The FOIP legislation that we do have: the AT and T minister keeps talking about the gold standard, which is a little confusing. If that legislation is so good, then why do we have to put this provision in here to extend that FOIP legislation when the people that are involved with the FOIP office do a very, very thorough job ensuring that this specific and proprietary information doesn't get out? You know, today it was brought up about the children in care. It took those papers four years of fighting to get that information from FOIP. If they can put them off for four years, I'm sure that they could hide any proprietary information on this commission for a number of years.

I'm not sure what they're worried about getting out. If the FOIP office is doing its job, then what are they worried about? We realize that it is big business, and a lot of the decisions that this commission will make could be used by other companies. You know, some information you've got to be careful with, but if they have such high hopes and they're so proud of the FOIP legislation, then why expand? If it's so good, why do they need to put this stuff in different legislation?

Another part of this bill that I'm not real enthused about is the buying of shares. Now, to me that raises a red flag. Why should a commission that's representing Albertans be able to buy shares in private companies? That's a pretty good example of picking winners and losers. I'm not saying, you know, how they're going to do it – that'll be scrutinized as it goes forward – but is that information going to be locked up for five years under the new FOIP lines that they have in here? We want to make sure that this commission is working in the best interest of Albertans, and if we don't know what shares they're buying and how much they're paying and why they're buying them – there are a lot of questions involved in that, and I hope that the government is forthcoming with that information when we do ask in the budget estimates to come and the different questions that come in question period.

You know, we realize that this commission has to work, so it's going to need to work with the Finance minister and his ministry and the government and get money, get their bills paid so they can keep the lights on and the doors open. The share deal I guess is not a deal breaker for me supporting this legislation, but it definitely is something that could be used to help out special companies. I'm not too convinced on that, and we'll definitely be watching that.

Other than that, a few of the questions we have – you know, I think the majority of the bill is going to be good, and it's going to help Albertans and ensure that they can get the most for their resources. That is a concern. You know, we're going to be trying to keep up on the information through this commission. So when they take that bitumen in kind, is the value they're getting for that bitumen when it's sold as a product down east, on the eastern pipeline, going to be more than they would have originally gotten taking the royalties right here in Alberta? There are going to be some people watching that and some questions, you know, to ensure that we are getting good value for that product. I'm sure that the minister and the government realize that, that they're going to be watched to make sure that they are getting the best deal for Albertans.

We've stated many times that we support the Gateway, Keystone, and east to west pipelines. You know, it's important for us to access those new markets and to ensure that we do get value for our products. Hopefully, this bill will continue to do that. We've talked a lot about liquid natural gas going to China, going through the west coast. That's another project that we are supportive of, and this new commission will be able to help out in that aspect, too. That's another expansion. Currently they don't deal with the gas market, but hopefully as we go forward and these LNG lines are put in and we access that market, this will be another avenue for companies to use, through the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission, to ensure that Albertans are getting the proper value for our products.

I guess, in closing, there were definitely some questions that I had with this bill. Some of them were answered; some of them weren't. But as we go forward and pay close attention to the new commission, we will be watching and holding the minister and the government to account and ensuring that the best interests of Albertans are looked after.

I guess, as the last point, I was very glad to see that public interest was put in this legislation. We debated for hours and hours on Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act, on public interest, wanting that implemented in that act, because it wasn't included. So it's good to see that the Energy minister did listen to me and knew that we are acting in the interests of Albertans with these energy bills that are coming forward. I'm glad to see that.

I look forward to listening to the other speakers on this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Caldre.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to get up to say a few comments on this bill. I kind of struggled with it over the last week or so because while there are certain aspects of this I really quite like – and I'm glad that the Energy minister is here to maybe just listen to a couple of things that I was reflecting on here. I certainly support the change to the Petroleum Marketing Act. I think that's a great opportunity – right? – to have a management plan for the whole thing. There are other potentials, I think, in regard to royalty structure and developing secondary industries for Alberta, not just shipping raw bitumen out of the province.

The thing that I was thinking about first. By sort of moving on with the BRIK program, sort of building on that further, I just don't know if we're not just maybe handing money over to – so many of the bitumen extraction companies here in the province now are from different countries, right? You have everybody here, from the French to the Chinese and Norwegians and so forth. So I'm concerned that the BRIK program is just handing money over for these resources and not being able to adjust the price to different market conditions. I don't know if there's a mechanism in this bill or a mechanism within the strategy that could make adjustments to both allow more secondary production here within the province of Alberta and then adjust so that we're not handing over, lock, stock, and barrel, so much profit and money to the foreign-owned energy companies here in the province.

My understanding as well is that we're creating sort of a Crown corporation here, which I certainly favour, but then I'm wondering why the Auditor General wouldn't be the auditor of this commission. That just seems like an obvious one to me, and perhaps I'm missing something. I wanted to ask that. If there is some reason that the Auditor General could not be the auditor for the commission, then how can we allow a Crown corporation, Mr. Speaker, that manages royalty and resource wealth owned by all Albertans and have no legislated auditing requirements built into the whole structure? Again, I just want to put that out there.

As well, Mr. Speaker, I'm curious to know how information on operations and revenues and expenditures and so forth would be reported to the public. How can we know, obviously, as owners of these resources that we are getting the due that we are owed, and what quantities are being put out? The idea of self-reporting has always been a problem, and I think that we can solve that problem with this bill if we chose to do so. I'm just curious to know how we can be sure as well that with decisions being made by or for this commission that we're creating here, we're getting the transparency that we need to regulate this commission as it moves forward.

Finally – I'm sort of conflicted about this – I just want to make sure that we have public control over this resource, although we certainly have lots of private companies involved, just because so much is at stake in terms of the revenues that we use to pay for public services here in the province and, as I said also, with being able to move the industry over to more secondary development and processing of bitumen and other energy-related products, that we're not making it easier to facilitate the export of raw material but instead, in fact, having a secondary industry that is better for workers, certainly. You get more value-added profit from that as well, and ultimately it allows us to control our destiny for the energy industry, which is essential to this province's well-being, I believe.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, my apologies.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) does apply if someone would like to question the last speaker or comment.

Seeing none, then I will recognize – and you can start over – the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Credit goes to the minister for a good idea. Bad bill. It's a shame, because it should have been a good idea followed by a good bill. Had they taken or at least listened to some of the arguments made to try to make it a good bill, I think we could have done that.

The idea is that we are creating this agency, a Crown corporation. The BRIK program, as this government has told the public, makes sense. It's logical that we would seek to get more revenue from our products. That is a function of not just the markets but efficiency. So, again, good idea.

What's missing in the bill is accountability and transparency. When we look at the bill, it reduces what was more accountable and more transparent in name only, if that. What we don't have as a public and as an opposition is the ability to at least measure. Is this doing what this government intends it to do? Are we getting the outcome? Is this a performance-based system here where we can actually measure the outcome and have confidence that it is doing what this government has said that it wants it to perform?

I'm going to cite just one example because the debate was long on this when we were proposing amendments. We did have an hon. member who mentioned something about proprietary information. I understand that for a private company, but this is not a private company. A private company takes a lot of risk in obtaining its import or its resources and seeks to profit. It does need to keep certain information proprietary. We understand that. This agency gets its product for free. It doesn't pay for it. It just receives it. It'll be receiving this product, this raw material, probably long after I'm gone from this earth and long after everyone else here in this Assembly is gone. There's enough of that resource there.

But the fact is that we don't even have access to the value that they're placing on it. What is the royalty that we're forgoing measured against the revenue that we're receiving? Using just the very basic values of the present value of money and the future value of money, we should be able to at least calculate and verify – that's the key, verify – what is being presented to us. It should not have to be the word of the minister. It should not have to be the word of this government. It should be easily verifiable by anybody in the public who wants to measure, based on the reports given, that this program is working according to what this government wants it to do. We don't have that ability. The reports are not going to necessarily be there. It doesn't mean that they're not going to file financial statements. It's just not required anymore.

Now, I fully suspect they'll file their financial statements. It's just not required by legislation. I fully suspect there'll be information given, but I don't know in what format and neither does anyone else. It hasn't been detailed. In what time frames will these financial statements be made? We don't necessarily know that. There's not a lot of clarity there. The problem is that it is clear that the government doesn't want to allow access to certain information. It has made that clear in legislation. That's why I say that it's a good idea and I think it would sell very well to the public if this was a stronger bill. Unfortunately, we passed that opportunity up on this go-round. I would hope that the minister would revisit this someday very soon and strengthen this to give the public confidence that the program is going to not just do what they say it's going to do but that they can verify it and have confidence that it is actually achieving the results.

With that, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll invite the Minister of Energy to close debate.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank all members who have participated in this debate. It's an important debate. There have been some technicalities that people have talked about in terms of the application of this legislation and the nature of the legislation, but what I have not heard is any fundamental criticism of the real purpose of this legislation. The really important objective for Albertans is to secure markets for our products to ensure that we are able to do value-added in this province and add that greater value to our gross domestic product, the wealth created for all Albertans.

This is all about ensuring that we get our resources to additional and lucrative markets, more lucrative markets than we're able to today. This act enables the government of Alberta to have a direct role in managing the policy environment within which the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission works and ensuring that there is a flexibility there, an ability to give direction and work closely with the board of the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission. It's an opportunity to update the governance and the way in which governance is conducted with this agency and ensure that we can draw from outside expertise, people who have decades of experience and are willing to contribute that to the common wealth of all Albertans.

Obviously, the APMC has put in place agreements already to supply bitumen royalty in kind barrels for the Redwater refinery and to ship crude on the Energy East pipeline. These are two examples of the kinds of increasingly complex initiatives which the APMC is undertaking.

There was a question about auditing. Well, Mr. Speaker, the APMC is a provincial agency as defined under the Financial Administration Act, and under the Auditor General Act it is mandatory – mandatory, Mr. Speaker, not optional but mandatory – that the Auditor General be the auditor of all provincial agencies, so that applies in this case as it would in any other case.

There was a question about annual reporting. Well, to suggest that there won't be full and complete annual reporting, I think, is trying to argue a technicality that, obviously, can't be argued. You know, under the Fiscal Management Act all provincial agencies, including the APMC, are required to provide an annual report to the responsible minister, in this case the Minister of Energy. It's not included in Bill 34 because it's not necessary, because it's already spelled out quite clearly, as it is under the Auditor General Act, that there is a responsibility for annual reporting under the Fiscal Management Act.

There's a FOIP exemption here, Mr. Speaker. This actually enables the APMC to secure more information from private entities, that they will know will be protected as commercially sensitive information. That's why there is a five-year exemption, which gives industry that assurance that any information they provide, which can be strategically useful to the APMC and the government of Alberta, will be protected and will not put them at a disadvantage.

Well, Mr. Speaker, there are many, many other things that have been said. Really, this organization, the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission, as it has been historically, will be measured on outcomes. We're taking new initiatives, and we have new opportunities here to build on the success of the past and be creative in how we approach the future. We're looking to ensure that we capture the greatest returns possible for Albertans and for industry in Alberta and that we make the most of the opportunities for adding value to those resources here in this province. The Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission will be a key platform upon which we will accomplish the strategically critical initiatives for the people of Alberta.

I'm very proud, Mr. Speaker, to be part of putting forward this legislation. I thank and encourage members on all sides to support this very important strategic initiative for the people of Alberta. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

[Motion carried; Bill 34 read a third time]

Alberta Economic Development Authority Amendment Act, 2013

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the hon. Deputy Premier and Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today on behalf of the Deputy Premier and the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education to move third reading of Bill 43, the Alberta Economic Development Authority Amendment Act, 2013.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to recognize the great support demonstrated by the hon. members regarding the value of economic development and the vital role it will play in Alberta's future. If we want to ensure Alberta's future prosperity, then we need to focus on diversifying our economy and expanding our markets. Bill 43 helps us do that.

A member asked about the value that AEDA delivers for the taxpayer dollar. AEDA is a highly effective and efficient means for government to solicit advice from senior industry leaders in the province. Membership in AEDA has always been comprised of volunteer senior-level executives. These leaders volunteer their time in support of public service, ensuring that government and Albertans are able to benefit from their advice at minimal cost.

Over the years there have been many examples of AEDA recommendations that have been adopted or have contributed significantly to policy-making and programming activities. AEDA has identified strategic solutions to a range of economic challenges such as job creation, skills and education, productivity, competitiveness, and market access. Many of the recommendations such as a better aligning of our postsecondary system with our labour market, engaging and developing our existing human resources, and examining new technologies to increase productivity have become part of our long-term workforce strategies. The proposed changes to the act will streamline the AEDA's ability to provide robust advice on economic issues.

Bill 43 amends the existing Alberta Economic Development Authority Act and includes a renewed governance structure that will make AEDA a more efficient and effective organization. A smaller and more focused 12-member board will enhance AEDA's responsiveness and allow it to better serve the Premier, cabinet, and Albertans. AEDA will incorporate functions of the Competitiveness Council, streamline the number of economic agencies, and increase their alignment with the GOA priorities. It will ensure greater client focus and improve the effectiveness and efficiency within the economic development community.

Bill 43, the Alberta Economic Development Authority Amendment Act, 2013, is a chance for the government and the AEDA to lead responsible change and reshape Alberta for a more competitive world.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to make a couple of comments about this bill. I find this particular organization, the AEDA, a bit odd. It looks as though it's moving the appointments of this authority to the Premier, right? My question is: why is this organization being brought forward to the Legislature? I mean, it obviously is an advisory council of some sort, but it seems as though there's no oversight as to what they really do or, you know, as to how they function.

I think Albertans need to kind of look at these things and wonder. You know, we have nonelected people, obviously, with a close ear to decision-making here in the province. It's fine to take advice, but I just don't know if we're institutionalizing too much this sort of extra nonelected group to be having such influence on the province. I wonder if we are not just institutionalizing and entrenching a certain group of people that already have a tremendous amount of influence and just moving them closer to the centre of power and decision-making here in the province. Certainly, I'm suspicious of this whole thing, and I just don't like the idea of us legislating more power and control over to this nonelected entity.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations on behalf of the minister to close debate.

Mr. Campbell: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: The question has been called.

[Motion carried; Bill 43 read a third time]

Bill 37 Statutes Repeal Act

[Adjourned debate November 21: Mr. McIver]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General on behalf of the hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak in third reading on Bill 37, the Alberta Statutes Repeal Act.

This is a rather sweeping bill that ensures we have a competitive regulatory framework that is easy for every person and business to understand. Mr. Speaker, I remember discussing this matter years ago, when I was a private member, with the Member for Calgary-Klein as well as the Member for Battle River-Wainwright, and it's nice to finally be able to put these ideas into action.

This act will repeal a group of 24 provisions in legislation that are unnecessary or obsolete, fulfilling what we had discussed years ago to reduce red tape. This includes the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act; the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Credit) Amendment Act, 2001; the Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act; the Crop Liens Priorities Act; section 43 of the Financial Sector Statutes Amendment Act, 2003; section 1 of the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003; schedule clauses (f) and (n) of the Health Disciplines Act; the Health Facilities Review Committee Act; the Hospitals Amendment Act; section 2(b) of the Landlord's Rights on Bankruptcy Act; the Masters and Servants Act – I see some members over there are unhappy about removing that – section 3(b) and (d), 7, 10, 15 to 18, 24 to 27, 34, and 43 of the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2004; section 2 of the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2000; sections 10, 11, 13, 16, 17, and 20 of the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2002; the Occupational Health and Safety Amendment Act; the Partnership Amendment Act; the Pension Fund Act; the Road Building Machinery Equipment Act; sections 37 and 40 of the Securities Amendment Act, 2006; the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act; sections 7(b) and 17(a) of the Stray Animals Amendment Act, 2005 – I'm hearing some opposition to that over here, Mr. Speaker – the Wheat Board Money Trust Act; section 117 of the Wills and Succession Act, which was never proclaimed; and the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act.

Perhaps more importantly, though, Mr. Speaker, this bill creates an automatic process of review every five years whereby unproclaimed legislation is automatically reviewed, and if it is no longer needed, it is repealed. For the members that didn't hear: it is repealed. Several years ago we talked about this, but again, we are putting these ideas into action.

Many times people talk about reducing red tape for businesses or individuals. This bill does exactly that, as the minister of environment has agreed with me here. This is just another reason why you should do business in this province, more than a couple of reasons you should do business with us.

The Statutes Repeal Act shows that Alberta is committed to actively maintaining its body of provincial laws, and I'm confident this legislation will serve Albertans well. With that, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to move to close debate on third reading of Bill 37, the Statutes Repeal Act.

The Deputy Speaker: For the record, the minister has spoken on his own behalf as the sponsor of the bill. I don't know if you can close debate at this point, hon. minister.

With that, I'll call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 37 read a third time]

Bill 38 Statutes Amendment Act, 2013, No. 2

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This time of night I think the hon. Member for Airdrie is getting a little pugilistic, but I will endeavour just to make my comments brief.

This bill makes minor changes to several pieces of legislation. The bill was designed to clarify and update existing legislation, which will help give Albertans a clear understanding of the legislation that governs them. Many of these amendments are simply catch-ups to the legislation, what's already in practice. Mr. Speaker, in a rapidly changing and growing province it's especially important to make these changes to ensure that our legislation is both consistent and clear. Albertans expect and deserve clarity and consistency, and these amendments will help achieve that. I'm confident that this legislation will serve Albertans well.

I'm looking forward to hearing from the Member for Edmonton-Calder. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I certainly don't want to take up a great deal of time. I think it's worth noting for both Bill 37 and Bill 38 that when we are making repeals and putting together so many different pieces of legislation, the standard practice is to have a consultation with each of the opposition parties, with the House leaders, and just make an agreement over that before we even have to come in here. I realize that maybe that seems like a small thing, but in the age of other Legislatures and parliaments around the world using omnibus bills and putting so many pieces of legislation together and sometimes using innocuous pieces of legislation to build up a volume of information and then sneak in something that's quite substantive and problematic, then, you know, that's what we always have to look out for.

I would suggest that the government would respectfully just consult on some of the statutes amendment acts or statute repeal acts because we'll see a lot of it in the future with this new drive to take out obsolete statutes, which I totally endorse. Right? Don't get me wrong. But if you can make a reference to that with us before, then we can make sure that it's clean and that we're not ever slipping into a situation where omnibus bills come to cast a dark shadow over our fine, fine Legislative Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers?

Seeing none, I'll invite the hon. minister to close debate.

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: The question has been called.

[Motion carried; Bill 38 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Seeing that we made considerable progress tonight, I would suggest that we adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:06 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 26, 2013

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. Holy Father and Great Creator, guide us in our discussions and in our deliberations that they may help us shape a positive future for all whom we serve. May they also remind us of the privileges we share in this land, where we have no fear of oppression, where we have abundant food and water and all of the necessities, unlike other places in our history. Amen.

Hon. members, as is our custom, we pay tribute on our first day to members and former members of this Assembly who have passed away since we last met and which I first alluded to yesterday.

Mr. Louis Davies Hyndman, OC, QC
July 1, 1935, to November 24, 2013

The Speaker: For almost 19 years Mr. Lou Hyndman served as a member of this Assembly for Edmonton West and then Edmonton Glenora. Mr. Hyndman's career was dedicated to public service. He was a lieutenant in the Royal Canadian Navy (Reserve), an aide-de-camp for Lieutenant Governor J. Percy Page, and a distinguished lawyer. Mr. Hyndman was first elected to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta in 1967 and subsequently held the positions of Minister of Education from 1971 through 1975, Minister of Federal and Intergovernmental Affairs from 1975 to 1979, and Provincial Treasurer from 1979 to 1986. Mr. Hyndman was appointed Queen's Counsel in 1976 and was named an officer of the Order of Canada in 1992. A born and raised Edmontonian, Mr. Hyndman also served as chancellor of the University of Alberta from 1994 to 1998.

In a moment of silent prayer I ask us all to remember the hon. Lou Hyndman in any way you may have known him. Grant unto him, O Lord, rest eternal, and may light perpetual shine upon him. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, joining us today in the Speaker's gallery are Mary Hyndman, spouse of Lou; Peter Hyndman, son; and joining them are additional members of the family and their friends: Pamela Parker, Samantha Parker, Melanie McCallum, Joan Pitfield, Bonnie Hope, and Judge Ken Hope. To you we extend our deepest condolences. With this tribute just read and with the applause you're about to hear, please know that our thoughts and prayers are with all of you. [Standing ovation]

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some special guests that are seated in your gallery. I would ask our guests to remain standing as I introduce all of you. First is Ms Olesia Luciwi-Andryjowycz, president of the Ukrainian Canadian Congress Alberta Provincial Council; Ms Daria Luciwi, past president of the Ukrainian Canadian Congress Alberta Provincial Council; Mr. Peter Dackiw, Ukrainian youth unity centre; Yaroslav Szewchuk, Ukrainian youth unity centre; Dr. Roman Petryshyn, Ukrainian Resource and Development Centre, Grant MacEwan University; Dr. Bohdan Klid, Institute of Ukrainian Studies at the University of Alberta; Father Rauliuk and Dobrodiyka Rauliuk, St. Michael's Ukrainian Orthodox church; Mr. Marshall Kachmar, Ukrainian Orthodox Cathedral of St. John; and, of course, Mr. Leonid Korownyk, survivor, and his wife, Mrs. Anna Korownyk; and Warren Singh, key researcher in 2008 in relationship to the Holodomor act, which is marking its fifth anniversary. Please give our guests who are standing our traditional and warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, we'll now commence with the introduction of school groups, starting with Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House 44 grade 9 high school students from Cochrane, Alberta. They're here visiting the Legislature today and the University of Alberta tomorrow. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege for me to rise today and welcome a wonderful group of students from Falun elementary school in the constituency of Drayton Valley-Devon. These 40 bright grades 5 and 6 students along with their teachers have toured our Legislature, and we've just had a picture. They're here to learn about our government. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

If not, let us proceed with other guests, beginning with the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of 12 staff from Alberta Energy's electricity and sustainable energy division. As you would understand, they perform good work on behalf of Albertans and they advise me well. I'm very pleased to welcome them to the Legislature Building today as they participate in a public service orientation tour. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Wellness, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to introduce Dr. Brian Gushaty and Deb Manz, registrar and CEO respectively of the Alberta College and Association of Chiropractors. Brian and Deb are dedicated to the practice of chiropractic care in this province and are great ambassadors for their profession. They are here today to support the tabling of their college's annual report, and at this time I would ask our distinguished guests, Brian and Deb, to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly four individuals: Louise Large, child and family services technician co-ordinator, Treaty 6 First Nations; Brenda Joly, executive director, Treaty 6 First Nations; Arlene Thunder, children and family youth co-ordinator, Treaty 8 First Nations of Alberta; and Victor Horseman, grand chief liaison, Treaty 8 First Nations of Alberta. These individuals are deeply concerned about the safety and conditions of First Nations children and all Alberta children who receive care in child and family services. They are here today hoping to hear answers to their concerns. I would ask everyone in the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Glenrose school. The Glenrose school offers multimodal mental health rehabilitation for students from K to 12 in conjunction with a school program. The program is staffed with educators who have additional training and experience in mental health care. The students are visiting the Legislature today to see our government in action. Attending are Lisa Lemoine, Lasha Luciwi, Beth Shedden, a lifelong friend Ginny Hamilton, Shannon Napora, Doug Cels, and 11 of the students. I would like them to please rise and receive the traditional greeting of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for a supplemental introduction.

Mrs. Leskiw: Yes. I forgot to introduce one person. I'd like Motria Dackiw to stand up. She's the wife of Peter Dackiw, that I introduced earlier. [Remarks in Ukrainian] Sorry that I forgot.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce Heather Workman. Heather's a good friend of mine from my constituency. She loves to make people happy, including in her work at the front door of the Old Strathcona market painting the faces of children, including my grandchildren at times. She's an advocate against domestic violence and ran as a candidate in our ward in the Gold Bar area. Heather, if you can stand up and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Holodomor Memorial Day

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is a province with strong historical ties to Ukraine. This is apparent to any Albertan who has visited Vegreville's largest pysanka in the world, Glendon's largest perogy, or spent a day exploring the Ukrainian Cultural Heritage Village museum east of Edmonton. Ukrainian pioneers first settled in our beautiful province over 120 years ago, and Ukrainian Albertans continue to play an integral role in the development of Alberta today.

Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and a privilege for me to rise to acknowledge the fifth anniversary of Bill 37, the Ukrainian Famine and Genocide (Holodomor) Memorial Day Act. Passed unanimously in 2008, the act commemorates the millions of innocent men, women, and children in rural Soviet Ukraine who died from a barbaric, man-made famine enforced by Joseph Stalin's totalitarian regime between 1932 and '33. Known as the Holodomor, which means extermination by means of starvation in Ukrainian, it makes one pause to think that this horrific act of genocide happened only 80 years ago.

The stories are haunting. Ukrainian farmers and peasants were forced to fulfill exorbitant government quotas that left them without food for themselves and their families. Those who refused saw their crops, livestock, and valuable seed grain confiscated. Those who tried to keep so much as a handful of grain or a few stalks of wheat were arrested or executed. Stalin's military patrolled the border to prevent starving Ukrainians from leaving the country in search of food. It is one of the darkest chapters in human history, that must never be repeated and must always be remembered.

In Alberta the fourth Saturday of every November is proclaimed Ukrainian Famine and Genocide Memorial Day. On November 23 Ukrainian communities gathered to commemorate and honour the fallen victims and those who survived. It is an opportunity to give thanks for the democratic freedoms and human rights we have here in Canada and reminds us of the role we must play to ensure a bright and inclusive future for all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Deaths of Children in Care

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday was the darkest day I've experienced in my short time in this Legislature. It was the day we as a province learned the painfully raw and unvarnished truth about how elements of our children's services system are failing those it is in place to protect.

We found out that the number of vulnerable children, many with serious and untreated mental health conditions, who have died while in government care is dramatically higher than has ever been reported. Since 1999 there have been 89 – 89 – deaths involving children in care that were never reported, each one an innocent life, each one kept a secret.

If there's one aspect of this story that disturbs me the most, Mr. Speaker, that is it. Not only were these oftentimes horrific deaths swept under the rug, the government fought tooth and nail for four years to keep the record secret. Yesterday, when the news broke, the government had an opportunity to demonstrate real-life leadership. They had an opportunity to tackle this issue head-on and champion the cause of getting to the bottom of it.

Perhaps naively I thought they might just do it. Instead, this government does what it always does: dodge, deflect, and deny. The Human Services minister downplayed the issue, first saying that the number of deaths was, quote, not significant, unquote, and then inexplicably said that the deaths were not preventable. The documents this government fought so hard to keep sealed clearly contradict him.

Here's the point. This has exposed a culture of deflecting blame and obscuring the truth that has seized this government. It is why these deaths went unreported, it's why the government fought to keep them secret, and it's why the minister reflexively shifted into spin mode yesterday when the news broke. This has to change, and until it does, the system that should be protecting our most vulnerable and defenseless will continue to be shrouded in secrecy, and this government will continue to be plagued by problems of its own making.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Government Achievements

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, last weekend our party met in convention and affirmed our support for our leader and the Premier of this province. I was amazed by the large and culturally diverse number, some 1,600, who attended this annual meeting. We're a broad-based party that share common mainstream values with each other and the people of this province.

The casual observer would see everything from staunch fiscal conservatives to long-haired hippies. Well, actually, that was me, Mr. Speaker. Themes emerged from the meetings. For example, the people of Alberta want our government to continue to build Alberta into the future, led by our Premier, and they want us to start now to get ready for the next election.

Mr. Speaker, as a chartered accountant, as a certified management accountant I want to commend our Finance minister and President of Treasury Board on the job done as a steward over our economic assets. The province is in great hands. I know that the Premier has said "live within our means." The Finance minister is delivering that. With the fiscal reality of the devastating floods in front of us, with continued pressures on the valuation of our resource assets, this Finance minister delivered a positive but cautionary second-quarter report today.

No financial statement is easy to read, Mr. Speaker, but I want to assure Albertans that the move to an operating plan, a savings plan, and a capital plan is a great one. Now Albertans can see what funds are being spent and, therefore, are necessary to build Alberta. They can tell quickly what the savings are.

There is a reason, Mr. Speaker, that people are flocking to Alberta. They share our set of common values. They like our progressive and conservative history, and they love that we're focusing on building this great province in the years ahead.

Mr. Speaker, the next election will be interesting, indeed. We're united on this side of the House, so I say to our leader with confidence on behalf of our team: let's keep building Alberta right through to 2016.

Speaker's Ruling Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's not the custom in this House to interrupt members when they're giving private members' statements, and it's not the custom for points of order to be raised, and it's not the custom for the Speaker to interject. But when you started off by dealing with internal party matters, hon. member, you know that you stand in violation of one of our rules, and that is to not bring internal party matters into the House. You recovered quickly on this occasion. We'll be mindful of your next.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition for your first main set of questions.

Deaths of Children in Care

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we learned from media reports yesterday of the sad and distressing news that the number of deaths of children in government care is nearly three times what official statistics say. This is a very serious issue, and Albertans need to be assured that children in government care are being given the attention they need in every single case. Will the Premier agree today to launch a full public inquiry?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, as a parent, as an Albertan any death of any child in this province is an incredible tragedy. We have to make sure that we're doing everything we can to protect children, particularly children in care. That is why our minister has taken the steps that he has in the past two years since we formed government to ensure that we are publicly accountable for every issue that comes up, that we have a child advocate that is independent of the government, that we have a quality advisory council that includes health care experts from the Stollery and the University of Calgary to deal with child protection. We are committed to doing everything we need to do working in partnership with the opposition to make this situation better for all children.

The government claims the large discrepancy between the official number of deaths and the actual number of deaths is due to how they account for "natural causes." However, the media reports clearly indicate that this does not, in fact, fully explain the discrepancy between the two sets of numbers. Even with 68 deaths attributed to natural causes, that still leaves the government unable to account for 21 deaths of children in their care. A full public inquiry would provide some clarity on this sad and disturbing issue. Will the Premier commit today to launch a full public inquiry?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, the work that is done in the department of children's services and has been done over many years by many ministers, including the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, has been about ensuring that we protect children. It is very important that we understand exactly what is going on. That is why we have an independent child advocate. That is why we have a quality assurance council. We are committed to ensuring that we continue to make the system better. That is fundamentally important. We need to bring people together to talk about this. Our minister today has offered that we need to do that, and we hope to work together with everyone to protect all children even better in the system.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we'll take him up on that, but we still need a full public inquiry. The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek agrees that we need a full public inquiry as well.

On the issue of natural causes there also appears to be some confusion about what actually constitutes a natural cause. A news report today details the tragic story of a baby placed in a bassinette which was improperly set up. The bassinette collapsed, and the child was killed. This was initially attributed to a sleep death; however, prior to 2010 no fatality inquiries were done into sleep deaths, which raises questions about whether statistics about natural causes are accurate. Will the Premier commit today to having a full public inquiry into this matter?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member will know is that we have a very thorough process which involves the medical examiner. Every death of a child in care with Human Services is reported to the medical examiner, and the medical examiner investigates. We now have a Child and Youth Advocate that is independent of the Legislature. Every death or serious injury of a child in care or subject to any programs of the department is referred to the Child and Youth Advocate, and he has full access to all the electronic records and full access to all the information in the department. All deaths of children in care are reported to the quality assurance council. So there are three ways in which there's a complete and thorough review of any death of a child in care.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's not what the Child and Youth Advocate says in his report, and it also isn't the case prior to 2012, which is what we're asking about.

Many of the deaths which the government characterizes as being of natural causes might well have been fully preventable. For years the government did not feel compelled to fully report the deaths of children in government care. Will the Premier acknowledge that simply defining these deaths as being of natural causes does not provide Albertans with the assurances that they're looking for, and will she call a full public inquiry?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I became the Justice minister five years ago. One of the reasons I got into public service and one of the reasons I decided to run for leader is that I thought we needed to do a better job of ensuring that we were taking care of kids in care, and that's because of the experience that I had before I came to this House. The work that we have put in place, that this government has put in place, since we were formed two years ago – an independent child advocate, children first legislation, ensuring that caregivers and people involved in the system can share information, ensuring we have a quality assurance council and that all deaths are reported – is better than what we have ever seen before. We are proud of it. We're going to continue to improve the system, and we'd like to do that with the help of the opposition.

Ms Smith: Better, Mr. Speaker, but still not good enough.

We learned today that a significant number of babies who die while in care die as a result of unsafe sleeping practices. It appears that some foster parents are not provided with adequate training on where and how children in their care should sleep. Furthermore, infant deaths while sleeping are rarely reviewed. Bearing in mind that the vast majority of Alberta's foster parents are caring, compassionate, and dedicated individuals, will the Premier commit to improving the training foster parents receive on the care of infants, and will she call a full public inquiry to make sure that all recommendations have been implemented?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member should know that we have actually followed up on recommendations from past fatality reviews and from past investigations. One of those was to do a better job of ensuring that foster parents know about safe sleeping arrangements, et cetera. An example of what has happened is what's called safe sleep. It's putting reviews into action. We developed safe babies training for foster parents and kinship caregivers who care for infants that provides valuable information about caring for infants and the specialized care required by babies prenatally exposed to substances. It has been incorporated into training modules and information for caregivers, including a chapter on infant sleep, with sections on sleep positions, reducing the risk of sudden infant death syndrome, and Alberta safe sleep guidelines, and every . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this minister has no credibility. Yesterday the minister said in response to a media question that the number of children who died while in the care of the government was, quote, not significant, unquote. Well, I've already pointed out that there are at least 21 deaths unaccounted for. Today's report reveals that infants in care have a three times higher mortality rate than those infants who are not in care and 78 per cent of the children who have died in care since 1999 are aboriginal. Does the Premier agree with her minister that the deaths can be characterized as not significant?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, this hon. member is a past master at taking words out of context even when she wasn't there to hear the context. She reads the paper and automatically uses the language in the way that she wants to characterize it. What's really true is that every child is important in this province to this Premier, to this government, and to this minister. Every child is significant. What we were talking about yesterday was with respect to tracking recommendations from reports. We don't have that many reports, and we don't have that many recommendations. I can assure the hon. member we know about each and every one of those recommendations, where they've gone, and what we're doing about them. We are implementing those recommendations. We have a very good track record on that.

Ms Smith: I think we'd all prefer to see a full public inquiry to prove that point, Mr. Speaker.

Resource Revenue Projections

Ms Smith: Today the Finance minister released his second-quarter update, and he is proudly selling it as good news. It's hard to get excited about that because the government has a pretty poor record of revenue forecasting. Usually the bitumen spread is low in the summer, then it goes up in the winter, and revenues go down. This government budgeted on the price of western Canada select oil at $68.50. Throughout the second quarter the price was very much higher, but it's been very much lower for most of the third quarter. Doesn't the Premier worry that her Finance minister's celebrations might be just a tad premature?

Ms Redford: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, I am very proud of the work that this Finance minister has done. He has put in place a responsible fiscal plan that ensures that today, seven months after we went through some difficult budget decisions, we made the right decisions to ensure that we could stand up and support people in southern Alberta that were impacted by floods in a way that was fiscally responsible and ensure that we could put those funds to people in communities.

Now, we've heard before the Leader of the Opposition speculate on the price of oil. Lots of people in Alberta do that. I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the work that our Department of Finance does, our Department of Energy does, and our minister does has consistently led to forecasting that works.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Smith: Except for that $6 billion hole the Premier discovered last December.

Yesterday western Canada select oil was $7 below the government's target. In the last month it got to almost $15 below the government's target. The Premier should realize that good news in Q2 is very likely to be offset by bad news in Q3 and Q4. Now that the Premier's leadership review is over, instead of trotting out new spending plans, shouldn't she be putting her efforts into creating a plan to actually balance the budget?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we don't change the budget every day that oil changes, as the hon. member opposite seems to indicate we should. Previous to this second-quarter report that I did today, at times western Canada select was $12 above what we put in the budget. I can inform the hon. member and all members in this House today that the year-to-date price on WTI is $99. The year-to-date differential that we're looking at is around $24. The WTI number is higher than our budget. The differential number is lower than our budget. I was cautioning today because we are seeing that differential spread. We're going to stick to the plan that put us in the right position in the first place.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, they talk about operational surpluses, capital deficits, borrowing to save, debt equals hope, and lots of new borrowing. Albertans are rightly confused by these ridiculous budget tricks. The Auditor General called this government out on its accounting sleight of hand for having three budgets. Why won't this Premier go back to the tried-and-true financial reporting practices that made Alberta's fiscal books the envy of the country for the last 20 years?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, once again the Wildrose is in the past. I quote from page 6 of the Auditor General's report of just this October.

The fact that none of our auditor's reports on financial statements contained a reservation of opinion means that Albertans can be sure they are receiving high quality information from the government on the province's actual financial performance.

Mr. Speaker, there is a reason why 105,000 people moved to our province, 39,000 this last quarter, a record. There's a reason why they came. It's because this is the best place in the world to create your future and the strongest financial position in North America.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that government is doing its best to keep the facts about the deaths of children in government care from coming to light. It's pulling out all the stops to deflect attention. You'd almost say that the minister said that these deaths were insignificant. You'd almost say that he wanted to blame families and front-line staff, but Alberta Liberals are not going to let this minister get away with it. The facts are clear, and they're staggering. One in 10 children in care is a baby. The babies account for more than 1 in 3 deaths of children in care. Fifty-seven of those 145 that died were babies. Experts say that these were preventable. To the Premier: why are so many babies dying needlessly in your government's care?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious issue, and we're all concerned about this issue. It's why our minister has taken the steps that he has even subsequent to the work that we've done in the past two years. This has turned into a debate where the opposition stands up and is morally outraged by the circumstance, and they should be. We all are. But the way that we resolve this is to come together and work to make the system even better than it is. We have asked for the opposition to come to the table to work with us because the outcome that we need is to ensure that all children are even safer than they are today and that we avoid these tragedies. We've asked for that partnership.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the opposition are fully in favour of working with this government and anyone else who wants to improve the lives of children, but far from doing the right thing — what's necessary here are answers. We have 147 dead children, Premier. It's time to call an independent, public judicial inquiry. The families of these children don't need a round-table; they need answers. The facts are horrific. Nine per cent of Alberta's children are First Nations, but they represent 78 per cent of the kids that died in care, yet they get much less funding at a time when there's much more need. Premier, your government is changing the First Nations children in our province. Why will you not call . . . ?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, there was actually a recent public fatality inquiry with respect to an aboriginal child in care who died. It was a tragic circumstance. One of the recommendations that came out of that was that the funding issue relative to aboriginal children on-reserve needs to be looked into. The hon. member will know that the federal government funds on-reserve, that the provincial government funds off-reserve. But one of the things that I have said to each of the treaty chiefs that I've met with over this fall, and I've met with all of them, is that we have to set aside jurisdiction and look to the best interests of the children. They agreed. We agreed. Will you agree?

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, when an airplane loaded with passengers crashes, passengers die. We call an independent judicial inquiry to find out why the airplane crashed. The children, family, and youth services system of this province: liken that to an airplane that has crashed. All these children have died; many have been injured and needlessly suffered. My question is: Premier, why will you not call a public inquiry? The public and these families need answers. Can you please stand up, Premier, and tell us why as a lawyer you won't call an inquiry?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I think on this issue it is tremendously important in this House to remember what we need to try to achieve. The outcome is to improve the system every single day with all of the people that are working in the system to protect children, who are incredibly vulnerable before they come into the system, in a way that we can ensure that they have the best opportunity to excel. Sometimes there are tragedies, and that is exactly what they are. We cannot exploit these tragedies. We must improve the system. We've asked for the opposition to help us do that, and we hope that they will.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition.

Child Poverty

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Nearly 30 years ago in his last speech to this Assembly NDP leader Grant Notley said that this government's failure to deal with the desperation of so many thousands of Albertans had led to the suicide of Richard Cardinal, a Métis youth in government care. Thirty years later too many children, most of whom are poor and aboriginal, are still dying in government care. Will the Premier agree to a public inquiry into the deaths of children in government care that specifically investigates the link between child poverty and the likelihood that children will end up in government care? If not, why not?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader makes a very good point and has asked a very good question. There is no doubt that when we have children in vulnerable situations and living in poverty, families are at risk and children are at risk. That is why this government has made a commitment to end child poverty, has introduced a social policy framework that we are working on with community leaders and not-for-profit agencies across this province to ensure that we can do a better job. He will know today that Public Interest Alberta has issued a report that notes that we have actually seen reductions in poverty rates in Alberta, that we continue to see less people on the social support rolls. That is good news. We will do more. We would like to work with the opposition.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, that report actually says that the government has done too little to end child poverty.

The leader of the NDP said three decades ago that the government's failure to deal with the desperation of Albertans living in poverty and the desperation of Albertans in government care had been ignored for too many years. In the last election this Premier promised to end child poverty, a measure which would hopefully see fewer children in need of government care. Instead, her government cut funding for rent supplements, child care grants, and income support, all things vitally needed to keep families and children out of poverty. To the Premier: why did you break your promise to Albertans' children?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, what in fact we are doing is keeping our promise to Albertans and to Albertans' children. We are keeping that promise by talking with communities about how we work together to ensure that every family has the tools that they need to be successful and that every child has what they need to succeed. We've talked about the social policy framework, we've worked through the Together We Raise Tomorrow, and we're working with communities to have an appropriate plan. But while we're doing that, we haven't stopped helping individual Albertans on a day-to-day basis with income support, with AISH, with whatever they need to be successful. This is a project of success, but there is more work to be done.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the government has asked for the opposition's help. I'll provide a little bit of advice to them, and I want to ask these questions. Will they restore cuts to income supplements? Will they restore cuts to family income support? Will they restore the cuts that they made to antipoverty programs in the last budget? Will they actually take steps, backed up with real money, to end child poverty in this province?

Mr. Hancock: Again, Mr. Speaker, this government has actually increased support for AISH recipients by $500. We've increased income supports to individual Albertans. The reason the budget for income support to individual Albertans went down is not because we cut the benefits to individual Albertans but because more Albertans have an opportunity to actively participate in the economy of this province because of the other good things that this government is doing. We're creating a solid place for Albertans to live and to raise their families. We're supporting those families where they need support. We're helping them with skill development where they need it. There's more work to be done.

The Speaker: Thank you.

That's it for preambles to your supplementaries. Let's go on with Calgary-Shaw, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mental Health Services for Children in Care

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A couple of weeks ago I asked a series of questions about the Child and Youth Advocate's most recent report, that went unanswered. Since then we've been made aware of a terrible trend in the system, the dramatic underreporting of deaths of children and youth in care. One of the minister's justifications for inaction has been to remind us that the Child and Youth Advocate is now independent and that therefore the system is completely fine: nothing to see here. If all is well, why, as the Child and Youth Advocate has clearly indicated, are traumatized children and youth coming into government care not receiving the mental health supports they so desperately need?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, there are some very good recommendations that the Child and Youth Advocate has made, and I'm working through the three reports that he's given us. In fact, I have them on my desk for review.

We do have something which this government has recognized as a very serious and important issue, and that is the mental health of children and the supports for children with mental health issues. I've been working with the Minister of Health and with the Minister of Education to make sure the supports are in place not just for children in care but for all children. That's a very important issue in this province, as it is in many other places in North America, and that's a very important issue to be addressed in an even better way than we have to this date.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, they've been working on this for 10 years.

Given the news of the last couple of days, namely the revelation that these children are dying in care at a much higher rate than the government will admit and that many have mental health issues that went untreated, does the minister accept that there is a correlation between these deaths and the lack of appropriate mental health supports for these children in care, and what is your ministry doing about it?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, first and foremost, I need to go back to his suggestion that the children are dying at a higher rate. That's not true. What in fact has happened is that prior to 2012 we did not report on children who died of natural causes and accidental death that were not impacted by a third party in an inappropriate way. There were investigations, and medical examiners and others determined that it wasn't necessary to go further. Since 2012 all deaths of children in care are being reported. We think that's important. That's an extremely important piece.

Mental health is an extremely important issue not just for children in care but for all children and youth and, in fact, for all Albertans. That's an issue we're addressing.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, the Child and Youth Advocate has done everything he can to sound the alarm on health supports for children in care, mental health supports. His warnings should send a chill down this government's spine. Again to the minister: when are you going to show some leadership, take some responsibility, and admit that this is still a major problem in your ministry?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've received the Child and Youth Advocate's reports recently. We are reviewing them. The recommendations are very important recommendations. But I don't need the report to tell me that mental health for children is a very important issue. In fact, we've been addressing that issue. We have programs in place. We're putting more resources in place to do that, and we've been working very closely with the Ministry of Health and the Ministry of Education to make sure that access issues are addressed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Airdrie.

Government Spending

Mr. Quadri: Mr. Speaker, the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance delivered the second-quarter update today. As he said himself, it's apparent we have turned the corner and revenues are higher than expected. It's good news for Albertans. My question to the Minister of Finance: can we expect to see spending increase as a result of this positive trend?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is important to remember that we are only halfway through the year, as we alluded to earlier in question period. We are seeing improvements. There's no question about that. But as I said in the press scrum earlier today, we have a long way to go. It is prudent fiscal management that put us in this strong position. Holding true on wage growth – population growth is a challenge for us. Flood recovery is obviously going to be a very significant challenge for us as we move through the next quarters. But it does show that the discipline that we put in place is getting results, and we are showing good results at this point.

Mr. Quadri: Mr. Speaker, given that growth pressures in many of Alberta's communities have resulted in a need for additional infrastructure and services, what steps have been taken to manage expenditures so provincial dollars go where they're needed the most?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, as we've talked about in this House many times, the capital plan is something that we are putting a lot of resources towards. We're talking a lot about the amount that we have to build. In order to do that, we had to have the zero per cent increase on our operational expenditures. We had to keep that very, very tight. The second-quarter results have shown that that was the appropriate direction. The MLA pay freeze and the continuation of the current and proposed MLA freeze, management pay freezes, a 10 per cent reduction in the staff, the doctors' agreement, the teachers' agreement: we have got to hold the line on all of these expectations, and we will continue to do that.

Mr. Quadri: Mr. Speaker, even though the second-quarter results are better than expected, how can critics continue to suggest that Alberta is in a dire financial position and that government financial mismanagement is to blame?

Mr. Horner: You know, Mr. Speaker, these claims, unfortunately, are unfounded and, frankly, somewhat irresponsible because we are in the strongest financial position of any jurisdiction in North America. It isn't me that's saying that. It's the credit-rating agencies. It's the financial agencies. It's the banks. It's all of the people that supposedly would be advising a finance critic in the opposition, but evidently they're not. We are the only province in the country with net assets. We have a solid economic foundation.

In the last two years we've led all other provinces in economic growth. People are coming here because this is the place to be, and it's because of our strong financial position.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Anderson: Everyone's lost but him, Mr. Speaker.

Provincial Borrowing

Mr. Anderson: Today's second-quarter update was the same old story: record revenues, more debt, more deficits, and questionable accounting. Despite a record bump in revenue, the consolidated cash deficit remains in the $3 billion to $4 billion range with at least $17 billion in debt to be borrowed by 2016. Yet, incredibly, the Finance minister, echoing the management team of my beloved Edmonton Oilers says, and I quote, we have turned a corner. Minister, how is a $4 billion consolidated budget deficit and $17 billion in debt by 2016 turning the corner?

Mr. Horner: You know, Mr. Speaker, I found it interesting the other night in debate in the House when the hon. members from the wild alliance were talking about: why don't you balance the way the federal government – my apologies. The Wildrose Alliance, Mr. Speaker. My apologies.

The Speaker: Withdraw that right now, and we'll carry on.

Mr. Horner: I do.

Mr. Speaker, the other day in the debate here they were talking about: "Why don't you balance the way the federal government does? Why don't you take a page out of the federal government's books?" Are they suggesting that the federal government will not be balanced until the day that they stop borrowing for either infrastructure or their deficit? Nobody does that.

Mr. Anderson: So sad, Minister.

Given that the CEO of AIMCo, who oversees the heritage fund and is an expert market investor, is quoted just a few days ago saying that he believes the risks are high that oil prices will sink to the $70-a-barrel range or lower in the next five years and given that you can't stay out of debt or even balance the budget with prices at over $100 a barrel, Minister, when will you admit that you and your Premier's fiscal mismanagement is not only burying us in debt today, it is risking fiscal disaster in the not-too-distant future if oil prices decrease as he has predicted?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I toured the province again this year in my budget deliberations, and what I discovered is that Albertans deal with their finances in a very similar way to the way we are doing today. They go and they buy a house, and they get a mortgage on that house because that's the appropriate financial tool to use. They build an RRSP or perhaps they're putting money into their pension because they know they should save for the future. What they also know is that you don't buy your groceries with your credit card, and we're not doing that. As much as the hon. members from the opposition would try to convince Albertans that that's what we're doing, that is not what we're doing. We're borrowing for the capital that is the schools, the hospitals, and the roads for all Albertans for today and tomorrow.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, they're not borrowing groceries on their credit card; they're mortgaging their house to borrow.

Given that the Premier promised during the last election that she would not go into debt and given that we are on pace this year to almost match or even break the all-time record for resource revenues yet will still be borrowing $17 billion by 2016, Minister, how can you or this Premier look Albertans in the eye and say that you can be trusted to keep your promises? No one believes you anymore. Do you understand why?

Mr. Horner: First of all, the reason that it is in the forecast as record revenues is because we actually booked the revenue that we hoped to receive from the federal government of some $3.1 billion. It would be interesting if the hon. members would actually read what's in there. But, Mr. Speaker, I can honestly look Albertans in the eye and tell them that we are borrowing for capital just like they do for their house and their warehouse and their business because they need the school, they need the road, they need the hospital today, not some time down the road when we cut $5 billion out of our operating budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Public-sector Pension Plans

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A number of my constituents have expressed alarm regarding the recent proposed changes to a number of our province's public-service pension plans. Many cite second-hand information from friends, the news, and other sources. These constituents have committed their careers to Albertans. Many want to take early retirement and now believe the rug has been pulled out from under them. My question is to the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance. Why are changes being made to these pension plans?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's pension plans were designed for a different workforce in a different era. Three decades ago government was trying to move older workers out of the workforce in order to make room for baby boomers that were coming in. Today we're facing worker shortages. It simply doesn't make a lot of sense to incent people to leave early. Currently the plans have no way to address funding shortfalls but to keep increasing the contributions that both the member makes and the employer makes. It's simply not sustainable. We have a 7 and a half billion dollar unfunded liability we need to deal with. We have to deal with people that are living a lot longer once they're retired. The demographic has changed. Life expectancy has changed. The number of contributors has changed.

Mr. Dorward: Minister, could you please clarify exactly what the proposed changes are? Some of the information out there is true, and some isn't.

Mr. Horner: You know, Mr. Speaker, it is important to note because one of the things that is difficult is when folks in the opposition or other stakeholders decide to try to scare Albertans or to promote fear to try to change their minds.

Mr. Speaker, it's important to note that the changes that we're proposing will only apply to benefits earned after 2015, so benefits that members have already earned and earn up to the end of 2015 are not affected. Core benefits are protected under our proposals. The changes that we're proposing are moderate. We're proposing to remove early retirement subsidies and move to a targeted COLA of 50 per cent. They are a very balanced approach.

Mr. Dorward: Is there a possibility that those pension reforms could be reviewed at a later date, possibly to incorporate new ideas? Clearly, many Albertans have raised concerns regarding public pensions.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, one of the other things that's out there that is also false is that the decision has been made. The decision has not been made. We have put some proposals on the table based on consultation that we've had over the last year. We received input from all of the plans' boards. However, I have to tell you that they didn't agree. They didn't agree on the things that needed to be done. Leadership was required to provide sustainability to defined benefit plans, and this government and this Premier are providing that leadership.

The Speaker: Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, you had a point of order at 2:24 during the first supplemental. It's been noted.

Let's move on. Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, with respect to 145 children dying in care, this minister said a few minutes ago, "We don't have that many reports, and we don't have that many recommendations." Why, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it's because the majority of those 145 were determined to be, through appropriate investigation, deaths of children by natural causes, and the circumstances around those deaths were investigated. We have fatality review reports where that is appropriate. We still have a number of fatality reviews to happen, because fatality reviews happen after all criminal investigations and court actions have been taken, so there are a number of outstanding reports, presumably, to come when those fatality reviews happen. But that's . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, the act says that any child in care, any person in care should have priority for a fatality review, yet a very small proportion of these children have gone into a fatality review. Why is that?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the medical examiner will review a death to determine what has happened in that circumstance, and if the child has died of natural causes, he still brings that to the attention of the Fatality Review Board, but the Fatality Review Board, which consists of a doctor, a lawyer, and a member of the public, reviews those incidents and determines whether it's appropriate to go forward for a fatality review. There's a very thorough process of consideration with respect to whether a further investigation needs to happen in any incident of death with respect to a child in care.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This minister has indicated how much they try to learn from incidents such as the deaths in care, yet the staff tell me that there is no systematic review of deaths or communication of deaths and lessons to the front lines. When and how is this being done, Mr. Minister? What are you covering up from the staff?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we report and are required to report the death or serious injury of any child in care to the Child and Youth Advocate, and he has the full powers of a commissioner under the Public Inquiries Act. He has full access to information from the department, and he has the full authority to conduct a review. We report the serious injuries or death of a child to the quality assurance council, and they look for systemic issues arising out of that. The medical examiner is required to review every death of a child in care, a child under Human Services, and then the Fatality Review Board reviews that to determine whether a fatality review should be recommended.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, after a four-year legal battle with this government the public now knows the number of children who have died in care since 1999. What we still don't know is the number of kids who died while receiving protective services during the same period. That's a major gap in historical information that this government is willing to share with Albertans, and it needs to be corrected today. So to the minister, very straightforward: can you tell this Assembly how many children have died while receiving protective services over the past 14 years? And if not, why not?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, that would require a historical review. I don't have that information at the tip of my fingers today. But I can tell you that we publicly disclose, as of 2012, the death of any child in care. We review every serious injury or death. We provide the information on that to the quality assurance council and to the Child and Youth Advocate. The Child and Youth Advocate has the full ability to have access to all of the information he needs and the powers of a commissioner under our Public Inquiries Act. The medical examiner reviews every incident of any child involved in the Human Services department, including the children that the hon. member is talking about, and has the opportunity to report to a Fatality Review Board.

Ms Notley: Forty-one years after you guys became government, you finally started counting all of the deaths? That is outrageous.

Given that even though eight kids under age five died while receiving protective services last year and only one of those deaths will proceed to a fatality inquiry and none of those deaths will be reviewed by the children's advocate, not even the one that the advocate describes as having died due to neglect, how can the minister possibly say, as he did yesterday, that the decrease in investigations of children's deaths is a good thing?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I've just recounted twice the number of ways in which an investigation into a child's death occurs, and each of those people to whom the death is reported has a duty of care, a duty to investigate to determine what more needs to be done. If they determine that nothing more needs to be done because a child died of natural causes or for whatever other reason, then I assume that they have carried out their duty and they're not going further with an inquiry. Fewer inquiries means we're on the right track, we're doing the right thing, and that the majority of those children are dying of natural causes.

Ms Notley: For 40 years you made assumptions, and for 40 years that was wrong.

Given that of the 20 deaths and serious injuries of children last year only five of those tragedies will be investigated by the advocate or through a fatality review and given that each child who is a victim of these tragedies deserves the full investigative attention of the government, who is responsible for them, will the minister commit to changing the legislation to ensure that every death or serious injury is investigated, or do those deaths and serious injuries simply not matter?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the death of any child is a tragedy. It's a tragedy for the family, it's a tragedy for the community, and it's a tragedy for all of us. We need to learn everything we can from every incident, but we don't need to have a full review of every incident to learn from it because in many cases children die of natural causes. When that is determined by the medical examiner, when the evidence is already there, then the in-depth review that the hon. member is talking about is not necessary. We do not want to put people through very, very difficult circumstances when the evidence is already available to the public.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Land Titles Registry

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Service Alberta is on the fence when it comes to Alberta's land titles registry system, and it's time he got off it. The minister is clearly interested in privatizing Alberta's land titles registry. On November 7 he told this House that Alberta's land titles registry is the "gold standard" but that this government wanted to see if there was a better way of doing things. I'm sure that the minister realizes a move towards privatization would have major implications for property owners and users of the system. The minister needs to be clear with Albertans. Minister, is your government going to privatize Alberta's land titles system? Yes or no?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, speaking of clarity, that party over there needs to be clear about something. Are they in favour of innovation and more private-sector investment, rethinking the way government does business? Or no? Are they looking to advocate the traditional, typical approaches, that government brings forth multimillion-dollar proposals? Do they expect ministers not to dig deep and ask tough questions and see what the best way is to run programs? Or no? It's quite simple. They need to know what side of the political equation they sit on. Do they care for innovation? Do they care to look at new options? Or no?

Mr. Fox: What are you hiding, Minister? Answer the question.

Given this PC government collected more than $80 million in land titles revenue and given that common sense dictates that if it ain't broke, don't fix it, can the minister explain what logic he's using to justify a potential change to Alberta's gold-standard land titles registry?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, the wonderful thing about this is that they finally admit that something we do is good. Wow. Amazing.

The fact is this. What we are looking to do is to assess what the next step in our land titles modernization looks like. For example, other governments in Canada have moved forward with online submissions of forms. Wow. Considering there are some apparent lawyers on the other side, maybe they would know that. Our question is: before spending $30 million to mimic their system, is that the system that will work best for Albertans?

Mr. Fox: Selling off property rights to the highest bidder, Minister?

Given that this government claims to be open and transparent and given that this minister is clearly toying with the idea of privatizing a very successful land titles system, will the minister of accountability at least stand up and do his job and make sure that any future contract is fully public so that Albertans will know what they're getting when this government sells off our property rights to the highest bidder? Minister, do your job.

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, we have continuously maintained that there are four things that the government of Alberta will always maintain. Number one, we'll always own the title, always assure the title. Always. We will always be the owner of the data. We will always be the ones that uphold the assurance fund. We will control fees, and we will set service standards. Where, based on that, can that member stand up and spread this sort of fear? [interjections] This is the type of thing that, quite frankly, Albertans are getting sick of. [interjections]

The Speaker: Too many interjections, hon. members. Let's keep them out of the way, please.

Let's go on. Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Alberta Distance Learning Centre

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency is home to the Alberta Distance Learning Centre. We are very proud of this institution and the staff who work there. Given that the Inspiring Education report, which is the basis of the new Education Act, highlighted the importance of innovative practices and the need to be flexible in the delivery of education – my question is to the Minister of Education – can you tell me what the Department of Education's thoughts are on the importance of distance education delivery by ADLC in relation to meeting the principles of the new Education Act?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the member for the question. First of all, I'd like to thank her for her advocacy for education in Alberta as a former president of the Alberta School Boards Association and her great advocacy on behalf of her constituents in the ADLC. That's why we chose her to chair the Education Act Regulatory Review Committee, which is out working right now. She knows the Education Act very well, and she knows that one of the underpinnings and one of the pillars of the Education Act and what we're doing in Alberta is that choice. Foundational to that, going forward in the future, is going to be distance education, which the ADLC will be an important part of.

Ms Kubinec: To the same minister: given that ADLC is a critical, value-added service and provides students with a broad base of programming in order to equalize opportunities, especially to students in small and rural high schools, will the department work with ADLC to come up with a funding model that will maintain the excellent level of service that has been provided for 90 years?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, that's quite a proud history, and I'll go further than that. I wouldn't describe them as value-add. I would describe ADLC and distance learning in general as foundational to our future, and we need to ensure that students enrolled in distance education programs continue to receive the high quality of education. That's why we're in the process of reviewing the distance education model and strategy in Alberta right now. [interjections] That report is due sometime close to the end of the year or early in the coming year, and those recommendations are going to help inform where we go forward on a strategy with distance learning.

The Speaker: Please keep the interjections out of here. I'm having trouble hearing, and I'm sure other members are, too.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Ms Kubinec: The minister answered my last question. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Stony Plain.

Energy Company Licensee Liability Rating Program

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The licensee liability rating program is jeopardizing Alberta's energy sector by driving junior producers out of business. Recently I met with several stakeholders to hear their concerns. One gave this example. Somebody owns a house and rents it out. It becomes vacant. Then all of a sudden the government tells them to bulldoze it down. That's the effect of the LLR program on these junior producers. The program is forcing the abandonment of producing wells. Yesterday the minister said that he directed the Energy Regulator to explore all possible options to ease the pain this is causing. What can the minister report is being done to ensure producing wells aren't needlessly being abandoned?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is always a great deal of activity amongst smaller players in the oil and gas industry. We've all witnessed that, where people sell and buy, transactions throughout the system in buying and selling wells and properties and leases. The hon. member is asking a question. What we have done here is that I have asked the Alberta Energy Regulator to take every step possible to ensure that as we protect Albertans, we also ensure that every option is available to small producers, explorers in oil and gas, to ensure that these assets are properly looked after for all Albertans.

Mr. Hale: Mr. Speaker, given that the PC government botched the royalty review and caused energy revenues to plummet and given that the Alberta Energy Regulator has botched the implementation of the licensee liability rating program, will the minister commit today to stopping any further implementation of this program until he can find a way to do it without wiping out any more of our junior producers?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, small producers in this province, many of them, are facing very difficult circumstances because they don't have adequate access to markets. It's because they don't have adequate access – you know, they've faced a very tough time for a very long time. What we're trying to ensure is that Albertans also are protected at the same time that industry is protected. Steps are being taken this very week, working with the Explorers and Producers Association of Canada, to ensure that that work is done to explore all possible ways to ensure that these small producers have access to other tools.

Mr. Hale: Mr. Speaker, given that this minister says that he understands the challenges to junior producers and given that this government is plowing ahead despite that desire and the immediate threat to over 200 junior companies, companies that live in and support our communities, can the minister assure us that this isn't a cynical plan to force a consolidation of industry by eliminating junior producers?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, small producers in this province are the heart and soul and the very entrepreneurial spirit of the province. There is no way – there is no way – that any government in this province on this side of this House would ever pursue that kind of a strategy. It's an outrageous allegation. We are here to protect the rights of Albertans, to protect the future of Albertans, and to ensure that we have a robust economy and a robust producing sector. We're going to work hard to make sure that happens. That's why we created an Energy Regulator that is effective and efficient, that looks after and protects the long-term interests of Albertans but ensures we have a very active economy at the same time.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the time for question period has now expired. I want to thank Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock for letting her second sup go when the question had been answered. Good leadership. Good example on you. Kudos also to Edmonton-Mill Woods, Edmonton-Gold Bar, Calgary-Mountain View, Calgary-Shaw among others, who kept their preambles to an absolute minimum if not eliminated them totally. Thank you for that.

Mathematically, members, it's almost impossible to get past 15 questions. We made it to 14 today. If you take 35 seconds to the maximum for a question, which is allowed, and 35 seconds to the maximum for an answer, and you go down that mathematics, you'll see that it's almost impossible to get past 15. But with help from some of you, members, mathematically we can get up to 16, maybe even 17 like we did yesterday.

Let us continue on momentarily with Members' Statements. We'll give you 20 seconds of preparation, and then we'll start with Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood with your member's statement, please.

Child and Family Supports

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Due to the significant time and resources of the Edmonton Journal and the Calgary Herald Albertans are getting a devastatingly complete picture of the shortcomings of the province's foster care system. In the coming days, as more of these stories come out, I urge all Albertans to remember who is affected by this tragic failure: children who did not choose the circumstances they were dealt; parents who did not have the support they needed for child care, for income support, or to make their rent; families with holes in their family trees, where a cousin, a grandchild, a niece, or a nephew should have been. The vast majority of children in care are apprehended from families that are living below the poverty line, dealing with mental health problems, or struggling with addiction. Seventy per cent of them are aboriginal.

This Premier was elected in part on a promise to end child poverty; however, her first budget after being re-elected was a betrayal of the children and families she promised to help. Cuts were made to rent supplements, child care grants, and income support. The government continues to oversee the worst mental health and addictions support system in the country.

As the children's advocate pointed out earlier this month, there is no reason why children who have faced neglect and trauma should also encounter barriers when they need mental health supports. Most disturbing, though, is that the factors that put a child on the path to government care are so well known. This government has steadily refused to address the systemic causes of poverty despite making promises that they would.

Mr. Speaker, these children are our responsibility, all of us together. When one is lost, it is our collective failure. We simply have to stop letting these kids down. When we make them a promise, we need to keep it. We owe them that at least.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Legislative Offices

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I rise to speak today about an essential component of our parliamentary institution, which has been proven for over 800 years of good democratic governance, the officers of the Legislature. In Alberta officers of the Legislature currently include the Auditor General, the Child and Youth Advocate, the Chief Electoral Officer, the Ethics Commissioner, the Information and Privacy Commissioner, the Ombudsman, and the Public Interest Commissioner.

These independent, nonpartisan officers are recruited by our Assembly's all-party select special committee in an open competition based on qualifications, not their political affiliation. Each legislative office is governed by the laws passed by this Assembly, and the task of the legislative officer is to administer and enforce the law like a judicial body. Each officer has an annual business plan and an annual report to the Assembly. They are audited by the Auditor General, and their expenses are posted online in order to ensure the highest level of transparency while maintaining legislative confidentiality.

In addition, the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, which is an all-party committee of the Assembly consisting of 11 MLAs, can consider officers' requests, changes in legislation, and forward the recommendations to the appropriate minister. Our Legislature mandates that the laws that govern these offices are subject to review on a regular basis.

Alberta has always been at the forefront when it comes to creating legislative offices. In 1967 our province became the first jurisdiction in North America to establish an Ombudsman. While legislative offices are part of the Legislature, they are not government, are not partisan, and their issues are the subject of our standing committee.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Holodomor Memorial Day

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is Holodomor, when we pause to remember the loss of so many lives and the injustices of a truly despicable regime. To a person of Ukrainian heritage remembering Holodomor strikes close to the heart as family members and Ukrainians across the world recall the horrors of the famine planned by the cold-hearted Communist regime under Joseph Stalin.

Ukrainians did not take to Communism as the Russian Communists desired. There was resistance to the centralization of power in the countryside, and the regime sought and implemented a means by which to impose its will and its flawed economic model. That means was to deny the peasants the agricultural products of their labour and to slowly starve them into compliance with the Soviet dictates.

Holodomor was entirely a man-made event, planned by the government of the USSR. In order to establish a Soviet empire as an industrial world power, Stalin would not tolerate the way of life in Ukraine, and for this, millions of innocent lives were tragically lost. To punish Ukrainians for their resistance to collectivism, Stalin decided to starve them into submission. This cruel punishment furthered Stalin's ambitions but devastated the people of Ukraine. Hunger became a weapon to Stalin, and he used that weapon with impunity.

We must never forget the devastation that was wrought on Ukraine by the evils of Communism during the 1930s. While we remember the lives of those who were lost and those who needlessly suffered, we must stand together in opposition to this act of genocide. Never again shall we allow such a tragedy to occur. Today, as we mark Holodomor, it is a timely reminder of the inherent need for western society to stand together in defence of every person's rights, liberties, and freedoms.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of notices to provide to the House today. First, I would like to give oral notice of intention to introduce Bill 45, the Public Sector Services Continuation Act, which will be sponsored by myself.

I would also like to give oral notice of intention to introduce Bill 46, the Public Service Salary Restraint Act, and Bill 42, the Securities Amendment Act, 2013, which are sponsored by the hon. Provincial Treasurer and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker, I also would want to provide oral notice of intention of introduce two motions. The first motion would be:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 77(2) Bill 45, Public Sector Services Continuation Act, may be advanced two or more stages in one day and that if Bill 45 has not yet been introduced, then immediately following the passage of this motion the Assembly shall revert to Introduction of Bills for the introduction of Bill 45, Public Sector Services Continuation Act.

The second motion that I'd like to give notice of is:

Be it resolved that

- A. On Thursday, November 28, 2013, the Assembly continue sitting beyond its normal adjournment hour of 4:30 p.m. for consideration of Bill 45, Public Sector Services Continuation Act, and any related motions; and
- B. Upon Government House Leader advising the Assembly no later than the time of adjournment on Thursday, November 28, 2013, the Assembly reconvene on Friday, November 29, 2013, at 10 a.m. for a special sitting, and the only business to be considered by the Assembly that day shall be Bill 45, Public Sector Services Continuation Act, and any related motions.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Services for Person with Disabilities. Do you have a tabling? Perhaps we'll come back to it.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of an article from the November-December edition of the Fraser Forum entitled Pensions and Government Both Hurting from Canada's Inability to Ship Oil to Market, written by Kenneth P. Green. In this article Mr. Green points out that the biggest obstacle to expansion of such projects as the Keystone pipeline is political. He mentions that all environmental, engineering, routing, and other challenges have largely been put to rest. His position is that while rail transport is generally safe, it is not as safe as transport via pipeline.

I table this article and hope that everyone gets a chance to read it.

The Speaker: Back to the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and my apologies. On a couple occasions in this House the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has referenced some statistics about lost-time claims for paramedics in Calgary. I did review the information that he tabled, and I am unable to source that information. I am unable to determine where he got it from or the validity of it. So I'm tabling today five copies of paramedical occupations claims reported by the Workers' Compensation Board both for the province of Alberta and for Calgary specifically, and very clearly they don't align with information that the hon. member has.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies of a summary report from the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees called Stress and Well-Being among Local 006 Members, child care workers in the government outlining the significant stress associated with their work, associated with increased rates of mental illness and burnout, and highlighting some of the opportunities for assisting these important employees in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to table 100 more of the handwritten letters that my office has received expressing concerns about the deep cuts to postsecondary education that are happening in this province. These letters call on this PC government to reverse their harmful cuts to postsecondary education. A feeling of confusion, frustration, and anger is reflected in the over 1,000 letters my office has received from concerned staff and students so far at the University of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others?

If not, hon. members, let me take this opportunity pursuant to section 46(1) of the Conflicts of Interest Act to table with the Assembly the requisite number of copies of the annual report of the office of the Ethics Commissioner of Alberta for the period from April 1, 2012, to March 31, 2013.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Horner, President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, pursuant to the Government Accountability Act the 2013-14 first-quarter fiscal update and economic statement dated August 2013 and the 2013-14 second-quarter fiscal update and economic statement dated November 2013.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we had two points of order, one of which might stand already as withdrawn, so let me just check quickly if I could here. It was with respect to an issue that arose when the hon. Minister of Finance mentioned the words “wild alliance,” and then he withdrew them at my request.

Does that point of order fall away, then, in your mind, hon. opposition deputy House leader?

Mr. Saskiw: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Although there have been numerous times when he’s said it, so hopefully it becomes a little clearer for him. He’s slow to learning it.

The Speaker: Thank you. He did withdraw them.

Let’s move on to the second point of order, which was raised at 2:24 p.m. I believe it was also Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, again with respect to some comments presumably made by the President of Treasury Board. So your citation, and please proceed with your point of order.

Point of Order Clarification

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise according to Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). This was in a response to a question from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar in which the Finance minister stated that the opposition was promoting fear. That’s a very serious allegation. In the totality of his three answers that he provided, in addition to stating that the opposition was promoting fear, he also said that there was no evidence or basis for the opposition’s perspective.

I realize that the use of the term “opposition” isn’t referring to a specific member per se, but of course you’d have to look at the totality of the way he was answering that question, the results of which would inspire the House to get into disorder. Of course, you have to take it in context. In the previous question, of course, he misnamed our party again. He was clear and was deliberately trying to cause disorder in this Assembly.

I think, Mr. Speaker, the main perspective on this is that we saw the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar give what is called a softball question, you know, just a lob. In fact, it was more along the lines of being close up and just tossing a question to the Finance minister. He was so close that it was almost like a T-ball for the Finance minister. It was, quite frankly, embarrassing. I’d ask that – and perhaps this is more of a clarification as he never did talk about a specific member of the opposition – it be withdrawn. Hopefully, we don’t have those T-ball questions.

The Speaker: I think we’ll deal with this in quick order, but I’ll allow the Deputy Government House Leader to comment.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would agree with the last statement that the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills made, that perhaps this is more of a point of clarification because the President of the Treasury Board did not mention any particular member, did not impugn the motives of any particular member. Above all else, I think you can also look to the intent and the context. I would respectfully submit to the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills that there has been no evidence conferred as to the intent or that any of his intent was off the actual rules.

The last thing I will say, Mr. Speaker, is that, again, whether or not something is a softball or a hardball question is up to the beholder to decide. That’s not part of this point of order.

The Speaker: Well, thank you, hon. members. I’ve heard enough on this. I’ve reviewed the Blues as well, and let me just for purposes of the record state the following. At approximately 2:23

this afternoon the Minister of Finance stood and said the following:

You know, Mr. Speaker, it is important to note because one of the things that is difficult is when folks in the opposition or other stakeholders decide to try to scare Albertans or to promote fear to try to change their minds.

Mr. Speaker, it’s important to note that the changes that we’re proposing will only apply to benefits earned after 2015, so benefits that members have already earned and earn up to the end of 2015 are not affected.

And he went on.

In any event, we shouldn’t be trying to use this time and a point of order to prolong any debate, but I do appreciate the clarifications.

By the same token, let’s be careful of our language. This was not particularly strong language, in my view, but it’s more the tone and the timbre with which sometimes our words get delivered that should be paid attention to.

That having been said, that concludes this matter, and we’re going to move on.

Orders of the Day

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I’d like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Supplementary Supply Estimates 2013-14 General Revenue Fund

The Chair: Before we commence the consideration of supplementary supply, I would like to briefly review the standing orders governing the speaking rotation. As you know, the Assembly approved amendments to the standing orders that impact supplementary supply consideration. As provided for in Standing Order 59.02, the rotation in Standing Order 59.01(6) is deemed to apply, which is as follows:

- (a) the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister’s behalf, may make opening comments not to exceed 10 minutes,
- (b) for the hour that follows, members of the Official Opposition and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister’s behalf, may speak,
- (c) for the next 20 minutes, the members of the third party, if any, and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister’s behalf, may speak,
- (d) for the next 20 minutes, the members of the fourth party, if any, and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister’s behalf, may speak,
- (e) for the next 20 minutes, private members of the Government caucus and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister’s behalf, may speak, and
- (f) any Member may speak thereafter.

During the above rotation speaking times are limited to 10 minutes. Once the above rotation is complete, speaking times are reduced to five minutes.

Finally, as provided for in Government Motion 44, approved by the Assembly on November 25, 2013, the time allotted for consideration is three hours.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs on behalf of the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I would like to move the 2013-2014 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund.

The estimates will provide additional spending authority to eight government departments. When passed, the estimates will authorize an increase of $624.7 million in voted operational funding and $139.6 million in voted capital funding for the government. These estimates are consistent with the amended 2013-2014 fiscal plan, presented as an appendix to these estimates.

The estimates will authorize increases for the departments of Aboriginal Relations, Agriculture and Rural Development, Education, Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, Human Services, Infrastructure, Municipal Affairs, and Transportation. The ministers that are responsible for these departments will be pleased to answer any questions from the members of the House.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, if the House leaders would send me a list of your speakers, because of the specific rotation it might be helpful for me.

I recognize the hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm happy to rise and speak to this supplementary supply bill that we received yesterday. I first want to comment that, again, I do not feel it is appropriate for the government to put a document of this size and dealing with this kind of money in front of us less than roughly 12 hours before we're actually supposed to address it in this House. That's not an appropriate amount of time to give the Official Opposition and the members of the Liberal and ND caucuses an opportunity to go through line by line, figure things out, cross-check, ask the ministry questions in advance, and be adequately prepared to make sure that we have what we need in this supplementary supply bill. There's been no opportunity for consultation.

We know what the supplementary supply is essentially about; it's about flood funding. Obviously, everyone in this House is in favour of making sure that we have the money that we need for reconstruction and relief efforts and so forth for the floods of this past summer, but in order to do a proper job of that – clearly, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the government and so forth have done research and have looked into this, and I'm sure they're very confident in what they're proposing in this document.

But without an opportunity to even brief us – I've not been briefed as the Finance critic for the Official Opposition. I've not had an opportunity to go over it with the Finance minister. Our critics have not had the opportunity to go over it; for example, the Municipal Affairs critic has not had an opportunity to be briefed by the Municipal Affairs minister on this issue, to go over it and to understand in full detail. And that's not just the Municipal Affairs minister. That applies to also the ministries of Aboriginal Relations, Agriculture and Rural Development, Education, Environment and SRD, Human Services, Infrastructure, Municipal Affairs, as I've said, and Transportation.

We're talking about $624 million in operational funding here, more than half a billion dollars, and, in addition, roughly $140 million in capital. That's a lot of money. That's a ton of money. We're not saying that it's not necessary money; it likely is. But how can we as an opposition and how can Albertans in general do the job of making sure that this is the right amount of money? Perhaps we need more; perhaps we need less. Who knows?

As the opposition we have had no opportunity to review this properly. This was put on our desks late last night. We come here. Obviously, we have to get ready for the day and question period and so forth. We had our entire research staff working on this as hard as they could. They, you know, helped us prepare as best we could with the half an hour to 45 minutes that we got. We've had no help from the ministries. Once again, it's a tired, tired pattern, and I fear from the government motions that we just heard prior to going into committee here the possibility of sitting all weekend on some things.

Mr. Chair, this is not good government. It's not good government. Proper process leads to good government. When you undermine the process by dumping things on the public, you end up with things like Bill 28 and the effect that that has had on the trust of this government with regard to our municipalities. Even if 95 per cent of what's in there was okay, it's the fact that there was no consultation and there was no chance for feedback that has caused the problem. Now, there was backtracking on that, and, hopefully, we're going to get a better bill next week and so forth.

Mr. Griffiths: Relevance?

Mr. Anderson: Again, as it was with Bill 28 – and I see that the Municipal Affairs minister is asking about relevance. Of course, he is a little bit tender on this topic of Bill 28, but that's okay. We understand his tenderness.

The supplementary supply estimates, Mr. Chair, have been dumped on us, much like Bill 28 was dumped on us, and we have very little time to go over them and, frankly, to ask the ministry some questions on these things. So our critics are going to do the best that they can. We hope that the ministers opposite will answer the questions, which would be a nice thing for them to do in this case. This could have been done previously in a briefing session, but I'm sure it's going to take longer than it otherwise would. Granted, they've given us a whole three hours to debate more than $700 million in financing. A whole three hours. That's good government. They've given us a whole three hours to kind of understand fully what's in this bill.

Honestly, guys. Please. I mean, you're the majority in your caucus. Can you please help your leadership understand that good government comes out of good processes and good legislative processes and co-operation and doing things previous to dumping it in the Legislature, doing the proper consultation with opposition and stakeholder groups, not just plumping it on the ground here, especially when you're dealing with this much money?

Now, obviously, the MLAs in this caucus represent areas that were probably, frankly, the most affected areas of the flood. There obviously are some on the government side who are MLAs of areas that were flooded extensively as well, including the Premier, the Member for Calgary-Bow, and others. Obviously, the worst flooding certainly happened in the Highwood area and also on the First Nations reservations and places like Strathmore-Brooks. Obviously, Banff-Cochrane was another area very hard hit.

We are very in tune and very aware of the need for flood funding. We think, and we've said this many times, that the initial government response to the flooding was good. It was solid. We had very few deaths. We had, obviously, pain and suffering, and those things are unavoidable in a tragedy of this magnitude, but I think all efforts were undertaken to alleviate that pain and suffering as much as possible. That was good.

There were some hiccups as well. No doubt about that. The first few days of treatment of the local MLAs, particularly the MLA for Highwood and her constituency, in my view, was inexcusable. She has to, as any MLA here does, inform her constituents of the relief programs and the most up-to-date information because she's right on the ground, living in the community, she knows the contacts, and so forth. There seemed to be a pretty active effort to freeze her out in the beginning. That seemed to take care of itself as it went forward, and perhaps some credit is due to the Member for Calgary-South East for smoothing that over and bringing her into the briefing circle and so forth. That has been good.

It's been very disappointing to see the Premier continually take offence to the Member for Highwood advocating for her constituency on the flood as she constantly does. I think that shows smallness on her part in that regard. I would say that on the whole the government has done a reasonable job in the first response, the initial relief effort for the flood.

Now, that's the area where they've done well. Where they had a failing grade was preparedness. Their flood mitigation infrastructure was not in place. They can say what they want about implementing X amount of the 2005 flood mitigation report from Member Groeneveld at the time, but the fact of the matter is that instead of spending $350-odd million on flood mitigation efforts, they decided to spend $350 million on new MLA offices. That lack of prioritization – the money was clearly there. I look at it out of my window every day, what $350 million could buy. Now, would that mitigation have stopped all of the flooding? No, it sure wouldn't have, but it would have gone a long way.

I look forward to continued debate on this.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Your time has expired.

I'll recognize the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to rise to speak to the 2013-2014 supplementary supply, which, of course, deals with eight different ministries within government. I'd like to echo the comments from the Member for Airdrie. We just got notice of this. We're dealing with millions and millions of dollars, yet the government doesn't feel like it's necessary to have a fulsome debate on it. You're essentially giving very little notice and only three hours to debate a significant amount of expenditures. Of course, the vast majority of these funds that are going to be expended is for the flood effort, and I'm sure all members of this Assembly agree with that. At the same time, we have to be frugal and vigilant with taxpayer money, and the requirement there is that we have sufficient notice, that we're sufficiently briefed, and that we work co-operatively together to ensure that taxpayers' dollars are respected.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's potentially a symptom of a government that's been in power for over 42 years, where they don't feel that the opposition should have a role in ensuring that taxpayers' dollars are respected. It's consistent with what I would call the draconian measures that were put forward by the Government House Leader this afternoon in his motions, which I'm sure will have a significant effect on the flow of legislation later throughout this session.

Of course, we know that a significant amount of dollars that are expended in the flood relief is going to be reimbursed through the federal program, and we look forward to seeing how much of those monies is in fact reimbursed.

I would just like to highlight a few things. Of course, as was mentioned by the Member for Airdrie, on the mitigation front there was a report done by a former minister, Mr. Groeneveld, and what this government did is what they do in many cases. They kept the report secret. They wouldn't release it, nor did they act on it. They essentially had the report on their desk and let it collect dust. Mr. Speaker, they essentially, you know, threw the report in the garbage. If you're not going to act on the measures in a report, then what's the point of doing the report in the first place? What was the rationale for the secrecy, for not releasing the report? Of course, it was subsequently released, and the fact is that they never implemented many of the significant material recommendations that were put forward by Mr. Groeneveld.

Mr. Speaker, obviously, there are eight different ministries. There's a significant amount of funds being expended, but with such short notice and absolutely zero briefing to members of the opposition it's difficult to discuss measures of such magnitude when the government feels that there's no need to discuss them. The evidence that they feel there's no need to discuss them is the fact that they've given minimal notice and a minimal amount of time to discuss the supplementary supply estimates.

Of course, everyone here would agree that any funds that are necessary for the flood relief should in fact be expended, and my understanding just in the short amount of time that we've had to review these documents is that a substantial amount of the money that's being requested here is in fact related to disaster programs in each of these departments. You look at Aboriginal Relations, Agriculture, Education, Transportation, Infrastructure projects. Of course, I support measures that go towards that.

I would also mention that this is why it's important that during the good times you actually save money. You put money in a sustainability fund so that if a rainy day does happen, you have those funds available for you because you just never know what's going to happen. But instead of being wise with taxpayer dollars, we see spending on things like $350 million for brand new MLA offices. Perhaps that money could go towards mitigation projects. You see millions of dollars going towards severances to individuals with close ties to a particular party. Perhaps those dollars could in fact go towards things like mitigation projects.

On this particular supplementary supply we'll be voting in favour despite very little time, very little notice by the government in terms of putting this forward. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: I recognize the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, rise and appreciate the chance to talk for a few minutes on the 2013-2014 supplementary supply estimates. I'm very, very pleased to see some quick action by the government. Again, I want to come back and talk about my displeasure with the process, how we get one day to look at this.

As many people in this House know, the 2010 flood that hit my constituency of Cypress-Medicine Hat – I've talked about how it was estimated to be a 1-in-350-year occurrence, how many constituents who went to bed that night with water nowhere near them had to swim for it. Although it's been reported that a large part of the process to finish up claims from this flood almost four years later is a function of people not getting their paperwork in and a function of waiting for estimates and whatnot, part of the truth is that people have walked away from the process because of the length of time it's taken. People have walked away from the process because of the uncertainty of how and when they're going to be paid out.

So something happened that will help many, many of the people of southern Alberta that were affected by this most recent disaster, which can get some money to people that need it and get money into the hands of people that were affected greatly by this flood and unable to have recourse through their insurance companies. As a matter of fact, the operator of the Medicine Hat food bank called me the other day, about two weeks ago, almost four months after the flood, and said: please do what you can to hurry up the response and the help to this flood; we're still servicing too many people from the flood at the food bank because of situations like they're paying for their existing property, that was flooded, and, of course, have to pay to maintain a second residence.

I remember a flood way back in 1995. There was a situation where people actually bought the house next door to them because their family was growing. They put it on the market, couldn't sell it, and decided to rent it out to make sure they could cover both of their payments. Good Albertans wanting to pay their own way. When the flood hit, believe it or not, the one they lived in didn't get hit; the one they rented out did. Because it was a revenue property, it didn't qualify under the disaster relief programs. It was not rentable or habitable anymore, so it created a huge financial hardship. I'm hearing instances of this again. A 40-year-old government with 20, 25 years between floods: it's amazing how these things get left on the table and don't get handled.

The process, to get this yesterday and not have time to analyze it, to ask questions, to reach out to our stakeholders: again, that's flawed. Somebody told me that the Canadian Senate costs about what the Alberta Legislature costs. I certainly hope we all strive to be as effective and as efficient as we can. I would hope that getting information earlier, sooner, and in more quality and quantity would be a good thing.

We saw today that the government is not against working with the opposition when it turns out to be to their advantage. Amazingly, with these underreported deaths in government care for all these years, all of a sudden they want to reach out to us and work with us. That is a good thing. That is a very good thing. Please do it more often.

Again, part of the reason that I'm in support of this and appreciative of the chance to talk about it is that it is going to speed up the disaster relief to Cypress-Medicine Hat and to all of southern Alberta. Fort McMurray was also involved in this, so let's not forget that there were a lot of people and not-for-profit organizations up there that were affected that are probably involved in this.

I would like to ask a couple of questions, though, when the government has their chance to stand up if they wish. I see that 33 and a half million dollars is for Transportation to improve roads and bridges. That's important. It's important in our commodity-based province to get going as fast as we can. We recall the Auditor General's report from a year ago, that many bridge inspections had been neglected to be done. Obviously, the fast-flowing water may have compromised some, so I trust that the Transportation minister will ensure the safety of our roads and our people.

One of the questions I have, though, is that I see that in the last budget for water management infrastructure, Transportation cut $11 million and is now adding $6 million. I'd be curious to know if this $6 million is in direct response to the flood damage. I understand that the numbers that we can recoup from the federal government are somewhere between 65 and 90 per cent. I'd be curious: how much of this could we recapture from the federal government?

I'm also wondering, of course, if that money had been spent, could it have mitigated some of this? The flood mitigation is still an amazing thing to me. I had a question in here a month or so ago about the former MLA who prepared the report and actually stated: someday we may get caught for not doing this work; someday it may come back to haunt us, that this wasn't done, and what will we say then? Well, here we are looking at $761 million. Part of that member's answer is that $751 million may not have had to be spent. If I remember the number right, the flood mitigation number was some side of $330 million, so you guys are twice penny-wise and pound foolish. Way to go, guys. You know, that's interesting to see.

I see that the Infrastructure minister is asking for a hundred million to buy flooded-out homes. Again, necessary and important for people. This huge disaster was beyond their control. Let's get at it as soon as we can. Let's treat them fair, and let's treat the taxpayers fair on this as well. I'm wondering, though, why this hundred million is being touted as operational and not as capital. Is there a plan to resell the lots? Is there a plan to turn the lots over to the municipalities for parks? How far along are we on that? Again, it seems slightly odd to me, and I'd hope for some clarification that that hundred million is being considered as operational and not capital.

Also, the Infrastructure department is asking for $5 million for planning a community resources centre for High River. As I read this, it's for planning only. Is this $5 million going to be on the three-year capital plan and then maybe disappear again in a year without ever being done? You know, soft costs in the construction industry generally relate to about 7 or 8 per cent of the total project. So if planning is $5 million and engineering is $5 million – I can obviously only guess – are we thinking of spending $120 million in High River for a community resources centre? Maybe it's money well spent. Maybe it's good value. I would like to hear and I'm sure everybody in this House would like to hear a little bit about what the government's intentions are.

Again, I'm looking at the process. I'm looking at a situation where we get a day's notice with this in the middle of our MLAs, our LAs, and our communications and research staff working very, very thoroughly, very, very hard, and very, very capably to get the information on these laws and bills, that are already on our desks in front of us, that we need to spend some proper time on.

You know, three days, 72 hours. As the Member for Airdrie said, a chance to consult between ministers and critics could have gone a long way to make the process of spending Albertans' tax money – and there is only one taxpayer, whether the federal government recuses 65 or 90 per cent of this for us. The process of being more careful in how we spend Alberta taxpayers' money I think is a good step and a step that I'd like to see more and more often. I'd like to see it done all of the time.

Disaster relief, if part of this 600 and some-odd million dollars in operational can go as soon as possible and as fairly as possible to people that were affected through no fault of their own in this great disaster . . .

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the next speaker. The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise today to speak to the 2013-14 supplementary supply estimates general revenue fund motions that are here before us. I find it, like my colleagues, kind of interesting that we got this a day ago, maybe even a day ago. I think I remember seeing e-mails at midnight last night from research staff looking for copies of this thing because it still wasn't available on the website at that point.

But, you know, I digress. I guess that's what this government thinks of Albertans and the democratic process. We just roll right over it and keep going and do what you want to do without giving time for oversight. That is really what the Official Opposition is here to do. We are here to be the oversight of the government, to point out errors, to be able to go through this and make sure that Albertans are getting the very best value for their dollar out of this government. But when you've only got an hour or two to prep for this because that's all that the government is willing to give you, it really speaks a lot to how you feel about Albertans and how you feel about them knowing what you're putting forth in these documents.

Looking at it here, there's $624,737,000 of operational spending in this presentation from the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance. On top of that there's another $139,560,000 of capital spending. All told, that's $764,297,000 in spending from this government. And how much time is this government giving to debate and to do oversight for Albertans? Three hours. Three hours. Can you believe that? I can't believe that. Three hours. Over half a billion dollars is going to be spent . . .

An Hon. Member: Three-quarters of a billion.

Mr. Fox: Three-quarters, that's right. Three-quarters of a billion dollars is going to be spent or has already been spent, and you're giving Albertans through their elected representatives three hours to look over these documents, to bring it forth in a public venue such as this to talk about what this government is doing.

You know, there's probably a lot of good things in here that the government is spending money on. I mean, there is the rebuilding of the province after the disastrous June floods. It's something that the government has got to do, but Albertans deserve to know how you're doing it and how you're spending those funds. You need to give them the ability to do the due diligence, to figure out what it is that you guys are doing. Unless you've got something to hide, but you wouldn't have anything to hide, would you? I mean, I asked the Minister of Service Alberta today about privatizing land titles, but no answer on that. I don't know if he's hiding something or not.

I guess we'll have to come back and ask him again, just like we're going to have to ask you a few more questions about this 2013-14 supplementary supply estimates booklet that you've given us here to look over. You've given Albertans less than, well, 24 hours to look at it before you're voting on it. Less than 24 hours for three-quarters of a billion dollars. Is that really respect to the Alberta taxpayer? I don't think so. I don't think that's respect to my constituents, to only give them 24 hours before a motion to have a look at what this government is spending three-quarters of a billion dollars on.

You know, looking at this, there are more than 40 pages of spending figures. Forty pages of spending figures, less than 24 hours. How many Albertans woke up this morning even knowing that this was sitting on our desks, that we were going to be debating this today? Aside from maybe friends at stakeholder groups like the CFIB or the CTF or our fellow colleagues here in the Legislature, other MLAs, really, I don't think Albertans even saw this, even knew this was coming out last night. I mean, there was a quick motion last night. We adjourned. We came back here to do question period, and here we are, well, not even barely two hours later, and we're discussing three-quarters of a billion dollars in spending.

Now, when we look through this, what is this being spent on? Let's see. Aboriginal Relations here, the amount is $50 million which is requested "to relocate, renovate or rebuild flood-affected homes in First Nations communities." Well, that is something that we must do, so, yeah, I'm in agreement with that one. Communities that were affected by the flood were Siksika Nation, Morley, and also Tsuu T'ina. So we see that the government is actually doing good work on this. They're actually spending the money here where it needs to be spent. Good for you, guys. We'll clap for you on that one.

Let's see. Agriculture and Rural Development. They are receiving an extra $19.115 million in operational spending. This is for business relief. It's interesting that in this flood you guys are actually going to put money out there, but in the last flood that affected central Alberta I actually had farmers contact me because they never got any rebuilding money when their crops were lying in the field rotting. I'm glad to see that at least this time the government has learned its lesson and is actually going to cover some of these costs.

In Education there's an additional $9 million in spending, and the money is going to be going to support school boards in High River, Canmore, and Exshaw. These boards have seen a sudden decline in enrolment, and they need to be topped up, so I'm happy to see that those funds are going there. What is interesting, though, is that there are really no capital amounts included here in the supplementary supply estimates for Education, so I'm wondering how much money is actually going to be spent and how it's going to be spent to rebuild some of the schools that are in that area. I mean, not only were homes and businesses affected, but, as we know, government infrastructure was affected as well.

I mean, schools are some of the most important government infrastructure in this province because that's where we're educating a future generation to take over and lead us into the brave new world which is the future. It would be interesting to see what is going to be spent on the capital amount there. We'd heard rumours – actually, it wasn't a rumour; it was in the papers – about a temporary gymnasium in the Premier's riding. I'm wondering where in the supplementary estimates that one fell. Maybe it was just funds being shifted around in the ministry. I don't know. We haven't had a chance to ask the minister that one, and I'm not sure we're going to get the opportunity to ask the minister that one in these budget estimates. Maybe he'll be kind enough to stand up at some point here this afternoon in the just over two hours we have left on this. Maybe he'll stand up and answer that question, where the capital spending is on the flood relief, because it's not in the supplementary supply estimates for 2013-14.

Moving on here, Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. We know that there is going to be some extra money being voted in here as well. I mean, it is in this booklet that was handed out less than 24 hours ago. There's some mention in the 2013-14 supplementary estimates on environment and sustainable resources. What's being voted on here? An extra $2 million in operations and an extra $101 million in capital. Jeez. That's over a third of what was asked for in the 2006 flood mitigation report. I wonder if it would have been wise to spend at least a third back then to figure out how we could mitigate some of these damages or how to deal with overland flooding. There were some recommendations there. It was – what? – $300 million that was reported in that report that would be needed to upgrade the province here.

You know, there were some interesting things in there like updating flood maps yearly. How much was that amount? I think, if I remember correctly, it was a $50,000 amount per year, one full-time employee through the ministry of environment. Fifty-thousand dollars doesn't seem like a lot of money to have spent six years ago on figuring out where the rivers are actually flowing now. It's not like – we'd heard one member say that the maps were correct, but the rivers were wrong. That was kind of an interesting statement considering that the river is what changes over and over and over again. I mean, over history how many times have paths of the rivers changed? Maybe we should be updating those maps yearly.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you for that, Mr. Chair. I want to foray into this discussion here. It's quite significant that the amount of money that's being brought before us here in a short period of time does not allow for proper discussion. The reason for this facility, for this Chamber, is open discussion, and with the appropriation of approximately three-quarters of a billion dollars of funding that's coming forward, it certainly deserves significant time and discussion and back and forth on that. That's my reason for getting involved in this discussion going forward.

As the critic for Tourism, Parks and Rec I see on one page, page 3, that there's some allocation for an increase in budget there, but on other pages there doesn't seem to be. It's not singularly carried out as a line item. I, too, would like to ask some questions on that.

I also see that there's some changing of funding to Alberta Agriculture, and I have interest there because there is a mention of a special project in my constituency. I know that the minister has made some inquiries in that regard in my constituency, so I'd like to understand how these budgets will be brought forward in those types of situations.

It's a responsibility that we have in this Chamber, and it's a significant, honourable duty that we have to bring forward these discussions with the ultimate sincerity. I have a situation in my constituency where there has been some improprieties with taxpayers' dollars, and as of today I'm just editing a letter to put out to my constituents in that regard about the misappropriation of taxpayers' dollars that's occurred in that county in my constituency.

There's a lot of importance to the funds that are brought forward here, and I would like to have a chance to debate them at a greater length at another time. It's part of the significance of the responsibilities that we have in this Chamber. Even the Speaker earlier on had made mention that 2015 will be the 800-year anniversary of the Magna Carta, the ability for members to bring forward a democratic discussion. I believe that proper allocation of taxpayers' funding and money towards any sort of new debate, new development that's required does not need to be done in a frivolous manner and is not to be taken lightly.

With that, Mr. Chair, I yield my position to another member.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm fairly disappointed on the methodology that's been employed by this government to basically railroad this bill through. There are so many variations of the issues that have to be addressed, that need to be discussed on how we're going to handle flood mitigation, on how we're going to spend money and even track the money that's been spent. It defies the logic of this House. I mean, we've gone through a number of issues where this government has talked about transparency and accountability, and what we have here is very little opportunity to actually look at this spending bill and to really, you know, drill down into how this is being applied and how this is being managed so that we have some sort of consistency with the various factions of what's happening.

Let me explain. In 2005 the town of Sundre experienced a 200-year flood. In 2013 the province experiences a 100-year flood. Now, this is a bit of an oxymoron because you can't have a 200-year flood and a 100-year flood just years apart and continue down this road, calling the next storm the 100-year flood. We should at least have 100 years between them, I mean, statistically.

But what we're doing here in many ways is risking wasting of a lot of money by not doing what we're supposed to do, by not doing what we should be doing. I'll give you an example. In the community of Sundre not just 100 but hundreds of citizens gathered together and protested to have this government do something about the river, do something about flood mitigation. We know that $2.4 million was spent on things like berms and spurs to help the community of Sundre except we have one problem that has happened moving forward, which is that we've had another 100-year flood, and the river has moved over a mile. We have a government that says: we do not have to define what is a flood plain, we do not define what is a floodway or a flood fringe, but we're going to make maps to show these things. That makes no sense to me. To claim that we're going to use scientific data from some other source makes absolutely no sense because you should put in legislation what definition you're going to use. If you're going to use the Environment and Sustainable Resource definition, then make it so. Say that that's what it's going to be.

That's not what this government has done. It has made it so that it is – I think I'm going to quote an hon. member – off in the wind. That just doesn't make sense. I look at the damage that was done in the community of Sundre back during the 2000 flood. We lost the whole development of Coyote Creek. It was under water. The Coal Camp Road and the Bergen Road homes were damaged. The River Road homes were damaged. The Mountain Aire Lodge was damaged. The amount of damage went into the multimillions of dollars.

We move forward to this flood and this supplemental budget. The Garrington Bridge was destroyed and impassable. The Coyote Creek development again goes back under water. The riverbanks immediately adjacent to the river in Sundre were damaged and destroyed. River Road homes were destroyed. The Mountain Aire Lodge was destroyed, and Coal Camp Road was again destroyed.

Here we have a situation where we move from the 2005 flood to the 2013 flood, and what we have is no change whatsoever in the preparation or the flood mitigation, preparing for and mitigating a natural disaster. Now, what we know is that in 2013 2,000 cubic metres per second was recorded in the Red Deer River. That is incredibly high given the history of the river. We also know the river rose 12 metres.

Now, the community of Sundre would say that they were spared a bullet, that they got lucky because the amount of damage that the community of . . . [An electronic device sounded] Did you signal me, Mr. Chair?

The Chair: It sounded like somebody's phone was vibrating on a desk, hon. member. But carry on. I don't want to waste any of your time. Please.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. There is lots of side noise in here, but I'm going to speak through it anyway. That doesn't matter.

An Hon. Member: It's in your head.

Mr. Anglin: Well, I mean, let's face it. If there's no common sense across the room, I might as well speak to the no common sense. I'm going to try to drive some sense into them. That's the whole point.

I mean, how do you make maps when you don't define what you're drawing on a map? How do you spend money based on those maps and spend it efficiently if you don't have any definition as to what you're doing?

I have a community that suffered tremendously in 2005. Move forward; they suffered tremendously in 2012. We've forgotten that. This is a community that has suffered time and time again. They actually suffered a tremendous amount of damage in 2013, and I can't find one person that qualified for or received aid from this government. They've been denied time and time and time again. That's unfortunate.

We have spent money there in the past, but if we don't do it right, we're about to wash all that down the river in next spring's flood. That doesn't make sense to waste that kind of money. We need to be more efficient, we need to be more frugal, and we need to get the best value for the money that we spend. So to do a little bit of flood mitigation within and around that small community of Sundre but to not address the larger problem of the river and the floodway on that river, which is further upriver, we risk wasting all that money we spent just a couple of years ago.

There's nothing here in this budget that shows that we're going to do anything, but what we do know is this. We're going to do yet one more study. I have to tell you that the number of studies that have been done on the Red Deer River for flood mitigation is almost enough to make a dam. We don't need another study. We need to act on an engineering plan, and that's not here. We don't want to be throwing money away. We want to be spending it wisely, and that's not what we're seeing here.

It's very frustrating for me trying to get an answer from the minister of environment on this issue. It's extremely frustrating because we've met with her. This is a minister who has basically poooh-pooohed the idea of pollution in the Athabasca River when it's probably the worst disaster known in Canada, in the history of Canada, of pollution going down the river, the heavy metals and toxins. It's a minister who said that gravel renews itself, and we know that's not true. That doesn't happen. I suppose if the next glacier comes through, we'll get some renewable gravel, but we'll have to wait a little while for that. With these kinds of comments coming out of the ministry, how can we expect from this minister that she will address this issue correctly and pragmatically and intelligently? We don't have that confidence.

What we don't have is the ability to really delve in and drill down into this bill to look at being more efficient in how we want to deal with this matter. What we have as a direct result is an entire community at risk, and that is tragic because if we don't spend what little we need to spend now in flood mitigation in the proper areas and take the proper action, we're going to have hundreds of millions of dollars in damage. More at risk are lives. As we've heard in the last couple of days when talking about children that were in the care of this government, in many ways the . . .

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Can I defer my time to Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre to give him an extra 10 minutes?

The Chair: You've got a total of 10 minutes. You've got till 4:05 p.m. between you.

Mr. McAllister: I can tell you, Mr. Chair, that I won't need the entire 10 minutes.

Let's try something a little different. I recognize that a lot of people watch these proceedings and wonder what we're on and on and on about, so this is what we ought to be discussing. We're looking at ways to get $625 million into the hands that need it for flood recovery. There is no member in here that wouldn't recognize that what we've gone through is going to require immediate action and that the sooner we can help out individuals, the better. There are communities that need to rebuild.

I cannot see us needing to oppose it, but we do have to in our role as Official Opposition find out why and where this money is going and what it is going to be doing. The point of the exercise, I guess, is to make sure, you know, that we're justifying value for the taxpayers. Our responsibility going forward is to the taxpayer so that these communities can rebuild. Again, just to point out, Mr. Chair, that $625 million is a great amount of money, so it shouldn't be just rubber-stamped.

I was going to get to my question right now, but I'm going to delay it for about 30 seconds because I think it's the appropriate thing to do here so that we can prepare for a response. I will say wholeheartedly, Mr. Chair, as I look at the Education portion of the supplementary estimate, that we have $9,050,000 going to boards that need it. I'm not exactly sure where, but I'll be the last person to stand here and say that they're not going to need it given what they're going through in Education right now. I cannot see any reason why I would not support it wholeheartedly. But as the Minister of Municipal Affairs said at the very beginning of this, the point of this debate is to have the ministers in this House so that we might ask them the appropriate questions, and then they could give us the answers, and those people watching at home can understand where their tax dollars are going.

Maybe I'm giving the Education minister a puffball question for once, Mr. Chair, but I think it's appropriate. I would like to ask the Minister of Education if he wants to respond – I hope that he does – to where the $9,050,000 is going and if he could itemize it for us. As the Minister of Municipal Affairs said off the top, you know, the ministers would be here to answer these questions. My question to him would be: could he itemize the list of where this money is going and again just reaffirm as to why it's needed? I think it's important that we do that.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Good afternoon. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak to this totally unexpected situation we have today with a lot of great angst. It is difficult to understand how we as a government process can proceed with a situation here where we're actually talking about $764 million, according to page 8 in this estimates booklet, with only just a few hours to have a moment or two to even page through what is contained in these pages here regarding all of these departments that are involved.

As many would know, I've spent some time in government work, whether it's been municipal council work and planning work and so on, and never have I ever in my lifetime expected that the government did these things in this manner, where they would dump this kind of information on someone late at night the night before and expect it to be able to be debated the next day with such an enormous amount of detail that is normally required for something like this. It seems absolutely appalling.

Nonetheless, we're here, and I can say only that I have paged through some of it. I know what it's all about. It's about the need for monies to help Alberta get back on its feet with regard to what has happened and what, as has been said by the media, is one of the largest disasters we've ever seen in Canada. I have no specific problem with trying to get this recovery program on its feet and going. It makes simple sense to do that. There are hundreds and hundreds, thousands, of people in my riding alone that were greatly affected.

I spent a lot of time going through some of this information beforehand. I'm surprised that we can't spend a little more time.

Mr. Chairman, I realize my time is drawing to a close.

The Chair: You're still good, hon. member. There are four minutes left for your entire time however you choose to use it.

Mr. Stier: Okay. Thank you, then.

I'd just like to say that if we're going to be spending this kind of money, let's for sure hope that they're going to take some of the information that we think is appropriate, obtain that information properly, fly the rivers and stream beds and the towns and the city that is involved, get the elevations, get the surveys done, do the lidar mapping, get the right data, and then, for God's sake, take that information and put it together in an appropriately engineered plan and look at the mitigation solutions, cumulatively or not, that we can look at to try to get these things addressed.

Most importantly, let the people know what their disaster recovery program really entails. Give them more time to look at what the future could bring. Give them more time to understand how the caveat system works. Ensure that they have the caveat information in front of them. For those that may be getting bought out, look at those bits of information and ensure that everyone knows fully what could be imposed and what the implications could be. I think that only makes simple sense.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'm going to relinquish the remaining few minutes I might have here. I would like to say that it is extremely appalling to me that we're having to hurry through something that's so important. I only hope from this, despite the process, that we can come out of this with a good plan and that it can move forward in a meaningful way.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills for approximately two and a half minutes.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I think we all realize that this is a one in a hundred year, hopefully a one in a hundred and fifty year incident, and the cost to all Albertans is significant, so we need to be a little careful about how we're doing this and make sure that the tax dollars are being spent. Three-quarters of a billion dollars in this supplementary supply doesn't seem like a whole lot of money when we look at the total of what this event is going to end up costing us. We fully understand the need for this money, but we still need to be extremely careful that we're spending three-quarters of a billion dollars in the right place.

I just have a few points to make here. The amount of $50 million is requested "to relocate, renovate or rebuild flood-affected homes in First Nations communities to provincial standards." Kudos to the government for addressing this issue. I would hope that somewhere in the very near future the federal government will pick up most of this cost as it should be a federal issue and not a provincial issue, but if the feds aren't going to step up to the plate and address the issue immediately, then we definitely need to do that.

The Education estimate includes $9,050,000 in spending. We all know that that's money that's needed, but I would like to point out that over 50 per cent of this amount was spent in the Premier's own riding to renovate one school and put up a temporary gymnasium. There seems to be a little inequity here when one constituency gets 50 per cent of this amount of funding for three communities.

I'd also like to draw attention to some of the Municipal Affairs issues: $378,572,000 of this amount is Municipal Affairs, and it will all be operational spending. In the budget estimates last spring I did point out that the Alberta emergency . . .

The Chair: Unfortunately, your time has expired. There may be some time later on. I thank you for your comments.

I will now recognize the member from the third party, and you have 10 minutes.

Mr. Hehr: I'd like to start with a point of clarification, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Please do.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I've come to the conclusion that I may be wasting my time here. I'm hoping you can enlighten me as to why I'm wrong and what, in fact, this exercise is, because it appears to me to be one of futility. In my five years previous here when we have done supplementary supply estimates, I've been of the understanding that the opposition MLAs split their time between asking questions and ministers responding to try and give us some information as to what, in fact, is going on. That has happened the last five years, and that has been how it was done. I'm wondering whether you could enlighten me as to whether there's been a change in that process. I know the Deputy Government House Leader is here. Maybe he could explain to me why that process isn't being followed, because this appears to me to be absolutely ridiculous.

The Chair: Actually, hon. member, if you noted in my comments earlier, I mentioned that the time that is allocated actually has the potential to be between yourself and the minister in whatever fashion is desirable by both sides. If you choose to use the time to make a statement, that is perfectly fine. If you choose to ask the minister a question, the opportunity is there for the minister to respond.

Mr. Hehr: Well, with the ministers here, is that the process that we deem going forward? I ask the government if we'd participate in that. I can ask them questions. I believe there are seven or eight ministers of the Crown. They can get up and answer on behalf of their colleagues or do the best they can. Does that seem like a reasonable process, or are we going to keep jerking each other around here all afternoon?

The Chair: Well, the process as I outlined it, hon. member, is that the Minister of Finance or his designate – as it turned out, the motion was moved by the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. In his absence, apparently, you are able to ask another minister of the Crown to offer, if he or she is able, some comment.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Chair, do they have a designate here today? Who would be the designate? I know that in years before the hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs was the designate that we could ask questions of. Does the government at least have a designate here that we can ask these questions of if the minister is not here?

The Chair: Hon. member, the rules allow that any member of the Executive Council is able to answer your question. If the particular one that you would prefer to ask is not immediately available, feel free to direct your question to someone else who might be able to assist you.

So with that, I'm going to start the clock on your 10 minutes. You can hopefully use the time to the best of your ability.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. In any event, my questions are going to be surrounding what I feel are the appropriations being made and applications made under DRP funding and whether we are going to expect all of that money back from the federal government or if there's going to be a shortfall. I've heard estimates that this flood could cost us $6 billion and that, roughly speaking, the federal government will give us $3 billion back. I do note that many of these expenditures may or may not be covered by the federal government. I'd appreciate hearing from the ministers here about what their estimates are, how much will be covered, and how much will not.

So noting that the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development is here, could I ask him what this $19 million of expenditures is for, what he believes is the amount we will receive back from the federal government, and if he could give us some details about what that spending is.

The Chair: Hon. minister, if you could. Or we could ask another minister to supplement. Go ahead.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. There may have been some confusion over what the plan was here, but I'm ready to answer questions that are specific to my ministry. If there are ministers who are not available, then we certainly would take the question under advisement and undertake to get answers. I will deal with questions that directly relate to Agriculture. I can start there. I've been sitting, listening patiently, and so far I haven't had direct, specific questions for my ministry. I'm going to make a few introductory comments, and then I'll endeavour to answer the question from the hon. member.

I just want to reflect a little bit on what the experience was for me and my ministry when this event happened. The urge was to get in a car or on a plane and get down to the scene of the event as quickly as possible. I resisted that, and I was on the phone a lot, talking to a lot of people involved with feedlots, irrigation, various types of agricultural production, and what I was hearing mostly was that the event was largely a river event. Producers have insurance. They have the ability to buy crop insurance and so on, so a lot of what we were concerned about was covered by insurance.

One of the things that I was very nervous about was our irrigation infrastructure. I talked to a number of people with various irrigation councils, and we dodged a bullet when it came to the irrigation infrastructure. We most certainly had damage, but it could have been far, far worse.

The focus of our department slowly evolved to a focus of rebuilding business. I want to acknowledge the leadership of the Premier on this. She was very decisive, and I think she also remembered the experience that we had had with Slave Lake. We had some devastating damage to property and business in Slave Lake, and it so happened that AFSC, Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, which my ministry is responsible for, played a major role in helping to rebuild.

So, very quickly, AFSC was asked to get involved in working on a program that would assist businesses to rebuild. Along with consultation with other ministries such as Enterprise and Advanced Education, we had a look at how many businesses potentially could be affected in the area. It's hard to predict and project exactly how many businesses might be affected and so on, but the number that we came up with, to my understanding, was 1,500 businesses. We started putting together a program that would assist...

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Chair, I asked him how much of this money he expects to get back from the federal government. It's a great speech, but...

The Chair: Okay. Hon. member, this is your time, so if you've heard enough from this minister and you'd like to make some more points, please go ahead.

Mr. Hehr: I'm just trying to clarify what I asked. How much of this money do you expect to get back from the federal government? Is it 90 cents on the dollar for all of these expenditures, or do you think there's going to be a shortfall?

The Chair: Can you answer that question, hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations?

Mr. Dallas: I sure can, Mr. Chair. If you go to, in the estimates, the amended 2013-14 fiscal plan, which is towards the back of the document, and you open the first page called Fiscal Summary – Operational Plan, the answer is right there. In the revenue section it shows the book revenue under the line item 2013 Alberta Flood Assistance Federal Transfer as $3.117 billion.

Now, if you look at the operational expense just half a page down below, you'll see a line item there that says: 2013 Alberta Flood Assistance, $4.163 billion. So the difference between those two numbers, which is just about a billion dollars, is the difference in terms of the revenue we don't expect to get back from the federal government based on the assumptions that we've made today.

I think you heard the conversation initially when the federal minister announced the funding and then the Premier's response to that, and I think everyone agreed that the number would vary, but for the purposes of estimates there has to be an estimate, and that's what this is.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. minister of agriculture would like to supplement briefly.

Mr. Olson: Just a clarification. The hon. member also asked what the $19 million from my department was. I was trying to tell him. If he's satisfied with my answer to date, then I'll just stop there and let him use his time for something else.

The Chair: Carry on, then, hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: If we can go to probably Treasury Board or his designate on this one, in Aboriginal Relations an operational supplementary amount of, I believe, $50 million was requested for the 2013 Alberta flood. I guess it was for rebuilding homes. I wonder: how many homes were affected, how many are going to be rebuilt, and are we supposed to be receiving all of that money back from the federal government in this regard?

The Chair: Hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, can you answer that?

Mr. Griffiths: Yes. I don't have the number of homes off the top of my head, but I can get you that. We've pointed out that members on-reserve are still full-fledged Albertans and that they deserve the same sort of supports that the rest of the province has received in these floods, Mr. Chairman, so we have sent a letter to the federal government highlighting exactly how much those costs are going to be to repair and rebuild the homes to provincial safety code standards. We've received no response yet, but we're very confident that the federal government will live up to their obligations and will continue to build, just like they would for the rest of the Albertans affected by the flood.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Okay. I guess this is again to the minister of the Treasury or his designate. Under Education there's an additional, I think, $9 million going to enrolment stabilization, operating supports and services for schools. Obviously, my question pertains to the fact that education is underneath the provincial government's jurisdiction and whether these supports – I don't know – fall particularly under the DRP program. Is this money going to be fully coming back from the federal government, or is there some split in the funding mechanism? Will the Alberta government be on the hook for more than the 90 per cent that we're supposed to be getting in flow-through dollars?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much. You're right. The $9 million for those communities is to stabilize the funding because, of course, when the student population is determined, we know some people won't have relocated back into their communities. It's very important to make sure that the school boards and those schools have stable funding because there will be an influx in population at some point going forward. We witnessed that, frankly, in Slave Lake. This is one of those costs that we know we need to meet, but there is nothing through the federal disaster recovery program to offset that cost that we'll incur. But we know it needs to be done, so this is one of the places where we've stepped up.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you.

Now, if we could go to the hon. Municipal Affairs minister. Many of the emergency centres that we set up: I don't believe we receive federal dollars for those under the DRP program. Can you describe under the 378 million or so dollars we spent how much you anticipate getting back from the feds under the DRP program and how much will be eaten by the Alberta treasury?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Yes. Thank you very much, hon. member, for the question. I'll just run through these so that it breaks down some of the information for you.

Out of the $378 million that Municipal Affairs is asking for, approximately $172 million of that was advances to communities, 18 municipalities in particular. Some got 25 per cent. Some requested 50 per cent because of the extent of the devastation. Those were advances that were DRP eligible.

Mr. Chairman, $54.6 million was to lead the government in our work to respond to and recover from the floods, support for flood-affected communities and to the First Nations; $25.6 million of it was for increased health care costs related to the flood, some of which was for patient evacuations, moving services, relocating folks; $25 million of it was for mental health services advanced in this year because we knew the emotional impact that the flood was going to have and anticipated that there would be increased costs; $23.8 million of it was for disaster recovery payments to Albertans recovering from the floods so far under the DRP; and $20 million was for immediate stabilization to address erosion damage. It's not specific to homes and the relocation of homes, but it's to rebuild or stabilize the riverbanks, those sorts of programs.

All of those are DRP eligible for up to 90 per cent. What isn't DRP eligible is $15.45 million for the feasibility analysis of several proposed flood mitigation projects – those are costs that we're going to incur that will not be federally eligible – and $42 million for financial support to stabilize municipal revenues from the loss of property taxes because no one is paying property taxes on the homes that were damaged. Now, that's just the first year. So those two are the only two costs right now on our list and our request that are not DRP eligible.

The Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Hehr: Now, I hear a little bit of a difference there in your request and what you're actually going to get paid for. How certain are you, especially on that mental health component, that you've earmarked some dollars? It doesn't seem to me, at least from sitting over here, that that ties neatly into a line item on the DRP payment plan. To me, I think you're whistling Dixie on getting that money back, but maybe you can tell me otherwise.

Mr. Griffiths: Well, maybe I should clarify a bit, Mr. Chairman. There's the disaster recovery program, the DRP. Now, that's the provincial government program where we help cover, specifically, costs to people for the damage to their homes or loss of their homes. We cover loss of and damage to municipal infrastructure, and then we repair provincial infrastructure as well. It also covers, specifically, emergency response over and above for the emergency.

Now, the federal government program isn't called DRP. It's the – I don't know. It's got a longer name. Anyway, their program covers our costs that are eligible. Now, those are DRP costs, but they also incur some other costs as well. So we're anticipating the advances to the municipalities, which are based on the destruction of their infrastructure, their costs over and above for fire services and emergency responders, and their challenges with operations when many places had their town offices closed. All of those costs are DRP eligible.

Our costs when it comes to the $25 million for mental health can be covered under the federal program. They're not called DRP because they're not provincial DRP programs. They are our costs incurred. They're not going to municipalities or the homeowners, but they still are eligible costs under the federal program for costs over and above to manage the disaster appropriately. I hope that clarifies.

The Chair: Thank you.

Hon. member, just so you know, for the record you have until 4:28 p.m. to complete your portion.

Mr. Hehr: Until 4:28 p.m. Well, I guess, then, I'd just ask a global question of the minister. There have been estimates that the total cost to the taxpayer at one level or another is going to be $6 billion. We see in this, as the minister of intergovernmental affairs explained, that there appears to be a discrepancy right now between what's been asked for, the approximately $4.1 billion by the province, and the $2.8 billion or $3.1 billion committed to by the government. It appears to me, at least from where I'm sitting, that there's going to be a $3 billion shortfall that the Alberta treasury is going to pick up. [interjection] No? Well, then, can you describe to me: how much, in your estimate, at the end of the day is the Alberta government going to have to eat on the total flood costs not covered under any federal government program? Has your ministry looked into this? Are there any estimates out there?

If I can tie on more one thing, I think you guys may be going down the path of adding $830 million in flood mitigation costs to the budget. I'll just ask: is anyone asking over there how we're going to pay for all this stuff?

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much. The $6.1 billion that we estimate are costs incurred already are the DRP eligible programs that we run. Some from the provincial government will not be DRP eligible, and I've named a couple already. I think the element that you're missing out of the $3.1 billion is the insurance coverage. The stark difference between this disaster and a disaster like Slave Lake is that there was extensive insurance coverage for Slave Lake. The insurance portion for this, although it won't cover the overland flooding portion that we're responsible for, is still going to be very extensive, and that's what adds it up to the potential $6.1 billion loss that we're anticipating right now.

We ask ourselves every day, and we work very hard – I've been asked, I think, constantly by the media how we're going to pay for this. We know that approximately – and, again, these are estimates – $3.1 billion is going to be eligible through the federal government, that we will incur some costs to the provincial government. We're still working on those numbers. Then a lot will be covered by insurance as well. They have very significant costs that they've incurred privately.

Our job and what we're paid for is to figure that out, but ultimately we had to be there for Albertans. It wasn't possible for us to figure out how we're going to pay for it and then respond. We had to be there. That's what government does. This is one of its core obligations, and I know you agree with me. We'll continue to work on it going forward. We look forward to your help in figuring out what we're going to do to pay for that.

Mr. Hehr: Why, thank you. I figured out why I was here this afternoon, and I appreciate that process much more than the last hour of my life, which I don't think I'll get back any time soon.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

At this time I'll recognize the members of the fourth party. If you're inclined, you can make statements or use the process similar to what was used by the last member.

Ms Notley: I think we'll try the process that we just had end there, the back and forth. We do have a few questions, perhaps not as many, but we'll see where it goes. I found that definitely more helpful than what we had just gone through before, so that's what I'd like to do if possible. Thank you.

I want to begin by following up on one of the questions that the Member for Calgary-Buffalo asked, and that was starting off with the $50 million from Aboriginal Relations. I, like the previous member, am very pleased that we are injecting money into those First Nation communities to ensure that they receive adequate disaster support, so that is all good.

The question that I have, though, does relate, again, to the issue of how many homes actually need to be refurbished or rebuilt. I know that the one minister who answered was not totally aware of those numbers, but I'm hoping that someone can get that. Oh; it appears as though he was actually e-mailed in the interim. I will say that at one point I heard an announcement, and I did a rough calculation of the numbers at the time. It sounded to me like we were looking at half a million dollars or $450,000 per house or something, and that seemed quite generous. I thought that perhaps we needed to get more information about exactly how that money is going to be spent. I'm, you know, totally in support of the purpose behind it, but I just want to make sure that what I originally heard was a misstatement in some fashion. If I could get more information on exactly what is being refurbished, how much is being refurbished, and how much is being dedicated to the training that I believe is also part of that investment, that would be helpful.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much. I checked my notes. I'm sorry; I should have done that earlier. We had professional engineering assessments go in on the First Nations reserve that were so heavily impacted. On the Stoney Nakoda and the Siksika nations right now the professional engineers are saying that approximately 600 homes need to be rebuilt or repaired, but that also includes water and septic systems, the road, the cleanup and removal of destroyed homes.

Of course, on the First Nations, like in other places in the province of Alberta, we've had some homes that are specifically located in the floodway, and there's no way we want to rebuild them there. So when we collect the homes and move them up the hill, where it will be safer, it's critical that we also make sure that there are the proper septic and water systems and that. We anticipate that the federal government will pick up those costs as well. This really is about rebuilding the homes to make sure that they meet the same standards that every other Alberta home meets.

I hope that answered your question.

Ms Notley: Actually, that's helpful. That's more houses than I had originally heard. I do know that. So that makes the math a little bit better.

I am curious, though, about what percentage or what the global amount is that's being dedicated to the training portion of the money that is being provided. My understanding is that a portion of the money was also going to be used for training, either on maintenance or construction or some element of that. I wasn't sure. I'm just wondering if the minister is able to provide that information to me.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm going to dig up some information and get back to you on that. I believe that that allocation is in Human Services, but I have to check the notes on the breakdown because the question is about training. I know that we initiated a program, and it's between Human Services as well as Aboriginal Relations, to make sure, since we're doing so much construction work and rebuilding so many homes, that we're also training for the long haul folks on First Nations with the skills that they need to carry on after we've done this rebuilding exercise. The exact dollar number: I'm going to check the notes; I don't have that off the top of my head. That is part of the program that we're operating on First Nations. [interjections] Thank you very much for that. Our associate minister does a fantastic job of rebuilding and indicated specifically that it's about $8 million that we're dedicating towards that program, but it's not in these supplementary estimates. These supplementary estimates are up to date today, but that's the plan going forward for the program.

Ms Notley: I see. So the complete amount that was announced with respect to investment in the rebuilding efforts in the two First Nations communities is not included in this supplementary supply right now. Right now we've got $50 million, and you're saying that there's at least another $8 million and potentially others.

I see that the minister is here.

Mr. Campbell: Just because I saw you on TV.

Ms Notley: I'm sure.

Thankfully, he's here and now quite enthusiastic, I'm sure, about answering the question that I asked, which is just basically: what is the total amount that was dedicated to the First Nations recovery, and how much of that is dedicated to the retraining piece?

Mr. Campbell: There's $83 million that's dedicated to Siksika, and there will be about the same, I think about $85 million, to Stoney. On top of that there's $10.3 million which is dedicated to training. The $50 million that we're asking for in the supplementary estimates is just the money that we'll spend up to March. In the new budget we'll have more monies dedicated for the rebuild.

Ms Notley: Okay. Well, then that raises another question because that now brings back my original question. If we are looking at around $185 million in total and we're talking about, I believe, around 600 homes to be refurbished or moved or rebuilt, what's the average cost per home that is being anticipated here? That seems awfully high based on my rough math.

Mr. Campbell: Well, it's not just the homes themselves. You have to understand that in some of the areas, especially in Siksika, we're actually moving the whole community. We're not just rebuilding homes. We're also talking about infrastructure, so water and sewer and gas lines. This will also include some of that. Same when you get to the Stoney reserve; we have issues with roads, culverts. This is not just replacing houses. This is actually a total rebuild of the community.

Again, some houses will be minimal in the sense that we will replace flooded basements, but we've also made the commitment that, for example, if there are other issues within the house, we will repair them to Alberta standards. Each home is going to be different. I can say to you that for a new build we're probably looking in the neighbourhood, I want to say, of $200,000 for about a 1,500-square-foot bungalow. All the homes have been coded through an engineering firm, so we have red, yellow, green, and black, and we'll move forward on each home as we can.

Again, we have different challenges depending on where we are. In Siksika we've already got temporary housing in place. I'm going to sign an MOU with Stoney next week. We've finally been able to get the three chiefs to come to agreement, and we'll sign an MOU. We've actually started the temporary build in Stoney, but we now will be able to start to move people out, repair homes, and start some of the rebuilds as we move forward.

Another $10.3 million for training will be divided between Siksika and Stoney because one of the commitments we made in the partnership is that we'll use First Nations contractors and provide training for First Nations people so that they can help rebuild their own communities.

Ms Notley: Okay. Well, that is helpful. I think we're still going to ultimately want to hear what the breakdown is in terms of the complete rebuild versus the upgrade versus whatever because my rough estimates show, not obviously including the cost of infrastructure, which may well be quite significant – and I'm the first to admit that I'm not your go-to person when you're looking for an estimate on a sewer system. Nonetheless, it's worth getting a sense of because, otherwise, we're looking at about $288,000 per home, assuming that all 625 homes require that $288,000. It just seems a bit much.

So just a little bit more of a breakdown would be helpful. I mean, we're in the ballpark, but a little bit more of a breakdown would be more helpful for us to have.

Mr. Campbell: Well, what I can say, Mr. Chair, is that we've already found about $10 million in savings in Siksika. We went with what our engineers told us, but that's not to say that we're not going to continue to look for savings as we move through the process. Again, my department tells me that we're probably looking at about $10 million savings in Siksika already, so as we move through the process and get better at this – I mean, again, this is something that we haven't done before. It's the right thing to do in the sense of moving forward and making sure that the people in these communities have a place to live and that we rebuild those communities. That's a commitment that our Premier has made. I'm very proud of the fact that it is a true partnership between us and the First Nations.

Ms Notley: Thank you. Another area where I have some questions relates to I think it's about $66 million from Human Services. My understanding is that this relates almost entirely to the cards – I don't know if they were credit cards or cash cards – that were distributed to Albertans in need.

I don't know if he remembers, but I remember running into the associate minister at one point and very briefly having that conversation with him and saying: you know, it's all great that we're going to help these business owners rebuild, but what about their employees who are sitting at home and not getting paid right now? And he said: oh, we're about to do something on it. So it appears that they did. I'm curious just to know, generally speaking, how many people received a form of assistance. Was the amount that was distributed consistent from person to person, or did it vary based on need? What were the criteria that were used? If it varied, what was the range of assistance that was provided in terms of, you know, the least amount typically provided, the largest amount typically provided, and the most common amount typically provided, and is that ongoing at this point?

The Chair: The hon. Associate Minister of Services for People with Disabilities.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I can't actually share the numbers that went to individuals, whether they were different and why they were different. I can tell you that 18,868 cheques were delivered, totalling $32,189,442; 18,097 payments were issued on debit cards, and that amounted to $31,393,619. So that's a total of $63.58 million. In addition to that, we had $652,000 in administrative costs, and we're still expecting a future expenditure of about $1.76 million. That's not in cards, though; that program is past its deadline. I think that's in administrative costs, IT costs, that kind of thing.

I would defer to the Minister of Municipal Affairs, who might be aware if we gave different amounts to individuals and why.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you. I apologize because I've had a lot of stuff going through my head for the last few months. If I recall correctly, it was around a thousand dollars per person when they were out of their home for longer than seven days. Then there was an amount for... [interjection] He's got the exact numbers written down, but I can tell you that it was 56,000 people who were out of their homes for more than seven days that were assisted.

The debit cards, the cash cards, that were issued to people had a prescribed amount for an individual and then a prescribed amount for a family, so it was very consistent. It needed to be consistent because, of course, we were issuing these cards within days and hours. So it was a set amount. That didn't stop Human Services from enhancing other programs that they had to assist people who needed special care and assistance just as they always do.

The Chair: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you. It turns out that if you just flip to the other briefing notes, Mr. Chair, it tells you that the eligibility for payments was based on family composition. It was $1,250 per adult and $500 per child, and you had to have a minimum of a seven-day evacuation order in order to qualify for the assistance.

The Chair: Hon. member, you still have five minutes if you choose to use it.

Ms Notley: Okay. Yes, a few more questions following up on that. First of all, I'm a little bit confused about the numbers because there are roughly 19,000 Albertans who received $32 million or so in cheques and roughly 19,000 who received $31 million in cards, which amounts to 38,000 Albertans, I believe, if we do our math. Then the Minister of Municipal Affairs said that, in fact, there were 56,000 Albertans who were out of homes. So is that excluding kids? Is that what the issue is?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you. To clarify, when cards were issued, they were loaded on the spot. Fifty-six thousand Albertans received assistance. But if a family of four came in where they received $1,250 per adult and $500 per kid, that was loaded on one card. The minister previously discussed the cheques issued and the cards issued, but it still amounts to 56,000 Albertans that were helped.

Ms Notley: Okay. So there was a one-time payment, and the criterion, then, was being out of your home for a week or more.

I guess my question goes back to the question that I asked the minister when I happened to run into him in the summer. We've got money for businesses, you know, that's been allocated. What about those folks who were working for those businesses and have been unemployed or had an interruption in earnings even for some period of time? Was there any provision made for them, or is there any provision with respect to the business support that's being provided or the loan guarantees that are being provided? I'm wondering about the folks who actually lost income because, you know, the restaurant they waited tables in was rendered unusable for three months. That's my question.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chair, I'm starting to realize that my memory is going. I don't recall the meeting that she's alluding to. Maybe it was to other people; I'm not sure.

Not through this program. This was direct cash benefit to those people that were evicted from their homes for more than seven days. There are the usual unemployment insurance and other programs, income assistance, available to people who require it but nothing that's identified in this flood spending that was spent on that purpose.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Notley: Yes. Well, I mean, the minister can be forgiven perhaps for having forgotten. We were just getting coffee at a meeting where I was otherwise, you know, probably yelling at him in front of the media or something. It was one of those kinds of things.

Mr. Oberle: Oh, now I remember.

Ms Notley: Nonetheless, we did raise that issue.

Mr. Mason: Just an ordinary day.

Ms Notley: Yeah. A very uncommon arrangement, I'm sure.

Nonetheless, the point that I want to make, then, is that I believe that through Agriculture and Rural Development and then potentially through Municipal Affairs, although I could be told that that is incorrect, we have money that is going to be dedicated either through a form of loan guarantees or through grants for business support. Again, I'm not necessarily opposed to that, but I am concerned that we seem to be missing a group of people who also suffered significant economic loss as a result of this natural disaster. So I am concerned, for instance, that we even have guarantees, the employees of those businesses that would receive the loan guarantees or the support would get the benefit of that, let alone those employees whose business may not be eligible. I'm just a little bit concerned that we may have overlooked some of the folks who suffered economic loss who are, you know, the ones that were less likely to be advocating to the minister directly or whatever the case may be.

I do understand that there's EI out there. That might work in some cases, but in other cases it might not. You could easily be someone who wasn't eligible for EI. Also, of course, EI is rather short-lived. Anyway, we don't need to talk about the shortcomings of EI. Suffice it to say that it probably is not the answer to a lot of people's questions.

The question is: has the government given any thought to the people who have suffered other forms of economic loss? Have there been any deliberations about that, and have you heard from people about that?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is through Agriculture. When we worked on what we called the hand-up plan, it was immediate financial assistance for up to 1,500 businesses that we could identify that may need a loan program in order to help them make business decisions about what they were going to do. There were 400 not-for-profits also eligible for that program. A portion of that is that when the loan program comes in, it's essentially interest-free while they make their business decisions.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. member, your time has expired.

We now have time, 20 minutes, where private members of the government caucus may engage in the debate.

Okay. Then we can go back thereafter to any private member. Is there any private member that would wish to speak at this point? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: You've got five minutes, hon. member. You could ask some questions of the minister if you so desire.

Mr. Rowe: Okay. I was almost done when our time expired, so I don't really have a whole lot more to go, just a couple of things that now the minister may be able to help us out with.

I did want to mention that in our spring budget estimates I did question the low numbers in the total for the Alberta Emergency Management Agency. I realize that nobody could have predicted this, and that's not what I'm suggesting at all. But in the three years prior to that, there was a consistently lower amount, other than one year when it was up slightly. It seems we need to get better prepared for this kind of thing. I would hope that when we come to budget estimates in the spring session next year, we could be a little better prepared for this. Again, I realize that we can't just do this.

I did want to mention that the total of three-quarters of a billion dollars in the supplementary supply seems a little low to me, to be honest with you. That may sound odd coming from the opposition, but when we first started tossing numbers around, we were talking $3 billion, $5 billion, $6 billion. I guess my first question to the minister, then, would be: will we see another supplementary supply in the spring?

The Chair: I'll get the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs to respond.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much. I appreciate the questions. I really look forward to doing the budget in the new year as well. I'm glad I have on record the hon. critic from the Wildrose, who has said that he supports more support for the Alberta Emergency Management Agency. It's such a critical institution.

After the critic for Education said that we need more money for schools and the critic for Health said that we need more for seniors, I look forward to the first three questions every week to stop being, "Why are you spending so much money?" after they've agreed to every dime we spend.

The question was about the estimate seeming low. I'd just remind the member that these are supplementary estimates, so these are dollars that have been spent to date. When we talk about the $6.1 billion, we're including all of the eligible insurance costs. We're talking about the provincial government's costs – our estimate right now is about $1.7 billion – and then the federal government's costs, which should be about $3.1 billion in eligible costs. When you put those all together, you get the $6.1 billion, but of course not all of that has been expended yet.

Provincially we're anticipating that we'll get $3.1 billion back from the federal government. We're anticipating that it could be about $1.7 billion, but these are ongoing costs. Our Premier has been very clear that we would be there to help Albertans rebuild going forward and also that it wouldn't be rebuilt by Christmas. We're still going to have to build more homes. We're going to have to replace more infrastructure. We anticipate that that total cost we quote all the time is something that is spent from the beginning of the flood right through until we have its conclusion and there isn't a person left you can talk to in the province who doesn't say that the job is done. So it's not just this year's costs.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just want to respond to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and his recent comment, as we discuss the supplementary estimates, that the critic for Education would lead with his first three questions as to building schools and spending money and then ask the government to cut, on the other hand. You know, this is the constant debate that we have in here. As I continually say, there's a middle ground here. What we're trying to say on this side is that you can prioritize your spending so that we can build the schools that we need. We're not asking for anybody to jump the queue in school building.

What we continually ask for is a public, prioritized list so that we know where projects are. Regardless of where you are in Alberta, regardless of what constituency you're in, the capital plan comes forward, and there will be a wish list from that school board. Now, if those projects are approved, that's terrific, but if they're not approved, they have no idea where they might be on the list. That is a giant frustration. To the minister: I think that even people in his own riding would want to ask the same question although I know he's got a bit of a strained relation with some of the school board representatives in his own riding. I think what he needs to realize is that around this province people want to know where they are on the list. The reason that people on this side advocate for a list is so that people will know when and where these schools are going to be built, so the people in the community will know when they can plan for them.

We would love to see money come from other areas.

Mr. Fawcett: Relevance.

Mr. McAllister: When we talk about this supplemental budget and the minister makes reference to one thing that we do, I think it's relevant for me to stand up and respond to what he said, so I'm happy to do that, Mr. Chair.

I would say again, as I said when I spoke initially to this, that I don't see $9 million as excessive as a supplementary budget, that this is to put money forward to the districts that were hit hard by flooding. I did ask the Education minister, respectfully, if he could break that down and itemize it for us. You know, I think that's what any member of the government, opposition, or otherwise ought to do about taxpayer money.

I noticed that eventually the ministers came back and started taking questions during this, which is kind of what the Minister of Municipal Affairs said would happen initially, but for whatever reason it took an hour to get to that point. But note that I did respectfully ask that question and to this point haven't received an answer.

I would conclude, on the statement that was made, that the reason we on this side ask for money for schools is because it's what Albertans are asking for. Don't forget, Mr. Chair, that this government promised to build 50 schools and renovate 70 schools this term. As we're awarding more money to them today or effectively allowing them more money for flood relief, not one of those projects has been started. Now, we're more than a year and a half since the election. If it really was a priority, don't you think you'd have a shovel in the ground? The only shovel I see ought to be following somebody around to the podium when they make an announcement.

Back to the minister. I would say that I'm happy and my colleagues are generally happy to approve of prudent financial governing. The flood that hit Alberta – there's no question – obviously affected so many communities and so many people's lives that we ought to do all we can to help Alberta rebuild. I think that's the point of what we're doing here today. Again, I would have liked to have gone back and forth a little bit on some of those questions, but I guess that's the way that it goes.

I think of a community like – Mr. Chair, you're looking at me as if you want to tell me something. Do I have time? The time is okay?

The Chair: You've still got a minute and 23 seconds, hon. member.

Mr. McAllister: Perfect. Well, then I'll end on a very strong positive if I could, referring to what we're discussing today, and that would be the community of Redwood Meadows. You know, there is a community that somehow managed to dodge a real bullet. They could have lost that entire community, 300-plus homes, but somehow they managed to save it, and it took a lot of people.

The government has been very good in dealing with the people of Redwood Meadows and helping them rebuild. In fact, I intend on asking the minister and Member for Calgary-Klein to join me in Redwood Meadows so that I can take him around and show him some of the work that's been done, how they managed to save that community, and why it's important that work is done going forward. I know he's been briefed, but I would love him to walk that berm with me so that I can explain it to him and show him exactly what's going on. We don't need to announce it to the world and have any big media day but just to show the government's commitment. I bet we can arrange that.

The point is that over here we do support flood recovery. We do support proper budgeting, but when we ask tough questions financially, we do it because there are two ways to look at things. We can't just spend, spend, spend without justifying it. We're talking about $625 million here today, and we are right to come in here today and ask the appropriate questions about where that is going. That's what this process has been about.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? You're going to respond, hon. minister? Please go ahead.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you. Actually, I didn't hear any questions out of that speech, again, and most of it was about the regular process, not about this budget. But I have the chance to respond because I raised it, so maybe I'll respond to a couple of things that were raised. The Member for Airdrie spoke first and didn't ask a single question about this, followed by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, who didn't ask a single question about all of this $800 million. They spend a lot of time complaining about not having the opportunity to respond.

Mr. McAllister: What did the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View say?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Chair, I didn't interrupt him at all. I let him run.

The Chair: Please, the minister has the floor, hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: They didn't ask a single question. They complained that there's 800-some million dollars here, yet they didn't have a single question about the budget, Mr. Chair. [interjection] I know the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills doesn't like to have any criticism, which is why he keeps beaking off.

Frankly, it's very easy to go through and see what the spending has been. We've got two other parties in there that have managed to ask some very good questions about what we're spending our money on for Albertans going forward to make sure that we can handle their issues.

Since we're responding to some of the questions, just like the previous member did, I know that the question was raised by the Member for Airdrie on how horrible this process and experience was. He didn't ask anything about the budget, but he did go on to talk about how the Member for Highwood was frozen out in the early days of the floods. I just have to point it out that it gives the impression that it was the provincial government, but in this province emergencies are run by local officials. It was local firefighters and local police and local emergency responders that were all together in the community of High River, managing the local response. The impression they try and give is that the provincial government had some say, which we didn't. We don't get involved in that, Mr. Chair, but they'd asked the Member for Highwood to leave High River in the emergency response.

Mr. Wilson: Point of order.

Mr. Griffiths: And I don't want anyone . . .

The Chair: I'll come back to you, hon. minister.

Your point of order? A citation, hon. member?

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Wilson: Citation 23(b)(i), speaking to the question under discussion. I have no idea why the Minister of Municipal Affairs feels it necessary to discuss matters of the Member for Highwood at this point. [interjections] You had the opportunity to call a point of order earlier, and perhaps you could have done it. [interjections]

The Chair: Hon. members, please. The Member for Calgary-Shaw has the floor.

Mr. Wilson: I would just ask the chair to direct the minister to speak . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, I would be very pleased to respond on this point.

Hon. members, I'm going to remind both sides of the House. We've had a fair amount of debate on this matter, and I have allowed quite a bit of latitude on both sides where the debate has strayed quite a distance from the topic at hand, being the estimates. I think that's maybe a good reminder. I'm going to leave it at that, hon. member. I'm going to remind the minister, as I'm reminding the members from this side of the House, that it's important that we stick to the topic at hand, which is the estimates. If that's the case, if you're able to do that, then I won't have to bring anybody back from either side of the House when you stray past that point. I believe that I've allowed a lot of latitude both ways, but I'm going to stop at this point. I'm going to ask both sides of the House to stick to the matter at hand, and I would consider the matter closed at this point, hon. member.

I would ask the minister to continue and remind you, hon. minister, to please stick to the matter at hand.

Mr. Griffiths: I'm happy to as long as they do, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate that.

The Chair: Thank you.

Debate Continued

Mr. Griffiths: I haven't heard any questions about the actual budget from the opposition that haven't been answered. The only question that I understand hasn't been answered yet is about the hand-up plan that was asked about earlier. I just wanted to point out that it was 1,500 businesses that were eligible for the hand-up plan, which is a loan guarantee and then interest relief for that program. Also, 400 not-for-profits. It was anticipated, Mr. Chairman, that those who accessed the program would want to keep their employees on staff and repay their loans so that they can continue to make sure that they make the appropriate business decisions.

Our understanding so far is that any employees that were out of work for a short time did have the traditional programs run through the province of Alberta and the federal government, such as employment insurance, to cover them. We've heard no significant group at all come forward and say that they haven't received some benefit from some level of government to take care of them in the interim while they experienced unemployment because of the flood, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there others? The Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I guess this is a constituency-based question. As most of you are aware, my constituency, Calgary-Buffalo, is surrounded on one side by the Bow River and the Elbow River on the other and thus had a disproportionate number of individuals and families affected by the flood. I do note and actually applaud the government for moving quickly on getting immediate supports in the form of those money cards that allowed many of my constituents to have an easier time of it throughout that particularly stressful period.

However, still to this day estimates are that there are up to 3,000 of my constituents who are not in their regular homes and are still living in accommodations that are not their usually dwelling place, yet they're still covering mortgages. They still in some instances have extraordinary expenses piling up. I believe I did talk to a member of government at one point in time or other, but has there been any consideration of recognizing that there may be a unique subset of Albertans, maybe 2,000 people, who have been disproportionately affected with extraordinary expenses related to them being out of their home and covering the cost of two locations, those matters? If that's being considered, could any programs be used to address the additional hardship?

The province moved very quickly for people who had been out of their homes for seven days, which I thought was great, but we have some Albertans who have been out of their homes now for four months and could be and, in fact, are racking up additional expenses. I've heard from many of them in my constituency office. I recognize that it's very difficult to try and tailor everything to any given program and to have it ongoing forever and ever.

The Chair: I think the Minister of Infrastructure will start, with a supplement from the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I've been wanting to answer this question for a while, so I'll butt in here and give my colleague a chance to get ready for that answer.

I did have a couple of questions, I think, from the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. I was writing them down and waiting till I had them all to speak. My department is here to request a supplementary amount of $100 million in operational money for the '13-14 flood relocation program. The remaining required funding for this program will be included in the 2014 budget. Also, we're requesting $5 million for the 2013 Alberta flood recovery for planning a joint-use community resource centre in High Prairie.

The first question was: why was the $100 million not capital and operational? Well, the flood relocation program is a program that's operational. I mean, we're going to buy out the properties and remove the homes, and the land will be left probably for a park or something like that. It's not really a good capital investment. It's an operational plan.

I think the second question was: what would it cost for the resource centre? We have $5 million for planning this joint-use community resource centre. The reason it's for planning is because we want to make good use of taxpayers' dollars. There are other agencies in the community such as the town of High River, the MD of Foothills, Foothills school division, you know, and our building, so we're looking at doing it jointly to save the taxpayers money. We're to have this resource centre that's jointly shared by all of us. The $5 million is for the planning part of it, so the exact cost will greatly depend on the space required by the other community partners and the resources that they have available to them to contribute. A cost estimate can't be provided right now. We need to further refine the requirements and work together, and we'll do a joint project.

I think those were the two questions.

The Chair: Thank you, minister.

If the Minister of Municipal Affairs would finish off the other half.

Mr. Griffiths: Yes. Thank you. The question that was just asked about people who might be overly burdened because they're trying to pay for two places at once if they're not back in their home and what sort of damage was done: right now we've been going door to door partnered with the Red Cross, and we've been taking people that are in our housing units in Calgary and High River, that are spread around southern Alberta right now. We haven't identified as many people as you've indicated for the whole province.

They've been self-selecting, so we had to start charging rent because we have some quite decent accommodations and thought that they could pay a portion. If I recall correctly, it's still $400 below anticipated market value. That's the market value for rent, but that also includes all their food, their recreation, so it's a pretty reasonable price, I think, that we're charging.

We have been talking with and working with the banks, and there are a lot of banks that have special flood programs now available so that someone with a mortgage can defer that mortgage until they rebuild their house and deal with DRP. No bank wants to watch people have to foreclose on a mortgage for a house that no longer exists, because they can't live there. They've been very accommodating, and I'm not aware of any that haven't had some sort of program available for people in despair.

If you own a house and you're in High River and your home was destroyed or damaged, frankly, beyond repair, so it had to be rebuilt, not only do we anticipate and witness that banks are very accommodating, but you may still have property taxes to pay on that home, which can be burdensome, too, so we have the program available for municipalities for municipal tax relief. We know that a lot of people that have a property they can't live in anymore aren't going to want to pay property taxes in that community. We did the same thing in Slave Lake, so we've applied that program to any of the communities that experienced flooding so that individuals aren't paying property taxes on a home right now, but the municipality doesn't suffer by lacking those resources to provide services.

So far we've had nothing but praise for the comprehensive programs that we've put together, and I think we've accommodated everybody that has been brought to my attention.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I believe I asked several questions, and I haven't gotten an answer. Maybe the questions weren't clear, but I would like an answer at least to address the concerns of the community of Sundre.

Here we have a supplementary budget dealing with flood mitigation, and the community of Sundre is one of the top communities. You could classify it as one, two, or three, and it doesn't matter what number you put it in. It is threatened every spring. It has a history where it's gone under water in 2005, 2012, and now in 2013. I don't have record of one person who applied and got approved for the damage they suffered. When I'm looking at these estimates, the question I have is: where is the mitigation here for the community of Sundre so that we don't waste what we've already done?

Now, the question I had earlier had to do with the whole purpose – you bring this forward, and you're dealing with maps, flood mitigation maps, yet the river has moved an entire mile. [interjections] I know you don't understand because you don't listen, Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Try listening. The fact is that you have a map. The members say: we don't have a definition, but we're going to use money based on the accuracy of the maps. Those maps were constructed after the 2005 flood. The Red Deer River has moved over a mile. So if you don't have a definition of what a floodway is or what a flood fringe is – and it's no excuse to say, "Well, it's going to be the scientific definition from Alberta Environment," because the act doesn't say that. If that's what you're going to do, then put it in the act. Why don't they put it in the act?

Getting back to the money that's being spent, where is the mitigation so that we don't lose lives and millions and millions of dollars of infrastructure for the community of Sundre? When that river moved, it moved to a position where now the entire community is threatened. The scenario is considerably different than before the 2013 flood. The community of Sundre deserves an answer for all those questions. Where are they in this? How is it going to be done?

The Chair: Let's see if the Minister of Municipal Affairs can help you with that.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Under the Environment and Sustainable Resource Development budget it specifically says under operational that there's $2 million for flood recovery to complete the additional studies under the provincial flood hazard identification program. That's the updates of flood mapping as you go along, for situations where the maps have changed significantly. Of course, that doesn't change the definition – the floodway is the floodway, and the flood fringe is the flood fringe – but we do need to identify if there are places where there has been significant movement of the river, which is typically in places where there is a lot of rock and sand, because it moves very quickly.

Also, Mr. Chairman, under capital for that budget $96 million has been identified for restoration projects addressing erosion damage. I'm aware of the situation in that community and in a couple of others. It's not a disaster recovery program or even strictly mitigation to protect houses and communities; it's erosion damage, which is very critical. So that item is listed.

As far as the infrastructure costs he will have seen that an announcement was just made. But, Mr. Chairman, this budget typically is costs incurred in the last few months which are not budget items. Since mitigation was just recently announced, what is going forward, no money has been spent on that yet. That's why it's not in the budget. You'll see that as we move forward.

The Chair: Other speakers? We still have time. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Sure. I'll try a couple of questions, Mr. Chairman. There is $19.1 million for agricultural flood recovery, a $4.1 million interest rebate on loans of up to $1 million for two years to assist in rebuilding eligible businesses and agricultural producers, and $15 million for a loan guarantee program. The province will provide a 75 per cent guarantee on loans up to $1 million to help stabilize and rebuild agricultural producers and not-for-profit organizations. I'm not sure which minister this should be directed towards. [interjection]. Okay. Good. The hon. minister of agriculture, who's had to take remarkably few questions this session. You know, you really should have a scandal or something in your department so that you can see a little action.

Anyway, I am curious about how this is administered and how you make sure that the businesses that receive these loans are putting it towards the things that they're supposed to, that they're not getting workarounds so that they, you know, can use this as capital to invest in other business opportunities.

The Chair: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I want to thank the hon. member for the question. I take it as a good sign that there aren't a lot of questions coming at me, but I'm always happy to answer questions either inside or outside this Chamber or do my best to have my department assist me. We're always only a phone call away from some sort of a crisis, and I'm well aware of that. Right now we haven't been in crisis mode, but we're dealing with serious issues.

To answer the hon. member's question, as I said earlier on, AFSC, the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, is the tool, the body, that we're using to assist in this program. There is a reason for that, and it is the great experience we had with the Slave Lake fire, where AFSC went in and did great work helping rebuild businesses there. I think it was something like 162 loans, about $111 million. These loans were very effective in turning around a lot of businesses and getting them up and running again.

We did learn some things, though. When you think about the scope of doing that in one community that had the fire compared to the scope of multiple communities along rivers, there is a huge difference in the challenge that it would have been in terms of the resources that AFSC had at their disposal. We pretty quickly determined that it would be a good idea to use the banks that are already lending to people who are running the businesses in those communities, to facilitate and try to create an incentive for the banks to be involved. That's where the 75 per cent guarantee came in.

When you think about the time and the people who were struggling to find out how they were going to receive the necessary financing, it would be a lot easier for them to walk into their bank and talk to their loans officer that already had a file on them rather than go to AFSC and start from scratch. We feel as though that was very effective. The banks were very supportive, but it was also important for the banks to have some skin in the game, so to speak, to address your question about abuse of the program. That's why we did not provide a 100 per cent guarantee but a 75 per cent guarantee.

I can tell the hon. member that there hasn't been as big an uptake so far as we might have expected. Right now we've only got about 32 guarantees out there for about $5 million. There is obviously some guesswork involved in trying to determine how many subscriptions there would be. There still could be more. People are still waiting to find out about insurance coverage and so on as well. That's basically the rationale. People are dealing with their banks in the normal course. They're also dealing with AFSC. In either case the scrutiny in terms of accountability for the money and so on is the same as it would be for any loan. We also have another program, which is the interest rebate. Actually, the uptake on that has so far been relatively modest as well. To date we're only at about $4,000 in rebates actually paid out. Now, again, that could change significantly as time goes by. That's kind of a quick overview of the program and how we got to develop this program.

I would also add that the staff at AFSC were thrown into this and worked day and night – literally day and night – and through weekends and so on to let as many Albertans work to try to recover, to put the paperwork for this program together and work with the banks as well. I think the banks as well as AFSC staff certainly deserve some acknowledgement in terms of the hard work that they put together on this.

The Chair: Other questions? The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Going through this budget supplemental, there are a number of ministries where they pick out a particular direction for where the money is spent and where it is going to be spent relative to the community. So if I look at Education, it picks out a number of communities, and it identifies the specific project. If I look under environment and sustainable resources, it does the same. It follows suit. It says, "$5,000,000 for local flood mitigation measures" taken in Medicine Hat.

Back to my question of Sundre. Now, I'm going to direct this question maybe to the Associate Minister of Seniors. The community of Sundre just received funding for their seniors' facility, which we thank you very much for. The whole community does. But according to the current maps and the potentially new maps the new seniors' facility is going to be either in a floodway or a flood fringe, depending on which definition we're going to go by. Now, we're talking about spending money, and this money has already been allocated. But I don't know what money in this budget is allocated to mitigating that provincial investment because it doesn't state that. So to any of the ministers who would have any knowledge of this: how are we going to protect that investment in the seniors' facility? This is significant, this does affect the whole community, and it's all about protecting this investment, that we're going to build this new facility. I question where this appears in this budget. How are we going to protect that community, that particular facility?

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Minister of Municipal Affairs. There was a question about Education as well. We'll get to the Minister of Education next.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you. I guess I'll clarify again. In Environment and Sustainable Resource Development's budget it outlines $96 million for restoration projects addressing erosion damage. I know it doesn't list the projects, Mr. Chair, because they're still assessing them and working with the communities to identify exactly what needs to be done and the best way to do that. Now, that request from ESRD is a non-DRP eligible request. That's work going forward on ensuring that we address some erosion control challenges. Within the Municipal Affairs budget we have $20 million that's been identified to restore riverbanks that are experiencing significant erosion damage which is specifically due to the June flooding. There is no list of specific projects in here because we're continuing to work with the communities, but this is what we've assessed that's required.

I'll let the hon. associate minister discuss the question about the seniors.

The Chair: The hon. Associate Minister of Seniors.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Just to give you the information, the member across had asked about the Sundre seniors' facility that's being planned. The last thing I would do is interfere with the municipal council and the direction of the siting. That's up to the development permit stage, and they're very well aware of which land is appropriate. The last thing I would ever do is interfere in that process. I know you're a champion for seniors' facilities in your riding. Stay tuned, be supportive, and work with your mayor.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Education on the education question.

Mr. J. Johnson: I appreciate the latitude, Chair. I realize Education was mentioned there, and there was a question on Education that I wasn't recognized for earlier that I'd just like to speak to: where some of the funds for the Education sups have gone. Then maybe the member can get back to his other questions.

Of course, most of the Education work down there was to protect some of the schools from potential decreases in enrolment and also the capital work. We had over 80 schools impacted by the floods. All but three of those were open in September, which is really good news. I can tell you that the final modular classrooms were filled. Well, in High River the final group is going to be full tomorrow. The final group of modular classrooms in Calgary was turned over, got the occupancy permits today, so the CBE will be working with those parents to nail down when those kids move in. Those are all done, and that's fantastic work. We've got 54 modulares, about 750 kids accommodated even though it wasn't as quick as we'd hoped.

We had great people working on the ground, including our deputy minister, Greg Bass, and Dean Lindquist, our ADM in capital, who were down there three days a week for the last three months. The superintendents of that area, Denise Rose and Scott Morrison, did great work, and I can point out that none of those people – and they worked with the local folks on the ground – ever got removed from the emergency operation centre for being disruptive, unlike the Leader of the Opposition. So I would point out that the $9,500,000 that I think the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View asked about earlier is the $9 million for enrolment stabilization.

We did the same kind of thing that we did in Slave Lake when that disaster hit that community. We gave, essentially, those schools, not the school board, a guarantee that if their enrolment decreased, fewer students in the school next year because of the disruption or for whatever reason, we wouldn't decrease their funding because predominantly the funding follows the students. We want to make sure that they have that stability, they have that certainty of funding, they don't have to let teachers go, and they don't have to take staff out and then try to restaff and retool up later. Then there was $50,000 that we needed to invest in resources from the Learning Resources Centre to help those schools retool up as well.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm wondering if the hon. Minister of Education would be willing to table a document that outlines the line items of the 80 schools, how much capital you've invested in each of those 80 schools.

The Chair: Relative to the supplemental, hon. member?

Mr. Wilson: Yes. Well, I think the question he just responded to is what the $9 million was that his ministry has requested in the supplemental estimates. In a response to the question from the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View he suggested that there were 80 schools impacted and that you invested capital in 80 schools. I'm just asking the Minister of Education if he would be willing to table the document outlining specifically which 80 schools were impacted and how much money was spent on each of them.

Thank you.

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Chair, of the 80-plus schools that were impacted by the floods, we didn't invest capital in each one of those. For some of those, a good number of those, the cost to repair them from the storm or some water damage that might have got in was done out of insurance funds or even reserves from the school boards although, I believe, that was minimal. It was primarily insurance. The money that we invested – and I believe the capital in here is about $19.9 million or $20 million – is specifically for the modular classrooms in High River and for the CBE in Calgary as well as the Sprung structure that's being assembled or will be assembled in the Calgary region as well.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I did not have a question for Education earlier. I just used it as an example of how they listed within this supplemental budget. But I will respond to that little snide comment about being disruptive. Our leader, who lives in that community, went to the aid of her neighbours. If that is his definition of disruptive, that's a perverted sense of disruptive.

Basically, what I want to talk about – and the hon. Associate Minister of Seniors pointed this out. This is the key here. The entire community of Sundre is now in a floodway, according to a map. The proposed seniors' facility is either in the floodway or the flood fringe, according to these maps. This is the point that I'm trying to make. The ESRD estimate right here talks about $5 million for local flood mitigation measures to be taken in Medicine Hat. Understandable. I know what happened in Medicine Hat.

There are provisions elsewhere in the bill. What I'm looking for here is – it says: "$96,000,000 for restoration projects addressing erosion damage." I'm not talking about erosion damage. What I'm talking about is an entire community under threat. The river has moved. That is the crux of this matter right now. It has moved a mile from where it was in the 2005 flood. It has actually moved a mile since the 2010 flood. It has moved significantly and now threatens the town in the next flood. That is significant.

We're looking at a situation where we have investment. The minister has just come down recently, and he's right. I thanked him, and I will continue to do so. I'm supportive of the project. I've been advocating for that project. They need it. What are we doing to protect it? There's nothing listed in this that says that. Where is it? Isn't this government aware of what's going on there? We are putting millions of dollars at risk, new money, not to mention the entire economy of this community, and the question is: how are we going to protect it? Where is this money here? What we've done in the past no longer applies. Things have changed. That's the point. Even if you look at the spurs and you look at the berms, they're in the wrong place now because the river has moved. That is significant. So how do we protect this?

The Chair: Hon. member, I'm going to ask the minister to respond, but I'm going to remind you that this seems like something for a future budget item. If he can't give you a satisfactory response, we may need to move on to another subject.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. On behalf of the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development I'll lay out a few more details of the program. It's for bank stabilization, for repair and mitigation of erosion damage to property or infrastructure, and larger community flood mitigation work such as dikes and berms. That's just this program that is being asked for here. The Alberta government will fund up to 100 per cent of the project costs up to $2 million and 75 per cent of the costs after the first $2 million is spent. Applicants run their own projects to make sure that they meet the requirements, and the ESRD staff will continue to work with the municipality to make sure that it complies with the Water Act and with the Public Lands Act.

To date, Mr. Chairman, 19 projects worth over $37 million have already been approved, so there's lots of room left in the program. Some of those projects that have been approved are projects in Calgary, Medicine Hat, High River, Canmore, Big Horn, Rocky View, and in Mountain View county. More applications will be coming, but we have not received one from that community, so I encourage him to work with the community to make an application.

He may also want to note that there was a recent announcement about flood mitigation in particular, that was just made, which is now open for communities to apply to. His question: what are we going to do, and why isn't there a solution? We're working with the community, and we anticipate that they will likely come forward with some interesting ideas about what they're going to do to handle it and apply to the program, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Any other speakers?

Mr. Anglin: To the hon. minister: the community of Sundre has applied, and they plan on following up with the next application, so I just want to correct you on that. There is an application in from the community of Sundre, and if you're not aware of that, then we need to track that down.

The Chair: Thank you.

If there are no other speakers, hon. members, we can call the question on this item. I'm certainly not trying to cut debate off, but if there's been ample opportunity and members are satisfied . . .

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: Okay. The question has been called.

Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, because we did not reach the three hours allocated – we finished early – I'm assuming you would like to ask for a motion that the committee rise and report the estimates.

Mr. McIver: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will move that the committee rise and report those estimates.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2014, for the following departments.

Aboriginal Relations: operational, $50,000,000.

Agriculture and Rural Development: operational, $19,115,000.

Municipal Affairs: operational, $378,572,000.

Transportation: capital, $33,560,000.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.
Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

5:40 Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 32
Enhancing Safety on Alberta Roads Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and move third reading of Bill 32.

Of course, it's been under discussion. The main elements of that are giving the authority to municipalities to control playground zones and also giving the government of Alberta the authority to designate lanes on highways as well as a number of other somewhat housekeeping issues. Those are the main elements.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

My apologies, hon. members. We missed a step in the order of proceedings, so I will have to come back to the hon. Minister of Transportation.

Introduction of Bills

The Deputy Speaker: I need to recognize the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs to introduce the supplementary supply bill.

Bill 36 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2013 (No. 2)

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 36, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2013 (No. 2). This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 36 read a first time]

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 32 Enhancing Safety on Alberta Roads Act (continued)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now I am still pleased to rise today and move third reading of Bill 32.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to talk about Bill 32 one more time, and I rise in support of the legislation. Our caucus had good, lengthy discussions about it and talked about it and appreciated many of the grassroots opportunities, the efficiencies put into the bill, as I've already mentioned a couple of times. Our uncertainty seems to revolve around two areas. You know, we expressed our concern over taking out the word "probable" from the "reasonable and probable" obligations that police officers would have to have for a start. There is some uncertainty as to whether "reasonable and probable" does mean the exact same thing or close to the same thing as "reasonable." I thought it was foolhardy for the government to take the chance that this may be challenged later on. We know what happened in Committee of the Whole with that.

Many people in our caucus expressed concern and ideas over whether the high-occupancy vehicle lanes would work, especially in Fort McMurray, where infrastructure development has been slow for us to capitalize on the royalties that Albertans need and deserve. Hopefully, highway 63 twinning is working on the timeline it was supposed to.

A lot of concerns over the busier streets like the Deerfoot in Calgary and the busier places in Edmonton on how the government will implement these plans. I trust and hope the communication will be there and that the regulations will be in the proper order for that.

The biggest concern with the bill may have been the way it was released. I'll just remind everyone that a press conference was held, a release was held before this bill was properly disclosed to the opposition members and the opposition critics and to this House, which we felt was an infringement on our duly elected authority and in my case the 40,000 Cypress-Medicine Hatters that I do represent and in our case, potentially, the 340,000 votes that we did receive in the last election. I do appreciate, though, the Minister of Transportation's efforts once we did have our meeting and how thoroughly and how well the bill was explained to me and then the opportunity to discuss this.

I hope that in the future, as we all strive to make this House better for all Albertans, we will be informed early as to the contents of bills and our opportunity to help make all of these as good as possible for Albertans. The unintended consequences and the ability to go wrong in any bill is there, so it certainly doesn't hurt to have 17 extra sets of eyes on it or in our case on this side all opposition members.

Once again, we are in support of the bill. I am in support of the bill, and look forward to the opportunity and the chance to, hopefully, make all roads safer for Albertans. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise, and I'm going to support this bill also. I thank the hon. minister for bringing it forward, but there are concerns. I hope these concerns do get addressed sometime in the future. The minister had mentioned earlier based on a given court case that reasonable meant the same as probable. In research in that case we find that that answer is not true. It doesn't mean the exact same thing. Reasonable is a degree of rationality, and probability is a degree of an event actually happening. As a matter of fact, the court, when it looked at this argument, looked at it, I think, fairly thoroughly. What the court ruled was that they weren't the same, but it did say that the reasonable test in the case in front of it met the same test as probability. That's what the court ruled. I'm sure the lawyers can dissect that.

What the court also talked about, which was extremely important, was that very critical balance between the right to privacy, the right to be protected from unreasonable search and seizure, and, of course, the right of the state to do its duty in law enforcement and what needs to be done to obtain a search warrant. As a matter of fact, when the court looked at this, what it basically did strike down was the provision that required a court to issue a search warrant even if the test was met. The court wanted to maintain the flexibility to look at each case individually.

Now, one of the arguments that will be coming forward – again, this is something so it is consistent with unreasonable search and seizure and probable cause – is that it's forever evolving. Looking at it from that perspective, it probably would have been safer to leave the words "and probable" in the act because that would have covered the bases for the people who are going to enforce this act and make sure that we try to protect both sides.

It doesn't prevent any court case from coming forward. People have their issues, there are always circumstances that are unforeseen, and there are misapplications and incorrect applications of any type of law enforcement procedure. All the mechanisms are there in our judicial system to have those adjudicated.

The idea of having high-occupancy lanes for vehicles, the HOV lanes. I agree with the minister. If you put them in the right spots, they are efficient. They work well. I've experienced it like many people here who have travelled and found these. If you use them incorrectly, well, then they need to be re-evaluated and, you know, put to a place where they're far more efficient. Again, efficiencies have to be measured. That is one of the major points of the bill where I think we can do fairly good service, provided it is applied correctly. I think it will serve our larger communities in particular extremely well.

The other provision in here with the playgrounds I have to agree with. Local decision-makers probably have a better grasp on handling this decision on how they want to do this. To allow that to go back to local decision-makers is something that I think everyone in my party will support.

The use of military police on highways. I'm not too keen on that issue. I don't know any more details than what's been provided in the bill, but I caution how we would apply that, how far that would extend. I suspect we will get those answers once regulations are known, but that is within the purview of the department or the ministry. I would suggest that what we need to do when we bring this forward and write these regulations is exercise a much larger degree of caution on how military police would be used. I do know today that there are provisions – and I don't know what those provisions are – on how the civilian police force and the military police force do interact. They always have done that. I just don't know if this is going to take anything beyond that or extend the authority. That question was never answered.

In closing, maybe the minister can answer that and give some assurances to the Assembly and particularly to the public on how this would look. Would it be any different than some of the agreements we have in place today across our great country? This is huge in that sense.

There are some other issues that we have, that we argued, that we brought motions forward on, but in the end I think the positives of this bill certainly overrode the negatives. This is a good step in the right direction on becoming efficient and managing our traffic system.

With that, I'm going to support the bill. I'm asking the rest of my caucus to support this bill that this government has brought forward. In the summary speech that the minister will give maybe he'll even answer some of the questions that I've just posed.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there other speakers? If not, I'll invite the minister to close debate if he so desires.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will close debate. I'll just give a couple of short words. I know that the member from Rocky Mountain House – I probably haven't got the name of the riding right. My apologies to the hon. member. But the hon. member that just spoke raised a couple of issues.

HOV lanes, of course, around Fort McMurray, the hon. member might know, might not, are actually something that have been requested by Wood Buffalo and the industry up there largely to help with the high traffic flow and the bumper-to-bumper traffic between the municipality and the areas of the oil sands and the workplaces outside of there. They're public highways, so they can't truly be called single-purpose highways. The fact is that the population base in Fort McMurray and the work areas are two of the only major stops on the highway. While that doesn't make them single-purpose highways, it makes them used a lot like single-purpose highways would be, and both the people from industry and the people from the municipality have suggested that if they could get greater use out of the infrastructure that's there, perhaps including the shoulders, of course, after first making sure that the shoulders are wide enough and safe enough to do that, if the shoulder was used as a bus lane, it might actually decrease the congestion and help things out there while being fiscally responsible. We hope to make that work, and we'll look for other opportunities, as the hon. member said before, only where they might be appropriate in the rest of the province.

Mr. Speaker, on reasonable and probable, although the hon. member that just spoke may be quite learned, unfortunately, I'm going to choose to side with the Supreme Court of Canada in the court's Baron versus Canada, 1993, part of which reads:

The argument was rejected . . .

"Rejected" is the key word.

. . . that the "reasonable grounds" standard in s. 231.3(3) is constitutionally insufficient as being a lower standard than "reasonable and probable grounds."

Now, as the hon. member said, who knows what future court cases will bring, but at this point, Mr. Speaker, I think that the government is going to side with the Supreme Court of Canada over the hon. member while acknowledging the hon. member's deep knowledge in these areas.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the House for their consideration, and I respectfully ask the House to support this bill. I will, with that, close debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

[Motion carried; Bill 32 read a third time]

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, since it's almost 6 o'clock, I would move to adjourn the House until 7:30 this evening.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:56 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 26, 2013

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 39 Enhancing Consumer Protection in Auto Insurance Act

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'll try to make my comments somewhat brief. I can speak in general in Committee of the Whole to this bill, can I not?

The Chair: Absolutely.

Mr. Bilous: Okay. Wonderful.

First and foremost, I think this is a positive in the right direction as far as looking at providing more affordability and accessibility when it comes to auto insurance. The interesting statistic, Mr. Chair, is that 80 per cent of Albertans carry additional auto insurance within our province, and regulating these rates is something that the Alberta NDP has been calling for for years if not decades. Again, I think helping Albertans to afford and also to understand their auto insurance rates is a positive thing, especially because so many Albertans do depend on their vehicles to get to and from work and for driving their families around. We want to make sure that, again, rates are fair and affordable for everyone.

I'd like to just walk us through a little bit of history here, Mr. Chair. You know, back in 2003 the PCs introduced what was then Bill 53 after years of calls to reform insurance regulation. We pointed out back then that Albertans paid some of the highest auto insurance rates in Canada and that at the time they were rising at quite shocking speeds. The PCs tried to address this by freezing the rates but after their friends the insurance companies had locked themselves into a 57 per cent increase over the previous year alone, which is quite significant.

When first introduced, almost all the changes that the Tories proposed during these reforms were really for the benefit of the insurance companies, not for Albertans, despite the fact that at the time, again, these companies were making record profits and premium revenues were 25 per cent over operating and claims costs. At that time the government only concerned themselves with prohibiting double-dipping and instituting minor injury caps instead of looking at the whole picture and looking out for Albertans, Mr. Chair, and the fact that they were paying exorbitant rates just to drive their vehicles.

You know, we pointed out that many of the changes amounted to nothing more than the government shifting payment obligations from some Albertans onto others instead of shifting costs away from ordinary Albertans and onto the insurance companies, who were raking in much higher profits than they were paying out in claims. Mr. Chair, we, the Alberta NDP, held the government to account and forced them to begin regulating some insurance rates on the grid, which is now used to protect the rates all Albertans pay on the basic coverage.

It is important to know, Mr. Chair, that some of the problems that we noted with Bill 53 are persisting and continuing. We drew attention to the fact that the board reviews rates behind closed doors and that there was no opportunity for the public or consumer advocates to challenge rate increases. As we see with this Bill 39, the government is repealing complaint procedure provisions and leaving, really, a bare-bones regulation as the only means for Albertans to address these issues.

Mr. Chair, we also support a greater degree of flexibility so that, again, the rates can be responsive and reflective of the needs of the public, but we obviously need to ensure that there are some legislative safeguards.

Mr. Chair, now the premiums for basic and additional coverage are both going to be dealt with by the Automobile Insurance Rate Board. Now, considering the repeal of the dispute resolution procedure for matters relating to those rates, you know, a question is: what recourse do Albertans now have if they encounter problems with the determination of fault or the availability of insurance or any of those issues? There are still several questions, and maybe I'll just throw a couple of them out and see if there is a minister that is willing to respond to some questions.

Continuing on with dispute resolution, Mr. Chair, the grounds available for dispute resolution in the complaint resolution regulation are not as comprehensive as section 612 of the Insurance Act, which the government is trying to repeal. The previous section envisioned the public being able to access the complaint procedure for determinations of fault and the availability of insurance and several other factors. Can we be assured by the minister that these grounds will be included in the regulations? Again, with the transition that we're seeing, you know, as opposed to being in the bill, in legislation, we're often told that some of these things will be addressed in regulations, so I'm curious to know if that's one of them. Another question: why aren't there arbitration procedures in the legislation as opposed to relying on the regulation?

If the rates set by the board are not being accurately reflected, how can ordinary Albertans access a procedure to rectify this? How can Albertans get help or follow a complaints process with respect to the decisions made by the board? Again, where is the oversight for ordinary Albertans?

As well, Mr. Chair, when the hon. minister introduced this bill, he said that they'll update the diagnostic treatment and protocols regulation through the normal regulatory process. Now, apparently, this will consist of modernizing some clinical definitions. If this is all part of a normal regulatory process, can we get some information on what the changes will entail? Since Albertans need to know what their level of coverage will be and what might happen if they're injured in an accident, these changes, which might affect their standard of coverage or care, should be clearly listed and explained. What consultations will take place or have taken place to make sure that these changes are well informed and effective for regular Albertans, who need to access the insurance coverage for which they've been paying?

What input from the public will the government allow, considering that these decisions will affect individual Albertans in potentially huge ways? Will it include other regulatory changes about which Albertans need to know?

Again, there are some questions that we have with the bill as it currently sits, Mr. Chair. I do want to note that the Alberta NDP for years led the fight as far as regulating auto insurance. Again, as we know, in the past, when this government privatized our auto insurance rates, they did skyrocket within this province. We went from one of the most competitive in western Canada to the most expensive. Again, the government, you know, finally listened to calls from the Alberta NDP to regulate not just basic coverage but to look at regulating additional coverage. As I pointed out, 80 per cent of Albertans get the additional coverage, not just the PL/PD.

We're happy to see that it's finally going to be regulated. Just a few questions on how that's going to work and, again, some questions around complaints resolution, resolving disputes, questions around how the board is going to make these decisions, and some questions around minor injury regulation.

With that, Mr. Chair, I'll take my seat. Thank you.

The Chair: Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Allen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak in favour of this. I would commend the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance on bringing Bill 39 forward. You know, I've heard from a number of my constituents in Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo about the increasing costs of auto insurance in the province. This is a particular problem in my constituency as so many people must travel from other areas of the province and across Canada, in fact, in order to work in Fort McMurray. As well, those living in the area – and so many have chosen to do so now – are in more remote and harder-to-access areas of the province. Vehicular insurance is a very necessary cost to every resident of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

I'm extremely glad that insurance rates will be regulated for the province. Consumer protection, especially when it involves something so critical as the ability to get to work, and access to services in the unfortunate event of an accident are vital factors in the quality of life of my residents. I'm pleased to see the insurance industry is onboard with this bill as well. That's integral to seeing this succeed.

The implementation of the independent Automobile Insurance Rate Board, the development of the file-and-approve system, whereby each insurer needs to apply for premium adjustments on an as-needed basis as opposed to annually, and the increased solvency requirements to ensure that insurance companies remain viable greatly improve market conditions. All are much-needed changes to the insurance industry in Alberta, and it is important to protect Albertans in the event of an accident and in the everyday usage of their vehicle.

Mr. Chair, I'm a small businessperson. I've always believed that government needs to stay out of the way of business and that the market will control itself. However, in a situation like this, in a province where insurance is mandatory for vehicular coverage, then it is appropriate that we bring in some form of regulation, and this act meets that guideline and certainly is going to be most appropriate for this province, so it has my full support.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.
Are there others?

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Chair, I did have a question that I was hoping the minister could answer or that somebody could answer. The question: under Bill 39 where will the dispute resolution process be after the deletion of section 612 in the act, and who will set that regulation? There is a bit of a concern just trying to understand, once section 612 is deleted, who is going to set the regulations for the dispute resolution process. There are some folks in the industry that are wondering that and how that will come about.

Maybe if you could look into that and get back to us, that would be fantastic.

Thanks.

The Chair: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 39 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report Bill 39.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 39.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 27

Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act

[Adjourned debate November 25: Mr. Campbell]

The Deputy Speaker: I recognize the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to third reading of Bill 27, the Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act, which I understand makes amendments to the Emergency Management Act as well as the Municipal Government Act. I regret the fact that the government did not accept some of the recommendations and amendments of my colleagues, which I think would have greatly improved the act and also allowed me to be able to support it. As it currently stands, I can't support this bill.

I want to go through, in particular, some of the issues that I have with the caveats on properties and do it from the perspective of my home riding of Highwood, which was the most impacted area during the flooding. I also want to spend some time talking about the provision that would allow for provincial emergency response to be extended from 14 to 28 days and why I agreed with my colleague's amendment that it should actually have been longer.

I'll start by giving a bit of context from my own perspective of what I went through as a flood victim. I live in High River. I think that the government has missed an opportunity with this bill to be able to address many of the glitches that occurred throughout the emergency response. It's why we put forward two flood reports over the course of the last five months. One of them was calling for a public inquiry into what happened in High River. The other was also a response with 22 different recommendations that we felt and hoped that the government would have considered when they were putting forward changes for how they would approach the issue of managing areas that are flooding.

I should tell you what happened on the day of the flood, on June 20. I remember getting a call from my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. He actually sent me an e-mail at somewhere around 8 a.m. letting me know that my hometown was flooding. I ended up going onto Twitter and having that confirmed by the news reporting. I hopped in my vehicle and went down to the emergency command centre, which was at the municipal council. At 9 o'clock in the morning I'd popped by the river, and at 9 a.m. the river was already breaching. It was when I went to the command centre that they indicated that the level of flood flows that they were looking at that day were already going to be in the order of about 1,300 cubic metres per second, which was 50 per cent higher than what they were in the 2005 flooding. Remember, in the 2005 flooding we had also seen three deaths and $165 million worth of damage.

It was at that point that I knew that we were going to be in grave danger in High River. I went over to the Snodgrass centre, which is where we were sandbagging, hoping to be able to rescue whatever properties that we could, and accompanied a flatbed of sandbags over to the High River hospital. They had already received a couple of loads of sandbags but needed to be sandbagged further. As we were sandbagging, we were getting close to noon now, and we were just barely finished getting the sandbags all around the hospital when it became clear that we weren't going to be able to do any more work.

I think there were a lot of moments of grave concern in the hospital that day as we didn't know whether or not the four sandbags we'd piled high were going to be enough to be able to keep the flood waters out. We didn't know whether or not the water had finished rising at that point. What I did notice in that hospital, though, is that the generator was right near the back door, which was leaking. If the generator had blocked out, we would have ended up having 124 patients stranded in the hospital because there was no way to access it at ground level. There was also no way for the helicopters to be able to fly in since the landing pad was also at ground level. We took turns at the back door shop-vacking to make sure that we were able to keep the water going down the drain to prevent the generator from blocking out.

I ended up getting rescued later that day. The Telus centre for the phone system went down about 5 o'clock, so I got blocked out of being able to communicate with anyone, including my husband, who I'd been separated from. It was about 7:30 that I got rescued by a couple of volunteer firefighters who came to the door. John Badduke was one of them – and I've since met him, and I'll mention him again – as well as six brave volunteers who loaded me up on a front-loader and put me in the back of a manure spreader. The media thought it was very appropriate for a politician to have been rescued on a manure spreader and told me so.

At that moment we were supposed to go back to the fire hall because we had a woman on the truck with us who was pregnant and another woman on the truck who had a heart condition, but as we were driving down the streets, there were just so many people who were coming out of their homes carrying whatever belongings they could, carrying their kids, carrying their pets that the six brave young men who were accompanying us ended up driving around the streets for another two and a half hours picking up people, as many as they could, putting people and pets into the back of the vehicle.

We only finished when we got our third injury. One of the young men ended up breaking his foot. We figured at that point it was time to go back to the fire hall, so we did. We arrived there about 9:30, and I was fortunate to be able to meet up with my husband. It wasn't too long after that that we found out that three people died in the flood. Those are the three names that we know. There were a couple of other individuals who have been identified as also dying either as a result of the flood or shortly after whose families have not released their names.

That was the initial experience that I had. The next day I went to the emergency operations centre along with other politicians who were there. The mayor was there. The MP for the area was there as well. We heard that day that the number one issue coming in to the command centre was the issue of pets that had been stranded in people's homes. Because there was no early warning, a lot of people had left for work in the morning and had left their pets in their homes. Later that day I volunteered to be part of the pet rescue team. We needed a phone number to be able to start getting calls from people and their addresses about where their pets were, so we posted the phone number for one of the council members, Jamie Kinghorn, and we ended up getting over a thousand unique phone numbers that came in. That's how many individuals were desperate to get their pets, to give you some idea of just how many individuals needed to have their pets rescued.

I think this is the interesting thing that they learned in Katrina flood rescue, after that event, that people look at pets as part of their family. In some ways, to be able to get people rescued, you have to rescue the pets as well. I think it's something that is important for us to consider in future emergency response. If we're going to have an event like this, how do you make sure that you build that into the emergency response? It wasn't built in initially, and it did end up creating issues in the days following. It's something I would have hoped that the government might have considered addressing as part of the update to its emergency management operations.

I also discovered over the course of the next number of days that search and rescue was not called in to our area. There does appear to be a command structure where search and rescue responds to the RCMP, but when you have a local command centre, there isn't an easy mechanism for search and rescue to be activated. It may have been activated in other parts of southern Alberta, but it wasn't activated in High River. I think search and rescue would have been very helpful if they had been activated in those first few days.

We also heard as well that as the waters were receding, the authorities were going door to door, and they were breaking into homes without using locksmiths. In other instances there have been locksmiths that have been used to prevent door damage. I did raise this in the EOC. The public had been told that once it was raised with them, the doors were no longer going to be broken down, that a team of locksmiths had also been activated so that it would limit the amount of damage.

On day four I was asked to leave town. I'm going to go through a little bit of this because I think it's important to understand the impact that this has had on individuals in High River and how they're perceiving the misplaced priorities of the bill that is coming through when we had very many other serious issues that the government had the opportunity to deal with in its legislation. I left on day four. That was the day in most other jurisdictions that people were being allowed back home. I think we all saw the coverage in Calgary where Mayor Nenshi was allowing people to wade into their homes up to their knees in water to be able to go in and get personal belongings. That didn't happen in High River. When the mayor asked me to leave, I did. I took three days' worth of clothes because I figured that was probably all I was going to need because, quite frankly, the waters had receded in High River in most of the places with the exception of one part of town.

The next morning when I showed up in High River, the emergency operations centre had been moved, and I found out that I was no longer welcome to attend any of the emergency operations updates. That led to a period of, quite frankly, chaos, in my opinion, where I ended up having to go to evacuation centres, crash press conferences, doing whatever I could to find out what the progress was on being able to move things along so people could get back into town. As MLA for the area I was getting phone calls, I was talking to my neighbours, and people wanted to have answers. But there wasn't a mechanism for me as the elected MLA to be able to get updated on a regular basis, so I ended up having to crash news conferences simply to get information.

At the same time that this was going on, the website and phone lines for the town were in a bad state because they were on Telus as well. With Telus having been down, it ended up disrupting the information channels to get information out to the rest of the residents, so I started doing telephone town halls. I think over the course of the crisis I ended up doing about 10 or 15 telephone town halls.

We set up our own website as well, where we were also posting government information as well as information that we heard from different sources to be able to give accurate information. We had Facebook.

We supported the High River flood support page. Within very short order the woman who ran that page, Colleen, had expected she was only going to help about 300 or 400 people with that. By the end of it she had something like 25,000 people who were signing in regularly to her flood support page to be able to get updates. I had hoped that the government would have recognized that this kind of information piece was one of the things that created a lot of difficulties in being able to keep community members up to speed on what was going on. It created an environment where there was growing frustration.

Now, I think we saw that by day 7 there was a standoff between residents and the RCMP in the northwest part of town. It was within the next couple of days that the RCMP announced that because things were getting a little bit hot, they had decided to go back into homes and start seizing firearms from gun owners, perhaps with the idea that somehow that would bring the temperature down or prevent any potential standoffs. I don't know. I'm still trying to get answers about why the RCMP chose to do that.

I ended up calling the Prime Minister's office at that point because I was concerned that there were things that were a little bit out of control in the whole situation. Ostensibly there was a local emergency response going on, but in point of fact the Alberta Emergency Management Agency and various provincial government officials, in my opinion, had been in charge from about day 4. It was that chaotic structure of not really knowing who was in charge that I think led to a lot of those problems over the course of that week and not being able to properly communicate. Was it the local authorities? Was it the provincial authorities? Was it the RCMP? It seemed that the RCMP was operating completely outside the chain of command. Also, the decision-making process, I believe, broke down.

The next day – I think it was actually the day that the Prime Minister came out and condemned the actions of the RCMP – was when the province took over a provincial state of emergency. I have to say that I commend the minister of High River. I think he did a terrific job over that 14-day period. There seemed to me to be a lot of progress being made. The communication improved. The amount of communication flow not only from the government website but also through the Alberta Twitter feed was tremendous. I think that the program that was rolled out for the debit cards, as I've already mentioned, was very well received and, in my opinion, very well managed.

One of the things I especially appreciated about the minister coming in at that point was that he realized how vitally important it was to bring the temperature down by allowing people to return home. I think if there had been an opportunity for the provincial government to step in earlier, it may have brought that additional perspective to it, and some of the return of residents may have happened sooner, and it may have avoided some of the standoff and pressure that happened between residents and the RCMP that occurred because of some of the delays.

Day 10 was when the first residents got let back in in the northwest part of High River. That was important because that was where the initial standoff had been with residents, so they were able to return home. It's also important because some of those homes in the northwest part are where the government floodway areas have been officially identified. There's a cul-de-sac of homes that is around the golf course where the floodway homes have been identified. I'll return to that in a moment.

Day 12, a couple of days later, was when the southwest part of the town was returned. It was Beachwood residents among the residents who were returned at that point on day 12. I mention Beachwood because I will return to them in a moment also.

Day 14 was when I returned, having worn the same set of clothes for about three times longer than I had anticipated doing so, so that was nice for me. I didn't have any damage to my home, which allowed me to have the time to be able to help my neighbours. That's how many of us felt who ended up not having any damage to our homes.

Day 23 or thereabouts was when I met with the minister for High River again because we were coming up on the close of the 14-day period where the provincial state of emergency was ending, and I did plead with him to ask the Premier to reconvene the Legislature to be able to extend the provincial state of emergency. That should give some indication of the confidence that I had in the minister for High River to continue to manage the affairs. It seemed to me that when the provincial minister came in, it did tend to recalibrate all of the decision-making. It seemed that the decision-making became a lot more clear and the communication became a lot more clear.

I was very worried about the provincial state of emergency ending before every resident area had been allowed to return home. At that point not every resident area had been allowed to return home. I don't know if the minister took that message forward, but it didn't occur, and I think that was unfortunate. I think there would have been a lot smoother transition if there hadn't been the return after 14 days to the structure where, once again, as I mentioned, it was a little chaotic.

I think what you see is that there is a pretense that the locals are in charge – that was my observation – but it was very, very clear that many, many of the decisions required the decision-making and the support of the provincial government and the AEMA. But when you have a confused reporting structure and it isn't clear who's actually in charge, it ends up breaking down accountability, and that's, I think, one of the things that I had hoped the government would be able to fix in this legislation.

As it turned out, it was day 25 that the residents of Wallaceville and Hampton Hills were able to return and day 26 that the residents of Sunrise were able to return. We already saw in the return of those residents that it was a world of difference experience for them than it had been for the previous residents. There weren't any porta-potties put into the area for them to be able to return and start cleaning out their homes. There was a confused message about whether or not it was safe for them to go into their homes. They were told that the soil was contaminated, that their homes might contain methane, that they couldn't bring in volunteers because it was too dangerous. People started cleaning out their homes anyway, not having proper protective gear because many of them didn't receive welcome packages. That is the experience of people who were in the worst situation in our town.

Because they had been out for so long and because their homes had sat in water for so long, you were beginning to see mould set in. My firefighter friend John Badduke took me into his home, which was in one of these areas, and he showed me his walls. There were two different kinds of mould on his walls, blue and red mould, that no one had ever seen before, and he wasn't even sure whether or not his home could be repaired. The water had gone up to the second floor in his home, and he was now in a position where he didn't know what his path forward was.

In the time since the last residents entered into their homes, I saw just an amazing outpouring of support and volunteerism like I never could have possibly imagined. When all was said and done, with Mission Possible having come into High River, with Mormon Helping Hands, with Samaritan's Purse, with Salvation Army, with Red Cross, with multiple other organizations, there were some 25,000 volunteers who came in to help people muck out their homes. I have to say that I do not think we would be where we are today if we had not seen that incredible volunteer effort.

The problem that I observed, though, is that there wasn't a very clear co-ordination between the emergency operation centre, which was focused on public security and public infrastructure, and all of these volunteer organizations who wanted to help, who wanted barriers taken out of the way so that they could help. I thought that that would have been an area we would have been able to see the government address in this bill, but it is an area where it seems that they were silent. It's still an area, I believe, that they need to take a closer look at.

My understanding in U.S. emergency operations is that organizations, particularly the Red Cross, are integrated heavily into the overall emergency response so that you do have that seamless flow of information back and forth. It's just simply not possible for the government to activate enough government employees to be able to repair in this case some 5,000 homes that had suffered damage. The only way we could have gone on to the road to recovery was to be able to rely on that incredible volunteer spirit that came into our community. But there were glitches, and those things need to be addressed.

In the time since the major part of the emergency ended and they've shifted into recovery and reconstruction, the calls and e-mails that have come into my office have been involving temporary housing, the contract that was given to Tervita to clean up homes, the contract surrounding school portables and the delays on that, the glitches in the disaster recovery program, and getting payments. There are also still so many individuals who are displaced, our seniors. We've got a number of tenants who are displaced. We've got temporary foreign workers because Cargill and Western Feedlots are both in the area. Many individuals are still without homes. There are issues for landlords. Because of the structure of the DRP program, it has left a number of landlords without being able to get any support to be able to rebuild their rental units, which is then displacing some of our lower income High River residents and creating problems with small businesses being able to start up. All of these things are connected, and all of these things, I think, are the ones that our residents are looking to the government to find answers for.

I have raised the issue before of the 1,900 claims that had gone in to the RCMP for doors that were damaged, windows that were broken, and other damage that was caused on the entry into people's homes. I was disappointed to read in the last couple of weeks that despite the announcement a few weeks ago that those claims would be paid, the RCMP is now saying that things are caught up in legal and it's going to take up to two years to resolve. The issue of the RCMP command structure and how they fit into the EOC when you have a local emergency response, a provincial emergency response going back to a local emergency response is something that absolutely has to be figured out in the event that we have another incident like this. I think that this unanswered question has left a lot of uncertainty in communities about what role the RCMP will play when we have another one of these disasters. Again, it's one of those areas I wish the government had taken the lead on trying to develop some policy or legislation around so that we could get some clarity in this area.

The things that I'm mentioning are the issues that come into my constituency office and the things that are causing the most concern for High River residents. I think you can probably tell from the things that I've talked about that there's still a lot of trauma in High River. I get more positive comments into my office these days than negative. I get a lot of people who have the ability to float on their credit cards and lines of credit their own reconstruction of their homes. But it's those who are at the lower end of the income scale, living paycheque to paycheque, people who are on fixed incomes, the really difficult cases that my office staff are working on on a weekly basis with the minister for High River's office staff to try to be able to work one-on-one to be able to resolve them. I've appreciated the fact that the minister has taken those seriously. We certainly haven't turned the corner completely in High River. There certainly are a lot of serious concerns.

This is the reason why we put out a call for a public inquiry into what happened in High River, not only because there were three deaths. It does seem to me that when you have deaths in these kinds of incidents, they should be examined so that you can look at ways in which you can prevent it from happening again. I think from what I have gone through today, you'll see that the priority that I heard from constituents who experienced this is, number one, they want to see more policy and legislation around the issue of emergency preparedness. What are we doing to ensure before the fact that we've got local municipalities who have gone through the emergency preparedness, who've identified individuals who are going to lead it, who've identified protocols and responses? If we're going to maintain the structure that we have, where in the event of a serious incident it's the local municipality who takes the lead, I don't know that we've addressed this part of the problem.

There are only a handful of municipalities who can manage their emergency response on their own. Calgary is a prime example. Medicine Hat is another example. Fort McMurray is another example. When a municipality gets large enough that not only do they have only a portion of their city impacted in the event of a flood but they also have a large number of emergency and first responders to be able to manage things internally, it's a very different experience than in a town like High River, of 13,000 people, who relied very heavily on the expertise of those outside our community not only because we didn't have as many first responders but also because all of our first responders in town were also victims themselves. The vast majority of them were facing issues of their own homes and in some cases businesses being wiped out, and having to be able to put that aside for what turned out to be, I think, 103 days of total emergency response was an awful lot to ask of a small town. So emergency preparedness and what the provincial government can do to assure emergency preparedness: I would have liked to have seen more done on that.

Early warning is another area where we needed to do more work. When you hear reports like the Discovery Channel documentary that said that scientists knew two days in advance because of the snowpack and the weather warning that we were going to be in trouble in southern Alberta, how is it that that information didn't get communicated to the local authorities? How is it that as the MLA for the area, living in that town, my first official contact with the government was at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, after I'd already been trapped in the High River hospital for two hours, to get an update from the Health minister about what was happening at the High River hospital?

These kinds of protocols have to be worked out. We need to have a system of early warning so that every decision-maker and every representative is aware when things are going to occur in their community so that you're not finding out after the fact. I've heard subsequently of parents' concern that their kids were still being loaded up on school buses to be taken to school after the official emergency response had already come out. How does that happen, when you have an emergency response in an incident like this where all of the key decision-makers in all of the different institutions don't have an integrated system of being warned? How is it that there isn't a siren system or a call-out system or an e-mail system? These are the kinds of things that my residents are asking about, and I don't think that the government responded in legislation to try to clarify some of that. That's what the residents of High River are looking for.

The issues of preliminary response, of ensuring that when everybody is kicked into emergency mode, there is a clear understanding of how the different agencies are going to work together. How does a local government communicate with the provincial government? How does the RCMP fit into that structure? When does search and rescue get called in? How do you ensure that every hand is on deck that can be on deck to make sure that you're dealing with all of the issues in the preliminary response?

Communications is an enormous issue, especially for a small municipality. Let's remember that we've got over 350 municipalities in Alberta. We've got 66 that are at risk of flood and others that are at risk of tornado or fire or some other calamity. They're going to face the same issues that happened in High River of how to actually communicate to a diaspora population that gets evacuated all over the province, indeed all over the country, and be able to effectively get information out of them so that you can close those information gaps and they're brought up to speed on the most relevant information.

I think that people look to Mayor Nenshi in Calgary as a model for how crisis communications should be conducted. Mayor Nenshi in Calgary was doing updates three times a day whereas the information coming out of a small municipality, where you don't have the round-the-clock media coverage that occurred in Calgary, made it a lot more difficult to get the information out. To me, it's incumbent upon the provincial government to figure this piece out because if you can figure it out for a community like High River, you can also figure it out for the other 350 communities that might one day be at risk of suffering the same problem.

The fifth area, and I've already mentioned it, is the operation of the emergency operation centre and the broader community. There are so many individual, independent volunteer groups that are going to spring into action the next time that this occurs. I had two researchers from New Brunswick come to interview me in my office wondering why it was that we had such an incredible outpouring of community support in the event of this crisis. I asked them what they meant by that, and they said: "Well, if this happened in New Brunswick, I don't think we'd see the same kind of response. People would just wait for the government to come and help them. What is so different about Alberta?"

I think in the era of social media, where you've got Twitter and you've got Facebook, you've got the ability for people to self-organize. We have to be prepared for the fact that people are going to show up, people are going to want to help. You can get truckloads of food and supplies organized and sent all over the province. Whether it's the work that my colleague from Airdrie and my other colleagues in the Wildrose caucus did to organize caravans of trucks that went to the Morley reserve and Siksika or whether it was the incredible amount of support that came down to High River, Calgary, and other parts of southern Alberta, that is going to happen again, and the government has to be aware of how they're going to be able to integrate that and work with those community groups when this happens again. I think that that is a piece that the government hasn't given serious thought to, and I think it would be a missed opportunity if they didn't end up dealing with that in the next crisis.

Mr. Speaker, how much time do I have? Are you telling me I only have four minutes? Oh, no. You're waving to somebody else. That's all right. I'll keep going.

Mr. Anderson: Forty minutes.

Ms Smith: Forty minutes. Okay.

I've told you what I had hoped I would see with the government's response, and we didn't get those. Hopefully, it's not too late. I've put it on the record, and maybe we'll be able to have an opportunity to have a conversation about these things again. I've already indicated to my town after I got elected that I would be giving them some of my observations in writing so that they can consider that for their own emergency response, and I'll make a copy available to the government as well so that they can consider some of the things that I've mentioned.

Turning more specifically to what the government bill did actually deal with, I still find that they ended up getting it backwards. The big problem with the government's approach is that after everything the residents went through – and this is why I went through in some detail what our residents went through. There's a great deal of trauma that people are still experiencing. We're only five months after the fact. I've got countless stories of people who are still in temporary housing, people who are still looking to the new year to be able to get their homes back to a point where they're livable, people who are still in the middle of trying to figure out whether or not their homes can be repaired or whether they have to be bulldozed. This is the situation that people have found themselves in.

The government's approach in this bill is to really blame the homeowner. It's not the homeowner's fault that they purchased a home in an area that had gone through all of the municipal approval processes, whatever provincial approval processes there needed to be. Many of the residents in High River and I think many of the residents who were in the government's now-identified floodway areas bought their homes in good faith, thinking that they were going to be safe. The approach the government has taken is to lock in flood maps that are in some cases 20 years old, that are not reflective of what has occurred in some of these communities to be able to protect them, and to punish even further people who are already traumatized and trying to face some pretty important life decisions about what their next steps are going to be.

We would have taken a different approach, and we have said this from when we issued our flood report all the way through the debates that you heard on this bill and all the way through press conferences and press releases, and we're going to say it again and again. The approach that we believe the government should have taken was to update the flood maps first, looking at the data that we have based on the most recent event. We thought that government should have then done flood mitigation or at least made very clear what kind of flood mitigation projects they were going to do and then reupdated the flood maps because every flood mitigation project you do is going to impact how safe it is to build in certain areas. It's going to impact what is flood fringe. It's going to impact what is floodway.

Then we thought that the next step after that, after you had done the flood mitigation and done the updated flood map, you would identify the very small areas which were floodway, where you couldn't protect homes, where you couldn't protect businesses, and then work with those homeowners to be able to buy them out and remove them. The difference in our approach would be that rather than have 254 homes that need to be moved under the government's plan, it would be a far smaller number once you had done those kind of changes, and it would make a huge difference.

The fourth thing, I think this is something that we've only heard a little bit about from the government, but I think it goes to this issue as well of why we can't blame the homeowner. If homeowners in Canada and in Alberta were allowed to get insurance, then we could have made the argument, perhaps, about why they shouldn't have been able to qualify for flood relief. The fact of the matter is that Canada remains the only G8 country that does not have a flood insurance program. This, to me, is one of the areas where we have to find a way to bridge that gap. If other jurisdictions have found a way to do it, if commercial properties have found a way to be covered under flood insurance – and they have – then there should be a way for us to be able to work with our federal counterparts and the insurance industry to be able to have a flood insurance program.

The reason that this is so important is that once you get the insurance companies interested in protecting the property and value of the homeowners' properties that they're insuring, they also, then, have an interest in making sure that there are flood mitigation measures taken at a community-wide level to be able to protect those investments.

I fear that the approach that the government is taking is one that is going to be unnecessarily costly. They've already identified the potential for $275 million worth of buyout value of those homes that are in the floodway, yet they're not applying the rules uniformly across the board. That's what's causing frustration for people in my community, especially in the community of Beachwood, which I'll mention in a minute. If you make exceptions for Fort McMurray because they've done mitigation efforts and because they're built in a floodway and they've got a lot of property value and you're making an exception to identifying that as a floodway because it would be too costly to do otherwise, if you're making exceptions for Drumheller, if you're making exceptions for Redwood Meadows, then it stands to reason that you should be able to have a program that is flexible enough that when communities take efforts to do mitigation, they can also seek a way of getting these caveats removed from their properties.

I want to turn to the issue of Beachwood. I already mentioned that Beachwood was one of the communities that returned by day 12. These are individuals who were back in their homes. For the most part these homes received relatively little damage. Many of the homes were able to get insurance coverage because they had sewer backup, and part of the reason why this area that the government has identified as floodway was actually one of the areas that was least harmed is because they had already done significant work building a berm to protect the community.

It was after the 1995 flood that the town continued flood mitigation strategies, that included building a number of dikes along the Highwood in the town of High River after the flood of 2005. They committed further to protecting Beachwood Estates subdivision with a tight-wrapped dike. The reason this is important is because they actually had a report, the Golder report of April 2008, that verified that this tight-wrapped dike around this community would not have any impact on any of the other communities further downstream. This was even litigated. It was brought before the Alberta appeals board to be able to challenge the issue of the flood and make sure that the installation of it was not going to impact other communities, and the appeal board approved the dike. The policy then stated that the flood hazard study would be updated, but it didn't happen. The local flood hazard study and the maps were not updated even though this community mitigation took place.

As a result, we've got a situation where because essentially of an administrative misstep, an administrative error, we have an entire community that has been arbitrarily drawn into a floodway zone on the basis of outdated maps that don't recognize its mitigation efforts, and it's going to cost the government a lot of money to buy these residents out. There are over 30 homes in this area. They are high-end homes. The value of the homes in total is somewhere in the order of $30 million.

The town of High River has already voted to improve and restore the parts of the berm that were damaged. They've been asking the provincial government to acknowledge the mitigation efforts that were taken in '95 and taken in 2005 and verified by the Alberta appeals board so that they could take this area out of the floodway zone and, for a mere $500,000, upgrade the berm so that it can be protected. To me, this seems like a pretty simple calculation. You spend $500,000 to avoid having to pay out $30 million. You acknowledge the fact that the investment has been made, that mitigation efforts have been taken, that you have made just a simple administrative error, that this area should never have been a floodway in the first place.

This is the reason why this party and my colleagues have been saying that the government got it in the wrong order. Beachwood makes the case perfectly. The mitigation efforts were done, the maps should be updated, this area should not have caveats on the homes, and we should be able to protect these properties.

I'm a property rights advocate. I have always been a property rights advocate. It is one of a number of reasons why I got into provincial office. I have to tell you that passing a bill that unnecessarily obliterates $30 million in property value leads me to believe that this government is seriously out of step with what it is that I am hearing our residents telling us.

It's not just Beachwood that's in this situation. There is an entire group of communities in Calgary along the river called the Calgary River Communities Action Group, and they're arguing for exactly the same thing that the community of Beachwood in High River is asking for: identify flood mitigation projects that will give community-based mitigation, then update your flood maps, and then identify these homes which have to be removed.

The approach the government should have taken from the very beginning is: how do you minimize the impact on private property values? How do you protect the maximum number of individual residents and businesses and properties? Unfortunately, the approach the government has taken has been one where they are obliterating far more property value than they need to. It's going to be far more costly than it needs to be from a taxpayer point of view. You can make some very strategic investments in community-based infrastructure mitigation and be able to save tens of millions if not hundreds of millions of dollars worth of property value.

The other reason why these maps don't make sense and why there is still a lot of confusion about the government's approach is the issue of flood fringe. Wallaceville is another example. This is an area that technically by the maps is called flood fringe, yet if you look at what happened in this most recent flood, it was the hardest hit area. There were a couple of others that were very hard hit, but this was the one that was coded the hardest hit area. The vast majority of residents there want to have their area redesignated as a floodway. The town has even debated whether or not they should redesignate the area as a floodway. If you look at the maps, this is where the water naturally wants to go, through the area where these homes were built.

I would say that the government is making an error in not deferring to listening to what the local town council is telling them about the need to take a special look at this particular community. This is sort of on the opposite side. In the one case you've got an area that was the least impacted, which the government by its old, outdated maps is saying is a floodway, and they want to get rid of the homes. You've got another area where the government's outdated maps say is a flood fringe, so they're not listening to the pleas of town council to consider how they might be able to change the designation on these homes so that they can actually be bought out to protect the community.

Then there's another area, Sunrise and Hampton Hills. I mention them because that is the area that didn't get to return until day 25 and day 26. This was an area that was never supposed to flood in the first place. This is an area where, instead, water ended up going in most of these homes up to the second level, and because they've got OSB joists, the company that makes those joists won't guarantee the structural soundness of these homes now that their joists have been immersed in water. Because they sat in water for 25 or 26 days, they ended up with a great deal more issues of mould.

Our docs in our community wrote a letter saying that toxic mould, black mould, can set in within five or six days. Keep in mind that these homes ended up sitting and boiling in all that hot water and all of that sewage and all of that water for 25 or 26 days before residents were allowed to get in. In some cases, because of the delays in Tervita being able to get in to assess and start remediating their homes, it literally took months for some of these homes to begin the remediation process.

I talked to my firefighter friend, John Badduke. After $168,000 being spent to be able to repair that home – he showed me pictures of his home – the mould has grown back. So we've got a situation now where the government is actually spending hundreds of thousands of dollars to repair homes that can't actually effectively be remediated rather than taking the approach that perhaps they should have looked at whether or not these homes should have been demolished so that they were able to save more money.

In addition to this, the developer in this area wanted to start things rolling again in Hampton Hills. He wanted people to be able to look at High River as a place that was going to be back on the rise, putting more homes on the market so that people would move there. The government's maps identify this as an area that is white. It's not floodway. It's not flood fringe. There are no additional mitigation efforts that these homeowners are required to take. But guess what the developer was told when he put forward his application to be able to get homes built? He was told that he wasn't going to get the approval to build a single new home unless he could guarantee that that area would never flood again.

How is a developer supposed to be able to make a commitment like that, when what is really needed in this area, as we saw, is a community-based mitigation project? There needs to be a berm built along one of the main highways – we call it 498 – so that you could actually prevent the water from coming across into that bowl. Because once it came across into that bowl, it just sat there, as we saw, for 26 days. They ultimately were pumping out water at a rate of 140,000 gallons per day. We know that that is what will happen in the worst-case scenario.

We've now left a situation where because of the outdated flood maps and because of a little bit of confusion about who is responsible for mitigation and whether or not there is going to be mitigation – this happens to be a mitigation project that will require the MD of Foothills to be onboard with doing it because it's not actually in High River – these homeowners are trying to rebuild their lives with homes that are so severely damaged that they can't actually be reclaimed. They don't have the ability to get them bulldozed and rebuilt because that's not one of the options that is being offered to most of the homeowners in that area, and the government has not committed yet publicly to any broad-based community mitigation measures so that the new developer can start rebuilding homes.

This is exactly the problem that happens when you develop a policy backwards, and that is what the government has done. They have prematurely identified areas for floodway buyout and flood-fringe additional requirements without actually identifying the first step. The first step is the flood mitigation, the second step is to update the flood maps, and then the third step is to make sure that you are identifying the homes for buyout.

The reason why I'm surprised that the government took the approach that they did is that it's like they didn't read the George Groeneveld flood report that came out in 2006. If they had read the report of their own colleague, the former MLA for Highwood, there are some things that stand out that are striking about the approach that was recommended here versus the approach that the government took.

In the first case, former MLA Groeneveld recommended that Alberta Environment develop a map maintenance program to ensure that the flood risk maps are updated when appropriate. We've had speaker after speaker on the other side tell us that the floodway maps never change, and even though the river is moving, somehow that doesn't affect floodway or flood fringe designations. That's not what this report said. It said:

Situations may arise where an existing flood risk map no longer adequately represents the flood risk for a location. This may result from changes in the river or immediate area, updating a rural flood risk map or errors in the original study. Flood risk maps should also be reviewed regularly particularly after extreme flood events when public and municipal government interest is high.

The cost for this would have been $50,000 annually for one full-time equivalent employee to make sure that we had flood maps that were up to date and to have a process of constant renewal.

Recommendation 3 identified that we also need to be able to have rural flood risk areas “that require flood risk mapping and develop a program to prepare the maps.” There are about 50 areas that “were identified as requiring flood-risk mapping, but only 25 had any existing information on flooding that could be used,” once again reaffirming how important it is to have a program to constantly update the flood maps. In this case that program, it was suggested, would cost a million dollars to be able to do.

It also is, in recommendation 5, recommending that

Alberta Environment continue to collect high-water elevation, aerial photography and other appropriate data whenever a significant flood occurs and share this information with local authorities. [They] should... explore and evaluate other methods of collecting flood data such as satellite imagery, once again reinforcing the need to have constantly renewed and updated maps to be able to have accurate flood risk.

Recommendation 6, recommending that they “make historic flood information available to the public on its website,” including historic high-water levels, flood risk reports, and flood photography. The government has started doing that, but if you’re not going to continue doing this renewal process, then it makes that recommendation less valuable than it otherwise would be.

We also have recommendation 7, recommending that the Minister of Environment designate a flood risk area after ... after

... the responsible local authority has had the opportunity to review the maps and provide comments on the technical elements. The recommended time period for designation is within six months of receiving the maps.

What I found interesting about this recommendation is that it identified that there already is a section, section 96 of the Water Act, that would give formal acknowledgement of the flood risk area by the provincial government. The report questioned why it is that there were no regulations in place to govern this section of the act.

This section of the act I find very interesting because the minister, as of 1996, already had the power to be able to identify flood risk areas under the Water Act, section 96(1).

If the Minister is of the opinion that there is or may be a risk to human life or property as a result of flooding, the Minister may designate, subject to regulations,

- (a) any... land in the Province as a flood risk area, either generally or on an interim basis, and
- (b) specify... acceptable land uses.

If the minister has made a designation, then it would have a regulation that would give some limitations on “new Government works or undertakings” that would be carried out in that area. Financial assistance would not be given to people who engage in uses

- (b) ... other than a use specified under [the] subsection ... and
- (c) money and services and Government disaster assistance programs [would] be restricted with respect to flood damage in the area except as designated by regulations. I don’t know why the government never used this power that it had under the Water Act to be able to identify flood risk areas.

What I found really interesting is that it says that

The Minister must ...

must

... consult with the local authority that is responsible for a proposed flood risk area before making a designation under subsection (1).

To me, that is what is really missing from what the government is passing in Bill 27: this respect for local autonomy, the respect for the local knowledge, the respect for people who actually understand the areas that have been impacted by flooding.

This is why I wonder if that’s, again, part of the trend that we’re seeing with this provincial government. They seem to always find ways to centralize decision-making. They seem to have lost faith in local government and local authorities. This is one of those areas where local government and local authorities actually have more knowledge than the individuals who are distant by hundreds of kilometres and trying to make these decisions from afar. I would have preferred for the government to take the approach that they would – must – consult with the local authority before designating these floodway areas.

I can tell you what would have happened in High River. What would have happened in High River is that they would have heard loud and clear from the town council that Beachwood, because of the mitigation measures that had been taken, should not be in a floodway area, Wallaceville is one that should be open for discussion, and there needs to be mitigation efforts taken to be able to protect Hampton Hills and Sunrise, one of the hardest hit areas in the community.

The fact that this is not a requirement for the government, to get the buy-in from the local authority before designating these floodway areas, is, to me, one of the errors that the government is making in the approach that they’re taking going forward.

The other recommendations that are in the report from Mr. Groeneveld all flow from, I think, the proper assessment, getting things in the right order, and I think, once again, it explains to me why the government is going to face immense push-back from residents who are impacted by the decisions that are being made today in this bill.

To put on homeowners an arbitrary deadline of having to make a decision by November 30, which is coming up now in just four days, only five months after these major incidents, with so much information that is still unknown – it’s still unknown what mitigation projects are actually going to be implemented, still unknown what the flood mapping would look like after those mitigation measures are implemented, unknown whether or not banks will refinance homes that are in floodway and flood fringe areas, unknown whether or not individuals will be able to get insurance on homes that are in floodway and flood fringe areas. We would recommend – and you’ve heard my colleagues say it as well – that the government extend the period to allow people more time to be able to see what some of the government’s decisions are going to be and also to be able to have the opportunity, once this bill passes, to look at the regulations to see if we are able to carve out some additional protections for property owners of the property value, where we can take those mitigation efforts to be able to protect those communities.

There is already, quite clearly, some precedent for doing so. The government made a calculation on Fort McMurray, Drumheller, and Redwood Meadows, where they looked at the impact that it would have on the community versus the kinds of efforts that had already been taken. I can tell you that in High River our residents and our town council are asking for the same consideration. I believe that the communities in Calgary who are going to be impacted by this bill are asking for the same consideration. In the 66 other communities, many of whom have not been impacted by flooding this time around, the government is setting themselves up, I believe, for the same kinds of arguments and concerns and frustrations that our residents are facing in southern Alberta.

I recognize that this isn't something that's in the daily news, that for most individuals, who don't have the residents in their riding and don't have these calls coming into their office, it may feel like the government has moved on and the rest of the province has moved on. But I can tell you that unless the government gets this right, they're going to set themselves up, I think, to have some serious issues in dealing with these kinds of incidents when they happen the next time around. We're going to have another serious flooding event, if not in southern Alberta next year then in some other part of the province.

By locking in with this kind of approach, I think they've locked in a flawed approach. I would hope that the government is flexible enough to understand that when this decision is made and this bill is passed, they may need to come back and make some revisions. The job of the government, in my opinion, when these kinds of incidents happen, is to try to do what they can to be able to get people back to life as normal. It's certainly what the Premier promised. I don't think that when we began this whole process, people anticipated that arbitrary decisions would be made that would cause them to have to make this kind of life-changing decision in such a short period of time in the absence of or at least seemingly divorced from good information, that would allow them to be able to protect their homes, protect their communities, and be able to rebuild and move on.

We'll continue to raise these issues as they come up. We hope that we're wrong. We hope that most people will be able to move on in the event that this bill does pass. We hope that there is some opportunity in the regulations to be able to have the government reconsider how a community would be able to do mitigation so that these flood caveats can be removed. But in the meantime I worry that they have set up a lot of individuals for a lot of unnecessary heartache, that could have been avoided if they'd just done things in the right order.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I am going to conclude my remarks. I will not be supporting this bill. I wish that I could support it because I think that the kind of approach the government intends to take could have been one that we would have been able to support if they had made sure that they had put residents first, property values first, and mitigation and proper flood mapping first. They seem to be in such a rush to get this bill passed that they're making a lot of mistakes, and I'll be voting against it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. leader.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available after the leader's speech if anyone is so inclined.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Livingstone-Macleod. Thank you.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Good evening, everyone. Thank you to our leader, who has just spoken in such great detail. It's hard to do justice to such a subject after such a great presentation.

I believe I have about 10 minutes, Mr. Speaker, if that's correct.

The Deputy Speaker: Fourteen and a half.

Mr. Stier: Thank you very much. I'll try to fit this in, then, if I can.

I rise tonight, as you all know, to speak to Bill 27, which has been named the Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act. As probably most of you know, my constituency of Livingstone-Macleod was also deeply affected by this year's flood.

Just to bring you up to speed on that, in case you weren't aware, there was significant damage to a lot of the communities in my area, in the north Millarville, Turner Valley, Black Diamond, where major bridges and roads were wiped out and homes were flooded. Millarville had a lot of rural areas wiped out, and a river actually changed its course totally and bisected some properties. They're still trying to deal with that. Of course, to the north end of my riding, I bound up against the town of High River. I did spend many days and hours there helping friends and neighbours and people that I've known for many years with their difficulties. It was just a very, very heart-wrenching thing to experience.

Further to the south in my riding we also had the areas of Longview and Blairmore, down at Crowsnest Pass and Fort Macleod, all affected by flooding but, certainly, nothing to the extent that was evident in High River. I still today, when I drive by the temporary housing facilities there at Saddlebrook, become quite solemn when I look to see that there are people there still living in temporary shelters because they have no home to go to. It's very difficult to see that.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, with all that in mind, though, I find it now a little disheartening, frankly, that the government would bring forward a bill and name this act the Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act when it appears that it's really got little to do with flood recovery or reconstruction, actually, the way I read it. After careful review I believe this bill is mild housekeeping at best, and it seems to barely scratch the surface. In my opinion, it will leave Albertans who have to deal with this problem of flood recovery and reconstruction even more confused, actually.

Ever since the government of Alberta announced its policy in mid-July to attach strings to the disaster recovery program funding, strings that included adding caveats to property titles for those that are located in floodways, many flood-impacted Albertans have lived in fear of applying for the program, actually. They've lived in fear of making decisions without clear, concise information, and they've lived in fear of even cashing their cheques from the DRP. The key worry is the unpredictability of the future property values after such decisions have to be made. As I've heard from my constituents, this fear still exists, and I don't believe there's really anything in Bill 27 that's going to alleviate that fear.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I understand that there is a need to ensure taxpayers are protected from the costs of future floods and that adding caveats to some properties that receive government relief can play a part in that. We understand that. But while Bill 27 allows for caveats to be placed on homes that have received funding for previous flood relief, it doesn't provide any clear criteria or guidance for them as to the circumstances under which a caveat can be filed, nor is it clear in the act how it may be removed. The fact is that when families are attempting to evaluate their situations that will affect the future value of their property, they deserve clarity, and the government isn't providing any clarity with Bill 27.

You know, the caveats were mentioned by the associate minister for flood recovery for the southeast in his opening remarks on this bill, and he was very clear that, in fact, the caveats will not be able to be removed if they've accepted DRP assistance. He restated it a couple of times in his remarks. It seems to me that this measure, if it is imposed – and it will be with this act – will result in a permanent reduction in property value. As you know and as our leader said, we stand for property rights. In my opinion, this is a government taking and, therefore, it should be compensatable as may be confirmed by the Property Rights Advocate.

Despite that, though, Mr. Speaker, and my own amendments and the lengthy debate by all opposition parties to rectify this situation, Bill 27 remains unaltered, providing for those caveats without any clear definition in respect to floodways. The cabinet and the Minister of Municipal Affairs will now be in charge of controlling, regulating, and prohibiting development in these floodways across Alberta.

The associate minister, again, in his opening remarks mentioned this issue with regard to the definition of floodways. He said that the reason that they weren't in the bill is that it would be an ESRD issue. Well, the fact is that we had taken the ESRD definitions, and we had suggested in our amendments that these very definitions were from them and that they were government created. They weren't our own invention. The fact is that the government still in those debates decided not to accept them. Instead, we're allowing the cabinet to designate what is and isn't a floodway. It could be said in the future that there might be some very, very difficult problems in resolving issues without clear definitions in this legislation. I've worked with legislation before in my municipal days, and without clear definitions it leaves you open to questions.

Another fact that only adds to the confusion around Bill 27 is the lack of updated flood mapping in Alberta. Currently the government is basing their application and funding process on faulty maps and is not taking future mitigation into account. Now, we've talked about these maps for weeks and weeks on end, and I think it's nothing new. I worry that the communities, though, and individuals will be treated unfairly if the regulations are adopted before we sort that out. We've said this time and time again. The updated mapping of floodways is needed now. A clear definition of floodway is needed now. This is much more necessary than giving more power to the cabinet and Minister of Municipal Affairs, frankly.

Another issue that is extremely sensitive is the buyout program, especially for rural landowners. Many lands in my riding have been drastically affected. As I said earlier, some have actually had their properties bisected by rivers that have changed course, yet this bill still leaves these landowners totally disrespected. No guidelines or policies are contained here to assist them in providing clarity to their situations either. These people are in a desperate situation. They had to be helicoptered out of their homes. That river still flows ahead of their driveway, and they have no way in or out. I'm very concerned that this has not been addressed, and I hope that in some manner we can get to the regulations soon and have some of these situations rectified.

Moving forward, then, Mr. Speaker, section 2 also proposes giving sweeping powers to the minister to trump the MGA entirely if there appears to be an emergency. The Minister of Municipal Affairs will be able to grant new, special powers to municipalities, and these unspecified special powers appear to be modified from the MGA and exempt from the MGA and often outside the MGA. They, therefore, seem like they're special powers that are secret in nature. The minister can just issue a ministerial order to make it happen with a wave of his magic wand, and that is what is going to take place. These powers don't seem to have a sunset clause, either. Although sunset provisions are enabled in this bill, we still wonder just how that may work. It leaves one to wonder: what new, special powers does a municipality need in an emergency that are not already provided under the MGA or the Emergency Management Act? Those acts have been in place for years. One has to wonder: what is the government intending? Yet this is not clearly stated in the act we're dealing with tonight, either.

Moving on, Mr. Speaker, the proposal to amend the 14-day state of emergency period by extending it to 28 days appears arbitrary. The government is making rules up as they go along. Twenty-eight days is still not long enough in a case like High River. We saw this already. Letting municipal government decide when it is ready to resume command, perhaps by extending every 14 days, might be better. I'm certainly open to hearing suggestions on how that could be amended. It certainly doesn't seem right as it stands today.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, the cut-off date for applications, which I mentioned just recently, is fast approaching this weekend. Most residents have yet to apply, are bewildered as to why they're being coerced into making such a drastic decision so quickly. It's only been four months since this disaster struck, and many property owners are still not able to return to their homes. Some are even residing in temporary camps, as I talked about earlier. They're unable to realize any hope in the foreseeable future for having a clear path to rescue them from this plight.

Previous disaster recovery programs did not have such a quick deadline, and one has to wonder why this government is imposing such a drastic rule when the people in southern Alberta, who have suffered so much, are having to make life-altering decisions without sufficient information to base them upon. I'd like to just take a moment to go back on that because I still have files in my office since I was elected, previous disaster recovery program files that were never resolved. They had, I believe, up to two years. Why is it that the applications for this are going to be cut off in four months when it's the biggest disaster – the biggest disaster – the country has seen?

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, we had an opportunity to amend this document, I think, and to secure a more clear, concise set of rules for the Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act. We could have set a clear, concise set of rules in this legislation to address the problems that I've outlined here and during the early debates on this bill. But I'm afraid to say that this document would appear to yet remain as one that falls far short of the mark that should have been required. Therefore, in closing I'm saying that I find this bill insufficient, and I cannot support it as it is.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker. The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand and speak to third reading of Bill 27. The hon. Associate Minister of Regional Recovery and Reconstruction for Southeast Alberta spoke in the House yesterday. I was not in the House to hear those comments that he made yesterday, but I did read Hansard, and some of the comments that were made were good. Some explanations were given, and we appreciate that. I am pleased to see some positive steps forward, but I am still very concerned that flood mapping updates are not a priority.

I think it's worth repeating that we remember that we are dealing with the largest assets that most Albertans will ever own, so placing caveats on property must be done very, very carefully, recognizing that while doing that we are trying to protect all Albertans as taxpayers.

We as the opposition put forth what I would term good amendments that enhance the bill and help protect those Albertans' investments and help them to make what, surely, in a lot of cases will be life-altering decisions. It's very important that – let me back up just a little bit. When I attended the flood mitigation presentation in Calgary a number of weeks ago, I have to say that I was very impressed. Some real good options were put on the table. The ditch, Duff's Ditch, if you want to term it that, around High River: it worked for Winnipeg; I don't see why it wouldn't work for High River. Upstream dams, storage dams: all of those things are really good, I think, mitigation proposals. We only hope that they will be followed up on.

But in looking at that, it raises the question: are we putting more confusion in the minds of homeowners who look at these things and say, "Well, if I'm in a flood zone or flood map area right now and if they do that mitigation, I'm going to be okay, so I'll just rebuild my house and everything will be fine," only to find out that they're still in the zone and that they've still got a caveat on their house? They're being forced into making some decisions on a very rapid basis, I feel.

Further, we did ask that some definitions be put in the bill. Those definitions would be very helpful, I think, for homeowners deciding on how they will proceed. We in the House have been on this for four months, so we're beginning to understand all this terminology. What is a floodway, a flood fringe, an overland flow, design flood, design flood levels, encroachment conditions? All of those terms are becoming almost second nature to some of us, but the average homeowner has no idea what those definitions mean. We were not allowed to put those into the bill, and that's further confusing them. I just want to reiterate that up-to-date flood mapping is absolutely critical going forward, and I would hope that the government will listen.

I still have friends that live in High River who haven't been compensated for doors that were kicked in in the searches of the homes. Nobody has stepped up and said: yes, we'll compensate you for that. Everybody is passing the buck. The provincial government says: we didn't order it. The RCMP says: we can't pay for it. The federal government is not doing it. They're still sitting here four months later not knowing whether they're going to be paid or not. I think that's unacceptable.

In short, I won't beat this over and over again. Our leader spoke very eloquently for some time on it. My colleague spoke on it, mentioned many of the things that I'm concerned with, too. So I'm going to cut this short. I will say that I will reluctantly – and I say "reluctantly" because some of the good things that we wanted to do with this bill were not accepted – support the bill in the end.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also rise to speak in third reading of Bill 27. This seems like a fairly small bill that will enshrine in law several disaster recovery and flood prevention proposals that the government put forward this summer in response to the June 2013 flood. Not all proposals are new, however. Some, such as requiring municipalities to no longer approve new developments in the floodways or filing caveats against titles to land in the flood fringe or floodways, were the recommendations of the 2006 provincial flood mitigation report, also known as the Groeneveld report.

One of the most striking features of this bill is the greatly expanded regulation-making authority it gives the government. While the government's news release on Bill 27 highlights several very specific measures that the legislation will allow, the fact is that the changes will give the government authority to do these things and so much more. That's the concern we have here, Mr. Speaker.

In total the bill contains several different amendments to the Emergency Management Act and the Municipal Government Act. Section 1(2) of the bill amends section 6 of the Emergency Management Act by adding after clause (c) clause (c.1) and (c.2), which will grant the province additional regulation-making authority over eligibility for disaster assistance, additional funding for home flood prevention, and the placing of notices on the land titles of homes in flood hazard areas. The government will use section 6 to deny future disaster assistance to homes that remain in the floodway, require homes in the flood fringe to undertake many more flood-proofing measures to be eligible for future disaster assistance, and establish a land title based notifying system to alert potential homebuyers if a home located in a flood hazard area is eligible for future disaster recovery.

Going back to the 2006 report, prohibiting new developments in floodways was a key recommendation of the 2006 flood mitigation report. Here's what the report had to say on the subject.

Selling flood-exposed crown lands abdicates the responsibility to keeping Albertans safe to private landowners, and while the government as the first seller can ensure that the initial purchaser is aware of the risk, there is no certainty that the risk is communicated to future purchasers, renters or lease holders.

Selling lands in flood risk areas is the opposite of flood mitigation. The province loses its say in the use of these lands and any protective measures would need to be taken through cumbersome mechanisms such as legislation or regulations. Undeveloped flood plains are the natural and most effective form of flood mitigation, and this recommendation will protect those areas. Long-term leases of crown land could be considered for appropriate uses such as parks, agri-business and golf courses.

The sale of flood-prone crown lands creates the potential for increased financial liability for the province in terms of Disaster Recovery Program funding that must outweigh the short-term financial benefits of the sale. Any sale, while ensuring the buyers are aware of the risk before purchase could still be seen as condoning development in flood risk areas.

Had the flood mitigation report of 2006 been implemented, I think there could have been much less damage done by the flood of 2013.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Liberals have been calling on this government to engage in proper flood mitigation for more than a decade, and I'm encouraged that this government is finally moving on this important issue. I can recall how in the 2012 budget estimates my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View demanded of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs whether or not he would continue to allow municipalities to develop on their flood plains. He also asked when the government was going to take action to ensure that the public is not on the hook for the preventable property damage. It's good to see this minister is finally supporting a ban on developing on the flood plains. It is unfortunate that he did not come to this position before the 2013 flood.

The first thing I wish to address, Mr. Speaker, is that taxpayers shouldn't have to compensate homeowners who knowingly choose to live in a floodway. Simply saying that these homeowners will not receive compensation in the future will not be effective. We may say that we will not compensate these homeowners, but the political pressure on a future government to compensate these homeowners will be immense. This government needs to recognize that the only way to ensure that taxpayers do not pay for the properties is to not allow people to build in the floodways.

Mr. Speaker, I also wish to stress that potential homebuyers should have the right to know if a home they are considering purchasing is eligible for future disaster assistance. The problem is that the bill indicates that the regulations will define “floodway.” What that means and what exemptions or distinctions are made for places already built in such floodways is critical and has a significant impact on potential homeowners. Leaving the clarity of what is a floodway to regulation will leave homeowners with little certainty and subject to the whims of the minister.

Mr. Speaker, I’m deeply troubled by the fact that the government has for all intents and purposes announced and implemented many of these proposals before enabling legislation was even introduced. The government did the same thing this spring with Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act. In that case the government unveiled an entirely new reporting system for Budget 2013 before the Legislature even had a chance to debate the enabling legislation for it. While this government has a majority and can enact any bill they like, even against the strongest opposition objections, I would remind them that they still do need to bring bills before this House before acting as though they are the law.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I’ll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to thank the Leader of the Official Opposition for her restraint and her heartfelt report. I learned a lot. I’m sure that everyone who interrupted their reading and conversations to listen to you were as moved and enlightened as I was.

Bill 27, the Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act, demonstrates the crass, insensitive arrogance of this government. For emphasis they reject wise amendments proposed by someone as directly affected as victims or hands-on helper volunteers who laboured in the muck and mire to serve their fellow man. Shame on all the Kool-Aid drinkers following their leaders lemminglike over a cliff of wasteful, thoughtless knee-jerk voting against helpful suggested improvements to their act.

Only government carelessly spending taxpayer money would choose to waste $30 million when $500,000 would produce a far better result. For less than the cost of the MLA Taj Mahal if acted on in 2006, the Groeneveld report recommendations would have saved $5 billion or more. Now, that’s a good return on investment and would have spared lives and much heartache.

In case you weren’t sure, I will not be supporting this flawed, incomplete, dysfunctional, and unfair act.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I’ll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to rise and give my opinions on this bill. I’d like to echo the sentiments of the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner in his comments to the Member for Highwood in her experiences in this incident. In my constituency I know I’m prone to extremities, and not those. Normally we’re in a situation of less water rather than more.

But I do have to speak to the extremity of what went on in that area. In the case of Drumheller the members of the town council in years previous, since 2005, were proactive about following the as of yet unreleased Groeneveld report and therefore saved the town and the taxpayers of Alberta a considerable amount of money and heartache and dispossession.

I may have some years on the member that’s proposing this bill, but I do have some experience in regard to the idea of being proactive rather than reactive. I think that’s simply what this legislation is is a poor knee-jerk reaction to an event that is completely unseen and unheard of. It’s to the chagrin of Albertan taxpayers that this legislation is brought forward. There are some good portions of it, and there are some bad.

The town of Drumheller is a town that is now facing a backhanded sort of result of a reactive piece of legislation that an inexperienced member decided to bring forward in that the revenues and the property values in that town are now somewhat seemingly frozen because they don’t know exactly what their designation is. There’s been an exemption put on the town, and that was only at the political whim of the minister and could possibly be removed or misplaced at the whim of someone who wishes to react. That’s the position that those people are put in.

In the situation of my counterpart from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre the floodway has actually moved. In the case of Drumheller that may happen in another certain situation, so the residents of Drumheller would be placed again at the behest of the political whim of – who’s to know who the minister may be in that day?

I just wanted to make those comments known in the Chamber. I would relinquish my position to the next speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

I’ll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to the third reading of Bill 27, the Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act. I guess I’ll start by expressing my disappointment, Mr. Speaker, in how reluctant the government was in not accepting many of the proposed amendments by the opposition as far as improving this bill and actually giving it some teeth and making it substantial.

I’ll outline why, but at the outset it seems to appear that this bill is little more than a reaction to the terrible tragedy that happened this summer but doesn’t actually address the substantial issues that have been outlined on numerous occasions in numerous reports over many years. Yet the government is still reluctant to listen to their own MLAs, their own reports, and actually take proactive steps not to ensure that this tragedy couldn’t happen again but to mitigate the damage and loss that can be prevented and could have been prevented before the floods of this year, which I’ll outline.

You know, to begin with, Mr. Speaker, it’s quite disappointing, to be quite honest, and I think that there are many Albertans as well that are going to be disappointed with this legislation as it’s currently written. Again, we’ll see, unfortunately, should or when the next major event occurs. It’s frustrating when you can see that something is going to happen again down the road and you don’t do everything in your power to prevent or to cut down on the damage, the destruction, and the consequences. You know, restricting development in floodways is good, and that principle we do agree with. Most experts also agree with that, not to build in floodways, and it's probably one of the most cost-effective strategies that we have at our disposal.

You know, one of the big challenges with this bill is, again, that the current bill relies on outdated flood maps. These outdated maps did not help prevent some of the catastrophic losses that we experienced in June. The government is still not giving any concrete information on how they're going to update these problematic flood maps. Now, the Alberta NDP brought forward – and I believe it was me that spoke to it – an amendment ensuring that we define what a floodway is and what a flood zone actually is so that everyone is on the same page, so that it's very, very clear we're all using the same definition when we're moving forward.

Again, you know, Albertans need information and need updated information when they're deciding where to purchase their home and whether to repair their existing property or if there are going to be measures that they need to take into consideration, depending on where they're buying and where they plan to live. Especially when we look at the number of people who migrate to Alberta, it's quite significant, Mr. Speaker.

Our position is that these definitions cannot be left to the discretion or the whim of the minister, that they need to be spelled out in this bill, in legislation, so that it's clear not just today, not tomorrow but moving forward, Mr. Speaker. I think that that's very, very important. You know, we were calling for the definition of these floodways because we believe in true accountability and transparency, where, again, actions speak louder than words. Unfortunately, with this government refusing to put these definitions into the legislation, they're anything but being transparent or protecting Albertans. I'm sorry that we don't trust this government to make those definitions and to act in the best interests of Albertans. I mean, it's quite clear why not.

Again, there have been several reports and recommendations from 1973, '83, 2006, yet this current government continuously drags their heels on taking preventative measures. You know, we've heard other members of the opposition talking about the costs of mitigating in advance or prior to a flood or a natural disaster of this consequence. It would have saved the government, taxpayers, and Albertans millions of dollars. I mean, it's not just about dollars, Mr. Speaker. We're talking about people's lives that were completely flipped upside down, things that were completely destroyed or lost, from personal assets to keepsakes. It had, as we all know, devastating consequences for many, many Albertans, and my frustration is when we look back and we take a step back and say: "Okay. How could we have prevented this, or how could we have mitigated against this? What could we have done?"

I appreciate that I'm harping on that, but moving forward, you know, it's going to be extremely frustrating if in the next natural disaster or event we're in a similar position, where we're talking about it in the House and looking back to this year, to this bill, and saying: "Why wasn't more done? Why didn't they put more teeth into this? Why didn't we look at doing a better job at mitigation?" Whether, again, we're talking about mapping, whether we're talking about berms or waterways or ways to mitigate against potential flood or damage, we could have it right now. This was really the opportunity, the fifth opportunity, I should say, again because of all the years that I've already outlined, where there should have been more action and wasn't.

You know, as I and my colleagues have said previously, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of experts and studies that show that the damage that was sustained this year, in 2013, could have been greatly reduced, again, if the government had implemented recommendations from previous reports and kept more updated flood maps. I think it's quite absurd for a person to take the position that flood maps don't change or that floodways don't change. I mean, as we continue to develop in this province, that has an impact, obviously, not to mention climate change and other impacts that do alter our floodways, our flood mapping, and I'll get to some examples.

I know that the Member for Highwood knows first-hand that there could have been a lot more mitigation and prevention done. Some of the areas in High River that should have never flooded flooded. I was quite amazed, actually, when I went down to take a tour of High River. The hon. member took me around and gave me a tour, looking at the different communities within High River, and what amazed me the most, Mr. Speaker, are the areas that never should have flooded or were not in floodways or flood zones. Some of them got hit the hardest that never should have had a drop of water. I completely appreciate the frustration that many members have in this House with the government, with many Albertans saying: why wasn't more done?

Reports that were done in 1973 by Montreal Engineering, in 1983 by Alberta Environment, and in 2005 have been used by experts since the flood this year to argue that a flood of this magnitude was actually predictable and that it wasn't that rare. I'll address the issue of claiming that this was a 1-in-100-year flood, which I think is a very naive way of looking at a natural disaster or giving people a false sense of security.

There was a report as well in 2010 that warned that Calgary would suffer more frequent and severe floods. The report cost, I believe, around $80,000 and was prepared by Golder Associates, consultants in Calgary, to guide emergency response planning and flood mapping.

Other recommendations that experts have made – and, again, we're relying on experts, not just on people making this up. John Pomeroy, Canada research chair in water resources and climate change and a professor at the University of Saskatchewan, says that integrated weather and water prediction models – so between the feds, the province, the municipalities, and even potentially universities – needed to give better warning but also to assist in planning for future flood plains, safer reservoir management, better forest and agricultural management for long-term flood and drought mitigation.

As I had mentioned, the 1-in-100 or the 1-in-1,000 years: again, a dangerous way of thinking, which actually goes quite contrary to many of the reports, some that I just cited, and even to the 1983 flood hazard survey, which the PCs commissioned themselves.

What's frustrating and, I think, frustrating for a lot of Albertans, Mr. Speaker, is that there seems to be a trend when it comes to this PC government and how they govern. Something happens, whether it's an incident, an accident, a natural disaster. Then there's a report, and then the most crucial recommendations don't get implemented and are ignored. Down the road this similar situation occurs, and we go back into the cycle of doing this, where, again, you know, taking direct action seems to be ignored by this government but would do much to reduce impacts of future incidents.

With this bill, we're left with, in my view, what is the shell of what it could be as far as giving us some crucial details, again, in the definition of the flood maps and floodways and flood fringe zones. Here we are asked to accept and support a bill with very vague language, you know, and provide our approval or not for whatever comes out of this. I mean, that's very troubling, Mr. Speaker, in that we have a real opportunity to take positive action. I think what many of the members, from the opposition anyway, are advocating for are some definitions, defining some terms, knowing exactly what we're talking about so that we're all speaking the same language.

You know, Mr. Speaker, what we have is a government that ignored the 2006 recommendations, which, again, many members have cited, to institute a continual map maintenance program instead of opting for a when-appropriate model, that clearly wasn't maintained when appropriate, with our friends in High River being a tragic example of this, where many of the safe areas on the flood map written in 1992 were the ones that were hit the hardest.

Here we are with a government that asks us to trust them with more power with respect to floods and definitions, but they've ignored all the evidence in the past – all the reports, all the recommendations, all the warnings – yet still try to frame this as, you know, a once in a hundred or a thousand years flood, which is quite frustrating. To put it quite simply, Mr. Speaker, Albertans see that much more could have been done prior to this June.

Again, I can appreciate that there are certain parts around the province, like places in Calgary, for example, where we're not necessarily going to be uprooting people and moving them, but one expert, Professor Ed Watt from Queen's, a civil engineer actually, ended up telling us that we should be keeping people from the water, not trying to keep water from the people, which seems to make sense for the most part where we can, acknowledging that there are areas throughout the province where that's not going to be possible.

You know, we should, moving forward, be working on ensuring that there is no more building in floodways, and unfortunately the legislation stops short of that and allows this government to decide what happens, where it happens, leaves the power with this government.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there other speakers?

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs to close debate if you so desire?

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a third time]

9:30                      Government Bills and Orders
                                 Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: I'll call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 40
Settlement of International Investment Disputes Act

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak in committee on Bill 40, Settlement of International Investment Disputes Act. Now, this bill is problematic, and I'll try to outline as concisely as possible the concerns that I have with it. I can appreciate and understand the desire for security and consistency for international businesses that the bill is aiming to help and what it's aiming to do. However – and I say this with respect to the bill's sponsor – the province of Alberta should come first, first and foremost. The way the bill is written, it's not a good deal for our government or for the people of this province.

[Mr. Amery in the chair]

There are two main reasons why I'll be opposing this bill. I believe my colleagues have spoken to this. The first is a specific focus on the centre itself, which I'll explain in detail in a moment, and the second relates more to the broader implications of this bill. The arbitration centre that's brought in by this bill, the International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes, or ICSID, if I've pronounced that correctly, has major issues in and of itself. You know, my first concern is the quality of arbitrators that may decide Alberta's future. Now, one arbitrator the centre employs is actually a person by the name of Orrego Vicuña. Now, some members of the House may not know who that is or the issue that we have. Mr. Vicuña was an ambassador for Chile under the Pinochet dictatorship. By signing this bill, we're saying that it's okay for him as one of the arbitrators to decide, when Alberta legislates in its own interests, whether it's done something wrong. We have very big concerns about letting one of Pinochet's friends decide our province's fate, and Albertans, you know, should be shocked that this PC government doesn't.

Now, for those of you who haven't looked at your history books in a while, Pinochet was a very brutal dictator in Chile, and we have serious concerns about, you know, one of his ambassadors being one of the arbitrators for this centre. What I'm talking about here is that fate is really no hyperbole here when we talk about this person being in a position to decide the fate of the province. Honestly, there's no maximum price tag on the decisions that are going to be made by this centre. What we're talking about here is potentially billions and billions of dollars out of Alberta's pocket if someone like Vicuña decides that we're in the wrong.

In addition to that, Mr. Chair, we can't even say just how poor the decisions of this centre might be because the centre doesn't have to release claim value. Basically this current government is locking us into an agreement, and we can't even get a full picture of how bad the deal may or may not be. Even for this current PC government this level of secrecy is quite extreme.

Examples that have leaked out from ICSID decisions: we know that they've reached into billions of dollars. We're talking about big potatoes here, Mr. Chair, so the issue that I have and that my caucus shares is that we're signing over the power to review decisions in our own courts to a branch of the World Bank, and whatever they say goes. For example, not only might one of Pinochet's friends get an opportunity to decide whether Alberta owes billions of dollars, but we can't appeal that decision within Canada. That's our first problem.

The second problem is the larger issues with some of the free trade agreements that have been negotiated. Again, we're asked in this bill to accept a method of dealing with international investment disputes, but the arbitration method is also directly relied upon in our free trade agreements. We can't look at this in isolation. For example, our recent foreign investment promotion and protection agreement, or FIPA, with China uses the centre as one option for an arbitration forum, or once this bill is passed. The Ministry of International and Intergovernmental Relations has told us that they've been encouraged by the federal government to pass this bill. We can only assume that the push from the Harper government to sign on to the centre, which has been around since the '60s and Canada has held out on ratifying until now, which is important to note, is based on a recent signing of new free trade agreements with China and with Europe.

Now, our trade partners want this as an arbitration forum. This current PC government here in Alberta is all too happy to oblige.

On our side we want strong relationships with our trade partners as well. We simply want to be able to protect our natural resources and ensure that the long-term prosperity of the province is decided through our own laws and not handed over to a foreign body to have that kind of power.

Under our recent free trade agreement with China, for example, Mr. Chair, if the government does something that the Chinese oil company doesn't like, we could be taken to arbitration. That arbitration would be dealt with under the rules of our free trade agreement, so it could go to the centre, which would mean that it is not appealable in Canadian courts yet enforceable within our courts. So a foreign company could or would literally be able to take over Alberta government assets, with no power of review in our courts. That's a massive loss of our sovereignty.

Now, here's the thing. There's a clear alternative available here, not just the other arbitration centres but allowing the province to work with companies and deciding what fits with them. We're not suggesting that we limit choice for corporations here. We just want to make sure that the province doesn't get locked into something that could be an extremely bad deal. That is our really big concern here, Mr. Chair. We do need to look after the interests of Albertans and Alberta, first and foremost. I believe we're painting ourselves into a corner for those two reasons. One, the arbitrators selected for the centre: very questionable, especially with, again, a previous ambassador to the dictator Pinochet. As well, the process by which the centre makes decision could end up costing Albertans and taxpayers billions of dollars if the centre sides not in Alberta's favour.

The question is: why are we allowing these decisions that cannot be appealed or potentially overturned to be made by a third party? That causes some real concerns. I mean, we're talking about the sovereignty of our province here, Mr. Chair, and my fear is that what this bill is going to do is really going to put that in jeopardy.

For those reasons, Mr. Chair, I cannot support this bill. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Next speaker?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 40 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities Amendment Act, 2013

The Chair: I'd recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. We are on Bill 41 now? Is that what I heard you say?

The Chair: Bill 41.

Mr. Wilson: Okay. Great. Thank you.

I have an amendment that I would like to propose to this bill, please.

The Chair: While we circulate that, we'll pause for about 30 seconds, hon. member. For the record, this will be amendment A1.

Please proceed, hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll be relatively brief as I describe this. This is the only amendment that I have to Bill 41. It's very straightforward in its intent. In Bill 41 one of the things that it talks about is that section 4 is amended by adding the following after subsection (1): "(1.1) The membership of the Council must include persons with disabilities or individuals who have involvement and experience with disability issues." I've got to say that I wholeheartedly agree with this addition to the act. I believe that it makes perfect sense to have an individual who is dealing with or has dealt with disabilities involved on this board.

What this amendment is intended to do is include an individual who is contracted as a service provider to also have a seat at the table on this board, based on the increased advisory role that this board is going to have. The way that this act is written, it's intended that it's going to have more of an advisory role to play with government. I and my caucus mates, I believe, feel that it is eminently reasonable that one of the 15 seats at the table be reserved for an individual in this province who is currently providing services to individuals with developmental disabilities in the province.

There is a lot of change that has happened in the system. There is going to be a continued transition as this government changes the way in which services are delivered in this community. I think that having a seat at the table so that they can offer perspective as to how decisions that are made may impact not only the level of service that those in the disability community will receive but how things are being laid out, how actions are being taken, all of the above – there's just a different level of perspective that someone who is in a service provider role will be able to bring to the table. I believe that's an important voice to have, and I look forward to the minister responding to this proposed amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities to respond if you're so inclined.

Mr. Oberle: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw for this amendment and for his thoughts around it. I'm a little curious. I think the current wording of section 4(1.1) says: "The membership of the Council must include persons with disabilities or individuals who have involvement and experience with disability issues." I wonder if that doesn't go far enough for the member, and if not, why not? I'm just kind of struggling here. I may be a bit reluctant to go further because of the potential for a conflict of interest, where a person that has a stake in the system advises the other council members on how to design the system. I'd certainly be open to some comment there.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This was a consideration as the amendment was drafted. My intent, I guess, was to address, first off, the way in which the act is currently worded. My idealistic view of the way in which this act is worded would suggest that subsection (1.1) here would suggest that it would be an individual with disabilities that would be on the board as one of the 15. So adding a second seat as someone who's strictly in a service provider role I thought would add more value.

To address the conflict of interest side of things, seeing as what this council is doing is not necessarily a binding role to government and they are just one vote on a council of 15, I found it a bit of a stretch, I guess, in the way that my mind works, that that would genuinely be able to swing advice to the Premier, advice to the council. Seeing as they are in an advisory and nonbinding role to government, there would not be a direct conflict of interest in anything that that individual who's providing services under contract to the government would bring to the council.

I hope that addresses the associate minister's questions.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. My colleague in my own caucus referred to it as an idealistic view, and I'm going to refer to it as a pragmatic view. I would ask the minister to consider this option or argument, which is that although the act itself wants to get people with experience, clearly I think there's a presumption that employees of the ministry would definitely have experience. This amendment acts as a piece of insurance per se that people that would be in the employment of the ministry would not only have experience but that experience would probably have been updated and be current. It allows for that continuity of experience. Maybe as members or volunteers come and go, having someone on this council who is employed would sort of ensure that that experience level is represented in one form or another. I think we talked about this when the bill was originally tabled, how difficult it is sometimes to deal with volunteers and how volunteers are stretched thin in many circumstances.

By doing this, it's an option that allows the ministry, when these councils are constructed, to keep a certain decorum or a certain level of experience within the makeup of these councils. I think that would be a tremendous advantage for the ministry in the consultation process and dealing with these councils.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Sure. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, just to be brief, you know, I think that as we went through the spring, we learned that the service provider network in this province – that is, you know, the 280-plus independent businesses that are operating – have a very reasonable and somewhat strong voice in this province. I know that the ministers do consult with them on various levels.

But, that being said, this council really – there are critical roles in the province. There are those who are clients of the system, there are the families of those who are in the system, there are the self-advocates, there are the guardians of those in the system, and then there are those who are contracted to provide services to those in the system. I think that if we can hold a seat at the table for those who are providing the services, again, it just strengthens the body as a whole and will add perspective to what this council can provide to the Premier when they provide their annual report.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Oberle: I get the intent thoroughly, Mr. Chair. I'm really struggling with it. The role of the council is one of a high order, and we talked about dealing with the United Nations declaration on the rights of persons with disabilities, talked about Alberta building codes, those sorts of things. Indeed, a broad array of voices would be welcome and necessary and certainly would play a role.

But the member knows that I intend also an operational role for the Premier's council in that I would love to discuss operational details: business plans, intended budgets, those sorts of things. That would really fringe on a conflict of interest if there was a service provider in the room that could benefit from that conversation. I would have to ask them to recuse themselves. They couldn't participate in it. That would seem kind of odd.

I just want to point out – the other member there talked about an employee – just for clarification, all of the members of the council are outside of the government. We do have a secretariat that provides services to them, a whole office, but the board itself is composed of nongovernment employees.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there others on amendment A1?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I have an amendment.

The Chair: Okay. Can you circulate that? About a 30-second pause, please.

Hon. member, are you introducing this on behalf of your colleague?

Mr. Bilous: Yes, Mr. Chair. I'm introducing this amendment on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

The Chair: Okay. Wonderful. We'll note that for the record, and we'll call this amendment A2.

You may proceed to speak. Thank you.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'll walk the hon. members through this. The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona moves that Bill 41, Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities Amendment Act, 2013, be amended by striking out section 4 and substituting the following:

Section 7 is repealed and the following is substituted:

Annual report

7(1) The Council shall, for each fiscal year, submit to the Premier an annual report consisting of a general summary of its activities and recommendations regarding government policies affecting persons with disabilities.

(2) A report submitted under subsection (1) shall include, but is not limited to, recommendations regarding the alignment of government policies affecting persons with disabilities and the principles of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.

(3) On receiving a report under subsection (1), the Premier shall lay a copy of it before the Legislative Assembly if it is then sitting or, if it is not then sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting.

(4) Within 30 days of a report being laid before the Assembly under subsection (3), the Premier must respond to the recommendations contained in the report prepared under subsection (1) and make that report public when completed.

Now, Mr. Chair and hon. members, the amendment looks quite lengthy, but it's honestly not that complicated, and I'm happy to walk members through this.

Essentially, it does three things. It's adding a requirement that the annual report made by the council on the status of persons with disabilities include recommendations. It adds a requirement that the recommendations adhere with the UN convention, and it adds a requirement that the Premier respond to those recommendations. So not sweeping changes when we look at it.

First, let's talk a little bit about the reports. The agency produces an annual report. Okay. That report is already required in the bill to be tabled in the Legislature, so we've got public reporting there. This amendment including recommendations will mean that, rather than having this council simply make quiet suggestions to the government about where it may improve or do things better, it will add some public accountability to it, Mr. Chair. I recognize that this isn't necessarily a perfect solution, but it does add more meat to the council.

We see this as important because the council has in long past done some very good work with recommendations. They released the 2002 Alberta disabilities strategy, which put forward 168 recommendations. Now, despite that being public, we haven't been able to find government follow-up that shows their progress on the recommendations. So what we're looking for here, Mr. Chair, is a way for the Legislative Assembly to know how the government is responding to these recommendations, if they're moving on them, in what time frame because, again, there have been great recommendations put to the government in the past. This is a way for the Legislative Assembly to keep the government accountable or to know what their actions are following recommendations.

I'll give a few select recommendations here. "A commitment . . . to embrace the principles of universal accessibility and a process put in place to remove physical barriers from public spaces." Mr. Chair, as of this January, a full 10 years after those recommendations came out, the Alberta Committee of Citizens with Disabilities is still stating that there are crucial holes in our access, most notably in the ability to access health care. That's one example where there would be a process and follow-up.

Another recommendation or requirement: "the Government of Alberta . . . ensure that the needs of persons with disabilities related to their daily living activities are met." We know how that was run over during the summer with the massive cuts to community access for the developmentally disabled.

Another example: an overhaul of the appeals process after decisions are made. That is still arguably in shambles at the moment, Mr. Chair.

Publicly reported recommendations aren't foolproof either, but at least they will help to give advocates of persons with disabilities in the province an extra resource and an ability to follow up. Since that report, by the way, it seems like they've been silent in terms of public recommendations.

We're hoping, obviously, that this amendment is accepted, Mr. Chair, and that it emboldens the council to come forward with more recommendations in the future because looking back at it, that disability strategy is something that the council should be very proud of. Again, we're just looking to be aware of the follow-up, not necessarily obligating the Premier or the government to take those recommendations but at least for Albertans to be aware on certain recommendations what action has been taken, if any, or what steps. I think that in some ways it could be argued that that's to the advantage of the government as well because they're able to demonstrate the steps and actions that they have taken on recommendations.

The second part of this amendment, Mr. Chair, is the inclusion of recommendations related to the UN's convention on the rights of persons with disabilities. A lot of ground is the same in terms of making these recommendations public and adding accountability that it provides. We feel that if the government is going to be honest in their commitment to the convention, they should embrace this sort of report card on any areas they need to improve that these recommendations could provide. Again, it's a way to be, well, both transparent and accountable.

We feel the convention is a good benchmark to live up to – and we're talking about the UN convention – and it would be a good idea to get an accounting on where the holes are at. We also see it as vital that recommendations are made on it because it appears, you know, that there are examples where the government misunderstands what the convention really means and what it's attempting to do. An example here is that last week the associate minister stated that somehow their decision to break a promise to people with developmental disabilities and close the Michener Centre was empowered by the convention.

What the convention really respects is choice for people with disabilities, Mr. Chair. Article 19 of the convention states that we must ensure that "persons with disabilities have the opportunity to choose their place of residence." When you promise to residents that they can see out their lives at the centre, a place they call home, and then give them the boot, you're eliminating that choice; you're not empowering it. Clearly, we need to be double-checking this work and this government's work and holding them to an international standard, and this is one way to do that and a good idea.

Finally, we made it a requirement that the Premier respond to recommendations. We think that this is fitting given that her name is on the council. The requirement for a response doesn't force the Premier to immediately have all the answers or force the Premier into immediate action. What we're talking about is a response to recommendations. Honestly, Mr. Chair, I look at that no differently than when constituents write to any one of the 87 members that our offices respond to our constituents and to Albertans. So this is a very similar approach.

The other thing that it does is that it gives recommendations some immediate consideration, you know, empowering the council that is making the recommendations by valuing them and getting a response back to them.

No dramatic shifts, all in all, in the purpose of this amendment, so it shouldn't be too controversial. Again, the purpose of this amendment, Mr. Chair, is really to provide the tools for the government to ensure that they live up to their promises. We're talking about improving accountability and public accountability with these amendments.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Oberle: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will be voting against this amendment, and I urge my colleagues to do the same. First of all, there's no shortage of report cards on how the government is doing, including the annual report of the Premier's council, which is tabled in this Legislature. The member in his speech mentioned several points where there are report cards.

There is no way that you could take the Premier's council, which is not a quasi-judicial process, and force, really, people who in many cases, you would hope, have full-time jobs elsewhere, without being quasi-judicial to have the powers of investigation, the powers to conduct hearings, the powers of research so that they could make recommendations. You're placing a role on the council that's not at all intended here. They are a partner and an adviser in this. To task them with recommendations really would make them somehow officers of this Legislature or some other quasi-judicial body that has some power over the government. That's a role that even the council itself would decline.

I strongly urge that we reject this amendment, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The council makes recommendations already to the Premier and to the government, and as the associate minister said, it is tabled in the Legislature. But what we're talking about is when they make the recommendations. We're not adding any more work to the job that they're already doing. What we're doing is giving them a way to make those recommendations public and to put a little bit of onus on the Premier and the government to respond to the recommendations.

Again, I'll clarify that in 2002 the Alberta disability strategy put forward 168 recommendations, and a lot of them were very, very good. All that this amendment is doing is putting in place a mechanism to ensure that the government and the Premier respond to those recommendations, Mr. Chair. I think, again, that if we're asking these people with full-time jobs to sit on this committee and make recommendations, well, let's first of all make sure that the public is included and aware of the recommendations they're making. More so, let's ensure that the government is responding to those recommendations so that these very folks know which ones are being implemented, which ones are being ignored, and where they are in the status of them. I don't think it's adding any more work to the council itself. What it's doing is providing more of a public accountability.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A2.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We're back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. As this bill, at two and a half pages, is very brief, so will my comments be. I just wanted to take this opportunity to rise and commend the government and the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities on this co-operative and inclusive amendment act. I've heard from several in my constituency that this will go a very long way in ensuring that the needs and services provided to persons with disabilities will be adequately heard.

The inclusion of the United Nations convention on the rights of persons with disabilities is an important and crucial piece to add to this legislation. I view the ability for the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities to provide input into the development of business plans for government departments that directly affect them as extremely important. It's crucial to the betterment of all of Alberta that everyone affected by policies or a particular piece of legislation have their voices heard.

My constituency is made up of a very large cross-section of all Albertans. This amendment will go a very long way to ensuring that those with disabilities are given an effective voice in decisions that directly affect them. I assume, at the same time, that it allows for these councils to make region-specific recommendations, because we all know there are no cookie-cutter solutions for the entire province.

I especially like the addition under section 3(a)(ii) of clause (i), stating that the council will "advise the Government on reviews and development of policies, programs and initiatives and their implementation with respect to the effect on services to persons with disabilities." Occasionally we have new policies put forward, and their impact on persons with disabilities is negative. The ability for this to be reviewed by the council prior to the change in policy helps to mitigate this possibility.

Finally and most importantly, I'd like to applaud the decision to ensure representation on the council of those directly affected by or involved with disability issues. This is so important. The ability to speak from personal experience is integral to ensuring that all aspects and experiences are included. I'm very pleased to support this bill, and I think it is important that all members here vote unanimously to pass this legislation. It is important, inclusive, and will ensure that constituents in my riding who have involvement and experience with disability issues will feel assured that their interests are being respected.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I also rise to speak on Bill 41. The treatment of our persons with developmental disabilities community by this government leaves much to be desired. This spring the community was put into disarray as this government announced $42 million in cuts. These cuts came without consultation and without warning. The PDD community has developed a mistrust of this government and a genuine concern that their issues are not being taken seriously. The concern is that the government views them as a community to be dictated to rather than partners in developing a positive environment for those in Alberta with developmental disabilities.

The mistrust that this community feels for the government combined with their unique vulnerabilities means that the PDD community is in need of strong and compassionate advocates.

The Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities plays an important role in being advocates for the PDD community and the disabled community more broadly. We encourage the government to take seriously the recommendations of this board.

I'm pleased to note the expanded mandate that the council has been given. This is a positive development that should support the efficacy of this council. Unfortunately, however, advisory boards have a history of being little more than window dressing in Alberta. The onus will be on the Premier, the Minister of Human Services, and the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities to prove they are willing to heed and act on the advice of this expanded Premier's council.

Many of the comments on the deficiencies in this bill have been previously raised by my colleagues, and I would like to echo their concerns regarding making recommendations of the council public and the need for a clear commitment for aligning with the UN convention on the rights of persons with disabilities.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, a precedent has been set with this bill that I urge the government to follow more frequently. Too often we create boards and councils in Alberta but do not specify that the members of these boards have to have any experience or expertise. Bill 31, which was recently passed, allows for the appointment of seven ballerinas and an engineer to the science advisory board rather than scientists. Thankfully, Bill 41 does require that members of this board have some experience with the PDD community, and this is a precedent I urge the government to continue to follow.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm wondering if the associate minister or the minister could just quickly clarify. I know this is a bit of an amending act. In the original is the Premier required to lay the report before the Legislative Assembly?

Mr. Oberle: I believe, in fact, that they are. When a piece of legislation calls for an annual report, it has to be tabled in the Legislature.

The Chair: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 41 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that the committee now rise and report bills 40 and 41.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 40 and Bill 41. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does the Assembly concur in the report? Agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 30

Building Families and Communities Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move Bill 30, Building Families and Communities Act, for third reading.

We've had an excellent debate in the House at second reading and some discussion in committee. I think I would ask all members of the Assembly to reflect on the excellent work that has been done by community boards across the province and the child and family services authority boards.

Over the years, as that system developed and as we put in a community governance model, we had a number of people who stepped forward and provided volunteer service to child and family services authorities. I would say the same with respect to the boards for persons with developmental disabilities. As we move forward now to build on that good work, I want to say thank you to the board members who have served over the years in those capacities.

I think it is important to reflect on that as the province grows and as the communications become more direct and as we have people who move around the province with greater degrees of mobility and as we have service providers who work in so many different areas of the province, to move to a new governance model and a new operational model which still will provide for regional service delivery but will also ensure that there is a continuity of contracting processes across the province, a continuity of implementation of policy across the province, and an ability to deliver services on a regional basis but have an efficiency and an effectiveness and a fairness of policy application across the province is extremely important.

So this new model of service delivery is on a regional basis, with the regions in the Human Services area aligned appropriately so that whether it's persons with developmental disabilities or child and family service delivery or Alberta Works delivery, we're working better together, which is the theme that we have in Human Services, bringing all of the various aspects that were formerly in other departments, co-ordinating the regions and doing service delivery better together within the regions so that we can support and strengthen families and make sure that the children have the support that they need, an extremely important objective.

But we do not want to lose that community governance, that oversight that comes from an engaged, active community that cares about the social issues in their community, cares about how we are treating our vulnerable children, how we are ensuring that our families are successful, how we are ensuring that communities can be engaged in the issues that matter and only in the issues that matter to their community. So our community engagement councils that are proposed under Bill 30 become a very important new iteration of the community governance model, not responsible for active service delivery but responsible for the active engagement of the community and the social issues and the active advice to their community and to this government with respect to policy development relative to social issues in their community.

The other very important role of the community engagement councils is one of assurance, one of testing within their community groups to say, "Are we hitting the ground? Are we actually achieving the objectives that we wanted to achieve?" two very important roles for community engagement. As we do that, and as we say thank you to the board members of the CFSAs and the PDDs, with this act being passed, with those boards being dissolved effective the end of the year, and moving towards the new year in which we would engage the community engagement council and recruit people, some of whom may well be board members currently but people who will actively provide that engagement role, we also want to look to the other part of the act, which changes the governance structure of the PDDs and amends the PDD act in order to do that.

There's one other important thing, and that is to provide for an improved appeal process. We didn't try to renovate or renew or redo the persons with developmental disabilities act in this bill. Really, all this bill does to that act is change the governance model and disengage governance from operations under that act. But we did take one further step, and that is to improve the appeal process. I would think that that's an improvement that all members of this House would want to see, and I'd ask for their support for Bill 30 in third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to third reading on Bill 30, the Building Families and Communities Act. I would agree with many of the minister's comments. We had a good debate. We had good discussion throughout the committee process. You know, I think there was strong debate through all phases of this bill. I, too, would encourage my fellow caucus mates to support this bill. I believe that it is a move in the right direction in terms of what we're, hopefully, going to see as a result of the dissolution of some of these boards. I think it's been a long time coming for some of them, and I'm excited to see what can be brought as we move in this direction.

There are some things, as always, Mr. Speaker. The devil is in the details of a bill, and, you know, the minister has left himself a pretty wide open space to create regulations as noted in section 23(f), that says that he can make a regulation "respecting any other matter necessary for carrying out the intent of the Act." This is one of those rare occasions where I would encourage the minister to make regulations about that because the intent of this act is to strengthen this system.

One of the things that I wouldn't say that I'm worried about but that I just want the minister to be aware of and cognizant of as he goes through this process and creates these details and these regulations is the values piece of what this act is supposed to do and the values of what the government's role is in terms of making sure that those who have developmental disabilities that are being cared for in this system, what those values are that this government holds and shares with Albertans about the level of care that they should receive. There's not really much in this bill currently that says that the government has a standard of service that they are going to maintain or that there is a standard of service that those who are providing the services ought to maintain. So I would ask the minister to be aware of that as he is creating those regulations.

What we're seeing as well with some of the debate that we've had in this House around, you know, the big news story of the week, the child and families services authorities. I would again ask the minister to keep in mind the values that this government, this House, and Albertans in general have and wish to have and want this government to hold themselves to account to and making sure that those children that are in the care of this system and those who are being serviced by the PDD community have the greatest set of values that we can offer so that if it was our own daughter, son, brother, or sister that was in care, we would make sure and strive to ensure that they received a level of care that we would want for our own loved ones.

Again, I reflect, and now I'm happy to report that the appeal period is officially over for Betty Anne Gagnon, so this one is free game. A tragedy like that: keep that in mind, ministers, as you come up with the regulations for this act to ensure that procedural oversight cannot be used as an excuse in the future to allow a tragedy like to happen again.

I recognize fully, Mr. Speaker, that a strong majority of individuals who are working on the front lines in this system – a very, very strong majority – are people deeply passionate about serving that community, and I'm not in any way, shape, or form trying to disparage any of them. But the reality is that if we have procedural loopholes, there are often times that individuals can fall through the cracks of those loopholes. I would just ask the minister to do the greatest job that he can in creating the regulations in this act to ensure that that never happens in this province again.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also rise to speak in third reading of Bill 30, Building Families and Communities Act. As Bill 30 acts as a framework for future arrangements, there are lots of details left out of this bill, and the devil is in the details, like my colleague said. One of the most effective ways to ensure that the details are done right is to include meaningful contributions and engagements from Alberta's PDD community.

With that in mind, the first issue I wish to address is the level of involvement that the PDD community has had in the development of the proposed family and community engagement councils. The family and community engagement councils will have a substantial impact on the situation of many Albertans. Many members of the PDD community have complained that they were not properly consulted on the changes being proposed. As such, they are rightly concerned that they will not be properly consulted in the operation of the family and community engagement councils as they develop social policy.

Considering that the group most affected will be the PDD community, failing to protect their interests on these boards could have huge negative impacts upon their community. We need to ensure that the PDD community's involvement is properly protected on this new board.

Second, we need to recognize that for many in the PDD community employment is not a meaningful measure of success. We are talking about some of the most vulnerable and disabled members of our society, where the only meaningful measure of success is quality of life. Mr. Speaker, while employment is an admirable goal for some in the PDD community, this government's obsession with it will cause harm to the most disabled in the PDD community.

On its own this legislation will not cure all that ails Alberta's PDD and child welfare programs. Overall, centralizing can create a hard-to-navigate bureaucracy and throws unnecessary barriers in front of the very people it is supposed to help. I would urge caution, to warn this government in its rush to centralize, especially because Bill 30 does not spell out how Human Services will be reorganized. Those important details are still to come, Mr. Speaker. Fundamentally this bill is in need of more detail and more clarity.

With that, I think I will be supporting the bill, but those are the issues I have with the bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available should someone wish to ask the member a question.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to third reading of Bill 30, Building Families and Communities Act. I'd like to just outline a few different things here. I'd like to remind members and Albertans of the actions that this government took this summer which were very hurtful toward the PDD community. Then I'd like to talk about some of the amendments that the Alberta NDP caucus put forward, which were unfortunately rejected by this PC government, especially highlighting the Betty Anne clause that was put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

You know, it seems that this government likes to push and pull at the same time. They'll take something away and then give back a little and pat themselves on the back for a job well done. I'd like to remind all members that in March of this year the PCs passed a budget which cut $42 million out of community services funding from PDD, which directly impacted thousands of families throughout the province. As well, this PC government closed the Michener Centre. Conversely to what the government says or thinks, I believe that not only the Alberta NDP but all opposition parties have been in touch and in contact with many residents, caregivers, family members of Michener who are all vehemently opposed to the closing of that facility, which provides crucial and necessary care for those adults who can't live in the community even with supports. It's necessary that there is a facility or a home like Michener.

You know, the third part is what this government announced, which was promising a 15 per cent wage increase for staff, for service providers. They then said: "Okay. It's going to be reduced to 10 per cent this year." And when the grant was provided this past August, Mr. Speaker, it actually amounted to about a 7.5 per cent wage increase for many service providers.

Now, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I've met with service providers who do phenomenal work in the community, working with families and people with developmental disabilities, and heard about their frustration. I'm talking about those who work out of small NGO service providers who are quite frustrated at the wage disparity between some providers and those that are employed by the government compared to the ones in the NGO community. The folks that I spoke with said that the government recognized the wage disparity and that they were going to do something about it. Clearly, what they promised and what they delivered were, yet again, two different things. We're in a position where there are still many service providers that are paid a fraction of what they should be considering the incredible work that they do and the necessary work they do.

Those were three actions this year, Mr. Speaker, which directly impact people with developmental disabilities, and it was a huge knock-back to that community throughout the province. I'll remind members that throughout the month of June I believe there was a rally on the steps of the Legislature every week. I know I was in attendance, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was emceeding it. I do respect the fact that the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw and the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View as well as other members from all opposition parties were in attendance at numerous rallies where it was very, very clear that the community of people – service providers, family, friends, adults with developmental disabilities – came out to protest the actions that this very government took, which significantly impacted their lives and, honestly, Mr. Speaker, from speaking to a lot of these adults and caregivers, imposed trauma onto a lot of folks who were worried about the quality of care that they were going to receive. They were worried about losing their caregivers. Again, as with most things in life the personal relationships are extremely important.

I think what the government often forgets is that when they come in with a heavy hand and the stroke of a pen and cut millions of dollars from a budget, whether it's postsecondary or PDD or to our classrooms and to school budgets, decisions are made which impact those very people, whether it's students or adults or children, and there are, for example in postsecondary, professors and support staff that are laid off. When money suddenly, magically comes back and only fraction of it, that really screws up those very organizations trying to plan and has a significant impact.

I would argue that there was a significant impact when the original budget was announced and the $42 million was cut out of PDD. So it needs to be recognized that although this bill is a step in the right direction, I can't let the government off scot-free or not hold them to account for the decisions that they've made and the impacts that those decisions had.

Now, as I've mentioned, my hon. colleague for Edmonton-Strathcona brought forward some very, I believe, positive amendments that would have strengthened this bill. Again, I'll start with the one that I was hoping and had my fingers crossed that the Government House Leader would accept, our Betty Anne clause. You know, looking specifically at the tragic case of what happened to Betty Anne Gagnon and how she fell through the cracks not because of neglect due to any one front-line worker but because there wasn't policy in place to ensure that she would receive the care that she needed.

The frustration was that there were numerous attempts to communicate to the department that care was needed and that her family could no longer care for her. Yet there was no mechanism in place to stop this from happening. The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and myself have walked the members through this, but this was an ongoing saga that happened over months, and even when alarm bells should have been going off in the department as far as their failed attempts to reach her, there was no process in place for a staff member or department member to drive out to her residence to physically check on her.

We have an opportunity here, and I guess this is probably my biggest disappointment with this bill. You know, I can appreciate that the hon. minister talks about how this is about governance and boards, and for the most part I agree with that. I just wished that while we're in the House and we're dealing with an issue here, we could open this bill up to address some of the major issues that exist within the system. Instead of just looking at the governance, again, this amendment that we introduced would ensure that there is a plan in place for every single person with a developmental disability, developed in consultation with their family or caregiver, to ensure that moving forward no one falls through the cracks again, period.

I also was very hopeful about the fact that that amendment established a duty of care to adults with developmental disabilities, with a definition as far as: what is that duty of care? Again, I mean, I thought the hon. Minister of Human Services would be delighted by the fact that the definition of duty of care was taken directly from the duty of care to children requiring intervention services as found in the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. We're talking word for word here. That would have ensured that this tragedy would not repeat itself. So it's frustrating that that amendment wasn't taken into consideration, Mr. Speaker.

You know, again, there has been very little consultation with the 10,000-plus people with developmental disabilities, their families, and the 156 service providers within the province prior to this piece of legislation being tabled.

Other concerns are, again, as the Member for Calgary-Shaw pointed out, that this gives the minister sweeping powers whereas we would like to see all members, all ministers, the Premier having limitation or parameters around what they can and cannot do, and that really needs to be outlined here in the Assembly through legislation, not through regulation. The concerns currently are that this bill gives the minister these broad powers.

So, Mr. Speaker, I mean, I can tell you that we will be supporting this bill in third reading, but again I think that there is a missed opportunity here to strengthen the delivery of services and care to people with developmental disabilities. I know that the minister has said previously that, I believe, there'll be forthcoming legislation to hopefully address some of these concerns, but we had an opportunity here to do more than just address governance. I wish that would have occurred.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities, followed by the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm almost reluctant to stand, but there were a few statements made there that I just simply cannot let go by, just astounding. First of all, I don't know what kind of calculator the hon. member uses, but I'm betting all the buttons are on the left side, because he seems unable to add. We did not have a budget cutback this year, and if he can't read that off the budget, then he shouldn't really be here. We had an increase in our budget this year, and we have had since this spring absolutely no operational cutbacks. Apparently, he wasn't watching that. Despite that, we did extend the 10 per cent wage increase that we promised. However, we held part of it back until we finished our bookkeeping to make sure. We're funny in that we track and make sure that we get the proper use of taxpayers' dollars. But all of the cheques went out this week to complete the 10 per cent that was promised at the beginning of the year.

It's kind of interesting that the member lectures me on article 19 in the UN convention and then criticizes us for closing the Michener Centre. What exactly does the member think that article 19 refers to when it says "choices"? What does he think that refers to? I'm astounded, Mr. Speaker.

And then, Mr. Speaker, during the amendments we went around and around on the Betty Anne Gagnon case. It's just such a tragic, tragic event. But you have to recognize, first of all, that we have made some incredible changes since then and there's a fatality inquiry that will lead us further. We're constantly criticized by that party for making amendments and passing legislation without consulting people, and somehow they can pull together amendments in 24 hours that change the disability act without consulting anybody and that's okay. That's just going to be fine.

I'll guarantee you that I've spoken to more service providers than that guy has in the last few months and in the spring. I made a commitment again this week in Grande Prairie, in Edmonton, St. Paul, and Red Deer to the service providers and to the families of the disabled that we will change this legislation when we consult with them and when we've got the proper act built. In the meantime we're going to do everything we can to make sure that the disabled people in our province are living with dignity, have the right to live in the community and be all that they can be, and we'll support them in doing that, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. associate minister for bringing that passion at this hour. It's appreciated. I'm wondering if he could comment on the 10 per cent increase that he referred to. Many of the service providers that I've spoken with have said, up until this week, that the top-up did not happen. They did just receive letters as of, I believe, today. Many of them are saying that it's still not quite 10 per cent and that it's a one-time grant as opposed to an actual increase. So could you comment on that?

Mr. Oberle: Well, first of all, they did receive letters, and they will be getting the grant. According to our books and our book-keeping with them it's 10 per cent. And, no, it's not a one-time grant. It is a 10 per cent wage increase. We committed some time ago to achieve parity. We had hoped for 15 per cent this year. We didn't do it, but we got 10. That's an ongoing grant. We still have further steps to go. We did in previous years give a one-time payment, a $1,500 bonus. That was not the case this year. This year was a wage increase, and it's enduring.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others?

I'll recognize the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise . . .

Mr. Anderson: Is this 29(2)(a)?

The Deputy Speaker: No, no. On the bill. I didn't see any more for 29(2)(a).

On the bill, the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: On the bill, Mr. Speaker. I certainly will be supporting this very willingly. I asked a friend who works within this field in southern Alberta, who I've known a long time and trust, for his thoughts on this, and he shared some things with me that I'd like to share with the minister. Hopefully, he will consider them and take whatever steps he thinks are appropriate and perhaps respond.

My friend replied:

- from where I sit, both CFSA and PDD are specialized departments with fairly clearly defined intervention or treatment target populations. As such, it usually doesn't bother me what they are doing with or amongst themselves . . . However, lately
- our local South West CFSA seems to be interpreting this as a mandate to push other agencies, [for example, Barons-Eureka-Warner] and Lethbridge FCSSs specifically that I'm aware of, to shift priorities and resources to support their intervention mandate with little or no regard for FCSS legislated mandate to be involved in prevention and only early intervention. There seems to be an assumption that these new Family and Community Councils will be directing all human services activities in their geographic area. And the CFSA will take a lead role in defining that.

Not sure if this is [just] a local or [if it's a] generalized issue. If [it is] just local, we can deal with it. If [it's] something CFSA's are being told provincially, [this] could require some clarification.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.
Seeing none, I'll invite the hon. minister to close debate.
He has asked for the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 30 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the good work that's been put in today, I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:45 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 27, 2013

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. Dear Lord, help us to define, to know, and understand what is true, pure, and just. Then, we pray, please fill our hearts and minds with truth, purity, wisdom, and justice for all. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

Mr. Jeneroux: It's an absolute pleasure to introduce this Assembly to Linda Worrell, seated in your gallery. Linda comes to our House with her son, Mike Worrell, both from Scarborough, Ontario. Linda is one the hardest working people that I have ever met in my life, a single mom often working two jobs. She has raised an incredible son, who has recently moved to our fine province and now works as a correctional officer within the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General. Linda is my aunt and Mike my cousin. I ask them both to rise here today and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it's an absolute pleasure to stand here today and introduce you to a lady very close to my heart, seated in your gallery. Despite raising three kids and working in a very successful public relations career, this lady has been my strength and my pillar for many years. She's been the one person that no matter what I decide to pursue in life is right there beside me all along the way. She's there for my two daughters when this job often has me running all over the province. She has put up with me as a rebellious teenager, and she's often understanding when I just need someone to listen. Importantly, though, she's taught me that the right to hope is the most powerful human motivation. After all of this, I ask that my mother, Jayne Jeneroux, please rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board to introduce a school group.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House 87 visitors from Muriel Martin school in my constituency of Spruce Grove-St. Albert. They are accompanied by teachers and group leaders Mme Kristen Campbell, Mme Lori Bilodeau, Mrs. Susanne Ambrose, Mrs. Rhonda Surmon, Mr. Rick Lof, Miss Lacey Zills, Mrs. Dana Nord, and parent helper Mrs. Yvonne Houle. They are seated in both galleries. They are Alberta's youngest, brightest lights for the future. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

Let us move on to other guests, then. The Minister of Health, followed by the Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you today to all members some very special guests who have joined us from the Health Quality Council of Alberta as we prepare to table their annual report later today. These guests are Charlene McBrien-Morrison, executive director of the HQCA; and Dr. Eric Wasylenko, ethics consultant. The HQCA plays a vital role in improving patient safety and health and service quality on a province-wide basis. I'd ask these guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it is also an honour to introduce to you and through you today to all members Paul Haskins and Cindy Gilmore. Paul and Cindy are both physician assistants for the Canadian armed forces, and I would first and foremost like to thank them for their service. Our guests are here today in recognition of Physician Assistant Day and to recognize the recent introduction of the profession of physician assistants to our health care system. I'd ask them both to rise and receive our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services, followed by the Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure today to introduce to you a number of people from the Alberta Construction Safety Association, which is celebrating its 25th year this month. They've been promoting workplace safety and training continuously since 1988. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm greetings of the Assembly: Tom Buchanan, representing the Lethbridge Regional Safety Committee; Georgina Nicholls, chairperson, Calgary Regional Safety Committee; Ryan Hawley, chairperson, Red Deer and area regional safety committee; Todd MacDonald, chairperson, Edmonton Regional Safety Committee; Kent Santo, representing the Grande Prairie Regional Safety Committee; Iris Steinley, chairperson, the Alberta ACSA board of directors; and Ken MacDonald, executive director of the ACSA from Lloydminster. Also joining them is someone who many of us have come to know and love through various capacities but is now here in his capacity as executive director of ACSA, Dan MacLennan. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, my guests aren't quite here yet.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition, followed by the Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I am very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guests, who represent thousands and thousands of public-sector workers in Alberta. They're here today because they are very concerned about the implications for their members, which will occur with this PC government introducing Bill 46, the Public Service Salary Restraint Act, and Bill 45, the Public Sector Services Continuation Act. I would ask my guests to rise as I call their names to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly: Heather Smith, president of the United Nurses of Alberta; Gil McGowan, president of the Alberta Federation of Labour; and Guy Smith, president of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. Join me in welcoming them.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, followed by the Associate Minister of Regional Recovery and Reconstruction for Southeast Alberta.

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you two very important guests from the Hong Kong economic trade office in Canada, the official representative of the Hong Kong special administrative region government. This office offers business seminars and programs for Canadian companies, helping us to build markets abroad. We are joined today by Miss Gloria Lo, who is a director of the main office in Toronto, as well as Mrs. Catherine Yuen, who is the principal consultant for western Canada at the Vancouver liaison office. Accompanying them today is Mr. David Tam, president of the Edmonton chapter of the Hong Kong Canada Business Association. They are seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Regional Recovery and Reconstruction for Southeast Alberta, followed by the leader of the Alberta Liberal caucus.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce two of Lethbridge's finest, members of our Lethbridge Regional Police Service. Constable Kisinger is on the board of directors of the Alberta Federation of Police Associations and is a director for our Lethbridge Police Association, and Constable Tom Kramer is president of the Lethbridge Police Association. They're here in Edmonton meeting with MLAs to maintain our strong relationship. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark for your first of two intros, I understand.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions. Today I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly representatives of AUPE. These are the front-line heroes who make this province run each and every day: Executive Director Ron Hodgins and researchers Tom Fuller and Jim Selby. They are attending today with grave concerns about the government's plan to ram through bills 45 and 46, which they believe are both a violation of the Public Service Employee Relations Act and a potentially unconstitutional violation of the Charter of Rights. At a minimum such actions represent bad faith on the part of the government to try to get around the neutral arbitration process that they agreed to. I'd ask the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome.

Mr. Speaker, it's also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you four members of HAAV Heart, humanity against all violence. They are Rajneek Thind, Trina Joshi, Abnas Grewal, and Sonam Sharma. The HAAV Heart campaign is an initiative directed toward raising awareness of many inequalities that exist in the world today. They encourage everyone to help create change by volunteering their time to help others, standing up for those who are vulnerable, and simply talking about issues that are happening in the world we live in. They can be followed on Twitter at @haavheart. I commend them for their work and ask every member to give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by Medicine Hat and the Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly six wonderful individuals here in recognition of the 75th anniversary of ATB Financial. Alberta was a different place 75 years ago, struggling through the devastation of the Great Depression, and in an effort to provide hope for farmers and small business, the government of the day created a system of temporary financial institutions known as Treasury Branches. ATB Financial has a proud history and today provides a full range of financial services.

Mr. Speaker, my guests are seated in the members' gallery, and I would now ask them to please rise and remain standing as I provide their introduction: Mr. Brian Koziol, branch manager, ATB Financial, Edmonton Namao Centre, located in the constituency of Edmonton-Decore; Mrs. Zorica Babich, assistant manager, ATB Financial, Edmonton Namao Centre; Mrs. Corene Zmurchik, assistant principal, Florence Hallock school, the recipients of ATB Namao branch's corporate social responsibility funding for a school-wide science presentation; Mr. Jack Christie, branch manager, ATB Financial, Edmonton Killarney, located in the constituency of Edmonton-Decore; Mrs. Maria Andreoglou, assistant manager, ATB Financial, Edmonton Killarney; and Mr. Greg Turner, executive member and past president, Killarney Community League. The community league is the recipient of ATB Killarney branch's corporate social responsibility funding for the development of a preschool program. Congratulations and best wishes to all of my guests. I would now ask this Assembly to provide the traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by the Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three introductions. I'll just go through them all at once. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three of the over 1,000 volunteer heroes who came together at the greatest time of need during the summer's flood in Medicine Hat. My first introduction is Constable Dave Allen, originally from Belfast, Northern Ireland. He's an eight-year member and is the president of the Medicine Hat Police Association and currently serves in the forensic identification unit. During the flood and evacuation of the police station Dave was responsible for overseeing the transfer of over 100,000 exhibits while setting up a functional ident lab in the temporary facility.

My second introduction is Mr. Darryl Hubich, a seven-year member and the vice-president of the Medicine Hat Police Association. He currently serves in the patrol section. Darryl holds an allegiance to his favourite green football team due to policing for seven years prior in Saskatchewan. During the flood Darryl was responsible for evacuations of affected areas and maintaining order afterwards, and to do this, Darryl worked 11 days straight, averaging 11 hours a day while on scheduled vacation.

My third introduction is Sergeant Ryan Thorburn, a 10-year member. He is the secretary of the Medicine Hat Police Association and currently works in the major crime section. During the flood Ryan worked with the support team to develop a temporary police substation in a safe area of the city. Ryan was later assigned to the residential safety inspection team, going door to door in affected areas before re-entry was permitted.

Mr. Speaker, these Medicine Hat heroes are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you. It's an honour and a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly three outstanding First Nations youth who are from the Mountain Cree Camp, located south of Edson in my constituency of West Yellowhead. Before I introduce them, I want to acknowledge that the success of these youth was in part due to the work that you did, Mr. Speaker, as Minister of Education and the work that the Member for Lesser Slave Lake did as associate minister of aboriginal affairs in establishing an education program in their remote community. The youth that are here today are outstanding because they are the first to graduate from their community in 30 years. I'd ask that these graduates, who are seated in the members' gallery, rise when I say their names so they can be recognized in the Assembly: Skywind Roan, Rodney Morin, and Shayna Papin. They are also joined by Chief Wayne Roan and 16 supportive family and friends who are seated in the public gallery. Congratulations to these graduates on a job well done. They are role models for many First Nations youth across this province. I'd ask that all members give these individuals the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Congratulations.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Ms Fenske: My guests are not here, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's go to Edmonton-Calder, followed by Stony Plain.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to everybody in this Assembly my guests from the Alberta Refugee Care Coalition. This coalition is formed by a group of public health students and physicians. They're advocating for this provincial government to cover the cost and restore essential health care coverage for refugees and refugee claimants here in the province of Alberta. I would like my guests to please rise as I call their names: Hilary Short, Melody Cesar, Dr. Jessie Breton, Dr. Maria Martinez, Chentila Nagamuthu, Ashley Davey, and Lina Sovani. Can you please give them the warm traditional welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you and to all members of the House two guests from my constituency. They are the parents of one of our hard-working pages, Matt Owens. Steve and Janice Owens have lived in Stony Plain for 13 years. Steve Owens is the director of construction for Capital Power. Janice Owens is an educational assistant at John Paul II Catholic school, located in Stony Plain. I ask that they now stand receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly five guests visiting today. All five of these guests are very aware of and interested in the proceedings of this House. I know firsthand how hard they work on issues related to politics, in particular for change after 44 long, long years of one-party rule. These individuals are Jonathon Westcott, Lindsay Lahey, Justin James, Leah Westbrook, and Matthew Smallacombe. I ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the House five wonderful nurses from Edmonton: Tracy Cox, Lena Peters, Sheena Lukacs, Laurie Hansen, and Akinyi Awando. They're here because they have deep concerns about the declining quality of health care in Alberta, with nursing aides replacing RNs in some of the hospital wards. They're also concerned about the over-capacity protocol that continues to be used with people cramming into hallways and extra beds in wards, increasing, as I believe, infection rates in our hospitals. Thirdly, they're here to register concerns that new nursing graduates are leaving this province because of lack of support and employment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, I understand that your guests have not yet arrived.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Deaths of Children in Care

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The shocking revelations about the state of our children in care have Albertans heartbroken. They cannot comprehend how senseless tragedies like the deaths of vulnerable children could go unreported for so long.

Mr. Speaker, as the Premier rightly pointed out yesterday, I was the minister of children's services at one point in time. I know what comes across the desk. Some of these cases are absolutely stomach-churning. They can often involve the worst kind of neglect and abuse, and each and every one of them is full of heartbreak. They're haunting.

I also know that the department counts amongst its staff some of the most caring and compassionate souls that I've ever had the pleasure of working with. However, Mr. Speaker, as the recent media investigations have revealed, there is something seriously wrong with how it responds to the death of children in care. In many cases the children passed years ago, but their stories are only now being told for the very first time.

Mr. Speaker, there is an opportunity that comes from each of these stories. It's an opportunity that cannot be wasted. We must learn why these tragedies keep occurring. Until we do, how can we know what steps to take to prevent them in the future? As the former minister I can honestly say with absolute certainty that nothing short of a full public inquiry will fix this. I don't say that lightly. I know I will be called to testify, and I know I will do it without hesitation.

Mr. Speaker, this isn't about politics. I know that the current minister works hard in a difficult portfolio, and I know that the ministers before him did as well. But we need to set aside our personal hesitation and do what's right. If there were things that I should have done as minister, I want to know about them, Albertans deserve to know about them, and the families that lost children deserve to know about them. I'm asking this government: please, call a public inquiry. It's about doing the right thing.

Speaker's Ruling Brevity in Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we start question period, I want to remind both the people who are asking questions and those providing answers that we do have a 35-second rule. I typically give you a five-second warning. Yesterday I allowed far too many to go over the 35 seconds inadvertently but also partly because of the sensitivity of the topics. I'm afraid we all got caught up in our questions and answers. There were many questions that went beyond 35 seconds and several, several answers that went well over 35. So I'm going to try to clamp down on that so that we can get more members recognized.

That having been said, please, let's not exceed the 35-second rule today. I've asked Hansard operators and our sound system operators to please stop the clock right then.

All right. We can start question period now, please. Start the clock.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood. Your first main set of questions.

Deaths of Children in Care

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the minister assured this Chamber that there were a number of mechanisms designed to ensure that the deaths of children in care are fully and properly investigated. However, as was made plain in media reports today, these different processes are deeply flawed. To quote the Edmonton Journal, "The child death review system is governed by two ministries, three different laws, an internal policy document, unwritten conventions and political whim" and "in the end, many deaths are never investigated at all." To the Premier . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It may sound like a complex system, but it's a very thorough system. There are internal reviews; there's the medical examiner, who does a medical review; the quality assurance council looks at things from a systems perspective; and the Child and Youth Advocate is ultimately responsible as the eyes, ears, and voice of the public.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the media investigation into this sad situation calls the system for investigating these deaths "secretive, redundant and fails to ensure recommendations to prevent similar deaths are acted upon." The groups and agencies involved are described as secretive with limited public accountability. Given this indictment of the system, which the minister in question says has met his expectations, will the Premier agree to call a public inquiry on the issue of deaths of children in care?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, far from the way it was just described, it's a fairly effective system in terms of a medical examiner that looks at the medical causes of death; the quality assurance council, which can look at the systemic approach; and the Child and Youth Advocate, who has access to all information. There are also internal reviews, of course, so that we can inform practice. What I have said is that we can get better, and we will look to get better. We will have a round-table bring all the experts together to look at what information should be public, who should make it public, and how death reviews should be conducted.

Ms Smith: In fact, Mr. Speaker, the investigation into the government's handling of child deaths for those in government care appears to be verging on chaos. One example of this is the fact that the death review system is governed by three different laws, each of which uses a different legal definition for what constitutes a reviewable death. To the Premier. Albertans need to have confidence that child deaths are being appropriately investigated. Will she agree to call a full public inquiry on the issue of deaths of children in care?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the public can have confidence because they have an independent officer of the Legislature called the Child and Youth Advocate, who has access to all the information, has the ability to call a review, has the powers of a commissioner under the Public Inquiries Act, as well as a fatality review board, which has an obligation to review all deaths and in appropriate circumstances call for a fatality review.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: The government's failure to disclose an accurate number of child deaths for those in government care raises the suspicion that the government is trying to avoid public scrutiny on this issue. While the minister claims that the result of all reviews are made public, the fact remains that there are many deaths for which we have no specific information. Will the Premier call a full public review on the issue of deaths of children in care?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the death of any child, in care or not, is a tragic circumstance. Many of us are parents. We know how much we love our children and how much we care about them and how much it would hurt if we lost them in any circumstance. Every single member in this House, I think, cares about children in care and about children in Alberta. What we want to have is a system which honours the caregivers, honours the people in the system who care for those in the most vulnerable circumstances and an opportunity to review appropriately where tragic circumstances happen.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, in addition to failing to disclose the accurate number of deaths of children in care, the government has also drastically reduced the number of special case reviews it has conducted over the past 10 years, stopping them altogether in 2009. The government's claim that it is fully investigating all child deaths, when it has halted special case reviews, is simply not credible. To the Premier: will she agree to call a full inquiry on the issue of deaths of children in care?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, in the first year that I became Minister of Human Services I was mandated by the Premier to put children first and to make sure that we deal with children in this province in an appropriate way. We published the numbers, all of the numbers, of children who died in care. But previously the numbers that were not published were those of children who were determined to have died under natural circumstances or where there was not a questionable circumstance around their death. So that is the situation in Alberta. We're always looking to do things better. We'll have a round-table. We'll bring people together to talk about what information . . .

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Second supplemental.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, when asked by the media about the lack of special case reviews, the assistant deputy minister responsible for human services said, "There might be some conversations between the statutory director and their staff . . . but we don't necessarily create reports . . . Some of it might be meetings; there may not be minutes." Unwritten recommendations, no minutes, and informal processes: shocking. Will the Premier agree to call a full public inquiry on the issue of deaths of children in care?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, one thing I can assure this House and one thing I can assure the Alberta public is that the people who work in the Department of Human Services and the people who work in the system in agencies who help children care about their children. Every serious incident and death is investigated and learned from. The learnings are shared in an appropriate way within the department. You can call it a special review, or you can call it something else. The work is done and it's shared and it's implemented. Every time an incident like that happens, we learn from it, and we improve.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Third main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, following the tragic death of each child in government care, we have to endeavour to learn what we can from these sad occurrences. While hard and painful, the lessons we take from each death can help to prevent future deaths from occurring. To date internal and historical recommendations from past reviews are not publicly available. To ensure that all appropriate information is brought to light, will the Premier agree to call a full public inquiry on the issue of deaths of children in care?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, public fatality review reports are, in fact, public, and responses to them are often made public. They certainly have been since I've been minister. We respond publicly to the Child and Youth Advocate's public recommendations. We will have a round-table. We will bring together all appropriate voices to discuss how we can do a better job because all of us want to do a better job for children in Alberta all the time.

Ms Smith: The problem is, Mr. Speaker, that of the 258 recommendations put forward by experts, we have no idea how many have actually been implemented. Despite the minister's assurances that, quote, a more formal tracking process, unquote, has been put in place, they have released no specific details on how this process works. It leads Albertans to believe that the government is not doing all it can to ensure that all of the recommendations are implemented. To the Premier: will she agree to call a full public inquiry on the issue of deaths . . .

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I can assure this House and Albertans that we do know the recommendations from every report that's been put forward, and we do track that internally. We do understand, and we do know what we're doing with it. What we've committed to do is to respond to the quality assurance council's recommendation that a more formal public tracking process be put in place. We will be doing that, and we will be doing that right away.

Ms Smith: Pressed by the media to explain how his tracking system would ensure that no recommendation falls through the cracks, the minister responsible said: I'm confident that we actually do a pretty good job, I think an excellent job, of learning from circumstances. However, this government's refusal to make public the information surrounding these deaths calls into question the minister's claim of excellence. Will the Premier agree to call a full public inquiry into the issue of deaths of children in care?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, that hon. member may think it calls into question the excellence that's happening in the system, but I can tell you that I have had nothing but letters and phone calls from people who work in the system, from agencies, from individuals, from foster parents who are concerned that much of the good work that's happening, the thousands and thousands and thousands of children who are helped annually in this province by those caring people – they do believe that the system is good, the best in Canada, as one person described it, and getting better and that we're moving the yardsticks. We're doing better every day. We can do better. We will learn.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that the Premier has clearly rejected a call from a united opposition and other groups such as AUPE for a public inquiry into the deaths of Albertan children in this government's care. Interestingly, at a Council of the Federation meeting on July 24 the Premier joined every other Premier in the country in backing the Native Women's Association of Canada's request for a national public inquiry into the case of missing or murdered aboriginal women, a very good thing. To the Premier: why do you feel that the families of the 145 children who died in care, most of them First Nations, are less . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Premier or someone on behalf of.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The difference would be that nobody is looking into the deaths of those women. There may be criminal investigations happening, but there's no concerted effort. In Alberta with respect to the child welfare system there is not only a concerted effort to look into the death of each child and learn from it, but as the opposition and the newspaper has said, there are three or four different groups that have a challenge to do it, looking from different perspectives to make sure, in my view, that what we're looking at is done very thoroughly.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, my grandpa told me that there are three things in the world you can't hide: the sun, the moon, and the truth. And the truth has come out. The fact is that 145 children died in this government's care, and 78 per cent of them are of First Nations heritage. The truth is that the death rate is three times that of the regular population. These children deserve nothing but the best, and the truth is that they're still dying today. They're on the website. They're still dying in care. It's on the website. To the Premier: will you please put your political self-interest aside and do the right thing? Let's just call an independent inquiry. Let's all fix this.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the most disgusting thing that would happen would be if this was to be made a political interest. This is about children. This is about making sure that we do the best we can for children. All of us are parents. All of us care about children whether we're parents or not. Some of us are grandparents. We care about the children. We want to do what's in the best interests of the children, and that is what we will do. We'll do it with all of those in this province who want to work with us to make the system better. We will take critique; we will use that critique to improve the process. But let's not turn this into a political windmill.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you what cheeses me off more than anything: when children are getting hurt. This government knows they're getting hurt. Minister, you've been a minister for many years in this government, and now you're the minister who loves round-tables. Well, your round-table is a PR exercise to make the problem go away. The problem ain't going away, Minister. Time to decide: is your Premier, is your government more interested in making bad headlines go away or bad problems go away? Minister, stand up and do the right thing. Call an inquiry.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I don't have to answer to that hon. member for my care and compassion for children in this province. Every single person that I work with and every single person in this Legislature knows that I have put time and effort and passion into putting children first. I will continue to do that. I will take advice from the opposite member, even that member. I will take advice about improving the system. But I don't need him to yell at me; I need him to come and work collaboratively to make the system better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, care for children is more than rhetoric and more than a lapel pin, Mr. Minister. The Minister of Human Services took advantage of his news conference today to berate the news media for their coverage of the plight of children in the care of his government. Clearly, the minister is attempting to intimidate news media into looking the other way while his government continues to reduce investigations into the deaths of children in care and fails to ensure that recommendations to protect those children are implemented. To the minister: how does muzzling the media . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister, who may pick up on that, please.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member must have missed the news conference, because I didn't berate the media. What we did was that we brought together a number of people who were concerned that their voices were not being heard, people who called us and said that they wanted to be heard on this issue. We called a news conference so that they could be heard. One of the members there took a very strong swipe at the media for the rather disgusting cartoon that was in the Journal the other day, but other than that there was actually respect put forward from a number of members, including myself, about the fact that this issue is in the public for discussion, where it should be.

The Speaker: The hon. member, first sup.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today the Minister of Human Services said the following, quote: people know that children die, and they die in care. It seems that this minister considers the deaths of children in his government's care to be routine and something that should be ignored by the media and the public. To the Minister of Human Services: how does this callous attitude to the deaths of children help those children currently in government care?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I don't think there's anyone who knows me who would consider me to be callous about the death of a child or children in care. What I basically said – and it wasn't just my words; it was others who were there – was that we're dealing in the child welfare system with children who have challenges and families who have challenges. We're dealing with the most difficult of circumstances. The caregivers and the social workers and the foster parents are dealing sometimes with children that they take into care and that they know are going to die, and children do die. We need to learn from every death and every circumstance, but I'm not callous about it.

Mr. Mason: How will we learn, Mr. Speaker, if all deaths of children are not investigated?

The minister also told media that he's not going to interfere with the system based on something he read in the newspaper.

Given that it took the media to do the research that this minister should have done himself years ago, will the minister tell the House why he is ignoring the plight of children who are suffering and dying in government care?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, every day this minister, the people who work in the Human Services department, the people who work in the Department of Health and other departments in government, Education and others, work to help create better opportunities for children in this province. Some of those children are in dire situations. Some of those children come from places where they don't get the supports that they need, where they don't get the love they need, where they don't have the stable home that they need. There are challenges, and there are people, there are Albertans, who step up to that every day. This minister does, this government does, and Albertans do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Distracted Driving Education

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government is working hard to make people safe on the roads by bringing in distracted driving legislation. Unfortunately, some Albertans are not taking this seriously. More and more tragic accidents are happening on Alberta roads due to drivers talking and texting on cellphones. My first question is to the Minister of Transportation, but I can see he's not here, so to whoever wants to answer for him: will you include distracted driving education for each driver in Alberta's to be taken at licence renewal?

The Speaker: Someone from the front bench, please.

Mr. Lukaszuk: I'll take that, Mr. Speaker. As laws under the Highway Traffic Act and other relevant legislation change and are updated and new restrictions or new clauses are introduced, that is included in our educational materials for new drivers and for those who have to take driver's licence tests to be granted a driver's licence in the province of Alberta. So, yes, any new regulations, any new restrictions will be included in the teaching materials.

Mr. Sandhu: To the Deputy Premier again: will you also include distracted driver education for all the new licensees with a compulsory 100 per cent pass mark on the written questions associated with this education?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it's a good question from the member. What I can say is that there is already a distracted driving component within the driver's handbook for when drivers are taking their test and learning how to drive and getting those assessments. It's already built in there. Of course, they don't have to get 100 per cent. If we had to get 100 per cent for that, maybe a few of us might not be driving, too. It's a good question from the member, and I'm happy to inform him that it's already in the driver's handbook.

Mr. Sandhu: It's my final question to the Minister of Education. Will you include distracted driving education for all high school students?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we care about the safety of our students, and that's why in the new Education Act there's a provision that talks about the safety of students, but driver education is not exclusively or particularly included in part of our K to 12 curriculum. It's a service that many parents do choose to enrol their students in, and Alberta Transportation has run a couple of campaigns here recently trying to increase awareness and provide education on this exact topic.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the Calgary-East.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning I attended a press conference, and I was astounded that the Minister of Human Services would attempt to change the channel on serious flaws in our children's services system by laying the blame on the media and the opposition. To slam the media for exposing failures in the system is simply ludicrous. Further, to say that parents should not have the right to discuss the death of their own children publicly is shameful, hurtful, and prevents those families from finding closure. Minister, why do you want to muzzle the parents of children who die in care?

Mr. Hancock: I do not want to muzzle anyone. I do not want to muzzle the media, and I certainly do not want to muzzle the children in care. I might want to muzzle the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, but that would be a different issue. Mr. Speaker, what we need to have is a very serious discussion about the balance between the right for the public to know and the right for parents to have that discussion that they want to have and the privacy issues surrounding it. That's a very important question. We'll address it in January at the round-table. I hope that hon. member is there to make a constructive contribution.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Minister, you suggested that parents may not understand the context of how their children die and that is why they are prevented from speaking to the media, yet you also prevent the parents from learning the context of their deaths by denying them any of the details or relevant information. Do you not understand how hurtful and insulting this is?

Mr. Hancock: What the hon. member refuses to understand is that there are many people involved any time there is a tragedy of this nature. There may be siblings involved. There may be other family members involved. There are caregivers involved. There are foster parents involved. There are privacy issues involved, and it's not quite so simple as being able to blurt out all the information on the front page of the newspaper. We do need to have a very adult discussion about what information needs to be in the public and how people can properly access that information. We will have that in January, and I hope that hon. member is there and being constructive about the discussion.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've already replied and accepted the minister's offer to attend his round-table.

Given that PIPA, the Personal Information Protection Act, was recently struck down by the Supreme Court, will the minister commit to ensuring that parents are no longer muzzled once this legislation has been rewritten?

Mr. Hancock: I'm not sure that's the act that applies, Mr. Speaker, but what I can say is this. We will have an intelligent discussion with all the necessary voices at the table to talk about what information should be in the public domain, what information should be kept private in the interests of those individuals, and who should make the decision if there's a judgment call to be made. We will have that discussion. We will have it in January. We will bring this to a resolution, because this is an extremely important and extremely difficult question for everybody involved.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Calgary Southwest Ring Road

Mr. Amery: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. On this historic day, November 27, 2013, the government of Alberta signed a deal with the Tsuu T'ina First Nation that has been decades in the making. This deal allows for the exchange of money and land so that the last portion of Calgary's ring road can be built. To the hon. Minister of Transportation: since the deal has now been signed, sealed, and delivered, can you reveal the total cost of this portion of the ring road?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it is a great day, and big commendations to the Premier and others who have been working on this. I know that the minister will be happy to go through the details of the costs, and maybe estimates would be a great time to do that. What I can tell you is how proud I am of the Premier and the Minister of Transportation and of Chief Whitney for the momentous signatures that they put on paper here today. You know, it's not even been two years since the election, and our Premier has already negotiated a deal with the teachers, with the doctors, a framework with B.C., and now this deal that's been decades in the making, Mr. Speaker. We've got a great Premier, who is building Alberta.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this deal includes the transfer of around $340 million and 2,030 hectares of land to the Tsuu T'ina, why does the government think that this is a good deal?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we think it's a good deal because great members like this, respected members of the Calgary caucus, have been telling us that it's a great deal. This member has been a great advocate of this. You know, there are all kinds of long-term benefits from this for the Tsuu T'ina Nation and Calgarians and all Albertans. It's going to provide the land that's needed to complete the ring road while providing the nation with compensation for the lands, which will enable them to enhance the quality of life for their people. I just think that for future generations of Albertans this is a great announcement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can we expect this portion of the ring road to be completed on time, or will we end up with the same situation as the southeast portion of the ring road?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, once the land transfer is complete, Alberta will have seven years to complete construction of the ring road through the former nation lands. We're hopeful that the construction will go well and the ring road will be completed before that time. This is just another example of Premier Redford's commitment to building Alberta. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members are reminded not to use first or second names of elected officials.

Let's go on to Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

University of Calgary Office Upgrades

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, taxpayers continue to be baffled by this government. The most recent slap in the face, one of them, is the outrageous $8 million plus, plush new offices for executives at the U of C. Now, the minister of advanced education said that he's okay with all of this, and that's no surprise considering his government is spending $375 million on fancy new offices for themselves. To the minister: do you not see that this is excessive and that the money would be better spent in the classroom?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, it's rather ironic for that particular member to rise in the House and ask this question in view of the fact that just a few weeks ago – and when you have free time to read the Hansard, read it – he was chastising me for micro-managing universities and for engaging in forcing universities to do certain things and for amalgamating and centralizing universities. Now when he doesn't like a decision, he actually wants me to override the board's decision.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, I'd never chastise the minister for standing up for taxpayers. It's his job.

Given that these new offices all exceed the maximum 215 square feet permitted by the university's own guidelines and given that the president's office includes a 175-square-foot bathroom, surely the minister can see why students and all taxpayers find this excessive. Why won't he do something about it and send the right message?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, this is a party, in particular a member, who believes in locally made decisions as long as he likes them. The moment he doesn't like them, he wants the minister to walk into either that municipality or university and override their decisions.

There is a board. They have made decisions. I said that I will have a conversation with the chair when an opportunity arises, but at the end of the day, they make their priorities as a board of the university, and if that member has issues with it, write them a letter.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, I'm pretty sure it's public money, and it's his job to represent Albertans. Why can't the minister do what every person on this planet would like him to do: stand up for the students at the University of Calgary, call out these executives for their flagrant misuse of taxpayer dollars, and end this culture of entitlement?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, that tells you how little the universe of that member's life is, 17 single-minded members of a caucus.

Mr. Speaker, no. What Albertans want us to do – and I don't think the rest of the universe is interested – is to support our universities and to support the boards that have been appointed to manage the universities. They make local decisions; they're the closest to the university. They have student representation on the board, they have staff representation on the board, and they have academic representation on the board and public members from Calgary, in this case, on the board.

Public-service Salaries and Pensions

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, during the last provincial election the Premier made promises about predictable, sustainable funding and supports for front-line staff. Now that her leadership review is done, she has declared all-out war on public servants, their pensions, and their salaries and contracts. If that was her intention, why didn't she campaign on this instead of running around saying she was Peter Lougheed? To the Minister of Finance: why are you shaking down front-line staff and middle-income Albertans with no debate and no discussion?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, in actual fact, on the pensions we've been in discussions for over a year around changes that need to be made for sustainability so that those front-line staff will have a defined-benefit pension plan into the future. As for the legislation that we've put on notice to table in the House, what we are after is a fair deal for the employees and a fair deal for the taxpayers. That's it in a nutshell.

Mr. Hehr: Given that the ministers of Finance and Human Services both know that several public-service contracts are currently being negotiated and some are even in arbitration, how can this government's callous attack on public servants' pensions and salaries be seen as anything else but bad-faith bargaining?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, if we're trying to make the pensions sustainable so that they have defined-benefit pension plans now and into the future, then it's not an attack. We're saving it.

On the other piece to this question that the hon. member talked about in terms of the salaries, we negotiated and worked in good faith with the teachers, Mr. Speaker. We arrived at an equitable solution that's fair for them and fair for the taxpayer. We worked with the doctors; we arrived at a fair agreement for them and for the taxpayer. This legislation will allow us to do the same thing with the hard-working employees.

Mr. Hehr: My final question is to the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation. Given that your government is ramming through the Assembly in the dying days of this sitting bills that will affect middle-income Albertans and front-line staff without consultation and imposing a six-hour limit on debate, does this really sound transparent?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, debate in this House is open and transparent. The hon. member should know because he's been here long enough that sometimes you put on notice various motions in order to encourage and enable the debate to happen in a reasonable way. We will see whether any of those tools are needed or whether the opposition members will come to the debate in a meaningful way to make good legislation for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday this PC government announced a direct attack on the women and men who provide public services in this province. Once again this government is proving that they will take every opportunity to drive down wages and trample over the middle class. To the Minister of Human Services: why are you attacking workers, including your own workers and staff, and throwing collective bargaining out the window?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, prior to suggesting that we're going to drive down wages, the hon. member should wait and see what the legislation is all about. I think that Alberta taxpayers and employees will recognize that what we are doing is asking to come back to the table to negotiate a fair and equitable solution for both the taxpayers and the employees.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that last year this same Premier went to the AUPE convention and said that she would seek, quote, a good relationship and constructive solutions for the future and given that ever since this Premier has delivered nothing but disgusting attacks on workers and public services, does this minister really think that vindictive and arrogant legislation on those who deliver our public services will do anything but fan the flames of chaos and confusion?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, this Premier has a very good record that in very good faith she has negotiated a deal for teachers, and again we have a labour piece that benefits only the children, and that was for the children. The same deal was reached with our doctors so that our parents and our family members can have continuous medical care. Right now, without pre-empting the bill – why should they start reading bills now? They obviously imagine what's in it without reading it. The intention, as the member will see, is to make sure that we reach a good deal between the AUPE and this government.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that this government is not just attacking public-sector workers but also undermining the essential public services that we all rely upon and given that this government has consistently slashed public spending in the pursuit of an arrogant, right-wing agenda while pretending to be progressive, are these now your true stripes that you are showing? I sure smell a big, fat skunk.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I guess he was calling on me. What we are proceeding with is legislation which will say to our workers: we think you are a very, very valuable part of the Alberta scenario, and we want you to be at work and on work; it's important to Albertans that you are because you're taking care of vulnerable Albertans. We do need to discourage and deter illegal action because vulnerable Albertans are at stake, and we do need to make sure that there are fair workers because our workers in Alberta . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by Calgary-Hawkwood.

Land Titles Registry

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I asked the Minister of Service Alberta why he was considering changes to Alberta's gold-standard land titles system when numbers show that it generates more than $80 million per year for this government. The minister wasn't very open or honest in his answer, but he's clearly flirting with the idea of privatization. While that's sometimes a good option, on this side we believe in common sense, Minister, and not fixing something that isn't broken. I want to give the minister another chance to be open and honest with Albertans. Minister, do you plan on privatizing the Alberta land titles system? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What we have said is that we're looking at ways to make the system better. We're looking at different options, whether they be the options of what B.C. is doing or Saskatchewan is doing or maybe what's happening in Australia. There's more to this question than just status quo and privatization. There's a multitude of different options, and we're exploring them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess my question wasn't very clear.

Given that Albertans, stakeholders, and even the minister's own deputy agree that the current system is darn near perfect and given that a move like this would have massive implications for property owners and stakeholders, maybe the minister of transparency is capable of answering the question. To the minister of transparency: is this PC government planning on privatizing Alberta's land titles registry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we've said before, we're looking at how we can make the system better. We're looking at options to see how we can move to what Australia does, where everything is done electronically, where you don't need to run around to lawyers and have photocopies and documents couriered from one place to the next. We want to eliminate fraud. We want to have a system that is the best in the world. Australia is the founder of our system, and that's where we're going.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Minister of Service Alberta is refusing to tell Albertans about his quest to sell off Albertans' property rights to the highest bidder, I'll give him an easier question. Minister, have you had any conversations or dealings with Teranet, the company that took over Ontario's electronic land titles system? Yes or no?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, I've talked to people from Ontario, from B.C., from Saskatchewan. We're looking at solutions all over the world. If these members think that the system today is great, good. But do they feel that we should move forward with a $25 million cost and just increase fees for Albertans? Is that what they're suggesting?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, followed by Livingstone-Macleod.

Engineering Profession

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It came to my attention lately that there are a growing number of Alberta companies who outsource as much as 70 per cent of their engineering and design work overseas for low cost. This concerns me and many of my constituents who are engineers. It leaves our own engineers in Alberta short of work or unemployed. My question is to the hon. Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education. Does the government of Alberta have any guidelines or legislation to deal with such practices?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our priority has always been to educate the workforce, a workforce made up of Albertans first and the rest of Canadians shortly thereafter, to satisfy the labour needs in this province. When it comes to engineers, just very recently, a few weeks ago, our government made a very significant investment in the Schulich school of business in Calgary. However, we're not in a position to dictate to Alberta businesses how they do their work and what they do domestically and what they do outside.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that other industries, like welders and construction workers, are more tightly controlled and regulated in Alberta than engineers, why doesn't the government level the playing field for engineers?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, as the member knows, this province plays on a global market. As we're looking for new markets for all of our products, not only oil and gas but agricultural products and fibre and others, we engage in business world-wide, and in doing so, we cannot be protectionist about our businesses. So we don't tell our businesses how to run their shops, but we want to be competitive, Mr. Speaker. Yes, engineers are governed by APEGA, which is a self-governing body made up of engineers. Our government does not deal with licensure and doesn't tell them how to conduct their profession.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the actions by these companies, leaving skilled Albertans without employment, my question is to the same minister: is the government of Alberta doing anything to help those Albertans find alternative, meaningful employment?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the opposite would be the case. As a matter of fact, in this province we have a chronic shortage of professional engineers, to the point where many come from abroad and from other provinces to do work in this province. We all know that this province leads Canada when it comes to construction, residential, commercial, and industrial. Some firms do outsource some parts of their work – that's simply their business practice – but we are focused on educating Albertans to become engineers to meet that market need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by Sherwood Park.

Ground Ambulance Services

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After weeks of opposition pressure the Minister of Health said in a press release on Tuesday that his government will finally begin looking at ways to end the failed practice of using ground ambulance resources for nonemergency interfacility transfers in rural Alberta. Unfortunately, the minister had to be harassed and coerced into finally admitting that there was a problem, but he did get there. Now, we know this minister sometimes says one thing but does another. To the minister: what are the exact details of this new plan to move interfacility transfers outside of emergency services?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know if it's the hon. member's intention to question my character or to ask a policy question about emergency health services in this province. His colleagues certainly seem to have no compunction in doing so with respect to other members.

What I will say, Mr. Speaker, is that we have recognized for some time that there are a growing number of interfacility transfers throughout the province. Alberta Health Services does a very good job of dedicating basic life-support resources to as many of those transfers as possible to ensure that our most specialized equipment and personnel are not used for that, but we're looking at ways to . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, first supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't think I got a clear answer to that.

Given that the minister has now admitted that there's a problem and committed to finding new ways to solve the problem, will the minister now give us at least a timeline for when we can expect a fully functional but separate ambulance interfacility system?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is getting a little better. The best way to get a clear answer is to ask a clear question.

Mr. Speaker, I'll say what I said to mayors and reeves and others across the province in our discussions around this issue, that we'll continue to look at other options to move interfacility transfers out of the EMS system to ensure that that very specialized equipment and personnel are available for emergencies as much as possible.

Mr. Stier: Thank you. Considering the minister has finally admitted that the interfacility transfer system was problematic as claimed by the Wildrose all along and acknowledging the fact that municipalities are still deeply troubled over his forced, centralized ambulance dispatch plans, will the minister now commit to making sure our current EMS system is working seamlessly before he imposes centralized ambulance dispatch throughout rural Alberta?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's very obvious but not surprising that the hon. member would not have taken the time to look at the Health Quality Council of Alberta report on ground ambulances. If he looked at either the terms of reference or an entire chapter, he would see that interfacility transfer was actually part of the recommendations that we're acting on now. He would also see that I added, in addition to the government response to the recommendations, a request that Alberta Health Services look at those options, look at how we might expand moving interfacility transfers out of the EMS system, and that's exactly what we're doing today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Trade with Asia

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the Asia Advisory Council helps facilitate discussion with industry and other stakeholders. My question is to the Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. In your role as the chair what challenges have been identified by Alberta's small and medium-sized enterprises that are seeking to enter Asian markets?

Ms Woo-Paw: I would like to thank the member, who is a great advocate for SMEs in her riding, for raising this point. Accessing the Asian market, whose middle class is set to triple to almost 2 billion people by 2020, is a key part of our building Alberta plan. Key challenges to our SMEs include the challenge of operating in new markets. Also, an Asia Pacific Foundation survey found that 60 per cent of Asia-related businesses had problems hiring Canadians with relevant qualifications and only 34 per cent felt that the Canadians working in the professions had sufficient knowledge about . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, first supplemental.

Ms Olesen: Thank you. To the same associate minister: what is being done to address these challenges and help our small and medium enterprises enter Asian markets?

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, the Asia Advisory Council holds regular in-person consultations with stakeholders and industries. The council also sponsored the National Conversation on Asia event, where the Asia Pacific Foundation launched the Canada's Asia Challenge report. Our Premier and I supported over 25 SMEs this fall in investing in Alberta seminars in China, which led to agreements being signed and incoming business. Also, an SME export council will be developed to identify opportunities and provide feedback and input. Finally, our international offices helped facilitate over 1,500 meetings for SMEs.

The Speaker: Hon. member, second supplemental.

Ms Olesen: Thank you. To the same associate minister: what is the most important area where further progress is needed, and what broad benefits would addressing it have for Albertans?

Ms Woo-Paw: Studies such as the Asia Pacific Foundation's Creating Competence for the Next Generation of Canadians and input from SMEs have identified the need for policies and support to address the development of cultural competency such as increasing public awareness of the importance of expanding access to an increasingly Asia-driven global economy and enhancing our education in Asian economies, differences in business practice and culture, and Asian languages across the province.

Mr. Speaker, opening new markets is about building Alberta and ensuring that we can fund programs and services that Albertans have told us matter.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Lethbridge-East.

Out-of-country Health Services

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Five-year-old Brooke Aubuchon qualified for a clinical trial in New York to treat her rare genetic disease. This is the same disease that killed her brother Alex in 2011. Most of the medical costs are covered, but the travel expenses are not. Her family has brought their case to the Health minister, written letters, and gone through every level of bureaucracy available. This family is running out of time. Minister, this government seems to be able to find money for outrageous expenses, bonuses to AHS, a million dollars to the Olympics. Can someone in your government find some money to help save this five-year-old's life?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I have complete sympathy for the little girl that the hon. member is mentioning or anyone who is suffering from a rare disease or an orphan disease. But, as the hon. member knows, we have a process that is independent of government called the Out-of-country Health Services Committee, that includes an appeal process to determine eligibility for costs of health care services that are provided outside of Alberta. I haven't reviewed the particulars on this case. I am not the decision-maker in this case. I'd encourage the hon. member to advise her constituent of the appropriate process.

The Speaker: First supplemental, please, hon. member.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Brooke's treatment is not covered by Alberta health insurance, that she cannot be considered by the committee for exceptional drug treatment, and that the out-of-country medical expense committee has already refused assistance and given that this family has followed every single step you have laid out in every single letter – she has written letters to the Minister of Health, the deputy minister, Alberta Health Services – what else can this family possibly do to get your personal intervention in this situation? It needs your help, Minister.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I believe I have a briefing on the decisions of the Out-of-country Health Services Committee, and if they have been through the appeal process, the appeal panel, information is available. These decisions are independent of government. We do have a variety of programs within government to assist people of low income and families of low income. I don't know if that is a consideration or not in this case. But the process of determining eligibility for any health service, whether it's in our health insurance plan or not, is independent of the minister.

The Speaker: Second supplemental, please.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is telling children and their families that have rare diseases and can't get any coverage that they're just out of luck. That's unacceptable. Minister, I understand there's a process. This family understands the process. They've followed the process. We've done the low income. We've done every single committee you've outlined. We've written to your ministry. I understand that this not a political decision, but you're the Minister of Health. You have the ability to be kind and compassionate. You've done it before: baby Aleena. You have taken cases on personally. Brooke needs your help. She's five, and she's going to die. The treatment . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, this is hardly a place for an appeal to a minister or any other member of this government to go outside established processes, that are evidence-based and independent of government, to make what are very difficult decisions.

It is, further, quite misleading and unfortunate that the hon. member on behalf of her caucus would claim credit for a political decision with respect to a very serious case that I had to review over the summer. That decision, Mr. Speaker, was made on the basis of clinical evidence that was available to us. I think Albertans expect . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Oldman River Watershed Management

Ms Pastoor: Mr. Speaker, I attended the Oldman Watershed Council meeting recently in Lethbridge, one of many held in the region. There was a robust discussion with the council and 15 interest groups regarding the protection of the eastern slope headwaters. I came from that meeting with some very important questions. To the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. There are comprehensive regulations protecting riparian zones and streams. However, could . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. I hope you got a question in there somewhere.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank this hon. member for the work that she did and is doing, especially by attending the Oldman Watershed Council meetings and bringing their concerns back. Currently, members, we are seeking feedback, as you know, from Albertans with regard to the draft South Saskatchewan regional plan. Under the draft plan we have proposed various locations to create recreation access management plans. Collaboration certainly is key, and we're working with the stakeholders to hear what their concerns are so we can move those forward.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that in their opinion and the opinion of other groups that recreate in that area enforcement is neither consistent nor forceful, are there plans for increased monitoring in that area?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is certainly something that we are hearing throughout the consultation. Enforcement is key. It's key that we do that now, but it's certainly something that we need to look at as we move forward. It's also about good design, ensuring that we have trails developed in appropriate places. That's part of the work that we're doing with regard to the South Saskatchewan regional plan. We're certainly also committed to ongoing education and outreach to ensure that we all have the opportunity to enjoy our beautiful backyard in the South Saskatchewan regional area.

Ms Pastoor: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that the information and data are missing for surface water quality, groundwater recharge areas, and sedimentation effects, has your ministry dedicated resources towards this research, and is there a time frame for reporting?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you. Hon. member, the draft plan also includes a surface water quality framework, that will allow us to analyze and respond to data on environmental conditions in the region. The management framework sets clear monitoring, evaluation, and reporting requirements so that we can provide the information on the status of the ambient conditions in the region.

Statement by the Speaker

Oral Question Period Rules Rules and Practices of the Assembly

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. The time for question period has elapsed. I'm going to take two minutes to address all of you and comment on the 35-second rule.

As I indicated before question period started, I would strictly enforce it today. As a result of that, we had 102 questions and answers, which is mathematically obviously possible. If you take 35 seconds for a question and 35 seconds for an answer and you use the full time, you'll get to just over 14 members that can be recognized. Again I ask the House leaders: if you want to address it, please do. Otherwise, I'll do my best to get up as many of you as possible. I was fairly strict in cutting people off today right at 35 seconds, and I will remain that way as best I can going forward. So that's the rule.

Number two, I let a number of interjections go on both sides of the House today to speed the clock along, just to illustrate the 35-second business, and that was accomplished. I won't be as generous, perhaps, tomorrow in terms of not interjecting should you persist in interjections yourselves.

A couple of comments about the process – I've received some notes – and how it works. Here's how it works. Please listen. Once you have been recognized, the clock starts. If you wish to stand there and wait for the applause to die down or you wish to finish off a conversation across the bow or whatever, that is up to you, but our rule at this table, until further notice, is that we start the clock as soon as you've been recognized.

The Clerk: When they start speaking.

The Speaker: I have here: immediately once a member has been recognized and actually starts speaking. There's a second part to that. Immediately once you've been recognized, the clock starts on your first word. Sorry. Thank you, Clerk, for helping me clarify that.

Please keep in mind to move ahead because the microphones don't pick up all of that conversation as such that's going on which is preventing you from saying your first few words. Thank you for that.

Secondly, I get a signal from someone at the table here. The five-seconds-left signal is what it's called. Five seconds left. And I do my best to give that. In the past I've been a little slow with the hand movement. I can stop doing that if you would find it helpful. It's never been done before; it's something that I've introduced to help all of you, frankly, and that might help us. I'll do my best to keep going. I'm sorry if I have to be a bit harsh in bringing it forward.

Finally, kudos also to people who didn't use a preamble today. The rule going back to '07-08 says that there will not be a preamble. The House leaders' understanding, as I understand it, is that there should not be one. That's another one for you to consider. Nonetheless, Edmonton-Manning, Calgary-East, and Sherwood Park did great work today by not consuming time with preambles, as did Calgary-Shaw and Livingstone-Macleod make a good attempt at it, and so did others. Thank you.

Also, please do not refer to members by first name or last name. You know better. Minister of Education, you certainly know that, so please keep that in mind. Secondly, do not refer to anyone's presence or absence in the Chamber. That is strictly forbidden. Frequently you might find yourself at a funeral and not be able to be here. You might find yourself with a family emergency. You might find yourself doing some urgent business or whatever it is. So please keep in mind that that knife slices both ways and that we should be respectful of the rules.

That having been said, in 20 seconds we'll commence with the continuation of private members' statements, starting with Edmonton-Strathcona.

Thank you for your kind attention.

The hon. Government House Leader before we continue?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In order that we can continue with Members' Statements and the rest of Routine, I'd ask for unanimous consent to extend the clock past 3 o'clock.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona for your member's statement.

Government Policies

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Attacking hard-working families has become the signature tactic of right-wing governments throughout North America. No matter what promises they make, Conservative governments from Ottawa to Wisconsin are determined to make life more costly for working families. They slash spending on public services, they operate in secret, they force the middle class to pay for their austerity budgets, and they put their corporate friends ahead of working families.

Mr. Speaker, this Premier promised to be different, but she's proven that she will never keep her promises to Albertans; she'll never side with the real people, who build this province; and she'll never stand up to right-wing, frankly, Wildrose policies. In fact, she'll implement them herself faster than they would.

We knew that the secrecy and cynicism of Harperism was already alive and well in the Premier's office, but now it appears that she's bringing the Tea Party to Alberta, too. In recent weeks the Premier has attacked working Albertans by undermining pensions, eliminating cost-of-living increases, and preventing CPP reform. Her government imposed a real wage cut on teachers for the next three years, and at the same time her budget eliminated more than 500 teachers and support workers from Alberta's schools.

Today, Mr. Speaker, they have raised their attacks on working people to unprecedented levels. Or we think they're about to. Today they will likely introduce legislation that we expect will attack the rights of workers to negotiate their working conditions, will give cover to the government for breaking internationally recognized human rights provisions, and will penalize Alberta workers for objecting. All of this will be done while using the oppressive Harper Conservative technique of shutting down democratic parliamentary debate, all this so they can levy a direct attack on the hard-working people of Alberta, an attack that is occurring the same week the government announced it had found an extra billion dollars in revenue.

Mr. Speaker, this Premier is showing her true colours. Her record is cynical, elitist, and regressive. It is designed to leave the majority of Albertans behind. However, ironically, I have no doubt that two years from now it is actually the Premier who will be left behind by the majority of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Aboriginal Teacher Education Program

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I want to call attention to a very important fall convocation ceremony which took place earlier in November. With 48 undergraduates crossing the stage, the aboriginal teacher education program at the University of Alberta Faculty of Education graduated its largest class ever. To add to the historical significance, this is the 10th anniversary of the program.

The aboriginal teacher education program is unique as it allows students to complete their bachelor's degree in elementary education while maintaining community, family, and cultural connections. The program's goal is to increase the number of First Nations, Métis, and Inuit teachers as well as teachers with an understanding of aboriginal issues and perspectives and histories in the classroom. Students who graduate from the program are prepared to teach responsively and meaningfully when they have aboriginal students in their classes and in aboriginal communities.

Students work in co-operation with Northern Lakes College and the Northland school division to study at 14 aboriginal and First Nation community sites. Another essential part of the program is the special relationship which exists with elders in the community. Elders are used as both mentors and also brought into the classroom as co-instructors.

Mr. Speaker, it's truly wonderful to see the success of a program that will benefit hundreds of youngsters in First Nations and aboriginal communities across Alberta. These graduates wanted to be able to share their knowledge and love of teaching with their own community, with their own children. In the coming months this goal will become a reality for these 48 educators.

Improving education and creating capacity within the aboriginal communities is important as our government continues building Alberta. The success of this program and these graduates will have a positive impact on aboriginal communities for generations to come.

On behalf of all members I want to applaud these graduates and the aboriginal teacher education program and wish them all the very best.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Small and Mid-size Energy Companies

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Mr. Speaker, junior and mid-cap energy companies are the backbone of Alberta's energy sector. I've worked in this sector for nearly three decades, even active in the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada in the early 1990s, and I've seen first-hand the contribution of these players to our economy and to innovation. And I've seen their resiliency. Most of these companies employ people with strong personal ties to this province, and this, in fact, often fuels the resiliency of their response to challenges.

Over the years these companies have adapted through many changes in how we explore for, produce, and market oil, bitumen, gas, and liquids. Right now, though, several of these companies face some serious challenges, including accessing capital and liquidity. To understand these situations for junior and mid-cap players and their choices, I've met one by one with over 70 senior decision-makers within these companies.

These corporate leaders don't want to be rescued by government – that attitude doesn't align with their entrepreneurial spirit – and there is wide recognition that there is no simple fix for the broad macroeconomic situation. But they do have ideas about how to weather the present challenges by strengthening their voice by building the capacity of the Explorers and Producers Association of Canada led by Gary Leach, a constituent of mine; by asking the new Energy Regulator to make sure that its regulatory approach to junior and mid-cap companies is more in tune with their operational timelines and decision-making processes, that it's competitive; by asking the Finance minister to work with his federal counterparts to modernize tax and investment rules; by thinking about how new markets can be accessed not just by the majors but by the smaller players, too; and by recognizing the role these companies play in moving energy research and innovation to commercialization.

Mr. Speaker, these ideas merit our full attention. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Highway 28

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Northeast Alberta is a fast-growing energy development area. Increase in industrial activity is a benefit and a challenge. One of the main challenges is the increased traffic and large loads travelling on highway 28.

In this House we have heard how highway 63 is critical to the development of Fort McMurray and, with its growth, the economic development of the province. Just as highway 63 is crucial to the development of the Fort McMurray oil sands area, highway 28 is critical to the development of the Cold Lake oil sands area. Future output in my area is expected to reach 1 million barrels of oil a day, and as Bonnyville-Cold Lake begins to grow and industry expands, highway traffic will only get worse. Large-equipment modules move along this highway, and with no passing lanes for the 200-kilometre stretch from Gibbons to Bonnyville, traffic is becoming more and more dangerous on this small two-lane highway.

Mr. Speaker, the leaders in my constituency and I have been asking the province to improve highway 28 for many years. These changes would start by adding passing lanes, and we hope the province will eventually twin the thoroughfare. I am happy to see my municipal leaders working together to establish a long-term framework for the future infrastructure needs of my constituency. Working together is crucial as oil sands production increases and the population of our area grows.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my constituents I will continue to voice their concerns and work to get this highway up to speed. Projects such as highway 28 are important improvements for this province to continue to be a great place to live, work, and raise a family.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Brooke Aubuchon

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For over a year now the family of little Brooke Aubuchon has been pleading with this government and this Health minister to help keep their five-year-old daughter alive. Right now little Brooke is slowly dying from Batten disease, an extremely rare inherited disorder of the nervous system, which took the life of her brother Alex in 2011.

Despite this bleak outlook, there is a lot of hope. Brooke qualified for a revolutionary new treatment at the Weill medical college in New York that may save her life. In February she received surgery, and though the medical costs were covered, her expenses were not. The people of Innisfail, touched by the story of little Brooke, have rallied their big hearts and made generous donations to cover the initial costs of this trip. But more trips and more medical necessities and expenses await. The treatment is not covered by Alberta health insurance and they cannot be considered by the committee for exceptional drug treatment. The out-of-country medical expense committee has refused assistance because they do not qualify.

We've written letters to the Health minister, to the deputy minister, and to Alberta Health Services, and what we've received back so far are letters directing us back to these same committees. The Aubuchons are a normal Alberta family living from paycheck to paycheck. Tragically, they're now facing heart-wrenching decisions about how to keep Brooke alive. Like any parent, they will do whatever they can to try and save Brooke's life. They are joined by many Albertans in asking why a province as rich as ours is leaving little Brooke behind.

Mr. Speaker, I could go through a long list of areas where money is spent by this government recklessly. The Auditor General's report showed just this year AHS spending of over $100 million in expenses in just 17 months. The wasteful trip to the London Olympics cost taxpayers an additional $1 million. But most disturbing is the practice at AHS of paying for executives to get private treatments in the U.S., fully covered by the taxpayer. That's not right.

Mr. Speaker, there's no question that we live in a great province. Albertans are kind, caring, and compassionate. We can and we must do better for children like Brooke, who have rare diseases that really just don't fit inside the box. These children deserve a chance at life. That's what we're asking for.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition or someone on behalf of.

Ms Notley: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood to give notice pursuant to section 15(2) of the Standing Orders that at the appropriate time I will be rising on a point of privilege regarding the obstruction of the work of this Assembly and also the independent Members' Services Committee by actions of the Premier, her office, and the Public Affairs Bureau.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you. We have the notice being read.

3:00

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Securities Amendment Act, 2013

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to rise to introduce Bill 42, the Securities Amendment Act, 2013.

Bill 42 will further modernize, harmonize, and streamline Alberta's securities laws as part of the ongoing collaborative reform of Canada's securities regulation. Bill 42 focuses on over-the-counter derivatives and the harmonization of derivatives regulation in Canada. As members of this House may recall, the lack of transparency within this type of investment was cited as a contributing factor in the global financial crisis in 2008.

Bill 42 creates a statutory framework for the regulation of over-the-counter derivatives, providing the Alberta Securities Commission with the authority to make rules such as mandating central clearing, trade reporting, electronic trading, and seldom-seen other conduct requirements for those trading in derivatives. Provincial and territorial regulators will be encouraged to agree on a harmonized approach to regulating derivatives capable of being adopted across Canada. Bill 42 is an important step in that direction.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 42 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Bill 45*Public Sector Services Continuation Act

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce a bill being Bill 45, the Public Sector Services Continuation Act.

Mr. Speaker, the work of Alberta's public-sector employees supports healthy and safe communities, something that our employees and all Albertans value. They take care of vulnerable Albertans. They protect our communities. Illegal strikes put Albertans at risk. This bill will help to deter such strikes and hold unions and individuals who break the law accountable for their actions.

It will also ensure that taxpayers are protected from the costs of an illegal strike. The recent illegal AUPE strike by corrections officers meant that over 400 RCMP officers had to be pulled from communities to ensure our prisons remained secure, costing millions of dollars. We learned that the deterrents and the sanctions that were in place are out of date and ineffective. This bill will ensure the stability of vital public-sector services that keep our communities healthy and safe.

I would ask for support for Bill 45 from the House in first reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 45 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Bill 46*Public Service Salary Restraint Act

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce Bill 46, the Public Service Salary Restraint Act.

This legislation supports government's commitment to living within its means by ensuring sustainability in the compensation of the Alberta public service. The collective agreement between the Alberta government and the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees expired on March 31, 2013. As you know, the union represents more than 21,000 Alberta government employees.

Collective bargaining and mediation efforts have not been successful in reaching a new agreement that would have been in the interest of Albertans. Bill 46 will provide a framework within which the government of Alberta can negotiate with the AUPE towards a new four-year agreement that is reasonable for employees and reflects our accountability as government to taxpayers.

With this bill, Mr. Speaker, we are asking AUPE to come back to the table with us. We still want to attract the best and the brightest to our public service, and we will uphold Alberta's market edge through competitive pay and benefits for our workforce, but we are committed to doing it in a way that ensures our overall growth rate for salaries is sustainable. These are difficult decisions that need to be made.

With that, I move first reading of the Public Service Salary Restraint Act. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 46 read a first time]

Mr. Saskiw: Point of clarification, Mr. Speaker. We can't really vote on stuff if we don't have a copy of it.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, I'm sorry. There's quite a bit of shouting going on outside, and I've not heard what you wanted clarification on.

Mr. Saskiw: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, it's been, I think, procedure in this House that as soon as a bill is introduced, we have a copy of it. We still don't have a copy, and it's time sensitive because they're ramming this bill through potentially this evening.

The Speaker: I believe the bill is being circulated now, is it not? Hon. members, it should be now being circulated unless there is some holdup or some disruption.

In any event, first reading gives you all an opportunity to move forward and review it before second reading arises, and that will happen.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health, followed by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this afternoon and table the appropriate number of copies of the Health Quality Council of Alberta 2012-2013 annual report.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to rise to table five copies of the Alberta Human Rights Commission annual report from April 1, 2012, to March 31, 2013. One of the really encouraging signs we see in this report is a three-year consecutive decline in the number of human rights complaints. I'm hoping, as we from all parties in this Chamber are, that this means a more inclusive and accepting province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood or someone on behalf of.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of, actually, the Member for Edmonton-Calder, who has two tablings.

The first tabling is copies of the report entitled Filling the Gaps: Why Providing Health Care to Refugees Makes Sense for Alberta. This report was released in October by the Alberta Refugee Care Coalition. The report clearly lays out why it would be in the best interests of all Albertans for the provincial government to fill the gap created by the Harper government's cuts to refugee health care. The coalition is hopeful that this PC government will follow the lead of other provinces such as Manitoba and Quebec by stepping up to cover the medical needs of refugees and refugee claimants.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Calder I'm tabling the appropriate number of copies of The Building Alberta Plan: 2013 Edition. This document, particularly page 6, is in relation to the point of privilege that will be raised by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Horne, Minister of Health, pursuant to the Health Professions Act the Alberta College and Association of Chiropractors 2012-13 annual report.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I don't have any points of order that were raised.

There was one point of clarification here a few moments ago, and we're dealing with that, hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. Thank you.

Let's move on, then. There is a point of privilege to be raised here. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona

Privilege

Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 15 I rise to raise a point of privilege based primarily on the grounds that the independence and the ability to function of both the Members' Services Committee and also this Assembly have been obstructed by actions taken by the Premier and most recently by the, I'm going to say – well, I don't know. I guess I'm going to have to go with the Minister of Human Services because I'm not exactly sure who specifically took the action.

Please allow me to go over the facts of this case. I will begin briefly by talking about timeliness, then I'll go over the facts, and then I will talk about my arguments with respect to where the breach has occurred. I do believe that we have met the conditions of timeliness in that the matter in question relates to a brochure which was mailed out, presumably by the Public Affairs Bureau, and began arriving in the mailboxes of a number of Albertans yesterday. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood first received his copy of this government-funded PC orange and blue leaflet in his mailbox yesterday. This is, therefore, the first opportunity to raise this matter in the Assembly.

The other action which occurred, frankly, just occurred, Mr. Speaker, in that it is now as far as I can tell 3:10, and I have not yet received a copy of either Bill 45 or Bill 46, yet I am advised that the media have received a briefing on this bill as of 2:45, which also amounts to a breach of the privilege of the members of this Assembly.

Let me carry on with my facts. On Monday, November 25, the government, through the Attorney General on behalf of the government, told media outlets that they would seek an MLA wage freeze at the Members' Services Committee, as is their right, at a meeting on Friday, November 29. On Tuesday, November 26, the government gave oral notice to introduce Bill 46, the Public Service Salary Restraint Act, presumably a bill that freezes public service pay or will orchestrate that outcome.

However, yesterday Albertans began receiving a mail-out from the government of Alberta, presumably mailed last week, which reads at page 6:

Public sector employees, including teachers, doctors and government managers – as well as MLAs – are leading by example with multi-year wage freezes because it's the responsible thing to do for our province.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that in making this statement to the public as a fait accompli, the Premier is breaching the privilege of this Assembly in two ways. The statement about the public wage freeze appears to anticipate the passing of Bill 46, a bill that, as I have just noted, we have not even seen. It also anticipates a decision of the Members' Services Committee, which has not yet considered the matter.

Erskine May describes privilege as “the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively . . . and by Members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions.” You see that at page 75. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, at the commencement of the First Session of each Legislature a number of committees are established, including the Members' Services Committee as per Standing Order 52(2). This committee is empowered under the Legislative Assembly Act to make on its own important decisions on issues such as the amount MLAs are paid. I would refer you in particular to sections 33(1), 36, and 39 of the act.

Now, notwithstanding this particular member's personal incredulity with respect to the following issue, the precedent in this House has been to recognize a so-called tradition of this Legislature, which is to assume that committees are to be treated as though they are populated by private members who toil on these committees on behalf of the Legislature as a whole. Accordingly, the Members' Services Committee is often described as an “independent committee of the Legislative Assembly.” I would refer you to the Speaker's ruling on April 17, 2007. As such, it is understood that members are free to consult with anyone, including their fellow caucus members, but are also free from partisanship or influence from Executive Council. The principle and general understanding that these committees are independent has been established by numerous rulings made by the Speaker of the Alberta Legislature as well, quite frankly, as statements to this effect by various Premiers and cabinet ministers.

Now, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood raised a point of privilege based on a similar sort of issue in February of this year after the Premier tweeted that MLAs were leading by example by freezing their wages before the decision had been made at the Members' Services Committee. At that time, I believe, the member raised his point of privilege in the Members' Services Committee. At that time, Mr. Speaker, you were chairing the committee, and you said:

The chair's role is to determine whether or not the issue that's been raised as a point of privilege touches on privilege. I have determined that it does. Now it's up to the committee to decide what it wants to do about that.

So we have a fairly clear precedent where the government anticipating a decision of the Members' Services Committee amounts to a question of privilege.

In terms of other precedents there are numerous examples whereby the Speaker has ruled that the proceedings of the committee cannot be directed or represented by the government. One example of this was May 14, 1992, when the Speaker ruled out of order a question posed by Member Ray Martin pertaining to whether or not the Premier would agree to direct the proceedings of the Members' Services Committee in a certain direction. In his ruling the Speaker at that time stated:

The government cannot answer on behalf of the whole committee . . . the government certainly cannot direct what happens to all the committee.

That's in Hansard, May 14, 1992.

Interestingly, Mr. Speaker, members of Executive Council in this House have also relied heavily on this principle. On October 23, 2012, the Premier described in detail how she understands that it is not her place to direct the proceedings of the Members' Services Committee. With reference to that issue she stated in Hansard on October 23, 2012:

My understanding is that the work of that committee was to review the recommendations of the Major report. I understand that that's what they did, and I don't understand that it's my role to direct the members of the committee to do anything.

She went on to say:

Mr. Speaker, as you have so rightly said . . . this is not a committee of the government. This is a committee of the Legislature that at some point will make a decision that we as MLAs will consider . . . That's why we have a Members' Services Committee. It is the job of MLAs, not the government.

Interestingly, on October 31, 2012, the Minister of Human Services, speaking on the issue of MLA pay, said:

There is not a government policy with respect to MLA pay. That's the purview of the members, and that's a debate that's held at the Members' Services Committee.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I wonder if you could just focus in a little bit more on the matter of urgency rather than all of these examples. I know you're providing the best you can.

Ms Notley: It's a point of privilege here, Mr. Speaker. I don't believe there's a matter of urgency to be discussed. There's an issue of timing.

The Speaker: Yes. I thought you were talking about urgency a little earlier.

Ms Notley: No, I wasn't.

The Speaker: I may have misheard you.

Ms Notley: Timeliness is one of the issues in terms of when I raise it.

The Speaker: Understood. Please carry on.

Ms Notley: So that's why I spoke to timeliness, but urgency is not the issue. The issue is: what are the privileges of this House and have the actions of the Premier breached those privileges? Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Moving on to the additional issue, just to briefly review the issue of what else constitutes privilege and contempt, Erskine May says at page 128:

Generally speaking, any act or omission which obstructs or impedes either House of Parliament in the performance of its functions, or which obstructs or impedes any Member or officer of such House in the discharge of his duty, or which has a tendency, directly or indirectly, to produce such results, may be treated as a contempt even though there is no precedent of the offence.

Then in Maingot, second edition, at page 225, the author says:

3. Contempt is more aptly described as an offence against the authority or dignity of the House.
4. While privilege may be codified, contempt may not, because new forms of [contempt] are constantly being devised and Parliament must be able to invoke its . . . jurisdiction to protect itself against these new forms.

Mr. Speaker, there are two separate issues, as I stated. The first – well, no. Now there are actually three separate issues, and I chose to raise it because the first possible opportunity was about 30 seconds after it arose. The first issue is the brochure sent out by the Premier, a brochure which anticipates, clearly, a decision of the Members' Services Committee which has not yet been made. That's the bottom line.

Just to be clear, the brochure refers to a multiyear wage freeze for MLAs. I am fully aware that the Members' Services Committee has already agreed to a one-year wage freeze, and quite honestly it may well be the case that our caucus would support a wage freeze although certainly not as a means of justifying the outrageous conduct of this government towards its employees. However, the fact of the matter is that the committee has so far only deliberated upon a one-year wage freeze. So by talking about a multiyear wage freeze, it is clear that this brochure is anticipating a decision of the Members' Services Committee which has not yet been made, and that, Mr. Speaker, is a clear breach of privilege.

The second point, Mr. Speaker, is that the brochure also refers to a wage freeze for public-sector employees. Now, it goes on to say: including teachers and managers. Yes, no question, those things have happened already. But by saying "public sector employees," I would suggest that it is also anticipating the passing of Bill 46, and in so doing, it too is breaching the privilege of this Legislature.

You, Mr. Speaker, turned your attention to this issue on the basis of a point of privilege raised by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills when the government engaged in promotional activities around the passing of the bill relating to transportation. I can't remember the bill number offhand, but I'm sure that you will recall it. At that time you found that they had narrowly missed a breach of privileges of the members of this Assembly by including on the billboards the phrase "if passed." I would suggest that that is not the situation in this case because, needless to say, the brochure, which has quite irresponsibly and in an entirely inappropriate and overly political way – but nonetheless that's not in your purview – been sent out to Albertans' households, says simply that public-sector employees will take a wage freeze, and the only way that can happen is through the passing of Bill 46.

The final point, Mr. Speaker, is this. And there has been a precedent on this issue, which I do not have at my fingertips because I wasn't aware it was going to happen until it happened. My understanding is that the media were invited to a technical, detailed briefing on the bill, which would have given them . . .

Mr. Mason: It's on now.

Ms Notley: It's on now, but it commenced at 2:45.

I made note of when I as a member of this Assembly received these bills, Mr. Speaker, and it was at 3:15. That is a profound breach of my privilege as a member of this Assembly. We should not be receiving bills and legislation after any member of the public but certainly not after the media has been provided access to it. There is precedent on that.

Based on all three of those points I would ask you to find that there has been a prima facie case made of breach of privilege against both the Premier and the Minister of Human Services.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona has laid out the precedents and the case for this, I think, very well, so I will be brief. You know, sometimes when we're in this Legislature, one has to ask, certainly in the last little while: why do we even bother sometimes going through the facade of having a Legislative Assembly? I hope that the purpose of the Legislative Assembly is that the elected members of this Assembly, elected by the people of Alberta, can come together, have bills introduced, debate those bills, vote on those bills. The bills are passed, decisions are made, we move forward, whether the minority is not happy with it, the majority is happy with it, whatever.

We have these processes, and you have talked a lot – and rightfully so – about the traditions of this House and the importance of this House and the standing of this House and how it's important to respect those traditions and those rules and practices and so forth. I don't understand how it is anything but a point of privilege and really just contempt of the House and the proceedings here to announce in a government promotional piece a wage freeze for members of the Members' Services Committee, which you chair, Mr. Speaker. And I'm definitely not putting words in your mouth, but I highly doubt that you were informed of this before the literature piece went out, as chair of the committee. Yet that gets announced as a fait accompli without even informing the members on the committee, certainly not the opposition members, likely not the Speaker, who is the chair of the committee. I mean, it is so clumsy and ridiculous and disrespectful of this House that it just makes you wonder.

The second point with regard to the wage freeze. Again, we just had this bill introduced in the House today. I first heard about it – I didn't know the details – last night when oral notice was given by the Government House Leader. And here it is in a document which was prepared and mailed out and sent to homes long before any of us even got oral notice on this. I've talked with several colleagues on the PC side. They didn't even know this was coming. But the Public Affairs Bureau knew it was coming, and they used hundreds of thousands of dollars to put this piece out in advance of the bill even being brought here or anyone even knowing anything about it.

Again, it is so utterly disrespectful of the entire process that we have here as a Legislature and of the rule of law. The rule of law states that before we declare something as law and fact, we pass a bill. We pass a law or at least introduce it in the House so that people can look at it. We don't circumvent the process and send to 39 bureaucrats at the Public Affairs Bureau the way it's going to be, while no one else knows what's going on, so that they can put their little pamphlet out. We won't even get into how much of a waste of taxpayer money that is – separate issue – but it's so disrespectful.

Then the third point, which my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona makes very clear – and it is accurate – is that there was a media briefing today starting at roughly 2:45. I know I was getting e-mails and texts about it. So the media gets briefed on this bill before we as members even get to look at it at 3:15. I have heard you, Mr. Speaker, and your predecessor warn the government kindly but, I would say, earnestly about this type of behaviour in the past. I have heard it at least three or four times since being in this Chamber, once from you, several times from Speaker Kowalski when he was Speaker. And if there are no consequences, this type of thing will continue to occur. They will continue to flout this process. They will continue to make announcements without going through the proper procedure.

It's sloppy, and it's wrong, and it's disrespectful of what we do in this House. I would ask you to find a point of privilege and find a remedy for it. I don't know what that remedy is, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, an apology is probably not good enough, but there's got to be some remedy here that you can come up with to stop this sort of stuff from happening because it's happening all the time, and frankly it's getting a little out of hand.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Anyone else? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am rising in support of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, who has brought forward the point of privilege on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, the leader of the ND opposition. I'm going to take a different tack on this because I'm going to call it like I see it. I believe that, for members on committees, whatever kind of legislative committees they are, it should not be so – or it must not be so – that they act as partisan groups. I understand that. I've read all the citations that have been given. I've read a number of background Hansard discussions on this. Everyone agrees or seems to agree that in fact these committees should not be influenced in a partisan way. It should not be so, must not be so, but frankly current practices put the lie to that. It's happening. It's exactly what's going on. It's not supposed to, it shouldn't – I absolutely agree – but it is going on, and there is no question in my mind.

Was there any thought given? I can't speak for the Premier or her communications team or anybody else about what they were thinking when they wrote this. Did they care that they were including all MLAs, or were they just saying that it was government MLAs that made this decision? Hmm. Hard to tell.

I've looked at the brochure, Mr. Speaker, and one of the points that you had made in ruling on an earlier and very similar point of privilege, that was raised in the context of the Members' Services Committee – let me give you the starting one there. That's appearing at MS-208, February 27, 2013, and the conversation goes on on that particular thing to MS-216.

The point that the chair of the committee, who's also the Speaker, made at the time was that the tweet that had been made by the Premier in advance of the decision made by the Members' Services Committee was that she was directly speaking about what the PC members on the committee were going to do. That seemed to be the way the point of privilege was addressed, that she hadn't meant everyone, she hadn't meant she was influencing anyone, but she was proud of her PC MLAs for voting that way because she knew this in advance. Of course, they did vote in that way.

When I look in this brochure, that has now gone out – boy, I wonder how much that was – the paragraph does say:

Public sector employees, including teachers, doctors, and government managers – as well as MLAs – are leading by example with multi-year wage freezes because it's the responsible thing to do for our province.

Now, interestingly, in reading all of the pronouns that are included in this document, I'm unclear about whether the "we" she uses is the collective "we" of the Assembly, whether it's the "we" of the government, whether it's the "we" of families and communities, which is also talked about here, or the "we" of resources or the "we" and "they" of apprenticeship or communities. So it's very difficult for me to be able to read this and go: nope; I know she's talking about the Tory MLAs that have voted for this particular thing to happen. I can't tell that, so I have to take it at face value, and it says "MLAs."

So we've got a document that is circulating in the public prior to this Assembly making a decision, prior to our committee of the Assembly making a decision, in which the Premier is saying that a decision has been made a certain way. I think it's pretty obvious that the influence is there. It's meant to be there. It is certainly happening on a regular basis in other committees I'm sitting on or in the votes that I have perused. I think it is commonplace for the government members to be voting as a bloc, very common, and by that, I mean almost every time. Yes, indeed, you can find examples where one or two members of a government caucus have voted differently and not with their colleagues on some of these committees, but for the most part in policy field committees, in legislative special select committees, and in standing committees we are watching government MLAs vote as a bloc.

Do I have any question about whether the Premier was assuming that her majority of members on a committee were going to be successful in putting through both the legislation and the motion regarding freezing MLA pay as part of that committee? No question in my mind. I think it's pretty clear. Although we're supposed to be nonpartisan, that has not been the case in my experience in these committees, in this Assembly for many, many, many years, Mr. Speaker. Although it would be nice and it should be and it could be and it must be, it's not. I think what we've got here is bloc voting that is undermining the importance of this Assembly. It is undermining the importance of the concept of a Legislative Assembly in Alberta. It's certainly undermining the work of all the MLAs.

Do I support this privilege and think it's based on something reasonable? Yes, I do. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope that you will allow me the time to address the issues of the three members as I don't anticipate there will be any from this side of the House.

There are a number of facts that need to be addressed relevant to this point of privilege. There are really two allegations that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is making, one being that this brochure, The Building Alberta Plan, which is or will be arriving soon in all Albertans' mailboxes – and I highly encourage them, by the way, to read it – in any way pre-empts the decision either of this House or the decision of the Members' Services Committee. The other allegation the member makes is relevant to the two bills that have been introduced earlier today by both the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Human Services, that somehow media was privileged to have either copies of the bill or facts prior to their being introduced in this House. So let me to speak to them in that order.

First, Mr. Speaker, when one takes this brochure – and Albertans will soon be able to verify it for themselves – if you turn to page 6, I believe that is the part that the member is referring to. I can't help it, Mr. Speaker, but I have to read this into the record because that's exactly what she talks about. It says:

Public sector employees, including teachers, doctors, and government managers – as well as MLAs – are leading by example with multi-year wage freezes because it's the responsible thing to do for our province.

Well, Mr. Speaker, you know as well as all of us in this House that teachers have accepted a multiyear deal with three zeros up front. You know that doctors have accepted a multiyear deal with zeros up front, and you know that our salaries as MLAs have been frozen – you chair the Members' Services Committee – for some time already. I'm not sure how many years it is, but it's multiple years. So it's very factual, relevant to what has already transpired, not anticipatory of what will happen in the future.

It also says:

Teachers supported a four-year agreement that provides labour stability and includes three years of zero wage increases.

That's the past.

It also says:

Alberta signed a seven-year contract with doctors, including three years of pay freezes, while ensuring physicians remain the highest-paid in Canada.

That has already happened, Mr. Speaker.

Then it goes on:

Government managers' wages were frozen for three years and over that same time we will reduce the number of public sector managers by 10 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, that has already happened, and the reductions are currently happening.

Lastly,

MLAs froze their pay after taking an eight per cent pay cut in 2012.

Mr. Speaker, that has already happened.

So this brochure is a report card of what has already occurred. It doesn't anticipate anything that shall be happening in the future. It reports to Albertans what has already happened. Everything in this brochure, Mr. Speaker, is reporting back to Albertans on what has occurred relevant to salaries and wages and collective bargaining with those who chose to lead by example in our province to meet our financial targets as a province and allow us to deliver the benefits that we have undertaken. That takes care of this brochure. It is not anticipatory in any way. It simply reports facts of the past.

Second, Mr. Speaker, yes, I anticipate that there will be a Members' Services Committee meeting – I don't sit on the committee – I believe towards the end of this week. A number of our members of the Legislature have raised the issue that the current freeze on MLAs' pay I believe is ending at the end of this fiscal year, and if no decision is made in the future, that freeze will thaw and MLAs automatically would become eligible for some kind of an indexed increase. Is it CPI? I'm not sure what indices that are being used would apply.

Now, because of the fact, as outlined in this brochure, that we have teachers that took the courageous step and decided to do what's right for the province, for the kids, and because we have doctors and others who chose to do that, MLAs from our caucus, the PC caucus, have been very vocal to me, to the Premier, and among each other saying that what's right for the goose has to be right for the gander, and they have chosen to put forward a motion in the Members' Services Committee imploring upon the opposition and asking the opposition to co-operate, that in line with those collective bargaining agreements MLAs' salaries should also be frozen for the next years.

Now, I believe that a motion has been tabled with you, Mr. Speaker, by one of the members of the Members' Services Committee to that effect. Whenever your meeting is, you will be debating that issue. It's like any other motion. As a matter of fact, this will not be the first motion that will be debated because there is a Wildrose motion asking for an $8,000 pay increase for the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. I believe you have to deal with that motion first and make sure that he doesn't get the increase of $8,000, and then you will be able to address the motion of the PC member who will be introducing it.

Mr. Speaker, if they vote unanimously – I certainly hope they will vote unanimously because this is something that we believe in. We believe that if public-sector employees are going to take those steps, we as legislators in this province should lead by example. I hope that the opposition, all three parties of the opposition, will support our member. There's nothing anticipatory about it. Due process will take place, but I certainly hope that there will be a unanimous vote in that committee although the leader of the Liberal opposition has the tendency, I understand, of walking out of those votes. Maybe unanimous minus one.

That should rest that issue, Mr. Speaker. There's no point of privilege. A debate will take place. I anticipate that our members and even members of the opposition will support that motion. The brochure only speaks to what has already happened, what has transpired.

Now, the second question, Mr. Speaker, is the matter of the media, whether the media has been privy to the legislation and a review of the legislation prior to any member of this House and whether our privilege as members of this House to have the primacy was in any way jeopardized. Well, the answer, clearly, is that it was not. What has happened is that the members sponsoring the bills, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Human Services, both called for a press conference at 2:45. It is very difficult to predict exactly at what time we will table the motion in this House because of, as you know, question period, members' statements, filing of petitions. The time is very flexible.

What has actually transpired, Mr. Speaker – and before the member makes such a serious allegation, she should get her facts straight – is that even though the press conference was called for 2:45 and media, I imagine, was available, anticipating to be briefed on the bills at 2:45, no briefing took place until 3:10. That's 15:10. Why? Let me tell you why. Both of these ministers respect the privilege of the House, and they would never brief the media on a piece of legislation prior to the members of this House having the ability to receive the bill. So media were in the press gallery, I imagine, but they all anticipated and waited for the tabling of the bill in this Chamber for the press briefing to begin.

Again, Mr. Speaker, no privilege has been breached in this case either.

I rest my case. Thank you.

The Speaker: Is there anyone else? I've already recognized you once, Edmonton-Strathcona. I'm just asking if there's anyone else. No? Did you have a brief supplementary?

Ms Notley: I'm pretty sure I get an opportunity to close debate and respond to the minister.

The Speaker: Actually, this process doesn't work quite that way. You get one chance to state your case, but if you have something very brief to add in, I'm not opposed to hearing it. It should be extremely brief, please.

Ms Notley: I will be very brief, Mr. Speaker. On the points made by the hon. member from the government side, we currently have in place an MLA salary freeze, which is for one year. The brochure talks about a multiyear freeze. Clearly, it's not talking about the past. That is clear on the evidence.

Secondly, the minister said that the briefing occurred at 3:10. I received my bill at 3:15. So even if the minister's information about the timing of the briefing of the press is correct – I'm double-checking – he on the face of it has indicated that the media received that briefing in advance of my receiving a copy of that bill.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, as you would know – and I won't take long at this time – points of privilege are reasonably rare, or at least they used to be, and it's because it's the most serious charge that one member can bring forward against another. The consequences can be devastating to someone. So I listened as attentively as I could, but I also will take the prerogative of the chair to review Hansard.

So many different points were raised here, and it seems that as some points got raised, new ones were brought in shortly after that, issues about whether the issue in question was a fait accompli or whether there was anticipation of a decision of the Members' Services Committee, including references to support arguments to that avail in rule books or books of precedents. Former Speakers' rulings were referenced, something to do with tweets, which I recall. In fact, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona in her first set of comments actually raised three different issues. So I'm going to take some time to review those as well. The first I saw of the brochure was when you actually referred to it, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Thank you for providing me with a copy of it. I will go through that as well.

The news conferences and the whole issue of bills being commented on before they're brought in and members having a chance to see them or not see them within a specified time frame: these are all very serious matters. Of course, Airdrie mentioned stuff to do with the wage freeze and questioned why we should even have an Assembly on some of these matters and went on with previous warnings and so on. Edmonton-Centre also noted the brochure and commented on previous rulings by this Speaker as chair of the Members' Services Committee as well as previous Speakers who also had the job of chairing the committee.

I listened intently as the Deputy Premier pointed out some of his stats and facts contained in the brochure, what I think some would consider a householder, and indicated that there was no anticipation. I'm going to review that as well.

Finally, the issue of timing, the issue of 3:10 as being of critical importance and also introduction of those bills in this House. Now, what's somewhat unique here is that a number of other members, specifically cabinet members, are implicated as being those who introduced the bills or the one bill in question. Again, I'll review Hansard just to see exactly how that read.

That having been said, I'm going to take at least one full day here, if I can, to review all of that and have my usual discussions with Parliamentary Counsel and perhaps consult with others and come back with a ruling as soon as I am able. So that matter will come forward again, likely tomorrow.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2013 (No. 2)

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister on behalf of.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Time to move on to some important business for the day. I'm pleased to rise today on behalf of the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to move second reading of Bill 36, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2013 (No. 2).

The government is requesting approximately $625 million for operational costs and $139 million for capital projects. These amounts are necessary for the government to fulfill its commitments to the southern Alberta flood relief during the current fiscal year and are exclusively for that purpose.

The supplementary supply amounts mainly relate to the following items: advances to municipalities, First Nations communities, and individuals through the disaster recovery program to support flood recovery efforts; funding to purchase properties from homeowners who wish to relocate from a floodway; capital improvements to roads, bridges, and water management infrastructure that was damaged by the flooding; emergency financial assistance to Albertans displaced by the flood; relocating, renovating, and rebuilding flood-affected homes in First Nations communities; financial support to municipalities and school boards to stabilize revenues lost because of the flooding; and the Alberta flood recovery interest rebate and loan guarantee programs, to assist rebuilding businesses, agricultural producers, and not-for-profit organizations affected by the flooding.

Mr. Speaker, the June 2013 flooding in our province is the most expensive natural disaster in Canadian history. When the floods happened, our provincial government pledged funds immediately to help Albertans in their greatest time of need. Now it is time to formalize the first part of that financial commitment, and I respectfully urge all of my colleagues in the House to support that bill for this reason.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm not exactly sure what immediate is according to this minister. Immediately nothing was going on from this provincial government. It took them a while to act. I'm glad that they've decided to act, but the fact is . . . [interjection] No. I'm serious. How many search and rescue people sat on the sides?

The reality, Mr. Speaker, is that now we have a supplementary bill, and this supplementary bill, this appropriation bill, is supposed to take into consideration a number of particular issues. We discussed this under the estimates, but here's the bill in front of us, and there's absolutely no mention of the community of Sundre in dealing with these various supplements. We went through this with the hon. minister, but we still have not gotten an explanation. This is extremely serious stuff. With the amount of money that is being allocated, whether it's under Municipal Affairs or whether it's under Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, what we find is that what we've identified as a serious issue for mitigation is not even addressed.

Now, what's interesting is that the minister would say that it would be covered under some sort of obtuse sum that was given in here. But it's not consistent with the bill because when you looked at the estimates that came forward, depending on the ministry – and I think I used Education as an example. Under Education the minister laid out exactly where some of this money was going to address particular issues. I agree with that, and that's why I use Education as an example.

The community of Sundre is experiencing a significant threat, and what we have here is a bill that is going to authorize the spending of money based on the new legislation we pass, which is going to use these flood mitigation maps, yet we don't have a definition for what is a floodway or a flood plain. We're just going to guess at this. The hon. minister says that we're going to use some scientific definition, but it doesn't say that in the legislation. It doesn't say anything in the legislation. So if it's true, I don't understand why they didn't put it in the legislation. But the reality for the community of Sundre is simply this. The flood maps that this government is saying that it's going to go by don't correlate to where the river is today. The river has moved over a mile, and it threatens that community.

One of the questions I had for the Associate Minister of Seniors was about the new investment that this government has taken in that community, authorizing millions of dollars for a new seniors' facility, and depending on whose definition we use, because we don't know whose definition we're using, that new seniors' facility could be in a floodway or it could be in a flood fringe. It just seems that if we're going to invest money in new infrastructure, that we invest it wisely and make sure that we protect it. The way it would be protected within this bill is to make sure that the money allocated for flood mitigation does what it's supposed to do, which is actually mitigate against the next possibility of a flood.

Now, the community I'm speaking about suffered a 200-year flood in 2005. Fast forward to 2010: it suffered another flood. Then it suffered another flood of a 100-year magnitude in 2012. I suspect that's somewhere pushing 300, 400 years in a five-year period. Clearly, I'm quite sick and tired of hearing of the hundred-year flood and the 200-year flood. They're happening too regularly. What we need to do is to take proper steps and make sure that the money we spend does what it's supposed to do.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs made a statement the other night that the community of Sundre has never applied for any funding, which is absolutely incorrect. They have applied for funding, and they have not yet heard. I went and double-checked that, and I ask the minister to double-check that.

What concerns me most is that we're missing an entire community in this mitigation process. It has been bypassed, and it is one of the most significantly at-risk communities in this province. It is on par with High River. It is on par with Canmore. It is on par with these other communities that are faced with the runoff from the mountains. It is backed right up into the foothills. Clearly, the history of this community alone warrants some attention. The risk for this government is simply this. This is about a huge economic loss should we lose this community, never mind the lives that would be affected and the possible tragedies that could be avoided if we do what we're supposed to do.

Clearly, you know, we want to pass this bill. Clearly, we want to mitigate – nobody's arguing that point – but what we want to make sure is that we do address these particular issues that are so important to getting the job done right. We've failed to do that, and if we don't do that, I fear we'll be wasting more money rather than getting results. This is one of these typical money-spending bills where, when you go from department to department, it gives the indication that money is allocated specifically for certain items, which makes sense. But to find an item such as the community of Sundre totally left off of anybody's consideration and have the minister kind of go through and say, "Well, it could be here or it could be there," that's not good enough. That's not good enough.

You know, clearly, High River is addressed, Calgary is addressed – hopefully, correctly; I don't know their particular circumstances – but the community of Sundre is not even mentioned. It hasn't been mentioned. What we know is that we've lost roads, we've lost homes, we've lost community buildings, and we've lost them numerous times. We've gotten lucky to date. As the mayor said, we dodged the bullet, and we did. But with the amount of water and how fast it rose in this last flood, to dodge that bullet, to know how precarious it was, clearly states that had we had one more millimetre, one more centimetre, that town could have gone under water. All those lives could have been affected. It could have been on the same tragic level as High River. We just got lucky, but that can change this next spring.

We have a significant investment in our community, in our economy, and in lives that we have to address. This bill failed to do that, and it's unfortunate, but we still have an opportunity for the ministries to stand up and say: this is how we're going to do this. The most important point is that saying it isn't the same as putting it in and seeing where the money is actually allocated.

As I stated the other night when we first did the supplementary estimates, there have been so many studies done on the Red Deer River, never mind the Little Red Deer River, that we probably could build a dam out of the number of studies that we've had. We don't need too many more studies. What we need is an engineering plan and a plan to implement that. We need to execute that. Everybody that's been involved – and I won't even go back 20 or 30 years; I'll just go back the five or seven – knows what we need. We need berms, we need spurs, and we need some sort of water retention. We have the ability to do that, because it all backs up onto Crown land and it all backs up eventually in the mountains onto federal parkland, which is Banff. That is the Red Deer watershed. We don't have concrete data to say that logging has affected the runoff, but there's speculation and suspicion that it has.

It gives the ministry all these tools to work with to develop a flood mitigation protocol to deal with that flood plain, to deal with the river tributaries that come into the Red Deer watershed. In our case here we could actually store water, make recreational areas, and manage the system. Clearly, any time we get involved with nature, we do put ourselves into a position where nothing is singular or isolated by itself. We do one thing, and it affects a number of others. That's why we need a good engineering plan, and that's why we need to execute it. That's what should have been in this bill. It should have been stipulated, maybe not in totality but in some sense, that this is how we're going to get there. That's not there, and it is unfortunate that the community of Sundre has not been heard by these ministries. It could have happened under ESRD, it could have happened under the Ministry of Municipal Affairs, and it could have happened under Transportation.

One of the things is that compared to other communities, even though we didn't have loss of life – we were very fortunate – we had a tremendous amount of loss of roads in this last flood. Of course, these are gravel roads that are – I'm not going to say easily repairable – significantly less problematic to repair compared to paved roads, but it's infrastructure nonetheless, and it's costly nonetheless. It isn't just about the straight cost or the present value of the road. There's an economic cost that the community suffers. Our logging industry came to a halt until some of these roads were fixed. A number of other economic operations came to a halt until these roads were again passable.

In this appropriation supplementary act the ministry has had the opportunity to address a number of issues, and it failed to address what I think is one of the most important, that this is an entire community. One thing that's significant about Sundre compared to any other community is how the river has moved since the 2012 high water. That is what has threatened this community more than anything else. The river now has moved, and if we don't take the appropriate measures, the next flooding, possibly even the spring runoff or the spring rains, could put the entire community under water. It is that much under threat.

Now, that has been brought to the attention of this government by myself, by the county, and by the municipality. Again, it's unfortunate that it didn't make it into this supplementary act. It should have. It's about the efficiency of spending the money that we're going to spend, getting the biggest dollar value for every dollar spent. This is what is absolutely important when we bring out these supplementary bills.

Now, going way back to our original budget, this is also an issue that we've missed year upon year and year upon year, going back four or five years. We've not budgeted properly for a disaster. Now, this disaster is of a magnitude that we would suffer regardless. I mean, nobody can predict the magnitude of any disaster any more than they can predict the disaster, but we clearly know based on our own historical budgeting that disasters run in this province on a yearly basis at the $200 million to $300 million mark. This one, of course, jumped to $5 billion, depending on the value that the government has given us, but that value nonetheless is hopefully going to be an aberration in our historic trends, and if we get the proper results of this supplemental bill, then the idea is that we wouldn't be suffering a magnitude of $5 billion disaster due to flooding. We would have mitigated and protected the most important economic assets, which are our communities along those foothills, along those river basins that are at risk. We back into this.

I hesitate to use the word, but it is somewhat callous when we don't take the time to make sure that we are putting the money to the right spots, to the right issues when we bring these bills forward and identify them even in bullet form so we know where and how we're going to implement these flood mitigation measures. It is somewhat disappointing, but it's also irresponsible that the community of Sundre is not mentioned anywhere, how we're going to mitigate the flood, how we're going to deal with the Red Deer River basin, how we're going to deal with the Little Red Deer River basin.

The economic loss that has occurred from just 2005, 2010, 2012, and now 2013 is adding up. It's more and more each time. It's interesting to note that even though the town of Sundre dodged a bullet in the 2013 flood, it suffered no less in economic damage than in 2012 or even 2010. You can see the dollar value going up. There's an incentive here for government to actually look at this, to spend money wisely to save a community from economic damage.

One thing I want to know. Of the homes that were lost in this community, none of this money is going to buy out any of those people who lost their homes or who suffered damage. They have all been denied in the community of Sundre. The ones that applied were denied. It's interesting because the community itself and the individuals are looking at what this government is doing provincially, and they're saying: "What about us? We're over here, and we suffered too." Maybe not to the extent that one little neighbourhood in Calgary or a community like High River did, but they suffered no less when they lost their homes. That's a tragedy. They have to build or rebuild, and to rebuild, they're working with confusion in many ways, not knowing whether they're in the floodway, the flood plain, or the flood fringe. They don't know how these caveats are going to work. There's a lot of confusion out there. They didn't have the opportunity to participate in any of this DRP funding. It is tragic, and it's sad that this happened to this community. We have the ability to correct that, but it's going to take action from this government to make the correction.

What's imperative about making the correction is that here we are in November, and come March, April, May the community will be threatened again at some point in time. It will see that, and we don't want to be standing here at that time saying "what we should have done" or "had we only taken that into consideration." We know historically that the Red Deer River tributaries, that watershed, has changed significantly. Flood waters are rising faster, and they're moving quicker historically. We know that. We know that from the data from the last flood. I think it's 200 million cubic metres per second or something like that. I might have to double-check my figures. The 200 number is stuck in my head. It is huge. I think it's 2 million cubic metres per second, not 200 million. I think the record flood of 2005 was only 1,600. Again, we dodged the bullet. It was the mountains that actually helped us dodge that bullet. It was the weather, and we got lucky in that regard.

The community's been lucky now two times in a row from tragedy. We got lucky on that pipe break in the Red Deer River, and the hon. Premier knows that. She came out to the Dickson dam and looked at it. The beauty behind our luck was that it was the wind that was helping us. It kept the oil spill to one end of the lake.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to discuss the appropriations debate in second reading and go through a little bit of my learning from this exercise and, hopefully, share some of my concerns around various issues, ones that I've focused on for the last four years, primarily the fiscal health of this province going forward.

I think that if we look at the process that evolved over the summer, the devastating floods and the government muscle necessary to try and alleviate tragedy, rebuild communities, and restore a sense of public infrastructure, school systems, our First Nations reserves, and other areas which the government moved on to assist, it's something for us to consider. If we look at this process, at least from the numbers I gathered yesterday in supplementary supply as well as from the Treasury Board's briefing yesterday, this flood in total cost roughly $6 billion. Now, it is true that our federal government will pick up roughly anywhere between $2.8 billion and $3.1 billion of this tab. Insurance companies may pick up some portion of the bill, possibly up to $2 billion. Nevertheless, it looks pretty clear that this will cost at least an additional $1.1 billion on the government books.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, if anyone has been paying attention, we all know that money is tight. I wonder – this, again, is highlighted to me – whether our fiscal structure is set up to be sustainable in the long term and to actually build a real sense of permanent wealth or public good in this province, or are we just spinning our tires? Now, I can go through a little bit of history here just to highlight this. It will also save me a trip to my psychiatrist as this really does bother me and, essentially, keeps me up at night. I think people in this House should be worried about it as well.

Since 1971 we have taken in some $360 billion plus in non-renewable revenues. At the same time, we have only managed to save $16 billion. One might ask: where has the rest of the money gone? I know full well that it's probably gone to many good things: building roads, schools, hospitals and the like, and some of the good public infrastructure that has been built around this province. But at the same time, from where I'm sitting, largely it has just alleviated the need for taxpayers to contribute to the public good and the society that we live in. I pointed out that it's pretty clear to me that that's where the money has gone, a refusal to ask Albertans to pay for the services they use. Essentially, instead of doing that, we have gone down a path of simply covering over their obligation to ensure the public good and spending all the royalty wealth in one generation. If we can't see that today, well, then I don't know when we're going to see it.

Right now we're essentially at a wash, where we're going to see our heritage savings trust fund, which is around $16 billion, roughly match what our debt number is at the end of the next two years, by the time the next election comes. What that will mean to me sitting here is that despite this economic wealth that has been created, no permanent wealth has really been created. All the while in the last 40 years we've had fits and starts as to whether we've been able to fund the public good – to fund education, to fund health care, to build infrastructure projects at times when it is needed – and oftentimes this has led to a countercyclical spending of money that has been contrary to basic economics and an understanding of when government investment is needed.

Largely, the fact is that government should be trying to build infrastructure in times when the economy is slow and not necessarily prime the pump when things are running well. Because of the nature of the Alberta economy and the nature of our unstable fiscal structure, well, we just haven't been able to do that. Might I point out, just to point out clearly this anomaly that exists here in Alberta, that if we look across this great nation, we are the lowest taxed jurisdiction by a country mile? If you just compare us to Saskatchewan, the second-lowest tax jurisdiction, if we adopted their tax code lock, stock, and barrel, we would bring in $11 billion more. If we just look at that number, that's roughly the amount that we are going to spend in nonrenewable resource revenue in this calendar year, in and around there. It's no secret that we're using roughly the same amount of public services as Saskatchewan is, but how are we doing this? We're just paying it through nonrenewable resource wealth instead of asking taxpayers to contribute to the public good.

I come from a school of thought, Mr. Speaker, that more of our nonrenewable resource revenue must be saved for the future. If it's not saved for the future, it has to be put into some capacity-building enterprise that sets up Alberta for the future, a future that may not necessarily contain the oil and gas wealth that we are currently bringing in and not necessarily allow us to have the good fortune that we receive today. In my view, that is what a prudent government would do.

If we look further at how we have been so blessed here in this province in the last 40 years and go through what we have done here in our oil and gas economy, it's clear that this may be our last opportunity to do so. Let me paint a little clearer picture. In the '70s, at least the early '80s we had what is now considered a traditional oil and gas boom. Largely driven by tremendous commodity price increases in the '70s and '80s, Alberta coffers were relatively full and the like. Then we see, following about '85, '86, the world energy price dropped to around $11, $12, where we go into a famine period. We probably didn't save as much as we should have in that time period although we did do a lot better than we do now, and there was still, probably back then, a refusal by us to adopt a conservative philosophy of paying what we use through our taxes and some subsidizations there.

We go through a contraction period in between '93, '94, and '95, and then we get lucky again. We have a natural gas boom, a bonanza, where we have natural gas prices at $16 – I don't even know what the terminology is called – a gigajoule or whatever the heck it's called, and again we think we are wealthy. Okay? We essentially moved to a flat-tax system, lowered our corporate tax rates beyond any other province at the time. Again, we don't have a PST here, that every other province and most other jurisdictions throughout the world have adopted as government policy and the like.

What happens to that wealth? Well, we get to 2008, and again we're not as wealthy as we think we are. Sure enough, over the course of the last five years we look around, and nothing is left again. Nothing at all. Have we built permanent wealth or lasting institutions that will stand the test of time to be here when our oil and gas industry may not be as prevalent in our lives? In my view, no, we haven't.

Now we have what I see as our last opportunity to get it right. I don't think our traditional oil and gas industries, despite the efforts of the Member for Calgary-Varsity, are going to be as abundant as they have been in the '70s and early '80s, okay? I don't sense that our natural gas pricing may go back to where it was or whether there's even as much of it as we once had to be able to continue this out indefinitely. We have bitumen right now that can carry the day, and there's a temptation by this government to look at 2017 and say: "Oh, my God, we're going to be rich again. We don't have to worry about this fiscal structure now. We'll just hopefully get lucky, you know, and all these royalties will be coming in, and maybe a pipeline will get built,” all these good things. But, really, we’ll be kidding ourselves. We will not be building permanent wealth.

Even if that happens, 20 years could go along, and the world is going to change. Whether the world needs our bitumen or whether the world has moved on – I’m not certain which will happen – that day will come, and then the society will be in the same sputtering mode that we find ourselves in now, you know, where we have to have a thousand fewer teachers in our classrooms with 44,000 more kids, where we’re not able to build a school except under a P3 model, where we’re not allowed to go forward with revamping long-term care centres and building the infrastructure we need. We’re just delaying the inevitable and what that could look like.

This process that we’ve gone through with the floods, to bring it back to my initial point, should move everyone in this House to consider: what are we building here in Alberta? Are we prepared to deal with situations like the flood? Is our fiscal structure able to adapt to things we truly need in this society? Are we setting ourselves up to just simply play the role of the ostrich and bury our heads in the sand and say, “No, this issue doesn’t matter because we may be wealthy again sometime in 2016, 2017”? To me, I don’t think that’s good enough. I think this is the issue of our times, and I’d encourage all members of this House to really consider this. If we don’t fix it now, we may not have another opportunity to fix it when it eventually does happen again. We should get to the point where we’re building some permanent wealth in this province, some permanent capacity, and the only way to do that is through fiscal structure reform.

I’m agnostic as to how you guys want to do it, but really you’re kidding yourselves. You know, you guys advertised yourselves, in the last election anyway – you haven’t followed through on that – as . . . [Mr. Hehr’s speaking time expired]

Just before we go to 29(2)(a), I have the hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations next, then Lacombe-Ponoka, then Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by a government member, then Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, and the list goes on.

But in the meantime we have 29(2)(a). Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to ask the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo if he wishes to complete his thought.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I thank you very kindly. Then I can cancel my second appointment at the psychiatrist after this one because I get my extra time in here.

I guess, you know, what I’ve said here is that, really, it should be clear to every member of this House, and I don’t know how it is not. What we have done here has not built permanent wealth. We can see that the continued cycling of this will not allow us to go forward as a society.

I just look at what we’ve gone through these last two years here: the gutting of a postsecondary system; a thousand fewer teachers in classrooms with 44,000 kids; really, an inability of the government to do very much because we have no predictable, sustainable way to fund things, no predictable, sustainable revenue source. This is despite us having a largesse that other provinces would kill to have in terms of our nonrenewable resource revenue, okay? That is so clear to me and should be so clear to every member of this House that denying it is, to me, beyond the pale.

Again, to follow up on what I said earlier, it is the issue of our times, and if we don’t deal with it now, well, then I think we’re destined to be in this position again, with possibly not another source of nonrenewable resource revenue to go to. We’ve gone through the oil. We’ve had a good run on natural gas. This could be the last kick at the cat to get it right, and this may be the only time we get a chance to get it right. Essentially, you have had every economist in the last 25 years saying that we need to move on fiscal structure reform. Might I point out that every former Tory Finance minister I’ve talked to about this issue – Jim Dinning, Shirley McClellan, Ron Liepert, and even Ted Morton, who, by the way, doesn’t see the size and role of government in the same fashion I do – has said that we have a revenue problem? Guys, you know, we’re kidding ourselves if we actually think we’re doing something to fix Alberta with what we’re doing.

Besides, you know, look at the election platform you ran on last time. You guys should have kept every one of those promises, built some capacity in our public services, built some capacity at universities, gone to full-day kindergarten and the like, and kept every one of those promises and broken the no-tax pledge. At least, we would have fixed the problem. Now we’re just skirting around and pretending to do something when we’re not addressing the fundamental problem. Look, your leader has passed the leadership review. Great. Now it’s time to actually do something to fight for a better Alberta instead of just treading water.

You know, I have every confidence that you’ll be just as – the electorate seems to enjoy your brand very much, and they have a lot of confidence in it. Why get into power if you’re just going to sort of hang out and not fix what’s broken? It, to me, makes no sense and, in fact, is probably a waste of time and of future generations of Albertans’ time as well.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I’m fine. That’s good. We can move on.

The Speaker: Forty seconds remain under 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: I, too, would like to ask the Member for Calgary-Buffalo – and hopefully we can sustain his potential third psychiatric meeting here – about the definitive point of view that he has about energy creation in our province. In Drumheller-Stettler, Mr. Speaker, we have the potential for wind and solar and also petroleum. I’d just like to ask the member about his feelings on that.

Mr. Hehr: I could be wrong on this. I think our oil and gas sector might have 50 years left.

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I move that we adjourn debate on Bill 36.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act, 2013

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to move third reading of Bill 33, Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act, 2013.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank members on all sides of the House for their support and the vigorous discussion about this bill that we have seen in the two preceding stages. The House, I think, has also taken an important stand in its support of Bill 206, that was brought forward by the Member for Calgary-

Currie, that will deal specifically with the issue of flavoured tobacco.

Both bills, Mr. Speaker, once passed, will contribute greatly to our ability to prevent the smoking of both tobacco and tobacco-like products among children and youth. These measures have the potential to prevent thousands of lifelong smokers from beginning to smoke and, in doing so, improve the quality of life for them, improve our ability to deliver health care across the province, and, of course, do great things to support future generations of Albertans in enjoying a better health status than the generations that preceded them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand up and speak in third reading on Bill 33, the tobacco and smoking reduction act. I appreciate the comments that the Minister of Health has made in moving third reading of Bill 33. We had what I consider some, as he says, robust debate. I don't know if you'd call it robust, but we've had some good debate. The minister and I have had some good debate back and forth on Bill 33.

I just want to reiterate some of the things that I brought up in committee. I've said in this House that I'll be supporting Bill 33, as I did Bill 206, the flavoured tobacco act. I appreciate what the government is trying to do in regard to curbing smoking or at least trying to target our youth in regard to not smoking.

I want to reiterate all of the things that we're hearing from the shisha bars and the hookah establishments. We put an amendment forward in Committee of the Whole which was defeated. I can tell you that the owners and the ethnic communities that I have spoken to in regard to their concerns about having their businesses closed are watching this very, very closely. We've been in considerable conversation with them back and forth. I had asked, when the minister and I were discussing back and forth, if he would be willing to meet with them and have some discussions, and he pointed out, if I recall, I think it was section 19(f) on page 9 of the bill: "respecting the exemption of a person or a class of persons from the application." It goes on to an exemption. So we're going to wait. We're going to obviously watch this.

There are many things in this bill that need to be discussed. The minister had indicated in speaking that he thought it would be 12 to 18 months on some of the regulations. That goes to, as far as I know, the number of cigarettes or the number of cigars that could be in a package. I have mentioned how I felt about that, the times when I decided to kind of go off the wagon a little bit and, you know, buy that one cigar, and then all of a sudden now I'm getting eight, but I'm not going to do that anymore. I'm honestly not going to do that anymore because it's just bad. It's just those very weak moments in life that I think we all have, that some of us may not admit to. It's no different from chocolates, as far as I'm concerned, and I don't eat chocolate, so I guess you have to have some sorts of vices in life.

If he could at least try and work in regard to the regulations. He talked about the stakeholders, and I mentioned some of the stakeholders in regard to addiction strategies in the city and in the province, that I've talked about, that had not been consulted. I think, you know, that when you're going to eliminate some tobacco products, you really have to talk to some addiction strategists in regard to how they can help the government help people deal with addictions. I know that they have the lines that people can call and discuss that. I'm going to be watching the regulations very carefully with the minister, and maybe he can make a commitment in the House to kind of help us through the process.

I think the bill is on behalf of Albertans, and the government wants to try and do something to deal with the tobacco in this province. I had shared some concerns – I think it was in committee or maybe second reading – in regard to enforcement. I really, really would hate to see any of our enforcement agencies across this province being pulled off dealing with things that I think are far more important like organized crime and things like that. He mentioned that he'd be using some of the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission. I know that they're trying to deal with white-collar crime and money laundering, so I'm hoping that maybe they will look at adding more types of enforcement, whether it's bylaw officers or something. I'm not sure what can be done.

I appreciate the opportunity to speak in third reading and look forward to the rest of the debate.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other speakers who wish to speak on Bill 33 in third reading? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today on Bill 33, the Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act. I rise today in favour of this act, actually, because it does something that we used to try and do in the insurance industry, which I used to work in, which is risk mitigation. The sooner we address minors' smoking of tobacco, the better off society is as a whole. Society needs minors that are in Alberta now. By their not picking up the habit, we don't have to worry about them later on in the health system because there are not going to be as many problems with health forthcoming from those that failed to pick up the bad habit of smoking.

It's great to stand up here and talk about risk mitigation. It's one of my favourite subjects. I came from an industry where risk mitigation was very important. We always wanted to make sure that when we went out to look at policies, we were giving our clients the very best information on how to mitigate risk so that claims wouldn't come forward. I mean, this is the same sort of idea. When you reduce the amount of tobacco being smoked here in the province by minors, you're actually reducing the risk that they're going to end up having to use the health care system for issues that come forth from smoking like lung cancer.

That is something that is kind of near and dear to my heart. I lost a parent at a very young age due to cancer. I really would not like to have to see anybody else go through that same sort of trauma. It's hard to imagine what you feel as a young child, watching a parent suffering because of a disease like cancer. I can tell you that it was very hard on me. It was very hard on our family, albeit it wasn't the same form of cancer that can come from smoking tobacco. It wasn't lung cancer that my mother passed away from; it was another type of cancer. But, I mean, cancer is cancer. It's one of those really hard diseases to watch. It's one where you watch somebody battle with it, and it is a lifelong battle once diagnosed with it.

When we talk about the Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act, we're actually talking about reducing that potential for future generations to have to grow up without a parent, without somebody there in the household to give them a pat on the back, to let them know that they've done something good or to scold them when they need scolding. I mean, that's what our parents are there for. They set some rules and some guidelines so that we know what society demands of us and how to act and how to behave. I'm very thankful for the few years that I did get with my mother. I had 12 and a half years with her, and they were a very good 12 and a half years, and I wish they were more. You know, these things do happen, and I want to make sure that more children in our future generations don't have to see a parent struggle and fight cancer. It's hard to watch.

There is one story that I would like to share with the Legislature on the hard work of front-line staff in hospitals, that deal with these sorts of patients. When I was 12 and my mother was in the hospital and we knew that she wasn't going to survive, we went and said our goodbyes. We did everything we could to hold out hope, but in the end it happened.

Well, when I graduated, when I was 18 – little known to me, my mother actually had talked to one of the staff members at the Whitecourt hospital; she'd asked them to pass along a message, a message for the future, for me – at the first dance, the dad-daughter dance at high school grad, I had this nurse. I can't remember who she is now, but I know that she had a son graduating in my class. It was so emotional. That's the reason why I can't remember who she was. She came and dragged me out onto the dance floor, and she had the dance with me – this was a front-line nurse at the Whitecourt hospital, these front-line staff – and whispered in my ear as we were dancing that she had a message for me, a message from my mother that she was proud of me for graduating from high school. Even in the tragedy of cancer parents still will be parents, and they will be parents even if they're not here with us today.

As touching as that is, I don't want to have to see one child go through that because their parent picked up, under age, the habit of smoking tobacco. I don't want to see lung cancer be prevalent in our society. I think this bill does a lot to address youths' smoking of tobacco here in the province of Alberta, so I support this bill. There are things that I wasn't happy with in the bill, things that have to do with tradition, but – you know what? – health trumps some of that. The fact that we might prevent a few families from being separated because of cancer – we still need to support this. We need to support it the way it is, even without the amendments that came through. This is important for the future of our province and for the children of this province that have yet to even be born. They will come under this act.

It is a fundamental responsibility of government to make sure that we've put forward legislation that helps society move forward, that helps society not fall into trappings that may hurt them. This is important. This is important, my colleagues, and I'm glad we're here having this discussion, this discussion on tobacco reduction and the mitigation of the risk of cancer, because that's really what this is. This is a mitigation of risk for children who might pick up smoking and might develop lung cancer because of it. I hear some coughing on the other side of the aisle, and we know that's one of the symptoms. I would hope that that's a cold and not because one of the members may have smoked at one point in time. It's good to be worried about lung cancer, and it's good to make sure that future generations aren't going to be able to have tobacco products sold to them.

Now, I would hope that this government does adopt some of the same methods for selling tobacco that they use for liquor merchants here in the province. There are some interesting rules around how liquor merchants sell their product here in the province of Alberta. They must have a licence to do so. It's a $700-a-year retail licence to be able to sell alcohol. They must hire staff that are at least 18 years of age. There must be mandatory training for that staff, and it must be provided by the AGLC. That's the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission for those that are listening and don't know the acronym. Clerks must refuse to sell to anyone under the age of 18. Stores must post signs, and posters must be supplied by the AGLC. Clerks must request photo ID from anyone who appears to be under the age of 25. I think this is another great measure.

Stores that fail to comply can have their licence to sell suspended or revoked. I think this is great. This is a way to stop the sale of liquor to those under 18, and I really think this is something that needs to be thought of with tobacco. I mean, there are adults here in this province that are able to make the choice for themselves on whether or not they want to smoke, but that's because they've reached the legal age of consent, the age of 18. Under 18: you can't make that decision for yourself. You don't know, always, what the repercussions of those decisions are going to be. We want to make sure that anybody who is able to make the choice to purchase tobacco is over the age of 18, and the regulations for the liquor merchants really do address the same fundamental issue. It's to stop providing liquor to those who are under 18, and we need to do the same with tobacco sales. We need to make sure that tobacco is not sold to minors here in the province.

The AGLC enforces the liquor sales laws here in the province, but they also enforce the Tobacco Tax Act. So, you know, you do have the opportunity there to expand this out so that they do some training with these retail outlets that sell tobacco so that there is some continuity here in the province. I think that is key to the issue here, continuity in the retail outlets when it comes to tobacco sales to minors. I mean, we want to make sure that no matter where you are in the province, they have the same rules, the same regulations, that the retailers understand this and that their staff understand this. That is something that the AGLC does very well when it comes to liquor merchants. I would think that we might need to expand that to tobacco merchants.

Now, Bill 33 does require that tobacco retailers ID someone that appears to be under the age of 25, and now in this act it's going to require that signage be posted that it's illegal to sell tobacco to minors. Again, these are some of the good things that are here in the bill.

I think the members of the opposition over here did a very good job, though, of speaking about some of the cons in the act and brought forth some amendments to try to address them. I would have liked to have seen a couple of those amendments go through. Unfortunately, they did not, but it was nice to see that there was a lot of thought put into those amendments from my colleagues. They did work very hard to bring them forth in the Legislature and argued passionately to have them passed, so I would like to commend them on the very hard work that they have done on this bill as well.

We see lots of kudos over to the government, but you know, there is the other side of the Legislature here, and we work very hard on these things as well, so I think there should be some kudos all around for the hard work and the hours that are put into debating these bills. And it's nice to see that the hours are being put into debating these bills. I know there was a motion earlier today to limit debate on a couple of forthcoming bills. One was raised for first reading here in the Legislature just a couple of hours ago. I think that motion reads – I don't have it in front of me – that it's about two hours per stage, so two hours for second reading, two hours for Committee of the Whole, and two hours for third reading. You know, that's a bit of a shame. It's a shame that we're not actually going to get the time to debate that bill the way that we have this one.

The Member for Calgary-Klein said it earlier today, that we've now gotten to the "important business for the day." He's right. This is important business. This is the debating. On Bill 33 we've had a lot of time – a lot of time – to debate, but on these next two bills, that the government has introduced today, we're only going to have six hours per bill. Six hours. That's not a heck of a lot of time to address the issues in those two pieces of legislation. I just can't understand why we don't afford a little bit more time to those bills and a little bit more time to the debate here in the Legislature. I mean, clearly, this is what we're here to do. We're here to debate these bills, to make sure that these bills are in the best interests of Albertans and that all the holes have been plugged in them.

I mean, we talked about the whistle-blower legislation last fall. There were a number of holes identified in that piece of legislation, but it got rammed through. Then we had the Justice Vertes inquiry this summer, that actually addressed one of the issues that we saw in that bill.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) will apply; however, there has been a request from the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview that we revert to introductions. Is there anyone in the House who objects to reverting to introductions?

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, please go ahead.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you and to all members of the Assembly a group here today from the AUPE, working in the land titles office, who are very concerned about the possibility of this government privatizing their valued work. They're here to lend their voices and show their support to their sisters and brothers and, in addition in light of the bills that were tabled today. I'll ask them to rise as I call them by name: Jenna Budney, Susan Budney, Donna Anderson, Michelle Kapach, Miranda Mach, Joyce Hutcheson, Theresa Johnson, and Lisa Gyselinck. I'll invite all members to join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Bill 33 Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act, 2013 (continued)

The Acting Speaker: We will go back to 29(2)(a) for the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka. Is there anyone here who would like to comment or question on his presentation?

Seeing none, we'll go to the next speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, on Bill 33, third reading.

Mr. Bilous: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm just looking for the member who asked to speak ahead of me. I think he was in a rush, but that's okay.

It's my pleasure to rise and speak to third reading of Bill 33, the Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act, 2013. At the onset I would like to point out that I had the privilege of speaking on numerous occasions to Bill 206, which I recognize is a private member's bill, the bill from the Member for Calgary-Currie. I was very supportive of that bill and the intention and what it will do as I am in rising to speak in support of Bill 33.

I do want to point out a few things that need to be noted, though, Madam Speaker, some frustrations in that we're happy that this bill is here; I'm not sure if it'll go far enough. Again, I recognize hindsight is 20/20; however, I do wish that the government would have brought in legislation like this sooner. I'll point out that other jurisdictions in Canada have legislation similar to this and even tougher in some ways.

One of the things to recognize is that Alberta has still not met its targets for reducing youth smoking. The target in 2010 was 10 per cent, but the actual rate among youth 12 to 19 was 13 per cent. That was three years ago. Subsequently we've fallen further behind, Madam Speaker. We are aware, in light of this, that Alberta missed the mark on youth smoking. Again, the Alberta NDP caucus and I are pleased to see this legislation come forward in a way that works toward keeping our youth away from lifelong unhealthy addictions. I'm using that word intentionally, and I'll come back to it. As one of the other members had brought up, we're not just talking about habits, but we're talking about addictions here.

Again, we're sitting at around 13 per cent, if my numbers are fairly correct, for a teen smoking rate in the province currently. It is crucial that we work toward attacking this rate, dropping this rate. It's disappointing – I don't know if that's the right word – that the average youth who starts smoking in Alberta does so at the age of 14. In 2009 a Canada health survey testing retailers selling tobacco found that Alberta had the second-worst record among provinces in their willingness to sell tobacco products to youth. Again, I'll come back to that as far as my hope and questions that I have for the government as far as what kind of resources are going to be available to enforce the legislation that we're debating right now. Again, legislation is the first part of the equation, but the second part is how the government is going to ensure that retailers are not selling tobacco products to minors, and if they are, if the law are being enforced and the fines are being enforced, which is an important second half to the equation.

We do have some work to do in this province. Again, this is a good step in the right direction. What's interesting is that up until now, or once this bill passes through third reading and Royal Assent, Alberta is the only province without provincial legislation to curb youth access to tobacco and tobacco products. Without legislation, that really does drive to the people that are responsible for selling these products to our kids and youth.

Obviously, we know that youth can't possess tobacco under our current laws, but at the moment there's nothing to stop the people who are selling or providing them with tobacco and tobacco products. What's interesting, Madam Speaker, is that the stance this bill takes at the moment is that it shifts from addressing the problem that youth have with tobacco to the people that are selling it to them, which makes sense, again, not to try to punish the youth, who might be addicted to smoking, but to go after their access to that. I do note that there is still a fine for youth, but it's obviously much lower than the fine for a retailer or merchant or someone selling tobacco products to youth, so we're happy to see that that is the focus within this bill.

As I mentioned before, I was going to briefly touch on a couple of other jurisdictions in Canada. It's only ourselves and Quebec, by the way, that have yet to pass legislation regarding smoking in vehicles where kids and youth are present.

There are municipalities as well that I'd like to highlight, Madam Speaker, that have bylaws within their own municipal districts or boundaries that protect youth from second-hand smoke; namely, Athabasca, Leduc, and Okotoks. They've all passed bylaws, for which I applaud them, which makes us ask the question of if this government is finally catching up to other jurisdictions and other provinces. Again, that is a signal that this government is well behind the times in terms of preventing youth smoking.

As I've outlined, the concern that I have with the bill is more about what's going to be passed through in regulation as far as enforcement, as far as dollars that are going to be allocated toward not only enforcing this law but working toward having a full youth and child smoking reduction plan. Something for the members to think about as well: I'm curious to know what the commitment is on the government's behalf to, first of all, get the word out about this piece of legislation not only to retailers but also to youth. It'd be an interesting question to ask the Education minister, if this will be addressed in schools and the information passed. Again, we're looking for voluntary behavioural changes, obviously positive behavioural changes, as opposed to coming at it, especially to our youth and young people, with a heavy hand.

Now, I know that one of the other members did talk about dealing with the issue of addictions and the fact that, obviously, smoking and tobacco-related products are addictive and that for many people suddenly making smoking illegal or with tougher fines – I realize it is legal. But, let's say that for young people – coming down hard on discouraging young people from starting smoking, I think, is great, but they need to be educated and informed about laws and then changes to legislation that we make here in the House. So I hope that the government has a strategy and will commit to getting the word out and also, like I said, resourcing the enforcement of this new legislation.

I do have a question. I'm not sure, again, what consultations were done province-wide in relation to this bill. I'm also curious to know if the government explored the idea of licensing for tobacco retailers. If they did, how did that data and information stack up with this approach? How did they come to the conclusion that this is a better approach than going through licensing tobacco retailers?

In summary, Madam Speaker, again, we're happy to see legislation come forward in this direction to work toward protecting our children and our youth. There are innumerable benefits of this legislation to cutting down on the number of young people smoking in our province, and, as I said, I'll be supporting this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We now have 29(2)(a). The hon. member on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Strankman: Yes. Madam Speaker, I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. I know he has an education background and we have some different political views, but I was wondering if he could expound upon the logic of using regulation rather than education to make sure that the potential recipients of these drugs, tobacco – the legislation might not even be required.

Mr. Bilous: I thank the hon. member for the question. I definitely am a strong advocate that education should be the first path toward, I think, resolving many different issues, and smoking and addictions are some of them. I know that the issue of smoking is quite heavily addressed in the K to 6 curriculum, and obviously in junior high and high school within the health studies this is dealt with as well. I think the question is very appropriate. When we're talking about addictions, whether it's smoking, whether it's coffee, whether it's illegal drugs or alcohol, we do need – and we being not just educators but Albertans – to do a better job explaining the realities of addictive substances as far as the consequences on health, et cetera.

I think the regulations of this bill – and when I say regulations, I guess I'm using that as far as enforcing this because I think the fact that in this bill the government is targeting the retailer is a step in the right direction. I mean, at the moment it is illegal for them to sell to minors and to youth, but I think increasing the penalty is a much stronger deterrent for them to participate in those acts.

But I think the best approach for our youth and young people still is education, absolutely. You know, I can mentally see some challenges arising from this current legislation. For example, some of the youth that I've worked with in the inner city who do and did smoke while underage: slapping them with more fines actually just works out to being a much larger problem. Fines aren't paid because they're not working, they can't afford it, and they don't have parents to bail them out. The fines become warrants, the warrants become arrests, and arrests become incarceration. Now you start a cycle – right? – where then they have a record, et cetera.

Again, I do appreciate that there needs to be within this a deterrent as well, not just your health and the logic behind not wanting to start smoking but to have a financial deterrent for young people as well.

I thank the hon. member for his question and will say that, absolutely, I think education is our number one tool for changing or adapting behaviour and encouraging positive behaviour.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. There's still a minute and 20 seconds left under 29(2)(a). Other members wishing to speak? Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, 29(a)(a)?

Mr. Hehr: No.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. We'll get you on the list, then.

This is third reading of Bill 33. The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, and then we'll have the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Apologies, hon. member. I will be brief.

It is a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 33, the Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act, 2013. [interjection] Oh, but I have so much to say.

I will be supporting this bill, Madam Speaker, and I think that there are some definite positives in here. I think there are some legitimate concerns around – I guess, my only thing is the hookah bars. I think the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek brought forward an amendment that would have grandfathered those businesses. I think that's an important step. I hope that the minister in charge of this bill looks at that during the regulation phase.

When I spoke to Bill 206, I confided in this House that as a teenager I started chewing tobacco at the age of 14. I'd switched to cigarettes by the time I was 16 and proceeded to smoke for another 15 years after that. So I do appreciate the attention that is being given to tobacco reduction. As I had said earlier, I wasn't in support of Bill 206, the flavoured tobacco amendment act. This one I would be happy to support.

There are some interesting things in this bill, and the one thing that stood out to me, Madam Speaker, was the discussion about tobacco-like products. I'm still not quite sure I fully understand the reason why we're targeting tobacco-like products if they're not of the same general harm as some of the other nicotine- and tar-based products that are out there.

I do like section 11(a)(1.1): "A minor who contravenes [the] section . . . is guilty of an offence and liable to a fine of not more than $100." I think that at the time that I was a teenager, that may have put a little bit of the fear of God into me as to walking around with a pack of cigarettes or a tin of chewing tobacco, that it was illegal in the same way that alcohol or other such products were and that as a minor you would be liable for a fine. So I think that that is a positive step forward. I think it's a mistake to just simply fine the establishment who sells tobacco products. I think it's a good idea to enforce that, to regulate it, to make sure that the point-of-sale for tobacco products is more closely mandated and moderated and enforced. I think enforcement is the key word here. We've had laws in place that, you know, retailers could be fined, but they're very rarely enforced.

I think that overall this is a good piece of legislation. I'm happy to stand in support of it today, and I will be voting in favour of it upon the vote.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The other day the hon. member was speaking on Bill 206, and he had indicated that he had taken a survey of his constituents. I wonder if he did the same thing for this bill and whether or not he's had any change of heart with respect to the personal freedoms that he was speaking about so eloquently the other day.

Mr. Wilson: Well, I thank the hon. member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill for the question. I did not poll my constituents for this bill. For Bill 206 being the flavoured tobacco amendment act, Madam Chair, I did, because that one was taking a product that is currently legal, that is currently being sold to Albertans and restricting just a very narrow element of it. Quite honestly, member, the reason why I did the poll is because it was a contentious issue, one in which I didn't feel that my role here was to use my own judgment in that scenario to place my vote. So I reached out to the constituents and got their opinion on it. As elected members we're all in here because constituents trust us to exercise our judgment and to do so when we feel it necessary. They trust us with that. The reason I used a telephone poll to gauge my constituents on Bill 206 is because it wasn't quite so cut and dried as this one. I think that this is a good, positive step forward whereas I think the other one was infringing a little bit too far into personal liberties, which is what prompted me to make the calls in the first place.

Thank you for the question, though, member.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members for 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo and then Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's always an honour and a privilege to get to rise and discuss any bill in this House, and it is the same when I talk about this act.

In the main I'm supportive of this act although I do have to sort of chide the government on how long it takes for Alberta to get with the program on many of our what I find are obvious bills that are aimed at promoting public health and public good to make it down the legislative track. If you look at more progressive areas in Canada or around the world, they've had this type of legislation on the books now for a number of years. I'm always surprised at the relatively slow pace we go at it here when public health, especially youth health and keeping them away from nicotine-based products, should be part of the government's mantra.

I will point out that for a long time here in Alberta there was actually an attitude emanating from the provincial government that I found slow to move. The case in point was always the smoking in bars rule, where neighbourhoods and communities in every city and town and village and hamlet in this province had to move on making their own regulations in this respect before the provincial government took any action on this issue. It's been an ongoing problem that I think has led to not sending a strong enough message from our government that smoking has detrimental effects and that it is a cost to the public purse and that waiting to do legislation like this is not in the best interests of our society at large.

I was also surprised that to this date we took so long to get a law on smoking in cars with kids in the vehicle to just be proclaimed. In fact, we and Quebec were the last two jurisdictions to hold out on this issue. If we take seriously the government's statement that the protection of children is job one, well, this should have happened years ago. I think I asked a question on this in 2008, and I know that previous members of the Alberta Liberals had asked it, going back even further. Oftentimes I find that digging in on personal liberty issues when it affects minors is just utter stupidity. I've found that the case in a lot of issues surrounding tobacco sales and tobacco use in this province in Alberta's history.

Hopefully, this signifies that we're going to take a lot more scientific approach to legislation to see how it affects children and youth and the development of our communities going forward and we won't be so timid in how we use government legislation to protect society and children from some products out there that are not in their interest.

I do also want to point out, as hon. members before, that Alberta in a national study was found to have some of the laxest retail sales in terms of selling to youth. I believe we were the second-easiest province for minors to obtain cigarettes in this nation. Clearly, that can be eradicated through regular and rigorous enforcement, keeping an ear to the ground, finding out the establishments that are breaking the law, and ensuring that adequate fines are put in place to quell this behaviour and/or, if necessary, put those businesses out of promoting the public harm that they do.

The same instance occurs to me around our drinking and driving laws. It's great to have laws in the book that limit people's alcohol use when they're driving a car, but at the same time if you don't have enforcement, well, that really doesn't cut the mustard. I'll point out just for reference that Alberta has the fewest checkpoints per capita of any other provincial jurisdictions, and that's just a case in point as to how government legislation needs to be followed up with enforcement or else it's not very practical, proactive, or doing what is necessary to protect not only safe streets but to protect children and families.

In any event, despite the slow-moving nature of things in Alberta, I, too, will be supporting this bill. It's a step in the right direction and an idea whose time has come. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), are there any members interested in commenting or questioning?

Seeing none, we'll go to the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 33 and to indicate my support for this measure and, indeed, to indicate my support for measures that are intended to curb tobacco usage and the like.

A little bit of background, Madam Speaker. I think I've made folks aware in this House during my maiden speech that by training I'm a veterinarian, and I spent close to 30 years in private practice and over that period of time saw literally thousands and thousands of animals. One of the things that we had during training as a veterinarian was comparative medicine. Indeed, comparative medicine was interesting in terms of using a comparison, basically, between the various species that veterinarians are called upon to care for and, in fact, human medicine. I found comparative medicine really fascinating if for no other reason than that my sister is a medical doctor, and it just put me on a better footing to argue with her because she knew less about animals than I knew about human medicine. That was always kind of fun. One of the things that becomes very interesting when you're doing comparative medicine is doing direct comparisons between disease incidences between animals and humans. In fact, the study of disease patterns is known as epidemiology, and I really enjoyed epidemiology back in vet school.

One of the things that I find very interesting when I look at this bill and when I look at public health care costs – during the election campaign I talked a lot about spending more time and effort and resources on doing preventive health care. Basically, I told people that my basis for this is that as a veterinarian I knew the importance of preventive health care because that was probably what I spent 70 to 80 per cent of my time doing. I know that preventive health care in the long run pays off although sometimes it is difficult to allocate the resources to preventive health care simply because the payoff is something you might see five or 10 or 20 years in the future.

Those are investments that, especially in a tight fiscal climate, can be difficult to make, but I would suggest, Madam Speaker, that they're exactly the kind of investments that we need to make and that, in fact, Bill 33 does that. In fact, Bill 33, I would suggest, goes after some of the low-hanging fruit, if you want to call it that. One of the most positive things that we could do to reduce health care costs, reduce the incidence of disease, and reduce the incidence of premature death in our society is to reduce the use of tobacco. There is no question about that. Those statistics are well established.

Let me give you some other statistics from the perspective of a veterinary practitioner. I'll just deal with one disease. I'll just deal with lung cancer. I will tell you that lung cancer in animals is exceedingly rare. Exceedingly rare. In fact, lung cancer constitutes less than 1 per cent of all the cancers diagnosed in animals, and in 30 years of veterinary practice, Madam Speaker, I diagnosed one case of primary pulmonary adenocarcinoma in a beautiful four-year-old golden retriever named Cupido. Now, why do I remember Cupido? Well, it's because it was such a rare thing. You know, if you asked me how many ear infections in poodles I remember – I don't remember very many of them. My most recent one was on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek; nonetheless, you know, it's interesting. Those rare ones you remember.

In contrast to that in human medicine, using statistics for Alberta for 2012, there were some 16,200 new cases of cancer in Alberta in 2012 and over 6,300 cancer deaths in our province. Of that number there were 1,050 men and 1,000 women diagnosed with lung cancer, making lung cancer the number three diagnosed cancer in men and the number two diagnosed cancer in women. In terms of the deadliness of lung cancer, well, there it is unexcelled. Lung cancer was the number one cause of death by cancer for both men and women in 2012, some 810 deaths amongst men and some 730 deaths amongst women. Whereas in animals the prevalence of lung cancer in terms of all cancers is less than 1 per cent, the prevalence of cancer in humans is some 12.65 per cent. So it's well over 15 times the prevalence.

What else is interesting is that we are seeing some cancers of the respiratory tract in veterinary medicine, and in most cases those are in dogs and cats that share their home with a smoker. So, in fact, it's second-hand smoke. We make that connection. It's difficult to make a guarantee, but you certainly have to wonder when the prevalence of cancers is even related to the length of the dog's nose. Short-nosed breeds, brachiocephalic breeds – so your Boston terriers, your pugs, you know, the dogs that look like they've been chasing parked cars – tend to get the cancers of the lower respiratory tract because they don't have the same length of nasal turbinate to filter out some of the potentially carcinogenic compounds.

Long-nosed breeds like collies and German shepherds and Labrador retrievers: if they develop respiratory tract cancers, they tend to get those cancers in the nasal passage where, in fact, the nasal turbinates are doing their job in filtering and warming the air that is inhaled into the body.

So from a medical practitioner's standpoint, Madam Speaker, from someone who's interested in public health care, someone who is interested in trying to minimize the scourge of disease that we face in society today, I am very interested in doing what we can on the prevention side because as a veterinarian I know that preventative medicine is more effective than curative, acute care medicine. I know that prevention works, quite frankly, better. It's cheaper in the long run and provides better outcomes. I've seen that in practice. While some would argue that veterinary medicine is perhaps not as sophisticated as human medicine, I would argue that in some ways it's quite the opposite. In some ways veterinarians get it. Veterinarians understand the need for preventative medicine, and in fact that is what we practice, and that's whether our patients are dogs or cats or feathered or furred or two-legged or have wings or if they are, in fact, farm animals like cattle or sheep or pigs.

Madam Speaker, I'm in favour of this bill. I'm very much in favour of anything that is intended to decrease the incidence of some of the diseases that we face in our society. I think cancers and other illnesses and deaths that are due to smoking are entirely preventable, and if we can take steps to decrease the use of tobacco and to in fact increase the overall healthfulness of our society, I think that those are steps that we should as a responsible government take.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Strankman: Yes. Madam Speaker, I'd like to address the member opposite. As he well knows, I, too, have a background in agriculture, and we've had discussions to that extent. I took great interest in his analogy of comparative medicine. In the House the other day we had a member speaking to the flavoured tobacco reduction act, and she made mention of the fact that comparative analysis would be comparing it to flavoured condoms. I was wondering if the minister would speak to that in that regard, how we might make comparative reductions in alcohol based on flavouring or something to that effect.

Dr. Starke: Madam Speaker, let me just say that I'm having a really hard time determining exactly the point of the question. I used to think of myself as being a rather skilled diagnostician, but at times some things are so convoluted that – but let me say this in terms of comparative medicine, which is, I think, what my hon. colleague is driving at. In terms of comparative medicine there is only one species of animal that can be caused to drink, and that is pigs. Pigs will happily drink, and in fact pigs are used for most chronic alcohol studies by laboratories because pigs will drink alcohol.

An Hon. Member: Flavoured?

Dr. Starke: You know what? It doesn't seem to matter if it's flavoured. Pigs will drink beer.

Madam Speaker, with specific reference to this particular bill I think that animals have choices in some areas, and they don't have choices in other areas. Thankfully, one of the choices they make is that unless they live in a home with a smoker, they don't smoke. I think making that choice, whether it's voluntary or by whatever means, results in significantly lower levels of disease and respiratory disease and other problems. I mean, we won't even get into things like emphysema, other forms of respiratory disease, or heart disease, which are almost unheard of in animals in any relationship to cigarette smoke unless they share a home with a smoker.

As far as my hon. colleague's comments with regard to some other flavoured products, I think we'd best, perhaps, in the interests of time leave that question alone.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

There are two minutes left in 29(2)(a). Are there any other members interested in making comments or questions?

Seeing none, I'll go to the next speaker. The hon. Member for Little Bow, and then Innisfail-Sylvan Lake will follow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. That's quite an act to follow. It was quite interesting to hear the member actually talk about his background. I was quite impressed by how he could relate a lot of the studies back to that. Again, it's a tribute to his background and all the work he's done on things.

Earlier my colleague from Lacombe-Ponoka was talking about it, and I think it touches base quite a bit to me on why we need to make sure that the Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act should be passed and brought in. Due to having kids, five children at our house with a blended family, we worry about their health and what they get into. Like quite a few people in here probably, in my youth I remember sneaking out to go have a smoke because it was the cool thing to do. I know it seems like I could be just as pure as the white, driven snow, yet in my younger years I might have done the odd thing that was . . .

Mr. Donovan: White, driven snow.

I think one of the things in here is, you know, that minors can't be smoking in a public place. I think putting the fine in there will definitely keep the kids maybe a little more on their toes with that if they're liable for a fine not more than a hundred dollars. I think that's pretty well to the point. If nothing else, if kids don't have the hundred dollars, they're going to have to go tell mom and dad what they got caught doing, and that would probably be fairly key decision-making about what they're doing.

You know, all the speakers have talked quite a bit about what it costs the system to have, when you go to the schools and stuff like that, younger kids, worrying about them going to high school and seeing kids smoking outside and everything else. I think if there's a way to be able to do that – one of the members had talked about Okotoks having it. I believe it was Calgary-Buffalo, or maybe it was Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Bilous: Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Donovan: Beverly-Clareview – sorry – was talking about some of the towns doing some of their bylaws. Interesting. It's just whether it's enforceable, and that's one of the challenges they have there.

So I think this is a good bill. I'm in support of it just due to the health costs of what cancer has done and causes to everybody and on the preventative maintenance side. With that, I'll leave that as my support for this bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing no members interested at this time, the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's once again my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 33. I supported Bill 33 in second reading, and I support this bill as it goes forward. I also supported Bill 206, the flavoured tobacco act. There were a lot of reasons why I did that. Mostly, my constituents sent me a clear message through calls to my office and e-mails to me asking for me to support it, but also as a person who's been touched by cancer.

My father was diagnosed with throat cancer approximately 21 years ago, and I was 18 years old at the time. It resulted in a throat operation that took away essentially all of his taste buds, most of his throat, and he has breathed through a hole in his throat for the last 20 years. It also ended his career. He worked in the oil field, could no longer wear a safety mask, and at 52 years old could no longer work independently, unfortunately. Watching that process as an 18-year-old certainly made it so that I didn't want to smoke.

I also grew up in that famous household where both of my parents smoked. I love them dearly, but I lived in the blue haze, and when we got into the car, it was another blue haze. Luckily for me, I never took that avenue. I tried it once, didn't inhale. Other than that, I was fine. I'm just kidding. I never did try it. I'm all good.

My brother, though, did smoke as well. While that did not contribute to his death at all or his Huntington's disease, it was a hard habit for him to even attempt to break. You know, he got on it young as well. He started smoking when he was 16.

My mom started smoking when she was 11, as I said earlier. Back in the day I guess it might have been cool or something. I'm not really sure why it would start at 11. That's a pretty young age.

I also previously talked about, though, the fact that my 21-year-old daughter started smoking at 16, against my advice and against her grandfather's advice. It was really quite easy for her to have access to cigarettes. One of the things I am happy about is the fines in this bill here, Bill 33. I see that the fines are higher, and I also see that there's a fine for the person who is actually obtaining the cigarettes. I think there is a direct correlation to making people responsible for their actions. When you start to actually tell them that there are a cause and an effect for the things that they do, I think that's a good thing.

I'm always conscious, though, of taking away people's rights. As a Wildrosier I believe firmly that people have the right to choice, especially when it's a legal product and a legal avenue. It does always occur to me that we're doing our best to stop smoking, but we're certainly taking a lot of money from taxes on cigarettes. It's unfortunate that those tax revenues don't get assigned to some sort of cessation program. They just go into general revenue, and then the money is allotted through general revenue to the ministries to deal with it as they see fit.

The reality of it is that this government has taken a lot of money from taxes, especially on a legal product that they've put out there, that for many, many, many years they supported and endorsed. That does always cause me a bit of concern. You're telling people that they can't do something that's completely legal, and then you roll in the money that comes in and you don't really assign any of those dollars to truly helping our society stop smoking.

We do know that the rates among young teens smoking are up, and that causes great concern. If the rates among young teens are up, then they're getting the cigarettes from somewhere. They have access. If we want to talk about Bill 33, I think we could have gone a lot further in the enforcement portion of this bill. It's a good start, and I think that this government has turned a corner, but they have a long way to go still. If you're not going to enforce the rules that are currently in place, it does little to actually prevent more people starting to smoke if you're not going to enforce what we have already on the books. So there's that.

I also have to take a moment to applaud the associate minister from Vermilion-Lloydminster. I think any time anybody can weave in pets and his professional practice from . . .

An Hon. Member: He's a minister.

Mrs. Towle: Sorry. Minister of tourism. I apologize for that.

Any time that he can weave his professional practice into the discussion here and actually hit it home for us pet owners, I think that's fantastic. You know, I actually did appreciate your comments. I did not know that there was a correlation between those who chose to smoke in the home and what would happen to their pets, but I think it's an interesting dialogue to have. Many of us love our pets. Some love their pets even more than they love their children. To know that the actions you're taking in your home and in your car while you're having little Daisy or Dixie riding beside you as you're driving down the highway are actually putting them at risk – many of us are avid pet lovers.

Recently this week, unfortunately, we lost our family pet of 15 years. The minister of tourism was incredibly helpful and incredibly compassionate with some questions that I had about that process. I think it's great when he can bring that passion to the House and give everybody a starting point so that even if you're not thinking about yourself and even if you don't have kids and even if you have a different realm of what you want to relate this to, there's a direct impact on other living things that might be in your house. So I thought that was fantastic, and I appreciate him doing that.

The other thing that I want to go to is obviously the discussion about the tobaccolike products. It's always interesting to me that, you know, it's not far enough to talk about tobacco, but now we have to go to tobaccolike products. There's no clear definition of what tobaccolike really is. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek said that it was very, very interesting that the government seemed to forget about the cultural impact that tobaccolike products and the clampdown on them might have for some of our cultural communities. It's also interesting that the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek had mentioned that this government chose not to consult with those groups of people.

It would seem to me that when you're going to have an impact on people's businesses and when you're going to have an impact on maybe what they do or they don't do in their cultural situations, we probably should be opening up and having those conversations, especially when this government talks about being open and transparent and how they're going to do government differently. They had every opportunity with this bill to ensure that they did that. Why that was left out, I'm not really sure.

Also, going one step further, in second reading I asked the question of whether or not children under the age of 18 were actually allowed to sell tobacco products in the grocery store. After that I went to my own local grocers, including some urban because I thought maybe rural was different than urban, and it was interesting. Last night I was out in Edmonton, and I asked a grocer, and he said: "Yeah. There's no law. There's absolutely no law that prevents children under the age of 18. If they're working in a grocery store, there's nothing preventing them, other than the good moral conduct of our business owners, from selling cigarettes." So we're going to fine them for buying them, but they can actually sell them, and that's okay.

I would urge this government – and they're not going to, so that's just the way it is. I urged them in second reading to re-evaluate that. I don't know if there's the opportunity, if it's covered in this bill or if it's covered in a different bill, where they can make that rule stronger. It seems a bit off from what we're doing.

I agree with this government. I think that this is a good bill, and I think that everybody is trying to do the right thing. I think that none of us want young people or people who want to quit smoking to have any barriers. But if we're telling young people that they shouldn't start smoking at 18, we sure as heck shouldn't be telling them it's okay to sell the cigarettes to the people that you're asking to quit smoking. It seems a bit off from the message. It didn't get changed, and that's unfortunate. It would seem like this government has a great opportunity to amend any legislation and amend anything it needs to to make sure that that loophole is changed. So I would encourage them to do that, and I would support them if they did that.

It also seems odd that we would fine someone under the age of 18 a hundred dollars for buying cigarettes, but we don't fine them at all for selling them. The message just doesn't seem congruent to what we're trying to do here, so I would just ask them to look at that.

The other part of it is talking about prevention as a whole. I appreciated the minister of tourism's comments when he put it into the context that, you know, a pound of prevention is just an amazing thing. It actually prevents a lot of people from going to hospital. It prevents a lot of these illnesses that, as they go forward, cost our health care system a lot of money. I'm sure almost everybody in this room has been touched by somebody who's had cancer or has been touched by cancer and may or may not have smoked at some point in time in their life. That's not to say that all cancers are caused by smoking. I'm not saying that at all. What I am saying, though, is that we all know that there was a day when the majority of people smoked, and it was completely acceptable, and you could smoke wherever you wanted.

It would seem to me that the prevention portion of this Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act could have maybe been a little stronger or legislated even further to give some clear guidelines for what prevention and smoking cessation looks like. I may be wrong. Maybe it doesn't fall under this act, and that's fine. I hope the Associate Minister of Wellness will be able to bring forward some really concrete plans on what that prevention looks like for keeping our young people and people of any age from starting to smoke but also the cessation programs that go along with that.

I'm fully aware that there are many programs available through our family doctors, which is fantastic. I'm aware that our front-line staff do a fantastic job of trying to encourage everybody they come into contact with to either reduce the amount they smoke or stop it completely and for other people the education factor of not starting to smoke in the first place.

I also wonder if there is any movement by the Associate Minister of Wellness to work with the Minister of Education to have a broader program in our schools on not smoking and the hazards of smoking. I remember – it was interesting – when I was in grade 10. We had this fantastic elderly lady who came to the school, and it was powerful. I think I was in grade 10, anyway, grade 9 or grade 10. She was powerful, and little did I know that that would be my life for the next 20 years with my dad. She came to the school. She had a hole in her throat, and she had a little buzzer. She came to the school and talked to us about smoking and talked to us about throat cancer.

In the end, the primary cancer place was in her throat. It had spread to her lungs, and she was dying. She came and gave a speech to the whole Assembly. It was totally off-the-cuff, but it was incredibly moving. You had to really listen because she spoke through this little buzzer. I remember at that age, 15 or 16 years old, thinking: "Oh, man, that is terrible. I hope I never have to go through that."

Then at 18 I went through it with my dad. My dad's throat cancer is directly related to smoking. Throat cancer is one of the most curable cancers if caught early. If it's not caught early, then it has the devastating effects that we already know cancer has. But watching my dad go through that process to have this hole put in his throat was incredible. Quite frankly, you know, with five days of ICU, it's very major surgery. They had to hack out almost everything, and he was literally cut from ear to ear, and then the hole was created, then the learning process after that. You lose all your taste buds. You lose everything that you're able to do. You can't smell anymore. You can't taste anything anymore. This process becomes what you would normally do through your mouth and nose.

If you're the young person that has to watch this changeover of your dad and see that he has a stoma and watch how he has to clean it every day and watch how it has to be reopened every five or 10 years to be cared for properly, that's pretty moving. That's pretty educational. I don't know if we do that anymore in our school system. I don't know if we're allowed to do that anymore, if it terrifies children too much, or if we've gotten that politically correct. But I can tell you that that has a direct impact on what children think smoking really is. It certainly deglamorizes it. I can assure you that watching my dad or anyone clean their stoma is not a pretty thing.

I would encourage the Associate Minister of Wellness to take this bill and certainly give it all of the ability it should have. I would encourage him to create a plan that is strong and is able to really, really have enforcement and prevention at a grassroots level. It starts when they're very, very young. I think that this is a good bill. I support this bill. I share the concerns of my colleagues. I share the concerns of the colleagues on the other side of the House. I applaud this government for bringing forward a bill that I think has real teeth. It appears to be really thought out, short of a few little minor tweaks and that.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to ask my colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake just a quick question. I'd like to know a little bit more about the teeth that are in this bill. If you could please enlighten the Legislature on some of the teeth that are in this bill, I'd be most appreciative.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, hon. member. Well, I do think that there are some teeth in this bill. The one I'll go to: I think that when you start off and you fine them $100, the minors who literally are buying the cigarettes, that's going to have impact. If there's one thing I've learned, even from my 11-year-old: she treasures every penny she makes. I think our young people would, too. I think there's a direct return from a monetary penalty for our young people when they're buying something underage. Do I think the fee could have been higher? I think $100 is a good start. I think this government will have to look at that in short order and see if it should be $250. I don't know what a hundred dollars does anymore. It doesn't appear to do very much, but for a 16-year-old it might do a lot.

The other part of it is that the fines for the stores that sell to underage, if enforced – if enforced – can be upwards of tens and hundreds of thousands of dollars, and I think that that is fantastic. We should not be allowing stores to continue to sell to people who are underage. That's a fact.

When you take a look at this, under section 8 it says:

(1.2) A person who contravenes section 7.5 is guilty of an offence and liable

(a) for a first offence, to a fine of not more than $10 000, and . . .

That's a pretty hard hit, and I think it's a good one.

(b) for a 2nd or subsequent offence, to a fine of not more than $100 000.

5:50

Now, the key is enforcement. If the government is not going to enforce it and they're going to fine them a hundred bucks, well, that really doesn't matter, but if they actually use this as a tool – the business owners who have chosen to break the rules and sell to minors should be penalized for that. I don't think that the majority of business owners do that. I think most of our business owners are fantastic people, and they're just trying to make a living. I think they follow the rules of the law, and they follow the rules of legislation. But the reality of it is, as with any good organization, there are a few bad apples. I think that this is good if it's enforced.

It goes on to say that for a person who contravenes section 7.21, the fines there are, again, $10,000 and $100,000. I think that there is a real ability. Section 7.21 reads:

No person shall sell or offer for sale a tobacco product designated in the regulations in a package containing less than the number of units prescribed by the regulations.

Now, I know the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek had a problem with that because she enjoyed every once in a while a single cigar – and I can understand that – but if the regulation is the regulation, then I think we need to enforce it. It's up to this government to provide that enforcement, and if the government does that, then that enforcement would be very valuable. Ten thousand dollars is not a small number, and $100,000 could break some businesses. That should be a deterrent. Now, it won't be a deterrent if the government doesn't actually use this tool and do what it needs to do.

I hope that answers the member's question. I could go on. Oh, I will go on – sorry – and note that what changed was that it used to be fines of $1,000 and $5,000. So if you sold to a minor, you were only fined $1,000. That is raised to $10,000. I think that that is fantastic. More interesting, though, is that the $5,000 fine for your second offence was raised to $100,000. If that's not a deterrent, I don't know what is. I would not want to be the business owner who literally said, "Okay, I'm going to take this chance the second time around" and have the government be able to come in and enforce the rules they put in place and fine that business owner $100,000. I wouldn't want to do that.

Mr. Bilous: It's got to be enforced.

Mrs. Towle: But the problem is – you're absolutely right – that it's not being enforced today. If it's not going to be enforced today, my worry is exactly that it won't be enforced tomorrow, when the numbers are just bigger but there's no enforcement.

Again, I'm not suggesting that any of our business owners do this on purpose, and I think that the majority of our business owners are fantastic and doing a great job. But the reality of it is that this government has to enforce. If you weren't enforcing $1,000 or $5,000 – it would be interesting if the Associate Minister of Wellness at some point in time brought forward a report on how many people are selling to minors and how often that $1,000 or the $5,000 was enforced. I don't know if that's something that is made public – I'm not sure – but even if you sent it to me personally. I'm just interested to know if that's something that currently happens.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Like my fellow colleagues, I'm going to rise to support this bill. I think that any time you can take steps to reduce tobacco use, particularly among our young, and just reduce tobacco use in general, it has to be taken in good faith and has to be considered a good thing for society as a whole. I kind of wish they had put in there, even though I know it's a criminal act, the reduction of smoking crack, considering some of the legislation that we're going to railroad through this weekend. That's not mentioned in there, but we will still support the whole idea of harm reduction.

What the bill does miss and what the bill fails to do is to deal with some very basic issues that are probably more effective in reducing tobacco use, which are education and rehabilitation. It is well established that nicotine is one of the most addictive substances. It's already been mentioned here more than once about the carcinogens, the cancer-causing agents, and the health risks that go with smoking tobacco and using tobacco, but there also are other concerns dealing with the cultural aspects. As the hon. minister had pointed out, I think maybe later last week or earlier in this week, there is an exemption for aboriginal peoples, First Nation peoples dealing with tobacco use, particularly in their ceremonial and cultural uses.

But the exemption for the hooker . . .

Some Hon. Members: Hookah.

Mr. Anglin: Hookah. I'm glad they're listening to me. I'm glad they're listening to me. That's good. They say that they don't, but I know they do. [interjection] That's right. We don't have hookers here. Sorry.

The fact is, the reality is that it is a culturally sensitive issue, and it needs to be addressed. The minister talked about it, that it could be found in another section of the bill, but it is not specific in nature in the sense that it actually singles out how they would do this under regulation. Hopefully, the minister does address that in regulation. As the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek actually stated earlier, she'll be watching very closely how the minister does this. I hope the minister in his closing remarks gives assurances to the community that that will be under consideration, that that will be dealt with, and does not delay in writing those regulations that take into consideration the concerns of some minorities and how they use this in their cultural ceremonies.

On the positive side, to look at this act, the act in itself is extremely punitive, which is not in itself a negative, but we are missing some very positive parts, which is funding education to keep kids away from tobacco, dealing with the issue of rehabilitation even for children, even for young teenagers. This is something that is extremely helpful in many ways in dealing with the prevention side. If you can help young teenagers who have become addicted to tobacco or tobacco use and are able to assist them in breaking the habit, they are able to actually work within the young community to help educate and spread the message, so to speak. It is an invaluable tool. Clearly – and I don't have any statistics in front of me – we do know that this is a valuable tool in dealing with the issue of tobacco reduction and dealing with the issue of health concerns.

Now, it's interesting. The hon. member talked about it as a veterinarian and how it affects various species of animals. There's always something to learn in this Assembly, and it's good to know, you know, that we as humans suffer from certain aspects that . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I hate to interrupt you, but it is now 6 o'clock. The House stands adjourned until 7:30.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m.]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act, 2013

[Debate adjourned November 27: Mr. Anglin speaking]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As I started to state earlier, I support the premise of the bill, and I'm asking my colleagues to support this bill, and I believe most are. I think we are close to unanimous. I haven't actually polled my own caucus.

The question for our Member for Calgary-Shaw earlier. The member was asked: did he ever poll his constituency based on this bill? I actually polled my constituents on both bills simultaneously, what they thought about it. Now, my findings were a little bit different than the Member for Calgary-Shaw's in the sense that the results I got, which are unofficial results, were more or less 50-50. I think the public at large supports a method of reducing tobacco use or supports any program that will help keep children and young people from using tobacco or smoking tobacco. They see the benefits of it, and it's not just for the protection of the user. It actually keeps the costs down in our health care system. It's really twofold.

The unfortunate part of the bill is that we missed an opportunity with this bill to address education and to address treatment. Now, this bill will pass, and I suspect it's going to pass fairly close to unanimously in this Assembly, but I would hope this government would take under advisement that the bill should be part of a trilogy of methodologies for treating and dealing with this issue. This bill is very much punitive. It levels fines for the purchase of tobacco. It creates a situation where it mandates the amount of tobacco packaging. It sets out an agenda to do a lot of proscriptive restrictions. That's the best way to describe it.

But what it doesn't address is education, and what it doesn't address is treatment. Those two aspects play a very important role in tobacco reduction, and we know that. This is not new in treating this. We started way back in the '60s and the '70s, and different governments in different jurisdictions have done different types of educational programs at different times, and there are studies out there showing that education does help. If we incorporate that with treatment, that's significant.

I'm not a smoker, and I never was, but experience tells us that there are huge numbers of people – and I believe I talked to one of the hon. members on the other side, if I'm not mistaken, about their attempts to quit smoking and how difficult it was. I don't think that it's any less difficult for an adult or a youth to quit smoking. It is extremely hard, and it's very difficult to do it alone.

If we were to incorporate the other two aspects of our reduction program, education and treatment, I think what we would see is a lot more success. I think this government has a chance to evaluate that on a cost basis of what it would save us in our health care system versus how much it would cost us to help get young people off tobacco and stop smoking or in some cases chewing tobacco and start living a healthier lifestyle.

What we have is an opportunity that starts us in the right direction. Supporting this bill is not the end-all, but it is a start. I thank the member for bringing this forward and presenting this bill. I would sincerely hope that they would take it the next step and that they will actually incorporate the other two parts, which are education and treatment.

Now, as I said earlier – and I couldn't find my notes on it – the sensitivities of certain groups, particularly dealing with the hookah and the shisha bars, are significant in the sense that we need to be cognizant of how we want to treat this. The minister said that this is covered under one portion of the bill dealing with other matters, but I notice it's not consistent with the bill in the sense that we actually, as the minister correctly pointed out, in dealing with First Nations list an exemption that says that First Nations have an exemption.

Now, I'm not asking for an exemption here as much as I'm asking for recognition that this government will in one form or another establish regulations to respect these minority groups and how it wants to regulate these types of facilities or businesses dealing with this issue.

As the hon. member from Vermilion said earlier, talking about the cancer-causing agents and dealing with animals and relating that to second-hand smoke – that's hard to refute. There's enough evidence with human beings dealing with second-hand smoke that confirms the cancer-causing agents, the health effects, and the harm it can cause. It's only consistent with what would possibly happen to pets that were subjected to the same criteria, which is second-hand smoke.

I'm not making a recommendation on what should be in regulation dealing with the hookah and shisha bars, but the government should establish these and figure out how it wants to respect these cultural practices and deal with this issue. I hope they would do that.

The other part is that we have fines for purchasing but not necessarily for selling. I think there can be some balance here on how we want to handle that, how this government should handle this to make sure that those that are responsible are held accountable. There needs to be a little bit of flexibility, in my view, in controlling how we want to hand out the fines and the methodology for dealing with it because every circumstance is different. So, again, this gives the government a chance to come back and make some corrections and actually establish it in regulation, how it wants to set these rules out for what I would call fair and just enforcement. That's really important for our young people.

Now, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw said earlier, had this been in place when he was younger, quite possibly he may not have started smoking at a young age. Now, that's hypothetical in many ways, but I think it shows why we support the bill and that we can see the value of how it can possibly benefit our young and make the reduction program effective.

One issue we haven't dealt with – and I think we should – is the income that this government receives off the tax for tobacco. How are we going to reconcile this? We are working towards two different things here.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, there is a request from the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville that we revert to introductions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure this evening to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly the 1st Lindbrook Scout group, who meet at the LDS church in Tofield on a regular basis. There are eight members here, including their group leaders: Justin Woodruff, Jon Cahoon, and Justin Tiedemann. For my Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, they are really anxious this summer to be able to spend some time at the Cold Lake weapons range, and maybe we can work some miracles. I would ask them all to rise, and I would ask you to greet them, please.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I guess the member kind of touched on some points. Of course, our critic had made an amendment to grandfather certain aspects of this bill for certain businesses.

There is one portion of the bill that deals with the minimum amount required for purchasing, and it actually increases the amount. The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek had earlier today talked about her thoughts on that, people who regularly might go out and buy one cigar in the evening, whether or not increasing the minimum amount to eight or 10 would actually increase consumption on that aspect. I'm assuming that the rationale for the increase in the minimum amount is to specifically target youth, that by increasing the amount, it would increase the cost per purchase, which may, in fact, inhibit some of the youth individuals from purchasing tobacco to begin with. I'm wondering whether or not the member has given any consideration to that aspect, whether or not we should increase the minimum amount or keep it at a lower amount and what effects this change will have on consumption patterns.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I actually did think about this, and we even had some discussions within our caucus but not necessarily in a formalized manner.

It's interesting that the government now is going to mandate the packaging and how much tobacco product would be included in the package. The question I have for the government is this. Will this actually reduce use? It's a valid question because if you're allowed to buy one cigar, which is the example the member brought up, then the individual would smoke one cigar. But if you're forced to buy more than one, would they then be – I don't want to use the word "corrupted" – basically enticed to smoke more than one, which is absolutely unhealthy in my view and not productive and not in the spirit of this legislation. The whole purpose of the legislation is to reduce use. I don't want to be facetious here, but it goes to the potato chip. If you have one potato chip, can you stop at one, or do you have the bag, and then you just keep dipping in? Tobacco use, being as addictive as it is – it's a very valid question. It's one that I hope the government would try to evaluate once this is implemented because I don't have the answer to it, and I haven't heard any member stand up and actually provide the rationale.

I understand the rationale that if we force them to buy more, they have to spend more, and it's a financial issue. That I understand. But one of the great advantages of living in this province is that we are a very solid economic place in Alberta, where young people can find employment well above minimum wage. So will this actually stop our young people from buying tobacco products even outside our legislation?

It's a valid question because any time you put any restrictive laws in, basically what happens is that, depending on how restrictive they are, you can create a black market. If that happens, the products are still sold but not legally. They become illegal. If you force a larger amount of tobacco products in a package, the question then becomes: are we enabling more usage and not meeting the spirit of this legislation, the intent of which is to reduce usage?

It is a question that I wish there was an answer to. I don't know anyone that has addressed that yet. Maybe the minister could in closing if there are any studies out there. Unlike with the potato chip or unlike chocolate, although some people would say that chocolate is addictive, we know tobacco is extremely addictive. If you have cigarettes there, if you have tobacco in any form that you can use, it would just be contributing to and enabling more usage of the product than prohibiting or reducing.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

That was 29(2)(a).

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to stand in support of Bill 33, the Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act, 2013. I really don't believe that there is any member of this Assembly that wouldn't agree with the intent of this bill. It's very good. There are a couple of things in it that I have some concerns about, but they're not major items.

Bill 33 will amend the 2008 Tobacco Reduction Act in basically five ways: by merging the Prevention of Youth Tobacco Use Act, by putting a ban on smoking in vehicles with children present. That's especially one of the very good points of this bill. The one I'm having trouble with, though, Madam Speaker, is restricting the smoking of tobaccolike products – and I'm not sure what that all entails – in public places, mainly in the hookah establishments with water pipes. I understand it will not ban their sale in public, but it will apply to restaurants like hookah and shisha bars, cafés. This is traditionally more of an ethnic practice than it is just the act of smoking, so I'm not sure how successful that will be. I think it will just move from cafés and bars to private homes and those kinds of things, which is perhaps even a little bit worse. That's of some concern to me.

The 18 to 20 per pack sales: I'm not sure that that's really going to accomplish what it's meant to do. Teenagers are actually quite resilient. If they can't buy five cigarettes or three or four cigarettes, they'll pool their resources, and they'll buy a package of 20 and split them up. The intent is good. The price of cigarettes in Canada is – I don't even know what you pay for a package of cigarettes anymore. It's been about 35 years or 40 years since when I started smoking.

I will support the bill. As I said, I do have some concerns. The fines, I think, could be much higher. Five hundred dollars as an initial fine to a store owner is probably quite substantial, but I'd like to see it be quite a bit higher. I'd like to have second offences or something of that nature, where they just lose their right to sell tobacco products, those kinds of things.

Madam Speaker, I could go on and on and on. I just want to get on the record that I support this bill very strongly. With the blips in it, I still support it.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any members interested in commenting or questioning the hon. member?

Seeing none, are there any other members interested in commenting on Bill 33 in third reading? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to make a couple of brief comments. Certainly, the Alberta New Democrats are supporting this bill, and we will be voting with it. We made a couple of amendments that, I think, might have strengthened the bill somehow. This is, I think, both an issue and a tension in our society that we constantly have to push at so that we are looking for more ways to not just reduce the incidence of new smokers in our society but to assist people with the cessation of smoking as well. The more that we can look at this medically and categorically, I think the healthier our society our society will become as well.

I think that some of the consultation around Bill 33 was a bit spotty. I think that people that were running shisha bars and so forth could have had more input. I know of some restaurateurs that had put considerable investment into their businesses without knowing that this was coming down the pipe. Always we need to be aware of those things. When we make legislation here in this House, we need to make sure that we give plenty of time and forward notice to people that may be affected.

Otherwise, certainly, this is legislation that is overdue. It's already happening in other provinces, and I'd be happy to vote in favour of it.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members who wish to speak on Bill 33 in third reading?

Seeing none, the hon. Associate Minister of Wellness to close debate.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you very, very much, Madam Speaker. It is a distinct pleasure to conclude deliberations on Bill 33, the Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act, 2013.

Hon. members, I am very proud to be with you here tonight. We're on the verge of making Alberta a much healthier province. A yes vote is all that stands between young Albertans and stronger antitobacco legislation.

Madam Speaker, this bill is vital to protecting the health and safety of our children and Albertans of all ages, really. This is certainly not a new effort. There are heroes in our midst in this Chamber, members past and present, and legions of folks that are beyond these walls that have been amazingly inspirational in this cause for decades in the past, and I expect the effort will continue. I know that my little part began when I was chairing AADAC, and my very first private member's bill was the Smoke-free Places Act back in 2005.

I definitely want to thank everyone who participated in all aspects and all stages of this bill, including those who have just spoken here in third reading. We've had incredible support for the intent of this bill during all stages of debate, and I want to thank, especially, our hon. ministers of Health, Human Services, Tourism, Parks and Recreation; all government members; and also members across the floor.

I have to say that it's great to see that when there's a matter of significant public health that comes to the attention of this House, we can come together and support a very important cause. This is an issue not just about smoking amongst youth but for all members of our society. In that vein, I would like to thank the members for Calgary-Fish Creek, Lacombe-Ponoka, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, Calgary-Shaw, Calgary-Buffalo, Little Bow, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, and Edmonton-Calder, amongst others who spoke at the different stages of the bill in the past.

Madam Speaker, I know that you and others in this Chamber and beyond were especially moved by those who took the time to tell personal stories. I've refrained from doing that. It can be a very emotional issue, but I will mention my dad, who tried stopping smoking 13 times. Thirteen was a very lucky number for him at that point in time, but I can tell you he went through amazingly difficult circumstances to become smoke free, and I salute him for that and for so many other things. Thank you to all members who had the courage to share their personal journeys and those of people that they know and for putting a human face on this legislation. That's the thing. It's not just a piece of legislation; it's about human beings, the Albertans that we're so humbly proud to serve.

It was an impassioned discussion at times. You know, it shows that people take this very, very seriously, and we should. As I've mentioned in previous speeches, this isn't just a quality-of-life issue. This is a life-and-death issue for in the neighbourhood of 3,000 of our friends and neighbours here in Alberta every single year. I want to assure all the members. I'm not going to go into detail on every single one of their issues – we don't have quite enough time in concluding debate – but I will say this. Their concerns are indeed addressed in a number of ways. One way is our 10-year tobacco reduction strategy and the existing Tobacco Reduction Act as well as this bill and the regulations therein.

Just a few examples to be specific. Traditional, spiritual, and cultural rights are indeed protected, point one. Point two, nothing interferes with personal tobacco use in the privacy of a person's home. Three, supports are available for people who want to quit. Four, businesses will have time to adjust to the ban on water pipes in their establishments. There are more, but, again, they're encapsulated by the previously mentioned categories. Above all of this, though, Madam Speaker, children will find it more difficult to access tobacco. Children and nonsmoking adults are protected from the effects of second-hand water pipe smoke, and children are protected from the example of adults smoking water pipes. Children are protected from second-hand smoke in the confined space of a vehicle.

With Bill 33 Alberta joins other provinces with legislation to prohibit the sale of tobacco products to minors, with fines levied against adults who provide youth with tobacco and enforcement through peace officers and other potential inspectors such as the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission employees. Additionally, a minimum number of tobacco products per package will make them less affordable for children. Significantly, the tobacco-like loophole is closed, with the smoking of water pipes prohibited wherever tobacco smoke is not allowed.

Madam Speaker, no smoking means no smoking no matter what the product, no matter where in the province. An example: adult drivers will have to wait for a smoke until they park their cars and get out. We have to remember that children who are breathing in second-hand smoke simply do not have a choice in that sort of situation. The health of child passengers will be protected from the many harmful effects of second-hand smoke. With Bill 33 we're acting on our shared commitment to the future health of Albertans and, especially, of our children.

Madam Speaker, the bill has the support of many groups who advocate for the health of Albertans and are working towards a smoke-free Alberta. In a previous speech I listed the number of partners. I will not do so again, but I can assure you it is extremely long. We have talked to them in the past, we're talking to them now, and we'll talk to them again in the future as we continue to build a healthier Alberta one Albertan at a time together. I do want to thank all of those organizations for the commitment to Albertans' health and support for this bill, again, past, present, and future.

Bill 33, Madam Speaker, will strengthen public protection from the health risks of tobacco, tobacco-like products, and second-hand smoke. This bill is a comprehensive, long-term commitment to tobacco reduction. I strongly encourage a yes vote now.

With that, I thank all members, and I move to adjourn debate. Thank you. [interjections] Sorry. The word is "closing." I am closing, and I will ask for the question.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion carried; Bill 33 read a third time]

Bill 39 Enhancing Consumer Protection in Auto Insurance Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and move third reading of Bill 39, the Enhancing Consumer Protection in Auto Insurance Act.

Over the past few weeks my colleagues and I have engaged in great discussion over this bill. The Enhancing Consumer Protection in Auto Insurance Act will in effect do three main things: expand the mandate of the Automobile Insurance Rate Board and include the approval of both basic and additional rates, move from the industry-wide rate adjustment process to a more responsive file-and-approve system, and change parts of the Insurance Act to strengthen consumer protection.

This bill also proposes making other modifications to the Insurance Act such as ensuring language in the New Home Buyer Protection Act is consistent with existing language in the Insurance Act. During debate a few members sought clarification on the wording of Bill 39, and I will provide you with that information today.

But before that, let me first clarify some misinterpretations that were also brought up during the debate. One member stated that the Automobile Insurance Rate Board currently reviews rates behind closed doors, with no opportunity for consumer input.

This, Madam Speaker, is false. Our current practice is to hold an industry-wide adjustment every year. One of the major components of this process is a formal public meeting that is open to any Albertan wishing to speak about automobile insurance rates. This meeting rotates between Edmonton and Calgary each year. While this process has been a good one thus far, we are moving away from an industry-wide adjustment towards a file-and-approve system. This is something that will benefit consumers through increased competition. It will also benefit the industry as a whole by applying rate increases or decreases on a company-by-company basis.

I want to point out, however, that under the new rate-setting process any consumers interested in auto insurance rates will still have the opportunity to follow industry trends through a public process. Work is still being done on what that process would look like, but I can assure the hon. member that consumers will continue to enjoy a high degree of transparency in the rate-setting process.

I also want to clarify another member's statement that insurance for vehicles can be the fourth- or fifth-highest household cost in the province. I'd be interested to see where the hon. member got that statistic from. In our research we found Alberta's auto insurance premiums on par with the Canadian average. A 2011 Fraser Institute report found that Albertans' premiums were actually among the most affordable in the country due to the higher disposable income and higher per capita gross domestic product in Alberta compared to other provinces. At 2.7 per cent of disposable income, it is the second lowest in Canada. I would say that is affordable automobile insurance, which is one of the principles on which our auto insurance system was built.

During debate on Bill 39 I was asked about the dispute resolution process for premiums. The hon. members questioned who would be responsible for the dispute resolution process if an insurance company's rates were challenged. Madam Speaker, investigating disputes is already part of the work undertaken by the compliance staff in the office of the superintendent. Compliance officers work directly with consumers, the Auto Insurance Rate Board, and insurance companies to determine if consumers' premium rates are appropriate for their particular circumstances. This process works, and as such we are comfortable using the same process as we move to the new rate-setting process. Consumers who want to dispute the value of damage to their insured property will continue to have access to a separate dispute resolution process.

During debate some members also questioned how government will ensure the rate board's decisions are appropriate. Under the proposal the rate board will continue to be accountable to the Minister of Finance. The rate board will also continue to be accountable to this Assembly as the annual report of the rate board is tabled each year in the Legislature.

There will also be ways in which members of the public would be able to scrutinize the board's decisions, and one of these is to compare the board's decisions against the results of the annual process in which industry trends are examined. If a consumer is not satisfied with his or her own premium, that consumer would work through the process with a compliance officer, which I outlined earlier. However, I don't anticipate this will be an issue because consumer perspectives will continue to be provided by the consumer representative on the rate board.

There are other details relating to the setting of the basic and additional rates that are still outstanding. Details will be dealt with in regulations and the rate board's new policies and procedures.

Another issue that came up during debate was a question on surcharges to insurance. Of course, insurance companies have to have some markup on their products to be profitable. However, the rate board will be the one to monitor and approve these rates on a company-by-company basis. Insurance companies will be subject to some guidelines and regulation, and we are considering what is appropriate as the regulations are under development.

Finally, another member raised a question around the language change to the Insurance Act pertaining to the New Home Buyer Protection Act. The intent of the changes is to ensure that the language in the New Home Buyer Protection Act is consistent with existing language in the Insurance Act. I can assure the member that the changes do not make substantive changes to the meaning or the intent of the legislation. Policy conditions in the regulation will be a mandatory part of every home warranty insurance policy.

Madam Speaker, I am confident the changes this government is making to Alberta's insurance system will increase consumer protection and also streamline efficiencies. Now that the minor concerns raised by the hon. members have been addressed, I ask that they would support this important piece of legislation as we move forward on improving Alberta's already robust automobile insurance system.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on Bill 39, Enhancing Consumer Protection in Auto Insurance Act? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Madam Speaker. Again, I just wanted to make a couple of closing arguments. The Alberta New Democrats certainly do support this legislation, and I think it is a step in the right direction.

We have had an historical problem with auto insurance regulation here in the province of Alberta in the past. It is good to see that we are covering another layer of insurance that people really need to drive their automobiles. I think it's eminently logical and reasonable to presume that if we make a law that compels people to buy insurance to drive on Alberta roads, then we need to provide a reasonable product that is available at an affordable price. Indeed, auto insurance can be one of the most expensive things that people have to purchase in their family budgets. I think it is our responsibility here in the Legislature to ensure that those rates remain affordable. This is a provision that could do that.

Having lived here for almost my whole life, I know that we've had significant problems with pricing on auto insurance in the past. I just want to certainly see an evolution, at least, towards a public auto insurance policy or program that we can have here in the province of Alberta. I think that we could regulate the rates even better and probably find even more efficiencies and savings for the public and for our economy, too. That's just the other thing that I would like to see. I think most Albertans would like to have that in there as part of their future, and certainly Alberta New Democrats will endeavour to make it so.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other speakers?

The President of the Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to close debate?

Mr. Horner: Question, Madam Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 39 read a third time]

Bill 40 Settlement of International Investment Disputes Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise and move third reading of Bill 40, the Settlement of International Investment Disputes Act, on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

I would like to thank all of the hon. members who participated in the debate on the legislation. If passed, Bill 40 will support the federal government's full implementation of the ICSID convention across Canada, ensuring implementation in Alberta after the convention officially comes into force on December 1 of this year. It's clear that ICSID provides an effective, fair, and impartial regime for the neutral resolution of international investment disputes. In accordance with ICSID regulation, information on the registration of all requests for arbitration and method of determination of each proceeding must be made public.

Canada has taken additional steps to ensure transparency in its arbitrations by making documents available and setting up open hearings where feasible. The sovereignty of Alberta and its legal system are also protected under this legislation. It is this Legislative Assembly that creates the laws that apply to any investment and investor that operates in the province. Arbitrary tribunals have no power to order the amendment or repeal of any of these laws.

Madam Speaker, the global economy is undeniably competitive. Alberta businesses have responded by becoming increasingly active in foreign markets, whether expanding their business abroad or attracting foreign investment back to the province. As part of the Building Alberta plan we are taking action to access new markets and build partnerships that create more economic opportunity, investment, jobs, and revenue to support the programs and services Albertans rely on. Our actions include promoting Alberta abroad, facilitating the free flow of international investment to Alberta, helping Alberta businesses succeed overseas, and, in the case of Bill 40, putting in place the rules and infrastructure that allow our investors to pursue fair treatment and compensation.

Madam Speaker, this is why supporting the implementation of the ICSID convention in Alberta is so important. The foundation of the ICSID convention is to help build our economy by providing a neutral mechanism to resolve investment disputes. With this bill we are signalling to our international partners and to the 150 countries that have already ratified the convention that Alberta is a stable and secure place to invest and to do business.

With that, I ask for your support to pass Bill 40. Doing so will help us continue to build Alberta for today and tomorrow.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on Bill 40? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Madam Speaker. I think I made my position on this Bill 40 fairly clear. I realize, of course, that a lot of this particular bill on the international investment disputes provisions through the International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes, or ICSID, is a federal-driven initiative. I think this sort of sat idle for several years, and then suddenly there's a great flurry to push it through, both federally and through each of the provinces. While I understand that as our economy becomes more international, we are compelled to enter into more of these agreements, sometimes you have to be careful what you wish for because with a structure like ICSID you have the erosion of the sovereignty of our own courts and, in fact, this Legislature and the federal House as well.

You know, as arbitration is made on trade disputes internationally and without provision for appeal in our own domestic courts, for example, we have to be very, very careful to not erode the sovereign right that we have to determine our own destinies. Certainly, I'm not a person that puts my head in the sand, and I know that international trade is very important to ourselves and to all countries, but I think that we really have to be very careful about the treaties that we sign that allow decisions to be made about our economy and about trade through international arbitration and not through domestic bodies that we have available to us here.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was going to forgo the opportunity, but I do have to speak to third reading of this bill. I've now been in the Legislative Assembly for 16 years. My very first question in this House, in April of 1997, was from Pam Barrett, and it was on the multilateral agreement on investment, which is another name for this particular bill. The convention had been negotiated. There was concern from the New Democrats about foreign capital and the investment of foreign capital, and nothing has changed in the 16 years on that front.

What has changed is the decorum of the House and the manner in which we operated. Pam Barrett was good enough to call my office and let me know that she was going to ask me a question on that particular topic, and then when she came in, she came over to me and said, "Did you get my message that I'm going to ask you about this?" Then she got up, and she tore a strip off me three times through the question and the two supplemental. Then she sat down, waved, and said: "That was good. Thank you." It was a different sort of decorum.

It was a very important agreement then. As Government House Leader I can say that it's been on the list virtually every year for the last 16 years to be introduced as soon as the federal government finished the process of negotiating and agreeing to it, first of all, and then it came to the point where they asked provinces to sign on. This is a milestone for the hon. minister of intergovernmental relations, to actually get this one past the post, after it's been on my list of bills that we might be bringing forward for at least 12 years.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

We now have Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Eggen: Was that part of 29(2)(a)?

The Acting Speaker: That was not 29(2)(a); that was his presentation.

Are there any members who wish to speak on 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll ask if there are any members who wish to speak on Bill 40, Settlement of International Investment Disputes Act.

Seeing none, we'll ask the hon. minister to close debate.

Mr. Dallas: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 40 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 44 Notaries and Commissioners Act

[Adjourned debate November 21: Ms Olesen]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Three – Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thanks. Yeah; we're jealous of the ones with three hills.

Madam Speaker, it's a pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 44, which combines two pieces of legislation, the Notaries Public Act and the Commissioners for Oaths Act. Considering that all notaries in this province are commissioners, this appears to make sense. The fines for those who contravene the act are also increased. This is important as fines should be a deterrent to committing an offence and not just a cost of doing business. Bill 44 also lays out legislation that prevents lay notaries, those without legal training, from attesting to deeds, contracts, and commercial instruments. This is a good move. These commercial documents can be very complicated and require a level of expertise. I know that my colleagues in their capacities as notaries have been asked to perform duties that they feel uncomfortable or unqualified in doing. This measure will afford lay notaries protection from pressure to perform these duties for which they have little to no expertise.

Finally, Madam Speaker, Bill 44 allows the minister to create a code of conduct for notaries and commissioners in regulation. The current practice is to provide notaries an informational instruction book on how to carry out their duties. Notaries are a very important part of our legal system and hence should be subject to a code of conduct and not just an informational booklet. I've talked to stakeholders on this issue, and they are very pleased that a code of conduct will be initiated. We look forward to the debate in the Committee of the Whole.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members that wish to speak on Bill 44, the Notaries and Commissioners Act?

Seeing none, I'll ask the hon. Member for Sherwood Park to close debate.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The amendments to these pieces of legislation will help ensure that they are up to date and reflect changes in Alberta. In a rapidly changing and growing province, it is especially important to make these changes so our legislation is consistent and clear. Albertans expect and deserve clarity and consistency, and these amendments will help achieve that.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. I now move to close debate on Bill 44.

[Motion carried; Bill 44 read a second time]

Bill 41
Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities Amendment Act, 2013

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my honour to rise today and move third reading of Bill 41, the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities Amendment Act, 2013. We've had considerable debate on this bill. I'm very excited, having worked now for over a year with the Premier's council. I'm excited about the renewed mandate and the new members on the council, and I'm really looking forward to the coming year with them.

I'll listen to the comments in third reading, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members who wish to speak in third reading?

Seeing none, the minister to close.

Mr. Oberle: Question.

[Adjourned debate November 27: Mr. Campbell]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members who wish to speak on Bill 36, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2013?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker: The question has been called. The hon. Minister of Finance and President of the Treasury Board has moved second reading of Bill 36, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2013.

[Motion carried; Bill 36 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Well, we have actually completed the work that was on the agenda for the day, and rather than surprise anybody with other work, I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 8:21 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, November 28, 2013

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Holy Creator, help us to remember that our debates and deliberations affect over 4 million Albertans and many generations that will follow. Give us accordingly, and guide us that our decisions may be right and proper, just and fair, for all whom we serve. Amen.

Please be seated.

Hon. members, as you will recall, on November 21 of this year this Assembly agreed to Government Motion 46, allowing the Hon. David Alward, Premier of the province of New Brunswick, to be invited to this floor of our Chamber to address the Assembly. Now I would like to invite Premier Alward to come and join us at this time, please.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Premier of Alberta.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a great Canadian and a great friend to Alberta, the Hon. David Alward, Premier of New Brunswick.

Premier Alward has been a determined backer of the Canadian energy strategy. He was among the first of Canada's Premiers to see the incredible benefits that it will deliver to all Canadians, and he has worked tremendously hard to build support for the strategy among our colleagues across the country. Premier Alward has also been a compelling advocate for the projects that flow from this strategy such as the proposed Energy East pipeline that will carry energy from western Canada to the Atlantic coast, bringing jobs, growth, and investment to every province and territory in our great nation. He is a leader with a truly national vision, a vision of our country, that he knows can be most successful when we work together with common purpose.

It is my great privilege to welcome Premier Alward back to Alberta. He is here to attend the Bennett Jones Lake Louise World Cup business forum, which I will also be attending, to talk about how provinces and territories can work together to help our country become a truly global energy superpower. I am delighted that Premier Alward will be adding his voice to the discussion about our shared future.

I would also note, Mr. Speaker, that while Premier Alward is in our province, Alberta's Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations is on his way to New Brunswick, where he will be speaking about market access, the Canadian energy strategy, and the Energy East project at a conference in Moncton. This is part of the growing friendship and partnership between our two provinces.

Mr. Speaker, Premier Alward has agreed to do us the honour of addressing our Legislature before question period. He is accompanied today by Dallas McCready, deputy minister of Executive Council from the government of New Brunswick, who is in your gallery, and Yvon Long, deputy chief of staff in the office of the Premier. I would ask all hon. members to give our guests from New Brunswick a warm Alberta welcome.

The Speaker: Premier Alward, I would now invite you to take a space here at the podium and deliver your address if you would, sir. Thank you.

The Hon. David Alward, Premier of New Brunswick Address to the Legislative Assembly

Mr. Alward: Mr. Speaker, hon. Premier, hon. Members of Alberta's Legislative Assembly. Thank you, Premier Redford, for the warm welcome and the kind introduction. It's an honour for me to be the first New Brunswick Premier to address the people of Alberta in their House. En tant que Premier ministre de la seule province officiellement bilingue au Canada, je dis bonjour aux Franco-Albertains de la part des Acadiens et des Brayons du Nouveau-Brunswick.

As you know, New Brunswickers were honoured to welcome Premier Redford in June and to have the opportunity to hear her vision for building a strong national economy that can support jobs in our communities, progressive provinces, and a more prosperous Canada. As a fellow Premier and as a Canadian I am energized by Premier Redford's leadership. She's a nation-builder, and it's truly an honour to work with her to move Canada forward.

I was one of the many Canadians across our incredible country that was moved on election night when Premier Redford stated her vision of a strong Alberta within a strong Canada. When we speak about strengthening Canada through smart and responsible resource development, we must never lose track of what we're really speaking about: jobs in our communities all over our country. Projects like the Energy East pipeline will translate into thousands of jobs in communities across Canada.

New Brunswick and Alberta are provinces built on natural resource development, and we believe that our future growth and prosperity depends on our ability to responsibly develop our resources and access new markets. In order to achieve this vision together, governments across our country must work together to forge a Canadian energy strategy. Again, I applaud the leadership of Premier Redford and what she has shown across our country in advocating a truly national strategy that can drive Canada's future growth and prosperity.

Last month the Canadian Chamber of Commerce released a report that shows how our lack of energy infrastructure at a national level is hindering our success in energy markets at a rate of $50 million per day. This translates, very literally, into reduced investment, fewer jobs, and lost revenues for governments at all levels to invest in the priorities of our citizens. This is the stark reality that drives our belief that projects like the Energy East pipeline will be as important to Canada's future growth and prosperity as the national railway's construction was in our past. Tidewater is key to accessing these new and, in some cases, emerging markets in Europe and Asia. New Brunswick offers the most direct, reliable, and proven access to these world-wide markets through the port of Saint John, the deepest ice-free port on the east coast of North America.

Let me be clear as well. New Brunswick favours a one-project, one-review approach to the Energy East pipeline project. We recognize that the regulation of an interprovincial energy pipeline falls under the jurisdiction of the National Energy Board.

To date TransCanada has completed seven open houses in various New Brunswick communities and will hold two more in December. As a government we will continue to work in co-operation with the provinces of Alberta and Quebec as well as Canada's oil and gas producers. I'm convinced that together we will achieve our common goal: to safely and efficiently move crude oil and natural gas from western Canada to the east coast for refining, value-added upgrading, and shipment to international markets in the Atlantic basin and beyond.

Some of you may not realize this, but New Brunswick is Canada's most export-driven province. Energy exports include refined petroleum products, electricity, and significant amounts of natural gas from both domestic and international sources, including output from Canaport LNG, Canada's first and only LNG terminal. Our province's annual energy exports currently exceed $10 billion, a significant economic and trade threshold for a province of just under 750,000 people. New Brunswick provides key export advantages, including the port of Saint John, which has safely and efficiently handled the largest crude oil and LNG carriers in the world for decades.

We also are home to the Irving Oil refinery, Canada's largest and most modern refinery, located in Saint John. Again, in case you didn't know, this refinery supplies 3 out of 5 cars in Boston with gasoline. And we're not Boston Bruins fans, by the way. Some are, but we won't get into that debate. The Irving Oil refinery currently operates at a capacity in excess of 300,000 barrels a day. Its output accounts for 42 per cent of all of Canada's finished petroleum product exports to the U.S. New Brunswick is ready to step forward to help Canada rise to meet the opportunities ahead.

In addition to the thousands of jobs associated with construction, refining, and shipping, the Energy East pipeline has the capacity to create new jobs and opportunities through expanded supply chains. In New Brunswick we see the potential for brand new industries such as petrochemicals and plastics. We believe that an expanded natural gas industry in New Brunswick will have the potential to create just as many opportunities, such as global LNG exports, a re-energized manufacturing sector, and the potential to add value to New Brunswick's abundant potash reserves through the construction of fertilizer plants.

These opportunities, in addition to the jobs and investments that will be generated with the development of each well, provide a very bright economic future for New Brunswick communities.

Our government firmly believes that environmental stewardship and economic growth are both vital pillars of a strong society and a healthy future. To echo the words spoken by Premier Redford in New Brunswick last June, the false premise that we must choose between the environment and the economy is indeed removed from reality. Canada boasts some of the strongest environmental protections in the world. The confidence we place in our laws to protect our environment has been well earned. As Canadians we value the environment as the natural infrastructure of our communities. As we continue to develop our natural resources responsibly, we will gain more opportunities to invest revenues and into research in innovation that will power our economy and protect our environment for future generations. I began this by saying that we must never forget why we are doing the work we are doing, to allow for the smart and responsible development of our natural resources. This is about jobs for Canadian men and women.

We stand here at a critical moment in our history. We are at a crossroads at home in New Brunswick and indeed across our country. Canada is at risk of standing still while our competitors around the world are moving forward and making plans to move past us. As Canadians we need to think about what that will mean for our grandchildren and their children. Prosperity and opportunity are not inherited rights. We cannot take for granted that future generations will inherit the same opportunities that we've been blessed with.

There are some 15,000 New Brunswickers working outside New Brunswick today in natural resource sectors, and we're not isolated with this story. In fact, when I took two flights today to get to Edmonton, I met several workers who are plying their trade here in Alberta right now. What they said to me is that they are blessed to be able to gain that opportunity, but they are looking for the opportunity in a year and a half or so to ply their trade back home.

In fact, as well, my youngest son, Ben, is 23. He's a red seal plumber and a last block pipefitter who works in Kearl Lake. As I was flying here today, Ben was flying home for a week.

Canadians want to work and need to work. Canadians want to build prosperity and economic opportunity no matter what region they live in. By working together and by building on the foundation of respect and friendship that we have built between provinces, I am convinced that we can move Canada forward.

Thank you so much for the chance to address the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. C'est un honneur pour moi d'avoir l'opportunité. Merci. Thank you. [Standing ovation]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. minister of government services.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a little difficult to follow that, but I've got a really great introduction today, somebody that you and many members of the Legislative Assembly know very, very well. Sitting in your gallery is Jay Ramotar, my former Deputy Minister of Service Alberta, your former deputy minister of health and wellness. Jay has one of the most distinguished careers in the Alberta public service, a career that spans 37 years, where he served as deputy minister for Treasury Board, Infrastructure, Transportation, Justice and Solicitor General. One of the most innovative things Jay has come up with is the way that we approach P3s. Projects like the southeast Anthony Henday are part of Jay's work. Albertans continue to benefit from his legacy, from the ring roads to other projects. As we move forward in this province, Jay's work will forever have set us on a course to innovative, smart infrastructure. I'd ask all members to give Jay a warm welcome and a thank you for his service.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, yesterday we stuck to the 35-second rule and no preambles to supplementals after question 5, so let's see if we can do the same thing today, starting with the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Your first main set of questions.

Deaths of Children in Care

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, today the media shared a heartbreaking story of a little girl who the system tragically failed. Failure after failure meant that this infant died a preventable death while in the care of the government. Bureaucracy, privacy, and a lack of adequate resources contributed to this child's untimely death. We need to give Albertans confidence that our child protection practices are fully protecting children. Will the Premier agree to call a full public inquiry into the issue of deaths of children in care?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the situation that the hon. member just recounted was indeed a tragic circumstance, which was fully investigated through a fatality review inquiry. Each tragic circumstance of that nature is fully investigated through a fatality review inquiry. We learn from those inquiries. We strive constantly to do better. We have thousands of people in this system who work daily to make sure the lives of Alberta children who are in danger or in need are improved and that they have the opportunity . . .

The Speaker: The hon. leader. First supplemental.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the minister has held up the Child and Youth Advocate as having complete authority to review child deaths. However, as the advocate makes plain in his report of just three weeks ago, this government continues to withhold information and has provided no details about how it intends to implement his recommendations. This is not acceptable. Will the Premier agree to call a full inquiry into the issue of deaths of children in care?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the Child and Youth Advocate has full access to information from the department. I met with the Child and Youth Advocate this morning to deal with operational pieces. His concern was not that he didn't get the information but is one of timeliness, which was an issue of a legal review and those sorts of things. We've agreed to iron out that and to make sure that he has access. He has full access electronically now and will continue to have it. There is no issue with respect to the Child and Youth Advocate having information from our department, Human Services, with respect to children in care.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the government's restrictive privacy laws contribute to Alberta's lack of confidence in our province's handling of the deaths of children in care. While the minister has cited the need for privacy, the priority for the government must be to ensure that future avoidable deaths are not repeated. With the battery of issues we now have before us, a round-table of MLAs just isn't enough. Will the Premier agree to call a full inquiry into the issue of deaths of children in care?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, in fact, Alberta's laws with respect to disclosure are similar to the laws right across this country. I checked on that, and that is the case. In fact, there is evidence to suggest that other jurisdictions have actually modelled their laws on ours. But what we have said is that we want to be best in class. We want to do what's in the best interests of all children and all Albertans, so we will host a round-table. It won't be an MLA round-table although the MLA critics are invited to come. It'll be an expert round-table and one that hears all the necessary voices so that we end up with the best policy in the country.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, other provinces don't hide the nature or the number of deaths.

Support for Victims of Child Sexual Abuse

Ms Smith: This government has a strange approach when it comes to protecting children. The minister steadfastly defends the status quo at every step. In his mind, there's no room to improve how his department works. Last year he turned down funding for Be Brave Ranch, which helps to heal victims of child sexual abuse. It wasn't necessary, he implies. Albertans disagreed, and today Be Brave Ranch is a reality. To the Premier: why is it that her government rejects any improvements or innovations in how we protect children?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I have never once ever suggested that we reject any suggestion about improvement. In fact, I have said to virtually every question in this House that we look forward to continuing to improve, continuing to learn, and continuing to do a better job, and we will.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we have on several occasions asked the government to fund the treatment of child sexual abuse victims with money from the victims of crime fund. Inexplicably, this government refuses to even fund it out of the surplus that it has of $50 million. To the Premier. Every Albertan knows that there is no greater victim than the victim of child sexual abuse. Why is her government not funding programs like Little Warriors out of the victims of crime fund?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, from the first day that I became the Minister of Justice, I was committed to making communities safer. We work in partnership with professionals and social workers, police officers, and health care professionals across this province who put programs in place that they determine to be in the best interests of all children who have violence committed upon them. Now, I am not going to take the word of the Leader of the Opposition that any particular program is the best program. The reason that we have a system, a child welfare system, with professionals and health care experts in it is to give us advice on how to provide the best proper programming, and that's . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Smith: Fortunately, the folks at Little Warriors aren't going to wait for the government; they're just going to do it anyway.

We're asking for the government to spend money on the right kinds of things. This government has money for lavish expense accounts, severances for their friends, and layer upon layer of senior managers, but they won't spend victims of crime fund money on helping victims of child sexual abuse. Will the Premier commit her government to funding the important work of Little Warriors so that they can make sure that they're treating Albertans who have suffered unspeakable crimes?

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, there is excellent work being done in this province in the area of child sexual abuse. It is evidence based, it has measurable outcomes, and it has been done in some cases for over 30 years. Yesterday we convened a group of more than 27 stakeholders in this area. They will be informing us going forward on where we put our funding and the decisions we make. Little Warriors is at that table. They are part of a larger group who will help us and inform us.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Third main set of questions.

Public-service Contract Negotiations

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, as most Albertans know, the Wildrose is the party of fiscal restraint, but we are also the party of the rule of law and due process. Across all sectors we believe government should uphold the law, respect the processes in place, and abide by the principles that distinguish us in a free and democratic society. That includes bargaining in good faith with public-sector workers. To the Premier: why has she abandoned the bargaining table and revoked the legal right to arbitration, which Premier Lougheed first created, to fairly settle contract disputes?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have been bargaining with a number of public-sector unions this year and had some very successful progress. We are currently involved in another round of negotiation and are very much hoping that AUPE will be able to come back to the table to ensure that we get a fair deal for taxpayers and a fair deal for public servants. Our public servants are valuable to our province. They provide the services and the programs that we need and rely on. We want to make sure that everyone is treated fairly, and we think we can get there.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, in his day Premier Klein was able to negotiate at the table reductions to public-sector salaries. He was able to do so for one critical reason: he campaigned on it, and he was elected to do it. Last election this Premier and her party promised the moon to everybody, including the public sector. To the Premier: does she not realize that after making lofty promises to public-sector workers during the election, she doesn't have a leg to stand on now when she tries to force a deal like this through?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, this is very rich coming from a leader and a party that have campaigned on reducing public-sector salaries by 20 per cent and freezing their pay until the deficit is eliminated in this province.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order. Flat-out lies.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that this province has reached deals with teachers, with doctors, and we're looking forward to reaching another deal with our very valued employees of the public sector.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, they didn't tell the truth about our platform during the campaign. Why would I expect any more in here?

At the end of the day this is about honesty, and we all know that this government has problems being honest. They promised public-sector workers one thing in the election and delivered something entirely different once elected. Earlier this year they agreed to arbitration to settle these negotiations. Now they're about to break that promise and override the arbitration rights that Premier Lougheed created to fairly settle these disputes. To the Premier: will she abandon the heavy-handed tactics and get back to the bargaining table in good faith?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, it wouldn't be correct to characterize that we agreed to binding arbitration. There's a process by which the union applied for compulsory arbitration under the act. But what we did promise Albertans was fiscal restraint. What we did promise Albertans was that public-sector salaries would be constrained this year as part of that fiscal constraint program, and that is what we are delivering. The bill that's before the House allows bargaining to continue till the end of January and, if progress is being made, to the end of March. It does not take away that right to collective bargaining. We want them back at the table.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, your point of order was noted at 2 o'clock, which was the first supplemental answer to your leader's first supplemental question.

Let us move on to the leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Liberals wish to thank Alberta social workers, front-line staff, and foster parents who go above and beyond to rescue vulnerable children. The issue we've been discussing this week isn't them. Rather, the problem is caused by this government covering up or, shall I say, not reporting the true number of children who died in care. This Conservative government has lost public trust and credibility on this issue. To the Premier: what do you think is going to restore public confidence? A chit-chat run by your secretive government or an independent, impartial judicial inquiry?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is actually concerned about getting better outcomes in the child welfare system, then we welcome his participation. Since this government has been formed, we have introduced the Children First legislation. We have an independent Child and Youth Advocate, which is one of the reasons we can talk about these issues in the House today. We've ensured that every fatality is reported and investigated. That is how we improve the system, and that's how we take care of kids, not righteous indignation on the part of the leader.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Liberal call or, shall I say, the united opposition call for an inquiry is not about placing blame on anyone. An independent, impartial judicial inquiry is the best way to allow the facts to come out. Only then can we find the best solutions, restore trust and confidence in the system, and improve the safety of children in care. This is our goal and should be the government's goal. To the Premier: why won't you restore trust and confidence in the system by calling for an independent, impartial judicial inquiry? What are you afraid of?

Mr. Hancock: Actually, Mr. Speaker, I think it's almost unanimous now in the calls I've had from experts in the field that the round-table that we're proposing is a much better way to bring all the important issues to the table, have an expert discussion together with lived experience, have all the voices there, and actually move forward to create the best possible policy for children in this province. That's what we're going to do because that's what Albertans deserve.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the minister raised a very important issue. The fact of the matter is that 78 per cent of the children who died in care were of First Nations heritage. Responsibility for them is shared between the federal government, the First Nations, and the provincial government. I've written to the Prime Minister asking him to investigate the deaths of the aboriginal children in care. To the Premier: will you join me in bringing the federal government, the First Nations, and the province of Alberta to the table through an independent, public judicial inquiry so we can finally get some answers and solutions?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member actually wanted to add voice and value to this discussion, what he should do is write to the Prime Minister and ask him to fund the DFNAs at the same level as the child and family services authorities are funded. That's where the federal government could really step up. All of the deaths of children in care have been investigated, and we have jurisdiction in that area. We do have jurisdiction in that area. The Child and Youth Advocate can investigate those. He doesn't need the federal government's help to do that. But the resources for on-reserve: now, that would be really nice. [interjections]

The Speaker: Silence, please. Thank you.

Let's move on. Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, the leader of the ND opposition.

Public-service Contract Negotiations

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday was a dark day for workers in this province, when this government introduced draconian legislation that has forever changed labour relations in this province. The right-wing Tea Party agenda of this PC government shined brightly yesterday when they removed the ability of public-service workers to bargain in good faith. Rather than follow UN labour guidelines to respect the “recognition of the right to collective bargaining,” this government is ramming through a bill that violates basic human rights. To the Premier: why isn’t this government respecting workers’ rights to enter arbitration without imposing cuts to wages and . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member of the front bench, the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it was a dark day in Alberta history yesterday because the protesters were actually turning on the leader of the NDP, and that is something new for this province.

Mr. Speaker, the fact is that this legislation does not impose anything. It gives the AUPE and this government an opportunity to negotiate in good faith until the end of January. I’m certainly hoping that both parties will be able to reach an agreement much like teachers and doctors and others have.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I did not interject yesterday, but there are a lot of you interjecting today, and if it continues, I’ll keep standing and you’re going to lose question period spaces. Please keep that in mind, both sides of the House.

Let’s listen to what the supplemental is from the leader of the New Democrat opposition, please.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The leadership review is over, and now the mask has slipped, revealing the true face of this Premier. The latest attack on working families exceeds the wildest dreams of Margaret Thatcher, Mike Harris, or Stephen Harper. They have put a gun to the head of the public sector and threatened leaders for even communicating with their own members. My question is to the Premier. Why are you trampling on the rights of workers and attacking the standard of living of their families?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we are a province of 4 million people. Those are 4 million people that make up families that work hard every day in this province. Whether they are people that are in public-sector unions or private unions or not in unions, we think it’s important that they be valued and compensated fairly. That’s why we have asked for the AUPE to come to the table and continue to bargain until the end of January so that we can actually get a deal that is fair for Alberta taxpayers, Alberta families, 4 million people in Alberta, and for workers.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, all the talk about being fair to working people.

The latest consumer price index shows Alberta has the highest rate of inflation in the country, 1.5 per cent across the province. The unilateral contract to be imposed on public-sector workers – and that’s what it is, Mr. Speaker – will actually result in workers taking home less money to look after their families, to contribute to the economy, or even to make ends meet. Why has this government established a policy of reducing the living standards of working families through the imposition of multiyear wage freezes?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, what the member forgets to tell Albertans is that we also have the highest average weekly earnings in this province. The fact is that we value our front-line employees – they deliver very valuable services throughout the government of Alberta – just like we value teachers and doctors. We have reached long-term deals for the benefit of students with our teachers, for the benefit of patients with our doctors, and I’m hoping that we can reach a deal with AUPE for the benefit of all Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you.

That concludes the first five. No more preambles to your supplementals, please.

Let’s go on. Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Health Services in Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What should be the best news possible, the birth of a child, is often the most frightening. With roughly 130 to 150 births per month in my constituency and only three obstetrician-gynecologists on staff many expectant mothers are choosing to deliver their babies in other municipalities to avoid long wait times. We desperately need to expand our maternity care so that mothers-to-be are not forced to sit in waiting rooms. To the Minister of Health: can you tell me what the ministry is doing to improve the access to services for mothers-to-be in my constituency?

Mr. Horne: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can. First of all, certainly, births are continuing to increase. Over the last year the average number of births has reduced slightly, from 117 to 105. We’ve increased the number of obstetrical-gynecological services this year. A fourth ob-gyn physician has successfully been recruited. A fifth recently signed a contract with Alberta Health Services. So we are well on the way to increasing the capacity to deliver more and more babies in Fort McMurray.

Mr. Allen: Thank you. To the same minister: given that the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo has a desire to build a multilevel seniors’ village which contemplates commercial and professional office space, would the minister consider including a birthing centre in the same complex?

Mr. Horne: Well, no, Mr. Speaker, we would not. What we have at the moment in Fort McMurray is a commitment to build a continuing care facility to serve the needs of seniors, which is a very important need, but we would not consider it safe from a patient safety or quality perspective to house a birthing centre in a seniors’ facility. What we are doing is looking at ways to expand the capacity within the Northern Lights health centre.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allen: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that the government has already selected land for a continuing care facility and the municipality has deferred approval for further consultation, will you provide the criteria used in the selection process so that stakeholders understand and we can get these projects moving forward?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, actually, we've done that on a number of occasions, and as the hon. Minister of Infrastructure may wish to supplement, we at the moment have two funded projects, a primary health care centre and a continuing care centre, ready to go. The land is set aside. We are awaiting permit approval from the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo to proceed. Once we have that, my understanding is that these projects will be under way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Edmonton-Riverview.

Publication Ban on Children Who Die in Care

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we heard another heart-wrenching story of a young child who died under the province's care and whose parents are barred from speaking out. For the province to forbid grieving parents from even mentioning their child's name publicly is simply cruel and unreasonable. The Minister of Human Services says that this is to protect their privacy, but across Canada almost all provinces lift this ban or won't enforce it when a child dies. Minister, is the legislation really meant to protect privacy, or is it simply meant to protect the interests of this government?

Mr. Hancock: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to get the facts right. The facts are that there's no prohibition on a parent talking about their child. The fact is that there's a publication ban. The media cannot report the name or the picture of a child who's died in care, and that is what protects the privacy of the family. The parent can talk in the community and often does and should, and that's part of the normal healing process, absolutely. But we have indicated that although we in the 2011 legislation made it discretionary or optional to be able to allow that information, we will meet in January. We will develop the . . .

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With a judge labelling the practice of making up names or only referring to children by their initials in fatality inquiries as dehumanizing, once again to the same minister: is this dehumanizing law really designed to protect privacy, or is it simply there to protect the interests of this government?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it was designed to protect privacy. But, again, this hon. member and other critics are invited as we sit down in January with the best experts available to talk about what information should be made public in the interests of assurance and what information should not in the interests of privacy. We will do that, we will bring back the best policy in the country if not in North America, and we will go forward to make sure that we have that right balance. It's a very difficult decision. It's one that's not made easily. But it is important to protect other siblings, caregivers, and others who might be unfairly accused and might be unfairly represented, and that's important, too.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the publication bans appear to be nothing more than a smokescreen to protect this government and keep the public in the dark about problems facing the system, will the minister commit today to addressing the issue and changing the legislation that gags parents after the death of a child in care?

Mr. Hancock: I would reiterate for the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, that parents are not gagged. Parents can talk about their child, and they need to talk about their child. What is not allowed is the publication of a name or a picture of a child who died in care, and that's because there are many others who may be affected. There is a discretion to allow that publication now. We brought that forward; I brought that forward in the Child and Youth Advocate Act in the fall of 2011. That discretion is sometimes utilized in appropriate circumstances, but you have to look at the circumstances on a case-by-case basis. We will, as I said, have a full discussion on this in January. We will bring that back to the Legislature in the spring, and we will . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Canadian Energy Strategy

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans understand the importance of collaboration on critical issues like responsible resource development. We know Alberta has enormous productive capacity in the world's third-largest oil reserve while New Brunswick has Canada's largest refinery and ocean access, enabling world markets. My question is to the Minister of Energy. With regard to discussions with Premier Alward are we connecting the dots to take advantage of this opportunity between Alberta and New Brunswick?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, today we had the unprecedented opportunity and honour of having Premier Alward from New Brunswick come and address all Albertans through this Chamber. The Canadian energy strategy has been an immensely effective strategy led by and with the strong focus of the Premier of this province. The Premier is focused on getting the job done. We have a focus as the province of Alberta on ensuring that we are a reliable, responsible partner in building Confederation, and that is the role of Alberta today.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: given that Premier Alward referred to the Energy East project as a game-changer and that we have called it a nation-building project, what could this project mean to workers and families in Alberta and Canada, not just the oil companies and pipeline companies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's clear that Premier Alward shares our view in Alberta and the view of many Albertans that we need to build a pipeline to tidewater, to the ocean, to ensure that we get optimum price for our resources. That means billions of dollars not just to the Treasury of the province of Alberta but to industry and employment opportunities for Canadians right across this country. The Premier of New Brunswick spoke eloquently about his own family working in Alberta and the contribution that that makes, and we're very proud of the fact that so many Canadians . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: how important is the Canadian energy strategy to achieving success on these types of projects across the jurisdictions of Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec, between here and New Brunswick?

Mr. Hughes: Well, it's quite clear, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian energy strategy has been a key enabler to allow us as Albertans to engage other Canadians. As we can see, other Canadians want to engage us as well. They want to work very constructively with us to help build the opportunities that we have in this country. You know, the Canadian energy strategy and the success thereof will come about because of these engagements with provinces like New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, British Columbia, the Northwest Territories, and other communities that want to work with us to build Canada and help ensure that all Canadians get employment.

Alberta Distance Learning Centre

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, parents across Alberta are starting to feel the impact of this government's broken-promise, back-in-debt budget. In Education it looks like the Alberta Distance Learning Centre is the latest casualty. ADLC has existed for 90 years and gives over 60,000 kids access to alternative learning options that are not available in the class, but that program is now in jeopardy. I'd like to ask the Minister of Education if he realizes that he may have inadvertently put a bull's eye on this program and the kids that rely on it?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it's a good question. I might direct the member to check Hansard from a couple of days ago because the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock actually asked very similar questions, and we gave her the answers. I would tell him again that the ADLC is a very important piece of the education system in Alberta, and with their 90-year history, which is a great history, they're going to have a great future, too.

Mr. McAllister: Well, that's four go-rounds at it, and we still haven't had an answer, Mr. Speaker.

The proof is in the pudding. The lack of foresight in Education means that boards can longer afford this program. Given that the ADLC estimates a 50 to 60 per cent reduction in enrolment next year, which potentially means tens of thousands of kids, does the minister not realize that without the program he is treating those that use it currently as second class?

Mr. J. Johnson: Well, Mr. Speaker, nothing is further from the truth. This was all debated during estimates, and we had questions on it last year as well. The issue that we had with the funding with respect to the ADLC was that there was some double-dipping going on. We're paying $1.56 for every dollar we're putting into the traditional classroom, so we're paying more for distance learning as a taxpayer. I hope that the hon. member can appreciate that we want to get value for the taxpayer. When we know that e-learning costs less to deliver, why are we paying 156 per cent of what we're paying for the traditional classroom?

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, I assure you that the boards in this province sing a different tune. You don't have to necessarily answer me today, Minister, but you ought to speak to them.

Given that there will be a couple hundred teachers on the steps of this Legislature in just a few days, probably a lot more, in fact, how are you going to explain to them that dumping distance learning makes any sense for the thousands of kids in Alberta that rely on it?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it's irresponsible statements like that that create fear in these folks. There's nothing of the sort happening. As a matter of fact, there's a very comprehensive review of distance learning happening in this province right now. It's been going on for some time; it was started by the previous minister. That report is coming due here very soon. In addition to that, the minister of advanced education, myself, the superintendent in charge of the ADLC, and the president of Athabasca University have been talking about a province-wide symposium or conference on e-learning in this province and the future of that. This is a foundational piece of education going forward, but we've got to make sure we're going to get it right.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Pipeline Environmental Issues

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The Fraser Institute has noted . . .

An Hon. Member: Whoa. Whoa.

Ms Blakeman: I know. Listen up.

. . . that the key to transcontinental pipelines and further development of the oil sands is the support of First Nations people. Now, mix in the province's poor reaction to environmental issues, which disproportionately affect First Nations, Métis, and Inuit. To the minister of environment: does the minister understand that when the province does not do its job in environmental and health protection affecting aboriginal peoples, it undermines the oil industry and jeopardizes future development?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. We care deeply about First Nations and all Albertans in this province, and we care deeply about the environmental issues in this province. That's why we work with all Albertans, be it First Nations or Métis, to make sure that we do have strong environmental policies in place and make sure that we work with Albertans on the concerns that they have when they raise them. Just yesterday I was talking to Chief Adam about issues that they have. We work very hard, as does the Minister of Aboriginal Relations, directly with First Nations and Métis.

Ms Blakeman: Same minister, Mr. Speaker: why does this government continue to minimize the concerns that are raised by First Nations people? Just today hundreds of people from Treaty 8 were on the steps of the Legislative Assembly to protest the lack of provincial accountability for damages done to their lands.

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I think the member across the way is a little high on her number of people on the steps of the Legislature today.

Mr. Speaker, I can say to you that we've had very engaging discussions with all of the treaty organizations in the province of Alberta. I've been to a number of communities, talked to chiefs and councils, talked about the environment, talked about consultation, talked about economic opportunities, talked about education. We're changing the dialogue in Alberta. We're partnering with First Nations to make sure that they succeed in all the opportunities that are available in this province, and looking after the environment is one of those key objectives.

Ms Blakeman: Talk is cheap, Mr. Speaker.

Back to the environment, minister: why does the polluter not pay in Alberta? They get an educational lecture, but they don't have to pay costs, and they don't seem to get any kind of a serious fine. Why is that?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Maybe we need to spend some time together because, quite frankly, if there are environmental issues that happen in this province, the companies are fined. That's why we actually take the time to do the investigations, which the members across the way never want us to take. But we, quite frankly, in our ministry take the time to do the investigation, and if there are charges to be laid, we lay them, and then the industry, companies pay for that.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, we seem to be having some technical difficulties with the sound system. It's not coming through as loudly. I've had three notes already. Let's speak up a little bit if we could.

Aboriginal Children

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, this week the media revealed the deep crisis of children in care in Alberta, a crisis this PC government wanted to keep secret. Nothing is more troubling than the disproportionate number of indigenous children in care and the appalling number of deaths of indigenous children. Will the minister admit that there is a crisis facing indigenous children in care and that it warrants a full public inquiry? If not, why not?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that there's an overrepresentation of aboriginal children in the care system, and that is something that we have been working hard on. We're building relationships with First Nations and with the Métis Nation of Alberta to deal with that issue, and we're achieving success. In fact, the numbers last year of aboriginal children in care went down, and they're going down again this year. It's not yet a trend, but it is evidence of very good work happening. More work needs to be done, and we will continue to do that work. It is absolutely a focus of our government through band designates, through DFNAs to deal with that issue.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, given that children at risk in indigenous communities receive significantly less funding than nonindigenous children and given that 70 per cent of children in care are indigenous, why won't this minister stop passing the buck to other governments, recognize our moral responsibility, and do what is necessary to fix the inequality faced by Alberta's indigenous children?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question, but one thing the hon. member should understand – maybe he should attend at a few First Nations communities. This is a very serious issue that First Nations take very seriously. There's a process within First Nations communities, and it's important for us as a government to understand that process, and it's important for us as a government to build the relationships and work in partnership.

Mr. Speaker, this Minister of Human Services, who has done more than any member in this House has when looking after children, has started to build those relationships. We met with the treaty organizations and will continue . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Where are the dollars, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Speaker, given that only 9 per cent of children in Alberta are indigenous yet account for a staggering 78 per cent of children who have died in foster care since 1999 and given that this government is able to find billions of dollars for the flood crisis, will the minister take responsibility and provide adequate funding to the crisis facing indigenous children to ensure that they receive a level of funding at least equal to nonindigenous children, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, we've had a few conversations with First Nations across this province and with the Métis and the Inuit, and we are putting programs in place. On December 9 we will announce our aboriginal women's council. We'll provide economic opportunities for single mothers in this province to have secure and stable homes so they can raise their children in them. We're going to have economic opportunities initiatives announced on December 9 – we'll meet with the chiefs again – that are going to provide opportunities to First Nations. We have First Nations in this province who have zero unemployment and zero children in care. We are going to continue to work with First Nations and partner with them to get to a solution and make sure that we do the best for all of our children in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Seniors' Care in Brooks

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This spring the Minister of Health met with families regarding conditions in the AgeCare facilities in Brooks. There's still work to be done to ensure that an adequate number of staff are hired to deliver proper care. In addition to auditing the facilities, the minister conducted an investigation under the Protection for Persons in Care Act. This was expected to be completed in August, but it has not yet been released. The families want this report. To the Minister: when will you release the results of this investigation?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, it is true that we did launch two investigations into two facilities in Brooks earlier this year. As I mentioned before in response to other concerns, we take all of these issues very, very seriously. At the member's request I met with representatives of his constituency who expressed these concerns. We released the public inspection reports. I am awaiting the Protection for Persons in Care Act report. Under certain circumstances we can share most of that information; whatever we can we certainly will in this instance.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hale: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the families are waiting, as soon as you get that report, you will contact the families, I hope.

Given that the main problems have been exposed and the investigation is complete and I'm still hearing a few concerns over the staff-to-patient ratio, Minister, when will you take action on the results of this investigation and other complaints?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's not forget the fact that we took immediate action as soon as these allegations were raised by this member with me in this House. That consisted of sending a team from Alberta Health Services and my department to both facilities. It included monitoring the operations at those facilities for a period of time, and it includes ongoing monitoring to ensure that both facilities are meeting the continuing care accommodation standards and continuing care health standards. This is aggressive action taken in response to very serious allegations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hale: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's great.

Given that it took significant public pressure to facilitate a timely response on the former degrading situations, what concrete steps is this government taking to ensure that complaints don't go unresolved for three years like they did in Brooks so families don't have to go through a public spectacle to get quality care for loved ones?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, public spectacles aside, as we've demonstrated in this House, particularly in response to this hon. member's concerns, we act immediately upon receipt of complaints, very serious allegations, some of which were not upheld in this case but nonetheless which we take very seriously upon their presentation. We continue to have among the most aggressive health and accommodation standards you will find in the country. We are continually improving our audit and inspection processes, and we follow up on the recommendations following those inspections.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie Smoky, followed by Little Bow.

Winter Road Maintenance

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Throughout the convention for the Association of Municipal Districts and Counties earlier this month delegates that I talked to were concerned about the standards of and maintenance being performed on provincial roads and highways. My question this afternoon is to the hon. Minister of Transportation. What is being done to improve not only the safety but the driving conditions on Alberta's rural highways?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member often puts a burr under my saddle on this when he hears from his constituents. Every year in winter people complain. We take those complaints seriously. We pass them on to the contractor. We try to get resolution. Again, we never ignore these things. I would encourage the hon. member to give details wherever he can, and we will try to address those things.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McDonald: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given the comments from the delegates, will your department be holding competitions on your maintenance contracts or raising your minimum standards for contracting companies?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, we tender out our maintenance contracts. There are some occasions where somebody that wins a contract can have it extended if they've met their obligations, but we tender those out in a transparent way in order to get the best service for the best price for Albertans. Nonetheless, problems come up from time to time. Some contractors on any given day will behave differently than others, so it requires constant vigilance. We provide that. We have GPS equipment on the equipment that says how fast they're going, whether the blades are up or down, how much salt and sand material are going on the road, and we'll continue to do that.

Mr. McDonald: No further questions. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's move on to Little Bow, followed by Calgary-Hawkwood.

Breast Cancer Screening

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For women up to 49 years of age a risk of being diagnosed with any type of cancer is 1 in 500. About 36 per cent of these cancers diagnosed in this age group will be breast cancer. Routine breast cancer screening with a mammogram can reduce breast cancer deaths by 30 per cent. However, women under 40 are being denied this because of AHS's policy to test only 40 and over. Will the health minister change AHS policy to offer young women who find a lump in their breast immediate access to mammograms?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, cancer is a growing issue in our health care system, as it is in all of Canada. As the hon. member will know, about 42 Albertans are diagnosed with cancer and about 15 people die from cancer each day in our province. To make decisions both about the extensive infrastructure we have and the treatment that is provided, we rely on clinical evidence that's evaluated by experts. We have a strategic clinical network in Alberta on cancer. They recommend protocols based on evidence around testing such as that the hon. member described.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that breast cancer can go undetected for a long period of time and that women under the age of 40 by even a few months are refused mammograms even with a doctor's requisition, will you ensure that if a doctor recommends a mammogram, any woman, regardless of her age, is going to be able to get one?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's absolutely no issue in Alberta with services such as the hon. member is describing being delivered upon the recommendation of a physician. I think the point here is that we rely on clinical evidence evaluated by clinicians to make these determinations when we issue protocols or guidelines in the system. Ultimately, the clinical judgment of the physician will prevail.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Speaker, given that when a doctor does give a requisition and if you're under the age of 40 by even a few months, it's up to the staff to decide whether they do the mammogram or not, could you please guarantee that women get this access as it is vital?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what I will guarantee is that this health care system will continue based on evidence and based on the clinical judgment of oncologists, physicians, and other health care professionals that Albertans get access to the services they need, including tests. Politicians don't make these rules. Clinicians evaluate evidence, which is changing on a regular basis, and they design protocols around services in accordance with that evidence. That's the kind of health care system we operate in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Seniors' Housing

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As people enter into their senior years, it is disheartening to learn that many of them have to move out of their communities that they have been part of for decades, becoming disconnected from friends and family and uprooted from their community simply because there are not enough seniors' homes nearby. My question is to the Associate Minister of Seniors: Have any thoughts been given by your ministry to convert old or unused schools or day cares into seniors' homes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for the question. In fact, it was just a number of weeks ago that I was up in Peace River, and we opened up a seniors' facility with Points West that did exactly what you said. We repurposed the site with the co-operation of the community, with the proper zoning. Where appropriate I think it's very valuable to do that. You know, we're building a thousand new units each and every year, and we have to continue that. With the demographic change that we're faced with here in this province, we need to continue that at an even faster pace if possible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same associate minister: given the huge demand for seniors' homes and the limited government resources, what services can your ministry provide for a group of residents in Silver Springs in my riding who want to work with government to build such facilities in nearby places?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, as you know, each and every year through the ASLI grant process we've partnered with faith-based organizations, with foundations, with private companies, with profit companies, anybody that we can partner with and use the leverage of that partnership. Last year in Calgary alone we partnered with companies providing an additional 600 sites. I'm sure that AHS will identify more sites as we go forward, and if budget allows, we'll continue to build at the pace we are.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same associate minister: given that public-private partnerships have been championed in this fiscal environment, does your ministry have money set aside to continue to do matching funds for P3 seniors' homes like what has been used for Wing Kei nursing home in Calgary?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, Wing Kei is just a classic example of a great partnership with an organization. We've cofunded a site there. I can assure the member that every penny that's in my budget every year gets allocated as quickly as possible, and when the new budget comes about next year and the year after, we'll continue to be very aggressive. The only way that we can keep ahead of this curve with the demographic change is to increase capacity, and we'll do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Continuing and Long-term Care Placements

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week the Minister of Health assured Albertans that the 100-kilometre first available bed policy had been rescinded and no longer existed. That was despite evidence to the contrary. However, another family just yesterday sounded the alarm, saying that yesterday Alberta Health staff in the central region told them that the government has simply reduced the policy from 100 kilometres to 80 kilometres. To the Associate Minister of Seniors: is your government trying to do a workaround of the 100-kilometre policy by just reducing it to 80 kilometres?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, you know, it may be a smart-sounding question, but I'm going to tell you that the folks here on this side and the people that work in Alberta Health Services work with families to make sure that families get the appropriate space. I'm going to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that every year there are between 7,000 and 8,000 placements either from acute-care facilities or from community into continuing care facilities. It's not easy to place everybody exactly where the family wants, but I can assure you that every step is being made to accommodate that.

Mrs. Towle: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate that the Associate Minister of Seniors doesn't know that his government is reducing it to the 80-kilometre rule. On June 19 the issues manager for the Premier tweeted out that central region is using David Thompson health region policy of 80 kilometres as their interim policy for seniors in care. Would someone on the other side like to explain the 80-kilometre rule to Albertans?

Mr. VanderBurg: Like I said earlier, you know, if this member wants to stand up and grandstand about 80 kilometres or whatever kilometres, she can do that, but I'm going to tell you – and I'm going to defend the system that's in place – that we try to put family members as close together as possible. We want to make sure that when there's a couple that needs placing, when there's a spouse that needs additional care, we think about that placement and that we be very mindful of the situation that we need to place people out of acute-care facilities and into a home-like setting as fast as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can honestly say that Albertans across this province do not think at any moment in time that speaking on behalf of defending Albertans and keeping couples together and keeping families or seniors in their communities is grandstanding. The question to minister is: why are you not standing up for seniors and eliminating the 80-kilometre rule as a whole?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I'm very glad this hon. member is raising this issue again today. The policy of this government is very clear. It is to place seniors, when they require facility-based care, in the facility which can best meet their needs. Whether that be dementia or Alzheimer's, whether it be other specified needs, the policy is to place the senior in the most appropriate facility that can meet their needs. Wherever possible that is closest to home and it is with a spouse, but the most important piece of this policy is that people get the care that they require.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 16 questions were recognized today with supplementals taking us to about 96.

I want to thank the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo for forgoing any preamble, but I think the prize of the day goes to the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, who came into this House about a year and a half ago but came into the world on this day many years earlier. Thank you, hon. member, for forgoing your question's second supplemental, and congratulations on your birthday. Also, kudos to Edmonton-Riverview and Little Bow for shortening their preambles.

In 30 seconds from now we will continue with Introduction of Guests, followed by Members' Statements.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are well into the time allotted normally for the introduction of guests; however, we're going to go back through. I recognize that some of the guests may have left, so if you need to put something on the record, please do so. If not, forgo your spot in the interest of time.

Let us start with Sherwood Park.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to rise before you and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the attendance earlier of 50 fine young people from St. Theresa Catholic school from my constituency of Sherwood Park. They were accompanied by teachers Luba Eshenko; Mrs. Cynthia Metzger; and parents Dave Laforce; Mark Ramsankar, president of the Alberta Teachers' Association; and Father Slavko Dumeč. Thanks for being with us today.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you 25 bright young minds from the grade 6 class at Bassano school. I have many great schools in my constituency, but Bassano school is a little special to me because I graduated from that school a few short years ago. Accompanying them today are nine parents, their teachers, and their school principal: Len Sproule, principal; Della Armstrong, a teacher; Janice Schaffer, a teacher; Melanie Chapman, a newly elected school board representative; Matthew Henry; Lorraine Bouwman; Tanya Moss; Amy Richards; Alanna Magnusson; Sung Mi Lee; Sandra Maloney; and Desirea Cunningham.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, any other school groups that were here that would like to be recorded? No?

In that case, let's move on with others. Mr. Deputy Premier, did you have an introduction for the record?

Mr. Lukaszuk: I certainly do, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly an executive and executive assistant of the Alberta Congress Board, which is a nonpartisan, nonprofit organization that hosts the annual Workplace Conference in Jasper. Its mission is to bring diverse stakeholders together from business, labour, and government. I'm pleased to inform you that in the fall of 2014 the Congress Board will be celebrating 40 years of service to Alberta. Today with us is Mr. Don Diduck, who has been a director for over 20 years, and his executive assistant, Kimberlee Sears. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, followed by the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very glad that our guest endured the last hour and 20 minutes and remained here in order that she could be introduced. It is indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Angela Groeneveld. She's one of the Albertans who has worked absolutely tirelessly to help rebuild her community since this summer's catastrophic flooding. Angela Groeneveld is a business renewal officer for the town of High River and has been instrumental in developing economic plans and strategies to restructure the town's commerce community. With her background as a business counsellor and mentor she has provided incredible experience to business owners and entrepreneurs throughout the area by fostering relationships between key stakeholders and government partners.

Mr. Speaker, High River does not want to be remembered as the town hardest hit by the flood. They want to be remembered as the town, the community, that came back the strongest. Moving forward, it is essential for the town to continue building on its strengths, including fostering a thriving business community.

I know I'm not the only one who considers Angela a hero, Mr. Speaker, for offering her expertise, but I'm one of her biggest fans, and I thank her from the bottom of my heart for everything she's done. Angela is seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, followed by the Liberal opposition leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to this Assembly some representatives of Little Warriors, a one-of-a-kind national charity dedicated to helping victims of child sexual abuse heal and move on with their lives. Today is a landmark day for Little Warriors and for sexual abuse victims across Canada. This morning I was delighted to attend their announcement that they have reached their goal and the Be Brave Ranch will soon be a reality.

Here on behalf of Little Warriors earlier today were Brandy and Halie, two survivors of abuse; Allison Lee, a wonderful young lady whose passionate YouTube video about Little Warriors has moved thousands of Albertans; Kelly Benson; and Tory Taruba. I'd ask that they receive the hearty congratulations of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, followed by the Minister of Culture.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly an outstanding individual, Dan Bildhauer. He was joined earlier by his friends Harjinder Singh Gill and Tariq Chaudhry. The South Asian community of Edmonton, in collaboration with other community organizations, is holding an intercultural and interfaith fundraising dinner for the victims of the natural disaster in the Philippines. The banquet will be held on Sunday, December 1, starting at 5 p.m. onwards, at the Maharaja Banquet Hall in Edmonton. I thank the South Asian community for showing solidarity and sympathy for fellow human beings at this time of great need and for their work in partnership with the Canadian Red Cross to help alleviate human suffering and hardships. I would ask Dan Bildhauer to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a lovely young lady, Isabelle Steppan. Isabelle's dad, Mat, is my chief of staff, and I also know her mother, Pamela. We all know how proud both of them are of Isabelle and her younger brother, Noah. I'd ask that she please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm thrilled to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly two members of the Premier's Council on Culture. The chair, Mr. Todd Hirsch, chief economist with ATB Financial, and the vice-chair, entrepreneur and best-selling author, Mr. Todd Babiak, are here with us today, enjoying question period. Council members serve us as the voices and champions of our collective cultural sector. They are incredible community leaders working on a long-term, province-wide cultural plan that aims to make Alberta's cultural sector one of the best in the world. I am so looking forward to the ideas and the wisdom that these creative minds will offer for a sustainable sector. I'd ask that they rise to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my guests from Treaty 6, Treaty 7, and Treaty 8. My guests are here today because they want to make it absolutely clear, as they did during their rally today, that they are not in favour of this PC government's consultation policy nor their response to the Obed coal slurry. This disrespect for First Nations members' concerns has led to a weak and inadequate consultation policy and has produced considerable mistrust from indigenous stakeholders, whose comments have been completely ignored. I would ask my guests to rise as I call their names: Kevin Ahkimmachie, Freida Cardinal, Shannon Houle, Francesca Kiyawasew, Jesse Cardinal, Mel Grandbouis, Chief Laboucan, Chief Courterielle, Chief Mackinaw, Victor Horseman, and a young chief from Beaver Lake.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, followed by Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a constituent of mine, Pierre Cormier. Pierre counts the Hon. David Alward, Premier of New Brunswick and our visitor to this Assembly earlier today, as a family friend. Clarence Cormier, Pierre's father, was a former Minister of Education for the province of New Brunswick. Pierre is seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that he now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, your first of two introductions.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions. Today I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly guests from my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie that are members of the Summerside Community League and the Summerside playground committee who were very instrumental in helping to build the new Michael Strembitsky playground. They worked very, very hard to raise a significant amount of money, and I would like to thank the committee. Please rise as I call out your names. Joining us today are Tracey Marshall Craig, chair of the playground committee, and her son Flynn Craig – please stand – Gale Johnson and her daughter Haley Johnson; Nicole Lindberg; Wendy Westren; and Kathy Murphy and her daughter Emily Murphy. I'd ask all of my colleagues to give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction. As you well know, southeast Edmonton is one of the fastest growing communities in Edmonton, and joining us today is the president of the Summerside Community League, Danielle Thorkelsson, as well as the vice-president of the community league, Michelle Gosselin. The ladies have worked extremely hard to build the playground as well as capture the multicultural spirit of southeast Edmonton. Once again, I'd ask my colleagues to please give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to recognize my guests that were here previously: Amarjeet Singh Grewal, Surinder Singh Braich, and Harpreet Singh Gill. The South Asian community of Edmonton is organizing a fundraiser for victims of the calamity in the Philippines, and I encourage everyone to participate in this humanitarian effort. It will be taking place at the Maharaja Banquet Hall at 5 p.m. on December 1. I just wanted to acknowledge the efforts of the Indo-Canadian community and South Asian community, who are always there to help the larger community here in the province of Alberta. I hope I see everybody out there on Sunday.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Just before we go to Members' Statements, Government House Leader, did you wish to rise?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I would. I'd like to ask unanimous consent that the Routine be extended up to 3:30 in order to make up the time that we allowed the Premier of New Brunswick to attend on the House.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: We'll continue the Routine until we finish, provided that happens before 3:30. We'll go on with members' statements, beginning with Edmonton Ellerslie.

Members' Statements

Michael Strembitsky School Playground

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to stand today and recognize the recent opening of the Michael Strembitsky school playground in my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie. On September 11 I was privileged to be part of the ribbon-cutting ceremony at this brand new playground. Most importantly, I was honoured to stand alongside dedicated members of the Summerside Community League and Summerside playground committee when the new structure was unveiled and opened to community members. Many of these community members are here today in the gallery. It is because of these hard-working and dedicated individuals that children and their families in Edmonton-Ellerslie as well as the students at the Michael Strembitsky school now have a brand new playground to enjoy.

In addition to local fundraising completed by the community members, this project was also complemented by provincial grant programs. Over the past five years the provincial government has provided over $29 million worth of funding through the community facility enhancement program, which is available to organizations to plan, upgrade, and develop community-use facilities to enhance the lives and well-being of its users. Mr. Speaker, this also includes playgrounds.

In addition to CFEP, additional funding has also been provided through the community initiatives program, enriching communities and local citizens, to respond to the local needs regarding facilities construction and equipment purchases among many other things. Over the past five years, Mr. Speaker, over $32 million has been funded through these grant programs to help build a very important part of Alberta's communities.

I would like to once again thank the members of the Summerside Community League and the playground committee for their unwavering dedication to supporting families and fostering community-based initiatives throughout the neighbourhood.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by Calgary-Fort.

Sikh Community Generosity

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Typhoon Haiyan struck the Philippines on November 7 with winds up to 315 kilometres an hour and waves over five metres high. The devastation it wrought was unimaginable, destroying homes and villages and costing over 5,000 lives. The Filipino community in Alberta was quick to respond, raising money and supplies for those in need. This tragedy was great, and the Filipino community called upon and co-ordinated their efforts with other immigrant communities.

Thanks to the president of the Dashmesh Culture Centre, Mr. Jarnail Singh Nijjar, members of the Sikh community heard the call, and on November 17 they set up a table in the temple and raised over $30,000 for Typhoon Haiyan from the Sikh community. The Sikh community's response was overwhelming.

We as a community have a history of helping others in times of need. From strong support for a local women's shelter to continual support of the Inter-Faith Food Bank and the Mustard Seed, the Sikh community has been at the forefront of generosity. When those in Haiti and Kashmir suffered a horrible earthquake, the Sikh community stepped forward. When the floodwater ravaged Calgary, the community raised $35,000 in the temple and another $175,000 and seven and a half tonnes of food in less than a day through the RED FM Radiothon.

But the Sikh community's commitment to humanitarian causes has not been just financial. All of the Sikhs were not free. When the forces of tyranny allied themselves against the free peoples of the world, the Sikhs fought nobly for honour, for freedom, and for peace. Between the two world wars over 109,000 Sikhs were wounded and 83,000 Sikhs laid down their lives. But the battles the Sikhs fought were not limited to Southeast Asia. The freedom of Europe is dependent upon the tens of thousands of Sikhs who fought bravely in trenches and fields far from home.

I wish to thank the Sikh community for their compassion, generosity, and sacrifice. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Chris Gibbons

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On November 23 many of us here in the Legislature lost a dear friend. Chris Gibbons came to Alberta in 1988 with his wife, Collette. He discovered a passion for software design and in 1990 started his own software design company, Caseworks Systems. A skilled entrepreneur, it wasn't long before Chris was designing programs for communities across the prairies. He designed many of the daily programs used by health inspectors and health care providers today. Chris remained the president of Caseworks Systems for 28 years.

In 1992 he became involved in politics as an active member of our Progressive Conservative Party. He was president of the Calgary-Fish Creek PC association for nine years, only stepping down when issues with his health made it impossible to continue. Chris was proud of his involvement in provincial politics, and we were very lucky to have him.

His greatest pride and joy, however, was his family. Mr. Speaker, before becoming Chris's loving wife, Collette had been his high school sweetheart. She passed away in 2004, but together they were blessed with a loving, happy family filled with children and grandchildren. In this difficult time our thoughts are with Chris's family: the children, Jennifer and Chris, and grandchildren, Riley, Victoria, Anastasia, and Aria.

Upon receiving a letter from our Premier while resting in the hospice – Chris was aware of his situation – he said: I've had a good run. That is something we can all agree with, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, followed by the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Grande Prairie Regional College

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 23 the rankings for Canada's top 50 research colleges for 2013 were released, and I'm so pleased to report that the Grande Prairie Regional College and its campuses across the northwest, including Fairview, fared extremely well. GPRC was ranked number 1 for growth, number 3 for research intensity, and number 15 for research funding. This is a noteworthy change from the ranking last year of number 43.

This achievement is credited in part to the hard work of the college staff and the board and in part as well to the establishment of the National Bee Diagnostic Centre a year ago. The centre is the only federal bee research program in the country and looks at bee health as well as offers honeybee diagnostic services and surveillance data to industry and government bodies right across Canada.

Alberta is strongly represented in the ratings, with SAIT and NAIT leading in research colleges, placing first and second respectively in research income, but GPRC's ranking attracted a total of $2.56 million and saw a phenomenal growth rate of 377 per cent, far more than any other institution. The members of the faculty at GPRC are to be credited for this incredible success with their projects on social and environmental research as well as bee population health and diagnostic research.

I would like to recognize and congratulate the faculty and staff at GPRC and the other Alberta colleges who made the rankings for their leadership in investing in quality research. I'm very proud of our colleges for achieving this national recognition, which will undoubtedly have a positive impact on our communities and our province. There is a bright future for students for many years to come.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, followed by Edmonton-Manning.

Be Brave Ranch

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today I was thrilled to attend a news conference announcing that the Be Brave Ranch, a first-of-its-kind treatment facility for victims of childhood sexual abuse, will finally become a reality. The Be Brave Ranch is the vision of Glori Meldrum and the Little Warriors, a national charitable organization that exists to educate adults on how to prevent, recognize, and react to child sexual abuse.

Mr. Speaker, as Glori always points out, sexual abuse is not a minor crime. It is a horrific crime, that can and often does leave lasting scars on its young victims. These scars come with great pain and can only heal when the community steps up and decides that it's going to help, and that is what Glori and the Little Warriors have done with the help of so many volunteers and donors. Together they have raised the $3.5 million they needed to open the ranch entirely from private contributions. The ranch will open this summer and operate for a two-year trial period, during which time it aims to treat 100 children per year.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to close with some comments from foster mom Brandy, herself a victim of child sexual abuse, who chose to adopt Halie, also a victim of this heinous crime, who just found out today that she will be one of the first children to be treated at the ranch. She says: I know all too well the true cost of what happens when children have their innocence taken from them by people we thought we knew: innocence, self esteem, pride, and value, ripped unexpectedly in the most vile ways. Then she goes on: the Be Brave Ranch will bring light where there was once only shadows, and it'll mean that kids will have a chance to be kids again, and parents will be able to see their kids smile again, really, truly smile; you never know what a blessing that is until you watch your child's smile be stolen, unsure if or when it will return. Parents and kids will be given the gift of knowing how to deal when memories come instead of . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Edmonton-Manning.

Brintnell Park

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to talk about a better way to build play parks. This summer I was honoured to attend the grand opening of Brintnell Park in my riding, a community that raised a lot of money, including winning a $100,000 grant from Schneider's through social media. I'm thrilled that another community in my riding, Hollick-Kenyon, will see their decade of hard work pay off with a new park next spring.

However, the average price of neighbourhood play parks is between $600,000 and $1 million, or close to 500,000 hot dogs if you're trying to raise money with barbecues. Although grants are available, a community must still raise the initial half million dollars for the matching funds. This idea works fine when the park costs only $100,000 to build, but it does not any longer. Instead of taking months to raise enough money, it's now taking years, Mr. Speaker.

So why do communities do it? The playground is a meeting area for a community, a place where a family can play, exercise, and meet their neighbours. A more engaged neighbourhood can result in less crime, Mr. Speaker. Children who play do better in school. Families who play together are happier and healthier.

It takes too long to build parks. We need out-of-the-box thinking. Since 2008 I have met many municipal leaders to discuss options, with no results. Developers should set aside $1,000 per lot for park building. I would urge all my colleagues to work together to develop policy that will ensure that every neighbourhood in Alberta has a play park.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(3) to advise the House that on Monday, December 2, 2013, written questions 42 and 43 will be accepted.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to section 15(2) of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act I am pleased to table the 2013-2014 second-quarter update on the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. Copies were distributed to members' offices earlier this week.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View or someone on behalf of? Edmonton-Centre, then, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Lucky me. I get to do all kinds of people's. I've got two of my own to start with, that are related. The first is copies of news stories about the walkout of guards at correctional facilities across Alberta, that I will be referencing later.

The second one is the answering response from Mr. Laville, the Justice and Solicitor General ministry spokesperson, in which he does admit that there was glass that needed to be replaced.

Then I have a report from my constituency office, the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. We've created this report to bring forward the names and the concerns of a number of my constituents who wrote to me to express their opposition to the pension sustainability reforms that are proposed by the government. They're very proud of the service that they provide to Albertans, and they find it very difficult to reconcile this demand to reduce their benefits. They've made plans based on that, and they're finding that this is really a broken promise. That's the report.

Now, on behalf of my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a report, From Words to Action: Alberta Can Afford a Real Poverty Reduction Strategy, published this month, November 2013. It's a joint study released by Public Interest Alberta, the Alberta College of Social Workers, and the Edmonton Social Planning Council, talking about a child poverty strategy that will take real steps to protect children.

Finally, on behalf of my colleague the leader of the third party and the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, copies of the letter from that individual to the Right Honourable Stephen Harper, the Prime Minister of Canada, asking him to use the power that only the federal government has to be able to bring together all parties necessary to protect vulnerable aboriginal children.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Little Bow, then the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to table more copies of handwritten letters my office has received expressing concerns about the deep cuts to postsecondary education that are happening in Alberta. These letters call on this PC government to reverse their harmful cuts to postsecondary education. A feeling of confusion, frustration, and hopelessness is reflected in over a thousand letters that my office has received from concerned staff and students at the University of Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the requisite copies of the 2013 Performance Measure Update, where AHS has failed to meet their participation targets by more than 10 per cent on mammograms.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona raised a point of privilege against myself, I believe, or the Premier, relevant to the breach of the House's privilege, relevant to the tabling of bills vis-à-vis the timing of doing a press conference. As you know, points of privilege are the highest accusation one can levy. Well, it looks like the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was rather liberal with her facts.

Mr. Saskiw: Point of clarification, Mr. Speaker. Are these tablings, or is he arguing a point of privilege?

Mr. Lukaszuk: I would like to table, Mr. Speaker, a copy of a document that Kim Trynacity of CBC Edmonton has filed showing that at 3:09 p.m. the media was waiting in the press gallery . . .

Mr. Saskiw: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. What is this?

The Speaker: Hon. member, do we have a tabling? How many tablings do you have?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Just three.

The Speaker: Three?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Yeah.

The Speaker: Which one are you on now?

Mr. Lukaszuk: The first one.

The Speaker: Good. Let's get on with it. [interjections]

Hon. members, please.

Just get on with the tabling, if you would, Deputy Premier. Shorten up.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, what we have is a copy of a communication from Kim Trynacity at 3:09 p.m. showing that media is still awaiting a briefing. We have a copy of a communication made by Mr. Matt Dykstra of Sun Media at 3:07 showing that the media is still awaiting briefing. Oddly enough, we have a time-stamped picture of the hon. leader of the ND opposition on the front steps of the Alberta Legislature at 2:33 p.m. indicating that this is the most draconian piece of legislation he has ever seen, indicating that he has seen that piece of legislation.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we had two interjections during that tabling. Again, I'm going to ask House leaders from all four caucuses to please review the matter surrounding preambles to tablings. This is not a new issue for this Assembly. It comes up every time during tablings. Some people take a very long time doing their introductions, and some people take very little time, which is the more proper way of doing it. We don't have anything hard-cased that we can rely on in that respect, so I leave it to the House leaders to address that matter as well as numerous others I have mentioned.

Let us move on, then.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document has been deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Drysdale, the Minister of Infrastructure, responses to written questions 28, 29, and 33, all asked for by Mr. Barnes on April 15, 2013.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have some points of order, one in particular. I believe the hon. Member for Airdrie rose on a point of order at around 2 o'clock. Who is prepared to move forward with the citation, please?

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise according to Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). It's in regard to a comment made by the Deputy Premier during question period in which he stated – and I don't have the benefit of the Blues with me – essentially that the Wildrose plan was to cut salaries by 20 per cent. Of course, the Deputy Premier is known for making things up, and that does cause disorder in the Assembly.

Mr. Hancock: Point of order.

Mr. Saskiw: You can't call a point of order during a point of order. You should learn the rules, too.

Mr. Speaker, I've seen, actually, in the Assembly that he has a copy of Budget 2013: Wildrose Financial Recovery Plan, so I think he would know that in regard to our plans there's some wording there that says, "maintain front line positions and salaries."

If you continue down there, completely contrary to what the Deputy Premier said – and I think it's actually a great opportunity that he's mentioned this so that we can outline our plan to the various entities that are now negotiating or dealing with the government – it states:

Wildrose has never proposed cuts to the salaries of Alberta's front-line public sector workers. However, until the provincial budget is returned to a cash surplus position (that would be in 2014 under the Wildrose plan), the Wildrose will work collaboratively and respectfully with public sector unions to hold the line on the current overall expenditure on front line public sector salaries.

Mr. Speaker, I can understand why the Deputy Premier might be confused because on the next page it states that one of our recommendations is to "reduce what is spent on the salaries, benefits, bonuses, and severance packages for non-front-line workers in the government and AHS bureaucracies [friends of the government's party] by 20% . . . over the next 4 years."

Mr. Speaker, hopefully, this educates the Deputy Premier, and I'm very glad that we had the opportunity to highlight our policy.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Deputy Premier, do you wish to respond?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, of course, Mr. Speaker. The fact is that in that very document, their alternative budget or whatever they call it, they say:

For the most part, Alberta's public servants are well compensated through pay, benefits, and pensions. Numerous studies indicate that Alberta's public sector is compensated substantially more than in any other province and the most recent statistics show that their hourly wages are approximately 20% higher than [those] across the country.

But then they say, Mr. Speaker, and I find it very peculiar, that they would negotiate with front-line workers in good faith – negotiate in good faith – but they say that they would "hold the [hard] line on front-line public sector salaries until the provincial cash deficit is eliminated." Well, those two things are very much contradictory. I believe that this, as a matter of fact, is a matter of opinion. The fact is that one cannot negotiate in good faith and also hold the hard line and freeze salaries until there is no financial deficit. [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, no misinterpretation and definitely not making up facts.

The Speaker: Okay. Thank you very much.

Hon. members, let me make a couple of comments briefly here. At approximately 1:59:01 this afternoon, during question period, the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition stood to ask a question about negotiations pertaining to public-sector salaries. According to the Blues, which I have, the Deputy Premier responded this way: "Mr. Speaker, this is very rich coming from a leader and a party that have campaigned on reducing public-sector salaries by 20 per cent and freezing their pay until the deficit is eliminated in this province." Immediately after that, the hon. Member for Airdrie rose and said, "Point of order," and then, loudly enough for Hansard to catch, he also said, "Flat-out lies." [interjections]

Now, one comment, as we know in this House, tends to provoke another comment; one action tends to provoke another action just like you've heard just now when I read the statement. So I have two comments. Number one, with respect to the point of order there is no point of order as such. There is certainly a point of clarification. I allowed Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills to go a little longer and explain their position, his position, their party's position, and I allowed the Deputy Premier to go on and conclude his position on behalf of his colleagues. The difference of opinion is clear. It frequently happens in here. There might be a dispute as to the facts as they state, but nonetheless it's a point of clarification.

What I do want to do, though, in this regard is to ask the Leader of the Official Opposition if she would please speak with her member from Airdrie about the comments he made, because saying "flat-out lies" is not parliamentary language in this context here. You can use other words, but that wouldn't be a very appropriate choice of language. Perhaps you could just bring that to that member's attention if you would, please.

That having been said, we shall move on to the next item, the point of privilege.

Privilege

Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

The Speaker: As all members here would know, points of privilege are the most serious points that can be raised in this Assembly, one elected official toward or against another, and that requires very serious consideration.

However, there are a few issues that still remain outstanding, in my view, or questions that remain unanswered, in my view, concerning the purported question or questions of privilege that were raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona yesterday on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Let me first remind you that under Standing Order 15, which is titled Privilege, subsection 15(3) among other things states that:

the Speaker may defer debate on the matter to a time when he or she determines it may be fairly dealt with.

It goes on to read in subsection 15(4):

If the Member whose conduct is called into question is not present, the matter shall be deferred to the next day that the Member is present unless the Speaker rules that, in the circumstances, the matter may be dealt with in the Member's absence.

Now, as acknowledged by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona yesterday at page 3167 of Hansard, there could very well be three different issues or purported questions of privilege in this respect. Put briefly, the issues as I have summarized them are as follows: one, the alleged reference in a brochure to a multiyear wage freeze for Members of the Legislative Assembly in spite of the fact that the Members' Services Committee has not approved such a multiyear freeze; two, the alleged reference in the same brochure to a wage freeze for public-sector employees, which is the subject of Bill 46, the Public Service Salary Restraint Act, which was introduced yesterday in this Assembly; and three, an alleged news conference or technical briefing on Bill 45, the Public Sector Services Continuation Act, and Bill 46 prior to their introduction in this Assembly.

In considering this matter, as your chair I wanted some assurances put on the record from the ministers responsible for the aforementioned bills and from whichever minister or ministers are responsible for the brochure that was referred to, or the householder or whatever it may have been called, and which was referenced by Edmonton-Strathcona, by the Deputy Premier, and perhaps by others yesterday.

First, your chair would like to know more about the referenced brochure containing the material referred to yesterday. For example, when was this brochure produced? Who produced it? When and how and to whom was it distributed? And whatever other information might be useful for your chair to know under the circumstances. There won't be any need to further characterize or analyze the language that was used in that document because that was already done and quoted on yesterday.

Second, it would be very helpful for your chair to know more about the nature of the news conference held yesterday in connection with bills 45 and 46. Was it a news conference? Was it a technical briefing? Was it an embargoed briefing? Exactly what was it? What time did it start? What time did it finish? And so on. Was there more than one such media session or technical briefing, and where was it held? Anything that would shed light on that matter would be much appreciated.

So if the minister or ministers responsible are not in a position today to respond to these questions – and I can well appreciate they may not be – then the chair would appreciate receiving written responses to these questions from whomever is responsible by not later than 4 p.m. tomorrow, Friday, November 29, 2013. The responses can be sent to me in my Speaker's office. Please know that any responses or written communications that I receive related to this matter will be tabled in this Assembly as soon as I'm able to.

Now, assuming that I do receive the requested information on a timely basis as mentioned, I would hope to find time to then review the matters at question and to provide you with a ruling as soon as possible thereafter.

That concludes that matter for the time being, and we can move on to Orders of the Day.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: If I may in response to part of your request . . .

The Speaker: Well, you can't respond to it, but if you request a point of clarification, I might be able to give it. But I've just indicated what the situation and the status is of the point of privilege for now.

Mr. Mason: Yes. I thought you were asking us for information in response to your questions, and I have some.

The Speaker: Hon. member, if you want to provide that to me, then I'll consider that as well.

Mr. Mason: But not now?

The Speaker: Not now, please. We've already called Orders of the Day.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 28

Modernizing Regional Governance Act

The Deputy Chair: At this time I understand that we have an amendment from the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. A couple of weeks ago, 10 days ago, we had announced and discussed that we were going to set up a task force which had representation from AAMD and C, the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties; the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association; the Capital Region Board; the Calgary Regional Partnership; the city of Calgary; and the city of Edmonton. We worked very vigorously, very diligently, as did I myself as a member of that task force, through Bill 28. We worked on it line by line and made a few proposed changes. So I would like to propose an amendment now.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, do you have copies of the amendment that we can distribute?

Mr. Griffiths: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause for a moment while the pages distribute the copies of the amendment to our Assembly. This will be known as amendment A1.

Hon. member, I think we have enough distributed. You can continue, please.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

Mr. Saskiw: Point of clarification, Madam Chair. I'm just wondering. Normally these are approved by Parliamentary Counsel. Is this approved?

The Deputy Chair: Yes, this has been approved by Parliamentary Counsel.

Mr. Saskiw: Okay. Because it's not signed.

The Deputy Chair: I'm sorry. It's approved by Legislative Counsel.

Please continue, hon. member.

3:30

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'd like to read the contents of the amendment. The bill is amended as follows:

A The title of the Bill is struck out and the following is substituted:

Enabling Regional Growth
Boards Act

B Section 4 is amended in the proposed section 603.1(3)(c) by striking out "2015" and substituting "2017".

C Section 6 is amended

(a) by adding the following after the proposed section 708.01:

Purpose

708.011 The purpose of this Part is to enable 2 or more municipalities to initiate, on a voluntary basis, the establishment of a growth management board to provide for integrated and strategic planning for future growth in those municipalities.

(b) in the proposed section 708.02(1)

(i) by adding "on the request of 2 or more municipalities" after "Minister";

(ii) by adding "in respect of those municipalities" after "board";

(c) by striking out the proposed section 708.03(2) and substituting the following:

(2) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may appoint one or more persons to a growth management board to represent the Government of Alberta, but those persons do not have voting rights.

(d) in the proposed section 708.07(2) by adding the following after clause (d):

(e) the power to appoint an auditor;

(f) the power to recommend the approval of a growth plan.

(e) by renumbering the proposed section 708.09 as section 708.09(1) and by adding the following after subsection (1):

- (2) On receiving the report under subsection (1), the Minister must lay a copy of it before the Legislative Assembly if it is then sitting or, if it is not then sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting.
  - (f) in the proposed section 708.1(1) by striking out “, with or without modifications or conditions,”;
  - (g) in the proposed section 708.14(1) by striking out “Minister” and substituting “growth management board”;
  - (h) in the proposed section 708.17
    - (i) in subsection (1) by striking out “The chief elected official of a” and substituting “A”;
    - (ii) by striking out subsection (2) and substituting the following:
      - (2) A participating municipality that contravenes subsection (1) is guilty of an offence and liable to a fine of not more than $10 000.
    - (iii) in subsection (3) by adding “participating” before “municipality”.
  - (i) by striking out the proposed section 708.23 and substituting the following:

Appeal or dispute resolution mechanism

708.23(1) A growth management board must at its inception establish by bylaw an appeal mechanism or dispute resolution mechanism, or both, for the purposes of resolving disputes arising from actions taken or decisions made by the growth management board.

    - (2) Section 708.08(2) and (3) apply to a bylaw made under this section as if the bylaw were made under that section.
  - (j) in the proposed section 708.25 by adding the following after subsection (2):
    - (3) For greater certainty but without the limiting the generality of subsection (2), sections 708.011, 708.02(1) and 708.23 do not apply to the Capital Region Board Regulation (AR 38/2012).
- D Section 12 is struck out and the following is substituted:
- 12 The Capital Region Board Regulation (AR 38/2012) is amended
- (a) by repealing section 24 and substituting the following:

Information must be provided

24(1) A participating municipality must, when required in writing by the Capital Region Board to do so, provide the Capital Region Board with information about the participating municipality that the Capital Region Board requires.

(2) A participating municipality that contravenes subsection (1) is guilty of an offence and liable to a fine of not more than $10 000.

(3) This section does not apply to information acquired by a participating municipality that is subject to any type of legal privilege, including solicitor-client privilege.
  - (b) by repealing section 33 and substituting the following:

Expiry

33 For the purpose of ensuring that this Regulation is reviewed for ongoing relevancy and necessity, with the option that it may be repassed in its present or an amended form following a review, this Regulation expires on November 30, 2018.

Madam Chairman, the task force was a very incredible experience to work on. Never in the history of this Legislature, to my knowledge – and I couldn’t find anyone else who had previous knowledge about it – has a bill been introduced and then a task force had the ability to go through that bill line by line. Normally our consultation processes are done on a conceptual basis, talking about some of the issues and the challenges. Then as per the prerogative and privilege of this House the bills are tabled, and then discussion ensues in this Assembly. This task force expressed many times their appreciation to have an actual bill presented to the House and an opportunity to go line by line through the bill to advise on improvements that could be made.

I have to tell you, Madam Chairman, that after four task force meetings, where we went through every single line of the bill, went through some proposed amendment ideas . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, we have a point of order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: My apologies, Minister, but I just noticed that there are a number of sections in this amendment, and under Beauchesne 688 and given the precedents of this House, I’m going to ask that the votes on sections A, B, C, and D be severed for the purpose of voting but not for the purposes of discussion.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. That will be so ordered.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you.

We had a fantastic discussion, and they very much appreciated the process that we went through. Of the four meetings, Madam Chairman, in the first two we went through the bill line by line so that everyone had perfect clarity about the bill, what its intentions were, and what it said. In the third task force meeting all the task force members again participated, and we wrote up what we thought the amendments could be and what they would look like. In the fourth meeting it turned out we needed very little time. Everyone was in concurrence, actually unanimous concurrence, about what we concluded at the end of that meeting for amendments, and the work that they had done was very much appreciated.

Madam Chairman, we then compiled the list of proposed amendments and the wording that we had conceived for them, not the actual amendments but the proposed conceptual amendments. All of the associations – I’ll list them again: the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, the Capital Region Board members, the Calgary Regional Partnership members, the city of Calgary, and the city of Edmonton – received a compiled list of them with the explanation and description and the wording that we had discussed. They were circulated to all members from each of those associations and organizations for feedback, and it happened last week.

The report I got back was that there was overwhelming support and consensus from those members and the participating members on the task force and the members that they represented, Madam Chairman. But I still wasn’t quite sure if that would be enough, so we made sure that we had a conference call where all municipalities were invited to join – every member of the task force was invited to join – to discuss exactly what we were proposing, and they had all had time to see those e-mails that went out on what we had discussed at the task force from their respective members.

I had said that I would stay on the phone and answer every question that came up until there were no more questions. I had blocked three hours, thinking there might be some very complex questions because it is a complex issue. It was really interesting, Madam Chairman, because most all municipalities had joined in on the call, and it only lasted 39 minutes. [some applause] Yeah, I was impressed.

Out of 13 questions that we got, there were six that simply called in and wanted to express their appreciation for the process and their support for the amendments. One gentleman asked questions twice. The first time was to ask a point of clarification. He said that he knew the answer, but he wanted his fellow councillors on the phone to hear the answer as well, and he then came back on the line just to express appreciation. That brought our total up to seven. Then there were two calls, two questions that came in, and they withdrew the questions because they said that we'd already answered them. That was the end of the calls.

I have been through AUMA and have been through AAMD and C. I believe we met with 68 different municipalities through that process and with anybody else. Those were the ones who had called and asked for invites and a chance to sit down and talk. We've gone through the bill and the proposed amendments, Madam Chairman, and I'm very glad that by the end of the AUMA and the AAMD and C I had heard I couldn't even tell you how many. I met with a lot of councillors in the hallway as well. Every single one of them that I met said that they understood exactly what we were intending to do. They never doubted for a moment that our intention was to make this voluntary, which, they appreciated, was why we were using the exact words that go along with the commissions, that are laid out in the MGA.

They knew that the commissions – water commissions and waste commissions – are formed entirely on a voluntary basis, but the wording, that was a bit confusing to some people, which is the same wording we use in commissions, simply says that in order for it to have weight and authority, the minister has to put it in regulation. But it still originates with the municipalities. We have through this made it expressly clear so that no one can lead anyone with deceptive comments about our intentions. It's expressly clear, Madam Chairman, exactly what our intentions are.

With that, I would just like to quickly review the five key areas of the amendments. The first clearly articulates that the act is renamed from the Modernizing Regional Governance Act, because this isn't about regional governance, Madam Chairman, to the Enabling Regional Growth Boards Act. It clearly defines that it's about regional growth management boards and that it's enabling legislation, so municipalities can choose it if they wish.

The second, Madam Chairman, strictly and clearly defines in a few sections that this has been and always will be intended to be voluntary. It's a tool for municipalities to use to manage the incredible growth that this province is going to have over the next decade. I had pointed out at the AUMA and the AAMD and C that, at minimum, we're probably looking at, if the trend continues and we don't see more growth, potentially another 1.3 million people moving to this province. For many of our municipal councillors in four years that's over half a million people. They're going to have to manage their growth and need all the tools in place, not to become isolationist but to work together in partnership, like they have with water and waste-water commissions and IDPs and so many other tools that this government has put in place for them to utilize.

The third, Madam Chairman, is an appeal mechanism – we had some great discussion about that, and I left it to the task force members – or a dispute resolution process. As I explained to them many times, it's up to them to write the bylaws should they wish to form a growth management board. It's up to them to write the rules on how they want it to operate. It's up to them to decide what the appeal mechanism would be or what the dispute resolution process would be going forward for any new voluntary boards that are set up. It's their rules, so they should write those rules on how they're going to manage each other's expectations and ensure that they do it in a co-operative manner.

I'd like to point out that the same questions were asked: what do you do if you want out? I'd said, Madam Chairman, that those, again, go into the bylaws. The bylaws should clearly articulate, just as they do with commissions, how it is that a partnering municipality might want to leave that partnership. It's not a rule for me to write; it never was. It's always been a rule for the growth management boards and for commissions to write.

The fourth area is the penalties section or the enforcement section. We had taken exactly what was written in the Municipal Government Act as a penalties mechanism, which is still in the Municipal Government Act. In the discussions with the task force it was made very clear that when you're looking at providing information, there isn't usually a person to blame for that. It's the participating municipality, the corporation itself, so fines would be appropriate, but penalties or imprisonment, which we never used anyway, aren't necessary. We've removed that section, and I still think it will work very well, and so do they.

Finally, we had a few miscellaneous items, which you'll note through there, Madam Chairman. The bill is going to be amended to empower the regional board to set the time frames to conform to their regional growth plans, which they had asked for. There's a removal of a reference to appoint a public member. That will be and should always be a job of the board to choose. It clarifies that the minister will approve or reject a growth plan but that if it's rejected with recommendations sent back to the board, then they will make modifications, and finally, that the minister responsible will be tabling the growth plan from the regional board in session, when we are sitting.

The municipalities are very excited about this. The partnering municipalities on the task force expressed appreciation for the work that was done. Madam Chairman, I'm very proud of the work that we accomplished.

With that, I would like to adjourn debate.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I'd move that the committee rise and report progress on Bill 28.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

Mr. Khan: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 28. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

All those in favour of the report given by the Member for St. Albert, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: All those opposed, please say no. That's carried.

Unanimous consent has been requested to revert to Introduction of Guests.

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to have the first opportunity since the election in October to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly the new mayor of Edmonton, Don Iveson. I'd just like to say very quickly that I've known Mayor Iveson for some number of years since he was a student at Strathcona high school, where my wife taught, and was engaged in student activities. I have followed his progress through student politics, where he served as an adviser for many years, and then his progress into municipal politics, where we on occasion have talked about smart cities and other important topics. I'm looking forward, as I know members of this House are, to working with him in his term, taking Edmonton even further and even higher with a vision for the future of this city and this province.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 45 Public Sector Services Continuation Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my privilege to rise and move second reading of Bill 45, the Public Sector Services Continuation Act.

Alberta's public-sector employees are critical to creating and maintaining healthy, safe, and vibrant communities. They provide vital services every day, services that are highly valued by Albertans. That's why the Public Service Employee Relations Act and the Labour Relations Code make it illegal for certain workers covered by those pieces of legislation to go on strike.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The illegal strike provisions in the acts and regulations I've just referenced have been in place for many years. However, they have not been updated for 20 years. It was incumbent on government to ask if the penalties in place were still a sufficient deterrent to illegal strikes that negatively affect critical public services because these are services that are provided to the most vulnerable of Albertans. When illegal strike action gets in the way of these services, the confidence of Albertans in those services and the people who provide them is undermined.

There have been some concerns in various sectors in the past. We learned that we didn't have the up-to-date tools necessary to deal with current realities. In essence, this bill is about protecting the Alberta taxpayer from personal or financial harm due to an illegal strike. It establishes a more comprehensive and responsive system to respond to the threat of illegal strikes or strikes themselves. That's important, Mr. Speaker, because in some circumstances the threat of a strike requires significant mobilization of resources to avert harm in the event that a strike happens. I believe that this legislation will serve as an effective deterrent to illegal behaviour, and I believe it will help ensure that Albertans receive the critical services and supports that they want and that they need.

It also shows government's belief in the importance of the rule of law. The Canadian Superior Courts Judges Association has explained the rule of law this way:

Our laws embody the basic moral values of our society. They impose limits on the conduct of individuals in order to promote the greater good and to make our communities safe places to live. It is against the law to steal, to injure another person, to drive recklessly or to pollute the environment, to name just a few of the countless ways the law is designed to protect us . . . Everyone, no matter how wealthy or how powerful they are, must obey the law or face the consequences.

I believe that the great majority of Albertans would agree with that statement. I also believe that Albertans would agree that inherent in that statement is the belief that the consequences of breaking the law should be clearly in keeping with the gravity of the offence.

Bill 45 addresses the need for serious consequences for breaking the law when it comes to conducting an illegal strike by public-sector employees. This legislation is about giving Albertans confidence that the services they rely on will continue and that there are severe penalties for illegal strikes. When a public-sector union carries out an illegal strike, Albertans are put at risk. This bill will ensure stronger penalties for unions that take illegal action and will ensure that taxpayers are protected in the event of an illegal strike.

In the event of an illegal strike, Bill 45 calls for a fine to the union of $250,000 per day plus $50 per day for each member of the bargaining unit. Each employee who engages in an illegal strike can be fined one day's pay for each day they take part in the strike action. The bill also calls for automatic dues suspension for three months for the first day of an illegal strike and of one month for each additional day, creation of a liability fund that requires the union to pay to the court $1 million per day or partial day – the money paid to the court will be used to satisfy any judgments with respect to losses incurred by the employer as a result of the strike, and of course if the fund is larger than those losses, the balance of the funds would be returned to the union that paid them – civil liability that allows the employer to seek cost recovery for any immediate or subsequent effects of the illegal strike, and civil contempt for nonpayment of orders to pay the money.

Workers prohibited from striking under the Public Service Employee Relations Act and the Labour Relations Code include firefighters, hospital employees, Alberta Health Services employees, ambulance operators, Crown employees, nonacademic staff at public postsecondary institutions, and employees at government agencies. It is important to note, Mr. Speaker, that the government believes that the majority of workers in these sectors would not willingly take part in illegal activity. We also believe that they understand and accept that the provisions in these pieces of legislation exist because strikes and lockouts in these sectors can either harm Albertans or put them at great health, safety, or financial risk. However, once a union has called an illegal strike, workers are often caught between a rock and a hard place. Regardless of how they might feel individually, there's always pressure on them to follow the dictates of their union leaders. Crossing an illegal picket line would be a challenge for even the most law-abiding of workers; not doing so would not necessarily indicate support for an illegal strike.

For anyone who would position this legislation as a solution in search of a problem, I would point out what happened in April of last year. That was the month in which 2,000 correctional peace officers abandoned their posts and walked off their jobs. The effects of this illegal job action were immediate and demonstrably serious. In one institution more than 450 inmates were left to be attended by only seven managerial staff. This put the inmates, their health care workers, and the remaining managerial personnel at great personal risk, but more importantly it also put the public at risk. An escape of prisoners from that institution or any other in the province could have resulted in dangerous and desperate individuals being released into the community. This illegal strike also spread to sheriffs and probation officers. Had the strike gone on for any length of time, it could have had serious repercussions in the court system. That could have also resulted in individuals who should be incarcerated being released back into the public.

But as much as this illegal strike action was about public safety, it was also an attack on the public purse. The measurable financial cost to the taxpayers was calculated and is now the subject of legal action. These costs were the result of having RCMP act as guards and overtime costs related to managerial staff. Those are the funds that could have been used for operating schools, for delivering health care, and for protecting the vulnerable. And what was the cost to the union for its illegal and dangerous activity? No one was prosecuted or fined under the legislation. There was applied a contempt proceeding, which resulted in fines for contempt of $100,000 immediately, an additional $250,000 if the strike did not end by noon the following day, and an additional $500,000 for each day the strike continued thereafter. There is also a matter before the LRB for a six-month dues suspension. In addition, the government is attempting to recover costs associated with the strike.

Given the cost and potential threat to Albertans, those fines amount to a financial slap on the wrist, and in no way do they reflect the seriousness of the circumstances that were created by an illegal strike. That must change, and this bill will do that. If these provisions had been in place during the illegal strike by corrections officers, it would have resulted in the court receiving $5 million from the union. Those monies would have been used to reimburse the expenses incurred by the taxpayers of Alberta, and any unused funds would have been returned to the union.

There is no doubt that these are serious penalties, but so, too, are the circumstances they're intended to prevent. It changes no workers' rights. It is already illegal for each of those workers to strike.

Ms Blakeman: But they get arbitration.

Mr. Hancock: Not on a strike they do not.

It's illegal to go on strike, and those strikes need to be deterred and they need to be sanctioned. This bill is only about the consequences of engaging in an illegal act, having the most current tools as a deterrent, and making sure that vital public services are delivered effectively and efficiently.

In the final analysis this legislation is about giving Albertans confidence that the necessary services that they rely upon for their health and safety will be there, that they will continue, and that there are severe penalties to deter illegal strikes and severe penalties for illegal strikes that would put Albertans' health and safety at risk.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to rise today to speak about the Public Sector Services Continuation Act and say that I believe that I will vote in favour of this bill despite some concerns that I have with how it's being handled and some of the heavy-handed clauses that I hope can be addressed. It's absolutely vital that we ensure good government and the continuation of essential services for all Albertans. These essential services are just that, essential. We need to ensure that they continue and are not interrupted as part of threats or negotiations. We need to make sure that our kids have a place to learn and grow. We need to make sure that the sick and the elderly are cared for and not left alone in hospitals. We need to make sure that our prisons are kept orderly and secure. We need to make sure that our homes and businesses and communities are safe from fire and crime. We need to do this for the good of all Albertans. It's our job, and they expect us to do it. They're entitled to expect that we will do that well and properly.

Now, as I said, I do have some concerns with how this is being handled, and I think that it's paramount for the government to address these problems and shortfalls. Once again we're seeing legislation without proper consultation and collaboration. I know that not everyone is going to agree all the time, but that doesn't mean that the negotiation and the conversation shouldn't take place so that you can come to an understanding. It's exactly what I did when I ran my trucking company and we had to negotiate with the teamsters, and I've still got both of my knees. It's what the government should be doing now.

Second, we're seeing bills 45 and 46 treated by this government as essentially one piece of legislation – it's not – and they're doing a disservice to Albertans and, I suspect, to their own goals and objectives by grouping them together. I know that there are a number of my colleagues that will likely support Bill 45 but oppose Bill 46, and they each have their own reasons for doing so. Mine is that arbitration should always be available to resolve differences and find common ground. It's in the contract and must be honoured and respected. We believe that this is an essential flaw in what's being proposed. Surely, this government can present its case for wage restraint in a compelling way to the arbitrator, have faith in yourselves and the justness of your cause and in the fairness and neutrality of the arbitrator. The union should be extended the exact same right.

I think that the abatement clause and the extreme penalties are sufficient deterrent to discourage even the threat of striking, and the threat clauses are therefore redundant and unnecessary. They're very draconian. It almost smacks of thought police.

This legislation is important, but that doesn't mean it should be rushed through. Shades of Bill 28, and look what's happened. We're seeing it coming back again, being forced to actually consult with stakeholders. What a novel thought, apparently.

It will continue to ensure the operation of essential services, but that doesn't mean we can skip through a bunch of essential steps. It's a disservice, and I for one hope that the government starts to learn this isn't the right way to govern our great province.

The issue of threats and strikes and counselling threats to strike is particularly vexatious and really needs to be examined closely. As I mentioned, it almost smacks of thought-police clauses. I hope that in its haste the government rethinks them and accepts amendments. I understand what prompts them. The hon. House leader did a good job of explaining what his concerns are, but that doesn't justify going this far. The abatement clause and penalties address that and provide the government with funds to prepare for that mobilization that it speaks about.

I really wish the government didn't break its promises. I might not agree with all of the promises they've made, but they are promises to the people nonetheless. For that reason they should be adhered to, and that includes covenants in contracts such as the right of arbitration. Of course, our Premier has made a habit of breaking promises. She's broken a lot, and I suspect she's got a few more she's going to break, too. I hope I'm wrong, but I doubt I will be.

As I said before, I'll be supporting this bill, I hope, and I have encouraged my colleagues to do the same with these reservations. That's not to say that the government has not been manipulating the process for some reason, and I can't understand why. Things can be done properly. They should be done properly. My dad, the grade 10 dropout, had a saying that's proven to be true and wise: if you've got time to do it over again, you had time to do it right the first time. But, as they say, even a broken clock is right twice a day.

We really do need to ensure due process is followed in legislation because this has a serious and real impact on people's lives. We need to make sure the legislation is drafted properly, that it's constitutional, and that it has the bases covered. Now, I believe that it probably does, but there's no way to know for sure with such little time to work on and to research and to prepare comments and proper amendments for the bill.

With that, I'm going to end with this. If the government keeps its habit of ramming through legislation without consultation, it will soon find that people don't trust it. Perhaps they're already there. Trust is an earned thing. It's not something that you can buy. This doesn't mean that it's necessarily bad legislation, but there are clauses here that are over the top, have gone too far. We must ensure Albertans have trust in this House and the activities of this House and the laws and bills that are passed. If not, I think we're going to see good pieces of legislation go by the wayside simply because a proper process wasn't followed that engaged all stakeholders. We know that one of the greatest causes of dissatisfaction in the workforce and in government is feeling you don't have a say in the decisions that affect you, and that's easily corrected.

We need to ensure the continuation of essential government services. We need to ensure that our children have schools. We need to ensure that our sick friends and family have continual access to public health care. We need to ensure that our streets are safe, our homes are secure, and our communities are strong and free.

I want to vote in support of this bill. I'm going to encourage my colleagues to do so. But I look forward to telling my constituents that I've done everything I can to ensure that they'll have access to the essential services and that their rights, the right of arbitration for example, have not been removed.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, your chair just assumed the chair a few minutes ago, and debate on Bill 45 had already started. I understand there is an agreement to let the Member for Edmonton-Centre go next, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

So Edmonton-Centre, if you would proceed.

An Hon. Member: I don't know who agreed on that.

Mr. Mason: I sent the Speaker a note. I mean, I don't mind. I don't care, but I just . . .

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, the agreement was made with the previous chair just before she left, and I wasn't aware of it till you sent me your note. Let's go with Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Mason: It's fine, but I didn't agree to anything.

The Speaker: Hon. members, for the record I meant there was an agreement between me and the previous chair – I just saw it now, though – not an agreement with you, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Let the record be clear.

Edmonton-Centre, third time, let's go.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. You know, I've been in this Assembly for 16 years, and there have been a couple of really identifying pieces of legislation that this government has brought forward, none of them in a positive way, by the way. Bill 45 is one of those identifying pieces of legislation for which I will never forget nor forgive this government. In my opinion, what is before us is vile, foul, disingenuous, wicked, hostile, devilish, repulsive, humiliating, abusive, degrading, offensive, gross, contrary, a violation. It's sneaky, immoral, bankrupt, malicious, depraved, corrupt, and nefarious. And that was just in the first couple of minutes I was thinking about it, so I'm sure there are many more words I can come up with.

It is foul and vile and evil because this is a government attempting to legislate away a constitutional freedom. It is a government that is so afraid of being embarrassed that it is going to use the power that it has, with the majority that it has, to overwhelm working people.

You know, what started all of this – and the government has admitted it – was a piece of glass, a piece of glass in the new remand centre. Now, the guards there had been repeatedly trying to meet with the appropriate representatives in the government to point out the deficiencies and some of the items that were either going to be or were a potential harm to residents of the remand centre or potential harm to the workers. Now, the government should not be approving of anything that would take away those guards' rights to come forward and say, "We're concerned about public health" or "We're concerned about worker health." The government should be supporting them in doing that. But, in fact, this bill has come about because the government got embarrassed. The government was asked repeatedly to meet with these guards to fix this. They didn't, and they wouldn't.

One of the things was a plate of glass that could be smashed with a coffee cup. Kadink. Smashed. Now, that would have been a huge health risk to both the residents of the remand centre and to the workers in the remand centre. Would the government replace that? Would they meet with those guards and understand that this was a risk? Well, they didn't want to do that, so finally the guards went out on a wildcat strike.

Now, do people go out on a wildcat strike because it's fun, because it's sexy, because they think that somehow this is going to get them on the front page of the news? No. They go out on a wildcat strike because they're desperate. They cannot find any other way to communicate with their employer, the government in this case, to get a point across. The point was inmate safety, worker safety. But the government was embarrassed. They were embarrassed that they'd been caught out on this, that they hadn't met with the inmates. They brought the full force of what they had to bear on these workers.

By the way, as I tabled earlier, they did finally admit that the plate of glass I was talking about, that could be broken with the coffee cup – yeah, they did finally come to agree that it was a risk, a health risk and a safety risk, to both inmates and workers, and they replaced it. I've tabled you the proof about that. They did acknowledge it.

But in the meantime, like some sort of cartoon smog of evilness, they descended upon these workers in this wildcat strike with everything they had. The whole government descended on a couple of hundred guards with everything: individual fines, fines for the union management, larger fines for court costs, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera. And you know what? Most of the strikes that we have had, actually all of the strikes that we have had in recent memory – let me go back 10 years; it's reasonable – have been about public health or worker safety. What is this government worried about? Why do they have to bring in this huge, overwhelming, smog legislation that will descend upon everyone and singe them? Why do they have to do this? Oh, right. Because people were looking for safer workplaces or for public safety – right – because the government was so threatened by that.

Okay. A couple of notes I want to make here. The first one is that, you know, wildcat strikes aren't done for fun. They're done because people have been pushed into a position where they take this. They know there are risks. They know they could not get the public support. It could go against them. In Alberta it's not only going to go against them, but the government is going to stomp you. They're going to squish you like a bug. They're going to get you under their boot and make mush out of you because they're embarrassed. Well, there you go.

The second note I want to make. We came to the labour agreements that we have under these two pieces of legislation in this province under the leadership of Premier Lougheed. He didn't want public-sector workers to strike. I'll respectfully disagree with the previous Premier. Nonetheless, what he did was give a fair deal: no strikes – it's illegal to strike in Alberta – but you've got arbitration. That's the deal. Now, this government has been unable to prove to us why they now need to withdraw the second part of that, which is taking away their arbitration.

Note three: protect us. The government needs to put this legislation in to protect them. Oh, my God. Protect them from whom exactly? Oh, wait. That would be protecting them from the people, the workers that they have gone on and on about, about how terrific they were and how great they were and that they pulled out all the stops and that they used all their expertise to help them with the floods this summer. What terrific public servants they were. They trained those volunteers, and they worked with them. They stayed on the job. They went away from their families. They went on and on. This is whom the government needs to protect us from? What absolute poppycock. It's ridiculous. They need to protect themselves from their own civil service? I mean, please.

These people don't go into civil service to somehow mock the government. They go there because they want to contribute to society. They want to work at a job where they give back to society, where they're a caring person like a nurse or an EMT, where they're kind of a superperson, a police officer or a firefighter. This is who we're talking about. This is who this government thinks they need to protect themselves from. Really? EMTs? Nurses? That's who they're afraid of or who they somehow think are going to do terrible things to the province, workers that go down and bail out flooded communities? These are these foul, awful people? Come on, Mr. Speaker.

Now, another note here. We have a Constitution, and this is where I started. Section 2 is the fundamental freedoms section. This is what you get if you're a Canadian. It says:

2. Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:
  - (a) freedom of conscience and religion;
  - (b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication;
  - (c) freedom of peaceful assembly; and
  - (d) freedom of association.

Hmm.

This is what our Charter guarantees us as citizens. You don't even have to be a citizen; you just have to be walking around in this country and you get the freedom of association. This government wants to take that freedom of association away. They want to put a blanket on it. They want to make it go away. They don't want to allow workers to associate for the purpose of collective bargaining.

The courts have ruled repeatedly. I mean, the most recent one was the November 15 ruling with the Information and Privacy Commissioner of Alberta and the United Food and Commercial Workers. They ruled very clearly that you have a freedom of association. You don't have to earn it. You don't have to buy it. You don't have to grow into it or age into it. You have it in this country. You associate with anyone you want. If you want to associate with a union, if you want to do that, go ahead. Part of being in a union is collective bargaining. That's how it works. It is meaningless to talk about the ability to have that freedom of association and peaceful assembly without adding into that and working with collective bargaining. That's what the courts say about freedom of association and collective bargaining. So we have a government that is trying to quash that freedom of association and, more than that, punish people for it.

Here's another note. You know, collective bargaining does have as part of it that ability to resort to withdrawal of services, or strikes if you want to call it that. Now, these are not done for fun, as I said. The employer holds all the cards here. They've got the money, they've got the law backing them up, and in this case they're the government. So, hey, if they don't like the situation, they can just write legislation to make it be what they want it to be, and that's what we have with bills 45 and 46.

This ability to go on strike is the only card they really hold as a tool to be able to get fairness in the process if they're not getting fairness, and they don't abuse it. Again, let's remember that we're talking about our workers, our civil servants, our public servants here. These are not, you know, jackbooted monsters out there that we need to protect ourselves from, except that this government thinks they do. They think they need to protect themselves from firefighters and police officers and nurses and teaching aides and accountants and engineers and park wardens and secretaries. That's who they think they need to protect themselves from. Wow. Don't let me call them wussy, Mr. Speaker, because that would be uncomplimentary. But, honestly, you need to protect yourself? Hmm. All righty.

One of the interesting things is that if I went to the police and said, "I think I might hurt someone," they won't do anything with that. Or if I say, "I think someone over there might hurt me," they won't go over there and arrest the Deputy Premier no matter how fervently I might wish it on certain days. Why? Because there have to be underpinnings and context and content to that threat. But this government in Bill 45 wants to be able to swoop down, fine people, and create a whole series of actions that will take place on the threat of a strike. The threat of a strike.

Now, how are they going to define that? If I've got some of those wooden stake things that they staple placards to in a march and I'm taking them over to my dad's because, you know, my dad gets into all kinds of stuff, well, oh, my goodness, what if I get caught with those stakes? I might have been thinking about a strike, because I have those stakes in the back of my car. So that would unleash a whole series of actions that this government wants to empower itself to take. Who would these actions be against? Our public servants. Why do they need to do this? Because they got embarrassed. They got embarrassed.

They like to talk about: oh, it'll save you so much money. Well, that's another question I have. Why on earth wouldn't we have the best paid? Why wouldn't we? We're the best province. We have enormous wealth here. Why this government can't manage to balance its books given the number of wealthy people, wealthy companies, and wealth that comes out of the ground because you stick a pole in it – and they can't manage to balance the budget. So they're going to punish our public-sector workers because they can't figure out how to have a fair taxation system here and to collect enough royalties on Albertans' natural resource wealth. So because they're afraid to do that and they want to be able to walk around and say that we have the lowest taxes, we're now going to punish big time – fine, jail, all kinds of things that they've got in this bill – our public-sector workers because they don't want to have a fair taxation system and they don't want to charge royalties.

I do not support this bill.

4:20

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 29(2)(a)? Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. I got that impression, hon. member, and I would invite you to finish your thoughts.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to withdraw my request to speak until the bill comes back on Monday.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you know the rules as well as I do. I have nothing to prevent you from commenting, so go ahead.

Ms Blakeman: You know, I've developed a certain mind-meld with the hon. member from sitting beside him for so many years, so I think what he wants me to do is to talk about why I think the government keeps saying that our workers are too expensive and that we've got to cut down the amount of money that we're going to give them.

You know, I've got to give you guys credit. You led up to this beautifully. You got a very low settlement from the doctors, you got a low settlement from the nurses, and here we come with the public sector, and you're going to impose that same settlement on them. Hmm. All right. I'll give you credit. That was pretty crafty. Whomever your strategist is, congratulations to them. They get an extra turkey in their little Christmas basket there or however you guys do that.

Why would we Albertans say that we don't want public-sector workers in a union to be paid well in Alberta? Well, you know what I learned when I was a kid? We had neighbours who were in the construction industry, and they did really well for themselves. They had a Cadillac, and they went on holidays where all the kids went skiing at Christmas, and I kept saying: why can't we do that? They'd say: "Look. We are teachers. We have a steady amount of money, not as good a payment as we would have if we were out in the private sector, that we make, and we have a very reliable pension. So our risk is low, but we get paid not so much." The guy next door takes a big risk with his money. He may tank. He may lose it all. He may go into something and lose it all, and that's the end of it. He takes a big risk. But if he does well and he invests well or he does a good job, ka-ching, as the Deputy Premier said. He could make a lot – a lot – of money. Good for him. He did that wisely. He took a big risk, and he gets paid very well. All right. Good for you

Now, how he does his particular pension is up to him with all of his money, but in the public sector the deal is that we're going to pay you a rate, and we're going to make sure that you get a solid pension. That's how we attract people into the public service. Frankly, for you guys to look good, you need those public servants behind you. Really, you're going to go back to your offices and you're going to look at your staff and say: "I don't think you're worth it. I don't think you should get any money. I think you're worth zero, and worse than that, I think I need to be protected from you because you threaten me. I think that you need to be fined and your union needs to be fined a million dollars every time you do something." Really? I thought you would appreciate your staff more than that.

That's who we're talking about, Mr. Speaker. Those are the people that this bill will come down on and will come down on hard for the threat of a strike, just for verbalizing it or taking certain actions that might be interpreted as thinking of starting a strike, not actually starting a strike, not actually getting on the street but actually thinking about it.

I'm really interested in why the government is so against the workers that really do the work in this province, that run into the building that's on fire, not out of it. They run into the building where a gunman is shooting – into it – because they're our public servants. But these guys think that we need to be protected, that we need to take away the deal that we've always had. You don't strike, but you've got arbitration. If you're going to strike, then there's a number of other things that come into play. But these guys want to dump that whole garbage truck of every trick they've got, of fines and everything else, on their head because they thought about having a strike. Thought about it. Didn't even do it but just thought about it, just had a stick in their hand that happens to look like something that you put placard on. [interjection] If you think what I'm saying is outrageous, that's exactly the same as what I think about what you're saying. This is ideology, a government ideology that is going to drive taxes lower, and they won't charge enough royalties, so it means we can't pay our people enough money and give them a decent pension. The government is coming at our public service one, two, three.

The Speaker: Are there any other speakers? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move to adjourn debate on Bill 45.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Monday.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:27 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 28th Legislature - 1st Session (2012-2013)

Activity to November 28, 2013

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 199 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 200 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter numbers until the conclusion of the Fall Sitzings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, December 2, 2013

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. Dear Lord, we pray that You will always be with us and with those we love as well as with those whom we serve. Amen.

Hon. members, please remain standing and join in the singing of our national anthem since this is the beginning of our new week. Today's anthem will be led by Ms Kyla Rodgers.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Hon members, it may benefit you to know that Ms Kyla Rodgers is a former head page and tour guide of our Legislative Assembly. She's also a member of the University of Alberta Mixed Chorus and Concordia University College of Alberta concert choirs. She also possesses a grade 10 certificate from The Royal Conservatory of Music. Still others would recognize her as working with the Sergeant-at-Arms. Thank you very much for joining us today.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Kie-Cheon Lee, who is the consul general of Korea. Accompanying him is Yoon Sun Eo, consul of Korea. They are, of course, up in the Speaker's gallery. Alberta and Korea have a long-standing trade investment and cultural relationship. In fact, this year marks the 50th anniversary of diplomatic ties between our province and Korea. In addition, next year will be the 40th anniversary of Alberta's twinning with Gangwon. There are more than 12,000 people of Korean descent who have made Alberta their home and helped make Alberta the most prosperous province in Canada. Korea is Alberta's fifth-largest export market. Our two jurisdictions continue to build strong ties in everything from trade to cross-cultural endeavours. I would like to ask Consul General Lee and Consul Eo to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us begin with school groups, starting with Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by Sherwood Park.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I would like to introduce to you and through you 35 students from Bisset elementary school, located in Edmonton-Mill Creek. These students are participating in our School at the Legislature program this week. They are accompanied by their teacher, Robin Kinasevich, and three parent helpers: Wayne Portice, Jason Scollon, and LoveLeen Kahlon. At this time I'd ask all of my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise before you and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 93 reinforcements from St. Theresa Catholic school, whose students were here last week as well. It is great to have them here to take in the proceedings, and I hope they have enjoyed their time with us today. I would like to introduce the leaders with them: Ms Stefanie Kaiser, Mrs. Lynne Schurek, Mr. Kurt Davison, Mrs. Clelland, Ms Tiffany Kryzalka, Ms Nicole Anderson, and Ms Norma Aanhout. If they would all please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome.

Thanks for being here.

The Speaker: Hon. Deputy Premier, I understand your guests have not yet arrived, so let's move on to the Associate Minister of Wellness, followed by the Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure for me to introduce Gordon Hensel, registrar of the Alberta College of Optometrists. Dr. Hensel is seated in the members' gallery and is here to support the tabling of the Alberta College of Optometrists annual report to government, which I will table later this afternoon. Members, please join me in welcoming him to this Assembly and thanking his organization for all of their dedication and hard work to advance the optometry profession here in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Roy Krahn, who's sitting in the members' gallery. Roy and his wife, Darlene, are very dedicated volunteers in the community of McKenzie Towne in Calgary-Hays. They have been volunteering at the McKenzie Towne Retirement Residence for 11 years and in that time have spent countless Monday nights serving seniors with nondenominational church services. I am pleased to introduce Mr. Krahn today and ask that he receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guest, my constituent Denise Baillie. Denise is the new president of CCSVI, chronic cerebrospinal venous insufficiency, Alberta. You saw her in front of the Legislature last fall and this spring demonstrating for CCSVI treatment to be made available in Alberta. She wants members of this House to know that after her treatment in California on May 1 she cancelled her government disability funding, has returned to work full-time, and is doing things she always wanted to do like taking dance lessons. I would now ask Denise to rise and perhaps dance a little and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, your first of two introductions, followed by Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Mr. Speaker, my guests will be here after 2 o'clock.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Edmonton-Decore, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly four representatives from Chateau at Schonsee Square, an affordable housing opportunity for low-income seniors and people with disabilities in Edmonton-Decore. Chateau at Schonsee Square opened on September 30, 2013. It illustrates a partnership between the private sector, federal government, and our government, who invested $6 million to achieve over a hundred affordable housing suites. My guests are seated in the members' gallery. I extend congratulations and thanks to them, and I would ask them to please rise as I mention their names: Mr. Jarret Sheath, vice-president of business development for Lifestyle Options Holdings; Mr. Dan Slaven, director for Lifestyle Options Holdings; Ms Renae Ferchoff, director for Chateau Schonsee Developments; and Mr. Cam Ferchoff, director for Chateau Schonsee Developments. I would now ask the Assembly to join yours truly to provide my guests with the traditional warm welcome.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Calgary-Hawwood.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly Cassie and Lyle Liska. Cassie's mother was Violet MacDonald, a senior who had a tragic experience in seniors' care and has since passed away. Both Cassie and Lyle are here because they are concerned with our system, that fails our seniors. I would ask them to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Hawwood, followed by Calgary-East.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly guests that have joined us today in the public gallery to show their support for Bill 211, that I'll be introducing later in this House. My guests today represent some of the largest Mandarin-speaking associations in Calgary, and they also represent some of the heritage language schools there. Because of weather conditions, some were not able to make it here, but for those brave souls who made it, as I call your name, I would ask you to stand to receive the traditional warm welcome of this House: Mr. James Zhan, president of the Qinghua association of Calgary; Ms Wei Huang, CEO of Calgary Ringtorch Sport Association; and Mr. Jilin Wang, president of Calgary Dongbei association. I would now ask all of my colleagues to give them the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly guests that have joined us today in the public gallery to show their support for Bill 211. They are here to show support, also, for heritage language schools in Alberta. All of my guests are from Changing Together, which is a place for immigrant women to meet and work together in solving challenges they face and to help them to participate fully in Canadian life. I would ask that each of the guests rise as their name is called: Leticia Cables, Cleo Palma, Lois Binas, Chandra Weerasinghe, Vida Drah, and Jasmine Phan. I would ask all members to give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mr. Jeneroux: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. They have yet to arrive.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you today to all members of the Assembly Ms Corrine Gowers, a provincial co-ordinator with WORKink Alberta. She has worked with persons with disabilities for over 20 years. Ms Gowers works to build awareness and community supports for individuals and employers. She's a strong advocate for training skills and the abilities of individuals with disabilities. Ms Gowers is here today to raise awareness for the International Day of Persons with Disabilities, December 3, 2013. I would ask that the Assembly greet her with the traditional warm greeting.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Persons with Disabilities

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, 15 per cent of the world's population lives with some form of disability. In 2006 the convention on the rights of persons with disabilities was adopted by the United Nations to ensure that full equality and participation for persons with disabilities was achieved in our society. This year's theme for the International Day of Persons with Disabilities, which will be recognized on December 3, is Break Barriers, Open Doors: For an Inclusive Society and Development for All.

On September 23 the high-level meeting on development and disabilities was convened by the general assembly of the UN, and an action-oriented document was created to provide policy guidance to translate the initial commitment for a disability-inclusive society into action and to ensure accessibility and inclusion for persons with disabilities.

Around the world persons with disabilities face physical, social, economic, and attitudinal barriers that exclude them from participating fully and effectively as equal members of society. They often lack equal access to basic resources such as education, employment, health care, and social and legal support systems.

The commemoration of International Day of Persons with Disabilities in 2013, which includes activities in the communities of Fort Saskatchewan and Vegreville, in my constituency, provides an opportunity for us to address exclusion by focusing on promoting accessibility and by removing all types of barriers in society, thus ensuring the integration of persons with disabilities in political, social, economic, and cultural life, and that should and must be our goal, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Seniors' Long-term Care

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For Cassie Liska out of Red Deer the past six years have been the most difficult years of her life. In the spring of 2007 her family faced the reality of putting their 66-year-old mum, Violet MacDonald, suffering from MS, into a care facility. As any loving family would, they asked questions, seeking the best quality of care that their mother could receive. Often their questions went unanswered. Their genuine concern for their mother's well-being was ignored. For Cassie there were many days where she felt helpless.

It was not uncommon for Cassie to see her mum left for days on end in a wheelchair, never being put into a bed, and lucky to be bathed once a month. As her caregiver Cassie was left wondering how to advocate on behalf of her mum when at every turn she was ignored.

In February of this year Violet was hospitalized due to complications from severe bed wounds which became septic days after being left in her own diaper for over 36 hours. She was taken from McKenzie Towne Centre to the Rockyview hospital, where she endured four months of treatment. The transition department told Cassie that if the family refused to send her mum back to McKenzie Towne, they could not guarantee where Violet would be placed in a care facility in Alberta. Due to the fear of the unknown and the family's need to be close to their mum, they felt there was no choice but to return to the same facility that was subject to a Protection for Persons in Care investigation, which ultimately found the abuse allegations to be true.

This is a sad state of seniors' care in the most prosperous province in Canada. After all of this, Violet was told that she would be bedridden, taking what limited mobility she had left away from her. Violet took her last breath on October 27, 2013.

Dignity and respect: that is what each and every one of us deserves in this world. We would not accept this type of care for our children. Why would we want any of this type of care for our seniors? Violet couldn't even get the required care she needed to survive, her family alone in a system full of bureaucracy and a cover-your-butt mentality.

Let's be clear. Violet's story is not a one-off. These same stories are happening each and every day. We have an opportunity to ensure changes are made so that no one – no one, Mr. Speaker – has to endure what Cassie, her family, and her mother, Violet, have had to go through.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

University of Alberta Health Sciences Partnerships

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today in order to highlight a matter of great importance for the future of health, education, and research in Alberta and, for those who know me, something that I'm personally and intimately passionate about. I'm talking about our medical students and the value we should place as a province on our ability to train them and retain their services. The University of Alberta's medical school, for instance, is host to some of the most talented medical personnel in the world and is renowned for producing some of the most groundbreaking research in the field of medicine.

The Edmonton Clinic Health Academy is a fine example of new advancement and innovation efforts coming out of medical educational practice in Alberta. The Edmonton Clinic Health Academy is one of two facilities that together represent a partnership between Alberta Health Services, the University of Alberta, and the government of Alberta, and it is designed to change how we deliver outpatient care as well as health sciences education and research.

This facility is home to a community of researchers, educators, and students who collaborate in a multidisciplinary environment. The academy is student focused, offering a new generation of learners the specialized space and simulations technology that will prepare them for the requirements of the 21st century, patient-centred and team-based health care.

The Kaye Edmonton Clinic, which is housed in the same building complex as the academy, is also unique to Alberta and provides co-ordinated diagnostic and specialist ambulatory services in a fully integrated facility. Patients here benefit from seamless outpatient care and streamlined access to specialized services. It gives students an opportunity to connect to real-life practices and learn from real experience. It also lends an opportunity for Alberta's medical students to gain wisdom in another critical aspect of their future professions. It places them with their patients and their families, and it's here that they become doctors and citizen leaders because it is here that they acquire that rare wisdom that can only be gained through direct contact with the intimacies of the human heart.

Positive outcomes like those in the Edmonton Clinic Health Academy and the Kaye Edmonton Clinic should make it clear why it is so important to continue to attract doctors and medical students to Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us begin with the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. The first main set of questions.

Seniors' Long-term Care

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the heartbreaking and horrifying story of Violet MacDonald's death paints a grim picture for other families whose loved ones are in long-term care. When Violet arrived at hospital, supposedly for treatment of a urinary tract infection, hospital staff were appalled to discover putrefying wounds on her feet, lower back, and buttocks. These wounds were clearly the result of improper care. Can the minister explain why a review is not automatically initiated when a patient in long-term care arrives in hospital with unreported gaping wounds?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a very, very tragic situation, and the first thing I want to do is express the sympathy of our government to the members of this resident's family and our condolences at the news of her death.

Mr. Speaker, I am gathering as much information as I can today, but what I can tell you clearly is that this sort of situation is unacceptable in this province in any circumstance. I have asked the Alberta Health Services on-site team to monitor operations at this facility until my questions are answered. We'll be taking some additional . . .

The Speaker: Hon. leader, your first supplemental.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure the family appreciates hearing that.

Despite all of the supposed safeguards and checks the government claims are in place to protect seniors, none were able to help Violet. The subsequent investigation into her wounds had to be initiated at the family's request. It produced precisely one recommendation, that the long-term care facility change its wound management policy. No further accountability and no consequence for Violet's neglect and death. Does this government really believe that its review process is adequate?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I can tell the House is that every investigation that is conducted under the Protection for Persons in Care Act produces a report. All of the recommendations in those reports are followed up directly by Alberta Health Services and my department so we can ensure that the appropriate corrective steps are taken. In this case media reports have suggested that there were issues around refusal to receive care. Those are some of the questions that I want to have answered. Absolutely, in this case the system has failed this resident, and we will do our best to find out why.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I think the public is alarmed at the government's record of protecting seniors in long-term care. The minister speaks of this particular investigation, which only produced one recommendation. In fact, the investigation of Violet's wounds was superficial and seemed to be more about covering off legal concerns than protecting Violet. Protections for Alberta seniors are clearly inadequate. Will the Premier commit that the new seniors' advocate will be fully independent so that they can properly and fully investigate cases like this?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is the point in these lines of questioning, where the hon. member begins to attempt to draw generalizations based on, in this case, a very tragic incident. What I can tell you is that Alberta Health Services is on-site today. They are monitoring the care being delivered in the facility. I have asked the Health Quality Council of Alberta to expand their review of the quality assurance system for home care and to extend that review to continuing care facilities across the province as well.

Mr. Speaker, the answer is that we can never do enough to assure quality in our health care system, whether we're talking about continuing care or acute . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. leader, your second main set of questions.

Disaster Recovery Program

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, last summer's floods were truly devastating, but for many families the chaos and the red tape of the disaster recovery program have added tremendous insult to their considerable injury. It is now more than five months since the flood. More than 9,500 Albertans have applied for disaster assistance. The government constantly reminds us that the flood will cost billions, yet there is only $25 million in disaster assistance funding that has actually flowed through to Albertans who have had their homes and businesses destroyed. Why?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, as we said when this first happened, there is no doubt that as we move through this terrible disaster, there are many complicated circumstances to deal with. You will know that the deadline for applying for the DRP was last week, and therefore we know now how many people want to work with the government to ensure that we support them as best we possibly can. I think a lot of people who are involved in this and have friends involved know that there are insurance claims to be dealt with, that there are business reports that need to be done. We've always said that we will not get through this quickly, but we will get through it.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I have correspondence between one of my constituents and LandLink, the company that has the sole-source contract to mismanage the disaster recovery program. LandLink has asked these homeowners for the same document three times. Three times this document has been sent in, and it has actually been lost three times. One of the letters from the DRP says that the homeowners won't receive their next DRP payment if they don't send in the document, but they haven't even received their first DRP payment. Can the Premier explain what on earth is going on with this program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the member is right. The $25 million has flowed out because we have been working very closely with families from all 30 communities who are impacted by the flood. There is no doubt that this has had severe impacts on many families. Some of them are taking time to make decisions, but the funds from DRP are flowing as fast as members need it. For a particular circumstance, I've always asked – and we've always offered, including the associate minister for High River – for any information about any particular cases that may be a challenge, and we address them as quickly as we can because we're here to serve every single Albertan who was impacted by this flood.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the funds are clearly not flowing out as needed.

This government bragged early in the flooding that people would receive $10,000 initial payments in August. Hardly anyone did. So far only 40 per cent of applicants have received any DRP money at all. The average payment so far is $6,300. We all saw the damage that the flood did. Sixty-three hundred dollars per application doesn't cut it. Sixty per cent of applicants not having received a penny doesn't cut it. What will the Premier do to fix this mess?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, we have an amazing team set up with Municipal Affairs and managing the DRP program, that has been helping every single Albertan in all those 30 communities impacted by the flood. You cannot measure the success of the program by the average cheque that's made because some people had very minimal damage and didn't need large cheques. Some people have received much more than the average the member across the way quotes. We will continue day to day to serve every single Albertan impacted by this flood, just the way we have for the last six months, successfully.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Third main set of questions.

Ms Smith: The Premier promised $10,000 initial payments within seven to 14 days of application. It hasn't happened.

Public-service Contract Negotiations

Ms Smith: Albertans have been blindsided by the government's new heavy-handed approach to public-sector contract negotiations, and I use that term loosely. Since the days of Peter Lougheed, if negotiations with unions didn't result in a deal, unions could go to arbitration to get a deal done. It was the cornerstone of Alberta's public-sector labour negotiations. Today that cornerstone is under attack. This government wants to terminate the legal right to arbitration to force a deal. To the Premier: why is she taking this dangerous step in labour relations if...

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a little rich coming from a party whose platform suggests that they're going to wipe away all of the rights for negotiations and zero salaries.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order.

Mr. Horner: I knew that was coming, Mr. Speaker.

We made a commitment to Albertans that we would live within our means. We were very up front with all of our negotiating groups. The doctors and teachers worked very well with us. This legislation, which will be debated in this House over the course of this afternoon and tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, is about getting a fair deal for our employees and a fair deal for the taxpayers of Alberta.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this move carries with it serious implications for future labour negotiations. By attacking the legal rights of unions in this way, the Premier is only deepening the rift between the government and its workers, and it's driving that crucial relationship right off the rails. To the Premier: doesn't she understand that treating public-sector unions with respect is the key to healthy negotiations, a motivated workforce, and ultimately a better deal for taxpayers?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that's a bit rich coming from this Leader of the Opposition, who doesn't actually believe that unions should exist in the public sector or the private sector.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order.

Ms Redford: However, I will tell you that this is a government that is absolutely committed to dealing with our front-line public-sector workers with respect, Mr. Speaker. We want to ensure that as we move forward, we have robust labour relations in this province. We have to ensure that we get a deal that is fair for both Alberta taxpayers and Alberta union members, and we'll continue to do that.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this Premier and her party didn't campaign on wage freezes and union busting. In fact, it was quite the opposite. Public-sector workers were told that this Premier was going to be their champion. She promised them everything in the 2012 election. However, in what has become the hallmark of her leadership, what she is doing today is drastically different than what she promised. This pattern of promising the world and then reneging now threatens the stability of public services in Alberta. To the Premier: why won't she just keep her word on anything?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Let's bring something into perspective. The Wildrose opposition clearly, clearly campaigned on freezing public-sector wages. [interjections] They clearly campaigned on freezing public-sector wages until some deficit is eliminated. Now they're talking about binding arbitration, but they also want to live within their own means. Mr. Speaker, it doesn't take a genius to figure out that what they're saying doesn't make any sense. [interjections] We are focused on making sure that our public-sector employees are remunerated properly just like teachers, just like doctors, and we have time until January 31 to reach that agreement.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the disruptions really are not very parliamentary, so let's not have any more of them today, or I shall have to interject.

A point of order from Airdrie was noted at 1:58, and a second point of order by Airdrie at 1:59. We'll look into those later.

Let's go on to the leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's time to hit this government right from the centre. Premier Lougheed took away the right of government employees to go on strike; however, he recognized that in the interest of fairness, the loss of the ability to go on strike had to be replaced with the option of going to binding arbitration. The very people who support the government with their work – nurses, teachers, support staff, legislative staff, and security, and many others, including those great Albertans who rescued many in the floods – depend on arbitration to achieve a fair contract. To the Premier: why do you and your Conservative government insist on attacking the very people that keep this province...

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased that we're going to have the opportunity to discuss this legislation in the Legislature. [interjections] Let's be clear that what this legislation does is that it encourages AUPE to come back to the bargaining table so that we can get the best possible deal for public servants and for Alberta taxpayers. [interjections] We will continue to ask AUPE to come back to the bargaining table so that we can continue to bargain.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Centre and others, please. The interjections are really not called for; you know that.

Ms Blakeman: It's an honest exchange.

The Speaker: I know. But then you provoke this side, and this side gets at that side, and then we have a little bit of confusion, and then I have to stand up here and take up your valuable time. All it does is that it shortens the speaking time.

So let's get on with your first supplemental, hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my hand is the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, brought in by a Liberal government. Two of the fundamental freedoms guaranteed to us in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms are the freedom of expression and freedom of association. To the Premier, a very simple question here: in your former life you fought for the rights and freedoms of others across the world, so in your current life why are you attacking the rights and the freedoms of the very people you were elected to serve?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned a number of times, the bills that these hon. members are talking about will be up for debate tonight. [interjection] Let it be perfectly clear, we would not bring forward any bill that we do not believe to be constitutional, and we do not believe that we are attacking fundamental rights. [interjection] We believe that what we're doing is protecting the rights of Alberta taxpayers in line with the budget that was brought forward and the constraints that we said we'd put in place. We are also ensuring, in another bill quite separate and apart from that, that illegal acts are sanctioned with appropriate sanctions.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Centre, I'd be happy to add you to the list, if you wish, at the appropriate space. Please, respect your leader's question, and respect the answer even if you don't like it.

The hon. leader. Second supplemental.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, it's quite clear that the Premier is absolutely speechless in her quest to go against the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Never seen that before.

Earlier this year guards at the new remand centre in Edmonton went on a wildcat strike in desperation because their complaints of unsafe working conditions were repeatedly ignored by this Conservative government. I spoke out in support of them, as did many journalists, bloggers, and others. To the Premier. Let me just ask you a simple question again. Could average Albertans, the media, the bloggers, say even elected officials be fined for speaking out or writing in . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, let's be perfectly clear. This bill is dealing with illegal – “wildcat” is a code word for illegal activity. This member will have the opportunity to debate. There is nothing in this bill that hampers any legal strikes or protests or manifestations. The member knows that very well. Relevant to our guards if there are bona fide safety issues, we have always been very clear: file an occupational health and safety complaint, and every complaint will be investigated.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week this government introduced draconian legislation in bills 45 and 46 that have taken away basic, fundamental human rights for thousands and thousands of workers across this province. But it was only a few months ago, during the devastating floods, that this Premier said that these same workers who helped save many lives are, I quote, heroes. Yet this Tea Party government thanks these heroes by reducing their standard of living and legislating punitive measures that effectively destroy their freedom of association and freedom of speech. How is it good public policy, Premier, to reward the excellent work of your own employees . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: It would be good to be able for once to deal with facts. You know, Mr. Speaker, very well that there is nothing in these bills that in any way limits the right of association. As a matter of fact, these bills will allow AUPE and the employer, in this case this government, to negotiate in good faith an agreement that we have reached with teachers and doctors and that we have with many others. What this member is talking about is definitely not reflective of the legislation before this House.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, this government fairly drips with hypocrisy. To suggest that passing legislation that forces a deal is negotiating in good faith is ridiculous, absurd, and insulting to the intelligence of every member of this House. Why won't this Tea Party government stop this shameful attack on middle-class families and instead roll back some of the generous tax cuts that this government has given to wealthy Albertans and corporations?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, the idea here is to come to a negotiated settlement, and that's exactly what we're working to do. We have indeed put an offer on the table that is, in fact, more than what is in the legislation which we will be debating in this House. We hope that the AUPE will come back to the table so that we can come to a negotiated, fair deal for our employees and a fair deal for taxpayers. The government is working to balance both sides' interests.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government's hypocrisy knows no end. To suggest that this is a negotiation is ridiculous. As far as this government is concerned, black is white, up is down, cold is hot. You know, the meanings of words are completely turned on their heads when these ministers get up and speak.

Why won't this government stop their attack on public-sector workers before they waste millions of dollars of taxpayers' money on an unnecessary and costly legal fight over this unconstitutional bill?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the facts are very clear. This government wants to negotiate with AUPE. We have asked that they come back to the table and negotiate in good faith until January 31. We ran on a campaign in the last election that we will live within our means, but at the same time, unlike the opposition, we will treat our employees fairly, and we will not simply just freeze their wages. We have reached a deal with teachers, we have reached a deal with doctors, and there is no reason to believe that we won't reach a deal with AUPE.

The Speaker: Thank you.

No more preambles to your supplementals, please, from this point on, starting with Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Leduc-Beaumont.

Seniors' Long-term Care (continued)

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Cassie Liska's mother, Violet, sat for days in a wheelchair and was lucky to be bathed once a month. She had wounds on her feet and buttocks that became so bad it resulted in hospitalization. The family was forced to file a protection for persons in care complaint, which found this facility was failing to follow regulations and was complicit in abuse. To the minister: why does this continue to happen?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, while the circumstances of this particular resident are indeed tragic, I would be doing workers and families across the province a great disservice if I did not reject the notion that this is, in fact, commonplace in our continuing care system. We deliver care of the highest quality to thousands of Albertans every day. We work collaboratively with their families and with front-line staff to make sure that the services people need are available to them, but there are occasions where circumstances arise where the conduct is not in keeping with what we expect. That's what we're . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, first supplemental.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sadly, I would think once is enough.

Given that the protection for persons in care complaint found evidence of abuse and was not able to make a single meaningful recommendation after seven full months, will you commit today to make the seniors' advocate independent to give seniors across Alberta a true voice?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the issue here is not the question of the voice for any one constituent in this in particular. The issue is how we establish and maintain and monitor quality standards throughout our health care system, in particular when they affect people who are most vulnerable. As I've said, I've expanded the Health Quality Council of Alberta review to encompass how AHS manages for quality with contracted service providers in continuing care. We will be expanding the role of the Department of Health in the monitoring of quality standards, and as with every other Protection for Persons in Care Act investigation the recommendations from this one . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, second supplemental.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We would never accept this type of treatment for our kids in provincial care, which has an established independent advocate on their behalf. Minister, on behalf of all seniors in Alberta can you please make the seniors' advocate an independent body of this Legislature?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would be the first to agree, as would all of my colleagues, that the situation that the hon. member describes should never happen in Alberta, but the focus that we need to have is one on quality. Attempts to establish independent advocates, attempts to politicize these situations do not help. What helps is ensuring on an ongoing basis that the very strong quality standards that are in place in this province are adhered to in every circumstance and that where they are not, there is appropriate follow-up.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont, followed by Airdrie.

Winter Road Maintenance

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My family has lived by and travelled on highway 2 for more than 40 years, and I have never seen a spate of accidents as over the last few months. The highway 2 corridor between Calgary and Edmonton is the economic lifeline of Alberta, with more than 80,000 vehicle movements per day. My constituents as well as many Albertans are very worried for their safety driving this highway in the winter due to the poor condition. To the Minister of Transportation: why this poor state of maintenance?

Mr. McIver: I thank the hon. member for being such a strong advocate for the people of his riding, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I drove that road just this morning, and I have to say that while I never felt unsafe, the trip took four hours instead of three. The fact is that we cannot stop winter from being winter. Nonetheless, when storms come, we get equipment out. We monitor it. At the end of the day we have people out, we have GPS, and we know of every piece of equipment, where they're out. The job is getting done. I can tell the hon. member isn't . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, first supplemental.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that these roads are supposed to be maintained to Alberta government standards and there have been many instances lately of poor conditions even days after snowfall, to the minister: do you have the ability to penalize the highway maintenance contractors for poor performance?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will say this. Not only do we have the ability to penalize contractors, we do it. They're held to a high standard. After every storm we review the storm with the contractors where the service was not up to the standards that Albertans could and should expect. They are penalized, real financial penalties, up to the point where they can actually lose the long-term contract that they have and put a lot of money in to set up. We take this seriously. The contractors will tell you they don't like it very much when they get those penalties, but we don't hesitate to put the penalties in place when the service requires it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that provincial highways are public, taxpayer-funded assets yet they're being maintained by the private sector for private gain, again to the minister: don't you think this poor highway maintenance situation is calling for your department to take over this vital service delivery to ensure the safety of all Albertans?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the taxpayers of Alberta, through this government, have saved lots of money, in the neighbourhood of 25 per cent, since we gave up our ability to do it and have contracted it out to the private sector. Further, over time the level of service has increased. I know the member is not happy today, but the fact is that over time it's gotten better. We have systems in place to deal with situations that crop up. The roads in this province get taken care of very well. We will continue to respond to the complaints as they come up, but we can't stop it from being . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Airdrie, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Public-service Contract Negotiations

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, Albertans obviously want the government to balance the budget. That means prioritizing and cutting wasteful spending, and there is a lot of waste. It also means bargaining in good faith with our public-sector workers to arrive at a fair deal for both them and the taxpayer. In 1977 Premier Lougheed provided our public employees, who provide critical services for all Albertans, the right to binding arbitration as an alternative to the right to strike. To the minister: why have you introduced legislation scrapping the arbitration rights of our front-line workers?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said, this is a little bit rich coming from the party opposite, who talked about holding the line on front-line public-sector salaries; in other words, freezing them. They'd have to put in the same legislation, actually, but much broader in reach. [interjections]

He talks about getting a bargained solution, Mr. Speaker. That's exactly what we're after. We want the AUPE to come back to the table to negotiate with us so that we can come to a fair and equitable resolution.

Given that during the 1977 debate in this House on granting our public-sector employees arbitration rights, well-respected minister Merv Leitch said, "If they are not to have the right to strike, in fairness to them we must provide . . . the fairest possible labor relations system for the employees of Alberta short of providing them with the right to withdraw services or strike." Very good point. Minister Merv Leitch and Premier Lougheed had it right. Arbitration rights rather than strikes on the front lines. Why are you messing this up, Minister?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, there's also the right of the taxpayer to have a settlement that balances what we know to be living within our means and fair and equitable payment. We are not freezing salaries at zero in this legislation, nor do we want to do that in the negotiation. [interjections] In fact, as I said earlier, we've got an offer on the table that's beyond what is in the legislation. We're open to the AUPE coming back to the table to negotiate. That's what we're after, a fair deal for the taxpayers and a fair deal for the employees.

Mr. Anderson: Given that before the election you, the Premier, your MLAs, and your paid operatives ran around the province promising large pay increases, promising support for the collective bargaining process, more support for front-line staff, a balanced budget, no debt, a free pony for every single voter and every single household, do you understand why Albertans have completely lost trust? How can they ever, ever trust anything that you say again, Minister?

Mr. Horner: You know, again, Mr. Speaker, it's a little bit rich coming from a party who totally reinvented themselves after the election, changed all of their core-held values at one policy conference, and came out trying to look like Progressive Conservatives.

Mr. Speaker, the honest truth here for the hon. member is that we are wanting to get . . . [interjections] I hope they'd like to hear the answer. We are hoping to get a balance between the rights of the taxpayers and the rights of our employees, whom we value deeply and to whom we want to provide competitive compensation that is amongst the best in the nation.

The Speaker: Interjection after interjection after interjection. I had trouble hearing what you were saying, hon. Minister of Finance, and I'd like you to repeat it all again, but we don't have time.

So let's move on to Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Oil and Gas Drilling Applications

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There has been a concern from the industry about the backlog of applications to the Alberta Energy Regulator. To the Minister of Energy: are those concerns grounded in fact and warranted?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we all know that the winter drilling season is an important time of the year for the energy industry and that it varies from year to year. What we're seeing is a real step up in the number of applications this year. This is a good sign. There's a lot of good work going on in Alberta. The regulator is responding and triaging applications as they're coming in and making sure that people who are ready to go out and do their work on the frozen land to develop the resources of this province, to create wealth for Albertans are able to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what has been done to address those atrocious delays?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, there have been some delays. But, actually, there's also been a lot of good work. The industry, the ESRD folks and the Alberta Energy folks and the aboriginal consultation office have all worked together to help ensure that any applications that are needed for immediate action or are critically important to the winter drilling season are dealt with expeditiously and are addressed. So I would say that the challenge of meeting the needs and serving the regulatory needs of Albertans are being well looked after.

The Speaker: Hon. member, second supplemental.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister again. Is this the last of the changes, or will there be more? Can we expect any more issues moving forward?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, we're partway through the creation of a whole new energy regulator in Alberta, that will be effective, efficient, and will help ensure that we address all challenges for the energy industry without for one moment compromising the environmental standards that Albertans hold dearly. I can tell you that if any industry players feel they have a concern, I'd encourage them to call the office of the CEO of the Alberta Energy Regulator to help ensure that they're dealt with on an expeditious basis.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Alberta Health Services Quarterly Reports

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Health Services continues to miss their own health benchmarks from 2010, including their first and second quarterly reports: 92 days late today. This cannot of course be blamed on the dedicated front-line professionals, labouring to make this unwieldy system work. The government hides the reality that hospitals are dangerously over capacity, there are life-threatening delays in EMS response times, and there's a failure to achieve eight-hour ER admission targets. To the minister: for three years you failed on your own benchmarks, eight-hour emergency in particular . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister for a response.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure there's a question there somewhere. As I've said in response to previous questions, we are developing a new performance management framework for the health care system. This is a joint effort on the part of Alberta Health Services in conjunction with their front-line providers as well as the Department of Health. We are actually, as I've said in response to previous questions, exceeding national benchmarks in areas such as hip and knee surgeries, and at the same time we are serving growing numbers of Albertans, the highest growth rate in the country.

Dr. Swann: So why are you not producing the second quarterly report, and why are you not engaging front-line professionals, experts, in setting these benchmarks, like Dr. Paul Parks?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've said in response to previous questions, we are developing a new performance measurement framework for the health system, one that looks at the performance of the health care system from the perspective of the patient, not the opposition, not others who would seek to politicize health care issues. When that performance measurement framework is ready, we will release it along with results since the last quarterly report.

Dr. Swann: A simple question, Mr. Speaker. When can we expect the first and the second quarterly health reports?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, that question was asked and answered.

As to the hon. member's request in his previous question, his reference to working with front-line providers, he knows full well that we are, Mr. Speaker, that the focus of the health care system is to provide front-line people with the tools and the support that they need in order to deliver the quality of care that they expect for patients.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Eggen: This weekend Albertans learned of a horrific case of abuse in a private seniors' facility. A woman suffering from severe bed sores was left without proper care and developed life-threatening infections. Alberta seniors will continue to suffer this sort of abuse and more often until this PC government takes real action to solve the crisis in long-term care by legislating staff-patient ratios and delivering services publicly, which report after report and good old common sense show is the best way. To the minister: what's the point of your seniors' advocate if the office is not independent and the system is thoroughly . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, one thing that we know will not work is focusing this debate on ideology, particularly that most deeply held by this hon. member and others who have stood up time after time to talk about quality issues in the context of their personal beliefs. What will allow us to continue to improve the very high level of care that's already provided in the province is a focus on quality, a focus on measuring and monitoring, adherence to quality standards, improving those standards as we go forward, and supporting front-line workers to deliver on that quality.

Mr. Eggen: Well, it's interesting on standards because the president of the Canadian Federation of Nurses Unions said this morning that Alberta has the lowest amount of nursing care in our long-term care facilities of anywhere in Canada. Given that the recent report from the Parkland Institute shows as well that residents in private facilities on average get an hour less of care, will the minister admit that his government's obsession with private care, which is ideological anyway, is shortchanging our seniors, endangering their health, and depriving them of the dignity that they deserve?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the people of Alberta are indeed fortunate that this hon. member is not making decisions about how to meet the growing needs of Albertans with respect to seniors' care and with respect to health care generally. This is a province that's growing by the size of the city of Red Deer a year. The answer to this is to support front-line workers with the tools and the resources that they need in order to do their job. Ideology has no place in this debate.

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know that the Alberta NDP has tabled thousands of working short forms of long-term care staff showing that residents were left in bed, missing baths, and weren't responded to in a timely manner because of inadequate staffing from this PC government. Given that caring for our seniors really should be the first priority, I would say and most Albertans would say: will this minister please commit to legislating staff ratios for long-term care in this province to ensure that our seniors receive the care that they deserve and not just empty words?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what this government will commit to and what we have continued to deliver on is to provide Albertans with access to the services that they need. That's based on a personal assessment, a professional assessment of the resident's needs and the patient's needs. It is not based on legislated ratios. It is not based on ideology. It is not based on anything other than a focus on patients and families in communities. That's what building Alberta is all about, and that's what we're doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Deaths of Children in Care

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are still reeling from last week's revelations about our child welfare system. The Minister of Human Services has since claimed that exposing details about children dying in care is somehow part of an agenda or that the information has been selectively chosen. But the fact remains that since 1999 one hundred and forty-five children have died in care, 89 deaths were kept secret, and publication bans shroud the system in secrecy. To the minister: what is your ministry doing in advance of the MLA round-table to ensure we take a co-ordinated approach to reviewing all child deaths?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I think that when one focuses on 86 deaths unreported prior to 2011 – all deaths now being reported – when there are some 8,000 to 9,000 children in care in any given year, that would be a rather narrow part of the agenda. There are a lot of other issues to be addressed and other things happening. There are a lot of very good things happening in the system as a result of many of those investigations that have happened over the years and the recommendations over the years. The round-table will determine whether we have the right death investigation process, one of its agenda items, and we will take . . .

The Speaker: Calgary-Shaw, first supplemental.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that one-third of the babies who died in care succumbed to SIDS or to entirely preventable unsafe sleeping conditions, how does the minister propose to address this issue before your round-table?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, some time ago there were recommendations around this. There's been a complete review. In fact, a review was done of infant deaths to SIDS in 2005 and recommendations that we implement safe sleeping policies. We've developed the safe babies training for foster parents and kinship caregivers of infants. The safe babies training provides valuable information about caring for infants and specialized care required by babies prenatally. It includes a chapter on sleep positions, reducing risk. So we've learned from what's happened, we've learned from the reviews, we've learned from the recommendations, and we have implemented changes, and those are . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the culture of secrecy has led to mistakes being repeated and policies not followed by caseworkers, many of whom are overworked and underresourced, how does the minister propose to address this critical shortcoming before your round-table in January?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's not a given that there's a culture of secrecy. In fact, in the child welfare system and in the Human Services department we have been spending the last two years working better together, working on outcomes-based delivery, working on changes to practice that improve practice, not because the practice before was bad but because you can always learn from every circumstance and do better. That's what this department is dedicated to, that's what this government is dedicated to, and we're fully prepared to do it in public while protecting the privacy of those whose privacy needs to also be protected.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Registry Services

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My constituency office in Edmonton-Ellerslie is receiving numerous inquiries from people wanting to open a business who are concerned that there are not enough registry agent offices in southeast Edmonton. Given that the province continues to grow very rapidly and that all registries are independent and privately owned businesses, how does your department determine when expansion of registry agencies is important to continue providing the level of service needed? That is to the Minister of Service Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have an expansion policy that we're working through with the Association of Alberta Registry Agents. I'm very pleased to announce, though, that we have put out an RFP for two new registry locations, one in the community of Chestermere and another in the community of Wabasca, where entrepreneurs from all sorts of different backgrounds are asked to put forward their best foot and bid on these new registry agent offices.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much. To the same minister: given that there's so much red tape, Mr. Speaker, in opening a registry – in fact, it's next to impossible – what is your ministry doing to ensure that the process is much more open and transparent so that some of the owners can have a fair opportunity to open a new business?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, what we've done in this particular case is that we're asking two essential questions. First of all, what are prospective owners willing to do to make services more convenient and better for everyday, hard-working Albertans, whether that be a reduction in fees or longer hours? That's up to them, to put forward their best foot on innovation. The second is that it's up to them to tell us what this opportunity is worth to them. This is a government asset that the taxpayers of Alberta own, and it's up to the business owners to tell us what they're willing to pay for this asset.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much. My final question is to the same minister. Minister, there are private businesses wanting to open. You just made an announcement in Wabasca and Chestermere. Can we expect new requests for proposals in Calgary or in Edmonton-Ellerslie?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is a good question. We're working with our partner the Association of Alberta Registry Agents to see how and where we need further expansion beyond these two communities. I've had requests from, for example, the mayor of Blackfalds, Alberta, saying that they would like an office. So we're going to look with these particular officials and see whether more offices are warranted and work with our partners to make sure that we have fair, reasonable expansion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Edmonton-McClung.

Mutual Fund Adviser Incorporation

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Various parties are asking for the Alberta Securities Commission to reconsider its restriction preventing mutual fund advisers from incorporating. As the Finance minister knows, mutual fund advisers in B.C., Saskatchewan, Ontario, and Nova Scotia are permitted to have commissions paid to an incorporated entity, but this is not allowed in Alberta. This inconsistency across the country creates an uneven playing field, causing unnecessary, burdensome paperwork for small businesses. Is the government considering changing the rules to allow mutual fund advisers to incorporate?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a good question. It is an active file, and it is something that I would like to bring forward to the House. I hope to do so in the next sessions. There are some issues around certified financial planners, financial advisers. In fact, nationally they are talking about how we might have professional self-regulatory regulations and some of those sorts of things enveloped within that. But in terms of administering securities and the passport system, et cetera, we are meeting on that. It is something that Alberta is active in right now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you. Given that incorporation is a modern and efficient business structure offering several practical advantages, as you obviously realize, will the government confirm that it is meeting with concerned stakeholders to discuss a solution, or if not, when will it?

Mr. Horner: Actually, Mr. Speaker, indeed we have been meeting with several of the stakeholders involved in this as well as in relation to our commitments with TILMA and with the New West Partnership as well as the rest of the provincial legislations. Again, it is something that I am very active in, and I look forward to bringing something to this Assembly in good time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the current restriction can result in individuals paying their accountants to do the same work twice, will the government ask the Alberta securities regulators to suspend the rule prohibiting mutual fund dealers' commissions being paid into a corporation?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, at this time we've not requested the Alberta Securities Commission to do that sort of thing. In fact, it's something that we stay away from, telling the Alberta securities regulators what to do. We do want the securities regulators to have as much length from the government as possible so that it allows them to do their job independently. Again, it's something that Mr. Rice and I have had discussions about and will continue to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by Little Bow.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents are very concerned about the fluctuating costs of monthly electricity bills, and given the unpredictable nature of recent winters and the effects on electricity consumption they are bracing for a very expensive season. My question is to the hon. Minister of Energy. What is being done to address fluctuating electricity prices in our province in order to protect Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, last January the government responded to the Retail Market Review Committee recommendations, one of which was to allow the retail companies in the electricity business to purchase their electricity over a longer period of time. It's a technical solution, but what it allows to happen is to reduce some of the volatility for prices. In fact, if you look at the results of that over this fall, you'll see that prices for electricity are dropping each month over the last couple of months.

Mr. Xiao: To the same minister: given that many seniors live on a fixed budget and that many live from paycheque to paycheque, how can the government help vulnerable individuals with electricity costs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, there are several options available to consumers. You know, we're all sensitive to the needs of people who are on fixed incomes. For one, they could actually secure a contract with their electricity retailer, or if they want to stay on the regulated rate option, they could actually choose a fixed monthly payment plan, which would help even out the costs of their electricity over the whole year. There are many ways, and I would encourage people to take the time to understand how they can manage the risk of volatility of their electricity price.

Mr. Xiao: Again to the same minister: given that in 1996 our electricity market was deregulated to allow for more competitive pricing, what is being done to ensure that Albertans always receive the most competitive prices?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I would note, actually, that the prices even this month are, you know, under 8 cents per kilowatt hour. Prices are very reasonable. In fact, if you compare that rate across the country of Canada, you will see that the prices for electricity in Alberta are right in the mid-range of all other provinces except for those provinces that have very low-cost hydroelectricity. However, we have no public debt on the generating assets in this province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by Edmonton-Riverview.

EcoAg Initiatives Environmental Compliance

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the last few years rural Albertans and agricultural producers have repeatedly called on this government to protect their land and water quality from anybody who has failed to act as good quality stewards to the environment. The EcoAg plant near High River, operated by Tongue Creek limited, has been repeatedly fined for excessive authorization of volumes of waste to their facility, posing immediate health risks to the livestock in surrounding areas. To the minister of environment: why isn't your government taking action on this ongoing problem?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for the question. I think it's an important question. We have certainly been working with EcoAg since 2009 to bring them into compliance. We have an enforcement order that was put in place. With the exception of a comprehensive groundwater monitoring program that we're working on with them on, they have met all of those. The enforcement order will remain in place until they have completed all of those enforcement order conditions that they must meet.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that enforcement orders are designed to ensure immediate action to correct the situation and given that this government has issued numerous orders dating back to 2003, why has your government failed to protect the environment, especially with water, and enforce the orders you have issued?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, the enforcement order is in place. They are meeting the majority of the conditions. We are working with them because we do expect them to meet the groundwater testing as well, and we will continue on with the enforcement order until that happens.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

2:40

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that concerned residents have repeatedly echoed concerns about this facility, is this minister prepared to create a new and effective policy to ensure that all landowners near the facility will understand that they don't have to live beside this mess any longer?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This issue did go before the Environmental Appeals Board. That's where the recommendations were made to myself as minister or to the previous minister, and that's where the ministerial order came into place, which, really, essentially modified the environment appeal approval, making sure that they must meet compliance. We will continue to make sure that they do meet compliance with the enforcement order.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. I believe the bell went, so question period is over. We did get to 16 questions again today. That's 96 total questions and answers. I want to thank Edmonton-Mill Woods for being ever so brief, just a matter of a few seconds in his questions and his preambles. Calgary-Mountain View made an attempt after a lengthy preamble to his first question to shorten his preamble, if at all, to his first sup as did Cardston-Taber-Warner, Edmonton-McClung, and even Little Bow.

So thank you to all those members. It allowed more time for other questions.

Secondly, would you mind if we reverted briefly to intros by giving your unanimous consent?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: I have a list of four: the Deputy Premier, followed by the leader of the ND opposition, followed by Leduc-Beaumont, followed by Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. If I may introduce through you to the Assembly and ask you to welcome warmly 11 individuals from the Ministry of Enterprise and Advanced Education and particularly from the supply chain development unit. These individuals provide support to industry and expert advice to this government to help further develop Alberta's industrial sector. I believe they are with us today in the gallery. Fabulous. They've waited patiently. Thank you so much for doing so. With us today are Mr. Larry Wall – if you can please rise – Mr. Tom Mansfield, Mr. Paul McLaughlin, Mr. Antonio Hurtado, Ms Patricia Armitage, Ms Jacqueline Loke, Ms Elizabeth Pin, Ms Farrah Fulton, Ms Lynn Martinez, Ms Patricia Fuentes, and Mr. Rob MacDonald. Thank you so much and welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I am very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guests, who represent hundreds of thousands of workers in Alberta. They're here today because they're very concerned about the negative implications bills 45 and 46 will have on their members and Albertans as a whole. I believe that most of my guests, perhaps not all, are here. I would ask them to rise as I call their name: Gil McGowan, president of the Alberta Federation of Labour; Siobhán Vipond, secretary-treasurer of the Alberta Federation of Labour; Brian Henderson, president of the Edmonton & District Labour Council; Marle Roberts, president of CUPE Alberta; Elisabeth Ballermann, president of the Health Sciences Association of Alberta; Ben Hendrickson, a board member from the HSAA; Judy Mayer, a labour relations officer with the HSAA; Mike Scott, president of CUPE local 30, the city of Edmonton's outside workers; Carol Chapman, president of CUPE local 3550; Linda Harris and Gloria Lepine, also from CUPE 3550; Olav Rokne; Tony Clark; and Ishani Weera, who are staff members of the AFL. I would ask the members of the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont, followed by Edmonton-Ellerslie and Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Bob Hawkesworth. Bob is a former long-time alderman for the city of Calgary, also president of the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, and no stranger to this House; he was the former MLA for Calgary-Mountain View. Bob is seated in the public gallery. I'd ask him to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly guests that have joined us today in the public gallery to represent their heritage language school and to show their support for Bill 211. My guests today are representatives from the International and Heritage Languages Association and from very, very different schools. Please rise as I call your names. To begin with, Dr. Alex Voloboev, International and Heritage Languages Association; Olga Prokhorova, president of International and Heritage Languages Association and a teacher, Russian Educational Centre; Josephine Pallard, past president of IHLA; Natalia Kovaliova, program co-ordinator for IHLA; Ms Aliya Tnaliyeva, Russian Educational Centre; Reuben Tut, Nuer Study Centre; Gatluak Ruot, Nuer Study Centre; Iryna Klymkiv, teacher at Ivan Franko School of Ukrainian Studies; Jagwinder Singh Sidhu, principal of Headway school, Mr. Speaker, your constituent; Manjit Singh Dhaliwal, board member, Headway school; and Kulvinder Thaira from Headway school as well. All of my guests have risen. I would ask that they please receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly guests that have joined us today in the public gallery to show their support for Bill 211, which will be introduced today in this House by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood. All the guests today are teachers from the Filipino language and cultural school of Edmonton. They're here to show their support for the many different heritages that will be impacted by Bill 211. I would ask that each of the guests rise as their name is called: Dr. Cesar Mejia, Carmelita Mejia, Alfonso Moster, Adelaida Moster, Merlyn Gonzales, and Linda Arma. I would ask that they all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm told that these members were prevented from being here earlier because of the very, very bad weather that we're all experiencing. So thank you for your indulgence.

In 20 seconds from now we will continue with Members' Statements, starting with Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by Calgary-Bow and Calgary-Mountain-View.

Education Act Regulatory Review

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Education in Alberta is transforming. With the new Education Act that was passed in the Legislature last year, we are another step closer to bringing the vision of Inspiring Education to life. Achieving that vision will ensure that all of Alberta's children get the chance to reach their full potential, become engaged thinkers and ethical citizens with an entrepreneurial spirit.

Before the act comes into force, however, we need to ensure that the regulations align with the vision, providing clear direction to the education system and ensuring that we are putting the needs and the best interests of students first. To do this work, Minister Johnson asked me to serve with three of my MLA colleagues – Calgary-Currie, Edmonton-South West, and Calgary-Glenmore – along with the public member on the Education Act Regulatory Review Committee. Since May we have met with education stakeholders and the public from all across the province to hear their input on topics such as school fees, transportation, school closures, home education, and more.

The purpose of the consultation has been to hear a variety of ideas and perspectives, and we certainly have achieved that goal. Thousands of Albertans – students, parents, teachers, administrators, trustees, and other members of the public – shared their input in person, online, and through written submissions. We had almost 4,000 online applications. Although we may not have reached a consensus on every topic, we can all agree that in order to give our kids the skills they need to be successful and to continue to build Alberta, we need to keep the best interests of students at the forefront. That theme emerged loud and clear.

We are now in the midst of compiling the feedback we received and look forward to sharing what we heard as soon as possible so that we can continue to work on preparing regulations to help create an even stronger education system in Alberta.

I want to thank every Albertan for providing their feedback and sharing their perspectives.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Impaired Driving

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In a heartbeat a tragic collision can take someone's life and change the lives of all those around them. It only takes a heartbeat to run a red light or to forget a shoulder check, and it only takes a heartbeat for someone to decide that they're going to get behind the wheel after sharing a few drinks with friends.

During the holiday season there are many wonderful occasions to gather with friends and family, and often alcohol will be offered at these celebrations. At this time of year especially but throughout the year our government is encouraging Albertans to plan ahead when spending time with loved ones or attending festivities. If you plan to drink, also plan a safe way to return home. Call a cab, use transit, or call a friend. Use safe alternative transportation.

We know that making a plan isn't always the first thing on our minds when we prepare to go out for the evening. As we know, after consuming alcohol, people are less likely to make wise choices and more likely to drive. Our research also shows that some people feel that if they're only driving a short distance, they will likely not be caught and there will likely be no consequences. It's a dangerous illusion.

We are all responsible for the choices we make. As drivers we need to ensure not only our own safety but the safety of others. If you feel your driving ability is impaired, regardless of how much alcohol you have consumed, find another way to get home. It's just not worth it.

Too often during the holidays lives are needlessly taken, and the grieving families are left behind. This holiday season make a plan to enjoy the festivities, and at the same time make a plan for a safe way to return home.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Labour Legislation

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There was an assault on human rights in Alberta today. Albertans who have chosen to join and work with a union do so with the understanding that they will enjoy the right to collective bargaining and, in rare circumstances when they cannot come to agreement with their employer, the right to independent arbitration. These rights are enshrined in section 2 of our Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

This PC government has increasingly followed the mean-spirited and undemocratic approach of their federal cousins and chosen to eliminate the right to both collective bargaining and the right to strike by thousands of public servants regardless of cause. Why? Because they can through their majority in this Legislature. While this means profound disrespect for public servants in their employ, it also means costly war with unions, all unions since the precedent can ultimately affect all unionized Albertans and eventually all wage workers. Not only is this unprecedented in Canada, but it overthrows decades of constructive working relations with tens of thousands of workers in this province and opens up the likelihood of costly court battles, in which we all lose both morally and financially.

This government makes frequent allusions to their common values with the late Peter Lougheed. There's no doubt now that these are not Lougheed Tories as Lougheed brought in Bill 41 in 1977, allowing binding arbitration, and he championed fundamental rights and freedoms for all unionized Albertans. To add insult to injury, this PC government will close debate on these two odious bills that will violate worker rights after only six hours each.

All Albertans are coming to see this PC government of 43 years as lost, entitled, and abusive of the values and principles that created this great province. All Albertans of conscience will be adding their voices and demanding a reversal of these bills and of this government's moral legitimacy to govern this great province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have two petitions to table. The first petition with 1,148 signatures is part of a larger group of petitions with over 3,500 signatures. This petition asks the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to “take the necessary measures, including the introduction of proposed amendments to existing legislation, to ensure the preservation and enhancement of the Pheasant Release Program, which has been an important part of Alberta’s hunting tradition, heritage and culture for over 65 years.”

The second petition that I am tabling, with 52 signatures, also asks the government of Alberta to introduce legislation that will help to preserve Alberta’s 65-year investment in the rearing, release, and hunting of pheasants program. Although the prayer is slightly different, this petition is part of a bigger group of petitions with over 3,500 signatures. Mr. Speaker, this petition is signed by a large group of people who understand the value of the hunting culture and traditions of Alberta.

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Bill 211 Education (International Language Programs) Amendment Act, 2013

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 211, the Education (International Language Programs) Amendment Act, 2013.

Bill 211 is a step forward from Motion 513, which urged the government to promote and assist heritage language schooling in collaboration with local school board authorities to provide adequate access to school facilities. It aligns international language programs with the Ministry of Education’s mandate under the new Education Act, section 19, alternative programs. Bill 211 is an amendment to the Education Act that consolidates international language programs and gives parents and students the option to access classroom space when needed. It honours the education-by-option principle by leaving the choice in the hands of students and parents when requiring this program. A minimum of 20 students’ requests are required. It acknowledges the partnership rule among school boards, nonprofit community language schools, and parents.

This bill sets a new framework to deliver international language education in Alberta. It complements the great work currently undertaken by the Ministry of Education, and it takes it one step further to raise the bar to create a stable and a consistent learning environment for our children. Mr. Speaker, in the end it gives our children the added competitiveness to succeed in the 21st century global economy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 211 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Wellness, followed by the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to table the requisite number of copies of the Alberta College of Optometrists annual report. Now, the college is the professional and the regulatory body for 600-plus members in Alberta, and its mandate is to govern and regulate its members to ensure that Albertans continue to receive effective, safe, and ethical care by optometrists.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, followed by Red Deer-North.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It’s a pleasure for me to table the appropriate number of copies of 10 pieces of correspondence that range from the AUMA, the AAMD and C, the mayor of Airdrie, the mayor of Calgary’s office, the mayor of Edmonton, the Calgary Regional Partnership, the Capital Region Board, and so on and so on, all endorsing the amendments to Bill 28 and asking us to pass the bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m very pleased to table documents with 61 signatures that request that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to take the necessary steps to introduce amendments to existing legislation to ensure the preservation and enhancement of the pheasant release program. These documents were part of the larger petition but could not be presented as a petition because they did not meet the strict rules of a petition. There are five copies, and the people who signed these documents are just as serious about the preservation of the pheasant hunting traditions and culture as the other 3,500 signatures.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to table five copies of an e-mail from Donette Kingyens to me expressing her concerns about changes to the public service pension plan. Ms Kingyens has put some personal notes on the end. She notes that when she retires, her entire means of supporting herself will be the earnings from her pension plan. She relies on what she’s contributing at this point, which is supposed to be into a guaranteed pension payout. It’s her only retirement plan, and the idea of it being reduced fills her with terror. I am very sympathetic to her plight. She is representing many other people.

Thank you very much.

3:00

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, did you catch my attention a moment ago about the clock?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, thank you. If it pleases the House, perhaps we could have unanimous consent to complete the Routine.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Let us conclude this section of our proceedings. The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m tabling the requisite copies for the enforcement order issued for the composting operator near High River, which I talked about earlier.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Today I’d like to table more copies of the handwritten letters my office has been receiving expressing concerns about the deep cuts to postsecondary education that are happening here in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, with your indulgence, I, too, have a tabling unless there's anyone else.

Seeing no one else, allow me, then, to table the requisite number of copies of a memorandum dated November 29, 2013, from the Deputy Premier to your Speaker concerning the question of privilege raised in the Assembly last week. Enclosed with this memorandum from the Deputy Premier to me are the following documents: a government of Alberta news release dated November 27, 2013, concerning Bill 46; a media notice from the government of Alberta dated November 26, 2013, concerning a technical briefing on bills 45 and 46; and finally, a government of Alberta news release dated November 27 concerning Bill 45.

Hon. members, we have two points of order, both raised by Airdrie within a very limited timeframe. Did you wish to deal with them both at once, hon. member, or separately?

Mr. Anderson: In the interests of time, because we do have private members' business, I'm going to withdraw those points of order so we can move on.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Both points of order have been withdrawn by the hon. Member for Airdrie.

We can now move on to the point of privilege. [interjections] I don't want to interrupt the Minister of Finance and the Member for Airdrie; however, I shall on this occasion.

Privilege

Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have a somewhat lengthy ruling, and I hope I could have your attention as I go through it. Your chair has given very serious and careful consideration, and I'm now prepared to rule on the purported question of privilege that was raised by the leader of the New Democrat opposition on Wednesday, November 27, 2013, which was subsequently argued by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona that day and can be found at pages 3166 and 3167 of Alberta Hansard.

The members for Airdrie, Edmonton-Centre, and the Deputy Premier also participated in that discussion, and their comments can also be found in Hansard on pages 3167 through 3170 for last Wednesday.

The central issue of the purported point of privilege is this. Did the government's brochure, titled The Building Alberta Plan, prejudice the actions of a committee of this Assembly, and was this Assembly also, perhaps, prejudged with respect to presuming passage of certain bills and whether a news conference on bills 45 and 46 was also somehow disadvantaged by not all members having seen them before they were offered to others outside the Assembly? The brochure that I referred to was tabled on November 27 by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview and is now Sessional Paper 1181/2012-13.

With respect to the formalities the Speaker's office did receive notice of the purported question of privilege on Wednesday, November 27, at 11:20 a.m., so the requirements of Standing Order 15(2) were in fact met. The November 27 notice of the question of privilege from the leader of the ND opposition referred to that his ability to perform as a member of the Members' Services Committee had been breached "by actions which have predetermined a decision yet to be made by the committee."

The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona clarified and expanded upon the alleged breaches of privilege during her November 27 comments, that I referenced a moment ago. Essentially, there are actually three purported questions of privilege, which the chair outlined last Thursday, November 28, at page 3208 of Alberta Hansard.

The first is that the brochure prejudged a decision of the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services by referring to the multiyear wage freeze taken by MLAs as that decision had not yet been made and was, in fact, not made until the committee met last Friday, November 29.

The second point is that the brochure prejudged a decision by the Assembly as it referred to public-sector employees taking multiyear wage freezes when that was the subject of at least one bill before the Assembly. The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was at a disadvantage on that point as Bill 46, the Public Service Salary Restraint Act, had been introduced in the Assembly literally minutes before she rose to speak to the question of privilege. In fact, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona did not have the bill when she was speaking.

The third purported question of privilege concerns a news conference about bills 45 and 46 prior to their introduction in the Assembly.

Now, the chair finds that it appears that the member raised the question of privilege concerning the Members' Services Committee at the earliest opportunity since that leader received the brochure in question on Tuesday. The notice did not refer to the news conference on the bills, which is the subject of another related question of privilege, but given the circumstance the chair is satisfied that it was raised when the event occurred and does meet the requirements of Standing Order 15(5). Likewise, the issue about the brochure, assuming that Bill 46 had passed, was raised at the earliest opportunity and was done so under Standing Order 15(5) as well.

The following day your chair asked the government some questions concerning the purported question of privilege, which can be found at pages 3208 and 3209 of Alberta Hansard for November 28. The chair asked when the brochure was produced, who produced it, when and how and to whom it was distributed, and whatever other information might be useful for your chair to know under the circumstances.

With respect to the news conference on bills 45 and 46 the chair asked whether it was a news conference. Was it a technical briefing? Exactly what was it? What time did it start? What did it finish? Was there more than one media session or technical briefing, and where was it held?

Earlier today your chair – moments ago, actually – tabled the November 29, 2013, memo by the Deputy Premier to me, in which was provided answers to these questions. The chair had asked that any response be received before 4 p.m. last Friday, and the Deputy Premier's memo was in fact received in my office at 3:27 p.m. on that day.

Now, with respect to the allegation concerning premature disclosure at news conferences, I have this to say. The response from the Deputy Premier clears up the purported question of privilege alleging that there was a news conference concerning bills 45 and 46 prior to their introduction in the Assembly on November 27. To release details of a bill or the bill itself to persons who are not members once the bill is on notice on the Order Paper but before it is introduced in the Assembly could be a contempt of the Assembly as you all likely know. This ground has been covered recently in the Assembly in the context of a purported question of privilege involving the Minister of Transportation and Bill 32. On October 31, 2013, it was found that there was no prima facie case of privilege. Members can find the applicable citations to the relevant authorities at pages 2655 through 2657 of Alberta Hansard for that day. There were some comments in that ruling that will be referred to later.

In his November 29, 2013, memo on the purported questions of privilege the Deputy Premier indicated that there was to be a technical briefing followed by a news conference on the two bills in question. He states:

The Bills were introduced at approximately 3:00 p.m. on Wednesday, November 27, 2013. A news release was issued after each Bill was introduced: the Bill 45 news release was issued at 3:09 and the Bill 46 news release was issued at 3:10 . . . The technical briefing with the media did not begin until after the Bills were introduced and the Ministers both arrived in the media room.

The Deputy Premier attached the news releases to his memo, which I referred to moments ago.

3:10

In fairness, the Deputy Premier provided similar information in his remarks on the purported question of privilege at page 3170 of Alberta Hansard for November 27, 2013. Accordingly, there was no release of the bill or any technical briefing provided to persons who were not members prior to the introduction of those bills in this Assembly. For the record Hansard advises that Bill 45 was read a first time at 3:03 p.m. and Bill 46 at 3:04 p.m. on the day in question. As there was no early release of information, there is no prima facie question of privilege on that point.

Now, with respect to presuming decisions of the Assembly and its committees, I have the following comments to make. The next two purported questions of privilege are not as easily dealt with. The document that precipitated these questions of privilege was the aforementioned brochure called The Building Alberta Plan. On page 6 of this document the following statement appears.

Public sector employees, including teachers, doctors and government managers – as well as MLAs – are leading by example with multi-year wage freezes because it's the responsible thing to do for our province.

It actually goes on, also, to talk about MLA pay being frozen for one year.

With respect to the timing of the brochure in question the Deputy Premier was very forthcoming in his November 29, 2013, memo. He indicates that "printing of The Building Alberta Plan started the week of October 7, 2013." Enough copies were printed for every Alberta home. Delivery of that brochure to the public, according to the Deputy Premier, "began November 21, 2013."

Now on the issue of a multiyear pay freeze for members there was a motion for consideration of the Members' Services Committee provided to the Speaker's office by the Member for Calgary-Varsity on Monday, November 25, 2013, which was then very quickly sent out to all members of the committee that day by my Speaker's office along with another notice as requested by the leader of the ND opposition.

Last Friday, November 29, 2013, the Members' Services Committee agreed to a freeze in salary or, more accurately, not to apply the mechanism for providing increases to members' salaries until March 31, 2017. Prior to that meeting the committee had voted at its February 7, 2013, meeting to suspend the increase in MLA salaries for one year; that is, until March 31, 2014. No motion was passed to suspend the increase over a number of years. There has not been such a motion since the new remuneration rates for members were put into place following the 2012 general election.

As discussed, Bill 46, which imposes a settlement on public service employees should an agreement not be reached, was not introduced in this Assembly until Wednesday, November 27. In his memo the Deputy Premier indicates that the text of the brochure was written in October and that distribution commenced on November 21. Clearly, this was well before there was any motion proposed to the Members' Services Committee for a multiyear freeze and certainly before any was approved. It may go without saying, but this was also well before there was indication to the Assembly that Bill 46 was forthcoming.

In terms of what aspect of the doctrine of parliamentary privilege might apply, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona provided the definition of contempt from the standard Commonwealth text Erskine May, 24th edition, at page 251:

Generally speaking, any act or omission which obstructs or impedes either House of Parliament in the performance of its functions, or which obstructs or impedes any Member or officer of such House in the discharge of his duty, or which has a tendency, directly or indirectly, to produce such results, may be treated as a contempt even though there is no precedent [for] the offence.

In the October 31, 2013, ruling, which was referenced earlier, your chair used the definition of contempt found at page 82 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition. That reference can be found at page 2656 of Alberta Hansard. The point is that a contempt of the Assembly differs from a breach of privilege since contempts may be affronts to the dignity or authority of the Assembly, which may not fall into a category of specifically defined privileges.

In 1989, for example, Speaker Fraser of the Canadian House of Commons commented on this distinction when he was faced with a similar question to what is now before this Assembly. In the House of Commons case the government of the day advertised on August 26, 1989, that "Canada's Federal Sales Tax System will change. Please save this notice. It explains the changes and the reasons for them." The tax of the day was to be replaced by the goods and services tax, the GST. The legislation to put the GST in place had not however yet been passed, which led to a serious question of privilege in the House of Commons.

In his October 10, 1989, ruling on this subject, found at pages 4457 through 4461 of House of Commons Debates, Speaker Fraser stated at page 4459:

In summary, all breaches of privileges are contempts of the House, but not all contempts are necessarily breaches of privilege. A contempt may be an act or an omission; it does not have to actually obstruct or impede the House or a member; it merely has to have the tendency to produce such results.

In the case before us today it is argued that the ND opposition leader was obstructed in performing his duties. I reject that argument, largely for the same reasons Speaker Fraser did in 1989. He stated, once again at page 4459 of House of Commons Debates:

In order for an obstruction to take place, there would have had to be some action which prevented the House or Members from attending to their duties, or which cast such serious reflections on a Member that he or she was not able to fulfill his or her responsibilities. I would submit this is not the case in the present situation.

However, this finding alone does not end the matter. The actions by the government of our day could constitute a contempt if it is found that they offend the dignity and authority of this Assembly. Members may recall that in the October 31, 2013, ruling in the Alberta Legislative Assembly your Speaker gave the following warning at pages 2656 and 2657 of Alberta Hansard:

Furthermore, in my view, any prior advertising about the nature of a bill must be undertaken very, very cautiously, if it is undertaken at all, so as to not create any impression that the contents of the bill are already law when the Assembly has not even seen the bill yet, much less debated it and passed it. In this respect, members may wish to examine the decision of the Ontario Speaker in 1997 when the government of the day advertised a certain bill as if it had already been passed. In this respect, please visit Ontario Hansard of January 22, 1997, at pages 6441 through 6443.

Now, in that Ontario case of January 22, 1997, a prima facie case of contempt was found, and in his ruling the then Speaker of the Ontario House, Speaker Stockwell, states, with respect to the House of Commons case, at page 6442 of Ontario Hansard for January 22, 1997, as follows:

In ruling that there was no case for contempt, Speaker Fraser appears to have accepted the submissions of government ministers that the government had never intended the advertisements in question to be anything more than “informational” and that it had never been “the government’s intention to suggest that legislation would not be submitted to Parliament for debate.”

For your information, I listened very intently to the submissions made by the Deputy Premier on November 27, and I did not hear the sort of assurances that guided Speaker Fraser in 1989. In finding a prima facie case of contempt in Ontario, Speaker Stockwell said at pages 6442 and 6443 of Ontario Hansard:

It is not enough for yet another Speaker to issue yet another warning or caution in circumstances where the wording and circulation of the pamphlet appear on their face to cross the line. I say in all candour that a reader of that document could be left with an incorrect impression about how parliamentary democracy works in Ontario, an impression that undermines respect for our parliamentary institutions.

Obviously, your Speaker has very serious concerns about the advertising that was undertaken in the Alberta brochure, which is central to the point of privilege before us today. As indicated in my earlier comments, the Alberta government was warned to not try and presume that the Assembly would pass legislation through some form of their own advertising. As your Speaker I was representing the interests and role of the Assembly in our parliamentary form of democracy.

In Alberta and throughout Canada we have a form of responsible government. As Speaker Kowalski, my predecessor, commented, on May 1, 1997, at page 319 of Alberta Hansard for that day:

the principle of the executive being responsible to the Assembly is the cornerstone of responsible government in this country.

In his text Constitutional Law of Canada, third edition, by author Peter Hogg, Mr. Hogg goes so far as to say: “Responsible government is probably the most important non-federal characteristic of the Canadian Constitution.” In the province of Alberta the executive is composed of the members of the Executive Council, all of whom have taken and subscribed to the oath for cabinet ministers.

In his 1989 ruling at page 4461 of House of Commons Debates Speaker Fraser requested that departments study his ruling carefully, pointing out that “we are a parliamentary democracy, not a so-called executive democracy, nor a so-called administrative democracy.”

In your chair’s view, the situation is more similar to what occurred in Ontario in 1997 rather than to what occurred in the House of Commons in 1989, as I referenced earlier in these comments, because this government of Alberta was warned recently, as recently as October 31 of this year, in a previous ruling that I made and within which I advised the government that it should not advertise in a way that presumes a decision of the Assembly or, by extension, a decision not yet made by one of the Assembly’s committees.

It is clear to your chair that the advertising in the brochure I referenced earlier did presume that a decision had been made by the Members’ Services Committee, to which the Assembly has delegated the ability to make decisions about members’ pay and benefits. That decision had not been made, in fact. That decision had not been made until the following Friday. Let me make sure I said that correctly: I am of the opinion that the advertising in the brochure presumed a decision that had not yet been made by the Members’ Services Committee.

The chair also finds that the brochure created the impression that legislation was in effect concerning public service salaries when, in fact, the bills had not been introduced. The advertising does show some disrespect for our legislative process and by extension, perhaps, for the Assembly itself. It should be very clear that in our form of democratic government the Assembly is owed total respect by the Executive Council, by all members of government, by all members of the House regardless of the capacity in which they serve.

The continued absence of adherence to some of the proprieties of this institution causes your chair a great deal of grief and anguish, and it also caused us again an enormous number of hours of research dealing with case precedent, dealing with former rulings, looking at other Assemblies, and so on and so on. I would estimate that collectively we spent almost 200 hours over the weekend, a number of us, looking into this and asking Speakers in other jurisdictions and other Parliamentary Counsels and so on for their examples. I would hope that the dignity and authority of this Assembly and of its delegated committees would be given greater respect from this day forward.

Accordingly, your chair finds that the advertising undertaken by the government on page 6 of the aforementioned brochure, The Building Alberta Plan, does constitute a prima facie case of privilege. It’s a breach of that privilege under Standing Order 15(6) as it is a form of contempt of this Assembly and of one of its committees.

That concludes my ruling on that matter. I would invite anyone from the government side should they wish to rise and issue a statement of whatever kind, and I’ll deal with it from there.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, obviously, I will accept your ruling. In no way, shape, or form would this government ever under any circumstances want to offend the dignity of this House and the importance of the Legislative Assembly and the parliamentary process, that we all strive to adhere to.

But if I may, Mr. Speaker, in my acceptance of your ruling point out to you that you very clearly make comments relevant to the mechanism by which MLAs’ salaries are to be increased. I would point you to your own website, Mr. Speaker, the legislative . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I’m offering you a chance to perhaps apologize for the breach. That’s what I’m expecting at this stage. We have not rehearsed any of this, as you know, but that would be customary. If you’re willing to do that, then the Assembly, including myself, would be more than anxious to hear it, particularly since you’ve accepted the Speaker’s ruling, for which I thank you.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, by no means would this government ever offend the dignity of this Legislative Assembly, and if, in your learned opinion, such has occurred, I do sincerely apologize.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Premier. That would close the matter.

I would like to mention one thing to you, Deputy Premier, and to all members of Executive Council, and that is this. In looking at the history of how matters similar to this have been dealt with in other Assemblies, I did note that members commented on how beneficial it was for their staff, particularly Executive Council staff, to meet with the Clerk and with some of our Parliamentary Counsel members in order to be better guided and better counselled on how some of our systems, protocols, and procedures work.

In particular, there are references made on websites such as the one you've just mentioned and elsewhere about the purpose and function of the Public Affairs Bureau, which was contained in one of your answers as a reference. In particular, the Alberta Public Affairs Bureau helps government communicate, for example. In particular, the Premier's communications unit also has a specific function in that respect.

Looking at ministry overviews, just for the benefit of all members, please know that there are eight different aspects that come under the Ministry of Executive Council. Executive Council is a short way of saying cabinet or a short way of saying the government of Alberta. The office of the Premier is one, and it's responsible for communications, according to the website. Another one is the cabinet co-ordination office. It oversees tracking and regular reporting on proposed government legislation up to the introduction of bills in the Assembly. Another one is the aforementioned Public Affairs Bureau, which advances government communication with Albertans and distributes government news releases, co-ordinates government advertising, and it goes on. I'm not going to read them all for you.

I only mention this – why? – because I know that there are a number of new people, not only in this Assembly but new people out there supporting ministers, supporting private members on both sides of the House, who may not have the benefit of that education and training. I would undertake a suggestion – please, hon. Deputy Premier, you might want to receive it as a recommendation – that you seriously consider taking up that generous offer, which I'm going to make on behalf of the Clerk and his staff, to meet with them in order to get a more complete understanding of the role of the Assembly and its rights and immunities, and I'm referring to the staff who support you in particular. All of you are welcome to consult with the Clerk, with myself, or with any of our Parliamentary Counsel at any time.

But we've got to fix up this system so that it stops and does not continue again. I've taken a long time explaining myself. I do not want to stand here and explain myself again and again and again on this kind of a matter.

I thank you for the apology. I note the sincerity, Deputy Premier, with which you delivered it. I shall hold you and all members to your word on that, and I hope that your staff will read Hansard so that they can benefit from your comments and mine as well.

That concludes this matter.

Point of Clarification

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, under section 13(2), and it's truly just a question, how would we at this point as an opposition – or is it even in our purview to do this? – refer something like this to the appropriate committee on this issue? Or, once you close the matter, is that just it?

The Speaker: That's a very good question, Airdrie, and thank you for asking it.

Had the government not apologized for it, you would have been free to bring a motion forward to this Assembly, because once the Speaker has made a ruling, then the matter belongs to the Assembly. It doesn't belong to the Speaker. I find whether there's a prima facie case; I did. I asked the Deputy Premier if he wished to comment, and he started to comment in an elongated way. I tried to shorten it up and say: here is what I think the Assembly is after. I don't think that anyone was really seriously harmed or hurt throughout this whole process, but neither would I want someone to be, and certainly the rights and dignities of this House could have been tarnished had there not been immediate action taken with the apology.

We'll leave it there. I think, Deputy Premier, you had a comment, but before you do, since I've recognized Airdrie – I don't want to get into opening a debate – very briefly, hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, your clarification is under 13(2), I assume.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, considering that this is just not so common, we want to learn from it. I'm wondering if there is a possibility for us to make a motion tomorrow under Standing Order 15(6). I just wanted to seek clarification on that, too.

The Speaker: Well, I think I answered that question in part already with respect to the question asked by Airdrie. The matter is now concluded in this respect, hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, so we're not going to pursue it. A motion is not required, necessary, nor would it be, in my view at least, in order tomorrow since the matter has been concluded with the apology that had just been offered.

Now, Deputy Premier, let's hear what your final comment is. Is this under 13(2) as well?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Correct, Mr. Speaker. In the spirit of wanting to learn from this exercise, is there a possibility that the Legislative Assembly Office could further clarify, not on the Assembly's time but through different means, how we reconcile the fact that, clearly, on the records of the Legislative Assembly it indicates that the mechanism for increase of salary was not utilized since 2009, yet the Clerk tabled a report saying . . .

The Speaker: Thank you. Hon. member, I thought you were rising under 13(2) to seek clarification of the ruling itself. There are other processes for debates. You can exchange letters. You can certainly talk to other members. You can raise it in this House under any number of ways. You have government motions. You have a variety of ways that you can address that question. The point that I think you're driving at is that MLA pay has been frozen for the last year. It's frozen again now for three more years, and that's now a matter of record.

Okay. Let us move forward.

Orders of the Day

Written Questions

[The Clerk read the following written questions, which had been accepted]

Supports Intensity Scale Interviews

Q42. Mr. Wilson:

From May 1, 2009, to May 1, 2013, how many individuals were trained to complete supports intensity scale interviews, and what specific training is required in order to qualify them to administer the interview?

Persons with Developmental Disabilities Program

Q43. Mr. Wilson:

From May 1, 2012, to May 1, 2013, how many clients did the persons with developmental disabilities program serve, and how many completed the supports intensity scale interview process?

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 208 Seniors' Advocate Act

[Debate adjourned November 25: Mrs. Forsyth speaking]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, I believe you have five minutes left should you wish to take it.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to Bill 208, the Seniors' Advocate Act, put forward by my colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, who's our Seniors critic. It's sad to be standing on this day after what was presented to us, the heartbreaking story of a senior in care. It highlights the broken system that we have.

The bill, as indicated by her, will create an office of an independent seniors' advocate. Now, I know what the government is going to say about this bill. They may get up to say how much they've done for seniors, how there is a strategy, how there is a policy and all kinds of programs for seniors, and that they've even announced the establishment of an advocate who would report to the minister.

Mr. Speaker, there are thousands of stories out there about senior abuse, and I'd like to talk for a moment about one of those seniors. By the time the ambulance showed up at her house, the senior's screams were, as paramedics would later describe, already at 10 out of 10. On the bed in the foyer lay an 88-year-old senior, her eyes screwed up in agony, her skin covered in feces, with a broken leg gone untended for weeks. The fact that she lived in the house was a surprise to her neighbours. No one had seen her. No one had any idea how she had spent her final days in pain. None of them knew that her daughter and caretaker had waited weeks before calling for help.

This senior has joined a large and growing number of elderly people across this world who live and die in silence, left to fend for themselves. This type of abuse, which also includes neglect, is still so hidden that it's hard to quantify. The broad picture painted by the Associated Press and gleaned from hundreds of interviews and dozens of studies is that world-wide tens of millions of seniors "have become victims, trapped between governments and families, neither of which has figured out how to protect or provide for them." By the year 2050 there will be more seniors than there are children, and that's a startling fact.

Seniors are people who have worked long and hard to contribute to the world we live in today, but as they age, their bodies and minds slowly diminish, and as such they can become a target for those who wish to prey on this vulnerable population. Many seniors don't report abuse for fear of retaliation from their abuser, from their caretaker, or from those who want to take care of them.

The seniors' advocate office will represent their rights, their interests, their viewpoints, and be a kind and willing ear. They are the one person seniors can go to when they feel no one else will listen to them or, for that matter, believe them. The seniors' advocate will be able to visit with any senior. I know how scared seniors are about speaking out. Residents are afraid to speak out. They are afraid to speak out about the quality of the food; they're afraid to speak out about the quality of the care.

Mr. Speaker, the government loves to promise things to seniors. There's a Seniors' Week, a Seniors Advisory Council, even a Grey Matters Conference. Lots of deliberation but, quite frankly, not the action seniors are looking for. Seniors are feeling lost in the shuffle.

Now, the government will speak eloquently about how people struggle to navigate the health care system. The common denominator here, however, is the government. It can be so impersonal and daunting that seniors feel lost. And you know what, Mr. Speaker? Their families feel lost. Half the time the government is the one that's lost.

Seniors need someone that can navigate the system with them. The seniors' advocate will have real power. They'll be able to meet with any senior they need to. They'll be able to intervene on a senior's behalf if problems arise in long-term care, home care, or continuing care. They'll be able to intervene when problems arise with trustees of seniors, and they'll be able to intervene when a senior isn't sure what to do or, for that matter, who to reach out to. All are important issues, and quite frankly the government needs to do less talking, pass this bill, and proclaim it.

We owe our seniors a great deal of gratitude, Mr. Speaker. They spent their lives building this province. They've raised children, and they've contributed to the communities. Now that they are growing older and becoming physically and mentally more vulnerable, we must provide them an independent voice.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all of our fellow members in this Assembly to vote for the bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Calgary-Glenmore for the moment. There are others on the list if time permits.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today and continue debate on Bill 208, the Seniors' Advocate Act, brought forth by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. To begin with, I'd like to acknowledge the vital role that seniors have played in our province. Seniors play a significant role in the history of Alberta's families and communities. They are the foundation of our province and the link to our history, our past. Our families today have gained much from their experiences. In many ways today they've helped shape the Alberta that we know and love. Because of this, it's more important than ever that seniors' voices be heard loud and clear.

With the recent announcement of a health advocate office, Mr. Speaker, we are listening. An advocate, by definition, works to promote awareness and understanding of the cause or the ability to change public opinion or cause a shift in people's perceptions or understanding of an issue. Now, our government saw the need for preparations to be made in order to effectively accommodate a vibrant and growing seniors population. This included improving existing programs as well as further streamlining and elevating the ways in which seniors receive the services needed to meet ongoing and evolving concerns.

This need was also realized through the proclamation of the Alberta Health Act, which established a seniors' advocate, fulfilling this government's commitment to help seniors and their families access supports and services in a timely and efficient way. Mr. Speaker, one could say that the Seniors Advisory Council was created in order to mitigate many concerns facing the seniors population. The Seniors Advisory Council is a government-appointed body reporting to the Minister of Health. Bill 208, however, proposes that a seniors' advocate be established as an officer of the Legislature. Now, this means that the seniors' advocate would be arm's length from the government.

Mr. Speaker, the council's main roles are to provide advice and information to the province regarding many of the challenges faced by seniors as they relate to their standard of living. Council members work to address a multitude of issues impacting the seniors population across Alberta. The role of the council has become even more important as the seniors population in Alberta has expanded to over 425,000 as of January of last year. This demographic will only continue to grow as the baby-boomer generation ages and many begin to retire.

Mr. Speaker, one of the ways that the advisory council ensures that seniors' voices are heard is through annual tours to various regions of the province to consult with seniors as well as service providers. In June of 2011 council members, in fact, toured the constituency of Cardston-Taber-Warner to consult with staff and residents. This interaction helped to raise issues most relevant to seniors in the region such as the quality of accommodation, availability of services, and satisfaction with staff that were raised to the touring council members. By the way, we have since toured Calgary and Edmonton. Others highlighted the availability of health services on-site or from community providers. Those working in seniors' facilities also brought forward concerns regarding the ability to retain staff, ongoing building renovations, and crossgovernment funding co-ordination.

The very structure of this advisory council, the fact that it is a government-appointed body reporting to the Minister of Health, ensured that the council's key recommendations could inform important policy decisions affecting Alberta seniors. Policy development often benefits from this relationship with the council, and this means seniors will benefit as well.

Although I commend the member opposite for bringing forward this proposed legislation, I am concerned that having an arm's-length body may hinder the very intent of having an advocate in the first place. As we have seen with the effectiveness of the advisory council, having a body which reports to the Health minister is crucial to ensuring that lasting changes are made to policy, programming, and the delivery of services for our seniors population. This effectiveness is exemplified through the council's work in the 2011-2012 fiscal year. During this time the council helped with the continued implementation of policies, programs, and services guided by the aging population policy framework.

Mr. Speaker, the council also played a significant role in the development of materials that addressed financial and elder abuse and provided insights on continuing care initiatives. In addition, council also fulfilled its mandate by providing further guidance in the development of information workshops to support the creation of a more age-friendly Alberta.

Another strength of the council is the diverse makeup of its boards and members. Appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, members come from varying experiential backgrounds, from medical professionals to university academics to regular Albertans who are seniors themselves and have advocated for other seniors. Through their work members ensure they consult with seniors, seniors' organizations, and other bodies to proactively gather information and provide advice to the Minister of Health, as detailed in their mission statement.

Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that this issue has garnered attention in the House. As this government continues to build Alberta, we project that the percentage of seniors in our province will increase from approximately 11 per cent to 15 per cent of the total population, and by 2036 it is projected that there will be more than a million seniors right here in Alberta, or 1 in 5 Albertans. It's crucial that we never forget just how important our seniors are to this province. After all, they are the men and women that built the successful Alberta that we know today.

As more and more Albertans begin to age and retire, it's our job to ensure that we care for them by providing effective services, and this means developing legislation, policies, funding, and program co-ordination to meet their essential needs. Not only are seniors a valuable and respected resource, but they're also an integral part of Alberta's families and communities, and, Mr. Speaker, it is important that we increase the recognition of the seniors population. That's why our government has proclaimed the Alberta Health Act and created the seniors' advocate role. The advocate will be involved in requesting inspections, investigations, and quality and safety assessments related to care provided in seniors' facilities, engaging seniors and stakeholders on seniors' issues as well as ordering investigations into reports of seniors' abuse while in care.

Mr. Speaker, the seniors' advocate will in many ways complement the work that the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta is already doing, and I would like to thank the hon. member opposite for bringing this bill forward. However, I am concerned that the proposed legislation in its current form will not have a lasting effect on services for our seniors and would interfere with the seniors' advocate role that will be in place.

I look forward to hearing the remainder of the debate. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw in place of Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods, and I have Bonnyville-Cold Lake on the list as well.

Mr. Wilson: Great. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your making that switch on the fly on our behalf here. I think that this is a very important discussion for our Legislature to have, and it's very timely in the sense of what we saw in the child welfare system. Now, we don't need to rehash everything that we've heard in the child welfare system, but in the quick Coles Notes version of it: 145 children who have died in care since 1999, 89 of which we just learned about last week.

The one feather in the cap that the government was able to have in response to this misconduct of responsibility was the fact that in 2012 they made the office of the Child and Youth Advocate independent of this Legislature. It was the one thing where consistently, every single day, anyone in this debate could say: "You know what? They did the right thing." By making it independent, it allows the office to look at the case files, to make recommendations, to do it outside the auspices of the ministry, which makes it that much more effective and that much more binding, I would suppose, for what the government should do about it.

It just seems so odd to me to listen to the debate coming from the other side. Here we have a member saying that the seniors' population is expanding, it's growing, that 1 in 5 Albertans within the next few years is going to be a senior but that we really shouldn't make the seniors' advocate independent of this Legislature because it's just not politically convenient. What's politically convenient is for us to stand up and say: hey, we proclaimed an act that we passed three years ago. Well, good for you.

The reality is that without having this body as independent, the same thing is going to happen as what happened with the Child and Youth Advocate prior to 2012. It was under the ministry; it answered to the minister. It was not as effective as it could have been, which is why it was moved to be an independent office, and it was the right decision. When this government makes the right decisions, we'll be here to support them and to say that it was the right decision. So April 2012: congratulations; you did the right thing. Our child welfare system is in a better position because the office of the Child and Youth Advocate is independent. You did the right thing.

It's time to reconsider your position on this one and do it again for the exact same reasons you did then. To stand up and suggest that it would be a more effective body under the ministry makes absolutely no sense, and I cannot believe for a second that not one of you sees it that way. It's very unfortunate.

Mr. Speaker, that concludes my remarks. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about a matter that is about seniors' care. This is not about politics; this is about the care of the seniors in Alberta. As we discuss Bill 208, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake for bringing the matter forward. The importance we give to seniors and the actions we take to address their concerns is of defining value for not only this government and for this Legislature but for our society.

We are aware of the difficulties seniors and their families face when confronted with the challenges of taking care of one another. Those who care for and advocate on behalf of our seniors are providing a valuable service to society. Our seniors deserve society's respect and support, Mr. Speaker, now and in the years to come. That is why I would like to compliment the hard work and attention paid by all members to Bill 208, and I congratulate its intentions.

While the intentions of Bill 208 are indeed worthy of praise, we should also consider the benefits that a seniors' advocate that reports to the Health minister will have as has been determined by the announcement of the new health advocate. The newly announced health advocate's office will assist Albertans in navigating the health system and will contain three advocates: a health advocate, a seniors' advocate, and a mental health patient advocate. The new seniors' advocate role will include requesting inspections, investigations, and quality and safety assessments related to care provided in seniors' facilities as laid out in Alberta law.

It will also ensure that complaints and concerns are referred to the appropriate channels, including education on the rights, interests, and needs of seniors. The seniors' advocate will work to provide information and referrals for seniors, their families, and caregivers regarding government-funded seniors' health, continuing care, and social support programs and services. Mr. Speaker, most seniors' services are health related, and these services are best navigated by someone who is aligned with the Ministry of Health. Again, this is an important distinction, and we should place emphasis on it as we discuss Bill 208.

Further to this, Mr. Speaker, we should also remember that several government departments share responsibilities for the various aspects of seniors' services and programs, including health and housing. If we want to keep our focus on seniors and on the best results for them and their families, then it makes sense to look at the best possible means for giving them direct access to the resources that are available. If you want to get the right information and work to co-ordinate the best results, you have to take advantage of the resources that are within the government departments. This is particularly true when it comes to advocating on behalf of our seniors, and the newly consolidated health advocate will improve upon collaboration, reduce duplication, and streamline administration.

The benefits of having direct access to the resources available are immediately apparent. A seniors' advocate working within the health advocate's office will place expert knowledge as close to the minister as possible and in alignment with the policy-makers. This has the advantage of direct and immediate knowledge of the key issues and potential solutions as they unfold. Seniors' issues are complex, varied, and the contexts in which they arise are often dynamic and emotional. Dynamic, too, are the types of solutions required to successfully mitigate the variety of challenges faced on seniors' issues.

While Bill 208 increases awareness of these challenges, Mr. Speaker, allow me to give a brief context to the points I've already made. According to the profile in Alberta Seniors' report released in 2010, the seniors' population in Alberta spans more than two generations, with an age range from 65 to more than a hundred years. Alberta's seniors population has varying backgrounds, incomes, living arrangements, and levels of health. This is why it is imperative that the solutions we present have an implicit flexibility, flexibility in co-ordination and flexibility in how available resources are mobilized. The solutions should also help Albertans and their families navigate the province's health care system.

A seniors' advocate that reports to the Health minister best allows for that flexibility. This advocate will be capable of successfully adapting to the dynamic environment in which seniors' issues arise. It will put the right knowledge and the right expertise in the right place beside the minister, and the minister would be able to make the best informed decisions in the light of the close and co-operative relationship with the seniors' advocate, under the umbrella of the health advocate's office within the context of the Alberta Health Act. Mr. Speaker, a seniors' advocate reporting to the Health minister is in a better position to do the right thing, and that is putting seniors and their families first.

Bill 208 does an admirable job of drawing awareness to the importance of seniors' issues. We all recognize that preparations must be made in order to accommodate our growing seniors population. That includes improving existing programs and further streamlining and enhancing the ways in which seniors have access to services to meet ongoing and evolving needs.

Mr. Speaker, we are proud of what our government has accomplished for Alberta seniors. In 2012 the ministry assumed responsibility for the support programs and services provided to seniors through the former ministry of Seniors, helping improve continuity in both short- and long-term care services. Currently the Minister of Health, working in collaboration with other ministries and departments, offers a variety of support services and programs for Alberta seniors.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with the announcement of this new health advocate office our government is creating a single advocacy office that brings health, mental health, and seniors' advocacy into one place, a place where it is now easier for Albertans to take their concerns, a place to provide education and direction to help people understand the health charter, to navigate through the health system and learn where and how to access health care services. This also acts as proof that our government is not only willing to do what is necessary to take care of our seniors but that we are bound by our duty to go beyond that by proactively improving the quality of life our seniors have worked hard for and which they deserve.

The Seniors Advisory Council of Alberta, who reports to the Health minister, is another strong example of the proactive approach our government takes in addressing seniors' issues. The council acts as a liaison for seniors, stakeholders, and government. Their hard work, research, engagement in province-wide consultations, and commitment to addressing a multitude of seniors' issues is invaluable to the development of legislation, policy, funding decisions, and the co-ordination of programs and seniors' services.

As we discuss Bill 208, we should recognize how policy development benefits from this relationship as the council's findings are essential in helping to develop a more comprehensive portrait of seniors' needs. Similarly, Mr. Speaker, this new health advocate office will foster collaboration and integration among Alberta government ministries. This could also extend into greater collaboration potential with the federal and municipal governments and with other community partners that wish to ensure effective and efficient delivery of services to our seniors.

As we discuss Bill 208, we need to remember that our purpose here is to better connect seniors with the services that are available and with services that will be available in the future. As several government departments share responsibility for providing senior-focused services and programs, it will prove positively that the seniors' advocate within the health advocate's office will be most effective in enhancing these shared responsibilities. It would also help to offset costs by utilizing existing services and resources. This is particularly true, Mr. Speaker, in an environment of rising health care costs.

Our government is committed to seniors. Our government is proud of the work we have done so far, and we understand the work and dedication that will be necessary as we move forward. We will continue to work to improve the lives of our seniors and give them the defining value in our society they so greatly deserve. In light of the government's proposed seniors' advocate, I find Bill 208 to be unnecessary. As such, I cannot offer my support.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, seniors are very dear to me; my parents are seniors, and I live with them. I echo my colleagues, and I want to congratulate the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake for her work on Bill 208, the Seniors' Advocate Act. It is an honour to rise to speak on the subject of advocacy and what it means to be an advocate, particularly in light of the announcement to create a seniors' advocate within the health advocate's office, that will be fully operational on April 11, 2014.

As we discuss Bill 208, it is important to reflect on what definitions we use for advocacy, how those definitions can determine our relationship to the kinds of advocacy we find most effective, and on the types of advocacy that are available to us. As my colleagues have also pointed out, Mr. Speaker, our seniors and their families deserve our respect and our commitment to the enhancement of their quality of life. And it is also true that we should define ourselves in relation to the value we place on what we do for our seniors and their families.

There are many definitions of advocacy, and much debate exists regarding which is the most appropriate to use. Having a definition of advocacy is necessary so that we have something to refer to, to check against, and to encourage discussion about what we are doing. At its most intuitive level an advocate can be defined as one who pleads the cause of another. To take this a step further, advocacy can also be described as promoting awareness and understanding of a cause or the ability to change public opinion and cause a shift in people's perceptions and understanding of an issue.

However, we should remember that advocacy can take a variety of forms and can involve more than one person or group. Mr. Speaker, with respect to Bill 208 I would like to highlight a particular advocacy group in Queensland, Australia, called Queensland Advocacy Incorporated. Queensland Advocacy Incorporated is a community-based advocacy group for people with disabilities. This group is particularly helpful in how they define both the types and the key elements of advocacy. In their view, the key elements of advocacy involve speaking, acting, and writing, with minimal conflict of interest, on behalf of the sincerely perceived interests of a disadvantaged person or group. According to this, advocacy is active, it involves doing something, it involves being there for someone or a group of people when they encounter a difficult situation and need strength to have their voices heard. It means possessing the unwavering will to fight for a person's right to a more fulfilling life.

Minimal conflict of interest also lies at the core of advocacy and is perhaps one of the hardest but most important issues to come to terms with. When one is in an advocacy role, they should be clear as to how their interests may be in conflict with the person for whom they are advocating. As an advocate one should be able to define and reduce conflicts of interest or at least be prepared to acknowledge their limitations as an advocate.

Mr. Speaker, being able to understand sincerely perceived interests is a complex and difficult task. Advocates do not just speak up for what a person may want or what a person may be interested in. Advocates will be faced with making decisions about an individual's life and well-being and may be the only resource in that person's life who has a positive vision for that person's future in the immediate and long term. Identifying what is in a person's interests, what they need versus what they want, can be a very difficult process.

In our discussion of Bill 208, the Seniors' Advocate Act, we would be wise to consider that an advocate's mandate is to promote and protect and defend the welfare and justice of those they advocate for. They do this by being primarily concerned with fundamental needs, and they remain loyal and accountable in a way which is emphatic and vigorous. One's advocacy efforts should be aimed at enhancing and protecting the value, the competencies, and the image of the person for whom they are advocating.

There are many important and subtle concepts in this definition that are worth our careful consideration. We should do what we can to acknowledge the sincerely perceived interests of our seniors, and we should do that in a way that avoids unnecessary conflicts. We should find the best possible ways to protect and defend their welfare and justice. We will continue to address their fundamental needs, and we will remain loyal and accountable in ways that are both emphatic and vigorous. We will take the lead, and we will initiate progress. Beyond this, we will accept this responsibility with understanding and compassion and empathy. This is the most true when it comes to advocating on behalf of our seniors.

Our newly created seniors' advocate is now well positioned to tackle those important and complex issues. We are proud of what our government has accomplished for our seniors. Our ministries and departments co-ordinate their efforts and share their resources in ways that make the best services and programs available. This new seniors' advocate will not only extend the effectiveness of our government's capacity to address the needs of our seniors, but it will also better align with existing initiatives such as Alberta's Mental Health Patient Advocate.

Before I finish, Mr. Speaker, I would like to briefly mention the different types of advocacy that exist as a way of rounding out our discussion on the defining qualities of a successful advocate. According to Queensland Advocacy there are five types of advocacy. The first is individual advocacy, which is when an advocate concentrates efforts on one or two people. The second is citizen advocacy, and this usually involves a community-based movement that aims to recognize, promote, and defend the rights, well-being, and interests of an identified group. The third is systems advocacy, which is primarily concerned with influencing and changing the system in ways that will benefit a defined group within society. The fourth is parent advocacy, which describes advocacy undertaken for a person in need and their family. The fifth and final type is self-advocacy, which is when a person or group advocates on behalf of themselves. I raise those points as a way of urging all hon. members to carefully consider the implications of what is proposed in Bill 208.

4:10

As we move forward and define the type of advocacy we will practice, we should focus on building relationships, on the best means to reach and mobilize the resources within our government, and on what would serve the interests of our seniors best. We should also encourage a close dialogue between our government and the seniors' advocate and the seniors that are advocated for.

Our seniors and their families deserve no less than the best we can offer. We will put our minds and energy and commitment to that task. Our seniors have set important examples for us and serve as wonderful and wise role models for our younger generations. They have built the Alberta we know today, and we are proud of their hard work, their generosity, and their lasting legacy of a real commitment to a caring and compassionate community.

Mr. Speaker, our new seniors' advocate moves us forward in the right direction, and as such I cannot offer my support to Bill 208. However, I would like to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. With regret, your time has expired, unfortunately.

I have to go to Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Calgary-Mountain View. Then I have Calgary-Varsity, associate minister, Edmonton-Gold Bar, associate minister, and Stony Plain.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to speak to Bill 208, the Seniors' Advocate Act, being brought forward by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. I would like to thank the hon. member for putting forth a bill that aims to positively impact our senior citizens.

To begin, I would like to acknowledge the vital role that seniors have played in our great province. Seniors have forged the path which our generation has avidly followed. It goes without saying that seniors have positively impacted the history of Alberta families and communities, and I'm proud to be a member of this Assembly, advocating for the hard-working constituents accordingly.

Bill 208, the Seniors' Advocate Act, proposes the creation of a seniors' advocate as an office of the Legislature. This, Mr. Speaker, differs from the government's current plan to establish an advocate that will consolidate into the health advocate's office. It is our duty as government members to advocate collectively not only for all our constituents but also for those requiring a higher need of due care. Bill 208 proposes to create an independent seniors' advocate, reporting directly to the Legislature.

By 2036 it is estimated that the senior population will reach upwards of 20 per cent of the total population in Alberta, meaning that about 1 in 5 Albertans will be a senior citizen. Realizing these statistics, it is imperative that this government act in such a way as to bring seniors' issues to our attention in a collective and organized manner.

In 2008 our government advocated for seniors by establishing a Demographic Planning Commission. The commission's main function was to provide analysis and research leading to proposals in preparation for our aging population. In December of 2008 the commission brought forth the Findings Report, that they created after conducting a survey with more than 10,000 Albertans and engaging in additional consultations with nearly a hundred stakeholders. The findings of the commission were used to develop an aging population policy framework, that provides strategy and goals to assist this government's decision-making and policy co-ordination. These findings, Mr. Speaker, helped to pinpoint the concerns of key stakeholders, enabling the commission to further narrow down possible issues and areas focused on our seniors. This government has done well to ensure that seniors are properly represented and advocated for.

Additionally, our annual budget consultations are directly aimed at gaining a heightened understanding of constituents' needs and issues. It is our responsibility to ensure that communication channels between ourselves and our constituents are being effectively utilized. Mr. Speaker, initiatives like the Demographic Planning Commission and our annual budget consultations surely capture our efforts to continuously and actively seek practical solutions to meet the needs of all our constituents, including our seniors that we care for and love.

This government is aware of the challenges that face our seniors, and this is why we have implemented such initiatives, so that we can better plan for their future. Bill 208 suggests there is a need for a seniors' advocate that works independently from the Minister of Health. It seems more natural that this advocate would utilize existing resources and benefit from experts' opinions already available.

It is my worry, Mr. Speaker, that by passing Bill 208, we are facilitating an additional level of bureaucracy that may hinder a member's ability to advocate for their constituents responsibly. An advocate who will be consolidated into a health advocate's office will ensure that issues surrounding policy and services are directly addressed without being lost in various levels of bureaucracy. My goal as a Member of the Legislative Assembly is to represent families and communities in my constituency as well as across Alberta. I sincerely believe that in its current form Bill 208 would hinder my ability to do that.

Many of our government's current advocate roles have strong relationships with the representative ministries and, as such, are very effective in representing and voicing the concerns of a wide range of Albertans. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, there are many government-appointed and non government-appointed bodies that assist in the advocacy of all our constituents, including seniors.

The Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta is a government-appointed body that reports directly to the Minister of Health. The council's general role is to provide advice and information to the province regarding challenges posed to seniors' standard of living. Government officials are provided up-to-date front-line information on issues affecting our seniors here in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, I'm not entirely convinced that in its current form and considering the resources that we currently have in place, Bill 208 is an actionable plan for this government.

Additionally, Alberta has many not-for-profit advocacy resources and programs, including but not limited to the Elder Advocates of Alberta Society, Alberta Senior Citizens' Housing Association, the Edmonton seniors' activity centres, and Seniors United Now. Constituents are being heard, Mr. Speaker, and it is our job to streamline existing services and prevent duplication, as is accomplished by consolidating the Ministry of Seniors with Health.

Additionally, the government of Alberta has proclaimed the Alberta Health Act, which confirms the principles of the Alberta health care system and calls for the creation of an advocate to help people navigate the health care system.

The health advocate's office will assist Albertans in navigating the health care system and will contain three advocates: the health advocate, the seniors' advocate, and the existing Mental Health Patient Advocate. Mr. Speaker, every day approximately 105 Albertans turn 65, and our government is preparing for this. I myself will be nearing that age pretty soon. Having a health advocate's office is incredibly important to help Albertans navigate the health system and address their concerns.

I look forward to hearing the rest of the debate on Bill 208 and will continue to advocate on behalf of the seniors not only in my constituency but in the province. I commend the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake for her work on this bill, but I'm concerned about how this would impact our seniors. I know that the member does care.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Let us move on to Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll be brief. I think this is an important issue, and I don't think there is anything that I receive more expressions of concern about than seniors' care in this province. Certainly, I have a growing list of what people describe as failures in seniors' care. Frankly, it's overdue that we get on and deal with this issue in a very comprehensive and transparent and accountable way, and I think all of us would benefit from that.

The Alberta Liberals have been calling for an independent resource to monitor and enforce standards in nursing homes and seniors' care centres for many years. If there's anything that would restore confidence and, I guess, quality, I would have to say that it's an independent advocate along with a body that establishes intermittent but consistent monitoring of seniors' care centres both for quality of care in terms of their staffing numbers and staffing qualifications and for quantity of service such as we've heard so often around the whole personal care issues; once-a-week bathing, as an example.

There is so much that we could be doing for seniors. It flies in the face of, I guess, what the government is talking about so often in terms of simply beefing up their inspections or putting the right people in the right place and ensuring that we expand the scope of practice of LPNs and care aides. What is needed, though, is that behind the talk there needs to be enforcement. There needs to be some ability to say: "This is the condition in this particular institution. These are the standards. These standards are not being met, and this is the action that will result from that failure to meet a standard." That would restore both the confidence of the public at large and the constituents in these settings and give confidence also and hope to the many front-line workers who are battling tremendous odds in terms of numbers of cases they're expected to care for, the increased complexity of these cases, and, frankly, the reduced qualifications of people caring for these people and the reduced staff-to-patient ratio, especially in some of the private institutions, as we've heard from the Parkland report.

This inconsistency, I guess, of standards in care could in part be addressed by an advocate but, again, an independent advocate. It doesn't make sense to me to go through the same process yet again that we went through with the child advocate, first setting up an advocate that reports to the minister and then, finally, under duress, under pressure, under continual barrage that the child services system wasn't adequate, they finally just a couple of years ago made the child advocate independent.

Now, I know that the government has taken that over and that this Bill 208 may be seen as redundant at this time. But it's not redundant in the sense that they could take two leaps, not only setting up the seniors' advocate but making it independent of the minister so that all Albertans, especially the Legislature, could have confidence that it is having that independent voice that's needed to challenge what's happening both within the ministry and out there in the field.

It's all about trust, Mr. Speaker. I know this government wants to build trust. I know it wants to build confidence. I know it wants to build credibility. This is a way that you really could do that with a minor change to the bill that the government is proposing, an endorsement of this very reasonable suggestion.

That's all I have to say, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the honour of speaking.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am pleased to speak to Bill 208, Seniors' Advocate Act. The idea of creating an independent advocate is actually really compelling. I must tell the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake that I gave this proposal an awful lot of consideration. I think it's really good for us all to reflect on how we do what we do in government. So asking all of us to think more about this, an issue that comes into every single one of our offices – and my office, in particular, in Calgary-Varsity sees a lot of questions about seniors' full spectrum of issues, to the point that we have decided in our constituency of Calgary-Varsity that this is one of the top five challenges that we want to tackle as a constituency. We work with partners and communities and try to identify how we can respond to these issues. So the question of creating an independent body merits consideration.

In addition to the comments shared by lots of other MLAs today in this Legislature, I just want to build on some of the thinking that we've seen. Mentioned already is an aging population policy framework. The government of Alberta went out to Albertans in a very significant way as early as 2008 and, obviously, since and asked: what are the key issues with seniors that we want to be looking after, making sure that we as the government of Alberta work on engaging other governments, engaging families, engaging municipalities, engaging the not-for-profit sector and communities? The three priorities that they set out I think are actually still very powerful priorities.

One was to make sure that we have consistent, province-wide policy directions about seniors and an aging population. I come from the city of Calgary, where the needs probably are very different than for some of my colleagues who live in more remote jurisdictions. The idea of having consistency and province-wide policy directions and making sure that we have the resources available to make sure we can deliver on these policies in an efficient way: I think that is the role of government, to lead. The idea of consolidating a seniors' advocate within the health advocate's office seems to be consistent with that vision.

The second role that the framework advanced and said was an absolute imperative was for government to create the conditions for collaboration, as I mentioned, among citizens, among families, communities, and governments. No one group can resolve this issue on their own. I'm a big fan of that, and I see that in action in my constituency all the time. We have amazing community associations, active aging coalitions that bring together seniors and citizens. They work with government, and when there is an issue or an opportunity, there is collaboration.

The third theme of the framework was to make sure that supports and services to Alberta seniors are provided. Some of these programs are provided by the government directly, and some are provided through community partners on behalf of government. Notwithstanding, the government is responsible for the effectiveness and the efficiency of these programs, and we must be.

It's also our responsibility to make sure that we have standards and mechanisms in place to protect seniors in a variety of circumstances. One of the things I have observed in our government and that I'm pleased by is the ability of ministries to increasingly have the agility to work across ministries. The Ministry of Health works with Health Services, works with Justice, works with Finance, works with Municipal Affairs, works with Aboriginal Relations. Most of these issues faced by seniors, the ones that we can't get to really quickly, are complex, and they need a multidisciplinary approach. That kind of collaboration, again, with communities and with families is hard to do sometimes, but it's absolutely essential.

A couple of other things I want to flag from the framework that I see in my office all the time are financial resources. A lot of people come into our office and say that they're concerned about whether or not they will have adequate access to financial resources in their senior years. I understand why people would have that concern. My own grandparents had that concern. As government, particularly the Associate Minister of Seniors, we're developing and tailoring programs that look at these issues, making sure that families of seniors and the seniors themselves have an informed understanding of issues that affect their future financial needs when they become seniors and as they are seniors.

We've also developed affordable housing and supportive living units, especially in remote and rural areas, through the ASLI program. There are 982 new affordable supportive living spaces receiving over $72 million in funding from the Alberta government. I've had lots of questions about how we get more seniors' buildings in the constituency where I live, which is sort of almost now an inner-city constituency in the city of Calgary. I know my colleague in Calgary-Hawkwood is asked the same questions. We truly do want to create choices for seniors so that they can continue to live in the communities where they grew up and raised their families.

I want to talk a little bit about continuing care services and support for seniors who are able to live independently and also about increasing demands for continuing care services. These questions need to be included in our debate of Bill 208, and I welcome that debate. The government of Alberta has been working with communities' co-ordinated access policies to make sure that we can reduce the barriers for seniors who want to live in the community. We've got pilot projects operating to support seniors' independence, the emergency-to-home pilot project, and the neighbours helping neighbours initiative.

Of course, seniors' independence means we cannot ignore the prevention of elder abuse and neglect. Yes, sadly, there is a need for us to raise awareness of elder abuse and to adequately respond to this horror. Communities and governments and citizens are coming together to tackle this challenge, and we need to keep this issue in our mind, at the very fore of our mind.

I just want to conclude by saying that I was very tempted to support this. The idea of having an independent seniors' advocate is compelling. But I truly believe that looking after seniors and making sure that we respond to their needs is a first priority for this government. As a member of this government I will commit to doing everything possible to make sure that our government uses its resources to support seniors, to listen to their needs, to respond to their needs, and I sincerely believe that the best place to do that is from within government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Scott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise today to speak to Bill 208, the Seniors' Advocate Act, being brought forward by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. The Seniors' Advocate Act proposes to create a seniors' advocate, who would be an independent officer of the Legislature.

As many of us can attest to, seniors helped shape our great province, making it what it is today. Our seniors helped build strong foundations in our province, making Alberta the strong economic engine it is today. Our veterans fought for the freedoms we are blessed with, and for that we cannot thank them enough.

Alberta's seniors population is growing. As of January 2012 there were approximately 425,000 seniors in our province. By 2036 it is estimated that Alberta's seniors population will stand at over 1 million, or 1 in 5 Albertans. Given our growing seniors population, it is imperative that we prepare for the challenges that may arise between now and then, and that is exactly what our government is doing, and that is why our government is establishing a health advocate office, one that will include a seniors' advocate.

Mr. Speaker, our government has a long-standing history of implementing programs and policies that promote a high standard of living for all Albertans, including seniors. For instance, $358 million has been allocated to fund the Alberta seniors' benefit for the 2013-2014 fiscal year, the highest of any province or territory in the country. The Alberta seniors' benefit helps vulnerable seniors supplement their incomes in order to maintain a high standard of living. This is an increase of nearly $22 million from the previous year.

Recently the seniors' property tax deferral program was announced, which enables eligible homeowners to defer all or part of their property taxes through a low-interest home equity loan with the government of Alberta. Just this past year $67 million in grants were made to municipalities, nonprofit organizations, community groups, and private-sector organizations province-wide in order to assist in the development of 665 new or upgraded affordable supportive living spaces as well as 30 additional long-term care spaces.

Debating Bill 208 allows members of this House to highlight our government's proven history of implementing effective policies that enable our seniors to lead healthy and dignified lives. In 2010 our government commissioned the Aging Population Policy Framework report, which articulated and defined the government of Alberta's key initiatives, defining principles that continue to help shape the lives of seniors in our province. This helped our government to hone in on systemic issues affecting our seniors and allowed us to foster a collaborative, interministerial environment to better develop seniors' supports and services.

Understanding the complexity of seniors' needs, our Premier tasked the hon. Associate Minister of Seniors with the mandate of establishing a seniors' advocate. However, unlike the one proposed in Bill 208, the advocate will be consolidated into the health advocate's office along with the Mental Health Patient Advocate, working collaboratively in order to tackle policy oversights in seniors' care. This, Mr. Speaker, makes sense since many of the issues that surround seniors concern their health. Alberta's first seniors' advocate would primarily focus efforts on addressing seniors' issues in the most effective manner by working with resources that are already available. This would avoid duplication, streamline administration, and ensure efficiency by drawing from existing resources.

On February 20, 2013, the Seniors Advocate Act was introduced in the British Columbia Legislature. That act was passed and received royal assent on March 14, 2013. Similar to the role brought forward by our government and, again, unlike the one proposed by Bill 208, the seniors' advocate for B.C. reports to the Minister of Health. Of course, B.C.'s decision to create a seniors' advocate who reports to the ministry was done after an extensive consultation process.

Before B.C.'s act was introduced, the B.C. government conducted 10 public consultations aimed at narrowing down several possible responsibilities that could shape the role of the seniors' advocate. These consultations involved key representatives from the seniors community, who provided invaluable input for the final vision of B.C.'s seniors' advocate, not to mention the needed co-operation, accountability, and transparency necessary for a successful initiative. Seniors, their families, caregivers, and other key stakeholders from across the province of B.C. provided ideas and feedback, helping to create an advocate that would address seniors' needs in the most efficient and compassionate manner possible.

After the consultation process ended, B.C. concluded that the advocate's overarching role would be to monitor seniors' services, raise and promote awareness on seniors' issues, and collaborate with seniors, policy-makers, and service providers regarding policies that affect them. The advocate would also focus on tackling roadblocks in governmental policy that may prevent seniors from attaining the care that they seek. Additionally, these consultations concluded that B.C.'s seniors' advocate role would involve providing seniors with up-to-date information and advice pertaining to the services and resources that are available to them.

In terms of support, participants expressed the need for having an advocate who would address the complaints of seniors regarding, for instance, suspected elder abuse. The role would also involve a high degree of collaboration such as being able to communicate with and engage advocacy groups from a number of sectors in order to establish the highest level of seniors' supports. Like our neighbours to the west, our government has also taken such concerns into account. The findings that were highlighted in B.C.'s consultations are being highlighted today in order to identify practices that would make our advocate a powerful voice for all seniors in Alberta.

Unlike Bill 208 proposes, Alberta's first seniors' advocate would better address seniors' issues, especially health issues, if the role was consolidated in the health advocate's office. Mr. Speaker, let us utilize the resources that our province already has and build on them rather than re-creating the proverbial wheel and, moreover, duplicating roles. Most importantly, let all members of the House continue to serve our seniors and advocate on their behalf.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake for bringing this bill before the House for debate, but given that our government had the foresight to implement a seniors' advocate role that works collaboratively with the government in order to reduce red tape and streamline services, I cannot support this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the Associate Minister of International and Inter-governmental Relations, followed by Stony Plain: hon. members, that is the list that I have. I don't know if we'll get them all in by 5 o'clock, but let's try.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to, in standing to speak regarding this bill, give an acknowledgement to all the advocacy groups in Edmonton and around the province that work with seniors. I also want to mention that the rural seniors don't always have these advocates close by, so this is something of a concern that I have. I hope that we can address those kinds of issues as we move forward. Also, I wanted to acknowledge the seniors in Edmonton-Gold Bar. We have a significant number of seniors. In four years I will add my name to the list, so I need to disclose that I'm getting close, closer every day.

I'm pleased to rise today to join my hon. colleagues in the debate on Bill 208, the Seniors' Advocate Act, brought forward by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. Before I begin, I, like others, would like to thank the hon. member for bringing this bill forward in the House today. We have the opportunity to discuss these issues and to let seniors in the whole province know that we do care about them, that we do have some genuine concerns for their care, and we appreciate, Mr. Speaker, the opportunity to speak to these concerns at this time.

Seniors' concerns have always been and always will be of great importance to me and, from what I've seen, to this government. According to recent G-8 statistics Canada remains relatively young, Mr. Speaker, in comparison to other countries in the world. However, having a relatively young population should not preclude Canada or Alberta from providing the best services possible to our seniors. In order to provide the best services possible to seniors, it's important to examine guiding principles from other countries or international organizations and how they may contribute to our discussion.

Therefore, the area that I chose to have a researcher work on is the set of standards, of principles, in the United Nations' guiding principles. The United Nations principles for older persons were adopted by the United Nations in 1991, and these principles call on governments to, when possible, incorporate five guiding principles in terms of policy and strategic planning. Mr. Speaker, it's these five guiding principles that I certainly hope and have been assured since that time by the minister that they have been taken into account as this minister has been working on it and will continue to work in this area.

The first principle, Mr. Speaker, is independence. This principle states that older persons should have access to adequate food, water, shelter, clothing, and health care through the provision of income, family and community support, and, of course, self-help. This principle also states that older persons should have the opportunity to work for or to have access to other income-generating opportunities of their choosing. Lastly, this principle mentions that older persons should be able to determine the pace at which they withdraw from the labour market, have access to training and educational programs, and be able to live in safe environments that meet their challenging needs while also residing at home for as long as they choose. That's really important to the people of Edmonton-Gold Bar.

The second principle is participation. I've asked our seniors to be involved in our communities, particularly on boards of community leagues, and to be participants in the decisions that get made in the 13 community leagues in Edmonton-Gold Bar. This principle puts a strong emphasis on the need to keep older persons integrated within society, including actively participating in policies that impact their well-being. Additionally, seniors should be given the opportunity to contribute to society by participating in community volunteer ventures and community services, as I've mentioned.

The third principle that may contribute to shaping our discussion of Bill 208 – and it hopefully will – is care. Seniors need to benefit from family and community care based on societal values, including access to health care, in order to maintain or regain emotional, physical, and mental health. Seniors should also have access to social and legal services in order to retain or enhance their autonomy as well as adequate levels of institutional care for providing protection, rehabilitation, social and mental stimulation.

As an aside, Mr. Speaker, I believe that mental stimulation is done a lot by computers, and I always encourage seniors to get involved in the many wonderful things that are available now on computers to stimulate their minds and to challenge them and to keep them active.

Seniors should be able to enjoy fundamental freedoms and human rights when residing in any shelter, care, or treatment facilities, including full respect for their dignity, beliefs, needs, and privacy. This is what Alberta seniors ask for, that's what Edmonton-Gold Bar seniors ask for, and that's what they certainly deserve. As hon. members of this Assembly we should be working with them to achieve this, working together and finding constructive ways to do this, Mr. Senior. [interjections] Mr. Senior Speaker.

The UN's fourth principle is self-fulfillment. Self-fulfillment involves ensuring seniors have the ability to fully develop their potential through various opportunities. We should ensure that our seniors have the necessary access to the resources they seek out. All of our efforts should be geared towards ensuring seniors can continue to live an active and healthy lifestyle of their choosing.

The fifth and final principle in the United Nations principles for older persons is dignity. This principle states that seniors should be able to live with dignity and security, which includes the absence of exploitation and physical or mental abuse. Older people "should be treated fairly regardless of age, gender, racial or ethnic background, disability or other status" – any other one, Mr. Speaker – "and be valued independently of their economic contribution." Elder abuse has devastating consequences. It jeopardizes the health and well-being of seniors and undermines one's sense of security, independence, and dignity. Seniors deserve to be treated with dignity and respect just as all citizens do.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to make a few comments on the definition of advocacy – the word "advocacy" is an important one – and how the United Nations principles for older persons and its five main principles could influence the future of our advocacy efforts. In 2009 the government released a bulletin defining advocacy as "promoting awareness and understanding of a cause or the ability to change public opinion, and cause a shift in people's perceptions or understanding of an issue." In relation to the government's definition of advocacy any of the principles of the United Nations principles for older persons would be beneficial in shaping the role of a seniors' advocate or any other program offered to seniors.

For example, we should adhere to the independence principle, which states, "Older persons should have access to adequate food, water, shelter," as I've mentioned. In fact, the government currently provides an Alberta seniors' benefit, a monthly cash benefit for more than 140,000 low-income seniors, which was included in the 2013-14 budget at $358 million, the highest of any province or territory. Mr. Speaker, I've sat with many seniors and helped them fill out those applications. This benefit helps low-income seniors acquire basic and essential needs such as food and medicine in order to experience a better quality of life.

In addition, the dental and optical assistance for seniors program helps over 210,000 low- to moderate-income seniors with basic dental and optical needs. Our government's seniors' activity tax credit helps senior to stay alive and aligns well with the self-fulfillment principle, that states, "Older persons should have access to the . . . recreational resources of society."

Budgeted at almost $23 million, the special-needs assistance program serves 23,000 seniors and provides lump-sum cash payments to offset costs for home-related expenses such as home appliances and repairs. This program also matches the self-fulfillment section of the United Nations principles for older persons, which states that seniors should have the ability to develop to their full potential.

The government's elder abuse awareness program provides information regarding senior abuse, which is defined as any action or inaction that jeopardizes a senior's health or well-being, whether that be emotional, financial, psychological; neglect; or sexual abuse, Mr. Speaker. The elder abuse awareness program confirms the dignity principle.

The numerous programs available illustrate this government's commitment to seniors. The proof is going to be in the pudding. I trust that the minister is doing the right thing. In addition, this government is establishing that health advocate office to provide additional services to Albertans and their families.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, followed by the hon. Member for Stony Plain.

4:50

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and speak to Bill 208, the Seniors' Advocate Act, brought forward by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. The hon. members of this House know how important seniors are to our families and communities. Actually, there's a Chinese saying, something to the effect that seniors are considered treasures in our families and communities. They are our parents, brothers, sisters, and grandparents, and we all know how much they support and provide wisdom to our families over the years.

Our government recognizes that seniors may need a little help from time to time, and that's why programs have been implemented that foster healthy living and sustainable support mechanisms. For instance, seniors can now choose how they want to pay their property taxes with the seniors' property tax deferral program. Seniors with limited income can also apply for the Alberta seniors' benefit program, which provides additional support to federal benefits acquired under old age security, guaranteed income supplement, federal allowance, and the GST credit. Mr. Speaker, these are just a few examples of the many important programs our government has spearheaded to help our seniors attain the services they need in order to lead fulfilling and healthy lives.

Just as Bill 208 implies, our government also understands the need for a seniors' advocate, one who would provide seniors with a strong and committed voice, one that would help seniors acquire the services they seek. This is why our government is establishing a seniors' advocate, who will work in collaboration with the health advocate's office. A seniors' advocate that works closely with the health advocate seems natural since many of the services that seniors seek are health related. This is why $405 million was allocated to seniors' services and benefits.

Again, I believe that a seniors' advocate who works in conjunction with the health advocate's office within the Health ministry would be better poised to take on the challenges facing seniors today. The underlying premise of Bill 208 seems to question the viability of this; however, there are several other advocate roles that do report to a minister and, as many individuals in our province can attest, these important roles are extremely effective in tackling many systemic issues.

The Alberta Mental Health Patient Advocate is a significant role that reports directly to the Minister of Health as mandated under part 6 of the Alberta Mental Health Act. In addition to the advocate's main responsibility to provide assistance to patients, other important duties include providing policy-makers with expert knowledge on key issues affecting mental health in our province. Other advocacy work revolves around educating members of the public, clients who utilize mental health services, health professionals, and community organizations.

When an individual seeks the advice or the services of the Mental Health Patient Advocate, the office provides individuals with an assigned advocate who can provide information or help resolve complaints. The patient advocate may conduct independent, formal investigations in order to make sound recommendations to the provincial health board in relation to the complaint. Maintaining strong mental health services is an initiative that our government takes very seriously and one that requires dedicated individuals.

Like the seniors' advocate that is being proposed by the ministry and unlike Bill 208's proposed advocate, the Mental Health Patient Advocate is an excellent example of when an advocate can act independently and work collaboratively with the ministry. During the 2011-12 fiscal year 9,714 cases were handled either through personal interaction, over the telephone, or through written contact. According to recent figures a resounding 91 per cent of clients who received services from the Mental Health Patient Advocate's office stated that they would recommend the service to someone else. So, Mr. Speaker, one could note that the success of the advocate's office is very much linked to a strong relationship with the ministry.

I would also like to point out that recently British Columbia passed its own Seniors Advocate Act, which received royal assent on March 14, 2013. In a news release the government of British Columbia stated that the seniors' advocate role would be to "promote awareness, work collaboratively with seniors, families, policymakers, service providers and others to identify solutions to systemic issues" with the hopes of eliminating policy gaps that affect seniors. Similar to the seniors' advocate our government plans to implement, British Columbia's seniors' advocate role also acts in an independent manner but reports to the Minister of Health. This decision was made after a number of public consultations between B.C.'s seniors action plan team, seniors, families, and concerned stakeholders.

Mr. Speaker, our government will always advocate for seniors across our province and will continue to provide the support they need the most so that they are able to achieve the high quality of life that our province is known for. I commend the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake for her work on this bill, but we must build on the policies and achievements that have been made, so I won't be supporting the bill.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to join my hon. colleagues in the debate on Bill 208, the Seniors' Advocate Act, brought forward by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. I would like to thank the hon. member for bringing forward this bill in the House today.

Mr. Speaker, our government implements innovative solutions to issues that affect our seniors population, which is growing, and that is why our government has developed certain frameworks and bodies in order to best respond to the current and future needs of Alberta's seniors population. The Demographic Planning Commission was established as part of our government's mandate to better address the needs of our seniors. It is important to examine the work of the Demographic Planning Commission as it will provide valuable guidance in shaping Alberta's first seniors' advocate.

The Demographic Planning Commission was established in 2008 in response to projections that our province's seniors population would reach upwards of 20 per cent of the total population by the year 2036. Mr. Speaker, this means that by 2036 around 1 in 5 Albertans will be considered seniors. The commission's primary function was to provide analysis and research which would lead to proposals in preparation for an aging population.

The findings of the commission ultimately led to the aging population policy framework. In December 2008 the commission tabled a Findings Report, which was the result of a five-day consultation process with over a hundred stakeholders across the province in Edmonton, Calgary, Lethbridge, Red Deer, and Grande Prairie. The Findings Report also took into account an online survey, which saw over 10,000 Albertans participate.

Several policy themes emerged from the report, and I believe these themes will be useful when considering Bill 208. The first theme focused on finding ways that would help to enable citizens and seniors to remain in their own homes for as long as possible. Over 90 per cent of survey respondents agreed with the statement: I want to live in my own home during my senior years. This is what Alberta seniors want and deserve, and our government is dedicated to helping them achieve it through a variety of programs, one being the seniors' property tax deferral program, which allows homeowners 65 and older to defer part of their residential property taxes.

The commission noted that participants emphasized the difficulty in securing affordable housing for seniors, especially those with disabilities. Mr. Speaker, that is why our government has budgeted over $23 million for the special-needs assistance program, offering over 23,000 seniors lump-sum cash payments to offset costs for home-related expenses.

The commission also heard from participants regarding the role of the private sector in creating more social housing, including how the private sector will be a positive factor in influencing building trends as they will adapt to the growing markets in Alberta. Governments across the country need to plan now in order to guarantee that an adequate number of seniors' residences are built.

As an example, our government in consultation with the federal government is working to expand the Bow River lodge in Canmore. The project will see 43 units renovated into 27 units in order to make them accessible, an additional 31 new units, and increased amenities . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I regret having to interrupt you, but the time for this particular section has now elapsed, and we must move on to other business.

5:00      Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Renewable and Alternative Energy Technology

518. Ms Calahasen moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to develop and implement a program encouraging Albertans to invest in and make use of renewable and alternative energy technologies in the province in order to strengthen Alberta's leadership in energy innovation and greenhouse gas reductions.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and open debate on Motion 518. I'm proposing this motion in order to reinforce our province's leadership in reducing greenhouse gases, energy modernization, and to get Albertans to see and use alternative energy technologies.

Motion 518 is not to replace nonrenewable energy but to work in concert with that so that we can see as a province that we will actively continue to combat climate change and encourage greenhouse gas reduction through investing in and making use of renewable and alternative energy. Renewable energy, or renewables, is defined as any naturally occurring, theoretically inexhaustible source of energy such as geothermal, biomass, solar, wind, tidal, wave, hydroelectric power which is not derived from fossil or nuclear fuel.

Alberta has a wealth of renewable biomass feedstock in the forestry and agriculture sector that will drive considerable production of low-carbon transportation fuels and power generation. As an example, many forest industries in my constituency also are bringing great and innovative ideas to be part of this solution. In fact, with support from the Alberta government West Fraser Mills Limited will turn waste from its Slave Lake pulp mill into electricity, increasing the plant's energy efficiency and reducing its greenhouse gas emissions.

The West Fraser biogas project, which received $10 million in provincial funding, is expected to produce enough green energy to allow the company to draw seven fewer megawatts from the electricity grid annually to operate its mill and reduce its natural gas use by more than 164 gigajoules annually.

In addition, Vanderwell Contractors operates a wood pellet facility in my constituency. These wood pellets are extremely dense and can be produced with a low moisture content, below 10 per cent, that allows them to be burned with a very high combustion efficiency.

Renewable energy's viability is improving, and innovation in this sector is constantly evolving, which means that it has the potential to become a significant part of the global energy mix this century. Alberta's development in the use of renewables will continue to raise our province's profile as a leader in environmental stewardship with regard to greenhouse gases. Alberta's diverse energy supply stimulates regional activity and fortifies collaboration across multiple industries.

An additional and very real category of energy that must be mentioned is saved energy. Unconsumed energy can be used productively elsewhere. Energy savings contribute to ensuring an adequate and efficient supply for Albertans while at the same time reducing incremental emissions.

Alberta has the highest per capita energy use on the planet. However, our province also has nearly three times the national average of electricity generation from wind power. In fact, Mr. Speaker, our government has implemented numerous types of renewable electricity generation in its current mix. As of June 2013 the energy capacity from renewable and alternative electricity sources includes 900 megawatts of hydro power, 1,113 megawatts of wind power, and 414 megawatts of biomass power.

Our government also has a history of supporting alternative and renewable energy programs, including the Alberta energy efficiency rebate program. From 2009 until 2012 the Alberta energy efficiency rebate program issued more than 173,000 rebates totalling over $49 million to Albertans who purchased energy-efficient upgrades; 46,157 rebates worth $100 each were given to individuals who invested in energy-efficient clothes washers while 2,969 rebates worth $250 to $300 each were given to homeowners who upgraded their furnaces.

One alternative energy source that the government is currently investing in is biofuels. Bioenergy is derived from biomass, which is material made from living organisms. In terms of our environmental benefits the most significant advantage is that biofuels are a renewable feedstock, part of the carbon cycle. The production of plant material pulls carbon from the atmosphere, and then this carbon is returned when the fuel is burned.

As of June 2011 Alberta has one ethanol-producing facility and one biodiesel-producing facility. Moreover, biofuel production capacity in Alberta has reached 40 million litres of ethanol and 19 million litres of biodiesel. Mr. Speaker, Motion 518 is meant to reinforce the province's leadership in greenhouse gas reduction and energy innovation and give Albertans alternative sources of energy to use.

This government has been and always will be committed to investing in renewable resource technologies in order to forge ahead on responsible energy innovation and reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Once again, Motion 518's goal is to encourage the government to develop and implement a program encouraging Albertans to invest in and make use of renewable alternative energy technologies.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I urge all hon. members, including all the people who have been against any reality of climate change, to support Motion 518.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to support this bill from the hon. member – sorry; this motion. It could have been a bill. The government could have sponsored a bill, but it is a motion. It's a motion that, once passed, has a lot of value, particularly if the ministry is on board to promote this and establish a foothold on dealing with renewable energy.

Now, one of the most significant aspects of creating what I'm going to call a road map in paving the way for renewable energy is the benefits that it can achieve in greenhouse gas reduction. This helps our existing industries significantly, who have a vested interest in making sure that there is a measurable reduction in greenhouse gas emissions.

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The other aspect is that most renewable energies, not all but most, have a value where we're able to reduce the cost of electricity, particularly over the long term.

I support the motion. I ask my colleagues to support the motion. But, most importantly, I ask the ministry to pay attention to what it's going to take to advance renewable energy and how we're going to measure the outcome of renewable energy to make sure it is doing what we want it to do. Again, this is realistically performance based.

With that, I want to bring one point forward where I think the ministry has failed, where it needs to address a particular issue with regard to renewable energy, and that is to deal with microgeneration. Microgeneration has been in this province for quite some time, and it is a viable part of the whole motion for renewable energy. Microgenerators in this province have struck agreements to purchase electricity and in some cases to purchase electricity for as much as 15 cents a kilowatt hour. Now, they would say that that is their all-in delivery rate that gets normally charged to all consumers.

Madam Speaker, what these private companies are doing is using the existing regulations and the framework that has already been created by our own Department of Energy. What they have done is that they have looked at the market and made a determination that a homeowner can put solar panels on their house, and these retailers have offered to purchase that electricity for as much as 15 cents a kilowatt hour based on what they have determined is the local distribution facility owner price for all-in delivery charges. Now, they signed numerous contracts; unfortunately, as of August 1, this ministry, this government under the Alberta Utilities Commission cancelled all the contracts with one stroke of the pen.

I don't mean to pick on the ministry, but I have to pick on the ministry because I have a letter that was sent December 2 from the ministry, where the minister is saying that "retailers can also compensate a micro-generator at a higher rate than they charge the micro-generator for consuming electricity," and it says that the AESO will only repay the retailer at the same rate that the microgenerator sells electricity. That's actually wrong. That's not what the regulation says. What the regulation says – and it's under section 7.5 of the regulation – is that "unless a micro-generator and a retailer agree in writing to different compensation, a micro-generator's retailer shall credit the micro-generator for [electricity] supplied out of the micro-generator's site at the following rates." Then it says that in the case of a small microgenerator, that would be the retail rate.

So the regulations allow a microgenerator to agree to different compensation as long as it is in writing. That's what these contracts were. What these private business owners realized was that they could pay the all-in delivery charge. That actually made sense because when a generator is generating electricity and selling into the grid, electricity is not being delivered to them.

Unfortunately, without notice, without warning many of these companies found that not only were their contracts invalid but the homeowners who invested based on these contracts found themselves now at a disadvantage and in some cases an economic loss. That's unfortunate. That should never have happened. Even if this government was going to change the regulations or interpret them differently – it has not changed the regulations – what they should have done is at least given notice to these people who had existing contracts and even grandfather them in before they change the regulations.

What we're dealing with here is that the government has not changed the regulations. These companies should be able to contract according to the regulations, and they're not being allowed to. That's wrong. If any amendments or changes need to be made to those regulations, they should allow any company to purchase electricity for the all-in delivery charge, whatever that might be, because that only seems fair.

In the example I just presented to this House, these private companies were purchasing electricity for 15 cents a kilowatt hour, and now they've been told that they cannot purchase it for that price. Now, the company Enmax, who is doing this also, is charging customers an all-in delivery charge, and they're purchasing electricity for the price that they sell electricity for, which is 6 cents a kilowatt hour. That leaves an 8-cent differential. We won't call it an electricity bubble, but it's still a differential. What they're doing is that they're charging for delivering a service that they're not delivering, and that's fundamentally wrong. I would call that gaming the system. The ministry needs to look at that because in advancing this motion on microgeneration, we shouldn't allow anyone to prevent or deter investment in renewables. I brought an example dealing strictly with microgeneration, but it makes sense even dealing with all the renewables that people would want to bring and put onto the grid.

Clearly, what we have here is a disconnect between the regulating bodies, which are two: the Alberta Utilities Commission and the AESO. They need to be directed by the ministry, or the regulations need to be changed so that they are directed so that we have paved the way so that private investors can invest in renewable energies and can get them connected to the grid.

This is a good motion. It is a step in the right direction. Hopefully, the ministry is paying attention and will at least read the Hansard so they can look at the example I brought. There are many, many more examples dealing with wind power and other renewable generators that need to be addressed so the rules are clear, concise, and are an incentive so that the private sector will invest in renewable energy. I think this province can make tremendous gains if they allow that.

With that, thank you for much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, followed by Little Bow and Edmonton-South West, then Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to join the debate on Motion 518, proposed by the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake. The motion urges government to be innovative in its approach to help develop and implement a program encouraging Albertans to invest in and make use of renewable and alternative energy technologies in the province.

Madam Speaker, Alberta is a global leader in energy innovations and responsible development. The energy sector is very important to the well-being of all Albertans. We have often considered energy development before energy efficiency and conservation.

One of the main challenges Albertans face today is the use of energy resources. In order for us to remain a global energy leader, we must recognize the versatility of the energy market and develop our energy resources strategically.

Madam Speaker, on December 11, 2008, the provincial energy strategy was announced. This strategy charts the course of Alberta's future in energy. While development of clean hydrocarbons is essential to Albertans' energy future, alternative renewable energy resources play an increasingly important role. We should also consider the cumulative environmental impact such as greenhouse gas emissions and impacts to land, air, and water. As outlined in the strategy, Alberta's energy vision is to sustain long prosperity. This means that the government must take responsible action towards long-term energy development and sustainability.

Although our fossil fuel supply remains plentiful, we must remain prudent energy producers. By exercising our resourcefulness and responsibility, we can achieve the desired outcome outlined by the provincial energy strategy. The aims of the provincial strategy include clean energy production, wise energy use, and sustained economic prosperity.

Alberta's renewable energy sector can be a key player in the provincial energy future. Alberta has almost three times the national average of electricity generation capacity from wind power. In 2012 the province's wind power generation capacity hit 1,116 megawatts, broke the 1,000 megawatts mark for the first time in our history. In terms of wind turbines the Canadian Wind Energy Association estimates that there are 752 wind turbines in Alberta divided among 34 different projects. Our province is indeed one of the leaders in responsible energy development. In addition to that, our province produces biofuels from plant fibre and forest waste products.

Madam Speaker, however, there are many challenges faced by the growth of renewable energy. Our government recognizes that expanding clean energy production is a long-term process. The provincial energy strategy would ensure that steps are taken towards achieving this long-term goal.

Madam Speaker, while policies and regulations should focus on producing a renewable energy supply, we cannot ignore the demand side of the sector here. Albertans are among the highest per capita energy consumers in the world. Adopting efficiency in energy use and emphasizing the conservation of energy resources by Albertans could provide the potential to create more wealth. This could be done by raising awareness about the costs and benefits of energy consumption. Also, our government can provide support through planning, technology, and education to the public. In addition, the provincial energy strategy also emphasizes Alberta's resolution to manage the cumulative environmental effect. Our province aspires to be the world leader in energy innovation and responsible energy production.

Madam Speaker, we are blessed with abundant energy resources in Alberta, where these are essential to our living standard and future prosperity. While we deal with our success in energy development, we cannot forget the environmental consequences of our goal to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

Madam Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. member for bringing forward Motion 518, as it urges government to continue its leadership in energy innovation and greenhouse gas reduction. I'm happy to support Motion 518 and encourage everyone to continue the discussion of this very important subject.

With that, I conclude my comments and look forward to the rest of the debate. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

5:20

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Strathmore-Brooks, then Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I will rise and speak in favour of Motion 518 today. I do have a couple of questions with some of the wording mentioned: "to develop and implement a program." I'm just kind of wondering what type of program this will be. Is it an educational program, a financial program? It's pretty broad. But I think she's going down the right path in bringing this motion forward to ensure that it's not just the large companies that are reducing their greenhouse gases and putting in technical procedures to help that. It's nice to see now that we'll be going on a more personal level. I know there were programs before where, you know, there were special appliances you could buy to reduce your environmental footprint, which is good. I'm hoping that more of these programs will be put into place.

We can do so much as people in this province, not necessarily just the big companies. I think we all have to take an active role in protecting our environment in our own homes, in our own businesses. You know, coming from a ranching background and owning a ranch, I know how important it is to ensure that we look after our water and our land and our air. There are so many things we can do just on a personal level to help out the environment. If the government accepts this motion, which I'm sure they would – I can't see why they wouldn't – they can look at ways to ensure that homeowners and average, everyday Albertans are doing what they can to reduce our footprint.

I do have a little bit of concern. I know through the Energy ministry and their bioenergy grant program we saw in the last few years that there are still some outstanding reports that we're waiting on. I brought it up in estimates this spring, and then I also did question the Energy ministry in Public Accounts last spring. We just finished another questioning with the Energy department on the bio-energy grants. There are still three of six companies that haven't fulfilled their requirements through that grant.

So I'm hoping that as they go forward, they'll be a little bit more diligent in giving out these grants and ensuring that the companies are actually fulfilling their requirements. I know that they did hire a third-party accounting firm to go in and audit these companies to ensure that they are spending the money properly and fulfilling their requirements, not only on the money side of it, the dollar figure, but on the greenhouse gases, too, that they are actually using that money to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

I know the Energy ministry does have some work to do. They assured me that, you know, they're going to be making sure that these companies are fulfilling their obligations. I guess as we go forward, the Auditor and everybody else will be watching to make sure that they do that. I think it's a good step in helping the province, in helping everybody to maybe be more aware of what they can do personally, on a personal level, what you can do in your own homes. It's something that, as the province continues to grow and industry continues to grow, we have to just ensure that we take a good look at and do everything that we can to help our environment.

We've seen some instances on the news with big companies lately, you know, spilling into the river, through coal mines. As we continue on, we have to ensure that these companies are doing everything they can. Most of those I've talked to are being more efficient, and with power efficiency levels comes reduced greenhouse gas emissions, which are all good for our environment. But it'll be interesting to see how the government proceeds with some sort of program to help individuals and the smaller producers in Alberta, to see how they will handle this as we go forward.

So I'd like to thank the member for bringing this motion forward. I will be supporting it, as I'm sure most people will. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Jeneroux: All right. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Motion 518, which urges the government to develop and implement a program encouraging Albertans to invest in and utilize alternative energy technologies in the province. I commend the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake for bringing attention to this initiative, that could strengthen Alberta's leadership in energy innovation and could further reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

Madam Speaker, our government is firm on its position on climate change, and we understand the implications regarding the adverse effects that greenhouse gas emissions have on the environment. I'm proud that Alberta is the first province to develop legislation regarding greenhouse gas emissions on large facilities. In 1999 the public-private partnership known as Climate Change Central was established and to this day continues to help Albertans use energy in a more sustainable manner. Our government furthered its environmental mandate by passing the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act, which received royal assent on December 4, 2003.

Madam Speaker, our government had this very important discussion decades ago and was able to promote responsible economic development since. For us, the science is settled and has been settled for some time. The main objective being proposed in Motion 518 falls in line with what our government is doing, continuing to build on programs that will focus on the next generation of Albertans.

One of these initiatives is Alberta's climate change strategy, which was conceived in 2008, building on the province's previous 2002 climate change action plan. This strategy established practical and real goals as opposed to unreachable targets for the reduction of greenhouse gas emissions. The three main themes highlighted in the strategy include implementing carbon capture and storage, greening energy production, and conserving and using energy efficiently.

The first theme promotes collaboration between different levels of government, industry, and scientific researchers and led to the Alberta Carbon Capture and Storage Development Council. Additionally, our government committed $1.3 billion over 15 years to fund the Alberta carbon trunk line project as well as the Quest project, which will reduce our province's emissions by 2.76 million tonnes each year beginning in 2015. Our government is also collaborating with industry in order to research the potential for deep geothermal energy production, something my generation can be proud of, Madam Speaker.

The second theme, greening energy production, helped our government enact the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act and led to the implementation of specified gas emitters regulation. Our government also expanded our use of alternative energy sources, that include wind and solar power, hydrogen, and, as mentioned earlier, geothermal energy.

In February of this year the Alberta Utilities Commission approved an application for a solar power plant in Brooks that would include close to 60,000 solar panels. Once completed, the power plant is expected to have a total generating capacity of 15 megawatts.

Madam Speaker, the province presented three options for companies to meet reduction targets. Companies could choose to improve the energy efficiency of their operations, buy carbon credits in the Alberta-based offset system, or pay $15 into the climate change and emissions management fund for every tonne over the reduction target.

The third and final theme, conserving and using energy efficiently, is an initiative that strives to promote that Albertans in socioeconomic sectors try to conserve and reduce their use of their energy. Some key actions that fall under this theme include developing acts promoting more sustainable energy usage, establishing incentive programs with regard to using energy-efficient appliances, and providing government leadership by utilizing power efficiency in government buildings as well as making energy-efficient purchases.

Madam Speaker, our government is building on its promise to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. As our government continues to make progress in the field of energy research and innovation, we will continue to evolve the programs, policies, and initiatives that have been already implemented. As stewards of the environment and as stewards responsible for economic development, we owe it to our children and future generations to keep Alberta strong, both environmentally and economically.

I would again like to commend the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake for building on our government's legacy in regard to the promotion of alternative energy-efficient technology use. By taking on such a praiseworthy cause, she'll undoubtedly be able to help motivate many young Albertans to develop a more sustainable relationship with our environment.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

5:30

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, then the Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to this motion. I definitely feel compelled, listening to many of the members on the other side give such high praise for this province, when the reality is that we're actually lagging behind every other province when it comes to the development of alternative energies.

This motion, albeit written with good intentions, sadly, Madam Speaker, does very little to move forward on an issue that, I can tell you, the Alberta NDP has been at the forefront of, pushing this government to invest in alternative fuels and looking at not just the benefit of reducing greenhouse gasses, which is a great reason, but looking at the economic benefit, where Alberta – and I'll cite some examples – has really missed out on opportunities in the past. So as opposed to some of the members on the other side patting themselves and their government on the back, the reality is that, again, Alberta does produce more greenhouse gas emissions than any other province in the country.

Something that really needs to be clarified, Madam Speaker, is that the number one culprit for that is our coal-fired plants, which produce much of the electricity generated within this province. Now, if you want to look for leadership, I mean, there are other provinces that have phased out coal completely. I was speaking with the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, and we were discussing the fact that Ontario, I believe, has one plant that's scheduled to shut down but one that's still operational. They've moved completely off coal, which is something that, again, we've been pushing for since long before I ever got involved in politics, for decades, looking back at Hansard, with previous New Democrat MLAs.

Again, looking at the benefits, not just the fact that coal-fired plants produce a significant amount of greenhouse gasses and are significant contributors to pollution within this province, there are many benefits. And looking at the free energy that we get in Alberta – I mean, something that I find fascinating, Madam Speaker, is the amount of sunlight that we get here in Alberta. Regardless of the season, the hours of sunlight that Alberta gets – I don't have the numbers at my fingertips – are higher than most other provinces in the country.

The fact is that if we want to really encourage Alberta businesses to invest in this type of technology, we need to look back at history and ask: how do we have such a thriving oil and gas sector? Well, we need to go back decades to see that it was through programs and incentives that kick-started this industry, as has been the case with most industries.

As members who sit on the committee for sustainable resource stewardship know, when we looked at the potential for hydroelectricity, the fact of the matter is that in all jurisdictions across Canada there has never been a hydro facility built without some government dollars, and it's because of the massive upfront costs and capital that is required to build one of these facilities. The fact that they take on average 10 years to come online before they start producing amounts to billions of dollars, and without government incentive and government assistance, these types of projects won't exist.

You know, my frustration is with how slow-moving this government is in their attitude toward alternative energies. Members can get up and provide beautiful lip service to reducing greenhouse gasses, but at the end of the day, actions speak louder than words, and talk is cheap. When we look at the few investments that this government has made, it is quite shameful. I mean, spending $1.3 billion on an unproven technology of sticking CO<sub>2</sub> in the ground as the silver bullet is absolutely absurd. If that $1.3 billion was invested in wind and solar, we would be at the forefront. But it requires dollars in R and D.

What's interesting, Madam Speaker, is that a few years back there was a German company that came to Calgary. They construct wind turbines and were very interested in meeting with this government to discuss just that, building a manufacturing plant for wind turbines. But this government couldn't be bothered to give them the time of day because they are exclusively interested in oil and gas and will do very little when it comes to other forms of technology. The fact that we're not... [interjections] I believe I have the floor, hon. member.

I'll give another example. I was quite fascinated, Madam Speaker, when I was down in Medicine Hat about six months ago and had a meeting with the mayor down there to learn what Medicine Hat is doing. Now, I can appreciate that that city is sitting on a significant amount of natural gas reserves. The city, by the way, owns the rights and does develop it. You know, the two words I'm going to say are going to shock the members from the Wildrose and those from the Tories, but it's a "Crown corporation," which does what it's meant to do. The city of Medicine Hat generates $30 million profit per year from their natural gas reserves. That's after covering all of their expenses. The city also passes significant savings on to their constituents.

Folks who live in Medicine Hat enjoy lower natural gas rates than folks in the rest of the province of Alberta.

The other part that's really interesting, Madam Speaker, is the fact that the city of Medicine Hat has developed an incentive program to encourage individuals and small businesses to invest in and install solar panels and to contribute to or use solar energy. What they do is that they offer individuals up to $10,000 to invest in solar panels for their personal homes, and for businesses it's up to $50,000. I can tell you that that type of investment does encourage families and businesses to invest in the technology, again, understanding that it's a long-term investment, that the payback is going to be spread out over many years. The payback isn't just in lower energy costs; it's also the benefits of reducing our pollution of the environment and our reliance on fossil fuels and nonrenewables. So I found it very fascinating that that's what Medicine Hat is doing.

Now, I know other jurisdictions – and I need to compare us to other jurisdictions – where government can play a role in encouraging individuals, families to generate energy on their own and sell it back to the grid. In the province of Alberta if a person does that, they get the exact going rate, whereas in a province like Ontario I believe it's around 10 times the going rate, that individuals will receive as a way to encourage them to generate their own energy and put that back into the grid, which, again, reduces the overall reliance on the major energy producers, which most often are nonrenewables and are the most polluting and most damaging.

Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member who put forward this motion – I believe her heart is in the right place. Urging the government, I think, is something that is positive. I can tell you, hon. member, that the Alberta NDP since 1961 has been urging the government. So that's positive. But I really wish that this would go much further, from lobbying the government, so to speak, to the government taking real action, again, whether it's in the form of incentive programs for individuals or for businesses. Maybe it's in the way of setting up some type of – well, I'm just thinking off the top, whether it's some type of arm's-length organization... [A timer sounded] Time flies when you're having fun.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to join the debate on Motion 518, which urges the government to develop and implement a program encouraging Albertans to invest in and utilize alternative energy technology in our province. I commend the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake for bringing attention to this initiative, which could strengthen Alberta's leadership in energy innovation and could further reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Energy plays a critical role in our lives every day, and energy's security will continue to become more important for future generations. Decisions we make today at the local, regional, and national levels will help shape our common future.

Madam Speaker, emissions reduction is a key to Alberta's stewardship commitment. Being proactive in reducing greenhouse gases saves energy and reduces our environmental impact. I understand that our electricity generation and retailing in Alberta is all done by the private sector, much different from other provincial jurisdictions, where electricity is still in the hands of government agencies and Crown corporations. In order to effectively reduce greenhouse gas emissions, we must work collaboratively with our provincial and federal counterparts.

To that end, many provinces have already implemented their own clean energy strategies. For example, in 2007 the government of British Columbia released their new B.C. energy plan, a vision for clean energy leadership. This plan puts B.C. at the forefront with an aggressive target for zero net greenhouse gas emissions, new investments in innovation, and an ambitious target to acquire 50 per cent of B.C. Hydro's incremental resource needs through conservation by 2020. The B.C. energy plan provides a made-in-B.C. solution to the global challenge of ensuring secure, reliable, and affordable energy. Under the plan the province will require zero net greenhouse gas emissions from all new electricity projects, and it will support the development of clean energy technology. As well, $25 million has been allocated towards an innovative clean energy fund that will encourage the development of clean energy and energy efficient technologies. Madam Speaker, B.C.'s current electricity supply resources are 90 per cent clean, which sets B.C. apart from leading jurisdictions in sustainable environmental and economic management.

Manitoba is another example of being at the forefront of utilizing alternative energy resources to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Manitoba is in the unique position of having the resources, experience, and wherewithal to become Canada's renewable energy powerhouse, and it's already a leader in developing one of the cleanest and greenest electricity systems in the world.

Recently the government of Manitoba released the Manitoba clean energy strategy, that focuses on made-in-Manitoba solutions to harness water, wind, solar, and biomass resources. Priority actions contained in the strategy include building a new generation of clean and renewable hydro power, leading North America in energy efficiency, keeping rates low, and growing renewable energy alternatives. The strategy will also develop Canada's first pay-as-you-save financing program, that covers the upfront capital costs of energy efficiency upgrades based on utility cost savings.

Madam Speaker, more than 98 per cent of Manitoba's electricity is renewable. This is a true testament to the unwavering commitment to reducing their hydrocarbon footprint. In 2004 Manitoba's energy efficiency program shot up in the Canadian Energy Efficiency Alliance rankings, from ninth place to first place.

Madam Speaker, the world has turned its attention to critical issues of global warming. As stewards of our province we have the responsibility to manage our natural resources in a way that ensures they meet both our needs of today and the needs of our children and grandchildren and great-grandchildren, too. We all have to think and act differently as we develop innovative and sustainable solutions to secure a clean and reliable energy supply for all Albertans.

This motion, Madam Speaker, is planning for tomorrow, not today. Our energy industry creates jobs for Albertans, supports important services for our families, and will play an important role in the decades of economic growth and in the environment that lie ahead of us.

Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you, hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, for bringing this motion forward.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, then Little Bow.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I, too, appreciate the tabling of Motion 518, a renewable energy program encouraging Albertans to develop and use renewable energy.

However, I'd be more convinced about the commitment of this government if they would bring it forward as a bill. Show us the money. Show us the commitment. Where's the bill?

In 2014 a motion is the weakest form of legislative action that one could take. Everybody, of course, can support the notion. The question is: where is the money, and where is the action on the ground? I want Alberta to be an energy superpower. I want Alberta to be the lowest per capita user of energy. I want Alberta to be a leader in renewable energy. I want Alberta to be a leader in state-of-the-art electricity production. That means not fossil fuels, and that means not coal-fired power plants, which still are funding 60 per cent of our power grid. Unacceptable in 2014.

I applaud the sentiments and the values in this motion, but, again, I'm looking for serious commitment from this government as is the rest of the world. I want Alberta to change through investment, research and development, and tax writeoffs to the renewable industry similar to the fossil fuel industry. We're not asking for anything exceptional that the government hasn't already produced in its incentives for the fossil fuel industry.

In fact, our fossil fuel industry has been seriously damaged by a government that continues to talk about and not take action on serious carbon and other pollutants in our environment, that has only in the last few years admitted that climate change was human induced and fossil fuel related. It's a very slow and, unfortunately, damaging approach to what the rest of the world embraced a decade ago.

We need to see a real commitment to eliminating those older coal-fired power plants, that continue to threaten health and add immeasurably to our carbon emissions and, I guess, again, to our poor reputation internationally. We can talk the talk, but when we're not walking the walk with real money, real plans, real action on the ground, and real reductions in our emissions, it's pretty tough to convince even our own citizens that we're serious about these issues.

This is almost 2014. The world is looking for leadership and investment in technology that is both low emitting and saves money for the commercial, the industrial, the enterprises that are using these alternatives, and we're still not involved actively in this tremendous entrepreneurial opportunity. We're tired of hearing words without action. If this government is serious, let's see a bill. Why are we not leading? Where is the action?

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

5:50

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm getting up to speak in favour of Motion 518 from the Member for Lesser Slave Lake. Now, one thing I want to promote here. On Friday I was back in my constituency. The Southern Alberta Energy from Waste Association, at www.saewa.ca, has 72 different municipalities joined together in this alliance . . .

An Hon. Member: How many?

Mr. Donovan: Seventy-two was the last number I got told.

. . . between towns, villages, counties, and MDs that are looking at alternative ways instead of using landfills. That represents about 250,000 people in the jurisdictions that they represent. I think it's a key thing – and this is where this motion really hits on it – to make use of renewable resources and leadership in energy innovation and greenhouse gas reductions.

To me, it's very key that we start looking at these things, and it's great to actually see this motion from the member. I think it's one of the key things that we need to look at going on to our children, our waste that we have. We want to make sure our kids have that option down the road, that we're not going to dump in some landfills. In saying that, I think a lot of the people that are in that industry, the landfills, have also noticed the different ways that they go about making sure things are out of the stream and how much they recycle out of stuff before it goes to a landfill.

I think the Southern Alberta Energy from Waste Association is a pretty key group, and it goes back to planning. It's not a forced group of planning on it. This is a group that's slowly come together over time and has seen the vision of where this province should go towards waste energy and making full use of it. I think this is a prime time for this motion to come through. They just had their AGM here on the 29th of November in Nanton, which I was glad to be a part of because it had lots of MDs, reeves, mayors, and members at large at it. I think we've identified that these are key things that this province needs to look forward to, not burying our waste but making energy out of it.

I'm very happy to speak in favour of this motion and urge everyone else in this House to do the same. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on Motion 518?

Seeing none, I would ask the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake to close.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to say a special thank you to everyone who has spoken on this motion, and I guess I want to address the issue from Calgary-Mountain View in asking: where's the beef? Well, the goal of Motion 518 is actually to encourage the government to "develop and implement a program encouraging Albertans to invest in and make use of renewable and alternative energy technologies." That could mean financial. That could mean educational. That could mean developing programs to make sure that we continue to build on what we have presently.

Yes, we may have some issues when we're talking about some of the things that Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre spoke about. I love his constant support, I love listening to some of the assessments that he has in terms of concerns that he's brought forward, and I agree that the Ministry of Energy needs to look at the issue of microgeneration in its regulation. So I happen to agree with things that maybe need to be fixed, and I know that we try to make sure we do that.

I'd like to also thank Calgary-Hawkwood for bringing out the provincial energy strategy. You know, it's really wonderful to be able to know what is going on presently. This motion has been on the table. I've had this motion on for about nine years to try to figure how we can bring this forward – actually, it's been about seven years – to try to figure out how, then, we bring this motion forward in a good way. I want to thank you for that, for bringing that out and for how it aligns there.

Also, from Strathmore-Brooks: what type of program? Yes, as I indicated, it could be financial; it could be educational; it could be most anything in terms of how we can make this to be the best that is possible. It is only a motion, but a motion can also spur a lot of things that could happen behind the scenes.

I also wanted to talk about options for people. I think we need to look at how we can help individuals, whether it's on the financial side or the educational side. As an example, geothermal is being used in one of my bird observatories, and that is such an incredible program and an incredible technology. We have to look at all possibilities. We cannot just look at one way, but we've got to be able to look all ways in this world. That, to me, is an important component.

Edmonton-South West: oh, he's so eloquent. He's got such a view of climate change strategy that I could just take him and just hug him a bit. I know that strategy certainly aligns with what this motion is about.

I want to thank Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview for the encouragement to continue to go further. I hope to goodness that he sees the benefit in things that have been done in this province. I know that we can continue to do better, and that's what this motion is all about, being able to see how we can go further.

So you talk about: where's the beef? Madam Speaker, I want to say that we still have challenges, yes, but we've got to look at ways for us to be able to explore what the possibilities are. I know that with this motion we can begin to look at all possibilities.

I want to say thank you to everybody who has supported this. I appreciate all of the encouragement, even the comments that have been made as to how we can improve this.

Thank you very, very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: I'd like to move that there's a one-minute bell if there's any division here.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, December 2, 2013

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Time Allocation on Bill 45

49. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 45, Public Sector Services Continuation Act, is resumed, not more than two hours shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in second reading, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Government House Leader.

This is a nondebatable motion, but the opposition is allowed to speak to this motion.

Mr. Anderson: I have five minutes. Is that correct?

The Acting Speaker: Yes, that's correct. The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise in the Legislature today and speak to this motion. It's good to see so many folks in the gallery. We don't usually get so many visitors here at night, but we're certainly glad to see all the folks here. It is the people's House, and we're happy to have them here.

I, of course, and my Wildrose colleagues – and I won't speak for my friends in the ND opposition or the Liberal opposition, but I'm sure they feel much the same – are very much opposed to this motion for several reasons. First off, we saw today the Speaker rule about a contempt of the Legislature and on how the process of the government publishing, essentially, the contents of bills and motions that they are going to bring into this House prior to actually bringing them to this House was a contempt of the Legislature and very disrespectful of our practices here.

The fact that this government would put on the table two very, very controversial bills, Bill 45 and Bill 46, and before they even started debating these bills, which we will start tonight, even before then, put on this government motion to limit debate on this bill to two hours, to just two hours, something that will affect so many people, literally tens of thousands of people if not more and indirectly well into the hundreds of thousands of people – they bring in a bill, and they give the opposition parties two hours in second reading to debate this bill. That is a travesty of disrespect and a travesty to democracy. That is what I believe. What we're witnessing here is what I would call gong-show government because that's what this is. This is not how government is supposed to work.

If you're going to bring in a bill like Bill 45 or Bill 46, anything like that, first of all you make sure that you explain what you are thinking of doing right up front months in advance so that you can go to stakeholders, so that you can go to constitutional lawyers, to, obviously, the labour representatives, to the people themselves and talk to them and understand their position and get their feedback on these things. Then you introduce the actual bill into the Legislature once you've gone through that consultation, and you give the opposition at least a week or two to digest the bill, so to speak, to understand it, to talk with stakeholders, people who are going to be affected by it, to talk with them, understand their position, understand the legal ramifications of the bill. Then a couple of weeks later at least – it should be longer but at least a couple of weeks – you bring it back, and then you have a good debate.

Sometimes that debate will take only two hours. Sometimes it might take 10 hours. Sometimes it may take 20 hours. Heck, it may even take a week, and that's okay because that's how democracy should work. We should respect the processes of this House enough to be able to have a good debate without the government coming in here and saying: "Nope. Sorry. You've got two hours and only two hours, and then we're shoving this thing through. We're ramming it down the people of Alberta's throats."

That's wrong, Madam Speaker. It's got to change, and if we have to bring a new government forward in 2016, we will, and we're going to change that. Laugh all you want, Deputy Premier. Laugh all you want. You're, politically speaking, digging your own grave.

Anyway, Madam Speaker, I look forward to the abbreviated, shortened debate. We will certainly do our best to represent the views of all Albertans in this Legislature in the short time that we have. That will be very difficult, but again, government, start acting your ages.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Government Motion 49 is nondebatable. I know that there were a number of you that wanted to speak to this, but there was only one opposition member allowed to speak for five minutes.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 49 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 7:35 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

Government Bills and Orders*Second Reading*Bill 46*Public Service Salary Restraint Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise this evening to move second reading of Bill 46, the Public Service Salary Restraint Act.

Madam Speaker, a key part of the government's building Alberta plan is to ensure that we continue to live within our means while focusing spending on the services Albertans rely on. It is the men and women of the Alberta public service, from paralegals to probation officers, fire prevention officers to child and youth care workers, who deliver these programs and services with purpose and pride.

We saw first-hand during the summer floods the dedication of our employees in the response, recovery, and rebuilding efforts. Through long hours away from their families in difficult situations our employees showed resolve and incredible heart when it counted. We are profoundly appreciative of the important work being done by our public servants both in these kinds of extraordinary situations and in the duties they perform every day in every ministry and in every department of our government right across this province.

Madam Speaker, Bill 46 reflects the government's commitment to holding the line on spending to help us balance the budget while meeting Alberta's enormous growth challenges head-on. We will save more, and we will live within our means. Over the past year Albertans have been very clear that they expect government to show restraint, which is why the last budget held the line with almost a zero per cent increase in operating spending. As we've seen with our recent fiscal update, we are in fact starting to turn that corner.

This is good news, but we remain mindful that these improvements will be offset by investment required to rebuild Alberta after the flood. Our ability to keep turning that corner is dependent on continuing to make prudent financial choices. Public-sector compensation makes up roughly half of our total spending. That includes doctors and nurses, teachers and postsecondary faculty, and the employees of the Alberta public service. That's why we've been abundantly clear with the public-sector unions, including the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, that we need to hold the line on salaries.

We worked hard with our doctors and our teachers on long-term deals that hold wages flat for three years and guarantee stability in education and health care for years to come. Albertans value those services and our front-line employees who provide them. The Public Service Salary Restraint Act has been introduced in an effort to reach a negotiated settlement with the union representing our government workers.

Madam Speaker, reaching a negotiated settlement with the union is our preferred option. Bill 46 is intended to kick-start those negotiations to reach a deal that is fair to employees and fair to taxpayers. Our public servants are paid fairly, and they should be. Sustainability in public-sector compensation means paying employees well for the work that they do on behalf of Albertans at a rate that is responsible to Albertans and to the taxpayer. This is the balance that we want to achieve through Bill 46. We must ensure we negotiate agreements with our public-sector partners that are sustainable and place the government's finances on a strong footing going forward.

Pay packages in the Alberta public service are, in fact, very competitive in comparison with other provinces, but being competitive in the market doesn't mean we must drive the market. Research shows that our bargaining unit employees at the job rate maximums are generally paid more than comparable employees in other provinces. We still want to attract and retain a strong, skilled public-sector workforce through competitive pay and benefits and uphold Alberta's market edge, but we can do that in a way that ensures our overall growth rate for salaries is sustainable.

The services that public-sector employees provide are complex and vary widely. As a result, all agreements won't look the same. We have responded to each part of the public sector individually, making labour market adjustments where necessary. To date we've reached successful long-term agreements with Alberta's teachers and doctors that align with our principles of fiscal restraint, but there is more to do.

The collective agreement between the Alberta government and AUPE expired on March 31, 2013. The union left the negotiating table after just 12 days and now wants binding arbitration, which is a step that has not been taken in 30 years. Bill 46 will provide a framework within which the government of Alberta can negotiate with the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees towards a new four-year agreement. Madam Speaker, we pledge to return to the table in a sincere and earnest effort to come to terms on a deal that is fair to our hard-working public servants and fair to the taxpayers of Alberta. In demonstration of our intention to reach a negotiated settlement we have in fact already made a new offer.

This legislation provides the parties with two months to negotiate an agreement with the possibility of extending that time frame to four months. If despite our best efforts we are unable to reach a negotiated settlement with the union, the Public Service Salary Restraint Act applies a reasonable wage growth for the term of this particular AUPE agreement, which includes no wage increases in the first year, which is in alignment with other public-sector agreements; a lump sum to put some money in employees' pockets in year 2; and a pay rate increase of 1 per cent in the final two years.

Government has committed to responsible spending. It is government who has the ultimate accountability for how taxpayer dollars are spent, and it is government that must act in the interests of Albertans. Madam Speaker, everyone agrees that a negotiated agreement is better than a legislated one, and we are committed to using our best efforts to achieve that end. Through this legislation we are signalling that the negotiations need to focus on an agreement that is fiscally prudent. Decisions that directly impact the spending of taxpayer dollars and our ability to pay for the services Albertans rely on need to be made by government. We need to get back to the table, reach a reasonable deal, and move forward.

I sincerely hope that you will join me in supporting this important piece of legislation. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to start out by talking a little bit about who we're talking about here and who this bill affects, first off. This isn't some nameless individual sitting in a cubicle in the AHS office tower making $250,000 or $300,000 or a half-million dollars, sitting around a board table with a $1 million severance package waiting for them when they're done. That's not who we're talking about right now.

We're talking about front-line public-sector workers. These are the Albertans in our hospitals right now cleaning up the floors from the messes of surgery and treatment and making sure it's clean and safe for other people to come. These are the individuals who are providing aids for our elderly and for the sick and for the handicapped and for those with disabilities. These are the individuals that are there for us when we're in danger as a province, as was pointed out, the ones that were on the front lines during the flood helping us to rebuild and recover and working amazing amounts of hours in order to do so at tremendous sacrifice. These are our front-line youth workers and child care advocates, child care workers. These are individuals who give so much to this province. Again, I would suggest that when we're debating a bill such as this, we do so and give these folks enough respect that we don't try to ram this thing through in a couple of days. They deserve more respect than that, in my view, Madam Speaker.

Now, Madam Speaker, negotiating a collective bargaining agreement that is fair for taxpayers is an important goal, of course, so that the public service employment agreements are affordable and sustainable and public services are sustainable. I haven't met too many Albertans, whether they're a member of AUPE or United Nurses or anyone else, that don't think that. Of course, salaries and public-sector services need to be sustainable, but collective bargaining does not give the government the right to terminate the legal arbitration rights of public-sector employees. That is a right that in 1977 Premier Lougheed first established. He said: "You know what? Our public-sector employees provide such critical services in care to the people of Alberta that we cannot afford to have them go on strike. If they go on strike – let's face it – things fall apart. It is devastating to our front lines. It's devastating to people in care, the sick, the elderly, obviously, our front-line emergency personnel, sheriffs, people like that. That would be so devastating to the economy, to the safety of Albertans, et cetera, we can't afford to have them strike."

But there was a quid pro quo when Premier Lougheed brought in that bill in 1977. I think it was Bill 41. He said that if we're going to take away the right of our government employees employed in essential services to strike, then we have to replace that with something that's fair. There has to be something that is fair and that they perceive and agree is fair. So Premier Lougheed introduced arbitration into the bargaining process so that if for whatever reasons the government or the labour leadership could not come to an agreement on what was a fair compensation package for our public-sector workforce, one side or the other could request arbitration. Then the matter would be referred to an independent third party with experience in dealing with these issues.

That independent party would hear from both sides of the debate, would hear the arguments from the government, would hear the arguments from the public-sector employees and union representatives and so forth, and would come back after deliberation and research and so forth, looking at all the different factors that are often too numerous, certainly too numerous to list here, with an arbitrated settlement, a decision, saying: "This will be fair. We know the government wants 0, 0, 1, 1. We know the union wants 3, 3, 3, 4." Whatever. I'm just making numbers up here. And then he says: "Okay. But this is what's fair." He comes out with an agreement, the agreement is put in place, and everyone feels they've been heard.

Now, that shouldn't be the regular course of business, of course. Usually, I would hope, that as adults and government as leaders, quote, unquote, in this province they could sit down and have a fruitful discussion and come to a negotiated settlement so we're not going to arbitration every time. You would think that would be what would happen. But sometimes it doesn't work out – we understand that – and that's where arbitration comes into play. So that's the deal that was made. It was a fair deal.

During the debate in this House on granting Alberta's public-sector employees arbitration rights, there was a minister, Minister Merv Leitch, a great guy, a great, amazing person. He's actually one of the individuals – I was lucky – who helped me through law school, actually, with a wonderful scholarship, a constitutional scholarship. Just a very generous man. He understood the Constitution very, very well. He, actually, to this day in several instances will give out scholarships to students in constitutional law for a certain achievement.

Minister Leitch, at that time a very respected scholar and minister, said:

If they . . .

And "they" in this case is our public-sector workers.

. . . are not to have the right to strike, in fairness to them we must provide . . . the fairest possible labor relations system for the employees of Alberta short of providing them with the right to withdraw services or strike.

And he said much, much more.

His view of it was that, constitutionally, if we're going to take away the right of our workers to strike, we have to give them another right, something that they can go to and make sure that their rights are being respected and that fairness will prevail. So they came up with arbitration rights, and they put those in the law. That right of arbitration has been in the law since 1977.

Do you know how long that is, Madam Speaker? I was born a couple of months after that law was passed. That was over 35 years ago. For 35 years we've had this right, this legal right, on the books.

Never once in our history, not even if you go back to Ralph Klein – and everyone thinks that Ralph Klein was a cost cutter, all these things, slashing salaries. Guess what? A little interesting tidbit: he never took away, in his time, the right of arbitration from our public-sector workers. He came to a negotiated agreement. It's one that hurt, but even Ralph Klein respected the right of arbitration enough to leave those rights in there. He didn't just rip them out of the law because it became inconvenient, and he was asking for cuts, substantial cuts.

Yet this government comes to our public-sector workforce and says: "You know what? We're not coming to agreement as fast as we would like. You won't agree to what we want; therefore, we're going to impose an agreement on you and take away your arbitration rights so that you have no recourse. You can't go on illegal strike. That's already illegal."

We'll talk a little bit more about Bill 45. There are some problems with that bill as well, but most people, I think, agree that illegal strikes are not a good thing. There's already law on the books today that deals with illegal strikes, so that's a red herring, frankly. That's not what we're talking about here. We're talking about a government who didn't get their way, who, frankly, is throwing a temper tantrum and then taking the right of arbitration out of the law so that they can get their way and so that there's no recourse for our public-sector workers.

I hear on the other side constantly: this is just a way to get people back to the table. "This is a way to get our union leadership and our public-sector workforce back to the negotiating table," they say. Okay. Now, I guess I would say that most negotiations – when I think of the word "negotiate," I don't think of one of the negotiating parties holding a gun to the other person's head, Madam Speaker, but that's essentially what this does, figuratively speaking. Of course it forces them back to the table. They don't have a choice.

What do you mean, that this is going to incentivize a negotiated agreement? What choice do they have? They can't go on illegal strike. They can't do that. Certainly, after Bill 45 if you even have a thought to go on an illegal strike, if they even call a talk-show host, if a union member, you know, some individual cleaning the floors at 2 a.m., decides to phone in to a talk show and says they should go on an illegal strike, they say: "Oh, that's illegal. Sorry. You were thinking about it." So that's what it's come to. We've got this red herring, Bill 45, within the context of Bill 46 that clouds the issue even further.

But, Madam Speaker, I believe, very much so, that Merv Leitch and Premier Lougheed had it right. Granting arbitration rights rather than leaving Albertans and public services at risk of strikes on the front lines was the way to go. I think that was the right decision.

Now, I want to make it clear. Before the last election the Wildrose was very clear in our statements. We said that we thought we could balance the budget in two years, and in that first year we would – I actually have the quote right in front of me. Until 2014 – that would be next year – "the Wildrose will work collaboratively and respectfully with public sector unions to hold the line on the current overall expenditure on front line public sector salaries."

There's nothing wrong with a government going into a negotiation and asking for a 0, 1, 3 or a 0, 2, 4 or a 0, 2, 2, 4 or whatever. There's nothing wrong with going in and asking for that and trying to negotiate that if that's what you need to control your expenses, if that's what you figure. That's okay. We have no grievance there. The grievance is not that you asked for a zero per cent increase this year or even a 0, 0, 1, 1. It is debatable whether that's really necessary, but let's say that it is. Say that's your first position: 0, 0, 1, 1. Okay. You have the right as the government to ask that. Premier Klein asked for way more than that, right? So you go in there and ask for it.

But the unions, or our public-sector employees, also have a right. They have a right to say: "No. That's not fair. These are the reasons. We have an inflated economy. It's tough to keep up with the rate of inflation. We don't want our members to become poorer over time with the inflation and so forth that is happening in Alberta right now." Then the government can come back and say: "Well, no. Actually, inflation isn't that much, and your salaries are above the average nationally" or whatever. It goes back and forth. That's part of the negotiation, and that happens. That's okay.

What you don't do when you don't get your way in the negotiation is sit there and say: "Okay. You know what I'm going to do? I'm going to take the legal rights that someone else has, I'm going to rip them out, and I'm just going to impose a settlement. That's just what I'm going to do because they just won't agree. They're just not being reasonable." So you take away their legal rights. You impose a settlement. Wham-bam; thank you, ma'am. All done. That's how this government is acting. It's wrong.

There's nothing wrong with asking. There's nothing wrong with fighting for sustainable wage increases. There's nothing wrong with that. Good. But you cannot then turn around and act like a dictator and impose an agreement and come in with heavy-handed legislation that essentially, Madam Speaker, takes away all the rights of unions to negotiate and to have good-faith collective bargaining. That's wrong. That's wrong. That's not the Alberta way. That's not what we do here.

We need to stop this ideological debate. Instead of words like "left-wing," "right-wing," "progressive," "conservative," and all these other words we throw around, we need to start using words like "fairness," "decency," "common sense," "fiscal responsibility." These are the words that I think Albertans today want to see their politicians not only use but incorporate into their actions. This bill, Bill 46, and significant parts of Bill 45 are not respectful. They're not decent. They're not even fiscally responsible because of the poison that this is going to put into the waters of bargaining on a go-forward basis for government.

Madam Speaker, how am I doing for time today?

The Acting Speaker: Four minutes.

8:10

Mr. Anderson: Four minutes. Madam Speaker, I know that there are others that want to speak, and we will absolutely let them. If we didn't have closure, time allocation, we could all speak to it, but unfortunately we don't have that.

I will wrap up by saying that this bill, Bill 46, is unfair. It is unjust. It is a slap in the face to our public-sector workforce, and it's also a slap in the face to the rule of law. The rule of law, Madam Speaker, is what separates us from the barbarians, frankly, the rule of law, the fact that we cannot have government just toss out the law when it doesn't favour them. Because then what are we? At that point we're just a totalitarian dictatorship, and that's not the Alberta that I believe in.

The Wildrose supports the rule of law, fairness, and decency, and we are not going to balance the budget on the backs of our public-sector workers or our front-line services. That's not the way we're going to act. That's not the way this government should act. That's got to stop, Madam Speaker.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would move that we adjourn debate.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion to adjourn debate carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 8:12 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

For the motion:

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Hancock: Madam Speaker, it appears we might have a number of bells tonight, and I wonder if we might ask for unanimous consent of the House to reduce the bells to one minute.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Bill 42 Securities Amendment Act, 2013

The Acting Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 42, Securities Amendment Act, 2013.

Bill 42 focuses on over-the-counter derivatives and the harmonization of derivatives regulation in Canada. These are complicated financial instruments, Madam Speaker, and as I mentioned at first reading, the lack of transparency around the over-the-counter derivatives was widely seen as a contributing factor in the 2008 financial crisis. Following that crisis, the International Organization of Securities Commissions introduced several new principles relating to the reduction of systemic risk, and the G20 made commitments to improve the regulation of over-the-counter derivatives markets. Canada along with the rest of the G20 countries committed to strengthening the regulation of this type of investment. Bill 42 supports these international commitments made by Canada.

I'll get into some more detail about the bill in a minute, Madam Speaker, but first I think it will be instructive to say a few words about the nature of this type of investment. Derivatives generally take the form of bilateral contracts under which the parties agree to payments between them based on the value of the underlying asset or other data at a particular point in time. The main use of derivatives is to minimize risk for one party while offering the potential for a higher return at an increased risk to another. The main types of derivatives are futures, forwards, options, and swaps. An over-the-counter derivative, which is the subject of Bill 42, is a derivative that is not listed or traded on any exchange.

What does the bill propose to do? Bill 42 creates a statutory framework for the regulation and oversight of over-the-counter derivatives, providing the Alberta Securities Commission with the authority to make rules dealing with derivatives. Under the framework proposed in Bill 42, over-the-counter derivatives would be traded through a derivatives exchange or an electronic trading platform. Trades would be settled through central counter parties, and all derivatives transactions would have to be reported to a trade repository. There would also be solvency requirements. Together these measures all serve to increase transparency in the derivatives market, helping to protect investors and reducing systemic risk.

The framework proposed in Bill 42 includes providing for the creation of a definition of a derivative and classes of derivatives; enhancing or creating new definitions of important terms such as "recognized trade repository," "security," "trade," and "clearing agency"; recognizing trade repositories and adding references to them in the Securities Act were needed; expanding or clarifying powers of the Alberta Securities Commission relating to the regulation and oversight of derivatives; replacing references to exchange contracts and future contracts with derivatives; repealing part 8 of the Securities Act, trading and exchange contracts, with requirements being moved into the rules; as well, adding a new section, 105.1, to provide that derivatives transactions are not void for noncompliance with Alberta securities laws. This will harmonize Alberta with other jurisdictions like B.C. and Ontario.

Amending section 147 to provide for a security of a reporting issuer to include a related derivative for purposes of insider trading obligations: again, this amendment harmonizes with similar B.C. and Ontario provisions.

Madam Speaker, the proposed amendments in Bill 42 will contribute to the harmonization of derivatives regulation across Canada. Provincial and territorial regulators are being encouraged to agree on a harmonized approach to regulating derivatives capable of being adopted across Canada, and this bill is certainly an important step in that direction.

We've learned a lot from the 2008 financial crisis, and contributing to the reform of securities regulation is a priority for all jurisdictions, including Alberta. Bill 42 will support the ongoing collaborative work by provincial and territorial governments to further modernize, harmonize, and streamline Alberta's securities laws. The changes proposed in Bill 42 will support Canada's international commitments, helping to reduce risk and contribute to public confidence in the financial system.

Madam Speaker, for the last three years the World Bank has ranked Canada as one of the top five countries for protecting investors, ahead of the United States and the United Kingdom. We want to build on that success, and that's why the government of Alberta and the Alberta Securities Commission are committed to continuous improvement of our securities regulatory system. The commission along with provincial securities regulators in B.C., Ontario, and Quebec have been active contributors to the development of regulatory reforms for over-the-counter derivatives markets at the local, national, and international levels.

I encourage all members of the Assembly to support this bill. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

With that, I now move to adjourn debate on Bill 42.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

8:30 Government Motions (continued)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Time Allocation on Bill 46

52. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 46, Public Service Salary Restraint Act, is resumed, not more than two hours shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in second reading, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Mr. Anderson: Well, here we go again, Madam Speaker. This motion, of course, again limits debate, this time on Bill 46. We talked earlier about the limiting of debate on Bill 45. We have had so far in this Legislature other than the mover of Bill 46 one speaker, myself, that has been able to address the Assembly on this issue. Apparently, the government thinks that that's just too much, too exhausting: "One person speaking out against a bill: we can't have that. Let's limit debate to two hours." If you do the math, if all the government speakers speak and use all of their time, that takes up more than half of that time, so at least an hour, and that leaves for the opposition a maximum of three people maybe, maybe four.

An Hon. Member: But we have four.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. But a minimum, three people, can speak, and then it's over. So that's democracy, eh? In what country? Honestly. So we're going to allow three opposition voices, maybe four opposition voices to speak on this bill in second reading, and then we're going to shut 'er down. Honestly, it's painful. It's shameful. It's a hundred different adjectives. It's not right, Madam Speaker.

We can't keep running this House in this way. It's undemocratic, and it's wrong. It's disrespectful of the process. When we have people from all over the province – I just met a lady outside from Airdrie who made the trip, in this ridiculous weather that we're having right now, all the way here to be in the gallery tonight and to listen to debate on this bill. What are we going to give her? We're going to give her and hundreds of other colleagues like her, not to mention all of the folks watching this at home, who are very engaged and very interested, mostly our front-line public-sector staff and workers as well as their families and their friends and so forth, that are very engaged in this because they don't feel they've been consulted – they feel they've been wronged. They feel they've had their rights undermined by this government, and we're giving them an entire two hours of debate on this bill. I don't understand how this government thinks that's fair.

So we can make some arguments, but we're going to be essentially disenfranchising all but six, seven, eight, maybe, members of this House. There are 87 elected members. We might get seven or eight speakers, maybe nine. How is that democratic? It's not democratic.

It's also undemocratic in my view – and I understand it's in the standing orders – that I'm the only one that gets to stand on this motion, frankly. I want to hear from the Liberal leader. I want to hear from the ND leader. I want to hear from the government side about why they think that it is appropriate to limit debate on this bill to two hours. Why are we disenfranchising them? They have constituents. They have people that they represent. We have 17 Wildrose MLAs. We have people to represent. Yet I'm going to be the only one that gets to speak against this undemocratic motion that is being brought forward by the Government House Leader and his government. That's wrong, Madam Speaker.

We have got to get the rules of this House reformed to better respect democracy, to better respect the people of Alberta, because we're doing a huge disservice to them, and we're becoming, frankly, a laughing stock when it comes to democratic government all over the world. It's very, very shameful what's going on here tonight.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 52 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 8:35 p.m.]

[Government Motion 52 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Privilege Opportunity for Debate

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I wish to raise a question of privilege. Under Standing Order 15 it says:

(1) A breach of the rights of the Assembly or of the parliamentary rights of any Member constitutes a question of privilege, and

(5) A Member may always raise a question of privilege in the Assembly immediately after the words are uttered or the events occur that give rise to the question, in which case the written notice required under suborder (2) is not required.

I would like to cite Beauchesne, section 25, on page 12:

In my view, parliamentary privilege does not go much beyond the rights of free speech in the House of Commons and the right of a Member to discharge his duties in the House as a Member of the House of Commons.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, the rights of members in this House to discharge their duties as members of this House are protected by the authorities and by the rules of this House, and a violation of that by the government through the passage of their time allocation motion constitutes, in my view, a question of privilege since, by shortening the time available to speak at each stage of two very important bills, they have effectively prevented many members of this House from being able to speak to the bills. These are fundamentally the responsibilities of members, to be able to speak to bills, to debate bills, and by the allocation of only two hours at each stage of the debate, it makes it impossible for each member who wished to speak to these bills to do so, therefore completely disenfranchising those members of this Assembly. Moreover, as the hon. House leader for the Wildrose has pointed out, the government tends not to speak much to bills in open debate. But during periods where time allocation has been applied and there's a limit, in this case two hours, the government speaks often to the bills, thereby shortening the amount of time available for opposition speakers even further.

So it's a misnomer to believe that we are actually getting two hours of debate on these bills on the opposition side. It actually in practice turns out to be closer to one hour. Each member is entitled to speak for 15 minutes; therefore, four members could speak at each stage only, and if the government decided not to debate the bills, then eight. Nevertheless, Madam Speaker, there are far more members of the opposition than that. I will go further and suggest to you that it is also a right of the members to be able to introduce amendments to bills, and this will clearly be impossible given the two-hour time allocation that has been applied now to both Bill 45 and to Bill 46.

So, Madam Speaker, I would ask that you find that there is a prima facie case of privilege in the government's use or misuse, I should say, of the time allocation under the standing orders. If you were to do so, then I would further make the argument that the government must apply time allocation in such a way as to permit each member of the House to speak to each bill before time allocation is applied.

I put that before you, Madam Speaker. It's a very serious matter. What the government has done by passing this motion and the other one relative to Bill 45 is to simply silence a large percentage of this House, including many members on the opposition side who wish to speak and be on the record with respect to this bill. It is unacceptable by all parliamentary norms and absolutely prevents us from doing our job, which is the key principle when speakers rule on a question of privilege. Does the action of another member or the government or some outside body interfere with the member's ability to do their job as elected members of the House? It is clear that these motions as applied by the government do exactly that.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

On this question of privilege I will hear from one member from each caucus, and then I'll rule.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The hon. leader of the ND caucus is absolutely correct in his assessment of a point of privilege here. There is a point of privilege. There is no doubt that this government, by bringing in time allocation – remember that the motion for time allocation was brought in even before debate started on these bills. Even before it started. What they're doing by doing this is disenfranchising all but a few people in this Assembly.

Now, time allocation is permitted under the standing orders, and I'm not going to sit here and say that it should never be used. If there's been debate going on for weeks – days, days, days, weeks, weeks, hundreds of hours or dozens of hours, whatever – then there is a point where everyone who has had their say has had their say and maybe, you know, the government does have to move on to other business and so forth. There is a role for time allocation. Everybody in here knows that.

But it's being abused, grossly abused, by this government. You cannot use a rule to interfere with the rights of members. We talk about privilege a lot in this House. There have been several points of privilege, and a lot of times the Speaker will say: "You know what? This was a very unfortunate incident, but it didn't interfere enough with the members' ability to do their job." This does exactly that. It couldn't be more on point, Madam Speaker. The government's motion as passed does not allow members of this Assembly to have their say, to propose amendments, to just even speak for a few minutes on the bill. How is that not a point of privilege?

It is a breach of privilege, and the remedy is easy. It's not an apology from the government. That's not necessary. It's not anything like that. The remedy is very simple. Give the members who want to speak in this Assembly – if they need to forward their name to you or whatever, let everyone in this Assembly who wants to speak to this bill for their 10 to 15 minutes have their say. Once it goes through, if the government still wants to bring in time allocation, fine, but then at least every member at every stage of the reading has had a chance to speak. By not allowing that, it is absolutely a prima facie point of privilege, and I hope that you will rule and protect the rights of the democratically elected individuals in this Chamber.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I, too, am speaking in favour of the point of privilege motion brought forward by the hon. leader of the New Democrats. This is a clear case of members of the opposition and their rights to speak on a bill being trampled on in an unwise and deliberate fashion by a government who is intent on keeping us quiet, from doing our job as elected public servants to speak on bills that are important not only to our constituents but to the future of this great province.

I, too, can see that if this government had placed this bill on the Order Paper at the beginning of session and we had been discussing it all the way along and we had had opportunities to speak to it, all members of the opposition and all members of the government side who wish to discuss this in an open and honest fashion, if that had been the case and we were still here, Madam Speaker, I, too, would understand the need for the standing orders.

But by bringing this bill in at the dying days of a session – and we all know why. Simply put, the government didn't want to speak about this as it really is, the most significant bill that has been brought during this legislative session. It really has been.

There are real, clear indications that this is a violation of our principles of fundamental justice and fairness, fundamental protections of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms, fundamental divergence from the laws of the way we've understood negotiating labour rights, and the ability to collectively bargain in this province will be dramatically changed at this stage. If that's not a bill that all members of this House, especially opposition members of this House, should get the opportunity to weigh in and speak on on behalf of their constituents, I do not know what is. This is seriously an affront to members to do our duty on behalf of our constituents, to speak our minds, and, in my view, is a clear violation of our privilege.

I, too, will commend the member for bringing this motion. I realize that this is a difficult position for you to be put in, but if you analyze the facts of this case, the way the government brought in this bill at the dying days of a session, the way the government immediately moved closure of debate prior to us getting an opportunity to even see the bill, this can be seen for what it is, as a way to trample on our obligation to speak up on bills that are of importance to our constituents. In my view, I think you would be in every right to find a point of privilege on the government and find a way to allow us to do our jobs as members of this Assembly.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. There's clearly no point of privilege at all. Standing Order 21 provides that:

A member of the Executive Council may, on at least one day's notice . . .

which was done

. . . propose a motion for the purpose of allotting a specified number of hours for consideration and disposal of proceedings on a Government motion or a Government Bill and the motion shall not be subject to debate or amendment except as provided in suborder (3).

The standing orders clearly provide for that.

The custom of the House is that a time allocation motion is not moved until there has been some debate in the House on the bill. In fact, with respect to Bill 45, there were two opposition speakers last Thursday, and on Bill 46 tonight the opposition critic had the opportunity to debate, and then time allocation was brought in.

Time allocation allows for – and there are two hours at this stage, and the discussion at other stages of the bill is totally irrelevant at this point because, of course, time allocation has not been moved on those other stages and may not be moved on those other stages, depending on what happens.

Mr. Mason: What are the odds?

Mr. Hancock: Well, the odds are that if he reads his Order Paper, there are probably six time allocation motions that are lying dormant on the Order Paper of bills that have all been passed, and those motions haven't been moved because they weren't necessary.

In the customs of the House not every member speaks to every bill. In fact, in the customs of the House every caucus organizes itself so they have caucus critics who are usually the chief spokesmen on a bill. Other members speak to bills. Often we find, as we proceed through the process of a discussion, that very rarely on a bill will every member of the opposition, much less every member of the House, speak. The time that's allocated has to be reasonable, and two hours at second reading is a reasonable amount of time. That was of course the motion. That's the motion that the House passed in accordance with the standing orders. A motion passed by this House in accordance with the standing orders can hardly be a breach of privilege of a member.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

A point of privilege has been called by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. This is a very serious matter. As the Member for Calgary-Buffalo said, this is a very significant bill as well. The Government House Leader has pointed out that there is no point of privilege because of Standing Order 21 and all the rules have been followed, but because this is something that's extremely serious, I will require some time to review the discussion, and I will defer my decision at this time.

So we shall proceed.

The Clerk: Under Orders of the Day, Bill 45 . . .

Mr. Mason: A point of order, Madam Speaker. On a point of order, Madam Speaker. Would the Clerk sit down, please.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I expect you to show respect for the table officer.

Mr. Mason: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, the table officer should sit down and not yell over me.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I will recognize your point of order, but I expect you to show respect for our table officers.

Mr. Mason: I apologize to the hon. Clerk, but he was in fact trying to shout me down.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, on your point of order.

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker, having made that ruling and deferring your decision, then I would make the point that, in fact, the use of this closure on these motions needs to be delayed until your ruling is in. In other words, I'm saying that given you have deferred your decision on that, we should not proceed with the debate under time allocation on these two bills.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Madam Speaker, again my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, the New Democratic caucus leader, is correct. The problem with moving forward with debate on this bill now that these motions have been passed is that by the time – and, absolutely, I think it's the right decision to defer your decision until the proper research can be done and so forth; no question that's the right decision.

But if we go through with the debate tonight on these bills and we finish up, then, of course, any decision that you make will be moot. It will have no application because, essentially, what you're saying is that – what we're debating is whether what's happened in second reading here, with the government using these motions to bring time allocation, by doing that, they breach privilege. Well, of course, that issue becomes completely moot if we move forward and debate those bills and pass them or don't pass them in second reading. By the time you've had a chance to do the appropriate research and so forth and bring in a ruling, whether that's tomorrow or the next day, the decision doesn't matter. It doesn't apply to these bills anymore, so it is moot.

I mean, the research staff are phenomenal. It usually just takes a morning to research these things and help, you know, the Speaker's office to have a decision. I don't think it's ever gone more than a day or two at the most, just a day usually. I would suggest that debate on these bills should be adjourned until tomorrow, until we can hear from the chair on your decision. I think that's consistent, frankly, just with good old-fashioned common sense, but it also doesn't make sense to purposefully make moot a decision of the Speaker that has not yet been given.

So I hope you'll find this point of order.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I believe you have spoken very wisely and thoughtfully here in understanding the importance of this bill and what it means to the future of labour rights in this province and how it affects what could be a point of privilege to members of this House given the way it was brought in. I, too, will echo the comments of speakers before. Without you taking time to deliberate on this, to check into what has transpired, and to look at it in a whole host of different fashions and facets that have arisen out of this, if we move forward on this, as members have said, the decision will have been made already. We will go on debating this bill, we will not understand whether a point of privilege has in fact occurred, and the decision will be made after the fact.

So I would implore you to find a way – and perhaps maybe even the Government House Leader, recognizing the significance of this and the significance of the Speaker's ruling, may wish to get up and simply adjourn the House until such time as you've had an opportunity to rule, given that you have stated that this is clearly an important bill that has important implications on the future of labour rights in this province. I would encourage you to adjourn the debate until you can render a decision. I'd actually encourage the hon. House leader to do the right thing and adjourn tonight to be able to allow you to do your work with fullness and with the ability of research staff to look into this issue.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, of course, there is no point of order. There was not even any citation given because, of course, there's nothing to cite with respect to this particular purported point of order that the hon. member is raising. No citation was given. There is no provision for the Speaker to unilaterally adjourn debate. That belongs to the House.

The motion has been passed in accordance with the standing orders. The question of privilege has been raised, but even on that, Madam Speaker, the argument has been made that that's been raised on a timely basis. But, in fact, the question of the point of privilege would really be as to whether Standing Order 21 is effective, and, of course, it's been used many times in this House over the last 16 years or so. If there was a point of privilege with respect to whether time allocation was appropriate, it ought to have been raised the first time it was used, not the last time it was used.

The fact of the matter, Madam Speaker, is that there will be three stages to this bill, as there are for every bill, and Committee of the Whole. The first stage was on Wednesday last. Bill 45 was introduced on Thursday. Bill 46 has been introduced tonight. Time allocation motions have been passed by the House to allow debate to proceed tonight. There will be another day for debate in Committee of the Whole and another day for debate in third reading. Members will have the opportunity to deal with it, and if your ruling should come back to suggest that there's some problem with the utilization of time allocation motions, that certainly can be implemented in time on Committee of the Whole and third reading, and no members' privileges will have been abused.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

This is a very serious matter referring back to the point of privilege. I had hoped to take some time to review and research, as we normally do in cases that are as serious as this. However, after listening to the debate from all parties here in the House, it is obvious to me that the rules of the standing orders were followed, and our standing orders are agreed to by everyone in this House. Our standing orders are what we run the orders of this House through, so I would say that far be it from a Speaker to overrule the standing orders that rule this House.

In that case, I would say that there is no point of privilege, and we will proceed.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 45

Public Sector Services Continuation Act

[Adjourned debate November 28: Mr. Saskiw]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill on second reading of Bill 45.

Dr. Brown: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise on Bill 45. I would like to start off by talking about a few of the aspects of the bill that I believe don't go far enough, in fact. Individual sanctions for those who go on illegal strikes, particularly those who defy a court order, are a very serious matter.

9:10

Madam Speaker, the rule of law and the respect for the rule of law is what distinguishes a highly developed society like Canada from other nations which don't have the benefit of a strong legal system. The rule of law is what gives us our fair elections, our democratically elected governments. It's what gives us a working economic system with capital markets, contracts which are enforceable. It's what makes us feel safe on the streets and in our homes. It's what gives us security of the person and of our property. And it's what enables us to live in freedom and to be free from fear. In short, the rule of law is what is necessary to our civilization.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, regrettably, the veneer of civilization is sometimes thin, and sometimes the rule of law and the respect for law breaks down. Sometimes the tyranny of the mob prevails. It overshadows the capacity of the police force to contain it. An example of the breakdown of the rule of law were those riots that we had in Vancouver during the 1994 and 2011 Stanley Cups. In the 2011 riot there were 140 injured, including nine police. One person was injured critically, and four people were stabbed. Windows were smashed, and stores were looted. The mob overwhelmed the police force's capacity to control the situation without doing serious harm to the public.

Now, what happens when the very public servants who are sworn to uphold the law and protect the law provoke the unrest and the civil disobedience? Mr. Speaker, we saw an example of that when the correctional officers at the Edmonton Remand Centre walked off the job. They did so illegally. What's more, they continued to break the law even after they were ordered back to work by a judge of the superior court. They finally returned to their positions when the sanctions of fines seemed insurmountable. In my view, that illegal action, when it was in defiance of a court order, moved into a different realm. It made it much more serious. I believe that even more than financial sanctions, there ought to be sanctions beyond that; that is, the denial of the right to serve in the public service for a period of time when you defy a court order.

Mr. Speaker, illegal strikes put Albertans at risk. This bill will hold unions and individuals who break the law accountable for their actions. It's also going to ensure that taxpayers are protected from the costs of illegal strikes. I would point out that in the case of the walkout at the Edmonton Remand Centre, it cost the public in excess of $13 million. It was a rampage . . . [Disturbance in the gallery]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! Order in the gallery! You're not part of these proceedings.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have guests in the gallery who are not as familiar with the rules, the protocols, and other procedures that occur in this House and that occur in every other House of the Commonwealth of Nations. Among those rules are that guests are welcome to be in the galleries, but they are not part of our proceedings. Should any further disruptions persist, then, of course, the Sergeant-at-Arms has the duty and the obligation to request certain guests to leave. I believe that is what just happened.

So let us just be reminded that there are rules that govern how this Assembly runs. They are no different than the rules that govern all of the other 50-plus Commonwealth countries, and they should be abided to by all members as well as by people in our gallery, who are welcome to stay as our guests provided that everyone observes the rules that I've just enunciated.

That having been said, hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, I'd invite you to continue, please.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One senior labour leader, quoted in the Edmonton Journal of November 29, called the bill "unfair, uncalled for and entirely out of proportion." Well, what was unfair, uncalled for, and entirely out of proportion was for the public servants/corrections officers at the Edmonton Remand Centre to irresponsibly walk out and let the inmates of the facility go on a riot and a rampage and to destroy the equipment and the furniture that cost the taxpayers hundreds of thousands of dollars. That was irresponsible.

The strike by the corrections officers meant over 850 RCMP officers had to be pulled from communities to ensure that our prisons remained secure, costing millions of dollars, as I said, in excess of $13 million in total. It was taxpayers that were footing the bill for this illegal strike. It crosses the line when public safety is jeopardized and when the taxpayers of Alberta have to foot the bill to the tune of millions of dollars for breaking the laws of the land.

When I first heard about the wildcat strike by correctional officers, the first thing I asked was: "What's it all about? What do they want to go on strike for?" To this day, Mr. Speaker, I've yet to hear any clear justification as to why they walked out on strike. The safety audits were completed. Mechanisms were in place to deal with . . . [Disturbance in the gallery]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! Order! Remove that man.

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us be reminded that this is the House of free speech. We may not like what we hear. [interjections]

Those of you who are guests in the gallery are welcome to stay, but if I hear one more disruption, I will ask the Sergeant to empty the galleries, and you will be escorted out. Let me make that abundantly clear. We are not here to make a mockery of this institution, and I don't think you are as well. So let us please understand that clearly, or we will recess, and we will empty the galleries. The choice is yours, dear guests.

Now, we have a member on the floor who has been recognized and is speaking. Hon. member, would you kindly continue, with the full respect of everyone who is here.

Dr. Brown: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, the safety audits were complete and the mechanisms were in place to deal with any safety concerns. I know the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General takes the safety of his staff very seriously, and he ensured that the opening of the new remand centre had state-of-the-art security and safety.

A correctional worker with 24 years of experience told the Edmonton Sun back in March that she has "worked in a variety of prison situations" and said that she "prefers the direct supervision approach." She said, "I truly feel a lot safer" and added that she feels like she is contributing more to the rehabilitation of inmates.

I go back to the rationale of the wildcat strike. I continue to be mystified as to why the union would jeopardize the safety of workers and inmates for an unknown cause and cause millions of dollars in damage to the public.

But of even more concern, Mr. Speaker, is what occurred in the prisons when this wildcat strike was going on. When we think of prisons, we often think just of prisoners and jail guards. In reality, there are a lot of different kinds of workers that are dedicated to providing safety and rehabilitation of inmates. I was very concerned to hear stories about health care workers, who work very hard at providing health services to inmates, who were intimidated and scared to cross the picket line, both for personal safety reasons and for later repercussions, bullying and intimidation that they feared they may face from their union. These staff were anxious and concerned with the health issues of inmates the night the centre was left unmanned as at times there was no one monitoring them and their health.

There were also concerns that the staff who gratefully filled in for the workers on strike were unaware of the centre's routines as they related to medication rounds. Mr. Speaker, that clearly crossed the line as it puts the health of inmates at a very significant risk.

Also at risk was the safety of those who held their post. I heard stories of how, when the RCMP were sent in to provide security at the remand centre, they were in disbelief upon their arrival that most union staff had abandoned their posts before they were relieved. This posed significant risk to not only the public but to other inmates and to those who remained at their posts. This could have led to very serious criminal charges should one of the inmates or correctional staff have suffered a serious injury. The situation would have been made worse by the wait for medical assistance to intervene.

Mr. Speaker, by updating the tools in this legislation to prevent illegal strikes, we hope that we can prevent situations like this being repeated, where, first of all, there was no clear reason for the illegal strike; secondly, where as a result of the strike both inmates and correctional workers were put at significant risk; and thirdly, where Alberta taxpayers are on the hook for millions of dollars in damages and in overtime and support staff wages.

Mr. Speaker, this bill ensures the stability of vital public-sector services that keep our communities healthy and safe. I ask all members to stand in support of this important piece of legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available for the next five minutes. Does anyone wish to speak under this?

If not, we'll go on to the next hon. member. Are you under 29(2)(a), sir? Okay. Calgary-Mountain View under 29(2)(a).

Dr. Swann: I just wanted to ask the hon. member if there is any circumstance under which it's conceivable that an illegal strike would be justified in our democratic society. Is there any condition under which an illegal strike would be justified?

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, do you wish to respond?

Dr. Brown: No, I don't.

The Speaker: Are there any others?

Mr. Anderson: Well, I think there are a lot of folks that don't think we should have illegal strikes, but do you really think that our public-sector service here and their actions when they're on a picket line are somehow equivalent to the riots in Vancouver, with bricks going through buildings and mace? How on earth is that the same? That's not what our public-sector workers do.

Dr. Brown: Well, I would answer the hon. member by saying that, in my view, it's even worse. In the case of a bunch of civilians going on a mayhem after a hockey game and smashing windows and looting and rioting and causing injuries – it's a little bit different where you are a public servant. You're there to serve the public of Alberta. You have an obligation to uphold the law. You have an obligation to abide by the terms of your contract. Even more importantly and ultimately, you have an obligation, when a judge of a superior court orders you to go back to work, to get into your place to protect the public safety. To me, that's a quantum leap above a civil riot in Vancouver. It's not equivalent; it's a heck of a lot worse, in my view.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to address the hon. member's comments. I was there at the wildcat strike. I talked to the workers, and I talked to the health care workers that looked after many of those folks that are in the prison in remand. The policies and procedures were not in place. The staff were considerate of the safety of the inmates as well as of the workers' safety. That was the basis upon which the wildcat strike happened.

To the misinformed member, to the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill: you know, I've always been told it takes two hands to clap. The question: do you believe that workers have a right, when they feel that their lives, their safety is in danger, that the safety of the people they are hired to protect is in danger, a moral and legal duty and obligation to stand up when their employer refuses to listen to them, to stand up and make their voice heard? That is exactly what happened, hon. member. I ask you to stand up and answer that question.

Dr. Brown: My response to that is that there are proper legal channels to go through. When you've got a complaint, when you've got an issue, you raise it through the proper channels. What you do not do is that you don't leave your post, endanger public safety, endanger the inmates, cause mayhem and riots and damage to public property. There is a way to do it legally, and there is a way to do it illegally, and this was done illegally.

That's why I'm in support of this bill. I think the bill toughens up the sanctions, and rightfully so, when those illegal strikes are made, as I said, particularly when it's in defiance of a court order. Without the rule of law, we don't have civilization, and we don't have a civilized society.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. We have about a minute left.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the hon. member. Is it the opinion of the hon. member that the 1995 laundry workers' strike, that lasted seven days, was a menace to society and was life threatening and somehow detracted and was worth, today, a million dollars a day plus $250,000 in fines? Is that what you're saying, that these laundry workers would be such a threat to the safety and well-being of the public? Goodness, maybe dirty underwear is that much of a threat. I'm not sure.

The Speaker: Hon. member, do you wish to respond?
Anyone else under 29(2)(a)?

Let's go on to the next main speaker, the leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I want to say first of all that I thought that the speech of the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill was provocative and offensive. I want to say to my friends in the gallery that I would very much appreciate having a bit of an audience here for as long as we can. I understand emotions are running high, but I hate speaking in the middle of the night to an empty House, so I'd like you to stay, and I implore you to do what's necessary for that.

The case that the hon. member talked about: guards raised at a number of consultation meetings for months and months concerns with the design of the facility, and they were ignored. When they actually were in the facility, they found that there were, in fact, glass barriers that were not shatter-proof, that didn't protect them. They raised that, and they were disciplined for doing so. That gave rise to the type of mood within the facility.

Since that time, the concerns have been buried, swept under the rug, and we've had since that time three suicides in that facility and just very recently a hostage-taking. When the government and its officials ignore the legitimate demands of working people, who actually know best what they're dealing with because they are there every day, then that's the kind of situation that they set up.

I also want to say with respect to that particular event that, in fact, the existing structure of fines was able to bring an end to that particular strike within a matter of just a very few days. I reject the hon. member's characterization of what went on during the course of that walkout as a riot and so on. It's just not so.

Mr. Speaker, I disagree with the government on many matters of policy. I've spent over a decade in this House as a member and as the leader of the New Democrat opposition. During that time I've taken every opportunity to present a better vision for Alberta's families, a vision based on fairness, social justice, and greater opportunities for all Albertans based on our shared prosperity. But even though I disagree with the government on many issues, even though I think that better choices should be made to help Alberta's families, even though I've spent my political life defending the public interest, minorities, and those who have no voice, in spite of all that, I still expect the government, regardless of which party is in power and regardless of our policy disagreements, to adhere to the rule of law. I think all members expect the same. I think Albertans deserve that.

Mr. Speaker, it is the first duty of a government to defend and protect the rights of its citizens. It is the duty of the government, no matter how it interprets its mandate, to ensure that the legislation it introduces for debate in this Assembly is in accordance with the fundamental freedoms enshrined in our Constitution. In short, it is a duty of the government to create laws that also uphold the existing laws of this province and country.

9:30

Mr. Speaker, I disagree profoundly with the government on Bill 45. It is in my view and in the view of the New Democrat opposition an unnecessary and heavy-handed piece of legislation that goes far too far. It is a bill that I will oppose in this Assembly and outside this Assembly, and I urge all Albertans to do the same.

Bill 45 makes it illegal for a public-sector worker to do anything that might be perceived as threatening to strike. Section 4 states that "no employee . . . shall cause or consent to a strike." "No employee . . . shall engage in . . . any conduct that" amounts to "a strike threat," which is a very vague concept that this government has just invented out of thin air. Under this bill no person, no Albertan, that is, shall counsel anyone to engage in any conduct that could be perceived as a strike threat. I say perceived, Mr. Speaker, because that's how strike threat is defined in Bill 45. They've invented a definition. A strike threat is, according to this minister's bill, "an act or threat to act that could reasonably be perceived as preparation for an employees' strike." It's entirely unreasonable for a government to ban any threats to act in any way that could be perceived as indicating or counselling support for an illegal strike.

What are the penalties, then, that are included in this Orwellian piece of legislation? A union that does anything or, again, threatens to do anything that could be perceived as a strike threat could be fined outrageous amounts. In the event of a strike a union like AUPE could be forced to pay over 2 and a half million dollars a day. They would be forced to pay $1 million each day – each day – into a liability fund to cover the government's expenses. They would be fined an additional $250,000 and $50 for every member of the bargaining unit every day. It's simply over the top, Mr. Speaker. It's entirely unreasonable.

I've looked at the legislation in other provinces. The highest comparable fine on the books is in B.C., where the teachers' union could be fined up to $1.3 million a day, but that legislation, Mr. Speaker, was never even proclaimed. In fact, it's being challenged in the B.C. Supreme Court on the grounds that it is unconstitutional. In fact, the highest fine a union could face would be in Saskatchewan, where a penalty is $50,000 plus $10,000 a day for each day that the strike takes place. In Nova Scotia a union can be fined $300 a day. Clearly, other provinces don't share this PC government's view that public workers are a dangerous threat.

But here's the issue, Mr. Speaker. This bill isn't just about unions and gargantuan fines; it's actually a much bigger issue that threatens the rights of all Albertans. Under section 18 any Albertan, not just an employee or a union official, simply any Albertan who consents to a strike by public-sector workers, any Albertan who indicates their opposition to the suspension of dues or these outrageous fines, any Albertan who makes any statement in solidarity with the people who work for our province and deliver public services would be fined up to $500 a day. That is unbelievable. It is out of line and cannot be accepted by this Assembly.

It's precisely these kinds of provisions that undermine the credibility and legitimacy of this minister and this government. The minister has stood in this House and said with a straight face that this bill is fair. He told us that he thinks it's an effective deterrent and that this legislation is needed to show that there are consequences for breaking the law. In fact, he stated last Thursday that this bill "shows government's belief in the importance of the rule of law." Far from it, Mr. Speaker. The bill does nothing of the sort. It is the furthest thing from fair, and under no circumstances can a government respect the rule of law by introducing legislation that undermines the very rights established by the rule of law. That kind of logic is no logic at all. But somehow this PC government thinks tomorrow is yesterday, black is white, and wrong is right.

Contrary to the minister's statements, this bill is an assault on two of the fundamental freedoms that Albertans hold dear. It's an attack on Albertans' freedom of speech and freedom of association as enshrined in sections 2(b) and 2(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Because it contradicts these Charter guarantees, if it is approved, then this bill will be challenged very quickly in the courts. I am very confident that it will be overturned because it is a clear violation of Charter rights, fundamental law in Canada. Should the government be spending millions of dollars to wage a legal battle they cannot win? That would be imprudent, Mr. Speaker. It would be much more reasonable and sensible from a legal perspective, from a political perspective, from a fiscal perspective, and just from a humane perspective for the members of this Assembly to do their job and defeat this bill before it ever becomes law.

Let me be clear, Mr. Speaker. This bill is not simply an attack on organized labour. It is not simply an infringement on the rights of workers and their representatives. It is instead an attack on the rights enjoyed and expected by every Albertan. In fact, bills 45 and 46 are two variations on one theme. Neither are about unions or wages. They're about a government determined to intimidate 3 million working Albertans.

The government and some of its most senior members were deeply embarrassed when correctional employees went on strike to demand safe working conditions earlier this year. Some of the members of the cabinet felt that their authority was challenged, and certain ministers had their wings clipped. This bill is their act of retribution, Mr. Speaker. The cabinet ministers who were most embarrassed by the actions of public employees earlier this year have now abandoned the guiding principles of reason and natural justice and fairness. They have crafted a bill that is dripping with testosterone, Mr. Speaker. This bill is the product of their own insecurity.

Members should open up this bill. Flip to page 4 and page 6 and page 24, and you will find in these pages a government prepared to force its employees to work even when they're not safe. You will see a government that does not respect the fundamental rights of the people of this province. You will find a government that is out of control.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans have the right to freedom of speech. They have the right to freedom of association. They have the right to go to work in the morning and come home safely to their families at the end of the day. They also have the right to stand up for those rights and for their government to do the same. But this bill shows that this government cannot be trusted to defend those Albertans' rights and Albertans' safety. When unsafe working conditions result in a worker's death, the maximum penalty levied against the company is half a million dollars. The largest fine for workers' deaths and injuries in this province's history was 1 and a half million dollars against Sinopec earlier this year in the case of two workers who were killed, another five who were injured.

When unsafe environmental practices result in charges against a corporation, the fines are often in the mere thousands of dollars. The single largest fine was levied against Syncrude, which was charged $3 million in the infamous case of ducks being killed in the tailings ponds. However, the median value of environmental fines in Alberta is just four and a half thousand dollars. Half of all fines for environmental crimes in this province are less than 4 and a half thousand dollars. But under this draconian bill a public-sector union that goes on strike or just threatens to go on strike will be charged millions of dollars per day. It's a greater crime in the eyes of this government for workers to stand up for their right to work in safety than is the death of a worker due to a company's negligent and unsafe working conditions. Mr. Speaker, that is just unacceptable.

I will ask today and I will ask tomorrow and I will ask of this government at every opportunity: why are you more concerned with penalizing workers who stand up for their rights than you are with punishing unsafe working conditions? You can answer that question now or you can answer it during the next election, but either way you will be held accountable for the decision to enact this unnecessary and unprecedented piece of legislation. Even though the government has invoked closure and will limit public debate of this bill, we will do what we can as New Democrats to slow this bill down and to defeat it. At every stage we will ask for recorded votes so that Albertans can see which members stand up for the rights of Albertans and which members silently allow this legislation to be approved.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill. We are determined that this bill should be defeated and, if not, then overturned by the courts or by public opinion, and I am prepared to resist this bill in order to defend the rights of all Albertans to freedom of speech and freedom of association. I will not be bound by the provisions of this bill if it is passed into law.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Standing Order 29(2)(a) is now available.

Mr. Anderson: First of all, I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood for that passionate speech. Obviously, we have a few policy differences between our parties in a couple of areas, but his passion and what he believes in: he clearly wears that on his sleeve. We need more representatives and politicians like that in this Legislature.

My question is a simple one. My biggest concern with parts of Bill 45 is particularly the issue dealing with freedom of speech, freedom of conscience, freedom of assembly. I'm worried about how this will be applied, specifically, you know, if there was somebody that was a member of AUPE, for example, and they were to, say, phone into a talk show or something like that and express outrage. They weren't in the union leadership, but they were just saying: "This is ridiculous. We should strike." If they said something like that to a call-in show or something, under this law it seems to say that they could be fined, that they could be subject to a very grievous fine for that, that that would constitute a threat.

Is that how you see this reading? What limitations is this putting on the free speech of Albertans regardless of whether they're a member of the union or not?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. Member for Airdrie for that question.

Yes, I do think that the bill gives very broad powers and not well-defined criteria for charging anyone. It is very open ended and would depend almost entirely on the discretion of the government which individuals might be charged for which types of comments. But any comment that might indicate that the only way out for union members in this province given this legislation, their loss of collective bargaining rights, their loss of the right to strike many years ago, and now their loss of rights to binding arbitration, that their only recourse might be to resort to an illegal strike or civil disobedience could result in an individual member of this community, whether or not they're a member of that union, being charged and subject to a fine of up to $500 a day.

The question is whether or not we can or we should trust this government to exercise its authority in a judicious way. Given the vindictive streak that the government has when anyone does dare to stand up to them as evidenced by these two bills, I simply don't believe that we can trust this government at all to exercise restraint in the application of this legislation. In fact, I shudder to think of the impact on people's rights to organize, their freedom of association, and their freedom of speech. I suspect that this bill will eventually be overturned in the Supreme Court, but that is a period of several years before we get through all the stages potentially to the Supreme Court of Canada. In the meantime you've given people who have shown themselves to be mean spirited, vindictive, and just plain nasty the authority to fine people for exercising their freedom of speech.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I too want to congratulate the hon. leader of the third party for his eloquent expression of what many Albertans are now learning.

My question is simple. Why do you think the Minister of Human Services, the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, is in such a hurry to get through this bill? What could be the motive for trying to rush this important bill through?

Mr. Mason: Thank you, hon. member. Just a minor point of correction: we are not the third party; you are. We are the fourth party, unfortunately.

Dr. Swann: You used to be the third party.

Mr. Mason: We used to be the third party, and then look what happened over there.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, it's far from me to fathom the mind of the hon. minister, someone I thought I knew. I can't understand for the life of me. If they do understand the legal and labour implications of this, they certainly don't understand the political implications.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Standing Order 29(2)(a) time has expired.

We move on to the next main speaker to the bill, and that is the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for this opportunity to speak to this very important legislation. I hope that as the night carries on, we will be able to debate the subject matter of this bill and the content of this bill without provocative language and waging insults at each other because at the end of the day, as you know very well, every member in this House has been elected to this House to carry out their duties as best as they possibly can. I without a doubt am certain of the fact that all members in this House try to serve their constituents in the spirit in which they have been elected and that there is no need to be waging personal insults at each other.

But let's get to the point, Mr. Speaker. As you know, in this province there is legislation in place that is allowing for legal strikes. We have seen some of those in the history of this province, where a strike meets the legal obligations and requirements to be so defined. Strikes have taken place, and many of them have lasted for prolonged periods of time. There also is a process on how to resolve legal strikes. All parties, both from the labour side and the employer side, are familiar with the rules. Those rules are very well tested by both sides, by lockouts on the side of employers, strikes on the side of the unions, and there is a process to resolve that. I don't think there is any question that in this province there is ample opportunity when a situation arises and it's meritorious and it meets the legal requirements for a legal strike to occur.

Many of these decisions, Mr. Speaker, are actually made by the LRB, the Labour Relations Board. I think those who would be objective from both sides, be it labour or employers, would agree that overall the LRB over a number of years has done pretty exemplary work. They represent both sides. They have shown their ability to be very objective and make decisions that are based on jurisprudence and that are based on the law. That is why in this province we have actually enjoyed relative labour peace. We have little eruptions here and there, but we haven't had major disruptions where the private-sector labour unions are involved or in the public sector, and we all benefit as a result of that.

I have never had the opportunity, but I imagine, Mr. Speaker, that being on strike is not a pleasant experience. My wife, actually, has been on one and tells me that it isn't a pleasant experience. But there are opportunities when it arises, and you simply participate in that action. I'm sure that for employers participating in lockouts isn't a good experience either, but, most importantly, particularly in the area of public service, those who rely on services being delivered by our civil servants, who dispense some of the most important programs for Albertans, usually draw the short end of the stick because they simply cannot obtain the services that they so deserve to receive.

Why are we here today, Mr. Speaker? Well, we're not dealing here with legal strikes, with strikes that meet the legal criteria, that are acknowledged by the LRB to be legal. What we're doing is that we're dealing with those strikes that have been found by the Labour Relations Board not to be legal. We are dealing here with strikes that have been found by courts, by the judiciary, to not have met the requirements. They are simply illegal walkouts.

What this legislation does, Mr. Speaker, is that it updates the fines that are outlined in the legislation that is now – and maybe many of those in the galleries wouldn't realize – over 20 years old. This legislation that we are now updating is over 20 years old. That reminds me of Austin Powers, when he was trying to hold the world ransom for $1 million. Well, the same thing over here. Inflation has set in, and fines in dollar values . . . [interjection]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, we heard an impassioned speech from your leader asking people in the gallery, imploring them to please do whatever was necessary in order for them to remain. I wonder if your leader would mind mentioning a similar speech to you at this time so that we could not have any further interjections.

Let us yield the floor to the hon. Deputy Premier that he might continue.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you. I didn't know that Austin Powers would get him that excited, but that's just fine.

Anyhow, Mr. Speaker, these fines have not been updated for over 20 years right now. How do we know that they're not effective anymore? Well, I can tell you that we don't have to go very far back in our memory. One of the members in the House made a reference to the most recent illegal strike by correctional officers, and actually the leader of the union came out and said: these fines are nothing; I can pay them standing on my head.

Well, Mr. Speaker, as we know, legislation is in place and fines are in place not only to penalize someone for engaging in activities that are illegal but also to serve as a deterrent from those activities. That's why fines, all fines from speeding tickets to parking tickets, are updated every so often to be reflective of the value of the dollar and to make sure that they still serve as a deterrent.

Obviously, in the last case they did not serve as a deterrent, when the leader of the union looks at the courts, laughs at the courts, and says, Mr. Speaker, "I can stand on my head paying those fines" because that's how low they are. Indeed, even many sections of the union who don't have a legal ability to strike have racked up funds for strikes that by far exceed any fine that is currently on the books.

So it is not unusual for any fine – and, as you know, Mr. Speaker, we do update all kinds of legislation that has monetary penalties built into it, actually, more frequently than every 20 years. This is the first time that we have done this in 20 years.

Mr. Speaker, what are we talking about over here? We are talking about instances where the LRB and the courts have actually decided that this particular strike is illegal. We have seen instances where process servers on behalf of the courts who were trying to serve orders upon leadership were simply disregarded and were not in a position to serve properly those who were directed to be served by the courts. We have seen situations where the judiciary was simply disregarded.

As another member in this House has indicated, we may disagree on issues, and that's fine. That's what democracy is all about. But at the end of the day, much like with you, Mr. Speaker, it doesn't matter how much you don't like the ruling. The fact is that you have to respect the judiciary. In this House you have to respect the Speaker. I often disagree with your rulings, Mr. Speaker, but I have to live by them. I'm in this House. One may disagree with the judge's rulings, but at the end of the day we have to live up to those particular rulings, and we saw that to not be the case. We see that when the judiciary is being ridiculed, when fines are being ridiculed, it is the onus of this House and of government to bring rules in place that no longer are subjected to ridicule and make sure that our judiciary is held up in the highest esteem because if it isn't, who is going to make the rulings, and who is going to make binding decisions both on us and on those who choose to engage in what is perceived to be illegal activities?

Mr. Speaker, what is also important – and I will not be referring only to the last example of illegal strikes – is that we also have a very fundamental responsibility of protecting the safety and the well-being of those who are being served by public servants. The last example has shown that not only co-workers, particularly in the medical field nurses, were left at peril and were actually concerned for their well-being, but definitely inmates in this case were left to their own devices. Even though maybe in society not many may feel sympathetic about inmates, the fact is that these are inmates of provincial institutions, and we have a fiduciary duty to make sure that they are safe in those institutions and serve out their sentences having access to water, toilets, and the list goes on and on. We know for a fact, Mr. Speaker, that in that case that wasn't the case.

But if we were to further generalize this – because this is not only relevant to that one particular instance, but this now updated act is going to serve us perhaps for another 20 years into the future – we know that we have many vulnerable Albertans that rely on government-provided services, and they are very well served by our public service. These individuals work with and for the government of Alberta and provide phenomenal service to Albertans out there, but those Albertans rely on that service. Many of them are vulnerable, and they simply could not sustain themselves if those services were not offered to them.

Well, Mr. Speaker, when you have an illegal strike, that's when the rule collapses. That's when we have vulnerable Albertans without the means of sustaining themselves, without being able to avail themselves with the benefits that they have, the supports that they need, and whatever the case may be. It is incumbent on us as government to make sure that we put any and all measures into place to minimize that occurrence.

You know, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood: it is unfortunate to hear a lawmaker make a statement saying: even if this law passes, I will not respect this law. I don't think we have that option, Mr. Speaker. We don't have that option not to respect the laws that we make in this country. But it is unfortunate even for other reasons. We know as legislators in this building that there are hundreds of thousands of Albertans out there who rely on the benefits provided by this government, and even if we choose to fundamentally disagree with a certain law, we have the obligation not only to democracy in this House but to those Albertans who rely on those benefits to make sure that we put rules in place, that they can rest assured and go asleep knowing that there is some order in place, that there are some laws in place, that there are some procedures in place that will protect them, that in the event that there was a labour dispute between the employer and employee, their well-being is taken care of and they will receive the benefits that they so badly depend on.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps less important, because money is never as important as the well-being and subsistence of our beneficiaries, is the cost. Being that we recently had an illegal strike, we saw how expensive that can be. Not only does it result – not always, but from time to time – in material damage, in actual damage to facilities, to structures and others but in costs the taxpayers of Alberta have to bear to provide supplemental workers to deliver services never just as well as the professionals who are our members of public service could deliver.

In this last case, yes, Mr. Speaker. Did we manage to secure the inmates? Yes, we did. Did we manage to keep the nurses safe? Yes, we did. But at what cost? Some $13 million was spent to bring in the RCMP, who, nota bene, were not doing the work that they are supposed to be doing on the streets and in their communities, who are not trained to do this kind of work, and who, as a result, have left inmates and co-workers in not as secure an environment as it would have been if professionals were in place. But that cost was borne by Alberta taxpayers, and in this case it was $13 million. We know that this was just a small local of a very large union. If other larger locals were to engage in an illegal strike, the costs would have been much more monumental, but not only the monetary costs. The real cost, the human costs, would have been much more monumental.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that tonight the rhetoric will be flying back and forth. I know there will be agitation, but the fact is that this is not about you against us. This is the fact that we have a process in place. We have a process that allows for legal strikes. There is the LRB, that makes those decisions. There will be comments that are not true. [interjection]

The Speaker: Why the interruption, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood? Nobody interrupted you. I'm sure everybody didn't agree with what you were saying, and you may not agree with what the Deputy Premier is saying, but let's be respectful of each other. We're trying to set an example for others here at the same time.

Deputy Premier, please continue.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the act is very clear on what constitutes an illegal strike. Now, I know the Member for Edmonton-Centre yesterday or a few days ago said: if she walks with something that looks like a picket sign, will she get arrested? Well, no. If a worker says to a worker, "we should go on strike," will you be arrested? No, you won't because the act clearly says – and I would encourage everyone to open up the act – that the LRB has to decide whether, indeed, somebody was engaged in enticing an illegal strike. Was that person in the position of authority to be able to entice an illegal strike, and at the end of the day did it constitute an illegal strike?

There are many legal tests and thresholds that have to be met in order for a strike to be considered to be an illegal strike. Workers being upset or p'd off with their employer and saying, "We should walk, we should get out of here; they're not listening to us": that's not an illegal strike. That's not enticing an illegal strike. Having a couple of pickets and coming with pickets to work; that's not an illegal strike. The LRB makes those decisions like they did last time. That process, Mr. Speaker, has not changed. I know that for purposes of inflaming the audience those comments will be made.

But the act is very simple. What the act really does is that it updates the monetary fines that will be placed on the unions so that in the future, if a union chooses to engage in an illegal strike, they will know what the repercussions are, what the financial repercussions are, they will know what the peril to the public is, and, again, that they don't pay today's fines with 20-year-old dollars.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. I have Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre first, followed by the leader of the New Democrat opposition, and then, perhaps, by Edmonton-Strathcona if time permits.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question for the hon. member is quite simply this. This bill is designed to prevent or to discourage illegal strikes. I understand that. To the hon. member: given the fact that this government just passed last week the Settlement of International Investment Disputes Act, which gave this government access to arbitration, why would we remove the one tool that would help us avoid an illegal strike by eliminating arbitration? Why wouldn't we use that tool to help us keep and maintain order when there was a dispute we could settle?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, this member is talking about the wrong bill. We're not debating that bill right now, but that's fine. That's fine. It's not the end of the world.

Mr. Anglin: You don't see the parallels? You don't see the hypocrisy?

The Speaker: Hon. member, you've asked your question. Let the Deputy Premier respond.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the fines have actually been updated. One would ask: "Why did government choose these particular numbers? Why are the fines so many dollars and not less or not more?" Well, it's because we actually have been given judicial guidance on what the fines should be. In the very recent strike of two months ago, the strike that was rendered to be illegal, it was a judge that made a decision on what fines the union will pay if they continue to engage in an illegal strike. Having the most recent judicial guidelines provided to us, we have now entrenched those particular fines as set out by the courts into legislation. So they're not numbers drawn from a hat. They're actually numbers that courts were imposing on the union for their most recent illegal strike, and they're not that extraordinary.

As I said earlier, it is an update. All monetary fines in all legislation that carries fines are updated from time to time. This, Mr. Speaker, is clearly a timely matter because we have seen very recently that unless we do that, we will have to resort to courts, who will fine these fines anyhow, because courts have already shown us how much they will fine. It also has shown us what happens if you don't update them. You have leaders telling you that they can pay them standing on their head.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the interests of maintaining harmony within the NDP caucus, I will defer to my colleague, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, please proceed.

Ms Notley: Thank you. Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I will say that it's really hard to sit and listen to this and have no opportunity to get up and speak, being the critic for this area, being the labour critic, and not getting an opportunity to speak and not being sure that I will actually get an opportunity tonight, Mr. Speaker, so I'm very pleased that my colleague allowed me to at least get up and speak once.

To the minister. The minister was suggesting to us that we were being somewhat liberal, shall we say, with our interpretations of what might amount to a strike threat, so I'm just curious whether the minister has actually read the legislation. I know he's no longer the minister in charge of that, but he's theoretically the minister who's partially in charge of everything and really in charge of nothing at the same time. Nonetheless, you know, your act there, Bill 45, redefines strike in a way that it has never been defined in this province. I'm not sure if you're aware of that. It broadens the scope of what strike means in a way that has never been done legislatively in this province. It also puts into the act the concept of the strike threat, which has never been done in this province, nor has it been put statutorily in any other piece of legislation. So, according to the briefing – but either way, the strike issue has been broadened, and therefore a strike threat would also be broadened.

So how in heaven's name can you possibly tell anybody what the LRB will or won't say is or is not a strike threat given that you – maybe not you but the people who wrote this – have very clearly and very intentionally broadened the scope of activities which are prohibited and which would attract these outrageous fines and which will clearly bleed into people exercising their rights of freedom of expression, just generally speaking, you know, in their daily lives? How can you tell them not to worry about it when it's a brand-new piece of legislation and the LRB has never been asked to consider this piece of legislation?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. The time for 29(2)(a) has expired.

We'll move on to our next main speaker, the hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is taking a jackhammer to kill an ant right here. That's what this is. You know, it's just complete legislative overkill on every level. I have a lot of respect for my colleague the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill-Mackay. He's a good man. He's a parliamentarian. But I do disagree with his characterization of civil servants on a strike line, saying that that's in fact worse than people rioting in the streets, throwing bricks through buildings, looting, all that sort of monkey business that we saw in Vancouver after the Stanley Cup finals that one year or wherever around the world. That's just unfair, in my view, to the folks that serve our province every day and sacrifice every day in their jobs to keep us safe and healthy and in order. I just don't think that's appropriate.

I want to also state very clearly that there are already provincial laws in place, of course, prohibiting illegal strikes, as has been discussed, including an expedited court process to end them within a very short period of time, which is why the timing of this bill is so counterproductive for good government, for public sector workers, and for taxpayers. It unnecessarily creates an environment now of suspicion, of bad faith. It creates an environment where it's going to be very difficult for future governments to negotiate in good faith and to win back that trust. That's going to be difficult. Some might say that we would need a new government in order to do that.

Mrs. Towle: Some might say that.

Mr. Anderson: Some might say that.

Mrs. Towle: Most.

Mr. Anderson: Most might say that. That's right.

It really is not correct to say, as the Deputy Premier said, that this bill and Bill 46 can somehow be separated. Yeah, they are separate bills, no doubt about that, but clearly with the way they've been introduced together, they are twin brothers, twin sisters. They go together, and clearly the effect is to make sure that unions, our public-sector workers, have absolutely no recourse. They already couldn't go on strike. That was already dealt with, but now they can't even go to arbitration. So the two actually are together. They may as well have been one bill.

It is really poisoning the waters of labour relations in this province unnecessarily. Long term that is actually going to not help the taxpayer; that's going to hurt the taxpayer, in my view, long term. Like I say, when the waters are poisoned, that causes a lot of long-term problems. Hopefully, a new government in 2016 can help to start to undo that poisoning and get things going in a constructive manner again.

I actually agree that the bill that Peter Lougheed brought in 35 years ago – we talked about that in the discussion on Bill 46. When Peter Lougheed said: "Look. We can't have our essential services on strike because, frankly, the province falls apart when that happens, for the most part. They give us such critical services; it's just so important to have them working and not being on strike." So he said: "Okay. If we're going to do that," as we said earlier, "then we're going to give a quid pro quo and make sure that we give them another tool," which was arbitration. That was the tool that replaced the striking mechanism so that our public-sector workers can constructively and legally have recourse, essentially, from a decision of the government with regard to their wages and benefits and working conditions and so forth. That was the deal that was made.

10:10

That deal has essentially, I would say, laid the foundation for, generally speaking, stable labour peace in this province for 35 years. Again, it was passed just before I was born, Mr. Speaker, so I've never really known labour unrest in this province. There's been the odd strike, the odd wildcat strike here or there but very rarely. It really is rare and very short term. I do understand that because that was 35 years ago, perhaps the penalties should be updated. Let's say for a second that that is a legitimate argument, okay? They need to be updated.

When you update a bill like that, what do you do? You should first consult stakeholders. You should talk to, obviously, taxpayer groups – obviously, those are good folks to talk to – but not just those groups on one side of the issue but also our public-sector employees themselves. Why don't they get a say in this consultation? Why can't they explain to government or be given a chance to explain to government what their feelings are on it? Now, of course, that doesn't mean that government is always going to agree with those folks, but at least they should have their say. If you're going to update the rules and you're going to update the penalties for illegal strikes, okay, good. Thirty-five years is a long time. Perhaps they need updating. But then, as the member for Edmonton – your neighbour.

An Hon. Member: Calder.

Mr. Anderson: Calder. No. The other one. Anyway, the House leader.

An Hon. Member: Strathcona.

Mr. Anderson: Strathcona. That's right. Strathcona. I used to live in Strathcona.

The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona said that this doesn't just update the penalties as the Deputy Premier has said. That's not what this does. This goes way further than that. This essentially creates new terminology. It broadens the definition of what a strike is. It broadens it so broadly, in fact, that it now applies to even, quote, unquote, the threat of strike and not just to union leadership but to just regular Albertans and not just regular public-sector employees and not just your average man or woman making a living, working hard in the public sector, not just those folks but also even Albertans in general. You know, as you read through the bill, it says specifically that "No employee and no officer or representative of a trade union shall engage" – so no employee of a trade union – "in or continue to engage in any conduct that constitutes a strike threat." Okay. What's a strike threat?

An Hon. Member: You just made a strike threat.

Mr. Anderson: Who knows? Maybe I just made a strike threat. Who knows? We don't have jurisprudence here on that issue because we've never had this definition in our Labour Relations Code.

"No person shall counsel a person to contravene subsection (1) or (2); in other words, to threaten a strike. No person shall counsel a person. That's pretty broad. That basically applies to everybody, every conversation in the province at any time unless, I guess, if the person was talking to themselves. Then perhaps that would not apply. So you can talk to yourself. Perhaps you could threaten yourself to go on strike, and that wouldn't be covered under this, but a person talking with another person is covered under this. I don't understand that, Mr. Speaker. I don't understand the need for that.

Now, obviously, I'd say the majority of Albertans – there are a portion of Albertans that think illegal strikes or civil disobedience, as it's sometimes called, is a legitimate thing to do in certain circumstances, as the sheriffs did when they felt that their safety was in jeopardy at the remand centre, so they went on an illegal strike as a show of civil disobedience and so forth. Okay.

Mr. Mason: Solidarity.

Mr. Anderson: Or solidarity, as my friend tells me. Exactly. Anyway, that is what some people believe.

I would say that the majority of Albertans are not in favour of illegal strikes. I think that the majority of Albertans – and I would include myself – don't think that that's the way to go with regard to our front-line workers. There are better ways. However, because of Bill 46, Mr. Speaker, the better way, which was arbitration in front of an independent third party, is now gone or will be gone soon, as soon as it's passed.

With Bill 46, if your intention was to make illegal strikes harder, have you really accomplished that now? If your intention was to cut down on the number of illegal strikes out there that occur every so often, does the combination of Bill 45 and Bill 46 make that happen? No, it doesn't. It will likely lead to more civil disobedience because, sure, you've toughened the rules and so forth, but now you've expanded it in ways that call into question the constitutionality, and on top of it, you took away the safety valve, which was arbitration rights, in Bill 46. Now you've really put yourself in a pickle because the average worker isn't going to be able to go and – there's nothing that they can do, essentially, to protest a decision of the government regarding their wages and benefits and working conditions and so forth.

So your bill is counterproductive when read with Bill 46. You're not going to cause fewer illegal strikes with these two bills. You're actually laying the groundwork for more. Now, you've made it more expensive, no doubt about that. But what if you had just updated the penalties? After a broad consultation and lots of feedback and lots of debate and all that sort of thing, why don't you just update the penalties for illegal strikes, which are already illegal under current legislation? Okay, fine. It's been 35 years. Update the penalties. But then you turn around and you're talking about people's thoughts and talking to their buddies and, you know, calling in on a radio show and saying: good grief, we should go on strike. Oh, that's not allowed now, too? Come on. That is going way over the line.

Although I absolutely do believe that we should not have illegal strikes with regard to our essential services – I think that's not productive – unfortunately, by getting rid of Bill 46, you just made this a bigger danger. Great job, guys. Well thought out. You've just made it worse. Honestly, it's unbelievable.

Obviously, with regard to Bill 46 – and I already talked about that bill – a Wildrose government will in 2016, if elected, immediately repeal Bill 46 and reinstitute arbitration rights. That will be done.

An Hon. Member: This is Bill 45.

Mr. Anderson: I know we're talking about Bill 45. But because the bills are paired together, I want to make it clear that with arbitration rights, those go back in, and they go in after talking with affected stakeholders. That's critical.

On Bill 45 – this will obviously pass as this government has made it clear they're not interested in listening to anybody's feelings on the issue, frankly – we are going to propose amendments as a Wildrose caucus that specifically address the issue of free speech. Public-sector workers and average Albertans should not in any way be brought under this legislation with regard to this strike threat provision that is floating around here. That is, in my view, a violation of free speech rights. It's a violation of freedom of assembly. It's a violation of several rights and freedoms that are in our Constitution, and I disagree fundamentally with that.

So we're going to bring several amendments forward that deal specifically with that. You should be able as a public-sector worker to talk with your friends, to send an e-mail out there saying, "You know what; this stinks; we're going to go on strike; let's hit the picket lines," and not have to be worried about doing something illegal. That is pathetic and wrong. It can't happen.

Now, illegal strikes are obviously already illegal, as we've talked about, and if the union leadership is getting together and getting ready and the organization is going for an illegal strike, well sure, you have fines. You have fines now. That's the point.

Again, Mr. Speaker, this piece of legislation, when coupled with Bill 46, is actually doing the exact opposite of what it was intended to do. You're putting our public-sector workers in a place where they almost have no choices. How do they defend themselves? I would say the best way to defend themselves is at the ballot box in 2016.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. I have Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Ms Notley: Thanks. I have just a quick question for the member about Bill 45 in particular. So we've got the government bringing in an amendment that eliminates arbitration in Bill 46, and we know that the previous law to negate the right to strike was upheld by the Supreme Court of Canada on the assumption that they had the right to arbitration. Now they've removed the right to arbitration, which means that sooner or later I suspect the Supreme Court of Canada is going to say that Bill 46 is illegal.

In Bill 45 they say: while we're waiting to make the courts and police stop the union from striking illegally, we're going to fine the officers of the union $10,000 a day. So do you think it would be a good idea to maybe amend Bill 45 so that we could perhaps fine the members of cabinet or the members of the Conservative Party over there $10,000 a day while this illegal piece of legislation is allowed to carry on until such time as the courts deem it illegal?

Mr. Anderson: This hon. member just keeps coming up with the best and brightest ideas in this House. Fantastic, hon. member. I'm not sure if a piece of legislation fining the PC cabinet is something that will – it will probably have a difficult time passing in this Legislature. I'm not saying it's a no for sure. There may still be a chance, but I doubt it highly.

You raise a very legitimate concern, and that is: is this legislation constitutional? If they had come in and just talked about updating some of the wording and the penalties for illegal striking and so forth, as you say, that type of legislation has been upheld as constitutional – but they didn't do that, like you say – based on the fact that they had legal arbitration to go to.

With these two bills together now, my guess is that when this goes to the Supreme Court, which it probably will, or a court of appeal of some kind, what will happen is they'll say: well, you just took away the rights of arbitration from these folks, so therefore they can't strike illegally. They don't have rights to arbitration. That to me impinges upon their freedom of assembly, I would think, and their right to organize and so forth, which is a protected right under our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I mean, you guys are always the ones that are throwing the fear tactics about tolerance and, "oh, respect the Charter" and all that, and then you go and do this. Really? Well, who's disrespecting the Charter? Look in the mirror.

That's one issue, that I don't think it'll be held constitutional based on those grounds, that they now don't have proper recourse. And then the second issue is this issue of free speech. You can't tell somebody that they will be fined or penalized, an average employee, for sending an e-mail to their buddies saying: "You know what? We need to hit the picket lines because this is just outrageous, what the government is doing to us." Who are we in this Legislature to penalize that? How dare we think we can do that? What kind of society do we think we live in?

I heard the Deputy Premier's remarks about, you know: "Oh, this is just wonderful, what's going on in the Ukraine. People need to be able to protest and protest their government's actions." Dam straight. Absolutely. They sure should. So if that's good for people in the Ukraine, isn't that good for people here in Alberta? I would think so. I would think that the people of Alberta are able to get together and say: "You know what? This is wrong. You can't do this."

Now, if they choose to go on an illegal strike under the definition of what's in the bill, there's a fine. There's a court process. All of that is laid out. But just voicing their concern in the newspapers with editorials or anything like that or calling in to a talk show or doing anything like that to express their outrage on something: that's just basic free speech. We've got to protect that right. All civil societies protect those rights. I don't care if you're left, right, middle, or something in between. Those are fundamental rights that we should be holding dear and should be protecting with everything that we have regardless of how we feel about collective bargaining and union negotiations. We're talking about a fundamental right here, so let's protect that right.

I thank the hon. member for asking the question.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is now consumed.

We'll move on to the next speaker. I have Edmonton-Meadowlark, the leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Liberals oppose Bill 45, and we oppose Bill 46. Bills 45 and 46 are sibling bills. At the end of the day they are unnecessary, they're heavy-handed, and they serve to further erode workers' collective bargaining rights. Beyond that, I feel that they're undemocratic. I feel that these two bills will be the nail in the coffin of these regressive Conservatives over here on this side. I feel that when a government institutes these kinds of laws, they are nearing the end.

These kinds of bills aren't about governing. They're not about serving. They're about ruling, ruling by decree, which by its very virtue is undemocratic. The freedoms, Mr. Speaker, that our forefathers fought for are what these bills aim to erode. In fact, under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, that a Liberal government brought in, everyone has fundamental freedoms. These bills attack the two very fundamental freedoms under section 2(b), "freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication," and also section 2(d), "freedom of association."

Now, I can't for the life of me understand, Mr. Speaker – the Premier is a very intelligent person. She's a lawyer. She spent her life prior to public office defending the freedoms and the rights of others across the world, but right here in this province, where she's elected, she and her government are attacking the rights of the very people they are elected to serve. That's exactly what these bills do. You know, I've always said: who's next? That's what happens when you have 42 years of unchecked power.

I also want to talk about closure. Closure is also a nail in the coffin of democracy. It's been mentioned here, the fact that we have two of the most important bills in our province in our current history moving forward. We're a diverse group of individuals from diverse caucuses in a very diverse province, and we only have a couple of hours to debate these bills.

Mr. Speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Centre has referred to these bills with many words, and one of them is "evil." What allows evil to run rampant is when good people remain silent, and the good Liberals will not remain silent on these bills. We will always come to the defence of those front-line hard-working Albertans who each and every day build this great province.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 45 is complex. It sparks a number of legal questions. I talked about the fundamental freedoms and the violations of sections 2(b) and 2(d). In 1977, when Premier Lougheed outlawed mass public strikes, it's been mentioned that he recognized the right of workers to have a fair say. That's where binding arbitration comes in.

Now, one of the core reasons why this bill, Bill 45, is before us is because of a wildcat strike. It wasn't a strike about wages. It wasn't a strike about money, and we haven't had a strike about wages for a long time in this province because the legislation that we have had has actually worked to avert these kinds of strikes. The wildcat strike was about safety. The good men and women who were in the wildcat strike were at their posts, Mr. Speaker. They were doing their jobs. The government was in a rush to cut a ribbon and get this remand centre open. They had no policies or procedures in place, and they didn't consult the front-line staff, nor the folks that are waiting to get their day in court. In fact, the facility wasn't even fully finished. That's what this wildcat strike was about. I know what it was about. It was a darn cold and windy day, I tell you. I was there. You know, wildcat strikes are illegal, and as an elected official and a lawmaker you have to find out why good people who have dedicated their lives for the service and protection of this great province would commit an illegal act.

Mr. Speaker, that guy over there, the Member – the hon. Member, I should say – for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, the honourable guy over there, referred to these very honourable people, compared them to a bunch of hooligans and thugs, to some rioters in Vancouver. That's just disrespectful.

The wildcat strike was about safety. It was about the safety of the citizens of this province, the safety of the workers, and safety of the inmates. It was about the safety of our province. I said that it takes two hands to clap, Mr. Speaker. The government made the decision to remove these men and women from their posts where they were performing their duties over a couple of days, when they weren't fully prepared, when the management and the government were not fully prepared to open this facility.

I also know a constituent of mine whose son is a big man, about 6 foot 4 and about 230 pounds. She told me in my office that he was dragged into a cell. Thank God he was about 230, 240 pounds; he didn't lose his life. That happened to the son of one of my constituents. I was there. I talked to a nursing friend of mine who I've worked with for many years, whom I trust. The medical files didn't come over. Inmates that were diabetics ended up in a diabetic coma in the hospital, according to what I was told.

Mr. Speaker, you were the Health minister. You understand how important it is for people to have their medical files and those who care for them to have them there so they know what the problem is. These were life-and-death safety issues. That's why these good people went on the wildcat strike. As a legislator who's charged with upholding the law and as a physician who is also charged with upholding public safety I recognized that the decision, the rash decision, made by this government was a threat to public safety, and that's why I supported the reason that they went on the wildcat strike. I supported the fact that both parties need to come together and come to a reasonable compromise as quickly as possible. We're all in it together. Nobody here wants to see strikes. Nobody here wants to see people get hurt, especially the good men and women who work in the institutions.

Mr. Speaker, let's focus on facts and evidence. The facts have warned that the workers were right: glass that could have been broken with a coffee cup; poor coverage of security cameras; repeated occupational safety reports and no action by the government; workers backed into a corner, forced to strike, not only for their own safety but for the safety of the folks that they are charged to guard. It's my understanding this glass has been changed, and camera coverage still lacks.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the government has moved quickly and swiftly. You know, the mechanisms were there to end this strike, and the mechanisms did work. The strike did end, and order was restored. But for the government to come in with a very heavy-handed approach: I believe they have gone way overboard. They have overreacted. I don't know why this government would overreact to such an extent, threatening union leaders if they even talk about a strike, banning employees, banning a blogger. My question – and I asked the Premier earlier today. She didn't even have the courtesy to get up and answer my question. Can you believe the Premier, who brought this draconian legislation, did not have the courtesy to answer the question of an elected member standing before you who actually supported the wildcat strike?

Well, would we be next if we supported these strikes because we actually were trying to protect public safety? Any employees, any bloggers: would people be fined for supporting, writing, tweeting, in any way supporting any wildcat strikes when there's a legitimate reason to have them?

Mr. Speaker, you know, the great thing about this country, the reason many of us or our parents or grandparents or ancestors came to this country: we escaped places of moral decay. We escaped places where dictators and tyrants ruled. We came to this place because of freedoms. We believed you could actually disagree with your government openly and you wouldn't be punished for it. I cannot believe a human rights lawyer is taking these freedoms away right here in Alberta. I just can't understand it.

Mr. Speaker, this government will vote everything through. They've got the majority of the members here. It's unnecessary for them to be so heavy-handed and draconian in many of the decisions that they make.

Now, when it comes to costs, I will say – you know what? – that if you actually look at the underlying cause of the wildcat strike, the government bears a major portion of the responsibility for the cause of the strike, for the costs of the strike. You do, hon. members. Now, when it comes to costs, this bill will not stand up to a legal challenge in the Supreme Court of Canada. What is it going to cost the taxpayer, the average hard-working Albertan? What's it going to cost for the legal challenge to this bill, the years and years of legal challenge, when a few of these good souls up there and out there in Alberta who work hard to build this province have the courage to again one day have a wildcat strike because they know it's in the public interest? What is it going to cost?

I know, Mr. Speaker, there are people – you cannot silence some people. They think they can do it with the law. Some people just will not remain silent when they see injustice and bad things happening out there. I know. My grandfathers lived under tyranny. You know, those folks almost risked the noose. They were arrested. They were imprisoned. Before my father died two years ago, he told me about his grandfather who was arrested, and his best friend was beaten by the authorities. That's exactly what he said. This draconian legislation, these laws will be the nail in their coffin. These are foul, they're evil, and they're senseless. There's no point for us to even be having this discussion and debate in the Legislature on this.

There are lots of stiff penalties already – front-line workers are already paying the penalties – many in this legislation. You have to ask yourself: why are we talking about this? The government says that they're out of money. Well, Mr. Speaker, we're the wealthiest place in the country. Oil is at more than a hundred bucks a barrel. The best employment rates, highest incomes on the planet: this is as good as it gets. My question is: where the heck did the money go? Where the heck did the money go? If you can't balance the books to get world-class public services and pay good, hard-working people a fair wage today, well, when are you going to do it?

Mr. Speaker, it's darn expensive to live in this province. Bills are higher than ever. It costs a lot of money to live here. It's the regular, common, working folk who built this province; their wages haven't kept up with inflation. Their taxes are higher with this flat tax than they were before the flat tax. It was actually a tax increase on regular, middle-class working families. We have a lot of money, but these guys over here have squandered it. They have wasted it, and they've squandered it. We've seen many examples of that squandering of that money: a hundred million dollars in travel and hosting expenses just for executives, not to mention their pay.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Liberals stand against . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is now available.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I appreciate your comments.

My question is to the hon. member. You used the term "wildcat strike" like it lends itself to some legitimacy. These were illegal strikes. Do you endorse members of the public service in whatever role which is an essential service abandoning their posts?

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member obviously wasn't listening over here. Okay? He wasn't listening, and he should do a better job of listening.

The whole reason the good folks up there went on this wildcat strike was because of a threat to public safety. Their genuine concern was a threat to public safety of the people they are charged to guard and their own safety in their work environment because this very same government – this same government – did not have the policies and procedures in place, and the facts have shown that to be true. So, hon. member, I absolutely stand in support of ensuring public safety for any worker in this province. Safety first, my dear friend.

You were or maybe still are a police officer. Hon. member, have you forgotten from whence you came? Have you forgotten that as a police officer your number one duty is safety of the public? One is your safety, your own personal safety. [interjections] Exactly. And the safety of your fellow officers. [interjections] Exactly. And the safety of even the people within your custody, hon. member. What do you think these good folks were doing? If you have any thread of decency, would you turn your back on your fellow police officers? Would you turn your back on your fellow police officers when their safety is threatened?

Mr. Young: I would not abandon my post.

Dr. Sherman: Officer, you would abandon your post, and you would abandon your colleagues. My question is: would you stand in solidarity with them? Answer that question.

Mr. Young: I would not abandon my post.

Dr. Sherman: Yes, you would.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: I'd like to ask the hon. Leader of the Liberal Opposition: given that the natural result of passing this bill will be a legal challenge, a constitutional challenge, and multimillions of dollars charged to the public purse, who really should pay the price for this unnecessary lawsuit?

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, hon. member, for asking that question. Frankly, in my opinion, I believe these people should pay the price at the next election. We should just repeal this legislation after it's passed, because it will pass.

But the fact of the matter is that it's the hard-working men and women of this province and this country that will end up footing the bill. When they foot the bill, because this government can't get its financial act in order, at the end of the day they're going to end up cutting something. They're either going to go into debt, or they're going to cut education, cut health care, cut the care of our seniors. They're going to cut something else because they don't have the courage to stop giving their buddies money, untendered cost-plus contracts, and giving money to private corporations from across the country and across the world. Okay? They don't have the courage to talk about tax fairness and cutting taxes on middle-class working families and lower-class working families. We're either going to go into debt, or we're going to further cut services, and Albertans and Canadians will pay this price, unfortunately.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), are there any other speakers?

Seeing none, let's move on to the next main speaker. Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased that I may actually get a few moments to speak on this horrific piece of legislation before it is rammed through second reading as a result of the undemocratic decision of the government to bring in closure.

I want to begin by saying simply this. To those Albertans who have not yet figured out that the Premier of the province did nothing but line up promise after promise after promise after promise in the last election that she clearly had every intention to break: I hope that all Albertans now get what they elected. They elected the Premier.

You know, the Minister of Health accused us of being ideological when we talked about public funding today. Let me just say that there is an ideology on that side, and that ideology by that Premier is that there is no promise she has ever made that she has not broken. This is one of them, and this is, I have to say, probably the most profound betrayal of working people in Alberta since she's been elected.

This Premier has embarked in her short career – she got elected at the same time I did, actually – on quite an interesting attack on human rights, one that is really quite unprecedented in this province. First, she oversaw the introduction of Bill 44, the scarring of our human rights code that makes us have a human rights code in this province which is an embarrassment to anybody who understands the concepts of human rights. Now she's bringing in Bill 45, which is the same kind of thing. It is an illegal law, Mr. Speaker. It is designed to bully working Albertans away from standing up against – wait for it – another illegal law. It's brought into force by a government that has lost its way, its moral compass, its connection to accountability for the record it ran on, and its connection to the real people of this province. That's what this law is.

Now, I've heard a lot of moral outrage and a lot of sense of self-justification from that side about how we need to deal with the fact that people are engaging in illegal activity. As I alluded to when I was asking questions of the Member for Airdrie, the fact of the matter is this. Some people have done a lot of sort of celebration about when former Premier Lougheed eliminated the right to strike for the public service in Alberta. Let me just say that at that time my father was in this House, and he fought tooth and nail against that piece of legislation because public servants should never have lost the right to strike in this province, Mr. Speaker. Not ever.

Now, ultimately, that decision of Premier Lougheed was taken to the Supreme Court of Canada, and the Supreme Court of Canada said: "You know what? Here's what has to happen for this law to be legal. Workers need to maintain the right to join a union. They then need to maintain the right to bargain collectively for the terms and conditions of their employment, and finally, they need to maintain a mechanism for resolving the disputes around that bargaining if they cannot come to an agreement." Typically in most democratic societies that right looks like a right to strike, Mr. Speaker. In this province it does not. It, unfortunately, looks like binding arbitration, until last week, when this government introduced a plan to eliminate that as well.

Based on that very age-old Supreme Court of Canada decision, one which, in fact, has been updated quite considerably in the court since then, anyone who knows anything about labour law, if they were betting people, would bet that this government is introducing legislation that they know full well is going to be deemed illegal once the courts get their hands on it. Yet they continue, and they continue with their faux moral outrage about how they need to take action against workers who act illegally when they themselves sit over there and intentionally and knowingly introduce legislation that is in breach of the Constitution of this country. How dare they engage in such outrageous hypocrisy? How dare they talk about workers who are standing up for their safety and for their rights in the workplace as though they are somehow criminals who need to be beaten into submission at the same time that they are introducing a piece of legislation that they should know full well is itself illegal? I mean, just every day they amaze me, Mr. Speaker, with the level of their hypocrisy and their willingness to break promises to the people of this province.

For those folks over there who are not really fully on top of the concept and the history of illegal strikes, let me just give you a little bit of background because it's not all about a bunch of drunken vandals breaking windows at Starbucks like the folks in Vancouver did after the last Stanley Cup final there. Strangely, that's not what it's all about.

Here are some of the things that illegal strikes have done. They've ensured safety standards. They have ensured laws that people have the right to refuse unsafe work; they don't have to go down into the coal mine that's about to explode. They actually get to refuse that. Do you know how they got to refuse that? By striking illegally, by standing up to guns that were directed at them by the government of the day, who – guess what? – said: you guys are criminals; you're acting illegally. That's what illegal strikes did. They gave the right to refuse unsafe work. They gave a six-day work week. Then they gave a five-day work week. Illegal strikes gave us the minimum wage, Mr. Speaker. These are the things that illegal strikes have done.

You know what? Governments like this government have never been interested in bringing in laws that respect and honour the work of working people in this province or any other jurisdiction in this country. So labour members have had to work for their rights, and that's their history. They've had to work for their rights. They've had to fight for their rights. So I am so deeply offended when a member over there tries to equate that history to a bunch of drunken vandals in Vancouver. That is outrageous, Mr. Speaker. I would expect that members over there, when they bring in a piece of legislation like this, that is this heinous, that is this reflective of an attack on the history of the right to bargain in this country, should at least know their history so they don't walk in and say things like that. That is offensive and insulting to many, many, many working people in this province, and they should know better.

I will drop it down a notch now and try to speak a little bit more about some of the other elements of this bill which are so offensive to me, Mr. Speaker. We've talked a bit about the fines. As things stand now, between the dues abatement, the liability fund, and the fines – the fines for individual workers, the fines for representatives and union officials – it's safe to say that when someone goes on strike or when a union goes on strike, it could be much bigger than this, but they could easily attract a fine of $2.5 million a day, and that fine would carry on for every day that the strike went on.

Now, interestingly, folks, I just want to throw it out there that if through their negligence, whether intentional or not, an employer allows a workplace situation to continue such that a worker dies, do you know what they can be fined? Five hundred thousand dollars. Let's just be clear. It's not $500,000 for every day that that family has to deal with the fact that their loved one is dead. It's just one day. That death is over at the end of that day. But that strike is not over. We are going to continue fining them into the Stone Age day after day after day. Does that sound like balance, Mr. Speaker? Does that sound like a government that understands or cares about balance in this province?

Interestingly, I noted that as much as we are bringing in through Bill 45 the ability to fine unions $3 million or more a day for an illegal strike, the corresponding action, the illegal lockout, continues to be subject to – get this – a $10,000 maximum fine. You know, I will tell you that you could go to the Harvard Business School, you could go to one of the most business-friendly schools of business, and they will tell you that effective labour relations relies on balance. And can I tell you that $10,000 versus $3 million a day – it's not so much with the balance, Mr. Speaker. We're kind of losing sight of the balance. We're so wrapped up in the desire to bully and punish and control and beat opposition in this province through fining them into the Stone Age, through pulling back their resources, through limiting their freedom of expression; they're so interested in that that they've completely forgotten there's apparently no need to hold themselves to any kind of similar standard.

It just goes to outline, I think, the fact that this government alleges that they are doing this in order to protect the public interest. Well, Mr. Speaker, this is not about the public interest. A month ago we had a company dump a billion litres of poison into the Athabasca River. Just today I went and listened to a bunch of scientists talk about the incredible devastation that that is bringing upon our environment, the generational destruction that is occurring to the habitat along the Athabasca River, the profound impact that this is going to have on our First Nations living all the way downstream. Yet no fine.

Mr. Mason: No charges.

Ms Notley: No charges. Nothing.

Interestingly, the organization that would be responsible for that, the Alberta Energy Regulator, these guys – these guys – actually went out of their way to bring in legislation that removed protection of the public interest from their mandate. They're really concerned about protecting the public interest of Albertans when it comes to beating up on workers, but when it comes to protecting us – our air, our land, our water – from toxics and toxins being dumped into, like, the Athabasca River and permanently undermining the health of that important waterway, not only are they not going to levy any fines, but they're actually going to change the legislation so that they're not held accountable for their failure to – wait for it – represent the public interest, Mr. Speaker. These guys have no interest – no interest – in representing the public interest and every interest in representing their own interests. That is profoundly clear through the way that they have moved forward with this piece of legislation.

You know, I just want to talk ever so briefly about the fact that we are going to be given such limited opportunity to speak today in this Legislature, Mr. Speaker. It is outrageous that we are not all going to get a chance to speak on this bill because the amount of frustration you are hearing in my voice is shared by many people. I want you to know that just the fact that it's in the standing orders does not make it right. Typically the standing orders have to be read and used in the context of the overarching parliamentary precedent.

Mr. Speaker, I know this is no longer an issue because the Acting Speaker ruled against this, but you need to know this. Freedom of speech is both the least questioned and the most fundamental right of the Members of Parliament on the floor of the House and in committee. It is the most fundamental right, and by bringing in closure after two speakers have spoken on a bill, this government may well be acting in accordance with the rules that they rammed down the throat of this Assembly, but they are not by any means acting in accordance with the historical and democratic tradition of this province or this country.

There is no need for this, Mr. Speaker. Just in six months this government brought in an extra billion dollars in revenue. There is absolutely no need for what they are doing here tonight. The really sad thing of it is that I think the reason we're here, the reason that all these workers are being victimized and our human rights are being undermined and our freedom of expression is being attacked is the most cynical of reasons. I think these guys want to pretend and make themselves look like the Wildrose because they're kind of scared they're going to win the next election. I actually think that this horrible piece of legislation is a profoundly cynical political game that they're playing. It's really unfortunate because they're doing it at the expense of some of the most deeply held, fundamental, important rights which are the foundation of our civic democratic society. They've raised cynicism to a brand new level, and all Albertans are paying the price.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona – she seemed to be defending the right for an illegal strike in certain circumstances. I wonder if she's advocating for future illegal strikes. Furthermore, when the AUPE was found by the Associate Chief Justice to be in contempt of court, and he specifically noted that the union leaders were sarcastic and mocking in their comments about the court order, I wonder if she has any comments regarding the fact that the union was held in contempt of court? Does she defend that kind of activity and being in contempt of court?

Ms Notley: I just find this very interesting. On one hand, we're hugely respectful of the courts, and we're hugely worried about running afoul of contempt of the court, but on the other hand we've got a clear Supreme Court of Canada line of cases that are going to render this particular bill completely illegal, and in that case it will be a breach of our Constitution as opposed to a breach of a judge who is enforcing a bad law. So why is one good and one not good?

At the end of the day I do not support people going into contempt of the court. You have to deal with the rules that you're dealing with. However, you do not need to be thrown into jail for 50 years for engaging in appropriate fight-backs, and that's what you guys are doing. You're taking a mallet to a tack, and it is bullying and nothing more.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. member, in light of the question of the hon. member opposite, if she could comment on the conviction of a number of farmers a few years ago for defying the law of Canada and the Wheat Board single desk and illegally selling their grain in the United States in violation of the law. Following their conviction the Premier of the province, then Ralph Klein, actually appeared at a ceremony and praised these individuals for breaking the law. Would she say, in light of that, that the record of the Progressive Conservatives opposite with respect to support of illegal actions is checkered, to say the least?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Notley: Thank you so much. I would suggest that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood raises a very good point, and it goes back to the other one. Checkered to say the least; hypocritical to say a bit more. Leading or one to which I would defer? Absolutely not.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)? No one else?

All right. Let's proceed to the next main speaker. I have the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What time do we have remaining on this debate?

The Speaker: Hon. member, the time is about seven minutes, I think. That's the best I can guess right now.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you. I just have to respect the democratic process, Mr. Speaker. I only get seven minutes, but that's okay. They're going to get seven full minutes from me. [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, the hypocrisy of the members opposite in the heckling is systemic of what's wrong with this government. I will tell you that they don't even see the hypocrisy of their own actions. This is a government that . . . [interjections] They can heckle all they want, but the truth be known. This is a government that hired six private investigators to actually follow me around and got caught tapping my phones. Amazing. Yet nobody was ever held accountable for that. It was: "Oh, I'm sorry. That was the government before this government." But it's still the same government for the last 45 years.

The reason I bring that up, Mr. Speaker, is that I am here because of that behaviour, and the beauty of what you're doing today is that I will be there because of that behaviour. That's what's going to happen as a result of this. They don't see the hypocrisy. They voted to eliminate the public interest test out of the new energy act. You would not even accept an amendment. Yet they stand up today and they say: ooh, we are going to protect the public interest against those evil people who would even think to walk out, who would even think to possibly protect themselves from an unsafe condition. That is, to me, the ultimate in hypocrisy.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that we don't want illegal strikes. Nobody wants illegal strikes. They don't want illegal strikes. So why are you trying to encourage illegal strikes? Why do you want to remove arbitration? That makes no sense. What happens here is that we have a bill that sets it up. We have a bill that puts in these incredible penalties just so you can pull the rug out from underneath them and remove that arbitration and then say: see what's going to happen.

But the problem is that this violates a very basic principle of jurisprudence, which is the onus of proof. If you look under the Labour Relations Code as it stands today, the onus of proof is on the employer. But when you look at what's going on here, what you've changed in this new legislation: unions, in particular, can be held responsible for the actions of a single individual, or in the case of a couple of individuals they may actually walk. Say that under section 1(k) two employees refuse to work because of unsafe working conditions. That means that a strike exists, and the prohibitions in section 4 come into force. Within four hours an application can be brought under section 5(3)(b). The board can declare that, yes, there is a strike. Now, under section 6(1) the employer is now obligated – no discretion; they're obligated – to suspend all union dues and to continue so for the next three months plus an additional month for every partial day that the individuals participate.

Now, this could be a very large union, which means that everyone in the union is affected by the fact that just a few people went out on a wildcat strike. Now it is incumbent upon the union in a reverse onus to prove that they gave expressed instructions prior to the walkout. How can they do that? They didn't know this would happen. Not general instructions but expressed instructions. They can't meet the test of the law. So automatically a million dollars a day is going in under the abatement order. The board or the judge has no choice. They must make that abatement order. That's what the law says.

To the hon. Transportation minister. In the ultimate of hypocrisy – I need this question answered – the minister threw out a case last week called Baron versus Canada, and the minister said to this Assembly that he would accept their advice. Their advice was in the question of reasonable versus probable, but it was an interesting point in that case. The court also ruled in Baron versus Canada: “the removal of the discretion to refuse to issue a warrant when all statutory criteria are met . . . the issuing judge's ‘balance wheel’ function” is diminished. In other words, what the court was saying is that you can't take the judge's ability to balance justice away. It was a mandate for the judge under the law to actually issue a warrant.

In this case we're talking about issuing the mandate order, issuing the abatement order, or issuing the declaration. The judges don't have to have discretion here. It's in the bill. They must issue the abatement order. They must issue that declaration. The fact is that what the court ruled, that in order for a judge to “be able to weigh all the surrounding circumstances to determine whether in each case the interests of the state,” in this case the province, “are superior to the individual's,” then “By restricting the factors that a judge may consider, Parliament has . . .” [interjection] Could you be quiet, please, while I talk to the Speaker? Thank you very much. “Parliament has improperly restricted a judge's ability to” reasonably assess the evidence. That's what they've done in this bill. Now, all of a sudden and under a strike the union has the reverse onus to prove that they issued expressed instructions, which makes it nearly impossible to do. That, to me, is absolutely unfortunate.

When we take a look at these huge threats to this province, in the 37 years that this legislation has been in place, that this union has been under contract, there have been a total of 51 days in 37 years of illegal strikes. Now, how dangerous have those strikes been? It's actually interesting. In 1980 there was a strike. In 1990

there were three social workers, there was a correctional officers' strike, and there was a general strike at the university. In 1995 the laundry workers threatened the whole province and went on strike out of the Calgary Foothills hospital. In 1998 members of the university went out on strike. Then in 2000 we had an auxiliary nursing unit that went on strike. Now, that's two days. It was only six hours on the previous. [Mr. Anglin's speaking time expired] It's a shame I don't get to finish my . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Government Motion 49, which was passed on December 2, 2013, I must now put the question forward.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 11:10 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

For the motion:

Amery	Fenske	Leskiw
Barnes	Fraser	Luan
Bhullar	Goudreau	Lukaszuk
Brown	Hancock	Olesen
Casey	Horne	Olson
Dallas	Jablonski	Quadri
DeLong	Jeneroux	Rodney
Denis	Johnson, L.	VanderBurg
Donovan	Kennedy-Glans	Weadick
Dorward	Khan	Webber
Drysdale	Klimchuk	Woo-Paw
Fawcett	Lemke	Xiao

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call for the opposite vote, could I ask you to please cut your conversations out during the vote? It's tough enough hearing the Clerk facing away from me, but you're not helping by interjecting with your comments.

Against the motion:

Anglin	Hehr	Sherman
Bilous	Mason	Towle
Eggen	Notley

Totals: For – 36 Against – 8

[Motion carried; Bill 45 read a second time]

Bill 46

Public Service Salary Restraint Act (continued)

[Adjourned debate December 2: Mr. Hancock]

The Speaker: Are there any other speakers? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: I can defer to the leader if that's okay, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: It's fine by me.

Hon. leader of the ND, would you like to go ahead?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is a bill which is, of course, the companion piece to Bill 45, which was just passed for second reading, with government members voting in favour as well as two of the four Wildrose MLAs present for the debate. That surprised me somewhat given the vociferous opposition expressed by the Wildrose House leader during debate. I don't know how you hold a political party accountable for its decisions when its members vote both ways. [interjections] They call it a free vote, but I call it evading accountability.

An Hon. Member: I thought you liked free votes.

Mr. Mason: Whatever gave you that idea?

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're not going to start this debate with interjections. Government members, please. Zip it up, and let's carry on.

The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really appreciate that. I don't interrupt them.

Mr. Speaker, this is an amazing piece of legislation. I'm not going to take the full amount of time, but obviously what was just passed at second reading is the enforcement bill. It's the bill that makes it completely impossible to protest, oppose, or refuse to comply with the provisions of this bill, and as such the two go hand in hand.

This is a very egregious bill, in my opinion. Imagine if it were reversed. Here's what happens under this deal. The union, AUPE, loses its right to go to binding arbitration, something that was presented as a substitute, and a poor one, in our view, for the right to strike, by legislation that was introduced by the Lougheed government. Nevertheless, there was some balance of fairness. Now that's gone, and the government is saying that if the union doesn't reach an agreement with them by the end of January, this bill will impose a settlement that is zero per cent in the first year, zero per cent with a small lump-sum payment in the second year, 1 per cent in the third year, and 1 per cent in the fourth year.

Now, the government says that they still want to negotiate a deal and that it's fair to do this, but if we wanted to evaluate that statement with regard to the fairness of the deal, let's imagine that the situation was reversed. Let's suppose that the legislation says that if the union and the government don't reach an arrangement, don't sign an agreement by the end of January, the union will get 6 per cent in the first year, 6 per cent in the second year, 8 per cent in the third year, and 10 per cent in the fourth year. Would the government then be so committed to arguing that this doesn't change the equation, that the union, of course, can be trusted to negotiate a lower amount in negotiations?

If you flip it on its head, Mr. Speaker, you can see the dishonesty of the government position with respect to this bill. If they were in the position that the union would get a very large settlement if they didn't reach a deal, they would find that completely unacceptable. So it is that the union finds it completely unacceptable to negotiate under those kinds of conditions. It is, as has been said a number of times already in the House and outside, asking the union to negotiate with a gun to its head, and I think that that is completely unacceptable.

Now, the government, of course, could be said in a sense to be in a conflict of interest because they are not only legislating the deal, but they're one of the parties involved in the negotiations, so they cannot be expected to act fairly in the interests of both parties. They are only interested in their own interest. In this particular case, it is not the public interest, in my view. In my view, this is actually not for any other reason than for political reasons.

I've heard the hon. Minister of Human Services say that the reason for this bill is because there has been a trend established or a precedent that the teachers and the doctors agreed to similar provisions in terms of compensation in their collective agreements. He uses that as a justification to take away the right of the AUPE members to decide for themselves what kind of agreement they would find acceptable and to impose the same kind of deal on them, missing the whole point, which is that the Alberta Medical Association and the Alberta Teachers' Association negotiated a deal with the government of their own accord, and their members ratified it.

That is not the case with the AUPE. They have a right to negotiate their own collective agreement. They cannot be held, or they ought not be held, by legal force, as it were, to accept the same terms that other organizations have accepted. Those organizations made a decision, and they have to live with it. Their leadership has to answer to the membership, and the membership have to live with it because it was a democratically made decision. It was ratified by the members upon recommendation from the executive.

This is not the case here. AUPE has been rejecting that arrangement. They have just recently gone to arbitration. They'd been out of a contract since April 1 of this year – that's not unusual, Mr. Speaker – and they were scheduled to go to arbitration in February.

So, Mr. Speaker, who are these people? Who are these people that have had their rights taken away from them? It's akin, really, in many ways to slavery. In other words, these workers are required to work at a job – I mean, they can quit their job. I guess that's the difference. They're required to work at a job at the rates of pay and under the conditions that the employer sets, with no recourse whatsoever. And if they do take whatever limited options they do have, then of course they can be fined, as my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona says, back to the Stone Age. That, in my view, is indentured servitude. That is something that we don't have in this country. Everybody has a right to form a union, to bargain collectively, and to have some reasonable means of settling disputes that is not settled by one side or the other arbitrarily. But that's what this government has imposed. I think they were just two months from a contract, and I think that it's not acceptable.

The people that we're talking about are social workers that strive to improve the lives of our most vulnerable youth. They work with developmentally disabled adults. They work at the Michener Centre, but not for long. They're jail guards. They work at the courthouse. They work as sheriffs patrolling our highways. They're conservation workers trying to clean up the mess of the environment. They work in our parks. They provide a whole range of social services, health services, and so on. These are the kinds of people that the government wants to force to take flat increments of salary: 0, 0, 1, and 1.

Now, the government members voted to freeze their pay the other day. They argued that they had to lead by example, and they wanted to avoid hypocrisy, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview said. But they haven't avoided hypocrisy, Mr. Speaker, because they're accepting a three-year freeze on salaries in excess of $150,000 a year, and they're asking people to accept a freeze on salaries in some cases of $50,000 a year or less. That's still hypocrisy. That's still unfair, and it's not something that this public, I think, should be asked to accept.

Mr. Speaker, I am hopeful that we can get maybe a few more members to speak to this particular piece of legislation than we did last time, so I'm prepared to take my seat. But I want to indicate that I don't think this bill is either fair or equitable, nor do I think it is ultimately going to be shown to be a legal piece of legislation. I do not understand how the government is prepared under the circumstances we have today in this province to do this.

First of all, the economy is booming. Alberta has the highest inflation in Canada. Prices are rising, and people's incomes are rising. People's incomes are rising in the private sector much faster than they are, of course, in the public sector. So what we should be expecting, then, is an increase in the standard of living of workers in this province because the economy is very strong. There's actually a shortage of labour. The natural market forces, which I know the government and the Wildrose are both very supportive of, would tend to lead to an increase in wages in the province, but the government is artificially holding them down in the public sector.

In fact, because there is inflation in the province, over the course of this four-year agreement that will likely be imposed, workers will fall behind, and their standard of living will fall. This government is saying that because they can't manage the finances of the province, because they've given tax breaks to wealthy Albertans and to corporations, because they collect the lowest royalties in the world, working people, the people that work for them have to take a cut, that they have to pay.

Mr. Speaker, this is wealth transfer. This is a transfer from working people, who have a decline in their standard of living, to the very wealthy, who get much better tax breaks under this government. It's a reverse flow of wealth from the bottom to the top that this government is consciously engineering through this legislation. I want to say that that is completely unacceptable.

The other point that I'd like to make is that it's unnecessary from a financial point of view for the government to do this. If an arbitrator were to bring in a settlement, say, in the range of 2, 3, or 4 per cent, it would not force the government into bankruptcy, and it wouldn't force it into a financial crisis of any sort. The Finance minister gave a second-quarter update just last week in which he projected an additional billion dollars in revenue over what had been budgeted for at the beginning of the year. So the financial position of the government does not require this. The economic situation in the province does not lead us to think that people should have lower wages. In fact, the opposite is true.

Why is the government doing this? Well, the government wants to lower the standard of living of working families in this province. It's as simple as that. They want to transfer wealth to their corporate friends and their wealthy friends, and they want to cut back on the services that all of us depend on because they're not prepared to take the necessary steps to ensure that those things are affordable. You can see this agenda, this same right-wing, ideological agenda in other ways. The Minister of Health has embarked on the most massive privatization in the history of our public health care system in a whole number of areas: in long-term care, seniors' care, lab services, and so on, Mr. Speaker. You can see this . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hon. member, in your opinion, would you say that it's a democratic right to vote? Is it a democratic right to choose representation? Those are two questions.

Mr. Mason: Well, it's a rather open-ended question, Mr. Speaker. I know the hon. member is a union member and must be in a very difficult position here, but I am assuming that he doesn't mean union leadership; he means leadership here, an elected position in this Legislature.

Here's the difficulty, Mr. Speaker. What if your elected representative that you voted for doesn't do what they said they were going to do and, instead, does the opposite? What then do you do? You have to wait four long years to have another crack at them under our system. The kinds of promises that were made by this government in the last election are amazing. We tallied it up during the campaign: $7 billion of additional program expenditure that was promised by the Progressive Conservatives under the now Premier. They had no way of paying for it. They had not costed the items. We costed it for them. They had no ability to pay for those promises, so most of those promises, of course, have not been kept: promises for more funding and reliable, stable funding increases for education and for health care, promises to support people with disabilities, ending child poverty. You know, it was massive.

11:40

Now when we ask questions in the House, the government stands up and says: we were elected on a program of restraining public spending. Well, Mr. Speaker, that is totally false. They were elected on a promise of wild, unrestrained, unaffordable election promises – oh, and of course then scaring people about the lake of fire. That's the mandate that this government has. They weren't elected to build Alberta, to show restraint in spending and live within our means. They are reinventing history. They're reinventing their own history, and they're manufacturing a mandate that in fact has no relationship to the platform upon which they ran, and we can't let them get away with it.

In answer to the hon. member's question, people do have a right to elect people, but they also have a right to have the people they elect keep their word, and this government has not done so.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a), hon. members. Anyone else?

Seeing no one else, let's move on to the next main speaker. The next hon. member to be recognized is the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will rise now to absolutely oppose this bill, and I'm going to detail the reasons why. Since 1995 there have been 13 days of illegal strikes. Nobody wants to see an illegal strike. That's just not a question here that I'm entertaining. The whole idea is to avoid illegal strikes. The whole idea is to reduce the probability of an illegal strike.

I don't know any tool that's more effective to reduce or eliminate the possibility of an illegal strike than arbitration. So when I look at the history of the number of strikes that have taken place since the passage of the Public Service Employee Relations Act, which goes all the way back to 1977, looking at beginning in 1995, laundry workers at the hospital struck for seven days, and the union was fined $400,000. In 1998 members at the University and Glenrose hospitals went on a wildcat strike for six hours. In 2000 there was a two-day strike at a nursing care facility, and the fines totalled $675,000. Then, of course, as we move forward to February of 2012, there was a one-day wildcat strike, that was settled by binding arbitration. It limited the strike to one day. Now, nobody wants a wildcat strike. Unfortunately, some of the members don't understand even what the definition of arbitration is because it got settled by arbitration. It got settled by arbitration. It prevented it from going on further. So arbitration is a tool that this government has proven works.

As much as they mock the comparison, we just passed a law giving this government access to arbitration in financial matters, to settle international financial disputes. They don't see the parallel, and they don't see the hypocrisy of granting themselves access to arbitration yet removing arbitration under this act from the public service employees' union to settle disputes. I don't understand the logic behind that. It doesn't make sense.

So while some members think we should have higher penalties to prevent illegal strikes, I say that's a debatable issue. I'm not sure what is the appropriate penalty, but what is absolutely important is that whatever the penalty is, it should be just, it should be fair, and it should be enforced by due process of law, not automatic in the sense of creating a law and then everything kicks in and the onus is on the union to prove that it's not so much at fault. They don't have access now to go to arbitration once this bill passes. That doesn't make sense. We're going to impose a pay freeze on these union members in the form that's listed in the bill.

The criticism is – and the government has leveled it at our party because we stood up during the election and said that we were going to try to freeze government wages until we balanced the budget. That was one of our platforms. Now, the union didn't like that, and many other government workers didn't like that, but the fact is that we told the truth. We didn't lie. We said: here's what we believe in. When we were elected as 17 members and the government granted an 8 per cent pay raise, we thought that was hypocrisy, so as a whole caucus we voted not to accept that. We've stayed committed to not taking that 8 per cent, and we're going to roll that back if we become government.

We are firm in our belief in making sure that we get our house in order, particularly our finances. We don't buy this concept that debt is hope, and we're not into this concept of just spending without taking accountability. We differ tremendously from the governing party, but we never once said that we were going to remove arbitration. We never once said that we were not going to deal fairly. We always said that we were going to deal in good faith.

When I talked to our leader over here about that issue, what she questioned me on was: do you think we can get the union to accept a pay freeze? My answer was: "It's very difficult to actually predict that in the sense that they're going to come to the negotiating table, and we'll go to the negotiating table, and if we don't agree, we're going to be forced into arbitration, which we should welcome, in a sense, and then settle the matter." But if we were going to ask for a zero per cent pay increase, then we had to be prepared to take it ourselves. What we've seen from this government is that it gave itself 8 per cent and then said that it's going to freeze its pay.

Now, I don't know how that's going to go over in arbitration when an arbitrator looks at: well, you gave yourself 8 per cent, and, oh, by the way, you're going to tell them they can only take 0, 0, and 1 or whatever it is. That doesn't even make sense. That's not logical. That's actually hypocritical." They don't see that, and that's fine. They don't have to see that. I suspect they're going to see these union members during the next election, but they probably don't want to see them. But they will, more than likely. The fact is that we will still stand as our party on the same platform, I believe, pretty much, unless something changes that I'm not aware of. Our goal is to actually balance the budget. Our goal is to control spending. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has the floor. Let's respect the fact that he does have some speech-making to conclude.

Hon. member, please continue, and let's stop the interjections, please.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't mind the heckling that the members give, but I understand that it's not respectful to this House or to yourself as the Speaker.

They don't like it. It's a bitter medicine choking on that Kool-Aid over there. I don't mind that. They're the ones drinking the Kool-Aid, not us. We have stood up on principle. Some of us disagree. We have argued over the issues, but I think we're in unison on our beliefs and our commitments, which is due process of law, which is dealing fairly. Contractual law is contractual law, and we want to uphold the law.

But we would never ever, in my view – and I can't speak for everyone. I can't imagine supporting changing legislation to circumvent a legal contract. That makes no sense to me. That's disrespectful, that is disingenuous, and it is just in many ways complete hypocrisy because it removes the fundamental beliefs that drive our civil society, which in our economic system is contract law.

The government entered into a contract. They are now involved in a dispute. The contract says that if they cannot settle the dispute, arbitration is available to settle the dispute. What they're doing now is saying: we don't want to go to arbitration because we think we're going to lose. You probably are. The way they've behaved, chances are that they predicted it quite well. Rather than abide by the contract, what they're going to do is change the law and remove the right, and I say that that's fundamentally wrong. We would not do that in any other circumstance, but we are definitely doing it in this circumstance.

One of the things that I think has gotten missed throughout these debates tonight is that when we look at the Public Service Employee Relations Act, if something does go to arbitration, what the mandate of the board to do is to ensure that the wages and benefits are fair and reasonable to the employees and the employer but, most importantly, that they are in the best interest of the public.

That law, in my view, was written to protect the taxpayers. When something went to arbitration, the board or the court that was going to use this act to arbitrate the dispute was going to look after the public interest and was going to try to be fair and reasonable, something that this government is not practising right now, in my view. They were going to look for not only the time period that was under review but the wages and benefits in both the private and public sectors. For many people, when they look at the government employees, they always like to do the comparison to the private sector, and that's fine. The government did it earlier. But the fact is that if it goes to arbitration, the arbitrator must take into consideration what the private sector is making versus the public sector and weigh that. That's that balance wheel that a judge has to weigh. There's nothing wrong with that. I say that that's a good law. That makes the arbitration work not just for the employees, not just for the employer but for all Albertans because it's looking after the public interest.

Here we have this government again, yet one more time, removing the public interest test. Interesting. Yet you're saying that you're looking at protecting the public interest or the safety of the public. I don't get it. Why don't we leave it there? Why don't we give them access to arbitration? Why don't we deal in good faith? They're not doing it. This speaks to integrity, and they are very, very suspect with the public employee union for that very reason.

They have done this time and time again since they've been elected, and this is something that I think is an amazing disrespect for all Albertans, never mind just the union. It is something that is not done in the private sector at all. They don't have the ability to do that. They have to deal fairly. The interesting thing is that union contracts are settled all the time. They are negotiated fairly, and most union contracts – when I say most, the majority – are settled without any type of labour action, without any type of lockout although we hear about the ones in the news. They represent the minority, again.

We're here at this stage removing arbitration, and we're seeing a tremendous amount of hypocrisy by this government in dealing with this issue. I'm not sure what the end game is with this government and how it plans to deal with this matter. I suspect that what they might end up doing after they get what they want is that maybe down the road we'll repeal this law and then give arbitration back after they force the union into a contract for the length of time they plan to force them into.

They did the same with the electricity industry. They first legislated it, and once they legislated what they wanted, they realized their mistake, and then they removed the law. I see that happening here. It just makes absolutely no logical sense, in terms of business and in terms of trying to deal in good faith, not to have arbitration and not to be in the mediation process, where it works.

In closing, I'm going to throw out a theory here. The hon. members from the other side want to protect the safety of the public. They want to protect the public interest. They don't want to put the public at risk. That's what I'm hearing. Oh, my goodness, the laundry workers going out on strike risked the public so very much back in '95.

The removing of arbitration, in my view, now actually increases the threat to the public because what it removes is an avenue to settle the dispute. When you remove the dignity of any person, when you remove their options to settle their concerns, situations can get out of control rapidly. We've seen that in different areas. That is nothing new to society. That's why we, even in this House, have rules on debate. Sometimes it seems like chaos, Mr. Speaker, but the rules keep us co-ordinated, and it allows for free debate except when they issue closure before the bill is even tabled and prevent people from getting up and speaking or even dealing with the issue.

Overall, that's the whole purpose of the rules. That's the purpose of the rule of law. By removing certain sections, the way they are today, what they're doing is that they're removing options from the unions to settle disputes, and that leaves, then, the options of violating the law. In my view, that increases the risk to the public. That increases the threat that there would be a strike or some type of action. That is something that has never ever worked.

The hon. Deputy Premier tweeted a picture of the illegal protest in the Ukraine, that he supported, but somehow we're forcing these union people to maybe act illegally, which we're not going to support. The point is that we don't want to have illegal actions at all. That's not what we want.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing no one, then let's move on to the next speaker. I have the hon. Minister of Justice, followed by the leader of the Alberta Liberal Party, followed by the Associate Minister of Regional Recovery and Reconstruction for Southwest Alberta, followed by Edmonton-Calder, followed by the Associate Minister of Regional Recovery and Reconstruction for High River, followed by the Member for Calgary-Buffer, and that's what I have so far. Of course, I have other members in the NDP who hold a site.

Please continue.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise tonight to speak to Bill 46, the Public Service Salary Restraint Act. You know, it's rather interesting when it gets this late. Sometimes it gets a little crazy. At the same time, though, the member to my right, the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, is always polite. She has been polite tonight. Even I have tried to be polite tonight. The Deputy Premier has been polite tonight as well, and I expect the same as well as I give my comments.

Under the leadership of our Premier but also for, I'd say, each member of the government caucus the guiding principle that we always had is that taxpayers have to be treated first, and I'll never apologize for always putting the taxpayers first in each of my decisions as an MLA and as a minister. I definitely believe that the Minister of Finance under his leadership has turned the corner towards budget surpluses, as outlined in the quarterly update last week.

Now, the last budget: some people may not have liked it, but at the same time it held the line on spending, Mr. Speaker. It made some tough decisions, with a focus on priorities, and it pronounced the philosophy of Building Alberta. Bill 46 follows on this leadership by continuing with our fiscal plan.

It's about balance, Mr. Speaker. Bill 46 ensures that compensation for our valued public servants is fair to our employees but also fair to the taxpayers. We worked hard with our doctors and our teachers on long-term labour deals that hold wages flat for three years and guarantee stability in education and health care.

Just this last week, Mr. Speaker, members of all caucuses here, I think, took a serious leadership step forward in voting to freeze our own pay for the next three years. I think everybody, regardless of what caucus you may be part of, can be proud of that decision.

At the same time, this is what a mainstream conservative party would do, achieve the goals of fiscal accountability, of economic growth, and a vibrant public service. As a conservative, though, I ask the question: if we do not manage the public tax dollar responsibly today, then how will we fund vital public services in the future? That's why, Mr. Speaker, I'm just perplexed by the changing positions of some members of this House.

Now, the Member for Airdrie has been polite tonight as well. I know he and I can get a little hot under the collar sometimes, but he's been very polite. I really never thought I would see the day where he'd be out on the steps of the Legislature practically wrapped in the flags of the AUPE and the NDP. If you would have told me a week ago that this would happen, Mr. Speaker, I wouldn't have believed you. The same member had indicated in the Calgary Sun a while ago: "The province should sit down and tell unions the truth. There's no money for raises, probably for two to three years." Now, those are not my words. Those are his.

Mr. Speaker, on top of that, I want to give you another quote. This is not from the Member for Airdrie. The quote is from the Herald a few years ago. Quote: I came to see unions as self-serving entities that punish good workers and protect bad ones, destroy workplace morale, and harm the companies that we operate in.

Now, that quote isn't from me. It's not from the Deputy Premier here either. It's from the Leader of the Opposition. I'm just really perplexed. My father worked at a union shop for roughly 30 years and got involved with a union. His politics, of course, are a lot more to the left of mine, but I wouldn't suggest that just because he was a union member, he was trying to punish good workers or protect bad ones or destroy workplace morale or harm the company that occupied him. This is very enriching to me.

Even less than a year ago the Leader of the Opposition said to the Calgary Sun: “There will have to be ‘some kind of austerity on public sector wages’ as in pay freezes in the short term.” Wow.

Mr. Speaker, the opposition has also released an alternative budget called the Wildrose Financial Recovery Plan, and it spoke at length of promoting cuts to the public-sector wages or the cost of bureaucracy. Some of the things that it talked about were, quote, holding the line on front-line public-sector salaries until the deficit is eliminated. Another thing: reducing salaries or benefits or bonuses or severances for non front-line workers in the government bureaucracy by over 20 per cent over four years. It also talked about: new hires will be provided with defined-contribution pension plans instead of defined-benefit pension plans.

Mr. Speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood talked about: you run on one thing, but you do something else. That’s exactly what the Official Opposition is doing here in opposing this bill. This opposition party supported budget austerity before. Now they’re railing against it. I’m wondering: next week will the opposition be joining Greenpeace in some protest? I don’t know. What do they stand for?

On this side of the House, in Bill 46, we will continue to hold the line on spending while meeting Albertans’ enormous growth challenges head-on. Bill 46 will support our public sector by ensuring that they are the best paid in the country. We will continue building Alberta so that we continue to be the best place in the world.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Mr. Anderson: That was a very passionate speech. It brought a tear to my eye that this member would spend so much time reading opposition literature and ideas and so forth.

Of course, the minister well knows. He was quoting from the Budget 2013: Wildrose Financial Recovery Plan. I’d like him to comment on this if he could. I just have to find the page here. On page 17 of that plan it talks about: “The Wildrose supports the work of public servants and supports the empowerment of the front lines.” Then it continues on page 18. “While this has prompted some to call for an immediate rollback in front-line public sector salaries, Wildrose has never proposed cuts to the salaries of Alberta’s front-line public sector workers.” That’s on page 18 if you’re following along there, Minister. However, until the budget is balanced in 2014, in a year, under the Wildrose plan “the Wildrose will work” – now, here’s the key phrase – “collaboratively and respectfully with public sector unions to hold the line on the current overall expenditure on front line public sector salaries.” What this says, to be clear, is that we will try to negotiate and make sure that we’re holding the line on salaries till 2014. Then beyond that I’m assuming they would probably go up likely with inflation, which is what we say later on.

So do you understand that it’s okay for you guys to go to the unions and say: “You know what? We would need to balance the budget, so we’re going to propose a zero per cent increase in year 1, 2 per cent in year 2, 2 per cent in year 3, and 4 per cent in year 4,” whatever. It’s okay to say that. No one is saying that you can’t go to them and say, “Look; how about 0, 2, 2, and 3?” That’s okay. I don’t think even the unions really expect you not to ask for that. It’s okay to do that and to fight for that. For the taxpayers, you say. Fight for the taxpayer.

But it’s a total, other thing – is it not, Minister? – when you don’t get your way, instead of negotiating and going to the bargaining table and doing so in good faith, to rip away the legal rights of our public-sector workers because you didn’t get your way and because you can’t work, as I quote from the Wildrose literature, “collaboratively and respectfully with public sector unions to hold the line.” Because you seem incapable of respectfully and collaboratively working with our public-sector unions, do you see the problem that people have right now with the fact that you are ripping away their rights of arbitration?

They have no right to strike. They have no right. You’ve taken that right away. We agree that, hey, there shouldn’t be illegal strikes. Agreed. But when you take away the rights of arbitration because you didn’t get your pay freeze that you’re asking for, which I’m sure we would have asked for, too, in a negotiation had we won in 2012 – do you see the problem with ripping away their legal rights to go to arbitration, to have a third party look at the government side and the union side and say: what’s a fair compromise here? Do you not see the problem with that? Do you not see the distinction and the difference? Doesn’t one seem disrespectful and one seem respectful and collaborative? Don’t you think?

That’s what Peter Lougheed, your beloved Peter Lougheed, talked about in 1977, when he passed that bill. He said: we won’t allow essential workers in the public service to strike, but we will set up arbitration in its stead as a quid pro quo. Now you’re taking that away, and you somehow think that reading a quote that we want to have a freeze for one or two years on public-sector salaries, that we would go to the union – they know we would go to them because we were honest with them. We would ask for that. If they said yes, phenomenal, and if they said no, we’d try to work it out. We would try to work it out. If it didn’t work, we’d go to arbitration.

But what we wouldn’t do, what was never in our literature and, Minister, what was never in your literature is that if we didn’t get our way, if the union said, “No, we’re not going to do a 0, 0, 1, 1” or whatever, we didn’t say that we were going to rip away their legal rights to arbitration. And guess what, Minister? Neither did you. How do you answer that?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, you have about 20 seconds.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I think this member really needs to answer something. He used to be a Conservative, and now he’s outside of the Legislature with the New Democrat opposition and the public-sector unions. Where do his loyalties lie?

It is important that we look after the taxpayer first, and the one thing that this member did not indicate is: what happens when you’re at an impasse?

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition, the next main speaker.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I rise on behalf of the Alberta Liberals to speak in opposition to Bill 46, the Public Service Salary Restraint Act. I rise to oppose this bill for a number of reasons. First and foremost, what is the rule of law, the law of this land? The Canadian Constitution, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, something that a Liberal government brought forward, a document – and this particular bill goes to the heart of who we are as Canadians – of fundamental freedoms.

Section 2(d), the freedom of association. We talked about bills 45 and 46, being sibling bills, as an attack and affront to the collective bargaining rights of Albertans. Mr. Speaker, you know, they talk about wildcat strikes. The only wildcats I know are sitting on that side of the aisle. The decisions that they have made as a government have led to certain decisions by hard-working public servants in our province.

Now, with respect to the Canadian Charter – they talk about workers breaking the law – the government would be in contempt of our Canadian law. If anybody challenged this law – and I believe it will be challenged – if it goes to the Supreme Court of Canada or when it goes to the Supreme Court, this government is going to be in a little bit of trouble, and it's going to cost a lot of money, which, unfortunately, Alberta taxpayers will have to bear.

Mr. Speaker, I don't know what's wrong with this regressive Conservative government. Even the previous Progressive Conservative Premiers recognized – you know, the father of the Progressive Conservative Party, Premier Lougheed, did take away the right of government employees to go on strike. However, he recognized that in the interest of fairness the loss of the ability to go on strike had to be replaced with the option of going to binding arbitration. The father of the Progressive Conservative Party put binding arbitration in here.

Now, the other reason we oppose this bill is just because of the principle of respect, just basic decency. If we want to build this province – well, I don't know. I think these guys over here are actually breaking the backs of Albertans who built this province. That's what this bill is about, breaking the backs of hard-working men and women. Mr. Speaker, we need to focus on the three Rs: respect, revenue, and shared responsibility. We all have a shared responsibility for this province. The government can't do it alone. They need the help of front-line workers.

The third main reason is that – you know what? – it's actually bad business. Nobody would start a business relationship by first slapping their partner in the face and saying: "Hey, let's all try to get along. Why aren't we getting along?" This bill is a slap in the face of hard-working men and women, who are going to build this province. That's not how you start a relationship, my dear friends. Negotiation and respect, sitting at the table. You may disagree, but disagree respectfully. Maintain your positions. Absolutely. The job of legislators and governments is to get taxpayers the best deal. Yes. The best negotiated deal. Yes, be tough in your negotiations, but don't walk away.

There are rules. There's binding arbitration. Go to arbitration. Sometimes you have two people that just, you know, are a mile or two apart, and that's where the binding arbitration comes in. My question is, Mr. Speaker: why does this government fear an arbitrator, an independent third party? Why do they fear that? They may actually rule in your favour – they may – and the union members would actually respect that. That's all they're asking for. Or they may rule in the union's favour. You know what? They might just say: "You're both sort of right. Why don't we sort of cut it in the middle, right? Let's make a deal here."

Mr. Speaker, for anybody who runs a business, you don't treat your workers this way. You treat your workers like gold. When you treat them like gold, they show up a half-hour early and leave an hour late and, darn it, go above and beyond the call of duty. When you treat human beings this way as your starting position – you know what? I still think these guys will show up early and leave late and still go above and beyond the call of duty, but I'll tell you that it's going to demoralize them. When people are demoralized, it lowers productivity, actually. It's good business to improve the morale of your staff. It's good business to treat them with respect. You know what? In this country it's actually legal as well to maintain the laws that we have that respect collective bargaining rights.

Mr. Speaker, you know, it's no wonder they can't balance a budget. When you've got an economy that's the envy of many economies in the world, the highest incomes, the best employment rates, oil this high, this is as good as it gets. You can't balance the budget and provide the services that the citizens need? I don't know when you're going to do it. The question is: how did we get here? Well, how we got here is that, you know, the government's got no money. They've got no money, so they say. Well, why don't they have any money? Let's look at our revenues. My question is: how come the government doesn't have the revenue it needs? I'll tell you why they don't have the revenue they need.

One, when they went to a flat tax, they raised taxes on the very people that helped run the economy, the middle class and the regular working people, okay? They don't have money in their pockets to spend. That ripple-down effect that happens in society when regular working folk have money in their pockets is good for the economy. They buy a better house. They buy a better car. You know what? They buy nicer clothes for their kids. They eat out. It actually is good for business.

They actually raised taxes on regular working families. The Alberta Liberals will actually cut taxes on working families and make sure that they have fair wages because we understand that poverty is not a good thing. In the end it costs you a lot more money. The effects of poverty – Mr. Speaker, we have 90,000 children in poverty in our province. Poor children come from poor families, and poverty leads to issues of poor health. Illiteracy, cutbacks to education: those lead to poor health and poverty.

Mr. Speaker, yes, the government has to look at their taxation rate. We have to go back to progressive income tax. Premier Lougheed had it, and when Premier Klein was on his game, he had it. You know, we also have to look at our expenses. I took the liberty of looking at all the budgets and all the expenses. Do we have a spending problem, a revenue problem? Yeah. We've got a bit of a revenue problem. We do.

We could improve our revenue problem if we actually dealt with the environmental issues. The world and our partners would say: please get your pipelines through our region to the coast. We'd get a world-class price for our oil if we actually dealt with the environmental issues. Money would be flowing like milk and honey in this province. Everybody would be making more money if these guys actually dealt with the environmental issues. That would help increase our revenue as well.

On the spending side – you know what? – there is a wasteful spending problem, but the waste isn't in the front lines, in the staff, as this government would suggest. The waste is actually in the mismanagement. We have too many managers managing managers. We've got ministers who are ministers of associate ministers. Jeez. Half of these guys are ministers on this side over here. That's just simply inefficient. Mr. Speaker, you need smart government, not dumb government, okay? We need efficient government, not inefficient government.

Let's look at the number one spending issue, health care. Well, health care spending is up $5 billion dollars a year from five years ago. That's a 43 per cent increase in health spending when the population has only gone up 11.1 per cent, and the citizens' needs aren't getting met. I had asked the government to find out where the heck the money is going first. Stop contracting out to private corporations in some other province or some other country that is going to deliver substandard services. This is actually costing you more money, delivering you inferior care. If you just had these good folks – when you take out the profit component, evenly pay unionized staff, and pay them benefits and pension, we would actually get better care for less money.

An Hon. Member: That's not on topic.

Dr. Sherman: No, no. It is on topic because this is how we got here. The government says that they have no money. We have given them solutions to improve their revenue, and we've given them solutions to fix their mismanagement.

Mr. Speaker, at the end of the day it's really a philosophy. The Conservative philosophy is, as Elizabeth Warren said: I got mine, and you're on your own; go get yours. They feel it's every person for themselves. We Liberals believe that when our prosperity is shared, when many more of us in society do well, we all do well as a society. We'll have fewer social problems, fewer homeless and hungry and poor kids, fewer people in the prison system. When people get a better education from early childhood to post-secondary, when everyone has the skills and training that they need, it's good for the individual, good for the community, and it's actually good for industry and good for the economy. It's for these reasons the Alberta Liberals oppose the need to pass this draconian legislation, Bill 45 and Bill 46. These are unnecessary bills.

Government backbenchers, I know you'll all vote for this because you really have no option. I know what your reward will be if you do vote against your government. But I think you're taking people for granted. I think you really are taking Albertans for granted. I believe that you actually insult the memory of Albertans, and I recognize that next election they will let you remember this.

Mr. Speaker, I believe there will be a true miracle on the prairies next election. I believe the Liberals will be part of forming a government, and I believe that when that happens – it will have to be a true miracle; it ain't going to be easy – we will repeal Bill 45 and Bill 46.

I understand that there's probably a 99.999 per cent chance that it's going to pass tonight. But for these reasons, Mr. Speaker, because of Supreme Court issues and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, because we believe this is bad business, and we believe this is just dealing in bad faith, in unnecessary, heavy-handed legislation to further erode workers' collective bargaining rights, I on behalf of the Alberta Liberals oppose this, and I ask other members of the government just to really search your souls and do the right thing.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29 2(a) is available. Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like the hon. member to comment on a few of the things I'm about to address with him. I guess I was very disappointed by the fact that this government chose to bring in time allocation on what I think are the most important bills actually facing this Legislature in this House sitting and the fact that we are going on, in my view, what can only be conceived as a trampling of workers' rights, the collective bargaining process, and, in fact, are engaging in an exercise that will basically take away our constitutional rights as enshrined in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

You know, say what you want about 1977, when Premier Lougheed took away the right to strike. Whether I agree with that or not, he actually had the foresight to put in the right to binding arbitration. That was the law of the land for the last 35 years, and in my view it actually allowed for the uneasy labour peace to exist. If you take away that right to strike, there has to be a vehicle for the collective bargaining process to work and exist because since that time, in 1977, we've had the enshrining of the Canadian Constitution in 1982. At that time we brought in the freedom of association. We in this country and in this province have a right to be able to join a union and to collectively bargain.

There's been much case law that says that we have a right to do that. You go down and you look. You need to have an ability to do these things. All workers in this province and in this country have that right, and the court is repeatedly saying that collective bargaining must be meaningful under section 2(d) and that it requires a process of consideration by the employer of employee representations and discussions with their representatives. This government's actions, by taking away the right to arbitration and forcing the union at gunpoint to negotiate a settlement in this manner, to me, are an affront to our rights under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It's not even that hard. This is an easy second-year law school exam, for crying out loud. You look at this. They would be embarrassed to put it on a test because every second-year law student in the province would come up with the answer and say: yes; this is unconstitutional. It really is. I can see no way around this provision. If you look at the case law that's emerged in this country since 1982, this is an affront to the right for workers to organize, the right to collectively bargain, and the right to a fair and representative hearing.

Given that why would this government be choosing to go down a path that not only disrespects workers and disrespects the process that was in place and, in fact, engaging in a law that is probably unconstitutional despite the fact that, you know, we're continuing to take it out on the backs of middle-class income earners, people doing the good work of this province? Why are they doing this at this time?

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. You've made some very important points. I can only speculate as to why this Conservative government would make this decision. I just thought: jeez, these guys are wilder than the Wildrose. At the end of the day this is a further erosion of our democracy. That's what my sense is. You know, binding arbitration is a very good thing. It's not often that unions have gone on strike for wages. The unions welcome binding arbitration. They do not know the outcomes of the decisions. It's in the Constitution because in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms they recognize that civil discord is . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, thank you. Unfortunately, 29(2)(a) has elapsed, and we must move on to the next main speaker. That will be the hon. Associate Minister for Regional Recovery and Reconstruction for Southwest Alberta.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise here today to speak to this bill, Bill 46, the Public Service Salary Restraint Act. I do want to thank the members that are in the gallery that have stayed here all night. While we know that this is a very contentious issue – these aren't easy issues to deal with – I think they can all be assured that even those on this side of the House that are supporting this bill don't take it very lightly. There has been lots of conversation about the value of members of the public service. I don't think we can underscore that enough.

You know, this last summer the Premier and the Minister of Municipal Affairs asked me to take on the roles and responsibilities of helping rebuild the southwest portion of Alberta from the worst floods in the history of this province. In doing so, I've been able to work with a number of public servants that have gone above and beyond what you would even expect most people to do. They do that not necessarily because they're public servants but because they're Albertans, and that's the Alberta spirit, and that's what they do. It's no different whether they're in the public service or not in the public service. It's just what we do as Albertans.

I think we need to make sure that as we go through this debate, we remember that we are all in this together, whether you are a member of the public service as part of the union, whether you're a member of this Legislature as part of a political party, or whether you're a regular working Albertan that's a taxpayer that might not be involved in a union of any sort. Those people, too, are hard-working Albertans, and they deserve to have their interests represented as taxpayers in this Legislature as well.

In fact, one of the reasons why I believe, Mr. Speaker, that I'm here is because I grew up in very much a working-class family. My dad and my mother I don't think got much more than a high school education. In fact, I don't even think my father completed grade 10, but he went on to have a successful career as an average working Albertan in the construction sector and was able to move up and is a superintendent for a company that builds The Keg restaurants. He travels all over North America building The Keg restaurants. You know, I saw as I grew up in my family with two other brothers that my parents worked very, very hard to put food on the table, to make sure that we had every opportunity to succeed in life, whether it was through playing sports or having the proper equipment or supplies for school, clothes, those types of things, the basic necessities. My parents worked very, very hard. I know at times it was a struggle for them.

I know that at times they were very, very appreciative of living in a jurisdiction that had the types of public services that we have but also had a government that looked to making sure that they maximized the amount of money that they got to keep from their paycheque or maximized the amount of money that they were able to save on buying supplies, food, whatever, without having to pay a sales tax. That's something that they very much appreciated, and I know that is something that helped out my particular family.

I think this is something we're talking about when we talk about fiscal restraint. I know that I haven't been shy in my time as an MLA, since I was elected in 2008, about talking about the importance of managing the government purse. That does mean everything. It does mean the ability to deal with public-sector salaries. It does mean the ability to make sure that we're offering programs that are relevant and effective and efficient to Albertans. It does mean taking a look at our bureaucracy, our levels of management, and making those appropriate decisions.

You know, there is some misinformation that has gone through tonight. I find it incredible – in fact, it's bewildering, actually – the stance taken by some of the members opposite, particularly the Official Opposition, who are the first ones to stand up and say: this government is spending out of control; it needs to curb spending. I mean, they've put out tons and tons of information about holding the line on salaries, those types of things yet then want to stand up – my guess? – to do nothing but pander for votes, frankly, and say that they're now the champions of this process.

In fact, I was at the economic summit hosted by our government about a year ago, and there was a cross-section of panelists talking about our budget and what we need to do. Their former campaign manager – the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre said that they were going to run on the exact same platform they did last time; he just said that tonight – advocated a 10 per cent rollback of public-sector spending, including all of the salaries. Fair enough. You know, this particular party might not have gone to that extreme, but it's very difficult to tell because their position changes from day to day, week to week, month to month on a lot of these things, trying to figure out where exactly they might be able to convince Albertans to vote for them. Mr. Speaker, what I can say is that as a member of this Assembly I don't go about picking my stances based on that type of illogical thinking.

As I mentioned, there is extreme value in our public servants. This isn't an easy decision. It's certainly not. I know that the ministers that were involved in this didn't take any glee in doing this. It's a very, very difficult decision, no doubt. Certainly, if the world was perfect and everything was ideal, you know, there would be a negotiated settlement already in place that works for the members of the public service, that works for the government, that allows us to continue to commit to our building Alberta plan, that has us living within our means so that we can keep taxes low, keep our economy prosperous, and continue to enjoy the quality of life and the quality of public services that we have today. But, unfortunately, that's not reality.

I guess I wouldn't expect anything different from the Official Opposition because they have developed this habit of standing up and saying one thing and realizing that in the reality of governing, you have to do something completely different. I think what we need to realize is that this is about the economics of the provincial budget and the commitment that we made to Albertans that we're going to continue to keep those gains that we've made as a province in being the best-managed fiscal jurisdiction in North America.

You have to do that through a number of measures. I think that results-based budgeting is one of them, Mr. Speaker. The initiative of eliminating 10 per cent of the management-level public services which, I might add – I think that we need to set the record straight on that. If you got rid of every single government manager, that would save $3 billion – $3 billion – in a budget that's between $35 billion and $40 billion annually in this province. That's less than 10 per cent, which is pretty typical of organizations this large, to have that level of management.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that's not to say that you still shouldn't maybe look at eliminating, you know, possible redundancy in management, and we are. We've made the commitment to reduce management levels by 10 per cent over three years, so we are taking that on. But the other big piece that you do need to take on is this whole idea around public-sector salaries. We've worked with teachers, and we've worked with doctors, and we've got them to work with us on living within our means and pushing that agenda forward as part of our building Alberta plan.

The plan is to make sure we're doing that to remain prosperous, to keep taxes low, which, I will remind everybody, public-sector workers also benefit from, as well as to maintain the sustainability of our quality public services moving into the future. While the process sometimes isn't as perfect as we always want it to be, I think it's important, Mr. Speaker, that what we do is to show a commitment to Albertans that we are willing to do this. We led by example by freezing MLA salaries, and we're going to work with our employee groups to get that same type of restraint so that we continue to protect the gains that we've made financially in this province over the last several decades.

I think what also needs to be brought up, Mr. Speaker, is that we do want to get to the negotiating table and work on that agreement – okay? – but you need a partner at that negotiation table to negotiate with. It's fine to just stand up there like the hon. Member for Airdrie did and say: we would negotiate a freeze. That's what you said that you would do.

Mr. Anderson: I said that we would try.

Mr. Fawcett: You would try. What happens if they're not at the table? How are you going to negotiate it? [interjections] That doesn't...

The Speaker: Hon. members, please. The hon. associate minister has the floor. Let's let him conclude. Section 29(2)(a) will be available thereafter. You can put your questions to him then. Agreed?

Please continue.

Mr. Fawcett: This is where I'm going, Mr. Speaker. Ideally, that would be fantastic – fantastic – if we can do it, but you need the other person at the negotiating table to be able to do that. It's very clear with this employee group that they have not the desire to be there at this time. The intention of this legislation is to encourage them to get back to that table so that we can do exactly that, hon. member. That's what the purpose of this legislation is supposed to be.

Mr. Speaker, this gets back to, as I said, the very basic reason why I believe I ran to represent my constituents in Calgary-Klein, why I believe it's an honour to be a part of this Assembly, why I believe it's an honour to represent the constituency of Calgary-Klein, and that's to make sure that we're making the right decisions even if they're the tough decisions. I will never shy away from that. I will never be intimidated. I will never be bullied away from that.

I truly, honestly believe in my heart that this is a tough decision. It isn't going to be easy. We are asking for some sacrifice not just from the group that this legislation applies to but from all of our employee groups, whether they be management, whether they be teachers, whether they be doctors, whether they be the good public servants, that work and are represented by the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, or whether it be future employee groups that are negotiating their contracts.

I think we have an opportunity today, Mr. Speaker, to show some fiscal restraint, to control public spending, and as a result, future generations of Albertans are going to benefit significantly. They're going to have an economy like the one that we have today, that's leading the country and is the envy of the world. They're going to have jobs. Then the result of that, which is the foundation of why, I believe, Albertans have voted for this party for 40-some years, is a strong economy, one that's generating investment and job growth and is going to allow us to invest in the public services that create the quality of life that we enjoy today.

Those are the expectations that Albertans have. They understand it, and we're asking all Albertans to work with us to make sure that we maintain that advantage.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

12:40

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. I have Airdrie, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Anderson: Just a question to the hon. member. As someone who's on this side of the House, sometimes I feel like you think – not you. I'm not going to accuse you of motives here. But sometimes the things we hear in this Assembly make me feel...

Mr. Eggen: Nauseated.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. Nauseated.

... like some folks in this Assembly might believe that our public-sector workers are idiots. It's almost like some folks think that if the government goes into a negotiation – do you not think that the head of the AUPE knows that the Wildrose or the PCs, whoever is in government, aren't going to go to them and ask for 0, 0, 2, 2 or something like that as their starting point? Do you really think that they're sitting there thinking: "They're going to come over here, and they're going to ask for 3, 3, 3, and 4? That's what they're going to ask for. That's going to be their initial position." I mean, clearly, they know that we're going to ask for a freeze when we have a deficit. Clearly, they know that.

An Hon. Member: That's why they ignored bargaining and went straight to arbitration.

Mr. Anderson: Well, no, actually.

For 35 years, associate minister, Peter Lougheed, whom you clearly respect and admire, as many other people do in this Assembly – I certainly do – put arbitration on the books so that for these types of disputes, where the government goes in and asks for a freeze or a 1 per cent increase or whatever and then they just can't find agreement with the union under any circumstances, there's recourse. They can't strike – they made that illegal; that's fine – but they can't even go to arbitration now. They can't even go to arbitration to get an arbitrated agreement.

Now, I know the arbitrator might come back and say: "You know what? We're not going to give you your freeze. We're going to go with 2 or 3 or 2 and a half or whatever." We know that's a possibility. But why would you take away that right for the unions to say: "Look, you know what? We don't agree with you, government." Government can go and make their case and say: "This is why the freeze is justified. This is reason why we're asking for a freeze for a year or two." There's nothing wrong. In fact, I commend you for making that case. Good on you for making that case.

But when you don't get your way, associate minister, and you don't get the freeze that you've asked for, what makes you think you have a right to then rip up 35 years of Premier Lougheed's legacy like this, rip apart their arbitration rights like they don't even exist and impose a contract? Instead, just go to the arbitrator and make your case. Say that this is why it should be a 0, 0, 1, 1 – in your case this is what you have in this bill – or that this is why it should be 0, 0, 2, 3 or whatever your negotiation was. Make your case to the arbitrator – that's the law – but don't take away their legal rights. Why are you taking away their legal rights on this bill?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In answer to that question I'd like to ask a question of my own. What would this member do, what would this party do – and I'm not sure he can answer that because they seem to be all over the map, at least on the last bill and, I suspect, probably on this bill as well – to keep their campaign promise if an arbitrator came back and awarded one of the public-sector unions a 4 per cent salary increase? [interjections] What would he do?

The Speaker: Hon. members, please. Show some respect here. I didn't see a whole bunch of heckling when Airdrie was speaking, and I'm hoping to see no more while the associate minister is trying to answer what Airdrie had asked.

Go ahead.

Mr. Fawcett: Yes. So I would like to ask the member: what would they do if that was the case? Again, I mean, who is he trying to fool here? At least be honest with that. Is he trying to fool the fiscal conservative base of his party by saying, "Oh, we're going to hold the line on spending, but if an arbitrator says that we can't do that, we're not going to do that," or is he trying to fool and pander for the votes of the union here, Mr. Speaker?

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, there's a doctor in the House, and the good doctor has made a diagnosis. This government is sick. They're sick, and they actually need a heart and a brain transplant. They do.

Mr. Speaker, this government campaigned on no new taxes and no service cuts, and they've broken every promise. School fees have gone up, tuition has gone up, seniors are paying more, working families are paying more and getting less, and they're . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, the time for 29(2)(a) has expired.

We'll move on to Edmonton-Calder, followed by the Associate Minister of Regional Recovery and Reconstruction for High River, and then Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to point out, first and foremost, that I have been sitting here since 7:30 p.m. This is the first chance I've gotten to get up, and it's now 10 to 1 in the morning. This closure not only is undemocratic, but it interferes with my ability to do my job as an MLA, right? I was elected to sit in this seat. Lord knows, I spent a lot of time, hundreds of hours with hundreds of volunteers, many years of hard work to speak in this Legislature for the people that I represent. So when these people put closure and those undemocratic things there, they get in the way of me and my ability to do my job. I find that offensive. Certainly, we will fight at every turn to defeat that kind of behaviour.

With Bill 46 I think it's important – and I was trying to think of a different perspective, having listened to so many people here this evening. I think part of what we need to look at here, ladies and gentlemen in the Legislature, is the fabric of our civil service and the idea that our civil service is an essential service. Lots of people use empty words about that, but you can only truly build up that civil service if you pay them in an equitable way that fits in with the economy of the jurisdiction in which they're functioning.

Here in the province of Alberta, Mr. Speaker, we have an economy that is growing exponentially. We have a population that's growing exponentially as well. We hear about that a lot in this Legislature. But we do not have a civil service that is growing commensurate with the population nor are their wages growing in keeping with the growth of our economy. So that is unsustainable in the most fundamental way.

You know that we attract people into civil service because it is a people-oriented job, mostly, right? So you attract people that have a certain demeanour. They want to help. They want to somehow make a contribution to our society. But they demand and know that that has to be reciprocated by their employer, that they have to be compensated in a fair way and that they have something that they can count on. Yes, working in public service has a certain amount of security that maybe some other jobs don't have, but you pay for that security by maybe a lower wage, and you pay as well by some compromises you make through how that wage is determined.

After 30 years of arbitration being the norm for determining what those wage and working conditions are, to breach that confidence, to somehow suddenly hit up against a stone wall, to say that you're no longer going to use that normal system of determining wages and working conditions by bringing forward some draconian, ridiculous legislation like this Bill 46, an absolute piece of garbage, as far as I'm concerned, you are breaking the trust with those public servants. And, Lord knows, it'll take you a long time if you ever regain that trust with those same people.

I know that there are public servants who have spent half the evening up here watching this sort of spectacle take place, and I have to say that although there are certain individuals in here that do a fantastic job, a lot of it is quite embarrassing because we're not talking about the substance of why these people are up here watching and the many thousands of workers are watching the deliberation of this debate. They're not watching for the empty words of saying: oh, we sure do like you public servants. Right? They're looking to look after their families, to make sure that there is a wage that they can live on here in the province of Alberta that can actually pay for the bills that they need to pay every month. Simple as that.

When I start looking at the wages that are being paid here in this province – because the economy is growing. You'd never know it from being in here. You'd think we were living in some kind of a 1930s dust bowl recession, the way these people like to talk about absolute nonsense of the greatest threat to whatever. You know, it's because you're too cheap to collect the revenues that we need to actually pay for the government services in this province, right? You want to redirect that money somehow, magically, to I don't know where. A lot of it just gets lost, I think.

Anyway, the last time I could find some figures that could reflect the differential for a public employee in this province was 2010, making an average of $57,000. The average salary for a non-unionized public-sector management person was more than $150,000, Mr. Speaker, in this same place during that same time period. So you have this differential, this inequality, this inequity, and we're only exacerbating that by, as I say, this pea soup garbage bill, Bill 46, bringing in something like, whatever it is here, 0, 0, 1, and 1. I mean, how could you possibly think you can get away with that? That is not going to pass any muster test of legality, right? And it's some way to send some lost message that you're still the Conservative Party, a draconian, you know, beat-on-the-workers party. People don't believe that any more. You've lost that title to somebody else, and you've lost the trust of the people that could deal with that anyway.

I've been listening for the last 48 hours as well about bringing in the doctors' agreement and the teachers' agreement and stuff. I mean, what a bunch of garbage, really. The doctors' agreement says, for example – here it is over the next one, two, three, four years, okay? Yes, they took a zero per cent increase over this year. Oh, well. There you go. They also got a $68 million lump sum to somehow lubricate that zero, make them feel a bit better about themselves, right? The next year they get a 2.5 per cent increase. Reasonable and normal, I would say. I'm not going to, you know, be feeling anything against the doctors getting that rate. The year after that, 2.5 per cent again. Again, probably meeting that cost-of-living, COLA, index in some reasonable way. Who knows where the economy is going at this point, but it's certainly growing. We know that, for sure, growing at a normal rate, which is good. Then the year after that, the fourth year, again cost of living, COLA, is written right into their agreement.

I mean, that's not 0, 0, 1, and 1, and that's based on a level that starts off very high. For doctors, I would venture to say, it's nothing like $57,000 that's the average wage. I think it's at least $300,000 for the average doctor. So there is one mythology that I wish you would stop talking about. If anybody tries to do that next in their so-called speeches over there, I will be sure to shout you down, and the Speaker will be very upset about that, I'm sure.

In talking about the teachers' agreement, well, that wasn't an agreement. That was legislated on the teachers, quite frankly, with heaped helpings of this sort of guilt and, you know, veiled threats and all of these other things. Even so, they still had to legislate that agreement.

So I'm seeing a trend here. I'm seeing a story that is being written, and the story is fiction, right? I'm an English literature teacher, and I can see people constructing a story, a story which is fine when you're maybe writing a novel, but when you're actually legislating people's lives, that is not acceptable. The story is trying to somehow suggest that, "Oh, well, we're living within our means; we have to make these tough choices," like this is a family, like we're living in a sitcom or something.

I mean, that's not even reasonable either because we know, like I said before, that this economy is growing here in the province of Alberta. People with eyes can see, living in the economy like we do. We all know that this government last week announced that they have a surplus of over a billion dollars this year, okay? That's a significant improvement over projections, and it's because the economy is growing. Whoop-de-do, you know, as if we can't see that with our own eyes. We work hard to build an energy economy here and diversify our economy. We certainly don't want to leave our civil service further behind than where they are at this present time, right?

So, you know, on a very practical level, even if you're just looking dispassionately at the situation here in Alberta, there's no need for wage austerity at this time in the province. There's no logical reason, there's no economic reason, and certainly it only pushes back that differential, as I say, between the wages of our public service and the rest of the economy, making them ostensibly poorer with the zero per cent, zero per cent. Zero per cent is not level. It's a cut.

For the years 2000 to 2010, Mr. Speaker, this province had the lowest public-sector wages compared to gross domestic product of any province in the country. For those of you over there who don't have an idea about what gross domestic product is, it's the sum total of the goods and services that are produced in an economy, right? And it reflects – if the wages and that gross domestic product start to separate from themselves, then you end up in an unsustainable situation. So you think: "Oh, well. Aren't we doing so well?" It's all relative to how much is being produced, and what the cost to live is in a given place. So, yeah, sure, we have higher wages for teachers than some other provinces, but it costs more to live here, so that's perfectly normal.

Mr. Speaker, I just had so many things that popped into my mind about this. Bill 45 as well: I missed that boat entirely, again, because of this ridiculous closure thing, that I just don't like very much at all. I'm sure they'll manage to get in eventually, though.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I just wish that I didn't have this Bill 46 in my hand. I wish that we could move forward with the arbitration that was in fact scheduled to take place here in a couple of months. It's not as though, "Oh, well, we've come to an impasse; the AUPE won't come to the table," and all of this. I mean, that's all utter nonsense. They're happy to negotiate. We all know what the endgame is. We've been doing it for 30 years. It's "Oh, well, let's get all blustery and so forth," the arbitrator comes in, we get a reasonable deal, and away we go, right? Instead, suddenly, we run up against this brick wall in the last week of our Legislative Assembly here, where you want to have this big fight, you know. It seems so artificial, but, Lord knows, it's deadly real for the people who have to face the pay cuts that will come as a result of this Bill 46.

I will stand in opposition to that. I will stand united with the growing number of people. If you think you can divide the public service away from the general economy, you're dead wrong on that. I was in Calder on Saturday and Sunday, and they all said: Dave, go get them, and give 'em hell. By golly, that's what I'm here to do tonight, and I will do it tomorrow afternoon, and I will do it tomorrow night again. I will do it tomorrow afternoon and then tomorrow night again and until we can resolve this issue. Maybe if I had one too many nights in there, I'll be here by myself. That's the only thing. Maybe I counted wrong.

Anyway, those are my feelings on this, Mr. Speaker, and I'd be happy to answer any questions.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. I have Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta's GDP is approximately $278 billion, 22 per cent of which comes from the resource sector, I'd be interested to know the member's comments on whether that taints the percentages that he threw out there.

Mr. Eggen: I didn't hear what he said.

The Speaker: Let's move on, then, to Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Eggen: He's got to speak more clearly, right?

Well, GDP – what did you say? The percentage of the GDP and then blah, blah, blah, mumble, mumble, mumble. I mean, you have to . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, did you wish to respond to Gold Bar? Is that what . . .

Mr. Eggen: No. I'm saying that I didn't understand what he said.

The Speaker: I thought you turned down the opportunity, so I recognized Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. I'd be happy to return if you wish. You're yielding the floor, then, to Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, are you? Okay.

Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, why don't you continue, then.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to ask a question here to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder. In his comments regarding second reading he spoke about an inequity. Now, clearly, as he outlined, there is an inequity between non-union employees and managers earning three times the salary of unionized employees. So there is definitely a differential and an inequity there.

1:00

I was wondering if the Member for Edmonton-Calder could comment on the fact that there's also gender inequity going on here, where the reality is that when we look at public-sector positions, unionized employees, there are many more women than men whereas when we look at private-sector wages and when they increase, it seems that for the private sector there is an inherent inequality and penalization for women, who, again, choose more than men to join the public sector and work in unionized positions. So it seems like there's a direct attack on women, on women's wages within this province. Again, I guess I'll ask the hon. member how he feels this bill will impact women in the workforce and the wages that they earn.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, my seatmate and Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. I could hear him crystal clear, by the way. Great articulation.

There is something inherent here. People always say: you know, how is it that women doing the same job as men and so forth are making so much less? Well, so many more women are working in the public service and starting off at this lower level. The wage freeze is an indirect – I'm sure it's inadvertent, but I think it's worth pointing out that it ultimately puts this inequality between genders and the wages that they're making as an average over the whole population into a greater gap.

We should just think about those things, right? I mean, I'm sure that that wasn't written right into the bill. "Let's go get those women and make sure that we make that gap grow, because, Lord knows, we'll blast them back to the 1950s and whatever." But that is the sum; that is the result of it. I come from a family of more females than males, and either they work in the public service or aspired to do so, and I will not let that happen to them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. On the issue of the wage gap and how that is enhanced by this bill, I'm sure the member knows, of course, that Alberta falls behind the rest of the country and that the wage gap between women and men in Alberta is the largest throughout the whole country and that, in fact, when most people talk about the historic decrease in the wage gap, we seemed to have avoided that – I'm sure these guys are all really happy about that – in Alberta. The historic decrease has been because of, in many cases, the public sector and public-sector jobs and public-sector wages, and that's what's allowed women to start to approach equality in most cases other than in Alberta.

My question is, then, to the Member for Edmonton-Calder. Given that the outcome of this particular deal under Bill 46 will be that three years from now public-sector workers will have effectively taken a 5.1 per cent cut, does he think that this bill is going to actually increase the earning gap between women and men in Alberta?

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) has now expired timewise, and we must move on to the next speaker. That would be the Associate Minister of Regional Recovery and Reconstruction for High River.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's always an honour to rise in this House and have a healthy debate. I wouldn't even say that this, to me, is bittersweet; it's just bitter. As many of you know, I come from the public sector as a paramedic. In fact, I represented Calgary paramedics for the better part of three years and worked with my counterparts in Edmonton and other parts of the province.

What I can tell you about the union: I have a fond affection for many of the people because they taught me civics. It's one of the things that the union does really well. They know their civics. They know how to communicate, they understand government, and they understand how to get their message out.

For all those people I've worked alongside, they work hard, and their intentions are always well meant. So, Mr. Speaker, it's just not bittersweet for me; it's bitter. But like my counterpart and friend the Associate Minister of Regional Recovery and Reconstruction for Southwest Alberta, sometimes you have to make the tough decisions, and that doesn't make it easy. I could speak until I'm blue in the face, and that won't make a difference to the folks in the gallery or the public sector, because it's still a tough pill to swallow.

Mr. Speaker, what we're asking is for them to come back to the table. Being part of the union environment, I know how easy it is to get caught up in the day-to-day: "Let's bargain for the 12 days, and let's just go to arbitration because maybe that's just our best bet for whatever." They're taking a gamble. But we've heard about the economy, and I'm so proud to hear that the members opposite are talking about our economy and how we're managing that and how it's getting better. That's the point.

Mr. Speaker, what I teach my children is that when times are getting better, it's time to batten down the hatches, it's time to save for the future, and it's time to have the debates that the members from the ND caucus are having at that bargaining table about that differential between women and men. Those are healthy debates. Those are the debates we should be having.

It's not just about the wage, and I know from being at that bargaining table that you negotiate everything before you get to the wage. Everything. We have an opportunity, Mr. Speaker, not only as government, not only as opposition but for those members in the gallery and for the people that represent those unions that are well meaning to change things in Alberta, to have a better dialogue between the unions and the government. That's why I got involved in the union. I thought that we could have a better dialogue, that we could show respect towards one another, and that we could actually make some headway, that we could have some meaningful, fulsome discussions about labour relations in this province.

Mr. Speaker, what I can tell you is this. There are two sides to the story. The Member for Airdrie on November 3, 2008, read the Emergency Health Services Act, Bill 43, into this House. He introduced that. Unwittingly, what he did was that he took away my democratic right to choose my representation, and what we've heard is that you should have the right to choose your representation. You should have your right to choose your bargaining unit. But that's not what happened.

While I respect the members on the other side of that union and while we had this discussion, respectfully we felt we didn't belong there. So I and my members in Calgary and in Edmonton and in other bargaining units went to every single member of this government, and all we asked for was a vote. They said: it's between the unions and the legislation that was created. Wait a minute, Mr. Speaker. That's legislation that fosters the idea that the union is in control. But the minority, over 2,000 people – and you're frowning at me, but it was your husband, I believe, that helped us communicate that.

Mr. Speaker, what we said – this is what it comes down to. Then we went to the union, the ND caucuses. Then, funnily enough, the Member for Airdrie wouldn't meet with us because we were the union. Wow. We went to the leader of the ND caucus, and he wouldn't meet with us. In fact, the one time we met, he didn't even show up. To me, that's not fair. We went to the Liberal caucus, and that member knows that we lobbied hard. All we said was: inside the union is a group that champions the democratic right . . .

Mr. Anderson: Point of order.

Mr. Fraser: . . . groups that actually watch people like Rosa Parks and Martin Luther King and the way that they conducted themselves, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. associate minister, I hesitate to interrupt, but Airdrie has a point of order, and he's probably going to give us a citation and tell us what it is.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Anderson: Here I was, Mr. Speaker, enjoying some good hot wings and some good pizza to kind of refuel for the battle here, and according to Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j) I heard the member opposite say that he as a union member asked that the union try to meet with me as the sponsor of a bill while I was over on that side of the House. I think it had something to do with Alberta Health Services. It was unclear what it was, but he said that they had asked to meet with me and that I had said no. That is categorically untrue. Never once did that union that that member represented ask me for a meeting and then I said no to that meeting. Never once. He needs to withdraw that allegation – it is untrue – or supply evidence, table the invitation or something that I said no to. Table it in this House.

The Speaker: Hon. associate minister, you wish to reply?

Mr. Fraser: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In fact, it was the union representing me at the time that reached out to him, and the truth is that I called his office numerous times and left messages without a return phone call. However, from my perspective and when I was part of that bargaining unit, you did not say no to me, but you said no to my bargaining unit, according to them. I withdraw that if that makes the member feel better, but I did make the phone calls, and they were not returned.

1:10

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. I think everybody knows, because you've heard me say this many times, that the rules and traditions and the protocols that have governed this institution for hundreds of years have always accommodated two differing points of view on the same issue. We've just heard two different points of view and a withdrawal. That closes the matter.

Let's move on with the main speech. The hon. associate minister.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order as well.

The Speaker: Hon. Liberal leader, you have a point of order as well. What is your citation?

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Dr. Sherman: I have Standing Order 23(h), "makes allegations against another Member," and (i), "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member." I haven't reviewed the Blues yet, Mr. Speaker, but I believe he said something about the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and unions and shackling somebody. I would like the hon. member, unless I misheard – I may have misheard. But if there's an allegation made that I said something about unions, I'd like the member to clarify.

Mr. Fraser: No, Mr. Speaker, that wasn't the case. In fact, I was just referencing the member. He knows that we met with him many times on this issue. Again, it goes back to: we were just asking for a vote. We're asking to choose our representation.

The Speaker: In other words, there was no imputation of any motive of any sort during your comments?

Mr. Fraser: No, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: That clarifies that message. Thank you.

Dr. Sherman: I thank the member for explaining.

Debate Continued

The Speaker: Let us move on, then.

You still have some time remaining on your main speech.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me get to the point really quickly. Really, it's not about us versus them. I'm just talking about the time and the situation because there are lots of allegations that this government is not making the time.

I guess, Mr. Speaker, what I'm saying, particularly to the union members up above – and I've no disregard for that group. What had happened happened. In fact, you know, when I had to hand over the reins to my membership, it was done graciously. I think the member has done a good job for that union in bargaining good contracts. It wasn't what we wanted. That's just the way that the legislation rode out. In fact, what I'm saying is that you can't always agree with the legislation. When it works for you, you can agree with the legislation. But if it happens to go against you – in this particular instance it's one time, not this draconian legislation that will be in place forever. It goes both ways.

Mr. Speaker, all I'm saying is that these are not easy decisions. These members know, particularly the ones that have known me within those bargaining units, that I fought hard for my group. I represented them honestly, just like I do for my constituents. Yes, public servants did an amazing job in High River, and I can't give them enough, you know, accolades. They're important, but so are the taxpayers, that I represent as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the hon. member if he's not at all concerned about how arbitration rights seem to be the balance that's been set in many, many jurisdictions for the public union's legal inability to strike and if he's not very, very concerned about how that removes individual freedoms.

I want to remind the individual member that in the last election tens of thousands of people in southern Alberta were very, very concerned with your government's quick and easy decision to legislate away property rights, the same way you're trying to do a quick legislation ramrod here of individuals' rights to have arbitration when they're providing valuable – valuable – public services. I remember hundreds and hundreds of signs that had the arrow through the PC: don't vote PC. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm sorry to interrupt.

There are just too many conversations going on here. The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat actually has the floor. Some of you may not recognize that, but he does. So let's not provoke. Let's not take debate. Let's just let this hon. member speak, please.

Mr. Barnes: Hon. member, are you concerned about taking away individuals' rights to arbitration under Bill 46?

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, what I can tell you, just further to my story, is that we took our concerns to the labour board, what was supposed to be a mediator in this situation. What was further troubling to me is that the labour board said that, in fact, we actually have the right to choose our own bargaining unit because we're a unique class of employees within Alberta Health Services that could fit and carve out their own bargaining unit.

You know what happened, Mr. Speaker, the closer we got to that and there were implications nationally for the union that was representing me? They put us under administration. If there's anything unethical, if there's anything undemocratic, it's taking away the money and the rights to work on your behalf, particularly when I didn't break any laws. I followed the constitution of the union. I represented them well, as you well know because I've met with you and many of the other people on their behalf respectfully. That's what was taken away.

What I'm saying, too, is that arbitration is not always the answer. In this particular case – to the hon. member – we're asking them to come back to the bargaining table and to try it for another 12 days, to try it for another 24 days. Why is 12 days the magic number before we call arbitration? It's two sides to tango. I think that we can have a resolve, but we need them back at the table, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I have the hon. Liberal leader next.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the hon. member's remarks. I'm not sure if the hon. member still works as a paramedic. I still work as an emerg doc, and I still regularly meet with his colleagues and his college colleagues. Here are the working conditions of the members that he once led. Looking at the Alberta Health Services website, ambulances in a life-threatening situation only arrive 50 per cent of the time under the eight-minute time limit. They're still stuck in hospital. They're supposed to arrive 90 per cent of the time in eight minutes, not 50 per cent. They're supposed to be in and out of hospital in 30 minutes 9 times out of 10. They're stuck in hospital for more than an hour 5 times out of 10.

The government's response to this is not to get them out of hospital on time; it's to centralize the dispatch. Experienced paramedic dispatchers, who understand the health care conditions and the region, are being replaced by protocols and inexperienced people. The injury rates of the members he once used to lead are through the roof. We won't even talk about the emotional injury rates, the stress of seeing human beings suffering and not arriving in time. Mr. Speaker, I still see the patients that his colleagues bring in.

One of these bills – it's Bill 45, right? Is that correct? Is it Bill 46? [interjection] Bill 46. Sorry. Bills 45 and 46, the sibling bills. My question is to the hon. member. When it comes to the working conditions and the safety of the members you once represented and the patients that they looked after and a fair wage, hon. member, are you still fighting for those good people?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I regret that 29(2)(a)'s time has expired, and we now must move on to the next speaker. I show Calgary-Buffalo as being next on the list.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As always, it's an honour to be able to speak to these bills regardless of their draconian nature. It really is nice to be elected and to represent constituents and to speak on important issues.

On that front I'd like to go through a few things quickly. I think I've been here all night, but because of closure, that was introduced by this government, in my view an unnecessary act, one that removes my ability to advocate on important issues and to allow all members of this honourable House to do so, I feel somewhat cheated. I think that if we were going to do this in fullness and in a fair fashion, we should have discussed this without the time limits of closure put around us.

From my view, these two bills, 45 and 46, are the most important bills we are going to be discussing in this Legislature. I think you have to look at these bills in tandem. In my view, they substantially change the labour negotiation processes we've seen in this province. It substantially takes away not only the union's ability to go to a fair arbiter to have their collective agreements negotiated, but I think it's also an affront to our constitutional rights and freedoms as they were signed in 1982. There's much case law that goes that way, and I'll stand by what I said before. I believe this government is putting in an unconstitutional bill that, in my view, is against what our Constitution says.

You know, I know we're here talking about Bill 46, and this is the third part of that bill, which is essentially hamstringing the union into accepting a 0, 0, 1 per cent, and 1 wage increase. Really, this is done with no ability for the members of the union to really operate in a full and fair fashion, that has been established in this province since 1977. There had always been the right to go to binding arbitration should the negotiation process fail. That's where we are in this process. The government has signed on to this ability as well as the union members. It was headed down that track, and that arbiter is able to fairly evaluate the union's position as well as the government's position. Both were able to make their cases known, to put up all the information they had, and for that arbitrator to recognize what he thought was a fair deal given the circumstances of what is happening in the Alberta economy.

That gets me to where we are. What that arbitrator would have had to deal with was the fact that this Alberta economy is clicking on all cylinders. It has wages in the private sector up, retail sales up, home sales up. Essentially, these are good times in this province for anyone except anyone who is involved in a public-sector job and the like. That's what this government is taking away from union members, an ability to go to an arbitrator, which would evaluate the Alberta situation in full clarity, in a full lens as to what is going on.

The reason why we are doing this is because this government, in my view, has mismanaged our finances in such a way that it is deplorable. I would disagree fundamentally with what the minister of flood recovery put forward here, that this province has been run in a fiscally sound manner. How can anyone suggest that when since 1971 we've taken in . . . [A timer sounded] You know the rest of it.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the time allocated for second reading of Bill 46. Therefore, I regret having to interrupt you, but pursuant to Government Motion 52, that was carried on December 2, 2013, I must now put the question forward.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 1:24 a.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, December 3, 2013

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. As we contemplate and prepare for our deliberations and debates, let us be mindful of the footprints we are creating today and in which others will walk tomorrow. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us begin with school groups and the hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks for the honour of always highlighting our schools first. Today with us we have two classes from Lorelei elementary school accompanied by their teachers, Mr. George and Mrs. Aker. I had the pleasure of spending some time with them, and I have to tell you that they are prepared, second to none, when it comes to social studies and government curriculum. Accompanying them today are a number of committed parents: Mrs. Boomer, Mrs. Harrison, Mr. Duggan, Mrs. Yigit, Mr. Abougoush, Mrs. Paquette, and Mrs. Lopez. I would ask the entire classes and parents and teachers to rise and accept the warm welcome of our Assembly today.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

If not, let us move on to other guests, starting with the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a number of staff who work for the public service. With us today are staff from the office of the Public Trustee, who manage the assets and finances of vulnerable Albertans on their behalf. There are also some staff here from the ministries of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, Human Services, Energy, and Health who are part of a leadership group, 25 E.

From the office of the Public Trustee are Nicole Nerenberg, Chad Ganske, Karina Maldonado, Marion Flores, Sharon Baxter, Mandi Al-Awaid, Chris Jesswein, and Taneya Aaron. From the other ministries, the leadership group: Jeff Steinbach, Andrew Schoepf, Irene Pankiw, Taryn Adams, and Brenda Kam. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Wellness, followed by St. Albert.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to introduce Kelly Olstad, president of the Alberta College of Pharmacists, and Greg Eberhart, registrar of the Alberta College of Pharmacists. Mr. Olstad and Mr. Eberhart are here to support the tabling of the Alberta College of Pharmacists' annual report, which will occur later today. They're in the members' gallery, and I'll ask them to stand as we thank them for advancing pharmacy care here in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, I have two introductions today if I may. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you residents of my constituency of St. Albert, Shawn and Shelby Bryan. Mr. and Mrs. Bryan moved to the city of St. Albert in August of 2010 from Barrie, Ontario. Shawn is employed as a director at the Alberta Motor Association, and Shelby works at the St. Albert library. The Bryans have three children. Noah is in grade 6; Jackson, in grade 8.

They also have a daughter, whom we in this Assembly are getting to know well. Laura Bryan is new to the Assembly page program this year and is doing an outstanding job on what I believe to be the finest team of legislative pages in the country of Canada. Laura is a grade 12 student at St. Peter the Apostle Catholic high school and serves in a leadership role on student council. Laura is a very well-rounded individual. She's an avid fan of theatre and hockey. We are all very fortunate to have her serving here as a page in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

I'd ask that my guests here today please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Do you have a second introduction?

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is very much my pleasure to introduce to you and through you Mr. Bill Wilson. For the past 12 years Bill Wilson has been employed with the Alberta pipefitters college. He is currently the director of education. Established by the United Association of Plumbers and Pipefitters local 488 in 2009, the Alberta pipefitters college provides apprenticeship training for steamfitters and pipefitters. Having recently celebrated 100 years, the United Association of Plumbers and Pipefitters local 488 is Alberta's largest construction union local, with over 10,000 members. I'd ask that my guest here today please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by the Minister of Culture.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to this honourable Assembly one of the best legislative assistants that this Assembly has ever seen. Mr. Cody Johnston used to work for a minister on the other side at one time, Mr. Guy Boutilier. He is a resident and a constituent of Fort McMurray-Conklin. This person works not only for three MLAs on this side; he tolerates me, and he has to work for all of these other MLAs. Mr. Johnston is up here, and I would have him stand up.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture, followed by Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly an outstanding gentleman known best for his ability to secure incredible international exhibits like Body Worlds, Star Wars, and of course Harry Potter. Mr. George Smith, president and CEO of the Telus World of Science in Edmonton, if you would kindly rise, sir. In his 17 years at its helm George has brought forward many innovative programs, and each one has served to motivate thousands of schoolchildren and adult visitors to higher learning and a lifelong interest in science. I want to commend George for creating an atmosphere at the Telus World of Science that inspires everybody who walks through its doors and for making it his personal mission to accomplish every goal he has set to achieve on that site. Thank you for all of your efforts, George. Please rise and receive the warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and privilege for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly four very special guests who are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask them to please rise and remain standing as I mention their names. As a former school board trustee with Edmonton Catholic schools it is indeed my distinct pleasure to recognize a former elected colleague, Mr. Ron Zapisocki. He is also a recipient of the prestigious 2013 Hetman award, which was installed on October 6 by the Ukrainian Canadian Congress, Alberta Provincial Council. The Hetman award recognizes the significant volunteer achievements of outstanding Ukrainian Albertans. Ron, thank you for your public service and special heartfelt congratulations on receiving the Hetman award.

Mr. Zapisocki is accompanied this afternoon by his sister, Ms Natalka Smith, now retired after 30 successful years in the nursing profession; in addition, two individuals who supported his award nomination, Mr. Orest Boychuk, president, Ukrainian Catholic Brotherhood of Canada, Edmonton eparchy, and Mr. Ray Lacousta, a friend, colleague, avid volunteer, and artisan. I would now ask that the Assembly please join yours truly to provide my guests with our traditional warm welcome.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to rise today and introduce a young man that's become very important in my life. My leg. assistant is here today. He is responsible for working with me on the education file, also the advanced education file. He also handles transportation, infrastructure, and municipal affairs. I know I speak on behalf of my colleagues for Cypress-Medicine Hat and Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills when I say that we could not do it without him. Interestingly, the young man is also an actor in his spare time, which I think suits him well for the drama that unfolds in here on a daily basis. He's a great, principled young man. I'm happy to ask Micah Steinke to rise and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, I understand your guests are now here. Please introduce them.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Firstly, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Kim MacDougall from Grande Prairie. Kim is a recent graduate of The Women's Campaign School at Yale University and ran for a seat on the Grande Prairie town council in the recent municipal election, coming up just shy of being elected in her first bid for public office. Kim is seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask that she stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, I understand that your guests have not yet arrived so we'll go back to the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. Are they here? Let's go with you, then, and we'll come back.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My caucus is advising me that they're there, that they hope that that's them. I'm already up, so I may as well go ahead.

Mr. Speaker, today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guest and constituent Ian Young. Ian has been an unpaid advocate for disability rights since acquiring a life-changing injury in 2004. Ian is a motivational speaker who has shared his story across Canada and the U.S. and has addressed the House of Commons in Ottawa in support of an injury prevention strategy. He's a past member of the Alberta brain injury board, currently a member of Edmonton's Advisory Board on Services for Persons with Disabilities, and he recently was appointed to the Alberta Committee of Citizens with Disabilities, which is a consumer-directed organization actively promoting full participation in society for Albertans with disabilities. He also contributes as a columnist to the Boyle McCauley News. Accompanying him is Isabel Henderson from the Glenrose rehabilitation hospital. If they are here, I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, I had you down for one intro. Do you have a second one?

Mrs. Towle: I do.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a constituent of mine from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, Jason Heistad. Jason is a long-time advocate for front-line workers in this province and sits on the executive of the AUPE as the secretary-treasurer. Jason is seated in the public gallery, and I'd like to ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Plumbers and Pipefitters Union Local 488

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak today about a remarkable, homegrown, hard-working, and innovative organization, the United Association of Plumbers and Pipefitters union local 488.

Local 488 was founded in Edmonton over 100 years ago by seven local plumbers whose primary objective was to work towards enhancing job site safety and improving worker conditions. Local 488 has grown to become the largest supplier of pipe trades professionals in Canada, representing steamfitters-pipefitters, welders, instrumentation technicians, sprinkler fitters, refrigeration mechanics, pipeline workers, and other specialty crafts.

Local 488 has a storied history. In fact, local 488 played a significant role, Mr. Speaker, in the construction of this very Alberta Legislature.

The good people of local 488 have always been innovators. That spirit of innovation led to the establishment of the Alberta Pipe Trades College in 2009. The Alberta Pipe Trades College provides apprenticeship training and upgrading for their members, the public, and industry and aids Alberta's industry in meeting the growing demand for a skilled labour force. The Alberta Pipe Trades College is a state-of-the-art, 55,000-square-foot, three-storey facility, which is used to train current and future steamfitters and pipefitters. With 14 classrooms, seven shops, and two computer labs the facility has the capacity to train up to 1,400 students a year.

Local 488's core belief in building Alberta extends to philanthropic investment and support for critical community organizations such as the Northern Lights Health Foundation, the Glenrose rehabilitation wing, and the Sturgeon community hospital.

Mr. Speaker, these are just a small sampling of local 488's commitment to family and community.

I would like to extend a heartfelt thanks to local 488 for their hard work and dedication to their craft, for the training and development of one of the best skilled workforces in the world, and lastly, Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the team at local 488 for their lasting philanthropy in their community and their long-standing belief and commitment to building Alberta.

Seniors' Care in Fort McMurray

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The ongoing campaign by the residents of Fort McMurray to have a long-term care centre built in their community has taken a bizarre turn. To date there's been precious little progress on the long-promised facility. Despite the city's rapid growth and aging population Fort McMurray has been waiting nearly six years for a seniors' care centre that was promised to them in the 2008 election. While seniors in Fort McMurray move to Grande Prairie and Edmonton to receive the care they need, this government continues to find excuses as to why they haven't made good on their promise.

Enter the latest excuse. If the PCs are to be believed, it is the current Member of Parliament's fault that the facility hasn't been built. This is the latest deflection tactic this government and its supporters are attempting to use, blaming others for their inaction. According to them the local MP hasn't done enough to secure a federally owned plot of land downtown for the facility to be built on.

But there's more to this. The PCs have been rallying support for a far-flung location, far away from downtown and the hospital for reasons that are unclear, the so-called Parsons Creek location, this despite owning their own piece of land right downtown that could have shovels in the ground tomorrow. The current MLAs for the region, both elected as PCs, campaigned on a firm promise to have the facility built at the downtown spot.

Here's where it gets really odd. One of the MLAs is now threatening to pull the funding for the facility altogether if council doesn't agree to Parsons Creek. It's a mess, Mr. Speaker, but here's the bottom line. We've got the PCs blaming the feds for not building a facility they themselves promised while PC MLAs, who campaigned on building it in one location, are now bullying the local council to have it built somewhere else. All of this threatens to wipe out the entire project.

It's time for this government to stop playing the blame game, start listening to the people of Fort McMurray, and get this facility built where the community wants it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Calgary-Currie.

NAIT Centre for Applied Technologies

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I want to call attention to a major capital project being built in Edmonton, one that will benefit thousands of Albertans. Our government is committed to building Alberta, and my Alberta includes strategic investments in our postsecondary system. That's why I'm pleased to talk about the many benefits that will come from building the new centre for applied technologies at my alma mater, the Northern Alberta Institute of Technology, better known as NAIT.

Last August our Premier was literally in the driver's seat when the backhoe broke ground on this five-storey, $294 million project, the largest infrastructure project in NAIT's history, Mr. Speaker. Our government has invested $200 million in the overall cost of this project because we know the value this expansion has in such an important institution.

The centre for applied technologies will be a critical campus hub for as many as 5,000 students a day, Mr. Speaker. Five thousand students a day. Alberta can lead the world in innovation, and this will help. It will allow NAIT to increase its enrolment capacity by 50 per cent in health, business, engineering technologies, sustainable building, and environmental management programs.

These are programs that are in demand today in Alberta. These students will help continue to propel Alberta's economy forward. We know our province faces a skill shortage in many areas, and NAIT along with our entire Campus Alberta system is an important part in making sure that we have the workforce that we need. This is an investment in Edmonton and in Alberta's future. SAIT and NAIT were 1 and 2 on the list of the top 50 research colleges in Canada. We're focusing on building Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Tobacco Legislation

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've had many conversations about the meaning of the latest tobacco reduction bills with average Albertans at the local corner store or waiting in the coffee shop lineup. People understand that this legislation is not about limiting rights. It's about taking responsibility as adults for the health of our future, Alberta youth.

At the end of the debate one tenet remains clear, at least to most. The passing of this legislation will impact the alarming statistics with regard to youth smoking. It tells tobacco companies and indeed the whole country that the Alberta government cares about building healthy and safe communities.

Mr. Speaker, I don't need to tell you about our responsibility to the well-being of our youth. No one can deny that we have the highest duty owed to anyone to protect those who have no legal capacity to choose and especially those who cannot help themselves.

1:50

I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that as a principal no one was ever granted access to my students for purposes outside their growth and development. I believe wholeheartedly in my responsibility to protect young people, especially where they cannot protect themselves. Why would any hon. member not vote in favour of our kids and be willing to do something about tobacco companies that seek to sidestep federal law by marketing candylike flavours to youth who are legally not allowed to purchase tobacco? Clearly, this is an effort to sidestep the law, so why be soft on crime?

I don't want to believe that any party has accepted donations from national tobacco companies or that they might be representing the interests of the tobacco company ahead of our children or that anyone honoured with serving the public in this capacity could ever have a hidden agenda. Mr. Speaker, what I do believe is that this legislation is about protecting our children first, not the interests of tobacco companies.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. First main set of questions.

Building Alberta Plan Advertising

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, today we released an e-mail that shows that the PC Party branded roadside campaign came at the direct order of the Premier. In a September 4 e-mail the Premier's director of operations, Darren Cunningham, stated, "The Premier would like to ensure that building Alberta signage is up and in front of every flood affected road, bridge, school, [and] literally everything on our infrastructure list." [interjections] To the Premier: why did she personally direct her staff to spend time and money plastering self-promotional signage across the province?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, I'll table that e-mail today even. Then we won't have to worry about the leader selectively quoting from it. I want to read another part to it. It says that this will "ensure that folks know that we are going to [rebuild Alberta]." That was after the flood. I was in my constituency, and I was in High River, and people said: we want to have confidence that you're going to rebuild our communities. [interjections] These signs are a commitment of that confidence. This letter also says, "We need a very visible commitment that the government is rebuilding." That was our commitment to Albertans. That's what we're doing. I'll happily table . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Hon. members, too many interjections during the leader's question, too many interjections during the Premier's answer. Let's not have a tone like that set for the day this early.

Ms Smith: Actually, Mr. Speaker, Albertans want the projects; they don't want the signs.

In Mr. Cunningham's e-mail the politics at play are pretty clear. He says, "I don't care if [a request for proposal] is ready or not . . . The signs are designed. We just need to push these out over the next 7 days to 2 weeks." In other words, get them out before the Premier's leadership review. Why does the Premier think it's okay to personally direct her staff to ignore the RFP process so she could fast-track her self-promotional sign campaign?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is right about one thing. This Premier and this government said: "We're going to cut red tape. We are not going to wait for process." [interjections] While the Leader of the Opposition said, "Let's go back in the House and talk for a month," this Premier said: "Let's help now. Let's get out. Let's cut our processes. We'll catch up with the paperwork later. We will build Alberta. We will rebuild Alberta. We will help people . . . [interjections]"

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, if you think I'm going to stand here and tolerate that many interjections, that much noise, which takes away time from the House, you have grossly mistaken what I'm about to do. Please, for the second time and, I hope, the final time, let's be respectful of the traditions, and let's be respectful of each other.

Hon. member, your second supplemental. Let's see if we can get through it.

Building Alberta Plan Advertising (continued)

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Cunningham's e-mail was leaked to us by a public servant whose cover letter stated that the Premier's order was given during the flood and reconstruction effort to, quote: exhausted staff members, many of whom had very few days off and worked very long hours during the flood and recovery. They were basically told that their efforts mean nothing compared with getting these stupid money-wasting signs in place. Unquote. To the Premier: why was she asking our exhausted front-line staff to put up these stupid money-wasting signs?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, the events of June 20 were devastating to 30 communities and hundreds of thousands of Albertans. Our front-line staff, our civil servants, people at the community level from one side of the province to the other were always tired and exhausted because we had the most devastating event that has ever hit this province happen. Yet they continued to work because we knew we needed to get the message out to Albertans that we're going to build, but we're also going to rebuild for the sake of this province, for the sake of these communities, and for the sake of those families. We'll continue to do so until we're done.

The Speaker: The hon. member. Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, that's not quite the way our public servants see it.

This public servant also estimates it would have cost between $3,000 and $4,000 to produce each sign, but the rush edict from the Premier caused the cost to jump to more than $6,000 per sign. The fact that this government is spending hundreds of thousands of taxpayer dollars to promote their party and their leader is shameful when they have cut programs to vulnerable Albertans such as children in care, seniors, and persons with developmental disabilities. Will the Premier order the PC Party to pay back the money for her self-promotion campaign and reinvest those funds into front-line care, where it belongs?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and respond to this question. During the early days of the flood what we saw was complete devastation, not just of homes but of families. I talked to these people, and you know what they said to me? "Assure us that you're going to repair this community. Assure us that you're going to put mitigation in place to protect my family." There was constant dialogue from the Leader of the Opposition to ensure and to protect this community. The Premier made it very clear to put these signs up, to put assurances in place so people could rebuild. That's what they're doing thanks to those signs.

Ms Smith: I don't recall ever talking to that minister about the need to put up PC-branded signs.

We know that in addition to signage in flood-affected areas, the Premier went further and actually spent hundreds of thousands of dollars plastering her self-promotional signage at literally every project on the infrastructure list. Again, this is taxpayer money in a time of budget cuts to front-line services. To the Premier. Clearly, she is trying to compensate for her party's poor fundraising results using taxpayer money to pay for her self-promotional sign campaign. Will she direct her PC Party to pay that money back to Alberta taxpayers?

Ms Redford: You know, Mr. Speaker, every couple of days I think that the Leader of the Opposition must live in a world of conspiracy theories, and that just proved the point. I know that when I walked through my constituency of Calgary-Elbow, the people who lived in Calgary-Elbow said to me: "What's going to happen to our community? How can we have confidence to build for the future?" I heard that in Medicine Hat. I heard it in Two Hills. I heard it in High River. Putting up these signs shows the commitment that we have as a government to the building Alberta plan and the rebuilding Alberta plan. That is hope, and that is what we . . .

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Second supplemental.

Ms Smith: Residents of Elbow Park asked the Premier to put up PC-branded signage? I highly doubt it.

Yesterday you ruled that this government was in contempt of the Legislature for the timing of their taxpayer-funded PC blue-and-orange promotional brochure, and, Mr. Speaker, we couldn't agree more. The contempt demonstrated by this government is clear, especially since we now know that the campaign is being politically driven out of the Premier's office by the Premier. To the Premier: does she even care about how much taxpayer money is being spent on all of these Building Alberta signs, brochures, mailings?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are committed to building Alberta, and we are sharing that opportunity to share that information with Albertans every day that we can. As a government and as Premier and as a cabinet we are proud to say that this is a political process. It was the commitment that we made in the last election, in contrast to the opposition, and we will keep doing that. We will invest in NAIT, we will invest in NorQuest, we will rebuild High River, we will rebuild Medicine hat, and we will rebuild every constituency that was impacted by the flood. That is rebuilding Alberta, and we will continue to do it.

The Speaker: Hon. leader, your third main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Taxpayer money for political purposes, and this Premier says that she's proud of it.

2:00 Seniors' Care in Fort McMurray

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, seniors' care in Fort McMurray is approaching a critical stage. The community is still without a long-term care centre despite its booming growth and aging population. Seniors are forced to move to either Grande Prairie or Edmonton to receive the care that they need. This is despite promises upon promises upon promises to build a long-term care facility. You may recall that the former member from Fort McMurray challenged his own government on their 2008 promise, but I guess history repeats. To the Premier: why hasn't she kept her word?

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Seniors.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to tell you that I'm very committed to the project in Fort McMurray and in every community that we've made announcements. Capacity issues are real. You know, 4 million people, 470,000 seniors, and more are coming: we have to make sure we're ahead of this curve. I'm committed to working with the community, the mayor, and anyone that wants to advance seniors' care in this province.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, a political battle has now erupted over this issue. The PC government is attempting to blame Ottawa for its own inaction, but a prominent leader of the community and lifelong PC supporter wrote a scathing open letter to the minister of accountability. Let me quote. "We supported you, campaigned for you and elected you . . . on the promise of you advocating for a downtown facility. Don't turn your back on us now." She says the province owns the perfect downtown site for the facility right next to the hospital. To the Premier: what is the holdup for building this project on provincial land?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, exactly what the member talked about, building it on provincial land, is what is proposed. The land on the downtown site was federally owned, and we've had nothing but co-operation from the federal MP, from the folks in the mayor's office. This project will get built, and we are committed to it.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, today we learned that the minister of accountability has written a letter to the community and informed them that if they don't cave to the government's demands to build this facility on a different site, it, quote, may put the entire provincial funding for the facility at risk. Unquote. Now, we've seen this before, breaking a promise after the election and then bullying the community to keep quiet. To the Premier: when is she going to stop the bullying and the political games and get this project built where the community wants it?

Mr. VanderBurg: Again, Mr. Speaker, I've made it very clear that we're committed to this project. The funding is put aside through Treasury. We will work with the community. We will work with the seniors. We will work with the federal government. We'll work with anyone to get the outcome that we're looking for, and that's increased capacity in Fort McMurray.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Public Service Contract Negotiations

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We go from billing Albertans for the Premier's political aspirations to breaking the backs of those Albertans who protect and build Alberta. Earlier this year the Conservative government repeatedly ignored appeals from corrections officers to address safety issues at the new Edmonton Remand Centre. This created dangerous work conditions for both residents and workers. In desperation the corrections officers staged a wildcat strike. Only then were safety issues dealt with. To the Premier: why are you punishing all government workers for the fact that corrections officers exercised their legitimate right not to work in unsafe work conditions?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I thank this member for his question, but at the same time it is a little bit skinny on the facts. We recognize the legal right to strike, but in that particular instance Alberta Court of Queen's Bench Justice Rooke indicated that in his independent opinion it was an illegal strike and imposed fines upon the union. It also cost the taxpayers $13 million because of the union's illegal actions. That's not acceptable.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that that minister was in a rush to open it up, moved all the folks over on one weekend. The fact of the matter is that this Premier and her government endangered lives. This Conservative government has stormy relations with all its employees – doctors, teachers, nurses, everybody who works for them, including AUPE workers – so it's not surprising that the union chose arbitration, a right that Premier Lougheed established and which this Premier now wants to take away. It's like slapping someone in the face and then saying: "Hey.

Let's do business." To the Premier: why is your government bargaining in bad faith instead of allowing arbitration to proceed? Is your government's case that weak?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have great relations with teachers and doctors. In fact, they came to the table and worked with us to ensure that we could continue to have sustainable services in education and health care in the long term. That's what we promised Albertans. You know, we want to have real discussions with the AUPE with respect to negotiations. That's why we've introduced the legislation that we have. Before we introduced this legislation, I had the opportunity to sit down with Guy Smith to ask him whether or not he was prepared to come to the table. He told me that he wasn't. We have a responsibility to ensure that we're supporting public services in this province for all Albertans, and we'll do that.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, we all know about the bullying of the doctors and the teachers, how those contracts were done. Bullying workers is bad business, Madam Premier. Stripping employees of their rights to arbitration and attacking free speech rights is bad for morale, not to mention a violation of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. These attacks on public employees create a toxic work environment, increased stress, illness, sick days, and decreased productivity. Then, of course, there will be the millions in taxpayer dollars spent to defend against a Charter challenge. Anybody with half a brain can tell you that that's no way to run a business or a government. To the Premier: when will your government stop bullying Albertans?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it is not bullying to bring good government to Albertans. That's what they've asked for, and that's what they're getting. We made a promise to Albertans with respect to keeping Albertans safe, and strikes in the public service are illegal for a reason. When we found out this spring that the sanctions that were in the act were not sufficient to prevent a strike and keep Albertans safe, we immediately decided that we needed to look at them. We've reviewed it carefully, and we've now brought forward a bill, which will be debated again today with respect to the improved sanctions in that bill, so that Albertans' safety and health will not be put at risk.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In justifying the draconian Bill 46, which cancels arbitration, this government has stated that only the AUPE had applied for arbitration, not them. But, in fact, documents which I will table later show that this government had agreed to enter arbitration and had even gone so far as to appoint a nominee, had agreed to a chair for the process, and had actually set dates for the hearings. To the Premier: why did you lead Albertans to believe that only the AUPE was interested in arbitration when your government had already fully agreed to the process?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, we must deal with the facts. The fact is that when one party files for binding arbitration, it is incumbent on the other party to respond, and government has responded. At the same time the Premier was very clear. She has met with the leader of AUPE, and the leader of AUPE knows very well that he has time to come back to the table and negotiate in good faith, much like teachers have and much like doctors have, to negotiate a deal perhaps that's better than what's on the floor of the Legislature right now. Now he has time, till January 31, and I strongly would encourage him to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, like many accounts from the Premier, this is not one that I believe. We know that this government had already assigned legal counsel to the Compulsory Arbitration Board as recently as November and that the Labour Relations Board had received those documents and confirmed the government's attendance at hearings scheduled for February. We know of several other legal documents outlining the process, which the government agreed to but then went back on its word. To the Premier: why would this government, as recently as in November, agree to a legal arbitration process only to unilaterally prevent this process from happening?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, what the member believes or doesn't believe doesn't make it true or false. Let's deal with another fact. The members of AUPE should also know that even though we're in a process of negotiation, they will continue receiving pay increases based on their grid. I wouldn't want members of AUPE to be misled by the leader of the fourth party that they will not be receiving increases. As a matter of fact, they will be receiving increases on the grid. What we are looking for is to negotiate with AUPE and make sure that the grid doesn't grow beyond Albertans' ability to pay.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is not negotiation; this is a stickup. With the introduction of Bill 46 this government has destroyed a reasonable and legal process for contract dispute resolution with the province's workers. Documents show that this government had already agreed to binding arbitration. Instead, this government is ramming through legislation that will impose a contract on January 31. To the Premier: will the Premier admit that in pursuing contract arbitration with AUPE and then pulling the plug by introducing Bill 46, this government has engaged in a classic case of bad-faith bargaining?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, it isn't a stickup when the leader of the fourth party is shooting blanks. The fact of the matter is that no rights are being limited. All we are doing with one of the bills is updating the legislation. As you know, this act wasn't updated for 20 years. The leader of AUPE said himself that he is willing to go on illegal strikes and that he is willing to pay the fines, quote, unquote, standing on his head. We are making sure that Albertans, vulnerable Albertans, are protected from illegal strikes so that their services can be assured by this government.

The Speaker: As hon. members know, bills 45 and 46 on this subject matter are up for discussion again later today and probably tonight as well.

Let's move on now with no preambles, please, starting with Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Sexual Assault on Seniors in Care

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Between 2010 and 2012 more than 60 cases of sexual assault on seniors in care were reported in provincial nursing homes and care facilities. This was documented in the annual protection for persons in care reports. The last annual report was released in July 2012, and the next one was due in July 2013. To the Associate Minister of Seniors: why haven't you publicly released the protection of persons in care annual report for 2013? What are you hiding?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me first tell everybody that one case of sexual assault in a seniors' home is not acceptable, whether it's in a facility that we manage in set accommodations or in any seniors' home. When anybody is aware of any situation that endangers the safety of a senior, call the RCMP. Call persons in care. Make a call; don't sit by idly.

Mrs. Towle: One would just have to wonder where the report is.

Given that sexual assaults on seniors in care have increased annually since 2010 and given that under the direct leadership of the Minister of Health there were over 30 allegations of sexual assault on seniors in care between April 2011 and March 2012, can the minister tell this House how many sexual assaults on seniors in care happened in 2013?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, what I can say is that every reported case has been investigated and is taken very seriously. The people within our department are very well trained and are very close to this situation and take this issue very seriously, and so does every one of us. The number, whether it's one or whether it's 13, doesn't matter to me. The issue is that it's very serious, and it has to be acted upon very quickly.

Mrs. Towle: Does the minister not understand that according to his very own report, every three days a senior in care is assaulted? Where is the report for 2013? Albertans deserve to know.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what this government understands and what all members should understand is that the complexity of dealing with seniors' issues, particularly those related to cognitive disorders like Alzheimer's disease and dementia, are on the rise. Care facilities all across the country are coping with that issue, with increasing numbers of residents, Alberta more so because of the number of people coming to the province. As the associate minister rightly said, the focus is on learning how to manage these behavioural issues in a care environment. We are leading in that area.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

NorQuest College Expansion

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I received 155 letters from students at college Saint-Jean concerned about this government's commitment to postsecondary education. I also attended the announcement of $170 million for NorQuest College to expand. Budget 2013 was challenging for postsecondary institutions. My question is to the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education. Given our government's frozen salaries and cutbacks, how is it possible today that they announced $170 million for NorQuest College to expand? To the minister: where's this money coming from?

Mr. Hehr: They've got a printing press going over there.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, unlike the Member for Calgary-Buffalo – he thinks that we have a printing press and we print money, and you'd think that from their policies, but no, we don't. The money comes from Albertans' investment. Albertans want to invest in advanced education because Albertans simply know that if Alberta is to move forward, if we are to progress, if we are to live fulfilling lives, and if we are to grow our economy, we need to invest in postsecondary education. One way to do it is to invest in relevant infrastructure.

Mr. Dorward: Given the many budget pressures facing the government, surely this project could have waited. Why do it now?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, unlike other parties in this Chamber we believe that investing in Albertans of today is much better than investing in Albertans of 30 years from now. That is why we're building schools for students today, hospitals for patients today, and seniors' homes for seniors today. If we want to grow, if we want to be ready for 130,000 new Albertans every year, we have to invest in them today, not 30 years from now.

Mr. Dorward: Almost everywhere I go in the city, I hear about pressures at postsecondary institutions, and probably across the province it's the same. How sure is this government that the NorQuest expansion is truly needed?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, NorQuest plays a very important role within Campus Alberta. It is, I would say, a gateway to hope. It is a school where a lot of single parents can resume their postsecondary education later in their life. It is a place where new immigrants can come and learn English as a second language and often convert their skills from back home into our Canadian licensed professions. It is a place that educates not only Edmonton but most of northern Alberta. It is the right type of a college to invest into, and we're proud of it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Red Deer-North.

Home-care Review

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we are beginning to see the impact of the government's misguided attempts to centralize home-care services. One child watched their father, a stroke patient with loss of function to his body, go several days without home-care providers even showing up. The Health Quality Council is reviewing reporting systems and whether home-care providers are meeting standards but will not be reviewing why seniors are not getting the treatments needed. To the Health minister: will you commit to ensuring that access to home care is included in the Health Quality Council's review? Yes or no?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm very glad that the hon. member is asking about this issue. As a matter of fact, just before question period I spoke to the chief executive officer of Revera, which is one of the new companies that is delivering home care across the province. We take this issue extremely seriously. In addition to the Health Quality Council review, that I talked about yesterday, the Department of Health will be reviewing the capacity, the ability of new providers in the health care system to deliver what they promised to Albertans, which is the highest possible level of home care that we can deliver. If they can't, we will find new providers to replace them.

The Speaker: Hon. member, your first supplemental.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Sharon Anderson saw new home-care providers refuse to give her mom meds due to the chaos of the centralization of services, can the minister ensure that the Health Quality Council will review quality of services? Yes or no?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, yes, I can. If the hon. member had listened last week when I talked about this issue, she would know that the Health Quality Council has been asked to review the quality assurance process within the home-care system; in other words, what the standards are, what the monitoring process is, and how I as the Minister of Health can assure Albertans, based on that information, that the system is operating as intended.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you.

Given that AHS is trying to find savings off the backs of our most vulnerable in care, who have seen chaos throughout the system, will the Health minister commit the Health Quality Council of Alberta to review home-care funding? Yes or no? And will you make that report public?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the Health Quality Council, as I said, is looking at quality assurance processes within home care. I want to make very clear that under my watch and under the watch of this government, we do not make decisions about the quality of health care services based on budgetary issues. That is why my department is reviewing the current contracts with home-care providers to determine if, in fact, they can deliver the quality of care that Albertans expect and deserve.

Thank you.

Shingles

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, did you know that if you've had chicken pox, you're among the 90 per cent of all adults who have also had chicken pox and who are now at risk of experiencing the very, very painful condition of shingles? Nearly 1 in 3 people will experience shingles, a common and often debilitating disease that results in a painful, excruciating rash that can lead to depression and anxiety and can also result in a lifelong loss of mobility and independent living. To the Associate Minister of Seniors: is your ministry aware that the economic, physical, and mental costs of shingles can be astronomical and that the . . .

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the member for the question. I'm very aware of the pain and suffering that goes along with having shingles. I'm married to someone that's had it, and I have a very good senior friend that's also had shingles on his head. I've never seen something so painful as that. We're very, very aware of the infection. The Seniors Advisory Council in one of their reports has made it very clear to me that there may be a benefit for the shingles shot as well.

Mrs. Jablonski: To the same minister: given that shingles can be prevented through an immunization program that can help reduce the burden of shingles and promote healthy aging, would your ministry consider subsidizing the cost of the shingles vaccine for seniors?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, what I said is that it's an infection that not only hits seniors; it hits younger people as well. Currently there's no single province or territory that provides funding for the shingles vaccine, but there is more and more evidence that I've seen that the immunization does work for a percentage of the population. I know that at the January 2014 meeting of the National Advisory Committee on Immunization it's something that they're discussing.

Mrs. Jablonski: To the same minister: since you've mentioned that this vaccine hits people of different ages, would you consider not only subsidizing seniors but people who are in the age group of 50 to 64 years of age, whom it also affects?

Mr. VanderBurg: The Minister of Health may want to supplement the answer to this. Clearly, any of the programs that I work with are 65-plus. I do know that it'll be very, very interesting to hear the findings of the advisory committee, that meets in January, because this is a timely topic that ministers across the country are talking about. I had the opportunity to meet with the federal minister and ministers from across the country dealing with seniors issues. This was a matter of great discussion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Nursing Service Provision

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Health is deliberately withholding Alberta Health Services' quarterly one and quarterly two reports because he knows the results are poor. For example, it would likely show that critically ill people are unable to get into the hospital in Medicine Hat while at the same time the Redford Conservatives are cutting registered nursing positions, up to half the nurses in one ward. To the Minister of Health: why at a time of increased seasonal demands and overcapacity in a hospital would you be cutting the number of registered nurses in Medicine Hat?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll be pleased to answer without attributing motive to the hon. member. If he is interested in the demand for nurses in Alberta, I can tell him that today there are a total of 436 vacancies for registered nurses in this province; 152 of them are full-time, and 210 are part-time. So as we've said before and as we'll continue to say, the demand for nurses is only increasing in our province, and their role is only increasing in prominence as well.

Dr. Swann: Well, the minister conveniently ignores the role of RNs versus LPNs versus nursing assistants. That is the real issue, Mr. Minister.

Given that nearly two years ago this government pledged $7 million to Park Place Seniors in Medicine Hat to build 80 seniors' beds and that nothing has been built to date, will the minister see the obvious connection to the lack of seniors care and spaces in this overflowing hospital?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, the issues maybe are not quite tied together. The community and the developer are working on some zoning issues in the community. As I understand it, there's a resolution to that around the corner.

Dr. Swann: Well, it sounds familiar. Fort McMurray has gone through the same, it seems.

Finally, to the minister: given reports of continued private home-care failures, when are you going to ensure that state-of-the-art nursing supports are in place both in hospital and out of hospital?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've already spoken to the very aggressive measures that the government has taken with respect to ensuring quality in home care in our province. I will say again that no provider that cannot deliver the quality of service that Albertans expect and deserve will be allowed to operate in our province.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to the member's comments around nurses, as a physician I'm sure he would want us to make sure that our valuable registered nurses are serving where their skills are needed most throughout the system, and that's exactly what we're doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Child and Youth Advocate Investigations

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since 1999 145 children have died in the care of the province, and the vast majority went unreported and uninvestigated. Last Friday the Child and Youth Advocate admitted that if provided with more resources, he could increase the number of investigations he performs. He conceded that with current resources he has to prioritize which cases to investigate despite incomplete information. To the minister: why won't this government put children first and support giving the advocate the resources he needs to investigate every in-care death?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the Child and Youth Advocate in this province has a very important mandate as an independent officer of the Legislature to investigate and to advocate where he thinks it's important. He doesn't investigate and advocate where the minister thinks it's important. It's his obligation to determine what needs to be investigated and to investigate it. And it's his obligation to put forward the request for the resources not to the minister, not to the government but to the Legislative Assembly, that he needs to do that job. When he asks for those resources, I assume the committee and the Legislative Assembly will examine that. It's not the Legislative Assembly's job to impose the resources upon him.

Ms Notley: I wasn't asking for the Assembly; I was asking for this government to support it.

Given that on Friday our caucus proposed a motion that would have provided enough funding for the advocate to investigate every single in-care death necessary and given that independent experts agree that transparent and complete investigations are critical in the task of improving the quality of child protection in Alberta, will the minister admit that his government is more interested in protecting itself than it is in protecting the children in its care?

Mr. Hancock: No, Mr. Speaker. Not at all. This government is very interested in protecting children who need protection, in ensuring that families are strengthened where they need strengthening, in ensuring that families get the assistance they need to overcome any barrier to success. That is what we are very interested in doing. One of the things that our Premier insisted upon when she asked me to take on this portfolio was to move immediately to make an independent Child and Youth Advocate's office. We brought that legislation forward. The Legislature established that office, and it's his job to bring an independent review, and he does.

Ms Notley: Well, given, Mr. Speaker, that with the current inadequate funding levels the Child and Youth Advocate has to see into the future and predict which deaths are significant before he actually investigates and given that nobody wants to see another unnecessary death of a child in the care of the province or, as well, the change required to prevent it in the future remaining secret, hidden, and ignored, why won't this minister stop putting politics before children and commit to a full public inquiry?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, that hon. member knows or should know that this particular minister puts children first each and every day. This particular government puts the resources in place to assist families when they need it so that children can have that opportunity to maximize their potential. That's actually one of our most important jobs in this government and this Legislature and in this province, and we try to do that each and every day. We learn from the tragic issues that happen. We learn from the tragic deaths. They have been investigated, but we have an independent Child and Youth Advocate who can determine if further investigation is needed in any particular area. It's his job to bring it forward and to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Registry Agent Office Contracting

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has introduced a disturbing new trend into how they will pick the new providers of registry services in Alberta. Not only will they compete on strength; now they will have to make an agency opportunity offer, which effectively awards a new registry to the highest bidder. There is already a $100,000 fee requirement. This sounds like a shakedown. Can the minister assure Albertans that cash offers will be confidential and no friends of the government will have the inside track on how big a bid is needed to win?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's quite the question coming from this member. I guess he wants us to give away government assets for free. I know that party over there had an extreme makeover convention just a couple of weeks ago, but I think they are suffering from an identity crisis. What's happening is that they don't know if they should zig or zag, they don't know if up is really up, and they're really forgetting basic principles of conservatism: stick up for the taxpayer first.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there's been an unfortunate tradition – and let me use the Ethics Commissioner's famous six words: friends and family of the government – in getting liquor store licences and registry agency licences, Albertans are rightly concerned about the process that might be gained. Will the minister assure all Albertans that no acquaintance, campaign manager, friend, cousin, uncle, or other member of the government family will get insider information on the landing of these contracts?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, I'm really glad he talked about friends and family because a lot of members of their friends and family are no longer acceptable to them. So what do they do? They end up having an extreme makeover convention. They try to reinvent themselves. I'd like to tell the hon. member that no matter how many times he stands in front of a mirror and reads a question, Albertans can see through the charade.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Minister, given that registry agents that I've talked to say that these new agency opportunity offers are highly unusual, can the minister explain why people bidding to provide highly important community services are now being asked to essentially grease the palms of government in addition to the traditional public tendering process?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to congratulate the member on asking a somewhat policy-oriented question. Thank you.

Now, if he will understand something, Mr. Speaker, when the government has an asset that they wish to dispose of such as a piece of real estate, maybe a piece of land, they go to bid. They say: what are you willing to provide for everyday, hard-working Albertans? Longer hours? Cheaper fees? What are you willing to provide the government of Alberta so taxpayers get what is rightfully theirs?

Surface Rights Payments to Grazing Lessees

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, my questions are for the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. On November 21 I asked the minister whether she would consider changing government policy to more equitably share surface rights payments on Crown grazing lands, to which she responded that grazing leaseholders were like property owners in their own private rights and could make private agreements with oil and gas companies. Does the minister not recognize that a grazing lease is different from the title held by Her Majesty for the benefit of all Albertans and that the rights of lessees are precisely those set out in the lease?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for the question. Compensation payable to leaseholders is determined by section 25 of the Surface Rights Act. This section provides direction to the Surface Rights Board in awarding compensation. This criteria applies to both the landowner and the occupant if they are impacted. When oil and gas activities take place on a grazing lease, the leaseholder receives payments based on loss of use, adverse effects, inconvenience, and noise as provided for in the SRA. Compensation is intended to cover damages to the occupant's interest, an amount that reflects actual . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, first supplemental, please.

Dr. Brown: Does the minister accept the proposition that she as Her Majesty's trustee of public lands has the obligation to see that they are managed in the best interest of all Albertans?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, yes, Mr. Speaker, absolutely. Grazing leaseholders are excellent stewards of the land, and we have agreements with them to ensure they remain excellent land managers. The best interests of Albertans are upheld by being able to fully utilize public lands with grazing leases. As a department ESRD works very hard to ensure that Alberta's public lands are managed in the best interests of the public and of Albertans.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, other provinces – Manitoba and Saskatchewan – and other levels of government here in the province of Alberta, like the MD of Taber and Forty Mile county, have limited surface rights payments to their grazing lessees. Will this minister do the same?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. No, I will not. As I answered on November 21, these are private agreements between leaseholders and the companies, and as a government we will continue to respect private agreements. Compensation payments are privately negotiated between the leaseholder and the company. ESRD does not have records of these agreements, and we should not.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Lesser Slave Lake.

Oil and Gas Drilling Applications

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm worried that the Energy minister and this government are not concerned with the impacts of their decisions. Under this government's direction application delays threaten the December drilling season, and the licensee liability rating program is driving junior producers to the brink of bankruptcy. Recently I asked the minister what he was doing about the LLR program, and he said that he was looking into it. Minister, actions speak louder than words. What are you doing to ensure the LLR program doesn't drive junior producers out of business?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, I actually indicated that I was doing more than looking into it. What I've done is that I've specifically asked the Alberta Energy Regulator to work with affected parties and legal counsel to them, who apparently are involved, and ensure that we take every opportunity to explore ways in which these companies could meet their obligations. This is an important issue. It's important to the future of the province. It's important that we ensure that energy companies look after the liabilities that they have so they're not left to the owners, which are the people of Alberta.

Mr. Hale: Given that the licensee liability rating program actually increases taxpayers' liability as well as increases environmental hazards if and when these companies go bankrupt, when will the minister intervene to prevent the unintended consequences of this poorly thought out energy policy from occurring?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, this topic has been addressed. We worked with industry – with CAPP, with EPAC, with the industry associations – over the course of no less than seven years to build a model so that it can be addressed and dealt with, so that the interests of both those in the energy industry and the citizens of Alberta are appropriately protected for the long haul. It's a tough time, I know. This is one more very difficult element of life that energy producers have to face. But, frankly, there are larger issues at work on behalf of many of these companies than this single regulatory . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hale: Interesting.

As has been acknowledged in this House, atrocious delays in processing applications threaten the December drilling season. Given that the estimated backlog of applications might be as high as 7,000 and given that companies have been asked to provide only their top two wells to expedite it, Minister, what are you going to do to make sure the December drilling season isn't lost altogether?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, I'll do what I've been doing continually for weeks now, and that is to ensure that this system is responsive to the needs of industry. The chair and the CEO of the Alberta Energy Regulator are taking exceptional steps. The numbers that are being thrown around by the hon. member are completely irresponsible and inaccurate by a factor of at least 700 or 800 per cent. The facts are that there's work to be done. People are working, and they are addressing these issues. They're responding to the needs of industry. We are going to have a winter drilling season in this province, and it's going ahead.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Public Tender of Leased Crown Lands

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The sale of government-owned lease land and the impact it has on ranchers who have held the lease for years is a concern because once a lessee starts a process of attempting to purchase land from the Crown, that process cannot be stopped. Once land goes out to the public tender, the lessee risks losing the land altogether in the bidding process. My question is for the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. Why do lands have to go to public tender if the leaseholder would like to purchase the lease?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for the question. Certainly, grazing leaseholders and farm development leaseholders in the settled area north of highway 16 have the opportunity to request the sale of up to one section of their leased land. Direct sales are undertaken to ensure that the sale of public land is fair, transparent, and that Albertans are obtaining a fair value for their land. Public tender ensures that all Albertans have an equal opportunity to acquire ownership of public land. The leaseholder is given the opportunity to match the highest bid in the public tender.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, knowing that the highest bid is accepted, why is it that once the Crown initiates the process of tendering, it cannot be stopped? Why?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, the applicant is able to withdraw their application right up until the statutory declaration is signed. The Crown can withdraw from the tendering process up until the leaseholder has signed the statutory declaration. After that point the land is appraised and publicly posted for sale.

Ms Calahasen: Again to the same minister: what measures are in place to ensure that leaseholders receive fair compensation for any improvements they have made to their land in the event that they lose their land in public bidding? That's a question they want to know.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a great question. Fair compensation is of utmost importance to ensure that Albertans receive fair value for their work. The government may compensate a leaseholder for portions of improvements done within the last five years. Removable improvements are owned by the leaseholder, and land improvements, like clearing and seeding, tame pastures, are owned by the Crown. Leaseholders are made aware of this when a range improvement application is approved.

2:40 Prince of Peace Lutheran School Lease Funding

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, Prince of Peace school is a terrific Christian school in the public system. It's just outside Chestermere. It's a private facility, so the government makes the lease payments, recognizing the great investment and also realizing that, particularly in Rocky View, there is just no other place to put kids. They're bursting at the seams in schools. Now, the government even sent a letter pre-election confirming its complete commitment to making these payments in full. Postelection another letter arrives. This one says: we can no longer make the payments in full. Why do you continually renege on your promises to Albertans?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, as you know and as we all know in this House, we are trying to live within our means. As part of this year's budget some very difficult decisions had to be made. [interjections] The Member for Edmonton-Centre will simply not allow me to carry on, but I'll try. Ministers on the front bench have had to make some very difficult decisions. The fact is that it's well known in Alberta that we are very much in support of the choice that's given to parents, having private, charter, Catholic, public, and home-schooling, and we will be working with the private school community as best we can.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, I will acknowledge that tough decisions have to be made. Let me put it like this. If you took out a mortgage and you signed a contract and then eight months later you called your bank and you said, "Times have changed financially. We can no longer afford to make the full payment," I think we all know how that would go over: not very well. How can the government justify doing the exact same thing to school boards, to parents, and to our kids?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, here is the irony of it all. It depends whether it's an odd or even day. On certain days the Wildrose opposition will tell us: allow local authorities and school boards to do what they want; they're locally elected; do not interfere. But when they don't like a decision, they say: go in there with a sledgehammer, overturn a decision, and achieve the outcome that we want. The Minister of Education is working with school boards and making sure that private and charter and other schools are accommodated within buildings that already exist and are within our financial means.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, I think that'll lead me to a completely different question. I think the minister missed the point.

Given that the government signed a contract, gave its word that it would make the payment for this school, then after the election sent another letter and said, "No, we won't make the payment," does the minister not recognize that going back on his word does nothing to ensure the confidence of Albertans and does nothing to stand up for our students in this province?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, that member may not like that, but contrary to what he likes, Albertans have a great deal of confidence not only in this Minister of Education but also in this government. Albertans know that for decades they have been provided a choice that no other parents in another province in Canada have. They also know that their children achieve some of the best educational outcomes, not only in Canada but in the world. I can assure you that our Minister of Education and our entire caucus will stay committed to those values and will work with school boards, private schools, charter schools, Catholic schools, public schools, and home parents.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. The time for Oral Question Period has expired. We did get through 16 main questions, or 96 questions and answers, which is quite good. I'm not sure how we got there, but we did. Part of the reason we got there was because of very short supplementary questions. Edmonton-Gold Bar, exemplary performance in that respect. Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, also a good job. Calgary-Fish Creek, your first supplementary: short, snappy, tight. It's that kind of performance that allows us to get on with the important business and allows more members overall to get up.

Statement by the Speaker

Items Distributed to Members

The Speaker: While I'm up, hon. members, I want to take this opportunity to summon your attention to remind you of something that's very important for all of you to be reminded about, and that's regarding the protocol for distributing or making available certain documents and other items to members, to your colleagues in this House. Now, should you as a member want to distribute to members in the Assembly let's call it extraneous materials, materials that are not the property of the House, in other words, or part of the deliberations or debates, such as amendments and that type of thing, those kind of materials require the prior approval of your Speaker.

This a long-standing tradition, and I realize some haven't been here that long, but you should all be reminded that it is a long-standing tradition for you to observe. It is simply not appropriate for any member to request a page to distribute materials without prior approval of the Speaker. This protocol was confirmed in a ruling by my predecessor, hon. Ken Kowalski, in this Assembly on February 23, 2010, which is available at Alberta Hansard at pages 247 and 250, mostly the latter.

Some documents to which your Speaker will have given approval for distribution are normally placed on members' desks while other items such as ribbons, pins, brochures, leaflets, and so on can be placed in baskets at either of our two entrance doors to my left and to my right, and then it is up to individual members to decide whether they want to pick up the pin and wear it or pick up the brochure and read it or pick up the ribbon and put it on or whatever. Members have that choice.

We have many good causes that are supported by these kinds of symbols and materials, everything from cancer to MS to education to children to seniors. The list is endless. We have been very accommodating and very lenient in allowing that to take place, and I don't think any of us would want to lose that leniency. Let's remember that this practice of using the baskets will continue. If you have anything else that you want distributed to all other members, you might want to use the mailroom. It gets there just as quickly to all other members.

Similarly, it wouldn't be appropriate for any one of you to walk from desk to desk and put material there. This was tried a few years back, and that was curtailed as well. I only mention that as a friendly reminder.

Please, let's not lose this privilege that we have to share things that we find are important to us or to advertise important events to our colleagues. Let's be mindful of that rule, okay?

Thank you very, very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Legislative Officer Independence

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to inform our Assembly that our all-party Standing Committee on Legislative Offices held meetings on November 28 and 29 to review the officers' 2014 work reports, business plans, and budgets, which were then passed by our committee after a thorough deliberation.

My thanks go to all committee members and the committee clerk, Karen Sawchuk. Also, I wish to thank all the legislative officers and their staff for always doing a great job serving our Albertan public and our Assembly.

These independent, nonpartisan officers are recruited by our Assembly's special all-party select committee in an open competition based on qualification, not on their personal political affiliation. While the legislative officers work for our Assembly, not for the government, and are nonpartisan, they still receive unfair criticism, particularly from some political opposition inside the Chamber and from some media. [interjections]

Former Ethics Commissioner Donald Hamilton said that criticism from these groups can be difficult as the legislative officers believe that their decisions, based on law, much like the judiciary, must speak for themselves.

More recently Bradley Odsen, general counsel for the office of the Ethics Commissioner, stated that allegations of corruption made by some political opposition were not only outrageous to Albertans but also an insult to the integrity of the people who hold these positions. [interjections]

As elected honourable parliamentarians, everyone in this House must stop dragging these independent legislative officers of our Assembly into partisan politics and must recognize their impartiality and independence and give them the respect they deserve.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, without interjections, please.

Foster Parents

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week a spotlight was shone directly on some flaws in our child welfare system, and many front-line workers and foster parents felt that we needed to do a better job of highlighting positive stories. I would like the opportunity to do just that and tell you a story about a baby named Corey.

Corey was born in Grande Prairie in February of 1978 to a mother who was 16. She made the courageous choice to put him up for adoption in the hopes of providing him with the best possible home, with the best possible parents, hoping that he would live the best possible life. Like many children who are put up for adoption, that process isn't completed overnight. Corey became a ward of the province and was put into foster care after a few short days in hospital.

As many of us are parents in this House, we know how difficult the first months of an infant's life can be: the erratic sleep patterns, the demanding feeding schedule, the stress of inviting a new child into the home. All across this province every day foster parents are caring for infants, children, and youth and do fantastic work. They give their heart and soul to the well-being of these children, loving them as their own, until permanency can be secured. In Corey's case that took six months.

Well, many of you may know that I, too, was adopted. My parents are two of the finest people in this world, Mr. Speaker. They did not keep it from me that I was adopted, and I will always remember the day that they showed me the paperwork from my adoption, which was accompanied by some handwritten notes. The notes gave advice on how to make me laugh, how to comfort me, how to stop me from crying, what I liked to eat, how I liked to sleep, how I liked to be bathed. It was a fascinating read. The first sentence in the notes stood out to me, and they are words I will never forget. They read: we called him Corey.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am Corey. That was the name my foster parents gave to me for the first six months of my life, and if anyone who is listening was a foster parent of an infant here in 1978 and called him Corey, thank you. [applause] Thank you, members.

To all foster parents, who give selflessly so much of themselves to these kids so that they can have a chance at a normal life, thank you. I and all Albertans owe you a debt of gratitude.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give notice that I will be moving the following motion this afternoon:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 15(6) the Legislative Assembly refer to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing the deliberation in consideration of the Speaker's finding yesterday of a prima facie case of breach of privilege and the determination of an appropriate remedy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Wellness, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to table the requisite number of copies of the Alberta College of Pharmacists' annual report. The college governs pharmacists, pharmacy technicians, and pharmacies in Alberta to support and protect the public's health and well-being.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, I have 155 copies of letters to the hon. Thomas Lukaszuk from students at Campus Saint-Jean, very positive, uplifting letters regarding Campus Saint-Jean.

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of the Law Society of Alberta's 2012 annual accountability report. Of course, the Law Society is a self-governing body comprised of over 9,000 lawyers in Alberta. I'm pleased to be one of them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the Government House Leader and the Deputy Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to table over 1,000 more signatures that I've received in my office from a petition. It calls on this PC government to reverse their harmful cuts to programs for persons with developmental disabilities and to properly support some of Alberta's most vulnerable citizens.

The petition is timely as today marks the International Day of Persons with Disabilities. Today is the day to raise awareness and understanding of those living with disabilities. This PC government's handling of their changes to PDD programming is an example of how Alberta's most vulnerable citizens can't trust their government to consult them, and I hope that upon reviewing these petitions, the government will conduct itself in a better fashion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader, followed by the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. the Premier I'm pleased to table five copies of the e-mail that she referenced in question period today, which indicates that signs were put up for Albertans because they needed a sign of hope, and it was a sign of hope.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the interest among the opposition relevant to government signs that inform Albertans on our progress in building Alberta and building the infrastructure that Albertans want today, I'm tabling the requisite number of copies of signage overview and all the rules and regulations that pertain to where, how, why, and how often these signs will be mounted.

Speaker's Ruling Motion Out of Order

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're now at the section that deals with points of order and points of privilege. I have no points of order so far, so I'll get on with the issue related to the privilege motion.

Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has provided notice of a motion that she proposes to move under Standing Order 15(6) concerning the ruling that your Speaker made yesterday wherein a prima facie question of privilege was found. This motion, at the outset, is out of order under Standing Order 48 for the reasons outlined by the chair yesterday and reasons that you can find at page 3234 of Alberta Hansard. My comments came in response to requests for clarification from the Official Opposition House Leader and also from the Member for Edmonton-Calder. Your chair was very clear, abundantly clear, in ruling that the apology by the Deputy Premier concluded the matter and that any forthcoming motion to pursue this particular point of privilege, such as the one we have before us today, would not be in order. That was made very clear yesterday, and that ended the matter. The chair does not want to engage in any debate on this point.

However, if members are interested in references and authorities, they can refer to a 1993 incident in this Assembly, where Speaker Schumacher ruled on the effect of an apology at pages 463 and 464 of Alberta Hansard for September 23, 1993. The chair would also like to update a quotation from Joseph Maingot. His book Parliamentary Privilege in Canada was relied upon by Speaker Schumacher and found in his ruling at page 464 of Alberta Hansard for that day. That statement is now found on page 267 of the second edition of that book by Maingot, and it states, "An apology by the offending Member will invariably close the matter without the necessity of putting the motion to a vote."

It has been a longstanding tradition that when there is an offence or an impropriety or a point of order or some such thing and the member is asked about it and then chooses to apologize, the House accepts the apology or, in some cases, an apology and a withdrawal, depending on the nature of the point, and that concludes the matter if it is accepted, and that was accepted yesterday.

I will conclude simply with this. The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona's motion is out of order as I've outlined and for the purposes that I've outlined, and the matter concerning the contempt of the Assembly related to the brochure that was the subject of that prima facie question and was produced by the government of Alberta was also concluded in totality yesterday. To repeat myself, what I said at the end of the ruling yesterday you can look up and find on page 3234 of Alberta Hansard where I said, "That concludes this matter." That ends it.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. You're seeking a point of clarification, I assume, are you?

Point of Clarification

Ms Blakeman: Under 13(2), yes, of course. That's the citation.

The Speaker: Yes. Please be brief.

Ms Blakeman: I am curious, when I examine the Votes and Proceedings for yesterday and look at the Speaker's ruling that is included in that, if the Speaker could explain, please, why he chose to move directly from the conclusion of his remarks, without allowing anyone else to speak or to rise to be noticed, to inviting someone from the government side to rise and issue a statement. In doing so, the Speaker took away the opportunity for any other member in the House to raise 15(6). So why did he choose to do that?

3:00

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. It's a good question, and I'm glad you asked it, actually. If you look back at the history of apologies, in every one that I looked at, that has typically ended the matter right then and there. An apology is issued. We judge it for its sincerity, for its intent, for its content. It was a sincere apology, it was accepted, and that ended it. If you look back at the history of even recent cases that have happened here, I followed basically that same procedure.

The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Also a request for more information under 13(2). It has to do with the remedy of the apology. I would ask the Speaker if we ought not consider additional remedies such as requesting the government to cease distribution of the brochure which is in contempt of the House.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I can't predict what you might want to do next. I'm simply dealing with what I had as facts and findings at the time that I had to make the ruling. I think I indicated yesterday that we spent collectively close to about 200 hours, so this was not a ruling taken lightly. We doted, literally, on every word in the two sections of the brochure. If you look at that brochure carefully, the first item that's there, you could actually determine it either way, hon. member. I know that some of you are grammarians and would side with me in that regard. I sided on the side that it was sounding like a fait accompli. You could get some clever lawyers who might have argued it equally well on the other side. So that concluded that matter in that way. What you might want to do after this, hon. member, will be totally up to you, but that matter from yesterday is closed.

We'll have one final point of clarification from the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, and hopefully that will be clarification enough.

Mr. Saskiw: Very briefly, I'd just like some clarification on the procedure here. My understanding of the rules and the precedents is that once a prima facie case of privilege or contempt is found, it's actually the Legislative Assembly that decides the appropriate remedy and not you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just asking for clarification.

Thank you.

The Speaker: That's why I was grateful that Airdrie rose yesterday immediately after the point, and Edmonton-Calder rose as well. I explained it then, and you're welcome to visit it once again.

I should just maybe draw your attention at the same time, while I'm on my feet, to Standing Order 2 of our Assembly, which states as follows:

Procedure in unprovided cases

2 In all contingencies unprovided for, the question shall be decided by the Speaker and, in making a ruling, the Speaker shall base any decision on the usages and precedents of the Assembly and on parliamentary tradition.

It has always, in my experience and in all the information we saw, been the case that once an apology has been issued and if accepted by the Speaker, that concludes the matter. That's what happened yesterday.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2013 (No. 2)

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak in Committee of the Whole to this appropriation bill. Of course, the appropriation bill is actually authorizing the expenditure of the money. The original document that is circulated, which is the supplementary supply estimates, is the wider ranging discussion in which the ministers should be able to stand and explain why they've made certain rulings. I regret that I was not able to be on duty when that was happening, so I do have a few questions that I would like to put on the record.

I do note that the expenditure is about three-quarters of a billion dollars, and most of it, of course, is directed towards recovery from the floods, primarily in southern Alberta but also in Fort McMurray. The first is the money for First Nations homes to be rebuilt, those that were destroyed in the flooding. The question I have is: when can we expect a report or an audit that would be available on this and other monies that are expended on specific purposes? This actually is appearing in the budget for Aboriginal Relations as vote 8.1.

Just generally speaking, Mr. Chair, what the government chose to do was that rather than apportioning money into each department into the area that it was going to be used, they just put an extra vote in every department, vote 8, and that's where they stuck in a lump sum the money that they were giving to the department to deal with related expenses for the flooding. So in this case, we have 8.1, First Nations housing, for $50 million. I am wondering: what is the auditing process that can be expected from this? We have a separate vote number. I'm expecting that there would be a great deal of attention put on this. When could we expect to see some kind of a comprehensive report back?

In the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development I do note that there was a 4 per cent interest rebate on any loans up to a million dollars for a two-year period to help eligible businesses and not-for-profits and, I think, agricultural producers – oh, there we go; yeah, those three groups – to take out loans to help themselves get back on their feet. Thank you very much to the government for recognizing the role that the not-for-profit sector contributes to our community. We always hear about business. It's a very business-focused government. They want everything done according to business, yet half our province is public sector or not-for-profits or a charitable foundation or of a volunteer focus as well as, in fact, all of the public service which is serving hospitals and schools and all the levels of civil service and a number of other functions. So thank you very much for recognizing the NGOs specifically in that area.

I know that the second piece of what's happening in Ag and Rural Development was loan guarantees. I know that for a number of years the loan guarantees were used frequently by the government, but then they sort of came out of fashion. As far as I know, in the sectors I worked in anyway, all of the loan guarantees were called, and the money was paid back. So I'm wondering if we're embarking on a new season of loan guarantees. Of course, in particular, I'm interested in how the government is going to be monitoring a loan guarantee. Is it just going to become like a floating line of credit, or is it for a specific time and then it would be called in? So another question there in Committee of the Whole.

There is additional money under Education specific to replacing books and materials – thank you very much – which will mean a lot to the schools in that area. I know that most schools struggle to provide enough materials, you know, books, library books, paper, computer floppies – no, not floppies any more – thumb drives and other materials like that. So thank you for recognizing that on behalf of the schools.

There is also a line to subsidize the school for vacant desks with the assumption that some families would not have been able to remain and have their kids go to the same school, so rather than the school losing money, they are subsidizing it. I am a little curious about that one. I know that in the spring there's a certain amount of money that's allocated to every school board and to every school, and then once you get into September, about the third week in September, the principal has to say: "Okay. This is how many students we actually have." Since the flood took place in June and September has gone by, I'm just wondering how that worked. If they were able to report in September that they had fewer students, is that when the money was allocated? I'm just interested in the timing around that.

Under Environment and Sustainable Resource Development there is an amount of money of $2 million that is "requested for the 2013 Alberta flood recovery to complete additional studies under the provincial Flood Hazard Identification Program." I would be very interested in hearing where the initial studies are. This is saying "additional studies." Where are the original studies for this? Are they public documents? When can they be obtained? Do you have to fill out a form, or who do I ask to see these?

Additionally, if the $2 million has been contracted outside, to an outside firm, what does the RFP look like? Also, what are the terms of the contract? I know the government doesn't like to do this, but the public does like you to do this, because the winner of an RFP should be willing to admit, "This is what I'm doing and for what," and have that contract made public. I'd be interested in seeing what that $2 million contract for additional studies under the provincial flood hazard identification program actually looks like.

Under Human Services, there is $66 million for flood recovery for emergency financial assistance. Those were the cards, the . . .

Mr. Hehr: Debit cards.

Ms Blakeman: . . . debit cards that were distributed to people very quickly, and I think many people found that quite helpful.

The question after the fact, of course, is: how do we audit this? How do we know if the right amount of money was loaded on the cards and got to the right people?

Not that I'm accusing the government of this, but I'll remind the government that when the Auditor General was able to do a systems audit on the BSE money that was also distributed very quickly, no questions asked, just went out to help our farmers, it turned out that our farmers didn't get very much help at all because the system was designed to compensate farmers for every cow that was standing in their lot, on their land at, you know, midnight of a certain day. Of course, the ones that had the most cows standing in their yard were the two largest packing plants in Alberta, and they got paid for every single cow that they had standing there, which was a lot of money. The farmers, of course, who had shipped the cows to them to be slaughtered, didn't get so much money. So did that program accomplish what it was supposed to, which was to be able to help our farmers? Not so much. I'm interested in how we are going to be able to assess whether that emergency money was in fact well spent.

Under the Infrastructure budget there is a supplementary amount of capital, $5 million, requested for the planning of a community resource centre in High River, and I'm wondering what additional monies are committed over what period of time for further developments. Good to plan. That's great. But they actually need a building to walk into, so what are the timelines around that?

Look at that. No questions at all on Municipal Affairs

In Transportation we have $23 million and change for improvements to roads and bridges, water management infrastructure, and water and waste-water infrastructure. I hope at some point we will get access to a detailed report of exactly which bridges and roads and water management infrastructure, in fact, this was used on. But thank you very much for recognizing the importance of water and waste-water infrastructure in Bragg Creek.

Okay. One of the things that I did not see in here – and it actually surprised me – was that there was nothing for the Department of Health. The Department of Health is a little bit besieged right now and has been for many years under this government, actually, because it doesn't seem to be able to improve the service delivery of health care although they seem to be able to change the management around on a spectacularly regular level, which is making it very hard.

For example, if you were a union that was negotiating with that management, how would you do that? Every time you went to the table, there would be a different boss there. Do you have to postpone so they've got enough time to get up to speed? Is that the fault of the union, then, that it can't make the arbitration date or what? Just a point.

One of the other things that came to my attention as a result of the Health budget was a wonderful program that was running with a mobile dental clinic. In the end, the government decided not to fund it. This was a partnership with the Alberta Dental Association and College. The program was operational up until September 30 of this year. Very helpful. I heard from people that just could not say enough positive things about this program.

They basically brought a trailer with a full dental clinic into long-term care facilities, especially those with dementia patients. They could just bring the patient from their room right into the trailer, do all of the dental and denturists' work. Of course, especially for people with dementia, it's very hard to get them to sit in different chairs that they don't know. So it really worked out. It's quite disappointing to find out that the government, in fact, did support the dental college with the purchase of the actual units, which was some $800,000 and change, but the operational money is about $285,000 a year, $2 million over seven years, and that's where the government has withdrawn their support. So a great, great, great program – we already have the machinery for it – and the government can't manage to find that extra money every year.

As a result, those trailers, complete with mobile dental labs, are now parked, and we have a whole bunch of seniors that are not getting dental care, which, as the many physicians in this House will tell you, is an integral part of wellness because if you've got bad teeth – sorry; it's a bit graphic – then you're swallowing bad teeth stuff. That is not helping your digestion, which is going to lead to other problems. So just a part of the funding that I had an opportunity to ask a question about, and I'm glad to be able to put that on the record. I think it was a great program. It certainly helped my constituents and other constituents.

Those are the questions that I have for the supplementary supply budget, which we are now discussing as part of the appropriation process. We're in Committee of the Whole. I'm happy to support the supplementary supply budget this time out. I don't always do that. If there's any opportunity to answer some of my questions, I'd appreciate it.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Before I recognize the next speaker, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I have a number of guests, some of whom have departed, I'm afraid. This is my fault. I thought that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was sending a note to the chair, and she thought I was sending a note to the chair. I apologize to those that have had to leave.

Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guests, who represent thousands of workers in Alberta. They're here today because they're very concerned about the negative implications that Bill 45 and Bill 46 will have on working Albertans. I would ask my guests, if they are still here, to rise as I call their names to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly: Siobhán Vipond, the secretary-treasury of the Alberta Federation of Labour; Jodie Zaplotinsky from the Health Sciences Association of Alberta; Judy Mayer from the Health Sciences Association of Alberta; Carol Chapman, president of CUPE 3550, which represents education support staff in the Edmonton public schools; Gloria Lepine, also from CUPE 3550; Linda Harris from CUPE 3550; Ryan Williams, who is a resident of Edmonton-Strathcona; and Chelsea Taylor Flook, who is with the Prairie chapter of the Sierra Club. I would ask them to now receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Bill 36 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2013 (No. 2) (continued)

The Chair: Okay. Are there other speakers on 36?
Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 36 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

Bill 46 Public Service Salary Restraint Act

The Chair: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you to all members who have offered their thoughts on and those who have offered support for Bill 46, the Public Service Salary Restraint Act. This legislation has been described as supporting "government's commitment to living within its means by ensuring sustainability in the compensation of the Alberta public service."

Mr. Chairman, we want to get back to the bargaining table with the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees so we can reach an agreement on pay that is fair to our hard-working public servants and fair to taxpayers. Bill 46 reflects the government's commitment to holding the line on spending to help us balance the budget while meeting Alberta's enormous growth challenges head-on. We must continue to make prudent financial choices. We've been abundantly clear with public-sector unions, including the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, that we need to hold the line on salaries.

We worked hard with our doctors and teachers on long-term deals that hold wages flat for three years and guarantee stability in education and health care for years to come. MLAs are also setting an example by imposing an additional three-year wage freeze on their own salaries.

The Public Service Salary Restraint Act has been introduced in an effort to reach a negotiated settlement with the union representing our government workers. Reaching a negotiated settlement with the union is our preferred option to reach a deal that is fair to employees and fair to taxpayers. In fact, our most recently tabled offer to the union is more generous than what's provided in the legislation.

Mr. Chair, sustainability in public-sector compensation means paying employees well for the work that they do on behalf of Albertans at a rate that is responsible to Albertans. This is a balance that we want to achieve through Bill 46. The decision to move forward with this legislation was not made easily. I take no glee nor satisfaction in bringing it forward, but government is tasked with making tough decisions.

At this time I would like to address some of the comments we heard during the debate yesterday and last night. I appreciate the comments we heard last night on the role of collective bargaining in labour relations. The collective agreement between the Alberta government and the AUPE expired on March 31, 2013. The government and AUPE negotiated for 12 days before the AUPE left the table. Mediation was held, and no resolution could be reached. AUPE quickly applied for compulsory binding arbitration, a step we have not seen in 30 years.

Again, Mr. Chair, seeking arbitration is the exception to the process, not the norm that we have seen in the past. The government is legally and constitutionally required to engage AUPE in good faith on workplace issues. We have done that through the collective bargaining process. Collective bargaining has now concluded after 12 days of bargaining and less than two days of mediation, and we are now seeking a negotiated settlement through renewed discussions with the union.

This bill does not interfere with good-faith negotiations. It has been carefully developed, and we are confident that it meets all legal and constitutional requirements. The legislation simply provides a framework to resume negotiations and work together with the union to reach a settlement that is fair to the public servants and to taxpayers, as I said. As you may recall, it was the AUPE who engaged in the five-day illegal strike earlier this year.

Again, we are confident that the legislation is constitutionally sound. Public-sector salaries make up roughly half of the government's total operating budget each year, including the doctors and the nurses, the teachers and postsecondary faculty, and the employees of Alberta's public service. In order to control spending, as Albertans told us they wanted us to do, we've had to bend the curve on salaries. The offer that is on the table right now is consistent with this approach.

We also heard much about fairness during the debate. Ultimately, our public servants are paid fairly and will continue to be paid fairly. The balance we are striving for is to negotiate a long-term agreement that is reasonable and that reflects our government's fiscal restraint policy. We were able to achieve this balance with other groups, enabling government to live within its means and meet Alberta's enormous growth challenges and flood challenges head-on.

As I've stated before, the offer we made most recently to the union was, in fact, better than the settlement included in the legislation. The offer included a four-year agreement, starting in the current year, that provides for salary increases of 0, 0, 1, 1, with an $875 lump-sum payment in year 2 to all eligible employees.

Other items in the offer include enhanced vacation entitlement and Christmas closure, which would see employees receive extra paid days off during the holidays for the next four years.

Mr. Chair, fairness is valuing the services Albertans rely on and the front-line workers who provide them. We do, and we will continue to ensure that Alberta public service salaries are competitive moving forward.

Mr. Chair, there have been a number of claims made by the opposition which I must take an opportunity to address as well. First, both the Liberal and the Wildrose opposition claim they would repeal the legislation in 2016 and reinstate arbitration rights. This does underscore their complete lack of understanding of this legislation because the bill has no long-term function. Once the provisions of the bill have run their course, it can be repealed by simple proclamation. By 2016 the bill will have already been completed. There will be a new collective agreement in place, and repealing it in 2016 will do nothing to change what will be by then be past events. As the bill states very clearly, it only applies to this union and this settlement. Arbitration rights for the AUPE will already be intact for any future deals at that point.

I'd also like to note that claims that government agreed to arbitration are somewhat misleading, Mr. Chair. Compulsory arbitration means just that, compulsory. The government has neither the option to accept nor deny arbitration once the union has chosen to apply.

I also couldn't help but notice that the hon. Member for Airdrie has been using union talking points. It's interesting to me, Mr. Chair, that the hon. member now positions himself as the defender of public service given his party's position as clearly outlined in their alternative budget. This party has been very clear, as it says here, that they would "hold the line on front-line public sector salaries until the provincial cash deficit is eliminated." It is clear to me, as I'm sure it is to all members of this House, that in order to secure indefinite zeroes from our public sector, this deal would bypass negotiations as well as arbitration. If AUPE is not prepared to take the deal that this government has put on the table, which includes increases, they would certainly be unwilling to accept indefinite zeroes from the Wildrose Alliance.

Mr. Chair, our research shows that our bargaining unit employees at the job rate maximums are generally paid more than comparable employees in other provinces, and they should be. We want to negotiate an agreement that continues to be fair for workers and allows us to continue to live within our means. At the same time, decisions that directly impact the spending of taxpayer dollars and our ability to pay for the services Albertans rely upon need to be made by the government.

We look forward to resuming negotiations and to a counteroffer to ours coming to us and to getting back to the table to talk about a negotiated settlement that is fair for Albertans and fair to our hard-working employees.

With that, Mr. Chair, I will take my seat.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This is an interesting bill, and I appreciate the comments of the hon. minister to clarify some points that we haven't really perhaps understood as well as we've needed to, so your comments were appreciated, beneficial, and helpful, I think.

There is an aspect of this that makes the bill itself seem a little prejudicial since it's just targeted at one union. I realize that's the union that's causing you to stay up at night wondering how you're going to balance the budget and hoping that removing the right to arbitration forces them either back to the table to accept what you've already offered or to come back with something very, very close to it. That really is, in a sense, just like holding a gun to their heads, because they know that they don't have a choice. They've got to negotiate because arbitration is now off the table. Something that's been on the books for years, a process that has proven effective for decades is now being removed to force them to sort of bend their will to yours. That seems inappropriate.

I think Albertans recognize that these are tough times, and I think this union perhaps recognizes it as well. The union's job, naturally, is to get the best deal it can for its members. That's how they can justify the dues that they're taking. I think they've demonstrated that they've been very good at it. In fact, perhaps they're too good at it, and that's what's got you worried.

We've stated in our literature, specifically in Budget 2013: Wildrose Financial Recovery Plan, that we support the work of the public servants and support the empowerment of the front lines. Our approach has always been – and we've stated it clearly – that we'll work collaboratively and respectfully with public-sector unions to hold the line on current overall expenditures on front-line public-sector salaries. This means the Wildrose would also bargain hard to get the fairest possible deal for taxpayers, but the key word here is "bargain."

It seems like the PCs are bargaining with a gun to their heads. They're threatening to pull out the right to arbitration, and in fact you're proposing to pass this act, that will remove that, for the specific purpose of bringing this union and the bargaining agents from the union either to their knees or at least to the table, where they won't have really much choice but to accept what's there.

You say that you want to bring them back to bargain. I'm not sure that this threat is a good endorsement of your sincerity about bargaining.

I believe that this bill is prejudicial, and I think it's unfair to this union. I believe that approving this will not be good for our province in spite of the meagre savings that it may generate. There is lots of waste in the government – we know about that – and as all good businesspeople know, the proper practice is to cut at the top. You trim at the top and then do all you can to enhance the service capability of the front-line workers, especially those that are providing essential services.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I move adjournment of debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 45

Public Sector Services Continuation Act

The Chair: I'll recognize the first speaker, the hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to make a few comments with respect to Bill 45 in Committee of the Whole to address some of the issues that were raised in second reading. The sole purpose of Bill 45 is to protect Albertans from harm. That has raised a number of issues and concerns in the Legislature, but most of them, quite frankly, are off point. They read into the legislation's intent. [interjection]

The Chair: The Minister of Human Services has the floor, hon. member, please.

Mr. Hancock: Issues and concerns that have been raised are off point. They read into the legislation an intent that doesn't exist, and they extrapolate from that intent ramifications of the bill that, at best, are extremely unlikely and, in fact, are nonexistent. I want to address some of those.

Violation of the Charter, whether or not the bill represents a violation of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Well, first and foremost, Mr. Chairman, I wouldn't bring forward a bill that I believed violated the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I haven't done that, and I won't do that. In my experience in this House, on the one bill that I thought was a violation of the constitutional provisions, I was the lone person who actually stood against that bill, when I was Minister of Justice and Attorney General. So that is my experience in this House. But you don't have to take my word for it.

Trust me. Before any bill is brought into the House – I was tempted last night, when I heard the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition talking about these contracts, to run in and say: stop the proceedings; we didn't think of that. Sorry. No. Actually, there is pretty thorough review of most aspects before they come to the House. There's a lot of legal work that goes into drafting bills. We do believe that this is very much a constitutional bill.

The fact of the matter is that in this particular bill we do not actually change any of the real provisions of the public-sector services employees act other than the penalty pieces. So the question about constitutionality would've been with respect to the existing public-sector services employees act.

Freedom of association. The Supreme Court has made it clear that the Charter protects the process of collective bargaining that allows employees to make collective representations and have them considered in good faith. Neither the right to strike nor a right to a final dispute resolution mechanism are constitutionally protected. It must be remembered that we're not creating new law when it comes to illegal strikes. That law has been on the books, as I said, for a number of years. What we're doing is increasing the fines, which have always been a consequence of causing or engaging in an illegal strike.

Freedom of expression. Concerns have been raised that Bill 45 restricts freedom of expression and that it will capture innocent third parties simply for expressing an opinion about an illegal strike. Nothing, Mr. Chairman, could be further from the truth. There is no stated or unstated intention to restrict opinion. The intent is to restrict those with credible power and authority from inciting illegal behaviour. That is against the law. It's against the Criminal Code with respect to inciting a breach of the Criminal Code, and it's against the law here. It must be noted that any charges for doing so brought under the act would have to be approved before the courts. In other words, there's no way you can just say: "Oh. There's somebody that's been talking around the water cooler about inciting a strike. Let's charge them, and let's impose penalties." There's got to be a credible approach towards counselling an illegal act. Government cannot arbitrarily decide that someone is guilty of having incited an illegal strike.

Bill 45 also calls for fines for threatening to strike, and this is seen by some as a restriction on the right to free speech. This provision in Bill 45 exists because with public-sector unions the threat of going on an illegal strike can have a similar if not the same effect as actually engaging in a strike.

I want to give you an example of that, a credible and serious illegal threat that would cause service providers to actually prepare for a strike. Not doing so would be an abandonment of their responsibility to those that they serve. If there were an illegal strike in the health care sector, for example, it could result in things such as the transfer of patients or the cancellation of scheduled services. Those actions have both a personal and an economic effect. The cancellation of services could put the lives of Albertans at risk. Making alternative plans comes at an economic cost and potentially a safety or health cost that should not have to be borne by an individual taxpayer in this province. Again, such a charge brought under this act would have to be approved in court.

In other words, it's not just because somebody, as I think last night somebody said, calls into a late-night talk show and says: we should go on strike. That's not a threat of a strike. A threat of a strike is a real perceived approach, where people got together and actually engaged in a discussion which could have effect.

One of the provisions of Bill 45 that appears to have caused undue concern is that other persons could be subject to prosecution and fines. This has been seen as extending the legislation to cover all Albertans. Well, such is not the case. In fact, the existing Public Service Employee Relations Act, section 71(3), already has that exact provision in it. Again, it's just a question of what sanction there is for someone engaging. The provision recognizes that there are third parties who could play an active and strategic role in counselling a strike or creating a strike threat. In fact, they could go further. They could essentially bar somebody from complying with the law. In other words, if you were a third party who stopped somebody from going to work when they wanted to go to work, it would be a legal strike.

Ms Blakeman: It would be a lockout.

Mr. Hancock: Yes, a lockout could be one of those things.

If you stop somebody from doing what they ought to do at law, that could bring you under this section. But, again, it's not a new section. It's a section that's there already. It's just a question of what the penalty or the sanction is. The scope of this amendment does not extend to ordinary Albertans who are simply expressing an opinion related to either a strike threat or an actual strike.

Seeing Bill 45 as an assault on human rights actually requires a great deal of imagination. Restricting illegal strike behaviour is a legitimate and ongoing public policy objective. Given the potential that an illegal strike represents risk to Albertans, the provisions are fair and include the right of appeal. It's also worth noting that an illegal strike in the public sector can cause a violation of the rights of Albertans to safety and security.

The need for the increased size of the fines has come into question. However, the fines proposed in Bill 45 are in keeping with the current economic reality. The fines are intended to present a strong deterrent to illegal behaviour, which can impact the safety, health, or security of Albertans, based on recent history something which the current fine structure had not achieved.

The peace officers' illegal strike was a short one, but even that short strike caused major disruption and endangered workers, inmates, and the public. Lest I hear an outcry on it, I would say that there are appropriate ways for workers to engage in grievances. No worker in this province has the obligation to work in what they consider to be an unsafe workplace, but there are appropriate ways to bring that forward. I can say to this House that as the minister responsible for occupational health and safety, I have not seen that being brought forward in this instance, so I can't give any credence to the idea that that was a legitimate cause for an illegal act. First of all, there is no legitimate cause for an illegal act, and secondly, if that was something that was of concern to workers, there were other legitimate ways to have it dealt with.

So the intent to prevent public-sector unions from seeking illegal strikes is an accepted part of labour relations activity in Alberta. The fines outlined in the proposed legislation indicate the seriousness with which the government and Albertans treat this issue. The fines are meant to be effective not in penalizing people but in deterring what is an illegal action, which can improperly affect Albertans.

Saying that the provisions in Bill 45 are too high because they're higher than those that can be levied under the Occupational Health and Safety Act is, at best, disingenuous. In no way is it an apples-to-apples comparison. Fines under the Occupational Health and Safety Act relate to a single employee. Penalties under Bill 45 address labour disputes that are potentially much larger in scope, where there is significant harm and risk can arise at multiple locations across the province.

The abatement order provisions in Bill 45 have been positioned as a de facto fine that would serve to cripple unions. Unions can already be liable for damage. The provision in Bill 45 to establish a more effective mechanism that ensures that taxpayers are not on the hook for the results of illegal strikes. Affected parties must prove the damages occurred and that the final financial redress being sought is fair and reasonable and that they were caused as a result of the strike. A union that has been subject to an abatement order will have any funds that have not been used to redress the consequences of an illegal strike returned.

Nothing in Bill 45 will impede a worker's right to refuse unsafe work. The criteria under which work can be refused are clearly established under the occupational health and safety legislation, but there are procedures that must be followed. There must be imminent danger. Site visits from government officials are used to determine the nature and extent of hazard and the appropriate remedy for reducing or eliminating the hazard. In other words, Mr.

Chairman, it can't just be a disagreement with respect to management and workers. There is an independent way to determine whether, in fact, there is a safety hazard.

If affected workers do not agree with the findings, they can appeal the findings or the decision to the Occupational Health and Safety Council. So, Mr. Chairman, a number of issues were raised in second reading, which, as I say, are not actual, real issues. The legislation itself does not create the concept of an illegal strike. It brings in the threat of a strike and counselling, both of which are recognized terms at law with respect to criminal codes and other laws. Both of those terms require proof. They're not charges that can be laid recklessly. They require the consent of the minister before they can be laid. So there are a lot of protective provisions in there.

But the most important part of the act, Mr. Chairman, is to protect Albertans. We haven't had a lot of illegal strikes in this province. We have a good labour relations record overall in this province, and we want to keep it that way. This bill is not an antiunion bill; this is a pro-Alberta bill. This is a bill which basically says that public-sector employees who work in areas where the health and safety of Albertans is put at risk or is at risk cannot strike and have not been able to strike. When somebody engages in illegal action that puts the health and safety of Albertans at risk, then that action ought to be, first of all, deterred in as strong of language as possible, and if the deterrence is not effective, then it should be sanctioned in as strong a manner as possible. That's what Bill 45 does.

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'd like to begin by saying that this is the first opportunity I've had to speak to Bill 45. I still as of yet have not had an opportunity to speak to Bill 46. I think it's important to note the tactic or technique that this government is using in order to stifle debate in this House and ram through legislation, which is a motion of closure. I suspect that there will be another motion coming through on Bill 45 shortly to ensure that this will get rammed through at breakneck speed.

I want to just address a comment that the Minister of Human Services made in regard to Bill 45, trying to allay concerns that the opposition has regarding the application of this bill once it becomes law and the interpretation of this bill, where the minister said – you know, the example that was used last night was if someone phones into a talk show threatening to strike, that that person under this bill could be charged. Now, the interpretation of this bill is that that person could be charged. But what I find interesting is that the minister is trying to provide assurances that that's an example where the person wouldn't get charged. It's not written in the bill. I'd like to ask the minister: where in the bill does it say that in such and such an example a person would be safe from retribution or fines? It doesn't. So I apologize that I cannot take the minister's word at face value, considering it won't be the minister that enforces the law once it becomes law.

Having said that, again, my frustration thus far, and I believe the frustration of all the opposition, on second reading is the fact that this bill had closure on it where – you know, a couple of quick points here. Number one, I know that that is a tool that the government has used in the past. I'd like to point out that it's been used sparingly. But normally when we look at parliamentary procedures here and even in Ottawa, that type of tool is used once a significant number of members have had the opportunity to speak to a reading of a bill and there is democratic debate and a healthy debate as opposed to one or two opposition members having the opportunity to get up and speak to a bill and then moving immediately into closure.

I think Albertans are quite frustrated that their representatives don't have the opportunity to speak. I'd really like to remind the government that the 87 members in this House represent almost 4 million people. Stifling two-thirds of the opposition or disallowing them to speak to a reading of the bill is effectively silencing a large number of Albertans, and I believe that this government will hear about it. If not through e-mails and social media, they're going to hear about it in the 2016 election.

I want to move into my second point, Mr. Chair, which is that this bill, Bill 45, is unconstitutional. I find it ironic that this bill is coming from a supposed human rights lawyer, yet the way that this bill is written is in complete violation of our Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I'd like to read briefly section 2 from the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, just to remind all members of the Assembly what those rights are, and then I'll explain how this bill is unconstitutional and attacks those rights.

2. Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:

- (a) freedom of conscience and religion;
- (b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication;
- (c) freedom of peaceful assembly; and
- (d) freedom of association.

This bill violates sections 2(b) and 2(d), which, again, are "freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication" and "freedom of association." This bill attacks those freedoms in the sense that not just public-sector workers but all Albertans, any Albertan, can be charged and fined under this bill if there is a threat of a strike or discussion of a strike.

You know, when I first went through this bill, Mr. Chair, it had some very Orwellian undertones to it and causes concern for all Albertans that this government wants to pass into law and enable – I mean, what are they going to introduce next? The thought police, that are going to be chasing people down if they think about a strike as opposed to even talking about it to their friends?

An Hon. Member: It's dangerous.

Mr. Bilous: Well, it is very dangerous, this type of legislation.

Again, Mr. Chair, this is a direct attack on the fundamental rights and freedoms of all Albertans, not just our friends that work in the public sector. This essentially is a bill that's designed as a gag order to silence workers and to stifle their ability to take action when their health and safety is at risk.

I want to just clarify for many of the members on the other side of the House. Often the wildcat strike that occurred this spring has been cited as an example of why we need this legislation. You know, what's frustrating, Mr. Chair, is that the government has completely misunderstood what had happened back in the spring. I, too, can say that I was on that strike line, speaking to workers about what prompted them, what was the impetus for them going on strike, and the story is quite fascinating.

You've got story after story of workers and employees who worked at the remand, frustrated after numerous attempts of speaking with management, of speaking with the government, of trying to get a hold of the minister to address the issues of their concern for their own health and safety and that of the inmates because of an improperly constructed brand new remand centre. Now, not all of it was improperly constructed, but there were parts of it that posed a direct risk to the staff, workers at the remand, and also the inmates. As the Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out, there was glass in this facility that could be smashed with a coffee cup, which poses a huge threat.

Now, Mr. Chair, I also want to bring up the fact that for a number of years I myself worked as a corrections officer at the Edmonton Young Offender Centre, and I can tell you that the people who work in these facilities are not there because of some exorbitant salary or massive amounts of benefits or a pension. They're there because they want to make a difference and because they care. When I worked at the EYOC, I did not feel unsafe in that existing facility. Now, I've been out for quite a few years, so if there are concerns that have come up in the last 15 years, then please excuse me. But my point is that workers in this province need to have the ability and the channels to take their concerns to the appropriate places and that they also be addressed.

Now, the wildcat strike was because of frustration for months and months of being ignored, neglected, pushed aside when they had real, valid concerns. This illegal strike – yes, it was illegal – was their last option, their last straw, to send a message to this deaf government that there were extreme flaws and concerns with the remand centre that were not being addressed. So they did what they were forced to do in order to protect themselves and the inmates in the remand. I just want to say on a side note that I found it quite offensive when a member last night tried to compare a legitimate strike to riots that occurred after a hockey game. I think it's a gross display of ignorance as far as understanding the purpose of the strike and the reason behind the wildcat strike versus young people partying too much and taking celebration or the opposite to an extreme.

I just want to point out, as the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona so eloquently put it last night, to spell out to the members in this Assembly, what illegal strikes have brought not only our public-sector workers but all Albertans and working people that are thankful for a weekend, for an eight-hour workday, for mandatory breaks, for overtime pay, for safety regulations in a workplace, for minimum wage: all of these things are brought to you by our friends in organized labour. I would argue that we would not enjoy those rights, whether you're unionized or non-unionized, anywhere in this province or in this country if men and women didn't stand up and fight for those rights which we now enjoy today.

Mr. Chair, examples of civil disobedience that have moved society forward. Let's look at the example of Rosa Parks. The fact that she refused to go to the back of the bus was the impetus for a movement that did bring some equality to all people in North America regardless of colour.

The fact that there was a period in time not too long ago in our history, Mr. Chair, where women and aboriginal peoples did not have the right to vote: now, do you think that was just handed over because people had clamoured and said, "We deserve the right to vote"? No. They had to take action that at the time was considered civil disobedience in order to gain those rights.

Now, Mr. Chair, I'm sure my time is coming to a close. I never seem to have an issue filling the 15 minutes. The two other issues I just want to talk about are, again, the real purpose of this bill and the fines, the amount of money. There have always been fines for illegal strikes. I would like to make some comparisons between when we have, especially, companies that break the law and their fines within the province of Alberta versus what this government is trying to impose.

The purpose of this bill. Essentially, Mr. Chair, in my view, this is an attack on working people in this province. This is an attack on people's rights. This undermines the rights of workers, of working people, to refuse to work in an unsafe workplace condition.

This as well is a bill designed to create a culture of fear and intimidation. More and more this government is looking like Big Brother, wanting to control, again, not just the actions and words of its citizens. It begs the question of what's next, Mr. Chair.

I really do need to clarify because this example keeps being brought up by the different ministers as far as how they negotiated a contract with the teachers. There couldn't be a bigger load of hogwash, Mr. Chair. That contract was starting to be negotiated, but when some locals decided this wasn't a good contract, then the government decided to put a gun to their head and legislate the contract. That's not bargaining in good faith. That's not negotiation. That's, well, the actions of this government, where they'll ask, and if you say no, they're just going to ram it down your throat anyway regardless of what you say.

Moving on to the fines in this bill, Mr. Chair, the fines for unions, union reps, and even Albertans are grossly disproportionate to their actions. The fact is that this bill will basically fine – and the intention of this, let's be blunt, is to fine unions into the ground and to break unions.

I mean, the government may say this is about safety. If this was about safety – let's go back to the example of the remand centre – then maybe they would have done something about the genuine concerns that the workers had at the remand centre. Who knows best? It's the people who are in there day in and day out, who are working there and don't want to put their own lives in jeopardy or at risk above and beyond, obviously, the risks of working within a remand centre. But it's not just about the workers, Mr. Chair. It's also about their concern for the safety of the very inmates and people that reside there as well. The fact that we had an example of an incident at the remand centre not two weeks ago: I mean, clearly, these concerns that the workers have put forward are still being ignored, and this government is not taking their concerns legitimately.

I'm going to try to find my notes because I've been all over the place here. We're talking about disproportionate fines, the fact that under Bill 45 – and I believe the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona figured it out – it could be as much as $2.5 million a day, which is an unbelievable sum of money. I'm not even sure if that number necessarily is accounting for all the individual fines that would go out. Let's compare that to some environmental infractions that have occurred. I mean, first and foremost, in this province they're a slap on the wrist for the most part. They're normally a one-time penalty as opposed to this bill, that would continue to fine Albertans, union members, or unions themselves every day that they're on strike. It's quite a difference between the two.

Mr. Chair, you know, I think Albertans, again, see this bill for what it is. This is an assault on working people, this is an attack on organized labour, and this is a very punitive and heavy-handed bill. I'm not even sure if the minister believes his own words when he says that this isn't a punitive bill. You look at the amount for fines on individuals, on unions, on workers and compare it to other jurisdictions across the country, and Alberta is by far – well, there is no other jurisdiction in the country that is trying to punish and ram into the ground its organized labour. In other parts of this country there is a recognition of the value that these workers bring.

I mean, this brings me to my concluding point, Mr. Chair, and that's that the level of frustration is rising amongst workers in Alberta when they hear this government get up and say one thing and their actions are the opposite. They get up and talk about the value of public-sector workers – our firefighters, our doctors, our nurses, our health care providers, the folks who stepped up during the floods – and then turn around and beat them down with a bill like this. I mean, it goes beyond a slap in the face. I think the minister may be delusional if he thinks that the workers that make this province tick – they are the reason that Alberta is one of the best provinces to live in. It's because of the workers, and when a government introduces a bill like this, it sends them a message of the opposite.

I mean, in our day and age people are valued, and the level of value is, honestly, often based on one significant factor, on wages. You know, it's insulting to compare the wages we get in this House to many of our public-sector union sisters and brothers and to say that – and I realize this next point is going to Bill 46 – well, we took a 1 per cent freeze, so they should, too. I'm sorry. You're comparing apples to oranges, not apples to apples. If we want to show not only our public-sector friends but workers in this province that we do value them, then . . .

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would move that that committee rise and report Bill 36 and report progress on bills 45 and 46.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills and reports the following bill: Bill 36. The committee reports progress on bills 45 and 46. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? That is carried.

Government Motions

Time Allocation on Bill 45

50. Mr. Hancock moved:
Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 45, Public Sector Services Continuation Act, is resumed, not more than two hours shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Mr. Anderson: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's also my duty to tell the hon. House leader that he's being undemocratic and irresponsible and spitting in the face of democracy in this province. So I'm going to stand up and do that exact thing right now.

These motions are, again, a complete farce. We just saw the farce in action. We saw one speaker get up on these bills in committee, and then without a second thought we saw this House leader adjourn debate to get out of committee and to go back to bring in these government motions. It's just unbelievable. These motions are to make sure that we only have two hours of debate for bills 45, in this case, and 46. That motion will be brought forward soon enough.

Mr. Speaker, I mean, obviously, I stood up twice yesterday on these same types of motions with regard to second reading. But I ask you: how is it democratic? We're going to be in here for two hours to debate this bill. Bill 45 in particular is a very complex piece of legislation. There's lots involved in it, lots of new pieces in it, with a lack jurisprudence to kind of guide the review boards and courts with regard to things like strike threat and new pieces that they're not used to dealing with and these definitions and so forth. We're taking a whole two hours of our wonderfully productive time to debate this.

For example, we on the Wildrose side have an omnibus amendment, that I'm sure the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner will be bringing forward. It's a very complex amendment. We had to do it in an omnibus fashion because we're probably only going to get one shot at it and out of respect for the third and fourth parties, who I'm sure have amendments of their own. We're probably only going to be able to have the debate on that one amendment, which contains a lot, virtually five or six pieces in it. We're going to probably give it about 30 to 40 minutes. That's how long we will have to debate a set of amendments that, essentially, amend the bill to protect free speech of individual Albertans and individual workers, public-sector workers. That's the respect that we're giving free speech in this province, 30 to 40 minutes of our time. That's an embarrassment. It's not surprising from this group, but it is an embarrassment.

Ms Blakeman: Do you think it's disrespectful?

Mr. Anderson: It's very disrespectful of the legislative process, Mr. Speaker.

This is gong show government. This is just not how you run things. If you want to introduce these types of bills, you introduce them at the beginning of session, not at the end of session. You allow proper time for debate on it. You don't sit here till 2 in the morning on second reading of the bill like we did last night. I'm sure we'll be here till probably close to 2 in the morning tonight on all these bills in committee because this is what government does that has no time for opposition to what they want. They don't like opposition, and they try to crush opposition with every tool that they have, even if that means trampling on the democratic rights and free-speech rights of the elected representatives of this Assembly, who will not all have the opportunity to speak to this bill, let alone speak to these amendments, let alone speak at every reading and stage of this process. It's wrong.

Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to inform this Assembly that in 2016 I look very much forward to working with my NDP and Liberal colleagues. However the new government works out – we're not sure, of course, but we're quite confident it will be a new formation – we will work together to make sure to overhaul these ridiculous standing orders that we have that allow for this pillage of democracy and fix it and make sure that we actually have fairness and protect free speech in this Assembly.

I think that Albertans would welcome that change, and I think it would make for better legislation, less mistakes, and it would better serve the interests of the people of Alberta, Mr. Speaker. I look very much forward to the spring of 2016 in that regard.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 50 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:14 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

For the motion:

Bhardwaj	Horner	Olson
Bhullar	Hughes	Pastoor
Brown	Jansen	Quadri
Calahasen	Kennedy-Glans	Rodney
Cao	Klimchuk	Sarich
Casey	Kubinec	Scott
Cusanelli	Lemke	Starke
Dallas	Leskiw	VanderBurg
Denis	McDonald	Webber
Dorward	McQueen	Woo-Paw
Fenske	Oberle	Xiao
Fritz	Olesen	Young
Hancock

Against the motion:

Anderson	Fox	Pedersen
Bikman	Hehr	Strankman
Bilous	Mason	Wilson
Blakeman

Totals: For – 37 Against – 10

[Government Motion 50 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would suggest that everyone who is coming is here, so I'd respectfully ask for the unanimous consent of the House to shorten the time between bells for any further divisions for the rest of the debate today to one minute.

The Deputy Speaker: For the balance of the afternoon?

Mr. Hancock: For the balance of the day because we won't be rising out of committee again until later.

The Deputy Speaker: For the balance of the day.

Mr. Anderson: A point of clarification.

The Deputy Speaker: A point of clarification, Member for Airdrie?

Mr. Anderson: We might be able to get agreement on this if it's to the 6 o'clock break; otherwise, I doubt we're going to get agreement on that. Is that okay with you, a friendly amendment?

The Deputy Speaker: A friendly amendment, hon. Government House Leader, moving that the bells be shortened to one minute for the balance of the afternoon.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Privilege Opportunity for Debate

Mr. Mason: If I may, I would like to again raise a question of privilege with respect to the motion that was just passed by the House.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday I raised a question of privilege, and the Acting Speaker said:

It is obvious to me that the rules of the standing orders were followed, and our standing orders are agreed to by everyone in this House. Our standing orders are what we run the orders of the House through, so I would say that far be it [for] a Speaker to overrule the standing orders that rule this House.

In that case, I would say that there is no point of privilege, and we will proceed.

Today I am not challenging the standing orders of this Assembly as they were approved, although not by everyone in the House, clearly, by the government and have become, in effect, the rules of the House. Rather, what I want to do is raise the question of the government's application of the standing orders; in other words, the way they word the motion and the impact of the motion made under the standing orders rather than the standing orders themselves.

Mr. Speaker, I think that motions 50 and 53 are an improper use of time allocation under Standing Order 21. This improper use of time allocation is a breach of the fundamental right of members to speak in the Assembly. According to Beauchesne, section 75, "The privilege of freedom of speech is both the least questioned and the most fundamental right of the Member." House of Commons Procedure and Practice on page 89 also states that freedom of speech is the first right of members. "By far, the most important right accorded to Members of the House is the exercise of freedom of speech in parliamentary proceedings."

Last night I rose on a point of privilege in relation to Government Motion 52, which, in my view, was an improper use of time allocation. I cited Beauchesne, section 25, page 12, which states that "parliamentary privilege does not go much beyond the right of free speech in the House of Commons and the right of a Member to discharge his duties in the House as a Member." I believe that government motions 50 and 53 are a violation of that basic right. They unnecessarily limit debate on bills 45 and 46, and they curtail the rights of all private members of this Assembly to do our job; namely, to debate government bills introduced for our consideration. I would add that this also denies our constituents their right to be represented in this Assembly.

Of course, everyone would acknowledge that time allocation is permitted under our standing orders because it is maybe necessary in certain circumstances. That is also the context in which Beauchesne, section 77, page 22, must be understood. That section states, "Freedom of speech does not mean that Members have an unlimited or unrestrained right to speak on every issue." Under some pressing circumstances and after a reasonable period of debate the right of members to speak can be limited. However, the right of members to debate cannot be restricted, curtailed, and ultimately prevented by closure motions that appeared on the Order Paper before the debate had even begun.

I note, Mr. Speaker, that notice of government motions 50 and 53 appeared on the Order Paper on Wednesday, November 27, and they were listed under Government Motions on the Order Paper Thursday, November 28. However, at that time second reading debate had not yet commenced on bills 45 and 46, and Committee of the Whole only commenced this afternoon. It's inappropriate and improper, in my view, that motions for closure would appear on the Order Paper three sitting days prior to the commencement of debate in the committee stage to which the motions refer. In short, it is completely improper to use Standing Order 21 to prematurely and deliberately prevent private members from speaking to bills 45 and 46.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, from my caucus, was unable to address either of these bills at second reading. Only today in committee was he afforded his first opportunity to speak to the bill, and that applies to many others. When the government applies the standing order in a way that limits debate before there's any clear indication that obstruction is occurring, when they do it in a premeditated fashion, and when they do it for such a short period of time at each stage, they infringe the rights of members of this Assembly to do their job, and that is to debate the bills put before the Assembly. I can't emphasize how much I think this is a critical point for us. If the government wants to use time allocation, if they want to implode...

An Hon. Member: They're doing that already.

Mr. Mason: I'll save that thought.

If they want to impose limitations on the right to debate, then, in my view, it should be only after a reasonable amount of debate has occurred and there is a clear attempt by the opposition or members to delay the passage of the bill by repeatedly speaking to it. It should not be applied in a way that prevents members who wish to speak to the bill from speaking to it at each stage if they wish to do so.

I would ask that the Speaker rule that the use of Standing Order 21 needs to be applied in a way that does not prevent debate, that does not unreasonably restrict the ability of members to stand in this House and debate bills that are important to them and to their constituents. Only after a reasonable amount of debate has occurred should time allocation be imposed, and the amount of time allowed under time allocation should be sufficient for members who wish to address the bill to have an opportunity to do so.

I can't state how much I am offended by the use of this time allocation under Standing Order 21 by the government in the way that they have done it. They have premeditatedly brought forward these motions, and after only two members have spoken, one government member, who introduced the bill, and one opposition member on the Official Opposition, they then bring forward the motion to close debate, allocating only two hours to that particular stage of debate. Of course, unlike most of the time, when we're not under a time constraint, more government members speak, so the two hours is not two hours allocated to opposition members. In fact, it becomes closer to one hour, perhaps a little bit more.

In 1977 the First Report of the Special Committee on Rights and Immunities of Members stated that freedom of speech is a fundamental right without which [the members] would be hampered in the performance of their duties. It permits them to speak in the House without inhibition, to refer to any matter or express any opinion as they see fit, to say what they feel needs to be said in the furtherance of the national interest and the aspirations of their constituents.

That quote can be found at pages 89 and 90 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice. On page 93 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice it also states that "this freedom is essential for the effective working of the House."

I am arguing that the work of the House cannot be done properly and effectively when the most fundamental right of members has been breached. We've seen the consequences, Mr. Speaker, after government motions 49 and 52 were invoked last night. A fraction of the private members of this Assembly were able to speak to bills 45 and 46. It is completely inappropriate to use Standing Order 21 in a way that ensures only three or four opposition members can speak to these bills. That means that throughout three readings only nine or 10 members of the opposition will be able to speak to the bills.

Last night, for instance, the members for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview and Edmonton-Calder wanted to speak to Bill 45, but Motion 49 prevented them from doing so. Motions 50 and 53 will have the same effect today with respect to Committee of the Whole. There are 28 members of the opposition, Mr. Speaker. It is by any reasonable standard simply inappropriate if only one-third of those members will be permitted to speak at all to bills 45 and 46. It is clearly a breach of their rights as members.

According to Beauchesne, section 533, at page 162, "Time allocation is a device for planning the use of time during the various stages of consideration of a bill rather than bringing the debate to an immediate conclusion."

Most importantly, House of Commons Procedure and Practice states, starting at page 661, that the history of the development of time allocation provisions in standing orders shows that they were intended as a means of time management, not curtailment of debate.

It is clear, according to the authorities, that time allocation was not intended as a mechanism by which the right of members to speak could be limited arbitrarily by the government of the day. This government is abusing the time allocation mechanism because they know that these bills cannot be passed expeditiously otherwise. The improper use of this standing order infringes upon the rights of members. Mr. Speaker, I'm making this argument not against the standing order itself but, rather, the way it has been used by the government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, I'm hesitant to allow this debate to go on for a very long time because a similar matter was ruled on last night in this House. I will afford the Government House Leader a chance to respond as well as one member from each of the opposition parties.

At this time I'll recognize the Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise in support of this point of privilege. This is very serious. Obviously, this member has brought this up. He didn't have the opportunity last night to be as incredibly thorough as he has been today with the citations and so forth.

There is no doubt that the standing orders are being abused here. Our standing orders, the rules of this House, obviously, are determined by the majority in this House. We don't have much of a say at all in the standing orders. We can give input, but at the end of the day we have no say in the matter. We can say that they're the rules of this House. They're the rules of the governing majority, so they can abuse those rules. Nonetheless, we have those rules.

Let's just say that those rules are in place, and let's pretend for a second that they're fair, which a lot of them are not. As the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood is saying, he's not taking issue with the time allocation rule itself in the standing orders. He's taking exception to how it's being applied. It's being applied to curtail debate prematurely. It's going against literally hundreds of years of precedent with regard to free speech in this House.

Let's put it this way, Mr. Speaker. Think about this for a second. What if this Government House Leader brought in a rule that said that from here on out we would have a time allocation of 10 minutes on each bill? Under our standing orders that's allowed. What if he came out and said that we have a time allocation of five minutes? Or one minute? Or 30 seconds? That's allowed under our rules.

Mr. Speaker, if a ruling comes back that this is allowed, you know, I would say, in contradiction of parliamentary tradition literally going back hundreds of years, that I feel we're doing a huge disservice to this House and that we're really embarrassing ourselves, frankly, because literally the standing orders as they are today could absolutely within their rules, within their definition limit debate so much that literally we could have one second of debate on an issue.

Now, one hopes that the House leader wouldn't do something like that, but if you find that two hours are enough, that that doesn't cross the line, then what does cross the line? One hour? I'd like a clarification on that. I'd like a clarification on what extent could this be taken to. Could it be an hour? Could it be half an hour? Could it be 15 minutes? Could it be 10 minutes? Could it be five minutes? Could it be 30 seconds? What is it? We as elected representatives have a right to know just how abused this is going to be, to what extent this rule is going to be used. It's pretty scary.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that you be judicious and patient in your ruling on this matter. This is a separate point of privilege in that this is a separate — obviously, we're in Committee of the Whole here, so this is different. Sorry; we just did a separate motion on this, but the motion referred to Committee of the Whole and time allocation in Committee of the Whole. I would ask that you please consider this, that we please go back and not just say: "Oh, there have been rulings on this. We live by the standing orders." Yes, we all know that. There's no doubt there are parliamentary precedents, that the House is governed by its standing orders. However, you cannot use your majority to manipulate the standing orders such that you essentially cut off the free speech of others.

I would ask that if you're not going to find a point of privilege here, you at the very least provide this House tomorrow, hopefully, after adequate research has been done, with the line. What is the line? What rights do we have under these standing orders? Thirty seconds? A minute? Five minutes? Ten minutes? Half an hour? An hour? An hour and a half? Two hours? How much? That's a fair question. I know that anybody with any common sense in this House knows that that's a fair question. What's the line?

I think that we're owed in this House an explanation as to what that line is going forward so that we can understand exactly what we're looking at with regard to all of these bills. I agree completely with the point of privilege. I feel that this rule is being manipulated to cut off debate prematurely, and it's unwarranted, sir.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise to support the point of privilege brought forward by the member of the fourth party. In my view, the point of privilege is proper, and it is unduly interfering with us as private members to do our sworn duty to bring forward whatever conversations we would like and to have a full time frame in which to debate the issues of the day. In my view, you need to look at this point of privilege in the entire context in which we find ourselves, the government bringing in closure at this stage of the bill when we as opposition members and, in fact, even government members will be deprived of the opportunity to bring forward arguments in the fashion that we deem reasonable in this House.

Let's face it. I think it's become pretty clear that these bills, Bill 45 and Bill 46, have been the most important bills to be discussed in this House this legislative sitting. They're contentious on a number of fronts. They do radically change the negotiating process that unions and their members have seen, the law of the land over the course of the last 35 years, since 1977, when Lougheed was in power. This is a pretty significant change in our processes, and it affects a great many Albertans. It affects all of us in this room and all of our constituents. In every constituency in this province there are public-sector workers and members of the unions that are affected by bills 45 and 46. We have a right under our rules in this country and in this province to be able to speak on these matters as they are important both for us and for the direction of this province.

I think the hon. member brought up a very important point, and that point is: after a reasonable amount of debate. That's when the standing orders are supposed to be used, after the government has placed a bill on the Order Paper, after it has allowed a certain amount of time for discussion to occur and the government of the day sees the opposition trying to dig in its heels to filibuster a bill, to be difficult about its passing. There's no doubt that had the government put this on the Order Paper on day 1 of the legislative sitting and we were still in this House and, after being here approximately a month, still going through the various channels of debate and presenting amendments and having people discuss these bills in a full and forthright fashion, I can see the government's need and wanting to bring closure to end the session and to get rightful bills passed. Whether they're rightful or not, the government of the day is allowed to pass bills that they see as fit for this province's future direction. That would have been one thing. But that is not what occurred here in this Chamber.

What we saw is that immediately upon bills 45 and 46 being brought to this Legislature, we in the opposition were given notice that time allocation was going to be called. That is, in fact, what has happened at every stage. After the government introduced the bills, one member of the opposition got to get up and speak. The government immediately went to time allocation. They did that in the second reading of both bills, and now they've done it here at the Committee of the Whole stage. Clearly, in no uncertain terms would that in any form or fashion be seen as a reasonable amount of debate. I think you can appreciate that, Mr. Speaker. The operative words: reasonable amount of debate. I don't believe any person in this Legislature or, in fact, any person in this province would consider roughly 30 minutes of debate and closure being called a reasonable amount of debate time. That is what has occurred.

If you listen to some of the citations given by the hon. member of the fourth party, what the traditions are in both the House of Commons and this Assembly, I believe your ruling has to give context to what that is. The way we've seen these bills introduced in the fashion they have been was meant for the government to limit debate from the outset. The decision was made in the backrooms, by the powers that be, to limit debate. Any way you look at it, Mr. Speaker, that is what a reasonable person would conclude, that these motions were brought in to stifle debate, to limit opposition responses, to limit the ability for them to consult with their constituents, stakeholders, and the like. In my view, that is the only conclusion that one can draw from this.

I would hope that given the importance of free speech of members in this House, given the importance of the respect you have for this Legislature – in fact, I'd hope most members would, but it doesn't seem to be the case in this matter, that we would respect that ability. Given the importance of these bills, given the way that they were brought in, and giving full context to the words "a reasonable amount of debate," if you could think about that and give us a ruling. I appreciate the comment given by the Official Opposition House Leader: how far are we going to allow the standing orders to take precedence over our elected duty to be able to speak on behalf of our constituents? That's what we're debating here, whether the standing orders take precedence over our ability to do our job as elected officials, to speak on the issues of the day in a reasonable, forthright fashion, our ability to bring forward our points.

Those are my submissions, Mr. Speaker. I know you will give some thought to them, and I'm hopeful that you'll look at this in the context in which this whole situation has arisen. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite the protestations of the member bringing this purported question of privilege, this is exactly the same question of privilege as was raised yesterday and exactly the one that was ruled on. So I would start by indicating that it is really out of order because it's asking for a ruling on the same question of privilege.

Secondly, it seeks to question a decision that's been made by the House. In other words, the hon. member, in bringing it, you know, referred to the passage of the motion that we just actually voted on. The House has already decided on that motion, and it's not in his hands to try and use privilege to overrule a decision of the House.

Mr. Speaker, let's get to the merit of it. Historically in this House; in fact, when I came to this House, we didn't have a concept of time allocation in the standing orders, I don't believe. I stand to be corrected.

Ms Blakeman: We had closure.

Mr. Hancock: We had closure. Closure was a much more difficult tool with respect to the management of time because it didn't provide for notice. It didn't provide for anything other than a minister standing up and moving that the question be now put. That raised issues of whether enough debate had happened and that sort of thing.

What happened was that the rules of the House evolved to actually remove the provision for closure and bring in a much more sophisticated tool of time allocation, which gave notice, which gave an indication that there was going to be a management of the time allowed relative to the debate on a bill. That's important because people have to know what to expect. Time allocation was actually a fairer way to deal with the question of time management. Now, most often time allocation, as with closure, is used in committee because debate can go on forever in committee. There's no limit to the number of times that a member can speak as long as there's an intervening speaker. But it has also been used in second and in third reading.

Over the course of time since this rule has been in, it's not been used excessively, but it is used in every session on a bill or two and usually with good purpose. Sometimes, as members opposite have pointed out, it's used when the opposition is being obstructive and not wanting to let a bill through, just engaging in debate for debate's sake. In fact, we've had a number of occasions, one or two a year, where we've sat through the night debating a bill for that reason because there was an objection, and the opposition wasn't going to let go. That's fair. That's one of the roles of opposition, to raise issues and to debate where they see debate. But there's also the question of government and government being able to carry out its agenda subject to the oversight of the Legislature.

The question that's been raised by the opposition – I'm not suggesting it's valid in all the ways that they've raised it – is: how much time do you need to have to appropriately debate a bill and to ensure that the opposition and all members of the House, for that matter, have an opportunity to bring their objections forward? That's, quite frankly, part and parcel. That's the whole purpose of a time allocation motion. It's to give notice of the fact that there will be time allocation and to allow all members of the House to organize their affairs accordingly.

Now, first of all, it's not an expectation in the House that every member will speak to every bill. We would never get any bills done if that was the expectation. That's never been the parliamentary expectation, that every member would speak to every bill. The expectation is that parties will organize themselves. They will have critics. Ministers or a representative on behalf of the minister will bring forward the government's business, and the critics will be the main spokesmen for their parties, and others who have a particular interest in the topic at hand will speak. But we rarely, rarely see where every member of the House would speak to a bill.

It is important that time allocation in our rules be recognized as slightly different from the way it's been developed in other Houses and purposefully so. In our rules you require notice ahead of time. Now, if you take a look at the suggestion that notice cannot be given of time allocation until the bill has actually been debated, that has actually not been the practice of this House and for good reason. We want to make sure that there is fair notice, well in advance of an intention to manage the time on a bill. In some cases that's a question of how much business is left in the session and how we manage the business remaining in the session.

In some cases it's a question of a bill being of such a nature that all of the positions are well known and excessive debate isn't going to change the position of any party. That would be the case here. There's no question where everybody stands on this bill in this House. Going on for 24 hours, going all night tonight in committee isn't going to change that fact. I'm sure we'll have an amendment on the table. I've been advised there'll be an amendment coming forward. Certainly, that will help to focus the debate and allow people to focus their comments on what they feel is important in it, but none of that restricts the ability of any party in this House to get their positions on the table in a fair and open and democratic way.

It may be a fair question going forward to determine how much time is reasonable, but the fact of the matter is that time allocation motions have been used in this House for at least – I'm guessing now; I stand to be corrected – I think, 10 years. They have been used on occasion, not excessively. They have been used with a practice that has the motion being put on notice and being moved at an appropriate time after there has been some debate on the bill, and some debate has ranged, in my experience – and again I stand to be corrected – two to three speakers on a bill, sometimes more than that, and then moving the time allocation motion. That's what's happening here.

That's what was ruled on last night by the Speaker. That is exactly the same question that's being raised today, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask that you find that there is no question of privilege.

If the Speaker at some point in time wants to raise the issue of how a rule such as this should be put in place, then I would say that that's a fair question to raise. But it's not a question of invoking a question of privilege. There are no privileges that have been revoked in this House today by the legitimate passage of a motion by this House. Members have had a right to speak at second. They've had a right to speak to a certain extent in committee and will have much more time in committee to speak, and they will have a right to come again in third. If they organize themselves properly, most of the members, if that's important, will be able to make sure that every member gets up and speaks to at least one stage of the bill, and I think that that's quite a practical approach. The time that's been allocated is sufficient to allow for that.

There's no question of privilege.

5:00

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood is arguing that there is a breach of his privilege as a member of this House by virtue of the government's use of time allocation under Standing Order 21.

Hon. members, the role of your chair is to ensure that members have the opportunity to debate. I understand the sensitivity, particularly around the topic, and that members are very passionate about that opportunity to debate these pieces of legislation and others. Obviously, that debate has to be consistent with the rules, your rules, of this House, and those are the standing orders. As all members know, it is in the purview of this House to establish its own rules of procedure, and one of those is Standing Order 21. The use of time allocation is permitted under the Assembly's standing orders upon the passage of a motion. I would remind you that Government Motion 50 has just passed. Such a motion has just passed. It is untenable that a prima facie case of breach of privilege could arise by the application of the Assembly's own rules.

I would draw your attention, hon. members, to Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, the second edition, at page 223. This is under the heading Where the Answer is Contained in Rules or Practice of House.

In deciding whether there is a prima facie case, the Speaker excludes any matters that are otherwise properly to be dealt with under the practice or Standing Orders of the House. That is to say, where the answer to the alleged "question of privilege" is contained in the rules or the practice of the House, it would unlikely involve breach of the privileges of Members.

Hon. members, your Speaker does not have the liberty to reinvent the application of the rules, the standing orders, on the fly. These are your rules. Again, I would invite both sides of the House and the House leaders, as Speaker Zwodzesky has done in the past, if it is time that these rules need to be updated, modified, to maybe get together. This might be something that would be appropriately referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing. We do have such a committee, which is at the ready. That committee is able to deal with a question such as revamping of the standing orders.

As such, I find that there is no question of privilege, and the House will now return to Orders of the Day.

Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Time Allocation on Bill 46

53. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 46, Public Service Salary Restraint Act, is resumed, not more than two hours shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my duty to move Government Motion 53. Now, I haven't spoken to these motions before because they, in my view, are self-explanatory and need not have a lot of embellishment. My counterpart from the opposition has spoken to each one, and in the last he was concerned about the whole question that we've just discussed about the amount of time available.

In this case I would indicate that the debate on Bill 46 actually was adjourned by one of his members. They can hardly be put to complain knowing coming forward . . .

Ms Blakeman: At your request.

Mr. Hancock: No. Not at my request. I had suggested that they might want to adjourn Bill 45 because they wanted some amendments to come forward and that would put them in a place to debate that, but not Bill 46. Bill 46 was a different bill.

So, you know, you can't have it both ways. You can't move adjournment knowing exactly what is going to come next and then complain about what comes next.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Here we go all over again. You know, it's really interesting to hear the Government House Leader suggest that we're in favour of his closure and time allocation amendment simply because we moved to adjourn. I'll clarify for the House why it is that we needed to do that, and that's simply because at the pace at which these bills are being brought forward, Parliamentary Counsel is having a tough time approving amendments that we want to bring forward. Not only that, there's the fact that we're at time allocation, where we don't have time to actually debate. We have two hours in second reading, now two hours in Committee of the Whole. There's a reason why we needed a little bit of extra time. It just speaks to the disrespect that this government has for the democratic process, and we're witnessing it again and again and again.

It's very, very unfortunate that this is the direction that we're going, and it's very clear why it is that we have the government making motions along this way. They want to limit debate on the amendments. They recognize that this is contentious legislation. They recognize that the longer the debate goes on, the more difficult it is for them because it's negative reporting in the media, it's protests outside the Legislature every single day, and it means that the longer we're here and the longer the opposition pounds them day in and day out in question period. That's what this is about. They don't want to be here. They want to get out.

Mr. Speaker, we sit fewer days in this House, in this Assembly, than any other province in Canada. Why is that? Because this government wants to ram legislation through as quickly as they possibly can so that they're not held to account and so that they minimize the amount of time that we're here questioning them. [interjection] And I appreciate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar constantly interrupting those of us who stand to speak in this House. It brings immense value to the level of debate, and just once I would love for him to stand up and actually speak to a motion or something and be on the record as opposed to just chirping from his chair. It would be very much appreciated, but I expect nothing less after 18 months, and I don't expect it to change moving forward.

Let's ask the question, Mr. Speaker, of why we didn't introduce this legislation earlier. Why was it tabled when it was? Why was it moved with a time allocation motion shortly thereafter? The answer is very simple. It was to protect the Premier during her leadership review. Imagine, had these bills been put to this Assembly and made public prior to that review, the protests that would have been happening in Red Deer by the AUPE. It would have been massive, a massive embarrassment for this government. That's why we're here, that's why we're ramming this down the throats of Albertans, that's why we're doing it without proper consultation, and that's why you're seeing the opposition up in arms and trying to procedurally derail the government's plans to get this thing through. It is ridiculous.

Let's remember, Mr. Speaker, that we are here to debate these issues. Albertans elected an opposition to oppose, to expose, to propose, and we are being limited in our ability to do that. We are being limited in our ability to speak freely in this House. It's a very unfortunate reality that we see the government moving in this direction. You know, I hope that they are open to the amendments that we are bringing forward, and I think that it's a disgrace that we find ourselves here, but it is what it is. What's left to expect?

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Having heard the motion by the hon. Government House Leader, all those in favour please say aye.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 53 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:08 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

Bill 45 Public Sector Services Continuation Act (continued)

The Chair: I recognize the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to move an amendment to Bill 45, the Public Sector Services Continuation Act, and I have the requisite number of copies, including the original.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

That will be referred to as amendment A1. If we'd just pause for about 30 seconds to circulate, and then I'll recognize you again. Thank you.

Please proceed, hon. member, on amendment A1.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. As I said, I move this amendment, which you've now identified as A1.

- A. Section 2(a) is amended by striking out "one or more employees,".
- B. Section 4(4) is amended by striking out "counsel a person to contravene subsection (1) or (2) or".
- C. Section 16 is amended
  - (a) in subsection (1)
    - (i) by striking out "the Minister or a delegate appointed under the regulations" and substituting "the Board";
    - (ii) by striking out "the Minister or delegate" and substituting "the Board";
  - (b) in subsection (4) by striking out "to any reconsideration under section 17 and";
  - (c) in subsection (6) by striking out "to the Board";
  - (d) by striking out subsection (7) and substituting the following:
    - (7) Subject to the right of appeal under subsection (6), where an employee fails to pay an administrative penalty in accordance with the notice of administrative penalty and the regulations, the Board may file a copy of the notice of administrative penalty with the clerk of the Court of Queen's Bench, and on being filed, the notice has the same force and effect and may be enforced as if it were a judgement of the Court.
- D. Section 17 is struck out.
- E. Section 24 is amended
  - (a) in clause (b) by striking out "the Minister or a delegate" and substituting "the Board";
  - (b) in clause (c)
    - (i) by striking out subclauses (i) and (iv);
    - (ii) by striking out subclause (v) and substituting the following:
      - (v) appeals of administrative penalties.

Mr. Chair, this is an important amendment to address some of the shortcomings of this bill, recognizing that the main reason given for the act is to ensure that Albertans receive the essential services they've contracted with AUPE to provide. In other words, no strikes are allowed. Well, they aren't allowed under the current contract either. The implication seems to be that somehow this act will be more binding on the employees of this union than their employment contract.

I'm not sure whether that's insulting or whether that presumes that somehow they were unwilling to abide by the contract and this is necessary to show that we really mean it this time. It's kind of like the way we threaten our kids, saying: this time I really mean it. "Well, how come, mom?" Five times you've already said no, and now you're going to change your mind? The penalties being proposed would certainly be a huge deterrent to strikes or even thoughts of strikes.

The government is counting on Albertans to believe that it's acting in their best interests at the expense of the interests of the public service employees. Well, most of the citizens of our province that I talked with believe in fairness, freedom of expression, the right of association, and the rule of law. They have strong feelings about keeping your word and honouring contracts. They believe in integrity. If you say you're going to do something, you do it. You follow through. They believe their government should have integrity and be held to the same high standard as any other supplier of goods or services. After all, the government has given itself a monopoly on providing some of the essentials of life. That's stewardship.

Is this PC government a good steward? Most of us thought so for a long time, but over the past few years we've been disappointed to see our government acting unilaterally to take away rights. Oh, they don't say that that's what they're doing, but believe me, it is, and the public interest has suffered. Property rights have been eroded through acts like bills 19, 24, 36, and 50. Lots of people, especially in urban areas, thought that property rights were just about the land that farmers use to grow crops and ranchers graze their cattle on. I think the citizens of High River whose homes were broken into and whose property was damaged and seized may have a different view about property rights.

Let's get back to talking about stewardship for a moment. Some Albertans may think that unions have negotiated wages and benefits more lucrative than those affordable for similar work in the private sector. That may be, but that's not the fault of the union. It has just been doing its job, getting the best deals possible for its members. If you've got a problem with that, with the wages and benefits government employees receive, then your real issue is with the employer, the PC government you kept electing.

How would you like working for someone as whimsical and arbitrary as this PC government? I suspect that it's very stressful, and I know that some of the people who have approached me in the last few days to talk about this were showing serious signs of stress. If you were working for the government, you would know that every time its profligacy gets it into financial trouble, the knee-jerk reaction is to attack your wages, reduce your numbers, and expect you to take on the extra workload that's left. Front-line cuts and firings will continue until morale improves. I wonder what management book recommended that approach.

Wildrose has said many times: this PC government doesn't have a revenue problem; it has a spending problem. Arm's-length analysts agree. Every successful business knows that to survive it has to control its overhead. More companies have failed for not doing this than ever did for running a lean, tight management team. Trimming at the top and listening to the front-line providers is a sound approach for business and governments.

In fact, in my experience, when business consultants are hired, one of the first things that they do in preparation to advise upper management is to talk to the front-line providers. Listen to them. They're the people that are interacting on a regular basis, every day, with the clients or the customers or the patients that are being treated or served. They'll know. Then when they write up their reports and come back, they sound like geniuses for coming up with such brilliant ideas, when those ideas are always there and available to management if they would just deign to go down and talk to people on the front line.

There was a great little book once called management by wandering around, and I recommend it.

An Hon. Member: It's a very good book.

Mr. Bikman: Yes, it is.

From personal experience I can tell you that when faced with the federal Liberal government's induced oil field depression following the enactment of the infamous national energy program, I really had to scramble. Demand for services and the revenue from the work we were doing dropped dramatically. We had to reduce our fleet from 22 company-owned vehicles and 10 owner-driven trucks to seven company-owned trucks and five lease operators. I asked dispatchers and foremen and other supervisors to go back into the trucks they'd formerly driven.

I was the president, the owner, but I came in early each morning to sweep the office, empty the wastebaskets, clean the restrooms, prepare the truck tickets for the bookkeeper to send to our customers, order parts, road-test new drivers, and do all the dispatching, some of it late into the night or very early in the morning, at all hours, literally. But we maintained our capacity to serve the significantly reduced number of customers that were relying on us.

We retained our people and paid them more than the going rate. How could we afford to do that? Because we trimmed at the top. We involved them in decisions that affected them. We sought their input on ways to work more cost-effectively in solving our customers' problems. In business, in fact in any profession or any practice, including the public service, you only sell or provide two things: solutions and good feelings. Well, I submit to you that the good feelings are going out the door. That's the way businesses survive. They trim at the top. But not this PC government. They will try to tell you otherwise, but the real problem, one of the serious problems, is a bloated bureaucracy.

I'd like to quote from a little essay written by Michael Baumann about bureaucracy.

Bureaucracy... is a portmanteau word combining the French term for desk or office ("bureau") with the ancient Greek word for government or rule ("kratos"). Thus, bureaucracy is "government from the desk," or "rule by office."

Notice that from this conception of governance all living things have effectively been removed. It posits no identifiable living being... No persons are left to speak, to bring order out of chaos, to subdue the earth, or to do so in communion with others. More importantly for the desk dweller, no one is left to answer or to blame.

Have we noticed that as we've talked to the leaders in this House and the ministries? There's no blame.

Instead, government is the function of a nondescript, faceless, nameless office – a deskocracy.

No doubt a real human person sits behind the desk... The desk holder is not a person who, by his or her words, brings wisdom, insight, compassion, creativity, and eloquence to bear on the task at hand, namely bringing order out of political and social chaos and making the best he or she can of the earth's potential. That's not what happens at... [AHS], or in any bureaucracy I can imagine.

In spite of what the PC government would have you believe, this bill is not about leveling the playing field. It's about coercion. It's about circumventing a system for public service labour peace that has worked well for decades. On those rare occasions when strikes have occurred, they've been handled fairly seamlessly and resolved expeditiously.

Is this just limited to essential services? Will this act and its ugly stepsister, Bill 46, be extended to cover all future negotiations? You can bet your sweet bippy it will. I've checked, and "bippy" is a parliamentary approved word. Once this government abrogates rights, it never gives them back. You'll have to wait till 2016 for a Wildrose government to undo the harm these bills cause, and we will undo it.

No one wants a strike, not the employer or the government, not the union leaders or members, and not the rest of us who rely on a sole supplier – on a sole supplier – for these essential services. I submit to you an interesting fact for your consideration. The negative aspects of monopolies cannot exist in the absence of government action because if service was poor and too much profit was being earned, competitors would be attracted into that market and would improve the service and lower the cost. But that can't happen in a monopoly, and what we have in too many cases, in my opinion, with the government is the creation of monopoly suppliers.

Now, when strikes are held and especially in essential services if that happens, no one wins. I've seen studies that show just how long it takes union members to make up their lost wages. It can be many, many years, and in some cases never. The union has a stewardship responsibility, too. Leaders want the best deal possible from the government. Because the government doesn't have to produce a profit, it isn't spending its own money. In fact, let's be honest here now and acknowledge that the government doesn't have any money of its own. All it has is the taxpayers' money, and because of that, because it's not spending its own money, it's spending from what, in essence, appears to this PC government to be a money tree, where it can go and pluck. In this case, it's plucking it from our pockets, the citizens' pockets, and the corporate pockets.

It rarely negotiates well. The hard stance we're witnessing with bills 45 and 46 is not evidence of good negotiations or enlightened consultations. It's the guy in the ski mask in a dark alley pointing a gun at you, his finger on the trigger, saying: your money or your life. That's not much of a choice, is it? You'll take our offer, or you're out of a job: that's really not much choice. You'll take our offer, or you'll take our offer: that's really what these two bills are about.

The hon. Minister of Treasury told us last night that this was to encourage a return to the bargaining table. That's quite an invitation, isn't it: "Here's your offer. Here's our offer. Take it or else. You can't strike. It's against the current law." If Bills 45 and 46 pass, it will even be illegal, or just about, to think about it, let alone complain out loud over coffee in a conversation that could be construed as counselling or threatening a strike. And you won't be able to appeal to an arbitrator. It's really like negotiating with a bandit, a PC government bandit.

So let's look at the subclauses in this amendment that I've proposed. Part A, only a trade union or officer or representative may be charged with starting a strike threat. Subsection 2(a) allows significant penalties to be brought upon an entire union if a few rogue actors discuss a strike or act on that. To be considered as real and genuine, threats should have been made by union leaders before stiff penalties are brought down. Part B removes provisions that limit free speech for all Albertans; to suggest that a strike should be done, for example.

5:30

Section 4(4) is a serious restriction on the freedom of speech of all Albertans, not just public-sector workers. A caller to a radio show, lawyers, average Joes on Facebook, guys sitting in a coffee shop venting, and so on should not be fined for saying that a wildcat strike should be conducted. It should be the union leadership's responsibility to make sure the union acts in a legal manner. The public at large should not be muzzled in order to prevent any idea of an illegal strike from being discussed in public or in private. Section 4(4) borders on thought police and is a startling step too far, even for this out-of-touch PC government.

Parts C to E take authority away from the minister or a designate to levy administrative fines and places that authority instead in the Labour Relations Board, so transparency and accountability, expertise that's been assembled on that board. Transparency and accountability from this government: what a novel concept.

Sections 16 and 17. The administrative fine process should be done without political interference. The Labour Relations Board exists to deal with labour issues for both the public and private sectors. The serving of administrative fines should be done through an arm's-length agency, not the minister's office. Administrative penalties are increasingly used by the PC government to circumvent the courts, following a disturbing pattern of attacks on due process that we've seen in other bills.

Section 24. While the minister should not have the authority to serve the administrative penalties, it is reasonable to allow the minister to establish the regulations regarding the contents of notices, service of penalties, and appeals of notices of administrative penalties.

Naturally, employers, the government included, must prepare for the costs of a strike or strike threat regardless of whether the threat comes from union officials or union members. No matter who starts the illegal action, counteractions must be taken at the cost of the taxpayers and should be recoverable.

Now, let me just spend a moment or two dispelling some myths that continue to be presented by the other side, the other side known for half-truths and partial truths. Of course, a partial truth is to convey an untruth, to lead you to an erroneous conclusion that you wouldn't make otherwise if you had the whole story, so let me give you the rest of the story.

As a young, opinionated columnist our leader made a few arguments, but she always believed in the Charter right to freedom of assembly, which permits workers to organize into a union, and she also feels that good-faith bargaining is in the long-term interests of both taxpayers and public-sector employees. The Wildrose and our public-sector employees might not always agree on how much wages should increase, and that's just the reality of government, of the employer-employee relationship. The difference between the Wildrose and the PC Party is that the Wildrose will respect and allow for third-party arbitration to deal with these issues. The PCs will have of course stripped that right from our public-sector employees with Bill 46, the ugly stepsister.

It's no secret that the Wildrose would have asked for a wage freeze through 2014, and we stand by that. The unions know that, the public knows that, and every party in this House knows that. Everybody knows this because that's what we said we'd do. Unlike the PCs, however, we would negotiate in good faith with the unions and not promise the moon, only to pull the rug out from underneath when our electoral victory and leadership reviews were secured.

If negotiations in good faith did not work out, we would use arbitration, not extinguish the rights of public-sector employees. Do the legal rights of front-line service providers really need to be demolished to balance only a portion of Alberta's books? The most galling thing about this government is not only are they going to war with our public sector and stripping rights away, but when it's all been rammed through, they will still be racking up billions in debt because of billions in waste, inefficiencies, and mismanagement.

Our alternative budget outlined what can be done to solve this problem. The budget can be balanced without cutting the salaries or positions of front-line staff. So let's go with the top 10 ways the Wildrose would balance . . . [Mr. Bikman's speaking time expired] Oh. Boo. You're going to miss that.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo on amendment A1.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. On amendment A1. I must beg some leeway of the chair because I see bills 45, 46, and this amendment all rolled into a whole bunch of thoughts that I have that have come to my attention with this amendment, that I would like to address, but I will do my level best, where I can, to co-ordinate it back to the amendment. Again, at the outset I beg some leeway from the chair.

If we look at the backdrop of how we've gotten here, why we're here, and the like, we can go back to the 2012 election. In my view, at that time you had a Progressive Conservative Party that made bundles of promises to bushels of people. They really reached out, and they really did their best to present a face and a platform that meant we were turning a corner here in Alberta. We were going to have predictable, sustainable funding. We were going to respect workers and embrace the public servants. I believe that the Premier actually went to AUPE and gave a keynote address, saying that former governments of her party had not respected their roles and the good work that they did and the like in this province. That is, I think, a fair characterization of what I saw in the last election.

What I didn't see in the Progressive Conservative government platform was that we were going to take a steamroller, a battering ram, a machine gun to the ability of organized labour, union members, to collectively go about their business and organize their workplace and negotiate with the government fair and reasonable wage addresses. At no point in time did I see anything in the PC platform that said: "We are going to go to war with organized labour. We see workers as being overcompensated. We don't value the work that our public servants do." That is the backdrop here, that we didn't see any of this comment in the Progressive Conservative election campaign.

So when we are presented with bills 45 and 46 in the manner that they are, at the end of a session, with limited debate here in this House, and with, in my view, the draconian measures associated with them, I'm really troubled. This is the biggest assault on the Charter of Rights and Freedoms of Alberta citizens we have seen from this government in a long time. Let's be clear. In my view, bills 45 and 46 together are significant in that they reduce or they eliminate, actually, in this case our Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Since 1977 in this province an uneasy peace was negotiated when the Conservative government took away the right to strike, but then always the union had the right to go to arbitration, to have their concern heard by a fair arbiter, where the government presents its case and the union presents its case. With all the context given there, a decision would be made, and that would bind the parties. That process essentially allowed for the collective bargaining process to proceed in a reasonable fashion given that union members no longer had the right to strike. Intervening at that time was the passing of the 1982 Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which in section 2(b) and 2(d) guaranteed, enshrined the right to freedom of expression and freedom of association.

In Bill 45, in my view, you have a direct assault on freedom of expression. You can see that this bill has done that in that it broadened the definition of the right to strike and, in fact, came up with a new definition of a threat to strike. It curtails or attempts to curtail people talking about workplace issues, the ability to organize, the ability to strike in all forms and fashions that are not limited in the written word of this bill. So when the Government House Leader gets up and says, "By no means can a person calling in to a talk-show host suggest that prison guards go on strike or that other union members go on strike," I take those words with a grain of salt. I read the legislation, and to me it doesn't limit that in any form or fashion. In fact, if you look to the exact wording,

(k) "strike threat" means . . .

(iv) an act or threat to act that could reasonably be perceived as preparation for an employees' strike.

Well, what does that mean? I'm not certain, and I don't think anyone in this House can be certain on what those words mean.

I look at this bill and its overarching fashion, and Bill 45 does in my view attempt to limit freedom of expression. It's an affront to what our Charter of Rights and Freedoms has protected. I listened to some of the amendment and what it was trying to do, and in my view it goes some way to try and straighten out this bill, that is overreaching and unconstitutional, in a form and fashion that may actually be a little bit better.

That said, I'm not certain if anything can save these bills. Bills 45 and 46, in their togetherness, to me are just an abhorrent set of legislation designed to crush the labour movement, crush any reasonable ability for our unions to collectively bargain, to go forward on a good-faith basis, to negotiate a settlement and the like in any fashion that would be permissible under our Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

There's much case law on the books that suggests that these bills will be unconstitutional despite the protestations of government members to the contrary. If you look at the litany of case law that has emerged on the books around the ability of unions – actually, in fact, all citizens in Canada have the ability to form a union and to collectively bargain. By taking away the role of having a final arbiter set an agreement between government and labour unions, this walks away from that principle of freedom of association. It is a direct attack on labour. It's a direct attack on every Albertan's constitutional rights.

In my view, the government should feel a great deal of shame in regard to bringing forward this bill at this time. It has gone a long way to undermine the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and, in fact, our ability to have any semblance of reasonable work conditions or reasonable negotiated principles in place: principles of natural justice, principles of fairness, and principles that we have agreed on as a society that make sense.

If we turn more closely to Bill 45, as I've stated before, the bill has changed substantially, and it's not merely an updating of the fines and pronouncements that the government can issue in this regard. It's broadened the definition of strike, and it's come up with, like I said, a new definition of a strike threat that was unknown to me before the presentation of this bill.

In my view, these provisions have made up the second point I'd make, an assault on our freedom of expression. People in this country have long been able to express their beliefs in a free, open, and fair way, whether they be a union member individual or rank-and-file member walking along the streets of Calgary or Edmonton or Leduc, Taber, Bawlf, or wherever you may have it. They should be allowed to discuss these issues in an open and fair manner. The way this legislation is written, I am not so certain that they have that right anymore.

I think I make this point because it goes to the far overreaching nature of this bill. It attempts to take a bulldozer to an ant. It's simply unnecessary. It's an attack against working people and their ability to organize and set their workplace rules and agenda and negotiate a fair and reasonable workday.

I appreciate the Official Opposition doing the good work of an opposition party by trying to put some amendments together to try to limit the power of the government and to try to limit who is, in fact, captured by this bill. Although I haven't quite decided yet, I'm thinking of supporting this amendment, but at the same time I'm not certain if anything can save this bill, and I do not want to encourage the government in any form or fashion by supporting this amendment, by suggesting such a thing, so I'm caught at loggerheads here. That is the problem as I see it.

The penalties far exceed any others that we see throughout jurisdictions in Canada. They, in fact, serve to hobble the labour movement and are draconian and, in my view, do not meet the purpose of what we should strive for in a fair and reasonable work environment here in Alberta.

I think many people have brought up this before. If we look at the fines directed at unions in regard to an illegal strike, should it happen – and I point out that this has been a very minor problem in Alberta's history. I think it's been brought up that there may have been four or five illegal strikes in the last number of years. Largely they've come about as result of the government's failure to communicate, failure to address problems, failure to adequately meet and discuss workplace issues.

I do point out that oftentimes progress is made by working people taking a stand, by saying: we have had enough; we have had enough of workplace conditions that are substandard, workplace conditions that do not respect a safe and healthy work environment. Oftentimes wildcat strikes may emerge through no prodding or poking by anyone, simply people reaching the end of their ropes and seeing no other alternative but to act in this fashion.

I would like to say, just to close, Mr. Chair, that, in my view, bills 45 and 46 in concert are really a dark day for this province and have really marked an attitude by this government that says that we're going to bully and push our way to get whatever results we want. Darn the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Darn the law of the land as it's been in this province since 1977. We're going to do it regardless of the rights and freedoms that citizens of Alberta have thought to have enjoyed over the course of time.

Nevertheless, those are my comments, Mr. Chair, and I look forward to hearing others.

5:50

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I rise to address issues within the amendment. I appreciate the hon. member for putting forward this amendment in hope or in an attempt to improve a deeply flawed bill. I share the same sentiment as the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo in that I'm not sure at the moment if I can support an amendment that tries to improve a bill that is flawed, well, not only flawed but, quite frankly, unconstitutional. I have every belief that should this bill pass through this House, it will be challenged and it will be thrown out. The concern here, especially, is the fact that it will take some time to pass through the courts.

As I've risen, Mr. Chair, I want to outline some of the very deep concerns that I and the Alberta NDP share with this bill. I appreciate the amendment's attempt to, in the first section at least, protect the fundamental freedoms of individual Albertans in even having a discussion or mentioning or talking about the possibility of a strike. Moving beyond that, the counsel or suggestion that one Albertan may make to another as far as if they have outrageous working conditions to imply that possibly an illegal strike would be the only method of recourse could land that person a $500-a-day fine.

As mentioned earlier, Mr. Chair, I'm going to outline as briefly as possible, granted, again, that as the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview I'm speaking as the elected representative on behalf of 45,000 Albertans. There are New Democrat supporters throughout the province, so really we're looking at a much larger number.

First and foremost, very concisely, I know it's been discussed, the fact that this government is starting to use closure and the motions of closure when it's convenient for them, when they don't want to hear debate in the House on a bill that they know is contentious. You know, they've taken it one step further from introducing night sittings and passing through legislation in the middle of the night to now inducing closure, which severely restricts and limits the ability of the opposition to speak to these pieces of legislation, which is what we were elected for in the first place. I mean, that is undemocratic for a number of reasons.

Moving into this bill, Mr. Chair, the fact is that, you know, this bill is a direct attack and assault on the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and our fundamental right of freedom of speech and freedom of thought, belief, opinion, and expression. It's quite shocking, quite frankly, that this government would put forward such a bill, that does attack the very freedoms that this government claims that they protect.

Quite frankly, I think that many Albertans, seeing and looking at this bill, have quite clearly come to understand that the Premier in her leadership race was full of promises – and, believe me, there are other words I'd love to use – that she then without a second thought went forward and broke. You know, I find it quite offensive that just a year ago the Premier was invited to the AUPE general convention. Other members of other parties were not able to speak at that convention. There, you know, she went on about working with labour, working with the public sector, and how much this government supports them and appreciates their work and then takes out a big knife and stabs them in the back.

I mean, similar to the floods and all of the public-sector workers, many Albertans are stepping forward, going above and beyond their duty to help other Albertans beyond their scope, and this is how the government then thanks them, with bills 45 and 46, effectively putting a wage freeze on workers who, quite frankly, Mr. Chair, deserve to be paid much more than they currently are, then trying to take a step backwards to, quite frankly, intimidate and induce fear into Albertans and working Albertans by putting a gag order on them if they even want to discuss possible action of a strike. They therefore can be severely punished.

Again, you know, I can't help but look at the dollar amounts that unions, union reps, and even just Albertans can be charged for talking about an illegal strike or threatening. But then we look at the numerous examples of companies in the province who have broken the law, who have polluted an area significantly, and it's a slap on the wrist of a fine compared to this. I mean, it's completely disproportionate. A union being fined $2.5 million a day, Mr. Chair, is quite absurd.

Something I wanted to touch on earlier is that there are members – and I believe the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General got up and spoke about the wildcat strike at the remand centre and how much it cost the government for that. I think he used a number around $13 million. Well, I would challenge the minister that if the government had addressed the issues and concerns that the workers at the Edmonton Remand Centre were trying to communicate to them over a number of months, over and over, whether it was written or verbal or even, you know, demonstrating the flaws in the structure of the building and how it put the workers' and the inmates' health and safety at risk, I can tell you, Mr. Chair, that they would have spent considerably less money, fewer taxpayer dollars to ensure that the workers of this province and inmates have a safe working environment.

Quite frankly, Mr. Chair, it's simply misleading to try to stand up and say that it was the union that caused the taxpayers to spend $13 million. No. It was the decision and, well, quite frankly, this government's inability and unwillingness to listen to real, genuine concerns of Albertans and address those issues, which would have cost far less than what ended up being the final price tag.

Again, let's look at – and I'd love to inform the minister and his colleagues – the facts of what led to that wildcat strike. It was documented, you know, in numerous places, Mr. Chair, that the workers were at their wits' end of trying to communicate to their managers and to this government the real, serious threats that they were facing working in a facility that, quite frankly, was not up to standards. So for some of the workers this was the only recourse . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but it is 6 o'clock. The committee will stand adjourned until 7:30 p.m.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta*7:30 p.m.*Tuesday, December 3, 2013*Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, we'll reconvene the Committee of the Whole.

Bill 45
Public Sector Services Continuation Act

The Chair: We are considering Bill 45, amendment A1.

Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, you have approximately 11 minutes left. Please proceed.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's my honour to speak to Bill 45, speaking to the amendment. I pointed out some of the concerns, before we broke, for this amendment. I can tell you that one of the biggest challenges that I have with this amendment is that it retains administrative penalties for people who contravene section 4, subsections (1) and (2), which is quite problematic. This is one of the issues the Alberta NDP has with this bill, the extremely punitive nature and language within this bill. Regardless of whether it's the minister or the Labour Relations Board that's responsible for levying the administrative penalties, the real concern is the amount that this bill prescribes. Unions can be charged, again, by our calculations, up to $2.5 million a day, and individuals can be fined anywhere from $500 to $10,000 a day. That's extremely problematic.

Before I get into some of the other issues with why the Alberta NDP vehemently opposes Bill 45, I do just want to make a note that hundreds and hundreds of letters have been pouring into our offices, with Alberta workers extremely upset at the Alberta government on this bill and voicing their opposition.

I think it's really interesting, Mr. Chair, that there was a press release that came out at 5 o'clock today about the B.C. government and a tentative agreement that they reached with public-sector unions. Now, what's interesting is that this agreement, that deals with 51,000 workers, was reached before their current contract expired, and it lasts five years. What it does is that the deal expires March 19 and includes wage increases of about 5.5 per cent over the five-year term, which is quite a stark contrast, how the B.C. government is treating their public-sector workers and the attitude that this government has here in Alberta toward our public-sector unions and workers.

The other thing that's really interesting, Mr. Chair, is that a background document states that there is an economic dividend agreement, where a government worker, for example, earning $50,000 a year can expect an extra $250 if the provincial GDP rises by one percentage point above forecasts, which I think is interesting, that there is an additional incentive. Should the province do well, they're going to pass that on to their workers. You know, this Alberta PC government pales in comparison to the current B.C. government. At least they acknowledge and recognize the valuable contributions that their public-sector workers make and, I mean, far above and beyond just providing lip service, which we can see in this House has been only words.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to outline briefly some of the huge steps forward that have taken place in the history of workers in Canada and in Alberta. They are due largely because of our organized labour force. Canadians and Albertans enjoy safety regulations, and we have safety regulations because, unfortunately, we have lost many Albertans and Canadians due to unsafe workplace regulations. With our unions at the forefront, pushing for those safety regulations, they have forced governments to bring in safety regulations as well as overtime pay, weekend breaks, paid breaks, an eight-hour workday, and a minimum wage. These are benefits that all Albertans, all Canadians enjoy, but they're due in large part because of organized labour. They are the reason that all Albertans have these benefits. Really, what organized labour has done is to bring the standard up to increase and improve the livelihood of today's families.

This bill is a huge step backwards. I mean, as my colleagues and I have articulated, not only is it unconstitutional, but it is a direct attack not just on unions and labour in this province, Mr. Chair; I would argue that this is a direct assault on working people in this province. Again, as I've articulated in the past, we have never seen nor has any other province seen a bill that is as punitive as this is on those that are speaking out and standing up for unsafe work conditions and unsafe work practices.

You know, the example right before us, Mr. Chair, is the wildcat strike at the remand centre. When we look at the reasons that drove the workers to go on strike, it was because of the inaction of this government to acknowledge that there were real, serious workplace concerns. We're talking about safety issues here. I know the minister loves to get up and talk about how this bill is for the safety of Albertans, yet it somehow completely overlooks the safety of our workers and our workforce, that are significant contributors to the Alberta economy and to our province.

The ability for a union to go on strike is used with great caution, Mr. Chair. It's not that unions want to just strike whenever and all the time. I mean, it's a real drain on them and their resources, but it's a tool that is available to them if other avenues have been exhausted and they've gotten nowhere. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona indicated last night – I know that her father, when he was a member in this House, opposed the bill that Premier Lougheed at the time put forward, taking away some of their rights. I know the members from the Wildrose applaud that and call it an exchange, you know, binding arbitration for their right to strike, where, in my view, both of those tools should not have been taken away from labour. Those are meant to be used to improve the life, the livelihood, the work conditions of not just the folks who work on the front lines but of all Albertans.

In summary, Mr. Chair, that's what this bill comes down to. This was not created in the spirit of protecting Albertans or saving dollars. I mean, you know, first of all, it's a myth that this province is short on funds. We're not in a period of tough times. We're actually doing quite well. Our economy is expanding and growing. This government refuses to address the revenue side of the coin, which is something that the Alberta NDP have been advocating for and have been a champion for. Bills 45 and 46 really were designed as an attack on Alberta workers and on our unions and organized labour and our public-sector unions.

So we will continue to oppose this bill, and we will be opposing this amendment. The reason, Mr. Chair, is that this amendment doesn't go far enough. Not only that; there is no reparation for this bill. We are advocating that this bill gets thrown out completely. There is no way to fix something as broken as this. For that reason, I cannot support the amendment that the Wildrose has put forward.

I encourage all members to read this bill and to look at the implications that it has and the merits and the contributions of working people in Alberta and of organized labour and to come to their senses. This bill is an attack on the very rights of each individual.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

7:40

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, but I have to say that I can agree with precious little, if any, of what he has said. In fact, some of the comments he has made are simply incorrect; "wrong" would be a correct statement. His comments were not only vastly inconsistent with the facts but incorrect, with the judicial ruling on the matter that declared the strike to be illegal. My comments will be in the context of illegal strikes and the danger that they cause for our safety but also for our economy.

I first want to thank our correctional workers for the outstanding work that they do every day, Mr. Chair. They have tough jobs, but they're well trained and equipped to handle their responsibilities, and I think in many cases they're the unsung heroes of our law enforcement framework.

The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has stated that we did not address safety concerns brought forward in regard to the new Edmonton Remand Centre, specifically its opening. Well, Mr. Chair, nothing could be further from the truth. We take the safety of our staff very seriously, and this is why there is a process for staff and the union to bring forward these types of concerns. Management at the remand centre has been working to address the concerns raised in the spring, and I remember distinctly the meeting that I had with a couple of union officials down at McDougall Centre in Calgary. I asked if there was anything else that they wanted to discuss. No occupational health and safety issues were raised.

Of course, Mr. Chair, we all remember the infamous evening when the illegal strike did happen. I remember it distinctly because I was out with my girlfriend for dinner, and she asked me to put my BlackBerry away for one time. Of course, as fate would have it, it was that one night when that happened.

Now, since the spring the vast majority of the concerns that the union has raised, Mr. Chair, have been addressed.

The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has criticized many things, but he's also criticized the structure of the building. Well, this brand new building uses a supervision model that is based on other provincial facilities and is new to some of the staff. We understand, of course, that with any type of change there are challenges. I have to only presume others' best intentions, but we have received extremely positive feedback from many front-line workers as they adjust to the new model, and we will continue to work with staff to ensure the safety of inmates, correctional peace officers, and, of course, visitors as well.

One of the increased benefits of the new centre's size is that we're able to run more programs in the facility, and one of the best programs, Mr. Chair, is the boot camp program. It is something that both the inmates and the guards have found to be extremely effective, and you can also get more information on it just on my website.

Mr. Chair, we've talked about the idea of illegal strikes this afternoon and last night as well. But my message to you is that this is not a victimless issue at all. We all know that there was $13 million in costs incurred to the taxpayer as a result of this strike, that was declared illegal by Justice Rooke of the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench. So it's not a victimless issue even from that point, and we are actually pursuing getting the costs of that strike back from the union through the grievance process. If we do not pursue that – guess what? – that means that the taxpayer will be on the hook for the costs of the illegal strike. That is why we're pursuing that, but I won't get into details on that because that is before a labour relations tribunal.

Mr. Chair, we have to thank again our hard-working staff, that work every day, but at the same time there's a process to bring up some of these particular concerns. My office is always available, and as I've said, these concerns were not raised in previous meetings that we've had.

As we move forward, I'm hoping that we have fewer of these disruptions, and that is why, Mr. Chair, I will be supporting Bill 45 in the interests of our economy and the interests of security.

Thank you.

The Chair: I recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak against Bill 45 and against the amendment. Are we speaking on the amendment or the bill?

An Hon. Member: We're on the amendment.

Mr. Kang: The amendment. Okay.

Mr. Chair, we as the Alberta Liberal caucus are not supporting Bill 45. We are vigorously opposing this because this invades the freedom of Albertans and Alberta workers. The government claims that there was a wildcat strike brought on by the prison guards, but there was a reason behind the strike. That strike came out of desperation. Every time they wanted to talk to the authorities about the issues they had, it was a dead end. Sure, it is illegal to strike, but they had reason because they were pushed to the wall, and they had to strike.

That's the rationale behind this bill, Mr. Chair. This is so heavy-handed; it's draconian. When Premier Lougheed took away the right to strike from the unions – that goes to Bill 46 but includes this, too – he still gave them binding arbitration. That shouldn't have happened in the first place, you know, but that's history. The bill sanctions are unnecessarily heavy-handed and will set the rules for workers' collective bargaining rights.

Bill 45, Mr. Chair, is foul, wild, and evil because this government is attempting to legislate away freedom of association, which is granted by the Charter of Rights. The reason people go out on a wildcat strike is because they are desperate. They cannot find any other way to communicate with their employer, the government in this case, to get their point across. So that strike was out of desperation, Mr. Chair. That was about the working conditions, about the safety of the inmates and the safety of the workers. They should have that option, whether legally or illegally. With bills 45 and 46 the government is effectively leaving workers no option to resolve their bargaining issues. They should have that bargaining right if there are safety issues, if there are working condition issues, and if there are health issues.

The ability to go on strike is really the only card that the workers hold as a tool to be able to get fairness and the process if they're not getting fairness. This is all about fairness, Mr. Chair. It's all about workers' rights and freedoms. I know, too, that this bill under the Charter of Rights won't stand up in the courts. It makes me wonder what on earth constitutes the threat of a strike. The government keeps on talking about protecting Albertans. From what? If they would be proactive, I don't think that there would be wildcat strikes. There's always a way to sit down at the table and negotiate everything.

I'm speaking against the amendment, and we will not be supporting this bill. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, did you catch my eye?

Mr. Denis: Yes. I would at this point like to move that all divisions be based on one-minute bells for the rest of the evening.

The Chair: Thank you.

Hon. members, this would apply in committee only, and it requires unanimous consent.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll be very brief. I would like to just quickly move that as we deal with this amendment, if we could, as per Beauchesne 688, go through this amendment and vote on it clause by clause, A through E, please.

The Chair: Hon. member, we've been debating this amendment probably for half an hour or so. I think that's something that you should have requested at the beginning. I can't allow that at this point. We've debated this for more than an hour. Had you asked this at the beginning, I would have ruled on it, but we're too late now. Sorry.

Mr. Wilson: Standing Order 13(2), just got clarification. Even just for voting on it as opposed to speaking on it clause by clause?

The Chair: I'll double-check, hon. member, but that process is typically at the start. That is a request that's usually asked of the chair at the beginning, when an amendment like this is put on the floor. We've been debating this for over an hour. I don't think it would be fair to the process to try to do something different. I would imagine that all members debating it up until this point have been assuming we're going to have one vote. So unless someone can find me a citation that would suggest otherwise, that will be my ruling.

If you'd like to speak to the amendment, hon. member, you're certainly able to do so, but I can't entertain a motion at this time to split it up an hour into the debate.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

7:50

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm very pleased to get up and speak in committee.

The Chair: Oh, sorry. In the interest of moving between the caucuses, I'm quite pleased to recognize the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. Sorry about that. It's just that we came rushing in and got our name on the list, and we were wanting to make sure that that process was still the way things were going.

Anyway, thank you. I'm pleased to be able to rise to speak to Bill 45 in committee. Obviously, at this point, given the short timeline, I'm also going to be speaking to the amendment that has been put forward by the members of the Wildrose caucus. Now, my understanding, having quickly scanned their amendment – and I will spend a couple of moments on that – notwithstanding that they were unsuccessful in dividing it up, is that section A of their amendment would remove the component of employees in the prohibition against either striking or threatening to strike. So that's an interesting approach to how this issue has been addressed in the past. I think it would potentially trigger quite a major rewrite of labour relations law. I'm not opposed to that particular amendment.

The next section, section B, would remove from the prohibition the action of counselling a person to potentially engage in an illegal strike or an illegal strike threat. Once again, since that essentially goes to one of the more heinous, not one of the most heinous but one of the problems with this bill. What it does is that it goes to a component of the issue around free speech because as the bill reads right now, it's of course illegal to counsel someone to engage in a strike threat, and it's illegal for a person to counsel somebody to engage in a strike threat. So that really widens the application of the prohibition in this bill in a way which is uncertain and ensures that the definite outcome is that the freedom of speech enjoyed by most Albertans will be significantly limited. So we can certainly support section B.

Section C of the amendment is an interesting one. I would suggest it's probably not at the heart of this, but nonetheless this is about putting the authority back to the board and taking it away from the minister. One of the other things that we haven't had a chance to spend a lot of time talking about in this bill is the fact that apparently this government doesn't trust the Labour Relations Board, so they would rather not have the Labour Relations Board adjudicate on the vast majority of the components of this bill. What they want to do is remove the authority and the jurisdiction of the Labour Relations Board from adjudicating on many of these matters. That, of course, is another thing that's unprecedented in this rather crappy piece of legislation. As a result, section C of the amendment would result in that authority going back to the board. I believe that, really, that's what D and E essentially do as well, just in different sections of the act. It's all about putting the authority back to the LRB.

Now, you know, those are all interesting improvements. I would say that they don't really get to the full heart of the matter. Whether the board is the one that makes the decision or whether the minister makes the decision, the fact of the matter is that they're making the decision on the basis of some draconian antiworker, anticitizen, anti-Albertan rules. The degree to which this amendment really fixes what is otherwise a really disgusting piece of legislation is sort of up in the air, and that's why I'm not convinced it's going to really deal with the problem.

Let me just talk a little bit about some of the specifics that aren't included in this amendment yet because I think that's important, and I know that in speaking to their amendment, the Wildrose has identified in more detail, I'm sure, the issues that I just reviewed. I want to talk a little bit again about sort of this whole notion of illegal strike. As you may know, Mr. Chairman, many years before I was elected, I worked in the labour movement in a number of different capacities. I also worked with respect to health and safety in the world of trying to protect workers at work and giving them the rights to maintain their own safety at the workplace.

I want to talk a little bit about a situation that I dealt with when I was in B.C., and I'm doing that, in particular, because I want to maintain the confidentiality of the situation that I'm speaking about.

The Chair: Are you still talking about the amendment, hon. member?

Ms Notley: It's absolutely about the amendment.

The Chair: Thank you.

Ms Notley: It's really important to talk about what's not in it. I just want to give some context to this.

There was a time when I was working for a union that represented a number of people who worked with youth at risk in a youth setting that was very isolated. It was on Vancouver Island, and it was about an hour's drive or more away from any major community. It was a place where youth were sent who were otherwise at risk and who had a history of violent behaviour in the past. It was typically teenagers.

As things were at that time, when the union that I worked for became involved with this particular institution, it had been a nonprofit run mostly by volunteers. We organized it, and the workers became part of our union. We discovered that one of the things that they had been doing for a long time was that they had been setting it up so that there would be one worker on call or one worker in the facility in the evening with between five and 10 young men who had a history of violence. They would be isolated in terms of an hour's drive away from anywhere else, and they had limited electronic communication. This was many years ago, back in the horse-and-buggy days, you know, pre cellphone and exhaustive cell service.

In fact, what happened was that one of those workers was very, very seriously attacked by a couple of the people that she was tasked with caring for. So the members of that group, the employees of that place, went to their employer and said: "This is unacceptable. We can't have people working here alone anymore. It's too dangerous given the risk factors, given the risk assessments, given the propensity of these particular people we serve to engage in violent behaviour. It is profoundly unsafe for one person to be here by themselves, and this person ending up in the hospital is the exact example of why that is the case."

They tried to negotiate with the employer, but what happened was that the employer was not interested in fixing it: "We can't afford it, we can't deal with it," yada, yada, yada. So eventually what happened was that there was, in fact, for a day, probably 24 hours or something, an organized decision on the part of the employees of that particular centre to not work because they said: "It's not safe. We can't have more of our people going to work and getting sent to the hospital because of this employer's failure to put in proper safety precautions." That was the situation that I was involved with.

Now, let's just say, hypothetically, that that situation was in Alberta and those people were members of the AUPE, which is likely to be the case because AUPE actually represents people who do exactly that kind of work. When those 10 to 15 or so employees spent a day not going in to work in order to support in solidarity their sister who was in the hospital, having been attacked by the people that they served, in an effort to put pressure on their employer to realize that they needed to not continue with the practice of making people work alone and hour away from a place where they can get support, they were, arguably, under the terms of this legislation engaging in illegal strike activity.

So what would have happened to them under this legislation, Mr. Chairman? Well, let's review the legislation. First of all, pursuant to section 6 the union would have all of their dues suspended for three months. So just in case that's not clear to everyone, that would cost the union $10 million. Then they would also have to pay into the liability fund a million dollars a day. Then they would have to pay a fine of $250,000 plus $50 for each one of their members, and using the number of 22,000 or 23,000 members, that would amount to another $1.5 million dollars a day. I'm getting to it. I'm getting to it, Mr. Chairman.

That amounts to a total of $2.5 million a day for every day that these women are out of work trying to ensure that they are not forced to go into a workplace where they are put at risk of being attacked, with no support and no protection from anybody else under the control and care of their employer. So for every day that they are doing that plus $10 million.

Mr. Chairman, this is why this bill is a piece of garbage. Those fines are beyond reasonable. They are beyond the pale. I'd like to say, you know, that yesterday the Deputy Premier got up and said that a judge told us that this is what the fines have to be, and I will tell you that that is not correct. The judge has laid out some ideas for what the fine would be, or there have been discussions. I don't have the specifics, but what I do know is that it does not amount to that amount of money by any means. Moreover, that judge is being appealed.

So let us be very clear, just in case anyone got confused by the misinformation that was provided to this House by the Deputy Premier. These outrageous fines were not, under any circumstances at all, ordered by a judge. Whoever wrote those talking points had better go back and rewrite them because you're misleading the House if they continue to say that.

Mr. Denis: Point of order.

The Chair: Deputy Government House Leader, you rose on a point of order. A citation?

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Denis: I rise under 23(h), (i), and (j) as well as Beauchesne 489. The member has indicated the word "mislead," which is on page 146 of Beauchesne. I would ask that she withdraw it, please.

Ms Notley: Mr. Chair, I withdraw the suggestion that members here were intentionally misleading the House. The information that they might have been relying on was misleading, but I apologize if it was . . .

The Chair: So you're withdrawing any allegation, hon. member? I think that suffices.

Please proceed, hon. member.

Debate Continued

Ms Notley: In any event, that should be clarified because that information has not been appropriately provided to the House at this point.

That's the problem with this bill. This kind of fine could easily demolish a union, completely demolish a union. Really, I think that, generally speaking, that's what this is about. It's about union busting. It's about repercussions. It's about showing AUPE that the Premier is boss and that they should never ever make eye contact with her again unless invited to do so. That's what this piece of legislation is actually about. It's not about good public policy, not by any means. It is, instead, about making this province a leader – a leader – in violations of basic human rights and basic rights to stand up and protect ourselves.

As far as the amendment goes, then, that of course is one of my concerns because it really does not deal with the outrageous fines which are included and the outrageous levels of penalties which are included in this bill. In so doing, it appears to potentially endorse those outrageous fines. So I struggle to support this amendment.

Something that would actively deliver this piece of legislation, that I almost don't really want to touch because it's so toxic, something that would actually deliver it to the LRB I'm not entirely sure I can be onboard with. That's another problem that exists, I suppose, with this bill although it can go either way because there's no question that the board generally understands what it's doing. I don't quite understand why it is that this government feels the need to take these decisions away from the LRB.

Then again, though, it's part of a pattern, isn't it, Mr. Chairman? We've seen that the government wants to take away the ability to arbitrate from the arbitrator as well. We know that the criteria that would be considered in that case by the arbitrator would easily ensure that members of AUPE would receive a much more generous settlement than what this government is proposing either in their last offer or through this heinous legislation. We know that if the rule of law were allowed to simply be followed in this province, the members of AUPE and the employees of AUPE would undoubtedly receive more money than what the government wants to give them.

My colleague from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has already noted that the B.C. government has managed to hammer out a five-year pact that would give their employees a 5 per cent increase. Now – I don't know – maybe B.C. is feeling super-optimistic and thinks that their economy is going to grow way more than ours. I doubt it – that would be silly – because that's not what most people are forecasting. In fact, people are forecasting levels of economic growth in Alberta over the duration of the agreement, that this heinous piece of legislation is being used to force down the throats of AUPE, of between 2 and a half and 3 per cent a year.

When this awful piece of legislation is successfully used to force the members of AUPE to accept this retrogressive wage rollback, they will, when it is finished, have lost in real dollars almost 10 per cent of their salary. It's interesting that that's what the new Progressive Conservative Party here wants to do to their hard-working employees while the B.C. government is (a) prepared to negotiate and (b) is prepared to give them a 5 per cent increase.

Now, of course, I understand that the B.C. government has learned its lesson. The B.C. government tried one of these little loopy-loos a few years ago, and in fact they were the ones that generated the very Supreme Court of Canada decision which invariably will render both Bill 45 and Bill 46 out of order and in breach of the Constitution, which, of course, again goes back to this whole issue of the ridiculous hypocrisy of this government wrapping themselves self-righteously in the flag of the rule of law while at the same time introducing legislation that – I believe it was the Member for Calgary-Buffalo who said: any second-year law student could have told them that this piece of legislation is going to be found to be in breach of our Constitution and our Charter.

Anyway, it makes some sense that B.C. would work a little bit harder on reaching a negotiated agreement because they've already been slapped down by the Supreme Court of Canada once. Apparently, these folks think it's a good use of our money as taxpayers to go back to the courts to defend this illegal piece of legislation rather than simply pay to the hard-working employees of this government and, actually, of the taxpayers a wage which is fair to them.

Unlike both the government on this side and the Official Opposition, we don't believe that a wage freeze is the appropriate answer for members of AUPE. We know that they are amongst the lower paid public-sector workers, and we know that it is important for them to have a wage increase that at the very least keeps up with the cost of living and, quite frankly, probably ought to increase beyond that.

You know what? Equity and moves towards equality are actually good for society as a whole. I'm sure you will not be surprised, Mr. Chairman, that I've raised before the fact that in Alberta, statistically speaking, we have the largest gap between the superrich and everybody else. We have a growing number of studies world-wide that show that that is bad not only for everybody else but actually also for the superrich. Gross inequity is not good for anybody, and the deal that these guys want to shove down the throat of AUPE is going to ensure that that gross inequity actually grows.

I am not in favour of the position of either the Official Opposition or this government that a wage freeze is the appropriate way to go. Our numbers about the projected rate of economic growth, the projected Alberta weekly earnings index, AWEI or something that the policy wonks always refer to, over the course of the next four years is that we're looking at a little over a 10 per cent wage increase, generally speaking, for all employees. By insisting that the public-sector employees in Alberta, particularly the AUPE employees, accept a 0, 0, 1, and 1 or a 0, 0, 1, and 1.5 or something is quite regressive because it means that they're going to lose – lose – a lot of money. I just don't understand it.

The vast majority of their members are women, and of course we've talked before about the fact that the wage gap between men and women in this province is also the largest in the country. That is a problem.

8:10

All of that is being facilitated by Bill 45. Bill 45 is basically a great big – I don't know. I'm not really a gun person, but, you know, it's an Uzi. It's a great big Uzi that's sort of being held to the chest of a 10-year-old kid with a slingshot, and it's utterly unnecessary. It's utterly unnecessary. The point is that it's over the top. It's over the top. It's an absolute bullying technique by a government that has been in office for far, far, far too long, that has completely lost touch with the people that it should be representing, and which is now involved in gratuitous retribution – I think this is really about retribution – and gratuitous bullying and potentially some incredibly cynical politicking. It's happening at the expense of some of our most hard-working Alberta citizens, and it's happening also at the expense of some of our most fundamental rights.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers on the amendment? The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll be very brief. Section B of this amendment talks about striking out "counsel a person to contravene subsection (1) or (2)." I'm just asking for some clarification on whether this could apply to a blogger or someone who writes a letter to the editor or someone who over coffee is saying: look, you should go and strike in these circumstances. Would this legislation actually apply to someone like that, or does the definition of counselling under this act mean that that person has to be paid for services or a lawyer counselling?

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, there's been a lot of this sort of talk about talk around the water cooler and those sorts of things. This hon. member was a practising lawyer and ought to know that there's an offence of counselling an offence, and that's more than just casual conversation. That's not something you just throw around lightly. That is a real and meaningful effort to encourage someone to engage in an illegal act. That's definable at law, it's a concept of law, the courts know what that is, and it's not something that just happens because somebody happens to walk by.

The Chair: Other speakers on the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise with a great deal of interest on Bill 45 and this amendment, and I thank the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, I think, who put this forward. I'm glad to see some interest and engagement with the member. I know that by osmosis and evolution we learn from each other, and I think that the member has thus learned to at least be sharing the same lounge with us. Engaging in Bill 45: that's wonderful.

I think that he also did go to the heart of the problem in Bill 45. Certainly, with the first large section – A, B, C, and D – that he included in this amendment, I think the intention is good because it's taking the authority for some of the most egregious parts of Bill 45 and moving them from the hands of the minister back to the Labour Relations Board.

Certainly, you know, if we're looking for small degrees of movement, that's a good thing. In fact, the terrible powers that Bill 45 unleashes in regard to its ability to fine in an unreasonable way and to penalize in a very unreasonable way should not by any means be in the hands of a minister, certainly not any minister that had anything within five miles to do with drafting Bill 45. I can see his point in that regard.

However, it still delivers some of the very most egregious parts, Mr. Chair, of Bill 45, as it happens, maybe over to the Labour Relations Board, nonetheless not moving them away from workers here in this province. In that way, I have a problem with the amendment. Certainly, the amendment still allows these parts of Bill 45 that have these million-dollar-a-day strike threat liability fines to unions of $250 to $1,000 per day, $10,000-a-day fines for reps, and a $500 fine for any Albertan or organization supporting a strike threat. I don't know. Do they make $500 bills? I'd better keep a very large stack of them in my wallet because I certainly will not stop advocating for workers in this province with a ridiculous law like that. Where's the Justice minister? There you go. He's supposed to jump up. I usually have him in a Pavlovian reaction when I say something like that, but he must have gone to the bathroom.

Any employee who causes or consents to a strike, any employee who does anything considered to be a strike threat, unions that engage in a strike threat, a person who counsels anyone to do anything considered as a strike threat, an employer that does not suspend a deduction or remittance and so on and so forth: I mean, all of these things are on one hand such sort of aggressive language and such sweeping language, but I also would venture to say that they're so vague, Mr. Chair, that I can't see how they could even really stand up for any length of time either in a court of law or under even a reasonable presumption.

You know, this is often how dictatorial states will move egregious legislation. They'll say: Oh, don't you worry; we couldn't possibly do any of those things. But all we have is the letter of the law that is given to us, and all we can do is judge a government or an individual by their actions. Right? The very act of writing these things down is an action that I consider to be quite threatening, certainly, not just threatening within the context of strikes and so forth but within the context of a just society and a free society and the way by which we can organize ourselves and speak freely about issues of the day and so forth.

I can see where the member was dealing with this in the amendment in some categorical way, taking it out of the hands of the minister who devilishly drafted this legislation. Better look it up to see if that word is in there, right? Devilish. Like devilled eggs, of course.

I think we need to remind ourselves as well, though, that we'd like to put ourselves and legislation and amendments such as this within the context of national standards. Really, we've worked on this very hard over the last few days. There's nothing that even resembles this kind of legislation in any other province in the country. You know, perhaps we're trying to be leaders in some sort of bizarre, aggressive way, to see who can draft the very worst labour legislation of all time. We would win, of course, if we do pass this. But in any other province, certainly, it doesn't exist to this degree whatsoever.

The justification that I see for this Bill 45 is completely out of context for the events that have taken place in this province not just in the last 12 months but in the last 20 or 30 years, where we've had actually quite a stable labour landscape. The excuse for this thing was that somehow there was a risk, and this deters risk somehow. It reminds me of when some small thing happens or something happens in a country, and they use it as an excuse or a pretext to bring in wide-ranging, sweeping, very negative things. I mean, I've just got the feeling that I'm caught up in the middle of that kind of behaviour here as well.

Certainly, the amendment shows some signs of life. But I think that, categorically, we can't, as the New Democrats here tried to, make a silk purse out of the proverbial sow's ear. You know, it's just too much. Bill 45 has too many things that interact with each other in a very negative way, so we are preferring that we can just reject this bill. I was thinking about it this afternoon. We don't need to just jump on this. There's no reason why we can't maybe just let it sit for a few months or perhaps put a pause on the aggression and the suspension of logic that this bill somehow represents. I think we'd all be the better for it. Right?

8:20

It's supposed to be the holiday season, where we reflect on things that we have and count our blessings and think about brotherly and sisterly love for each other. What better way to demonstrate that than to the 22,000 workers that are directly affected in a most negative way by these two bills and then the hundreds of thousands of workers that also will be living under the pall and dark shadow of these two bills? You know that if they can get away with this kind of thing, who knows what's going to be next? The building trades like to think they've inoculated themselves. They haven't. The other independent unions are all going to have to live under this very dark shadow, and I think that we could do everyone a great favour here in this Legislature by taking two steps back, agreeing to disagree in some general way but certainly not vote for this kind of aggressive attack on workers here in the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others on the amendment? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just wanted to add a little bit because I was challenged earlier to provide some concept around the idea of counselling. I would direct members to section 22 of the Criminal Code, which says:

22. (1) Where a person counsels another person to be a party to an offence and that other person is afterwards a party to that offence, the person who counselled is a party to that offence, notwithstanding that the offence was committed in a way different from that which was counselled.

(2) Every one who counsels another person to be a party to an offence is a party to every offence that the other commits in consequence of the counselling that the person who counselled knew or ought to have known was likely to be committed in the consequence of the counselling.

(3) For the purposes of this Act, "counsel" includes procure, solicit, or incite.

In commentary to that I would say that in R. versus Sharpe, 2001, Supreme Court of Canada, it says that counsel under this section is more than simply advising. It has the meaning of actively inducing. The mens rea of counselling requires evidence that an accused either intended that the offence counselled be committed or knowingly counselled the commission of the offence while aware of the unjustified risk that the offence counselled was in fact likely to be committed as a result of the accused's conduct.

Mr. Chairman, it's very, very clear that counselling is not simply people talking about what might happen. It's not simply people sort of speculating: wouldn't it be great fun to go on a strike? It's people who are actively inducing the action which then occurs. That's a legal term. It's been interpreted by the courts. It's not ill-defined or undefined. It's, in fact, something which a court would find. It's not something which is imposed by a government or by an employer or by a minister. It's a term which can be well understood by the actions which are put forward, and then a court or the Labour Relations Board would determine whether, in fact, the evidence actually indicated that the person who was counselling actually intended the act of the strike to happen.

It's not a simple little matter that anybody can fall afoul of, and it's not curtailing people's freedom of speech to discuss whether they're unhappy at work. It's not a question of people hanging around saying: "Oh, there are bad things happening" or "Maybe it's unsafe at work." It's actually a serious intent to encourage someone to commit an offence.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, did you wish to speak on the amendment?

Mr. Wilson: Yes, very briefly, Mr. Chair. Thank you for the opportunity, and thank you for the clarification, Minister, on that particular clause.

I just wanted to comment quickly on my colleagues that are quite conveniently to my left. The difference between pragmatism and idealism . . .

An Hon. Member: Not anymore. Not anymore.

Mr. Wilson: Easy. Easy.

The pragmatic approach and the reason why our party and our critic here proposed these amendments was because we accept the fact that regardless of what we do over here, this government is going to pass this bill. We might as well do the best that we can at trying to make it just a little bit better than it was when it first was tabled. As much as I appreciate the idealism that you are, I guess, showing by your insistence in not supporting this amendment, I would just merely ask you to reconsider as I'm sure that the government will no doubt be in support of our amendment on this.

That being said, Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to let this committee know that, speaking about this bill and about where my vote will land, if the government does accept this amendment, I will happily be supporting Bill 45. If the government does not support this amendment, I will still struggle to do so.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there others on the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A1.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: Back to the bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's my first opportunity to speak in committee on Bill 45, and I'm honoured to do so. I want to try to create a little different ambience here while we're talking in committee on the impact of the bill. I think there's an opportunity now to just pause a bit and reflect on some of the impacts. I'll more than anything just raise questions for the government. I hope they're thoughtful questions. I hope they're taken in the spirit in which they're given because I think this has important implications, as we've seen from the attendance in the gallery, both tonight and other nights, the seriousness with which many people in Alberta are taking this, and indeed the seriousness with which it's being, I guess, communicated across the world and in some jurisdictions. I'll comment on that later.

We're talking about the impact of the bill. In the interest of honest dialogue I'd like to just raise questions that I think many people have wrestled with and made comments about and made decisions on, but I hope we can open up our minds and consider, once again, some of the key impacts of this bill. I submit these respectfully in hopes of gaining attention to the consideration of the potential benefit and potential damage these bills can do not only to the recipients of the bill, the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, but also to the public and to government and to this institution, the democratic process that we represent.

Well, first of all, the most salient question would be: what is going to be the impact on the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees? What will it be financially in terms of their income? What will it mean financially in terms of any actions that they feel they have to take as a result of this? What's the impact on individual members of the public service, AUPE, and other unions in respect to their own sense of their worth as employees and as civil servants, servants of the public? What will be the impact in terms of their own self-confidence and what they bring to the workplace, their attitude? What will it do to their sense of fairness? How will that affect their willingness to volunteer, to go the extra mile, to bring a very positive attitude to their work and to their clients? I hope we're taking that into some consideration because that's a key to productivity: how people feel about themselves, how they feel about the workplace, and their ability to influence it in a positive way.

Will it build confidence? Will it build trust both between the workers and with their employer, the government of Alberta? That's an important dimension of impact in a bill. The irony is that this is called the public-sector continuation bill, and I guess the question would be: will some people decide not to continue work if they feel that this has been in some way harmful to them, to their self-respect, to their ability to do their job, to their confidence, and to their trust?

Does it build on a strong Progressive Conservative foundation set by Peter Lougheed? I know everyone in this House is proud of the legacy of Peter Lougheed. Will this build on that important visionary leadership and, certainly, his commitment to human rights, or won't it? I ask that seriously. Will this help build on that strong PC foundation or not?

Does it honour the Canadian value of negotiation and respectful bargaining in good faith? Does it send a positive or a negative message to people in the public service and to our union folks in the province? Another measure of impact I think we need to consider.

Does a forced agreement send the message that this government wants to send to our public servants, and does this ultimately save money in the short term? Perhaps it will. How about the long term? Will this bill save money for the budget in the long term? Again, I guess the question becomes: how much will we pay in terms of attitude shift, lost productivity, and, potentially, litigation, lawsuits, in terms of Charter challenges, which, from everything I've heard, could be quite expensive?

Finally, what will the political impacts of these two bills be? I'm sure, given this government's long history, they weigh the impacts, the political impacts, of everything they do. I again want to challenge you folks: what are the short-term political gains, in what populations, and what are the long-term political gains? What are the short-term losses and the long-term political losses? I think there are some serious liabilities, myself.

I hope one of them will be enhancing our respect for the democratic process. If it doesn't enhance our respect for and our engagement as citizens in the democratic process, then surely we have to consider that. If it's going to undermine our ability to represent people and to have them engaged with the political process, that's a significant liability. I think you recognize that some of us believe that it might do that. It might be a serious long-term threat to our engagement with citizens, not only those in unions but, generally, citizens who have watched the proceedings and watched the process through which these decisions have been made, especially, I guess, from my point of view, the short timeline in which we've tried to squeeze this all in.

I guess my question directly to the minister, perhaps disrespectful since I didn't have the floor – I continue to ask the minister: why the rush? Why the haste on these two very significant bills from a public perception point of view, from a public trust point of view? Why the haste in the last few days of the Legislature, and why contain the debate so stringently? Again, I just have questions about how that's going to strengthen or undermine the democratic process and public trust.

From a political point of view is that going to serve the Progressive Conservative Party, both in the short and the long term? How will the Progressive Conservative caucus feel about this at the end of the day, having rammed this through in a short time and limited debate and without hearing the full dimensions of how it may or not impact them? How is it going to build a team within the PC caucus, and how's it going to affect relations between the PC caucus and their staff, their public servants, that they're involved with day to day?

Finally, as I mentioned, the big political determinant is how it's going to impact the public, public perception. I think the media have done a fair job in this case of raising some of those questions so that the public can wrestle with these.

Recently an international body called the Index on Censorship has run an article on this particular set of bills, raising the question of whether this has pushed Alberta into a new level of attention around democratic rights and freedoms, particularly with reference to journalism. They're concerned that if a journalist were to raise a question about illegal strikes, wildcat strikes, there could be a threat to that journalist. They raise some questions, I guess, about whether Alberta wants to threaten free speech, particularly that of journalists. They see it as a potential chill on journalism in Alberta. I hadn't thought of that, but they have cited it in an article this week. You can google it at Index on Censorship if you want to see the full article.

One quotation I also read today was by Bob Barnetson, a champion for farm workers' rights in this province. He spoke very eloquently, I think, about, again, the right to free expression, the right to association, the right to bargaining, none of which are available to farm workers. It's still a sore point for me and for many Albertans that farm workers are legally not entitled to form a union in Alberta. It's in the legislation that farm workers cannot legally form a union.

That's another dark spot for me in terms of the strong political and democratic legacy that Peter Lougheed left. I don't know how much the PC caucus feels that. But a number of people across the world now recognize that Alberta stands out in Canada as violating some fundamental rights of farm workers only, uniquely. They're the only occupational group that are exempted from the ability to form a union. Obviously, that goes along with their lack of protection under the Occupational Health and Safety Act, their lack of workers' compensation if they're injured, the lack of any child labour standards in the workplace for farm workers in Alberta, and the lack of a labour code.

This is coming to a head, I think, for this PC government. There are some questions about your commitment to long-term public interest, democratic process, and basic rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I think there are some questions that you may want to ask about these two bills in the context of how they – not only is our public looking at it, but the international community is increasingly looking at it and questioning where we're coming from.

To quote Bob Barnetson, Bill 45 would see newspaper columnists who write opinion pieces about the plight of workers, including farm workers, or those who merely comment that the only option these people have is to strike handed a hefty penalty for their work. Making such comments would be a violation of section 4(4) of the bill. In a globalized economy, where Alberta already has a hard time accessing markets around the world because of our failure to meet some international environmental standards, we've now given another reason to markets around the world not to do business with Alberta because of a record that we are creating for ourselves on how we treat workers in Alberta.

Mr. Chair, I hope these questions and these comments are taken in the spirit with which they're given. I genuinely want to challenge the government on thinking through the labour implications; the financial implications, short and long term; the political implications, short and long term; and, fundamentally, the implications for our democratic process, which, I would hope, a confident government would want to champion themselves, would want to raise to the highest possible level, would want to be proud of.

In the spirit of engaging all Albertans in this important building of Alberta, they would ensure that everyone is strengthened, feels empowered, feels engaged, and sees a vision of something very much better for all of us in the coming years, especially our children, our grandchildren. Many of us here have children and grandchildren. These are the kinds of legacies that I think we have to be much more conscious of in terms of the day-to-day decisions that may be expedient and may be short-circuiting also some of the key values that we say we stand for.

I guess my view is that these bills will not serve the short- or the long-term interests of this government, they will not serve the short- or long-term interests of labour, they will not serve the short- or long-term interests of the public, and there's very little to benefit all of us, including the Progressive Conservative government. There's still a chance to step back from this. We can refer this bill. We can hoist this bill. We can take time to reflect on it and recognize that we can all be winners here. There doesn't have to be a win-lose conclusion to this. We can all be winners here in the context of a big-picture view and the recognition that process is as important as outcome.

I know that the Minister of Human Services believes very much in process. I've seen that in action in the social policy framework and the consultations that he's done. I think there's an opportunity for him and for this government to not proceed with this bill and reflect on some of these questions.

With that, Mr. Chair, I'll take my seat. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I also rise to speak on Bill 45. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View has raised so many questions. Bill 45 is a complex bill. It sparks numerous legal questions and requires substantive back-and-forth debate in order that we can properly consider it. The bill in its present form I don't think, you know, anybody should be supporting, and the government should take a second look, as they did on Bill 28 and all the other bills they rammed through. Then they had to be withdrawn or brought back later on.

This bill is against the fundamental freedoms in the Charter.

Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms in section 2 of the Charter:

- (b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication . . . and
- (d) freedom of association.

The nature of the problem with this bill, Mr. Chair, is that it violates section 2(b) and section 2(d). When the bill is taken to the Supreme Court, they will use the Oakes test. When Bill 45 loses in the Supreme Court of Canada, will the government invoke the notwithstanding clause? Will you invoke the notwithstanding clause if you lose in the Supreme Court after spending millions and millions of dollars?

The Chair: Through the chair, hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Sorry, Mr. Chair.

Here's a little bit of background about the wildcat strike. In 1977 Premier Peter Lougheed outlawed mass public-sector strikes in the Public Service Employee Relations Act. When things are really bad, essentially around safety issues, wildcat strikes still occur, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt you, hon. member, but pursuant to Government Motion 50 the time for debate on this bill has now expired.

I will now call the question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 45 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

Bill 46

Public Service Salary Restraint Act

The Chair: Are there any speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's my first opportunity to speak to committee on Bill 46, the Public Service Salary Restraint Act. I guess it's an interesting question, to what extent we're restraining and who we're restraining. But I guess I would have a lot of the same questions about Bill 46 that I've raised with respect to Bill 45 in relation to the short-term and long-term benefits of using, I guess, a blunderbuss or a hammer to deal with something that is more properly dealt with in a process that we have defined as binding arbitration and that this government has agreed to as far back as 1977. Peter Lougheed, along with the Canadian Charter, established the right of people to assemble, people to negotiate in good faith, and to ultimately have their differences arbitrated by an independent arbiter.

Again, I guess I would have to ask some of the same questions of this government. What is going to be the impact of this threat of very heavy-handed fines, not only financial fines but potentially restricting people's freedom? What is going to be the impact of a bill that basically tries to muzzle – this is also going to muzzle people who will not feel free to speak about unreasonable conditions, unreasonable negotiations. In combination with Bill 45 these are bills that will set a tone for people to negotiate, to not proceed with what is reasonable and fair in terms of standing up for their rights, for their respectful treatment, for their freedom to speak. This would potentially limit their rights and freedoms under the charter.

It's disappointing that a government with such apparent confidence, such a majority, feels that in some way they have to use a blunderbuss, again, to control a group of people that have legitimate rights under the Charter and then violates a basic contract, particularly with unionized people, around the right to arbitration, imposing a four-year wage settlement if they fail to return to the bargaining table. That's not the spirit in which Peter Lougheed brought in the legislation. I would have to ask the same questions again: what are the short- and long-term implications of this, financially, for this government? They may force some labour peace. They may force, indeed, some silencing of people who might want to talk about strike action and negotiate some issues that may not be on the surface of them clearly based in contract but may indeed be.

What will be the workplace implications of this in addition to Bill 45, in the context of people communicating about their work, being proud of their work, proud of their union affiliation, proud of their citizenship in Alberta and Canada? What will it mean for their attitudes in relation to their colleagues, their public that they're serving, whether it's people on the front lines of home care or people in the laboratories of hospitals, people in our correctional institutions, who are dealing with very challenging individuals? What will it mean for them when they feel that they've been bullied and threatened? Even the very idea of raising the possibility of a strike in some cases will be suppressed.

Again, whether or not it is intended, I'm asking the government to consider the possibility that they're sending a very strong message, a negative message, a disrespectful message, one that undermines trusts and engagement, not only of the workforce but also of citizens at large, who have become cynical about the political process, which, I dare to say it, has become a lot about power and money. Is that all we're here about? Power and money? It appears to be, and this reinforces the notion that politics is all about power and money and self interest.

After 42 years of this government I think more and more people are saying that this reinforces an attitude that I don't think you want to convey but that is being conveyed. Whether you've lost touch with the grassroots or whether you're simply ignoring what people are telling you about the impacts of your actions and your bills, your policies, your processes – and this is another process that was brought in late, in the last few days, rushed through without a reasonable level of debate or an opening up of issues rather than a closing down of some of the key implications of these two bills.

Bill 46, in the same way as Bill 45, is sending a chill through the democratic process, and I dare say there will be not only the short-term pain of implementing this on a group of people that don't feel respected, there will be long-term pain financially from a democratic process point of view and from a personal well-being point of view.

I look at policies often through the lens of health. Is this going to build capacity? Is it going to build relationships? Is it going to build a sense of confidence and empowerment in people, both in and out of the union brotherhood? If it's not, it needs to be reviewed. It needs to be revised. It needs to be rescinded. If you can't see that, I think you've become blinded to your own power and your own ability to do whatever you wish, which is dangerous in any body.

Forty-two years of absolute power is dangerous for any group, and I would say the same if it was the Liberal government in Alberta. It would be time for a Liberal government to be taken down after 42 years in Alberta because you lose touch with the grassroots. You lose touch with the impact of your policies. You lose touch with the deeper values, the longer term vision, and the opportunities that we possess as legislators to build a better set of relationships, a longer term vision, and a stronger community base that will start to work within themselves as well as with each other with a political process to ensure that we have a better outcome for all of us in the future.

A lot of it has a very specific focus on the Alberta Union of Public Employees. The question really is: what message does it send to all unions? What message does it send to all Albertans? The bill stands a very reasonable possibility of being ruled unconstitutional in a court of law. Is that the message that you want to send to Albertans, to Canadians, to the international community? Surely not.

The government says that it's going to ensure fiscal restraint. But to what extent? For what period of time? How is it going to translate into more productivity? The minister is quite aware that employee surveys in the Human Services department continue to be very low in terms of confidence in management, confidence in the vision of the department. Is this going to enhance that confidence, that sense of well-being, empowerment, and willingness to work? I doubt it.

Does it represent bargaining in good faith, which, again, Peter Lougheed championed? If it doesn't, surely you want to look at that. Often what I reflect on in policies of this government is that there's a short-term gain, often in the bottom line, and there's a long-term pain because of the long-term implications, the damage done to individuals, organizations. The public confidence is the bigger price that we pay, with long-term costs that are not factored in.

A four-year time frame, election cycles simply are not on in the 21st century. You have the power and the experience to know that, so it's disheartening to see that kind of short-term thinking, expediency, opportunism, I guess I'd say. The comment I made on the steps of the Legislature is: if you want to know why the PC government is forcing these bills through, it's because they can, simply because they have the power to do it. This is not in the long-term public or civil servant interest. I don't think you want that. I want to give you an opportunity to take a step back and consider where this is going.

These two bills appear to be effectively dismantling or trying to dismantle the collective bargaining process in Alberta or at least send a very intimidating message to those who would stand up and challenge this government, especially a wealthy government such as we are, on their negotiating terms and conditions.

I guess the final question that we continue to ask on this side of the House is if budget is the real motivator, if budget is the real driver, if reducing costs is the real question here, reducing services, therefore. Make no mistake. If you cut what people perceive as a fair and reasonable settlement, you're going to reduce productivity. It won't be easy to measure, but it will be there. I think we're seeing that in the health care system today, where the demoralization of health workers, the chaos in the health system has come to the point where professionals don't volunteer as readily, they don't go the extra mile, they don't sit on committees as readily, and their attitude at work is less than positive. It adds to an atmosphere of distrust and lack of confidence and stress and strain and loss of productivity. I think many of my colleagues would recognize that and express that. The same is here.

If budget is the real issue, let's talk about revenue. Let's talk about a fair, progressive tax system. Let's bring in the revenue that we need to provide the basic services that we say we deserve and that our most vulnerable people deserve: seniors, persons with disabilities, farm workers who need the protection of this government, health care services, schools. If revenue is the problem, let's fix it. There's no shame in saying that we have come up to a point where we can't do more with less. We can't afford to go more and more into debt. We need to take a fair look at taxation. Then we can be solid in our commitment to some of these fundamentals: health care, education, some basic infrastructure, human services.

This is not a positive way of dealing with a budget problem. I'm not saying that that's the only driver, but it is one driver. It seems to be a major driver in a lot of the decisions coming out of this Legislature. I hope you'll rethink your obsession with the Wildrose Party and their attacks on taxation. Let go of that. This is the long-term public interest we're looking at. We have no stability fund because we haven't been bringing in enough revenue, and revenue, fundamentally, is from our resources and a fair tax system.

So let's be honest about what it is we're dealing with. We're dealing with a shortfall of revenue, primarily: $10 billion less than the lowest taxing province in this country, Saskatchewan. We could tax another $9 billion and still be the lowest taxation venue in the country. We'd be able to confidently provide services year to year, save money, provide the basics for everybody that needs them, and not have to resort to tactics that I think many people feel are disrespectful in the least and illegal at worst.

I'm pleased to be able to leave my remarks and my questions, and I hope for a reconsideration in this important decision that our government is making this week. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

9:00

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Bill 46: what a pleasure this one is. I want to thank those in the gallery who have stuck it out here to hear us debate this bill tonight. Bill 45 was an interesting one. This one takes it to a whole new level, and I've got to say unequivocally that I know I will be not supporting this bill. I don't think it matters what the government does to it. There's no way to fix this one. It is, straight up, a piece of junk. There's no better way to put it.

You know, in our party over here, Mr. Chairman, we believe strongly in respecting the rule of law and upholding contracts, including the collective bargaining process and the agreements that have been in place. Negotiating a collective agreement that's fair for taxpayers is an important goal, but it doesn't give the government the right to terminate legal arbitration rights of public-sector employees, and that's what we're seeing here.

As has been brought up time and time again in this House, in 1977 Premier Peter Lougheed instituted arbitration rights, and he gave public-sector employees the right to binding arbitration as an alternative to removing their right to strike. We believe this was and still is a fair compromise that should be upheld.

The government often accuses us of suggesting that we would hold the line on spending and that it would be much worse if we would have never increased spending because in our fiscal management plan it's suggested that we would wait until we had a balanced budget to do that. It's right. We did say that we would hold the line on spending in terms of the public sector, and we made no qualms about it. We said it very clearly in the 2012 election.

I think what's happening here and one of the big problems is that we didn't keep it a secret what we were going to do, but the governing party made all sorts of promises. The Premier dashed her little pixie dust all over the province and certainly was able to do so with the public-sector unions. You know, unfortunately, the glitter has gone away, as it were, Mr. Chairman, and I think that that's where this government is seriously getting itself into problems, into trouble. In between bills 45 and 46 it pretty much seems like there's an all-out, full-on attack against our public-sector unions, and it's just absolutely unnecessary.

The Premier has broken the promise to the public-sector unions to negotiate in good faith, to give them increases, and it should come as no surprise to her that on the steps of the Legislature every day for the past few days there have been rallies, there have been very angry people who are using their democratic voice, which it is their right to do. They thought they had done that in the election by casting their ballot, but unfortunately it didn't quite work out the way that they had planned. They were led down a path that didn't quite end up working out for them, and it's quite unfortunate.

Taking a legislative approach to collective bargaining is heavy-handed, and it erodes the trust between public-sector employees and the government. The government is basically saying: see this our way, or else we'll make you see this our way. It's terrible for employee morale, and it's certainly not the way to go about collective bargaining, and it's certainly not doing it with any measure of good faith.

The pushing through of Bill 46 shows the PCs' arrogance and contempt for the democratic process. Before these two bills were even put on the Order Paper and tabled in this House, there were motions to ram them through this Legislature this week so that we only had to endure two hours of debate in both second reading and here in Committee of the Whole. Again, we have I wouldn't say contempt – that's not the right word – but definitely arrogance. "Contempt" is not the right word. It's arrogance. The process that they're taking is very disrespectful to what it is that we're elected to do here, Mr. Chairman, as I had suggested earlier.

Now, we would have asked our public sector to hold the line on spending to help fix the financial mess created by the PC government, but what we would not do is be holding a gun to the head of the union, the way that the government currently is. The reality is that for 35 years the arbitration system put in place by Peter Lougheed worked, and even under Ralph Klein the government of the early '90s was able to negotiate with the unions to take a rollback in pay. So it works. There's no reason for Bill 46 to come in and impose in such a draconian fashion a legislated line on spending, 0, 0, 1, 1, however they're doing it. It just doesn't make sense.

At the end of the day, Mr. Chair, one must question the Redford government's ability to govern when a system that held up for over 35 years, through thick and thin, is collapsing under her watch. It's very disappointing to see. I believe it's going to change public-sector negotiations in this province. We're at a fork in the road. Things will not be the same for a very, very long time.

But for all of those public-sector union workers and employees who are struggling as they hear this, they can rest assured that in 2016 a Wildrose government will go back and correct this process and make sure that we do this properly by reinstating the arbitration rights that have been in place in this province for 35 years.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there others?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I rise, and I won't take up too much time. I've already spoken once in Committee of the Whole, and I've spoken in second reading. I just wanted to talk a little bit about some of the comments that have been made by the last couple of speakers.

This is not about power, Mr. Chairman. This is about the commitment we made to Albertans to live within our means. It's also about the commitment to continue to provide a low tax environment, to continue to provide an environment where our public-sector and public service union membership and workers are amongst the highest paid in the country. We want to continue that. We want to negotiate that. We want to sit down and have that negotiation.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member suggests that the arbitration rights will be gone after this piece of legislation is passed, never to return. That's simply not true. The bill is designed so that if we don't need this and we get a negotiated settlement, this bill is revoked on proclamation.

The other piece to this, Mr. Chairman, is that we're in a situation right now where we have a $6 billion flood that we need to deal with, and we've got a billion dollars' worth of operating losses associated with that. Yes, this year we're looking at a position where we may have an additional billion dollars that we can work with, but frankly, as I said at second-quarter report, that billion dollars is spoken for. It's spoken for based on helping southern Alberta rebuild and Albertans in southern Alberta to do that.

Mr. Chairman, the other piece that the hon. member suggests is that they'll somehow revoke or put this back in, which is a purely political ploy for the members in the gallery and those outside because the reality is that the compulsory arbitration won't change after this. This is for this period in time, for this particular contract.

As the Premier suggested today, we requested that the AUPE come back to the table. They denied. We asked, "Let's sit down and have another offer," so we put another offer on the table. It was rejected.

Mr. Chairman, I heard from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview about B.C.'s agreement, and I've been reviewing some of what B.C.'s agreement has within it. I understand it to be, like, 5.5 per cent over five years. It sounds pretty close to 1 per cent a year. I understand that it has some benefits in there around the fact that they would share in GDP growth. Well, you know, the way that you get to that type of agreement is where one party puts something on the table, and the other party responds and puts something on the table. That's what we want to see. We want to see some negotiation that might actually even come with that.

I'll tell you this. That kind of unique arrangement that you see in B.C. would not come from compulsory arbitration. It comes from sitting down, talking to each other, and trying to come up with something that is a fair deal to the taxpayer, Mr. Chairman, which is what part of our obligation is, a very big part of our obligation. I know the hon. members opposite have always purported to be, you know, the protector of the taxpayer and talking about, you know, cutting back on expenditures. They've got a $5 billion capital plan, and they still haven't told Albertans how they're going to pay for it. The only way they'd be able to pay for it with cash is – well, they're not going to use cash. They said that they can't dip into the sustainability account because that changes the net financial losses. So they still haven't figured that one out, Mr. Chairman.

But now they're trying to tell Albertans and they're trying to tell the members that are in this gallery and the members of the AUPE that they are the bastions of saving, negotiating, arbitration, and of all things collective bargaining. Yet their own budget, the Wildrose financial recovery plan – it's not a budget, Mr. Chairman, because there are no actual financials in it.

But there are a lot of very interesting statements in this document about how they would freeze wages, how they would cut management levels by 50 per cent, how they would effectively say to public-sector employees that we're going to have to have a hiring freeze, that we're going to have to essentially hold the line on the public-sector salaries until the cash surplus is established. Well, Mr. Chairman, if you're spending $5 billion in cash every year on your $50 billion capital plan and you're not cutting anything in the public sector in terms of the services we're providing, they're never going to get to a cash balance.

Obviously, I guess they'd have to freeze salaries at zeroes indefinitely. I fail to see how the members that I've spoken to from the AUPE, given the fact that a zero, 1 per cent, lump, 1, and 1 is evidently not acceptable, are going to accept indefinite zeroes. And they're not going to have to legislate that? They're just going to say: "Okay. I guess we ran on that, but we're not going to actually do it." That is what they're telling us now.

Well, Mr. Chairman, you know, they're suggesting that we didn't run on this. Well, we didn't run on the fact that we were going to have a $6 billion revenue deficit in the bitumen bubble either. We didn't run on a lot of that. But to suggest that we ran on the fact that we were going to freeze your wages and that you would have accepted that and now to say, "Well, no, we wouldn't freeze the salaries if you didn't want us to" is a little bit disingenuous.

I guess what I'm suggesting is that the reason that this piece of legislation – and, as I said in my opening comments, I'm not superpleased that it's my duty to bring that piece of legislation to this House. But as the Finance minister and as a member of the government of Alberta and representing 4 million Albertans – and I know that all of the members of the union are taxpayers, too – it's my obligation to make some tough choices and to make some tough directions. That's what leadership is all about, Mr. Chairman. That's what we're doing here.

We want to sit down at the table with our public-sector employees. We want a negotiated agreement. We're asking for them to come back to the table. We'd like to see that happen. You know what? I'm a pretty innovative kind of guy, too. I would love to see us talk about things like what that B.C. agreement has in it. I think that would be kind of neat. But I'm not doing the negotiations, Mr. Chairman. I'm asking them to do the negotiations, and we would love to see an offer on the table.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you. It is a pleasure to be able to get up and speak, finally, fully on Bill 46 as this is my first opportunity to do that. Now, I will say this much about the comments that the Minister of Finance just made. With the greatest of respect to my colleagues in the Official Opposition, whose participation in some of the fight-back on these bills has been well received and much appreciated, I will say, nonetheless, that watching the Official Opposition and the government talk about who is best at representing union rights and ensuring fairness for public-sector workers is a bit like watching two really old dinosaurs that are stuck in the tar ponds sort of roaring at each other as they both kind of sink into the muck. I have to say that it's really quite entertaining – quite entertaining – watching it. Now, that being said, you may ultimately win the tar pit mud fight, but at the end of the day it is still a dinosaur-ridden tar pit mud fight.

You know, we talk about disingenuous statements, and let me just begin by saying first of all to the Minister of Finance: yeah, I'd love to see the B.C. kind of negotiation. But, of course, one of the things he forgets is that the BCGEU actually still has the right to strike. Okay? That's really fundamental. So you're right. They didn't have to go to binding arbitration because they have a right to strike. They haven't had their ILO-recognized, basic fundamental human rights ripped away from them like the public-sector workers in this province did decades ago. Let's just be very clear here. If that's what you're yearning for, there is a path for you, and the path is to fundamentally amend the Public Service Employee Relations Act. But I suspect that that's not really the path that you are yearning for.

[Ms Kennedy-Glans in the chair]

Let me go back to the whole issue of what is or what is not disingenuous. I have to say that when I hear folks from that side talk about how "we really want to bargain with AUPE; we just really want them to come back to the table," that is the most disingenuous statement I've ever seen. That's like, you know, a 72-year-old woman walking down the street carrying her groceries in one hand and her bag in the other hand, and three guys come up with a gun and say: "Jeez, we'd like to bargain with you about whether you're going to give us your wallet or not. Okay?" That's what you guys are doing. There is no bargaining when you've indicated that the trigger is going to be pulled January 30, and you know it, so stop saying it.

You know the courts are going to tell you that that's not genuine bargaining when, in fact, this gets in front of the courts, so stop saying it now. At least have the intellectual integrity to acknowledge what you've done. You have taken one of the three legs out from under that three-legged stool, and that stool is going to fall down now because, you know, they need to be able to join a union, they need to be able to bargain, and they need to have a means of resolving disputes if the bargaining goes south, and you have just taken that away. So it is not possible for them to bargain in good faith in this current environment. That is, in fact, the primary example of disingenuous debate in this House, even more so than the other debate that you've been raising some concerns about.

The minister says: well, you know, we ran on living within our means. Now, I'm just kind of curious because there are at least 15 promises that I could run through right now that you also ran on that, you know, you've broken. You ran on full-day kindergarten. You ran on eliminating child poverty in five years. You ran on respecting postsecondary education. You ran on enhancing the scholarship opportunities for university students living in rural and aboriginal communities.

Dr. Swann: Dealing with climate change.

Ms Notley: I don't actually think they ran on the environment. I kind of noticed all along that the Premier was steadfastly silent on the environment, so I thought to myself: whoa, if she's not even prepared to break that promise, wow, is she ever going to the other side on that one. I always knew that that was one that we were in big trouble over and in fact every single thing this government has done since this Premier has been elected has been just an outrageous attack on the integrity of the environment. Anyway, I digress.

The point is that there is a whole schvack of promises that this government made in the last election. So why pick this one out of the bag to keep? That is my question because you've broken all of the other ones. Now, that being said, it's not even that you're actually doing that – okay? – because you're not living within your means. You are creating a structural imbalance in terms of our revenue against our expenses because you fundamentally refuse to collect the revenue which the people of this province are entitled to.

You're so wrapped up in giveaways to your friends in the oil and gas industry, to your friends in the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers. I'm actually surprised that they're not sitting up there. Honestly, if I came here, Mr. Chair, one night to debate and I found a couple of CAPP execs just sort of sitting in for one of the cabinet ministers or two or three of the cabinet ministers, I wouldn't be surprised because, you know, they're kind of directing things anyway at this point.

Anyway, the point is that we're giving the farm away. We're doing it at the expense of all Albertans, and we're doing it at the expense of generations of Albertans to come. So, yes, we have a problem with respect to living within our means, but that is because this government is not interested in standing up for the rights of Albertans to establish our means and to build our means and to collect our means because our means are more than adequate. We just have a government that can't be bothered to collect them and give them to the people of the province, to whom they belong.

That's the issue with respect to living within our means. We don't really want to bargain because we've got a gun to their head. We're not really that interested in doing what we need to do to live within our means. We're not interested in bringing a progressive tax system. We're not interested in doing any of that kind good stuff. Instead, we're interested in keeping the members of AUPE to a deal of 0, 0, 1, and 1.

Now, let's talk a little bit about what that actually means for them. The survey of top employers by the Hay Group released in August included their predictions for what was going to happen with respect to Alberta wages in 2013 and 2014: a 3.6 per cent increase in 2013 and a 3.2 per cent increase in 2014. What did AUPE ask for? Three and three. Reasonable? Keeping up with inflation? Barely, actually. What did they get? Zero and zero. What is the context within which that is being offered to them? It's being offered in the context of them having taken roughly 4 per cent at a time when inflation increased at a greater rate, so they've already lost in real dollars in the previous round of bargaining.

That's what we're doing. We're taking money away from these workers, who this government said disingenuously, let me say, that they believed were heroes this summer, these public-sector workers who came out to work so hard on behalf of all Albertans and put in all those hours and rolled up their sleeves and gave up their time and put in overtime up the yingyang and just kept working until everything that needed to be done was done.

Those folks then, of course, got yelled at because they didn't put up the signs fast enough. That was funny because, you know, it's not enough to stop the floodwaters and to help people get settled in proper living conditions after the disaster. No, no. They need to put up 150 signs with pictures of the Premier on them, and if they haven't done that, well, then, they haven't done their job.

Anyway, that's what they did, and what we're going to do in return is that we are going to effectively reduce their real wages by about 3 per cent a year over the next four years, or 3 per cent, 3 per cent, 2 per cent, 2 per cent. As I said before, roughly a 10 per cent rollback is what this government is interested in doing with those folks. Now, they say: well, you know, other public-sector employees have also agreed to this. Well, we've already talked about the teachers. They didn't agree to it. They were forced into it much in the same way that AUPE is being forced into it.

The doctors. Let's just talk a minute about the doctors. Let's be clear. The doctors did not take 0, 0, and 0. I don't know what planet any minister over there is on if they're suggesting that the doctors took 0, 0, and 0. From what I can tell, they took something like 2.5, 2.5, COLA, and $68 million dollars, so I don't know. I'm not an accountant, Mr. Chair, but I'm pretty sure that does not amount to zero per cent. Given that that increase was applied to an average salary of $357,000 a year, I'm thinking they're doing okay. I'm thinking that saying that because doctors, who earn an average of $357,000 a year, got 2.5 per cent, 2.5 per cent, COLA, plus $68 million, somehow that means that people who put up those signs for the Premier after being yelled at a lot for not doing it fast enough are obliged to take 0, 0, and 0 on their average salary of roughly $55,000 a year is really quite disrespectful.

I know I feel like I'm overusing that word sometimes. It is frustrating to me, but I have to say that on behalf of not only the members of AUPE but average working folks in this province – because we know what the average wage is for most Albertans, the average and the median, and it's around about $65,000 a year. Those people are really quite offended by this government saying: hey, we only gave the doctors 2.5, and you know they were only hey, we only gave the doctors 2.5, and you know they were only making $350,000 a year, so you guys should also pull your weight.

It's just like when these MLAs all get together and say: "Hey, look at us. We're taking a wage freeze. You know, it's $160,000 a year. How will we ever make do for the next three years with our wage freeze? Look at us all joining together in solidarity." Well, you know what? It's just not the same, Mr. Chair, for us to take a wage freeze as it is for someone who's earning less than half of what we're earning or in some cases a third of what we're earning. The fact that these folks don't get that is yet just one more indication of how completely disconnected they are from the real world and the real lives of the vast majority of Albertans in this province. That doesn't mean that we're not a productive province, that people don't work very, very hard, that people don't all have jobs and they're not pleased with their jobs and they're not proud of their jobs and they're not happy to work more or to contribute more to their communities as volunteers and in all those great things.

But the fact of the matter is that the vast majority of Albertans do not live in the special little Tory world, where everybody makes somewhere between $150,000 and $350,000 a year. That's, like, 3 per cent of the population, Mr. Chair, and these guys have completely lost touch with that fact. So for them to say, "Well, we're all in this together" just kind of makes my stomach turn a little bit because they don't even understand what "in this together" looks like anymore. They're so out of touch with the majority of folks in our communities.

From 1993 to 2013 management wages in this province grew 52 per cent over inflation, professional and technical services in this province grew 44.2 per cent over inflation, but public administration salaries grew only 13 per cent over inflation. Clearly, again, the rich are getting richer, and the rest of us not so much. I won't say "the rest of us." I'm an MLA. I make $155,000 a year now. I'm not part of the rest of us anymore. The point is that we need to understand that and recognize that.

Now, I've mentioned before but I want to mention again because it is really, really important to me, Mr. Chair, that the vast majority of AUPE members are women. The wage gap in this province is the largest in the country, once again, just another example of how this Premier self-righteously talks about her so-called human rights record, yet one more example why we should all just roll our eyes, turn around, and walk away. It's, again, another incredible example of disingenuous posturing. You can't be interested in human rights and completely turn your back on the fact that in this province more than in any other province in the country the gap between what women earn and what men earn is growing every day.

Researchers will tell you that the reason why in most places, unlike this province, that gap has been closing is because of the role of the public-sector unions, whether it be direct government service or federal government or ancillary public-sector services. It doesn't matter. Public-sector unions are the single biggest reason why the wages women earn are starting to catch up to men's. But when you treat your public sector the way this government is treating their public sector, you make very sure that you are rolling up your sleeves and reversing that trend with tremendous intention. That's what this government is doing. It is a clear dismissal and rejection of the notion of equality, the kind of principle that would be protected under human rights, honoured by anybody who actually cared about human rights, which, as I have already said, I don't believe this Premier does. So that is another issue that we need to talk about.

I want to talk a little bit about the arbitration. We talked about how, of course, the Minister of Finance is, you know, not being completely open on the issue of the government's positioning around desiring to negotiate because we're compelling folks to negotiate with a gun to their head. The fact of the matter is that it's not AUPE that's somehow refused to work with them. Arbitration is one tool in their tool kit that's completely appropriate under the restricted labour relations regime that this government has put in place. It is completely appropriate for them at a certain point to go to arbitration. Indeed, the government had responded and in fact had responded with who they were going to be putting forth for that process and had agreed with the process and was moving forward and then pulled the rug out from underneath them, which, of course, raises the whole second reason why bargaining with the union is somewhat up in the air now: (a) you can't bargain with a gun to your head, and (b) you can't bargain with someone who clearly doesn't understand the concept of bargaining in good faith, which is the other problem with this government. They've not conducted themselves with good faith in this process with the union. Not at all.

Had they conducted themselves with good faith, which they did not, the arbitrator would've been looking at reviewing the salary proposals and discussions between the two parties under the Public Service Employee Relations Act. That act, under section 38, would have suggested that the arbitrator would have had to look at the wages and benefits in private and public and unionized and non-unionized employment in the sector, the continuity and stability of private and public employment, and the general economic conditions in Alberta.

Now, I've actually heard – and this is the other thing that I find so incredibly dishonest about the actions of the government and so disingenuous. We have the Deputy Premier, who has been out there complaining endlessly about how we don't have enough workers in this province, how the market has somehow shifted, and how poor employers can't possibly hire enough people in this province. Well, you know what, Mr. Chair? This is just another hypocrisy on these guys' part because, you see, when the market – these guys love the market. They're all about the free market, aren't they?

So when the market tells you that you're short of a certain product – and in this case the product is employees – well, that's the time for employees to use their ability to negotiate fair wages and benefits. And when the market is working against them – for instance, like in 2008 when we had a major slowdown in the economy or in the mid-80s or the early '90s – well, that's when government says: "Oh, we've all got to roll up our sleeves and get through this together. We have no money. You have no money, and we have no money, and that's just the way it is. That's what the market will say. People are just happy to have their jobs, and you should be so lucky to have your job. If we take 5 per cent away from you, that's just fine because we all know you're lucky to have your job. That's what the market says." Fine.

Well, here we are now, a few years later, and the market says something else. The market says that wages are going to go up at least 3 per cent a year. The market says that there is a shortage of employees. That's what the market says. Now, these guys can't fully take advantage of what the market would do because if they could, they could strike, and that's been taken away from them. What they can do is go to binding arbitration, where the arbitrator is compelled under the Public Service Employee Relations Act to look at what the market would bear. This government knows that had they done that, the arbitrator would have come up with a much more generous settlement than what these guys are proposing. So they decided: “You know what? We like the market until it doesn’t work for us . . .”

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I’ll recognize the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. On my first opportunity to speak in Committee of the Whole, I spoke on the bill itself earlier today. I haven’t changed my mind. I think it’s draconian and goes much further than necessary. People that support me in my riding really believe in the rule of law. I’m not sure that they’re necessarily fans of unions in general, but they certainly believe that contracts need to be honoured and we need to keep our word and that if you take one right away, you’ve got to balance it. They believe in fair play.

This gives me an opportunity to address some of the half-truths that were referred to earlier this evening by the hon. Minister of Treasury. I’d like now to be able to give you the rest of the story. If my hon. friend over here, who’s asked me to e-mail him these points, would like to pay attention now, then he will be able to hear the top 10 ways the Wildrose would balance the budget, contrary to the allegations and misrepresentations that characterize the other side.

Number 10, save millions right under the dome by reducing ministries, eliminating associate ministers, cutting Public Affairs in half, slashing political patronage posts, and postponing the fed building extras.

Save over $200 million by cutting grants to for-profit companies, some of whom have more money than God. Save $150 million a year by cancelling AOSTRA. Save $300 million by reducing the number of public-sector managers. Managers, not workers, not the people that are actually doing the job but the managers.

Number 6, sell the Alberta Enterprise Corporation, which is invested with roughly a hundred million.

Number 5, cut government promotional spending by $20 million.

Number 4, cut AHS executives’ travel and hosting expenses in half, saving $35 million. Whose business are they trying to get by entertaining? Tell me that.

Number 3, negotiate a better equalization deal, potentially getting billions more back from the feds.

Number 2, limit bonuses and severances for executives. Wouldn’t we all like to see that? Some results-based stuff.

And the number 1 way to save a billion is by stretching out the capital plan one year and bidding in a truly competitive way.

The Chair: Are there other speakers? The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. It’s a wonderful opportunity to be able to speak again to this really, really unfortunate piece of legislation. Cuts to services. We have a government that suggests that this is fair to their workers and that they are just, you know, holding the line and that everyone should just participate. But in addition to freezing and effectively reducing their real wages, what this bill is doing in concert is also cutting services and creating incredible chaos in the work environment of these AUPE staff.

Quite honestly, I just don’t know that I have seen more chaos in this government than I have seen over the last few months. Just for example, those poor workers who are engaged in some fashion with the services provided through Alberta Health Services. You know, I can’t even begin to imagine how they can do their job from one day to the next. Their boss changes every week, and their managers change every week, and their directives change every week. One day the minister is in charge, and the next day someone else is and it’s their fault, then the minister is in charge again, and then it’s someone else’s fault, and then the minister is in charge, and then it’s someone else’s fault. Clearly, they’re creating an incredibly, incredibly chaotic work environment for their staff.

Above and beyond slashing their wages effectively by not giving them even the basic cost-of-living increases that would allow them to maintain – just maintain – their current buying power and their current quality of life, they’re also making it worse because, of course, they are repeatedly playing around with and reorganizing and generally creating a huge amount of chaos within the government area itself. They just don’t listen to their employees, they don’t consult with their employees, and they are generally highly, highly disrespectful of them. So that is yet a whole other element. Now, I realize that’s not specifically addressed in this bill, but this bill needs to be seen in the context of this government’s constant reorganization and the cutting of public services in many respects.

For the moment, I am going to sit down and cede the floor to at least one member who I believe is interested in rising.

The Chair: Are there others? I’ll recognize the Member for Calgary-McCall, and then Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would also speak in opposition to Bill 46. Here’s the chronology of things. Government employees are under the Public Service Employee Relations Act, enacted in 1977, and that act prohibited government workers to go on strike, but they were given the right of arbitration. When negotiations failed, you know, there was mediation, and when the mediation didn’t work, then the government and the union both agreed to binding compulsory arbitration. Now the government is imposing this settlement, this offer they made, by bringing in Bill 46.

9:40

When negotiations with the province on a new contract reached an impasse, which resulted in AUPE applying for mediation, mediation took place on July 3 and 4, 2013, at which point the mediator determined the likelihood of resolution was remote and concluded the process. AUPE subsequently applied to the Labour Relations Board on July 15, requesting that a compulsory arbitration board be established. Bill 46 ends the arbitration board that was set up under the Public Service Employee Relations Act and will impose a four-year wage settlement on AUPE if it doesn’t return to the bargaining table and negotiate a new settlement by January 31.

The Finance minister has said that a new wage deal with AUPE, whether it is imposed or negotiated, must be in line with the multiyear wage freeze that Alberta doctors and teachers have already accepted. But, Mr. Chair, doctors have two years at 0 and 0, then they have 2 and a half, and 2 and a half, another $60 million dollars. The president of AUPE, Guy Smith, has aptly likened Bill 46 to having a gun held to your head. If a negotiated settlement cannot be reached, then the government will force one down their throats anyway.

Here the problem is good faith. The Minister of Finance was talking about B.C. unions having a contract settled with the government, but that was done in good faith. Here if the good faith comes back, you know, maybe there can be a negotiated settlement, Mr. Chair.

The AUPE represents 22,000 front-line workers in a variety of fields from correctional services to social workers. By taking their arbitration right away, Mr. Chair, I’m wondering what it will do to their morale, what it will do to their productivity. Here we were singing the praises of front-line workers when we had those floods, you know, how hard they worked, how they were heroes. Now I think that by taking the right to arbitration away from them, we are making them zeroes. This is not justified.

When in 1977 the right to strike was taken away, there was something given back in return, and that was the right to binding arbitration. The following are some of Minister Leitch's comments from the second reading of Bill 41, the Public Service Employee Relations Act, on May 10, 1977.

If they are not to have the right to strike, in fairness to them we must provide a system for resolving labor relations issues that is not only fair but is seen to be fair by them.

Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude by simply saying it is our intention to provide in Bill 41 the fairest possible labor relations system for the employees of Alberta short of providing them with the right to withdraw services or strike. In that I believe we have succeeded, and for that reason I believe Bill 41 warrants the support of the members of the Assembly.

So they were given that right, the workers, and the AUPE has not had to resort to arbitration in collective bargaining in over 30 years. This is the first time in 30 years that they went to arbitration, and the government is taking their right to arbitration away. That is the crux of the matter, Mr. Chair.

This bill is going to potentially impose a four-year wage settlement on AUPE members, which would be a clear violation of their Charter rights to bargain collectively. The government should consider that under the Charter, you know, that right will be lost, and if they fight it in the courts, it will cost lots of money. And that's taxpayers' money. That money belongs to the workers, too. The bill stands a reasonable chance of being declared unconstitutional since the government is claiming that its intent behind the bill is ensuring fiscal restraint. It should immediately abandon the bill instead of wasting taxpayer dollars fighting a Charter challenge.

In 1977, as I said, the government of Peter Lougheed took away the right of government employees to strike but wisely introduced binding arbitration as a fair substitute. Now with bills 45 and 46 the government is effectively taking away both, leaving AUPE with no options to resolve its bargaining issues. That will force, you know, bad working conditions on the employees if they have no way to settle those issues, Mr. Chairman. Bill 46 is the antithesis of bargaining in good faith.

In 2007 the Supreme Court of Canada determined that the right of workers to bargain collectively is protected by the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. That's plain in black and white, Mr. Chairman. The Supreme Court of Canada found that the Charter gives the same protection for collective bargaining as contained in international labour conventions that Canada has ratified.

Mr. Chairman, there are other reasons here. From now on a government that interferes in freely negotiated collective agreements and the collective bargaining rights of employees must justify their actions against the protection provided by the Charter of Rights.

This essentially is a high-stakes game of chicken, with public-sector workers standing to lose. Either they return to the bargaining table or have a wage settlement imposed on them. Either way they're going to lose.

Bills 45 and 46 are the beginning of the effective dismantling of collective bargaining in Alberta. For those reasons I will not be supporting Bill 46, Mr. Chairman. This is a bad piece of legislation, and it should be withdrawn right now.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I certainly appreciate the opportunity to say a few words about Bill 46. Certainly, this has dominated, I think, a lot of people's minds over the last week or so. I think that we've seen a lot of anger, but as time goes on, it really starts to sink in, just the whole implication of this bill and the idea of imposing through legislation a four-year wage contract for the 22,000 members of the AUPE but also, I think, setting a precedent for other contracts that are currently up for settlement.

What I was thinking about over the last day or so was that it's part of a larger problem, where this government does not manage the economic levers that it has at its disposal. These economic levers include the public service, to which they are directly employing these people, but also the larger economy, that tends to swing more wildly between boom and bust here in the province of Alberta than in other jurisdictions across Canada and throughout the world. When the boom-and-bust cycle rotates through this province, I think as part of the sort of poor economic management that this government provides, then it has a direct effect on the public service and the way by which the public service can live in this province and can afford to live with the wages that they get.

It's not as though the average person, in which I'm included, certainly, cannot see with their own two eyes exactly where our economy is going at this moment. We see growth in regard to economic growth in almost every quarter of the province – I haven't seen any place, really, that has been experiencing anything but growth – and quite rapid population growth, too, which also helps to feed the economy.

Members of AUPE and the public sector can see those factors in place, and they see it every time that they have to balance their monthly family budget as well. Presumably, we want to keep the same level of service and the same level of professionalism and reward that professionalism with a living wage here in the province. With the economy growing like it is, the population growing like it is, the level of professionalism, these four-year legislated levels of pay increase are absolute insults to the people who do the job. They know that it's wrong. Indeed, if this government would dare to take this to an arbitrator, that arbitrator would know it was wrong, too.

This whole mythology that's being written here in the province of Alberta since the last election of austerity and tightening the belt and everything like that flies in the face of every economic and population indicator that we could use to describe the economy of this province. The only measurement which is, in fact, a belt-tightening, austerity sort of thing is the fact that this government is not managing the revenue side of its responsibility as a Legislature here in the province of Alberta. So by not managing that revenue side, yes, I suppose, there is a money problem, but it's a money problem of collecting the resources that we would need to run the sort of society that we expect and, in fact, should provide for the people of Alberta: a place where we monitor the environment, a place where we run the parks properly, a place where we pay and run proper supports for trained professionals in our health care, the literally hundreds of different jobs that this Bill 46 casts a shadow over, Mr. Chair.

I just really want to remind this government of the responsibility they have not just to these wages over a couple of years and seeing what they can get away with using the heavy-handed choice of tool of legislation to do this but, rather, to remind yourselves about the larger responsibility you have as a government to contribute to civil society. Civil society is a tacit agreement between all of the residents and citizens of this province and the government to provide for the essential services of health care and education and roads and sustainable environment and an equitable justice system, literally everything. Yes, it's become more sophisticated; yes, it has grown. But I would venture to say, Mr. Chair, that it hasn't even really grown commensurate with the growth of our population and economy. Right?

These same people that we're now trying to put a wage cut onto – which is exactly what it is – in fact, are dealing with more people with less personnel on the ground to actually do the job. It's not like we've gone through a great hiring phase of the public service here since, you know, the last ice age here in this province. These same people that you want to put an ostensible wage decrease on are in fact doing more and more work for less money already.

There's always a breaking point. That tacit agreement, as I spoke about last night – you know, you're attracting people to the civil service with an idea that they do want to contribute, and they do make that choice to work in a people-oriented sort of environment because they do want to be citizens that do contribute. But you can only take advantage of that goodwill for so long. Once you blow that currency, Lord knows, try getting it back. Right?

At least we have the benefit of watching other places, other jurisdictions across Canada and around the world, to see just how bad things go, just how bad things break when you start to really snap that agreement between the civil service, civil society, and the government. Lots of places where corruption starts to creep in. Lots of places where, you know, in the absence of monitoring, people just start doing things on their own: industry without environmental protection, people building in places where they shouldn't, people running unlicensed health care and so forth. Right? We say, "Oh, well, that could never happen here," but it all starts with that break in that contract, that civil contract that you have between your workers and the government that is responsible for them.

You know, it's interesting how you write a story, but the story somehow gets tripped up by reality, right? Part of the story that this government is trying to spin is: well, the public workers don't want to negotiate; they won't come to the table and won't, you know, do this and do that. We know that that's not true, and we know that there were things set up for arbitration already, including dates for arbitration.

This is something that's taken place not just in the last couple of months or years or whatever, Mr. Chair. This is something that we've seen as part of the normal cycle of negotiation here in this province for the last 35 years, right? Just like the snows come in November and spring comes in April, every few years there's negotiation, followed by arbitration, followed by an agreement. Again, that's part of the tacit contract that we have set up since 1977 in this province for the 20-some thousand public service workers here. That's what they've come to expect, and suddenly that reality has been broken. That conventional wisdom is seeping down that somehow one side is not bargaining in good faith anymore.

Arbitration is not something to be afraid of. I certainly don't agree that, you know, these members should not have the right to strike. I think they should. I think that's an important thing to have available to you. But arbitration is eminently reasonable, right? It's a process that works so often. Even when you are doing negotiation without arbitration, really you're engaging in that same process based on good faith, based on trust, and based on some reasonable expectation down the middle. We always look for compromises, and the world and our lives are full of compromises. Certainly, negotiating a wage for 22,000 public service workers should involve compromise too, right?

We don't need to have this Bill 46. Again, I've sort of been filled with the spirit of the season here and encourage everyone else to do so as well. Put this aside for a short time. Let's just put it on ice. Soon we'll be all away from this Chamber and missing each other, but in that last sort of gesture of goodwill let's take Bill 46, put it away for a little while, come back to it, and see what happens when cooler heads prevail. I know that there are people that have been watching over the last couple of days here, and certainly I'm very, very proud of the many thousands of people they represent. It's sometimes boring to watch, but, you know, you have flashes of brilliance in between. Wouldn't that be the great moment for them to witness here today, that we all stand up and say: "Yes, let's put Bill 46 on ice. Let's just not beat up on employees here for the Christmas season. We can put it away, see what happens, and maybe people will feel differently in 2014."

You know what, Mr. Chair? The government will get a Christmas present out of that, too, because at this present time with this Bill 46 and this Bill 45 they're literally bleeding votes for the next election. Votes are slipping through their fingers like water and sand do on the beach. It's pouring out. If you could possibly give yourself a Christmas present, dear government, you would put these two bills on ice and you would staunch that flow. Cooler heads would prevail, and we'd all have a better society for it.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I would like to talk a little bit about where I left off talking before, which is the issue of bargaining and respecting the market, and you know, the "Don't just do as I say; do as I do" kind of thing. To these guys, as I said before, nothing is more valuable than the free market and the free operation of the free market.

It's not surprising, really, because for Conservative governments, whether they be this Conservative government and, quite frankly, many Liberal governments in other jurisdictions and federally, this is very typical. The minute the economy heats up, the minute workers are in a situation where they finally have some market influence, some control, some ability to assert their rights and take those major steps forward, then that is the time that you will see the government come in and suppress and eliminate the right of workers to use their bargaining power to actually improve their situation. It's very typical behaviour on the part of right-wing governments to whine about negative economic situations in an effort to suppress worker wages when the economic situation is not good and then to simply change the rules when the economic situation is to the benefit of workers. It's hardly surprising that that's the case, but that's what these guys are doing.

10:00

I want to talk a little bit about what the implications of that are because the fact of the matter is that the minister has suggested: oh, well, you know, we're only tearing up the Public Service Employee Relations Act and the protections for collective bargaining contained therein for this time because we all have to work together to deal with the tremendous financial strain that we're under as we have the extra billion dollars that we found in our sock under our bed after the first six months of the budget year.

They're all saying that, but the fact of the matter is this. What this government has done is they have truly through Bill 46 engaged in, very clearly, bad-faith bargaining. We've had this system that's been in place since PSERA was brought in and since the government ripped away the public-sector workers' right to strike and replaced it with binding arbitration. We've had this system in place. Now the government doesn't like the rules they have to play by, so they've just decided to write legislation to rewrite the rules. Classic schoolyard bully behaviour. Classic, classic schoolyard bully behaviour. That's what they've done.

What they don't seem to understand – and a couple of other members, both Calgary-Mountain View and Edmonton-Calder, have alluded to this outcome – is that they have fundamentally broken the trust with the people with whom they are bargaining. I don't know how they can ever possibly expect to have anybody come to the bargaining table with them again without those people anticipating that these guys will lie to them and bargain in bad faith and rip up the rules and rewrite the rules and just generally be the schoolyard bully. The fact of the matter is that anybody in any negotiations with this government from here on in has good reason to believe that they can't trust them in anything. They will not keep their word, they will not respect the bargaining process, and they're not at all interested in preserving their reputation of integrity.

That doesn't just apply to AUPE. Quite frankly, this actually will have a chilling effect in all different sectors. I mean, as much as the business community goes, "Oh, yeah; these are our guys; they'll always do what we want," the fact of the matter is that these guys had a set of rules. They sat down at the table. They started bargaining. They didn't like the outcome. They ripped up the rules. They used their ability to pass legislation. They created a new playing field. There's nothing to say that they won't do that to farmers. There's nothing to say that they won't do it to landowners – oh, wait; I guess they've kind of already done that – that they won't do it to people concerned about preserving the integrity of our environment, that they won't do it to nurses, that they won't do it to doctors, that they won't do it to children because, quite frankly, this is a government that doesn't believe in keeping its word about anything.

When they don't like the way things are unfolding, they'll just rip it up and pass a new piece of legislation to reset the playing field. Just reset it: "Nope. We're going to press reset. We're going to start this game over, and we're not going to let you guys play until halfway through it, and that's how we're going to play from here on in." Classic schoolyard bully behaviour. That's what these folks have done with this bill.

Mark my words. This does not just have implications for labour relations; it has implications for all bargaining, all negotiations, all representations, all complex issue management items out there where people need to know that they can trust the integrity of this government to manage their way out of a complicated situation. Now, I don't really care what's in the best interest of Christy Clark – she is not someone I have a tremendous amount of support for – but the fact of the matter is that if I were Christy Clark, I wouldn't be sitting down at the table with these folks. No, no, no. I would not. They have clearly proven that they cannot be trusted. Christy Clark shouldn't be sitting down with them or, you know, even their friends in New Brunswick. If I were them, I'd be a little bit worried because these guys will just change the rules.

They're not interested in keeping their word. They're not interested in acting with integrity because what they have done here is they have completely changed the rules of the game. There was a clear set of rules laid out in the public-sector employment relations act for how these matters were to be dealt with, and then when these guys didn't like it, they brought in this legislation, and they laid out section 4(1), nonapplication: "Division 2 of part 6 of the Public Service Employee Relations Act will not apply because we don't like it. We don't like the rules of this game anymore.

We're not going to win, so we need to change the rules." That's what they're doing.

What are the rules again, just to review? What would the arbitrator have been considering? Well, the arbitrator, as I said before, would have been considering

- (i) wages and benefits in private and public and unionized and non-unionized employment;
- (ii) the continuity and stability of private and public employment [in the province], including
  - (A) employment levels and incidence of layoffs [in the province]

Well, we know that that is not an issue right now.

- (B) the incidence of employment at less than normal working hours.

Well, I could have sworn that I've heard these guys crying crocodile tears over the fact that they can't find enough full-time nurses. Clearly, if anything, they have too many people working part-time, and they want more people working full-time.

- (C) opportunity for employment.

Well, of course, we've already talked about that fact. The fact of the matter is that we have a worker shortage. Then, of course,

- (iii) the general economic conditions in Alberta.

These are the things that the arbitrator would have considered. The government didn't like playing by those rules anymore.

Then they would have as well considered

- (i) the terms and conditions of employment in similar occupations outside the employer's employment, taking into account any geographic, industrial or other variations that the board considers relevant.

The arbitrator might have considered

- (ii) the need to maintain appropriate relationships in terms and conditions of employment between different classification levels within an occupation.

For instance, I'm pretty sure that the arbitrator would not have said: "You know what? I think it's a really good idea that we give the biggest wage freeze to the lowest earning group in the employ of this government." I'm pretty sure they would not have said: "You know what? Let's make sure there's a bigger gap between these groups of people." I'm pretty sure that's not what the arbitrator would have said. That's what these guys are doing, but that's not what the arbitrator would have said.

- (iii) the need to establish terms and conditions of employment that are fair and reasonable in relation to the qualifications required, the work performed, the responsibility assumed and the nature of the services rendered.

These are the kinds of things the arbitrator would have considered had Bill 46 not come along and change the rules of the game because little Johnny is starting to cry in the sandbox and wants to take his toys home. So little Johnny, or little Ali, decides to introduce Bill 46 and take her toys home.

This is really important because this really does lay out very, very clearly that the bargaining relationship, the employer-employee relationship, between this government and their staff will not ever be the same. They have fundamentally breached that trust with their employees. This is something that all Albertans will pay the cost of. When you break your promises, when you act unethically, when you bargain in bad faith, when you treat people unfairly, what ends up happening is that everything is impacted. These guys are acting like schoolyard bullies except, unfortunately, they're schoolyard bullies that have a huge amount of control over the everyday lives and working conditions of 24,000 Albertans – I think that's the group that's actually implicated in this particular bill – which is outrageous, of course. But that's what they do. They have that much power, and they have very, very, very clearly broken their trust with them.

I expect that you are going to see morale plummet within the public sector. I have heard from so many people. Obviously, I've heard from the people that have heroically showed up to demonstrate outside of this Legislature when it was, you know, minus 20 and blizzarding and blowing out yesterday. I've heard from those people. I've heard from the people that are here watching us debate. I've heard from people who have been watching us online, who've been tweeting and facebooking. But I've also heard from people who are not really even that involved in their union at all, people who otherwise, when I talk to them about their job, talk solely about: this is my job; I am committed to this public service, and this is what I like about my job, and this is what makes me feel good about my job. They don't happen to be union activists. It doesn't make them good or bad. Personally, I wish there were more union activists, but whatever.

The fact of the matter is that they're not talking about it within the context of being union members or not union members. They're talking about it within the context of being employees who thought they were doing good work, who thought they were respected, who thought that their education was valued and their contribution was valued, who thought that their efforts to do a better job every day, to work harder, to bring out better outcomes for Albertans, that those efforts were seen and valued by this government. I've heard from those people, too, and those people have told me that they are so angry. So angry. They cannot believe how profoundly betrayed they feel by a government that clearly doesn't care about them, that clearly is prepared to use them as tools, that clearly is not prepared to stand up and defend them.

We talked a little bit about living within our means, and I just wanted to speak again about the issue of progressive taxation because, you know, the first step in Alberta is to move Alberta back to a progressive tax system, used by every other province and the federal government. This government has gone on and on about how great the flat-tax system is, but it's interesting. It's been in place now for – I don't know – 15 to 20 years now, something like that. I have to do the math. No, closer to 15, I guess. Interestingly, it's such great thing, but no other province has replicated it. Why? Because it's an idiot idea. It's an idiot idea that ensures that the rich get richer and the poor get poorer.

Our flat-tax system means that people with average amounts of taxable income are paying more in taxes here in Alberta than people in B.C. do, than people in Ontario do, the two closest tax jurisdictions. So let's be very clear. The folks that are profiting off our flat-tax system are – well, let's see – everybody in this room. Just to be clear, all of us are profiting off the flat tax. Yay, me. I'm paying lower taxes than I would if I lived in B.C. or Ontario.

But let me say this: the members of AUPE, those hard-working public-sector workers, are paying more taxes in this province than they would if they lived in B.C. or Ontario. You know, as much as it's all great that I'm paying lower taxes, I don't think we should be governing for this little group here. I don't think we should be governing for the family. I think we should be governing for all Albertans. The majority of Albertans are not earning $150,000 a year or more. Quite the opposite. When that is the case, we find that they are actually paying more taxes than they do in other parts of the country.

Interestingly, if we were to actually contribute to the public good, if we were to pay our fair share of taxes, if we were to introduce a progressive tax system in this province, then there would actually be more money. There would be more money in our coffers. We would not have to, quote, unquote, live within our means by beating up on some of the lowest paid public-sector workers in this province. We would not have to do that. We would not have to break our promise to them. We would not have to breach constitutional law. We would not have to breach the International Labour Organization convention on human rights. We wouldn't have to do any of those horrible things. We could just give them a fair deal and improve our quality of life.

Mr. Kang: We would not have to borrow for our roads and bridges and schools.

Ms Notley: And we would not have to borrow for our roads and our bridges and schools. We might have to borrow a little bit over time, but there's no question that we would have more money to build our infrastructure, generally speaking, and we could grow a better province for everybody.

Someone in Alberta earning $70,000 a year pays $1,362 more in taxes than if they lived in B.C. and $947 more in taxes than if they lived in Ontario. However, someone from Alberta earning $1 million pays $41,000 less in provincial income tax than in B.C. and $82,000 less than if they lived in Ontario. Why is that, Mr. Chair?

Dr. Swann: That's the Alberta advantage.

Ms Notley: That's the Alberta advantage, the Alberta advantage for the really superwealthy. That is what we've got going on here.

If individual income in Alberta over $150,000 was taxed at, say, just hypothetically – I'm just throwing this out there; I'm not proposing it, but I'm just throwing it out there so that people understand the numbers – 14 per cent, Alberta would bring in an additional $700 million per year. Who knew? Now, I know that's chump change for these guys because you just found a billion dollars in your sock yesterday. However, that $700 million would also be worth while, and it would ensure that we had the money to pay the employees of this government fairly. This would affect just over 6 per cent of Albertans, who make over $150,000 per year. If we had the same top income bracket as Saskatchewan, which taxes all income over $123,000 at 15 per cent, we would bring in over $1 billion.

We could bring in even more if we had the same top income bracket as B.C., where high-income earners pay 14.7 per cent on everything they earn over $104,000. Interesting. So wealthy B.C. people are paying more income tax, yet apparently they expect their economy to grow more than we expect ours to grow because they're prepared to share the proceeds of that growth with their staff whereas we are not. Apparently, the sky doesn't fall when you ask the wealthy to pay their fair share. I guess that is the summary that I could come up with.

Alberta also has the lowest corporate income tax rate in Canada, at only 10 per cent. Many provinces, including Alberta, have been cutting corporate income taxes while cutting vital public programs at the same time, like, for instance, the attempt by this government to take $45 million away from people with developmental disabilities.

Alberta's corporate tax rate in the 1990s was 15.5 per cent, and in 2001 it was cut to 13.5, and then it was slowly cut to 10 per cent in 2006. If we were to increase our corporate tax rate to that used in Saskatchewan, at 12 per cent, we could bring in an additional billion dollars based on the $5 billion being generated by the existing 10 per cent rate.

Again, it gets to this whole issue of living within our means. This government seems to think that "means" means: if we're superrich, let's keep all our dollars to ourselves, and that's our means. So our means are that everybody keeps their dollars in their back pocket. They don't contribute to community. They don't contribute to well-funded, well-staffed long-term care centres. They don't contribute to more hospitals. They don't contribute to more schools. They don't contribute.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, for another opportunity to, I guess, raise the fundamental questions about a bill that on the face of it is so clearly antidemocratic, anti human rights, against the very values that Canadians have stood for for decades. It, unfortunately, sends a message to our vital civil servants, the people that we work with every day in our offices, in our communities, who take care of our families, take care of the most vulnerable people in our society, ensure that we have stability in our roads, enforcement of rules, basically ensure that there is security around us every hour of every day, stand up in emergencies, care for the most vulnerable, volunteer because of the great willingness and desire to return a contribution to the public. We seem to be slapping them in the face both with Bill 45 and with Bill 46, which is not bargaining in good faith.

This is fundamentally a violation of the concept of bargaining in good faith. How anybody, any government can believe that they're going to make progress with this bill is beyond my understanding. This is a mature civilization. Communications are readily available. People understand human rights. They understand the role of unions and the rule of law and the role of government. You cannot slip this by without paying a price, and it appears that you're willing to do that for short-term financial gain.

Well, many of us can see the longer term. This is not only going to diminish your role in this province. You're going to diminish democratic values, democratic engagement, and public trust indefinitely, and frankly you're threatening your own possibility of re-election. Do you think people are going to forget this most fundamental threat to democratic rights, human rights, labour rights? Absolutely not. This is going to be on the lips, in the media, in the signs, in the workers' activity in the next campaign. You're going to pay a price for this.

The bill will be challenged as unconstitutional. It's been challenged three times nationally, and the Supreme Court has upheld the right to collective bargaining. Why would you push this when it's going to be so costly in human terms as well as financial terms? I would like each of you to step up and say that you will pay out of your pocket if this goes to a court challenge. That would demonstrate to me that you really believe what you're doing, but of course you won't. You'll let the public purse pay for your malfeasance.

Mr. Chairman, this is irresponsible governance, and surely Albertans will hold you accountable. If they can't hold you accountable financially, you will be held accountable politically. I recommend and I adjure you and I ask you seriously to withdraw this bill and the waste of taxpayer dollars fighting the Charter challenge that will result.

In 2007 the Supreme Court of Canada determined the right of workers to bargain collectively. It's under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Why would you take this step that violates not only your own commitment to uphold the laws of Canada – and this is a government that says that they will uphold the laws of Canada and that they will fine people who don't uphold the laws of Canada. Here they are violating one of the fundamentals of our society. The Supreme Court found that the Charter gives the same protection as contained in the international labour conventions that Canada has already ratified.

To quote from the Canadian Union of Public Employees' national treasurer: "From now on, governments that interfere with freely negotiated collective agreements and the collective bargaining rights... must justify their actions against the protection provided by the Charter of Rights." That was a Supreme Court decision in 2007.

This is essentially, Mr. Chair, a high-stakes game of chicken, with public-sector workers standing to lose whether they return to the bargaining table or they have a wage settlement imposed on them. This is the beginning of, effectively, dismantling collective bargaining in Alberta and dismantling good will, dismantling trust and the notion of bargaining in good faith. This cannot benefit you. It cannot benefit Albertans. It certainly will not benefit our relationships with unionized folks.

Mr. Chair, I think it's very clear that in spite of our best efforts this government is not willing to listen to logic. They're not willing to listen to human rights legislation. They're not willing to listen to public opinion. They are doing this because they can. They have the power of a majority to do whatever they wish.

What they don't seem to have is the common sense to realize what a negative impact this is going to have on all of us, including the respect for government and the respect for the rule of law, which they say they want to uphold. It's a serious miscalculation and a double standard. This party on the other side wants to multiply the penalties for illegal action of unions, yet they're abusing their own power to now violate a fundamental commitment to free and fair negotiations with our unions.

The Minister of Finance says: oh, this is only one union. Well, of course, nobody believes that. If you can do it with this union, why wouldn't you do it with the next? Are we going to see a bill in this House every three months, every six months addressing an uncomfortable relationship with a union? This is an unnecessary and dangerous precedent that I think you should feel uncomfortable about. You should be willing to step back and say: in the interests of democracy, in the interests of responsible governance, we see the error in pushing this through, not only pushing it through with closure but pushing it through against the will of most Albertans. If we gave this some time, I think you'd recognize that Albertans don't support this kind of heavy-handed, circuitous management of a negotiation that doesn't seem to be going your way.

My comments are finished, Mr. Chair. I await the common sense and willingness to review, revise, and reconsider this what is a very profound shift, one that will be recognized for years by Albertans and certainly by the union members in this province, including many of the people in this building.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. In an effort to leave no stone unturned, I just wanted to look more specifically at the features of Bill 46, of course the most egregious and obvious being section 2, which has the zeroes and the 1 per cents in year 3 and year 4. Of course, if we look at the cost-of-living index for the province of Alberta over the last five years or so, these are definitely adding up to, effectively, paid rollbacks and decreases, quite significant ones, in fact.

But the other side of this very small bill, really, is this lump-sum payment business. It talks about a lump-sum payment to the tune of $875 but goes to great lengths to describe the exclusions, the people that will not receive that lump-sum payment. It's interesting. As we go through these exclusions, I think you, Mr. Chair, will see a pattern of who exactly is being targeted here. It gives us, I guess, a glimpse as well as to the larger picture of the composition of our public service and the people that will be negatively affected here, right?

The lump-sum payment in section 3 excludes people on leave of absence and receiving workers' compensation benefits, people on leave of absence for long-term disability, including as well parental and adoption leave and maternity leave. I mean, you can see certainly, again, the large composition of women in the public service – right? – that are, of course, performing very essential familial duties in our society. In their absence we cease to exist as a society if we don't have children and look after those children. They are excluded by Bill 46 from getting their $875, which is taxable, of course. I find that, again, to be regressive and small, reductive as well.

The lump-sum payment, finally, is not subject to the deduction and remittance of union dues under the article of the master agreement. Again, just that little dig always, if possible, to attack the very structure of the unions as well.

This is a section in this bill that has not been identified here so far, and I just wanted to bring it up, again, a sort of parsing and very surgical cutting of people from the lump-sum provision in Bill 46, and I don't think anybody wins from that, really.

It's interesting when we talk about broken promises and so forth. I think that this PC government quite rightfully reached out quite aggressively to public-service workers during the last election because they recognized that there were a lot of people there – right? – a lot of people that are over the age of 18 and can vote and so forth. During the last election they made great efforts to bring people over to vote for the PCs, yet now, suddenly, a few short months later, this is slapped right back at those same people, and they're forced to take a rollback in their wages.

I understand, in some fundamental way, what the Finance minister is trying to articulate. I know he's at heart a good person who believes in what he's doing. The fundamental belief that he ascribes to here, which I think is fair, is that he has to try to balance the books somehow. When we start to look at where we manage our finances, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona started to point out here in her speech, when we balance the books, we have to make sure that we look at both our expenses and our revenues. It's very important at this juncture because these 24,000 or so public-service workers are certainly looking at this very clearly and can see the writing on the wall, so this government must do it, too. We must examine how we can receive fair royalties for our energy and other natural resources so that we can have a revised royalty framework that could go towards investing in the infrastructure we need for our growing population and to save for future generations as well.

I would venture to say, Mr. Chair, that we could do both and that the most important investment in infrastructure is in the people who populate our public service and make the literally thousands of different jobs, essential services, function properly here in the province. Everything from, as I say, park wardens to emergency responders to firefighters, forest firefighters, to people that work in the various ministries. Let's not forget that the people that you are targeting with Bill 46 are the very people that actually do the work for you in your ministries. It must be a little bit uncomfortable. They might nod their heads, turn their gazes away, but they know that they're getting the short stick from Bill 46 as much as anybody else is.

This whole notion of sacrifice and, "Oh, yeah, the people who I talk to are okay with it," well, you know, I don't think so. We all love to do our jobs, but you have to balance your family budget, too. Don't expect or think that people are happy with having to balance the budget of the provincial economy on the backs of civil service workers' wages. That's ridiculous. If you add up the numbers, the amount of money that we might save from 0, 0, 1, and 1 is nothing compared to the damage that you will do over the course of the next four years by imposing such draconian, arbitrarily legislated legislation that determines wages. Right?

People only do that, Mr. Chair, when they are in an economic crisis. Right? This government has manufactured an economic crisis. If you look at the total assets and actual income and the money that flows through the economy of the province of Alberta, this economic problem is almost entirely stemming from this very building and the adjacent buildings and ministries around here in Edmonton. It's got very little to do with the actual economy and very little to do with what is actually happening. To bring that back to the public service and try to pin that on their backs, to pin Bill 46 on them, is very, very callous and short sighted. As I say, the money that you might save from bringing forth the 0, 0, 1, and 1 will certainly be far outstripped by the damage, both economic and otherwise, from the bad will that you will create from this whole thing.

By making changes to Alberta's personal and corporate income taxes, this provincial government could bring in an additional $2 billion per year and still be the lowest tax jurisdiction in the entire country. This would allow Alberta to invest in all the policy solutions for a real, for example, poverty reduction strategy presented in this report and with additional funds to invest in other important public services. The public services that we put on our platforms, the ones that we speak about in such glowing terms and such broad strokes, mean absolutely nothing if you don't have the people to actually carry out those things. Everything from child services to seniors' care to the various ministries and the environment: all of those things have absolutely no value unless you have professionals that are responsible for them. While we might be responsible in some macro way in this House, it's the people in the boots on the ground that actually get those jobs done.

We love to talk about the flood. We like to talk about all of the good work that we do around emergencies here in this province, and certainly it was a great moment in time. Something that we'll remember for the rest of our lives. But if you go and turn around and three or four months later cut the wages of the same people that you were lauding a few short months ago, well, you know, those tin medals and salutations with "good job," a slap on the back, and that sort of thing don't pay for the groceries, don't pay for the high cost of living here in this province.

Mr. Chairman, I certainly would like to see Bill 46 go. As I said before, it's not as though we are obliged to any of these things. It's not as though anybody is gaining any real currency from Bill 46. It's more like it came crashing through these doors and has just caused a great deal of ill will. When you have something like that, you have to evaluate it dispassionately, and I think the dispassionate, logical solution is to simply take a pause on both Bill 45 and Bill 46. We would all be the better for it. You know, we really don't need that kind of thing to move into these next two years. Right? There are too many important issues to deal with. We need to know that the civil service is stable.

Quite frankly, although it's not mentioned in here specifically – right? – this has a lot to do with nurses, too. It's like dominos. I know that you guys are playing a power game here with bringing up the teachers and the illusion that you gave them a contract that they all happily agreed to and couldn't wait to sign on the dotted line.

I mean, that's anything but the truth, right? You'd played with the goodwill that you have with teachers. I saw that happen before when I was a teacher as well. They said: well, you can all take a 5 per cent cut, and it's for the children. Well, yeah. For sure it's for the children. As if. It's because the government mismanaged the economy so badly in the easiest place to manage the economy in the entire world that suddenly now, you know, teachers have to . . . [interjection] Yeah. The same grade 8s that I was teaching at the time could have managed the economy better, I'm sure. We're going to cut these teachers unless you take a 5 per cent cut.

Well, you know, I mean, you're playing off that goodwill, that sense of looking after the children. The same thing happens with Bill 46. People say: "Well, I work in this nursing home; I've got to look after these people. If we don't take a wage cut, then perhaps these seniors aren't going to get the thing that they need, right?" Playing off that goodwill doesn't last you long, and certainly the narrative of cuts and the necessity of cuts over these last number of months is entirely unnecessary.

I think that whenever we open labour law and labour legislation, you have to be very, very careful because there are so many unintended consequences that can take place, and we know that, in fact, a stable labour environment, with a good portion of people belonging to a union, actually helps to stabilize an economy over time. Here in this province more than 300,000 Albertans are in a union, and really all of the economic drivers of this economy, many of them, most of them, are in fact unionized. If they are not, then they are setting the standard by which the other industries reflect their wages.

Say, for example, Suncor, which is unionized, casts a very positive shadow over Fort McMurray and area and sets a level for wages that helps people in Fort McMurray enjoy some of the highest salaries that you will find anywhere in North America, right? Shaw, Telus, ATCO, Enmax do the same thing for their respective industries, and in fact you find, if you take that same model and compare it to other jurisdictions, that with a higher unionized population you'll end up with a much more stable and more diverse economy.

Let's not forget that if you take 24,000 union members and you're going to cut their wages here, what cities, what places, does that affect most? Edmonton, right? This is an attack on Edmonton. Edmonton has more civil service workers than other places. It's an attack on Edmonton's economy. It's an attack on Lethbridge's economy. It's an attack on the stable jobs in smaller centres that those local economies depend on, too. If you chose to do that – maybe it's unintended. I mean, I'm just telling you to help you guys. I want to help you out. You don't want to have unintended consequences. I know that sometimes in your brash sort of sweep of dominance you miss some of these things that can help you out in the end.

When you take that money out of the economy – that's what you do with 0, 0, 1, and 1 – it means that in Edmonton here there will be many tens of thousands of public service workers that will move down the slippery slope from middle class to lower middle class and so forth. They'll buy fewer things. They will, you know, go to fewer hockey games, buy fewer cars, and so forth.

Ms Notley: Well, I don't think they're going to too many hockey games.

Mr. Eggen: Well, I'm talking about junior hockey games, you know, modest hockey games. I hear that you can go to those other games if you mortgage your house to buy tickets. Right?

Ms Notley: Yes. Oh, yeah. Give all your money to them.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Exactly.

In conclusion, Mr. Chair, it's not as though we should try to create these class barriers and suggest that people who choose to unionize and build those structures to help protect themselves, not just for wages but for working conditions, for environmental conditions, and a whole range of benefits that organized labour has given us, not just now but throughout the entire history of the industrialized Western world – it's not as though you have to butt up against that and suggest that it's a liability. That's a simplistic way of looking at a society to try and somehow create winners and losers, enemies somehow, to make excuses for making decisions to move resources, including money and power, to a certain group that might be your friends. All people, in a unionized environment or not, outside, are all citizens anyway, and they all contribute. They all come from a wide part of the political spectrum. Don't think, you know: well, let's punish these people because they're all left-wing people anyway. I mean, Lord knows you have voters from every single party in the AUPE, so don't just look at them as though they're some kind of . . .

Ms Notley: I don't know how many voters for the Tories are in AUPE.

Mr. Eggen: Well, suddenly, yeah, the whole thing is all mixed up. But, I mean, that idea of simplistic analysis like that just doesn't work, right? So let's not punish the people that pave our roads. Let's not punish the people that look after our parks, that look after our children – right? – and our seniors. Let's not shortchange the centres of civil . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but pursuant to Government Motion 53 the time for debate on this elapsed, and I will now put the question.

[The clauses of Bill 46 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed?

Some Hon. Members: No.

[The voice vote indicated that the request to report Bill 46 carried]

[Request to report Bill 46 carried]

Bill 28 Modernizing Regional Governance Act

The Chair: Amendment A1 is on the floor.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is indeed a pleasure to rise tonight and speak to this bill once more but this time in a much more positive tone. The last time we were in this Assembly debating it, I think it might be an understatement to say that my Wildrose colleagues and I had a few problems with the bill in its original form.

On that note, I do want to say thank you to the government for listening to us and, more importantly, listening to the local decision-makers that saw all kinds of problems with the original Bill 28. These are the folks that must be consulted first and foremost in decisions regarding municipalities and their governance. After all, the locally elected officials are the second level of government in this province, and the people on the ground like them know what's best for their respective communities better than any of us here in Edmonton do.

A consultation process with local officials is very important. Consultation is a vital step in the legislative process, and it is one that the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties have long asked for from this government. Principle 6 of the AUMA's 2009 policy statement on municipal governance is: "Amendments and changes to legislation and regulations relating to municipal governments shall only proceed when AUMA has actively participated and agreed, through meaningful input in a review process." This government must ensure that it continues to respect these major institutions, which represent elected municipal governments in Alberta.

The Wildrose Party fought hard to be the voice for municipalities and to listen to the feedback that we were getting from stakeholders. I'm pleased that this feedback was heard by the minister and then incorporated into the amendments. It will now be up to the participating municipalities to agree to a growth board structure they can live with. The key here is that participation in such boards is voluntary, which, by the way, was a word put forward by the people on this side of the Assembly. This means that the local officials will be empowered to put forward their own governance structures and make sure that a certain structure makes sense for their respective communities. The powers of the board, the exit terms, and the voting model will be decided by the bylaws, and the municipalities can choose to join or not.

With this bill going forward in its current form, I would be interested to know what the government's plan is regarding the funding model for these boards. Will the establishment of large boards result in less money for collaboration in other parts of the province? The implications of putting Bill 28 into effect raise questions of how the funding balance will shape out to be. So there are concerns that remain for me about funding, housing density requirements, and certain governance models that are not specifically addressed in the recent amendments except by assuming that they won't be onerous because the boards will now be voluntary. Depending on what the municipal leadership at the time of founding agrees to, the penalties or other conditions might make leaving a reasonable partnership too burdensome and leave a municipality at the mercy of its neighbours on these issues if it remains in a legislative lack of clarity. I hope these are the types of questions we can start to answer going forward.

Overall, I'm happy that strategic planning for municipalities has taken another step forward. I'm particularly happy that this can be accomplished through continued consultation and the voluntary nature of co-operation between municipalities.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Are there others speaking to Amendment A1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Well, you know, like the previous speaker, of course, we, too, in our caucus want to take some credit for this government's decision to put the brakes on and do a little bit of consultation. I do recall that, in fact, the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview raised this issue in the public through discussions with the media about some of the rather significant components of this bill that had not been discussed with anybody else.

While I appreciate that the minister has brought in this amendment, it is, unfortunately, a bit of an example of how this government operates, that they would think to bring in something like this, so substantial, without first consulting with organizations like the AUMA and AAMD and C and the others. It is part and parcel, as I've said before, of a government that's been around so long that they kind of think they're God, so they don't really feel that they need to actually sit and talk to anybody about what they're doing. That being said, though, I mean, obviously, they did go back and consult. There's no question, we've been advised at this point by our parties, that most people are relatively satisfied with this amendment, and they see it as having addressed some of the concerns that they raised, so that is a good thing.

There are a couple of pieces that we'd like to see improved slightly that we will bring forward in our own amendment. I believe the Member for Edmonton-Calder will be bringing that motion forward on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview once this particular amendment is completed. However, I just wanted to say that we were pleased to have been able to play a leadership role in compelling this government to actually consult with their partners in the municipal sector before bringing in such heavy-handed legislation without first speaking to them. I feel that we were successful in doing our job as the opposition and leading the discussion in that regard.

I'm pleased that the minister has managed to rebuild some of those relationships and indeed come up with a plan that represents what I understand, as I said, to be a consensus, one amongst municipalities.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to stand and speak to Bill 28, Modernizing Regional Governance Act. The bill has been renamed the Enabling Regional Growth Boards Act.

Further to the amendments proposed below in the outcome of the bill section, participation in any future growth management boards will now be voluntary. This is obviously progress given the rather violent reaction we saw among the municipalities based on the first iteration of this.

I think all members of the opposition were assailed by concerns from our colleagues in the municipalities regarding the rather heavy-handed and poorly planned initiation of this, which on the face of it has a lot of credibility. Clearly, we need to plan on a regional basis. It's long past the time when we can expect individual municipalities to do what is, essentially, a land-use plan and is needed within the loci of major urban centres. Obviously, as clear as that is the need to ensure voluntary involvement and proper consultation, with a minimum, I guess, of heavy-handed enforcement that this government initially communicated largely due to the lack of consultation, in which they would have heard and respected some of the important local autonomy and important roles of these independently elected and equal-status governments to ours at the provincial level.

11:00

The government has now amended the enforcement provisions to ensure that penalties are focused on organizations rather than individuals and on fines rather than imprisonment, a shocking omission in the first iteration. It's now also amended the bill to require management boards to develop and implement their own appeal process, again eminently sensible. We support, of course, regional planning, and we also do not believe that regional plans need to be legislated at the provincial level. These are all sensible new provisions that I think will probably enable most of us to support this next iteration, subject to more consultation with the councils of the municipalities.

We definitely want to see growth management boards incorporated into the Municipal Government Act. We're looking to support an ongoing process in which there is meaningful dialogue, integration of a land-use planning framework, a responsible and respectful relationship between the provincial Municipal Affairs department and the municipalities. Certainly, a softening of some of those penalty clauses that were in the initial iteration I think is going to go a long way in building appropriate relationships with our municipal governments.

The destruction of some of the earlier municipal planning councils under Mr. Klein left a tremendous void in terms of our ability to plan regionally for transportation, conservation, recreation, water management, and adequate constructive relationships between the major municipalities and the surrounding areas. It is continuing to be a problem for all of us as we see environmental impacts and inefficient transportation corridors and conflicts resulting. I would hope that we can get full buy-in from the municipal governments across the board and that we will not see the kind of destructive relationships that have been resulting in a stalemate in both the Calgary regions and the Edmonton regions as a result of this innovation and changes to this act.

So, Mr. Chair, I'm pleased to offer my support to this bill subject to the approval by the councils in this province, but from my point of view it goes a long way to extending the appropriate balance between provincial and municipal governments and the need for action at the regional level surrounding some of the major municipalities.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.
Are there others?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: The question has been called. Hon. members, it was agreed when this amendment was introduced that the vote would be on each segment, as in A1A, A1B, A1C, and so on. So I will be calling the vote in that manner.

[Motion on amendment A1A carried]

[Motion on amendment A1B carried]

[Motion on amendment A1C carried]

[Motion on amendment A1D carried]

[The remaining clauses of Bill 28 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd move that the committee now rise and report bills 45, 46, and 28.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 45, Bill 46. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 28. Mr. Speaker, I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you hon. member.
Does the Assembly concur in the report? Agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Motions

Adjournment of Fall Session

41. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 3(9) the 2013 fall sitting of the Assembly shall stand adjourned upon the Government House Leader advising the Assembly that the business for the sitting is concluded.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, this motion is not debatable.

[Government Motion 41 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Select Special Ethics Commissioner Search Committee

55. Mr. Hancock moved:
Be it resolved that:

- (1) A Select Special Ethics Commissioner Search Committee of the Legislative Assembly be appointed consisting of the following members, namely Mr. Rogers, chair; Mr. Quadri, deputy chair; Ms. Blake-man; Mr. Eggen; Mr. Goudreau; Mr. Lemke; Mrs. Leskiw; Mr. McDonald; and Mr. Saskiw, for the purpose of inviting applications for the position of Ethics Commissioner and to recommend to the Assembly the applicant it considers most suitable to this position.
- (2) Reasonable disbursements by the committee for advertising, staff assistance, equipment and supplies, rent, travel, and other expenditures necessary for the effective conduct of its responsibilities shall be paid, subject to the approval of the chair.
- (3) In carrying out its responsibilities, the committee may with the concurrence of the head of the department utilize the services of members of the public service employed in that department and of the staff employed by the Assembly.
- (4) The committee may without leave of the Assembly sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued and may continue performing its work in a subsequent session of the Assembly.
- (5) When its work has been completed, the committee shall report to the Assembly if it is sitting, but during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued, the committee may release its report by depositing a copy with the Clerk and forwarding a copy to each member of the Assembly.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Ethics Commissioner has advised the standing committee of his intention to not seek renewal but agreed to stay on for six months while the search is conducted, it's necessary for the House to set up a select special Ethics Commissioner search committee.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.
Hon. members, this motion is debatable. I recognize the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll just be very brief. I think what's important when you have important committees like this, particularly with the appointment of an Ethics Commissioner, is that you have proper representation from the respective parties. If you look at the number here, the proportions of caucus, we have 17 members on this side, yet we're only having one representative on this particular committee. It seems from the outset that this government is stacking the committee with members of their political party. That has no congruence with the proportion of representation in this Assembly. I'd just ask the Government House Leader why he wouldn't compose these committees based on some type of proportion instead of just stacking it one way.

The second point I'd make is that on committees like this it would be a nice change to have either the chair or the deputy chair be from the opposition. Obviously, there's a majority on the committee that belongs to the governing party, so why not have some type of balance on the chair positions? It just seems that they're stacking it right off the bat.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, I really want to thank the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills for raising that point because it was one that occurred to me as well when I looked at that.

You know, Mr. Speaker, we have not had a particularly stellar history in the last little while with respect to some of our officers and with respect to the level of confidence enjoyed by those officers from certain members of this House. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, please.

Ms Notley: The fact of the matter is that part of the reason for that problem, the problem that originated all along, is that we have the situation where we have a gross majority of government members on one side of the House on a particular committee, and then they tend to vote as a bloc.

Now, I will say that I've been involved in some selection processes. In the last term, from 2008-2012, I sat in on the selection of all officers. There were a couple of them where I believed that we absolutely reached the best decision. We worked collaboratively, and there were some very good choices. Those officers, you know, are without reproach. But it has not been smooth sailing, and I don't think I am coming up with anything that people in this House are not aware of.

If we wanted to move forward in a more effective way, we would have more balance on this committee. I think that the failure of the government to suggest or to include more balance on this committee is just setting the table for additional problems in the future, Mr. Speaker. It's unfortunate. It is just not the best move forward. This particular position is one that governs the conduct of all members of this House, yet the proportion of people that will be involved in the selection is weighted in a way that is not reflective of our numbers for government members of the House. As it is, the fact of the matter is that government members of this House and particularly members of Executive Council are the ones whose conduct must be subjected to the greatest amount of scrutiny under our conflict legislation because they are the ones who have the greatest authority and exercise the greatest power. It is unfortunate, then, that we don't have more balance in terms of this committee.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a few comments here. First off, I'm not sure which officer of the Legislature the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was speaking negatively about. I wish she would have mentioned.

Interestingly enough, though, the comment I wanted to make to you, Mr. Speaker, is that this committee would have six government members on it and three opposition members. This is the same composition as the select committee to choose the Chief Electoral Officer, and we received a lot of positive comments about that from both sides of the House, but it's the same composition. I'm at an absolute loss as to why we're now getting negative things on the same one.

Ms Notley: Get over it.

Mr. Denis: I keep getting heckled here by Edmonton-Strathcona, but I'm going to keep talking.

What is perhaps most poignant to me at this late hour, Mr. Speaker, is that if you look at the composition of this House, 32 per cent of this House is comprised of members of various opposition parties. Interestingly enough, six government members and three opposition members would give a 33 per cent composition of opposition members on this committee. Almost exactly equal to the composition of this House is the number of opposition members on this particular committee. So I'm at a loss as to what the complaint is from either of the last two speakers.

I will be voting in favour of this motion, and I hope to see at least one member of the opposition vote in favour given the actual equity we have on this committee. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess I have a question for the Justice minister. The question is: don't you think that on some of these committees a good way to do things would be actually to have either the chair or the deputy chair be a member of the opposition, just to provide a little bit of balance in this process? Just a suggestion.

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, we already do have balance. As I mentioned, 32 per cent of this House are opposition members, and 33 per cent of this committee are opposition members. The question that I have, though, is: if the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills were the chair of the committee, would that not give him less power? As the chair you're only allowed to vote under the standing orders in the event that there is an actual tie. This member, in effect, is arguing for less representation from the opposition, which just bewilders me.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess, you know, that if the Justice minister is offering that the chair of this committee be provided to the opposition, we'd gladly take it. If you're putting forward an amendment that would allow an opposition member to be the chair, we'd most welcome that.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others under 29(2)(a)?
Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Government Motion 55 carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 42

Securities Amendment Act, 2013

[Adjourned debate December 2: Mr. Horner]

The Deputy Speaker: Any speakers? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to rise today to speak to Bill 42. Of course, unlike other jurisdictions, jurisdiction over securities in Canada is done through the provinces, and this allows the provinces to react as needed to special situations that arise in provincial capital markets.

Capital markets are international, and provinces can't go to the international stage to negotiate common rules and regulations concerning investments and, in this case, specifically derivatives. This means provinces have a responsibility to move quickly to implement these international standards when they are negotiated by our federal counterparts and work well for our provincial capital markets.

In 2009 the leaders of the G-20 committed to a comprehensive reform agenda dealing with the systematic risk in the international derivatives market. These commitments are being turned into regulations established collaboratively with all provincial security regulators across the country through the Canadian Securities Administrators. Bill 42 will grant the authority to the Alberta Securities Commission, the ASC, to implement these new CSA regulations when they are finalized.

This is a perfect example of how the Canadian system of provincial jurisdiction over security regulations can work in the international marketplace. Bill 42 will allow the ASC to appoint trade repositories. This is a much-needed measure, Mr. Speaker. Now over-the-counter derivatives will be reported to trade repositories, thereby eliminating systematic risk. No longer will corporations be able to hide through their vicarious financial positions created by different contracts. Bill 42 also updates definitions regarding derivatives, which, of course, change quite regularly over time. The use of the term "exchange contract" deals with some of the complexity of the modern-day derivatives.

Mr. Speaker, we look forward to debating this bill in Committee of the Whole, potentially putting forward amendments. At this stage we're cautiously optimistic about the intent of this bill, and we look forward to debating it further.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a bill where, in terms of what it does, we too are cautiously optimistic. Generally speaking, we would suggest that it does not go far enough and that, of course, it is being put in place because our province continues to resist efforts to work towards participating in a national regulatory system. That being the case, we know that this is positive in that at least what it does is that it attempts to provide greater regulations around over-the-counter derivative trades.

Derivatives, as we know, played a large role in the 2008 global financial crisis because they were not adequately regulated. Bad debts were bundled into securities, which were bought by investors without the ability to know what was underlying those securities. It was difficult for investors to have access to enough information to know in what they were actually investing, and no one was providing adequate oversight because there were enormous regulatory gaps. Because most derivatives were traded over the counter, meaning not traded through exchanges, there was even less oversight. Therefore, this bill is a positive step towards increasing transparency and investor protection in the ever-growing derivatives market.

However, the same deficiencies that exist in securities regulations as a whole in this province will continue until those deficiencies are addressed. For example, derivatives will still now be regulated similarly to most other securities and are still subject to some exemptions which are outdated or not working properly. For instance, when were the thresholds for the accredited investor exemption last updated? A net income of $200,000 is not that rare or high anymore.

As a result, this is a move forward, but it does not – well, it just is a move forward. Let's say that. I think that increased regulation of derivatives is commendable, and it will actually assist both traders and investors with better transparency, certainty, and protection.

I would say, however, as well that the fact that we are doing this does indicate, of course, that the government has not changed its position of resisting moving towards a national regulator. Of those states which currently regulate securities out there in the world, the only other country outside of Canada without a national securities regulator is Bosnia and Herzegovina.

As it stands, B.C., Ontario, and the federal government are going to be entering into a co-operative regulatory system, and we're going to be left out. So the need for this particular legislation perfectly illustrates the absurdity of continuing on without a national regulator. We have to keep wasting government time and resources or those of the Alberta Securities Commission in updating legislation and harmonizing with other jurisdictions across the country, something that we don't do entirely and appropriately. If we had a national regulator, all of that time and resources could be better spent on enforcement and investigation to better protect Alberta's investors.

Capital markets are increasingly integrated and increasingly global. It's inefficient and in many cases impossible for a provincial regulator to handle these complexities. Overall, then, we would think that it would be better to move towards a national regulator.

We know that as a whole Canadians lose billions of dollars a year to securities fraud, and reports put it at an estimated $2.1 billion loss just for Albertans alone. It appears that at this point our provincial regulator just isn't strong enough to prevent this type of thing from happening. There are countless examples out there like the Harvest Group, facing a half a billion dollar class action suit after bad real estate ventures; Platinum Equities, which took $51 million from Albertans; or Shire International Real Estate Investment, a $20 million fraud. In many of these cases, the provincial regulator took action but only after the fact due to wide exemptions on who has to register and report under our security laws.

A strong national regulator could protect Albertans from these types of scams in a way that the provincial government seems reluctant to lest stronger rules and fewer exemptions mean slightly more paperwork for some companies. We think that government should be putting their focus on that kind of measure, finally getting a national regulator up and running after a decade of talk, rather than all the focus we've had this far on attacking working Albertans.

Those are our general comments on this piece of legislation thus far. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also am glad to rise and speak to Bill 42, Securities Amendment Act, 2013. Prior to the 2007-2008 global financial crisis the market for so-called over-the-counter, OTC, derivatives was largely unregulated. As such, countless OTC derivatives transactions occurred, completely invisible to the securities regulator. It is the invisibility of such financial transactions and failure to properly clear and record them that contributed heavily to the market collapse. In response to the economic crisis the leaders of the G-20 nations met in Washington, DC, in November 2008 for a summit on the financial market and the world economy.

Following that summit, the G-20 issued a formal declaration calling for common principles for reform of financial markets, including the regulation of derivatives. In the ensuing period there has been considerable and ongoing regulatory reform of OTC derivatives around the world. Since Canada, unlike most other countries, has a decentralized security regulatory system, it must rely on its provincial governments to enact legislation providing for increased oversight and regulation of OTC derivatives through individual provincial security regulators. Bill 42 represents Alberta's attempt to comply with the G-20 declaration.

This bill will define what a derivative is and provide the Alberta Securities Commission with the authority to regulate OTC derivatives and the people involved in such financial transactions. It will also define what a clearing agency is and provide the Alberta Securities Commission with the authority to mandate that the OTC derivatives transactions must be cleared through a commission-recognized clearing agency or central counterparty.

It also defines what a trade repository is and provides the Alberta Securities Commission with authority to mandate that OTC derivatives transactions must be recorded in a commission-recognized trade repository. It stipulates that no person or company shall carry on business as a trade repository in Alberta unless the person or company is recognized by the Alberta Securities Commission as a trade repository.

11:30

References to "exchange contract laws" will be replaced by "derivatives laws," and reference to "exchange contracts" will be replaced by "derivatives."

It authorizes the executive director of the Alberta Securities Commission to provide information to and receive information from other securities or financial regulatory authorities, trade repositories, clearing agencies, alternative trading systems, credit-rating agencies, exchanges, self-regulatory bodies or organizations, law enforcement agencies and other governmental or regulatory authorities in Canada and elsewhere, and any other agency or entity as determined by the regulation.

No one likes unnecessary bureaucracy or red tape, Mr. Speaker, but the global financial crisis is a perfect example of what can happen when the needed regulatory oversight is weak or nonexistent. Market integrity and transparency are significant improvements when OTC derivatives transactions are subject to centralized clearing. Also, the market trend is moving in this direction, so it makes complete sense for Alberta to adopt this as well. Regulation of OTC derivatives transactions should make another global financial crisis less likely or at least enable regulators to deal with the crisis more effectively.

Overall this is a good bill, Mr. Speaker, and I'm going to support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, other speakers?

The hon. minister to close debate?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 42 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

Bill 44
Notaries and Commissioners Act

The Chair: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This bill updates the language in the legislation, consolidates the two acts into one, provides provision for a code of conduct, outlines appropriate behaviour for individuals in carrying out their duties. This bill will serve Albertans well.

The Chair: Okay. Are there other speakers?

Ms Notley: I hate to disappoint everyone, but come on, people. Really?

Okay. So, listen. We've had some folks in our office do a little bit of research on this, and I have some genuine questions for the minister on this because there are some legitimate and important questions arising from this piece of legislation as it relates to notaries public.

Now, we know that notaries public and commissioners do good work. They have important roles in our communities, and the work that they do is critical for a lot of the work that goes on in these communities. So we absolutely agree that it's important to regulate this group in the public interest. We also agree that it's good that we're consolidating the Notaries Public Act and the Commissioners for Oaths Act. That's also a good thing. Thumbs up on that.

The concern, though, is that it seems that it goes beyond simply consolidating the two and creating a consistent set of rules. It also seems to go fairly far in setting a whole new level of requirements for notaries and commissioners and then at the same time handing an enormous amount of discretion to the minister over regulations and even day-to-day activity of the notaries' affairs.

One of the concerns that I have is that what we're doing here is potentially putting such an onus of responsibility and such a set of demands on notaries and commissioners that we are effectively managing them in a way that is similar in some ways to the way we manage lawyers. Yet, of course, these parties don't charge anything like that. So the question becomes: do we run the risk of putting a bunch of them out of business? Do we run the risk of driving up their fees at a time when we already have a serious access-to-justice problem in this province? That is the question.

I'm not asserting that as a truth. I'm genuinely asking that as a question because I believe that we've had some contact from people who are within the notaries and commissioners community who are concerned about this bill, and these are some of the questions that they have raised. I won't purport to know enough about the matter to be able to answer those questions, but I am putting those to the minister.

One of the things that people asked us was: why was there no consideration, instead, to introduce a model that is more similar to British Columbia's, where they are regulated by a society of notaries public and they kind of do their own sort of self-regulation? It's more of a self-regulation body. There's not the similar kind of being subject to the ministerial discretion.

As well, B.C. notaries exercise more power in that province. Of course, as a result, this aids in access to justice because, of course, they're much less expensive than lawyers. I'm wondering why it is that we wouldn't have been working with them to see where we could expand some of the roles they could play in order to provide greater ease of access to some of the more manageable roles that otherwise are filled by lawyers, and then we're in a situation where we don't have enough lawyers and costs are too great. So that's a question. I don't know if there were consultations with that group, if there were consultations with the Law Society. I don't know, but I certainly do have those questions.

The ministry has also changed the powers that used to be available for all notaries so that only lawyers and judges can now notarize deeds, contracts, and commercial instruments. These even include those issued or prepared by judges or lawyers in respect of which judges or lawyers have otherwise provided legal advice. Again, this seems to be moving powers and roles and work away from commissioners and notaries to lawyers, which, again, is going to result in greater workloads for lawyers and, of course, greater costs to citizens. It's always been the case that if you need legal advice or contract interpretation, you need to see a lawyer. If you need a document notarized, you can go to see a notary, and that is cheaper and faster.

The bill also hands the minister an enormous amount of discretion in that he can now establish a code of conduct through regulations and issues governing the duties and the conduct of the notaries public. I'm just curious as to what plans the minister has with respect to how he will go about establishing that code of conduct. How will it differ from the current sort of booklets and guidelines that are provided for notaries and commissioners? What level of consultation will occur with notaries and commissioners? What changes does he see happening with respect to that code of conduct? That is another question.

As well, the minister may also through this new legislation refuse an application or suspend or revoke the appointment of any notary public for a number of reasons, including certain types of charges – I assume that's under the Criminal Code – when the minister considers it appropriate to do so. That seems like a great deal of discretion. Of course, we all know there's a difference between being charged and convicted. My question is: why would that be when there are charges and not postconviction?

Even more troubling is that a decision by the minister under the section is entirely final, so there's no appeal for the notary or commissioner. Of course, this has a huge impact on their way of life, their actual ability to do their job. So you essentially end up potentially disqualifying them from being able to do their job and earn a living. That's a fairly significant power that the minister is giving to himself with not a lot of parameters around how it will be exercised nor any mechanism for appealing it.

Another other drafting problem that has been identified by some people in our consultations is the definition of a lawyer. The language is similar to previous legislation, but the act has added the line: "has not been suspended or disbarred." This language isn't clear. Once a suspended lawyer is reinstated, is he or she then again able to regain their status as a notary public or commissioner, or are they now forever unable to function as a notary public or commissioner? It's not clear in the way the language is drafted in this piece of legislation.

The language of the previous legislation was far clearer in stating that members could not exercise the powers of a notary public while membership or registration is suspended. Obviously, in that case the implication was that if the membership or registration suspension was lifted, then the ability to exercise the powers of the notary public could be reinstated.

There are classes of members of the Law Society who are not active and practising members, lawyers who are not active and practising who nonetheless retain their status as members, myself included, actually. They're not entitled to practise law or provide legal advice, and they are not covered by insurance, but they can still act as notaries or commissioners.

The provisions requiring lawyers to notarize certain documents, deeds, contracts, and commercial instruments rely on this definition. There's a discrepancy in the bill in terms of who is qualified to perform those particular notary services. I ask solely for the purpose of making sure that I don't accidentally notarize something I shouldn't because it's not clear in the drafting of the legislation.

In drafting the definitions as you did, did you intend to include nonactive members of the Law Society amongst those with the ability to notarize deeds, contracts, and commercial instruments? As drafted the language is somewhat unclear.

Those are, I think, the sum total of my observations, questions, and concerns, and I'd certainly be happy to hear any response that the minister might be able to provide on that.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, and I thank the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona for her comments, particularly the positive comments she had at the beginning. I have been jotting down just some of her comments that I can respond to, and if I'm missing a few, perhaps we can have an offline conversation, I would suggest, as well. [interjections] It's getting too late, Mr. Chair. It's just getting too late.

First off, the member is quite correct that notaries and commissioners are not the same as lawyers. First off, commissioners are able to witness and swear documents for internal use in the province of Alberta only. Interestingly enough, Mr. Chair, any individual who is appointed a commissioner can actually just be appointed by reading the pamphlet as provided. That can happen just by satisfying himself or herself to a practising lawyer that he or she understands the requirements of a commissioner. I respectfully say that commissioners are necessary to run our whole legal system, but at the same time I don't know of anyone who makes a living just as a commissioner.

Notaries public, of course, can copy documents. You can witness documents that go outside of the province. It is a much higher appointment. These individuals are appointed not by me personally as the Minister of Justice but, rather, by the Notaries Public Review Committee. That's designed, Mr. Chair, to provide some objectivity and just to avoid political interference for the whole item.

The member also mentioned the talk of a code of conduct. Currently, Mr. Chair, there is no code of conduct whatsoever – none – for notaries or commissioners. I will respectfully submit that bringing in a code of conduct with some discipline is a step forward. Now, the sitting minister does have the authority under the current legislation to remove somebody's commission or to remove somebody's notary public designation with cause. I respectfully submit to that member that having a code of conduct is a positive step forward because it enables the minister to go and suspend someone instead of just saying, "Oops, you're gone" if there's any further investigation. Also, the code of conduct specifies exactly what a notary or a commissioner is expected to do.

The member also mentioned the example of British Columbia. She is quite correct, though, that B.C. does have a very different paradigm for notaries public. It is a self-governing profession there. For example, I remember from my past law practice that if you are purchasing a property in B.C., you don't actually have to go to a lawyer. You can go to a notary. To change that in Alberta would require significant changes to our land titles system, the Law of Property Act, for example, and that's not being contemplated at this time, specifically not by this legislation.

The member also mentioned the issue of access to justice, and that's a passion of mine as well. The one difference between talking to a practising lawyer, Mr. Chair, versus a notary in Alberta is that if you're talking to a practising lawyer and getting advice on a particular contract or deed, there's a consumer protection mechanism in there already, and that's called the Alberta Lawyers Insurance Association, otherwise known as ALIA. If you come to me, and I somehow give you improper advice – guess what? – you have a mechanism to claim back for your losses against this insurance fund whereas if you just go to a lay notary public and you were getting advice, you don't have that same type of protection. That's why we're moving to restrict the powers of notaries public and commissioners for oaths. It is consumer protection.

The member also mentioned a reference to lawyers, specifically if a lawyer is disbarred or suspended. That, again, is handled by the Law Society of Alberta, which is a fully self-governing profession of over 9,000 lawyers in this province. We felt that if a lawyer is disbarred – guess what? – you're not a lawyer. You shouldn't be doing items such as notarizations that you wouldn't otherwise be entitled to do. If you're suspended, that also could have an effect as well. I think that would be the intention of the self-governing body being the Law Society.

All in all, Mr. Chair, I do think that this piece of legislation does improve people's rights from a consumer protection standpoint, but it also clarifies the conduct that we expect of notaries public and commissioners for oaths. I'm sure I'm missing some of the member's comments here, but I'm happy to chat with her if she wants to send me a letter, or we could discuss it later as well. I always reply to your letters.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a very brief question here, and I'd like some clarification from either the Minister of Justice or the Member for Sherwood Park. I'd like to know: what is the appropriate section for the declaration of a notarial certificate under a guarantees acknowledgement? Would it fall under 4(1) or 4(2)? In other words, is it considered to be a deed, contract, or commercial instrument, or is it simply an attestation, an affirmation, a declaration, or whatever? I'd just like clarification on whether or not you need to be a lawyer in order to do a guarantees acknowledgement certificate?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much. I appreciate that member's comment. It is the intention of the legislation that attestation for a guarantees acknowledgement certificate, which is typically to guarantee the debt of a third party, be done before a lawyer. The reason for that is because if you look back many years in our jurisprudence in this province, there's always been that protection, just to ensure that a person knows that they are held fully responsible for the debt of another by executing or attesting, as this member quite correctly indicates, the guarantees acknowledgement certificate.

Interestingly enough, Mr. Chair, in the past there has been a $5 maximum fee upon this. Some people have ignored this. Some people have seen a way to go around this. I think that for a $5 fee you may have a difficult time finding a practitioner to do this, so I think that that should be between the particular individual, the customer, and the practitioner in accordance with the principles of the free market.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I also have a question for the minister. The government is implying that the section on publishing suspensions on notaries public has not been vetted for compliance with FOIP, or vetting has not been completed. Briefing notes from the minister's office state that we may need to add a provision so that the collection, use, and disclosure of information regarding conduct and discipline reflect the current FOIP requirement for enactment.

Under sections 11 and 23 a new ministerial power will give the ability to suspend notaries public and commissioners for oaths. The government believes that this will allow more flexibility in the discipline process before revocation. Sections 11 and 23 also allow for the nonmandatory publication of suspensions if the minister deems it to be in the public interest. The question is: can the government confirm whether Bill 44 is compliant with the FOIP Act, particularly the section on publishing suspensions?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. First off, I do appreciate the member's comments in this case. Right now the status quo is that if we don't go ahead with this particular amendment, the only option that the minister has is to revoke somebody's power.

I believe that my office has spoken to the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner, and I do not believe that this falls afoul of any particular legislation because it is statutory, in my recollection. However, I will undertake to review my records in the morning as it is a little late and my memory may be a little foggy.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 44 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report Bill 44.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill and reports on Bill 44. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does the Assembly concur in the report? Agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the hour I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:54 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, December 4, 2013

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. As we head into the festive season, let our minds be filled with thoughts of caring, of sharing, and of giving, and let our hearts be filled with that special spirit of Christmas. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations I rise to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly His Excellency Carlos Gómez-Mugica Sanz. Since his appointment as the ambassador of Spain to Canada, he has been instrumental in strengthening the ties between our two regions. Last year he visited schools in Calgary and treated students and teachers to an enriching and memorable experience. Earlier today His Excellency signed a memorandum of understanding with the government of Alberta, which we're all proud of. This MOU reaffirmed our commitment to continuing a partnership that has supported the growth and enhancement of Spanish language and cultural programs in Alberta's schools. I can tell you that we certainly enjoy the opportunity to exchange information and ideas with him on his visits, and we look forward to a continued and strong relationship with Spain.

Accompanying His Excellency today are the honorary consul of Spain in Edmonton, Mr. Benjamin Garcia, and Ms Melissa Valdés Vázquez, an employee of the Spanish government who works on secondment in Alberta Education as a resource to all of our schools wanting to implement Spanish language programs.

Mr. Speaker, I'd ask that our honoured guests, seated in the Speaker's gallery, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today, indeed, to present to you a couple of diplomats from a country that is the origin of some of Canada's best politicians. One is Ambassador Marcin Bosacki, who was presented by the Foreign Affairs minister, Minister Sikorski, to our Governor General of Canada as ambassador extraordinary – and you all will have guessed – of the Republic of Poland. Ambassador Bosacki has been awarded the bene merito distinction and has served in many capacities for the Polish government and for the European Union, among others, during the Polish presidency of the European Union, the communications branch. He has also been very much involved in the efforts to build the EU's most recent budget and also in the matters of the Arab Spring. I would ask the ambassador to rise. Also accompanying him today, well known to us, is John Szumlas, who is the honorary consul of the Republic of Poland. Welcome to both of you.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us begin with school groups. The Minister of Human Services, followed by Calgary-East.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 64 enthusiastic, bright, and inquisitive students from St. Mary elementary school, located in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. I know that they are the best and the brightest of students that we have across the province, and I have that on good authority. Don't take my word for it. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar attended to speak to their grade 6 classes about a month ago. Now, I'm not sure why the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was invited to speak instead of me, but it might be because they've heard from me often enough. In any event, accompanying the students are their teachers Thérèse Coates, Tracee Laba, Julie Valdez along with parent helpers Stacey Dej, Christine Scheelar, Elaine Buma, Laurie-Ann Gratton, Sherry Comeau, Ermila Gantar, Alison Hughes, Mark Stratton, and Sheree Mireau.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to add that this Children First pin that I wear was given to me by the principals of St. Mary school the day I was sworn in as Minister of Education some years ago. So I have a special place in my heart for St. Mary school.

Among their group is Sophie. Sophie is here today as a student from St. Mary school. She is the granddaughter of former Lieutenant Governor Peter Liba from the province of Manitoba.

I'd ask all of my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm and enthusiastic welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Amery: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 45 grade 9 students and three adults from the Almadina Language Charter Academy. Almadina charter academy has two campuses. One is located in my constituency, and the other is located in the constituency of Calgary-Fort. Almadina charter school is home to students from 34 different countries from around the globe and also home to about 1,100 students right now. They want the hon. Minister of Education to hear that this school has a waiting list of about 650 students. The students are accompanied by Mr. Rabih El-Masri, teacher; Kristine Dupuis, student teacher; and Sara Bhaye, volunteer. They are seated in the public gallery. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my former students from Inner City high school, that I'm introducing on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Calder. This is an incredible group of bright young people who have been given an opportunity to finish their high school. I just want to say that these are some of the most resilient young people you will ever meet. I'm honoured very much to have them join us in the Assembly. I'll ask them to rise as I say their names. They're here with their teacher Dan Scratch. There is Morgan, Donavin, Frank, and Won Joon.

The Speaker: Are there any other school groups?

Seeing none, let's move on to other guests, beginning with the President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Rene and Karen Command and daughters Charlotte and Sarah. I first met the Command family at the Parkland children's Christmas party, that we've both been a part of since its inception in 2001. Charlotte and Sarah have also sung for quite a few of my constituency events and have been quite a hit, such a hit that it was my honour to invite the girls to be the youth representatives from the area who travelled to Calgary to meet the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge in July 2011.

Charlotte and Sarah have quite a resumé of their own as local entertainers. A few highlights of their career: they're recent winners of the John Lennon NAMM Songwriting Contest for a song about Alberta – Mr. Speaker, they'll be in L.A. this coming January 24 – winners of the rising star award in Edmonton; winners of the Safe and Caring community Heroes award; were showcased at the Canadian Country Music Association Awards in both 2012 and 2013, Folk Alliance International, a number of Sundance Film Fests, the MTV Movie Awards and celebrity slam-dance; had three shows at the famed Bluebird Cafe in Nashville. They're currently in a partnership with the RCMP – that includes a video featuring their original song, Something to Live For, that will be shown to schools across Canada, with proceeds going to the Kids Help Phone; they're still looking for a large corporate donor there – as well as a partnership with the Stollery children's hospital.

Mr. Speaker, it's obvious that these young ladies make their parents very proud, their community very proud, their province very proud, and I'm proud to be their MLA. They are seated in the public gallery this afternoon. I would ask for Karen to give us a wave and for Sarah, Charlotte, and Rene to stand and for us to give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure, followed by the leader of the Liberal opposition.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly representatives from Seven Generations Energy, which is a private oil and gas developer based in Calgary who is investing in a large development in my constituency. Pat Carlson, CEO, who is now a constituent of mine, is here today with the VP of geology and stakeholder relations, Steve Haysom, and the VP of land, Susan Targett. They are in Edmonton today for meetings. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a wonderful, caring group of nurses, many from the Royal Alexandra hospital. In fact, I refer to them as the angels of health care. They are UNA president Heather Smith, Monique Corbiere-Nangunda, Wendy Hui, Sheena Lukacs, Christel Shipton, Nichole Batienco, Guida Morais, Tracy Cox, Lonnee Rousseau, Rochelle Walker, Donna Fayant, Adele Wardley, and Donna Schluchter.

Now, they are here for two reasons, Mr. Speaker, really, to educate us about patient safety and respect. Their concerns are with this health care workforce transformation project, that reduces the number of nurses at a time when patient care is so complex and of high needs. They're concerned that it's putting patient safety at risk. They are also concerned that the over-capacity protocols that spread the wards of the hospital with sick, infected people are also putting patient safety at risk. They are also educating us about respect. It's not necessary to treat front-line public servants in a bad fashion by passing bills 45 and 46. They are asking all members of the government to vote against bills 45 and 46. I would ask everyone to welcome them, thank them, and give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a new member of our caucus staff, Jeffrey Behrens. Jeff is originally from Edson, a small-town boy come to the big city, in the West Yellowhead constituency, but he and his wife, Chantelle, now call Edmonton their home. Jeff is a graduate of political science from the University of Alberta and has a master's degree in comparative politics, specializing in constitutional engineering, from Queen's University. I'd now ask that he rise and receive the cordial welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my guests from the Piikani Nation. With me today – and I want to say that I'm thankful that they made the drive up here – are three council members: Angela Grier, Kyle Grier, and Serene Weasel Traveller. I do want to mention as well that their acting chief, Clayton Small Legs, was supposed to join us but, unfortunately, ended up in a car accident on the way to the Alberta Legislature. Thankfully, he is okay, although the car is quite damaged. He wasn't able to join us, but I want to thank these council members for meeting with me today, and I look forward to an ongoing dialogue with them.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Mr. Jeneroux: Mr. Speaker, I am eagerly awaiting their arrival, but alas they're not here yet.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rarely get to introduce individuals from my constituency, but today it's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a great friend of mine, Mr. Dave Lilienskold. Mr. Lilienskold is a tremendous volunteer, a superb campaigner, and a wonderful board member of our PC association. He's in the members' gallery, and I would ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly my guests, who are representatives of the United Nurses of Alberta. My guests, who are all registered nurses, are here today because of their grave concerns about Alberta Health Services' plan to eliminate nearly 200 full-time nursing positions here in the province. My guests are also very concerned about Bill 45 and Bill 46. I would ask my guests to please rise as I call their names, and we'll give them the warm traditional welcome. I have Heidi Gould, Sheila Dorscheid, Alan Besecker, Claire Galoska, Daphne Wallace, Bev Dick, and Colleen Adams.

The Speaker: Edmonton-South West, your guests have now arrived. Would you like to introduce them?

Mr. Jeneroux: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two active community members in my constituency of Edmonton-South West that are here today to see their hard work of gathering signatures in support of more schools for Edmonton-South West come to light. My first guest is a wonderful mother and active volunteer with Bessie Nichols school and has a very successful day job as executive director of pharmaceutical funding and guidance with Alberta Health Services. With her is another outstanding mother who is hard at work with young children at home and is an active volunteer in her community. As a Bessie Nichols school council member she has been instrumental in exploring options and sharing the concerns of parents in regard to enrolment pressures we see in Edmonton-South West, which I will be presenting a petition on today at the appropriate time. I'd ask that my guests, Mrs. Michele Evans and Mrs. Colleen Kellner, please rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Information Requests under the FOIP Act

Mr. Saskiw: Alberta is the only jurisdiction in Canada where MLAs cannot ask questions about the ethics or scandals of this government if the matter is before the Ethics Commissioner. I won't go into why this is an affront to basic democratic principles but, instead, will focus my comments on a new development today regarding political interference in freedom of information laws.

There is a truism in life and politics: it is not the original wrongdoing that will sink you; it is the cover-up. In question period we asked for information regarding the awarding of a multibillion-dollar contract. We've asked the Premier, we've asked the Justice minister, and both have refused to disclose the information. So we FOIPed it. We FOIPed all records and correspondence related to the contract tendering, selection process, and request for proposals. Alberta Justice has returned that FOIP, Mr. Speaker, with 1,000 pages, including all relevant information blacked out under very weak pretenses.

Today, Mr. Speaker, beyond that secrecy, we learned of direct political interference in the process. The FOIP manager sent an e-mail to the personal chief of staff and political confidant of the Justice minister and asked this question: "Is it okay to go ahead with our planned release of records regarding the requests for information regarding the selection and proposals related to the tobacco recovery lawyer initiative?" Yes, an independent officer is asking permission from the Justice minister's personal chief of staff. The response from the political staff was, "You bet." In other words, it's good to go.

So here we are, Mr. Speaker. We have over 1,000 pages of blacked-out documents from the Minister of Justice and now know that the political arm of the Justice department was directly involved in what documents were released and what documents were hidden.

Political interference is serious. A political cover-up involving the Premier is even worse.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Labour Legislation

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Mahatma Gandhi said, "Civil disobedience is the assertion of a right which law should give but which it denies." Martin Luther King Jr. said:

An individual who breaks a law that conscience tells him is unjust, and who willingly accepts the penalty of imprisonment in order to arouse the conscience of the community over its injustice, is in reality expressing the highest respect for the law.

While illegal strikes could be avoided if labour laws were balanced and fair to all, they're actually responsible for much of our social progress. Some of the things that illegal strikes have done include ensuring safety standards and the right of people to refuse unsafe work. They brought in the five-day work week, Mr. Speaker. Illegal strikes gave us the minimum wage.

Decades ago this government made it illegal for their employees to strike. Now they're acting to make it illegal for the same workers to even talk about striking. Bills 45 and 46 will likely pass this Assembly today as a result of the government's imposition of closure. After today, as Calgary Herald columnist Don Braid wrote, "talking is now pretty much illegal."

In our Charter of Rights and Freedoms we have the right to freedom of speech and freedom of association, and we won't allow this government to take those rights away from us regardless of the laws this government rams through this Assembly. Speaking about workplace health and safety, standing up to say that workers deserve a fair deal, or refusing unsafe work cannot and must not be illegal.

The New Democrats have fought these bills tooth and nail, but this fight is not over, Mr. Speaker. We believe that these laws are fundamentally unjust, and our opposition will continue long after they've been passed into law by this antiworker government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition for your first main set of questions.

Information Requests on Contracted Legal Services

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we expect the Ethics Commissioner to rule on Tobaccogate shortly. My question involves another related but separate issue. The Wildrose had requested a copy of the actual litigation contract between the government and JSS, the law firm of the Premier's close friend Mr. Robert Hawkes. The Justice department has refused to share that contract with us, and perhaps we now know why. We just received a letter from the FOIP commissioner advising us that they can't help us because the very law firm that is under investigation also represents the FOIP office. To the Premier: when did she know this was the case?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is quite ironic that the very party that I believe yesterday in question period was asking for an independent seniors' advocate commissioner of this Legislative Assembly now undermines another independent officer of this Assembly before they even had a chance to read a report, before they even had a chance to review documents. There is nothing unusual. All offices of the government are represented by either – they can't be represented by Justice because it would be a conflict, so they have independent legal advisers. But there are ways of dealing with those conflicts.

Mr. Saskiw: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we're not maligning the office; we're asking for information from this government. The office has been actually quite forthright with us.

Now that we know that this conflict of interest goes very deep, the Premier has the power to direct her Justice minister to do the right thing and to release all of the documents that have been requested by Wildrose on this file. Will she instruct the Justice minister to release all of the documents related to this file immediately?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, we have full confidence in the FOIP commissioner, and the FOIP commissioner has a number of choices at the office's disposal. They can, if they choose, retain another firm that they perceive would not have a conflict. There is also a known procedure within the legal community of setting up Chinese walls, as they're called, of separating a law firm, making sure there is no conflict. But the fact of the matter is that you would not want the Department of Justice advising an independent officer of this Legislature. That would be a conflict. What they can do is that they can retain additional counsel if they wish, but they will make an independent decision of this Legislature.

Ms Smith: There is actually another option, Mr. Speaker. They could just release the information.

I have to wonder how it is that this Premier could think that the Ethics Commissioner can undertake a thorough review of this matter if no one but the Premier can even have access to the very contract that is the subject of this investigation. To the Premier: why will she not release these documents? What has she got to hide?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the Privacy Commissioner will release what can be released. As you know, there is always a balance between protection of privacy and access to information. Those are not arbitrary decisions made by the Premier, myself, or any cabinet minister. Those are decisions that are under the scrutiny of an information officer. That information officer, who is independent, will make that decision and provide them with whatever information can be provided. But if you're going to ask for the independence of one officer, I would suggest to please respect the independence of all officers of this Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: Second main set of questions, Official Opposition leader.

Ms Smith: So we can't have political interference with independent officers. That's what the Deputy Premier just said.

There's a little more to this case. The Premier has said, quote: no politician is involved in decisions to release freedom of information requests. However, on September 4, 2012, the Justice minister's chief of staff, Mat Stepan, was asked for his permission to release certain documents relating to Tobaccogate. Mr. Stepan's response was, "You bet." To the Premier: why is the Justice minister's top political staffer deciding if and when documents get released? I thought politicians were . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I don't get involved in the FOIP process. In fact, I never have. If the Leader of the Opposition had enough time to actually go and read the e-mail, she would know that there was no political interference from my office. We don't know why the department sent us that particular item, but regardless, even the fact that that e-mail was disclosed shows again that there was no political interference from my office whatsoever.

Ms Smith: I beg to differ, Mr. Speaker.

It appears that the Premier is mistaken. She also said this: it is not for me to step in to release a document or to not release a document. The Stepan e-mail proves beyond a doubt that politicians, in fact, do step in. Not only does this run contrary to what the Premier has said; it raises all sorts of concerns about political interference in the release of information to the public. To the Premier: just how widespread is this practice of top ministerial aides authorizing the release of public information?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, that member is no longer a rookie, so she should know better than that. She should know that at the end of the day every minister is the custodian of information, any and all information that is within that particular ministry. However, what we have done not to politicize the process is that we have subrogated the decision-making process of what is and what isn't going to be released to an individual within the bureaucracy of our ministry, and that decision is further scrutinized by the independent Privacy Commissioner. If she doesn't like that system, I don't know how less political you can make it.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I can't believe that the government can't see how problematic this e-mail is.

Wildrose alone has filed hundreds of information requests over the last few years. Media outlets are constantly seeking information through the process as well. If the Premier is to be believed, if the Deputy Premier is to be believed, there is an independent, nonpolitical process for the release of information, but the Stepan e-mail shreds that claim to pieces. To the Premier: what is she going to do to fix this?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I do not doubt that this whole concept is problematic to that particular member. Why? Because she simply doesn't understand how the process works. [interjections] But if she only spent a minute and realized it, ministers are the custodians of the information that is shared with government, but for purposes of releasing or not releasing that information, that decision is deferred to our bureaucracy, which is further overlooked by an independent officer of this Legislative Assembly. [interjections]

The Speaker: Leader of the Official Opposition. Third main set of questions.

We could do without the interjections, please.

Ms Smith: So I guess there is political interference in the process after all, Mr. Speaker.

Disaster Recovery Program Payments

Ms Smith: Yesterday we learned that the PC-Party-coloured roadside campaign was the Premier's idea and that her top staff member told the ministries to do it in seven to 14 days. Apparently they wanted everyone to know about their commitment to rebuilding, but the rebuilding itself has been painfully slow. The Premier trumpeted that everyone who lost a home would get a $10,000 initial disaster recovery payment. That hasn't happened. Most applicants haven't seen a penny. To the Premier: will she instruct Darren Cunningham to write a snarky e-mail to LandLink so that flooded residents can get their funds?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we won't be doing that, but we will be asking Mr. Cunningham to write a snotty letter to Santa Claus because apparently the Legislative Assembly Office has distributed phenomenal Christmas cards printed by the opposition, but look at this, Wildrose Christmas cards. The fact is that this opposition is looking for a problem where there isn't one. The fact is that the signage that is being released is simply appropriate and within the policies of government for decades.

Mr. Saskiw: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Smith: For the record, Mr. Speaker, we paid for those with party funds. That's what we're asking . . . [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, the Transportation minister defended the rush to put up the PC-coloured signs saying: we're going to cut red tape; we're not going to wait for process; we'll catch up with the paperwork later. However, that's a privilege that more than 6,000 families don't have. They're tied up in red tape. They have to do paperwork over and over again because LandLink keeps losing it. Unlike the sign builders, they haven't got any money. To the Premier: why won't she get the special blue-and-orange sign approval process . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: They may have paid for the printing of those propaganda cards with party money, but they're using the LAO distribution for distributing them. [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, the fact is that Albertans want to know where we're building schools for our children, where we're building hospitals for our patients, and where we're building seniors' homes for our seniors. [interjections] Part of rebuilding Alberta after a disaster is rebuilding the confidence and the morale in that part of the province, and those signs are addressing exactly that.

2:00

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've asked once politely. I'm going to ask again. Please, enough of the interjections already. Let's cut them out. Let's get on. These are serious questions. We're hoping for serious answers.

Let's get on with the final supplemental from the Official Opposition leader.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, it is quite ironic that the $6,000 cost for each of these blue-and-orange signs is almost the exact same amount as the average DRP payment made so far. LandLink has messed up the paperwork. Homeowners wait months and months for DRP visits that are cancelled over and over again. LandLink engineers recommend impossible repairs. Hardly any money has flowed. To the Premier: why won't she use the special blue-and-orange sign approval process to get the disaster recovery money flowing?

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, 4,000 payments have been made to those homeowners at $25 million. The building Alberta signs have been helpful in putting High River back together. In fact, they've been part of a communications plan to help bring back confidence to the town. You know what? That's the overall cost of this expense, and that's a quote from the mayor of High River. He appreciates those signs; in fact, they're actually going to put their signs up because they believe that's part of rebuilding Alberta's confidence after the worst disaster. That's leadership. That's what we're doing.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, we have your point of order at 1:59, and we also have noted the point of order right in the first set of questions as well.

Let us move on to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, the Alberta Liberal leader, with some peace, order, decorum, and civility.

Government Policies

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's talk about the Premier's promises. She promised 140 family care clinics. She only opened three and announced 24. She promised to build 50 new schools and modernize another 70. Instead, we got some portables. She promised more funding for postsecondary education. Instead, she slashed it. She promised a thousand long-term care beds. Instead, she is cutting them. I could go on, but the bottom line is that this Premier has run out of promises. To the Premier: are you beginning to understand why so many people mistrust you and your government?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, in the last election Albertans made a very clear choice. [interjection] The choice was to provide our children with badly needed classroom space not only in Edmonton and Calgary but throughout all of Alberta. They made a choice to build hospitals where patients actually are so they can go for their medical treatment closer to home. [interjection] They made a choice to build seniors' facilities that allow our seniors to retire in dignity near their homes. [interjections] Those are the choices that Albertans have made. We are delivering on those choices, and they don't like that.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, let me make it very clear. If I hear too much of this interjection stuff, you're going to lose your spots. End of story. That's going to be it. The same goes for the Liberals, the same goes for the ND, and the same goes for private members on the government side. I've had enough. How many times do you have to be asked? Do you literally have to be scolded like schoolchildren about this? Hopefully not. But I'll do whatever I have to do to maintain order, civility, and decorum in this House. You can count on it. I will cancel your spot. I may cancel the rest of question period if I have to, but I will not put up with this tomfoolery. No more, please.

Let us go on. Edmonton-Meadowlark, you have the first sup.

Government Policies (continued)

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, the Premier has no answer for my questions.

Besides the string of broken promises another hallmark of this Premier is her draconian and heavy-handed, imperious style. She's introduced legislation that would give her government the power to fire, fine, and jail democratically elected municipal officials who disagree with her, take away the long-established arbitration rights for public service government workers, and attack free speech rights of Albertans. Again, I could go on. To the Premier: why have you taken the joke that Canada has elected dictators so literally? Who will the government put in jail when all the workers are gone?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I really hesitate to even answer whatever this was. It definitely wasn't an appropriate question for this House. I can tell you one thing. In this province Albertans pride themselves on the fact that they can be politically engaged at the grassroots level in any political party. They pride themselves on the fact that they can freely vote in every single election. [interjection] They pride themselves on the fact that they can sit in the galleries and observe the procedures of this House, and they pride themselves on the fact that they elect a government that represents their values, and here is . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member. Final supplemental.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, let's continue. Some of the results of this Premier's reign: ambulances not showing up on time in life-or-death situations, people with broken bones waiting days and days in agony for surgery in overcrowded hospitals filled with infections, public schools being gutted, a thousand fewer teachers at a time when we have 50,000 new children in the system, far too many seniors getting bedsores from neglect in long-term care facilities, home-care workers not even showing up, and, finally, the cover-up of the heartbreaking deaths of the children in care. To the Premier. Even the Grinch had a change of heart at Christmas. Why are you so indifferent to the suffering of people?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, it must feel like a reign when every four years you're told by Albertans over and over again that your party's values are not reflective of what Albertans' values are. [interjection] That is why they continue to elect this government. They do have confidence that this government will deliver on what Albertans' priorities are. We have, and we will. You know what? They don't like that.

The Speaker: I'm trying to get the attention of Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Yes, sir.

The Speaker: We wouldn't mind an apology later. No more interjections. You heard me.

Let's move on. First main set of questions, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. You have the floor.

Ms Blakeman: No. Excuse me. No. I'm not going to do that. It's part of the give-and-take of this House. You can ignore me . . . [interjections] It's part of the give-and-take of this House. I won't be bullied by you, the Speaker, telling me what I can and can't do in this House. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, nobody is bullying anybody. There are rules in this House. You are no stranger to them. You helped create some of them.

Ms Blakeman: I am, sir. I am no stranger to this, and that's why I'm challenging you.

The Speaker: I am not going to stand here and have you be in contempt of this chair or of the Legislature, so please have a seat.

Ms Blakeman: You cannot make us sit here with our hands in our laps like children. We are not children. We are elected people, and we have a right to yell at each other if we want. Yes, we do. We need to keep decorum, we need to be polite about it, but it's a give-and-take in this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you have a choice to either sit down or be escorted out.

Ms Blakeman: I'm happy to sit.

The Speaker: Okay. Thank you for sitting.

Speaker's Ruling Rules and Practices of the Assembly

The Speaker: Now, let us be reminded that there are rules, there are conventions, and there are protocols, which I have brought to your attention many, many times. I am tired of bringing them to your attention time after time after time. I'm going to review what you just said, Edmonton-Centre, and then we'll decide what to do about that, okay?

Ms Blakeman: Okay.

The Speaker: I want to just see what Hansard picked up.

Ms Blakeman: Okay.

The Speaker: I also want to see what Hansard picked up when some other members were answering questions. The microphones were on and references were made that might be against the rules as well. I'm going to review all of that. They didn't escape my ears either.

Now, I recognize that session is wrapping up in a couple of days. I understand that. I understand you're all trying to get your licks and bits and pieces in. I get that. I've been there myself a few times. But there are rules with how you do all of those things. Let's see how they are demonstrated by the hon. leader of the ND opposition with his questions.

Private Health Services Delivery

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. With respect, Mr. Speaker, there is no rule in this House or in the British parliamentary system against interjections.

Whenever Alberta's NDP challenges the health care privatization of the Health minister, he responds by claiming that our opposition is based on mere ideology. He ignores the fact that all reputable studies show that private health care delivery costs more and has worse outcomes. Now the minister's chickens are coming home to roost. Just yesterday he blamed one of his private companies for their inability to deliver home-care services to those that need them. Will the minister now admit that his . . .

The Speaker: Thirty-five seconds are up; I'm sorry. The Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, it's difficult for me to understand what this hon. member is getting at. What I've been saying and what I will continue to say on behalf of this government is that the bottom line in any circumstance in the delivery of health care is the quality of health care. We are indifferent to the quality provided by public and private and not-for-profit providers so long as all types of providers adhere to provincial standards, which are rigorously enforced. That is what creates a high-performing health system. That's what allows us to deliver health services to growing numbers of citizens.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member. First sup.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This minister's ideological commitment to privatizing our health care system is putting our seniors at risk. Seniors are dying in the care of companies who are more interested in profit than care. Seniors' care is chronically underfunded, and seniors are left lying in their own waste. When will this minister admit that his underfunded privatized model for seniors in care is not working and take real measures to ensure the comfort and dignity of every senior in this province?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, every day in this province care of the highest quality, that would be the envy of many in this country, I dare say, is delivered to hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of Albertans. In any large system, in any system that is growing at the rate that Alberta is, there are bound to be issues on a day-to-day basis. The bottom line is that quality trumps all, that we have common standards that apply regardless of who the provider is in a given situation, that we monitor for compliance with those standards, that we report on that performance, and that we learn from it.

Mr. Mason: How many seniors are going to die in care while this minister learns his lessons?

Why doesn't this minister admit that these are not just rare and one-off occasions, that, in fact, all of our seniors' care in this province has serious problems mostly due to very short staffing? We've tabled in this House thousands and thousands of working short forms describing individual situations where seniors didn't get the care they needed. When will this minister take responsibility and actually do something?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member can say what he likes. The fact of the matter is that we have strong provincial standards for quality in the province. We have challenges, as we have discussed in this House in the back and forth of question period, with respect to the increase in the number of residents with dementia and Alzheimer's disease and other ailments. We have acknowledged the fact that people enter facility-based care at an older age, 85 today in Alberta, and we have acknowledged that their health care demands are much more complex than they were even five years ago. We are taking the appropriate steps and adding capacity for additional beds. We are keeping up with staffing requirements, where we're . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, I'll bring you up to speed later about interjections that cause disorder and what prompts the Speaker's interventions. I did not interrupt your question, but I want you to know that I will comment on what the rules are of this House. I'm very acquainted with them as well.

Let's move on. No preambles now, starting with Edmonton-Manning, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Windbreaks along Highways

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta winters can be long and cold and bitter. Regular heavy snowfalls result in major drifts, poor visibility, and slippery conditions. The use of windbreaks would lower many of these risks, resulting in many saved Albertan lives and lower insurance costs. My first question is to the Minister of Transportation. Will you commit to build windbreaks along major highways such as the QE II and highways 28, 21, and 63?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for his concern for Albertans' safety and for the request that I think he just made of me to break wind. We use snow fences all across the province. We use them in dips and valleys where they think they will be appropriate to create safety by stopping drifting on the roads. It's something we've been doing for a long time. We even use windbreaks in the form of snow fences on private land when we can get permission. If the hon. member has particular places where he thinks they need to be added, I would most certainly welcome that input.

Mr. Sandhu: My second question is to the same minister. How soon could this simple, environmentally friendly tree-planting project begin?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said, we use snow fences both on public land and private land. There are examples of it that the member can find along the Queen Elizabeth highway between Edmonton and Calgary. Again, he mentioned highways 28, 21, and 63. If the hon. member has other places where he thinks we need to do more of this work, whether it's on public or private land, again I'd ask him to draw that to my attention, and we will most certainly take those requests seriously because when we're building Alberta, the safety of Albertans is paramount.

Mr. Sandhu: My final question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. Will you commit to working with the federal government to bring back the important prairie shelterbelt program, that shut down last spring, to help with the cost?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry; I may not have caught the first part of the question. But regarding the shelterbelt program, that, of course, is a federal program. We have certainly received some expressions of concern from a number of people. I've spoken to the federal minister about it, and he tells me that the shelterbelt program largely was not being used by agricultural producers, but it was being used by people on acreages and so on. So for the purposes of the federal program – I'm hesitant to speak on behalf of the federal government, but that's the explanation I've received, and that's why they got rid of it.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Information Requests on Contracted Legal Services (continued)

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are eagerly anticipating the Ethics Commissioner's ruling into the actions of this Premier. We have recently learned that there has been political interference and a political cover-up. We filed a FOIP on this issue, and it was returned from Alberta Justice with 1,000 pages blocked out. To the Minister of Justice, a simple yes or no: does your chief of staff and close political confidant have to sign off on what information is disclosed?

Mr. Denis: No.

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mr. Saskiw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the FOIP manager for Alberta Justice asked permission from your chief of staff to release information, would you agree that your office is providing political interference to protect this Premier and cover up the facts?

Mr. Denis: No.

The Speaker: Final sup.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think those words speak really loudly.

Why are you purposely blocking and hiding this key information from the public? What facts are you covering up?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, this member isn't going to get off that easy the third time. The question that he asked could be the subject of a point of order under 23(h), (i), and (j) because it assumes many facts that are simply not in evidence. I do not direct anything to do with FOIP in my office. I've stated this before. If he would even read the particular e-mail, the e-mail in no way seeks to restrict any information out. We have no control of the e-mails we receive, but the e-mail went out, and there's absolutely nothing that the chief of staff has sought to destroy in any way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Dertour Academy 2013

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. While building Alberta, tourism has a vital role to play in showcasing Alberta's profile and appeal while broadening and diversifying our economy. This week 600 travel agents and journalists from Germany are in Alberta as part of the Dertour Academy, so my question is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. In this current climate of fiscal restraint why are we rolling out the carpet for these travel agents?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for her question. Dertour is Germany's number one tour provider, and every year they host the Dertour Academy. They've been doing this for 40 years. For the first time ever Alberta is hosting the Dertour Academy, and we will have 600 of the top travel agents in Germany visiting us. Now, Travel Alberta anticipates an at least 20 per cent increase in tourist traffic from Germany as a result of the Dertour Academy, with a resulting economic impact of some 16,000 additional visitors, creating $16 million in increased economic activity.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As building Alberta is important, I am thrilled that my constituency is part of the two host communities, Calgary and Banff, but what about all the fantastic tourism locations in the rest of the province?

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, there's no question that Alberta has a variety of fantastic tourist locations. Where these agents go is the decision of Dertour, and I will tell you that Dertour has chosen wisely. In addition to Calgary and Banff, they've chosen 19 additional locations within this province for the tour guides to go on familiarization tours both before and afterwards; for example, ice climbing in Canmore, snowshoeing in the Edmonton river valley, touring the Royal Tyrrell Museum in Drumheller, and sampling a wide range of Alberta-produced beverages and foods.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again to the same minister: what did Travel Alberta have to promise to get this huge German organization to come to Alberta?

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will tell you that hosting Dertour is a very competitive process. This Premier and our government are committed to building Alberta by increasing our tourism industry from $7.8 billion to $10.3 billion by 2020, employing 139,000 people in 19,000 businesses, and providing $1.15 billion in provincial tax revenues to provincial coffers. Winning the opportunity to host the Dertour Academy came about as a direct result of our attendance at the London Olympics. When we go abroad we get results, and we're . . .

Education Performance Measures

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, the OECD just released its triennial report on education. It tested students from across the globe. As a country we have fallen behind, but as a province we have really hit the skids. Our grades are sliding. The Minister of Education was quick to blame teachers: oh, if they were only trained more. Now, I'm sure that teachers would approve of appropriate professional development – I know they would – but this government and this minister ought to accept the fact and recognize that larger class sizes, fewer teachers, and fewer resources are contributing to this as well. Does he realize that?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it sounds like another spending day from the Wildrose. I'm not sure where to begin with this question because there are so many inaccuracies about it. First of all, the assertion that I said that about teachers is completely inaccurate. The more alarming and the more concerning assertion is that our system is on the skids. It certainly is not. If the member would look at the OECD results, he would see that the results from Alberta and the results from Canada show that our kids are performing well above the OECD average on numeracy, on literacy, and on science. We're doing well, although there are areas that we need to look at, and we're paying very close attention to that.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, Inspiring Education is upheld as some sort of crown jewel for Alberta Education, and there's a lot good about it. But I don't think a 32 per cent decline in mathematics is anything to beat your desks about, folks.

Given that a lot of parents are starting to refer to this government's education talk as edubabble, can the minister see from this obvious proof that all Inspiring Education is a lack of confidence and a lack of results inspired by this government?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I think this hon. member needs to do some math work. The test scores on the math did not drop by 30-some per cent. That's quite an astonishing claim, and I think he needs to do his homework. He's also misquoting me and others.

I would point to things that are easy to pick up on, and it's the article that was in the Globe and Mail two days ago by Andreas Schleicher, who is the guru of testing and who does these tests. He says, "Then you look across borders and you find that most high-performing education systems have quite large classes and focused their resources instead on the quality of teachers." So that's the OECD quote.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, results matter. That is how life works.

Given that this government has made it very clear that it supports a no-zero policy and given that this government celebrates wanting to change the way that our kids are graded, taking away those dreaded and offensive letter grades and percentages, when will the minister and his team realize what parents already know: there's a huge difference between preparing your kids for the path and preparing the path for your kids?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I've seen some of the members comments, and I think they're quite alarming. They're comments like: we need no transformation; our system is just fine the way it is. So the Wildrose doesn't support changes to PATs, they don't support dual crediting, they don't support these kinds of things that we're working on. I find that hard to believe.

Mr. Speaker, there's lots of great work being done, and it's being done because there were five years of dialogue done with Albertans, thousands of Albertans, numbers of professionals, employers. They all told us what path to go down. There's a blueprint that's been created very thoughtfully, very well-respected right across the globe, and we're heading down that path, and it's going to be the right thing to do.

Mr. Hehr: As noted, a major international report released by the OECD shows that Alberta educational performance in math, science, and reading is slipping at a faster rate than most other provinces. This report adds to the growing body of evidence that this government is failing our students. To the minister: is it not obvious that at least part of the reason why our test scores are going down is because our education system has 51,000 more students attending school than it did three years ago, with 1,000 fewer teachers teaching those students?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of things that we can point to in terms of the slide of our math scores, but I do want to emphasize that there are a couple of great things about the reports that came out. They do emphasize to parents that if you want to ask the questions, "Are our kids prepared? Are they able to compete with the skills they have in the global economy?" the answer is yes. We're performing extremely well in all three categories. The other thing is that Canada and Alberta have one of the most equitable education systems on the planet even though we have one of the most diverse student populations. It matters least where you live, who your parents are, how much money you have . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, first supplemental.

Mr. Hehr: The facts and numbers don't lie. We now have two comprehensive international studies that indicate Alberta educational performance is on the decline. Could that be the case because Alberta has clearly walked away from the Alberta class size initiative of 2003 and now has children in classrooms bursting at the seams, some teachers having 40 kids in each room?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I say once again that we have an incredible education system in this province, and the OECD test results prove that. Certainly, we have some concern with the decline in math. There are steps being taken to address that. I would point out also, though, that many of the countries that we compare ourselves to regularly – like Finland, Australia, New Zealand – that are high-performing countries, have declined faster than we have, and the countries that are at the top in math are the Asian countries. There's work to be done, but let's not tear down our education system. We've got a fantastic system right now, and our kids are well prepared.

Mr. Hehr: Given that jurisdictions that are moving up in the rankings are those that have instituted early childhood learning strategies like kindergarten and junior kindergarten and learn through play programs, why has this government broken the Premier's promise of funding full-day kindergarten across this province?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we're looking everywhere we can to gather best practices from other jurisdictions, including Quebec, that's instituted a lot of work on training teachers on math specialization so that they can increase their numeracy scores. We've got a commitment on early childhood development and full-day K. We're working on that.

I want to once again point out to the member some of the things that he seems to ignore out of the report, though. Once again, Andreas Schleicher saying:

High performers . . . [in this report] prioritize the quality of teachers over the size of classes. Think about it: In many countries, Canada included, significant resources have gone into making classes smaller. Parents like it, teachers like it, and ministers become very popular . . . But then you look across borders and you find that most high-performing education systems . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, the time has expired.

Public-service Contract Negotiations

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, this past week the PC government put the spotlight on its antidemocratic, regressive, and vindictive ideology. With bills 45 and 46 the PCs have launched a co-ordinated assault on the freedom of speech and right to assemble, things you just don't mess with in Alberta. This week you have fundamentally betrayed Albertans. To the Minister of Human Services: have you no shame?

Mr. Hancock: I guess one could respond to that with the question: have you no access to reality?

In this province, as the Deputy Premier just a few minutes ago outlined, we have access to free and open elections. We have access to the right to congregate, we have access to be able to speak our minds in appropriate ways and appropriate places, we have the opportunity to participate, and we have the opportunity to elect a democratically elected government, this government, which operates on the values of Albertans.

Mr. Bilous: Not after Bill 45 passes.

Mr. Speaker, given that 51,000 public-sector workers in B.C. just received a 5.5 per cent wage increase over five years and will receive bonuses if the economy continues to grow and given that here in Alberta, with inflation at 1.5 per cent, this PC government is forcing a rollback on the wages of 21,000 workers, to the minister: why are you intent on attacking Albertans?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a very interesting question because we're talking about an offer that was made and a counteroffer that was made in a negotiation in B.C. that came through a rather unique arrangement, one that would not have happened through an arbitration process. It happened through a negotiation process, and that's exactly what we're asking for now. We want them to come back to the table, with an offer if possible, because our offer is still on the table, which is a fairly reasonable offer.

Mr. Bilous: In B.C. they can still strike.

Given that this year the PCs doled out over $3 million in bonuses to overpaid AHS executives and given that the Premier claims that people are pleased with rollbacks to the wages of hard-working Albertans, to the Premier: how dare you reward your friends and then suggest that public-sector workers are pleased by your blatant hypocrisy.

2:30

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the facts are clear. There are still two months left for negotiation. The government has put an offer on the table for negotiation. All we are asking for at this point in time is for the AUPE to not block negotiation but to return to the table and negotiate. At this point in time it's impossible to predict what the outcome would be. However, in the meantime if that is not possible, we do have the responsibility of living within our means and making sure that our hard-working public servants are remunerated in a respectable manner.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Edmonton-Riverview.

Alberta Health Services Executive Pay

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all know that in June the Health minister fired the AHS Board. The tipping point was the fact that so many executives wanted to return their bonuses. According to the minister, the board told these kind-hearted execs that they had to keep their money, so the minister fired the board and said: I'm going to make sure they get the option not to take it. Well, today we learned that the minister overestimated the charity of these executives as only 1 out of 100 returned the money. Minister, were you misled by these executives? Who told you that they would return the money?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, there certainly was an issue with respect to a compensation model at Alberta Health Services that allowed for pay at risk as opposed to the term "bonus," that the hon. member used. I'm proud of the fact that this government stood up not only within the public sector generally but within Alberta Health Services and said that there would be no more pay at risk as part of the compensation structure for senior executives. That is in keeping with Albertans' values.

Mrs. Forsyth: The only reason you're keeping with their values is because Albertans spoke up against it.

Minister, your reasons for firing the board are now unravelling. Given that the board refused to withhold performance bonuses and then so did the minister and given that the board couldn't get executives to return the money and then neither could the minister, can the minister please explain who's running the show?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta is providing direct oversight of the health care system in this province. That has always been the case. The members of the former board at Alberta Health Services, whom we thank for their service, I'm sure did their best in their role to try to move forward the goals that we have for the health care system and for the outcomes that we want to see for Albertans. Whether the issue was pay at risk or whether the issue is oversight in other very, very important areas like continuing care, the fact of the matter is that this Premier has stepped up, is providing the direct oversight that Albertans demand, and we are improving our health care system every day.

Mrs. Forsyth: Minister, it's a blame game. If you screw up, you blame AHS. If AHS screws up, you blame them, so please.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that only one single executive turned down their performance bonus while $3 million was paid out to the rest, where are all the others who told you that they desperately wanted to give the money back?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will make no secret of the fact that I am disappointed that more of those senior executives did not see their way clear to avoid receipt of the pay-at-risk component, but notwithstanding the fact that not as many of them did make that choice, the fact is that today because of this Premier there is no more pay at risk at Alberta Health Services. There has been reform, significant reform, with respect to travel and hospitality and other expenses. This government has taken leadership in showing necessary restraint . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mental Health Supports

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While postsecondary institutions in Alberta provide excellent education and support, some university students who feel stressed, isolated, overwhelmed, and who struggle with depression or mental illness are seeing innovative approaches resulting from the three-year funding grant targeted at students within the university communities. My concern is that these innovative supports are going to end after three years. To the Minister of Health. These needs will continue. Will the targeted supports?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, that is an excellent question. I had the opportunity to meet the other day with the Canadian association of university students to talk about the impact of this $3 million investment. Our commitment to supporting the mental health needs of postsecondary students will continue. This grant is just one of the ways that we are going to continue to provide that support.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Young: Thank you. To the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education: where do students' supports, particularly for mental health, fit within the mandate letters to Alberta universities?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Good question. Mr. Speaker, all educators know that students need to be well in order to learn well. So yes, actually, in the 26 letters that we have just recently signed with all 26 Alberta postsecondary institutions – don't quote me on it directly – there is a line item that demands that all postsecondaries provide students with all of the services that they need in order to create an environment that is conducive to learning. That is an area where our ministry and, most particularly, postsecondary institutions have to co-operate with the Ministry of Health and deliver those services jointly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Young: Thank you. Back to the Minister of Health: whether it's university students, children, families, seniors, or any other Albertans, what psychological counselling supports are available to Albertans?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are many opportunities for Albertans to access psychological services and other mental health services. A key focus of primary health care improvement in Alberta has been to deploy addiction and mental health resources in all points of care, ultimately, in our system: primary care networks; family care clinics; as the hon. member has said, in the postsecondary sector; in schools, through the mental health capacity building initiative; and in many others. A full 40 per cent of visits to family doctors in the province are estimated to be for a mental health or addictions-related issue. This is a critical . . .

The Speaker: Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Calgary-Currie.

Information Request on Disaster Recovery Program

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, we see time and time again how this government spends big bucks on commission studies and then tries to bury the results and obscure the findings. Residents of Cypress-Medicine Hat have seen this again as this government denied the Medicine Hat News freedom of information request for documents related to the KPMG report on the disaster recovery program. While the report was completed in 2012, the government sat on it for over a year. What is this government hiding from taxpayers, flood victims in Cypress-Medicine Hat, and the Medicine Hat News?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, the answer is very simple. The report was released, and anybody can look at it. It has been for a while.

Mr. Barnes: Only 10 out of 42 things were answered in the FOIP, Mr. Speaker.

Given that even PC MLAs like the Member for Banff-Cochrane have expressed frustration at the delivery of the disaster recovery program and that slow response times, conflicting information, and delayed payments are causing undue stress and hardship, does the Minister understand why the DRP is such a failure and that hiding the report for over a year has made this much worse?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, we used that report to improve the program. I have to say that 4,000 payments have gone out in the most recent disaster, totalling almost $25 million. Out of the previous report on the 2010 disaster that we had in that member's constituency, almost 2,800 people were helped. There are only five outstanding claims, which we're still working to resolve in the interest of making sure that taxpayers are not paying more than they should. That's good work.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, many in Cypress-Medicine Hat gave up because of the frustration. Given that implementation of the recommendations when it mattered, in 2012, could have solved some of the needless upheaval and emotional stress that Albertans have experienced, when will the ministers involved commit to full transparency instead of hiding the failures of this PC government?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, before that report was released, we made a lot of different changes to the DRP to make sure that it was more responsive, which again is why we have had almost 4,000 cheques go out in the last couple of months. That's a total of $25 million. I've talked to colleagues from across Canada and from across North America who say that their biggest concern is that they're going to have to match Alberta's speed in reaction to this flood, and they don't know if they can handle it because we did such an exceptional job and set the bar so high that we now have the gold standard in response to disasters.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

2:40 Recreational Land Use in Southern Alberta

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgary-Currie is home to many outdoor enthusiasts. They regularly keep me informed of their needs as Albertans who like to live active lifestyles in our majestic backyard. Hiking, climbing, skiing, backpacking, and camping are low-impact, fundamental recreational activities that happen in parks and on Crown lands in the area covered by the South Saskatchewan regional plan. Will the Minister of ESRD confirm that the South Saskatchewan regional plan implementation will not limit access to existing backcountry trails and areas that hikers, climbers, skiers, and other low-impact users are currently using for recreation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans who love to get out into the backcountry for hiking, climbing, and other low-impact recreation will not be negatively impacted. In fact, new conservation areas will offer new opportunities. Nine new proposed conservation areas will provide more than 130,000 hectares of low-impact recreation opportunities such as hiking and horseback riding, and 21 new or expanded provincial parks and rec areas add in almost 1,500 hectares for all forms of recreation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how can you say that this government is taking recreational access seriously when there are no subregion management plans for recreation, but there are plans for resources like oil and gas, forestry, and agriculture?
