Mr. Speaker, I think that it is important for this House and for the freedom of speech we should enjoy in this House and for the opposition to do its job properly to be able to hold the government to account and ask hard questions about the conduct of government, ministers, and Premiers in their conduct of public business. That is, I think, something that's essential to our parliamentary system and something, quite frankly, that over many years in many countries has rooted out corruption, malfeasance, malpractice on the part of many governments. That role, I think, is very, very precious and needs to be very carefully preserved.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that you will find in this case and rule on and recognize what the Government House Leader's actual wish or hope is, and that is to shut down debate on this very sensitive subject. That's what the points of order amount to, in my view, an attempt to stifle debate and to stifle the Official Opposition from getting to the core of an issue that may in fact hurt the government very seriously and, quite frankly, for which the government has no one to blame but itself.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: That concludes speakers on the point of order raised. I suspect that this particular point of order might apply to a number of other subsequent points of order that were raised, so I'm going to take a few moments here to address what has occurred.

I believe I have mentioned at least eight or 10 times that the principles that govern the procedures and practices of this House – the rules, the guidelines, and whatever else you might want to call them – are of great importance to all of us, and all we need to do is to refresh our memories from time to time as to what they are. I'm going to do that, hon. members.

For example, if we look at some of the principles that are included in Erskine May, we will note on page 445 that the text cites expressions which are unparliamentary and call for prompt interference by the chair. Basically, these pertain to the following:

- (1) the imputation of false or unavowed motives;
- (2) the misrepresentation of the language of another and the accusation of misrepresentation;
- (3) charges of uttering a deliberate falsehood;
- (4) abusive and insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder. The Speaker has said in this connection that whether a word should be regarded as unparliamentary depends on the context in which it is used.

I myself have referenced that on a number of occasions.

Now, in Beauchesne you'll find a lovely section on page 121, depending on which edition you're looking at, and it says:

- (7) A question must adhere to the proprieties of the House, in terms of inferences, imputing motives or casting aspersions upon persons within the House or out of it.

I would remind you of that one.

It goes on to state:

- (12) Questions should not be hypothetical.

Hypotheses are frequently what allegations may be based on, as we all know, and that is unfortunate.

As I go on through my notes, I note that with respect to page 444 of Erskine May it also states:

Good temper and moderation are the characteristics of parliamentary language. Parliamentary language is never more desirable than when a Member is canvassing the opinions and conduct of his opponents in debate.

It goes on to page 445 to talk about abusive and insulting language, which I'll bring to your attention for the second time.

Then we go on to the issue of personal attacks. Be they by direct name or by innuendo or by inference, the nature of them is always the same. In House of Commons Procedure and Practice on page 422 it says:

In presiding over the conduct of this daily activity, Speakers have been guided by a number of well-defined prohibitions. In 1983, when the procedure for Statements by Members was first put in place, Speaker Sauvé stated that . . .

- personal attacks are not permitted.

And the quote goes on. I'll save some time and not read it all.

Finally, you will know that our own standing orders, which I highly recommend all of you to please visit and visit often if you're ever in doubt, on page 14, for example, you're all familiar with because 23(h), (i), (j), (k), and (l) have been raised on a few occasions already, and you should be there. But let me just go through them quickly. Section 23 states:

A Member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that Member . . .

- (h) makes allegations against another Member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member;
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder . . .
- (l) introduces any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly.

Now, I have read those to you before in one version or form or another, so I ask you to please remember them not only during question period but otherwise as well.

Now, specifically to the matter at hand, I think we all know that there is a mechanism already in place that deals with or can deal with allegations that a member feels put another member into a conflict-of-interest position. For example, members can always refer such matters to the Ethics Commissioner. There is a process outlined, in fact, in the Conflicts of Interest Act, which I know you are all very familiar with. The reference to the Ethics Commissioner should of course be something that you are familiar with as a process and as a practice that has been used before, and you're certainly welcome to use it again as you feel should fit the occasion, if it does.

Now, I'm somewhat curious about a decision that was announced back on May 31, 2012, by the government and whether or not that matter has now been referred to the Ethics Commissioner. I think it would bode well if someone were to clear that up either today or perhaps tomorrow because this matter, that was frequently raised today, is something that you may want to visit and review in the context of that date.

Today's proceedings actually demonstrate a lot about the wisdom of leaving any such review to the proper channels and to the Conflicts of Interest Act, that I've just indicated should be visited. It should be left to an independent officer of the Legislature and not to the cut and thrust and the heat that often accompanies our question period.

That having been said, I would ask again that all of you please check your language very carefully and very closely, both before the questions are raised, on the one hand and on the one side of the House, and with the answers and the tone of the answers and the content of the answers given by government members who are replying. There has been a lot said here in the last several minutes that clarifies this issue quite succinctly.

As such, we're going to move on to the next point of order, assuming there is another point of order, and I'll ask the Government House Leader to please state his citation and what it is.

Point of Order Reflections on a Nonmember

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, two succinct points of order, and I will be very brief. The Member for Airdrie rose during question period today and specifically made an allegation against the president-elect of the Law Society and named him, and that offends the rules of the House and, specifically, Beauchesne's 409(7). It's a very inappropriate thing to do, and it was a very inappropriate question. Everybody clearly understood what he was alleging in that question. Everybody understood who he was alleging it against. I would just ask the hon. member to do the right thing and withdraw that allegation and the insinuation that somehow a person who's not in the House, who was described as being a senior member of the Law Society of Alberta would somehow be compromised in carrying out his duties, somehow would be implicated in the process, somehow would be connected to any sort of ethical filing that was sent to the Law Society.

It's quite an inappropriate thing to raise in the House when the person who's named specifically, and clearly not only by name but by position, is unable to defend themselves, unable to clear the air. Again, if there's any question about that person, there are appropriate processes, and this member as a member of the Law Society knows what those processes are.

The Speaker: Before I go to the Member for Airdrie, I too am going to extend that courtesy to the hon. Member for Airdrie. I have the Blues here, and I'm prepared to get into them if you feel it's necessary.

Hon. Member for Airdrie, let's hear from you.

Mr. Anderson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate it. I also have the question. The question was very simple.

To the Premier. I have another problem [to ask you about]. If I need to make a complaint on behalf of Albertans to the Law Society of Alberta for what seems like an egregious violation of professional code of conduct, how can I feel comfortable doing so when the president-elect of the Law Society of Alberta . . .

That's the individual I'd have to complain to about this exact complaint, the complaint dealing with the stuff that we've been discussing.

. . . itself happens to be Carsten Jensen, senior partner in – you guessed it – the exact law firm that you awarded the tobacco contract to?

I'm going to clarify right now that I assumed that Mr. Jensen would be fair and impartial. Absolutely. I would assume that, but here's the problem, Mr. Speaker. I don't feel comfortable and I don't think anybody would feel comfortable to launch a complaint and draw it to the attention of this individual, whose law firm is directly the question of what I'm going to be launching the complaint about.

Now, I don't see how that is alleging any kind of allegation against Mr. Jensen. I'm sure he's a good person. I've never met him before. I'm sure he's a fine, upstanding individual. But it goes to what we're talking about here, Mr. Speaker. What avenue do I possibly have to launch this complaint against the Premier, who keeps saying – you heard her today – that if you've got a complaint, you go and complain to the Law Society? How can I do so?

To find that I've cast aspersions on this individual is simply not true. I'm just simply stating the point that he's in a conflict here. He's done nothing wrong, but he's in a conflict. If I don't give facts to the situation, the questions won't make sense. I don't even understand how this could even be a point of order on just simply asking a very legitimate question. I didn't say that Mr. Jensen did anything wrong. I didn't say that he was going to do anything wrong. I did imply there was a conflict of interest. Clearly, there's a conflict of interest, but that's no fault of Mr. Jensen. It's no fault of Mr. Jensen. I think that's clear.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Well, the hon. Government House Leader has risen on this point of order, citing that it is inappropriate, I'm sure, to raise names of individuals in a light that might be cast upon them somehow as an implication or as some other form of slurring or slandering or whatever it might be that it could be connected to. In this instance I quickly looked up House of Commons Procedure and Practice on pages 616, 617.

3:30

Let me just read you what it says, and then we'll get on to the point here.

Reference by Name to Members of the Public

Members are discouraged from referring by name to persons who are not Members of Parliament and who do not enjoy parliamentary immunity, except in extraordinary circumstances when the national interest calls for this. The Speaker has ruled that Members have a responsibility to protect the innocent, not only from outright slander, but from any slur directly or indirectly implied, and suggested that Members avoid as much as possible mentioning by name people from outside the House who are unable to reply in their own defence.

Now, I want to focus in on “directly or indirectly implied” because as I review this particular quote from Hansard, I am not only looking at the words, but I'm also remembering the tone, the context, the temper with which, the passion with which it may have been delivered. What I recall and what I am going to remind the Member for Airdrie of is that there was a certain tone of innuendo, in the Speaker's opinion, that I believe I picked up, but what I want to focus in on besides that is the fact that we have mentioned a person's name here in that context. I'm going to ask the hon. Member for Airdrie if you would like to please retract that statement wherein you mentioned the person's name.

Mr. Anderson: I will retract that statement.

The Speaker: Thank you very much. I appreciate it. That concludes that matter.

Are there other points of order, or have we covered them?

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Hancock: I will leave aside all the other points of order but one, and that is when the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview rose to ask a question this afternoon, I believe, to the hon. Provincial Treasurer and used the words “intentionally mislead.” I don't have the Blues, so I don't know whether it was Albertans. I think it was Albertans. He said it directly, he said it purposefully, and he intended to say it. He knew in doing so – you could tell from the tone of the voice – that he was doing so intentionally.

We've got to get past this. The budget is the budget. In the budget the Provincial Treasurer brought forward estimates with respect to the revenue, and those estimates were based on calculations as the Provincial Treasurer has said over and over again in this House. Members opposite are entitled to have their opinions as to whether they could do a better job of forecasting and whether or not there's something else.

I'm rising under 490 and 492 of Beauchesne's. In both circumstances the words “intentionally misled” or words very, very similar to those have been ruled unparliamentary in the past, and I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that they should be ruled unparliamentary again today. The member should be asked to apologize and withdraw the statement.

That is an allegation also against a member under Standing Order 23(h) because it was specifically about the Provincial Treasurer. He's basically, through other words, calling the Provincial Treasurer a liar.

We have got to raise the level of discourse in this place. If we want the public to engage in important discussions of public policy, if we want them to take those discussions seriously, we can't be calling each other names, and we can't be using that kind of invective. I appreciate it goes both ways sometimes, but today was particularly egregious. In fact, it was bilious, and it's got to stop.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will ignore the last adjective that the Government House Leader used and will avoid making an opinion as to whether it was a deliberate slight or not to my hon. colleague and get on with the point of order.

The allegation by the Government House Leader that unparliamentary language was used, in my view, is not valid. Mr. Speaker, it is clear from the practice and the rulings that I have heard and from the standing orders as well as Beauchesne's that "deliberately misled" is, in fact, unparliamentary language when it is directed against another member. This is found on page 143 of Beauchesne's. Section 488 says this clearly: "It has been ruled unparliamentary to refer to a Member as . . ." and it goes on to give a long list.

The Government House Leader doesn't have the exact words that were used, but I do because I have the text that was used, and it was delivered verbatim. It said, "Mr. Speaker, given that this Conservative government intentionally misled Albertans by using a budget based on overly optimistic projections – in other words, rainbows and unicorns . . ." He is dealing with the actions of the government, not an individual member.

That will bring me to the second point made by the hon. Government House Leader, where he quoted Standing Order 23(h): "allegations against another Member." That, according to the Government House Leader, is directed against the Provincial Treasurer. This is absolutely false, Mr. Speaker. The member's statement in his preamble – and it was his first question, so it was actually a legitimate preamble – said that the government had misled Albertans, not another member but the government.

That is, in my view, a very accurate statement, and it is certainly the view of our caucus and our party that in the last election and in the last budget the government used projections for tax revenues, for royalty revenues, and so on that were artificially inflated so that they could in fact campaign on a platform of increasing services. They made a wide range of promises, Mr. Speaker, and the list went up very substantially as they found themselves in some difficulty in the campaign. Suddenly there was somewhere between $3 billion and $6 billion of campaign promises – they were going to eliminate child poverty, they were going to put 140 new public health clinics in place, they were going to put billions of dollars against the deficit, and they were going to clean up the deficit by next year, among many others – all based on the misleading projections that were used in the last budget by this government and repeated over and over by the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party in her campaign.

Now we're finding – and we learned today in the second-quarter update – that, in fact, those projections were way off and that we're still headed towards a $2 billion to $3 billion deficit in the next election. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to you that an allegation that the government misled Albertans in the last election or that the Progressive Conservative Party misled Albertans in the last election is not only substantially true but is within the rules of order because it is not an allegation directed against a particular member of this Assembly. As such, I don't think it is protected by the rules.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we won't consume more time on this. We've dealt with a number of citations over the last half hour or so and in earlier discussions.

Hon. members, I want to raise to your attention again what was exactly said and what caused the Government House Leader to rise on a point of order. The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, as the New Democratic leader just said, rose, and he said, "Mr. Speaker, given that this Conservative government intentionally misled Albertans," and it goes on. Now, we know that there's a long list of words that are parliamentary and unparliamentary. In this instance let me cite for you Beauchesne's section 492 again, where it says, "The following expressions are a partial listing of expressions which have caused intervention on the part of the Chair, as listed in the Index of the Debates between 1976 and 1987." They still stand today. To go on with the quote, it says, "deliberately misled," and it goes on further to say "deliberately misled," and "misleading" is in here somewhere as well. We've dealt with that issue before and those exact words before.

At issue now is whether this was directed at an individual member or not. Now, I think we all know what the word "government" means and that government essentially does mean people. You can interpret it either way. Having been an English teacher, I can stand by that. By extension you could say that it was directed not only against one member but against 20 or however many members might be in government because government is a living, human body of people.

I looked at this very carefully. I know that under Standing Order 23(j) it says that a member will be called to order by the Speaker if in the Speaker's opinion that member "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." In this particular case I think some disorder was created. So while it is technically parliamentary or unparliamentary, depending on how you interpret what I've just said, I would ask that you please, again, not use words or phrases that do cause that kind of disruption and disorder and result in points of order and, in turn, rulings by the chair, particularly if you're using them specifically during our well-known and well-televised question period to gain attention or to focus attention in, perhaps, a wrongful way, and that, in turn, causes disorder, as I just mentioned.

Hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition, I would ask you to review that with your hon. member so that we can avoid these circumstances going forward. I'm sure that there will be occasions again when something close to this will arise, but I would ask you to please mention this to your hon. colleague and ask him to please refrain from using phrases like that in the future, and I would remind all members here to do the same. Thank you for speaking on his behalf.

That concludes it for this afternoon unless there are other points of order.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I did rise on a second point.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much. I'll be very brief, Mr. Speaker. The point of order I rose on was pursuant to Standing Order 23(h), (i), (j), and (l), when the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood referred to the Minister of Justice, obviously being me, and then something about misleading. Now, he talked earlier about referring to a group of people, but this was directly against me. I'm not going to make big deal out of it. I just ask that he withdraw the remark. I refer you also to Beauchesne's section 489, which indicates that "mislead" or "misleading" are inappropriate terms, the same as 490.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Is there anyone else who wishes to speak to this matter? The hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition.

Mr. Mason: I'm at a disadvantage since the hon. Justice minister can't seem to recall what the words were or the context. It's very hard for me to respond. I'd be happy to do so if he could . . .

An Hon. Member: Just withdraw, then.

Mr. Mason: But I can't withdraw something that I don't even remember.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I would really, really, deeply appreciate the opportunity to make a point here, and that is that we stand in a Chamber modelled on a system where once members stood with swords, and that's the instrument that kept order in this Chamber. Now it's governed by rules of order, which might well be called rules of disorder because that's really what they're for, to manage disorder. This is an adversarial system. We're different parties. We come here to conflict with differing opinions. What allows the free discourse in this House is precisely those rules of order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood talked about the government trying to stifle the debate here. Quite the opposite, Mr. Speaker. We wish to allow the debate but within the rules. It's the rules of order that actually allow for the exchange of ideas in here without the acrimony and the waste of time. We've just wasted another hour and a half of legislative time here.

I sincerely hope, Mr. Speaker, that in the event that I were to use a term to slander or accuse somebody on that side of the House, I would be able to revisit the fact that all of those people there are duly elected by their constituents and deserving of my respect, and I would be able to withdraw the comment, and we could move on.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe what's being referred to here occurred at approximately 2:10 p.m., when the leader of the New Democratic opposition rose right after the Minister of Justice had risen and said the following: "Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the current Justice minister is attempting to define this question in a way that completely misleads Albertans," and you went on.

We just dealt with this point earlier, and that is what you said according to the Blues. I can get into a long, lengthy ruling here if you wish, or I can ask you to just do the honourable thing and withdraw that comment. Clearly, Albertans are people, and they should not be maligned in any way. I'm sure you perhaps didn't mean to, but the cut and thrust of debate sometimes yields that result.

Hon. member, I'll recognize you for that purpose.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Justice minister is indeed a human being, and I did not mean to imply – in framing the question as he did, I meant to imply that he might lead people to the wrong conclusion. I'm sure that it would not be a deliberate attempt on his part to frame an issue in a way to protect the Premier if that wasn't warranted. So in that sense I am prepared to withdraw the use of "misleads."

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. That concludes that point of order.

Are there any others now that we haven't dealt with directly or indirectly as a result of previous points of order? Seeing none, we can move on.

Hon. Member for Airdrie, you have a Standing Order 30 you wish to bring forward. Please proceed.

Request for Emergency Debate

Tobacco Recovery Lawsuit

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't know. Perhaps if we can just in the future forward our questions somewhere to get them sanitized in advance, that would probably be a way to save some time since it seems unclear sometimes what we can and can't ask in here.

I rise today pursuant to Standing Order 30. It is:

Be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the need for the government of Alberta to suspend all activities and proceedings related to any contracts it has with International Tobacco Recovery consortium, including Jensen Shawa Solomon Duguid Hawkes LLP, that are related to the tobacco recovery litigation until a full investigation has been completed by the Ethics Commissioner of Alberta and all results therefrom made public.

I first would like to address how I am terming this. Had we termed it in that we debate making sure that we compel the Ethics Commissioner to do an investigation into this, which, of course, we can't do, then we would have a problem. I realize that. We can't control what the Ethics Commissioner will or will not do, but we can control what we do, Mr. Speaker, and that is why what is within the government's control and what is a matter of urgent importance is with regard to the litigation. That cannot wait.

I could have brought something up that we need to help restore some of the reputation of the government on this issue and a whole bunch of other things, but instead the only thing that I think is relevant to a Standing Order 30 in this case is actually ceasing all activities being undertaken with regard to this consortium on behalf of this government.

The reason why it is urgent, first of all. I'll refer to Standing Order 30(7), which is:

A motion under this Standing Order is subject to the following conditions:

- (a) the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration;
- (b) not more than one such motion may be [made] on the same day . . .

And so forth. Now, the reason that this is so urgent, first off, is because what is happening right now is that the litigation is in its infancy. It is just starting. There are lawyers in law firms scrambling around, spending a lot of money, spending a lot of time on the government's behalf pursuing this matter. There's no doubt about that.

The amount of money involved here is astronomical. We are talking about a $10 billion lawsuit. Now, we do not have access. We do not know what the contingency fee is or if there is a contingency fee. We don't know. But if it is a contingency fee, a lot of times that could be 5 per cent, 10 per cent, 20 per cent, 35 per cent. We don't know.

What we're talking about here could cost taxpayers, if there is a recovery, not just millions of dollars but billions of dollars, depending on the size of the settlement. That is how massive this litigation is. We're not talking about a few hundred dollars or a few thousand dollars in donations and so forth. We're talking about possibly billions of dollars, certainly hundreds of millions of dollars, that the taxpayers of Alberta will not have going into general revenues if this is continually pursued.

Now, the reason I say that is this. We don't know, Mr. Speaker, from the allegations and the proof that we have tabled – and we'll go over it very quickly – whether the taxpayers of Alberta are getting the best deal possible. We don't know whether we could get a 5 per cent contingency rather than, say, a 10 per cent contingency, if that's what it is, which is a difference of hundreds of millions of dollars. We don't know that. I don't think we can have confidence – and we need a debate on this – that the proper tendering process was gone through without undue influence. That's what the documents that we have submitted suggest. This will be a very expensive problem for us if we continue on with this litigation without sorting this out to make sure that, indeed, we did follow the proper practices.

The Finance minister today released their budget report, the second-quarter update. We have another massive deficit on our hands. If we do not take care of this issue now, this will probably be the last chance we have to put a stop to this before moving forward any further. The further it goes forward, the more work is done, the bigger the problem.

Now, I will try to keep this next point as succinct as possible.

The Speaker: Hon. member, let's talk about the urgency as required under 30(2). That's what we're arguing here, not the motion itself. We're arguing the urgency of the debate.

Mr. Anderson: No. I understand that.

The Speaker: Why must it be done now? That's what we're arguing, so please get on with that part, or we'll move to the next speaker.

Mr. Anderson: It's incredible, isn't it?

The Speaker: Hon. member, please have a seat.

Mr. Anderson: What?

The Speaker: Please have a seat. The chair is not immune to what you uttered before you started this Standing Order 30. Do you recall what you said?

Mr. Anderson: I said . . . Do you want me to recall?

The Speaker: Do you recall what you said?

Mr. Anderson: No? Okay.

The Speaker: Thank you. I'm not here to debate with you. I'm asking you if you recall.

Mr. Anderson: No, no. I'm just asking if you want me to answer your question.

The Speaker: Okay. Good. So you recall it. I'm going to review it in Hansard as well just to see exactly what the tone and intent of that comment was because it had absolutely nothing to do with the Standing Order 30, but I allowed you to proceed nonetheless just in the interest of being fair.

Now, I'm not prepared to sit here and debate or argue what the rules are with you, hon. member. I'm simply asking you to please get on with what Standing Order 30(2) calls for. You know this, so here it is. Under urgent public importance 30(2) says, "The Member may briefly state the arguments in favour of the request for leave and the Speaker may allow such debate as he or she considers relevant to the question of urgency of debate." Then we can define urgency of debate. All I'm asking you to do now is to please get on with the argument about urgency for debate, not the debate itself. Please.

Mr. Anderson: Okay, Mr. Speaker. To clarify, I was not directing those comments at you, but we can talk about that after if you'd like. It was not intended to be disrespectful.

It's difficult to present an argument for urgency without giving any kind of context, but I will try. I'm trying to say that the cost of it would be so large – and if we don't stop it now, this will be the last time we have to contain the cost – to the taxpayer in this regard if something untoward has occurred.

Now, I'm going to be referring to three documents and only three documents for the purposes of this just to create the context on the urgency argument or else it won't make any sense.

The first was tabled. It's regarding a memo coming from the then Minister of Justice, the current Premier, dated December 14, 2010, which says:

Considering the perceived conflicts of interest, actual conflicts of interest, the structure of the contingency arrangement and the importance of a "made in Alberta" litigation plan, the best choice for Alberta will be the International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers.

That's the first document, just one paragraph from it. Again, that was while she was Justice minister.

The second piece is from the Deputy Minister of Justice, who specifically says that on October 25, 2010, the now Premier, then Justice minister announced that Alberta [will] initiate legal action to recover health care costs from the tobacco industry pursuant to the Crown's Right of Recovery Act," et cetera, et cetera, et cetera.

So – we'll shorten it up – they took in bids, et cetera.

The Review Committee's assessment of the three proposals was provided to the Minister of Justice . . . meaning the current Premier,

. . . in . . . December. All three consortiums were considered capable of adequately conducting the litigation, and no one consortium stood out above the others. Each had unique strengths and weaknesses.

Shortly before Christmas . . .

This is the Deputy Minister.

. . . [the Justice minister, the now Premier] selected the International Tobacco Recovery lawyers (the Jensen consortium).

The Speaker: Hon. member, with due respect please have a chair.

Let me just read for all members what this is all about just so that you would all know. Beauchesne's 390 states:

"Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but means "urgency of debate", when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the House do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and the public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

So why is this of paramount importance and urgency at this time when no other opportunities might be available to you and words to that effect? That's what is being discussed now or should be discussed now.

I'm going to allow you one final time to wrap this up. Remember our own Standing Order 30(2), that says, "The Member may briefly state the arguments." So I invite you to please be brief and be conclusive. Proceed.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, the reason it is urgent given the background – I won't give more, obviously – is very simple. This is the first opportunity we've had to debate it. If we do not debate it now, we will not have the opportunity in the future to stop the possible loss of money to the taxpayers that could be based on something that was untoward, which is the context I was trying to refer to.

As you've pointed out during question period and with your recent explanations in rulings, I'm more unsure than I've ever been about when else we're going to have an opportunity in this House to debate this issue. I don't know if we are even allowed to do it in question period anymore. I don't know when we're allowed to debate this anymore. It's completely up in the air. So if we don't debate it now, Mr. Speaker, while we have the opportunity, when else are we going to debate this issue?

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Minister of Justice, briefly.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll endeavour to be very brief further to your earlier ruling. Again, as you mentioned, pursuant to Beauchesne's 390 we're not reviewing the direct matter here; we're reviewing what constitutes and what's called urgent public importance.

Now, I would respectfully submit to you, sir, that there's nothing new on this story other than just some additional innuendo. Standing Order 30 is typically used for some very serious matters. It needs to be a matter of urgent public importance. I would submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that this matter first came to light with respect to a press release from my department at that time on May 30 of this year, and this is the first time this, in fact, has been raised.

There have been questions and answers on this throughout the entire day. I won't belabour the point on the issue, but I do want to mention that pursuant to section 1(5) of the Conflicts of Interest Act we know that a former spouse is not considered to be a direct associate under the act. We don't need additional debate or investigation under that in and of itself.

Now, I do want to turn your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the last two times this House has adjourned for Standing Order 30. It was February 23, 2012, Mr. Speaker, and March 14, 2011. Both of those matters dealt with matters to do with health care. I would agree that the matters of the health of Albertans could constitute a Standing Order 30. Obviously, it did in those particular cases. [interjections] I'll just ignore the boos and catcalls from across the way.

This litigation in Alberta, Mr. Speaker, is challenging and has to do with the conduct of tobacco companies years ago. Hiring outside counsel is entirely appropriate for a past Justice minister or, frankly, for the current one. We've indicated that if anyone wants to make a complaint, they can do so to the Ethics Commissioner, but again that does not involve a Standing Order

30 item. The ruling proposed today would also have the unintended consequence of perhaps even prejudicing the action. I also refer you to Standing Order 23(g), which prohibits any reference to matters of a civil nature that have been set down. The statement of claim already has been filed.

I also just wanted to mention as well that in the practice manual, page 674, it also talks about what constitutes an urgent nature, Mr. Speaker, and the first one that it mentions involves a matter dealing with Prime Minister Lester Pearson with respect to a Canadian peacekeeping force to Cyprus. That was a matter of urgent nature. This is not. It's been in the public since May 30, and this is the first time that this has been brought. I'm sure that the member that has brought Standing Order 30 does not do so solely for political gain – I'm sure he doesn't do that – but at the same time it does not meet the urgency test in Standing Order 30. I would ask that you respectfully decline the request.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this. First of all, I believe that this is the first opportunity to raise the issue. That's the first test. It's the first day that the House has been in session since the Premier's direct involvement in the awarding of this contract has been known. It has not, as the hon. Justice minister said, been in the public since May 30. The question relates to the former Justice minister's, now the Premier's, involvement in this question and her role, which was not known by the news release that he's referring to because – guess what? – the government didn't include those facts in its news release when it announced which firm had received the appointment.

Mr. Speaker, there is no other place in the agenda for this to be discussed, which is the second test. In the past we have accepted items for an emergency debate under Standing Order 30 notwithstanding the fact that question period was available to discuss the issue. Question period is not debate in the sense of attempting to come to some conclusion. There is no other place in the agenda, and it's clear that the government has no wish to discuss this matter. In fact, the Government House Leader was at pains today to try and cut off questions about it in question period, something that I and other opposition members will steadfastly oppose. So it is appropriate from that point of view.

Now, the question of urgent public importance. It's been suggested that this could be referred to the Ethics Commissioner, and perhaps it should be, but, Mr. Speaker, the inadequacy of our legislation around conflicts of interest is certainly well known, at least in some quarters, and the legislation may or may not cover this matter. It has really raised a question as to whether or not the common-sense ethics of the Premier recusing herself in this matter have been violated. It brings into question the integrity of the entire government. It is an urgent public matter that I think needs to be clearly addressed.

Secondly, it brings into question the conduct of the justice system in our province. The public needs to have full faith in the conduct of justice in this province, and they need to be assured that it is not affected by illegitimate considerations, which may or may not be the case here. It is clear to me that the public needs to know that the government has acted with integrity and that the justice system and the administration of justice in our province have not been compromised. Those are matters of urgent public importance. Given that our session may soon end, within a few days, and given the government's attempts to not have this matter discussed and to dismiss the question, this may well be the only opportunity to have a thorough discussion around the issue.

You know, the government argument that the Premier, then the Justice minister, was not the Justice minister when the final decision was made is of no bearing as to whether or not a conflict of interest exists. If someone uses their influence to try and move a decision to a certain place when they're in a position of authority to do so, it matters not that they were the person who made the final decision as far as any test for conflict of interest may be concerned. In that matter, the government's attempt to deflect adds to the urgency of this particular case.

Mr. Speaker, just in conclusion, this is indeed the first opportunity to raise the issue. Secondly, there is no other place on our agenda for this to be addressed. Thirdly, it calls into question the administration of justice and the integrity of the government, and it is therefore of urgent public importance. So I would ask you to rule that, in fact, this is a legitimate question.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we've heard from spokespeople from each of three different parties. I'm wondering if there's someone from the third party that might wish to participate as well. That would allow one person each from each group to have spoken. The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I heard the leader of the NDP and the member from Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, and I've been thinking about this, too. There's too much at stake. There are a billion dollars and integrity. Maybe it's not the reality, but the perception is that, you know, some favour has been done in awarding this contract.

I don't think we will be able to address this issue in any other way, shape, or form, and I think it should come in the House here. We should be able to debate it and scrutinize it in a way that we clear the air that there were no favours done here. The matter is of ethics. That brings into question the honesty, the integrity. It may be the perception, but it brings into question the integrity and ethics of the government. I think this is an urgent matter that should be debated on the floor of the House so we can clear the air once and for all.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we've heard from one spokesperson each from each of the four caucuses. Now, I've got two other members who wish to still chime in. I'm inclined to allow them to chime in if they can be very brief. Perhaps then we can move on with the ruling. I have the Government House Leader, and I have the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

On that basis, hon. Government House Leader, briefly, please proceed.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. The allegation has been made that the Government House Leader was trying to curtail questions. Nothing could be further from the truth. Questions can be appropriately framed in the House on this topic. That is an opportunity.

To the point of urgency: there is no action allowed under our rules with respect to this. In fact, Standing Order 30(6) says, "An emergency debate does not entail any decision of the Assembly." So what, then, is the purpose of adjourning to debate this? Is it in the public interest to have a debate at this point in time?

You asked the question earlier. Has anybody asked the Ethics Commissioner to do an investigation? I haven't heard an answer.

I'm not sure if you've heard an answer. What I heard which came close to an answer was: no, we don't know whether the Ethics Commissioner is going to investigate this. I think the hon. Member for Airdrie indicated that. There's been no indication of a reference to the Ethics Commissioner, and therefore the concept of having a debate this afternoon is really about people who have, perhaps, small pieces of information, which may or may not be valid or reliable relative to the issue at hand, having a debate in the House about an issue that the person who can do the investigation has not investigated.

Clearly, if there ever is a time to have a debate about this matter in the House, it's not now. If there was a time, it would be when the facts were known and when the investigation had been concluded. Now, I would have an argument at that time as to whether or not it was in the public interest.

This essentially is a contract which has been awarded by the law firm of government, the Department of Justice, to deal with a matter. It's a matter that's under way. Suggesting that we should curtail that action now is sort of an application in the nature of an injunction. Injunctions are rarely granted unless somebody is to be harmed and the question of harm is something which can be compensated for monetarily.

There is no issue here of urgency. It may be the first time that they have the opportunity to raise it in the House, but as the hon. Minister of Justice said, the fact that the contract was awarded has been around for a long time. The fact that the Premier was the Minister of Justice during a period of time that this was being considered in has been around for a long time. There's nothing new here, and there's no result of an investigation which gives us something to actually talk about in a meaningful way.

It's not urgent, it's not at this point in time, at least, of public importance, and it's not appropriate to adjourn the normal business of the House, which is substantive matters and substantive progress for the House, whistle-blowing legislation scheduled for this afternoon, to deal with some things which are nebulous allegations at best.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, briefly.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This matter, in my opinion, is of the utmost urgency for one factor and one factor alone. A lawyer or a law firm needs confidence in the client in the case; a client needs confidence in the lawyer. Right now with this debate open, these people now know that this is now undermining, basically, that confidence. It has the potential to do that. If we don't settle this now, this debate remains open. As long as this debate remains open, they can constantly plague the process and, as the hon. member said earlier, cost us dearly.

The Speaker: I believe that concludes the speakers' list for the moment.

We've heard from about six different speakers on this matter. Clearly, some were adhering to the term "briefly" more than others. Nonetheless, the Speaker had to intervene a few times just to keep you on track with respect to what the rule is regarding SO 30s. I'm just going to remind you again because some people may have not heard it the first time.

Urgency deals with whether or not there are other opportunities available to raise the matter. Now, I want to clarify for you that there are several vehicles available to you to do a variety of things.

One of them is question period, where a well-crafted question that meets the rules and proprieties of this House and of Houses across the world that are part of the Commonwealth parliamentary system – that exists there as one of those vehicles.

Secondly, a carefully crafted motion for return might accomplish something very similar, or a carefully worded written question might accomplish something similar. There is room for some debate within some of these vehicles.

This particular case, obviously, is newsworthy, and we understand that, so the debate isn't about how important the subject matter of Standing Order 30 is. It's not about how much money might have been saved or spent. Those are important issues. Of course they are. It's not about what the ramifications might be if this or that doesn't happen. It's not about the seriousness of the matter at all. All matters that hon. members raise are serious. All of them have possible consequences, one way and the other. That is not what a Standing Order 30 is about when we talk about urgency of debate.

I do note again that there was an announcement in connection with this subject matter dating back to May 30, 2012, six months ago almost to the day. Six months ago. We are now in our second or third week of the fall session. So I don't see how this matter immediately suits the definition and meets the criteria and normal qualifications of urgency for debate. Perhaps even more importantly, as evidenced today in question period, there are ways that questions can be cleverly phrased, and perhaps we'll have some of them tomorrow. So I would invite you to visit that.

While I'm on the subject of question period and because it was raised at the very beginning of the Standing Order 30 debate, the hon. Member for Airdrie said the following when I recognized him for his Standing Order 30. According to the Blues it says:

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't know. Perhaps if we can just in the future forward our questions somewhere to get them sanitized in advance, that would probably be a way to save some time since it seems unclear sometimes what we can and can't ask in here.

Now, had I received the latter part about clarity from a new member who was just elected, I might have granted some leeway for that last part of the sentence only because for some it can take a longer time than others to learn what the rules and proprieties are of the House and to experience some of them and to hear Speaker's rulings and so on, all of which are based on precedent by and large. But in this case, hon. Member for Airdrie, you are not a rookie member, you're not new to this House. This was delivered, I think, in an unprofessional way. When you say, "Thank you, Mr. Speaker," and then you go on talking to the Speaker, "I don't know," because you're supposed to be talking to and through the Speaker, and then you say that you want your questions to be "sanitized" because you are unclear, I think that is a pretty low standard for a veteran member of this Assembly.

I'm sure you didn't mean it. It might have been in the heat of the moment. So I'm going to let you off the hook subject to you withdrawing that question about sanitizing questions in advance. Being "unclear sometimes" I will let go for the moment, but the sanitization comment I am not prepared to let go. I'm prepared to have you stand and withdraw that comment, please. That would be an honourable way to proceed.

Mr. Anderson: I was not referring to you in that, Mr. Speaker, but I withdraw whatever you'd like me to withdraw in that regard. Sanitization. Sure. Fine. Whatever you'd like.

The Speaker: Well, I'm glad to hear you withdraw it, and I would ask you to visit Hansard, wherein you addressed the Speaker directly, right in advance. Then, as you well know, subsequent matters are always delivered to and through the chair. Thank you for withdrawing it.

That concludes our matters under Standing Order 30. We will move on to Orders of the Day.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Good afternoon, hon. colleagues. I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 4

Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Madam Chair, how nice to see you in the chair again. I think we're on round 14. The boxing match continues, and I look forward to all of the amendments that we're going to bring forward. Having said that, I will be tabling another amendment, and I'll sit down until it's passed around.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much. We'll pause until we distribute the amendment to all the members.

I think we can continue now, hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a great honour, again, to rise on Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act. As I indicated in my remarks earlier, we're on round 14. We have now brought our amendment . . .

The Deputy Chair: This will be known as amendment A14. Thank you.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have that. Can I say round A14 or amendment round A14?

Madam Chair, what that indicates to us is that we are now on our 14th amendment that we've brought forward in trying to bring some rationale and some conciseness and some rights to a very flawed bill. Thirteen times we have not done a very good job of convincing the government about accepting any of the amendments, which is unfortunate because these amendments that we're bringing forward are not the Official Opposition's amendments. They're actually amendments that we've worked hard on with probably some of the top experts in this country and, for that matter, North America on whistle-blower legislation.

In fact, when I got home late last night, I sent an e-mail to one of the people that have been watching us, what's happening in this government and what's happening with amendment after amendment that we're bringing forward being defeated. His comment was very interesting last night. He talked about that they've conclude that this is the most – and this is his quote. I'm going to be careful. If you think that I'm out of order, I'll withdraw that immediately. This is a quote from FAIR that they have. I will quote that because it was in the paper on November 5, so I am directly quoting from a news release that they put out. They've concluded that this is a misleadingly-named piece of legislation which shields the government from damaging disclosures, may be used to protect government wrongdoers, and does not protect whistleblowers at all.

He goes on to say:

This bill is a backward step because it does the opposite of what it claims, effectively shielding the government from embarrassing publicity while doing nothing to protect whistleblowers or the public.

The Deputy Chair: Can you table that document? You said that it was a news release?

Mrs. Forsyth: I'm sorry. I can't hear you.

The Deputy Chair: Will you be able to table it tomorrow?

Mrs. Forsyth: Sure. It's all scratched up, but I'd be more than pleased. We'll bring you a clean copy. That's not a problem. It was a press release that went out Monday, November 5, called Whistleblower Charity's Analysis of Alberta Law. I'm sure we can get you another copy.

The Deputy Chair: Can you inform us who issued the press release as well, please?

Mrs. Forsyth: Sorry, Madam Chair. While I wanted to mention that, that brings me into amendment A14. They wanted me to bring that to your attention.

This amendment that we're bringing forward, which if anyone wants to know is on page 21 of Bill 4, is going to avoid the cabinet secrecy in the event of wrongdoing. As it stands in the bill, information or documents that would disclose cabinet deliberations or proceedings are private. If the government is found to have committed a wrongdoing and the whistle is blown, that information should be made public. Interesting, interesting amendment, Madam Chair, considering the chain of events that was happening in this Assembly today in regard to some serious allegations that have been made through the day in regard to some connections with the Premier.

What this amendment does, what it's suggesting it does, is add under section 29(2) another section. It talks about:

- (3) Subsection (1)(a) applies only if the Commissioner, upon completing an investigation, makes no findings of wrongdoing against Executive Council or a committee of the Executive Council, or the proceeding of any of them.

Our amendment is to add that under section (2). Cabinet will keep its rights of privacy, even if it's responsible for wrongdoing. But the cabinet should lose its privacy if – now this is important because you and I have both been at the cabinet table, and you and I have both had before us our briefing binders, and we have discussed around the cabinet table some things that should be considered private. No question. What this is saying is that if there has been a wrongdoing, you lose that privacy.

When I'm looking at these amendments and standing up here talking, I always kind of look through the eyes of Albertans, what they would see, what they think is right, what they think is wrong. A lot of things that we do in this Legislature, quite frankly, is gobbledygook to most Albertans. Some of them don't even know what we're doing in this Assembly. They don't even know we're here. They're just wondering why, when they're calling their MLA on Tuesday, the office is saying: no, I'm sorry, we can't schedule you in until Friday.

There are lots of things that it's important that our cabinet – your cabinet, the front-bench cabinet – has to keep private, and I understand that. But if this same cabinet is accused and found guilty of wrongdoing, they lose that privacy. I think that's something standard that happens anywhere in this country.

I'm going to be sitting down very quickly because we have probably another, I think, 15 amendments ourselves to go through in regard to this. I would like to hear . . . [interjection] It's going to be a long day and a long night.

You know, it's funny you should say 15. We wouldn't be bringing this many amendments forward if the bill wasn't so flawed. We've even taken some out. We thought there was just, you know, you're getting so into the small dotting of i's and the crossing of the t's where we've added the word "or" or we've added the word "may." We have taken out what we consider our top priorities, that are sitting behind my desk, and prioritized them in order of how we're going to deal with them.

As I said last night when we were sitting late in this Legislature – and the same thing goes out again. I put the same thing back to the minister, the fact that, you know, the people that he's consulted with on his bill and the people that we have consulted with to bring these amendments forward have put on the table that they would be me and talk about any of the amendments that we are prepared to bring forward. Because after you've already lost on the other 13 amendments, it's very difficult. So I am going to sit down.

I would like to hear from the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation on why he thinks this is an amendment that he can't support and why he thinks that cabinet, if found guilty of wrongdoing by the commissioner, of all people, should think that they can keep it private any different than any other person in this province that's found guilty of wrongdoing.

With that, I'll sit down and wait for the minister.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. I am very interested in reading this amendment. I support this amendment. Looking at it, the section of the bill that it pertains to is limits on disclosure.

- 29(1) Nothing in this Act authorizes the disclosure of
  - (a) information or documents that would disclose the deliberations of the Executive Council or a committee of the Executive Council, or the proceedings of any of them."

Now, in this bill we also see an area that talks about wrongdoings. Well, if a wrongdoing has occurred – I don't know if we would look back in other portions of the law – the investigator does have the ability to go in and find the information. By excluding certain classes of people in this case, we may never get to the bottom of a wrongdoing. The whistleblower commissioner may never get to the bottom of a wrongdoing. I mean, how is it that cabinet can keep its right to privacy but no other individual can? If there is a wrongdoing, just like the individual they should be losing their right to privacy. The Alberta public deserves to know what went wrong, where it went wrong, and how it was corrected.

The way that this exemption reads, this won't exist within this whistle-blower legislation. This exemption will apply. Nobody ever need know that there was a wrongdoing. Nobody ever need know if it was corrected, the way that this was written. I think that is a travesty, an absolute travesty. I'm flabbergasted. I know that Albertans deserve better. I challenge you to accept that Albertans deserve better, and I challenge you to pass this amendment so that Albertans will receive better.

I'm a little taken aback by the events today and just wonder – I really wonder – that if this bill, this act, was in force with this amendment, would we be able to get to the bottom of the allegations that were brought forward in the Legislature today? Well, I can tell you that had a whistle-blower come forward with it, it would have been dealt with promptly. It would have been dealt with quickly, and Albertans would know and would have confidence in this system.

That's really what whistle-blower legislation is about. It's about protecting those who come forward to protect the confidence in our institutions. Here we are at amendment A14, I believe. We're 14 amendments in, trying to help create a piece of legislation that will promote confidence in our government institutions.

I would ask the associate minister to stand up and give us some answers on this. We're asking why. We're asking: why was this excluded, or why was this immunity given? So let's hear it. I think we all deserve to know, and when I say "we," I mean all Albertans. We all deserve to know why there are certain classes that are afforded special protections that other classes are not. Please, I ask you to rise and answer that one simple question.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Are there any others who wish to speak on amendment A14?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A14 lost]

Mr. Campbell: Madam Chair, I'd ask that we have one-minute bells.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader has requested that we have one-minute bells. We need unanimous consent for that. Are there any opposed to going to a one-minute bell?

[Unanimous consent granted]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:36 p.m.]

[Motion on amendment A14 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We're back to Bill 4. Are there any other members who wish to comment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Madam Chair, thank you very much. I believe that we are going on to my next amendment, which I am assuming you are going to say is A15.

The Deputy Chair: That's correct. We'll pause for a moment while we distribute that amendment.

Mrs. Forsyth: Perfect.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we are ready to proceed. This is amendment A15 to Bill 4, Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, you may proceed.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again, I'm pleased to rise on Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, at yet another attempt to try and straighten out a very flawed piece of legislation. I want to put it on the record at this particular time, just so I can go back next spring when we come here, to see how long it is before we start getting amendments that come forward on this particular piece of legislation. We've seen it with bills 19, 36, and 50.

In the short time I've been a member of the opposition, I can't tell you how many pieces of legislation that were passed have come back amended or, for that matter, not even amended; they haven't even gotten proclaimed. I mentioned that last night in regard to all of the bills that are sitting somewhere in proclamation land, waiting to get proclaimed. I'm not sure when they're going to be proclaimed. We actually went down to the library just to see how many bills hadn't been proclaimed that had been passed in this Legislature. I was actually floored. After being here for as long as I have, it's not very often that I get floored.

Speaking to amendment A15, if anyone is interested – actually, it was quite interesting. The Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation made a comment I think yesterday. He was wondering if I knew about the bill or had maybe even read the bill. I informed the minister that I had read the bill probably more often than he had and had talked to more people about this particular bill than he had and had been working on this particular bill probably before he even was elected, to be very honest with you. The experience that he brings to the table in regard to why he decided to put this 41-page bill together is fascinating to me.

I went through some of the clippings in regard to their press conference. It was quite fascinating to see some of the words that they used in regard to the whistle-blower bill: groundbreaking, earth-shattering, many other words. All of a sudden all of the comments came back from the experts.

What this amendment does is that it would not allow former MLAs to be the public interest commissioner. If you go to that section, it says very clearly in 38(4) that the commissioner may – now, that's "may," so that means maybe. I've learned from sitting on the Leg. Review Committee when I was with the government, that in law when you want to make something definite, it's "must." I've also learned that from my lawyer friends. I'm not a lawyer, so I always like to listen to my lawyer friends in regard to the fascination that they have with words when they're drafting legislation.

It was an interesting experience, sitting on the Leg. Review Committee, when I was with the Conservatives, for I think three years. I don't know, Madam Chair, if you've had the opportunity to sit on that committee. It's not one of the most exciting committees, but I'll tell you that it's probably one of the most important committees of this government when they're reviewing their legislation.

In its current state it says: "The Commissioner may not be a member of the Legislative Assembly." This amendment that we're providing would not allow even former MLAs to be a public interest commissioner.

Now, the government steps up, and they think: oh, gee; you're stepping on the government, and you're not allowing us, whether we have credibility or not. We've seen many members – and I can remember at least four that I've had the opportunity to sit with – end up with the judiciary in this province. We had one just recently, probably a couple of years ago, that set off a by-election. Having said that, that includes any MLA.

Obviously, like any Official Opposition – and I don't want the government to crack up on this – our goal as the Official Opposition is to form government in 2016. So this particular amendment wipes us out. As the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek heads off into the sunset in 2016 and her colleagues do an incredible job and end up in government, that precludes me and it precludes every other single person in this Assembly, whether they're a currently sitting MLA. We've had MLAs leave in by-elections to seek the judiciary. I can think of a couple of other times that MLAs have left this Assembly, some for personal reasons, some for other jobs. This excludes everybody.

It will be interesting, yet again, for the minister to explain to the Assembly why he doesn't like this amendment. We've tried to bring several amendments forward. I keep wanting to tell people – and I know we've got some new people in this Legislature that weren't sitting till late last night – that these amendments did not come from the Wildrose.

It goes to what the member from the southeast has spoken about in the past. He's reaching out, talking to the stakeholders, talking to the people that are important, and he's emphasized that over and over and over again in this Legislature. Well, we reached out. We talked to the experts in the field of whistle-blower legislation. Some of the stuff that he had to say we didn't like. We as a party might not agree with some of the things that he's bringing forward, but we have been awfully lucky to be able to work with other opposition parties. We said, you know: "You bring this forward. I'll bring this forward. You agree with this. We disagree on this." They might not like some of the things that we're bringing forward in this legislation.

Madam Chair, this is a very, very simple amendment. It's very easy for the members to vote for. All we're saying is that the public interest commissioner cannot be an MLA sitting now or before. With that, I'll sit down, and if anyone else wants to speak, I'd be more than happy to hear from them.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: On the amendment.

Mr. Anglin: On the amendment. I wouldn't think of anything else. No.

It's almost good that it's going to be voted down because I may be looking for a job as a commissioner some day, and I don't want to be excluded by the law.

I do want to talk about the integrity of the whole process because this is really nothing about whistle-blower protection whatsoever, in my mind. I won't argue with the intent, but as each amendment and this one in particular comes along, at least the public deserves some sort of explanation why it's unacceptable to be adopted. We're not even getting that.

If there's supposed to be integrity to the process, clearly having a member of the Legislature, particularly a former member of the Legislature, who would presumably have been a member of the governing party – I don't see the party across the floor actually hiring me as a commissioner, but crazier things have happened sometimes. I won't exclude that. It's possible; I just won't hold my breath. But it should not happen, and putting that into the act, putting it into the legislation ensures that it won't happen. To me, that's not a large price to pay.

There are certainly lots of people who would be qualified as commissioners and lots of people who can act in a fair and objective manner. We talked about this in a number of venues even today, about the objectivity, about the integrity of the system. Here what we want to do is increase or enhance the integrity of this act so that it has some sort of perception of – I don't want to overuse the word "integrity" – unbiased application. If a former member were to be appointed as a commissioner, it's hard for the public – I mean, we can argue this here in this Chamber, but it's the public perception that matters the most and only the public's perception, in my mind. They're the ones that are going to look at this, and it's the employees who are expected to come forward under this process and have some sort of idea that they're going to be protected. To me, it's a simple motion that sort of secures the independence in the sense of keeping it separate from political.

With the greatest respect, it's hard for a former MLA to not be political or not have some sort of political allegiance. I'm not saying that it's impossible, but in the public's perception I would say that it's just not going to sell. It's not going to pass the smell test. It doesn't mean that the hon. members can't do it. They can do it. I mean, there are lots of things that have been done in the past that have been objectionable to the public.

In this case here I'm just curious. It's a simple motion in many aspects, in many regards, and the whole purpose of the amendment is to enhance the integrity of the process. I think the public deserves some sort of comment on how it doesn't and why it would possibly take away from the integrity of this act if we were to accept this motion.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any others who wish to comment? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you. I'm also standing up in support of this amendment. When we were briefed on Bill 4, Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, we were all supportive of this bill. We didn't think there would be that many holes in it that we would have to plug with amendments.

You know, all from the opposition are bringing these amendments. We are trying to strengthen this bill. We are trying to take away the perception of conflict because the government always talks about openness and transparency. By leaving these little loopholes in here, I don't think it's going to do the job it is intended to do. We were supporting the bill because the intent was there to clean things up. I think that by adding this, in the public's eye at least, it will take away the perception that: oh, you know, these guys just scratch each other's backs. I think this is a good amendment. I think we should add that in there to strengthen this bill.

We can talk about drinking and driving, and we can talk about all the other bills. That bill is challenged, and in the quotes we were saying that. I think on the government side they seem to think that they know everything and they are right, but I don't think so. Any good idea coming from anywhere should be accepted, and this is a good amendment. I think we should accept this amendment in order to close this loophole.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak to this amendment. I find myself fascinated by this process. It's only the second time I've stood to speak in debate to any of the bills that we've had coming forward. I'm learning, and I really do understand the intent that the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek is trying to bring forward here, particularly considering all of the question and debate we've had since this House has been sitting.

One of the things that fascinates me is that a lot of the motions for amendments that we have coming forward are things that really are not necessarily necessary or appropriate to be embedded in legislation, from my perspective, because they either already exist in other legislation or they belong more in the regulations that we're going to create after the act is passed.

In this particular case – and it's actually timely that this is coming up because we have just recently struck the Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee, as the Member for Calgary-Shaw so aptly spoke to this afternoon – it's understood that former Members of the Legislative Assembly really should not be restricted in their pursuit of further employment in the public service, and that's provided they have met all applicable requirements under the Conflicts of Interest Act. To change this amendment the way you're wording it would actually restrict in this particular case, just for the commissioner. Really, it is already governed and guided by the Conflicts of Interest Act.

Madam Chair, this bill, as all others, also continues in the same tradition as other independent officers of this Legislature. It is the Legislative Assembly which has the mandate to appoint who that commissioner is going to be. The public interest commissioner, the Ethics Commissioner: they are officers of this Assembly, not of the government. So, you know, when the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre spoke to integrity and independence, I believe that the Members of this Legislative Assembly will in fact be able to protect that integrity and independence of this office.

From my perspective, I believe it's more appropriate that we don't embed it in yet another act but leave it where it already is. Currently the Conflicts of Interest Act also has a mandate to be reviewed every five years. If this Assembly decides that it is appropriate to make changes, that is the place to make them. For that reason I just cannot support this particular amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Madam Chair, you know what? I'm actually pleased to stand up. The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo: I can't tell you how much I appreciate him standing up and rationalizing in this House why he can't support it. Actually, you know, I can appreciate the fact that his knowledge is what we've been asking for for the last I don't know how many hours that we have been debating why the government can't support a particular amendment. So it would be extremely beneficial. I appreciate your comments in regard to the Conflicts of Interest Act. I certainly may not agree with you, but, boy, I'll tell you that certainly my respect for you to stand up and speak on why you can't support this has gone up 10-fold.

My colleagues – we have free votes on this side – may stand up and support you because it makes you think. I guess that for me it's always: if it isn't in the legislation, then there's always a way around it. For that, I want to thank you very much. I know that you've got some of my colleagues thinking at this particular time. It's too bad that your minister, the minister responsible, can't get up and so eloquently speak about why he can't support the bill.

I just want to have on the record, Madam Chair, how much we appreciate the new Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo standing up and saying from his heart, quite frankly, why he can't support this legislation. It's greatly appreciated.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to join my voice with that of my colleague across the way in opposition to this amendment. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, a long-serving member in this House, was once a cabinet minister and in that role and in a number of cabinet positions was responsible for appointing people to committees. Now, I don't know – I don't have the information in front of me – but it occurs to me that it's entirely possible that that member would have at some point in her career in cabinet appointed a former MLA to a committee. I don't know that to be the case. I only say that it's entirely possible. If she had done that, it would have followed a long-standing tradition in that there are a number of former members of this House that have gone on to serve the political process, to serve this Legislature, and serve other public roles with deep, deep honour.

Our own Ethics Commissioner is a former MLA. I believe the past Ethics Commissioner was. Others that have served in this Chamber have gone on to serve the process with honour. I don't think we should start by ruling people out as to what their future role may be. Certainly, at the time that we fill a role, whether a particular person, including a particular former member, is appropriate or not is certainly up for discussion, as when they are in any other role. But I certainly don't think we should be excluding current or past members of this House from future employment.

There's also the legal aspect, Madam Chair. We come here to serve, and we all do so, presumably, honourably. We give up things to be here. We can't give up our lives after we leave this Chamber. We should be equally employable – hopefully, we haven't lost too many skill sets while we've been here – beyond our time here because we don't leave here with a pension, and usually we don't leave here upon retirement age. The average MLA serves about four to six years. I believe that is the number. I don't think we should preclude in legislation that a former member can have a position.

The other thing – and I will revert to what the hon. Government House Leader was talking about yesterday and that sort of came out a bit in points of order today – is that we have to assume that all members here come here to serve honourably and are honourable people. It matters not what party they were elected by or what constituency they represent or what their points of view are. They are honourable, and they have the right to be respected. As such, they have the right to be considered for future employment.

I won't be supporting the amendment. I understand the sentiment, understand what the member is getting at, but I can't support this amendment. Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. I guess I can take the hon. member's points in general. In general MLAs should have the ability to seek further employment. The material difference in this case is that this is an appointment of an independent person. It's supposed to be completely independent. Of course, we have to assume that members are going to be honourable in fulfilling their duties and obligations, but there also cannot be a perception of bias. In this case you have whistle-blower legislation, where someone speaking out could be potentially very fearful for their occupation or something else. I think there is a potential perception that if they whistle-blow to a former MLA or a former cabinet minister or whatnot, that information may somehow jeopardize them.

I take the hon. member's points that in the vast majority of circumstances MLAs should have the ability for further employment with the government, but there are only a select few independent folks. It's the Ethics Commissioner and a few other members. I think that this is an exception to that rule that he outlined.

Mr. Oberle: I get the hon. member's point entirely, but I will point out that the need to manage one's impartiality is evident through our chair. Our Speaker of this House, though a member of a party, is required to be impartial. A judge, despite their past life and their past legal experience, is required and respected and understood to be impartial. It comes down to the individual, not the office. All I'm saying is that I can't support enshrining it in legislation. I certainly would be understanding of the discussion, should it come up, with respect to any individual being considered for appointment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any others who wish to speak? The hon. Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation.

Mr. Scott: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to assure my colleagues that this was an issue that we looked at. The reason that I can't support this amendment is that I do believe it's properly housed and properly dealt with as part of a review of the conflict-of-interest legislation, which my friend has already spoken to. That's the proper venue. Where these kinds of issues are dealt with is in that act, which is going to be reviewed.

The other thing I wanted to point out to my colleagues is section 38(1) of the act. The bill continues the tradition of all the other independent officers of the Legislature in that it is the Legislative Assembly that has the mandate to appoint the public interest disclosure commissioner, and that's in section 38(1).

For those reasons I cannot support this amendment, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any others?

Seeing no others, we will ask the question.

[Motion on amendment A15 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll move back to Bill 4. Are there any members who would like to speak?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Madam Chair, is this A16?

The Deputy Chair: That's correct. Can we just take a moment to distribute it, please? We'll pause.

Mrs. Forsyth: I'd be pleased to pass this around.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Hon. member, we can now proceed. This will be known as amendment A16.

Mrs. Forsyth: Madam Chair, thank you. I guess we're now on our 16th amendment. We only have another 15 to go, and that doesn't include what the opposition is bringing forward tonight. So I expect that our members are going to have a long night tonight.

I'm going to talk about our next amendment, which everybody has in front of them. I'm going to refer people to page 12 on their bill, and that's disclosure to the designated officer under section 11. This amendment would delete section 11. I want people to understand that we had brought in an amendment yesterday. What's important about this section – and I want to again read into the record.

I'm going to bring forward a quote about what the Premier had talked about when she released her democratic renewal strategy in May, when she was running. I guess this is what we would consider yet another broken promise to Albertans and why it's important for us to get it on the record and also to get all of the votes on the record, because this is going completely against everything that she has talked about on her democratic reform. You'll see where this flows into amendment A16. I don't want you to say, "Well, to the amendment, Member," but you'll understand. I can't tell you how much we've worked on this bill.

She said that she would pass a law that protects whistle-blowers no matter what manner they choose to expose wrongdoing. She goes on to say that when you start saying that a whistle-blower must report to the Ombudsman, you're being prescriptive again about the structure that is in place in an effort to manage the information. I think that defeats the purpose, she said. I think they need to be protected if they go public with it, she said.

The Premier proposed to protect whistle-blowers, who can go to opposition politicians, media, or the courts as well as the Ombudsman and internal managers. Now, you will look under section 11, where we're talking about disclosure to designated officers. She called them internal managers; the bill calls them designated officers. She said that political leaders need to send a message that allegations of wrongdoing will be examined in full no matter how they come to light. You either have open government or you don't, the Premier said.

This open government's accountability, transparency, and transformation: we even have a separate minister. I have yet to see that accountability, transformation, or transparency, to be quite frank with you, and I haven't yet seen that bar that was supposed to be raised on how we're going to treat people and how we're going to do things differently in the Legislature, other than the fact that we were working till – what? – 12:30 last night. I can't even guess to what time the night will go tonight.

In this amendment we have decided that we're going to delete section 11. It says right now:

As soon as reasonably practicable after a disclosure is made under section 10(1)(f) . . .

So then you have to go to 10(1)(f), which lays out disclosure to a commissioner.

. . . the employee must also make a disclosure about the matter . . .

“Must.” There we go with that “may” and “must” again.

. . . to the employee's designated officer.

Well, what happens if that designated officer happens to be the person that you want to blow the whistle on? What happens if that designated officer is the same person that you've been pleading with and begging and have gone to on numerous occasions? I cited in this House yesterday that Dr. Magliocco is a prime example from Calgary. Dr. Parks went through all the processes when he was bringing the issue of emergency to the Assembly. Those would have been your designated officers.

Madam Chair, in case of an emergency I think it's important that they can blow the whistle directly to the commissioner. The government has decided, when we brought forward two amendments last night in regard to the ability to blow the whistle to their MLA or, for that matter, blow the whistle to the media, that they didn't like that.

This amendment would delete section 11. Section 11 makes it mandatory for an employee who has blown the whistle to the commissioner about an imminent danger to report their disclosure to their supervisor in their department. If there is imminent danger that has been brought to the commissioner, an employee shouldn't have to go back to the supervisor to disclose their disclosure.

Once again, we want to get it on the record. Once again, the people to whom we have spoken, who, I have told you, were probably North American experts, have broken down a detailed analysis of all the things in the bill that they absolutely find – as they said before, the government claims that it's leading the way, and they want to know where they're leading the government to. The only way they see this government leading the way on whistle-blower legislation is to a black hole. They talked about, again on the record, how this bill is arguably the worst in Canada, which is bad. They talk about how it's so deeply flawed that they were trying to find something that they could say. They didn't even like the title, for goodness' sake, because it protects the government.

With that, I think this is another one of those major amendments that I look forward to the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation getting up and speaking on, or maybe we'll just let his colleague from Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo get up and speak on his behalf. I look forward to any of my other colleagues standing up and speaking to it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any others who would speak on amendment A16? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise in support of this amendment. Now, let's read what's in the bill here.

Disclosure to designated officer

11 As soon as reasonably practicable after a disclosure is made under section 10(1)(f), the employee must also make a disclosure about the matter to the employee's designated officer.

We're told that if the employee doesn't like the process or is not comfortable going to their designated officer, they can go to the commissioner. That's what we've been hearing here in the Chamber. Well, this clearly states that no matter what, when you come up to the commissioner looking to disclose a wrongdoing, you have to come back to your designated officer. What if you're not comfortable with that? What if you have concerns about that? There's no protection for you in that.

I thought that the idea of having the commissioner was to bypass the need to go through the designated officer if you weren't comfortable coming forward to or going through the designated officer. The key – the absolute key – to whistle-blower legislation is to protect the whistle-blower. It's for them to feel comfortable coming forward with their issues and their concerns in a manner which they choose. We're taking choice away. They're being told: no matter what, when you come forward, even if you have an issue with the department, with the designated officer, you still have to disclose to them.

I thought the spirit of this legislation was to protect the employee who needed to come forward, to protect our front-line services. I can tell you we need to protect our front-line services. They're the ones that deal with what we do in here every day. They implement the will of this Legislature. They look after the services that the government oversees. They disperse those to Albertans. These people are the backbone of government service. They deserve – they absolutely deserve – to be protected. With this, they're not being protected. These people do wonderful work, and a lot of times they come home stressed. They come home upset and not happy with processes or procedures. They live with it. They do their jobs because they love their jobs. They love what they do. They love that they get to help Albertans.

When there is something that is egregious that they need to come forward with and blow the whistle, they may not be comfortable coming through their supervisor, through their designated officer, yet the legislation that we're debating is going to force them to do that. I think this is egregious. I think this is absolutely egregious. These people, these employees, these public-sector employees work hard, and they care. We know they care. I think it behooves us to make sure that when they do have an issue, they have choice in how they move forward with that issue, that they're not just shoehorned and pigeonholed into one route, into one kind of black hole where they're not comfortable. They're not going to come forward.

I certainly wouldn't come forward myself if I was not comfortable with the process. I'd probably leave the service and go and work somewhere else. When that happens, not only do we lose an employee, but we might be losing somebody who is integral because they did not have the ability to step forward in a way to bring reconciliation to an issue that they had. Let's make sure – let's absolutely make sure – that our employees, who work very hard for all Albertans, are protected by this piece of legislation.

Let's pass this amendment. This is a very good amendment. I don't understand any reason for us not to pass this amendment. I mean, if the employee wants to go to the commissioner and have the commissioner investigate it, they should be allowed to do that. We were told they were allowed to do that, but then we ran across this in the bill. I'm going to read it again because it just flabbergasts me. "As soon as reasonably practicable after a disclosure is made under section 10(1)(f), the employee must also make a disclosure about the matter to the employee's designated officer." I don't believe that this fosters an environment that would make the employee comfortable coming forward. They need – they absolutely need – to have choice in how they do this and when they do this and in choosing whom they disclose to and not be forced to come back and disclose to somebody they may not be comfortable disclosing to.

With that, I would invite the other members of the Legislature to speak on this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Chair. You look fantastic, but that's par for the course for you.

You know, I'd like to speak to this amendment. When I represented the Calgary paramedics, one of the best things that could ever happen was when we were dealing with employee issues and with the employer. The employer quite often would skip steps in the process. When they did that, it always worked in favour of the employee. That's not always best in cases where the employee absolutely needed to be reprimanded in terms of maybe their attitude or their work performance, but because that process was never followed, the work never got done. Therefore, it was not always of benefit to Albertans.

This issue is exactly the same thing. There is a process that needs to be in place, and I understand where the members are coming from. I know that they shake their head, but we have a labour code in this province. We have contracts with public-sector employees. When those processes are broken down based on one thing – and I understand where the members are coming from. There are avenues where that person doesn't feel comfortable going to the supervisor or where the issue is related directly to that supervisor. I've been involved in that, too. Quite honestly, when the process is followed and there is a good dialogue, more often than not it works. I've been there. I've been on that front line that they talk about. I've represented those people on the front line.

I'll continue to do my best in this Legislature to work across all party lines to make sure that we bolster our processes in the sense of making sure that this province always works for the benefit of Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Madam Chair, this member is charming. I just sometimes wonder. We briefly talked yesterday, and I truly wonder if he's read the legislation. He told me he did when we were leaving the Legislature yesterday, and I said: all of the things that you're talking about are included in the bill under frivolous complaints. He looked at me as if he wasn't sure if it was in there or wasn't in there.

He spoke again yesterday, late yesterday afternoon about the same time, about how he's got the backs of the paramedics, and I appreciate that. I know he had the backs of the paramedics before he decided to run. I asked him yesterday in the House if he has the backs of the paramedics, if he is going through the process that he talks about, which would be the concerns that the paramedics have brought forward to the Minister of Health. I look forward to him sharing that with me. I'm sure that if he's listened to the paramedics, he knows what the concerns are.

I sent a message to the paramedics last night that the minister has assured me that he's going to get back to them on their issues. They're going to keep me posted because I said that he's got this process, and he's talked about how it's important for employees to go through the process. We're going to give him that. I'm in close touch with him as the Health critic, so I will look forward to what he has to tell them. I know they're looking forward to telling me what he has to tell them in regard to their complaints.

What I would like to suggest to this minister: this isn't jumping the queue. It's not jumping a process. It's just simply talking about: the amendment would delete section 11. Now, Member, I want to bring to your attention – and it's in Hansard – that the amendment that you voted down yesterday on the record was about the ability for a whistle-blower to come to you as an MLA or to go to the media. You said: "Oh, no, no. I've been dealing with these paramedics for a long time, and the last thing you want to do is go to the media because, well, the damned media are not all very good." It's in Hansard. That's why we're getting recorded votes on everything that we're bringing forward, because we believe it's important that your constituents, my constituents, and, quite frankly, every MLA's constituents know the record of how you voted on the whistle-blower legislation. That's why we're spending an incredible amount of time getting the standing votes on all of this.

This amendment would delete section 11. That's on page 12. Like the Member for Edmonton-Centre said last night, it's like a book. It has a beginning, it has a middle, and it has an end. So when you walk through the legislation, it puts it in order. It's like footsteps. The table of contents, and then it goes to the wrongdoings. Then it goes to the procedures for the disclosure, the investigation. It's not just willy-nilly, jumping and going to section 11 of the act. It's reading the process that's involved in getting to that.

What this says is that this amendment would delete section 11. Section 11 makes it mandatory – mandatory – for an employee who has already blown the whistle to the commissioner about an imminent danger to report their disclosure to their supervisor and their department. So he's already gone to the commissioner. If there is an imminent danger that has been brought to the commissioner, an employee shouldn't have to go back to the supervisor to disclose the disclosure. There's a reason why he's jumping that process.

I have explained on several occasions in this House some really good examples that have been brought forward in this Legislature. I mean, I can give you five of them. I can even just give you one.

It was serious. I know you're a paramedic, so I know you must know some of the doctors. I know you know Dr. Maybaum in emergency. I know you know Dr. Parks. Madam Chair, they're all on the record. Dr. Parks along with Dr. Felix Soibelman were so concerned – and you were here – about what was happening in our emergency wards. They started in 2009. They started through the process that was outlined to them without whistle-blower legislation. Alberta Health Services has a code of conduct that they claim they have, but they really don't have, but they do have because all the employees know about the code of conduct. Both of those fine gentlemen went through the process, what was designated to them. Nothing. They went to their MLA. Nothing. They went to the Premier. Nothing.

It was in 2012, with their frustration, that they went to the member of the opposition. We brought it to the Legislature. It was brought up in the House today in regard to when we were talking about emergency debate. The Justice minister talks about this. This is about missing the designated officer – so the member totally understands – when there are situations where your designated officer isn't exactly the right cat or dog to go to, whatever you want to call it.

I appreciate what this member is trying to do, and I appreciate right now what he's saying that his paramedics are trying to do. They're going to go through the process, and they are going through the process. They're putting a lot of weight on you, Member, to go to your minister and get some changes, but they're not going to wait forever. But they're going through the process that you talk about.

Having said that, I know the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is anxious to get up and speak, and it will be interesting to hear what he has to say on this particular amendment. I appreciate the debate more than anything from members of the opposition because it adds a little excitement to the Assembly, and at least it certainly lets people that are watching it – we know they're watching it. The member is an avid tweeter, so he knows people are watching this. I look forward to him standing up and debating.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I did have a question, but that enlightened conversation actually hit the issue I wanted to say. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: You're welcome. Thank you.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre on the amendment.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm going to be short. I'm not even sure what the relevance of section 11 is other than that it imposes upon the employee that's reporting. There's nothing in the act that prevents the designated officer from finding out information from the commissioner or the release of the information within the chain of command from the top down. This doesn't bypass anything.

The employee has the ability to go directly to the commissioner under section 10(1)(f), so that reporting is done. What concerns me is this. Knowing how some employees act, some are very intimidated about coming forward, and what we want to do is to make sure people do come forward, particularly in matters of safety or imminent threat. That's what this section actually refers to. We want that information to come forward.

There are certain people that have no problem coming forward, but there are people who are intimidated, and it's very difficult. If the issue is with the designated officer, you know, which would be probably highly unlikely in terms of percentage, this would prevent that. As I stated earlier, there's nothing in the act that prevents the designated officer from getting that information from another source within the chain of command. It's available. All we're doing is making an imposition on the employee reporting it and nothing more.

That's all I have to say.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Yes. I'd also like to speak to this amendment because I have a personal experience relating to our constituency and to myself. In the case of the hon. member speaking across, he has paramedic experience. In our constituency the guy on-site was of an arrogant nature. At one location that I attended, it was a foggy evening, and they blocked the road by use of the ambulance to supposedly extricate people from the vehicle involved in the accident. Well, there was no one front or rear of that site to block traffic. In this case out there we have oil field traffic that maintains – you may or may not be familiar with the term “super-B.” It's 125,000 pounds going down the road at 50 to 60 miles an hour.

Well, there was no blocking of the road, so the volunteers on-site wanted this gentleman to move the ambulance to the side. It would have been as easy and as safe to extricate the people, but the gentleman in charge of the process was of an arrogant nature and said that he was in charge of the situation, which they abided by. So that situation occurred, and nothing came of it because there was no traffic. It's in a sparsely populated area. We live in a sparsely populated region.

Those volunteers were afraid to come forward to this gentleman's superiors or his controlling officers simply out of fear of reprisal from this, could I say, person or, I might even say, character because of the fact that he may have to also deal with another situation on the same site and create problems. There needs to be freedom for people to go to different people to bring their concerns forward. In this case they didn't have that freedom, and there could have been a situation of danger or concern. I just wanted to bring to the hon. member's attention that there are situations that happen.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Fraser: Again let me speak to the amendment and to what the gentleman was saying. There is no doubt – there is no doubt – that people in authority and people who wear a uniform can sometimes bring some uncomfortable feelings to a situation, particularly in the volunteer situation. However, that being said, at the end of the day, when we go through a process and we have a complaint of a critical nature, that absolutely should bypass the person that you're talking about if it's a supervisor, and I think that's what this commissioner provides. You bypass that. At the end of the day, at some point, when you think about the legal proceedings, the person that's being accused will always have to be informed. Now, nobody and nowhere in this legislation suggests that that person is going to do a one-off face to face in a room where they're being bullied or whatever the situation might be. Clearly, there would be somebody that's mediating that, the commissioner, but that person would need to be informed so that they can defend themselves. When I talked about that process before, when that process is bypassed, 9 times out of 10 the justice that should be served never does get served.

Further to that, what this member is saying is that this Legislature, the people that are in this House that are elected members, always needs to remain vigilant to go out and be the face, be the protectors of their constituents. I'm prepared to do that. I'm prepared to stand behind this legislation. If this legislation falls down, I'll be prepared to stand in this Legislature, admit that failure, and correct that behaviour because it's not about Rick Fraser being re-elected. It is about us doing our job for the betterment of Alberta, and the minute we carry that forward, the better off we will be. I don't stand here out of my own vanity. I stand here because the constituents of Calgary-South East put their faith in me to do the right thing. I will continue to pursue that with all my effort not just for those constituents but to make my children proud because they will have to stand and live by the laws that we create in this Legislature.

I will do that, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thanks, Madam Chair. I beg to differ with the Member for Calgary-South East. The whole purpose of all these amendments coming forward is to do what's right in the first place, not to come back next year or two years down the road.

On the amendment itself I think that by putting this mandatory requirement on the whistle-blower that he or she has to go to their designated officer is just like putting a gag order on somebody. I think that by putting this section 11 in here, we are making lots of whistle-blowers quiet. They won't come forward. Maybe the whistle-blower is working with their designated officer, and maybe they don't see eye to eye and don't get along. They don't want to be bullied after they come forward. Maybe they don't feel comfortable going to their designated officer in the first place; otherwise, they would go to him or her. So by going to the commissioner, I don't think there should be any requirement on the part of the whistle-blower to go to their designated officer.

By taking section 11 out, I think this will further strengthen this bill so that we won't have to go back to the legislation again to correct it. For that reason, I'm going to support this amendment, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation.

Mr. Scott: Thanks very much, Madam Chair. The one point I want to make to my colleagues – I've listened very carefully to everything that's been said – one of the points that's being missed, is that we want to make sure that the imminent risk is dealt with right away, and that's what this section is designed to deal with. We want to make sure that the organization that is facing the imminent risk has the information so that they can deal with it right away. That's the purpose of this section.

For that reason, Madam Chair, I cannot support the amendment. We want to make sure organizations have the power to deal with things effectively and quickly.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

We will now call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A16 lost]

[Motion on amendment A16 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We will go back to the bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Madam Chair. I am again going to – I believe this will be A17. We will pass this around.

The Deputy Chair: That amendment needs to be distributed.

Mrs. Forsyth: Our time is limited, obviously.

The Deputy Chair: We have all night.

Mrs. Forsyth: You betcha.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Madam Chair, being as they're handing out the amendments now, I would suggest that we adjourn and come back at 7:30 p.m.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, according to committee rules we have to stay until 6.

Mr. Campbell: Okay. We'll stay till 6, then. That's fine.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Okay. This will be known as amendment A17.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you. It's like trying to bust out of school early, I guess, and getting caught by the teacher. That's something I honestly didn't know, that if you're in committee, you have to go right till 6. I guess I really haven't paid that much attention. Madam Chair, I have learned something new today. I honestly didn't know that. That's something new for everybody here.

We're on our 17th amendment, going strong. We're down to, I think, 14 more, which will keep everybody on their toes tonight, obviously. It's been interesting watching the Twitter world as we're tweeting people about having amendment after amendment defeated.

What this amendment does is make sure that this act applies to any organization that receives government funding. The current act says that cabinet may – now, there's that may and must – make regulations related to organizations that receive “all or a substantial part of its operating funding from the government.” I guess for us this amendment would make sure that any organization that receives public dollars would be covered under this act. That, I think, is a fair amendment and maybe one that the minister will consider, you know, pick and choose, as I would consider, winners or losers.

The other thing is: what is considered substantial? I mean, our agencies today, the agencies that I work very hard for, I think, would probably think that their consideration of substantial versus one of the major organizations like the Cancer Society would be two different things.

What we want to do in this particular amendment is include all organizations, so that if someone in their organization – and we had a good example of that just happen. I think it was in Toronto – I can’t remember which organization – where $10,000 worth of toys disappeared from a charity fundraiser. If those people have an opportunity as they see somebody marching out the door . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but it is now 6 p.m. According to Standing Order 4(4) the committee is now recessed until 7:30.

[The committee adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 28, 2012

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 4 Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act

The Deputy Chair: We are in debate on amendment A17. Just a reminder, we have the one-minute bells, so we'll ring the bells for 30 seconds, and there will be a minute pause, and then we'll ring for another minute. Okay?

Any hon. members wishing to speak on this bill? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. I must say it is a pleasure to stand once again to continue on in the vein of the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, my friend and colleague. What amendment A17 is proposing is that we open up the whistle-blower legislation and give it the same powers that the Auditor General follows, to follow an account for tax dollars wherever they are so that the whistle-blowers, when they come forward, also have protection to come forward and can come forward.

Why would we audit something if a whistle-blower couldn't come forward and speak? It's only common sense to allow any person who is working for an entity that receives government funds to be able to stand up and blow the whistle if need be, maybe if there is gross mismanagement of public funds within that organization. Right now the way it stands in Bill 4 is that they're not covered. It's only the public entities, so the direct ministries. We want to open this up. We want this so that public entity means any organization receiving government funds. I think this is a very common-sense amendment and one that offers up a little bit of transparency and accountability.

Again, I think this is a wonderful amendment. I can't see any reason why we wouldn't want to extend the protections under Bill 4 to anybody who's working for a public entity, one that is receiving government funds, so any organization receiving government funds to operate. I think this is prudent, and I believe that we need to have this. All it's going to do is mirror the powers that the Auditor General has. We've got one entity where these powers are granted. Why not grant protection for those people as well? If they're already receiving government oversight, let's expand it to protect the employees when they come forward if they do see gross mismanagement.

With that, I'd like to thank you for your time and the ability to speak to this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other speakers who wish to speak on amendment A17? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Madam Chair. It is an honour and a privilege to speak to Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, and this amendment that has been put forward by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka. I am speaking in favour of this amendment because I think it's interesting that we trust and we receive guidance from the Auditor General on a regular basis. We trust his or her judgment. This amendment would essentially allow this act to have very similar powers and very similar actions.

Also, by changing it to public entity meaning any organization receiving government funds, I think there's an additional obligation on us. We need to ensure that if the organization is receiving government funds, then it needs to be protected by the whistle-blower legislation. The reason for that is because the minute we're using taxpayer dollars in any organization, we need to ensure that those working for that organization have the same protections that we're affording those people who are not working in the public sector. Allowing for it to have similar powers to the Auditor General's and to follow an account for tax dollars is extremely important, especially as we head into an era when the public itself has a limited amount of trust at the moment about where we're spending our tax dollars and how we're spending those tax dollars. It would ensure that this public entity that's receiving the government funds is accountable to the taxpayer and accountable to the Legislature.

The current act says that cabinet "may make regulations" relating to an organization "that receives all or a substantial part of its operating funding from the government," but this amendment would make sure any organization that receives public dollars would be covered by the act. The section of the act is not yet determined, but if we're saying that it may receive all or a substantial part of its operating funding from the government, then it's not that big a stretch to say that make sure any organization that receives public dollars would be covered by this act.

It would seem to be a reasonable amendment that not only protects the government, but it also protects those people who are working in those organizations that are receiving government funds. If we're saying that it's fair to have reasonable protection for those people who are working in government-funded facilities and organizations, then it would seem only fair that those organizations receiving taxpayer funds are afforded the same protection.

We have many facilities that receive taxpayer money and aren't necessarily government agencies, but they do receive taxpayer dollars. For example, let's just say that it's a seniors' facility. In that seniors' facility there's a worker that is not a government employee or not fully funded by government funds or taxpayer funds, and in that facility an employee sees areas of wrongdoing. That could mean a multitude of things. It could mean abuse of patients. It could be financial abuse. It could be concerns with regard to regulations.

I believe we heard the hon. Member for Airdrie talk about an unfortunate situation where paint thinner was kept in a closet and hadn't been removed for a time. Let's say that that was an ongoing practice hypothetically. I don't think it is, but let's just say it was. If it was an ongoing practice and that employee had a concern about that but because they really felt that they couldn't go to the designated officer that the act allows or in this case because they're only receiving government funds but not full funding, they really have no protection. So if they see any abuse going on or if they see any areas of concern, whether it be ethical, financial, or abusive, they have no ability to report without fear of reprisal or fear of losing their jobs.

This is really, really important when we're dealing with the more vulnerable in our society. We're dealing with people who can't speak up for themselves. We're dealing with people who literally are relying on others to ensure that their interests are met and to ensure their protection. When we don't apply this act to a public entity that means any organization receiving government funds, then we're limiting the protection that we're providing to the more vulnerable people in our society. We're also limiting the ability for those workers to be able to do their job in an effective manner. It's easy to say all the time that anyone can step forward and anyone can put their job on the line and they'll be protected, but the reality of it is that if it's not legislated protection, then very few people are willing and able to do that.

I mean, we even see that right now. In areas that should have full protection, we see that employees are right now scared to come forward. Whether it be anonymously or not anonymously, they're terrified. They literally come forward only under duress and usually only under significant impact, and/or they leave their job and then come forward and say: oh, this was what I saw happening, but I couldn't speak to it at the time.

One of the clear areas where we saw that, really, was when Stephen Duckett left in 2009. I mean, he clearly came out against the government's position. He went against Alberta Health Services. Like him or not – I don't know the man, so I'm not saying that I do like him or don't like him – what I am saying is that, unfortunately, for unclear reasons, you know, he was dismissed. We know it was clearly after taking a position that wasn't in favour at that time. We had a payout of $735,000 to him. Perhaps if there had been whistle-blower legislation, he might have taken that avenue rather than coming out publicly and then being publicly reprimanded and forced to lose his job. It would have also perhaps saved the face of everyone in here if his issue could have been dealt with in a more ethical and controlled manner.

It literally has the ability to protect the people that are taking care of our most vulnerable. I think that that's really important going forward. I think that if the act already says that people may be covered or organizations that are receiving government funding right now may be covered, then to say that they will be covered if they're receiving government funds is not that far a stretch.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else? The hon. Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise today and just speak for a moment or two about this bill. If you look at the act the way it's been written, public entity is quite broadly defined already. "Public entity" means any agency, board, commission, Crown corporation or other entity designated as a public entity in the regulations." This leaves it within the regulatory ability to sit down with almost any organization that works with government and work through a process with them to see them become part of this.

Don't forget that this legislation is about our employees, about working with our government employees. This isn't about taking it to the entire province. The problem with this amendment as you see it means that almost every agency, every not-for-profit in the province of Alberta would fall under this legislation. Now, one part of that sounds good. It'll allow people to blow the whistle. The other piece of this is imposing the requirements of this act on every softball organization and judo club. Every organization that receives some funding from the provincial government would have to try to meet the requirements of this bill without ever having a chance to sit down and work with us or talk to us or determine if they even want to be part of it.

Whistle-blowing is important, but this bill is really geared not to open it up to every Albertan or to every organization that may receive money. It's about providing an opportunity for our staff, for people who work closely with government to find new and better ways to do things, to find an opportunity to speak to us. If they see things that may be done better or expenses that are being done wrong, they can come to us, they can sit down, and they can work with us. That's the intent of this bill. I believe that this amendment, first off, takes it out of regulation and broadens it so wide that it will almost become impossible to manage.

I'm thinking about organizations in my community that would fall under the requirements of managing this legislation. These are things like your local Scouts and Girl Guides. These are things like your local judo club. These are organizations that receive some funding support, that have some part-time people working with them who run organizations in our communities. You would be forcing them to meet the requirements of this act. You know what? We're here to listen to those folks if they see funding that is being misspent or misappropriated. We're always going to listen to them.

But this legislation isn't about that. It's about working with our staff, public servants, and creating a way for them to come to us freely and openly and talk about new and better ways to do things, to clean up things that maybe could be done better. Whistle-blowing isn't all about trying to sneak around and find how somebody did something wrong. It's also about finding new and better ways to do things. Often I've had people in my office – I've had nurses; I've had many, many people over the last five years – sitting across the desk and saying: you know, if we could do this this way, it would be so much better. You know what we do? I don't take her name. I take the idea. I pass it on to the Health minister or to the Associate Minister of Seniors. You know what? We've been able to fix many things because those people came and sat down across the desk from us. That's how it's done.

Imposing legislation like this without even talking to those organizations, many thousands and thousands of small community organizations, would be just wrong. I can't support that, and I believe that we should stick with what this is. It allows us within regulations to work with any organization that comes forward, that wants to work with us in this.

We already know that cities and any municipality, hundreds of them across the province, will have the opportunity simply by having a resolution at council to join this plan. We have huge opportunities to bring people into this. But if you water it down too much, we lose all of the impact.

I will be voting against this amendment. I believe that the way the bill is structured gives us the flexibility we need to do it right.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Is there anyone else who would speak on amendment A17? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in favour of this amendment on a number of fronts. I do find it interesting that for legislation that is supposed to protect the whistle-blower, my colleague from the opposite side just argued how it doesn't do that. It actually just creates more bureaucracy rather than protecting whistle-blowers.

First of all, if the government did not consult with all these organizations, that in itself points to another flaw in this legislation. Those different groups should have been consulted. The purpose, again, of whistle-blower legislation is to protect the whistle-blower regardless of which department or entity they work for.

The fact that my colleagues from the Wildrose came up with this amendment to cover all groups that receive public dollars I think will help ensure that those dollars are accountable and that organizations that receive funding are held to account but, also, give the tools to the individuals working within these organizations. If they feel that they need to exercise their right by blowing the whistle because of something that does need to be improved or something that is wrong, it gives them the ability to do so. Ideal whistle-blower protection would ensure that the whistle-blower is made whole, which is something else I'll speak to later on regarding some of our amendments on this bill and the fact that it falls short as far as doing everything which it should be doing to protect the whistle-blower and the individuals themselves.

I do think that we do need to broaden the definition within public entity and, again, cover all organizations that receive public dollars. If this is meant as a tool to help individuals, to give them a way to ensure that there's a channel for them to make suggestions or improvements to an organization or especially if they see that there's either neglect or an abuse going on, they need the certainty to be able to speak out and there is a proper channel and recourse. Again, if that's what this act is intending to do, then let's expand it to include all agencies and organizations that receive public dollars.

Therefore, I will urge this Assembly to vote in favour of this amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much, hon. member.

The Deputy Chair: We will move back to Bill 4. Any members who wish to speak on this bill? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to move an amendment on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

The Deputy Chair: We have another amendment. We'll pause for a minute while the pages deliver that amendment to each member.

Hon. colleagues, the amendment that you just received is out of order, so we're not going to discuss this amendment because it was discussed previously. We're going to go back to Bill 4.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to move another amendment on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. We'll pause while those papers get distributed.

This document is now considered A18. If you would like to proceed on amendment A18, the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again, it's an honour to rise and speak on behalf of this amendment, which I support. What the intent of this amendment is is to further protect those who come forward to blow the whistle, those who may wish to stay anonymous when they blow the whistle. What we're looking to do in this is amend section 10(1), to strike out "only" at the end of section (1), strike out "or" at the end of clause (h), add "or" at the end of clause (i), and add the following after clause (i):

(j) in a manner that protects the identity of the employee making the disclosure.

Now, I think it's pretty self-evident why we would want to protect the identity of the whistle-blower. Sometimes they come forward on very contentious issues, ones where they may be worried about their safety or may have other reason to be concerned about maybe some other type of reprisal that is not listed specifically within this act. I believe it behooves us to allow them the option to come forward with an anonymous disclosure that would – who knows, actually, what the anonymous disclosure would be? It's just the fact that they may not want their identity out there. I do believe that the protection of a person's identity is very important, and I believe the government thinks that as well. I mean, we've seen in the past other legislation put forward to protect the identity of Albertans. We saw it with the FOIP Act. We've seen it in other locations as well.

An employee really should be able to blow the whistle any time, and they really should be able to do it anonymously if they so choose. They should not be forced to have their identity released if they are concerned about that. Currently, the way this is written, employees have to identify themselves to their designated officer when making a disclosure. If they don't and they want to go through the commissioner – we just were talking about that in another section here, section 11, where it said that even if they go through the commissioner, they've got to come back to the company's designated officer. Again I ask: how is that keeping that person anonymous? We want to make sure that when they come forward, if they only want to speak with the commissioner and they want to stay anonymous, that request be met.

Now, employees shouldn't be intimidated when they are flagging down wrongdoing. Who would want to complain about their boss to their boss? I mean, they're looking for a little bit of anonymity when they're coming forward. Let's make sure that we're protecting those in our public service so that when they do want to come forward and they do have something sensitive and they are worried about their own person, they have the ability to stand up, come forward, and do it anonymously.

With that, I'd like to thank you for your time and thank you for the honour of standing and speaking to my colleague's amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who would wish to speak on this item? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Chairwoman. I'm in favour of this amendment. It seems to me that in running a $44 billion enterprise annually and being a believer in opportunity and fairness for all and a believer in making this legislation the most effective way we can, as the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka just pointed out, if an employee or a whistle-blower cannot blow the whistle anonymously with a degree of security and a degree of certainty that they will be protected – I guess it comes back to them being able to blow the whistle in the way that makes them the most comfortable.

I can think of some situations in Cypress-Medicine Hat in the short time I've been an MLA where people involved in the education system and people involved in the health care system have come to me and said: "Oh, I'm going to tell you something," or "Maybe I'll tell you something, but I don't ever want them to know it's me; please don't say my name." Fortunately, it's been nothing that hasn't been workable, but how do we know when it goes past that?

Again, to make this legislation, part of a $44 billion annual enterprise, as strong as possible, it would seem to me that the thing to do is to make it so the whistle-blower, a fellow Albertan, is the most comfortable at blowing the whistle in the way they see fit. For some that will be going back to their employer – they'll be going back to the chain of command and sitting down and having a coffee or a beverage and working it out – but for others it won't. So why would we do anything to slow that down?

Employees should not be intimidated when they're blowing the whistle and they're helping us eliminate government wrongdoing. Of course, the whole purpose behind eliminating government wrongdoing is to make our government spending so it's more efficient, make it so it's more fair for all our citizens. The current situation where they have to identify themselves: I can see some real problems developing with that.

You know, as critic for Infrastructure and Transportation, I mean, there are billions of dollars spent on those two annually. I think there have been many, many times in there where if somebody has some idea of cost savings, if somebody has some ideas of things where our government money and government employees are not being treated properly, they should have the opportunity as well to come forward in the best way that suits them.

Thank you to the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka for bringing this forward. I will certainly be supporting it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Are there any other members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Yes, Madam Chairman. I'd like to speak in favour of this motion. I think it's important to part of the whistle-blower legislation. The similarity that I see in this legislation is to that of a newspaper source, where the reporter has a chance to use an anonymous source to report a wrongdoing or to bring forward a story. In that case, those options or those situations have been challenged and fought in legal jurisdictions both in this country and others around the world, that there is a guarantee of anonymity to those people who bring those stories forward. And with that the responsibility then falls back on those who this person gives that story to to understand the credibility of that.

I take great umbrage that our government and the members opposite seem to have a level of fear or a certain form of vision – in the rural community we call it blinders – to a wider perspective of this legislation. This is only one of, as you know, many amendments that we're bringing forward here, but I think it's important to try and give this as much latitude as we can. In some cases more freedom creates less regulation, and it allows greater purpose to the legislation coming forward. Why should we have to come back multiple times to bring some of this forward? I think we have a chance now to be proactive about bringing this legislation forward, and our party is doing the best we can to bring forward amendments, albeit small. I think members opposite deserve to hear and understand our arguments.

With that, I yield the floor, Madam Chairman, and speak in favour of this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members that wish to speak on amendment A18? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East on that amendment.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would speak against this amendment for a number of reasons. Research into best practices has demonstrated that an internal process supports developing an organizational culture that encourages people to speak out without fear of reprisal when they witness a wrongdoing. In turn, this will lead to an environment where wrongdoing is less likely to occur in the first place.

That said, the act sets out circumstances where the employee can disclose directly to the commissioner. These circumstances have been carefully considered and weighed in light of the advantage of an internal disclosure process. They include, for example, where the employee has suffered a reprisal or fears reprisal, where the employee is reporting about an individual charged with administering the internal processes, where the internal processes have produced an outcome that is not satisfactory to the employee. When making a disclosure internally, employees also have the option of notifying the commissioner to ensure appropriate oversight.

The second part of this amendment has no effect. As I've said before, anonymous disclosure from anyone, employee or not, is permitted specifically under section 21. The opposition's proposed clause (j) would do nothing but restate what the act already has said in other sections.

I would just make one, I think, personal comment in terms of actually standing up for something that you think is wrong and confronting your employer with it. When I was a nurse, there were a number of things that I was seeing that I didn't like, and I would speak out. But was I brave? Probably not. Why did I do it? I did it because I knew that I was protected by the union. The fact that I knew I had some kind of protection allowed me to pretend to be brave and speak out.

I believe that if people know that they will be protected by that commissioner, if they know that there's somebody else that is aware of what they've done and what they've said – and, of course, all of this should be in writing – then I believe that people will speak up. But if they're on their own, and they're only talking to their boss, which has been alluded to many times, and the boss is the one that can enforce reprisals, then yeah, they're not going to do it. But if they know there's someone behind it, they will.

For those reasons, I will not be supporting this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you to the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. I appreciate your comments there on section 21. However, if you read section 21, it says:

If the Commissioner receives an allegation of wrongdoing that has been made anonymously or by an individual who is not an employee, the Commissioner may choose to investigate the disclosure or may, in the Commissioner's discretion, forward the allegation to the chief officer of the department, public entity or office of the Legislature in respect of which the allegation of wrongdoing is made while maintaining the anonymity of the individual . . .

At that point, yes.

. . . and the chief officer must manage and investigate the disclosure in accordance with the procedures established under section 5.

If you go back to section 5, they must do it in writing, so there is no anonymity. He may choose to investigate, he may choose to further it down the line, or he may choose to do nothing.

In reality there is no protection of anonymity. There is the option of it at the commissioner's discretion. So you're totally trusting that the commissioner will always do the right thing. There may be a time when the commissioner does not do the right thing, or there may be a perfect time when the commissioner does do the right thing, which I think is the intent of the bill, but then he puts it down to the chief officer, who then follows section 5, which then forces the person doing the whistle-blowing to now follow section 5, which then requires them to disclose.

Also, under disclosure of the commissioner in section 10(1), it says that the employee may make a disclosure directly to the Commissioner only

- (a) if no procedures have been established.

And I'm sure that the departments will establish the procedures.

- (b) if the employee has made a disclosure in accordance with the procedures established under section 5, which requires them to self-identify.

- (c) if the employee has made a disclosure in accordance with the procedures established under section 5 and the matter has not been resolved . . .

- (d) if the employee has made a disclosure in accordance with the procedures established under section 5, the investigation under those procedures has been completed, and the final decision was not satisfactory.

- (e) if the . . . disclosure involves the employee's chief officer or the employee's designated officer.

And then it goes on to list, you know, a few more options there.

It says that you can only disclose to the commissioner if those five conditions are not met. If we're truly talking about protection of whistle-blowers, why does it matter who the whistle-blower discloses to? Why are we putting conditions on their anonymity and who they disclose to? If we truly want to protect whistle-blowers, there is no reason why that person could not anonymously or at any point in time disclose to the commissioner.

We're not saying: change all of these parts. You certainly can leave those conditions in there and certainly try and redirect them up the chain. That's fine. But why are we saying to a whistle-blower that you can only come to the commissioner under anonymity and only if you meet these section 10 conditions? It seems to me that we need to take a look at what is best for the whistle-blower and puts them in the most protected position.

Given that section 21 does not actually protect their anonymity and forces them back to section 5, which forces them to go to their chief officer and forces them to meet all of the subsections under section 5, which are substantial, and then only after going through that roundabout process can they make a disclosure to the commissioner anonymously, what we're really doing is – let's just say that the whistle-blower decides that they feel they can't meet section 5. They believe that they can't meet all of the subsections of section 10, and they fall under section 21. Let's say that they honestly believe that they have anonymity, and they go to the commissioner, and then the commissioner uses his discretion and says: "No; sorry; we're going to punt you back to your chief officer," back in section 5. What does that do to the morale and to the integrity of the system of the whistle-blower legislation? What it really does is effectively kill it.

We're saying to people: you can come forward, but in my discretion I'm going to tell you under which area you can come forward. It would seem to me that we shouldn't make it so hard for them to come forward. We need to make it easy for them to come forward. I think you just might find that if we make it easier for them to come forward, they may actually do exactly what the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East said. They may feel that they truly have the protection there, that they do feel that they can go to their supervisor, and if that solution doesn't work, they can go to the manager above that person, and if that person doesn't work, perhaps they could go to their deputy minister, their minister, or their MLA. Rather than creating a huge scene, they may be able to actually solve the problem from within rather than having to go public and actually putting themselves on the line.

If we're not going to protect their anonymity, if we're going to make them circle back and come back to section 5 anyway, why not just eliminate the process and truly allow for them to have anonymity, to have true whistle-blower protection, and keep integrity in the process?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and thank you to the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. Thank you very much for that. I understand where you're coming from, but a couple of things. Enron and Nortel were brought down by women, women that had the backbone to stand up. Another thing that they did have was that they had a lot of data, they had a lot of stuff that proved what they were talking about. If you go to the commissioner, I don't think you need to – I think everybody should know who you are and what you're doing because surely you're not going to come forward unless you've got something concrete to present to the table. That's probably why I would disagree with that.

As far as huge scenes go, I think that huge scenes often can get results a lot quicker than worming around inside of internal stuff. But if a commissioner knows that somebody has that data, they have that information that proves whatever they're trying to talk about, he's going to do something. He might send them back, but he's sending them back with that protection behind their back, knowing that in section 5 that boss or whoever that is will know that the commissioner is behind this person. So their back is covered.

I think that was the end of my notes.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. First off, Enron was brought down by derivatives and false bookkeeping. The female that actually knew about it was unable to actually report it, and her legitimacy became legitimate after the collapse.

Ms Pastoor: But she started it.

Mr. Anglin: She knew about it.

It speaks directly to this amendment, Madam Chair. This is why this is a good amendment. As the hon. member pointed out, under section 21 it doesn't apply when you get down to section 10(1)(f) because if you look at section 11, that employee must disclose.

Now, using the Enron example, had this person had the ability to disclose anonymously – certainly, she knew what was going wrong. She had the knowledge, but nobody was listening. I don't know how to get beyond that even in this legislation, never mind the anonymity, dealing with the issue of this amendment. But it's an attempt. Anonymity is important in many regards.

I want to back up just to the particular section that reflects to the anonymity of section 11, which relates back to 10(1)(f): if it is a matter that "constitutes an imminent risk of a substantial and specific danger." I couldn't care less if I knew who made the warning as long as I got the warning on that imminent danger. The last thing I would want to really concern myself with is the identity of who is going to ring the alarm. What I want is the alarm to be rung in a valid manner. In other words, it meets that standard of imminent danger.

I agree. It is rare that anonymity needs to be actually part of the process, but it has to be an avenue that is available when it is required, in my view. As I look at this legislation, we want people to come forward and disclose information. I don't agree with all the amendments that have been rejected. I think some were valid amendments that would have actually strengthened this bill. But for this amendment here to give one avenue to the protection of anonymity does not override any other aspect. It just throws that protection in there when that protection is required.

Section 21 is not paramount to section 10(1)(f) or section 11. There is no paramountcy there. As a matter of fact, section 11 actually mandates that "the employee must . . . make a disclosure about the matter to the employee's designated officer." So the anonymity is lost.

Again, to summarize exactly what I've just been saying, if it has something to do with imminent threat or imminent danger, to respect anonymity is a valuable tool versus not getting the information. I don't see where it hurts either way.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else who would like to speak to the amendment? The hon. Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation.

Mr. Scott: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to briefly point out to my colleagues that section 21 does deal with the issue of anonymity. I realize that people are describing other sections of the act and that it's possible to refer the issue back pursuant to the circumstances set out in section 5, but the one thing that is going to need to be done – and it's right in section 21 – is that if it's referred back, it's done "while maintaining the anonymity of the individual." That's in section 21, about the third line up from the bottom. So there is protection of anonymity in the act. It's in section 21.

For that reason, I can't support the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else who wishes to speak? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just a couple more comments, if I might. Clearly, I think that we're going to agree to disagree on this. If I was the commissioner and somebody came to me and I didn't know who they were, I'm not sure how much attention I would pay to it. Now, if it was something that was an imminent danger, then I probably would react.

I'll use an example. Way back when I was a nurse in long-term care, they set up a phone line that people could phone and complain about whatever it is that they wanted to complain about. It was very quickly changed so that people actually had to give their names because there was all kinds of nonsense being put out because they knew nobody could know who they were. So, clearly, they had to say their names.

I don't know what kind of funny stuff that you have to smoke, but I really don't think that there's a whole pile of privacy left in the world. Even if you do something anonymously, gossip usually takes over, and it doesn't take long for this kind of thing to come forward.

My comments.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. The hon. minister brought up a comment about section 21. I would disagree. Managing or maintaining anonymity is not the same as protecting anonymity. There's a difference in language, and that is important to know here. If you go back to my example of 10(1)(f), of an imminent threat or danger to life, maintaining anonymity does not supersede section 11, which requires that that employee basically report this to their designated officer. I just want to point that out. There's no clarity here, which actually substantiates why this amendment is a good amendment to make sure it is clear and concise in law that anonymity can be protected when it is necessary.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion on amendment A18 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We will move back to Bill 4. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll move an amendment, that I'll pass out.

The Deputy Chair: We have an amendment. We'll pause until that amendment gets handed out. Hon. members, this will be known as amendment A19.

If you would like to proceed, hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. If you'll indulge me, I'd like to read the amendment itself. I'm moving that Bill 4, the Public Interest disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, be amended as follows.

In part A section 5 is amended in subsection (8) by striking out "and that all future disclosures, other than in the circumstances described in section 10(1)(b) to (i), must be made to the designated officer in accordance with the approved procedures."

In part B section 10 is amended (a) in subsection (1) by striking out all the words that follow "directly to the Commissioner" and (b) in subsection (2) by striking out "or under subsection (1)(f)."

In part C section 11 is struck out.

In part D section 29 is amended in subsection (1) by striking out clause (c).

In part E section 36 is amended in clause (g) by striking out "when an employee may make a disclosure directly to the Commissioner, and."

At the moment this bill makes it very difficult for a whistle-blower to go directly to the commissioner. Only under exceptional circumstances, in other words, can an individual go directly to the commissioner. This amendment will ensure that a whistle-blower can go directly to the commissioner and bypass the internal processes. Once this internal whistle-blower policy is in place, again, they must use the internal process except under exceptional circumstances referred to in the bill. Essentially, a whistle-blower can only go directly to the commissioner if he or she feels there's an imminent threat to health or safety or if he or she has serious reasons to doubt the integrity, to mistrust the capability of the internal processes to deal with the issue. The challenge with this is that these limitations set out in clauses (a) to (i) are far too limiting, and they should be struck out in order to encourage whistle-blowers who feel anxious about internally reporting to a chief officer.

It's another example where the bill seems designed to discourage whistle-blowers and to protect public entities from them. We should be encouraging all avenues of disclosure. This, for example, is a specific case with a simple amendment to the bill which can allow whistle-blowers to feel safe in going outside of their workplace right from the outset should they so choose.

The process for blowing the whistle should be as clear and as transparent as possible. Oftentimes serious cases of wrongdoing which threaten the well-being or safety of employees require quick action. Again, this amendment will ensure that the employee and not the regulations decides when he or she can go to the commissioner and when he or she can go to the internal chief officer.

Again, Madam Chair, it comes down to: what is the purpose of this legislation? If it's to provide the whistle-blower with the tools to be able to act and in certain situations act immediately and promptly, then this just opens up an avenue where they're not going to be limited to going through the internal process first, where they can go to the commissioner. I feel that this is an amendment that, hopefully, will be accepted by this Legislature and Assembly.

Again, if we look at the intention of this bill, to protect whistle-blowers, to give them options and avenues to do what's going to be serving all of us in our best interest the most effectively and efficiently, then I recommend that the Assembly accept this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise in support of this amendment. I think it's a very thoughtful and appropriate shift to put the onus on government to make it as safe and easy for a whistle-blower to achieve the end, which is to expose wrongdoing. By limiting that and by forcing internal processes first, you're simply going to discourage a large majority of whistle-blowing. It just doesn't indicate to me a government that really wants to get at the root of problems: mismanagement, malfeasance, waste, corruption.

Why not make it the very first priority to allow a whistle-blower – and I again have to go back to my own experience. If I was able to go outside of the organization safely and raise some of the issues around carbon and climate and felt safe to do so, I would have done so. This bill suggests to me that we're still not ready for that. We're still not ready to allow people inside the bureaucracy to actually avoid any perception of vulnerability and any perception of the possibility of indirect harm coming back to them.

One of the big challenges, of course, in this whole legislation is that there may not be any immediate retaliation, there may not be any financial impact, there may not be any job impact for months, but the next opportunity for retaliation may come.

I guess I would argue very strongly that we should make every effort to really facilitate the easiest, safest, and most timely response directly to the commissioner. It's a key issue for me in terms of adding credibility and effectiveness to this bill.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on this amendment A19? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Madam Chair, and I'll keep my comments brief. Clearly, even in this room there's some confusion on whether there's anonymity or whether there isn't. The hon. Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation mentioned that section 21 does offer anonymity, but then the last sentence of that also says that "the chief officer must manage and investigate the disclosure in accordance with the procedures established under section 5."

I believe that you have the greatest of intents here – I honestly do – and I think that what you're trying to achieve is anonymity, but it concerns me greatly when the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East says that anybody who has information should have to disclose, not just that they may or have the option not to disclose but should have to. Clearly, within this room of legislators there's a discrepancy. She also went on to say that in the event that they had the evidence and didn't disclose, she would not take it seriously, that if she was the commissioner, she would believe that if a person didn't disclose, they would have less value in what they were whistle-blowing about than somebody who did. I don't believe that's what she actually meant. I'm hoping what she actually meant was that we want to make sure that the people coming forward have the best information and that they're not sending everybody on a wild goose chase. I hope that's what she meant.

The fact that there's even a discrepancy in this room makes me wonder: how could there not be room for discrepancy for the people coming forward, especially when we're hearing comments from MLAs and from legislators that say, "On the one hand you have anonymity, but on the other hand you may not have anonymity, and if you have anonymity, I may not pay any attention to your complaint anyway"? That causes great concern, and I think that would cause great concern to somebody who's thinking about coming forward.

I think the intent of the act is good. I think the intent of the act is to provide the ability for whistle-blowers to come forward, and I think this amendment allows you to do that. But, clearly, if there's a discrepancy in this room, then I think there's going to be some confusion once we get out to the average public.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Scott: Just to speak to the point that was just made, I want to point out that section 21, the anonymity section, is surrounded by the rest of the language. Anonymity is protected by section 21.

As to the specific amendment itself, I just want to point out to my colleagues that section 10(1)(h) provides that if an employee has a reasonable fear that they're going to have or experience a reprisal, they can go straight to the commissioner. The procedures permit that. It's already in the legislation. I think that that's a reason why I cannot support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Seeing no other members wishing to speak on amendment A19, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A19 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We will move back to Bill 4. Are there any members who wish to speak on Bill 4? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. I must say what an honour it is to stand once again and move another amendment on behalf of my colleague the wonderful Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

The Deputy Chair: All right. We'll take a few minutes as we pass out the amendment. This amendment will be known as A20.

Hon. member, we may proceed on amendment A20.

Mr. Fox: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Again, I must say what an honour and a privilege it is to stand here and support this amendment and support those that would wish to use whistle-blower legislation. Now, what is this amendment? This amendment is another one that is looking to protect the anonymity of somebody who may wish to come forward and blow the whistle. What it does is amend section 8 of the bill, the whistle-blower act.

How does it read here in section 8? It's a request for advice.

8(1) An employee who is considering making a disclosure may request information or advice from the employee's designated officer or chief officer or from the Commissioner.

(2) The designated officer, the chief officer or the Commissioner may require a request under subsection (1) to be in writing.

Now, why? Why do we always have to disclose somebody who's coming forward looking for information? The current bill can require a potential whistle-blower to make a written request for that information. They may not be willing to come forward yet. They might actually just need information on the process itself and not wish to identify themselves yet or at all.

Really, the government or the ministry or the commissioner or the chief officer or the designated officer: I mean, do they really need to be tracking who's asking for information? Do they really need to know to begin with? I think not. I think that when somebody wants to come forward or may need information to come forward, they should not be painting a target on their back just by requesting the information on how to do so. Employees should be able to learn the policies while remaining anonymous. In fact, I dare say that the employees of these public entities, your ministries, have a right to privacy in requesting that information. I just can't understand why we put in here "may request." May request that they put this in writing, that you have to go directly to them.

Why can't this information be open and available to everybody? Why are we hiding the process? I don't get it. I can't fathom it. Why hide the process on how somebody can come forward and blow the whistle? And blow the whistle on what? Well, anything that could harm or be a danger to the life, health, or safety of individuals or to the environment. I mean, why? Why would you hide the process? I don't get it. Why make somebody come forward and request that information? Why isn't it open and out there and in the public domain? I mean, this is a procedure of government. This is a procedure that you should be laying out there rather than hiding it behind closed doors.

When somebody is coming forward, they're doing so in good faith. They're needing information. With information comes power. You're empowering them to be able to come forward. When you hide it or make them request that information from somebody that they're not sure they're ready to trust yet, you're not empowering them. You're taking that power away. You're taking that knowledge away. Again, we keep going on and on and on about the same issues: anonymity, protecting the whistle-blower, protecting the person, not the process. We want to make sure that the person is protected. The person is paramount above all else.

We don't see that with the way this legislation is written now. This is why we're bringing forward all of these amendments. This is something that not just the opposition parties seem to think is required, but this is something that independent organizations like the FAIR organization are asking for. Whistle-blowers are asking for this. The public is asking for this. We want to make sure that those who come forward, who are heroes, are protected. When we're hiding that information or having them request that information and having to out themselves before they even know that they want to make a claim under this act or seek this act for their protection, I mean, they just can't do it. Honestly, by hiding that information, you're damaging the integrity of this bill. I honestly don't get it. That's why we keep bringing these types of amendments forward, amendments that are designed to protect the whistle-blower, to protect the person, because we want to see integrity in this legislation.

You know, I guess I have to say thank you for the opportunity to stand up for whistle-blowers, to stand up for those who want to come forward as heroes. Again I thank you. I thank this Assembly for allowing me the ability to stand here and ask that we amend this bill so that whistle-blowers are protected not only when they blow the whistle but when they seek the information to decide whether or not they wish to come forward.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Do any other members wish to speak on this amendment? The hon. Member for Livingstone-MacLeod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Chairman. It's very nice to speak to all of you folks here tonight. I don't often get up until something really strikes me as very important. This one, I think, is very key. I would like to just take a few minutes to talk about it if I may. I have to agree with my associate here from Lacombe-Ponoka. This basic clause has to do only with requesting advice. It is not to make a complaint. It is only for requesting advice.

I know that perhaps the hon. member across the way may get up and want to recite to us once again section 21 about anonymous complaints in whistle-blowing. I don't think in this case that applies because this, again, is simply just information.

You know, a lot of this bill is great. It's bringing to us a piece of legislation that we've needed for some time to protect whistle-blowers, and I think it's really important. A lot of times it doesn't go far enough, but in this case I think it's gone too far. Whistle-blowers have a lot of nerve and bravery, I think, to come forward, and these people deserve some kind of protection in this stage of their situation.

As the bill stands, it says that the designated officer in the ministry can request a written request. Why? As he has just said, why would that be necessary just for information? It seems absolutely way over the top, and it looks to me like it may be a way for the government to track who's blowing the whistle. It seems to me to be a way to interfere with the whole sense of this bill.

I would ask those of you on the other side of the House to have a really good look at this one. I think it makes an awful lot of sense to perhaps rejig this one. We think we've got a solution to it, and I would ask for your support on this amendment.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there any other member who would like to speak on amendment A20? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in support of this amendment for a couple of reasons. I think, first and foremost, that if we want whistle-blower legislation to encourage whistle-blowers to come forward to report wrongdoings so that we can improve our system, then we need to ensure that whistle-blowers are encouraged to step forward and, especially, to learn the process of how to go about blowing the whistle. As my colleagues from the Wildrose caucus have eloquently illustrated, this is something that's helping to educate our public sector, our workers, to give them the tools to be able to come forward and learn how to navigate through the process should an instance arise where they feel compelled to use this legislation once it's in place. I think it's important that they can learn about the process while retaining anonymity, while retaining their identity, without fear of reprisal on even inquiring into processes of blowing the whistle.

It's for this reason, I believe, that my colleagues from the Wildrose caucus have put forward this amendment. You know, we don't want our workers to fear reprisal. We don't want them to fear for their safety or to jeopardize or potentially jeopardize their relationship within their professional environments by merely inquiring into how it goes or how it works. My concern is that without this amendment, anyone who steps forward to ask about it will suddenly be grilled on why they want to know the process and who are they planning to blow the whistle on. Suddenly it becomes a witch hunt when a person may be honestly asking about the process just to educate themselves.

For these reasons, I think, again, if we want to protect the whistle-blowers – I mean, I'm frequently hearing from the government that they're doing this for the whistle-blower, to help improve transparency and accountability. Well, it's time to step up to the plate and put in some of these amendments that actually do that and will help facilitate this process. So I encourage members on the opposite side of the House to look at this amendment, which I think is a very friendly amendment to the current legislation.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A20? The hon. Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation.

Mr. Scott: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to point out to my colleagues that the act does not prevent an employee from making anonymous requests for advice or restrict a designated officer, chief officer, or commissioner from replying to anonymous requests for advice. For this reason, I cannot support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. What this bill is missing, though, is the ability to find the procedures in the public domain. There is nothing that an employee can go to to find the procedures. They have to go through the designated officer, the deputy minister, or the commissioner. I think it behooves us to make sure that those policies are out there and in the public realm. I mean, if you're going to go and even think about blowing the whistle, you want to know what the rules are before you even start. You might not be comfortable going directly to these individuals right at the beginning. You may just want to read up on it. There is nothing that allows the person to do that. There is nothing that empowers the person to educate themselves before they come forward and present themselves to these individuals. I think it behooves us – it behooves us – to allow those people that freedom, the freedom to gather that information anonymously.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Chair. Once again I would just like to refer to the last comments from the associate minister if I could. He says that the act does not prevent or preclude someone from seeking advice. I beg to differ because the very section that we're seeking to amend says:

8(1) An employee who is considering making a disclosure may request information or advice from the employee's designated officer or chief officer or from the Commissioner.

That's fine. However:

(2) The designated officer, the chief officer or the Commissioner may require a request under subsection (1) to be in writing.

May require, meaning that he would have to disclose his identity. That's not my definition of anonymity. If I could suggest, it is actually quite the opposite.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion on amendment A20 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We will move back to Bill 4. Is anyone wishing to speak on Bill 4? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm putting forward another amendment with the requisite number of copies.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. We will pause.

You may proceed, hon. member. This will be known as amendment A21.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. This is dealing with section 11 of Bill 4. I'm moving that Bill 4, Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, be amended by adding the following after section 11:

When wrongdoings may be reported to a Member of the Legislative Assembly or journalist

11.1 This section applies if an employee has made a disclosure to a designated officer and the Commissioner and

- (a) the Commissioner has refused or failed to investigate the disclosure,
  - (b) the employee has not been advised with a period of 3 months after the day the disclosure is made whether or not the disclosure will be investigated or dealt with,
  - (c) the employee has not been advised of the progress of an investigation for a period of greater than 3 months, or
  - (d) the employee is advised at the conclusion of the investigation by the Commissioner that no action will be taken in relation to the wrongdoing.
- (2) This section also applies if an employee honestly believes on reasonable grounds that
- (a) the employee has information that tends to show a wrongdoing,
  - (b) there is a significant risk of detrimental action to the employee or another person if a disclosure is made, or
  - (c) it would be unreasonable in the circumstances for the employee to make a disclosure to a designated officer or the Commissioner.
- (3) An employee may report a wrongdoing to
- (a) a member of the Legislative Assembly, or
  - (b) a journalist.
- (4) In reporting a wrongdoing under this section, an employee
- (a) must disclose sufficient information to show that the conduct is a wrongdoing, but not more than is reasonably necessary to show that the conduct is a wrongdoing, and
  - (b) if a wrongdoing was reported to a designated officer or the Commissioner, the employee may inform the member of the Legislative Assembly or journalist about the progress and outcome of any investigation.

At the moment the current bill does not provide any provisions for when it's permissible for an employee to report a wrongdoing publicly to an MLA or to the media. This amendment sets up a process for a disclosure to an MLA and to the media.

I'd like to point out a couple of things. Number one, even our federal legislation has a provision which allows for public disclosure of blowing a whistle. Section 16 of our federal law states:

16. (1) A disclosure that a public servant may make under sections 12 to 14 may be made to the public if there is not sufficient time to make the disclosure under those sections and the public servant believes on reasonable grounds that the subject-matter of the disclosure is an act or omission that
- (a) constitutes a serious offence under an Act of Parliament or of the legislature of a province; or
  - (b) constitutes an imminent risk of a substantial and specific danger to the life, health and safety of persons, or to the environment.

As we can see, our federal legislation at least provides that opportunity for whistle-blowers.

Where this amendment is coming from, hon. members, is that if Alberta is serious about setting the standard for whistle-blower protection in Canada, which I have heard the hon. Associate Minister for Accountability, Transparency and Transformation mention on numerous occasions, that our whistle-blower legislation here in Alberta will be the toughest, even tougher than our federal cousins', well, then this section needs to be amended. Much more needs to happen as well if that's to be the case here in the province, but we can start with this. Again, if the claim is that we're going to be open and transparent, then there is nothing for public entities or for public employees to hide. Full public disclosure should be encouraged. This is giving the avenue and the processes for how an individual can go to their Member of the Legislative Assembly or to the media in order to disclose.

This amendment, hon. members, is taken directly from Australian legislation. Again, we've often heard that our government has consulted legislation from around the globe. In case this was missed in the first perusal, this is taken from Australian legislation, and it's considered by experts to provide the strongest protection for whistle-blowers who wish to go public.

When a breach of an act is in question or there is significant risk to the health and safety of Albertans, there shouldn't be any hesitation on the part of the whistle-blower to go public. I would add not only hesitation, but there shouldn't be anything stopping or slowing or delaying or deterring a public servant from blowing the whistle and going public. As I have said, this gives them an avenue and the steps in order to be able to do that.

I will ask this Assembly to consider this amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who would like to speak on amendment A21?

Mrs. Towle: I'll just keep this brief. I do rise in support of this amendment. It's very similar to one that we proposed as well, but I think that it's actually more in depth. I appreciate the effort that was put into it. I think that it goes back to exactly what we've been saying all night. In reality, the person who is wanting to come forward and identify a situation that causes them to be a whistle-blower should be able to do that in any manner that is acceptable and comfortable and makes them feel safe to do so. Regardless of whether it's the media, whether it's a commissioner, whether it's a chief officer or it's your MLA, they should be able to do that.

There have been situations where none of those avenues are safe, so they decide to disclose to the media. I appreciate the hon. member from Calgary for his comments the other day about how sometimes that can go haywire. You're absolutely right. Sometimes it can. I can understand the concern there. But if that person is taking that avenue, then sometimes there's a reason for them to do that.

I also can appreciate other members' concerns here that MLAs are not ombudspersons and MLAs shouldn't be involved in this situation, but the reality of it is that this is our job. People come into our offices every single day and disclose personal detrimental situations to us all the time.

I have a situation right now in my office where a person has come forward to me as the Seniors critic and is talking about what they believe to be abuse in a seniors' centre. They believe that they've already taken their complaint as far as they can go through the system. They claim to have written a letter to the minister. They claim to have written a letter to the associate minister. They've provided a letter to me where they've made a complaint to the Protections for Persons in Care Act. They've provided a letter where they've complained to the elder abuse strategy person. They feel that there is no other avenue to go to. They also feel that if they come forward, their loved one will be punished or abused further. Where do they go? They're even scared to come to me. They don't even want me to bring this situation up yet because they're terrified that if I do, their senior will be abused, their loved one will be hurt even further.

That is a scary situation for us to be in these days. There should not be a single Albertan who believes that if they report something that has a negative impact on someone else – that they're scared to come forward. There shouldn't be a single person out there that if they've used the process in place – and many of the members here have talked about the processes, the processes, the processes. That's fine. But sometimes the process fails, and when the process fails and when the person who's coming forward doesn't trust the process, where do they go?

So far they have no ability to have anonymity. They have to go to their chief officer. They have to disclose in writing. We're just making it pretty much impossible for them to come forward, so they're reaching out to other people, and they are reaching out to their MLA. Now, I could take forward an anonymous complaint or an anonymous situation, but am I going to go to the chief officer of that person who's an employee or that person whose loved one is in that facility? They're too scared to have that happen. There's a reason they're scared. I don't believe that the average person who's gone to that many lengths is going forward to that point just to create a problem. I believe that that person truly, honestly believes that their loved one is being hurt in some way.

I can tell you that as a caregiver, as someone who cared for my brother in a long-term care facility, I was very fortunate. My brother was never in that situation. But I can tell you as somebody who's been there that if I truly believed that that person that I loved was being abused in any way and that if I took that information through the process, he would be punished further, I wouldn't do it.

That's the fundamental problem here. We're putting up a roadblock to say, "You have to do it this way, and if you don't like doing it this way, then don't come forward," which means that that behaviour continues until either that employee leaves, the person dies, or they're taken out of that situation. I don't think we want to put any Albertan in a situation where they're forced to make a decision for caring for their loved one – this is just one example – or coming forward. We don't want to do that. This legislation isn't supposed to do that, but it's exactly what it does.

If we just take a step back and realize that they could disclose and they should be able to disclose in whatever manner they're comfortable with and then let that matter go forward and they can go through the process, that's fine. But what does it matter how the information gets to where it needs to be? What matters is that the information gets there and we resolve the problem. I think it's imperative on us to realize this isn't just about protecting us; it's protecting those people who can't stick up for themselves and those people who are scared to come forward. Right now in Alberta there are people who are scared to come forward.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to make sure that the record stands corrected. Last evening we talked about MLAs' roles as ombudspeople for their constituents. MLAs aren't the Ombudsman. The Ombudsman is a separate, independent office, and I think we all need to respect that office. MLAs certainly act as ombudspeople for their constituents. I think every single elected official here in this Legislature would agree that that is our role. I don't think there is any dispute about that, and I just want to make sure that the record stands corrected on that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Scott: Madam Chair, these two issues were dealt with last night. I just want to briefly restate some of the points that were made. Nothing in this act prevents somebody from going to their MLA. Nothing in this act prevents somebody from going to the media. We have anonymity protected in this act, and I think we have effective procedures not only for reporting but for actually addressing the wrongdoings and for addressing things that need to be fixed. We have an effective procedure set out in this act, and that's why I cannot support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Is there any other member that wishes to speak on amendment A21? On the amendment, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Madam Chair. I guess that, to summarize a little of the way we are seeing this bill, it's an attempt by government to balance the rights of the employer with the rights of the employee. We think the bias should be much higher in favour of the employee who is trying to expose wrongdoing because in your attempts to try and protect the interests of the employer, you're sending a very mixed message to those that would see problems and want to raise problems but have too much at risk to expose it.

Efforts by this bill, if anything, bias it more in favour of the employee and demonstrate to would-be whistle-blowers that the bias is not so much in finding a balance between the rights of employer and employee, but the bias is in favour of exposing wrongdoing. What we haven't seen in this bill so far is the bias in favour of whistle-blowing, which would send a very strong message to any of us who support whistle-blowing that you're really serious about wanting to know and to stamp out wrongdoing. One might call it erring on the side of the whistle-blower. That's, essentially, what I think we're asking for.

In all of these different amendments we're saying that the balance of power is too much in balance. You're not biasing this in favour of people taking the risk of sticking their neck out and potentially compromising their future, their family's future, anyone associated with them because of the lack of checks and the lack of real, definitive protection.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion on amendment A21 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We return to Bill 4. Are there any members who wish to speak, question, or provide an amendment? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again, what a wonderful opportunity this is to rise in this Legislature and put forward another amendment on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. We'll pause for a moment while we pass out the amendment.

Hon. member, this will be known as amendment A22. Please proceed.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. How wonderful it is to be speaking to amendment A22. Now, this amendment is on section 32 of Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act. What section 32 is is the section with the reporting function back to the Legislature, so the chief officer's annual report.

32(1) Every chief officer must prepare a report annually on all disclosures that have been made to the designated officer of the department, public entity or office of the Legislature for which the chief officer is responsible.

(2) The report under subsection (1) must include the following information:

(a) the number of disclosures received by the designated officer, the number of disclosures acted on and the - number of disclosures not acted on by the designated officer;

- (b) the number of investigations commenced by the designated officer as a result of disclosures;
- (c) in the case of an investigation that results in a finding of wrongdoing, a description of the wrongdoing and any recommendations made or corrective measures taken in relation to the wrongdoing or the reasons why no corrective measure was taken.

What we're asking for, what the government is perceived to be asking for here is a report very similar to the one that the Auditor General provides. I think this is wonderful. We should have that report here in the Legislature. The only question that I have is: why is the reporting a little bit different? With the Auditor General and the other independent commissioners that we have that report to the Legislature, they do this on a semiannual basis, yet with the commissioner for whistle-blowers, not so. I don't understand this. Clearly, the Auditor General's report is a fantastic report. We get that twice a year. The Auditor General is doing a wonderful job. We get a nice, well-put-together report that has not only the findings but also recommendations and outstanding recommendations.

Unfortunately, with the chief officer's annual report we're missing the recommendations side. I would like to see that. I would like to see that the recommendations come forward. I would also like to see that we see that report twice a year, that we see a semiannual reporting process. The reason behind that is that, you know, after something comes forward, it might be two years before the investigation is done. Depending on when the last report was, we may still have to wait another year before we find out if that report was investigated, completed, acted on, and resolved. I don't understand why we would need to wait that extra year. I think that we should put this forward in the same way that the Auditor General puts their report forward. It's a system that is working very well.

The other independent commissioners of the Legislature operate in the same manner. They put forward this semiannual report. We all get to look through it as members, read the report, and come back and make sure that the report has been acted on and that everything is okay within the government. If there are some outstanding recommendations, we can see when those recommendations may be acted upon in the future or prompt for a little bit of action on those. Again, that is the job of the opposition, to prompt the government to work on some of the recommendations that the Auditor General puts forward.

Now, I see that this is working so very well with the other independent commissioners, so let's continue on in that tradition. Let's amend this and have a semiannual reporting, much like the Auditor General has, and have this information come forward on a semiannual basis so that all the members of the Legislature can know in a timely manner what's been going on within the ministries and that cases of wrongdoing have been looked at and have been resolved.

I can't understand why a whistle-blower would want to come forward if they didn't have any oversight on the commissioner. This is just the one place where we have a little bit of oversight, and that's we as all of the members of the Legislature, not just we as the opposition. It's good to have these reports, and it's good to have them often. We've seen it with the other independent commissioners, so let's do it with the whistle-blower commissioner. Let's follow the traditions that have already been set forth and have a semiannual report.

Again, thank you for the opportunity to stand and support my fellow Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and to support this wonderful, wonderful amendment.

9:30

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A22? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in favour of this amendment as well. It is my understanding there has been a long-standing practice in this Legislature and in many others that officers or these types of organizations report back to the Legislature on a semiannual basis. There's a reason for doing that. It allows for accountability and transparency. It also allows for a status update on what's going on. Is that department effective? Is this effective? Is the whistle-blower act in itself effective enough and doing its job and allowing for complaints to come forward, or is it not effective and something that should be reviewed further at a later date?

Clearly, we set out the standards for the Auditor General and several other of these types of groups that report back to the Legislature, and for some reason we've omitted the same standard we put to everyone else from this act alone. I'm certainly open to the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation explaining why he would change the standard practice of what this Legislature was already doing, to report on a semiannual basis, and explaining why this report would be so much different and be pushed to a yearly basis.

It would seem to me that given this is a brand new act and given this is a brand new opportunity for people to come forward that not only would the government want to make sure that we're accountable and transparent, but they'd also want to make sure that there's progress being made in how effective the act actually is. In order to do that, it would certainly seem that to have it come back to the Legislature I believe it's every April with a fall update every October would allow for the Legislature to hear what has happened between spring and fall, so over the summer months. Maybe we don't get any complaints leading into the fall. Maybe the bulk of our complaints come at Christmas. Who knows? At least then we might even be able to establish some sort of pattern. But we're not going to know if it comes in yearly. It could also be quite a substantial amount of time, that 12 months in between. It would seem that if there's a reason that we make the Auditor General report semiannually, why wouldn't we follow the same practice and the same standards with this act that we apply to all other acts?

It would also seem that by reporting back to the Legislature every six months, or semiannually, if there were budget implications – perhaps you're overloaded with whistle-blower people who want to come forward; there might be a budget implication – then you could propose that with lots of advance, which would allow for reporting and all of that to justify or not justify your position on funding.

I just don't know why we would make it any different than what we currently expect of our other reporting agencies. I would open the floor to the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation to maybe explain why there's such a difference between the annual and semiannual.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A22? On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's interesting that on the amendment all the speakers from the members opposite keep talking about semiannually, but actually in the amendment here it's prescribed as April and October. Given the justification for the amendment, the April seems foolish because the legislation allows for the commissioner to report on any matter when the commissioner feels it is in the public interest to do so. That is a more open, transparent, and customized approach to reporting and is better use of the commissioner's resources than mandating a semiannual report.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thanks, Madam Chair. The hon. member in his statement even quoted from the provision and said that the Ethics Commissioner may report. This is a mandatory requirement that we think is very important. To actually leave the discretion with a commissioner once he has found there to be a wrongdoing, I think is completely unacceptable. If there's a finding of wrongdoing, it should clearly be made public. Anything other than that is just a very secretive process.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there any other member who wishes to comment on amendment A22? Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A22 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Back on Bill 4, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise with an amendment to Bill 4.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause while that amendment is being distributed.

This amendment will be known as A23. Hon. member, you may proceed.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm moving that Bill 4, Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act be amended by striking out section 21 and substituting the following:

Allegations by others of wrongdoing

21 If the Commissioner receives a disclosure that has been made anonymously or by an individual who is not an employee and the Commissioner believes that the disclosure may relate to a wrongdoing set out in section 3, the Commissioner must investigate the disclosure while maintaining the anonymity of the individual in accordance with the procedures outlined in section 5.

At the moment this bill does not ensure the commissioner will investigate disclosures made to the commissioner by individuals who are not an employee. The amendment that I'm putting forward today will ensure the commissioner will investigate disclosures to ensure that the public interest is protected even in cases where the disclosure is not made by an employee.

Madam Chair, if I can indulge the House and explain some of the rationale behind this. Sometimes third parties are made aware of internal corruptions or gross misconducts or illegality or other wrongdoings, okay? In these cases nonemployees must have an open avenue to the commissioner as legislated under our whistleblower protection act. This avenue will ensure the protection and anonymity of nonemployees, which is important in cases where a whistle-blower may not be affiliated professionally with the organization he or she finds a wrongdoing within.

This amendment will obligate the commissioner to investigate these disclosures, to seek out wrongdoing only if the commissioner is convinced there has been a wrongdoing. I want to emphasize that to the hon. members across the way, that this isn't about creating an endless witch hunt. This isn't about, you know, trying to dig for wrongdoings that don't exist. This is only if the commissioner is convinced that there is a wrongdoing that it provides the commissioner an avenue. Again, it provides for nonemployees to be able to approach the commissioner if they learn of a wrongdoing. So once the commissioner deems that there has been a wrongdoing, they can ensure that all Albertans, even nonemployees, receive the full services of the commissioner and that their legitimate disclosures will result in an investigation.

I honestly believe, hon. members, that this will strengthen the whistle-blower protection act and, again, provide avenues where we're not limiting this only to public-sector employees because, again, there are many examples of instances where nonemployees learn of a wrongdoing that is legitimate. It's up to the commissioner to do his due diligence before pursuing, but this opens up another avenue or another channel to ensure that there is that accountability happening and that we aren't missing any potential wrongdoings. Again I would ask the members of this House to consider this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there any other member who wishes to speak on amendment A23? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka on the amendment.

Mr. Fox: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I want to stand in support of this amendment. Why I'm standing in support of this amendment is because it is looking to protect the anonymous discloser, the anonymous whistle-blower, and make sure that when they do send something in, it is looked into. It is investigated. It isn't just dismissed because it was anonymous.

With that, I thank the chair for recognizing me, and I'd just like to state once again that I am in support of this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on this amendment, A23?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A23 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back on Bill 4. The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. I am happy once again to stand and move the last amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The last amendment.

Mr. Fox: The last amendment from the Wildrose on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. We will take a moment to distribute the amendment, and this amendment will be known as amendment A24.

Hon. member, we can proceed with amendment A24.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. Now, I'm going to read the section of the act that we're looking to amend here, which is section 1(g).

"Employee" means an individual employed by, or an individual who has suffered a reprisal and has been terminated by, a department, a public entity or an office of the Legislature or an individual prescribed in the regulations as an employee.

Now, I understand that you are looking to protect the employees, but there are other classes of people as well that work within ministries. What we're looking to add here is "or who performs a service as an appointee, volunteer or student for or under a contract or agency relationship with" after "employed by".

The reason why we need to add this in is because there are other people that work within the public entities. I don't understand why we wouldn't want to protect them if they saw something that they felt it necessary to come forward with.

Now, employee is limited, very limited, in scope. When we open this up, we're not really opening it that far. We're just making sure that, you know, if you do have a student that is working in a department, maybe volunteering time or working under contract or doing a practicum, they have the protection to come forward if they see something that just doesn't pass the smell test. We want to make sure that that person is protected and that their entire future career isn't damaged by coming forward. I couldn't fathom – I could not fathom – having somebody's career destroyed before it even started because they saw something that they thought maybe, just maybe, should go to the whistle-blower commissioner or to the designated officer. I don't understand why we wouldn't want to protect them from reprisals as well as the employees.

This is not really changing the scope of the bill at all. We just want to make sure that those who are working within these departments, whether they're there as an appointee, a volunteer, somebody under contract or in an agency relationship, are protected. That is the name that's on the front of this bill. This is whistle-blower protection, not protection for the government from the whistle-blower. I can't understand why this wouldn't have been included in the first place along with a lot of the other amendments we've spoken about here tonight.

You know, I'd really hoped that we would go to committee and discuss these things within a legislative committee and have a real back and forth about what's in this piece of legislation so that we could possibly fix some of the areas that we've found issue with, that independent groups have found issue with just like this one here, this amendment to section 1(g). I can't understand why we're not utilizing the legislative committees, which are there for that.

We really should have a discussion about this. We should have a further discussion about this because, clearly, there are issues with this piece of legislation. I mean, the NDs had multiple, multiple amendments. The Liberals had multiple amendments. We had over 20 amendments. They were all amendments in good faith. I know because I worked on most of them. This wasn't about what was going on on the other side of the aisle or trying to make anybody look bad. This was simply about trying to protect all those who come forward as whistle-blowers.

I guess this is the very last amendment that we have on this. I would sincerely hope that you would want to protect those who come forward who perform a service as an appointee, as a volunteer or student, or have come under contract or are in an agency relationship with the public entity.

With that, I thank you again for the opportunity and the ability to stand here today to bring this forward. In fact, I would like to thank the members of the Lacombe-Ponoka constituency for electing me to come forward, to stand up for whistle-blowers on this piece of legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A24, Bill 4? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just to thank the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka and the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and, as well, the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills for all the effort they've put into all of these amendments. It does take a lot of work. I've watched them over the last week or so putting forward these amendments and consulting with Albertans. I appreciate all the effort that you have put into it. Thank you very much, because they are important.

This last amendment is something that is really important because more and more often we rely on volunteers or appointees to come into certain facilities and actually work there and help with protecting the people who are there. For example, my brother was at the Innisfail health care centre, which is an Alberta Health Services facility. He was in Rosefield Centre. My brother could not feed himself. He required 11,000 calories a day to live. You could imagine: if you can't feed yourself, how do you get 11,000 calories a day?

Well, clearly, the staff there did not have enough time to continuously feed him. He could not feed himself because his disease had progressed so much that he was unable to hold a fork or a spoon or anything and provide that food to his mouth. So we engaged with certain people in the community who registered as volunteers. They came in in the day, when my mom was not able to come in. My mom was there every single evening to feed my brother. On the weekends we spelled off, and mostly mom fed him because it was something that she wanted to do.

When you're having to feed someone who needs 11,000 calories a day, you're literally having to feed them all the time. It's not just: let's go and feed them dinner, and let's go feed them breakfast, and let's go feed them lunch. You are having to literally sit down with them on a constant basis and feed them pudding and feed them Ensure and all of those things, and that takes time.

We acknowledged that that was almost impossible for front-line staff workers to do. There's not the ability in the system to have them be able to spend that much time with my brother. So by engaging the volunteers – we were able to find some fantastic volunteers that for two years, while he was in the Rosefield Centre, came in faithfully every single day that my mom could not be there and fed him all day long. Well, this is a huge burden that they've taken off of the health care system.

I think it's important to understand what our volunteers do in these facilities. These same people took time out of their day to spend eight hours a day feeding my brother, who couldn't feed himself. Now, without them that duty would have fallen to a health care worker, and clearly we don't have the staff nor do we have the dollars to provide that kind of service. In addition to that, that volunteer would take him outside because he could not wheel himself outside. They would light a cigarette for him. They would take him out to smell the flowers during the times when my mom had to work. My mom and I both had full-time jobs because we were the only ones paying the bills.

When we're relying that heavily on a volunteer sector, we need to protect them because they really are doing the job of our employees. If we're expecting them to do the job of our employees, then they should be granted the same protection as that employee gets. When we're taking a look at a sector of our health care system – and it's not just our health care system. We have volunteers who deal with people with developmental disabilities, our AISH clients – they're all over – yet we're asking them to work as employees.

Some of them are putting in significant hours. I know that the two volunteers that helped my brother for two years put in easily 40 hours a week and then were kind enough to come in even on the weekends just to see if my mom needed a hand. If you're doing that – we're not asking you for family members. When my mom came in, that was just her nurturing nature to go in there and sit with him for that long until his passing. But when you're asking people to give up 40 hours of their week to go in and really do what employees should be doing but can't, don't have the time to do, then let's protect them just the same as if they're employees.

Not only are we talking about that, but we're also talking about these people that are in the system, that are there voluntarily. They also see things. They're made aware of situations. Some of those people that are there that are feeling vulnerable might confide in them. So then we're basically saying to them: you have no protection; so if you come forward, you may not be able to come back here.

I can tell you as a caregiver I relied on those volunteers to help my brother because we couldn't be there, but I can tell you, more importantly, that those two volunteers became my brother's best friends. You know, these were two older women who took the time out of their day to spend eight hours a day with some boy they didn't even know. When my brother came into that facility, he was just a patient, just like any one of us. But by the time of his death and to this day these people spend their holidays with our family, these people spend their time with our family. These people have dedicated their lives to the last two and a quarter years of my brother's life, all just because they're kind. And now we're saying to them: we don't want to protect you because you're just a volunteer.

Now, I'm giving you one side of the story – and I appreciate that you're hearing this; I feel like you are, and I think that's great – and if you take a look at it from that perspective, it's not just a frivolous amendment. These people add value to our system. They relieve the health care system. They relieve taxpayer dollars. But, more importantly, they make the lives of the people they're helping that much better. My brother loved these people. I love these people, and I didn't know them three years ago. I ask if you could just take a minute, before you automatically decide that this is something you absolutely cannot support, to take a look at it from that perspective.

We're asking a lot of people here. More and more people are going into care. More and more people need baths. More and more people need to be fed. My brother did get bathed once a week. Once a week. Now, if that volunteer had been allowed to bathe him, she would've done that, too. I'm not faulting the front-line workers for that. That's not their fault.

We're asking volunteers to be employees. So just take a step back, please think about it for two minutes, and consider this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A24?

Mr. Scott: Madam Chair, the act already allows anyone to make a disclosure to the commissioner even if they are an employee of a contractor hired by a public entity, an employee of a company that provides services on behalf of a public entity, a nonemployee, a volunteer, or a private citizen. That's covered in section 21.

This government recognizes the importance of accountability outside the public sector. We also recognize the importance of reducing red tape for both large and small businesses. We encourage Alberta businesses to take a leadership role and to develop similar protections for their employees. Prior to extending this legislation, it would be critical that we have consultation with the right organizations to make sure that the right people and the right organizations are covered.

For that reason, I cannot support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm going to read section 21 here again:

If the Commissioner receives an allegation of wrongdoing that has been made anonymously or by an individual who is not an employee, the Commissioner may . . .

May, not must.

. . . choose to investigate the disclosure or may, in the Commissioner's discretion, forward the allegation to the chief officer of the department, public entity or office of the Legislature.

May.

Now, this only talks about disclosure. This does not afford protection. This is about investigation. This is about going forward and investigating a complaint, but it doesn't say anywhere in here that it applies to reprisal, and it doesn't offer protection. It just says that they may investigate.

Well, we want to make sure that not only can the commissioner investigate, but that person who had the audacity to come forward – the audacity to come forward – is protected from reprisal under this piece of legislation. Just by adding this to section 1(g), you are protecting them from reprisal. That's what we're looking for. We're looking to protect the whistle-blower. It's important that we protect these people.

I just can't understand why we don't want to extend the provisions that protect the employees to the volunteers, to the students who might come forward, to these people that are coming forward. I mean, I can't understand why you wouldn't want to apply that there rather than just investigate. This piece of legislation is so much more than an investigation tool. This piece of legislation is meant to protect the whistle-blower, not just to investigate allegations of wrongdoing.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mrs. Towle: I will keep my comments brief. I can appreciate your position, and I understand that you believe section 21 covers them, but very clearly section 21 says may. It says may. If you've had someone in care and you're relying on that volunteer to be with them eight hours a day to provide a service that the system does not provide, I would defy any one of you to say: you are not entitled to the same protection that the LPN or the RN or the health care aide is given. Yet they're doing the same level of care because the system doesn't provide it currently. This isn't just about seniors. It's not just about care facilities. It's people with developmental disabilities. It's people on AISH.

I respect your position. I understand your position. But, very clearly, section 21 says may. Surely, at some point in time tonight we can take a step back, really take one amendment, and literally say that we're going to protect volunteers. They're integral to our system. They're integral to Albertans. They're integral to saving taxpayer dollars.

I understand your position, but section 21 just says may. It doesn't protect them. It doesn't say that you will investigate. It doesn't say that their volunteer position at that facility will be protected.

These people love the people they're helping. I would defy anyone in this room to believe that if you have a person in care right now and you have that volunteer looking after them, you would honestly say that that person doesn't deserve the same kind of care and compassion and protection that we're affording to employees. Do you honestly believe that that employee who is helping people go from group homes to the mall doesn't deserve the same kind of protection if they see a wrongdoing? This is only if they see wrongdoing. That's it. Section 21 does not protect them.

Thank you.

10:10

The Deputy Chair: Thank you hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A24? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just going back to the member opposite's comments on section 21 in relation to this amendment, it's clear that it's permissive. It says may. Not only that, it even goes further in terms of the legislation. It's not only may; it's in his discretion. It is abundantly clear that it's permissive.

I'm not sure why the minister is sticking to his talking points, probably written by someone in his department, when he can clearly read the legislation and see that it's permissive, that it doesn't guarantee the protection of those who whistle-blow, and it doesn't guarantee that those instances that are put forward to the commissioner are eventually investigated. It's just mind boggling that someone who has written the legislation apparently still is trying to portray that it's mandatory when the language is clearly permissive.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to weigh in on this conversation and to reiterate what some of the other hon. members have said as far as the impact that volunteers and caregivers have and the role that they play in our society, you know, the contributions that they make to ensuring that Alberta is the greatest province in the country.

It's disconcerting to hear that, again, the hon. associate minister is referring to a section which allows the commissioner to use their discretion as far as whether an investigation happens or not. I think, you know, if the intention of this bill is to protect whistle-blowers, which we've heard time and time again from this government, then this bill needs to reflect that language. Unfortunately, when you have a section that can be interpreted, which gives an out, which means that the commissioner may investigate or may not, that takes any teeth out of this bill, and I would argue that there are very few left in this bill or even to begin with.

I think this amendment put forward by my colleagues on this side of the House is trying to strengthen this bill. It's acknowledging the role that volunteers and caregivers play in that. Again, they may learn of either wrongdoings or ways to improve an agency or an organization, so give them the tools to be able to blow the whistle and ensure that action is taken and that it's not either dismissed or looked over.

Again, this is another amendment that I think is a reasonable amendment that this side of the House is putting forward. I'm a little dismayed as to how little interest the government has in looking at improving a bill, which is what we're supposed to be doing in this House during these debates and during this Committee of the Whole.

I would ask them to seriously consider this amendment and to look at the value that will come out of adding this to the bill. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion on amendment A24 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We now return to Bill 4. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Once again, we'll take a few moments to distribute the amendment. This amendment will be known as A25.

Hon. member, I think that it's okay for us to proceed with amendment A25.

Mr. Bilous: Wonderful. We were just verifying.

The Deputy Chair: It looks like everybody has a copy, so you may proceed.

Mr. Bilous: Wonderful. Thank you, Madam Chair. In this amendment I am moving that the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act be amended in section 32 by striking out subsection (3) and substituting the following:

The report under subsection (1) must be included in the annual report of the department, public entity or office of the Legislature, and the report must be made publicly available.

This amendment is fairly straightforward. We're requiring that the chief officer's annual report be made public each year. At the moment the bill reads that the annual report of the chief officer on all disclosures made to her or him must be included in the annual report of the office of the Legislature if it's made public, and if the report is not made public, it must be made public or available on request. This amendment, what we're proposing, removes any reference to public request and, instead, stipulates that the annual report must always be publicly available.

Albertans should not have to put in a request in order to see an annual report issued by an officer of the Legislature, particularly concerning the number of whistle-blower disclosures received each year, the number of investigations commenced in each year, and a description of findings of wrongdoing and any recommendations or corrective measures taken in relation to the wrongdoing as well as, in cases where corrective measures are not taken, reasons for that decision.

You know, if we want to strengthen not only our democracy but the faith that Albertans have in this legislation and make this as open and transparent a process as possible, then this report should be made public, shouldn't have to be requested. Again, this government has made claims repeatedly about how it wants to be transparent and open. If they are serious about these objectives, then they'll support this amendment and ensure that these annual reports are automatically made public, that we're informing the public of the concerns that are coming into the chief officer's office along with the aforementioned things from the description of the wrongdoings, actions taken, et cetera. If we really do want to improve our agencies and public services that we offer in this province, then this is a great way to do that. Albertans should not have to request this report. It should be automatically made public.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to comment on amendment A25 to Bill 4? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thanks, Madam Chair. I guess, just referring to this amendment, it just seems to be the most reasonable amendment that I've seen today. It states that the annual report must be made public. If the commissioner is going to go through all the work and effort of creating a report, why would it not be made public? If this amendment isn't accepted by the government, it just seems that instead of Public Interest (Whistleblower Protection) Disclosure Act, it should be read as Nondisclosure Act. Why wouldn't the commissioner's annual report be made public? I think this is a very reasonable amendment. I genuinely hope that the minister will strongly consider this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A25 to Bill 4?

Mrs. Towle: I'll keep it brief, but it would seem to me that it would just make sense that if we're protecting the public, then we should allow the information to go back to the public. It would seem to me that this act is called the Public Interest (Whistleblower Protection) Disclosure Act, and by not allowing the report to be made public automatically and requesting that the public request that it be reported or that it may be disclosed publicly and not actually implementing that it be mandatorily sent to the public, it defies the actual title of the act, which is the Public Interest Disclosure Act. It would seem to me that it would only make sense. This one is a no-brainer. We need to do the right thing and make sure that it's accepted publicly, that the public has access to it, because it's in the public interest. This is what the whole act defines.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak?

Mr. Strankman: Well, I too, Madam Chair, would like to challenge the associate minister and the members opposite as to why this is coming forward in this manner. As a member previously stated, it's a public interest disclosure, and it seems to me that this just may be some sort of a typo or a miscommunication or something. When the government presented Bill 2, they also presented 11 of their own amendments, which were primarily legalese to properly bring the bill forward. I would speak completely in favour of this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A25?

[Motion on amendment A25 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We will go back to Bill 4. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have another amendment to Bill 4 that I would like distributed.

The Deputy Chair: We will pause once again to have the amendment distributed. Hon. members, this is amendment A26.

Hon. member, you may proceed.

Mr. Bilous: I'd move that Bill 4, Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, be amended in section 33 by striking out subsection (3) and substituting the following:

- (3) Where it is in the public interest to do so, the Commissioner must also publish special reports relating to any matter within the scope of the Commissioner's responsibilities under this Act, including reports referring to and commenting on any particular matter investigated by the Commissioner within 90 days of the matter being investigated.

The reasoning behind this, Madam Chair, is that section 33 refers to the commissioner's annual reports and special reports to the Legislative Assembly on the exercise and performance of her functions and duties as well as with regard to investigations that she conducts.

Currently section 33(3) indicates that the Commissioner may publish a special report relating to any matter within the scope of the Commissioner's responsibilities under this Act, including a report referring to and commenting on any particular matter investigated by the Commissioner.

This amendment that I'm proposing today will require the commission to publish a special report within 90 days of any particular matter being investigated by their office. Again, this amendment maintains the commissioner's authority to publish additional special reports in addition to those that they shall be required to publish regarding investigations. It's imperative, in my view, that this Legislative Assembly be made aware of the matters that have been investigated and the conclusions and rationale reached by those investigations by the commissioner, putting a time frame on that, within the preceding three months.

This amendment ensures that such reporting is a requirement of the commissioner as opposed to a subjective judgment open to interpretation, which, again, is a real cause of angst for me and amongst my caucus. Within this bill at the moment there is so much that is left to the interpretation, the subjective opinion of the commissioner, so in order to serve all Albertans and serve the interests of all Albertans, we need to firm up certain sections of this bill and ensure that there are established timelines and parameters. As for us, as Members of the Legislative Assembly we want to ensure that we always have the most detailed information available in a timely manner to assist us as legislators. Again, that speaks to the three-month time frame in which we're requiring the commissioner to report.

In short, this amendment helps us to do our job as legislators, and I would ask that all members consider this amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members that wish to speak on amendment A26? The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Yeah. I'll be brief, Madam Chair. It occurs to me that there's just a distinction without a difference. The hon. member is representing that this takes away the choice of the commissioner, yet the first few words in this are, "Where it is in the public interest to do so," clearly a judgment call on the part of the commissioner.

So with all due respect to the hon. member, this doesn't change anything. Consequently, I don't see a point in supporting it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. I am standing to support this amendment. Why am I standing to support this amendment? Because there is a time frame in which that report must be released if the commissioner so decides to write one. Currently, there is nothing in here that says that. It says:

Where it is in the public interest to do so, the Commissioner may publish a special report relating to any matter within the scope of the Commissioner's responsibilities under this Act, including a report referring to and commenting on any particular matter investigated by the Commissioner.

Where is that report going? It doesn't say. It just says he's going to write one. Well, that's nice. We're going to have a report that's going to go somewhere. It's not going to come out into the public, yet the name of the bill is Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act. So where is that report going to be disclosed? Well, in this amendment it specifically states that that report will be disclosed to the public and that it will be done in a timely manner, within 90 days.

It's not just going to be swept under a rug somewhere so that opposition members or some member at large can put in a FOIP request and maybe get the full report. Who knows? It might be redacted. I can't understand this. This bill is supposed to be about public interest disclosure, yet where there is something egregious enough that the commissioner will want to create a special report, that report is not going to go anywhere. It's laughable. It's absolutely laughable. I can't understand why that bill reads the way that it does.

Let's put that information out there for the public interest within 90 days, within a prescribed time frame, where the public can see what the whistle-blower commissioner is doing in the public interest. I mean, who is this bill for? Is this bill meant to protect whistle-blowers and bring things to light, or is it just a black hole in which investigations happen and get sucked into nothing?

Sorry; I can't support the way that this bill is written, and this amendment goes a long way in at least bringing forward a little bit of integrity behind the name of this bill, Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: I would like to thank the hon. Minister of Transportation for speaking to this amendment. However, I need to clarify a few points that he's clearly overlooked. One, the way that the bill is currently written, it uses that word that this government seems to favour, and that's the word "may." At the moment, "the Commissioner may publish a special report." Again we're leaving that decision to the commissioner, as opposed to the amendment that we're putting forward, which instructs and legislates the commissioner, where he or she must publish the special reports as opposed to "may publish."

The second part of this amendment puts a time frame or a parameter around when the commissioner publishes the report. As this Assembly has seen, the government often commissions reports and then holds on to them like a nighttime blanket for months or years afterwards, clearly afraid to either share them or disclose them. This amendment stipulates that the commissioner must report, first and foremost, and second of all, that it is within a timely and reasonable manner. Instead of using those words, which, again, can be interpreted in too many ways, we've put 90 days as the parameter.

This amendment does strengthen this piece and ensures that the public is getting this information, number one, and getting it in a timely manner. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll be very brief. Just in response to the hon. Transportation minister's comments, if something is in the public interest to disclose, why would you then make it discretionary upon the commissioner to disclose it? It just makes absolutely no sense. I think that this is just another example of an absolutely disastrously written bill that hasn't been properly vetted. We, of course, provided the opportunity to put this to a committee so that poorly worded provisions like this are not put into law. Eventually this and many other provisions are probably going to have to be amended. This is why you have all these different independent bodies coming out and saying that this bill is an absolute disaster. An absolute disaster. It's just shocking that you have a Premier who in a throne speech says that this government is going to be open and transparent and then comes out with this disastrous bill that does the complete opposite, protects the government from whistle-blowers instead of the other way around. To make it permissive for a commissioner to release a report when it's in the public interest to do so is just completely wrong.

It's unfortunate that the minister who drafted this doesn't just take some of these really reasonable amendments and accept them. This is supposed to be part of the process. Even though there are valid, substantive amendments being put forward, we're seeing again and again this government rejecting them, it looks like, without even reading them.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on this bill?

Mr. Scott: Just to speak to some of the comments that have been made by my colleagues, section 33(3) does not exist in isolation. It follows the annual report section, which is 33(1). Annually the commissioner is going to report on a number of things:

- (a) the number of general inquiries made to the Commissioner relating to this Act,
- (b) the number of disclosures received by the Commissioner under this Act . . .
- (c) the number of investigations commenced by the Commissioner under this Act,
- (d) the number of recommendations the Commissioner has made and whether the departments, public entities or offices of the Legislature . . . have complied with the recommendations,
- (e) the number of complaints of reprisals received by the Commissioner under this Act . . .
- (f) whether, in the opinion of the Commissioner, there are any systemic problems that may give rise to or have given rise to wrongdoings, and
- (g) any recommendations for improvement that the Commissioner considers appropriate.

There are strong reporting provisions in this act, Madam Chair. Section 33(3) supplements that. It says that whenever the commissioner thinks it's in the public interest, they can issue another report. This is very strong reporting, and that's the reason I cannot support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. One last question. Who is that special report going to? We know where the annual report is going, but the special report that's listed here – it's not clear. It's not clear in the legislation who that special report is going to come to. I think we need to have an amendment that specifies who this special report is going to be given to. Clearly, section (1) and section (2) deal with the annual report. Does that mean we're not going to get to see a special report that is in the public interest? It states here:

- (3) Where it is in the public interest to do so, the Commissioner may publish a special report relating to any matter within the scope of the Commissioner's responsibilities under this Act, including a report referring to and commenting on any particular matter investigated by the Commissioner.

If it's egregious enough that we need a special report, why are we now waiting for an annual report to get it? What's the purpose of having a special report? I don't understand.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion on amendment A26 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We will move on to the main bill, Bill 4. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to put forward another amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Once again we'll take a few moments to distribute the amendment.

Hon. member, you may proceed on amendment A27.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, be amended by adding the following after section 53:

The Commissioner has the duty to protect the job of any employee who in good faith makes a public interest disclosure.

It's interesting and at the same time almost frustrating that it's currently not in the bill that is supposed to be whistle-blower protection. It's not spelled out anywhere that the commissioner has the duty to protect the employee and his or her job.

This amendment simply clarifies what I'm sure members on the opposite side will say is inherently in this bill, yet we don't want to leave anything to interpretation or to reading between the lines. We want to spell out one of the fundamental duties of the commissioner, which is to ensure that whistle-blowers who make disclosures in good faith will not suffer by losing their job through the process. Again, nowhere in this bill is there a section that speaks directly to the relationship between the public interest commissioner and the employee in terms of protecting their employment.

One of the fundamental indicators, when one looks at whistle-blower legislation throughout the world as far as an indicator of success, is in the protection of employees and whether or not whistle-blowers have managed to maintain their jobs throughout the process. Therefore, it's crucial to explicitly and fundamentally state that the duty of the commissioner is to protect the whistle-blower from losing his or her job. Otherwise, the lack of that statement undermines the whole purpose and intent of the bill.

This section will help to shift the perception that this act creates more hurdles for whistle-blowers than protection. Again, you know, if the purpose is to protect the whistle-blower, then it needs to be stated explicitly in this bill. The proposed section will enshrine the spirit of the bill, which is the protection of whistle-blowers as part of the commission.

I can pretty much anticipate that members on the opposite side will speak to the fact that it's already in the spirit of the bill, and I will challenge that comment by stating that it needs to be explicitly written into the bill that this is one of the duties and priorities of the commission in order to give potential whistle-blowers the confidence to step forward and blow the whistle. I mean, again, if there is fear of reprisal and the potential for that, then potential whistle-blowers will be unlikely to step forward, and this whole bill will essentially be meaningless as far as protecting whistleblowers or giving them the tools or the ability to come forward and the protection that will follow.

So I will ask members of this House to consider this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members who wish to speak on amendment A27? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Again, it is a pleasure to rise and support the amendment of my good friend from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. Now, what is this amendment? This amendment goes right to the very intent of this bill, whistle-blower protection. It's right there in the name, the shield provision, as the Member for Airdrie described it last night, of the act. This is meant to protect the whistle-blower. This act, I believe, was supposed to have been brought forward not to create just an internal reporting body but to protect those who come forward, those who put their jobs on the line, their ability to produce income on the line, which ultimately can affect their family and their home life. I mean, this is everything. This is why this bill was supposed to have come forward, to protect the employee who in good faith comes forward with a disclosure.

Now, nowhere in the bill does it state that the commissioner has a duty to protect that person. All that's in the bill is provisions that the employee should be protected from reprisal, but it doesn't put any onus back on the person that ultimately has the investigation purpose, the person that ultimately enacts the provisions under this bill to protect the employee. It just simply states that the employee is protected. But, you know, we should be making somebody responsible for it. The commissioner should be responsible.

They need to know. The employee needs to know that when they've come forward in good faith, there is somebody there who is willing to stand as the shield, to stand in front of them to protect them, not just from the piece of legislation but a physical human being to protect the whistle-blower who has come forward. I mean, it's nice to have a piece of paper, but paper is flimsy; people aren't. When you have a commissioner that understands that their duty is to protect the person coming forward in good faith, they will do so. It's the same oath that many other public servants take.

So let's have the commissioner understand that it is his duty and put it in the legislation so that the commissioner knows that it's his or her duty to protect the employee who comes forward in good faith.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Bill 4 Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act (continued)

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, we can now proceed with amendment A28.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 4, Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act be amended by striking out section 38 and substituting the following: "Notwithstanding section 3(1) of the Ombudsman Act, the Ombudsman shall serve as Public Interest Commissioner to carry on the duties and functions set out in this Act." Currently the bill as written allows for the Ombudsman to serve as the public interest commissioner but does not necessitate that. This amendment will ensure that the Ombudsman will serve as the public interest commissioner.

The logic behind this amendment is that we're trying to remove the ambiguity surrounding the appointment of the public interest commissioner. In order to maintain transparency in the process, this amendment will provide some clarity and avoid any questions surrounding the process of the appointment of the public interest commissioner, which is currently quite ambiguous if members look at that section.

Concerns have been raised that recommendations by the Legislative Assembly as per the appointment of the commissioner may not result in the best appointee for the job. This amendment will avoid the potential for the Lieutenant Governor in Council and the Assembly to appoint a person without the necessary credentials to serve in the role of commissioner. You know, it takes away or eliminates that possibility of not appointing the most qualified, effective, and nonpartisan person for the position. It is our position that in order to remove that ambiguity, we clarify that it will in fact be the Ombudsman, which, as I've stated, is one of the possible commissioners for this bill as written by the government.

I would ask, then, that all members of the Assembly consider this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who would like to speak on amendment A28?

Seeing none, we will call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on Amendment A28 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 11:13 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Motion on amendment A28 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Once again we move back to Bill 4.

Mr. Bilous: Madam Chair, I rise to table my final amendment to this poorly written bill.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. We will pause while we distribute that amendment.

Hon. members, the amendment that we were going to name A29 is out of order. The reason for that is because it is the same amendment that we have already defeated. That was amendment A11, and that was defeated on November 27.

We will move back to the bill in Committee of the Whole. Are there any members who have any comments or further amendments to be offered with respect to Bill 4?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 4 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Mr. Campbell: Madam Chair, I'd ask that the committee rise and report on Bill 4.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-East, would you read the report, please?

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 4. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 4 Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation to move third reading.

Mr. Scott: I move the bill for third reading.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, here we are, finally, on third reading, and I'm pleased to speak to Bill 4. Remember that when I first spoke on this, I said that we had hoped to be able to support it, that we were going to seek significant amendments to it, and in the absence of those significant amendments we would not be able to support it. So I will be voting against this bill. I am looking forward to seeing my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek bring forward a piece of private member's legislation that will look like the kind of whistle-blower legislation that this government had the opportunity to draft and failed at doing.

When we started looking at this legislation, we said that we were going to judge it by three criteria. We wanted to see legislation that would allow for whistle-blowers to blow the whistle anywhere, anytime, for any reason.

One of the groups that the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has been working with in developing her draft legislation for her private member's bill was FAIR, the Federal Accountability Initiative for Reform. They took the time to go through and do an assessment of Alberta's bill even though they have been in the past a research agency that looks at federal legislation. They don't have much nice to say about the federal legislation. They have said that the federal legislation has cost taxpayers more than $30 million with, as they quote, "virtually nothing to show for it." They say, "No other developed country has suffered such a spectacular and humiliating meltdown of its national whistle-blower system" as this system. Unfortunately, they do say that Alberta's bill, this legislation, which models after many of the errors in the federal bill, is not much better.

I want to read a couple of things from the report because I think it's instructive about the approach that they think that this government should have taken, which would have allowed them to endorse it. What they say about this bill is that the shortcomings and loopholes of this bill are so serious that any of the rest doesn't matter because the law as it's presently configured simply cannot be effective. I think that's important.

The other thing that is important is that in looking through the very serious concerns that they have with this legislation, they point out 15 major flaws. They say that it does not look like a serious attempt at creating an effective anti-corruption system: it looks more like an attempt at window-dressing – or the result of a failure to understand the most basic requirements of whistleblower legislation.

There are three other areas from this report that I want to quote at length before I go into some of the more summary arguments that they make. Don't worry; I won't go through all of the 15 major flaws that they have with the bill. I will table this report, if it hasn't been done already, so that members can read it for themselves. The problem that we see, one of the big, serious issues, is that the most common types of wrongdoing are excluded. In the definition of wrongdoing the act doesn't reference the most common types of misconduct – namely, the violation of policies, violation of codes of conduct, and the like – even though they can have very serious consequences.

Here's an instructive example, I think. They give this example that most of the misconduct exposed within the financial industry during the major financial meltdown and economic devastation that it caused around the globe was in fact perfectly legal even though it was clearly immoral and unethical and violated numerous policies. That I think is instructive. Just because something doesn't violate the letter of the law doesn't mean that it's ethical. It doesn't mean that it doesn't breach some kind of code of conduct or policy. These are the kinds of things that we want to give our public servants the latitude to be able to report on without fear of retaliation.

Because what happens – and I'm sure the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark would be able to go on at length about this, about how false accusations and smears are routinely used to ruin truth tellers' reputations and to prevent them from ever finding employment again in their chosen field. Sometimes it results in the loss of income. Crushing legal bills often lead to the loss of home, and families can be torn apart because of extreme stresses. It's not surprising that some whistle-blowers, having lost everything yet still failing to stop the wrongdoing, commit suicide. That's what we're talking about here, Madam Speaker. That's why this is such a serious issue and why we had hoped that this bill would address it and why we're so disappointed that it doesn't.

This is the last piece that I'll quote from here.

The primary purpose of whistleblower legislation is to deter wrongdoing that harms the public interest, so it's essential to take appropriate, visible action when misconduct is proven. However, there is often great resistance to this, especially when senior people are implicated in some way, or simply trying to save face. It's not at all uncommon for proven wrongdoers [to] get a 'soft landing' or even to be promoted.

That, once again, is the problem with a system where you're forcing everyone to go through internal departmental processes when it could well be that the very people who are breaking the codes of conduct, who are creating a toxic work environment are the ones that have been continually promoted up the food chain and are now the bosses overseeing this process. This is the reason why this legislation is so fundamentally flawed. It hands over the power to one individual through this internal departmental structure to be able to have unlimited discretion to do anything or to do nothing at all.

That's the bigger fear, that they will do nothing at all. There's no avenue for appeal. There's no public disclosure despite the best efforts of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to add some requirements for public disclosure. I agree with the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. We probably should have changed the name of the bill to the Public Interest Nondisclosure Act after what I saw this evening with the voting down of those two amendments. There is no remedy, so there is no described forum in the legislation for how an individual could seek a remedy or redress or compensation.

One of the things that FAIR points out and that I think, again, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview tried to address is that the very best whistle-blower legislation focuses – and this is in the U.K., for instance – not on specifying the processes for investigation of disclosures and so on but focuses almost entirely upon the mechanism for providing a possible remedy for the whistle-blower. That's what whistle-blower legislation is supposed to do. The modest proposal from the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, making it a mandate of the commissioner to ensure that a public servant would be able to keep their job, seems to me to be very baseline stuff if you're going to try to create whistle-blower protection that actually works. I'm very disappointed that the members opposite refused to support that amendment.

The other issues, of course, are not being able to go to the media, not being able to go to an MLA and be assured that your disclosure through those mechanisms is going to yield any positive results, and I'll talk more about that in just a minute. The FAIR organization, the Federal Accountability Initiative for Reform, says that there's been no evidence of extensive research done on this bill despite what the members opposite may say. If there had been extensive research done on this bill, it would not be as poorly written as it has been.

I thought that the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka asked the most relevant question. To me, it really resonated. He said: who is this bill for? This bill is not for the hard-working public servants, who are working in an environment where they observe wrongdoing, they observe breaches, and they're terrified to come forward and talk about it because they fear retaliation. That's who the bill is supposed to be for, but the way this bill is structured, it is structured to keep all of that information internal, to bog it down in processes, to keep the information internal, to never really get any true light shone on incidents that are occurring, and to give no real remedy. I think that for those serious reasons this is a bill that should not be supported.

We had some 20 amendments that were put forward. I think that in total there were 27 amendments that were put forward. I guess what I want to do in just finishing off my remarks on this this evening is just remind members of what it is we were trying to do with this piece of legislation. We were trying to create a safe environment for public servants to come forward to report wrongdoing, and I have to say that there is an incongruity that I can't help but notice between what the intention of this legislation was supposed to be and the experience that we have had on the opposition benches virtually every single day since we came into this Legislature.

We've been raising very serious issues of ethical violations. We've been raising very serious issues of breaches of code of conduct, very serious issues of breaches of expense policy, very serious apparent breaches of the conflict-of-interest code, very serious shortages of dollars leading to the prosecutors' offices having difficulty keeping up with their workload. These things, I think, that we are raising are the kinds of things that we want our public servants to be raising so that they can be addressed. Yet we raise these issues. For instance, let me go through a few of them.

The London expense trip began as an $84,000 trip in the official public press release. Then we found out that there were a bunch of expenses that weren't included, so it ballooned to $500,000. By the time we ended up with the disclosure, it turned out it was closer to a million dollars, and we still can't get a full list of all of all of the receipts for all of the people who were on that trip. We're going to keep on asking.

The issue of health care expenses. I ask the Health minister virtually every day about why he won't release all of the expenses for all of the executives for all of the health regions going back to 2005. His response is: well, keep on doing your FOIPs, one FOIP at a time. That's the kind of response we're getting as an opposition when we're trying to raise legitimate issues of health care expenses that, once revealed, have demonstrated that there have been some serious flaws in the way the expense policy has been interpreted in the past.

We raised the issue today of a contract that was given to the firm of the Premier's ex-husband, serious issues, we think, warranting questions. We believe it's our job. We believe that there might be a public servant out there who is a little bit concerned about the closeness of the decision-maker when that decision was made. We would have thought that this is the kind of thing you'd want a public servant to bring forward. Yet every time we stand to ask a question, we're shouted down. We're ridiculed. We're told that this is not appropriate business to bring forward in the Legislature.

We brought forward the issue of the prosecutor in Airdrie dropping the case of a young woman who had been abused for nine years. Why was it dropped? Well, because there weren't enough resources to be able to get the case to court in a timely way. We raised this, and once again the Justice minister shouts us down, tells us we're wrong, says: oh, we'll do an internal investigation. He doesn't want to have a full review. These are the kinds of things you would expect that maybe a public servant would want to bring forward.

The health inquiry, the allegations of queue-jumping: when a public servant, Dr. Stephen Duckett, came on the scene, he stopped any preferential access that MLAs had to get minor tweaks to the waiting times for their constituents and other friends. We want to have a health inquiry that goes back and investigates all of that. Well, too bad. The terms of reference are: looking forward. When we try to put forward a notification to the inquiry to say, "Hey, maybe here are a few people of interest that you might want to have a look at," we're ridiculed. We're told that we're interfering. We're told that we shouldn't.

The fiscal update. We hear from the minister that he's given a full and complete fiscal update. Well, that's not what the Alberta Auditor General said. He's investigating for breaking the law. Maybe this is the kind of thing that a public servant would have wanted to bring forward before this shoddy piece of work was brought forward and presented to this Legislature.

The issue of a high donor giving what is alleged to be a $430,000 cheque to a single political party: I don't know; it seems to me that the media was the one who blew the whistle on that, talking to someone internal to find out about it. It could have been cleared up very easily by just releasing copies of the cheques and the deposit slips, again the kind of thing you'd think that you would want some hard-working employee to bring forward if they think that there's a breach of the elections law. We bring it up, and we're told that it's an inappropriate avenue of discussion and line of questioning in this Legislature.

The Election Act: we have now seen over 80 investigations launched. Most of them have been launched because members of the opposition, members of the media got tips, got phone calls, got people saying, "Hey, maybe this isn't right" because in the law you're not supposed to have public institutions funnelling taxpayer dollars back to a political party. You'd think that this is the kind of thing that maybe public servants would want to bring forward, but once again we bring it up in the Legislature, and we're told that it's not appropriate business to bring up, to bring forward.

The issue of the power lines. We finally saw some revision to the power line legislation, that's going to restore, as it should, an independent needs assessment for those power lines, but no one wants to go back and look at all of the reasons why those initial power line contracts were approved without proper scrutiny, without an independent needs assessment. I would note that the parent company of one of the companies who is going to be a huge beneficiary just announced another criminal prosecution, one of its executives. I don't know. Maybe there's someone in the public service that might want to bring this forward, might want to talk about something that is known about: what were the reasons behind why this decision was made against the public interest? These are the kinds of things that we are bringing forward as an opposition. These are the kinds of things that MLAs are hearing about. These are the kinds of things that the media are hearing about.

You have to understand why I find it a little incongruous that we're standing here debating a piece of legislation to be able to give the public sector the power and the latitude to come forward and to talk about these things without being punished, yet when we bring them up in the Legislature, we are called bottom-feeders. People make jokes about us being failed actresses. Yeah, I did hear that one even though I was walking out. We get shouted down by the folks across the way. When we're trying to put forward amendments late into the night, we've got the Deputy Premier, who rips them up and couldn't show more derision. Then they have the nerve to actually lecture us on decorum in the Legislature. This is the behaviour of a government that then puts forward legislation to create a safe environment for public workers, for public servants to come forward and to report wrongdoing.

Do you see, Madam Speaker, why we just can't support this legislation? There is such a huge divide between the talk of this government and the walk of this government. I don't believe it. The public doesn't believe it. Our hard-working public servants don't believe it. We're not going to pretend that this sham of a legislation is anything other than that. It is the Public Interest Nondisclosure Act. It will not protect whistle-blowers. It will not protect public servants. It is designed to protect the government. For that reason, I will be voting against it.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise this evening to speak against this awfully written piece of legislation. I mean, we've been talking about renaming it. I think that it should be renamed the Public Disinterest Nondisclosure Act.

It's rife with problems, beginning with the fact that organizations that specialize in whistle-blower protection legislation were not consulted along with pieces of legislation from around the world that actually do serve to protect whistle-blowers. First and foremost, this is an act that was supposedly written to encourage and to provide protection for those public servants who see either acts of illegality or issues that they have, to give them a mechanism to report on that so that we can improve and strengthen our systems and agencies and government departments. It's frustrating with what we're left with because this bill doesn't do that at all, not in the least. It doesn't provide an avenue. It does not protect the whistle-blower. It's rife with loopholes from the fact that you've got a commissioner who has sweeping, godlike powers to decide what's investigated and what's not. There is little to no protection for a public servant to step forward, let alone even inquire about how the whistle-blowing process works.

It doesn't include all workers. This government is doing more and more to contract out work to private contractors, who will not be covered by this legislation, which is something else that many different members from the opposition have put forward.

It's with great frustration that the work that the opposition parties have put into bringing forward amendments – as the Leader of the Official Opposition eloquently illustrated, we move amendments forward because we're trying to strengthen bills to provide the best possible legislation for all Albertans. The fact that this Legislative Assembly is divided up amongst four different parties, different ideologies, different points of view being represented: I was under the impression that this government and other members wanted to actually work with each other. What I have seen over the past few weeks regarding pieces of legislation like this whistle-blower protection act is that the government is not interested in working with opposition parties, listening to all different points of view, really putting forward legislation that is in the best interests of Albertans.

You know, it's quite sad that an amendment that's put forward is not based on the merit of the amendment but is looked at as who put it forward, and if it's not put forward by the government themselves, then they want nothing to do with it. I think this sends a very loud message to Albertans that you've got a government who is actually the opposite of transparent. They're actually quite opaque, disinterested in working with and listening to Albertans and working with other members of the Assembly, who represent a great number of Albertans across this province.

It's with great frustration that there were many amendments put forward that were quite reasonable, speaking with members from all different sides of the House, yet because of political positioning, amendments couldn't be accepted. It's at the peril of Albertans, and we're actually doing them a great disservice by not passing a bill that could have worked the way that the government says that it should or will. Unfortunately, as the opposition has pointed out in tabling over – I believe collectively we've tabled over 40 different amendments to this bill alone, which screams that it is full of holes and rife with problems. We're trying to amend them to strengthen this bill, to ensure that it's going to do what the government says that it's going to do.

You know, as the hon. Leader of the Opposition has put it, this bill seems to be more lip service than anything else and isn't in fact going to protect whistle-blowers or potential whistle-blowers from stepping forward in order to improve a system, to provide them with protection, to ensure that they're made whole, to give them the opportunity to blow the whistle any time to anyone anywhere, which is the fundamental principle of what whistle-blower protection should be doing.

Clearly, when we go through this bill, as we've done, we see time and time again that there are not only loopholes, but the way it's written is extremely subjective. It's up to the commissioner to decide whether an investigation is even warranted. What will happen with that? It's limiting on the information that the commissioner comes up with, the rulings that are made. I mean, this piece of legislation is anything but transparent, and I don't think the irony is going to be lost on Albertans when they look at this and say: this bill is terrible and is anything but transparent and is anything but going to protect whistle-blowers.

Again, as all members of the opposition have stated, this is a bill that really protects the government from the whistle-blower, not protecting the whistle-blower, nor will it encourage those who see wrongdoings to have the confidence to step forward to report it. I mean, the whole reporting process is a joke as far as reporting internally to your supervisor. I'm not sure how many people are going to step forward, but I would imagine very few.

It is for these reasons and many others that I have to vote against this bill, and it is with great frustration that another example of a bill that is not serving the best interests of Albertans – and, I mean, I'll take this moment to extend to the government the opportunity that we have in this House of working with different parties coming forward, coming up with the best bills that are going to serve the interests of all Albertans. I think the government has really failed to do that on this piece of legislation. It is for that reason and many others that I have to vote against Bill 4.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, we do have Standing Order 29(2)(a) at this moment, so we have five minutes for questions or comments for the hon. member.

Seeing none, I'll move to the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View on Bill 4 in third reading.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, let me say in this final phase of this bill how eagerly I anticipated this bill. It's been over a decade that on behalf of Albertans, on behalf of many professionals in this province and civil servants we've been pressing for a whistle-blower bill, and I do appreciate the fact that the government has taken a stab at a bill called the whistle-blower bill colloquially, Bill 4. I regret, as others have indicated, that there are so many problems with the bill that it is impossible for me and for this Liberal caucus to support it.

This is a bill that we said from the outset was in principle a great achievement, but after reading the completed bill and trying to amend it and failing, we've realized that this is such a flawed bill that it should be hoisted. I have a number of reasons. Clause 3(2) reads that the act would only apply to wrongdoings that have occurred after the coming into force of the act, completely limiting the investigations that may be required regarding incidents that may have occurred prior to and continuing into this current time. Not only will this not allow an exploration of past events; it will ensure that those individuals that have been accused in the past couple of years can fall back to this clause and be protected for their wrongdoings. Albertans need to know that those that have committed offences can be prosecuted for all they have done and not just what may happen tomorrow.

Clause 19(2) states: "the Commissioner is not required to investigate a disclosure." It also states that if the officer has begun an investigation and this process has taken over two years, the investigation may be discontinued. This allows the commissioner to discontinue without proving an outcome. All he must do is state that the investigation has been discontinued due to the lapse of two years.

The insult to injury can go even further, as in 22(4). There's a provision that allows the commissioner to choose to discontinue his or her investigations without reporting the findings or lack thereof to the initial whistle-blower. In fact, it states that he or she may decide what if anything is "appropriate in the circumstances." This is important as it means the whistle-blower could potentially receive a letter two years after reporting, stating that the commissioner has discontinued the investigation with no reason given.

Clause 51 allows the commissioner to be above reproach in this or any decision that they cannot be questioned on. There should be no individual that's free from the terms of this act. Taking into account the chance that officers are typically protected from action, there still has to be protection for the whistle-blower in the event the commissioner doesn't sit on an issue until two years has lapsed, then report nothing. A whistle-blower needs recourse that an investigation will occur prior to the two years lapsing, and should this not occur, they deserve to know why. To avoid protectionism and promote transparency, the commissioner should absolutely be responsible for ensuring that very timely and thorough investigations occur and that the whistle-blower is protected.

Clause 52 sets out that no proceeding of the commissioner is invalid for want of form. It also goes on to state that their decisions, again, cannot be challenged or reviewed. This becomes a large issue if you look at 49, which states, "Any person who contravenes section 24, 46, 47 or 48 is guilty of an offence and liable." If the commissioner, chief officer, a designated officer, or person acting on behalf or under the direction of any of these parties decides that an accusation is in bad faith, the act states that this is not subject to review. If the accused is terminated or fined and truly believes they were innocent and wrongly accused, they have no ability to defend themselves in court. Further, if the whistle-blower makes a claim and the commissioner decides that the claim is frivolous, he can then, in turn, be fined. There is, essentially, insufficient protection for the whistle-blower. What's more, they have no ability to protect themselves from being fined or punished for coming forward.

This is a bad bill. It has failed to provide assurance or protection for those in the public sector to come forward with concerns. It has failed to provide for appropriate and responsible measures for timely investigation. It will protect those that have been committing offences in the past. I mentioned that we tried to amend this by requesting that certain clauses be struck. All were voted down, as were other opposition amendments. The issue of this totally inadequate protection for whistle-blowers still remains.

Madam Speaker, we're back here, and we begin where we started in second reading. This is, we believe, a fatally flawed bill as it fails to make the process safe, anonymous, and accountable to the whistle-blower while at the same time opening those brave enough to try to come forward to fines or punishments themselves. We have no choice but to move that the motion for third reading of Bill 4, Public Interest Disclosure Act, 2012, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 4, Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence."

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. The hon. member has moved a hoist amendment. It does have to be distributed, so we'll take a few minutes to have that amendment distributed. Do you have that amendment with you?

Dr. Swann: I do not, Madam Speaker. I do not have it copied. My error.

The Acting Speaker: We'll pause for a moment. Like every other amendment, we expected to have a copy for each member of the House.

Dr. Swann: My oversight, Madam.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, would you read that one more time, and we'll listen carefully as none of us will have a copy of that amendment. Please read that again, and then after he's finished reading the hoist amendment, I'll ask if there are any other speakers to that amendment.

Proceed, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: I'm moving that the motion for third reading of Bill 4, Public Interest Disclosure Act, 2012, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence."

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We heard the hoist amendment from the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View. Are there any members who would like to speak to the hoist amendment? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll be very brief. You know, we saw with this piece of legislation that there was absolutely no consultation with independent experts, experts in the field who've had experience examining other jurisdictions, as the Official Opposition leader mentioned, or FAIR, which looked at many other countries and jurisdictions and got best practices. Instead of doing that and having one of the strongest pieces of whistle-blower legislation, this government has apparently refused to look at that.

The result is pretty alarming. We have a bill that has been a complete failure according to independent groups that have come forward. Instead of actually protecting whistle-blowers, it protects the government from whistle-blowers. I think that in the circumstance where there are so many loopholes, you know, like section 31, where the government can exclude anybody from the powers within the act, so many different loopholes that make this legislation unworkable, there's no need to pass a piece of legislation that has so many problems with it. Even if it elevated the bar slightly, I think that it would be worth while to pass a piece of legislation like this, but in its current form I don't think it's worth while. Unfortunately, the minister refused to look at any of the amendments put forward by the opposition parties. We did a lot of work. Again, we talked to Albertans. We looked at best practices in other jurisdictions. The minister, for whatever reason, decided not to. In that case . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you very much, hon. member.

We do have a procedure. I have just been informed by Parliamentary Counsel that without the original copy of the amendment we cannot proceed. In the future, for any member interested in making a hoist amendment, it is an amendment, and we need copies just as we need copies for every other amendment.

We will not allow that amendment, and we'll proceed in third reading. Are there any members who wish to speak to Bill 4 in third reading?

Seeing that there are no other members who wish to speak, I would ask the hon. Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation to close debate.

Mr. Scott: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As sponsor of Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, 2012, I have appreciated the interest and lively debate by the members of this House. The intent of this act is to enable disclosure of wrongdoing in public entities and further deliver on this government's promise to do business with openness and transparency.

We saw repeated comments during Committee of the Whole and even in second reading that focused on disclosure of wrongdoings that predate the act. I want to take this chance to again remind this House that while this act is not retroactive, it is most definitely retrospective. We very purposefully established an independent commissioner with the ability to exercise discretion in terms of investigating any wrongdoings that may have occurred in the past.

The disclosure process set out in the act reflects extensive research and consultation with our stakeholders. It is based on best practices that are already in place in many public entities, some of which are internationally recognized. Our research also indicates that an internal process helps build a culture where wrongdoings are less likely to occur in the first place. Madam Speaker, I feel strongly that what is before this House will be the most effective approach for enabling disclosures of wrongdoing.

Madam Speaker, there has also been much discussion around the establishment of an independent commissioner. I stand by the way in which we are establishing this office. An independent commissioner will be the best option to ensure accountability in the operation of this act. The commissioner acts as the ultimate overseer of internal disclosure procedures and investigates disclosures of wrongdoing when an internal procedure is inappropriate. As an independent officer the commissioner reports directly to the Legislative Assembly. While we heard much about accountability and checks and balances, I find it hard to believe that the members across the way could disagree that accountability to this Legislature is an effective way to ensure that the commissioner performs his or her duties in accordance with this legislation. With this legislation we are establishing a practical and effective mechanism to bring any wrongdoings to light and to make sure that employees who have courage to speak up about a wrongdoing are protected.

Madam Speaker, I am looking forward to getting on with this debate, so I would close by saying that this act is a cornerstone for this government's commitment to transform the way we interact and foster confidence in the public sector with Albertans. It is just the beginning. We are going to continue to be a leader in open and accountable government.

With that, Madam Speaker, I move that third reading of Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, 2012, be closed.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for third reading carried]

12:20 Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole (continued)

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 7 Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I would like to propose an amendment to our bill, and I would ask that that be circulated. It's at the desk.

The Deputy Chair: We'll take a few minutes to circulate the amendment.

Hon. members, this amendment will be called A1. Will the hon. Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs please continue?

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. In the interest of time I will just give a quick description. We have circulated this House amendment tonight to ensure that the Local Authorities Election Act will provide municipalities and school boards with the flexibility to adapt voter identification processes to their local circumstances.

In discussions with municipalities we found that some would like to use a variety of identifications that are specific to their municipalities, so this amendment simply allows that a city upon decision could allow something like a transit pass or something else that's issued by that municipality to be an acceptable form of identification. We're not removing any of the requirements for minimum standards with photographs and such, but it is allowing municipalities to select the kinds of identification that could be used in a municipal election.

With that, I would ask for the agreement of the House to add this amendment to the bill.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members that would like to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, we'll move to the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: Back to Bill 7.

Mr. Campbell: I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Campbell: Now I ask that the House rise and report progress on Bill 7.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-East, would you read the report, please.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 7. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Mr. Campbell: Madam Speaker, seeing the time, I would suggest that we adjourn until 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 12:26 a.m. on Thursday to 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, November 29, 2012

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. Our Divine and Holy Father, as we conclude for this week our work in this Assembly and head back to work in our own constituencies, we renew our thanks and ask for your continued guidance regardless of where we are working for Albertans. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly someone who needs no introduction in this House. He's a former principal of Victoria composite high school and someone who has dedicated much of his life to the arts and is a valued friend of the aboriginal community. He's also a member and a strong advocate for the Northern Alberta Pioneers and Descendants Association. Bob Maskell served as the MLA for Edmonton-Meadowlark from 2001 to 2004. Bob is seated in your gallery. I would ask that he rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Go ahead, Member for Leduc-Beaumont, for your second introduction.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a special visitor from the Northwest Territories. Daryl Dolynny is originally from northern Alberta. However, he is a member of the Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories, representing the riding of Range Lake. Mr. Dolynny is the deputy speaker of Committee of the Whole and deputy chair of the Standing Committee on Social Programs and a member of the Standing Committee on Government Operations. Outside of his political activities Mr. Dolynny is a pharmacist and a former owner of the Shoppers Drug Mart in Yellowknife. Mr. Dolynny is seated in your gallery, and I would ask that he rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Legislature the grade 6 class of Bassano school. This is indeed a monumental day. It's the first time that I'm able to rise and introduce my hometown school that I had the honour of graduating from. Accompanying them today are five parents and two teachers, all of whom are good friends of mine. They are seated in the public gallery. As I call their names, I would ask them to rise: Lana Hale, who is also my constituency assistant for Strathmore-Brooks; Edward Chapman; Jason Huckerby; a teacher, Shawna Singular; Lora-Lee Bell; Carilyn Wallace; and their homeroom teacher, Mrs. Della Armstrong, one of the best teachers in the province, who, may

I also add, is my cousin. I would ask the class to rise and receive the traditional warm greeting of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's truly an honour and privilege for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly five very special guests from St. Michael's Health Group, here to be recognized for a special project very dear to their hearts, their Taiwan volunteer exchange project. St. Michael's Health Group is a not-for-profit organization providing long-term care, supportive housing programs, and services to seniors and families in our communities. My guests today are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask that they please rise as I mention their names: Mrs. Christine Teterenko, director, fund development and communications, St. Michael's Health Group; Mrs. Vicky Beauchamp, president, Friends of St. Michael's, a group of caring volunteers who provide support to St. Michael's Health Group; Mr. Gerry Beauchamp, member, Friends of St. Michael's; Ms Pat Wilkes, volunteer co-ordinator, St. Michael's Health Group; Ms Kate Haidukevich, who is not here today, but she is the exchange co-ordinator, St. Michael's Health Group; and Mrs. Sherry Liimatainen, fund development co-ordinator, St. Michael's Health Group. I would now ask that all of my colleagues in the Assembly please join in welcoming the group from St. Michael's.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition, followed by the leader of the Liberal opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly our guests Lisa Caskenette and her father-in-law, Mr. K. David Caskenette. Lisa has a three-month-old son named Isaac who has a very rare allergy to protein, which means he can only stay healthy by consuming a formula called Neocate. Unfortunately, Neocate costs up to $1,200 per month, and Isaac may need it for up to three years. Lisa is still waiting to hear from the government if the cost of Neocate will eventually be covered. She and her husband have been putting off bills to pay for Isaac's formula and are facing the prospect of having to sell their home. She's here today to raise awareness about the serious protein allergy and the high cost associated with the only effective formula. I would now ask Lisa and David to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, followed by Little Bow.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have two introductions. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Dr. Brian McPeak. Dr. McPeak was born and raised in Edmonton. He completed his medical training at the University of Alberta and went on to do his postgraduate work at Grey Nuns hospital. He's the founder of Dominion Medical Centres, with three primary care clinics in south Edmonton. Dr. McPeak is a constituent of Edmonton-Rutherford, and he is here representing 27 family doctors who wrote a letter to 60,000 patients addressing significant concerns regarding the future delivery of their health care. I ask all hon. members to welcome Dr. McPeak to the Legislative Assembly.

I'd also like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Ms Sydney Carriere and Miss Elaine Ardis. These wonderful ladies work with the Gateway Association, a family resource centre specializing in intellectual disabilities.

Driven by their desire to see individuals living as contributing members of our communities, the association has launched a new initiative called We Belong, an initiative that makes visible organizations and businesses that provide meaningful employment based on the individual's ability to make a valued contribution in the workplace and to this province. To learn more, I encourage all members to visit webelong.ca. Now, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask Sydney and Elaine to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have two introductions to do. First, I'd like to introduce to you and through you my wonderful constituency assistant, Lois McLeod. Lois came to me with over 20 years of constituency experience working for the former MLA, Barry McFarland. Lois is a great asset to me and the constituents of Little Bow. I'd like to ask her to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For my second introduction I'd like to introduce to you and through you a fabulous constituent of Calgary-Elbow, Mrs. Joanie. Today she is watching the legislative process and is here to hear her MLA answer the tough questions all Albertans are asking. I'd like to ask her to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services, followed by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you. Today I have the honour and privilege of introducing to you and through you to members of this Assembly a truly wonderful lady who has done a lot of good work for this province. In particular, the work that she is doing for this province right now, among many other contributions, is to keep the home fires and the business burning for the Minister of Energy. The Minister of Energy's spouse, Denise Savage-Hughes, is in your gallery, Mr. Speaker. I met the Minister of Energy way back in 1974, when we were working on a campaign together, but his bride did not come along until much, much later, I have to say. Between the two of them they have three wonderful children: Aidan, who's 17; Carlan, who's 15; and Eamon, who's 13. They're truly wonderful family people, they're good business-people, and with Denise's help the Minister of Energy can continue to provide the wonderful service that he does to the people of Alberta as Minister of Energy. I'd like Denise Savage-Hughes to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview with two introductions, followed by the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was going to say that, hopefully, you'll indulge me for my two introductions. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly our guest Chris Nielsen. Chris works at Edmonton's Lucerne Foods ice cream plant, where he's a shop steward for his union, United Food & Commercial Workers local 401. He's interested in activism and was a dedicated worker on my election campaign. Chris is here today to learn more about the legislative process. He's worried about the state of our labour laws in Alberta. He's committed to protecting the rights of workers and is concerned with antiunion, antiworker Conservative policies. I'd like to say thank you to Chris for his hard work and dedication during the election and ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

As well, Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly our guests Tristan Turner and Evan MacDonald. At the age of 15 Tristan and Evan are two of the youngest activists in the New Democratic Youth of Alberta but also two of that organization's most motivated. They have been on the NDYA executive, designed the website, and started the Morinville community high school NDP club. Tristan and Evan also organized a demonstration against this spring's federal omnibus budget bill at their local MP's office in St. Albert. I would now like to ask Tristan and Evan to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you three fantastic members of our Wildrose team at the Legislature Annex. Each one of them has put in some dedicated, hard, long hours while we've been here in the House working, and I'd like to acknowledge them today. We have Mr. Evan Menzies, Mr. Brad Tennant, and my own personal favourite along with the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, our legislative assistant, Mr. Matt Solberg. Please rise to receive the traditional welcome.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Mr. Young: It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly our government caucus research and communications branch, seated in the members' gallery. These intelligent, perceptive, and clear-headed individuals deserve a heightened recognition. They have served countless hours supporting our caucus in preparation for the duration of the session and the moments leading up to it. I'll ask them to stand as I mention their names. Our research and communications team consists of Eldon McIlwain, Mark Golanco, Ashleigh Niziol, Kara Sherwin, Kyle Olsen, Brian Senio, Chris Berger, Joseph Dow, Chelsea Keenan, Rosa Ellithorpe, Mandi Rondeau, Jennifer Renner, and Max Yuan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly some very special guests who travelled from all over the province to come here for a special meeting. I have a group of 17 guests representing language schools across the whole province. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'll ask that when I mention their names, they please rise one by one: Mr. Michael Embaie, president of Southern Alberta Heritage Language Association, or SAHLA; Aurora Dacanay, Ingrid Smith, and Susan Eng, directors of SAHLA; Michael Gretton, co-ordinator of SAHLA; Mehari Wolde-Giorgis, project co-ordinator of SAHLA; Mr. Lim, the Alberta Chinese Academy; Georgia Paschalis, Greek community school; Aida Labanauskiene, principal of the Lithuanian school in Calgary; Vinay Dattani, funding director of the School of (East) Indian Language and Performing Arts; Katavzyna Denys, teacher at John Paul II Polish school; Paul Galuak, the president of the Nuer Study Centre; Len Chan, journalist with Canadian Latino Times; Amina Ofleh, international school of excellence for the Somali language; Sanaa Hatoum, Arabic teacher at Horizon Academy; Malik Muradov, volunteer co-ordinator at Anatolia Cultural Centre; and Mr. Brian Senio, the fabulous legislative researcher, who worked tirelessly with me on this project and many others on a daily basis with high-quality work. Thank you, Brian. I would like to ask all of my colleagues of this House to extend the traditional warm welcome to my guests.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we get into Members' Statements, I just want to remind you again that members' statements are not to be used for personal attacks, nor are they to include language that might cause disruption or disorder. If anyone violates that, I will stand up immediately and intervene, and that will be the end of your statement.

Secondly, you have about four or five minutes before we begin Oral Question Period. Please be reminded that supplementary questions must contain no preambles and no personal attacks nor language or statements that may cause disorder or disruption. If any do or if you violate any of those rules in particular or any other rules, I will stand up immediately, and we'll move on to the next question.

Please bear that in mind. Thank you for your support.

St. Michael's Health Group Taiwan Volunteer Exchange Project

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, since 1985 the United Nations has invited governments to observe annually on December 5 an International Volunteer Day for Economic and Social Development and urges them to take measures to heighten awareness of the important contributions, commitment, and the powerful impact of volunteer services. This specific day celebrates the involvement, dedication, and the offering of assistance by volunteers and volunteer organizations to improve the lives of people and to our civil society.

Each day and year over year thousands of individuals, groups, and communities across our great province uphold the values of volunteerism. In advance of December 5 and in the true Alberta spirit I'd like to commend the executive, administration, all the staff and volunteers of St. Michael's Health Group for their leadership and involvement to welcome and host in July and August 2012 a Taiwan volunteer exchange project through the International Association for Volunteer Effort.

Also, the delegates were hosted by yours truly at the Alberta Legislature, and today with pride I am wearing the commemorative pins which recognize the relationship between the International Association for Volunteer Effort and Taiwan.

Mr. Speaker, St. Michael's Health Group provided a full range of positive opportunities for nine delegates from Taiwan to build and enhance their professional body of knowledge of the volunteer sector in our province with a focus on seniors. The experiences include direct interactions with St. Michael's Health Group and other stakeholders from the capital region.

Heartfelt thanks to St. Michael's Health Group and the delegates from Taiwan for their energetic, entrepreneurial spirit and determination to strengthen volunteer sector development. I believe that volunteerism helps bring us together as individuals and societies, Mr. Speaker. It is a powerful means of mobilizing all segments of society as active partners in building a better world.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Tobacco Recovery Lawsuit

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I want to be clear that I'm not making an allegation against another member with my questions today because that's not allowed under our rules. I merely want to get at the truth about the process the government went through in awarding a massive litigation contract to a consortium of lawyers that includes a firm where the Premier's ex-husband is a partner. After reflecting on her answers yesterday, does the Premier still insist that she did not make the decision that awarded the tobacco litigation deal to International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, both the Premier and I were very clear yesterday, and I'll be very clear today. It was the same question yesterday and the same answer today. The Premier was not Justice minister when the contract was awarded. The date was June 21, 2011. It was the gentleman who is currently the agriculture minister, who has absolutely no connection to this whatsoever. That is the end of the story.

Ms Smith: Given that the current Premier, then Justice minister, selected the winner on December 14, 2010, and given that the winning and losing firms were advised on December 22, when she was Justice minister, and given that discussions on the terms of the retainer began January 6, when she was Justice minister, and given that she resigned from cabinet on February 16, how can she insist that she was "not the Justice minister" at the time that the government made the decision?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that the member opposite is not a lawyer, but I would refer her to the Law Society's code of professional conduct, which indicates that for a contingency-based matter it must be in writing, and this was not in writing until June 21, 2011, when the Premier was not even a member of the cabinet. Basically, again, there is no retainer, there is no contract whatsoever until it has been signed, and the Premier was not even a member of the cabinet at that time.

Ms Smith: Sounds like a bit of a technicality to me, but I'm not a lawyer.

The documents I'll be tabling today make it clear she made the decision. Why does she keep denying it?

Mr. Lukaszuk: I appreciate the fact that the Leader of the Opposition is very passionate about the topic, and that's good. Maybe some of her passion – I would ask her – stems from the fact that during the last campaign, when approached by the Campaign for a Smoke-Free Alberta, she indicated that the Wildrose, if they were to be a government, would not stop the sale of candy-flavoured tobacco to our youth and also would not litigate against tobacco companies to recover health care dollars for Alberta. Mr. Speaker, those allegations have been clarified, but I'm wondering whether this is not a mere elaboration of their platform.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Your second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: I'm not disagreeing with the decision to proceed with litigation, Mr. Speaker. I am only questioning how the decision was made.

Political conflict of interest is a serious matter. In Toronto a judge ruled that Mayor Rob Ford should be removed from office over a conflict involving $3,100 to a charity to buy football equipment for underprivileged kids. That's how seriously other jurisdictions look at the issue of conflict of interest. Here we have a multibillion-dollar contract for close friends and political supporters of the Premier. How is it the Premier does not see that this creates the perception of a conflict?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, how can this member rise in the House right now and say that she doesn't disagree with this government taking action against tobacco companies to recover health care dollars for Albertans when six months ago on the record during the campaign she indicated that her party would not take any legal action against tobacco companies? Yet another flip-flop. Obviously, this is a reversal on policy and, obviously, looking for something that doesn't exist.

Ms Smith: This is not about the decision to proceed. It is about the litigation and how it was awarded.

The government insists this is a good deal . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I've indicated very clearly we're not going to get into preambles today. Now, please rephrase your question.

Ms Smith: When we raise the issue of conflict, the Premier points to her successor in Justice and insists that he did it. So what is it, Mr. Speaker? Did she as Justice minister make a deal that she is proud of, or is she running away from the deal and blaming her successor?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, when she was Justice minister, the Premier didn't make any deal at all. But as we've already asked and answered these particular questions, I'm really wondering: is the Leader of the Opposition really concerned about this case, or does she disagree with the case entirely? I point, actually, to some articles that she's written entitled: right to smoke is an issue of property rights; high taxes push tobacco underground; government must butt out of tobacco picture; antismoking lobby does more harm than good. She can't have it both ways.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I know I'm new at this, but I'm pretty sure I get to ask the questions, and they're supposed to answer them.

If this deal is of benefit to Albertans and the terms are favourable, then she did it. If it's a conflict, then her successor did it. Is that what they're saying?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the only flip-flopping you see is on the other side: we will not sue tobacco companies. Now they're saying: sue them except with a different firm. But it's quite ironic. We know that our ethics rules in this House have not been breached. We know that the Law Society's rules have not been breached. They're relying on an ethicist from outside of the province. It's ironic that she would bring up football equipment because that very same ethicist just wrote an article saying that it's okay for football fans to cheer as long as they don't cheer too loud. This is the quality of evidence that they are relying on.

Mr. Anderson: Maybe I'm in the pocket of big tobacco, too.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier stood in this House and, referencing the tobacco litigation contract given to her ex-husband's law firm, stated, "I was not the Justice minister at the time that the government made that decision." Yet a memo from Assistant Deputy Minister of Justice dated January 13, 2011 – you were still Justice minister then – said, "Shortly before Christmas,

[the now Premier] selected the International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers." Premier, can you explain which one of these statements is not the truth?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I think that there were a few rule violations, but I'll let that slide. Again, I appreciate that in the six months that this gentleman practised law maybe he didn't see a contingency-fee agreement. It was not actually signed until June 21, 2011, when this Premier was actually out campaigning for the leadership and was not in the cabinet.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie. Supplementary question with no preamble, please.

Mr. Anderson: Right. Given that this Premier says that a decision – that's what we're talking about here, a decision – on awarding the $10 billion tobacco file did not occur until after she resigned as Justice minister on February 16, 2011, can the Premier please explain why an e-mail was sent from the Deputy Minister of Justice on December 22, 2010, confirming he had called the successful law firm to let them know they had been awarded the contract? Was the deputy minister not telling the truth either, Premier?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I say again: there was no legal contract until June 21. The terms of the contract were negotiated by the previous Minister of Justice, the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose. I'm not sure which fact this member chooses to ignore.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, given that this Premier says that a decision on awarding the $10 billion tobacco file did not occur until after she resigned as Justice minister on February 16, 2011, can she help us understand why the senior partner at her ex-husband's law firm sent an e-mail to Alberta Justice's director of litigation on January 6, 2011 – again, you were still Justice minister – stating how happy he was to learn they had been chosen to pursue the tobacco litigation file? Why would he write that if you hadn't already made the decision, Premier? It doesn't make sense.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the opposition was clearly advised, and they know that they have many recourses. They can send this matter to the Ethics Commissioner. They can complain to the Law Society. Unfortunately, they undermine the authority of those institutions as well. Let me tell you something. An institution that I actually pay a lot of attention to is Albertans. Today I and all of our caucus met with rural gas providers, and they are telling us – rural Albertans are telling us – that we should be focusing on building infrastructure, on seniors' benefits, on health care, on education.

The Speaker: The leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Physician Services Agreement

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Canada Health Act states that a province must enter into either conciliation or binding arbitration by an equally representative panel with an independent chairman if requested by an organization like the AMA when an agreement by both sides can't be reached. Clearly, after 20 months an agreement by both sides has not been reached. To the Premier: why does your government refuse to follow the Canada Health Act by denying the AMA's request for binding arbitration?

Ms Redford: I see that the leader of the Liberal Party has suggested that the Canada Health Act refers to the AMA specifically. Of course, Mr. Speaker, it doesn't. Our Health minister right now, in fact at this very moment, is having discussions with the AMA with respect to ongoing discussions around how to ensure that Albertans are getting the best possible access to health care. That is our commitment to Albertans, and that's what we're seeking to achieve.

Dr. Sherman: Given that, Premier, during the debate half a million Albertans looked on, and you looked me in the eye, and after three pilot projects you said that the Alberta College of Family Physicians and the College of Physicians & Surgeons supported these 140 family care clinics and given that the next day the same Alberta College of Family Physicians said that these comments were misleading and possibly false, what were they? Were they misleading? Did you misspeak? What were you doing to Albertans on the day of the debate? Were you misleading Albertans on that day, Premier?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we had some very successful announcements with respect to pilot projects, particularly in east Edmonton, east Calgary, and in Slave Lake, just before the election. That was the beginning of very successful work that's been done with the Minister of Health in consultation with the College of Physicians & Surgeons and with family physicians around how to keep moving forward with respect to the family care clinics. I think that if the hon. member wanted to consult with those organizations, he would find that there have actually been ongoing working groups involving all of those members and officials representing those organizations throughout August and September, ensuring that this will be successful.

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: Hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, I think I heard the word "misleading" in your question just now, so I ask you to revisit that, please, because we had 11 points of order yesterday, and some of them dealt with the word "misleading" and how it was used.

Proceed with your final supplemental.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier made a commitment and that her idea of a consultation is to unilaterally implement a decision and given that she made a commitment to build 140 family care clinics and now she's taking us back into debt, to the Premier: where are you going to get the money to build, staff, and operate these 140 family care clinics? Are you just planning on taking it from the pockets and the hides of Alberta's doctors?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I don't know who the hon. member thinks that he represents in this House, but it's not our job to represent doctors. It's our job to represent Albertans. Our budget clearly sets out that we have the resources to implement 140 family care clinics, which was our commitment during the election, and we're going to stick to that because that's a commitment that we made to Albertans.

Tobacco Recovery Lawsuit (continued)

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier told the House that she was not in a conflict of interest regarding the selection of her ex-husband's law firm for a $10 billion lawsuit because she didn't make that decision. The Premier's claim that she did not make that decision to hire her ex-husband's firm is just not true. To the Premier: why didn't she tell the truth?

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: Hon. Deputy Premier, one moment. Let's review our language again, okay? We're not here to cast aspersions or toss out any kind of, perhaps, false motives or anything else, so I'm asking you to just raise the level of the questions a bit.

The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Redford: My question.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Tobacco Recovery Lawsuit (continued)

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, unlike many people in this House I actually respect the rules of this House, and I did tell the truth.

The Speaker: The hon. New Democratic leader, without preamble.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier may well be in a conflict of interest and she falsely denied it yesterday – the evidence from her own department officials proves it – will the Premier tell Albertans why she denied what she knew to be true?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I stand by what I said yesterday in this House. I told the truth.

Mr. Mason: She's at it again, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the evidence is overwhelming that the Premier did in fact make the decision to hire her ex-husband's law firm and yet denied it here today and yesterday in the House, Premier, how can Albertans ever again trust a Premier who won't tell the truth?

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: Hon. member, we dealt with 11 points of order yesterday. Some of them were about unparliamentary language and about potential character assassinations and other language that's likely to cause disruption. I just asked you not one minute ago to please raise the bar on the level of language being used here.

Now, if somebody wishes to answer on behalf of the government, please do so.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I wish I had longer than 35 seconds because there's lots I want to say, but I'll just be brief. The Premier does speak the truth. I did make the decision. I was satisfied. I knew that I could go any direction I wanted, including a conversation I had with my department about using internal resources. They may not wish to believe it, but I'm speaking the truth. It was my responsibility. I inherited that responsibility when I took over. I made the decision.

The Speaker: A point of order has been recognized from the hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition at 2:07 p.m.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier, after writing that none of the three law firms interviewed for the tobacco lawsuit stood above the others, clearly personally picked the firm of her close political confidante and transition team leader, who would directly benefit through legal fees for the largest lawsuit in Alberta's history. This is a $10 billion lawsuit. At even a 20 per cent contingency fee, that would be $2 billion to a 20-something-person law firm in possible legal fees. A very simple question: will the Premier be open and transparent and show Albertans the agreement she made?

Mr. Lukaszuk: How can she do that? She never made an agreement. She was never a signatory to an agreement.

Mr. Speaker, maybe you may want to elaborate to all members of this House what the process is relative to allegations. I said this on a number of occasions because allegations are flying every day, and I told them that pretty soon they will be running out of Albertans to somehow make allegations against. There is the Ethics Commissioner, there is the Law Society, there are professional bodies. If you have any smidgen of evidence, file it, allow due process to take its course, and stop accusing Albertans of things that you cannot substantiate.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier wrote that all three firms had unique strengths and weaknesses, how can the Justice minister say that her awarding the agreement to her transition leader and ex-husband is in Alberta's best interests without this government showing any evidence of how much this consortium would benefit from this agreement? Just show us the agreement.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, we heard from the Premier. We heard from the Deputy Premier. And earlier we heard from the hon. minister of agriculture. He was the one that made the decision on June 21, 2011, not the Premier. Let's move on, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that other provinces such as Newfoundland have disclosed the key terms of their litigation agreement – in that case, 30 per cent – will the Justice minister simply table the agreement so Albertans can see whether they got a good deal or whether they are being hosed?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I refer this member to 23(g) of the standing orders about talking about cases that are before the courts. This is already before the courts. I really question if this hon. opposition really supports this type of action to recover taxpayers' dollars or if they have an ideological and extremist opposition to it.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order has been noted from Airdrie at 2:09.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Highwood.

Provincial Fiscal Policy

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Finance. Yesterday when you released the second-quarter results, most of the dialogue, like today, was focused elsewhere. However, what did stand out was the Official Opposition's claim that this government has borrowed over $3 billion so far this year and that that could be money that could be used to hire teachers, nurses, and doctors, of which there are a lot in my constituency of Edmonton-South West. I'm hoping that with productive questions I can get some productive answers. Hon. minister, if this is true, how am I supposed to explain this to my very knowledgeable constituents in Edmonton-South West?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, finally a question that is on policy, and it's a good question. The wild Alliance opposition could take some lessons.

Mr. Speaker, it is indeed true that . . .

The Speaker: Hon. President of the Treasury Board, you may want to rephrase your answer knowing full well the name of our Official Opposition.

I encourage you to continue.

Mr. Horner: I do, Mr. Speaker. That's what I think of them.

Mr. Speaker, the government borrowed about $3 billion and then on-lended that amount of money to the Alberta Treasury Branches, to the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, to the Alberta Capital Finance Authority. This type of on-lending actually saves taxpayers money. I'm sure the hon. opposition wouldn't prefer that our municipalities would pay a higher interest rate or that farmers would not get loans or that the ATB didn't make money.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, with no preamble.

Mr. Jeneroux: To the same minister: given there is a forecast deficit and all we hear in this Assembly is extreme doom and gloom, could government balance its books by simply trimming managers in the public service as the opposition suggests?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is another one of the fallacies that is put forward by the opposition. You know, the entire public service compensation adds up to less than $3 billion. Cutting managers or the executive staff of government is not the silver bullet that some opposition parties would suggest. Basic math would tell you that the entire public service would only free up enough funds to match up 20 per cent of our health care budget. I should also note that that would mean the eradication of all government services and programs. One of the things that we are doing is we're reviewing every one of the programs and services the government delivers under results-based budgeting.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, again with no preamble.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given we've heard that the economic circumstances have changed since the budget was introduced but we've also heard the economy is strong and growing, what can I tell my constituents of Edmonton-South West as to why we are still forecasting a deficit? [interjections]

Mr. Horner: Well, it's unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that the opposition doesn't like a good question when they hear it.

The economy is indeed strong, and our Alberta economy is growing. Even so, global uncertainty is still very volatile. We have seen what's happening in the United States with the fiscal cliff. We've seen what's happening in Europe. Everyone is reducing the energy forecast, Mr. Speaker, including the federal government, Saskatchewan, and Newfoundland. Of all of these jurisdictions, I might add, Alberta was the most conservative in our projections over those projections. As well, you'll see that Saskatchewan is forecasting a balanced budget this year, but that's primarily due to a higher tax rate, a sales tax. Alberta continues to have . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood, followed by Edmonton-McClung.

Ms Smith: The deficit is going to be at least $3 billion this year. That's what the government will admit to. We calculate that it's actually closer to $5 billion when you include the hidden deficit of $2 billion for capital. Now, that's just this year. Next year, who knows? But there will be a deficit despite the efforts of the Finance minister to mask it as alternative financing. How much will they borrow this year to cover this year's deficit, or will the minister just scoop it out of the sustainability fund and call it one of the other tools in his tool box?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate the hon. Leader of the Opposition wasn't listening to the last question. We are borrowing this year. We borrowed last year. We borrowed the year before that. We borrow for on-lending. As I reported in our six-month update yesterday, the quarterly report, we've borrowed close to $3.4 billion so far this year. Almost all of that is for on-lending to those other institutions. It's very clear, hon. member. It's unfortunate you don't understand it.

Ms Smith: Sounds pretty proud to have gone into debt. Too bad they didn't campaign on that.

Perhaps the minister could explain how it is that raiding the sustainability fund to cover overspending and unfunded promises during the election is different than running a deficit.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the hon. member would understand what happened at Public Accounts. Her Finance critic is on Public Accounts. I'm sure he's been through the books very thoroughly and would understand that in past years, before the election, even before that, we had P3 debt on our books because it is a debt. You know what? That goes all the way back to previous Premier Klein, who was the first one to introduce P3s in this province. We're very proud of that because they saved Alberta taxpayers money. So to suggest that we have not been borrowing before the election is simply not telling Albertans the truth.

Ms Smith: In the last year Premier Klein was in office, borrowing charges were only $200 million. Borrowing charges this year have already risen to more than half a billion dollars. More debt means more money wasted on interest payments and not available to hire nurses and doctors and teachers and social workers. Why is the minister insisting that more debt and more interest charges is good for Albertans?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, it is truly disappointing that the hon. member does not understand the financial picture of this province.

If you'd like to learn, the borrowing charges which are recorded in our statements that she saw yesterday are actually the expense side of the borrowing. Because we do it for the Alberta Capital Finance Authority and the Treasury Branches and Ag Financial Services, on the revenue side is the money coming in. In fact, we make a little on it. So, indeed, we are spending money on paying off that debt, but we're also collecting money, more than what we borrowed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

GreenTRIP Incentives Program

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the need for accessible urban transportation grows, the demand to develop environmentally friendly, responsible modes of transportation also increases. The green transit incentives program, also known as GreenTRIP, was announced in July 2008 to reduce Alberta's greenhouse gas footprint. My question is to the Minister of Transportation. What is the status of the GreenTRIP program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I think the member knows, the GreenTRIP program is part of the government's commitment to supporting communities as they plan for the future. It was announced in 2008 with a budget of $2 billion. The deadline for the first call for applications was January 2011, and project approvals to date are just over $1 billion. Subject to the first round of approvals there's about $948 million in additional project funding for the second application process.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, your point of order at 2:15 was noted at the conclusion of comments by the President of Treasury Board in response to a second question.

First supplemental, hon. member, with no preamble.

Mr. Xiao: Yes. To the minister again: given that both Edmonton and Calgary have extensive plans to develop their transit systems to better address the need for sustainable and environmentally beneficial transportation alternatives, are there any plans that the proposed $2 billion allotment be changed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, thank you. As mentioned earlier, in the GreenTRIP plan there is about $948 million in funding still to be expended. We haven't scheduled the second call for applications yet. When we do, we'll certainly make sure that all Alberta municipalities know about it. To be more direct to the question specifically asked, we are not at this time planning to expand the program, but we'll stay in touch with it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplementary question to the same minister: over the course of this program's funding does the minister have any indication or estimates as to how much greenhouse gas emission can be potentially reduced?

Mr. McIver: Well, this is an example of actually doing something that's good for the environment, Mr. Speaker, and also good for Albertans because with mass transit a lot of Albertans that couldn't otherwise afford to get around do. On the greenhouse gas side the estimate currently is about 46,500 tonnes annually of carbon dioxide. That's as close as I can get.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Groundwater and Hydraulic Fracturing

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The government has failed to follow the science and do the work to be able to prove or disprove whether fracking has affected water and particularly failed to do a baseline study of water until after coal-bed methane production and fracking had been done for some time, so we have no information from before when this activity started. To the minister of the environment: how does the minister plan to overcome this lack of scientific fact?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said the other day in the House here with regard to similar kinds of questions, what we have been doing and what we will continue to do as a department and as a government is to make sure that, first and foremost, the groundwater mapping is done in this province. We've done a significant amount of that. We've put $16 million towards groundwater mapping, and we will continue on top of that to make sure that baseline testing is done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, without preamble.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: does the minister recognize that this lack of science is affecting the industry? They would like to be able to prove that fracking that's done with proper standards and well-casings is safe, but without proof they can't do it.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, we are working not only with the industry but also with the ERCB and the Ministry of Energy to make sure that we are doing baseline testing, that we are looking at hydraulic fracturing. We are looking, in fact, at how much water will be used, and we are doing consultation in the new year on this particular subject because water is the most important resource for Albertans. We know that. This government knows that, and that is why we are doing the work that we are committed to doing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Does this minister understand that baseline testing has to be done before you start the activity?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, absolutely, Mr. Speaker. That's a silly question. We know that, and that's why we're doing all of the groundwater mapping first and foremost, and then we are doing – I'll slow down so people can hear and understand – the base water testing, and we are doing studies, and we're working with Albertans to go and have a discussion in the new year about hydraulic fracturing as it pertains to water use. Yes, we know that. There have been very few wells drilled in this province with hydraulic fracturing, and that's why we're taking the time with industry, with the regulator, ERCB, with the Department of Energy, and with Albertans to make sure that we get this right as we develop this resource.

The Speaker: Hon. member, let's be careful with terms like "that's a silly question," please. I'm sure that that was in the heat of the moment. No question, in a member's opinion who is giving the question, is silly. I'll just remind you of that.

Let's move on to Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Whistle-blower Legislation

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier said that she wanted to work with all parties in the Legislature. "I know that with a little goodwill, we can see past . . . our differences." However, the past weeks have proven that the PCs never had any intention of working with opposition parties. Late last night the government passed its flawed whistle-blower legislation. The opposition proposed 29 amendments in an attempt to strengthen this bill, and the government voted them all down. Will the Premier admit that this government has no intention of working with this side of the House?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of the whistle-blower legislation that was passed last night. It's very effective. If the members on the other side spent more time reading the legislation rather than engaging in personal attacks, I think they'd be a lot more effective in this House.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that all opposition parties have been working hard this session to improve this government's legislation and given that the Premier said, "this is not a partisan project" and that we all "want what's best for this province and its people," to the Premier: is pulling the microphone out from under opposition MLAs your idea of what's best for the province and its people?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, there are very few Legislatures in this country where the opposition has the amount of input as it has over here, starting with all-party committees. When the government of Alberta makes an announcement, they make arrangements for where to make that announcement, but there are facilities within this building, including the press gallery, that are available to the opposition 24/7, 365 days a year where they can make announcements of any choice, where media is available, technology is provided.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that one of the many amendments to the whistle-blower legislation proposed by the NDP last night would require that reports be made publicly available and given that all parties in the opposition benches agreed it was an extremely reasonable amendment and given that this government voted down 93 of 95 opposition amendments, clearly, to this government, the word "co-operation" means as much as "accountability" and "transparency," absolutely nothing.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, one of the problems that we've had throughout this debate with the whistle-blower legislation is that I'm not convinced that everybody has been reading it. Section 33 talks about public reporting. Read the legislation. Look at it yourself. Section 33(3) provides for further reporting. There is public accountability in this legislation. Read the legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Calgary-Foothills.

SNC-Lavalin Transmission Infrastructure Project

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The company SNC-Lavalin, owner of AltaLink, appears to be emerging as a disreputable company that makes money by engaging in illegal activities. Executives have been arrested, and the company is under multiple investigations overseas for corruption, bribery, and in one case executives had been convicted of scamming and fraud. Can the minister of accountability guarantee Albertans that SNC-AltaLink secured their multibillion dollar contract in Alberta through a legitimate vetting and proper bidding process?

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, I know you're going to have two supplementals here momentarily. Just watch the language, please, okay?

Let's go on to an answer from the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's difficult to answer a question full of allegations, some of them very troublesome. If that particular member has any knowledge of any agreement that he finds could be unbecoming, if he has any allegations against any companies or any individuals, provide them in writing to the appropriate minister. If he thinks that there is something illegal going on, there are police and other law enforcement authorities that he should be reporting it to.

The Speaker: The hon. member. Supplemental, no preamble.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not making an allegation at all.

Quebec's anticorruption squad has arrested the former SNC-Lavalin CEO and charged him with fraud in connection . . . [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling

Preambles to Supplementary Questions

The Speaker: Hon. member, no preamble to your supplemental. Please, have a seat. You see what occurs here when we break the rules? [interjections] Excuse me, hon. members.

I'll let you rephrase. I realize this is your first term here and maybe you didn't hear all of my admonishments, which I've done 30 or 40 of, but I'll remind you again: no preamble to your supplementals today. Please proceed with a rephrased question.

SNC-Lavalin Transmission Infrastructure Project

Mr. Anglin: Given Quebec's anticorruption squad has arrested the former SNC-Lavalin CEO and charged him with fraud in connection with construction contracts in Montreal, how can Albertans have confidence this fraud activity doesn't extend to the multibillion-dollar no-bid contract SNC-AltaLink received from this government?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, no information has been filed to this government or, as far as I know, any law enforcement agency that would in any way indicate that there are any illegal activities going on. This government, unlike the other side of this House, is not practising assuming that everybody is doing something illegal unless proven innocent. If that member feels that there are any issues relevant to any contractual agreements that this government may have, please indicate so, and it will be looked into.

The Speaker: Hon. member, without the preamble, please.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the process of awarding a no-bid contract to SNC-AltaLink, a progressive party donor, has already been tainted with the illegal activities of spying and listening in on private phone conversations of Albertans, why should Albertans trust this company with a multibillion-dollar contract?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Because Albertans trust anybody until they have a reason not to. If this member has a reason that he can produce that Albertans should not trust this company, there is a process through which this company will be put, and then we will find out. Simply accusing individuals, family members, companies, entities, societies, and associations just for the sake of doing so doesn't cut it in Alberta, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

First Nations Consultation

Mr. Webber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The other day I was reminiscing about my time serving as the Aboriginal Relations minister just over a year ago, and I thought about how much I enjoyed the people and the community and the culture of the First Nations and Métis people of this great province. There were many issues back then that were of deep concern, and many of those issues continue today. To the current Minister of Aboriginal Relations: First Nations continue to express that government and industry are not adequately consulted when development occurs within their territory, so what is this government doing to address First Nation consultation?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a good question, and it's a very important question. I can tell you that when I became Minister of Aboriginal Relations on May 8, the first thing I did is that I went out to the communities of the First Nations and the Métis settlements to talk about some of the issues, and one of the issues that did come up was consultation. What we've done is that we've engaged in a very robust dialogue on consultation with First Nations, industry, municipalities, counties so that we can get this right. We've released a discussion paper, which I have now set down with the First Nations and industry. I'm waiting for responses back. I hope to bring both industry and First Nations to the table together to see if we have some common ground to work on, and from those discussions we will be releasing a policy paper in the spring for further discussion.

Mr. Webber: Well, then, to the same minister: given the vast amount of development occurring in many areas of this province, do aboriginal communities have adequate capacity to deal with the rising number of applications that may impact their people, their lands, and their traditional territories?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's the exact reason we're having the discussion we are today. I've heard from both First Nations and the ministry that the First Nations do lack the capacity and the funding to do a proper consultation. As the Supreme Court has said, the government has an obligation to do a proper consultation process. We are going to take a more active role in that process, and we are going to make sure that First Nations have the proper funding and the proper capacity to do a proper job to look after their treaty rights.

Mr. Webber: Again to the same minister, then: how long will this long-drawn-out, ongoing, seemingly never-ending review of the consultation policy go on for?

Mr. Campbell: Well, again, a good question, Mr. Speaker. I had set a timeline of having all discussions in by the end of this month. When I met with First Nations last week, I met with 25 chiefs. They'd asked if they could have an extension at that time, and I said: yes; if we could go to Christmas, that would be great.

Again, Mr. Speaker, there is an urgency to get this done and get it done right. This is one small piece in the larger scheme of looking after things like education, looking after things like housing, looking after health care on-reserve, and economic opportunities. We want to get the consultation piece done as quickly as possible, but we also want to make sure we get it done right.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Whistle-blower Protection for Physicians

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The cry of front-line workers will continue to go ignored with this government's so-called whistle-blower legislation. This government failed to provide protection to the vast majority of doctors in our province as they are not direct employees of Alberta Health Services but, instead, contracted employees, which isn't surprising given this government's record of bullying and intimidation of our health care workers. Does the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation – and I have read the bill – have an explanation as to why this government continues to ignore our doctors and leave them out in the cold as well as their patients?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, this legislation augments other existing avenues that doctors can pursue. Any doctor that's an employee is going to have the right to use this legislation. I think this is legislation we can be proud of. This is legislation we're going to build on. This is legislation that you should support.

The Speaker: The hon. member, without preamble.

Mrs. Forsyth: Given that this government has bullied our doctors, has forced a contract settlement on them, and continues to shut them out of consultations on just about every health initiative, will the associate minister of accountability, transportation, and transformation, AT and T, pick up the phone and explain to Alberta doctors why they can't get coverage under his protection for government from whistle-blowers act?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, I'll repeat it again. I think this is legislation that we can all be proud of. Doctors that are employees of the public service are going to have access to this legislation. This is legislation that augments all the other avenues that are available. This is good legislation. It should be supported by my friends on the other side. This is going to be effective. But it needs your support. It doesn't need you always slamming it. Support the legislation.

Mrs. Forsyth: Given that Bill 4, the protection for government from whistle-blowers act, has been a step backwards and has been, arguably, the worst bill of its kind in this country and given that it shields the government from embarrassing publicity while doing nothing to protect the whistle-blowers, how can the minister of accountability, transportation, and transformation justify rejecting 29 straight opposition amendments that would have actually put teeth in this bill?

The Speaker: Let's hear from the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, she doesn't even know the name of the bill let alone having read it. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, let's move on.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has asked her third question. Let's go on to Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Drilling Operations near Lakes

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I live in an area with many beautiful lakes and lovely natural areas. The same areas are also home to numerous oil and gas projects. Residents have voiced their concerns over and over again that these operations are encroaching on their beautiful lakes and spoiling the areas that they've loved for so long. All of my questions are to the hon. Minister of Energy. What are the setbacks required for drilling operations near these lakes that people call home?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The requirement for all drilling operations near lakes is a 100-metre setback from any sensitive drilling area. In fact, indeed, in the Cold Lake area certain lakes even have a 300-metre setback. Before any energy development, including drilling, can proceed, it's obviously subject to the usual necessary regulatory and environmental approvals as well. So the minimum setback is a hundred metres, and industry is required to have measures in place to protect that water body throughout the development. Also, there's a minimum setback from any home as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's the 100-metre setback that bothers us.

To the same minister: my constituents want to know what other regulations are in place to regulate oil and gas development occurring near the beautiful lakes that they call home. These lakes are in my constituency.

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, since I was asked to take on this role in this government, the hon. member has been a passionate advocate on behalf of her constituents, and she's also a passionate advocate on behalf of the quality of life in that part of the province.

Exploration through seismic testing on fish-bearing lakes is not allowed, and further approvals through the Water Act may be necessary for exploration activities that alter any water body. Mr. Speaker there are four directives – 008, 009, 010, and 026 – of the ERCB . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, without preamble.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll continue to advocate for my constituents.

What other measurements are in place to protect the lakes, that are enjoyed, from the potentially hazardous effects of drilling operations in the area?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I certainly am sensitive to and echo the concerns of the hon. member, and I can assure her that we have very stringent safety measures in place to protect our lakes. This is, obviously, a priority for this government and for all Albertans. Under ERCB directive 056 it outlines the requirements around energy development near water bodies. The creation of the new Alberta energy regulator seeks to find that good balance between our environmental responsibilities and the economic development in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Calgary-North West.

Postsecondary Education Accessibility

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Postsecondary education is critical for Albertans. Campus Alberta is responsible for flexible transfer arrangements between institutions. There has been progress in this area, but things are not as they should be. Several constituents have raised issues about their challenges with transferring between schools. To the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education: if you're aware of this problem, what are you doing to ensure that students in Alberta have the best flexible transfer arrangements between institutions?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. member from across the aisle for a very good question. As most folks in the Chamber are aware, we have 26 Campus Alberta partners, ranging from all the way north to Northern Lakes College to the south to the University of Lethbridge and Lethbridge College. As the hon. member talks about, there are transfer arrangements between our Campus Alberta partners. I've travelled around the province meeting with our stakeholders, and as he suggests, there are some issues that we'd like to work on and resolve and continue to do so. We will be meeting with ACAT, the Alberta Council on Admissions and Transfer, early in the new year to discuss how we can resolve some of these issues.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Twenty-first century technology is making traditional classroom learning obsolete and cost prohibitive. Athabasca University is perhaps Alberta's best example of addressing this issue, but there are others in the world that are doing even more. Can the minister of advanced education tell us what his department is looking at and learning from other universities and when our students can expect new approaches that will make postsecondary learning even easier and more affordable to access?

Mr. Khan: This is a remarkably timely question given that just yesterday eCampus Alberta celebrated their 10th anniversary of operation. Mr. Speaker, eCampus Alberta is a consortium of 16 of our postsecondary institutions that have gotten together and are offering online content to students in Alberta, distance education around the province. As the hon. member across the aisle alludes to, Athabasca University is an innovator in online education, and we'll continue to work with Athabasca University to be a leader in the field of offering online degree education.

The Speaker: The hon. member. A final supplemental without preamble.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta has a labour shortage and that Paul Blomfield of Ward Tires and many other companies find it necessary to bring in foreign workers, often at great expense, and given that some of them then leave to go to work for less pay in jurisdictions where it's easier to apply for permanent status in Canada, will the minister please tell us what he's doing to level the playing field to protect the large investments Alberta businesses are losing each year because of this?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take a moment to thank the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner for asking a very constructive question regarding governmental policy and regulations. Thank you, sir.

To his point, we've been working with our federal colleagues quite closely. We're working on examining some of the best practices in the world in terms of immigration policy. We'll be working on an expression-of-interest model which turns the table from a supply-driven system to a demand-driven system, where we'll be able to select from a talented pool of labour . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. Please have a seat. Your time is done. Thank you.

I, too, want to extend some thank yous here very briefly to those members who made such a good and sincere effort to cut down and not use any preambles. Many, many members stuck to it. We got to one or two more people as a result of that. Had I not had to intervene, we would have gotten to a third one. So those of you who made the sincere effort, my sincere thanks to you on behalf of all members of the House. Thank you.

Let us move on in a few seconds with the readings of private members' statements.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

International Languages Program

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise again today to bring attention to the need for international languages education in our communities. The international languages program assists children in learning languages further to English and French. They help promote cultural competency and enhance global citizenship. Due to the increasingly globalized economy it is crucial for our children to learn additional languages to give them a competitive advantage in the global market.

Mr. Speaker, this advantage should not be underestimated. Many jurisdictions around the world are developing their strategy to prepare their children. In the case of Australia they have explicitly supported an international languages program targeting emerging markets such as China and India. Unfortunately, Alberta is falling behind. Our programs in this area are offered inconsistently across the province, with fragmentation, poor financial support, and lack of standards. I hope that by bringing this matter to the House, we can collectively raise the awareness of this important issue and find ways to improve our current standing.

On a more positive note, Mr. Speaker, I'm very delighted to be a member of a working group initiated by the hon. Minister of Education, working with a number of other MLAs and ministers to further explore ways to address this need.

To conclude, I look forward to the time when we can proudly declare that Alberta has developed a comprehensive international languages strategy and that we as Albertans once again lead the nation in educating our children today for our continued prosperity tomorrow.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

Home Care for Seniors

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Society and governments are judged by how they treat their most vulnerable, especially their seniors. The Christmas season is upon us, and thoughts turn to our families, especially those most vulnerable and families with seniors in care. At a time when the needs of seniors are growing in Alberta, this government is either unprepared or unwilling to provide the resources to care for them. Many of my constituents, Mr. Speaker, are seniors, and they tell me that they're stretching themselves to the breaking point to attend to members of their family in care settings or at home.

I learned this week that home-care services are being cut back in Black Diamond, Turner Valley, and homes all across the province. A nurse working at a seniors' facility wrote yesterday that the harsh joke amongst the nursing staff is that prisoners in Alberta get better care than seniors do. They at least get to shower when they want to shower or when they need a shower, and they don't have to pay extra to get one. The minister's comment in this House when questioned about inadequate bathing or personal care says it all. Either he doesn't know what's going on or he really doesn't care.

Mr. Speaker, he knows how to fix the problem. The problem is really to improve and increase the amount of home care for our vulnerable and our seniors, nonprofit home care. Our vulnerable should not be used as commodities to be sold to privateers. The way we fix this is by bringing in nonprofit long-term care, community care, nonprofit aging in place in our communities.

Mr. Speaker, this is that time of year when seniors are lonely. They're disabled and lonely. They're in their homes alone. Their health care providers: many of them take holidays. Their care providers also have health issues. I ask the government to reconsider its policy and invest in seniors' home care and long-term care.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, followed by Airdrie.

Historical Resources Foundation Heritage Awards

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans take tremendous pride in the rich heritage and history of our great province. That pride is seen in the efforts of individuals, municipalities, corporations, and nonprofit organizations that are preserving and protecting the monuments of the past and breathing new life into cherished landmarks of history. It is seen in the commitment of individual Albertans who are documenting the unique history and heritage of their communities so that we might all take pride in our shared past, and it's seen in the visionary leadership of municipal officials who have ensured that the history of Alberta remains vibrant and alive for all Albertans now and for generations to come.

Today thanks to their efforts the Alberta Historical Resources Act recognizes over 870 sites on Alberta's register of historic places. Mr. Speaker, as government we join with them in this effort and as partners in heritage conservation are proud to honour their achievements. On November 30 my colleague the hon. Minister of Culture will recognize the work of deserving Albertans with the presentation of the 2012 Alberta Historical Resources Foundation heritage awards.

Honoured for creating awareness of our heritage and for their outstanding achievements in the preservation and presentation of Alberta history are Kermith Anderson of Scandia, Judith Ann Miller-Carleton of Blackfalds, Jack Manson of Thorsby, and Catherine Cole of Edmonton. Excellence in heritage conservation awards will be presented to the town of High River, the Lacombe & District Historical Society, and the Arts and Heritage Foundation of St. Albert. The city of Lacombe, famed for its magnificent historic main street, is being honoured for successful heritage management with the 2012 municipal heritage preservation award.

Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta is proud to support heritage conservation efforts with programs like the heritage preservation partnership program, the municipal heritage partnership program, the Alberta main street program, and the biennial heritage awards.

I ask all members and all Albertans, indeed, to take a moment to thank all those who are helping to connect us with our past.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie, followed by Calgary-Foothills.

Tobacco Recovery Lawsuit

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier stood in this House and, referencing the tobacco litigation contract given to her ex-husband's law firm, stated, "I was not the Justice minister at the time that the government made that decision." Well, let us examine the facts to see if what the Premier said was indeed the case. First, the key date. The current Premier resigned from her duties as Justice minister on February 16, 2011, so I will only be outlining the written evidence produced before that date.

The first letter is a memo with the current Premier's own signature dated December 14, 2010, in which the Premier in response to a request asking for a decision on who should represent Alberta in the tobacco litigation states, "The best choice for Alberta will be," – will be – "the International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers." That's her ex-husband's law firm.

Next, we have a memo from the Assistant Deputy Minister of Justice dated January 13, 2011, updating the Deputy Minister of Justice on where the tobacco litigation file is at. It says that shortly before Christmas the Minister of Justice – and it actually names the now Premier – "selected the International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers."

Next, we have an e-mail with three letters of rejection attached that were sent to law firms that had applied for the litigation contract but were not successful. The e-mail was dated December 22, 2010, and was sent to the Deputy Minister of Justice. Then we have yet another letter from the Assistant Deputy Minister of Justice to the executive director of Alberta Justice stating, "Call made to Karsten Jensen at the successful consortium."

Lastly, we have an e-mail to a litigation director at Alberta Justice from Carsten Jensen, senior partner at the Premier's ex-husband's law firm, dated January 6, 2011, which states, "We were very happy to learn that we will be working with you on the health care recovery claim."

Mr. Speaker, the evidence in this matter is overwhelming, and it is clear. When the Premier stood up in this House and stated that she was not the Justice minister when this decision was made, she was not telling the truth.

The Speaker: We admonished someone earlier for using statements like that, and I'd ask you to revisit, hon. member, the final couple of words.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Cross-border Economic Opportunities

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 23 Albertans gave our government and our Premier a strong mandate to govern on a platform that had at its heart the belief that a stronger Canada means a stronger Alberta. Albertans rejected isolationist firewall policies that pit one region against the next.

While all of us here spent the week in this House debating amendment after amendment after amendment into the wee hours of the morning, our Premier was building fundamental relationships across North America. In Halifax she led discussions among Premiers on a Canadian energy strategy. The crux of this strategy is simple. Working together, provinces can leverage each other's unique energy strengths to catapult Canada into a global leader in responsible energy development. She received strong support from Premiers for a west-east pipeline carrying Alberta crude to eastern Canadian refineries, creating jobs, prosperity, and increased market access along the way. She met with the Premier of Quebec, where both agreed to share energy expertise and address pipeline-related environmental questions. In Arizona this weekend she has been asked to share her expertise and vision with U.S. governors to build a stronger regional energy partnership and stronger economies on both sides of the border.

Building these relationships requires travelling across Canada. It requires travelling across North America and the world. The result will be improved opportunities for a wide range of Albertans, including those in agriculture, in forestry, in education, research, tourism, culture, energy, and innovation.

Albertans are right, Mr. Speaker. As evidenced on April 23, the Premier is wanted. She is wanted by Albertans to get this important job done.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations, followed by Airdrie.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(3) to advise the House that on Monday, December 3, 2012, written questions 5, 6, 11, 12, and 13 will be accepted and written questions 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18 will be dealt with. Also on Monday, December 3, 2012, Motion for a Return 1 will be accepted, and Motion for a Return 2 will be dealt with.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with Standing Order 15(2) of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta standing orders I am hereby providing you with notice of my intention to raise a question of privilege today in that the Premier's responses during Oral Question Period regarding her role as Justice minister in selecting the firm to represent the government in the tobacco lawsuit deliberately misled the Assembly in such a way as to impede the ability of members of this House to fulfill their duties, thereby committing a contempt of parliament.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to submit five copies of several documents that I made reference to today in my questions. First, the Hansard from November 28, in which the hon. Premier indicated that she was not the Justice minister at the time the decision was made in the tobacco litigation case; an article from the CBC news dated February 16, indicating when the former Justice minister entered the PC leadership race; also, a document dated December 14, 2010, outlining the decision by the then Justice minister to say that the best choice for Alberta will be the International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers; the briefing note dated January 13, 2011, that was submitted by Grant Sprague, the assistant deputy minister of legal services, indicating a status update on the matter in which it was indicated that the then Justice minister selected the International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers; an e-mail dated December 22, in which, again, Grant Sprague, assistant deputy minister, indicates that he had made a call to Carsten Jensen at the successful consortium; an e-mail also dated December 22, 2010, in which the scanned documents with signed memos to the unsuccessful candidates are indicated, and this is also from the office of the assistant deputy minister of legal services in Alberta Justice; a copy of the letter written by Grant Sprague regretting to advise the unsuccessful parties about their proposal not being successful; in addition, on January 6, an e-mail from Carsten Jensen to Lorne Merryweather indicating before Christmas that he was happy to learn that they would be working on the health care recovery claim with the government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, did you have a tabling?

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. One is a letter from the Grey Nuns Medical Staff Association dated November 27, 2012, to the citizens of Alberta, explaining why their doctors are upset with the government. I have five copies.

My second tabling is a letter dated November 28, 2012. It's a letter to the patients in the constituency of the Minister of Health, expressing their concerns regarding the future of health care delivery. I have five copies.

I have a letter dated April 11, 2012, from the Alberta College of Family Physicians. It's from Dr. Cathy Scrimshaw. This letter is in reference to the question that I had asked where Dr. Scrimshaw is quoted as saying that the Alberta College of Family Physicians "has responded to concerns regarding Alison Redford's misrepresentation of the ACFP in a recent newspaper article discussing the Family Care Clinics." It's a quote, Mr. Speaker, that goes on to say that the ACFP is disappointed with the . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, just table the document, please.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies. This is related to a question that I asked earlier today.

The Speaker: Is that it, then? Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my esteemed colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek I'd like to table the following documents. The required five documents for the record that I am tabling are from the Federal Accountability Initiative for Reform, FAIR. They promote integrity, accountability within government by empowering employees to speak out without fear of reprisal when they encounter wrongdoing. This tabling is in regard to the debate from last night on Bill 4, the whistle-blower protection act. I'd like to state that we read this and comprehended it many, many times.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, I saw you looking at the clock. Did you wish to address the Assembly?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If it pleases the House, could we have unanimous consent to continue with the filing of papers with the House?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Let's proceed and finish off, then.

Hon. Deputy Premier, you had a tabling.

3:00

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, while arguing that the Premier may have acted unethically, the Official Opposition, in particular the leader, was relying on the expertise of a leading ethicist in Canada on matters of ethics. I would like to table a recent article written by the said academic that chastises fans of Saskatchewan Roughriders and tells them that it is okay for football fans to cheer but not loudly. This is the expert paper written by that very same expert.

The Speaker: Well, let's table it, and we'll move on. Thank you.

Projected Government Business

Mr. Saskiw: According to Standing Order 7(6) I'd like to ask the Government House Leader for the projected business in this Assembly next week.

Mr. Campbell: Well, on Monday, December 3, 2012, in the afternoon we hope to do some private members' business and as per the Order Paper; in the evening Committee of the Whole on Bill 7, Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012.

On Tuesday, December 4, 2012, in the afternoon it will be Committee of the Whole on Bill 7 and as per the Order Paper; in the evening Committee of the Whole, third reading of Bill 7 and as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday, December 5, 2012, in the afternoon and evening we'll be doing third reading of Bill 7, Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012, and as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday, December 6, 2012, in the afternoon Bill 7, Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012, and as per the Order Paper.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have some points of order to deal with here. I believe we have three, possibly four. In order of occurrence I have a point of order by someone on behalf of the hon. Leader of the New Democratic opposition. Please proceed.

Point of Order Request for Documentation

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I am proceeding. This is a point of order that was drawn to your attention in regard to the minister of agriculture claiming that he was solely responsible for the decision to award the contract to the consortium of the International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers while he was the Justice minister under the then current Premier after the current Premier left office to pursue the leadership of the PC Party.

I am citing here Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms section 495 on page 151, that talks about documentation. The minister of agriculture claimed in question period today that he was capable of choosing other law firms and consortiums than the one that was recommended by Minister Redford in her memorandum to the Deputy Minister of Justice on December 14, 2010. This said that it was important to have a made-in-Alberta litigation plan and that as a result the best choice for Alberta would be the International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers.

As it stands today, Mr. Speaker, the Premier's recommendation to the Deputy Minister of Justice is the only evidence that we have pertaining to the awarding of this litigation contract to the International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers. The minister of agriculture stood today to enforce this claim that the Premier did not make this decision herself. In order to evidence the minister's verification of the Premier's claim that she did not make this decision, I think it's incumbent upon the minister that he should table for this House any documents to which he was referring that attest to his response to the opposition's questions here today regarding this contract.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but I'm trying to follow the point of order. Did you say 495 of Beauchesne?

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. That's right.

The Speaker: And which subsection?

Mr. Eggen: I'm sorry. Subsection (5).

The Speaker: Subsection (5)? Are you in essence asking that a certain document be tabled to back up something that an hon. member said? Is that what you're asking for?

Mr. Eggen: That's correct, yeah. That's right. Thank you.

The Speaker: Okay. Understood, then. Are you concluded, hon. member?

Mr. Eggen: No, I'm not.

The Speaker: Okay. Very briefly tidy it up, and we'll move on.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you for the clarification. I'm learning this as I go along. I'm learning a lot.

In order to evidence this minister's verification of the Premier's claim that she did not make this decision, we should have the tabling for the House of any documents to support this. With the documenting evidence to the contrary of the minister of agriculture's answers in question period today, that we've all seen here – the letter to the Deputy Minister of Justice on December 14 and other documents – the House can only find confidence in the minister of . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm sorry to interrupt, but I see a conversation going on here from chairs that ought not be occupied. I wonder if we could just be reminded that the only time you're allowed to move around the Chamber freely and sit in other spots is during Committee of the Whole. Thank you for observing that rule.

Sorry to interrupt you again, hon. member. Please continue and conclude.

Mr. Eggen: That's okay. Thank you. I'm almost done. Absolutely.

The confidence that we require, Mr. Speaker, in the minister of agriculture's statements needs to be buttressed with the documentation of that which is implicit in the statements that he made here this afternoon regarding the awarding of the International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers litigation contracts.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you. It's apparent on the face of it there's no point of order. The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development didn't refer to any documents. He didn't cite any documents. There are no documents involved in his answer. He made a statement that when he was Minister of Justice and Attorney General, he made the decision. He carried through and implemented the decision. The hon. member ought to be directed to 494. In bold title right above that one: Acceptance of the Word of a Member. "It has been formally ruled by Speakers that statements by Members respecting themselves and particularly within their own knowledge must be accepted."

The fact of the matter is that the hon. member stood up. He wasn't required to because one can't ask questions of people's former portfolios, but any member of the government is entitled to answer any question. He had information which he thought was relevant to the House, he stood up, and he answered. He's not required to provide any documentation. If they want documentation, Written Questions and Motions for Returns are the appropriate places. FOIP is another appropriate place. I think all the documents relative to this have probably been FOIPed already. There are lots of documents out there. The chronology in this event is very clear. There is no conflict of interest, there's no decision that was inappropriate, and these hon. members continue to muckrake when they should be trying to deal with the real interests of Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, this is a point of clarification. I think everyone knows that if you quote from a document, the expectation is that you will in fact table it. I'll have to review and I'm sure the hon. member also will review whether or not he did allude to a document that he might wish to table at some point. I didn't hear it personally, but we'll review just to be sure. Otherwise, this point stands clarified and closed.

Let's move on to the second point of order, at 2:09 p.m. The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Just for clarification, Mr. Speaker, would you like me to address all three of my points of order at once or just one at a time? What would you prefer?

The Speaker: Well, I have you down for one at 2:09 and another one at 2:15, and I'm suspecting they may be about different issues. If you wish to roll them both together, let's hear the argument for the first one, and then we'll see.

Mr. Anderson: I'll do the two separately, then, as you suggest.

Point of Order Insulting Language

Mr. Anderson: The first, of course, is regarding 23(j), "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder," and (l), "introduces any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly." I think you've been very clear on a couple of these. Maybe we can roll these all into one because they are very much related.

The first was with regard to the Justice minister and Solicitor General. He called members of the opposition on this side extremist. I think that's a very offensive statement. I think we all know what that means. I would note, Mr. Speaker, that it's a little rich coming from the side where I heard a slur about my own faith yesterday, a slur by a member from that side, which was very offensive. I find it a little bit interesting that they would have a member slur my faith and then the next day call us extremists. I think they should be ashamed of themselves in that regard, not to mention some mouthed expletive language used by the Premier yesterday that was caught on video. I would ask him to retract that statement. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Airdrie has the floor.

Please continue and conclude.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. The other is regarding the Treasury Board president. You did try to correct him, Mr. Speaker, when he called the Official Opposition the wild Alliance. You've been in this House many times when a member on our side, for example, called the PCs pathetically cowardly. You immediately had them withdraw the comment, and I would assume you'll do the same with regard to the minister who refused to withdraw when he was asked to by you.

The third was the transparency and accountability minister, who said that the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek had not read the bill. Of course, this member is a long-serving member, and that was very offensive to her, especially since, as you can see by the colourful rainbow of notes and highlights and all the work that she did, including preparing 20 amendments to the legislation, she not only read the bill, but she understands it. Perhaps it is that hon. minister that needs a refresher on the bill and not this member on this side.

I would just ask that those comments be retracted so that we can move on, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Government House Leader. The hon. Minister of Justice also wishes to chime in on this, so let's go with the House leader first.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just with respect to the last matter it was clear on the record and will be clear when Hansard is printed that the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek used a title of a bill which is not a bill that was in the House. It was not a bill that was passed. By using a title of a bill that is not in the House and that wasn't passed by this House, she obviously was either not reading correctly, not reading the bill, or making something up. The title that she used was something to do with the protection of the government from whistle-blowers. She obviously was trying to be ironic, but I think it's quite appropriate for the minister in question to respond that she obviously doesn't know what the heck she's talking about. I mean, if they want to make fun of the titles of bills, it's quite appropriate to toss it back and say: obviously, you haven't read it.

Everybody knows that we spent a lot of time talking about the bill. Points of order could be raised about whether it's appropriate for people to jump up the next day and raise questions about why their amendments weren't passed. Nobody does that because it just carries on too much.

The references with respect to the wild Alliance and extremist, both of which are appropriate in some circumstances and perhaps inappropriate in other circumstances – the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner called us progressives. None of us, I think, would be upset about that. Sometimes you use a name that is not quite the name of the party to perhaps describe better what you think. I don't think there's a point of order on that. Everybody knows what's going on. It's hard to take offence on that one, surely.

With respect to extremist, I think my friend wants to deal with that.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Justice, since one of these is about you, I'll allow you a brief comment. Please do what you think is appropriate, and I will respond accordingly, and then we'll move on. I think these are issues of clarification, by and large, and some I've already intervened on. But let's hear your submission.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I'll endeavour to be very brief. First of all, I wanted to indicate that I've never said anything about the Member for Airdrie's religion. In fact, I employ two members of his faith. I don't think people should be persecuted. I just wanted to put that on the record because he had mentioned that.

Mr. Speaker, my comment was related to the caucus as a whole. It did not go directly towards any one of the particular members. I know that the word "extreme" – and I said extreme, not extremist – is found nowhere in Beauchesne's 489 or 490 as a prohibited item.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, let's deal with these in, I hope, the order they were given. The hon. Member for Airdrie rose first and foremost on a comment made by the Minister of Justice where, in response to a certain question from another member, the hon. Minister of Justice said, "I really question if this hon. opposition really supports this type of action to recover taxpayers' dollars or if they have an ideological and extremist opposition to it." Now, in the heat and cut and thrust of debate, as we all know, things get said, but in my view that was attributed to the opposition, and you might want to just withdraw that comment very briefly, and we'll move on to the second.

Mr. Denis: As I indicated, Mr. Speaker, it wasn't against one particular member, and I'll withdraw it.

The Speaker: Thank you for withdrawing it. I realize that it wasn't against a particular member, but when you do what you just did, it's an honourable thing to have done. Thank you.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: Let's move on to item 2. Item 2 deals with a comment made by the President of Treasury Board, who rose and said something about the wild Alliance opposition. I rose immediately and asked him to correct himself, and he did. I think I heard you withdraw it. I hope it was a sincere withdrawal, or words to that effect, but if you didn't withdraw it – I thought you did, but if you want a second chance to make it really clear that you really meant the withdrawal, I'll recognize you very briefly.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you. Notwithstanding expressing my opinion of the group, I would withdraw that. Really, the only wild rose I need worry about in Alberta is my wife, who's at home probably watching, because her name is Rose.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: The last item deals with a comment first made by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek that prompted a response from the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation. I believe that was the issue, wasn't it? You will recall that the minute I heard the associate minister say something along the lines of, "She doesn't even know the name of the bill," or words to that effect – I don't have Hansard in front of me – then I rose immediately and stopped the associate minister from proceeding onward. That was my way of admonishing him for something that I felt may not have been very appropriate in the circumstance.

Hon. associate minister, I'll allow you an opportunity to retract that statement very briefly if you like, and then we'll deal with the other comment that prompted it.

Mr. Scott: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I clearly heard some words, and I thought the other member might have been confused by the name of the bill. I certainly withdraw the comment.

The Speaker: Thank you. That's the honourable thing to do.

In the circumstance, I'm sure that the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek would like to revisit the issue as well. So someone on behalf of the hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: We'll make sure in future, Mr. Speaker, that we use the correct names of the bills.

The Speaker: Well said. Well done. Thank you.

That concludes the points of order that I have unless there was one that I missed. Are there others?

Seeing none, I think we can move on. Hon. members, our next point of business here concerns Standing Order 15. What I'd like to do at this point is to hear some brief arguments in this respect, first from the presenter and sponsor of the motion, the hon. Member for Airdrie.

Privilege Misleading the House

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising in accordance with Standing Order 15(2) to raise a point of privilege; namely, that yesterday, November 28, 2012, the Premier interfered with the ability of members of this House to fulfill their duties when she insisted repeatedly that she had not made the decision as Justice minister to award the tobacco lawsuit to the firm in which her ex-husband and political confidant is a partner.

The Hansard quote that we're referring to here from yesterday is when the Premier, in answering a question from myself, said: "Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta made a decision as to who to retain. I was not the Justice minister at the time that the government made that decision." Notice, first, that we are talking about the decision. Not the contract, not the retainer agreement, but the decision to actually retain the law firm in question. The Premier was well aware of the same documents we have tabled and will table that show she did clearly make the decision in selecting the firm she had close ties to.

Not only did she sign documents to that effect, which we've put forward, but they were publicly reported on that morning and her government knew days in advance that the story would be getting published as the reporter was persistently seeking comments from her and the Justice minister. It's our view that by stating she had not made the decision, she intentionally misled the House and in so doing interfered with the ability of several members to fulfill their duty as Members of the Legislative Assembly, which, in my view, is a contempt of parliament.

I'd like to start first with preliminary matters. Points of privilege must be raised at the earliest opportunity. The statements in question were uttered yesterday, and our notice went to the Speaker's office this morning. As such, it is our view that the point of privilege was raised in a timely manner and is in order according to Standing Order 15(2).

I can refer to several authorities on this point of privilege relating to deliberately misleading the House. The first, House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, says on page 83 that "deliberately attempting to mislead the House" is considered a contempt of the House. Erskine May, at page 132, states that "the Commons may treat the making of a deliberately misleading statement as a contempt."

I would also like to note, Mr. Speaker, the ruling of your predecessor on a point of privilege on November 7, 2007, at page 1860 in the Hansard, where he said:

These purported questions of privilege allow members to allege that someone is deliberately misleading the Assembly, which is something they could not say in the ordinary course of debate under our rules of debate.

As you and the previous Speaker have reminded us in this Chamber, points of privilege are the most serious charges the can be levelled in this House and should not be taken lightly. On May 30 of this year you yourself, Mr. Speaker, referred to a decision of your predecessor in which he counselled members "to carefully consider bringing forward matters that call into question the integrity of other members when the evidence is less than convincing."

I assure this House that this matter has been carefully considered and that we are not being frivolous and vexatious and that the evidence is quite convincing. There is no other way to refer to it except as misleading the House, and that is why it must be brought forward as a point of privilege. I trust that, despite the prominence of the member in question, after hearing the evidence, Mr. Speaker, you will grant that this matter does constitute a prima facie question of privilege and refer it to the appropriate committee.

I'd now like to address the substantive elements of whether the misleading was intentional and grave. To establish that a member is in contempt, there has been a test that you and your predecessor have referred to, which can be found on page 86 in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition. The test was articulated by David McGee, a former Clerk of the New Zealand House of Representatives, and is found in the third edition of his book, Parliamentary Practice in New Zealand, 2005, at pages 653 and 654, where he states:

There are three elements to be established when it is alleged that a member is in contempt by reason of a statement that the member has made: the statement must, in fact, have been misleading; it must be established that the member making the statement knew at the time the statement was made that it was incorrect; and, in making it, the member must have intended to mislead the House.

This was in fact the test used not only by you, Mr. Speaker, on May 30, but also by Speaker Kowalski in the past; November 7, 2007, for example.

First, according to the test we must establish that this statement is misleading. First, a key date. The current Premier resigned from her duties as Justice minister on February 16, 2011, so I will outline the written evidence produced before that date, nothing after that date. Yesterday the Premier stood in the House, as stated, referencing the tobacco litigation contract given to her ex-husband's law firm, and stated, "I was not the Justice minister at the time that the government made that decision."

There are three documents that show very clearly that as then Justice minister the current Premier was the decision-maker on this file. The first is the memo of December 14, as tabled. As it indicates, the bureaucratic team sent her a brief suggesting that any of three firms were qualified and gave no preference, leaving the decision up to her. She acknowledged the suggestion and declared that the best choice – in fact, she says that the choice will be the tobacco recovery litigation consortium that was in question here. To be clear, that December 14, 2010, memo to the deputy minister includes the current Premier's own signature as Justice minister in response to a request asking for her decision on who should represent Alberta in the litigation. It states, "the best choice for Alberta will be the International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers." That is, of course, her ex-husband's law firm.

Next, we have a memo from the Assistant Deputy Minister of Justice, dated January 13, 2011, updating the Deputy Minister of Justice on where the tobacco litigation file was at that time. It says:

Shortly before Christmas [the Minister of Justice] . . . And it actually uses the name of the now Premier, the Justice minister at the time.

. . . selected the International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers.

Next, we have an e-mail with three letters of rejection attached that was sent to law firms that had applied for the litigation contract but were not successful. The e-mail is dated December 22, 2010, and was sent to the Deputy Minister of Justice.

Then we have another letter from the Assistant Deputy Minister of Justice to the executive director of Alberta Justice stating: "Call made to Karsten Jensen at the successful consortium." Of course, Carsten Jensen is the senior partner at the law firm in question.

Lastly, we have an e-mail to senior counsel at Alberta Justice from Carsten Jensen, the senior partner at the Premier's ex-husband's law firm, dated January 6, 2011, which states, "We were very happy to learn that we will be working with you on the health care recovery claim."

Mr. Speaker, the evidence in this matter is clear. There is no doubt to the facts. When the Premier stood up in this House and stated on the record that she was not the Justice minister at the time the government made the decision – the decision – to award the tobacco litigation contract in question, that simply was not the case.

These are the facts. But they are not all of what the Premier said in the House yesterday. Instead, she went to great lengths to lead the members of this House and the public into believing that the decision was made well after she left her position as Justice minister. I'll quote the statements made by the Premier other than the first one. She also said:

The suggestion that the Leader of the Opposition is making is absolutely inaccurate and false. In fact, when the decision . . .

Not the contract or the retainer agreement, the decision.

. . . was made by the government of Alberta as to who to retain on this file, I was not the Justice minister.

Also:

Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta made a decision as to who to retain. I was not the Justice minister at the time that the government made that decision.

Again, not the retention agreement or any of the other superfluous things in these agreements, the decision. This is the quote continuing.

The opposition can stand up every single day and say that I was, but I wasn't. It is simply not the case. It is not true.

Now, the second part of the test, we need to establish that the member knew that this statement was incorrect; in other words, the mens rea component. Of course, she signed the memo that we have already referred to. She also clearly had access to all of the documents in question and as Justice minister at the time we assume would have seen them, but she did sign the one memo in particular. The Premier proved also that she was well aware of these memos in question when she told the civil servants which firm should be chosen because in one of her answers in question period she spoke very clearly about it. She said:

Mr. Speaker, there are four factors cited in that memo. In that memo we look to the fact that we do talk about perceived conflicts of interest, actual conflicts of interest. These are entirely appropriate to be raised by the Department of Justice. On top of that, we had the opportunity at that time to talk about a made-in-Alberta solution and cost-effective service for taxpayers. At the time that memo truly reflected what needed to be considered.

She understood what she was saying.

The government of Alberta four months later, when I was not the Minister of Justice, I presume considered the same factors, and that's why the decision was made.

Decision, again, was the language used. She continues:

It would be incorrect to highlight one factor over others. It's time for this to stop.

Finally, the third part of the test, that the member intended to mislead the House. I would submit, Mr. Speaker, that this essentially has been made, so I'm not going to repeat everything that I just talked about in this regard. Clearly, the government did have time to plan their response to this. They were not caught off guard. They were fully aware of what they were saying. They repeated it again and again in this House since then, today in fact. So, clearly, the mens rea component is satisfied. She knew what she was saying at the time, and it was misleading.

Before I close, briefly I want to address the main reason Speakers have ruled against finding a prima facie case of contempt in the past. On March 20, 2002, in a ruling on an allegation like this on page 465 of the Alberta Hansard for that date, the Speaker said the following:

It would be difficult for the chair to conclude that a contempt of the House arises every time a minister misspeaks or misstates department policy. Exactness in all answers to questions in question period would also require exactness in all questions. This would seem to amount to an impossible standard of perfection that would certainly go beyond the standard expected in any Westminster-style parliament.

And I would completely agree with that, Mr. Speaker.

It is absolutely fair that the government ministers are bound to make mistakes, and misspeaking or having something incorrect in your head, of course, is not grounds for contempt, even if it is very misleading. Accordingly, Speakers like to refer to Marleau and Montpetit's statement at page 433, which says:

In most instances, when a point of order or a question of privilege has been raised in regard to a response to an oral question, the Speaker has ruled that the matter is a disagreement among Members over the facts surrounding the issue. As such, these matters are more a question of debate and do not constitute a breach of the rules or of privilege.

I would submit, Mr. Speaker, that I've established above that this is not a case of different perspectives. There are clear facts here. It seems quite clear that the Premier and Justice minister repeatedly and in a co-ordinated fashion tried to portray the situation as one where the decision – and, again, I cannot highlight the word “decision” enough here – not the contract regarding the retention, putting the decision into place in a contractual fashion, but the actual decision to award the contract was entirely made after she left the post of Justice minister. That's what they're saying, but the well-documented facts we and the media have presented show otherwise.

Absolutely, this decision was not communicated to the public until after she left her position as Justice minister. That announcement was made after she left office in that regard. Clearly, the minister of agriculture, who was the Justice minister at the time when the Premier was running for leadership, did in fact co-ordinate the details with regard to the retainer, with regard to the different terms of the agreement and so forth, but the actual decision to award the contract, clearly, without question in this case, Mr. Speaker, was the now Premier's, the then Justice minister's.

It appears to me that instead we have a case here that meets the criteria, the three-part test referred to above. Speaker Kowalski on March 20, 2002, stated the following: “When statements made by a member are so inconsistent as to lead to the natural conclusion that the member has deliberately misled the House, then the chair must find a prima facie case of privilege.” It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the natural conclusion to yesterday's statements is that the member did indeed deliberately mislead the House, and I hope you will find that a prima facie case of privilege exists and that the grave step of referring it to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing is called for. I recognize that given the status of the member in question this is a difficult action for you to take, but I know and I hope and submit that you find that this is indeed the right thing to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much. I just want to rise to talk about this particular point. The Member for Airdrie has kept the temperature down, and I'll endeavour to do the same. That is unfortunately where this ends.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the member seemed to have impugned me in some of his arguments, and I think that he should clarify if he intends to amend this or if it's against just the Premier or if it's against me, but I'll leave that aside as well.

We received at 10:54 his notice under the rules in which he says, “regarding her [being the Premier's] role as Justice Minister in selecting the firm to represent the government in the tobacco lawsuit deliberately misled the Assembly.”

Let's take a look at exactly what she said yesterday. I'm referring to Hansard, page 1109, Mr. Speaker. The first quote from the Premier:

Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta made a decision as to who to retain. I was not the Justice minister at the time that the government made that decision.

And I go further down on page 1109, November 28:

Mr. Speaker, there are four factors cited in that memo. In that memo we look to the fact that we do talk about perceived conflicts of interest, actual conflicts of interest. These are entirely appropriate to be raised by the Department of Justice. On top of that, we had the opportunity at that time to talk about a made-in-Alberta solution and cost-effective service for taxpayers. At the time that memo truly reflected what needed to be considered. The government of Alberta four months later, when I was not the Minister of Justice, I presume considered the same factors, and that's why the decision was made. It would be incorrect to highlight one factor over others. It's time for this to stop.

In the legal test that the Member for Airdrie has noted, which I note is the correct test under this section, he would have to show that the Premier herself said something that was wrong, which in legalese is the actus reus argument, or also the mental element, the mens rea argument, that that particular member knew or ought to have known that she was going to deliberately mislead the House.

I appreciate that there are not a lot of lawyers in this House. [interjections] The Member for Little Bow is quite happy about that. I'll try to dumb it down. [interjection] I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. When I said "dumb it down," I meant just to get rid of the legalese, and I meant no offence, Member for Edmonton-Centre. I apologize.

Ms Blakeman: Don't be snarky. There's no need.

Mr. Denis: I was not meaning to be snarky. Again, I said that I apologize. I'm just going to ignore this and keep going on.

Mr. Speaker, there are two ways you can retain a lawyer. One is through an hourly rate, and the second is through a contingency. This retainer was through a contingency fee agreement. What happens with a contingency fee agreement is that the lawyer agrees to take your case and what happens is that typically they get a percentage of the recovery. Typically what happens if there's no recovery is that you end up paying nothing. Let's say you got $100 out of the case; the lawyer might get $20 out of that. It depends on the particular item.

What happened, Mr. Speaker, is that I actually did a bit of research this morning. I went through the code of conduct from the Law Society of Alberta, and I'm quoting – and I'll table this on Monday – 2.06(2). "A lawyer may enter into a written agreement in accordance with governing legislation that provides that the lawyer's fee is contingent." Now, the key there is "written agreement." There are no verbal contingency fee agreements.

I want to thank as well the Minister for AT and T, who had given me today the rules under rule 10.7(1)(a), which again indicates that by law contingency fee agreements must be in writing. So unless you have a written contingency fee agreement, there is no retention.

On top of that, Mr. Speaker, I talked about a binder full of lawyers. Well, I went in my binder, and I called a couple of senior lawyers throughout this province, and they confirmed to me today that that was the case.

Now, why is that important, Mr. Speaker? It's because there was no contingency fee agreement until June 21, 2011. The Premier stepped down as Justice minister on February 16, 2011, as the Member for Airdrie correctly notes. If there is no legal contingency fee agreement, there was no legal relationship. The agriculture minister indicated again correctly today, Mr. Speaker, that he was the one that under his carriage authorized the contingency fee agreement, again, June 21, 2011, long after the Premier had in fact stepped down.

I would say with no disrespect to the Member for Airdrie personally that he has failed to meet this test because the statement, in fact, was true, and under the law of defamation, Mr. Speaker, we all know the adage: truth is an absolute defence. The Premier has been consistent, I have been consistent, and today we heard from the former Justice minister, the minister of agriculture, all singing from the same song sheet, Mr. Speaker.

With respect, there is no point of privilege here, and I will respectfully submit that you throw this out. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, briefly on this point.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief. I am speaking to support the hon. Member for Airdrie in his submission on this question of privilege. As the member had pointed out, there are those three elements to be established for contempt, and I think that, in fact, upon reflection and looking at this evidence that keeps coming, really, there is sufficient grounds on all three.

Perhaps the timeline of this information, the different documents, would provide some illumination, right? First, the Premier was the Justice minister until February 16, 2011, I believe. The FOIP documents: there's the one piece that's from December 14 talking about the international recovery lawyers being the best choice to go ahead with this tobacco case; another one, a briefing note from January 13, again much before February 16, saying that the International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers were selected; an e-mail from the assistant deputy minister stating he has informed Carsten Jensen that the consortium was successful in its bid; an e-mail to the successful bidder on the tobacco litigation file; the copy of letters to the unsuccessful parties; and so forth. There is a growing body of information here, Mr. Speaker, that would point to this being decided.

I think what's really important here – we're not going to lose this point in deliberations over these next weeks and months – is that it's not just the very point by which something is signed on the dotted line, but I think that we have legislation to protect from conflict of interest from the time that you start the intention to do something, right? It's a continuum. Clearly, the minister launched a process which ended in this decision being made.

If we are splitting hairs on the point of where this began and ended – and you know, the minister of agriculture is very honourable in his making that statement today – I mean, really where did all of this come from, right? That's what we make decisions on based on conflict of interest: where was the impetus to make this choice, I think an unreasonable choice, for this particular tobacco lawsuit lawyers' firm to get this contract?

We've heard from the Ethics Commissioner and ethics experts from across the country that have said that this is inappropriate in all ways possible.

I thank the Member for Airdrie for his hard work on this. Certainly, we do not make these questions of privilege frivolously. I think there is just something here that is very substantial that needs moving forward on.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, briefly.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to speak to this matter. It's difficult to sit and listen to a conversation that swirls around events that I was in the middle of without having the opportunity to speak to them. But I, first of all, want to comment just to give a little bit of a backdrop as to what I'm about to say. That is that I take my role as a member of this Assembly very seriously, just as I do as a lawyer, as an officer of the court. One thing that we have is our reputations. It's really all we have. I'm not about to stretch the truth or bend the truth for any purpose for anybody. What I tell you is to the best of my ability what I know.

When I was appointed as Minister of Justice – I believe I was sworn in on February 18, 2011 – the next day I had a meeting with my new deputy minister. As some would know here, what happens is that they give you binders full of material to read, and they start briefing you on everything that you're inheriting.

One of the things that I inherited was the tobacco litigation file. You don't start with a blank slate. You start with work that's already being done. Nobody ever said to me, to the best of my recollection: the cards have already been dealt; you're stuck with a certain law firm, and you have no choice to go a different direction. On the other hand, certainly, it was indicated to me that a firm had been identified that was the preferred candidate at the time. I was assured that a very thorough process had been gone through in order to get to that point. It wouldn't be a surprise to hear that there aren't that many law firms in Alberta that would have the capacity to do this kind of work. This is a very big litigation file. There was a short list. What was explained to me was that all of the firms on that short list were very well qualified, very capable, and had the capacity to do the work.

When I talk about capacity, there are at least two things that one has to consider. One is, of course, the resources, the people with the expertise to do that work. The other thing is that because this was a contingency arrangement, which means they don't get paid anything until you get to the end of the file if they're successful, they've got to have the capacity to carry on possibly years of work, paying as they go out of their own pocket for their staffing and so on in order to get to a successful conclusion. It was explained to me that this firm met all of those tests.

There was some negotiation that had started when I got there in terms of a contingency agreement. Contingency agreements aren't very common in that environment. They are in terms of big tobacco litigation files, but in terms of what government does, I don't think that there have been very many contingency arrangements. The Minister of Justice is right when he says that there are rules that the Law Society has about entering into contingency agreements. Nothing of the sort had been finalized. As a matter of fact, out of an abundance of caution the department had hired outside counsel for us to negotiate with that particular firm the terms of a contingency agreement.

Now, another thing that was very important to us – I should back up a step. I also remember conversations I had with my departmental staff about the process of selecting a firm to represent us, and I was curious to know what other provinces were doing. You know, there were various announcements coming out from other provinces that they were going to be embarking on litigation as well. My understanding was that there were some provinces that were going to use their own internal departmental people to carry that litigation. I remember asking the question about: well, maybe we should be considering that?

Again, there aren't that many firms that have this capacity, so some of the firms that were on our list, I'm told, were also talking to other provinces about getting involved in the litigation. One of the things that was important to me and to my department was that we wanted a firm representing us that would have Alberta's interests exclusively top of mind and that we weren't going to end up being a junior partner in some litigation with other provinces that may have had bigger claims than us. It was important for us to have somebody who would focus just on Alberta. Also, we were careful about getting involved with a firm that might have other files where they were suing our government, so there could be a potential conflict of interest there.

These were all the discussions that I was having with the department, and nobody ever explained to me: it's a done deal; you're stuck with the deal. So we carried on through that process. I would have regular meetings with my executive team, and I would get reports on how the discussions and negotiations were going on with the particular firm that had been selected or, at least, that was being focused on, to be clear.

Now, I don't know the people in this firm. I don't know the people in the other firms. I wouldn't know them if I ran into them on the street. I at no time had any conversation with my predecessor, the now Premier, about any of this. As far as I knew, as far as I understood in my conversations with my department, it was my call as to whether or not we finally went ahead with this firm, and that didn't happen until sometime into the summer. There was a lot of preparatory work that had to be done because, again, it's a big file. The legislation had been passed, but there was lots of preparatory work that had to get us into position before we could actually proceed with the litigation, one of the pieces being the retention of this firm.

Those are the facts as I know them, and I think that that supports the position of the Premier that there was no final decision. She may have identified a firm that she thought was appropriate, and this firm, again, I'm told, was also selected by Nunavut. Again, I stand to be corrected by the current minister because I'm perhaps a little bit out of date on this, but one of the things that was important to us was that whomever we selected was going to be working exclusively for us and would not work for another jurisdiction unless we said that it was okay because we did not want conflicts of interest. To my knowledge, I believe Nunavut may have asked, but I don't believe that that's actually been formalized in any way. I think that also supports that this was far from any kind of a decision having been finally made because we needed to negotiate all of that with any firm we might be talking to.

Just as a final analogy, I guess, to simplify things, if a person is looking to buy a house and you look at three houses and there's one you're kind of interested in, you may tell the other two that you're probably not going to be interested in them, and the other one you focus on, but you don't have a deal, not until you actually make the deal. That was my understanding as to where we were at and what my role was in all of this.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to just address this briefly because I think it is important when people raise questions of privilege. I would note that this is probably the fourth or fifth question of privilege that's been raised. I think we need to get back to an understanding that questions of privilege are very important pieces.

There's been no misleading. It's very clear on the face of it what the Premier did when she was Minister of Justice. There are documents that have been tabled. There are clear explanations about what the process was. There are clear explanations about the result, how the decision was made. There's no misleading. There's no intent to mislead, so there's no mens rea. There's no actual misleading. Everybody is quite aware of what the process was. The fact of the matter is that there's also no conflict of interest, but that's not what's being focused on here.

The reality is that people are complaining about an action which is not a conflict of interest. You know, in any one of the firms that was on the list, I would suggest, you'd find that there were people that the government knew and people that the opposition knew. The reality is that there was no misleading. The documents are there. The Premier has not said that she didn't sign the memo. What she said was: "The government of Alberta made a decision as to who to retain. I was not the Justice minister at the time that the government made that decision." That's accurate, and that accuracy has been portrayed by the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. There's no question of misleading the House. There's no intent to mislead the House. It's very clear what happened.

There's no conflict of interest in the first place, but there's no contempt of the House. There's nothing that stops the members opposite from doing their jobs. The fact is that everybody is clear where everybody stands on this. We have a clear disagreement as to what the import of what they think they know is, but it's very clear what the facts are, and the facts do not support any misleading of the House, any attempt to mislead the House, any intentional misleading of the House, anything at all which would support a contempt.

The Speaker: Let's go with Airdrie first, then, very briefly – you've already spoken once – and then we'll go to another member briefly and then perhaps be able to move on.

Mr. Anderson: Very briefly, just because we had three members of the House on that side. I want to agree with the Government House Leader. This is not about the issue of conflict of interest. That's not what is at play here. I think we agree with that. Now, we, of course, think that there was a conflict of interest, a very serious one, but that's not what is at issue here. The issue is: when was the decision made? When was the decision to retain this firm made? In the agriculture minister's comments – I thank him for his very clear statements on the matter, and I'm glad that he stood up – what he said was that he obviously inherited the file, that there was a preferred candidate already there, that she identified the firm that she, referring to the Premier, thought was best, and that outside counsel had already been secured to negotiate the contingency agreement.

If you look at those statements, Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the decision for this firm had been made subject to a few details. I think that just because the Government House Leader stands up and says over and over again that this is not a point of privilege, that does not in fact make it so. My kids try that on me all the time. It's not the case.

An Hon. Member: Does it work?

Mr. Anderson: No, it doesn't work, and it doesn't work here because the fact is that she had made the decision. The documentation is overwhelming. I've seen no documents tabled by the government that say opposite to that. I would ask that you find a point of privilege.

The Speaker: Very briefly, the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess this troubles me a little bit. I have a lot of respect for the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose and his thoughts. I don't know if I'm allowed to ask or not, but did you ever interview the other firms when you talked about what went on . . . [interjection] I can't do that? No? Then that's fine.

The Speaker: It's not how this process works. If you wish to make a point, then please do.

Mr. Donovan: I'll ask him afterwards.

The Speaker: Are there any others?

Seeing none, let me make a couple of brief comments so we can move on and get some business done today of another nature. The hon. Member for Airdrie rose and spoke at some length, almost 15 minutes, to outline his case for what, as you all know by now for sure, is a very serious point of privilege because that's where it was raised. We subsequently heard references to many previous decisions, some of them involving other Speakers, some of them involving citations, some of them involving documents, which I will obviously have to review and go into Hansard to find other information.

Then I listened very carefully to the comments as well that accompanied those citations, documents, and other decisions. We then heard from the Minister of Justice, who spoke for about five or six minutes. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview spoke for about four or five minutes. The former Minister of Justice who's currently the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development then spoke for almost nine or 10 minutes. The Government House Leader spoke for a couple of minutes. The hon. Member for Airdrie spoke again for a few minutes. Finally, Little Bow spoke very briefly. So there's a lot to digest here.

I'm going to take this one under advisement and give a thorough, thorough look at all that has been said and all that has been cited. I'll come back in a day or two with a ruling in that respect. Thank you, all members, for contributing as you did.

Privilege

Distribution of Election Act Amendments

The Speaker: Now I'm going to move on with another matter, and that involves a question that was put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, which, coincidentally, was also a purported point of privilege. Hon. members, we'll all be reminded that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona raised such a purported question of privilege on Monday, November 26, 2012. Essentially, in her purported question of privilege she contended that her ability to perform her functions had been interfered with by not having received a copy of the Chief Electoral Officer's proposed amendments to election statutes. In fact, the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General wrote to the Chief Electoral Officer and requested his involvement regarding amendments for a particular bill that was under his purview.

Under Standing Order 15(6) the Speaker's role when a question of privilege is raised is to determine whether the matter was raised at the earliest opportunity and whether it constitutes a prima facie question of privilege. Now, just to be clear, hon. members, only the Assembly can in fact determine whether something is a question of privilege. But, to be even more clear, the Speaker's role is to determine whether the purported question meets the requirements to proceed. That is the role of the Speaker. Therefore, as for the preliminaries, the member raising this matter did provide notice to the Speaker's office at 10:52 a.m. on Monday, November 26, and thus satisfied the requirements of Standing Order 15(2).

Now, before outlining the facts of this particular case and discussing the applicable authorities in making a determination on this application, the Speaker wants to say that there are some very serious allegations contained in this purported point of privilege that have been made against an officer of this Alberta Legislature.

Not without reservation the Speaker has allowed many statements and many comments to be made in the Assembly about the Chief Electoral Officer, known to many as Mr. Fjeldheim, because those statements and comments related directly to the question of privilege. As all members here would know, some of those comments most likely would have been ruled out of order by the Speaker had they been raised in question period or during Members' Statements or in some other form of debate, discussion in this Assembly. As we know, members cannot call into question the impartiality or integrity of an officer of the Legislature per se. The Speaker will have more to say on this issue very shortly.

Meanwhile let me briefly outline some of the facts giving rise to the member's purported question of privilege. The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General wrote to the Chief Electoral Officer on May 29, 2012, Sessional Paper 12/2012 for reference, concerning possible amendments to election statutes, and that letter was in fact tabled in this Assembly on that day, May 29, 2012. The minister stated in his letter, "Amendments to Elections Act would involve your Office being fully consulted to maintain the independence of your Office and avoid arbitrary amendments passed in the Legislature."

Mr. Fjeldheim, the Chief Electoral Officer, responded to the Minister of Justice with a letter on May 31, 2012, Sessional Paper 25/2012 for reference, indicating that he would be pleased to review both the Election Act and the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. This document was also tabled in the Assembly on that particular day, May 31, 2012.

Then on August 27, 2012, the Chief Electoral Officer provided the Minister of Justice with recommendations concerning election legislation. The covering letter of that date was tabled by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on November 26, 2012, in this Assembly as Sessional Paper 311/2012. That letter and the attached recommendations were copied to the chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, that being the Member for Edmonton-McClung. From the submissions that were made on Monday, November 26, 2012, on this purported question of privilege, it appears that the committee chair did not circulate the Chief Electoral Officer's August 27, 2012, letter, and consequently the committee members were not aware of the contents of the recommendations until the legislation was introduced.

Now, before continuing, your Speaker has two points to make. First, the member raising this point of privilege, that being the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, is actually not a member of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices. Nonetheless, the Speaker is not going to rule for or against the question on that basis alone. There are other matters that were raised with respect to what transpired in that committee referred to in this matter.

The member who raised this matter along with the Member for Edmonton-Centre referred to what transpired during committee meetings in September 2012 and to correspondence from the Chief Electoral Officer as evidenced in Hansard on pages 997 and 1000. The Speaker is reluctant to get involved in what transpires in committees. You've heard me comment about this matter before. In this instance, however, the Assembly is not waiting for a report by or from that particular committee on this subject. Therefore, the Speaker will in fact rule on this question. Support for this process is found in Joseph Maingot's book, Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, second edition, where on page 222 he states:

The practice (of the Speaker not interfering in committee matters unless a report of the matter has been made) was "not an absolute one and that in very serious or special circumstances the Speaker may have to pronounce on a committee matter without the committee having reported to the House."

In reviewing this matter, your Speaker notes that there is no statutory or codified procedure for how an officer of the Legislature is to proceed in having his or her governing statute amended.

On page 1001 of Hansard for Monday, November 26, the Government House Leader referred to the practices of some officers going to the Legislative Offices Committee with requests for legislative change to reflect the fact that they do not report to the government but to this Assembly. In the case before us the Chief Electoral Officer was responding to a request from the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Furthermore, the Chief Electoral Officer had copied the chair of the standing committee in his August 27, 2012, letter under cover of which were the recommendations. One may have thought that would result in committee members being provided with a copy of the recommendations, but that was apparently not the case. The Chief Electoral Officer, however, cannot be faulted for what was or wasn't circulated at a particular meeting.

Now, the Member for Airdrie referred to several examples in his argument from other instances where contempt of the Assembly such as deliberately publishing a false or misleading report and refusing to answer a question or refusing to produce a report and so on – but here, in this particular case, there was no demand by the committee. Therefore, the Chief Electoral Officer is not in violation of any committee order. He was responding to a request made by the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona indicates in her arguments that her parliamentary work was interfered with by not having received a copy of the recommendations that were made by the Chief Electoral Officer. Now, while the Speaker sympathizes with the hon. member in that regard, this nonreceipt of information by members of the committee does not in the chair's view reach the standard of a member having been obstructed or interfered with in the performance of his or her duties.

I would refer members to chapter 3 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, and in particular pages 111 through 116, wherein obstruction and interference are discussed. To recast the question: has this member been prevented from carrying out her parliamentary duties? In the chair's opinion the answer is no. The document is now publicly available on the Department of Justice's website. The chair understands that it was actually distributed to all members of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices on Thursday, November 22, 2012, one week ago.

No member speaking to this question of privilege was able to provide an example or precedent from any jurisdiction where a prima facie question of privilege has been found with identical or highly similar facts. For the benefit of members unaccustomed to the nuances of parliamentary privilege, the Speaker would point out the subtle distinction between questions of privilege and contempt. To use the definitions from House of Commons Procedure and Practice, at page 82 it states:

Any disregard of or attack on the rights, powers and immunities of the House and its Members, either by an outside person or body, or by a Member of the House, is referred to as a "breach of privilege."

On the same page this particular authority offers an explanation of contempt as follows:

any action which, though not a breach of a specific privilege, tends to obstruct or impede the House in the performance of its functions; obstructs or impedes any Member . . . in the discharge of their duties; or is an offence against the authority or dignity of the House, such as disobedience of its legitimate commands or libels upon itself, its Members, or its officers.

That is the explanation of contempt.

Contempts are treated in the same manner as questions of privilege under our Standing Order 15. While undoubtedly it would have been in everyone's best interest if the documents had been provided to the members of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices when they went to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General and the chair, the fact that they weren't does not elevate this matter to a prima facie question of privilege.

The Speaker is also struck by the fact that there is an absolute absence of any intention to withhold information from members deliberately. The Speaker is of the view that some remedial action could certainly be undertaken. In fact, former Speaker Kowalski directed some action following his ruling that there was no prima facie question of privilege against the Ethics Commissioner in his ruling of June 3, 2009. You can reference pages 1512 and 1513 of Hansard for that day for more information in that regard. In the case before us today, however, the standing committee could establish guidelines or a protocol for officers of the Legislature that want to pursue changes to their governing statutes or are asked to do so by a member of the Executive Council.

To be clear and in summary, the Speaker finds that there is no prima facie question of privilege, which now concludes this matter.

However, the Speaker would like to add that Mr. Fjeldheim is a respected public servant who has provided great service to the province of Alberta in his terms as Chief Electoral Officer. While this question of privilege may be concerning, in my view as your chair and Speaker it deals with one particular incident and should not be seen as damaging or tarnishing the fine reputation that Mr. Fjeldheim has and continues to have in providing services to all members and to all Albertans.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Under 13(2) I'm wondering – the Speaker did not address the issue of the time lag. A number of us did mention it when we spoke of when we were supposed to or that the officer thought we were going to receive the documents in the spring at the same time and we, in fact, as you mentioned, did not receive the information until November, a time lag of some five or six months. He omitted any discussion of that in his remarks. Could I ask him why?

The Speaker: Hon. member, once the Speaker has made the ruling, it stands, and it concludes the matter, as I indicated. I appreciate your comments, but this discussion and this matter are now over, and we will move on.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'll call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 7

Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: There was a government amendment. Has it passed?

The Chair: The previous amendment was carried, and that was amendment A1. That was carried, hon. member. You may proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. There were a few omissions in that amendment that have now become part of our record, and I'm wondering if anybody can give me an explanation as to why. I am curious why the city is now required to keep the database of candidates and why that administrative burden was placed on the city.

Secondly, I'm really curious about why there's an exemption, a consistent exemption, under the Local Authorities Election Act for candidates that are self-financing. Anyone that self-finances up to $10,000 in a local election is exempted from a number of requirements that appear for everyone else. I'd like to know what the thinking is behind that. I can't find any explanation for it. If I win the jackpot lottery on Friday and I decide to run for city council and I self-finance up to $10,000, which given civic elections in metropolitan areas like Edmonton and Calgary $10,000 wouldn't get you very far, but let's say I decide to self-finance for $10,000 or $9,999, I'd be exempted from everything: disclosure, filing, everything. I wonder why that is because I would think that you should be disclosing, especially if you're self-financing. I'm looking forward to a response on that.

There's a really quirky one in here in section 110, which is amending – oh, boy, I'm sorry that I didn't do page numbers here. This is really strange. Section 110, which is amending section 54: "A candidate, official agent or scrutineer may only make an objection under subsection (1) at the time the person makes the statement under . . ." and then it names the various other sections. This is requiring everybody to be standing together in a little telephone booth in order to observe what's going on and to be able to jump up at that exact moment and make the objection. Can the minister explain why that was put in there, because it is requiring everybody to be standing in fairly close proximity in order to observe the – what's the word I'm looking for? – break in protocol that the objection is then made on. You know, it doesn't sound like you can be across the room. It sounds like you're all standing right together. So that's section 110.

Then there are a couple of sections where power is being given to a civic registrar. That strikes me as really interesting because, generally speaking, the correction that the government recognized and made in their government amendment was to say: "You know what? As long as you hit the minimum required by this for everybody, if you want to have more stringent regulations in place, go ahead." But there are two sections. Section 107, which is amending section 22, is going to appear in your act on page 70 of the bill. That section empowers a registrar to not accept. One, it gives a new ineligibility for a candidate, but it also makes the civic registrar a decision-maker in that they will now take or not take the nomination papers if the person has not met the criteria set out there. I wonder why that would have been done.

Later, in section 108, we see almost the reverse of that. Here we go. Section 108 is amending 28. "If a nomination is not signed by at least the minimum number of electors required to sign the nomination, the returning officer shall not accept it for filing." So once again the province has now given a power to decline something to a municipal officer. Now, those municipalities may not want their registrar or their returning officer to have that power, but the province just gave it to them, and I'd like to know why because they may not want to be in that position.

You know, we have different levels of eligibility to vote between the province's criteria and the municipal criteria in a number of municipalities. Of course, I'm most familiar with Edmonton, so that's the one I'm going to talk about. But that is interfering. That's now given their returning officer the power to say: "No, I won't accept your application to be a candidate because the provincial bylaw says" – God, I've got too many books open here – "that you have to meet this criteria, or I'll decline it." They shall not accept it for filing, which wasn't a power that they had before, so I'm wondering why you gave them that power, that they must decline it. That's the way it's written. I'll let you explain that.

Ms Blakeman: You'll answer it. Excellent. Okay. I'll finish asking you the questions.

We have 107, which again makes the registrar decision-maker when I think they should be neutral and follow the rules of the municipality, and 108, which gives the power to decline. In 110 I mentioned the very close quarters. I mentioned a number of cases where the self-contributor up to that $10,000 mark is exempt from every disclosure requirement.

Why has the province made the municipality the banker? When told by the Lieutenant Governor in Council what the interest is that's to be paid, the municipality now has to pay it. It strikes me that that's an additional administrative burden that the municipalities didn't have before that they have now. That may not be a big deal in the bigger cities; it might be a huge deal in the smaller places. And my understanding, but you could clarify for me, is that the municipality is required to hold that money from election to election.

Finally, you can tell I'm going back and forth between the main act, the amending act, and the government amendments to try and put this all together, so I might have missed something, but it does appear as though the disclosure rules required of candidates are actually less than they were before, or the ability of a municipality to put a higher test has disappeared. I'm wondering if the minister could comment on that.

Those, I think, are the issues that I have to raise on the local authorities section. You know what? There were a couple more, but I've got sticky notes, and they've disappeared. They're just too far in. So let me get the minister to answer those ones.

I do thank the minister for recognizing the issue of the voter ID and the printing of the special ballots, which was a real issue. I look forward to hearing from the minister.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm glad to rise and speak to the Election Accountability Amendment Act, Bill 7. You know, when this first became public earlier this year when we were first elected, we were calling for very serious changes to the election finances act. That's the background to why, I think, this act came forward.

In a modern democracy when someone has actually been found guilty of illegally soliciting and accepting political donations, not an allegation, when the Chief Electoral Officer has actually made a finding of guilt, has publicly come out and said that he's found, I believe, 38 cases of illegal donations, we found it exceptionally odd that under the current act there was interpretation that that could not be made public. The reason we found that odd is that in no other western democracy would there ever be a case where illegal donations, the finding of that, would not be made public to all Albertans. So that was an obvious loophole that we wanted to see changed.

What we saw in this legislation is that there is a permissive ability for the Chief Electoral Officer.

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but under Standing Order 4(3) the committee shall now rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: I recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 7.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Does the House concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? That's carried.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seeing that it's almost 4:30, I move that we adjourn the House until 1:30 p.m. on December 3, 2012.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:25 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, December 3, 2012

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. Dear Lord, may we as elected members always do the right thing for and unto others for we are but servants chosen by others to bear the burdens, the challenges, and the duties of public life as entrusted to us. Amen.

Hon. members, please remain standing now as we begin this week with the wonderful singing of our national anthem led by Mr. Paul Lorieau. I invite you to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly today a group of 51 very bright students from Griffiths-Scott middle school in Millet. That's in my constituency of Wetaskiwin-Camrose. They're here to have a look at the building and hear about the history of the place and also witness the legislative process. I had a chance to chat briefly with them just before question period, and they indicated that they're all very much enjoying the experience. I'm going to have a chance to engage with them again soon because Griffiths-Scott middle school is having a grand opening of their new school next week on December 13. I know they're all very excited about their new school. With them are teachers and leaders Glen Donlevy, Hayley Snowden, Gary Hill, and Susan Schmidt. I'd ask them to all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you a grade 6 class, a German bilingual program from Forest Heights elementary school in Gold Bar, who are here with their teacher – I'm going to make sure I get this right – Frau Marion Fritz and a parent, Mrs. Kathy Colwell. These bright minds have been here all week. They're in the School at the Legislature program. I just visited with them. It's my hope that these students will take an avid interest in government during their time here and – who knows? – maybe replace me in this seat someday. I would now ask that they rise and please receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pride and all the love in my heart that I introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly the greatest gifts that a man can get from God, and that's my wife, Mishelle, and my two sons, Carson and Thaine. I have to tell you that anything good that I've ever done in my life is because of the good woman who stands behind me, and everything good that I'll do is for those two kids up there. I honour them, and I'll work hard for them and for the rest of Albertans. My kids want to send a message to the Premier, and that is: we stand with you, and we certainly stand behind you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly two young ladies who are currently working in the Department of Human Services. Nicole Nunes is completing her practicum for a master's in social work with the Ministry of Human Services. She's been with the ministry since May of this year and is currently working with the social policy framework team to analyze the feedback gathered during our public engagement process. She spent seven years working in direct service delivery with the social services field, mainly in the not-for-profit sector, including work with the offender, immigrant, and refugee populations and also with the housing first initiative. Nicole has an interest in policy development, particularly in how policy and front-line delivery connect. She's come to the right place.

Stefanie Rosskopf is a policy intern currently in her first eight-month placement with the Ministry of Human Services. She has been assisting in the creating of communication tools for the literacy and essential skills program offered by the ministry. After Christmas Stefanie will be moving on to her second eight-month placement, with Municipal Affairs. Stefanie is interested in working in International and Intergovernmental Relations upon completion of her internship in August of 2013. Stefanie is a graduate of the University of Alberta and currently resides in Edmonton.

Nicole, to my good fortune, is not only working for me, but she's also my boss. She's a constituent in Edmonton-Whitemud.

I'd ask Stefanie and Nicole to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the Minister of Culture.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a group of guests who are members of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. These workers are from Monterey Place assisted living and represent nearly 90 staff members that continue to be locked out by their employer, Triple A Living. We're now well over the five-month mark. Once again they're here to remind this PC government that private operators like Triple A Living are receiving government subsidies yet paying salaries up to 27 per cent lower than industry standard. I'd now like my guests to rise as I call their names and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly: Ester Castillo, Sharifa Mohamed, Nicole Stromquist, and Maricel Tabile.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you Mr. Brendan Newman. Brendan is a policy analyst for the Department of Energy and a recent graduate of the University of Alberta with a degree in classics and history. My deputy, Barry Day, and I had the honour of hosting Brendan on a tour of the Provincial Archives this morning. The tour and lunch was an auction item that Brendan bid on, raising $170 for the United Way. I'd like to ask Brendan to stand now and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a constituent of mine, Melissa Barr. I had the pleasure of meeting Melissa two years ago, when she first got her job as a reporter for the Bonnyville Nouvelle, our weekly area newspaper. She stood out right away, right from day one, and was noted for her professionalism, honesty, and integrity when reporting both sides of any story. I am happy that she's joining us here at the Legislature and wish her all the best in her new career. I would now ask Melissa to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. Welcome, Melissa.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie after Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. John Mandlis. John is a hard-working Albertan and a concerned citizen. He's been watching question period this session and is quite concerned about what he sees and hears. Most troubling, he tells me, are the Tobaccogate allegations that bring into question the integrity of the office of the Premier. He encourages all Albertans . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, you probably know that it's inappropriate to raise or refer to a matter that the Speaker has not yet ruled on when it comes to a question of privilege. So I'll ask you to redo your introduction if you would, please.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. He encourages all Albertans to make their voice heard and to sign the petition to ask the Premier to order an independent investigation into the matter and step aside until it's complete. I'll ask John to rise and . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, let's just ask your guest to rise and receive the applause.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the Minister of Health.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the whole Assembly Darlene Lennie and Sheena Phillips of the Métis Urban Housing Corporation. The Métis Urban Housing Corporation does an excellent job of providing affordable rental housing for aboriginal families, working with the president of the Métis Nation of Alberta, Audrey Poiras, and the president of Métis Capital Housing, Wendy Goulet. They are working very, very hard to ensure that the corporation will be able to continue functioning at the highest level of efficiency. I'd ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health, followed by the Minister of Justice and the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members Dr. Shyamala Nagendran and her husband, Mr. Jay Nagendran, who are Edmonton-Rutherford constituents. Accompanying Dr. Nagendran are her parents, Mr. Ratna Ratnasingham and Mrs. Gowri Ratnasingham. Dr. Nagendran, as you may know, was nominated for a minister's seniors' service award for her volunteer efforts, which included starting a fitness and wellness club where seniors can exercise and learn about health and wellness as well as socialize. Dr. Nagendran recognized a need to improve the quality of life for seniors 10 years ago and sought very valiantly to address this need. She has also organized weekend workshops focusing on seniors' health, including information sessions given by health professionals. Her work is very inspiring. I'm honoured to introduce her to the members of the House, and I'd ask my guests to rise and receive our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two individuals from picturesque Calgary-Acadia. They are Glynn Hendry and Karin Finley, both of whom work with Qualico Developments in Calgary. Qualico, of course, is one of the largest fully integrated, privately owned real estate companies in western Canada. I welcome them to the Assembly and ask that all members please give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First, it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two outstanding Albertans from my constituency, the mayor of the village of Myrnam, Ed Sosnowski, and his CEO, Gary Dupuis. Both are outstanding municipal leaders and community members. I'd ask both to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Your second introduction, please.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Cathy Gladwin. Cathy is a representative of Indoor Tanning Is Out, an organization dedicated to promoting and educating Alberta's youth about the dangers of tanning beds. Cathy is a member of the board of the Alberta Public Health Association. I would ask Cathy to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Jeneroux: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two wonderful ladies who have quickly become friends to me during the long consultation I've undertaken while working through the development of my private member's bill: Miss Angeline Webb, a senior public policy adviser with the Canadian Cancer Society, Alberta/NWT division, and Miss Anna Mann, an executive director with the Alberta Caregivers Association. I look forward to continuing our friendship during and after our work together on my compassionate care leave legislation. I ask that my two guests seated in the public gallery please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two quick introductions today. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 24 visitors, incredibly bright young students from the Ponoka composite high school, and their teachers Mrs. Maryann LaFrance and Mr. Brady Teeling. Please give them the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier, followed by Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you a very special individual, a young individual, David Roezinger. Some of you may have seen him in the hallways of the Legislature over the summer as he served as the ministerial intern. What makes him very interesting in addition to that is that he just completed three months of volunteering in Peru, where he was engaging in humanitarian projects such as reforestation in Peru, and in doing so, he overcame a morbid fear of spiders, I understand. I would ask him to rise and receive our welcome.

The Speaker: Lacombe-Ponoka, you had a second introduction? Please proceed.

Mr. Fox: Yes, I did. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second introduction is a very special young lady from the Ponoka composite high school. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Miss Lisa van der Westhuizen. Please join me in wishing her a very happy birthday today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly our caucus team at the Legislature. These assistants are seated in the members' gallery. These hard-working, responsible, and dynamic individuals deserve recognition for all the work they do for their members. I'll ask them to stand as I mention their names: Emly Anderson, Caroline Breakey, Rhonda Checknita, Lindsay Cooke, Tanja Crnogorac, Lisa-Marie Gaucher, Ashley Geis, Shannon Hamelin, Jennifer Kirkelund, Ryan Loney, Benjamyn McKay, Candyce Neill, Marilyn Nixon, Ryan Osterberg, Carlie Pochynok, Robert Stephenson, Marshall Thiessen, Bryan Tower, Zack Ziolkowski, and in my own office, Darcy Diachinsky. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Statement by the Speaker

Oral Question Period Rules

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed with the next couple of phases of our Routine today, a brief reminder. First of all, no preambles again today, please. Let's get the maximum number of people up that we can. That worked well on Thursday. Secondly, no personal attacks. Those are two very critical rules that we must abide by. Thirdly, let me bring to your attention pages 502 and 503 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, wherein it states that "a question should not... deal with the subject matter of a question of privilege previously raised, on which the Speaker reserved his decision." As you know, we have that exact case before us right now. So that clarifies that, and with that note we will proceed to the next stage of Routine.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, a point of clarification under Standing Order 13 with regard to that last finding. Just a question of clarification.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I've just given the clarification.

Mr. Anderson: I just want to know: is it regarding – obviously, we cannot speak regarding the assertion that the Premier has intentionally misled the House, but can we talk about Tobaccogate, the conflict of interest?

The Speaker: Hon. member, thank you for your question. I've just clarified what is and what is not within the rules, and I just asked you to abide by it. We'll judge you accordingly as things proceed.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Tobacco Recovery Lawsuit

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government deserves a prize for fiction. Their stories on issue after issue read more like fairy tales than fact. On the budget they insist more borrowing and more debt is actually a balanced budget. On the issue of MLA pay they tried to convince us that the new pay of $156,000 is less than the old pay of $145,000. Now on the tobacco lawsuit the fantasy is just as absurd, with the Premier insisting a decision isn't a decision. Does the Premier still insist her decision selecting...

Speaker's Ruling

Questions about the Subject of a Privilege Motion

The Speaker: Hon. member, this issue is just exactly what I referred to. If you wish to rephrase your question, I'll allow you this one opportunity to do so. It is against the rules to raise issues about a question of privilege which is before the Speaker for consideration and he has not yet ruled on. That was part of why I just stood up to say what I just said. Recast your question. It'll be allowed.

Tobacco Recovery Lawsuit

Ms Smith: I'm seeking clarification on whether the Premier still insists her decision in regard to the International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers is not a decision.

Speaker's Ruling

Questions about the Subject of a Privilege Motion

The Speaker: Hon. member, let me just read this again in case some people missed it for whatever reason. On page 502 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice it states very clearly, "Furthermore, a question should not... deal with the subject matter of a question of privilege previously raised, on which the Speaker reserved his decision." Now, those are the rules, and that is quoted verbatim from the text that I cited. This particular point of privilege was raised by one of your own members, hon. leader. Let us proceed with your question rephrased if you would, please. Thank you.

We have a point of order noted. The leader of the New Democratic opposition.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 13(2), which says, "The Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision on the request of a Member," my question is this: given that the point of privilege is exactly on the point of misleading the House and nothing else . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, please have a seat. I've just explained this twice now. I'm not going to explain it a third time. The rationale is in the ruling that's in the House of Commons, and I've just enunciated it and read it out twice.

Let's please abide by the rules as they exist. We're not here to invent them or remake them at this stage. If the House leaders wish to do that and apply a local rule here, then I invite them to get together and have that discussion. In the meantime let us proceed with the balance of the question from the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll move on to my first supplemental. Given that the Premier still insists she played no role in choosing the firm and instead points to her successor in Justice as the one who made the decision, then why is it that in the nearly 100 pages of documents received on this matter, the name of . . .

Speaker's Ruling Questions about the Subject of a Privilege Motion

The Speaker: Hon. member, please have a seat. Shall I read this a third time, then? Let's not get down to that level, please. You're all somewhat experienced now in parliamentary practice and procedures. I've allowed a lot of leeway, particularly for new members, including you, Leader of the Official Opposition. I've allowed a lot of leeway for first-time members from the government side, from all the other parties.

When a law exists, it exists for a reason. Let us contemplate for just a moment what society would be like without any laws at all or if people chose to break them even after they have been admonished, reminded, perhaps chastised once, twice, three times. What kind of a society would we have? What kind of Assembly would we have? I ask you to ponder those questions.

I'm not up here to hear myself speak. I'm up here to help you understand your roles if that's the case and to enforce the laws as they exist. These are not my personal laws. These are not your personal laws. These are the laws that you agreed to abide by when you took your oath. I would remind you to please start sticking to them more fervently, or I'll have to remind you again to do so.

Let's move on with your second main set of questions and see how they go.

Ms Smith: Given that the Justice department wrote an e-mail to CBC on July 5 stating that on December 14, 2010, the then Justice minister determined that TRL consortium provided the best made-in-Alberta litigation – the decision was communicated to the consortiums and law firms shortly after – would the Premier still insist that this was her successor's decision?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I do not understand why you continue to go against the law which I've cited three or four times now. Please, if you're not prepared to rephrase, I'll just move to the next person on the list. You have one last shot.

Oil Price Forecasting

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, there's a new report out that casts even more doubt on this government's projections for energy revenues. They've used $108 a barrel to calculate the next couple of fiscal years, but now Bank of America Merrill Lynch in their 2013 energy outlook raises the alarm about the potential impact that shale oil production may have on benchmark oil prices. They see a possibility of $50 west Texas intermediate over the next 24 months. What is the Finance minister's plan to adjust should this become the new reality?

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate the hon. member's question. It's a good question because we have had one financial estimator come up with a fairly low outlook. We are monitoring, as I'm sure the federal government is, as I'm sure all governments across Canada are, all of the private and public forecasters. There's a lot of variance out there right now in terms of those forecasts. In fact, at our second quarter we adjusted downward our forecast for the rest of the year to $92 and change. That puts us at the low end of all of the other provinces and the federal government.

Ms Smith: Given that the Wildrose caucus pointed out over a year ago that the shortage of pipelines was costing the Alberta treasury $2 billion in additional royalty revenue, how is it that the Finance minister missed factoring that into his most recent projection?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, it's curious, Mr. Speaker, because if I missed it, then the federal government missed it, then the Saskatchewan government missed it, and I guess the Official Opposition missed it, too, because they accepted and endorsed this year's revenue projections that the Wildrose pledged. The party counted on a 30 per cent revenue increase by 2016 to pay for the Dani dollars that were supposed to be out there.

Ms Smith: We actually made an adjustment on the Finance minister's rosy projection, so that's not quite true.

Mr. Speaker, given that the $108 is yet another piece of government fiction, the projections that they have for the next couple of years, and that in-year savings don't even begin to address the $3 billion plus deficit, where is the Finance minister's real plan to address the current and future drop in current revenue?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting when you look at the Wildrose budget program that they put out. To get their $18 billion surplus now, they'd need to see $223 per barrel as their price for oil, a little optimistic on their end. The budget coming forward will have an operating plan, a savings plan, and a capital plan, and it will be balanced. Is it going to be an easy budget? Absolutely not. There is no new money in next year's budget. I've said that a number of times. We'll be prudent and responsible with Albertans' finances.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, did you not ask a main and two supplementals already? I believe I have you completed for now.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by the leader of the Liberal opposition.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are billions of dollars up for grabs in the largest litigation case in Alberta's history, yet this Premier can't tell Albertans how much they are on the hook to pay for this government's latest scandal. We know the government in Newfoundland disclosed . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'll just let you rephrase, okay? This is your first warning. I've already given others. This is yours. You must not refer to an issue that is here as a question of privilege, so I'll allow you to rephrase.

Mr. Saskiw: This is about the contingency agreement, Mr. Speaker. We know the government in Newfoundland disclosed the key terms of their agreement, in that case a 30 per cent contingency. At that rate there are $3 billion of potential legal fees at stake. If the Premier has nothing to hide, can she simply show us the terms of this agreement and the other proposals laid out by the competing firms?

The Speaker: Hon. member, you rephrased the question and didn't refer to anything specific in it, so I'll allow the answer.

The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, thank you for recognizing me. I'm referring directly just to the contingency-fee agreement here pursuant to your ruling. I have spoken to Alberta's counsel, and it's important to note that the plaintiffs here are everyday Albertans. The defendant is big tobacco. Our counsel has advised that making the contract public . . .

The Speaker: Thank you. You've touched on the tobacco issue, which is the subject before the Speaker right now for a ruling.

Let's move on with your next supplemental, please. No preamble.

Mr. Saskiw: Given that the managing partner of the firm that was awarded the contract publicly stated today that he has no objections to the terms of the agreement being released, how can this Premier expect Albertans to ever trust another word she says until she comes clean with the facts and shows us the contract?

The Speaker: Hon. member, let's try your final supplemental, please, and see if it's within the rules.

Mr. Saskiw: Mr. Speaker, this has nothing to do with the point of privilege.

Given that the government's own department states that the review committee considered all three firms to be capable of conducting the litigation, will the Premier stop blowing smoke, do the right thing, and lay out the documents showing us the agreement as well as all the offers?

The Speaker: Hon. member, it's very difficult to tell exactly what is being referred to here the way the question is being phrased. However, I'd invite the hon. Minister of Justice to make a comment if he wishes.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much again for recognizing me. I will indicate that I went back to my constituency office on Friday, and on Friday I returned many people's calls.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Speaker's Ruling Questions about the Subject of a Privilege Motion

The Speaker: Let me remind you of the rules I just read once again. There is no choice but to follow the rules that guide this Assembly. If certain members wish to take umbrage with that, that is up to you and your House leaders to discuss and determine. In the meantime I have made it very clear what the reference is with respect to how question period is to be conducted.

I don't wish to remind either members of the opposition who are phrasing the questions or members of government who are attempting to answer the questions, but the minute you raise the issue in the context of the point of privilege that is before the Speaker, I am obliged to rise and remind you that that is outside the rules that govern question period. So that is how we shall proceed.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to 13(2) I know you have explained it, but I now really have a very genuine question.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I've already ruled on this matter.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, could I please ask for clarification?

The Speaker: I've already given you comment with respect to how the rule applies. Now, if you want to take a moment and find House of Commons Procedure and Practice, pages 502 and 503, I would invite you to do that. [interjection] I've already given clarification and justification, and that is the end of that.

Let's go on to the hon. member of the Liberal opposition. [interjection] You have the floor, hon. member of the Liberal opposition.

Ethics Commissioner Referral

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't want to talk about the Tobaccogate scandal, that has Albertans questioning the Premier's decision to award a lucrative tobacco contract to very close political allies although she claims to have nothing to do with it. That's not what I want to talk about today. What I want to talk about is that when similar allegations of abuse of office were raised against Alberta's envoy to Asia, the Premier forced him to step down pending an investigation. To the Premier: now that similar allegations are dogging you, why the double standard?

The Speaker: I didn't hear what your preamble's first few words were, but I'm going to allow the answer if someone on the government side wishes to answer.

All right. Hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, with your next supplemental.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the double standard is that this same Premier ordered Alberta's envoy to Asia to step aside and stay home.

The Speaker: Hon. leader, you know there are no preambles. I've just indicated that, so please recast your question without preamble and proceed.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, given that the double standard is that this same Premier ordered Alberta's envoy to Asia to step aside and stay home until she could have the matter investigated, this should be easy for the Premier. Madam Premier, will you order an independent investigation and step aside?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's very important that we ask these questions, and I appreciate the hon. member's question. The reason is that I believe that it's important, when these issues come up, for the appropriate people to make determinations independently. I understand that this matter has been referred to the Ethics Commissioner. I welcome that. I've said that for all of last week, and I stand by my comments with respect to this and look forward to the outcome of that and will certainly abide by any decisions of this House or the Ethics Commissioner.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, without preamble.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier insists that she did nothing wrong, that she didn't make the decision, that she allegedly has nothing to hide but given the growing piles of documents to the contrary, the integrity of the Premier's office has been brought into question. To the Premier: will you order an independent investigation . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, let us move along here.

We're going to the hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When Gary Mar faced allegations of misusing his position for inappropriate purposes, the Premier forced him to step aside until her investigation was complete. Now that the Premier is facing allegations of possible conflict of interest and bias, it's a different story. To the Premier: why won't she follow her own direction to Mr. Mar and step aside until these serious allegations are thoroughly investigated?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, what happened in that circumstance, as I understand it – and it wasn't something that I was involved in; it was our clerk of the Executive Council because Mr. Mar is a public servant – was that the matter was investigated by the Ethics Commissioner. As I understand it, Mr. Mar continued to be a public servant during that process. I have no more detail than that with respect to that, but what I will say is what I've said before. I understand that there are people who are asking these questions. I certainly appreciate that they're asking those questions. It doesn't change the fact that I stand by my comments, and I welcome the investigation.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier just told the Assembly that she wasn't involved in that and given that there were a number of public statements that she made at the time, including "We've asked the Ethics Commissioner to [take a] look at this," if there's a breach, then there have to be some consequences as a result of that. Her officials said that Mr. Mar would be on leave without pay during the investigation only with the Premier's permission. Why did she just tell the House she wasn't involved in that?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this was clearly a matter that the clerk of Executive Council dealt with with respect to a public servant. That's the end of the matter.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, what's sauce for goose is sauce for the gander.

Given that Albertans need to have confidence that their Premier knows how to avoid situations that might create a conflict of interest or the appearance of bias and given that they have a right to demand complete honesty as well, why won't the Premier do the right thing and step aside until this matter is fully investigated?

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm not sure what the hon. member was referring to. He didn't seem to mention any case in particular if someone from the government side wishes to answer.

The hon. Minister of Justice to provide something briefly.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When I went home to my constituency office on Friday, there were a lot of matters discussed, but, you know, the biggest thing I keep hearing from our constituents: they'd rather talk about schools, hospitals, roads, police, things that we can do to improve their lives.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Let us move on to Calgary-Fish Creek.

Family Care Clinics

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the health inquiry under way and a long list of evidence of our doctors being bullied and intimidated, it's clear that this government continues to mismanage our health care system. What better example today than this government's plan to build 140 of these family care clinics with no idea how much they'll cost or how we'll pay for them, and as is typical with this government, it's become more apparent that they have no idea how to staff these clinics. My question is simple. How does the Health minister plan to staff family care clinics without pulling nurses and front-line staff away from hospitals and primary care networks?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government is doing a lot of things in health care. What we did this morning was that with the assistance of the hon. Premier we opened the Kaye Edmonton Clinic, a $484 million dollar facility that will provide a variety of front-line services to Albertans, including consultations with specialists, including access to diagnostic imaging under one roof. This facility and the operations that go on within it will work very closely with both primary care networks and family care clinics that are serving the capital region, staffed by competent, enthusiastic health professionals who believe in the benefits of primary care for the communities they serve.

The Speaker: Hon. member, your supplemental with no preamble.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you. Given that this minister has repeatedly in this House refused to tell Albertans the cost of family care clinics per patient and given that the number we have documented is $300 per patient for family care clinics versus $62 per patient for primary care networks, will he finally tell Albertans how much these clinics will cost?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know what kind of health care policy the Official Opposition is developing. The work that this government is engaged in is improving all aspects of primary health care across the province. If the hon. member wants to focus on the merits of one particular model over another, that's certainly up to her to do. We're interested in providing better access to family physicians, nurse practitioners, dietitians, and other professionals, supported by a common set of standards and tools that truly equip them to do the job.

Mrs. Forsyth: Given that this government is facing a deficit and given that this minister can't tell us the cost of family care clinics versus primary care clinics, I'd like to ask him one more time. What is the cost per patient for family care clinics versus primary care clinics?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants to play with the dynamics of health economics, I leave that up to her. What we're interested in is building and improving upon the work of primary care networks – there are 40 of them – serving Alberta. We are looking at similar opportunities with family care clinics. As the hon. member knows, we're spending over $181 million in support for PCNs today. We've allocated a further $75 million in this budget and for the budget for the next two years to support family care clinics and other primary health care initiatives. That adds up for us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Physician Supply

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's really concerning and discouraging to my constituents when they can't find a family doctor, yet we hear that we don't have a shortage of doctors in the province but do not have doctors in the right places. My question is to the hon. Minister of Health. What can be done to make sure that we have doctors in the right places and that we can find a doctor when we really need one?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the hon. member's question. Currently there are approximately 80 per cent of Albertans reporting that they have access to a family physician, but as the hon. member notes, many Albertans report that they don't have that access. There are a number of things that we're doing. We are currently hosting 330 places in our medical schools in Alberta. That compares to Ontario at about 500 spots. We have some very specific programs that support family physicians, particularly in rural areas, and provide incentives for them to come and practise in specific communities. Also, local communities play a very important role in designing and implementing programs to attract physicians.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a large proportion of the population of east Calgary does not have a family doctor, what can be done to increase access to quality and consistent health care?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, one thing that we have done is that we have opened a family care pilot project in the hon. member's area, in east Calgary. We are working to support doctors by providing them with access to other health professionals, other equipment in order to enable physicians to spend the majority of their time on patients with the most complex needs. This allows, of course, other professionals to supplement that work by addressing the more everyday needs through the resources provided by other professionals. This teamwork is working for Albertans.

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, since we do have a shortage in the province of doctors in the proper locations, what is being done to expedite the accreditation of foreign-trained medical professionals and their entrance into the health care system to alleviate this burden?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you to the member for asking because this is a question that many of us as MLAs face from constituents. We're working very closely with the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta, and as the hon. member knows, licensure of physicians is done provincially across the country. I personally talked about this issue with other ministers of health across the country. I don't think there's an easy answer because every province has a different approach to licensing, but I can tell you that here in Alberta we have provided other opportunities for physicians awaiting their licensure through the clinical and surgical assistance program and other initiatives.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Now the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Edmonton-Manning.

Personal Care Standards in Seniors' Facilities

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Associate Minister of Seniors made outrageous claims about our most vulnerable seniors in care, and I quote from Hansard: "The number of showers, the amount of bathing, the amount of safety provided in our seniors' facilities is what's appropriate and what's needed." However, caregivers are saying emphatically that they're not being consulted and would not agree with only one shower per week. Additionally, health care professionals are indicating that they are not able to provide more than one shower per week, not because of the care plan but because of the lack of priority from this government. To the Associate Minister of Seniors: will you now finally admit that one shower a week for seniors in care is not appropriate, as you said last week, but rather it's completely unacceptable, disrespectful . . .

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, I think that one thing for sure is that between the families and the residents the family care plan and the care plan that's developed within the facilities is a plan that meets the personal hygiene needs, meets the safety needs, and makes sure that the wellness of that resident is there. Because of the questions last week I said that I would have a further look at this just to ensure that things are being done properly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, your first supplemental without preamble.

Mrs. Towle: Given that a number of seniors in long-term-care nursing beds and continuing care facilities may be incontinent, in diapers, and unable to wash themselves, how many showers per week does the Associate Minister of Seniors believe that those seniors deserve?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, all seniors deserve the appropriate level of care, not just what's laid out in their plan but what's appropriate. In some cases it may be a shower, in some cases it may be a bath, and in some cases it may be a sponge bath. That's not for politicians to decide. That's for caregivers to decide. And I'll stand by that.

The Speaker: Hon. member, your final supplemental.

Mrs. Towle: The direction comes from you. Take responsibility.

Mr. Speaker, how long do seniors in our province have to suffer before this minister takes action and issues a directive to all licensed care facilities in this province that guarantees all Albertans in care access to the basic necessity of a shower or bath more than once a week? A simple directive.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, I stand by my word last week when I said that I would have a further look into this to clarify any misconceptions that may be out there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Regulation of Tradespeople

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I commend the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs for his work on Bill 5, passed last week in this Assembly. This was a great first step, but there is much more work to be done. My question to the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education: what's being done to regulate home builders as well as roofers, exterior finishers, and framers?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to answer this question on behalf of the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education. I spoke with him early last week about this issue. The government works closely with Alberta Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board to ensure the appropriate training standards for all trades, including those related to home building, including carpenters and roofers. Any person learning a trade is required to participate in an apprenticeship program that includes both on-the-job and technical training that can last up to four years. That includes optional certification trades.

The Speaker: Hon. members, let's keep the noise down to a bare, bare minimum if we could, please. It's very difficult for the chair to hear some of the questions and answers, and I'm sure it's difficult for members in the galleries to hear as well.

Hon. member, your first supplemental without preamble.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education: are there any regulations to protect home builders from below standard work done by nonticketed people working in the trades?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education encourages homeowners and other consumers who are considering hiring such an individual to check whether they are registered as an apprentice or certified as a journeyperson before committing to work. Staff from the minister's department regularly visit employers to inform them about the benefits of training and trade certification.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the same minister: does your ministry see any value in regulating optional certification trades when it comes to home building and structural integrity?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can also advise this House that all trades in Alberta are reviewed on a regular and continual basis both by industry and by government. Residential site managers continue to co-ordinate the work of many skilled tradespeople and suppliers. In addition, Alberta was the first jurisdiction in Canada to designate residential construction site manager as a designated occupation.

Thank you.

2:20 Personal Care Standards in Seniors' Facilities (continued)

Mr. Hehr: Since bringing it to this Legislature's attention that seniors and people with disabilities living in the Dr. Vernon Fanning centre were only receiving one bath a week, my office has been inundated with phone calls and e-mails that lead me to the conclusion that this is not an isolated occurrence. In fact, many of our seniors in long-term care are only receiving one shower a week. For example, former Judge Tom McMeekin, a senior with multiple sclerosis living in the Colonel Belcher care facility, last week stated on CBC unequivocally that he only received one shower a week; otherwise, he had to pay for it. To the Associate Minister of Seniors: are you now willing to admit that this is a widespread problem throughout our long-term care centres in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said previously, I understand the issue for the families and the residents and the caregivers. I understand that there's a care plan given for each and every member. But I do commit to this member that I will have a further look into this matter.

Mr. Hehr: Well, he shouldn't need to look at it any further given that in 2011 the Alberta Disabilities Forum report identified that one bath a week is a serious problem and recommended at least two baths a week. Will this minister tell the House when this policy will be changed at our long-term care centres?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, the one issue that I remain firm on is that the safety, the well-being, and the personal hygiene needs are met in the care plan. I want to ensure that the residents and their families are assured that the proper care is given to their loved ones. I will ensure it, and I will promise to this member that I will have a further look into it. I'll go and visit this centre as soon as I can as well.

Mr. Hehr: Well, given that the policy in long-term care centres like the 10 operated by Carewest and others is that seniors will receive, and I quote, at least one shower a week, when will this government adequately support long-term care centres so they can change this policy to at least two showers a week?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, I want to make sure that the policy is what the senior or the resident of the facility needs. Not one bath, not two baths, not three baths, but what's appropriate and what their personal hygiene needs are. I can assure you that the caregivers in these facilities with their families are the ones that are best to determine what those appropriate levels are.

Ms Notley: There aren't enough of them to do that.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, we know this is a serious issue, but it doesn't require any interjections, so please let's refrain from them.

Edmonton-Calder, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Collective Bargaining with Teachers

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In her leadership campaign the Premier promised to restart discussions with the ATA to reach an agreement that would include more prep time for teachers and a review of class sizes. The ATA took her at her word, crafting a framework agreement that focuses on the quality use of time and effort in the classroom. To the Education minister, who has just rejected this more than reasonable proposal from the ATA: have you ignored the will of the Premier, or was the Premier just saying anything to get elected at the expense of both students and teachers?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the way he ended that question – you know, this is about the students. That's who it needs to be about. The last proposal was one of many that have come back and forth over the last six months. I can tell you that we have been working very hard to try and get to a deal, which is never an easy thing to deliver when you're talking about potentially around 35,000 different employees right across the province working in a number of different schools and communities. There are a couple of sticking points, but we have invited the ATA back to the table and were surprised when they pushed back from the table on Friday, which was unfortunate. But I hope they'll be back this week, and we can continue working on this.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that teachers face significant workloads as they deal with everything from the inclusion of high-needs students to the unique demands of rural schools and given that the minister has broken the Premier's own promise by dismissing a reasonable proposal that respects the government's fiscal constraints while still addressing teachers' concerns, can the minister please explain why he is rejecting the teachers' appeal for quality classroom time and reasonable time?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, 30 seconds is hardly enough time to get into it. The member mentions the unique demands of rural schools. That's exactly one of the reasons we can't accept the most recent proposal because, in my mind, it would put small rural schools in jeopardy and the ability for those schools to be flexible in their planning. We're not going to do that because we want to put the students first.

The other piece of the agreement we just couldn't agree with was essentially giving the ATA veto power over any policy, regulations, or legislation we want to bring forward that has anything to do with the profession. Mr. Speaker, right now we're looking at the teaching quality standard, we're going out to do a regulatory review on the Education Act, and we wouldn't be able to do those things.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that teachers said explicitly that they want progress, not hard caps in view of rural areas and so forth – and they did tell you that, Mr. Minister – and given that the minister's comments have confused the matter and misrepresented the teachers' framework agreement, when will the minister hit the books, learn how to negotiate properly, and stop dealing out broken promises by actually building an agreement that's best for everyone in this province?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we're all working hard to try to do exactly that. What we're trying to do is put the students first. With respect to hard caps, soft caps: you can couch it any way want, but if you want to tie time to the amount of minutes or the amount of hours in a week that a teacher can work, whether it's 31 hours or whether it's 907 hours of instruction during the year, you're going to limit the flexibility of small rural schools; you're going to put them in jeopardy. Again, the second piece is that we're not prepared to give a veto to the ATA with respect to anything that might happen policywise or regulationwise to do with the profession.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Pipeline Network Review

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Northern Gateway pipeline, the Keystone pipeline, and the possible pipelines to eastern Canada are essential to the prosperity of Alberta. We have seen opposition to these projects based on concerns of pipeline integrity. Unlike the Premier's national energy plan, the Alberta pipeline review has the potential to alleviate many of these concerns. It's expected that Group 10 Engineering will be done its final report and submit it at the end of this year. Will the Minister of Energy release these preliminary findings from Group 10 Engineering to the members of this Legislature before they are altered by the ERCB or the ministry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for the opportunity to speak on this important matter. I appreciate the question, a thoughtful question from the hon. member opposite. The pipeline inquiry that I commissioned earlier in the year will address three important aspects: operations, water, and response capability. We expect to see that report from the independent third-party group that's working with the ERCB. I commit to this hon. member that I will provide that report, have it released publicly without anybody else doing anything to it, and it'll be available as part of the discourse and the review that we're doing of pipelines in this province. We want the highest quality performance.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that that's the answer I was expecting and the importance of this review and given that the retail market review is still sitting on the Energy minister's desk and the provincial flood-mitigation report stayed behind closed doors for almost six years, will the minister commit to releasing the findings of the Alberta pipeline review as soon as he gets it to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, that's what I indicated earlier in the year when I commissioned and asked the ERCB to do this work. Obviously, there will be other folks who will be looking at this as well. I'll release it to the entire world – not just the committee, the entire world – to take a good look at this when it becomes available.
Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the ramming through of the ill-fated Bill 2 without any substantial amendments and the difficult task that the ERCB now has in becoming part of the new energy regulator, will the minister admit that the ERCB will not be able to adequately complete its recommendations by the March 31 deadline?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think what we want here is the right answer, not always the quick answer, so what we will be doing is ensuring that there is a thorough review by the ERCB. Even though it is in a time of transition, it's perfectly capable of doing the work that it's been assigned to do. It goes through tens of thousands of applications every year in governing and regulating the energy industry today, and I expect that work to continue until we get the new Alberta energy regulator up and operating by June of next year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by Little Bow.

Highway 43

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's provincial highway 43 is one of the province's busiest highways. It connects northern and central Alberta and is the northernmost link of the Canada-Mexico corridor, which continues down all the way to Mexico. However, it also has the reputation of being one of Alberta's most dangerous highways. That is partly due to certain sections of the highway that have not yet been twinned. My question is to the Minister of Transportation. What is this government doing to help ensure the safety of the drivers on highway 43, and when will we see its completion as promised in 2007?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member should know that we have invested more than $370 million to support highway 43 projects since 1990, providing critical infrastructure for the region. Further to that, we've invested $26 million to twin the final stretch of highway 43 between Valleyview and Grande Prairie. Twinning preparation work through the Sturgeon Lake First Nation has started, with an expected twinning completion date of the fall of 2014. I say to the hon. member that our focus is on the safe and efficient movement of people and commodities through the region, and we'll continue to support those things.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McDonald: Thank you. Given that highway 43 is a high-traffic conduit for many of the Peace region's manufacturers, especially the stretch between Valleyview and Fox Creek, does the government have a plan to repair the heaves and ruts that plague this section of the highway?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, the engineering design for the road rehabilitation is currently under way. Once the design is done, we'll of course prioritize it against projects across the province, considering traffic volume, safety, infrastructure conditions, and the economic activity in the area when we create our public three-year construction plan. I understand why the hon. member is concerned. Roads break down at different rates. But I want to assure the hon. member that we take precautions. We evaluate it every spring and try to take action as appropriate.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we continue to see maintenance problems on these roads, and people's lives are at risk. When will the minister provide a maintenance schedule that is applicable to these conditions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is right in saying that rehabilitation projects are important. We do prioritize them on the strength and smoothness of the roads, input from our field personnel and stakeholders, and, yes, traffic volumes and safety concerns. Highway maintenance is conducted as needed, with frequency and response time based on our best judgment of the needs and available budget. I encourage the member to inform my office if there's a particular condition that is less than what Albertans should expect, and we will do our best to react accordingly.

Water Rights

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Speaker, in the Little Bow riding and other ridings in southern Alberta people raised the concern that the government has been unclear if it's going to protect the principle of first in time, first in right in the elimination of irrigation permits that cover the leftover water rights that become available through efficiencies through the efforts of irrigation districts. To the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development: will the minister state with certainty that she is not going to take away the traditional irrigation rights of Alberta's farmers in irrigation districts?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to take that question on behalf of the hon. minister, who is doing good work on behalf of Albertans at an international conference with respect to climate change, which would have been interesting had somebody else won the election. I would be pleased to take that question under advisement and ask the hon. minister to get back to the member.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just wait till 2016.

Does this government plan to rescind the prior appropriation of water rights for farmers by using the strong arm of the land-use framework?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, the land-use framework is a model designed to ensure that we have a thoughtful conversation before we do things in this province. It ensures that when our kids and our grandkids in 50 or 75 years look at the landscape that is Alberta at that time, it looks something like the landscape we have today, that it is appropriately developed and appropriately planned to respect the landscape that we're so proud of today.

I'll pass that question along to the hon. minister as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can you please assure me and my constituents that this government does not intend to override the water rights that Alberta farmers have been entitled to for 118 years?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, that is one of those questions that actually is easy to answer. Of course nobody is overriding water rights. We're addressing long-term planning issues in this province. We're ensuring that we're protecting property rights, that we're protecting water rights. We're ensuring that future Albertans have access to the resources they need to develop this province and to live a high quality of life here, the kind of life we experience today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

High Prairie Health Care Centre

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For 12 years, 12 long years, the people of High Prairie and region have been waiting for a hospital which will serve their needs. Well, we finally got one, and I want to thank the Minister of Health. However, from a recent public meeting our facility appears to be missing some areas of importance. My question is to the Minister of Health. Could you please tell my constituents why our new hospital does not include important areas like dialysis or a second operating room?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, must congratulate my colleague the hon. member for her advocacy on behalf of her constituents for the new hospital. We have allocated an additional $70 million over and above the original cost projection for this facility, in fact, to expand services. One of the services, as an example, that is included in the High Prairie hospital is a CT scanning unit, which will make it possible for residents to receive those consultation services at home in High Prairie. Additional services in the future will depend upon the growth of the community. Services like dialysis and chemotherapy are certainly possibilities in the future, but the population projections, in fact, do not support the need to integrate those services at this time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's very important information.

Should the community, however, be willing to partner with us, would you consider such partnerships to help with this need, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member's question. That would be a hypothetical question, however, and I wouldn't be prepared to give a detailed answer at this stage. What I can say is that we have designed this facility specifically so that it can be expanded in the future. Its physical characteristics are such that it can be expanded. It will leave room to consider the addition of other services, and we're, of course, always happy to work with the community in that regard.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you very much, Mr. Minister. I'm very thankful for the work that you have done.

My final question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. The proof is in the pudding. When can we see action begin on this site?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There'll be a lot of activity happening over the next couple of months that isn't visible in the community, but rest assured that a lot of work will be going on behind the scenes. By year's end we'll start a tendering process for project scoping and construction. By next spring major construction activity will begin with the installation of pilings, the foundation, and off-site work. These activities will continue throughout the summer. At the same time site development and construction of the superstructure, which is construction above the ground, will be taking place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Ownership of Resource Revenues

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, I wasn't quite prepared for this question. Nevertheless, it's an honour to ask a question to the Minister of Energy. It's regarding the fact that we have 14 national oil companies here who are all drilling oil, paying royalties, and sending large sums of money back to their home countries. I know at one time we had the Alberta Energy Company, which did some of this and had tremendous returns for the Alberta people. Why is it that we don't have an Alberta energy company today so that we can earn more profits from our oil?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will well recall that there once was the Alberta Energy Company, and it became an opportunity for all Albertans to participate in the wealth creation of the province. Albertans had those shares that became publicly available on the marketplace, and it served its purpose at that time in life. Today in Alberta we have a very robust – very robust – private sector that is fully capable of finding the capital and investing in energy assets in this province and developing them on behalf of the owners.

The Speaker: Hon. member, do you have a supplemental, or should I move on to Bonnyville-Cold Lake?

Mr. Hehr: I have a supplemental.

The Speaker: You do? Okay. Proceed.

Mr. Hehr: Given that these national oil companies are here and they're drilling oil and I assume they're doing pretty well, will the minister admit that there seems to be a lot of money to be made in this business and that maybe we should get into it? If they can make money at it, why the heck can't we?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, we actually are making money at it because we, being the people of Alberta, own the assets. We get royalties as a result of it. The province of Alberta secures taxation as a result, income tax, from the people who are working here. The government of Canada gets income taxes. There's tremendous wealth created for all Albertans in the current system we have today.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I understand, sir, that these national oil companies, who represent other countries, pay their royalties and still make a whack-load of money, that they send back home. Doesn't it seem odd that these national governments can make money in this business, yet we can't?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, we Albertans as the owners of the resource actually do very well out of this arrangement. Roughly 50 per cent of the development in this province and the production that's sold is actually controlled by Canadian-owned companies or Canadian-controlled companies. As a result, there's great wealth created in this province. The system works really well for Albertans. That's how we have hospitals, that's how we have roads, and that's how we have schools in this province. It's because of the success of the energy industry in this province.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now we will begin the first of six members' statements, starting with Red Deer-North.

Members' Statements

Inclusive Education

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, did you know that we have over 600,000 kids in our schools in Alberta? Some of these children struggle every day to overcome a learning disability or to learn English. Others need a little more work to keep them busy, and some just need some help to catch up on certain subjects. While some of these challenges would fall into what we have often called special needs, the truth is that all these kids are special, and their learning needs are important.

That is why we as a government have changed our approach from just funding specials needs to ensuring that all kids have the supports they need to learn. In the last provincial budget, Mr. Speaker, we provided school boards with an additional $68 million in funding, a 22 per cent increase. We asked them to develop programs and supports that will serve all kids no matter what their learning needs are, and the school boards are delivering.

For example, in my constituency Red Deer Catholic regional schools kicked off their school year with a full day of professional development completely focused on inclusive education. Topics included ways to create inclusive classrooms, ways to improve classroom support, and how to effectively support students socially, behaviourally, and academically. Red Deer public school also continues to do a lot of great work to support inclusive learning. In fact, they've made inclusion of all students one of their three main goals. I am proud that they recognize that all students are diverse learners and are implementing supports to make sure they all succeed, and all the while they are maintaining the significant supports they have always provided for our children that struggle with disabilities.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud of the efforts under way to support all our special kids, and I encourage all members to check out Alberta Education's website to learn more about inclusive education and to check their local school authority's website to see the great work happening on the ground.

The Speaker: I had the Member for Airdrie. Someone on behalf of?

Mr. Saskiw: Mr. Speaker, given your ruling that we cannot talk about the Premier's involvement in the tobacco scandal . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's move on, then, to Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Calgary-Fort.

International Day of Persons with Disabilities

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is International Day of Persons with Disabilities, a day that was proclaimed in 1992 by the United Nations to promote understanding of disability issues and the rights of persons with disabilities. Albertans with disabilities have a great deal to contribute to our communities, but sometimes they face barriers to inclusion. This could include physical barriers like lack of wheelchair access or social barriers like negative attitudes about employing people with disabilities.

Increasing the awareness of the challenges that persons with disabilities sometimes face as well as the contributions these individuals make to our province is an important step towards creating more inclusive communities. That's why we are celebrating the International Day of Persons with Disabilities across our province with special events and presentations of awards from the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities.

This year's award recipients are Mezaun Lakha-Evin of Calgary, winner of the Gary McPherson leadership award; Mark Iantkow, recipient of this year's newly created award, the Marlin Styner achievement award; Dory Rossiter of Lethbridge, winner of the award of excellence in public awareness; the Camrose Association for Community Living training mentorship program, winner of the award of excellence in employment; the Early Access to Supportive Education school, or EASE, in Red Deer, winner of the award of excellence in education; the city of Red Deer, winner of the award of excellence in community; and a personal favourite of mine, the Reducing the Social Isolation of Rural Deaf Albertans Project Team of Sherwood Park, winner of the award of excellence in community.

Mr. Speaker, as part of our efforts to promote this day, I invite all members of this Assembly to support initiatives to make their communities more inclusive.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Universal Declaration of Human Rights

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to recognize the anniversary of the universal declaration of human rights, which falls on December 10, this coming Monday. The declaration, adopted by the United Nations General Assembly in 1948, sets out a broad range of fundamental human rights and freedoms which all people from all nations are entitled to without distinction. This declaration seeks the rights of individuals over the rights of society.

Today in many parts of the world individuals are still living under oppression by their governing authorities. Their dictatorship governing bodies retain their power by perpetuating the myths that their action is in the name of the people or for the good of the community or society. We should always question and be wary when politicians use the pretext: in the name of the people.

As Canadians we live in a province and a country where our government respects human rights as its core value and with a justice system where an individual is not guilty until proven. We live in a land where individual rights to private property ownership are intrinsic and common sense, and our justice system allows individuals to protect their rights.

Mr. Speaker, while others may talk about violation of property rights in theoretical terms, I would like to tell the Assembly what violation of property rights really is. Not too long ago my family was persecuted by the Communist regime in the old country for property ownership. The land and property that our family owned for many generations was confiscated without any compensation, without any right or process to dispute. Here, with our existing good laws and our open justice system, this situation has never happened and will never happen in Alberta, in Canada.

I'm pleased to be part of a government that protects individual rights, freedoms, and private property ownership. Indeed, we are fortunate to be living in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Métis Urban Housing Corporation

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to recognize the Métis Urban Housing Corporation, owned by the Métis Nation of Alberta. The Métis Urban Housing Corporation was incorporated in 1982 to provide affordable, adequate, and appropriate rental housing for low- and middle-income Métis and other aboriginal families within Alberta's urban centres. At its heart is the goal of improving housing conditions for Métis and aboriginal communities by offering an alternative to mainstream housing. Such alternatives include the urban aboriginal housing program, which provides rent at 25 per cent of total household monthly income, an affordable market housing program which provides accommodation based on a fixed rental rate that is determined at 20 per cent less than market rates. The corporation also partners with area associations such as Habitat for Humanity and the urban native housing program to maximize their capacity to serve in Alberta's communities.

Alone the Métis Urban Housing Corporation currently houses over 3,000 tenants in 881 units across the province and is the largest section 95 aboriginal housing program in Canada. Acting as a property manager, the corporation is responsible for renting and maintaining these units, which includes everything from paying property taxes to inspecting and repairing damaged units. With a staff of only 50 full-time and part-time workers, this amounts to quite a workload, Mr. Speaker. The Métis Urban Housing Corporation is accountable to the Métis people through the Métis Nation of Alberta and to the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation under section 95 of the National Housing Act.

It is this balance between accountability, responsibility, opportunity, and sensitivity that, I believe, lends to the Métis Urban Housing Corporation's success. I rise today in honour of this success and the continued dedication that the corporation's team demonstrates in serving their people.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Services for the Disabled

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, today is the International Day of Persons with Disabilities. The theme this year is Removing Barriers To Create an Inclusive and Accessible Society for All. Over 1 billion people around the world live with some form of disability. In Alberta half a million people, or 1 in 6 Albertans, live with a disability.

The barriers faced by people with disabilities take many forms, including the physical environment, societal attitudes, and even discrimination through legislation and policy. Creating and fostering an inclusive environment where these barriers are removed should be the goal of this government. Evidence shows the entire community benefits when people with disabilities are empowered to participate fully in society.

To be honest, Mr. Speaker, I don't know if we are doing enough in Alberta. There has been very little movement in employment for people with disabilities in the last 25 years. Young people and seniors alike are often warehoused in our hospitals because there's not enough room in long-term care or community care. The government should commit to finding spaces in the community for our disabled population.

As we heard last week, the general guidelines within some AHS facilities are to provide a minimum of one bath a week. While people in care have the option to pay extra if family members do it, I received many calls and e-mails from people who feel the government is off-loading its responsibility when it comes to this issue. We should increase bathing frequency and accommodate a needs-based bathing schedule above the minimum to ensure hygiene, health, and safety as well as dignity for those in care.

While it is difficult to hear, it needs to be said that we are all disabled people in waiting. The healthy bodies we inhabit will age and become infirm, or, like me, some of us may have an accident or illness which leads to disability. But the fact remains that all of us will be disabled one day. With self-preservation in mind, Mr. Speaker, we should ensure opportunities are in place for people with disabilities to live in dignity and to their maximum potential.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five oral notices of motion. The first:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 3(9) the fall 2012 sitting of the Assembly shall stand adjourned upon the Government House Leader advising the Assembly that the business for the sitting is concluded.

The second notice of a motion:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 7, Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012, is resumed, not more than two hours shall be allotted to further consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

The third notice is:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 7, Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012, is resumed, not more than two hours shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill at third reading, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

The fourth is:

Be it resolved that the Standing Committee on Privilege and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing may meet at the call of the committee chair to review the standing orders and report any proposed or recommended changes to the Assembly.

The fifth is:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur with the continuation of the Alberta Treasury Branches Act.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Canadian Cancer Society, Alberta-Northwest Territories division,

I'd like to table the following report titled Support for a Wellness Foundation. The Alberta Policy Coalition for Chronic Disease Prevention commissioned an Ipsos-Reid public opinion survey of Albertans. Specifically, the APCCP-developed survey assessed the level of public support for increasing investments in prevention and health promotion in the form of an independent wellness foundation and various revenue sources for funding a foundation. The survey was completed between March 5 and March 12, 2012, by 869 Albertans between the ages of 18 and 55 years. I'm providing the requisite five copies of the report.

Thank you.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I'm rising to table five copies of five different articles that I'm required to table because I referenced them on Thursday. I'll just quote briefly. They're all written by the Leader of the Opposition. The first is entitled Right To Smoke Also an Issue of Property Rights; the second, High Taxes Push Tobacco Underground; third, Government Must Butt Out of Tobacco Picture; fourth, Anti-smoking Lobby Does More Harm than Good; and, finally, Quebec Recruits Taxman for War on Tobacco. I'll provide all copies to the Clerk.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have some tablings. I referenced the Alberta Disabilities Forum report from 2011, which clearly indicates that many people with disabilities are only receiving one shower a week throughout this province.

I also have a couple of e-mails I wish to table. One is from Mrs. Diane Powell, who indicates that her husband was only receiving one shower a week.

I have another e-mail here, from Mr. Jake Kuiken, who lives in Silver Springs in Calgary, indicating that his mother received only one shower a week for a number of years.

Another e-mail, from Nancy Cameron, who indicates that she was having various challenges with showering for her husband in his stay in long-term care.

One more tabling – actually, I'll figure that out for tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, and I'll come back to that tabling.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first is a press release entitled Keystone Delay Costs Alberta Treasury Billions, and I have the requisite copies to illustrate the cost of the differentials in oil and gas.

The second is an article dated December 1 entitled Analyst Makes Bombshell Prediction of $50 Oil, and More Production than We Could Possibly Know What To Do With. I have the requisite copies as well, Mr. Speaker.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Denis, Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, page 53 of the Law Society of Alberta code of conduct.

The Speaker: Hon. members, our next point here would be to discuss and determine points of order. It's been a long time since we haven't had any, but today we have no points of order. Thank you for that to everyone, I'm sure.

That having been said, I will proceed now with the ruling on the point of privilege.

Privilege

Misleading the House

The Speaker: Hon. members, as I indicated just a moment or two ago, as chair I'm now prepared to rule on the purported question of privilege raised by the Official Opposition House Leader last Thursday, November 29, 2012. The debate on this issue can be found in Hansard for that day at pages 1184 through 1189.

In a proverbial nutshell, the allegation by the Member for Airdrie is that the Premier deliberately misled the Assembly when she denied that the decision was made to retain a particular law firm for conducting litigation related to tobacco use while she was Minister of Justice.

In terms of formalities notice of the purported question of privilege was received in the Speaker's office at 10:54 a.m. on Thursday, November 29, 2012, so the requirements of Standing Order 15(2) regarding notice have been met as the statements were alleged to have been made in the Assembly the day before.

The chair notes that Standing Order 15(5) permits members to raise a question of privilege "immediately after the words are uttered or the events occur that give rise to the question, in which case the written notice required under suborder (2) is not required," but no one raised any objection on this point, and the chair imagines that had it been raised, the Opposition House Leader would have said that he needed time to review Hansard. In any case, the Official Opposition House Leader carefully and succinctly cited the relevant authorities on the issue of deliberately misleading the Assembly, including this Speaker's ruling of May 30, 2012, which can be found at page 96 of Hansard for that day.

In making his presentation on the point of privilege before us today, the Official Opposition House Leader indicated that deliberately misleading the Assembly was a form of contempt, which, as the chair pointed out in another ruling, last Thursday, at page 1190 of Hansard for that day, is treated as a question of privilege. The point is made in Erskine May's Treatise on The Law, Privileges, Proceedings and Usage of Parliament, 24th edition, at page 254. It reads:

The Commons may treat the making of a deliberately misleading statement as a contempt. In 1963 the House resolved that in making a personal statement which contained words which he later admitted not to be true, a former Member had been guilty of a grave contempt.

Now, before ruling on the purported question of privilege before us today, the chair wants to remind members that this application places a Speaker of the House in a difficult situation because the Speaker's usual role is not to determine the merits or veracity of questions or answers in the Assembly. In fact, the Speaker's role in question period is stated at page 510 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, which states: "The Speaker ensures that replies adhere to the dictates of order, decorum and parliamentary language. The Speaker, however, is not responsible for the quality or content of replies to questions."

The Speaker's role in the Assembly is to ensure that members are allowed to exercise their historic, if not ancient, and constitutionally recognized right to freedom of speech to the greatest extent possible consistent with the rules, the conventions, and the practices of the Assembly. On that point, any member alleging that another member is deliberately misleading the Assembly will be swiftly called to order by the chair and asked to withdraw the comments. In the chair's view, there have been numerous and far too many instances of this type of exchange occurring in this House during this fall session. The only time that this type of allegation may be permitted is when a member raises a purported question of privilege that a member deliberately misled the Assembly, which is one reason why Speakers have continually cautioned members that these allegations should only rarely be brought, as was indicated in my ruling, in fact, of May 30, 2012.

Now, to return to the matter raised by the Official Opposition House Leader, his allegation is that the decision was made to retain a law firm for tobacco litigation by the Premier when she was Minister of Justice and that statements to the contrary by the Premier constitute, in his opinion, deliberately misleading the House. The test for such situations both in this Assembly and in the Canadian House of Commons is that articulated by David McGee, a former Clerk of the New Zealand House of Representatives, and stated in his book, Parliamentary Practice in New Zealand, third edition, 2005, at pages 653 and 654. This test was recited by the Official Opposition House Leader last Thursday and also by this Speaker on May 30, 2012, but it bears repeating one more time. It reads as follows:

There are three elements to be established when it is alleged that a member is in contempt by reason of a statement that the member has made: the statement must, in fact, have been misleading; it must be established that the member making the statement knew at the time the statement was made that it was incorrect; and, in making it, the member must have intended to mislead the House.

The Official Opposition House Leader was clear that, in his view, the decision had been made on awarding a contract to a law firm before the Premier resigned from cabinet in February 2011 to run for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta.

The Member for Edmonton-Calder was more equivocal on this point and was perhaps more careful in his choice of words as he referred to “a process which ended in [a] decision being made” at page 1187 of Hansard for last Thursday, which was not, with respect, what was alleged by the Official Opposition House Leader. He alleged that the decision had been made.

This is an important distinction, hon. members. If the Premier or the government had denied that a process was under way to select a firm to handle the tobacco litigation prior to February 2011, then different considerations come into play in a forthcoming ruling. However, the allegation that the decision was made by the now Premier on hiring a law firm to conduct the tobacco litigation was firmly rejected by the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, by the Government House Leader, and by the now Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

On the three elements of the test the Government House Leader was quite clear and succinct at page 1188 of Hansard, where he stated:

There are clear explanations about what the process was. There are clear explanations about the result, how the decision was made. There's no misleading. There's no intent to mislead, so there's no mens rea. There's no actual misleading.

By definition mens rea means guilty mind.

The distinction between the process and the final decision on selecting a law firm was in fact addressed by the minister of agriculture when he said at page 1188 of Hansard for last Thursday the following:

Those are the facts as I know them, and I think that that supports the position of the Premier that there was no final decision. She may have identified a firm that she thought was appropriate, and this firm, again, I'm told, was also selected by Nunavut.

In his comments last Thursday at page 1187 of Hansard the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General indicated that the then Minister of Justice, now Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, authorized the contingency agreement with the law firm on June 21, 2011.

A government of Alberta news release which the chair has discovered, dated May 30, 2012, and entitled “Alberta to launch lawsuit against tobacco manufacturers,” indicates that “Alberta has retained Tobacco Recovery Lawyers LLP since June 2011, a consortium of law firms, to file the lawsuit on its behalf.”

Now, in this case much hinges on the interpretation of the decision to hire a firm. Certainly, the chair admits that this is getting into a case of semantics, but it is evident that there was no final decision made as to the selection of a law firm for the tobacco litigation when the Premier was Minister of Justice. Clearly, a process was in place, but that was not the basis of the purported question of privilege.

Accordingly, the chair cannot find that the three parts of the test have been made out. The determination of whether the Premier's statements were misleading is entirely subjective and depends greatly on the exact nature of the words used. The chair cannot find that the second and third parts of the test have been made out; namely, that the member making the statement knew at the time that the statement was made that it was incorrect and that, in making it, the member must have intended to mislead the House.

All three ministers who spoke to the issue vehemently denied that any decision had made at the time the Official Opposition House Leader alleges. Certainly, the Premier was unequivocal that she did not make the decision on the matter of retaining the law firm when she responded to questions on November 28, 2012, at pages 1107 through 1109 of Hansard for that day and which statements are at the core of this purported question of privilege.

Members may think that this a very difficult test to meet, and the chair would agree. That is precisely why such allegations are hardly ever found to be prima facie questions of privilege. Versions of events and interpretation of those events by members may and frequently do differ. This difference is a characteristic of parliamentary debate and is one reason why the chair has referred frequently to paragraph 494 of Beauchesne's, sixth edition, at page 151, which states:

It has been formally ruled by Speakers that statements by Members respecting themselves and particularly within their . . . knowledge must be accepted. It is not unparliamentary temperately to criticize statements made by Members as being contrary to the facts; but no imputation of intentional falsehood is permissible. On rare occasions this may result in the House having to accept two contradictory accounts of the same incident.

The same point is made in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, at page 510, which states, commencing at line 6, the following:

In most instances, when a point of a order or a question of privilege has been raised in regard to a response to an oral question, the Speaker has ruled that the matter is a disagreement among Members over the facts surrounding the issue. As such, these matters are more a question of debate and do not constitute a breach of the rules or of privilege.

For the reasons that the chair has just spent some considerable time articulating this afternoon, there is no prima facie question of privilege. Accordingly, under Standing Order 15(7) there are no further proceedings on this matter. This matter is now concluded.

Orders of the Day

Written Questions

[The Clerk read the following written questions, which had been accepted]

Health Transfer Payments for Aboriginal Peoples

- Q5. Ms Smith:
Of the transfers received from the federal government, what is the total amount earmarked for health care for aboriginal peoples in Alberta, and where and how were these funds spent during the past three fiscal years?

Housing Transfer Payments for Aboriginal Peoples

- Q6. Ms Smith:
Of the transfers received from the federal government, what, if any, is the total amount earmarked for housing for aboriginal peoples in Alberta, and where and how were these funds spent during the past three fiscal years?

Addiction and Mental Health Strategy Consultation

- Q11. Mrs. Forsyth:
Which physicians, psychiatrists, or pharmacists were consulted on Creating Connections: Alberta's Addiction and Mental Health Strategy, dated September 2011?

New Registry Offices

- Q12. Mr. Fox:
What are the criteria for determining the location of new registry offices in Alberta, and do the communities of Blackfalds, Chestermere, and Redcliff meet these criteria?

Medicine Hat Infrastructure Projects

- Q13. Mr. Pedersen:
What government of Alberta infrastructure projects are currently scheduled for Medicine Hat, and what are the projected costs and completion dates for each infrastructure project?

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: I recognize the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Disaster Recovery Programs for 2011

- Q4. Mr. Barnes asked that the following question be accepted.
Have all the claims submitted to the 2011 southern Alberta disaster recovery program and the 2011 spring southeastern Alberta disaster program in regard to the June 2010 South Saskatchewan River basin flooding been finalized, and what is the longest claimants had to wait to receive payment?

The Deputy Speaker: I recognize the hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today on behalf of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. I propose that this question be accepted as amended to:

Have all of the applications to the 2010 southern Alberta disaster recovery program and the 2010 spring southeastern Alberta disaster recovery program been finalized, and how long did it take applicants to receive a first assistance payment once they provided all required information?

The first part of the question as written cannot be answered as the June 2010 South Saskatchewan River basin flooding resulted in two programs: firstly, the 2010 southern Alberta disaster recovery program; and secondly, the 2010 spring southeastern disaster recovery program. That's a bit of a mouthful. Those affected by the June 2010 flooding were eligible to apply under these two 2010 programs, not under the two 2011 programs as indicated pursuant to the written question.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, an accurate response cannot be given to the second part of the written question as it is currently written. For an accurate response the question should indicate a reference to the necessary information which is required for the processing of applicants and the payments to all claimants.

The Alberta Emergency Management Agency stays committed to delivering disaster and financial assistance as quickly as possible to communities who are impacted by unfortunate disasters and emergencies.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

On the amendment, hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak against the amendment. What has actually happened in practice is not what's happened in writing. I make note of one young couple who had thousands and thousands of dollars of damage done to their property, who shortly, sometime around three or four months after the flood, received a cheque with no explanation for somewhere around $1,400 or $1,500. When they queried as to what the cheque was for, it took some time to get an answer that it was for a filing cabinet. This was the story I was told.

During the campaign I had a town hall at a small hamlet called Walsh that has approximately 50 or 60 people living in it, I believe. I had approximately 60 or 70 people at my town hall, many of whom spoke about how the rules were not clear. It was absolutely impossible for them to figure out in many instances what needed to be supplied, what needed to be submitted so they could in turn get what was coming to them from uninsurable losses.

There were also many instances where some claimants had had up to 10 government-hired adjusters, government-hired contractors show up at their property, take a look, submit reports, write reports, but the one level of truth was that no one could make a decision. No one could answer as to what they were entitled to and what they had to do to get it. So the problem with the phrase "once they provided all required information" is that there were many, many people out there who had no idea what the required information was. I believe that this government's failure to make it clear caused some indecision and some injustice in the community.

The problem with the other part of the would-be amendment, the "first assistance payment" is that people in Cypress-Medicine Hat that were affected by the flood: our hope is that these people would be helped fairly and quickly. The flood, of course, ravaged Saskatchewan at the same time, and Saskatchewan had a program of giving every person that was affected I think it was $3,000 – it might have been $3,500 – and then handling their complaint from there. Obviously, the money was to initially . . .

Mr. Lukaszuk: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Point of order, hon. member. The Deputy Premier has risen on a point of order at 3:20. That has been noted.

Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Thank you. Then from there they were supposed to file the rest of their paperwork to satisfy their claim. In many cases that I've heard of in Cypress-Medicine Hat, people that were affected greatly by the flood received several cheques in several instalments.

I think that for the citizen of Cypress-Medicine Hat, the taxpayer, the goal and the hope is that these people will be treated fairly and quickly. Many of them have come to my constituency office in the short time I've been an MLA and mentioned that they're still waiting for a cheque. They're still waiting for an answer. They're still waiting for paperwork. I believe that if we accept when the first assistance payment was made and once they've provided all the required information, when they are not sure what that required information is, that this could drag on much, much longer and cause stress and the unfairness that that causes.

Mr. Lukaszuk: A point of order. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that you should be dealing with the point of order at this point in time. This is not question period, and I would like to speak to it now.

Point of Order Exhibits

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, it has been brought to my attention that certain members are holding up props during this process, as in something that indicates whatever. I'd just remind hon. members that it is inappropriate to hold up . . . [interjection] Hon. member. It is inappropriate to hold up any items that represent a prop at any time during debate in this Chamber. If anyone is guilty of that offence, it's inappropriate, hon. member.

I'll recognize the hon. Deputy Premier to speak to the point of order, and then I'll cut to the next member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to tell you that you are being very generous in your comments. I imagine you have been advised by now by your table clerks, but I have also advised you. I have to tell you I'm rising on this point of order with a little bit of trepidation because I have a great deal of respect for this House, and I want to make this clear to you and particularly to people who are watching this on TV right now that I hope that we hold this House in a higher esteem and that those actions are not reflecting on all members of this House and particularly the reputation of this House.

It has been brought to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that while the member has been speaking, his own member of the Wildrose, the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, quite deliberately is holding a sign behind him so it does become visible on monitors and television cameras, a sign that is definitely inflammatory and slandering the government. That is behaviour that we wouldn't condone in this House, and I think that the member not only owes an apology to his own caucus member who is speaking – and he's posturing behind him – but I think he owes an apology to this entire House.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: I'm citing section 23(h), (i), (j), and (l) of our standing orders.

The Deputy Speaker: Those are the citations, and so noted.

I'll recognize the hon. House leader of the opposition.

Mr. Anderson: I think you've dealt with this subject already despite the somewhat ironical, self-righteous protestations by this Deputy Premier. I would respectfully say that you've dealt with this. I don't know if the member, being new to this Chamber, was familiar with the rule around props. I will make sure to express that rule to my caucus as we move forward so that won't be a problem again.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. House leader of the opposition.

Hon. members, the clarification is given, the admonishments. I would declare this point of order closed, and I would recognize the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat to continue on the amendment.

Debate Continued

Mr. Barnes: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. I'll just finish with a couple of stories and ask the government to address these seriously. A young family with four children had a lot of trouble navigating the process. Temporary housing was provided. They were unable to navigate the process in a way that made things happen on a timely basis, and right now they're still in the middle of trying to fix their house so they can return to it.

A very good business in Cypress-Medicine Hat and a business-person provided me documents like this that show paperwork back and forth from Alberta Environment, from the disaster relief people. He appears to have the go-ahead to do some work. He went out and did the work and then received more conditions on receiving payment and now is faced with a written demand for money and a potential lawsuit from the service provider, who appears to be absolutely entitled to their payment. But, again, this change in the way that all information was supposed to be required, in the way the rules were never provided has caused great hardship, great stress for families who were affected by an event that was totally out of their control and uninsurable.

I would ask the government to take these issues seriously, to help these people as they fairly deserve, and I would ask all to not support this amendment because I believe it is not a step forward in helping the people that deserve help.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Others on the amendment? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've continuously seen with what I would suggest are quite straightforward written questions that the government is somehow forced to tweak the language and amend them to not embarrass itself. We see that right here as well. The phrase "once they provided all required information" is very broad. If an individual has met the prerequisites and provided substantially all of the information, those monies that they're entitled to under the legislation should be provided.

I find it quite hypocritical that when the government wants money, when the MLAs want money – you know, in 2008, the first day they were there, they gave themselves a 34 per cent pay raise. Here they gave themselves an 8 per cent pay raise. But when it comes to someone who's had their property damaged in a horrible incident, it takes years and years and years to provide them the money.

Mr. Speaker, I would speak strongly against this proposed amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others on the amendment? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, agree that this is a shameful way to treat people who have suffered losses through acts of nature. The very reason that we have insurance is so that these kinds of things can be taken care of. Like the very worst of the insurance companies, they're denying claims, and they're slow in settling claims, and they're causing hardships for people who have already suffered unquestionable hardships. They're looking to their own government for the relief that's promised them.

I think it's shameful, and I, too, would not support the amendment. I don't know why they can't just answer the question.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek on the amendment.

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I always find it interesting as a member of the opposition, some of the wordsmithing that goes around. I remember this flood distinctly because I was one of those people years ago that was hit by the flood when it hit Fish Creek. I believe it was – oh, gosh. At that time it had to be – I'm not sure if I can say his name – the hon. member who ran for the leadership. If I'm out of order, please tell me because I know you can't use people's names in the Assembly here. Gary Mar happened to be the minister at the time and was dealing with this horrific flooding in Fish Creek park and all the things that were happening to the people. I happen to back onto Fish Creek park and the Bow River. It was quite a sight to see.

But I think one of the things that frightens me on this written question – if you go to the original written question, the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat has asked the question:

Have all the claims submitted to the 2011 southern Alberta disaster recovery program and the 2011 spring southeastern Alberta disaster program in regard to the June 2010 South Saskatchewan River basin flooding been finalized, and what is the longest claimants had to wait to receive payment?

It's a pretty straightforward question, and I don't see why that can't be answered. Of course, we faced that last week when we were dealing with written questions, when I asked the Health minister the exact, identical, same questions, and he accepted one and couldn't accept the other and tried to amend the other one. It's funny how when they don't want to answer a question, they change it around.

What I find striking is that the amended written question will read as follows. They've taken out "have all the claims," which means we've gone now from "claims" to "applications" in the fifth word, and I struggle with that. Then it goes on to:

... to the 2010 southern Alberta disaster recovery program and the 2010 spring southeastern Alberta disaster recovery program been finalized, and how long did it take applicants to receive a first assistance payment once they provided all required information?

I think the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat has spoken very passionately and eloquently in regard to his constituents, and I think he's even shared some personal information on how some of his constituents are suffering. I mean, the year 2010? It's 2012, and we still have things that are not answered, so I am going to, along with my colleague from Cypress-Medicine Hat, not support the amended question but support the original question as written on the Order Paper under Written Question 4.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak against the motion. I remember particularly when this tragedy first took place. To withhold the information from the public is a disservice on multiple levels, and I want to just focus on one of those. If the system is not working well – and I pose that question: if the system – what we need to know is this information to make a proper evaluation. If it's not working well, if we get this information that validates that, then we can make adjustments accordingly to make sure that the system works well. What's being asked here is nothing more than what is, I think, the duty of this government, to disclose information. This government has said that it is going to be more transparent.

These people who were directly and adversely affected down in the Medicine Hat area deserve a prompt response to a number of issues. These particular questions are really about whether or not we dealt with the matter in a judicious and swift manner. If there are people that are still unsettled in the sense of dealing with these claims, then not only do we need to know as a legislative body, but we need to then act on that if that's the case. Now, if there are no claims, then say it to be so. But, to me, this is something about the operations of how we're going to function not on a policy level but on a practical level in dealing with these types of disasters. If we're going to make corrections moving forward or if we need to make corrections moving forward, this is the critical information that helps us as an elected body to make those decisions. Without that, we cannot make that decision.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also want to speak against this amendment. There wasn't a whole lot affected within the constituency of Medicine Hat, but there were a couple of instances. I think the key thing here is: "receive a first assistance payment once they provided all required information." The issue was, pretty much, confusion right from the start.

We in Medicine Hat lost one of the founding industries of Medicine Hat. It was the I-XL brick-making plant, and it was severely flooded. Some of the rules and requirements around those people and that kind of a business were very extensive, and they just simply decided to walk away. It wasn't worth proceeding. They didn't feel that they would be treated properly. They actually ended up shutting that factory down, and we lost about 70 employment positions out of that shuttering. I don't know if the government could have stepped up and maybe done something differently to prevent that from happening, but that's what happened. When I look at this, talking about providing all required information, I kind of wonder how that was addressed with those individuals.

The second one was the Ross Creek par 3 golf course. That was off the highway. Because it was tied to another business, the rules and regulations set out didn't allow these people to actually even make any claims at all. It was very disturbing to these business owners, the fact that, again, they were victims of an unforeseen natural disaster. They were exempted right from the start.

I think that, again, when you're talking about providing all the required information, I think we have to look at: is this information actually meeting the needs of individuals facing a natural disaster claim? If not, we should look back because if it's not working for these folks, it certainly didn't work for a number of the individuals, as my fine member indicated, in Walsh and Irvine. I think there's an indication that it wasn't helping the homeowners, and it wasn't helping business, so obviously there needs to be some clarification on what this information is, what it was, what's going to happen to make it better.

I'll just end by saying that I won't support this.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We should go back to the amendment and, I guess, why everybody is opposing it. It was a written question from the member to ask on behalf of his constituents, so his constituents put him here to ask a question. He asked that question, and the government member has said, "We don't like your question, so we're going to amend it to suit us," not the constituents that he's asking the question for but the government, so they can answer exactly what it is that they want to answer.

A couple of more points to make. By striking out "in regard to the June 2012 South Saskatchewan River basin flooding," by striking out "and what is the longest claimants had to wait to receive payment" and substituting "and how long did it take applicants to receive a first assistance payment once they provided all required information," what the amendment is essentially saying is that we don't want to answer what you asked us because, clearly, it's not going to look very good on us. The answers aren't going to be flattering to the government. That's okay. Sometimes they're not, but you have to be able to ask the question without an amendment from the government on a written question. I don't believe there's anything illegal going on. I think my cohort here is just trying to stand up for the people of the Medicine Hat area, and well he should. It's what he's here for. It's why they put 17 of us over here and, I would suggest, a lot more after the goings-on today.

Ross Creek golf course: wonderful owners. I know them well. I've played there. I actually had the pleasure of playing at that golf course that was flooded out with my son and his class when he went to Notre Dame academy in a tournament, which we lost in a playoff, Mr. Speaker. I know you'll be troubled to know that. Of the foursome – I think they were grade 8 students – I was the worst on the team.

In any event, they almost went under, literally. They did go under and then almost went under, so when they asked their elected member to come to this Legislature and ask a question on their behalf, he should be able to ask that. That's what this forum is for, not to amend a question so it suits you, which is what's done in this amendment.

Again, to repeat so that we all get this, it's a written question. It's part of the legislative process. The opposition puts forth written questions; the government answers those questions. The government doesn't say: "We don't like your question. If you ask it like this, we'll answer it." In other words, we'll answer part of it, the part that suits us. That is why we're in the pickle that we're in here today, and that is why we're in the pickle that we're in here in Alberta, and that is why Albertans have just about had it, Mr. Speaker. I will not be supporting this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, notwithstanding the most recent theatrics, there's a reality to this. A written question or a motion for a return, once accepted by the House, becomes an order of the House. It must be responded to. In order to respond to a question, to make sure that you do it in a way that answers the question, the question has to be specific and certain. In other words, it has to be answerable. Most often when questions are amended, they're amended so that you can actually provide the information in a way that is a legitimate response to the question.

As we see and hear today, we've had a number of speeches about the people who were harmed by the flood. Everybody cares about the people who were harmed by the flood. Everybody wants to make sure that they get the support that they need and have their claims processed.

But in answer to the question and in response to the hon. member who just spoke, first of all, there is a rule that says that he can't actually ask a question given to him by a constituent, so we have to turn it around. But I understand what the hon. member means. He means we're brought here to represent our constituents. We are brought here to represent our constituents, and we do represent our constituents, but we also have to adhere to the proprieties of the House. The proprieties of the House require that you have to have a question that's answerable. If you pass the question in a specific form and you don't have clear definition as to what it is you're answering, then you can have a dispute break out as to whether or not the minister responsible has appropriately answered the question. In order to ensure that that doesn't happen, you refine the question to something that is clear in terms of the parameters so that you can answer it in an appropriate format. That, with due respect, is all that's being done here, putting in clear, finite time frames or pieces to it so that you know what you're answering.

In this case the amendment would be a first assistance payment rather than the question of: what's the longest they had to wait to receive payment? Receive what payment? Okay. Well, receive the first assistance payment. Now we know what we're talking about. "Receive all payments" I suppose could be another question. The question of: when does it start? You could say from the date of the flood to the time they receive their assistance statements. But the question about when a claim might first arise: when did it first arise? When the first document was filed? There needs to be some certainty to provide a written answer or a motion for a return. That's all that's being intended here. Nobody has intended to deny information that's appropriate but to ensure that any member down in the area that's affected has some clarity around the program.

Programs like this should be looked into. They can be looked into in a number of different ways, and if there's been a problem with the delivery of a program, clearly it's in everybody's interest to determine what those problems are. But this is not a question of debating about whether or not people are concerned about the residents of Medicine Hat and area who were affected by the flood. It's simply a question of how you define a legitimately answerable question.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, you've spoken on this already. Hon. member, you can speak once on this, so I'm recognizing the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With all due respect, hon. Government House Leader, this goes back to the similar question that we asked the Associate Minister of Seniors. We asked it one way for mental health. He answered it. We asked it a different way for seniors. He wouldn't.

This question that the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat is asking is very clear. Now, what the government wants us to believe is that it's got to be a certain timeline or it's got to be a certain way that the question gets answered and that there's no intention to withhold information. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, that's exactly what this does. There's a process in place that allows people to ask written questions that require a certain amount of research, and the reason we're asking them in a written format and not in the House during question period is because we understand there's a certain amount of research that needs to be done in order to get an appropriate and satisfying answer on behalf of Albertans who are asking that question. When we asked the hon. Associate Minister of Seniors the question on long-term care beds and allocations and that sort of thing, he didn't like the date we picked, so he amended the question to pick a date that was suitable. That's not acceptable. Once again, this question is being amended to once again suit the government's answer that they want to give.

I would almost propose that we should change Written Questions. How about we submit all of our questions to the government, you amend them all, send them back to us, and then we'll resubmit them in written, proper format so that we know exactly the answers we're never going to receive. If we're going to truly talk about democracy – I mean, it's bad enough what happened today in question period, but it's even worse that given when we have the opportunity to ask a fair question under the written question guidelines, that we're allowed to do, this government repeatedly sends it back to us and says: "We don't like the format that you're asking on behalf of Albertans. We'll amend that format. We'll tell you what we think you need to hear, and then we will literally send it back to you, and we'll decide what information Albertans get to hear."

This is a fair question, just like the seniors question was a fair question. Once again this government is deciding what Albertans want to hear and deciding what Albertans need to hear. It's not fair, and it's not right. If they want to change the process, let's go back to Members' Services and do what you need to do to change the Written Questions process. Why don't you just provide us with all the questions? We'll go back to Albertans in our ridings and say: guys, these are the questions that they're willing to let you know. Everybody can take a tally, and we'll bring them back. That seems to be the way that this democracy works.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on the amendment as proposed by the hon. Government House Leader.

The Deputy Speaker: We will now go back to the debate on Written Question 4 as amended.

I'll call the question.

[Written Question 4 as amended carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I would ask for unanimous consent of the House to shorten the bells for the remainder of the afternoon.

The Deputy Speaker: A motion has been moved by the Government House Leader that the bells be shortened for the balance of the afternoon. I don't believe that's debatable.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Deputy Speaker: On Written Question 7 I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

4:00      Staffing Costs for Family Care Clinics

Q7. Mrs. Forsyth asked that the following question be accepted.
What is the projected annual cost to employ health care professionals and other staff who will operate individual family care clinics?

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, if I may, Mr. Speaker, we have continually asked this question of the minister. As of today he has yet to answer the question that we were trying to find out from him in regard to the per-patient cost on family care clinics. I can tell you that we have been able to FOIP some of the requests for proposals that the minister has put out, and there are some, quite frankly, alarming numbers in these requests for proposals.

It's interesting. We can do the numbers quite easily on what the cost per patient is for the family care clinics. The minister will probably stand up and say: "Well, it doesn't matter. It's important that we provide good health care for people in this province." I don't think for a minute that anybody is arguing about that. What is important is for us to understand the cost per patient.

I have spent probably the last two weeks, including this weekend, meeting with some very, very entrepreneurial people. That's been doctors, nurses, and all of those people working in primary care networks. Now, I know that the minister is in receipt of a letter that went to him – and I was CCed – on one of the primary care networks in his riding that has several physicians working under it and about 60,000 patients. They, too, are asking the same question. I had a good meeting with one of the docs from there I think on Friday or Thursday. They think that it's important to get the questions. I guess the question that he posed to me is that he's not quite sure, he's not convinced that the minister really understands how primary care networks work.

I don't think it was any clearer than what was brought out in the Auditor General's report in regard to the direction that this government hasn't taken in regard to finding out what primary care networks do and how well they do them. So we have put this question on the Order Paper so that the minister can talk about the projected annual cost to employ health care professionals and other staff who will operate individual family care clinics. I can tell you that I know the costs because we FOIPed the documentation. I also can tell you how they've laid out the costs not only for their nurse practitioners and their RNs and their dietitians and all of that but exactly how many are going to be needed.

What has been fascinating to me – and the minister may want to explain. I understand that they had a proposal looking for nurse practitioners, put a call out for their family care clinics. Mr. Speaker, have you got any idea how many nurse practitioners applied for that particular position? A hundred? Twenty-five? Any idea? Maybe the minister will answer. I can tell you: two. That's all. Two.

Again, the minister has not yet answered one question in regard to the cost of the family care clinics, so it will be interesting to hear what he has to say about what the cost is. I can tell him right down to the penny what the costs are in regard to setting up the family care clinics. They're from his requests for proposals that have gone out in regard to people bidding on the family care clinics, how they see the family care clinics running. It's something that I think Albertans truly need to know and understand.

I know, again, that the minister will stand up and say: "It's not about whether it's a primary care network. It's not about whether it's a family care clinic. It's about bringing the best service to Albertans." Well, I can tell you this. The money that this government is proposing for family care clinics, the dollars that we have been told, is $300 per patient versus $62 per patient. There's a ton of money that could be taken from the cost saving between $300 and $62 and put into primary care networks and not only put into those, like the minister has talked about – I think he mentioned a dollar figure today – but the expansion of those same primary care networks.

I will wait. I know my colleagues are waiting to find out what the answer is from the Health minister. It will be interesting to even know if he knows not only the costs for these health care professionals but if he has any idea of the total cost to run these family care clinics.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I can tell him that we know. We got the FOIP documents. We got their requests for proposals. All of the numbers are laid out very clearly, what the costs of these family care clinics are. You start doing the math and the dividing on the per-patient ratio. It will be interesting to see what he has to answer.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Notwithstanding the fact that we're here to debate a written question, Written Question 7, I won't take the time to point out a number of factual inaccuracies in the hon. member's speech.

Mrs. Forsyth: Please do.

Mr. Horne: No, I won't, Mr. Speaker.

What I will do is I will respond to the question as proposed. While I appreciate the hon. member asking the question, the projected annual cost of staff at individual family care clinics is, in fact, unknown at this time. There's a very simple reason for that. It speaks to the hon. member's lack of understanding of the basic premise of what we're doing in primary health care in Alberta.

The cost of each individual family care clinic will vary from location to location. The FCCs, as are the PCNs for that matter, are intended to respond to identified community health needs as determined by a community health needs assessment. Now, if the hon. member believes that she is in possession of a thoroughly completed health needs assessment for every community in Alberta, then I'd be very interested in seeing that information. But the fact of the matter, Mr. Speaker, is that it is impossible to provide standardized costs for family care clinics on a global basis. What we can do and what we will do is that as more FCCs are established, we will provide updates on the clinic costs for each individual family care clinic.

For these reasons, I'd ask my colleagues in the House to reject this question.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I recognize the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again we're here to ask a question that's important to Albertans. I can appreciate the hon. Health minister's comments that maybe they're not all fully known yet. However, today in question period you stood up and you talked about $180 million in the budget right now – I could be off slightly in the numbers – and an additional $75 million going to family care clinics. I can only assume that you must have some projections or some idea of what these family care clinics are going to cost because otherwise you wouldn't be asking Albertans to just roll it out with no idea of what the cost to taxpayers is. First of all, I would find that a little hard to believe, but that's okay if that's the way you want to go.

You have three pilot projects on right now, I believe, one in Edmonton and two in Calgary, where PCNs were replaced by a family care clinic. Surely by now there must be an averaging of costs of those three clinics that the government has already been working with. Those averages of costs – I mean, we talk every day about how the government has projections, can go forward, is going to put this into their budget, infrastructure costs, all of those things, so surely the Minister of Health has those projections and those averagings and has done some background research on what this would cost taxpayers across this province.

I don't believe that the member is asking for an exact cost. I believe the question as it's written is: "What is the projected annual cost to employ health care professionals and other staff who will operate individual family care clinics?" To say that it is unknown at this time – I don't believe that she is asking you for an exact number. She is asking what all Albertans want to know: how do we honestly know if family care clinics are an effective and fiscally responsible way to go if we truly have no idea of what the projected cost going forward is? How do you sell this idea to taxpayers?

What if the projected cost for family care clinics is 10 times more than the current PCN? Is the hon. Minister of Health honestly asking Albertans to believe that he has simply no idea of what the projected costs are and that they'll find out in due time? I would assume that given the budget is not that far away and you've clearly stated in question period today that you've allotted some monies to family care clinics, you do have an idea of what these projected annual costs will be and that it would only be fair to share that with all Albertans. I would also expect that, quite honestly, the hon. Health minister could alleviate some of this constant questioning if he simply answered the question.

Again, it doesn't say: specifically what are the costs? Given that we already know that these are not fully implemented yet – and maybe there aren't going to be exactly 140. Maybe there's 137, maybe there's 144, or maybe there's 90. But Albertans don't know this right now. All Albertans know is that you're going to roll out a whole new set of family care clinics. The Health minister is asking everybody in this House and every Albertan to believe that he has no idea what the projections of the costs of family care clinics are. As we head into budget and estimates, it would seem to me that if you've already allotted $180 million and an additional $75 million, you clearly do know.

Once again, we're right back to where we were with the seniors' question. We're right back to where we were with the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat on Question 4. They don't want to answer the question, so they stand up and they insult and say that they won't go forward and won't talk about the semantics of the issue. But we need to be fiscally responsible, and how we're spending taxpayer dollars is not semantics. Albertans have a right to know what the projected costs are. If you want buy-in from Albertans and you want buy-in from opposition and even if you don't want buy-in from opposition, surely Albertans have a right to know where this government is spending their taxpayer dollars and have a right to know if spending those taxpayer dollars is done in a fiscally responsible way but, more importantly, if what they're getting in return for spending that money is actually effective. Asking for the projected annual costs to employ these health care professionals and other staff is truly important.

One of the concerns that I'm hearing is – for example, Sylvan Lake is a PCN. If you change it to a family care clinic, that's going to change the business model that they currently have. More importantly, what I'm hearing from the regional hospital that's near to my riding is that we may have a health care shortage in our hospitals because those same nurses may decide that they like the work hours or the environment of a family care clinic, which is valid – they're allowed to work wherever they'd like – but then what do we do with employing the people at the hospital? What wages are we offering at the family care clinic? If you're looking for more nurses, you're going to have to be competitive.

If we don't even know what the projected costs are that this government is talking about, how do we know how we're going to hire, how we're going to staff these facilities, where those people are going to come from, and how much it's going to cost taxpayers. Fundamentally, taxpayers have a right to know what these family care clinics are going to cost them and whether they're getting the best bang for their buck.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to this question one has to take even a broader perspective of why the Health minister can't answer this question. It appears that he is just completely abdicating his responsibility as Health minister and saying:

oh, this is up to Alberta Health Services; I have no say in this at all. If you can't even have projected numbers on a key, key, key issue like this, it's a demonstration that there's just cluelessness on the other side.

We have a chartered accountant with the government. Do you not have budgeted numbers? Do you not have a budget? If you look at the question, it refers specifically to projected annual costs. We're not asking for the exact cost that will occur. It's a projected amount. It's a budgeted amount.

It seems to me that this is a broader basis of why the health care system under this Health minister has been deteriorating. Why we're spending more per capita yet getting the worst results is because the Health minister can't even budget on one of his core, core promises that he made during the election. It's outstanding.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to stand and rise and, I guess, question what the point of submitting a written question is because what we've seen from this government to this time is that we present a question during Oral Question Period, the minister indignantly stands up and suggests: that is not a question I can answer in Oral Question Period; please submit it in written question form, and we'll get an answer for you. In the book House of Commons Procedure and Practice it suggests that "the purpose of a written question is to seek and receive a precise, detailed answer." There are also some guidelines as to what these questions should and should not be. Similar to how an earlier ruling today by the Speaker suggested questions that would be ruled out of order, there are also rules and regulations suggesting what a written question should do.

Not one of these written questions that we've seen either amended or rejected by this government has violated one of these guidelines in this book, yet we have the minister standing up and not wanting to give the precise, detailed information that the written question is inherently designed to get. In our job as the Official Opposition it would be nice if there was a recognition from the government side that that information needs to be forthcoming for us to have a dialogue about these issues, to actually have a debate. I'm sorry that you don't feel that that's a necessary part of your role as the government, but this book and precedent suggests that it is. So I would simply question the government's stance on these written questions, and I would hope that, moving forward, we see a little bit of a different response from the opposite side of this floor.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe that this question is a fair question and one that needs to be answered, and I want to resort to Scripture to support this contention. In Luke chapter 14 of the New Testament, verse 28, we begin:

28 For which of you, intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first, and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it?

29 Lest haply, after he hath laid the foundation, and is not able to finish it, all that behold it begin to mock him,

30 Saying, This man began to build, and was not able to finish.

31 Or what king, going to make war against another king, sitteth not down first, and consulteth whether he be able with ten thousand to meet him that cometh against him with twenty thousand?

32 Or else, while the other is yet a great way off, he sendeth an ambassage, and desireth conditions of peace.

I submit to you that that's an apt Scripture to apply to this, and we can learn great things from the wisdom literature of the ages such as the Bible, that advises us on the dangers of starting something when we don't really know what it's going to cost. Asking what it's going to cost is a fair question, and I think it's a question that Albertans want an answer to. So I submit that this question ought to be answered.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

4:30 Building/Leasing Costs for Family Care Clinics

Q8. Mrs. Forsyth asked that the following question be accepted.

What is the forecast for annual expenditures for the next four fiscal years for building or leasing family care clinics?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure this is going to be another lengthy debate. Now, to me, that's a pretty simple question. I'm sure the Minister of Infrastructure is going to get up and speak to this because his responsibility is for infrastructure and the planning of infrastructure and, obviously, the infrastructure dollars. I am quite looking forward to him either getting up and speaking in regard to this motion or, again, the Minister of Health.

Mr. Speaker, this is quite a simple question. What we need to find out is how many family care clinics they're building or, for that matter, how many family care clinics that they're leasing. Now, we know that they've got three on the go, pilot projects, so I'm sure that the minister can answer that question quite easily on what the cost of the infrastructure for the family care clinics in his three pilot projects are or if they're leased.

What is more interesting to me is the proposal of about 137 more family care clinics. Again, he's spoken into the record about the money that they're going to have for the primary care networks and the money that they have for the family care clinics. I can tell you as a businessperson that if I'm looking at expanding my business and wondering if I'm going to be making a profit, there is no question that I will know what my infrastructure costs are going to be, whether I'm buying that building or, quite frankly, leasing that building. The other thing that I think is important is the operating costs that are going to be contained in either buying that building or leasing that building and maintaining that building.

This government talks about being fiscally conservative. They talk about their plan, how they have an infrastructure plan and how they have this plan in place on the needs of Albertans. I am looking forward to hearing from the Minister of Infrastructure and, quite frankly, the Minister of Health to find out, first of all, what the current costs are for the three family care clinics that are out there that are pilot projects. Then, as you can tell, I put in here "for the next four fiscal years." If they're looking at building in the next four years 137 more family care clinics, then they have to have some numbers in their head. If they don't, Albertans need to know that. They truly need to know that this government – the best laid plans of mice and men. Well, the mice have gone, and we're not sure where the men are, and they have no plans. Period. That's not good government. Good government is basing the needs on Albertans.

We can see, quite frankly, where we are right now with the government, where we are with the deficit. I think on that side we're only getting half the picture. We don't seem to get the full picture on the other side of our infrastructure debt. The Minister of Health and the Minister of Infrastructure owe Albertans, they owe the medical community the costs to have these family care clinics up and running.

Now, in the last question I talked about the documents that the minister doesn't seem to know that we have. He said: well, I don't know where they got their documents. Well, it's his darn documents that we FOIPed, so it shows that this minister surely isn't really too sure about what's happening in his department, which, to me, isn't a good sign of a good minister.

We can see what's happening with the AMA, the negotiations with the AMA. They're all over Twitter in regard to what's happening with the negotiations. I'm getting e-mails constantly, and my phone is ringing constantly in regard to trying to get an update on exactly – the dollars that they seem to want to take from the AMA negotiations are exactly the dollars that are going to be used for the family care clinics. Now, this minister will deny that. He can't deny that quite rightfully because what he doesn't understand is that people have caught on to him. The medical community especially has caught on to him.

I said in this Legislature before that I can't keep up with the calls that I'm getting from people in the medical community. Quite frankly, I always say that if I'm ever in an accident, somebody is going to think I'm a hypochondriac because I've got about 65 doctors in my BlackBerry that I constantly talk to back and forth, and I don't know them, Mr. Speaker. Quite frankly, I don't know how they vote, and I haven't asked them.

The fine doctor I talked to on Thursday night that happened to send an e-mail to the minister asking him some pointed questions on the cost of family care clinics and explaining what he does as a primary care physician and explaining to the minister that he's got 60,000 patients within his constituency, I've never met. I didn't ask him how he voted, and I don't care how he voted. I mean, he lives in Edmonton; I live in Calgary. But I'll tell you that he was a breath of fresh air. He had indicated, as I said earlier, that he's not exactly sure if the minister really understands how well primary care networks work, what they do. He walked me through several different examples of people that they're serving in the minister's riding.

We talked about how one of the biggest expenses to the health dollars is dealing with chronic illness, whether it's diabetes or any of those chronic illnesses. He explained to me and he shared with me how they deal with chronic illnesses in the minister's riding, especially if the fellow is a diabetic. You know, he gets treated under the family physician, and then after that he enters the primary care network, and he deals with a nurse. He doesn't get paid for that. The nurse takes care of him. The only time the nurse calls him is if there's something going on with the patient's diabetes and he thinks that he needs to be brought in, maybe change his meds or find out if it's a dietary problem or whatever it is.

You know what? The Health minister continually talks about how Albertans don't care whether they access a primary care network or whether they access a family care clinic. I'm not disputing that. I think that the family care clinic that's up in Slave Lake is probably working and serving the needs of the people up in Slave Lake. I'm sure the family care clinic that's in northeast Edmonton right now is doing a fine job of meeting the needs of those people. But when government money is involved and government money is being used to run these clinics, then the people of Alberta, the Official Opposition, and the other opposition members have a right to know what the cost is because it's important when you're talking about budgets.

Now, the minister knows and he can stand up easily and tell you exactly the dollars primary care networks are getting in this province and that they got a raise – he's talked about that in the Legislature – of $12 per patient. He will tell you: it is $62 per patient under the primary care networks, and we've done this, and we've done that, and we've done this, and we've done that. You ask him the same question on the family care clinics, his lips close and he doesn't have an answer. That is something that is disturbing not only to me as the Health critic with the Official Opposition of the Wildrose, but it's disturbing to the medical clinic and it's disturbing to the people in Alberta that are particularly paying close attention to the budget.

I'm going to sit down because it's 20 to 5 and we've got several more written questions. I would like the minister to talk on the record about the forecast for annual expenditures for the next four years for building or leasing family care clinics. Both these ministers of Infrastructure and Health and, in fact, the government . . . [Mrs. Forsyth's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Minister of Health, do you care to respond?

Mr. Horne: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. Well, it's interesting but perhaps not surprising that, in my view, much of what the hon. member had to say had really little, if anything, to do with the written question that she has posed. You know, what's very interesting is that the hon. member has raised some questions about the projected cost for family care clinics – and those are certainly fair questions to be asking – but what we have not heard is any detailed questions about financial accountability for primary care networks or for other models.

In the last round the hon. member referenced the Auditor General's report. As you may know, Mr. Speaker, one of the very specific issues that was raised in that report was around the question of monitoring and measurement, including costs of primary care networks. As the hon. member knows, while we can speak to the funding that's provided to family care clinics, which is on a per capita basis – and the hon. member is correct; we raised that amount last year from $50 to $62 – while we can talk about what that amounts to globally in the health system, which is about $181 million per year, we are unable to provide the standardized costs that the hon. member is seeking.

The reason for that, Mr. Speaker, is the very same reason. It is impossible to answer this hon. member's question in the way that she has posed it. That is because every primary care network is different. They all employ different types of staff working together on a team. Some work in small physician clinics. Others work in larger group practices in the catchment areas that they serve. They offer many different programs, and many of them are extremely innovative and have been noted nationally. But they are different. They are not consistent across the province, and that is one of the issues as well that was raised in the Auditor General's report.

The same is true, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to projecting costs for family care clinics. As I said in the response to the last written question debate that we had, family care clinics are going to be developed in response to community proposals that are based on community health needs assessments. In some cases this is going to make use of existing facilities, physician offices, or other facilities, infrastructure that currently exists in the community. That would certainly be our first preference as a government, as a government that is concerned with being cost-efficient, that is concerned with getting the most value from our physical infrastructure resources.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, we would turn first to what opportunities might be available in local communities to host family care clinics. In response to some proposals there may in fact be situations where facilities do not exist in communities or where there is not sufficient space within those facilities to house the family care clinic operation. In those cases we could end up looking at responses to proposals that ask for physical infrastructure.

The hon. member's question – if she's interested in taking responsibility for the question that she did pose as a written question to this House – was for the projected future costs over the next four years in their totality. Mr. Speaker, we don't have that information. We don't have that information for a very good reason. We're not imposing a cookie-cutter, standardized approach across Alberta. We are transforming primary health care to something that is community driven, that responds to local community needs, be it in the areas of addictions and mental health services or easier access to home care or specialist linkages. We fully expect the needs of the community to be different as we look at different proposals.

The other thing of course, Mr. Speaker, is that whatever information the hon. member has or thinks she has – and if it's publicly available information, I congratulate her on accessing that information – what I can tell you is that we are working actively with physicians and with other health professionals in planning all of this, whether we're talking about primary care networks or family care clinics. I've talked on many occasions about our primary health care advisory committee, our primary health care strategy working group that includes representatives from the Alberta Medical Association, from the College and Association of Registered Nurses of Alberta, from psychologists, from a whole range of health disciplines. It is these people whose expertise I will choose to rely upon as Minister of Health in making decisions about projected costs for the future.

You know, Mr. Speaker, in listening to the last portion of the debate from the hon. member, it would appear that the only thing that's really concrete and clear and perhaps easy to project for me is that she has listened, in my view, to nothing that has been said about family care clinics in the last year, that she has listened to nothing in terms of developments in health care policy to improve access to primary health care, yet she persists in these questions. I'd be very pleased, as I said earlier, as family care clinic proposals are finalized and family care clinics are implemented one by one, to certainly share fully with this House the cost associated with each.

But, Mr. Speaker, our first concern – and we would hope it would be the concern of members opposite – would be that we are able to meet the primary health care needs of all of our citizens regardless of where they live. We will continue to provide the flexibility and the opportunities for input on the part of our health professionals and other stakeholders in this work. We make no apologies for that.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there others? I'll recognize the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can appreciate the Minister of Health's answers. One of the points that you brought up in answering this question was that the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek didn't have a costing, what our primary care networks were costing us. I would think that it's imperative for the Health minister to provide that to Albertans, not for the opposition to provide that to Albertans. I mean, clearly, I think, Albertans would very much like to see what the PCNs are costing Albertans versus the family care clinics, which I think is exactly what these questions are attempting to do.

The Health minister has come up and said that we should be asking that question, which is clearly what we're asking, and then he chastises the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for doing just that. If he wants to actually show what the comparisons are, family care clinics to PCNs, he's in the position to do so. We're not in that position, hence the question that's coming forward.

If the Health minister really wants to talk about who's not listening, clearly, it's the Health minister. That has been identified by the Alberta Medical Association. The Alberta Medical Association has come out clearly and said that they've been left out of the negotiations on family care clinics. They even have said that they're not sure exactly what the plan is or what this means for primary care networks. They've stated emphatically that primary care networks work and, if given time, can actually save the province money going forward.

The Health minister just wants to chastise the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for doing her job. She submitted a written question. So far he's told us that he doesn't know what the projected annual cost to employ health professionals will be. Now he's seriously telling Albertans that he has no idea what the annual expenditures for the next fiscal year are. I can appreciate that he's saying that they just increased from $50 to $62 per year, which, he's saying, is about $181 million a year under the PCN model.

Does the Health minister honestly want Albertans to believe that they're not looking at leases right now, that they're seriously not even remotely scavenging the province and looking at what they would be willing to pay for real estate or at what the going rate is for leases in the major centres where they plan to put these family care clinics? All along the Health minister has had us believe that there's a plan for family care clinics. All along the Premier has said that she's got a number of 140. Surely the Premier and the Health minister have a plan for where these 140 family care clinics are going to go, and surely they have an idea of what the average rents are going to be. Or is it better to rent versus purchase? Surely the Health minister and the Minister of Infrastructure have done their homework and are prepared to come forward with that plan. I can't imagine that going forward they're saying to Albertans: we will make that decision the minute we roll out all 140 family care clinics.

What limits the cost of family care clinics? Nobody is disputing that family care clinics will be individual to the communities they serve. No one is disputing that. That also could mean that a family care clinic in Calgary-Shaw might cost $10 million and a family care clinic in Elnora might cost $750,000. How does the Health minister expect Albertans to believe that he has no plan on a per cost basis of how the infrastructure of this is going to go? Nobody in business, nobody in government sets out their budget allocations that way. That would literally be unfathomable.

The Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board has said all along that he has a plan, that we'll see it at budget time. He has said that they know exactly that they will be on budget. How can they know they're going to be on budget if they don't even know what the cost of the family care clinic infrastructure or of employing the people in these family care clinics is going to be? How can you hit your budget? You can't honestly expect that you can hit the budget number, whatever that might be. I don't know what that number is, but you can't tell Albertans that we will hit the budget number when we don't even know what the costs are going to be.

The Minister of Finance has emphatically stated that this government will be on budget, that they will only borrow for schools, hospitals, those sorts of things. He's never once mentioned that he's going to borrow for family care clinics. Do the Minister of Health and the Minister of Infrastructure actually expect Albertans to believe that they have no projections of what infrastructure is going to cost, that they've done no relative study of what leasing versus purchasing does? That's basic business. I own a small business. You can't tell me that I forecast for the year.

Now, I understand, things happen. Maybe we need 137 clinics. Maybe we need 145. Maybe the employment contracts for nurses in Calgary are slightly higher than employment contracts for those in Innisfail if that's where the family care clinic is going to go. Surely they have an idea in their head of what those forecasts are.

The other part of that is: are the Minister of Health and the Minister of Infrastructure also asking Albertans to believe that they have no maximum? You've set no maximum in your forecast, absolutely none? You have no annual projected cost that you will not go above? If you can't give the actual forecasting on a per patient basis or on a per clinic basis, surely you have sat down and said that the cost of these family care clinics will not exceed X. There's no way you couldn't have done that.

Now, the Minister of Health and the Minister of Infrastructure easily could have amended this question to say: "Excuse me, hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, because this is such an individualized situation, I don't have the exact numbers you're looking for on a four-year go-forward. I will amend the question to tell you that this is the maximum budget that we will not exceed. This is what we've built into the forecasting for this year based on my talks with the Minister of Finance. This is the max we will not exceed, and as it rolls out, we will tell you exactly how that money is going to be allocated.”

The Minister of Health would have us believe, standing here today, that he’s done absolutely none of that. He has no max; he has no minimum. He’s not researched a single lease; he’s not researched a single purchase. But we have three pilot projects in two major centres that have lease costs, that have real estate costs maybe. We don’t know what those are. He could easily have amended the question to say: well, we could release these numbers for you and show you exactly what those are. But he’s not willing to do that either.

Now, going to the Minister of Infrastructure, it’s interesting because the Minister of Infrastructure stands up in this House every day and says: we have a list of infrastructure priorities on a website. Has anybody gone to that website? Family care clinics are just listed: no cost, no priority, not where they’re located. How can the Minister of Infrastructure sit there and honestly believe and ask Albertans to believe that they have no idea what these things are going cost, where the priority is, and then stand here in this House every day when he’s asked a question and say: “Just go to our website. Everything is prioritized on our website.” It’s impossible. There’s no number assigned to it and no dollar value. How do you prioritize anything if there’s not a dollar value associated with it and a list of where they go in priority? So, yeah. I mean, it’s sitting on the website. Family care clinics. Fantastic. That tells Albertans tons.

These two members, honestly, could have easily provided the costs and the values associated with (a) the pilot project or even provided a maximum and a minimum budget that they’re willing to work with to go forward into 2013. They’re telling Albertans: “We’ve done no homework. We’re so neglectful in our duties. We’re not going to provide you with any information, and you just have to accept that.” Easily, you could have provided information. You’re just choosing not to do so.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly good friends of mine. Mike Shaikh, Alberta Senator-elect, is a long-time provincial Progressive Conservative and a Calgarian for nearly 40 years. Mike Shaikh is a successful businessman and a tireless volunteer and philanthropist. Mike has sat on dozens of nonprofit and business boards and currently chairs the Calgary Police Commission. A champion of higher education and community, he has received the Premier Klein leader service award, the University of Calgary distinguished alumni MAX award, and many more. Mike is joined today by a gentleman who is well known to all of us, Mr. Ken Faulkner. They are seated in the public gallery. I’d ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Written Questions

Building/Leasing Costs for Family Care Clinics (continued)

The Deputy Speaker: I’ll recognize the next speaker. Are there other speakers on this question? The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It looks like I’m running out of time, which is probably going to please some in here. [interjections] I asked for that, and once in a while it’s good to receive it, so thank you.

Mr. Dorward: You should have gone to a minute, and we would have had time.

Mr. McAllister: Oh, is Statler at it again?

The Deputy Speaker: You have the floor, hon. member.

Mr. McAllister: The point I want to raise on this, Mr. Speaker, comes down to something the Minister of Health said in his defence talking to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. I believe he was suggesting that she hadn’t listened to anything that he had said as she gave her thoughts on how this is working and what Albertans are expecting in terms of finances, and I recognize that she would probably say the same to him: I don’t think you were listening to anything that we say when it comes to these clinics and what Albertans are expecting in terms of information. There is a lot of detail here, and I understand that from both sides. But it does seem logical to suggest that some of these details be made public so that we have an idea of where we are going forward as we plan for the province.

In making one more point, the president of the AMA just issued a new letter to doctors stating: “Batten down the hatches and prepare [for] a storm.” To the Minister of Health: who is it that isn’t listening?

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, I’ll call the question.

5:10 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: There are 13 minutes remaining. I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Public Funding of Private Schools

504. Mr. Hehr moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to implement a policy to eliminate public funding to private schools.

[Debate adjourned November 26]

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm standing today to speak to Motion 504. I'd like to start off by saying that the intent of this motion I support completely, and that is to ensure that our public education system remains just that, publicly funded and publicly delivered. What I do want to mention is that there are some private schools within this province that fulfill very specific and special needs. There are schools that serve populations that require additional support or students that require many different supports in order to function.

I'll note that the school that I taught at for six years, Inner City high school, is actually a private school with a very interesting history. That school in particular tried to come under the public education model for a number of years in the '90s, and it didn't work. The reason it didn't work was because the current funding model that is in place did not allocate or give the school enough dollars to be able to provide all of the services that those students require. You've got at the moment a school system that is trying to do a one size fits all within our public.

Now, in my opinion, what the school would like and what I would like to see is that schools like Inner City high school fit under the umbrella of our public school system so that we don't have the need for a private grouping of schools, some that absolutely require public dollars. Those schools like Inner City high school, because of the needs they serve, should come under the public school envelope. There are other private schools, I will say, that receive public dollars that, in my opinion, shouldn't be getting those public dollars, and if they intend to operate, they should do so completely on private dollars.

An example with Inner City high school is that in a classroom of a size, let's say, of 20 to 25 students, you'll have 15 to 18 students, probably around 90 per cent, that have severe special needs, whether we're talking about behavioural disorders to other types of needs. For that reason, the dollars that fit under the public model would not apply to this school because there simply would not be the supports that these students require.

So I'm speaking in favour of this motion that the government implement a policy to end public funding to private schools, and with that, I would urge the government to come up with a way to include schools like Inner City high school. There are other schools, I've been informed, like Muslim schools that get their start as a private school, but their intention would be to join with our public system as well. Let's move to a publicly funded model of education but one that truly does reflect the diversity and needs of all students in this province. That's where I will leave my support.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'd look to the mover to close if there are no other speakers. Hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, you have a few minutes. Please proceed.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly support the public school system. As I've said numerous times on the floor of this House, all 13 of our children were educated through that system. But I believe in choice. I believe that, properly done, there's room for both under the umbrella of education. I certainly think that parents and students ought to have some choices, and I don't think that that means that one is going to suffer at the expense of the other unless we're mismanaging, and I can certainly understand a case being made for that. I believe that there ought to be room in this tent for both.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand in support of this motion. I think it's something that many Albertans have written to us about: a public system that's under siege from the point of view of classroom sizes, from the point of view of supports for special-needs kids, infrastructure deficits. We have a lot to do to strengthen and create a level playing field for our young people, especially those who are in difficult circumstances. We're not going to get there if we don't start investing our public dollars in public education.

I haven't heard very many people at all across the province say that the private system needs support. Clearly, our first priority is government. I think it's an important issue. If the government feels that they can stand up to the public in terms of their position on these millions and millions of dollars going to private institutions, then they should put it to a referendum.

I think the evidence is clear. Albertans want a strong, sustainable, publicly funded education system, and I think it's time that we moved in that direction to support the majority of Albertans, who are saying so.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? We've got a couple of minutes left.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo to close debate.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to everyone in this honourable House who took part in the debate. In my view, I believe this motion put forward is a good one and one that I would urge all members to support.

I look at the goals of the Education Act, which says that our students are to come together to learn in a modern society, tolerant of all views and opinions, and to foster a strong democracy. That's, essentially, the beauty of the public education system. Regardless of whether you're wealthy or whether you're poor, whether you're of one religion or another religion, whether you've just come from a different country or have been here a hundred years, you are entitled to go to the public education system. To me, having our children go to learn to care, share, play, and learn together is what we should be trying to foster, and that is done through funding a public education system.

What I said earlier and I'll say again is that, in my view, private schools tend to divide children on the basis of wealth and religion. We can look at that. That's very clear. Eighty per cent of private schools in this province are currently of one religious denomination or another. There is another cohort to that, elite private schools, that charge upwards of $20,000 to $25,000 for their children to attend. Why would we be propping up a system that divides communities, doesn't bring them together? In my view, it doesn't make sense. If people believe that they want to have a private school, by all means, they should get a private school, but the public dollars to foster that do not have to follow them.

I believe there is one caveat to this, and that would be until such time as the public system is able to accommodate all children with disabilities. I understand that there is a need out there. Currently the public system is not functioning well in that regard. That being said, with a forward-looking government, one that understands that all kids need an opportunity to learn, I believe, too, that this can be rectified in time.

It's my view that the public system can be that system where everyone comes together and learns in a caring, sharing environment, and I stand by that proposition, sir. I believe that it's in our society's best interest to continue to encourage our families through our support of the public education system to have their kids attend. There's no need for us to fracture society by our public dollars going to support someone's private choice.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, December 3, 2012

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

Bill 7

Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. With respect to Bill 7 I have an amendment that I'd like to put forward, and I have the requisite copies.

The Chair: Okay. Please have that circulated.
Hon. members, this will be amendment A2.
To the amendment.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. On amendment A2 this is a very, I would suggest, straightforward amendment to the act as it currently states that there will be a bunch of penalties if the registered party, registered constituency association, or the registered candidate knows or ought to have known that the prospective contributor is – and then you look through the act, and it states a bunch of things – a person ordinarily resident, a prohibited corporation, et cetera. Essentially, what the current version has is a mens rea component, both from a subjective perspective, where a candidate personally knows, and also from an objective perspective, where the person ought to have known that a particular donation was illegal.

Our proposed amendment, Mr. Chair, is to eliminate that language and just simply replace the wording with the inclusion of the word “from.” If a political party, a constituency association, et cetera, accepts an illegal donation, at that point there ought to be some type of administrative penalty or sanction. The rationale for this is that the way it's written right now is that the party or the candidate can say that they didn't know that the donor lived outside the province. We saw this with some other donations where it's clear that an individual lives outside of the province, yet a political party accepted that amount of money. I think in that circumstance there should certainly be some type of level of due diligence required by a party, a constituency association, or a candidate.

Right now the way the language currently reads, it allows parties or candidates to claim that they accepted illegal donations from prohibited corporations unknowingly, and thus they are not at fault. I think, Mr. Chair, we saw that with the numerous illegal donations that were made and that the Chief Electoral Officer found to have made those illegal donations. In those instances it was actually the prohibited corporation that was fined. Often that was a municipality, so taxpayers got hosed twice. Once, of course, taxpayer dollars went towards an illegal donation, and secondly, they actually had to pay a fine. In those circumstances clearly the party that accepted those illegal donations should also be on the hook.

We shouldn't put this high standard on political parties to find some wrongdoing. Right now it's almost impossible for a political party accepting a legal donation to be provided with an administrative sanction. This amendment, I think, is very straightforward. I think it puts the appropriate onus on the political party to ensure that they are not accepting illegal donations.

On this amendment I think it's very clear. If we want to be serious, actually serious, about stopping illegal donations going to a political party or to a candidate or a constituency association, this amendment ought to be passed. Other than that, this is obviously just allowing another loophole in the legislation to say: “Close your eyes. We've taken this donation, but we didn't know for sure that it was illegal.” This amendment just makes it a lower threshold to provide an administrative sanction when an illegal donation has been made.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I thank the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills for his amendment here, but I will not be supporting it. I do not recommend that others support it as well. I believe that the primary onus should always rest upon the donor. It is the donor that knows his, her, or its individual circumstance. It is the donor that knows if he or she is over the limit. It is the donor that knows if they're part of prohibited corporation as the member talked about. It is the donor that has that direct knowledge.

We have to remember that with political parties we're also dealing with volunteers of all four parties as well as other parties who are not represented in this Assembly. I agree that in the event that there appears to be some co-ordinated, nefarious effort to accept illegal donations on the part of any party, the party should be held responsible. But the reason we have that test – and the member quite correctly intimates the constructive knowledge portion, knew or ought to have known – is because in the course of any given year when you go in to donate money to a certain party, they may not know right away if something is a corporation. I imagine that there are many corporations that may be seen as legitimate entities that may actually be subsidiaries of another.

On top of that, I would further indicate that in the event that if someone from, say, a municipality or university would buy a ticket to a dinner of party X or party Y and then seek to have that ticket reimbursed, again, the recipient of the donation does not know and, frankly, has no knowledge whatsoever that that ticket is being reimbursed. Again, the primary onus, not the full onus but the primary onus, must be on the donor's side, and that's why I cannot support this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I rise in support of this motion, and I would disagree with the hon. minister in the sense that the onus, in my opinion, is actually on the party and the party itself. It is the party that is the direct beneficiary of any donation, and I don't believe that anyone in this Assembly is going to make an argument that the person making the donation is going to be a direct beneficiary from making the donation.

As far as onus of proof – and here's where I think the amendment has a tremendous amount of strength to improve the act. There is a presumption that everybody is fully knowledgeable of the rules and regulations, but in reality that's not true. There are people who in good faith and with the best intentions may want to donate without any knowledge that they might be in violation of the act or the regulations, but if you sort of correlate that to campaigns, it is the candidate that is ultimately responsible. You take that back to the party. Regardless of all the volunteers, it is the one and only CFO, the chief financial officer, that makes these decisions.

Now, I can tell you that in my riding what we do is that we make sure. We have to double-check that the people making the contributions are not over the limit. We make sure that the monies that are coming – and, by the way, in my riding we don't have to worry about anyone being over the limit, but we still check. We really feel the onus is on us to try to make an electoral system that is not just representative of due process and fairness but responsible for any shenanigans that could possibly happen. It's twofold in the sense that, yes, nobody should be allowed to do anything illegal, but nobody should be allowed to look the other way because somebody is acting in ignorance. Without this amendment this is what this allows.

I'm not saying that any party or any constituency association would do this deliberately, but it does allow this to happen if they can play the card of: "We didn't know. That person who made the donation should have known." I think that's a nonexcuse.

A violation is a violation is a violation. The whole purpose here is: should we exonerate the party because someone else violated the act or violated the regulations? There's no recourse or responsibility on the party that is accepting the donations. I say that is fundamentally wrong. This is clearly a shared responsibility, and what this does is put the onus on the party to share in that responsibility.

By the way, the arguments that have been going on in this Legislative Assembly, particularly during question period, would be a moot point if responsibility was shared by the parties, particularly when it came to those smaller donations that came from government agencies or government-funded organizations, which are prohibited.

The typical course of action when any CFO writes a receipt is to know to whom they're writing the receipt and to know where that money came from. The sense that the party should be exempted from the responsibility, in my view, is not consistent with why we're bringing this amending act forward.

What we want to do is strengthen our laws. We're not changing the penalties per se as far as illegal donations. We're not changing the fundamental criteria: what is a legal versus illegal donation? All this amendment does is say that the party receiving it is going to share in this responsibility, that they also are responsible for accepting money. I'll draw a correlation with the transfer of – well, we can use Bill 201, the copper. If you know an item is stolen and you're a business that accepts this and you do that knowingly, you're responsible for that.

In this sense here what we want to make sure of is that there are checks and balances, and the checks and balances are just quite simple. We want the public to be educated, we want the public to be informed, but we also want checks and balances so that the party itself does its own homework. By doing so, what we do is that we create a system that's stronger, and there'll be fewer violations. If we do not accept this amendment, then what we still have is what's existing today, where the onus is on the donor, and if a donor even in good faith makes a mistake, it leads to the allegations against the party for illegal donations, as it's often referred to, but it doesn't serve anyone's purpose.

Clearly, where I support this amendment is that the people who know or who ought to know are the party people who actually write the receipts. This is their responsibility. In my example of my own campaign or my own constituency association volunteers do come forward, but we have rejected contributions because they were outside the bounds, and we knew that. If we got audited, we didn't want that to haunt us or to basically plague our audit. This is nothing more or less than a nice little check and balance. It doesn't, I think, add to any more paperwork in the sense that all it's saying is that everybody on both sides of the equation has to be informed, and they share in the responsibility. The party will share in the responsibility along with the donor. We do not want any donations that would violate the act, that would violate the regulations made under the act. By accepting this amendment, we strengthen the system. We just basically say that all those involved in the whole process are responsible to know the rules, to know the regulations, and they share responsibility if those rules or regulations are violated. No one should receive any donations that are not in compliance with the act or the regulations, and certainly they should be expected to know whether those donations are in compliance. The same is true of those people who are making the donations.

But, again, the people who generally know the rules the best are the party and are the candidates who actually participate in the process. The people who generally don't know the rules but participate in good faith are the general public. They all have their reasons. They may be as varied as the number of people involved in the process. They may want to contribute to a friend who is part of the party. They may want to contribute because of a cause. But they may not have the real knowledge of the intricacies of the election laws or the limits or any of the other criteria. They're just doing it in the sense that this is the way they want to participate in the process.

By requiring the party to share in this obligation to make sure that everything stays legitimate, it's part of the process that would make this system stronger, not weaker. I don't see where it puts any great imposition on the people keeping the records. Volunteers are volunteers, and they would not be hurt by this. The contribution is not made until the CFO actually accepts that contribution and writes that receipt for that contribution. There alone is a great place for a stopgap for checks and balances to make sure that we maintain the integrity of the act, which is that we're not going to allow any illegal contributions or any contributions that violate the act or violate the regulations.

With that, I support this amendment, and I'd be interested if some of the members have a response to that.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak this evening in support of this amendment. I think this amendment is very consistent with basic laws of economics that suggest that unless the recipient or the user, if you will, or the beneficiary of a donation, shares in some of the responsibility of the potential for accepting an illegal or an inappropriate donation, then it'll be easier for people to come forward with those donations. I think that creating an act or a law that includes an amendment like this makes it more consistent with human nature and the laws of economics.

As my hon. neighbour here mentioned, people donate for a number of reasons. Very often with candidates like me or this hon. member and perhaps many of us, too, they do it out of friendship because they know us and like us. Hopefully, they'll like the cause that we represent, the party that we're running for, the position, the platform that we stand for, that we put forward. They may do it out of a sense of patriotism to encourage the democratic process. They may think that we need a loyal opposition, and we can see that that's certainly true. They may think that the government is doing a terrific job, so they're going to support the candidates running for the party in power.

Whatever their reason, it could also include, perhaps, the possibility of greater access. Some of the people that we've seen that have made illegal contributions did it because that was the system. That's the way you grease the wheels. That's the way you got access: a door was opened, a phone call would be returned, an e-mail returned, or whatever it would be. There was some benefit that they were getting. The party or the recipient was getting the benefit of that money, which would help them with their campaign.

If you dry up the market for that money, then the supply of that money is going to dry up, too. I think you've got to balance the responsibility for this policing or this regulating action between the two. I actually think that the user or the direct beneficiary of those funds ought to bear the greater burden. I think my friend did an admirable job of eloquently explaining the way that could happen and the responsibility that should naturally fall upon the shoulders of the candidate and his organization or the party in general as they educate their candidates in terms of how to properly accept donations and which ones to shy away from and the reasons why.

I believe this is a very good amendment, and I find it to be consistent with my study and understanding of the laws of economics and of human nature. I would encourage you to support it.

Thank you.

The Chair: Other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just have a couple of very brief comments on this amendment and, really, questions. The first is that I'm just curious to know – if a constituency association, let's say, is accepting a donation, the onus is upon them to discern whether this is a legal one or an illegal one. I mean, how could they go through a reasonable process to account for that? I know this doesn't happen very often, but if you have someone who's mischievous and/or has other motives behind their donation, the money is coming from one thing, but it's really another.

You know, it's difficult for us to organize through our volunteer organizations, as it is everything that a constituency association or even a party needs to do. For us to be vetting people or take that responsibility – this amendment would work better if we had corporate and union donations eliminated from the process, I think. Then you would have a much clearer idea about where these things are coming from. I mean, this amendment in concert with the elimination of union and corporate donations I think would work better than good, right? Otherwise, it just seems slightly problematic to me.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The test here is “knows or ought to know.” That's the catch in this. There are cases, truly cases where you simply cannot know. If I come to a dinner and ask for a receipt in my name, the constituency association writes me a receipt, and they give it to me in my name. If I go back and I submit that as an expense into my expense account, how in the world can the constituency association or the candidate or the party know that I've done that? Yet we've seen cases here in the last six months where we're all branded, everyone in the PC Party, at least, as being this illegal group, this group that accepts this stuff on a daily basis.

Most of that reason is that these were not obvious contributions. The truth is that to put the onus on the party to verify each and every one of these is quite foolish, quite honestly. The onus is on the person that's asking for the receipt. The onus is on the person contributing the money. If they don't tell the truth, if they don't say, “By the way, I'm going to expense this back to my school board” or “By the way, I'm going to expense this back to AHS” or whatever, then there is no possible way of knowing that person is doing that.

This amendment puts the onus on people who have no ability to control that outcome. This is saying that if you are contributing – and, by the way, candidate and party, you should have known. If I'm saying, “By the way, I want a receipt written out to AHS” or any other illegal contributor, whatever, well, then you ought to have known. This isn't always about that being so apparent.

The onus, then, is on the person who is contributing. It's that simple. They are the only ones to truly make that determination when, in fact, it is not apparent and you ought not to have known how that person was going to record that contribution.

I won't support this amendment for those reasons.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much and thank you to the member who just articulated that. The issue of “knows or ought to know”: when you read this section, it says that the registered constituency association or registered candidate shall, directly or indirectly,

(a) solicit or accept . . .

Now, what this amendment does is put the onus on the people accepting the contribution. This idea that we're penalizing the person, I would disagree because it puts the responsibility – if you're defrauded, you're defrauded.

This has to do with soliciting also. If you're soliciting or even accepting indirect donations, if you set out the rules for the people who are actually making the donation that you basically tell them before you accept the donation that this has to fit within these guidelines, which is within the act, within the legislation, then what you do is you basically lay this out. If you're defrauded, you're defrauded. That's a different element altogether. What we're saying here is that this is checks and balances. We're not shifting the onus, not at all. The onus is still on the person making the donation. What we're doing is that we are sharing the responsibility to make sure that somebody doesn't knowingly take donations when they ought to know better, and they can't hide behind that shield because they're no longer responsible.

This amendment, in my opinion, does not take full responsibility for that individual making an illegal contribution or an illegal donation. What we're saying is – and this is nothing more than what I myself have practised – to make sure that everyone stays within the guidelines of the act. When we did this voluntarily before we accepted money, we made sure people knew what the rules were and how much they could possibly donate in what time frame, so we made sure we stayed within the Election Act.

All we're saying is that we're going to put this now in legislation so that practice is shared and that responsibility is shared. I don't see where someone is going to be unduly penalized. What we're saying is that you have to lay this out so when you are soliciting, the rules that you convey at your fundraiser, the rules that you convey if you go door to door or however you accept donations, the people who make the donations accept the rules that you have laid out there so they stay within the act. If they don't do that, they are responsible. But in no way does this take all the responsibility and put it on the party.

What we're saying is that the party has to share some responsibility on a checks and balances system because if we don't have that, then what you can get is that some parties would hide behind this idea of: “It's not my responsibility. I don't really know where the money came from. I just issued the receipt.” I don’t think that strengthens the act if we allow that to continue. Sharing the responsibility, putting some onus, not all the onus, on the party does strengthen the act. It gives some checks and balances, and I don’t think it unfairly puts a party in a bad position. I see the party doing nothing more than what a lot of organizations do, which is that they put right there in front of the people making the donations: “This is what you can donate. These are the rules of the donation.” Basically, you’re just informing people before you accept the donations.

That type of onus to me is not a burden, in my mind, on the party. It’s just that we want the system, the electoral system, to have stronger integrity. As it was pointed out, the allegations that have been made, the accusations that have been made – had this been in place, I would suggest that many of those allegations would be moot. Particularly, many of those smaller donations would not have been accepted, or in many cases the ones that were accepted would have been clearly in error and would be automatically returned.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Saskiw: I’ll be very brief. I think this has been debated enough. You know, I just think it’s important that we have on the record that the government appears not to want to put any onus on political parties for accepting an illegal donation, and I think that’s a shame. If you don’t have that type of deterrent, we’re going to see more and more illegal donations like this occur in the future.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I wouldn’t normally rise to the bait on that, but it’s an absolutely inappropriate comment, the last comment, that the government doesn’t want any responsibility or onus. In fact, the changes in this act make it very clear that everybody supports the idea that there’s an appropriate way to make donations to the political process and to political parties and candidates. There are inappropriate things.

The question we’re talking about in this particular section is how you ensure that inappropriate donations are not made. Really, it’s only a question between whether you should know or ought to have known or whether it’s an absolute. In any law it’s very difficult to hold people accountable for what they didn’t know or couldn’t know. It’s inappropriate to say that the government doesn’t want responsibility or accountability on political parties. There will be responsibility and accountability on political parties, and there is a duty for people to inform themselves, but there are some things that you can’t find out. You’re not obliged to take responsibility for something that somebody has done when there’s no possible way that you could have known that that was a prohibited corporation or an inappropriate donor.

The Chair: Are there others? The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: I’d move that we have a one-minute bell for only this amendment.

The Chair: The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills has moved for unanimous consent that we would have a one-minute bell for this amendment.

The Chair: I’ll recognize the Member for Little Bow. Did you want to speak on the amendment?

Mr. Donovan: Yeah, I guess. It’s been an interesting conversation here on this. I guess my thing in my constituency, for instance, is that I go over every cheque before we deposit it. When I was running, I actually returned cheques. Hey, I didn’t raise that much money, so I’m not here to swing a big stick of what I did in life. I sent back cheques because I didn’t want one particular industry to make it look like I was just here, if I did get elected, to promote their backing.

I heard the hon. House leader from the other side, Edmonton-Whitemud, talk about last week that there’s nobody in here that wants to be painted with a black brush or get a black eye out of anything. You want to portray that you’re open and honest and transparent. In my constituency the way I did that is that my financial officer does not cash any cheques until I get to go over them all. If they sit for a month or two, they do, but that way you have some control over it. Then there’s no question of whether you’re representing one industry or a different industry for the wrong reasons. I guess that’s, you know, the cross you decide to die on or not.

That’s all I’d add to that. Thank you.

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We’ll now go back to debate on the bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It’s a pleasure to rise. Actually, I’m going to propose an amendment right off the start to the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member. If you'd circulate that through the pages, I'll give us a minute, and then I'll let you speak to it. Did you send the original?

Mr. Hehr: I'm assuming I did. Is there one there, or else I can quickly sign one. I've got the original right here. Sorry, guys.

The Chair: We'll give you back a copy, hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Sorry about that. I'll send that back.

The Chair: You may speak to the amendment, hon. member. This will be noted as amendment A3. We're sending you one back. It's on its way.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm assuming that most everyone now has a copy of it. I'm putting forward an amendment by Ms Blakeman, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, that Bill 7, the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012, be amended in section 80, in the proposed section 32, subsection (3), by striking out clause (a) and substituting the following:

- (a) within 15 days after the end of each year a return setting out
  - (i) the total amount of all contributions received during the year that did not exceed $250 in the aggregate from any single contributor, and
  - (ii) the total amount contributed, together with the contributor's name and address, when the contribution of that contributor during the year exceeded an aggregate of $250.

And by striking out subsection (6).

Really, this amendment serves, in my view, the overall democratic process in a more fair and balanced manner towards all political parties that are actually represented in this House now and future parties that may join the ranks of the political landscape. In my view, without this amendment it makes it exceedingly difficult for many parties and, in fact, any new organizations starting out to be in compliance with the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012.

The current legislation that the hon. minister has before the House states that every quarter political parties are by law now required to publish the names of all contributions and the like over $250 and actually report on ongoing fundraising efforts. In my view, it is an extremely onerous task for many political parties to venture down that path, not even mentioning those political parties that may be nascent political parties that are starting out. This requirement would be onerous because it would require almost a full-time bookkeeping effort, which is most likely going on but not to the extent that the new act will require it to be. If this amendment is not accepted, I can see political parties having to hire more people, hopefully trying to find some more volunteers, and a nascent political party may be simply giving up because they can't find the volunteers needed or the required accounting to keep up on a quarterly basis.

It appears to me that the act as it reads currently is overkill on reporting. It's a requirement that I believe is not in the best interests of the democratic process, in allowing new political parties to be formed and even political parties that are in existence to keep on going. Let's face it; these are onerous requirements that are now going to be prescribed in law and, in my view, will take away from our ability to organize as citizens and take part in the election process.

Now, I full well note that having a requirement to report is necessary, and I believe it was adequately handled in the last act, which said that political parties are to report their contributions once a year. I found that reasonable. I found that a good use of a party's time, and it allowed that openness and transparency that the electorate is looking for. They want to know who and how much is donated to political parties. That's fair. That's part of the democratic process. That being said, I don't believe it needs to be on a quarterly basis, which takes away from the democratic process in ways that I have just stated.

In that vein, I would urge all members of this House to support this amendment in the spirit of democracy and encouraging new parties to be formed and going forward on that basis.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, and I thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo for bringing this amendment forward. However, I cannot support it. I will just indicate a couple of reasons why. First off, the principle behind the Election Accountability Amendment Act is that we want to encourage more disclosure, and that's why, for example, the disclosure limit, the point at which you have to disclose who is donating to what entity and what amount, has been lowered from $375 to $250. That principle is established. I trust that the member opposite does not disagree with that principle. But as we move forward here, moving to quarterly disclosure will increase transparency even further. I do want to indicate that people have complained, like in the past. They don't know exactly who has donated to what party in what amount, and you don't find out until the year after that. This quarterly disclosure will allow for greater transparency of the actual amounts, who has donated to what party, to what constituency association.

The other thing I wanted to mention is that a good friend of mine used to work for a political party in the province. I'm not going to say which political party, Mr. Chair. One of the things that he had indicated to me was that it was very frustrating because a lot of the constituency associations would on the last day or a week before put all of the receipts into a bag, send it to the constituency office, and just have all sorts of problems and mayhem. By going to a quarterly disclosure, you're actually dealing with this issue on a much more proactive basis. The parties will be able to regulate themselves better because you'll have fewer donations coming in at one time. They'll be able to space them out, much like if you made, say, quarterly payments to the Canada Revenue Agency or if you made quarterly payments on a vehicle or your property taxes. If you don't make them once per year, you're able to plan further.

I do think this amendment is in the best interest of transparency in the province. I am advised also that Ontario has a continuous disclosure policy although I have not had a chance to view that myself. But I will indicate that we're not the first province to move away from just the annual disclosure, and I don't think that there's anything wrong with that.

In that vein, I'll take my seat and note that I will not be supporting this amendment.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I rise in support of this amendment. I appreciate the comments by the hon. minister. Although I can't speak for those ridings or constituencies that actually raise a lot of money, I will say this. In the constituencies I have dealt with, you see that the fundraising is generally when the election is called, and 90 per cent of the funds come in.

An Hon. Member: Not mine.

Mr. Anglin: I understand that. You have just so much money coming in. I can't help that.

What I'm looking at here is this. The reporting is done. We do the reporting right now on an annual basis. What's really important, I think, to most of the electorate is the election results on the election contributions, which is something totally different. Although people do consider and want to see what the party is raising, I'm not sure there's a great desire on the part of the public to get that information every three months versus seeing it on an annual basis. I haven't seen any data to support that.

There is another problem that's created here, and that is a bureaucratic problem. If we just take the four parties that are represented in this House – and those four parties have 87 constituencies; I just make the presumption – we're looking at just under 1,400 filings annually. That's a lot of filings. Elections Alberta is going to have to deal with that, process that, and they will have to be funded to deal with that. That's a lot of filings. That's not even counting the smaller parties who are not represented in this Legislature right now, but they do have constituency associations. If you are a constituency that has difficulty with quarterly reporting, the smaller ones will just deregister and register when it comes closer to election time, and you won't see any reporting whatsoever on an annual basis or a quarterly basis. There are ways around every law.

It is important. I do agree with the $250 limit – I like that – so that we get to see that and see who is contributing to the party. I just question the reasonableness of the added paperwork for sort of a more sped-up disclosure process when realistically the annual disclosure process now, in my view, is sufficient. It doesn't burden bureaucratically with the amount of extra paperwork.

Now, one of the things that one of the members said earlier was that most of the parties, particularly at the CA level, unless these very wealthy CAs actually have paid employees – ours are always volunteers. We always search for an accountant for the CFO, put the burden on the accountant. We search the community. It works well because you have somebody who is trained, who understands the process, and having a professional that's a volunteer works to the advantage, I think, of the whole system. Requiring quarterly reports or quarterly disclosure will put an extra burden on those volunteers.

In my riding you're going to see the same thing for quite a while, and then you'll see a blip every now and then when we do a fundraiser. We don't require a lot of money to do an election. You can check my elections return, and you'll see that.

In that vein, to me, it's a lot of unnecessary paperwork for disclosure that's going to be readily apparent on an annual basis. I'm not sure of the necessity of having the quarterly reports or even a biannual reporting when even on the typical accounting basis, looking at balance sheets and income statements – you know, there are updated quarterly reports by major corporations, but we really look forward to the annual report to give us much more detail.

The amount of necessity for contributing to a party – because that's really what this is about. We just want to know who the contributors are. They're not hiding in the sense that they can hide. At year-end we will know. At the election's end we will know. That will be reported. That doesn't change anything. So I'm not sure of the value on the quarterly basis of knowing that Katz wrote a cheque. As much as I want to know that Katz wrote a cheque, that's it, and that's all I want to know. Seeing when it exactly happens in April because it was a March reporting: I'm not sure that's of any great value as long as that information is disclosed and we get to question and harangue the party opposite and try to hold them accountable. That's really the key.

Do we need to make an extra bureaucratic step that I would say for Elections Alberta is significant, roughly 350, 348 filings every quarter that they will have to process and post, 1,400 every year? You know, if we get more parties, then there'll be more constituencies, and they will have to do it. I'm not sure of the value. The information will be available, and it is available today on that annual report, on that annual filing.

If there was some sort of reason, some sort of impending necessity why that information has to be available in April and then in July and, you know, going out each quarter, I could see the validity of requiring quarterly reporting. But all across the party system? I might even agree to it if it was just the main parties alone, but I'm not sure there's a value there either. From where I sit, from the information that I gather from the public, what most of the public wants to know is: "Who's contributing to whom? Can I make an allegation that somebody is trying to influence with money?" We get that information right now on an annual basis. I just don't see the value in making all this extra paperwork for what we're going to find out anyway.

With that, thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you.

I recognize the Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you. Just to reiterate the Member for Rimby-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre's comments, just, say, taking four primary parties, 87 ridings times quarterly, there are 1,392 filings. That's not including some of the parties that aren't doing it, that are not in this House. I mean, the red tape alone on that I think would be a challenge.

As the minister talked about before, about doing things quarterly, I guess I do things a little differently. I pay my property taxes once a year. I make my air seeder payment once a year. I make my tractor payment once a year. That's how I operate. [interjection] My combine, too, Member for Chestermere-Rocky View. As everything is financed at my house, it's nice as a poor farmer, obviously.

My point is that we've got enough red tape. People can figure out how to do this annually. I think that's more than adequate. I'm not sure filing it every quarter is really helping anybody other than making red tape. I mean, as this amendment touches on it, the red tape for volunteer CAs is onerous enough already and getting buy-in from people and stuff.

I'd really ask everybody to seriously think about the striking of subsection (6) on it. To me, it's just too onerous. There isn't a whole lot we'll actually gain out of this. You know, I get the transparency theory of what they're trying to sell on the concept of this, but I really don't think the true intent of that is doing anybody any good.

I think the Justice minister could probably attend to – you know, the paperwork that's done in this province already is onerous enough to most people. I mean, I just watch you taking a file of stuff that gets delivered to you all the time. Heaven forbid that you'd have to sign off on 1,392 filings all the time. Not that that would be your job but somebody else's.

We know that Elections Alberta has enough stuff on their paper trail to do already. When we talk of, you know, some constiencies, it sounded like you had very close contact with one where maybe you weren't getting all your bills and the receipts in on time, and you're taking it to your constituency once just before the filing was due at the end of the year, which, I assume, must have been a situation you were used to or something. For most people it's a challenge to get people to buy in and to do this.

Mr. Hancock: Just at tax time.

Mr. Donovan: Well, it's just at tax time, I guess, possibly.

To get people to buy into the process and to volunteer to begin with in politics, we all know, is a challenge. There are some ridings that are, obviously, strong, and there are some where, you know, it's hard. It goes back to the size of the ridings. Just for my constituency alone, to have a meeting, there are people driving 180 K one way to come to a constituency meeting. Well, I move the meetings around in my riding so it doesn't have to be the same person that drives that far all the time. But to get buy-in and to do that quarterly, if you had the chief financial officer and your president have to sign off on it every time, I just think it's onerous, and I'm really not sure what we gain out of it.

I don't know if the minister would like to touch on if he truly feels this is the red tape that we need in this. I think we're all here to try to make government more transparent and roll through. Really, is quarterly the answer that we really need on this? I guess I'd sure love to hear a lawyer's opinion on what he thinks of it.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Chairperson. I rise to speak in favour of the amendment, very much in favour of the $250 disclosure on the aggregate contribution from a single contributor. I think anything that increases transparency is going to help solve one of the big, big problems that we have in our system right now, and that's low voter turnout and the lack of people that are engaged and the lack of people that are involved.

I also think, though, of the fact of going to quarterly. Volunteers: bless them; it's hard to find enough. It's hard to find ones, especially, that have interest in paperwork and interest in doing this little bit of extra financial disclosure. I am fearful that for no apparent gain from knowing information possibly nine months earlier, we'll be taxing our volunteers. We need to get people more involved in a way that won't allow that to happen.

I would ask to consider supporting this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Chair. I certainly do concur. I like this amendment from Calgary-Buffalo. On subsection (6), I guess, my arguments have been made already quite eloquently, but just one further thing to add. I think that although we have had lots of donation problems and squabbles and things here over these last few years, we're still in a much better situation than in the United States, where perhaps, you know, even one senatorial race would spend more than our whole election in some places. That high sort of financing of democracy in the United States: part of it, I think, we can push back on by making sure that we have low donation rates or rules about how much can be donated but also, I think, by keeping the system as it is in terms of not quarterly reports but annual reports. The reason I'm saying that: it's kind of just something I thought of here now. Part of the way that they track American politics now is by how much money is coming in weekly, right? They'll say that Obama is a hit or this guy is a hit because he's raised so many more millions of dollars in the last few weeks.

8:30

Well, by decreasing the time in which we are submitting reports, I think we might be running the risk of having more analysis being done on who's ahead, who's behind, and so forth and the push to have more donations coming through on a continuous basis, based on people making an analysis of who might be ahead or behind based on the money. We are blessed by not having such a dominant factor of money as in the United States. I mean, it's certainly a problem, and I just don't want for us to go down that road.

The other issue that I wanted to bring up, of course, is the issue of just putting so much pressure on small constituencies and volunteers to do this work. I think that it's just not fair to do that, to have volunteers being charged with such busy work every three months.

Thank you.

The Chair: Other speakers?

Seeing none, we'll call the question on amendment A3.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: Back to the bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I have an amendment that I would like to distribute. The top copy is the original.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: This will be amendment A4, hon. members.

Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. You can see that this is striking out section 17(1) and substituting the following:

- (1) Contributions by any person, corporation, trade union or employee organization to a registered party, registered constituency association or registered candidate shall not exceed $3,000 in a calendar year.

This bill currently amends subsection (5) of section 17 by making minor changes in what counts as a candidate's contribution to his or her own campaign. This amendment changes a different subsection of section 17 in order to place reasonable limits on political contributions. You know, it has been very troublesome. Because Bill 7 is an amendment act we had found it difficult to get at what we believe is the core problem with election accountability in this province, which is to limit corporate and union donations from the political process. We've studied the legislation carefully, and we seem to have a problem.

We've been calling as New Democrats for a ban on union and corporate donations for a very long time. It's part of our party's commitment to making the political process more democratic and fair. Since we can't make that amendment to ban union and corporation donations outright with Bill 7 here this evening, we are making this amendment, as I've just passed out to you, to change the contribution limits in order to begin the process of making our political process more fair and accessible.

The current contribution limit of $30,000 in an election year makes full participation in the funding of the political process virtually impossible for the majority of Albertans. According to Stats Canada the 2010 median income in Alberta was $35,770, so approximately 50 per cent of Albertans were making $35,000 or more. With these numbers on personal income, the majority of Albertans clearly can't even come close to giving those kinds of contribution limits set in the province.

It's been argued by the other side of this House and others around the province that funding the political process is a right and a necessity given the expensive nature of campaigns and politics in general, but if all organizations, Mr. Chair, are subject to the same contribution limits, then all parties will be playing by the same rules and funding campaigns will be a challenge that will be felt equally by all parties.

We've seen other jurisdictions, including the federal government and other provinces as well, pass through significant limits and changes to the political donations, Mr. Chair, and it has resulted, I think, in probably democratizing the process considerably. We make no bones about being willing to forego the union donations, but we do not take corporate donations already. It's like a balance of power or an arms race when we have the détente – right? – that brings the whole process down to a more reasonable level. I mean, not to preclude spending money in a modern campaign with literature and some advertising and so forth, but again not heading down that road which I believe nobody really wants, which is American-style, big-money campaigning.

We've already seen glimpses of that here in the province. We've seen with the $30,000 limit in donations, you know, that some parties can just run away with that – right? – with very wealthy donors or with corporate donations and so forth. By bringing that down, turning the temperature down, so to speak, Mr. Chair, I believe that we would be serving democracy better and seeing maybe even more participation, less cynicism amongst the voters who think that politics is already fixed somehow through big money and so forth, bringing it down to a level that I think regular Albertans can understand and appreciate.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others on amendment A4? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to speak in favour of this amendment. I guess, as a little bit of a background, I believe that corporate and union donations should be banned as a matter of course in this province simply to recognize that it's people who vote, it's people who contribute, and that corporations and unions should not have undue influence over political parties and/or candidates. With that being said, I appreciate the amendment brought by the hon. member in that within the framework of the act itself it's trying to limit the amount that individuals, corporations, and trade unions are allowed to give in this province to a more reasonable limit of $3,000 in a calendar year.

He brought up some very good instances of bodies in Canada, other Legislatures and our federal government, that have been proactive on this file. One, the federal government in around 2004, 2005 brought in limits that I think were eminently reasonable and fostered better democracy, the $1,100 limit per man and woman in this great country, and it forewent the corporations and the unions. I think that was an excellent example of legislation that was written to bring democracy back to the people, the people who get to vote and the people who should be influencing the politicians, not necessarily the corporations and the unions. Another excellent piece of legislation was done by the Manitoba government I believe some 10 years ago, which also forewent contributions by corporations and union members and brought in a more reasonable limit of $3,000 for every individual in the province. That was their limit to give in any calendar year. In my view, that was very progressive legislation.

What kind of bothers me about this government is that oftentimes there is progressive legislation out there that has been written. It's been done, examples of it. Other organizations have commented on the fact that it's more progressive legislation, that it's more realistic, that it eliminates big money from politics and the problems that arise from such. Oftentimes if there's good legislation out there, it would be a reasonable approach for this government to look into it. In my view, I don't see that happening. That begs the question: why? I think the simple answer is: because they realize that it may actually be less advantageous to them.

Being the government in power, they can run leadership dinners and the like that they expect corporations to come to, that they expect unions to go to. Maybe attendance is kept as to whether their corporate contributors are there. Although some hon. members would say that this would never happen in politics, that any influence by corporations or unions on the government does not happen, I live in the real world, Mr. Chair. I understand that these entities can bring much power to bear on governments and have a big say in the day-to-day goings-on. I believe that. If we don't admit that at least to ourselves in this House, I think we'd be denying the obvious, that it does influence decisions and does influence access and the like.

In my view, it would be wise for this province to go forward on limiting those types of contributions, limiting them to a more reasonable form, and this amendment does that. So I will be speaking in favour of it just from the simple common-sense approach that we should try to eliminate money from corporate interests and union interests to the greatest extent possible. This measure goes a long way.

There's another reason. Even if I am wrong in that corporations in this province have easier access to politicians or the powers that be, then I believe it would send a message to Joe and Jane Albertan. It would send a message to them that democracy is not for sale. It would ease their concerns over what they've seen and heard in the papers about illegal donations or the size of donations from various individuals or other entities that lead the average voter to question the process. Oftentimes if the average voter questions the process, they lose faith in the democratic process, they lose faith in us as elected officials. Sometimes we need to bring in legislation to assure them that this is in fact not happening.

On that note, I would encourage everyone to support this amendment. I can see no reason why not. If you look at various published papers out there by various think tanks and the like, many if not all of them agree that money should be limited in some reasonable fashion. This amendment goes a long way to do that, so I'd urge all members to support it and improve the democratic process and ease concerns of the electorate that are out there.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers to this amendment?

I'll call the question on amendment A4.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: Now back to the main bill. Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, it looks like you have another amendment.

Mr. Saskiw: Yes, I do. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: If you'd care to circulate that, hon. member, and we'll let you speak to that in a minute.

That will be for the record, hon. members, A5.

You may proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Mr. Chair, speaking to amendment A5, this is a relatively simple amendment but a very important one. What it does – under the proposed legislation section 51.01(2), essentially, the way the act currently reads is that

(2) If the Chief Electoral Officer is of the opinion that

And it lists three different groups.

(a) a person, corporation, trade union . . .

Et cetera.

(b) a prohibited corporation . . . or

(c) a person, political party, constituency association . . .
has contravened a provision of this Act . . .

the Chief Electoral Officer may serve on the person or entity . . .

[an] administrative penalty . . . or a letter of reprimand.

Our position is that there should be no discretion here. If someone's been found guilty of violating an elections financing act, the Chief Electoral Officer "must serve" those persons.

Then, subsequently, our second amendment is that a copy of that notice or letter must be made public within 30 days. I think it's important at a minimum that when someone's been found guilty, it's publicized and that, secondly, the person is appropriately served. The whole point of having a transparent and open electoral system is that the public knows when a person doesn't comply with the legislation. I think that this amendment is actually consistent with what the government is doing in a subsequent amendment, where they're shining the light on past illegal donations. This is just on a go-forward basis that the Chief Electoral Officer must shed light on it and must make those illegal violations public.

The second part, of course, is adding the requirement that a copy of the notice or letter of reprimand be made public within 30 days, and that's just an easy way for the office to be accountable to the public. It's simply not transparent if the CEO is choosing whether or not to reveal all or any illegal donations. I think, you know, we've heard the mantra from the Premier saying that we want an open and transparent and accountable government. The way to do that is to make sure that if anyone's been found guilty of violating a statute, that person must be served, and it must be made public.

I think this is a very reasonable amendment. I don't know what the counterarguments possibly could be to making something like this more open and transparent and also making it mandatory for the Chief Electoral Officer to do this. I know that I listened to the hon. Justice minister, when he announced this legislation, talking about how it's now going to be mandatory that the Chief Electoral Officer disclose when there's been an illegal donation. This amendment is certainly within the spirit of the Justice minister's words, and I hope that he would strongly consider this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I, too, will speak in favour of this amendment. It seems to allow for the Election Accountability Amendment Act to be more open and transparent when the Chief Electoral Officer finds a violation that has happened under this legislation. It should read: must serve. That would serve a dual purpose. The person who violated the act would know in what form or manner they had done it and would know that it was a serious enough ramification that they would change their processes in place or attempt to do things better if they knew they were going to get a summons.

Let's face it: common sense dictates with the second revision of this that if it was going to go public, people don't like that. They would strive to do their jobs better and would strive to ensure that they followed the act as well as possible. In my view, it serves a purpose, and it would serve to have people better perform the jobs that they are occupying.

I think it's a good amendment and would urge all members to support it in kind. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Chair. I just wanted to briefly speak in favour of this amendment as well. I think it's really important for the Chief Electoral Officer to be compelled to follow up on circumstances where individuals or parties disobey the election laws. We need to be sending letters. You know "may" instead of "must" allows some deliberation by the CEO, which I don't think is necessarily within his purview. We have clear laws surrounding our elections. The whole idea here is to have an open electoral system, right? The public needs to know that when people don't comply, then something will happen. It's not particularly transparent, I don't think, for the CEO to be choosing whether or not we are the ones who set the parameters by which these things should be – I think that this particular, very simple change from "may" to "must" is a must here right now.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak in favour of this amendment. What good is a law if it's not enforced? What's the purpose of a law if we don't enforce it? We're passing a bill here that is intended to strengthen our election process, and we're not changing any of the penalties in this amendment. We're not overburdening the system with any kind of offensive language. What we're simply stating is that when there's a wrongdoing, a violation of the act or the regulation, the Chief Electoral Officer must serve, whether it be a penalty within the jurisdiction of the Chief Electoral Officer or a letter of reprimand acknowledging that, say, someone actually in good faith made an honest mistake and filed or donated incorrectly or violated the act and is in contravention.

It should be enforced. This is what we have been talking about, I think, as we've spoken to the bill. What this does is that it puts the duty on our regulator to enforce the law. We will make public those people who violate it, and that information will become public within a reasonable amount of time.

I'd be really interested in how this does not fit with the intent of this legislation and how it doesn't strengthen it. I don't see where it weakens it. I don't see where it puts any type of burden on the regulator, which is the Chief Electoral Officer. What we're asking the Chief Electoral Officer or the office itself to do is to do its job.

If people are identified accordingly by either a letter of reprimand or a penalty – because the whole purpose of a penalty is to make sure that this doesn't happen again. That is the so-called consequence of any type of violation. So if we leave it to the Chief Electoral Officer that they may or may not enforce the law, I think that puts an unfair burden on the Chief Electoral Officer and an unfair burden to be accused of improprieties of favouring one party over another if that were the case. But if the law was specific in the sense that it said, "You must serve these violators either with the penalty as you found or you must serve them with a letter of reprimand showing that they committed a wrongdoing," then that settles the issue. It's applied equally. It's applied fairly.

It doesn't change the fact of whether someone has been found in violation of the act. That's not the issue here. The issue here is: what is the duty of the actual regulator? What is the duty of the Chief Electoral Officer, when it goes to review these situations, to the public? It's the public that is of significant concern here because it's the public confidence that we want to increase not decrease. We do not want to hide people who violate the act or violate the regulations. We don't want to unfairly burden them with punishment, but that's not part of this amendment.

The amendment is specific in the sense that it just says that the Chief Electoral Officer must serve and must do it in a reasonable amount of time. The jurisdiction to determine whether it's a letter of reprimand or whether it's an administrative fine hasn't changed one iota. That is still within the purview of the Chief Electoral Officer to decide whether it's warranted to actually have an administrative penalty or to issue a letter of reprimand.

It doesn't change the fact that we're talking about a defined wrongdoing regardless and that we're dealing with an issue with the intent to strengthen the public's confidence that we are going to enforce our election laws. It eliminates any kind of accusation of bias whatsoever on the part of — well, I shouldn't say whatsoever because if there's always a letter of reprimand, somebody will argue that somebody should be fined. You can't get away from that, but at least we are enforcing our laws. At least we are enforcing our rules and our regulations, and no one is exempt from that. I think that's important. That shows the public that we're serious about our election laws and that if you violate that, you will be held accountable. That accountability may just be the letter of reprimand, or it may be an administrative fine, but you don't get off because of: "I'd rather not do that. I'd rather not fine you."

I'll tell you what this does eliminate: any kind of inconsistency over a period of time, particularly in a change of the Chief Electoral Officer's position, where people who make the same type of violation find themselves maybe subject to administrative penalty, and then all of a sudden people are no longer subject to that, yet they've committed the same offence. It will not change the law or the regulation. It is still an offence. All we're saying here is that the Chief Electoral Officer must serve, must enforce the law however that law is defined. The law is defined accordingly. The Chief Electoral Officer has that ability. They must disclose that in a reasonable amount of time to the public.

Now, that would be consistent with this quarterly reporting of finances. Here we're overburdening these constituencies of the parties with quarterly reporting, but do we want to make it public information if somebody violates the act to whatever degree? This would make it mandatory that within 30 days of the violation that information becomes publicly available. In my view, that is more important, I think, in the public's eye in establishing confidence in the system, that violators are held accountable, and it would deter violations if it was viewable that people were held accountable. I think that's significant in strengthening our elections act and our election processes.

Thank you very much.

9:00

The Chair: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd also like to speak in favour of this amendment. Just to reiterate a little bit of what the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre had talked about, "may serve" is just a little too loose. It doesn't create action on behalf of the CEO. It still leaves the CEO able to act or not act, and I think we need to remove that. I think the fact that that person is in that position of power is that he is there to act upon situations like this. We rely on him to act when there is an indiscretion.

The wording also allows for too many options. You know, he "may serve" or "must serve." If he may serve, sometimes he might serve the purpose of issuing it and have some kind of conclusion. The next time he might not. There is no consistency at all.

I'm always in favour of any amendment that's going to close loopholes, and I think this would help strengthen this bill. "Must serve" also clarifies the rules that no matter who the CEO is, because this individual would normally change over a period of time, this individual has the same set of rules. I think that's important because if you put a different person in place, who is to say that they're going to operate under the same guidelines and principles that his predecessor did? If we create rules that are clear and concise, I think that creates an easier working environment for that individual to perform to the utmost of their abilities.

The 30 days' notice also creates the accountability factor. The public will know that action is being taken, and the action is followed up on on behalf of the Alberta voters. I think that's the important part here: it's answering to the Alberta voters. That's who we want to try and keep informed through this whole process. By reporting this within 30 days, we are showing that there is consistency on the actions and that violations will also be very consistent in how they're publicly displayed. If an individual is offside for doing A, B, C, somebody else will be held accountable for the same reasons if they do A, B, C again. And they should. There should be consistency across the board on behalf of those who violate. I think that's very important.

The fact that we're saying that the individual must and that they also must make this accountable, I think the public will have a lot more confidence in this bill to know that there is consistency in it, it's transparent, and no matter who is sitting in the position of CEO, they have a very straightforward and realistic set of rules and guidelines to follow, which they can look back to if they replace someone else that was in there before.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just want to rise very briefly to point out that this amendment is actually quite unnecessary and redundant. In the provision under section 62 of the proposed act, 5.2(3):

Findings and decisions and any additional information that the Chief Electoral Officer considers to be appropriate shall be published on the Chief Electoral Officer's website in the following circumstances.

Then it goes on to outline what those circumstances are. There's no question that the findings of the Chief Electoral Officer on an investigation are to be made public on the website, so all this adds is within 30 days. That may or may not be an appropriate addition, but there's no question that findings will be public.

With respect to the "may serve" or "must serve" what that does is that by replacing "may serve" with "must serve," it takes the discretion out of the Chief Electoral Officer's hands in circumstances where they may have done an investigation, they may have found a technical breach, a mistake, there's a finding that the law has been breached, but it's not something that is deserving of sanction. There are those circumstances that may happen from time to time. They happen in the criminal law. They happen in other circumstances. To leave out any discretion means that people will be served a letter of reprimand or an administrative penalty must be served. One of those two leaves out the other option for the Chief Electoral Officer to make a finding that there has been a problem, to report that finding, because he's required to report it, but not actually to levy a sanction where he doesn't feel a sanction is warranted.

Mr. Saskiw: Mr. Chair, I'm not following what the Government House Leader is saying. If the language is that the Chief Electoral Officer produce something on his website when he considers it to be appropriate, that is clearly discretionary, again.

Mr. Hancock: No. He has to publish decisions and findings and such further information he deems appropriate.

Mr. Saskiw: That he considers appropriate.

Mr. Chair, this is just another example. If there's been a violation of the act, there should never be any wiggle room language like something that the Chief Electoral Officer considers to be appropriate or in this case something the Chief Electoral Officer may do. This is particularly important. We have already found that the Chief Electoral Officer has found, I think, over 40 instances of illegal donations made in this province. Yet under the proposed legislation it's still discretionary on whether he has to make it public.

I'd like to refer the member to even, for example, 51.02. That's page 68 of Bill 7. I'll start with 51.02(2): a disclosure under 5.2(3)(a) may be made with respect to an alleged contribution. Again, that's consistent with what was under 51.01. Under the new law the Chief Electoral Officer does not have to make public illegal donations made in the province. That is the case under the current legislation. In both instances they may.

I'm not sure what the hon. member is referring to on the other page. If the hon. member would please refer to that section, I'd appreciate it.

Mr. Hancock: On page 42, under section 62 amending section 5.2(3):

Findings and decisions and any additional information that the Chief Electoral Officer considers to be appropriate shall be published on the Chief Electoral Officer's website in the following circumstances:

- (a) subject to section 51.02(2), if a penalty is imposed or a letter of reprimand is issued under section 51 or 51.01.

"Shall be published."

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The hon. member is referring to section 62, amending 5.2(3). Again, I think that the language there, "considers to be appropriate," still provides wiggle room. The other thing is that it's contradictory to the subsequent section.

If it is redundant, as the hon. member argues, I don't think there's any reason to reject this amendment. If there's ambiguity in this section, I think – it's clearly ambiguous. One section says "may" when it references the same section. One other section says, "considers to be appropriate shall." I'm not sure why there would be any reason not to.

I would also refer you – I think this is maybe getting to the thrust of the matter – to 51.02, the retrospective disclosure of illegal donations, that clearly says "may." If you look at 5.2(3), it says, "considers to be appropriate." It's confusing. If the intent of this government is actually to definitively publish any illegal donation, I would suggest that we simply amend this legislation and make it "must."

Mr. Anglin: To the hon. member of the opposition, I don't agree with the interpretation of that section 62, but if it is as you say it is, then what this amendment would do is provide consistency because if it was mandatory that it be published and there was no discretion to publish it, then what this amendment will do is make this section consistent with the previous section, which would make it mandatory that the penalty be served on the individual or the entity and that that notice would also be brought forward in a sufficient time frame. That would actually bring consistency.

Although, going back to my original statement, there is discretion in what was just read where it says, where the Chief Electoral Officer "considers to be appropriate." That "considers to be appropriate" is, in my mind, discretionary, and I think that legally that would be discretionary. What this amendment would do to the actual violations is that it would create a consistency right across the spectrum which says: if there is a violation, then that violator will be served, and there will either be a penalty or a letter, and that will then be available to the public within 30 days. That would be consistent with at least posting on the Internet or on the website or however they post it. What it would eliminate is any confusion about the matter. The mandate that they shall be served is prescriptive, and it will make sure that there is consistency and less ambiguity rather than more confusion.

In my mind, the argument that it is redundant, I don't see the redundancy. What I see is that this amendment is bringing forth prescriptive language that makes it absolutely clear that once a violation has been established, it is mandatory that that violator be served, whether it's an individual or an entity, and that however it is determined, whether it is a penalty or whether it is just a letter, at least then there is consistency with the enforcement of the law, which is the whole purpose of investigating, and when there is wrongdoing found, the idea of penalties is to serve as some sort of – I'm lost for words for a second.

An Hon. Member: Deterrent.

Mr. Anglin: Deterrent – I was looking for it; I found it – so we don't have these offences: that's the whole purpose behind it. A deterrent is also the letter. Nobody wants their name out there that they violated either the act or the rules and the regulations under the act, so we have consistency. That, to me, is what this amendment brings forward, consistency.

Just backtracking to the hon. member's statement, if it is as he says, then this amendment would be then consistent with that previous section he referred to.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Yeah. Just quickly. Thank you, Mr. Chair. Just the way it's worded, it just gives me concern that it still allows for some subjective decision-making rather than objective, and that's just, you know, what I'm picking up on. I don't claim to be an expert, but, you know, when you create these areas for wiggle room, again, there are going to be people who are going to be unhappy if somebody actually makes a decision that they feel wasn't right. So, again, if you can remove that subjectivity and create more of the objectivity that I think this bill is trying to create, for normal, you know, regular street people like me, I think it would go a long ways. But I do thank you very much for the clarification.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I don't wish to prolong this debate unnecessarily, but it's clear that the Chief Electoral Officer receives a complaint or otherwise comes into information which would suggest that there is an investigation, makes an investigation, and then as a result of that investigation determines whether or not an offence has been committed. Now, it's clear under the section that we're talking about, on page 66 and if you go over to 67, that the Chief Electoral Officer has some decisions to make. I mean, he's in the nature of a judge in that case and can make certain decisions. At the bottom of page 66, subsection (4), "in determining the amount of an administrative penalty . . . to be paid or whether a letter of reprimand is to be issued" – in other words, does this offence warrant anything? – then he takes into account subsections (a) to (g).

It's clear that he has that ability to make that determination. First of all, has an offence been committed? Secondly, what's the context of that, and what is the appropriate response to it? The response could be: an offence has been committed, and we'll report that. But it wasn't wilful; it wasn't any of these things. Therefore, no further sanction is necessary other than publishing that it has happened. Or a letter of reprimand may be appropriate, or an administrative penalty, a sanction of more severity, might be appropriate. Those are the tools that are in the CEO's hands, and that's clear in this section. It's also clear if you go back to page 42. There's no ambiguity. "Findings and decisions and any additional information that the Chief Electoral Officer considers to be appropriate shall be published . . . subject to section 51.02(2)," which is the time limitation of three years.

It doesn't have anything to do with the decision piece in 51.01. Section 51.02 is the time limitation period, which is consistent with the other time limitations. I presume that we'll get into that discussion at another point. Section 51.02 is simply the time limitation. Subject to the time limitations when he makes a finding or decision, he needs to publish it. He can also publish any additional information that he thinks is appropriate. The two sections are clear, and what we're trying to accomplish is clear. It's an entirely appropriate way to go.

Mr. Saskiw: I'd like to thank the Government House Leader for that. The issue, I guess, is that if we look at some of the comments that were made, we're going back – there's been an inclination that we will go back three years on any illegal donations, and 51.02(2) is permissive. The section he referred to on page 42 says: "subject to." So right now under law the Chief Electoral Officer need not disclose any violations in the past three years. I don't think that was the intent. I know that the Justice minister during the introduction of the bill made it very clear that those illegal donations going back three years would be made public. Right now 51.02 is permissive, and the provision that he referred to under section 62(3) is also permissive.

The Chair: Are there other speakers?

Mr. Hancock: I hesitate to continue this back and forth, but 51.02 simply puts in some time frame, "may not be served more than 3 years after the date on which the alleged contravention occurs," and 51.02(2) "a disclosure . . . may be made with respect to an alleged contravention that occurred before the coming into force." So, it may be made, with respect to disclosure, before the coming into force of this section. Normally if you didn't say that, you might not know that you had that authority, but then when you read that with the other one that says that when he makes a decision of wrongdoing he must publish, it's very clear.

The Chair: Other speakers?

Mr. Saskiw: I'd like to make a motion on this amendment that there be a one-minute bell.

The Chair: Okay.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Chair: We'll call the question, then, on amendment A5.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Chair: We'll go back to the main bill. Are there other speakers? The Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I, too, will move another amendment here on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

The Chair: Wonderful. Thank you. You'll send us the original along with enough copies to be distributed, and make sure you keep one. This amendment will be A6, hon. members.

Hon. member, you may proceed to speak to the amendment.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. This amendment by the Member for Edmonton-Centre moves that the Election Accountability Amendment Act be amended in section 3(b) in the proposed section 4(2.1) by striking out "the registered political parties that are represented in the Legislative Assembly" and substituting "any registered political party."

It goes without saying here that I think this is a pretty self-explanatory amendment. It represents the fact that here in Alberta there are a great many political parties not necessarily referenced by their electing a member to this Assembly. There are some parties – at the top of my head: the Alberta Social Credit Party, the Alberta Party, the Communist Party and a few other organizations – out there that are active political parties moving slowly but surely in having their voice heard in the democratic process.

If we're going to have a bill that's going to be an Election Accountability Amendment Act, it should reference the fact that political parties are out there waiting for their opportunity to elect members and go to government. I think there is a prime example in the current government. It didn't always have a member in this honourable House, nor did the Official Opposition. I'm sure at times the Alberta Liberals have not had a member in this House.

Mr. Eggen: We've always been here, yeah.

Mr. Hehr: Actually, the New Democrats have always been here, at least in spirit, if not maybe in person.

Nevertheless, I think this is an amendment that really reflects the diverse nature of the Alberta political system. One never knows what will happen in the future as to who or what political organizations start up and try to add to the political debate in this province.

That's the nature of my amendment, Mr. Chair, and I'd urge all members to support it.

The Chair: Other speakers to the amendment? The Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. Briefly, I certainly concur with my colleague's comments on this. I think it's both fair and taking the long view that we should be including any registered political party in this. I mean, these things come and go, and certainly we would like to keep the fluidity that we have in our Alberta system with new parties emerging and rising over time and not be stuck in the channel of parties that just carry on and on. I think this is a very simple, straightforward amendment, that I will be supporting on behalf of the Alberta New Democrats.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise in support of this amendment. Far be it from me or anyone else, I think, to inhibit the Chief Electoral Officer from doing their job. We're talking about just substituting a very benign language, from the political parties that are represented in this Assembly to all registered political parties which fall under the jurisdiction of the Chief Electoral Officer. I mean, we can go on and on with examples of why the Chief Electoral Officer should or may out of necessity have to meet with a political party for whatever reason.

I'd be really interested in the objection of the sponsor of this bill as to why this isn't something that is acceptable as giving flexibility to the Chief Electoral Officer and allowing the Chief Electoral Officer to do their job. I don't see that we're impacting this bill in any way other than giving just a little bit more flexibility to it and, even then, not a whole lot of flexibility. This is just straightening up some language to make sure that the Chief Electoral Officer has that ability by legislation to meet with any registered party in the duties of their job.

With that, thank you very much.

Mr. Hancock: Question.

The Chair: Question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I have a modest proposal here that I will pass to you. I think the original is on the top.

Thank you.

The Chair: This will be amendment A7.

Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chair. As you can see, my amendment is taking a look at section 44.94(7) and putting in a section that would say:

(8) Contributions to a registered leadership contestant shall not exceed $3000 in the aggregate in any campaign period.

This bill currently makes no changes to the leadership contest on the issue of contribution limits, and there's a whole section on how contribution rules are applied to leadership contests, nothing specifically about limits, though. We thought that this amendment might pick up where Bill 7 left off when it comes to leadership contests and, in fact, places a cap on leadership contributions of $3,000. This is not in sum total but a single contribution.

Currently Alberta's election laws place no limits on donations to leadership contestants, and we find it troubling that leadership contests are quite apart and autonomous from Alberta's election legislation now under the Election Act and the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. Bill 7 tries to bring leadership contests under some semblance of the basic rules that govern general elections.

In the spirit of that, this amendment makes sure that contribution limits are also set at a reasonable limit to encourage participation and democracy in the process of electing parties' political leaders, the same rationale that we brought forward when talking about the elimination of union and corporate donations and lowering the individual donation limits from the $30,000 that we currently have. The Chief Electoral Officer, I believe, as well made recommendations to the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General to ensure that leadership contests were governed by election financing rules. This amendment simply extends that recommendation to contribution limits. It's very logical and eminently reasonable, I think, Mr. Chair.

The $3,000 contribution limit is in line with some other provinces such as Manitoba, which has set contribution limits. Manitoba's election financing laws, as it happens, have been considered as reasonably democratic and fair when compared to other jurisdictions such as Alberta, which places no limits on contributions to these campaigns. I think that, similar to a lack of a reasonable limit in general political contributions to parties and candidates, the fact that leadership contests don't have contribution limits means that certain individual party members who do not have the financial ability to contribute competitively in the leadership process are thus diminished, right? This limit on leadership contest contributions will, I think, level the field to a great degree and will encourage maybe more leadership contestants to reach out to more supporters and thus create a more democratic field in which these leadership contests should be played.

Mr. Chair, I think that my proposal is clear.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize first the Minister of Justice and then the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffer.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much. I'll keep my comments brief as we're getting a lot of progress here. I just wish to correct the record. The Member for Edmonton-Calder was talking about the Chief Electoral Officer's recommendations. The Chief Electoral Officer made no recommendations as to contribution limits with respect to leadership contests. He did recommend that there be a disclosure over $250. We've accepted that recommendation. We've also accepted 90 of his 101 recommendations, Mr. Chair. As we move forward, we want to keep this away from becoming a partisan document, and that's why we followed his recommendations so closely.

I do note that in last year's PC race five of six candidates decided to disclose everything. There was a $5,000 limit imposed by the party. I also believe that in the Wildrose leadership just before the last election the Wildrose leader disclosed her donations. I would therefore suggest that the Chief Electoral Officer is correct, that we can impose these new regulations, but at the same time this is also an internal party matter, and we need to respect that, the internal structures of all the major parties, in fact all of the parties' leadership selection processes throughout this province.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I actually got a little bit of a chuckle out of the hon. Solicitor General's comments there stating that he seemingly seems to have to wait for the head of our elections to make a recommendation before he can act. To me, that was a telling statement and one that I hope he doesn't continue to follow. If he sees an opportunity to increase openness, transparency, or to bring better democracy to this great province, I hope he's not waiting for the Chief Electoral Officer to make those recommendations. If he knows of some, he should be making them and not merely relying on a member who is appointed by our Legislature and the like. He is the minister and should not abrogate his responsibility in this regard, and he should be moving forward boldly where he sees fit regardless of whether the Chief Electoral Officer says so or not.

In any event, back to the amendment. I see this amendment as being a very good one. If we go back to the concept that I believe happens, that money influences politics, that by human nature it allows not our better angels to guide the process, I believe limiting leadership contestants to $3,000 in aggregate from any one person is a very good move. To me, I don't buy the argument that some tried to put forth that money has no influence in this game. If they take that view, I believe they're being unbelievably naive.

In my view, we should look to limit the amount of influence any one individual, any one corporation, or any one union can have on any member of the House and, in particular, leadership contestants to run this province and/or be a member of one of the opposition parties. It really doesn't matter to me. There should be strict limits enforced and the recognition that no one should have a pipeline to the Premier or an opposition leader of any party. It should be based on the more essential, egalitarian concepts of fairness and what is seen as right.

I get back to the principle of Joe and Jane Electorate. You know, there's a sense out there that politicians can be bought, can be influenced by money. In my view, it's not necessarily right of Joe and Jane Albertan to state that, but it is the truth, okay? We should in all contests try and eliminate money from politics where we can. I think this amendment to limit leadership campaign contributions to $3,000 is a good one in that regard. I think it is one that would make leadership contestants seek out money from a variety of sources and individuals and allow for more competitive campaigns. As well, no one candidate could simply lock up a certain amount of donations from a certain sector or industry or the like and have made a whole bunch of promises to that industry, corporation, or the like and get an unfair advantage in the leadership race and then also be beholden to that industry or corporation for future promises.

I believe that has happened before, Mr. Chair. I believe it in my heart, and I believe that anyone who has sat on the government side of the House has seen that influence happen before their eyes. If they would admit that and sort of see that this is a good amendment to try and limit that undue influence that may be present with large donations to leadership campaigns.

In any event, I commend the Member for Edmonton-Calder for making this amendment, and I urge all members to support it.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll be brief. Four points, I think, in support of this. I think that it's a good amendment. Limiting the donations to $3,000 is a good idea. It levels the playing field and removes the potential for the appearance, at least, of buying undue influence and easy access to the successful leadership candidate. Third, it can provide increased confidence in the process to the people at large, particularly the party members that would be participating in the vote for their leadership candidate, and it may encourage broader participation financially as well as being involved in the process itself.

I think, all in all, it's a worthwhile amendment, and I hope that the people over there might see the light and hear the voice. Thanks.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise in support of this amendment. I'm not sure the $3,000 figure is the correct figure, but I'm going to support this amendment because there needs to be some sort of limit on what the contributions can be. If history has taught us anything, this has been an issue, going back a number of leadership races, that has been a point of contention. The argument that individuals might seek to unduly influence a leadership race is a valid argument. It's been leveled at numerous leadership campaigns in the past, and without any kind of limits it will continue to be leveled at leadership races. This is a good way to address that issue.

Whether or not the $3,000 figure is a correct figure, that I don't know. But I do know that if we take steps to actually not just strengthen the process but to make sure that the democratic process is respected in the sense that we have a rule here or a piece of legislation that prevents something – in the case of the allegation we've just seen recently with the Katz Group, the allegations that certain individuals wanted to influence a system. Whether that allegation is correct or not, it is the presumption in the public, and it's the black eye that we suffer from that presumption, whether it's accurate or not. By limiting the amount of contributions, it does set a cap, and it does help to strengthen the system and, I think, make for a stronger democratic process.

With that, I urge members to support this motion.

The Chair: Other speakers on amendment A7?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A7 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have another amendment to put forward with the requisite copies.

The Chair: That'll be A8.

Hon. member, you may proceed with amendment A8.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This is a very, very simple amendment but a very, very important one. This is where the rubber hits the road. What this amendment does is that it amends section 51.02, which makes a retrospective amendment to the legislation which allows the Chief Electoral Officer to go back three years and make public any illegal donation. Unfortunately, even under this act it's only three years from the date of coming into force of this legislation, so by the time this comes into force, a bunch of illegal donations that have been found by the Chief Electoral Officer will have expired.

This amendment makes it go back seven years, and the reason for that is that we've found and the Chief Electoral Officer has decided on numerous cases of illegal donations going to a certain political party. These are not allegations. There have been findings by the Chief Electoral Officer of illegal donations going to a certain political party, yet right now this is kept secret. We don't know what the findings were, whether they've been repaid, what the penalties were. It's shocking, quite frankly, shocking and appalling that in a modern democracy a party can illegally solicit and accept illegal donations – illegal donations – that actually have been found to be illegal, but the political party doesn't have to make that public. That is wrong, Mr. Chair. No other democracy does that.

You know, there's a opportunity here for the government to accept this amendment. We've seen very, very recently, in fact, an example of where this amendment would come into play. We found that a former executive of the Calgary health region had expenses, put money into partisan political purposes and had it reimbursed by Calgary health services. Clearly illegal, Mr. Chair. Clearly, clearly illegal. Under the current legislation, if you can believe it, despite it being completely illegal, the Chief Electoral Officer has no obligation to make that finding public, to make the determination of the penalty public, to make the determination of whether the monies have been repaid public. It's absolutely shocking.

If the government decides not to accept this very straightforward amendment to go back seven years for whenever the Chief Electoral Officer has made a finding of wrongdoing – this is not a case of making new offences; this is an actual case where the Chief Electoral Officer has found illegal donations in this province. If this amendment is not accepted, one can only surmise that this is a deliberate attempt to cover up previous illegal donations. There's no other explanation here. If you believe in transparency and if someone has made an illegal donation, why should that not be made public? Why should that not be made public?

You know, it's not a case of record keeping. This is an instance where we've already actually had a press release from the Chief Electoral Officer saying that he has found 48 cases of illegal donations. How could that not be made public? What kind of democratic deficits are there in this province? This is the only province that does this in any western democracy not just Canada. No other western democracy would keep secret a case of illegal donations that have been found. It is absolutely shocking.

The inevitable question here is: what are you hiding? I know that the Justice minister spoke, and he said there's no smoking gun. Well, if there's no smoking gun, disclose it. Is this a deliberate attempt by this government to cover up illegal donations, some of which have clearly been made by the Premier's sister in her capacity as an executive for the Calgary health region?

Mr. Chair, I just find that this is an obvious amendment. If this isn't accepted, it's just shocking, quite frankly, that we will know going forward that we have an instance of the Chief Electoral Officer finding illegal donations, but they will forever be kept secret. They will forever be kept secret because of this government's position. How can anyone actually defend a position where illegal donations have been made, public dollars, taxpayer dollars have gone toward political purposes, but that is not made public? The penalty for that is not made public, and whether those funds have been repaid has not been made public. How can anyone with any integrity actually defend that position?

I hope and I urge that we have a democracy here in Alberta, where this very, very basic accountability provision is accepted.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Certainly, I concur with the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. I think that extending Bill 7 retroactively to seven years, not three years, would capture a lot more of the illegal donations made since the end of 2005. It's a reasonable time frame as records, I think, generally get destroyed in different places after seven years. You know, just because the CAs don't have to keep records past three years doesn't mean that this evidence is not relevant. We know of many cases where cheques might be illegally cashed, whether or not they know about that. Any problems because of a lack of party or CA records can be taken into consideration, but it's still not an excuse to just pave it over with law, right?

It's clear that we know that we've seen illegality, alleged and proven, past this date. I think it's reasonable to extend it back seven years. The whole idea that, well, if you don't have limitations, then it calls into question the whole viability of the law: you know, we always put limitations on different aspects of our data, but I think this seven years is eminently reasonable, Mr. Chair.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise in support of this amendment. I understand that the hon. members get insulted when the issue of some of these illegal donations from one of the Chief Electoral Officers is brought forward. They get insulted when allegations are made in respect to relations to the Premier. But what this appears to be is a way to avoid this and to get around this.

All I want to say to the hon. members on the other side of the House is that if it is as you say it is and there's no wrongdoing, then this is a moot point. Seven years should never be an issue. It is one statute of limitations. But if you have something to hide, then you cannot go back seven years. That is, bluntly, just the way it's going to be perceived in the public. So here we have an amendment that says that we will go back to the previous findings, and that would be subject to this law, this act that we are passing. If we only say that we put this limitation to three years, when this goes into force, then what we're doing is subjecting this House to the criticism of the public that there's something to hide. If the hon. members do not like that, that is exactly what's going to happen as a direct result.

I support the amendment to include the seven-year statute of limitations here for the notice of administrative penalty but to limit that so that it prevents those numerous allegations that have been made and those numerous findings, which are not allegations but findings of the Chief Electoral Officer. To me that's disrespectful of the public, and that's disrespectful of the process. People need to be held accountable, and so be it.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I speak in favour of this amendment. I think it's a critical amendment. I think it's one that ought to be embraced by almost all, if not all, of the members across the floor. It's a chance to have the slate wiped clean. It should appeal to the hon. members across the floor who have nothing to hide but are being found guilty by association and tarred by the same brush of guilt.

The public at large will feel that the only reason for this amendment to be rejected by the governing party is that they must have many embarrassing donations that they need to hide. If they don't have anything to hide, then why not support the amendment? But if we and the public at large are wrong, then here is your opportunity to prove it and restore trust or show publicly why the government can't be trusted and is as corrupt as we've been telling people.

Just because you can defeat this amendment doesn't mean that it's ethical to do so.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, rise to speak in favour of the motion. It seems logical that in retrospect if we can look back three years, we should be able to look back seven. We're not putting any extra onus on constituency associations for record keeping. It's just that if the Chief Electoral Officer happens to come across something, he will have the power to investigate back seven years.

As the hon. member mentioned earlier, we have heard of up to 48 instances of wrongdoing that could get overlooked or basically missed with this law. At the very least, the fact that the monies raised – and the allegations were made – should have the chance to be repaid and should have the chance to be returned at least to a level playing field.

You know, as I mentioned the last time I rose, there's a lot of concern to have an open, transparent process where our public is engaged, want to be involved as voters, as volunteers, and as candidates. The more that we have the opportunity to make these instances in the past – and I think in the past it's to retrospectively shine the light on them so that they are dealt with – that will put some accountability in the system that is much required. Again, I am in favour of making this a seven-year amendment as opposed to only the three years that it is now.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to this bill, to any amendment. I'll try and strike a little bit different tone but try to make some similar points. The Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012: I would love to believe that the government proceeded with the best interests in mind and truly wanted to reform the way things are done and make them better.

Proceeding with that thought, I think the reason that this amendment was put forward was so that we can get to the bottom of what we believe to be out there right now. Regardless of what side we sit on, if there are up to 50 cases of illegal donations out there, it's our duty to make sure that all of those cases are investigated. Maybe somebody could rise and assure me that that's going to be the case, in which case, you know, I think I would rest a little easier. I think everybody would.

Our fear is that if these cases go back beyond three years and are currently in the queue, they won't be investigated and it won't be made public. Those people that are guilty will just get away scot-free, and the public won't be aware of what's happened. You run the risk of, you know, people not being accountable for their mistakes, and you run the risk of people saying that government didn't take the time to investigate known cases. That's the problem.

Going seven years – I mean, I guess you could've picked five. You could've picked six. I suppose if you would have picked five, you'd suggest that maybe we would have said: well, we can't support five; we've got to go with 10. That's sort of what I'm seeing here over the last six weeks, the way things seem to work.

In general, my biggest concern in looking at this is that cases that are in the queue, those that we know have donated illegally, won't be investigated and won't be made public. I think that's the motivation to make sure that we go back a little bit further on the subject, looking at the amendment and making all of the cases public.

I think it's fair to say that sometimes, Mr. Chair, some of the cases of illegal donations are indeed innocent. I believe that. People make mistakes. Unfortunately, when those cases are made public, you know, those people have to answer questions that maybe they shouldn't have to answer. The problem is that if we make an exception and don't make all of that public – we would be wiser to risk letting the public judge those that are mistakes and, hopefully, understand those that are honest mistakes. We would be wiser to do that than err on the other end and let those that have made serious mistakes get away with it and not be investigated and not make the public aware.

That is our biggest concern. You know, it is and always should be about full disclosure. In the last couple of months or even during the last election campaign – we all fought very hard to be here regardless of what party we're representing – you wouldn't have to go very far to see that the public has an appetite to see that government is doing things above board and government is going through the proper rules and regulations to make sure that there are no unfair advantages given.

What the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills here is proposing is reasonable. You can have a problem with the number of three to seven. I would say that if we would just ensure that we would investigate all cases of illegal donations that we're aware of or that come forward, you know, I'd be incredibly happy. I think we owe that to the public in terms of full disclosure.

Did we say that the Chief Electoral Officer, Mr. Chair, had 48 cases before him? It's not like we get a case, you know, every three, four, five, six months, and it's easy to defend or make an excuse or an exception for. We're talking about 48 cases before the Chief Electoral Officer, nearly 50 cases of alleged illegal activity to be investigated. Now, that's a serious number, whether I'm sitting here as a member of this Legislature on the opposite side of the government or not. If I sat on that side, I'd want that investigated, and I bet many members do. What it comes down to for us and should for all of us is so that we can look the people in the eye that put us here and say that we're doing all we can to make sure that we're transparent, we're accountable, and more importantly we're holding those accountable who make mistakes and try and abuse the process.

I would also say that I don't believe, as some members on the government side have spoken to on this amendment, not necessarily on this amendment but on the issue in general, the government is always aware of things as they are occurring, and the onus might not always need to be on them to provide every piece of documentation and receipt, et cetera, et cetera. But in these cases when we have them right in front of us, it's our duty to investigate them. Should this bill get put into legislation, the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012, and us not have the ability to go and investigate these known cases, these illegal donations, then that's a problem. There's nobody here or nobody outside of here that would suggest we should do that.

That's why I rise with great pride hopefully striking a better tone and suggesting that I will support this amendment wholeheartedly. Mr. Chair, as always, it's a pleasure to be able to voice my opinion.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We're all here for the right reasons, I've said numerous times, and I think this one just goes back to that I don't think we're adding any more extra onus on anybody to do this. It clears everybody of any alleged could-be wrongdoings. They're all alleged, so if you open up the books, you clean them off, there isn't a problem.

You know, the office of the Chief Electoral Officer opened in 1977, so it's been around a while. You know, I was one when it opened up, but we're not here to point out ages on things. The administrator is to be open, fair, and impartial on elections.

Mr. McAllister: You look way older.

Mr. Donovan: Pardon me? I look way older. Yes, thank you.

You know, to embrace the partnership on doing it, to make sure political participants or necessary information accesses comply with the election rules, I think they have all the information there that's available. If the CAs have it destroyed in three years, I guess that doesn't mean that the evidence is moot. We need to look at the case and see if the cheques have been cashed. There is a process. It goes back to just clearing the air in this House all the time, to make sure that there is no Joe Q. Citizen out there that wonders, "Are we doing this wrong or are we doing this right?" and that it's open for everybody.

I think as long as we're showing that we're being open and transparent, which this government has taken a very hard stand on – that's what they want to be, open and transparent. They even named a ministry of it. It's excellent to see that they've taken that step. Now follow through with it. I mean, it's great to say and stuff, but we need to follow through with the process. We're dealing with, you know, an office that has 16 full-time staff members. They've identified things already, so let them follow through with them. If it means going back the seven years, I think it would be something that constituents would be able to say that we're being open and transparent. It proves the government's side that they are being open and transparent. I think there isn't a ratepayer or constituent in this province that wouldn't agree that we are open and transparent.

But how do we get to there? Well, make sure the rules are available so that it can be. You can dig into the situations and line them out so that if there were any thoughts out there that there was anything wrong going on, this clears everybody's name. I think, to me, it's one of the key reasons why I'd be supporting this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will just be very brief. I think this has been debated enough. This is a critical amendment. Of course, if you look at the current provision, it goes back three years from the coming into force of this legislation. Oftentimes it takes years for a piece of legislation to come into force. Under the current amendment it's essentially covering up past indiscretions, sweeping wrongdoing under the rug. It's completely the opposite of open and transparent.

For the new MLAs who are here, this culture of corruption in the past happened when you were not here. I would suggest that we shed a light on it, make it public, and then it's done. Right now, what the case is – and I respect the hon. member's comments earlier, but the Chief Electoral Officer actually issued a press release indicating that he has found tens and tens of cases of illegal donations. It's not alleged; he has found cases of illegal donations. If this amendment is voted down, it's clear that there is some type of intention to cover up past illegal activities.

Mr. Denis: A point of order, Mr. Chair, under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). This member is making a lot of allegations.

Point of Order Relevance

The Chair: Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, you rose on a point of order?

Mr. Denis: Under 23(h), (i), (j), and (l), Mr. Chair. This member is just making a lot of allegations with respect to the intention of this bill that I believe are inappropriate.

The Chair: Care to respond, hon. member? Well, then, I guess, hon. member, I would just ask if you would maybe stick to the bill and maybe avoid the allegations.

Mr. Saskiw: Sure. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader?

Mr. Denis: Thank you.

The Chair: We'll proceed.

Debate Continued

Mr. Saskiw: With respect to amendment A8 this would shine light going back seven years if there are cases of illegal donations being made. The Chief Electoral Officer has publicly stated – this is not an allegation; it is public – that he has found numerous cases of illegal donations. If this amendment is not passed, it is essentially voting in favour of keeping those illegal donations secret. Consider that when you're voting here. You are voting to cover up past illegal donations.

Go ahead and vote if you want.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Yeah. I'd just like to add a few comments on this amendment. I will be supporting it for many of the reasons that were given. I was just enlightened to a point brought up by the previous speaker. What I'm concerned about is the coming into force date of this. I would hope that the government takes it to heart that this should be proclaimed and proclaimed very quickly if you're really sincere. I have every confidence that the government and, in fact, even the political party that it runs its banner under is aware of contentious stuff that may or may not be out there, and they may be full well aware of some of the dates and the times and locations of some of this possible wrongdoing. I would hope that the government, regardless of what happens on this amendment, moves to proclaim this bill in force very quickly, hopefully in a matter of a month or two. I think that would be the right thing to do.

Nevertheless, sunlight is the best disinfectant, so I will be supporting this amendment.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I also rise to speak in favour of this. Coming from the private business sector, you know, to have government only held to standards of three years, where small business or any business has to keep records back to seven years, I'm just wondering why we would want to come up and say that business has to be more accountable than government. I just don't understand that. That's one point I wanted to make. I think government needs to be and should be as accountable as any businessperson has to be in that regard. Seven years is the standard, and I think we should just be consistent with that. I don't think we deserve to be treated any differently or even less. Hopefully, you will consider that.

Some concerns that I've heard, you know, in the media and even in the House here, the Minister of Health and even the current health superboard. One of their comments is: "We don't want to waste time looking to the past. We want to look forward to the future. We're wasting money. We're wasting time looking into the past." I think that has been proven to be false. I think that there have been cases shown in the past that needed attention. I think they were investigated, and they actually found issues that were of concern. What I'm concerned with is the mantra that is coming from the government. "Don't worry about the past. We've changed. Let's concentrate on the future." Even though that mantra is, you know, nice in words and principle, there have been some indiscretions in the past that do need to be looked at and rectified, brought to light and dealt with so that things like that do not happen again so that as you move forward, you're not making the same mistakes or people within bureaucracy or government are not making the same mistakes.

The last point I'd like to make, being new to the Legislature and understanding just how slow government can move, is: when you're talking about three years before the coming into force of this section, that in itself will naturally kill a lot of indiscretions that have been brought forward. They're just going to die a natural death, and I don't think that's right for the voters and the public of Alberta. I think that going back that seven years will help to keep the trust going forward as you're intending to with this bill.

That three years on that part of the amendment also worries me. Who's to say when this bill is going to come into force? That's a real concern. Going back seven years on that as well also gives the ability to dig deeper, keep some of these investigations open, find out what the results might be, and move forward and, again, learn from any mistakes that are found and, you know, try and prevent those same mistakes being recommitted.

In closing, that's all I want to say. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's hard for me to imagine that almost every piece of legislation this government drafts is not done with a specific intention in that it's not carefully crafted to accomplish a certain task or whatever the policy or objective that the legislation intends. Three years would fit within that realm of that type of conscious drafting. It is unfortunate that the members can be insulted, they can stand on points of privilege, they can heckle, but what they can't do is support an amendment that would open that window up to seven years. That's what the public is going to know. That's what the public will see. It's unfortunate that they would find that offensive, but that's the reality. It doesn't take a whole lot to see right through what's happening here.

The allegations, the findings of the Chief Electoral Officer: all that is now going to be tossed in the back, and these three years will protect against any of those findings ever being actually – I don't want to use the word "prosecuted" – brought forward and people being held accountable. That's the most important part, that people need to be held accountable when there is wrongdoing, and people need to be exonerated when there's none.

What we're doing is that we're avoiding issue completely. Rather than actually dealing with it, people are getting insulted, and people are standing up and saying: "Point of order. I don't like what the allegations are or the language being used." This is a great way to put an end to all that. Let's get down to business.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just want to clarify: is the government trying to invoke closure on this, or are we trying to work through this? No? We're not? Okay. Then would the Solicitor General please give me a quick explanation of where the huge holdup is between seven years and three years?

Mr. Denis: First off, just to clarify for the Member for Little Bow, there was a motion brought forth by the Government House Leader earlier today for time allocation. Just the notice came in today, so we're just going through the amendments, you know, as much as we can here.

As I've indicated publicly, not in this Chamber, if you refer to section 52 of the existing act, there is a three-year limitation imposed upon any – I'm sorry; I don't want to say "prosecutions" either – findings, any information whatsoever, and we are simply following that three-year limitation.

I've discussed earlier this government's view about retroactive legislation. Mr. Chair, it's our intention to release all the findings. We don't know, in fact, what party may have had illegal donations. If I were a betting man, I would suggest that it would be a multitude of parties. Regardless, we want to go back three years, which will cover the last election and the vast majority of these particular items. At the same time we want to go back only three years because of the three-year limitation in the act and no other reason as alleged here.

Mr. Saskiw: Just to clarify, the vast majority of circumstances that have been made public are far beyond three years. It's not just the past election. Almost everything that's been public has been beyond three years. The word "cover-up" just comes to mind here.

The Chair: We'll call the question, then, on amendment A8.

[Motion on amendment A8 lost]

The Chair: We'll go back to the bill.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would ask for unanimous consent to reduce the bells to one minute for the rest of the evening.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Back speaking on the bill, I have an amendment to make.

The Chair: All right, hon. member. That will be A9. If you would send the original to the table and circulate the rest.

Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm moving this amendment to the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012, for the Member for Edmonton-Centre. It's amending section 95 in the proposed section 44.94 by adding the following after subsection (7). Essentially, we're suggesting that maybe the limit proposed by the New Democratic Party to donations to leadership contests was too high, and maybe the hon. government would consider it too high and, hence, want to consider a lower limit to leadership campaigns. That's why the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is suggesting:

(8) Contributions by any person, corporation, trade union or employee organization to registered leadership contestants shall not exceed $2000 to each registered leadership contestant in each registered leadership contest.

There's a second component to that.

(9) Any money paid during a campaign period by a registered leadership contestant out of the registered leadership con-testant's own funds for the purposes of the registered leadership contestant's campaign

- (a) is a contribution for the purposes of this Part, and
- (b) shall be paid into a depository of the contestant on record with the Chief Electoral Officer.

Clearly, I made my points on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre's motion that a $3,000 limit to leadership campaigns was a step in the right direction as it would limit the amount of influence a corporation, union, or an individual could have or be perceived to have on an elected official. In my view, we have seen money have an influence on politics, and I believe there have been instances in the governing party's own proceedings where undue influence may have occurred or where at least the perception of it had occurred as the result of donations.

I must remind everyone in this House that part of our job here is not only to ensure that leadership contests are fair and open and transparent but to send a message to Joe and Jane Albertan that politicians can't be bought. Although I've heard many protestations here that no one can be bought or that it has never occurred in this province, I think it's better to err on the side of caution and better to err by keeping the donation limit low to ensure that this does not happen. That's why the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is proposing a $2,000 limit.

Further, it would make leadership races more competitive. It would ensure that leadership contestants need to raise money from a large number of sources, not rely on any one pool or one industry to get their contributions, and in my view it would go a long way to creating an equal playing field for all leadership contestants in all parties.

Further, I guess the second part of the amendment is an easier one, just to clarify the rules around contestants spending their own funds for the purposes of a leadership contest. Clearly, this should already be known, but it's wise to put it in the legislation just in order that this is followed in a full and forthright manner.

That's my amendment on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Centre, and I'd encourage all members of this honourable House to support it accordingly. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others on this amendment? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I find part of the amendment quite interesting, actually, and it's subsection (9), where it requires that the leadership contestant's own money is counted as a contribution for the purpose of the act and that it has to be disclosed on record. I'm not sure if the existing legislation provides for that to be classified as a contribution. If it does, it's redundant, but I think that would certainly be a very good provision to ensure that someone with means – you know, we saw recently where there was an allegation that someone has made a $430,000 donation in a campaign. That, obviously, has significant influence on the integrity of our electoral system, and we'd hope that that type of influence is inhibited. This amendment would just do that.

On the $2,000 limit that's set out in subsection (8), I think our amendment would be somewhere along the lines of $5,000. We think that's reasonable, but I think reasonable people can reasonably disagree on a certain figure like that.

In general, I'm still looking forward to see if there's any other debate, but I think I generally support this unless I hear something otherwise.

The Chair: Are there others? I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A9 lost]

The Chair: On the bill the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes, Mr. Chair. I have an amendment. The top copy is the original. If we could get that distributed, I would be grateful. Thank you very much.

The Chair: This amendment will be known as A10, hon. members. Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. I think everybody has got it now. You can see that this amendment is amending section 51.01(5)(a) by striking out "exceed $10,000 for each contravention" and substituting "be less than the amount by which the contribution or contributions exceed the prescribed limit."

Mr. Chair, currently Bill 7 says under the penalties section that administrative penalties cannot be more than $10,000. This amendment ensures that the Chief Electoral Officer will place administrative penalties that are in line with an excessive contribution. It makes it more flexible. Perhaps it could be more.

This amendment gives the law some teeth, I believe, Mr. Chair, that it doesn't currently have. It will ensure that when the CEO places administrative penalties on a person or organization for contributing over the prescribed amount, the person will be fined at least as much as what was contributed. In other words, if someone contributed $400,000 over the contribution limit, then that person could pay an administrative penalty of that same amount. This would ensure that the potential administrative penalties would actually have some deterrent effect.

Currently administrative penalties are too low, I believe, Mr. Chair, to be effective. Bill 7 gives the CEO, I think, as it stands, too much discretion when administering penalties. The CEO can administer penalties below the $10,000, of course. This amendment will ensure the lower limit for penalties, that will obligate the CEO to use administrative penalties that are in line with the contribution found to be in contravention of the act.

This amendment also allows the CEO to send a clear message to overcontributors who are in contravention of section 17 or 18 of the elections financing act to encourage future compliance with Alberta's election laws. Certainly, we don't want large donations that are clearly in contravention, and then the person is just calculating the fine potentially as the price of making that contribution. We've seen problems with very large contributions coming in without people having a clear idea what the law is. I think that Bill 7 is starting to clarify the landscape here, but this amendment clarifies it even more.

You have compliance with any law, Mr. Chair, based on the agreement between the public and the law somehow. You have compliance with the law as well through deterrence. The deterrent has to be sufficient to make someone think twice about breaking any law here in the province of Alberta. When we're dealing with money and with elections, I think the best way to hit back on any potential breach of this law is to hit back in the same way, with financial fines that are commensurate with the law that the person is breaking.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Just a few comments. I thank the Member for Edmonton-Calder for his interest in this act with his amendment. I appreciate where he's coming from when he talks about the need for a deterrent, the need for teeth. But this actual amendment would give far less teeth than keeping the original verbiage. The amendment would substitute "be less than the amount by which the contribution or contributions exceed the prescribed limit." The vast majority of contributions are, I would say, less than $10,000. The vast majority. If you have an illegal contribution of $500, guess what? If this amendment was accepted, the maximum then that the Chief Electoral Officer could actually impose would be in that case $500.

I would also suggest that the Chief Electoral Officer needs a broad array of discretion when dealing with these particular issues. For example, if you have prohibited organization X or Y that is just contributing the same amount of money and, as this member suggests, they just calculate the fine as part of doing business, well, you know, what should happen then is that the Chief Electoral Officer should have the discretion to increase the penalties on an escalating basis in order to deter these types of infractions from happening again.

I should also mention to this member and to the rest of the members here this evening that the $10,000 ceiling is an increase from $1,000. It does really keep up with the whole time.

I would also mention to this member that the previous amendments that we've discussed deal with the primary onus being on the donor. In keeping with that, the Chief Electoral Officer should and must have the discretion to deal with administrative penalties, as I suggest, perhaps in a very increasing manner, in an escalating manner in the event that you have a repeat offender. I would suggest that to continue with the principle of giving more teeth to enforcement under the new act, we should keep the $10,000 ceiling and leave the discretion with the Chief Electoral Officer.

I'll take my seat.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to support this amendment. You know, the Justice minister indicated that often in cases there aren't excess donations that are exceptional. He mentioned a $500 donation. But if you actually take one example, there's a potential that someone could make a $430,000 donation. If that's over the prescribed limit, say, of $30,000, then one would expect that the fine should be no less than $400,000; otherwise, you're going to have a circumstance where this is simply the cost of doing business. "Let's make a big donation. If we get caught, it's going to be a small fine of $10,000." For a donation $400,000 in excess of the maximum prescribed limit to have a $10,000 penalty seems ridiculous, too small. Why would someone who made a $400,000 excess donation care about a $10,000 fine? It baffles the mind. I'm not sure why the hon. member wouldn't accept this.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A10.

[Motion on amendment A10 lost]

The Chair: Now back to the bill. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have an amendment with the requisite copies.

The Chair: Hon. members, we'll refer to this amendment as A11. I'd invite the hon. member to speak to the amendment.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Speaking to amendment A11, I think the intent of this amendment is evident just on the face of the provision. I'll just read it briefly.

When a person or entity fails to pay the administrative penalty within the period of time specified in subsection (7), the Chief Electoral Officer shall make public this failure within 30 days of the expiration of that period.

This is just an instance where if the Chief Electoral Officer makes a finding that someone has made an illegal donation and issues a penalty as a result of that, if that person doesn't pay that penalty, that that be made public. The reason for this amendment is just to provide a little bit of public shaming. If someone doesn't pay the penalty, Albertans have a right to know that. It also, I think, acts as a deterrent. If you've been found guilty and don't pay your penalty, you're going to be shamed in public, and you may not do that again. I don't think this is a very controversial amendment. I think the rationale for it is self-evident.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Chairperson. I'll speak in favour of the amendment, too, for the two reasons that the hon. member mentioned. I'll also add that it may help the Chief Electoral Officer collect these penalties, especially important when so many of these seem to circle around the illegal public donations of all taxpayers' money, another reason, you know, in addition to, as mentioned, the fact that it's a further penalty and a further penalty that will have some public disclosure, which will incite someone to pay the fine and not reoffend.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would just add, of course, that the Chief Electoral Officer doesn't currently have many powers to collect penalties. I think the hon. Justice minister would acknowledge that this is a way not only to force the collection of penalties but to publicly shame someone into paying that penalty.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I just wanted to add that under this legislation moving forward, the Chief Electoral Officer will have all the powers to make administrative penalties, letters of reprimand, or items referred to a prosecutor public. We've said this before, that we believe that he has always had this, but he disagrees. This gets rid of the discrepancy, so there already is the public element. Let's say that if there's a fine of whatever number of dollars against whichever entity, there already are mechanisms under civil enforcement that are afforded to the Chief Electoral Officer. It essentially becomes a judgment. What can happen is you can take out a writ, you could do examination in aid of enforcement, you could seize assets, what have you. Those are the powers that are available, and it already is fully public.

Mr. Saskiw: Very briefly, Mr. Chair, what this amendment does, though, is – sometimes it's not necessary to go out and get a civil judgment if you can actually shame someone publicly when they haven't paid their fine. It's just another tool in the toolbox for the Chief Electoral Officer to collect penalties. I think this is a very reasonable amendment. It's often used in other situations just to do that public shaming. Instead of forcing the Chief Electoral Officer to go through the expense of enforcing a writ of judgment, I think this is a good way of collecting those penalties.

11:00

The Chair: Other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you. I just wanted to ask the member what he felt "make public" would be, for example.

Mr. Saskiw: It's a good question, Mr. Chair. I suggest that under that other provision that the Government House Leader mentioned, section 62, making public in that circumstance is publishing it on his or her website.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chair, I think it's clear that this is surplusage. Obviously, if he has under subsection (8) the right to file the administrative penalty with the Court of Queen's Bench, it becomes a judgment of the court. That becomes very public, and there's no restriction on then putting it on his website or doing whatever. I mean, it mandates him to do something which is already likely to be done and is clearly public record. Subsection (8) says that he just files it with the clerk of the court "and on being filed, the notice has the same force and effect and may be enforced as if it were a judgment." It doesn't require him to enforce it, but it puts it in public in a very strong way.

Also, by filing it with the court, even if he takes no further enforcement action, it's an interference with the individual's other matters. The purpose that the hon. member is trying to achieve is already achieved by subsection (8), and there's nothing precluding at that stage the Chief Electoral Officer from going further and putting out a list on his website if he wants to.

Mr. Saskiw: I won't belabour the point, Mr. Chair. Of course, if the Chief Electoral Officer decides to go and get a judgment, that is certainly as public as one can make it. Of course, at that point I think you could put it on the website. The problem is that there's always a cost to getting into litigation, particularly on collection procedures. If you have a deadbeat debtor, for $500 I don't think the Chief Electoral Officer would want to expend any time and resources to get a judgment on that, but it may be a good opportunity to shame that person into actually paying that fine. It's costly.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I can't believe I'm getting up to join this discussion in the middle of one, two, three lawyers. [interjections] The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar made a brief point. That was good to see, so maybe I will, too.

It may have been answered by the House leader from the other side, but to the point made by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, I just think of so many different areas in society where we use this public shaming. I'm not sure that I agree with it in principle. I wish that we didn't have to do it, but we do use it to make people fess up and do what they should do. We post things in the paper, charges, and nobody wants to see that. You think about it in child support. Unfortunately, it's a terrible thing to have to go through those issues, period.

Often they're used as leverage, you know, to make people come clean. I think what the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills was putting forth with this amendment was that to give the Chief Electoral Officer that power might actually help the process and might make the people who have broken the law – I think I can say that – pay the fine and come clean and do what they're supposed to do.

Again, I'm in the middle of a three-way lawyer debate here, and I don't mean to be. But just from the optics, from the way that, you know, the ordinary person would look at it, that's how we would look at it. I'd just suggest that if you get through the legalese, it would make sense to give the Chief Electoral Officer that ability. It would just be a little more transparent, and it might help them. It's a shame that sometimes when you speak, you miss a good discussion going both ways.

Anyway, Mr. Chair, that's my point. Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others? Seeing none, we'll call the question on amendment A11.

[Motion on amendment A11 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder on the bill.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I have an amendment with the appropriate copies to distribute.

The Chair: This amendment will be A12, hon. members.

Hon. member, you may proceed to speak to the amendment.

Mr. Eggen: I think we're looking good. Thanks, Mr. Chair. This is an amendment that looks at section 54 and at the proposed section 153 by striking out clauses (b), (c), (d), (e), and (g). Currently Bill 7 gives discretionary authority to the CEO on the following grounds when considering administrative penalties or letters of reprimand under the Election Act. It's to do with severity, wilfulness, other mitigating factors, preventative steps that might be taken, history of noncompliance, whether a person is reported as noncompliant, and any other relevant factors. This amendment will remove most of the clauses that give the CEO discretionary power in order to leave only the relevant and specific factors of severity and whether or not the person reported noncompliance.

The reason behind this, Mr. Chair, is that currently the bill gives, I think, too much discretionary power to the CEO when considering contraventions. The CEO should maintain the authority to investigate and decide on the severity of the contravention and whether the person in question has made a disclosure to the CEO that a rule may have been broken.

Beyond these considerations, Mr. Chair, the CEO would have too much discretionary power, I think, to avoid laying administrative penalties. The issuing of administrative penalties and letters of reprimand is important in the cases of some contravention of the law, and the caveats that would allow individuals to avoid adequate penalties should be reduced, especially clause (g) in Bill 7, which would allow the CEO to cite any other factors when considering letters of reprimand or penalties and I think is completely vague in scope and in application and would allow any reason to affect the administration of penalties under this section.

This amendment will help to increase the number of cases where the CEO administers some formal penalty by limiting the vague list of clauses that fall into the CEO's powers for consideration. This is, I think, an important amendment because administrative penalties should be laid and made public in all cases where an individual has been clearly in contravention of the election rules.

Mr. Chair, I hope that everyone might consider it and help to make Bill 7 a better piece of legislation. Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others? The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I understand where the Member for Edmonton-Calder is coming from with respect to ensuring that there are harsh enough penalties under this act to act as a proper deterrent for future wrongdoers. What this amendment does is that it takes out five different factors that the Chief Electoral Officer must take into account.

11:10

I respect the intention of this amendment, but I think that the better way of doing it would be to increase the minimum penalties that are allowable under this act and increase the maximum penalties as well so that despite the Chief Electoral Officer's discretion under these different factors a significant and harsh enough penalty would be applied on the minimum threshold or the minimum amount of penalties that ought to be put into this act. Although I respect the intent of this proposed amendment, unless I hear otherwise, I likely won't be voting in support of this one.

The Chair: Are there others? The Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you. On this amendment is there any reason we didn't strike out (f) also?

Mr. Eggen: I'm not sure.

The Chair: We'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A12 lost]

The Chair: We'll go back to the bill. The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to propose that we've done a lot of work tonight and that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report progress on Bill 7.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, please take your seats.

I'll recognize the Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 7. I would wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? That's carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, December 4, 2012

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. O Holy Creator, may our conscience always guide us and help us do what best serves our constituents, and may our prayers of today be echoed by our actions of tomorrow. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly a very special guest who's seated in your gallery. He represents the Singing Christmas Tree, a nonprofit organization that supports such charities as 630 CHED, Santas Anonymous, and Edmonton's Food Bank. The Singing Christmas Tree is, once again, an annual production, and it begins this weekend, December 7 through the 9th, at the Jubilee Auditorium in Edmonton, which I hope to attend. The man responsible for this amazing production is executive producer John Cameron, an Edmonton musical wizard who has appeared in shows along with Dave Foster, Josh Groban, Bon Jovi, and others. John, please rise and receive our thanks and best wishes for a most successful weekend with the Singing Christmas Tree.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Along that same line, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members another special guest in your gallery who's a member of my staff, in fact my chief of staff, Ms Hana Marinkovic. Now, while John Cameron is busy conducting the Singing Christmas Tree, Hana is busy singing as a member of the Singing Christmas Tree choir. She has a great voice, and she's been using it effectively in the Singing Christmas Tree and, I might say, in my office as well, although not the singing voice. I wish Hana and all the Singing Christmas Tree members a successful run of performances this weekend. I'd ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a grade 6 class and teacher, Trina Ludwig, from Crestwood elementary junior high school, located in my constituency of Edmonton-Riverview. They are seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask the students and their teacher along with parents Mary Wong and Tara Hatch to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a grade 6 class from St. Brendan school who are here today with their teacher, Ray Bradshaw, accompanied by Sharon Toal and Ken Airhart. It's wonderful that these students are able to participate and learn about our government right here at the Legislature, and I hope that they all take away a positive experience of their visit. I'd like to now ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, your second introduction, please.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As well, two individuals who are literally changing the lives of those living with type 1 diabetes, Barb Armstrong, regional manager for north-central Alberta and the Northwest Territories; and Myles Rusak, regional manager for southern Alberta, are here from the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation to help bring awareness and change to the lives of thousands of people in Alberta who are affected by this thus far incurable disease. I would now ask that they please rise and receive the warm welcome.

Mr. Casey: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the MLA for Edmonton-McClung, who was unable to be here today, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a grade 6 class from St. Martha elementary school and their chaperones. I'd ask that the group from St. Martha school rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three guests from my constituency of Leduc-Beaumont. I've known Dave and Linda Cox for over 35 years. As a matter of fact, I attended Leduc high school with Linda. They are joined by Linda's uncle, Art Balkan, a lifelong resident of Leduc county who has for many years farmed and continues to farm just south of the city of Edmonton limits on the piece of land his father bought in 1905. Both Art and Dave are visiting the Assembly for the very first time. My guests are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask that they rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you a member of my constituency here in the Assembly today, Marianne Kroetsch. Marianne is a parent with a developmental disability who has committed herself to living her everyday life to the highest standard. For this reason, she has been nominated for the Norm McLeod self-advocacy award. Her work with the Connections Counselling and Consulting Foundation of Calgary has allowed Marianne to share her insight regarding the rights of people with disabilities and, most importantly, her experience and success as a mother with a disability raising her daughter. I would now ask that my colleagues please join me in giving her the traditional warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to introduce to you and through you newer members of our Wildrose caucus staff: Naomi Christensen, Joanne Autio, Keith Pridgen, Tim Banman, and Shad Thevenaz. These are essential members of our staff. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: While we wait for some guests to arrive, let me go to the Associate Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a guest and a constituent of mine here today, Jennifer Martin, who is the CEO of TELUS Spark in Calgary. TELUS is at the forefront of innovate learning for the 21st century. It's more than just a building. Working with schools and postsecondary institutions across Alberta, TELUS Spark is promoting an attitude towards learning that is more collaborative between the areas of science and technology, engineering and math, and as they apply to the real world. Please join me in welcoming Jennifer and thanking her for her leadership in this wonderful new initiative for education in Alberta. I believe she's in the members' gallery, so I'd ask her to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two guests who are constituents of mine; namely, Elisa Benterud, who is a student council president at the Strathcona Christian Academy, and Pam Cholak, a constituent and friend who is no stranger to this building, having spent several years here in different capacities. Elisa and Pam are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly six students from Strathmore high school. These students are in an honours social studies program and are here to learn about the legislative process. As I call their names, I would like to ask them to rise: Cassy Keeler, Genista Kippin, Travis Luehr, Jenna Mohamed, Kelly Rice, Kayla McGougan. Accompanying them today is Richard Boisvert and their teacher, Jill MacDonald. Please join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have two introductions. First, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Zachary Weeks and his companion Rodel. Yesterday was the International Day of Persons with Disabilities, and Zachary has been a very vocal advocate for those with disabilities for many years. He's worked hard to ensure buildings are accessible and the needs and requirements of those with disabilities are addressed, including the need for good food, good care, and good hygiene. While Zachary is a busy guy, he's taken the time to join us today. I'd ask all members of the Assembly to welcome Zachary Weeks and Rodel to the Assembly. Thank you, hon. members.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Ms Shirley Bidnick and her daughter Rochelle. Shirley is a nurse trying to get care for her parents, like many of us. As we age, our parents also age. Shirley's parents really need more care, more home care, affordable home care, and she's here to try to ask all members of the Assembly to support our seniors and the most vulnerable to allow them to live with dignity in their places of residence as much as possible. I'd like to ask Shirley and Rochelle to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly all members of our caucus staff. Throughout this fall session they've all worked extremely hard to help us keep the government's feet to the fire. I'm very proud to have such an enthusiastic and intelligent group of individuals on the NDP caucus team.

I would like them now to rise as I call their names and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly: Rupinder Kaur, our principal secretary; John Ashton, our director of caucus services; Adrienne King, my executive assistant and now the communications officer; Olenka Toroshenko, our communications assistant; Maria Vicente, our research officer; Philippe Johnson, a sessional research officer; Brad Lafortune, sessional research assistant. Dakin McDonald is also a sessional research assistant, Pascal Ryffel is our outreach officer, Chris Gallaway is an outreach officer, and Yared Mehzenta is our sessional outreach officer. I would ask them all to please rise on both sides and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to rise to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a group of bright young people from Inner City high school in the constituency of Edmonton-Calder. These students overcome incredible odds every day in order to work toward completing their high school diploma and have found success at Inner City high school because of all of the supports available. I'm proud to say that before I was elected as an MLA, I taught at Inner City high school for over five years.

Teacher Dan Scratch and his grade 12 social studies class are here to learn about the democratic system and politics in Alberta. They are particularly interested in social justice and how this relates to their local community. I'd now like to ask them to rise as I call their names: Jubilee Cardinal, Kim Cardinal, Cheyenne Moses, Sasha Gladu, Skye Gladu, River Newborn, and their teacher, Dan Scratch. I'd ask you to join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a very, very special individual from my constituency, Curtis Hargrove. Curtis has spent the last seven months running across Canada for the Stollery children's hospital with a goal of raising $1 million. I'll expand on Curtis's journey across Canada during my member's statement later this afternoon. Curtis is here today with his very, very proud parents, Bev and Larry Hargrove, and his support team, Morgan Seward and Noelle Fitzpatrick. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Curtis Hargrove

Mrs. Leskiw: That was good timing, sir. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been said that a journey of a thousand miles begins with a single step. For a young man from my constituency his journey consists of approximately 7,800 kilometres. Curtis Hargrove's journey began at St. John's, Newfoundland, and will end in just a few short weeks on Vancouver Island in Victoria, B.C. I stand here today to recognize this very fantastic young man and the cause that has fuelled his unwavering determination to run thousands of kilometres to raise $1 million for cancer research at the Stollery children's hospital.

Luckily for Mr. Hargrove, known as the Cold Lake Runner, he is no stranger to the sport of running. In 2004 he ran the Edmonton Centennial Marathon and placed first. His journey marries his love for running, his passion for helping others, as he did previously in 2007, running across B.C. and Alberta for the Terry Fox Foundation.

Curtis chose to run for the Stollery children's hospital located here in Edmonton given its reputation across the country and the number of children and families it has helped. Mr. Speaker, Curtis has just two short weeks left to reach his goals and so far has raised $250,000 for cancer research. Since the beginning of the trek he has faced arrest in Quebec and was hospitalized for a short time here in Alberta, but Curtis is a strong believer that you can do anything if you put your mind to it, and I strongly believe that this local hero can reach his goal. If you wish to support his cause, please go to www.stollerykids.com to donate.

Mr. Speaker, I hope this statement reflects the admiration I have for this incredible young man as well as for the utmost pride shared by all my constituency in Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Curtis, all the best to you. We're proud of you. Keep on running.

Tobacco Recovery Lawsuit

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, it is clear the vast majority of Albertans do not believe the Premier when she said that she did not make the decision to award the tobacco litigation contract to close political friends. The evidence against her is airtight, regardless of how many government ministers continue to say that black is white and the sky is green. However, there is also the issue of the actual conflict of interest in this case. Some are focused on the fact that ex-husbands are not included in our province's conflicts legislation, but this is not what is being argued.

We are concerned that there have likely been violations of section 3 of the act, which prohibits a member from using her office to make a decision that improperly furthers another person's private interest. The fact is that there was indeed a close and ongoing personal and political relationship between the now Premier and several members of the law firm in question. Her ex-husband, a senior partner at the firm, led her transition team into the Premier's office. The Premier's chief of staff's wife was hired by the firm just before the election. Firm partners have donated tens of thousands to the PC Party, the Premier's CA, and her leadership bid. The firm has received almost $1.3 million in legal work since the Premier became Justice minister in 2008 but none prior to that, and a full 30 per cent of the firm's partners have received their QC designation under the Premier's watch.

The combination of these circumstances creates at the very least the appearance or the apprehension that the Premier may have used her office to influence a decision made on behalf of the Crown to improperly further the private interests of her friends in this law firm, thus contravening section 3 of the legislation if true. But make no mistake. Whether a technical conflict is found under our ethics legislation is somewhat irrelevant in the end, especially given just how weak our ethics laws are on these matters compared with virtually every other jurisdiction in the country. Just ask Rob Ford. What matters is whether Albertans feel they can trust the words and actions of this Premier. To that question, Mr. Speaker, the answer is painfully self-evident.

Speaker's Ruling Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, private members' statements are a very special privilege, as you would know. I don't know how many times I have to remind people to be very careful of the words they choose, the approach they take in their members' statements, and to not cast aspersions on another member here in the Assembly nor on any people who are not in this Assembly and do not have the immunity and the ability to be here in person to speak up for themselves. Let us hope this does not set any kind of a tone for the rest of the day.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Highwood and Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Tobacco Recovery Lawsuit

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, your ruling yesterday did nothing to remove the cloud of doubt that lingers over the Premier's handling of the tobacco lawsuit awarded to a law firm that includes a number of her close associates, including the chair of her transition team. How can the Premier explain this document, action request 39754, dated November 17, 2010, where the ADM of legal services references the timeline that includes the minister, now the Premier, making a decision in early December?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps it would serve all of us well if I reminded the House that while Her Majesty's irresponsible opposition tried to divert this House's attention on matters that are perhaps distracting and capture their imagination, this House actually has been very successful in passing some great legislation for Albertans. We stayed focused. [interjections] We passed the Education Act for our children, for all children of Alberta not only for today but probably for the next 20 years. I'll give you a list of others later.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would note that the government has refused about a hundred amendments that have been proposed by the opposition.

Given that another action request, 40333, dated January 13, 2011, has the ADM of legal services noting that, quote, shortly before Christmas the minister, now the Premier, selected the Jensen consortium, what does the Premier have to say about this document?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I am very proud that I was the Minister of Justice, and at the time that I was Minister of Justice, we decided to sue big tobacco. We did that on behalf of Albertans because we know that it's important to recover those health care costs. [interjections] Being the minister, we certainly know that in the department there was a process in place, which I was involved in, in terms of progressing the selection, and a decision was made to retain a firm in July of which I had no part. [interjections] But I am very proud of the fact that as Justice minister we decided to sue big tobacco when that Leader of the Opposition has said that she wouldn't.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Airdrie has risen on a point of order at 1:52. It has been noted. I'd just ask that we curtail the interjections. We have the right to ask questions as we see fit within the rules. We have the right to answer them as certain members see fit. Let's abide by that.

The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are not disputing the decision. We are disputing how the decision was made.

Given that there's a memo stating that there will be a decision on a particular firm, another memo indicating that there is a decision on a particular firm, and a third saying that there was a decision on a particular firm, all before she left the Justice portfolio, how can the Premier still claim she didn't make the decision on a particular firm?

Ms Redford: I think we're reliving last week, Mr. Speaker. Last week I made it very clear that on this particular day I was not involved in making the decision with respect to which counsel was retained. Since that, we have had a number of events in this institution that, as I understand it, confirm that I can stand by what I said last week, and I will. I'm very disappointed in the irresponsible and the extreme behaviour of the opposition, who will not respect the institution of the Speaker or the Ethics Commissioner, both decisions that we will welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition for your second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are disappointed they can't get a straight answer.

The Premier chose International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers to handle the big tobacco lawsuit, and we believe that there is a breach of the Conflict of Interest Act under section 3, where a breach occurs if a member uses her office to improperly influence a decision to further the private interests of another, in this instance the law firm of her close personal and political friends. The government's position seems to be that the Premier had no conflict, but if she did, some other Justice minister made the decision. How can they still insist that no one did anything wrong?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is the same question we've had the last few days, and it'll be the same answer today. June 21, 2011, very important day, the longest day of the year in that particular year: that is when the contract was formed to hire TRL. There was no binding obligation prior to that. I would suggest that this hon. member should get back to talking about highways, roads, schools, police, things that matter to Albertans.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, they don't answer those questions either.

Putting myself in the shoes of the Premier, I appreciate that this is difficult for her, but I am asking the Premier to put herself in the shoes of Albertans trying to understand what went on here, and given that she believes that there is no conflict of interest under section 3 of the act, why does she refuse to accept responsibility for making the decision in the first place?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I have to say that, in fact, while I appreciate the fact that Albertans may want to talk about this – and we have been very open and forthright – this is not difficult for me because I know what I was involved in. I know when the decision was made. I stand by my personal integrity and principles. The opposition can stand up every single day and can continue to allege that there was something inappropriate. I am proud of who I am, I am proud of the role that I had as Justice minister, I am proud of what we have done as a government in the past six months, and that is what Albertans voted for.

Ms Smith: Given that a number of responses from the Deputy Premier, the current agriculture minister, the current Justice minister suggest that the contract is good for Alberta, one must ask: why is the Premier running from acknowledging her role in choosing this particular firm? Does she feel guilty?

Ms Redford: I was listening to the answer to the last two questions, Mr. Speaker. I guess the opposition wasn't. I've said that I am very proud of the fact that I was Justice minister when we as government decided to do this. I am very proud of the fact that we are continuing to pursue this litigation, and as I've said in this House, I believe that the decision that the Justice minister made in the summer of last year was a good decision to represent Alberta's interests. That doesn't change the fact that I did not personally make that decision.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Ethics Commissioner Referral

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Gary Mar felt this Premier's wrath when she determined that he violated a "code of values and ethics" when he faced allegations of misusing the powers of his office. She ordered that he step aside until the investigation was complete. Now she's denying that she ever did this. Yesterday the Premier said, "it wasn't something that I was involved in," but in March she said, "I asked the Ethics Commissioner to look at that." To the Premier. Albertans are getting tired of your loose interpretation of the truth. Why did you say that you had no involvement in the Gary Mar investigation when you clearly ordered it yourself? [interjections]

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I must say that as Premier I was incredibly enthusiastic to ensure that the right thing was done. I did ask the Ethics Commissioner to look into this. You will recall that the turn of events was that the Ethics Commissioner said that because Mr. Mar was a public servant, he wasn't able to look into it. At that point the clerk of the Executive Council took over the entire process. At that point I was not involved in it. There is nothing that is not absolutely certain with respect to the facts of this, and I think that's something that is lost daily on the opposition.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, I appreciate the enthusiasm with which you are greeting both the questioner and the answer person. However, those kinds of interjections ought not be tolerated, and I'm not going to tolerate any more today. We've had enough. Please, no more interjections. I don't think that that's how you coach or train your children, to interrupt each other, either at home or on the playground or in school or elsewhere. It's not going to be something that we leave here as an example of how we conduct ourselves once we have grown up.

Let us proceed now with your first supplemental, without preamble, please.

Ethics Commissioner Referral (continued)

Mr. Wilson: Great. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given your swift and well-documented action in ordering Mr. Mar to step aside and your apparent refusal to admit you had anything to do with it, what is preventing you from being honest with Albertans and standing by decisions that you have made?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, this question, to begin with, doesn't deserve an answer considering the language, but let me be perfectly straight, and maybe there's a lesson which they can draw. When the issue of Mr. Gary Mar came into being, the Premier did the right thing, the thing that they should have done. If you believe that something may have happened that is wrong, you turn to the appropriate body to investigate it, either the Ethics Commissioner or the office of the clerk. If they believe that something nefarious happened, they should have done the same as opposed to dragging everybody through the mud over the last three months instead of talking about health care, education, children, and things that people actually elected us to do. [interjections]

The Speaker: You've forced me to take up my list pad, so I have it out. Any more interjections, and you're going to make it on to the list, and then I'll have to not recognize you when your turn comes. There have to be some penalties for breaking rules, and that will be what it is.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, you have the floor for your final supplementary without preamble.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that there is clear hypocrisy in ordering someone else to leave their job because of an alleged ethics breach while refusing to do so yourself, did you order Mr. Mar to step down just because most of your caucus chose to support him for leader and you wanted everyone to know who is boss? [interjections]

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, here's a response. I will not dignify that question with a response.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: We're going to go to the leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition in a few seconds, but I'm hearing some comments from the back row of the government bench here. I would ask whoever it is – I didn't get it in time – to please cease and desist, or you, too, will make my list.

The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Liberals support the decision to sue big tobacco but question how the decision was made. The Tobaccogate scandal has Albertans questioning the Premier's uncanny ability to apparently say one thing and then deny any involvement whatsoever. Now she is distancing herself from the decision to select International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers as a firm to represent Albertans in a $10 billion lawsuit. I've sent the Premier her memo dated December 14, 2010. To the Premier: will you acknowledge that by signing this memo, you as the Justice minister at least may have influenced the decision?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is rather rich coming from a member who about six months ago was screaming and shouting for an independent commission into queue-jumping and now comes out and says that we shouldn't be spending money on investigating queue-jumping.

The facts have been laid out. They have been asked. They have been answered. I have to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that if they ask a hundred more times, they will receive the same answer a hundred more times because there's only one truth.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, given that I asked a question and the Deputy Premier went off on some other rant about something else, allow me to go back to the real Premier – the real Premier – not the guy who wants to be Premier. Premier, there's ample documentation with this memo with your signature on it. Can you please rise? I just want to ask you: if you're really trying to distance yourself from the decision, why didn't you distance yourself from the decision when it counted, before you signed the memo?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, as the Deputy Premier has said, this question was asked and answered. It was asked and answered continually last week but not by the Liberal Party, by the Leader of the Opposition. I'm sure glad to see the leader of the Liberal Party has finally caught up.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments from the Premier and wannabe Premier. Given that as Justice minister the Premier had the opportunity to recuse herself from a decision involving hundreds of millions of dollars, maybe some billions of dollars in contingency fees benefiting a partner in the firm that clearly has strong connections to the Premier, so strong that he helped her transition her front bench, didn't you consider that there would be at least the appearance of a conflict of interest?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, there was nothing for me to recuse myself from because I didn't make the decision.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition.

Physician Services Agreement

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The government signed a deal with the doctors before the election, and after the election they broke it. This agreement was ignored by the Health minister, who imposed a settlement on the doctors. To the Health minister: why won't he admit that he is unable to negotiate an agreement with the AMA before patient care is affected, and do something?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is certainly true that our excellent Minister of Health has been working very hard over the past 10 months to try to get a deal with doctors, and we have done some very good work. The agreement that the hon. member speaks of was an agreement that was signed some eight or nine months ago that had a number of conditions in it. In fact, going back to the detail of that, it was not any action taken by the government that ended that agreement but an action taken by the AMA. Even after that our minister stood by the terms of that agreement, has until this day, and wants to get a deal with doctors.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much. The Premier answers the minister's questions and vice versa. It's interesting.

I want to ask about the Canada Health Act. The Canada Health Act requires a negotiated settlement with doctors if extra billing is prohibited. It says that at the option of the appropriate provincial organizations, it needs to have . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, let's get to the question. No preamble, please.

Mr. Mason: It is the question, Mr. Speaker. The question is to the minister. Is he going to continue this playing footsie with the doctors, not get a deal, and then have some kind of impact on patient care, or will he do what the Health Act says and go to binding arbitration?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can enlighten the hon. member on the provisions of the Canada Health Act. What the Canada Health Act says is that where an agreement exists between a government and an association representing physicians in the province, compensation shall be reasonable. The compensation for physicians in Alberta is the best in the country. It is on average $80,000 more than the national average for compensation paid to physicians. We make no apologies for that. We pay the best in Canada, we have the best doctors in Canada, and we intend to keep paying them the best.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, you had one more supplemental?

Mr. Mason: I do.

The Speaker: All right.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given – given – that the Canada Health Act does not talk about one party determining whether or not compensation is fair but provides a mechanism to settle the dispute when two parties disagree, why doesn't the Health minister do the right thing and go to binding arbitration with Alberta's doctors to prevent any work shortage?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Premier said, we have been without an agreement with the Alberta Medical Association for some 20 months now. This government has tried everything reasonable that we can possibly try to achieve that agreement. We stand by our commitment that we believe an agreement is in the best interest of patients and Albertans and physicians. Unfortunately, at the moment the Alberta Medical Association has made a decision not to negotiate. We have presented our best offer. We have asked only that the AMA recognize that there is an upper limit to the additional funding the government is able to provide for this purpose. Beyond that, we're prepared to talk about any issue, and we await their response.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Red Deer-North.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are billions of dollars up for grabs in the largest litigation case in Alberta's history, yet this Premier seems to have no idea that she made the decision, can't see why Albertans are thinking that there's a perceived conflict of interest, and can't tell Albertans how much they are on the hook for to pay for this government's latest scandal. We know that the government in Newfoundland disclosed the key terms of their agreement, in that case a 30 per cent contingency, which could be a potential $3 billion in legal fees. If the Premier has nothing to hide, can she show us the terms of this agreement and the other requests for proposals laid out by the competing firms?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm rather surprised to get this information because I know this member is a lawyer of many years. If he doesn't believe me, that's fine. But I'm going to quote the former president of the Law Society who sent me an e-mail today. His name is Perry Mack. He indicated:

The disclosure of such information can be expected to be of benefit to the opposing litigants, in this case tobacco companies . . . Disclosure of the contingency [fee] agreement would almost certainly assist the defendants in fighting the case. Releasing that type of information while the lawsuit is ongoing would be unusual and ill advised.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that even the managing partner of the firm that was awarded the contract publicly stated yesterday that he had no objections to releasing the terms of the agreement and given that this government continues to deny that the Premier had a direct hand in awarding this contract, how can this Premier possibly expect Albertans to ever trust another word she says until she releases all the terms?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I spoke to that very counsel member, our counsel last week as well as last night, and he indicated to me again that he would advise for the same reasons as the independent counsel here why to not release the particular agreement. I'm on the side of everyday Albertans, not big tobacco.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier's own words clearly state that her department's review committee considered all three firms to be capable of conducting the litigation, will the Premier stop blowing smoke, do the right thing, and lay out the documents showing us the agreement as well as the offers put forward so Albertans can see for themselves whether they got a good deal or whether the Premier awarded a super-lucrative contract to a friend? Just show us the agreement.

Mr. Lukaszuk: I can assure Albertans and this member of the House that, number one, this agreement was not directly negotiated between the department of Justice and the law firm, but there was a third party sort of grinding them down to the lowest. I can also assure Albertans that we as Albertans are paying the lowest contingency fee of any province that is involved in this lawsuit.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, you rose on a point of order at 2:12, and it's been noted.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by Airdrie.

Openness and Transparency in Government

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, when I was elected, I made a commitment to my constituents that I would bring their issues to government and be their advocate. There's been a lot of daily drama in the Assembly during this session. As a result, many of my constituents are wondering what the government has accomplished and if it will make a difference in their lives or the communities. My first question is to the Deputy Premier. Can he tell us what this session's activities have done for the average Albertan, and why should they care? [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. Deputy Premier, I'll allow you to briefly comment in response to the hon. member's question.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate that the opposition is laughing as this question is being asked because, obviously, they have no interest in the true work that happened in this House. I think members of this House – not all members, the other side excluded – should be proud of the fact that we passed an Education Act, that we passed a regulatory process that is a one-window approach, that we opened up hospitals, and that we opened up schools while the gimmicks have been going on on the other side of the House. [interjections]

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier has a vision of a more open and transparent government, can the Deputy Premier review what has been done to achieve this vision?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I think one legislation that we all should be proud of, including you, is the fact that we passed the election accountability act. Again, another promise that was made during the election campaign that has been delivered on. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, you rose on a point of order at 2:14. It's been noted.

Final supplemental without preamble, please, hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Deputy Premier: what have Albertans been telling you about government policies and directions especially as it pertains to what's been accomplished so far in this legislative session?

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, you know, it's difficult for me to put you onto my list when five or six or seven of you all speak at the same time with your interjections. I'm going to sharpen my focus on all of you here in this next couple of minutes because you just can't hear. You can't hear the questions. You can't hear the answers. People have the floor. Let's give them the courtesy of continuing their questions and answers to their best abilities.

The hon. Deputy Premier.

Openness and Transparency in Government (continued)

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you. First of all, Mr. Speaker, I must correct myself. The act was introduced, not passed, but I have good confidence in the House that it will be passed.

Another thing that has happened while the distractions were carrying on is that we have as the government instituted a policy of transparency relevant to the expenditures not only of elected members but of all employees, executives, and board members in Alberta.

But to your point, Mr. Speaker, I'd suggest to you, if I may, not to chastise him for being loud because it is a good thing that Albertans can't hear what is being said on the other side.

Justice System Review

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, the individual tasked with investigating the Airdrie sex abuse case which was dropped due to court and Crown delays said last week that his 300 overburdened Crown prosecutors may need to start abandoning minor charges so that violent offences are prosecuted within a reasonable time frame rather than risking the charges being dropped entirely. To the Minister of Justice: why did you and the Premier repeatedly deny that a shortage of court and Crown resources was to blame for the Airdrie sex abuse case being dropped and then accuse the opposition of being disloyal for making that claim, which was, in fact, the truth?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One thing that I would agree with this member on is that one case like that is one too many. That is why I launched the investigation. We're looking forward to the results of the investigation. But I will remind this member that we have 302 very capable Crown prosecutors in this province, 69 of which have been added since 2006.

Mr. Anderson: It surely doesn't keep up with population growth.

Given that the problem of cases being dropped for lack of resources was exacerbated during your and the Premier's time as Justice minister, what immediate steps are you taking to adequately fund our Justice system, and will your government consider redirecting funds from the $2 billion that you're handing out to private companies to pump CO<sub>2</sub> into the ground in order to do so without going deeper into deficit?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I indicate again that we have the fourth-highest number of Crown prosecutors in Canada, and we are the fourth most populated province. I would suggest that this member needs to have a much stronger view of our Justice system, which is working. Where we have issues – guess what? – we call an independent investigation. That's what's happening.

Mr. Anderson: You did not call an independent investigation. I don't know how he can say that, Mr. Speaker.

Two final questions, Minister. On what date are we to expect the results of the internal – internal – investigation into the Airdrie sex abuse case to be completed and made public, and will you contact the victim in the near future to apologize on behalf of your ministry for how her case was handled and discuss the possibility of assisting her to recoup some of the legal and other costs incurred by her and her family in the course of this absolute debacle?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, as I've indicated before to this member, one case is too many. I have full confidence in the assistant deputy minister who is handling this independent investigation. We indicated at the time that we called it that it would take approximately two months or within that period. It's independent, and there is no political interference. [interjection]

The Speaker: I almost caught you but not quite. I'll try harder.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Anthony Henday Drive

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As many of us know, this past summer saw a substantial amount of construction take place on the southwest leg of Anthony Henday Drive in my constituency of Edmonton-South West. Based upon the materials and design used in construction, we were given to understand that the road would require no maintenance for at least 25 years. My question is directed to the hon. Minister of Transportation. Why is it that after a period of only six years Anthony Henday Drive is being repaved and causing delays in certain sections?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the question because I asked it myself. What I found out is that the work that was done on the southwest Anthony Henday this summer was actually maintenance work on some of the concrete portions of the road. This was done to prevent major maintenance being needed in the future. This particular portion of the road was built using a concrete design option, which is a little unusual. Preventative maintenance now will result in a road that is designed to last nearly twice as long as an asphalt option with a reduced long-term maintenance situation. So this option is expected to create a long-term value for Albertans, and it's one of the many things that we're doing for their benefit.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: when Anthony Henday is to be complete, will it be a true ring road for the city of Edmonton and actually bring the results it promised?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, when we announced the P3, an investment of $1.8 billion, in July for the construction and operation of the northeast Anthony Henday, including bridges across the North Saskatchewan – at this point we've invested $4 billion on the Henday to date, and it's 90 per cent complete. The last leg will be open for traffic in 2016. I'm pleased to say that at completion there will be 78 kilometres of free-flow traffic. It will be a ring road. Whether it provides the benefits that we hoped for, I guess the future will tell, but I can tell you that we put the best possible program in place, and that gives us the best chance of getting those benefits.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that I have two young daughters whom I drive to school on the Anthony Henday every single day, with 78 kilometres planned with an absence of traffic lights, how do we intend to ensure that we have traffic driving at safe speeds?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that we won't do it alone. We'll do it with the co-operation of Albertans, as we do with all traffic safety. We'll work with the city police and the RCMP. We'll work out our traffic safety plan, we'll do education, we'll do enforcement, and we'll combine that with the good engineering that actually is the Anthony Henday.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Collective Bargaining with Teachers

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In my view, the current proposal put forward by the Alberta Teachers' Association achieves the fiscal goals of the government: ensures cost containment for school boards, secures meaningful improvements in the conditions of teachers' professional practice, and provides stability for Alberta students and their families. My question is to the Minister of Education. Given that this appears, to me at least, to be an eminently reasonable proposal, what are the minister's hang-ups of the current proposal put forward by the ATA?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, like I said yesterday, there's probably not enough time to get into a few of the details that we'd like to talk about with respect to this. The member is right. You know, we are fairly close on many issues, but there are a couple of glaring concerns. I would tell you that one of the main objectives, one of the main responsibilities of the Minister of Education is to ensure that there's excellence in teaching. We take that very seriously, and that's why we're taking our time to try and get this deal right for Alberta's kids.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I applaud the goal of excellence in teaching, but does the minister understand that any deal would place reasonable limits on teachers' instructional time and include a process to identify and reduce the low-value administrative and bureaucratic tasks routinely assigned to teachers? Will the minister understand this in the new agreement?

Mr. J. Johnson: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker, and that's exactly why I proposed that piece. But there are other pieces that do cause concern, and those are pieces that we typically talk about as being hard caps, hard caps on the minutes or hours a teacher can work in a week. Some jurisdictions have hard caps of 31 hours of assignable time for a teacher in a week. Another hard cap that is proposed is 907 minutes of instruction per year for a teacher. Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that there are many teachers around the province, excellent teachers, that are working more than those hours, that are working more than those minutes because it's required in small, rural schools. If we go to hard caps, they're inflexible; we'll close rural schools. We're not going to be a party to that.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, I challenge the minister on that statement given that small school divisions like the Northland school division, which has many small schools, have been dealing with hard caps for a long time. So is not the minister's answer simply a red herring?

Mr. J. Johnson: I don't believe so, Mr. Speaker. One of the things we talk about is the strength in our system, the diversity. The strength is that every kid is unique. We need that flexibility. We want to move to a system that has even more flexibility. You can't have flexibility when you have a cookie-cutter one size fits all right across the province.

One of the main issues with the hard caps that we have in place today is that with the school divisions that have them in place, the teachers that are working under them are just as profound in their concerns on workload as the teachers that don't have them. I'm submitting that it is not the silver bullet and that we want to look for other solutions to the workload issues that the teachers are bringing forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Castle-Crown Wilderness Area

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Castle wilderness is cherished by the residents of Lethbridge and the rest of southern Alberta. The government's policies towards the Castle, however, have been very inconsistent. They have not stopped logging, destructive random camping, and rapid environmental degradation in the area. My questions are to the minister of tourism. When will you commit to doing what residents are clearly asking for and even what your government's own reports have recommended and designate a wildland provincial park for the Castle wilderness area?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank this member for his question. Some of the response would actually come from my hon. colleague, to whom I will convey your question, specifically with regard to . . .

An Hon. Member: Castle-Crown.

Ms Cusanelli: . . . Castle logging. Thank you very much.

With respect to wildlife parks at this point what we are looking at are regional plans. Perhaps within the framework of our discussions we will be able to have a wholesome discussion around that. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. Given that the South Saskatchewan regional plan is just the latest in a litany of consultations, reports, and frameworks, all of which up till now have pointed to the same conclusion, and given that clear-cut logging has devastating environmental consequences that jeopardize the most important watershed in southern Alberta, what's stopping the minister – it's under your purview – from declaring the Castle to be a wildland provincial park for everyone to enjoy?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to answer on behalf of our colleague as the Acting Minister of ESRD. We all know that those of us who grew up in southern Alberta have a deep attachment to the land: the landscape, the foothills, the mountains, the Castle area. Clearly, that is why we are looking at this very closely under the South Saskatchewan regional planning process to ensure that we respect the environmental aspects of that corner of the province, which is so special to all of us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we've had consultations and reports for the last 40 years and given that 87 per cent of the residents of Lethbridge and Coaldale and everyone from the Lethbridge Chamber of Commerce to the Alberta Wilderness Association support the creation of a provincial wildland park in the Castle, doesn't one of the ministers over there think that it's time to do the right thing and designate a wildland provincial park in the Castle wilderness area?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, you know that this input, the advice from this member and the input from residents of all of southern Alberta, will be taken into account in terms of the plan. This is, actually, the first time that right across the watershed basin across southern Alberta work is being done to ensure that we respect the environmental values, that we respect the property rights, that we respect the activities that are going on in that part of the province, and that we value and cherish and make the most of this tremendous landscape.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Personal Care Standards in Seniors' Facilities

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This House and Albertans have heard a lot of discussion regarding the outrageous once-per-week bath policy in place in many care centres across Alberta. Last week the Associate Minister of Seniors said, "I've discussed this matter with the Health minister, and together we're going to have a look at this issue." I hope that the Health minister and the associate minister had a good, long discussion about it because seniors and their caregivers are demanding answers and action. To the Associate Minister of Seniors. Albertans want to know if this meeting has taken place and what was discussed. Did you decide on any course of action to reverse the degrading, unhealthy, and disrespectful once-per-week bath policy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all know that there are more than 25,000 Albertans that live in our seniors' facilities, whether they're seniors or folks with disabilities, and we have 753 licensed facilities in this province that I'm very, very proud of. I made the commitment to this member and to all members here that the minister and I will have a good look at this issue, and I look forward to your other questions.

The Speaker: Hon. member, first supplemental, without preamble.

Mrs. Towle: It's truly disappointing that this issue wasn't important enough to have a discussion with the Health minister.

The Speaker: Without preamble.

Mrs. Towle: Again to the Associate Minister of Seniors: have you consulted with other care facilities who are managing to actually give the residents more than one bath per week to figure out how to provide proper bathing for seniors in care?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, there's nothing like going home on the weekend to check on reality. I did have the opportunity to make sure that when seniors or our loved ones move into seniors' facilities, there is a proper care plan developed and that the caregivers follow that proper care plan. It's not up to the minister to develop those care plans, but it's important that our family members and all Albertans know that these care plans are followed, that they're followed with respect and followed with care and followed with love by our caregivers.

Mrs. Towle: You're the advocate for seniors across this province and you license these facilities.

Speaker's Ruling Preambles to Supplementary Questions

The Speaker: Hon. member, please. I think we just need to be reminded yet again about no preambles. I've been very tolerant and very patient, recognizing that some of us in this building are new, but the rule is the rule. The reason that the rule is there is so that it doesn't yield any inflammation on anybody's part, any inflammatory responses back and forth. So let's rise above this again.

Hon. member, you have the floor. You have a supplemental without preamble. I'm sure it's ready. Please proceed with it.

2:30 Personal Care Standards in Seniors' Facilities (continued)

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that seniors and their caregivers deserve better from this government and that this government licenses all care facilities across Alberta, when can Albertans expect your office to actually do something about this problem and fix what most everyone except you thinks is a horrendous and degrading bath policy?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we do license and inspect over 753 facilities across this province. Like the member, I do care deeply about the residents that live in our facilities, and I will ensure to have a good, solid look at this issue going forward, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

CRISP Report on Cold Lake Oil Sands Area

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents often come to me with questions about ongoing oil and gas development in the Bonnyville-Cold Lake area. A CRISP plan is under way for the Cold Lake oil sands area, and I'm interested to see how it will impact the residents in my area. My first question is to the hon. Minister of Energy. What concerns were expressed at the public hearings and stakeholder consultations that were held in my area of Bonnyville-Cold Lake?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank this very effective and persistent member in this House.

You know, there were participants, folks from across the area who participated in the open houses, that had a very strong interest in a high level of water quality, which is an important issue for the Cold Lake area. There's also general agreement that there needs to be over time more transportation in and out of the Cold Lake oil sands area, including roads, bus, perhaps air. As oil production grows in this part of the province, we are going to need to have a greater infrastructure over the next several decades.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you. To the same minister, without any preambles: what have you learned from the CRISP report and implementation process that you feel would be applicable to my area?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The CRISP reports, which are the comprehensive regional infrastructure sustainability plans, actually allow for creating a process of engagement amongst municipal-level governments and First Nations and aboriginal communities in the area. It ensures that the needs are well defined and that the government of Alberta is in a position to respond to those needs when those needs become imminent.

Mrs. Leskiw: My final question to the same minister, without any givens: when is this CRISP report scheduled to be released, and is there a timeline for the implementation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We will be releasing this report in the very near future. At that point we will be in a position to speak with all Albertans in the Cold Lake oil sands area about the long-term implementation of this plan. This is not about next year. It's not about two years. It's not just about three years. There is a three-year window. There are another 10 years after that and another 10 or 15 years after that as we look at what is needed to respond to the immense growth that is going to go on in that community over the next 40 years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Edmonton-Riverview.

Family Care Clinics

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday afternoon this government confirmed what most Albertans already suspected, that this government has absolutely no idea how it will pay for its costly campaign promises. I asked for the nitty-gritty on how much their 140 family care clinics promise would cost. The Health minister responded that the costs are unknown. Well, they weren't unknown when they said that the campaign platform was fully costed. They weren't unknown when they said that it would come from in-year savings. They weren't unknown when they said that it would come from the existing budget. To the Minister of Health: are you really now saying that you have no idea how much it will cost Albertans to keep this promise, and why weren't you up front about it when you made the commitment?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the ability of the hon. member to rephrase previous questions in a way that would seem to suit her purpose never ceases to amaze me. In Written Questions the hon. member asked for standardized costs relating to various aspects of family care clinics. As I explained to the hon. member and as I hoped she would understand as a result of the election campaign, this government is leading a number of improvements in primary health care delivery across the province. These improvements are focused on analysis of community health needs. They are focused on allowing communities to participate in developing plans to meet those needs. They will be unique plans that respond to their particular situation.

Mrs. Forsyth: Given the $3 billion hole that our province is falling into, your unwillingness to discuss health economics – those are your words – and the fact that you haven't looked at the cost-effectiveness of what were supposed to be our three pilot projects, how can the Minister of Health have us believe that the hundreds of millions, perhaps billions, of dollars that will be spent on family care clinics will be money well spent?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the first flaw in the hon. member's logic is her assumption that we are going to simply spend new money in order to achieve our objectives to improve access to primary health care across Alberta. What, in fact, we are doing, as I explained in an answer to one of her questions yesterday, is that we are looking at existing resources across the province in the form of physical infrastructure, in the form of teams of health professionals that deliver care, in the form of clinical protocols and processes and programs that they have developed to support Albertans, for example, living with chronic disease, to see how we reorganize those resources in order to deliver a better product. I would expect that as a member of the party opposite she should be very interested in that.

Mrs. Forsyth: Given the lack of trust that this government has sown with the doctors of our province, as evidenced by their new full-page advertisement, and given the lack of trust Albertans are feeling with this government over your broken promises, will the Minister of Health please tell the Assembly the cost of the family care clinics?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, this government, as was committed to in the answer to the hon. member's written questions and as we've committed to before, will provide the costs of individual family care clinics as they are rolled out. We will also disclose to the House the cost of enhancements that we will be offering to primary care networks in order to further the very important work that they do. If the hon. member opposite wants a cookie-cutter approach to primary health care in Alberta and she wants to impose a model of care on particular communities that stay tied to a standard cost, she's welcome to go out and market that to Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Firefighting Services in Crowsnest Pass

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was recently contacted by an Albertan from the constituency of Livingstone-Macleod who brought to my attention issues surrounding the effectiveness of fire services in Crowsnest Pass and was concerned that this issue was not being brought forward. I am honoured to bring the concerns of this community to this Assembly. My question to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: following the resignation of volunteer firefighters after municipal administration relieved the Blairmore station chief of his duties, what have you done to help resolve or mediate this situation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We understand that every municipality can have some challenges and difficulties, so we sort of operate on three levels of engagement. First, we ultimately respect municipalities to manage their own affairs and their right to do that. Secondly, we're there to offer any assistance in any critical issues that they may need. Finally, we're there to step in if there is some critical issue that would affect the health or well-being of people within that municipality. Our department and the fire commissioner's office within our department has worked very closely with the municipality to provide them with any resources they need that are available. My understanding is that they have been handling the situation exceptionally well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental. An internal dispute is one thing, but Albertans in the region need reliable fire services. Can you assure the residents in the constituency of Livingstone-Macleod that the emergency services are still available and will continue to be available in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, our department has been working, as I said, very closely with the fire department and with the municipality to ensure that. Our fire commissioner's office has been down there several times communicating with the department. My understanding is that though they've had a few volunteer firefighters resign their positions, they've had more than that come back, and they're well on their way to ensuring that they have consistent firefighting services for the municipality.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. I've been told that a petition has been delivered to your office to review the municipality's operations.

Some Hon. Members: Preamble.

The Speaker: Hon. member, tighten up here, please.

Mr. Young: Okay. I'll start again.

The Speaker: Just start again with no preamble. Just ask the question.

Mr. Young: Given that a petition has been delivered to your office to review the municipality's operations, will you do that? Will you review the municipality's operations?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's always unfortunate when we get such a petition, but we take every single petition and every single complaint that comes to our office very seriously, and we work very closely with municipalities to make sure that they're functioning appropriately. The petition was approved, so we will be doing an inspection. We will make sure that we work with the municipality so that they are operating in the most effective manner and that the citizens in that municipality can be confident they're getting the best service possible.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we go to Members' Statements, might we have unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Thank you very much.

Introduction of Guests (continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation, followed by Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two people that work exceptionally hard at a very difficult task; that is, trying to make me look good. First of all, we've got my legislative assistant, Ryan Osterberg, who also works with the hon. Member for Stony Plain. He's been in the service of the LAO for just over a year and is a resident of Sherwood Park. He's here to accompany my brand new constituency assistant, Shirley Lin, who is here for her first trip to the Alberta Legislature and also for the winter constituency seminar. Shirley was previously one of the editors with Fort McMurray Today. My recollection of my first meeting with her was that she was covering a story of a fundraiser in Fort McMurray, and I took a pie in the face, and she was there with her cameras. We're very fortunate that she has a degree in journalism and a minor in politics, and I'm very glad to have her as part of my team and working for the residents of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Speaker, they're seated in the visitors' gallery, and I'd ask that they rise to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Scott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to introduce to you and through you Nicole Blake, who is my constituency assistant for Fort McMurray-Conklin. She's been with me for about two months in that role, and she's somebody that I've known for a long time and that I consider a very close friend. Like so many other people in my region, she came for the opportunities that exist in the Fort McMurray-Conklin area, and she is succeeding. She has made a life for both herself and her husband. I'm very proud that she is able to work for me. If Nicole Blake could please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the entire House an extremely intelligent group of young students and their parent helpers from Mrs. Kerry Faber's grade 6 class at Ekota elementary school. The school's belief states: "with the shared commitment of students, parents, and staff we create a safe and caring learning community in which every student achieves academic success." Joining Mrs. Faber today are parent helpers Joe Friend, Linda Campbell,* Ron Friend, and Don Kwas. At this time I'd ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 20 seconds from now we'll go back to Members' Statements, and we'll begin with Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Members' Statements (continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Government Accountability

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today is likely the last day of this fall session of the Legislature, and it's been one of the most acrimonious in recent history. The government is ending the session early by invoking closure. It is doing so because it can no longer face opposition scrutiny of its actions. Indeed, the Legislature has become dysfunctional.

This is not because of opposition antics, as some would suggest, but because the government has thwarted legitimate debate and questioning. It has raised avoiding accountability to a fine art.

Questions about illegal election donations are not answered, and when complaints are made to the Chief Electoral Officer, investigations are kept secret along with any findings or penalties that might be imposed. The government's so-called reforms will shroud any offences more than three years old in permanent secrecy, including several high-profile cases.

Questions about potential conflicts of interest have been ignored or prevented outright. The answers that are given are contradicted by documentary evidence with no repercussions. Vital election finance legislation has been drafted with no input from the political parties directly affected except, of course, the Progressive Conservatives. The Chief Electoral Officer provided advice directly to the government but not to opposition MLAs despite his mandate as an officer of this Legislature.

All 29 opposition amendments to Bill 4, the whistle-blower protection act, were defeated, many with no one from the government even getting up to speak. Opposition parties have so far presented 106 amendments to government legislation, and the government has voted down all but two.

From the outset of the fall session the government has pushed legislation through the Assembly, regularly sitting past midnight. Finally, the government has imposed closure on Bill 7, a critically important piece of legislation affecting the financing of provincial and municipal elections. By limiting debate to two hours in committee and two hours at third reading of the bill, they ensure that many opposition amendments cannot even be made and that debate is severely limited.

The government's arrogance and disdain for the democratic traditions of the Legislative Assembly have predictably generated much frustration on the part of opposition MLAs.

The Speaker: Hon. member, thank you. Your time has elapsed.

The Government House Leader rose on a point of order at 2:47, right at the conclusion, I believe. You rose on a point of order right after he had concluded? Is that right? We don't normally do points of order on private members' statements, as you know, hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker, but we don't ordinarily make that type of accusation and falsity in a member's statement.

The Speaker: We'll deal with this matter at the conclusion here right away.

Let us go on with Edmonton-Gold Bar.

World Diabetes Day

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On November 14, 2012, millions of people around the world marked United Nations World Diabetes Day, WDD. In part it coincides with the birthday of Dr. Frederick Banting, the Canadian codiscoverer of insulin, and it is an international campaign to raise public awareness about this chronic disease for which there is no cure yet.

This November marked the fourth year of the five-year focus on diabetes education and prevention. The event followed the United Nations summit on noncommunicable diseases in 2011 as there continues to be an urgent need to strengthen the momentum generated by the event and to widen the awareness of the factors responsible for the disease and the solutions required to counter it.

*This spelling could not be verified at the time of publication.

It is important to appeal to the hearts of concerned individuals and the general public to achieve these goals, Mr. Speaker. Internationally the campaign aims to educate, engage, and empower the general public on diabetes.

Many WDD events revolve around the concept of a blue circle, the international symbol of diabetes. In Canada, Mr. Speaker, JDRF was a key player in leading World Diabetes Day events across the country and in the world. JDRF Canada is the leading global organization focused on type 1 diabetes, T1D, research and the largest charitable funder and advocate for T1D research. Founded in 1974 by parents of children with T1D, JDRF is passionate about improving the lives of all people affected by this disease. Canada is definitely a leader in this area. JDRF has made a bold impact on the research landscape by setting the agenda world-wide. Through over a hundred locations in the world JDRF offers a diverse support network. We all appreciate the work that they have done here in Canada and in the world through the UN, very proud of that, because so many of us in one way or another have been affected by diabetes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Letter from a Senior

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Firstly, I want to thank Dorothy, the dear senior in Edmonton who made this beautiful scarf for me. I'm going to speak on behalf of her and many other seniors across this province from a letter.

My Dear MLAs,

Please be patient and understand what I'm going through. One of us raised you and wants you to remember us.

If I repeat, don't say, "You said that already." Please remember that when you were little, I read you the same story every night. When I'm walking slow, take my hand as I did when you were little and offer guidance, not harsh words.

Remember, I bathed you every night, so please don't tell me it's okay if I only get bathed once a week.

When I mess in my diaper, it is no different than when I cleaned you up. Remember, I washed you up, cleaned you up, and we started all over again.

Remember, I fed you home-cooked meals and made sure your food was hot and nutritious. Please don't tell me it is okay for me to eat food when I'm really not sure what I'm eating.

I like and admire the caregivers that are taking care of me. They do a great job. There just aren't enough of them.

Remember, I've taught you to be honest to yourself, to be kind to others, and, more importantly, to take care of yourself. I took care of you, and now it is time for you to take care of me.

With warmth, love, and compassion,
Your parent.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, did you have a tabling?

Ms Pastoor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of the report Bringing Lethbridge Home, the five-year plan to end homelessness. Lethbridge is very proud of their success: 199 households from homelessness to permanent housing; 205 people had intensive follow-up support; shelter occupancy was reduced from 25 per cent to 70 per cent fewer people living rough; 500 volunteers were involved; affordable housing increased by 10 units, for a total of 635 units since 2008. Social Housing in Action continues to work toward ending homelessness.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Okay. I was just about to remind you to just table the document, and we can all read it. Thank you. Is that it? It is concluded?

Ms Pastoor: That's it. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table 764 e-mails that I have received after the government members on the Members' Services Committee voted to give MLAs an 8.1 per cent raise. These are not form letters. In fact, the vast, vast majority were individually written by Albertans upset with the government. I know many of the members on the Members' Services Committee have seen this because they were all CCed. I would like to table them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have six tablings if you'll permit me, three from myself and three from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. The first is a letter by a registered nurse who has worked 50 years in long-term care. I'll just give you one quote: the sad joke among nursing staff is that it's much better to be a prisoner than a senior in Alberta; prisoners get a shower a day.

The second, Mr. Speaker, is from an eight-year-old, whose name is Richard Mather, appealing for protection for habitat and wildlife, especially the sage grouse, whom he's concerned about being threatened in Alberta.

The third is the President's Letter from the Alberta Medical Association commenting on the strategies by the AMA to try and counter the misrepresentation of the negotiation breakdown.

From Edmonton-Meadowlark another tabling, quoting the dissatisfaction with Canadian democracy, published in the Ottawa Citizen.

Another from various media calling for the consistent application of the rules to the Premier that were applied to Mr. Mar.

Finally, a series of articles from the Globe and Mail having to do with Mr. Mar's dismissal.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two tablings, which I referenced today. Action request 39754 indicated the timeline for the decision in choosing the International Tobacco Recovery consortium, which included a decision by the then minister, now the Premier, in early December. Five copies of that.

In addition, action request 40333, another memo from the ADM of legal services noting that shortly before Christmas the then minister, now the Premier, selected the Jensen consortium. Five copies of that as well.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Mr. Anderson: Just one tabling, Mr. Speaker, from Ross Casswell, whose wife suffers from MS. Apparently, the pharmacists of Alberta are thinking of not allowing air miles when you go buy pharmaceutical drugs, which will really hurt him as he and wife rely on that to travel for treatment and other things. I would urge the Minister of Health to look into this at all speed. I've got five copies.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 235 e-mails that we received after inviting Albertans to express their opinions over the government's handling of the tobacco lawsuit. The invitation was issued yesterday, and we received 235 e-mails in roughly three or four hours.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you. One more tabling, Mr. Speaker, from the Alberta Association of Seniors Helping Seniors, calling on the government to restore seniors' programs and services to the same levels as before the Klein government cut these seniors' programs and services.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in the flurry of notes that arrived in the last little while, I inadvertently overlooked one of our members for a private member's statement. I'd like to ask for your unanimous consent to return so that this member can deliver his two-minute statement. Are we all agreed?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, with apologies, proceed.

Alternative Health Practices

Mr. Luan: Thank you. It's a true honour to rise again to give a statement to support my constituency. I'd like to bring the House's attention to alternative wellness practices and their health benefits as I believe their effectiveness has been underestimated. Mr. Speaker, in today's high-pace, high-stress society it is important to pay attention to personal wellness as our day-to-day activities can take a toll on our physical and mental condition. The consequences of ignoring such can be very costly.

Alternative health practices refer to such activities as yoga, tai chi, and qigong. They provide excellent alternatives to alleviate stress and improve one's well-being. Recent studies have shown that yoga could assist in lowering blood pressure and heart rate. This, in turn, helps reduce the risk of heart disease, a condition which affects thousands of Albertans. Tai chi and qigong are other alternatives which involve a system of relaxation and breathing techniques and have been practised in Asia for centuries. Studies have repeatedly shown that these activities can help reduce anxiety and depression and boost one's immune system function.

I believe that we should do more to help increase the awareness of those alternative wellness practices and their health benefits. One of the great initiatives undertaken by the government of Alberta is Healthy U, which promotes healthy choices for food and active lifestyles, including practising nontraditional exercises. A healthy you leads to a healthy Alberta, which, in turn, leads to a lower cost for Alberta health care. I believe Albertans are well served in this way, and we should send a positive message to our government to continue doing the right thing.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Horner, President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, pursuant to the Conflicts of Interest Act Report of Selected Payments to the Members and Former Members of the Legislative Assembly and Persons Directly Associated with Members of the Legislative Assembly, year ended March 31, 2012.

Statement by the Speaker

Questions about the Subject of a Privilege Motion

The Speaker: Hon. members, there were a few points of order that were raised. Just prior to that, I want to address some notes that were sent up, some questions that were asked in the last little while with respect to how the proceedings worked today and why it is that the Speaker allowed questions and comments and other things pertaining to the issue of tobacco litigation and things related to that.

First, however, I must explain why they were ruled out of order yesterday as one final reminder. Yesterday in accordance with pages 502 and 503 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice I indicated to you: "Furthermore, a question should not . . . deal with the subject matter of a question of privilege previously raised, on which the Speaker reserved his decision." That was the circumstance yesterday. That was not the circumstance today. So when you're responding to your constituents, hon. members, and you're looking for clarification, there you have it now in Hansard. That issue was resolved yesterday, and the Speaker ruled on it, as you know.

Today is a new day, different circumstances, and that particular rule did not apply. However, all other rules still do apply: no personal attacks; do not cast aspersions on one another or on others, and do not make statements or create actions that might result in some disobedience or some disorder or disruptions in the House. Those rules still apply along with all the others.

That having been said, we're going to move to our points of order here. Just before we do that, just one other quick reminder, which is on page 634 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice. Let me just read you this quick note because sometimes it is applicable, obviously, and it is potentially applicable here. "A Member may not direct remarks to the House or engage in debate by raising a matter under the guise of a point of order." So let's just keep that in mind for whoever raises points of order today or in subsequent sessions. This is not an opportunity to prolong debate as such.

Let's hear the points of order that we have here. I have, I think, three or four, maybe five. Let's start with Airdrie, please.

Point of Order

Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one of the points of order. The deputy House leader for the Wildrose will deal with the first one that I had to deal with. It's actually a point of clarification on your comments under section 13(2) of the standing orders. I would just ask the Speaker to clarify: in future when there is a specific subject that is not to be broached in question period, as was the case yesterday, because of a rule that you pointed out, could your office please inform us, the opposition members, of that ruling so that we can prepare for question period accordingly?

The Speaker: I'm sorry. Which citation are you rising under on your point of order?

Mr. Anderson: Under 13(2) of the standing orders.

The Speaker: So you're asking for a clarification on something in a general sense?

Mr. Anderson: On what you just said. In future if there's going to be subject matter that we're not permitted on that day to deal with, could you please inform our offices before so we can prepare accordingly?

The Speaker: Hon. member, thank you for the question. While I'm not going to get into a debate with you on it, let me just mention the following: I did exactly that. Unfortunately, I was not able to do it until just before Members' Statements started. If you'll remember, our introductions of guests and so on ran very long yesterday, so we didn't actually get to the first member's statement – in fact, we didn't get to one, as I recall, but I did clarify it as quickly as I could. That would be the traditional place.

However, as a cautionary note I will take that comment under advisement and see what we can do in the future to provide more notice, recognizing that there a lot of new people in the Assembly, and not everybody could clearly understand yesterday what the point of privilege really was about and how the House of Commons Procedure and Practice pages 502-503, the quote I just read out a few minutes ago, would apply in that case but did not apply today. So let's bear that in mind.

Now let's move on. The next point of order.

Point of Order Allegations against Members

Mr. Anderson: The only point of order that I will bring up is under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j) and is this issue with the members of government – it happened twice today, once with the Premier and once with the Solicitor General – when they said specifically that the Wildrose is in the pockets of big tobacco. Clearly, that was meant, as you often say, to incite disorder in the House. They know that that is not the case, that that's not what we're questioning, and that, in fact, we approve of the case moving forward. We're not questioning the need for it but just the decision, how it was made and so forth. So that's just a point of clarification.

The Speaker: I would agree. It's a point of clarification. In fact, there are two. We can probably address them both at the same time, hon. Member for Airdrie. In the first comment the hon. Premier said, "But I am very proud of the fact that as Justice minister we decided to sue big tobacco when that Leader of the Opposition has said that she wouldn't."

Your second point of order is with respect to a comment made by the Minister of Justice shortly thereafter, I believe, in which the hon. Minister of Justice said, among other things, "I'm on the side of everyday Albertans, not big tobacco." The context within which that was said was, in the Speaker's view, important, so I'm going to ask the hon. Minister of Justice to please clarify what he had intended there, and we will move on. Briefly.

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, my comment was that I was on the side of everyday Albertans, not big tobacco. There was not an intimation towards any other member here, and I apologize if anyone would have perceived that.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

Was there another point of order that was over here? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Point of Order Anticipation

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising on this point of order on behalf of the Member for Airdrie under Standing Order 23(e). In a response to a question from the Member for Red Deer-North the Deputy Premier referred to the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012, indicating that it was passed. Of course, subsection (e) of the standing orders states that it is improper to anticipate, "contrary to good parliamentary practice, any matter already on the Order Paper or on notice for consideration on that day." I do have the Order Paper in front of me, which notes that the Election Accountability Amendment Act is on the Order Paper for Committee of the Whole today. I'd ask him to withdraw that comment.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. In fact, the Deputy Premier made a statement similar to what you're commenting on, and I believe he immediately corrected himself as well. It's a good reminder for everyone. I don't think this bears anything further. It was in fact corrected right at that time. But you're quite correct, hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. We should not anticipate in that manner, and we'll try and ensure that it doesn't happen again.

I believe that concludes our points of order. I did want to make one clarification, however, with respect to a comment that was raised by the Government House Leader.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rose under 23(l), "introduces any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly." The practice of members' statements has been a very important practice in this House, and the general rule has been that members' statements are not interrupted. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood during his members' statement, however, made a number of false statements that can't be characterized any other way when he made the allegation – and I think it is an allegation against me, which would be another rule, 23(h) – that somehow we had invoked closure or time allocation.

In fact, what's happened is that a notice of motion was put on the Order Paper, hasn't been invoked, hasn't been utilized but put on the Order Paper in the event that it's necessary to deal with the time remaining in this session with respect to the remaining bill before the House. I would ask that the hon. member be asked to withdraw the statement that we've invoked that. It may in fact be appropriate tomorrow. I don't know. But it wasn't appropriate today because it hasn't been done. I understand the hon. member wants to make these hyperbolic statements about how bad the government is – you know, hair on him; that's what he does all the time – but they should be at least based on some meritable point. To suggest that closure had been invoked at this stage is absolutely wrong.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader, for the point. I'm going to just comment on this very quickly and then recognize the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I would agree that this is a point of clarification; it's not so much a point of order. But it is an opportunity for us to please be careful, again, with our choice of words. In your statement, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, you indicated a few things that caused some people to stir. One of them was, “Today is likely the last day of this fall session.” That one is speculative, perhaps.

Nonetheless, I believe it’s the comment when you said, “Finally, the government has imposed closure on Bill 7.” Factually – and I think all hon. members would know this – that is not true. There is a notice of motion which if the government chooses to put into effect, it may do. But that motion would have to be put forward to you at a time of the government’s choosing if it so wishes. Until that time, it has no merit in fact because it has not yet been exercised.

The other point was with respect to a comment made during your statement in which you said, “The Chief Electoral Officer provided advice directly to the government but not to opposition MLAs despite his mandate as an officer of this Legislature.” There are a couple of clarifications that need to be referenced for all of you. I think you need to be cautioned, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, not to make statements about persons outside the House in that manner. It’s not of a huge or grave concern for the way that you may have felt you did it. Nonetheless, I have admonished other members in this respect, so I am reminding you at this time as well. We invite you to clarify your point of view, and then we’ll move on.

Mr. Mason: I don’t really have anything to say, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: All right. Well, then, that ends that matter. It’s been sufficiently clarified. We will move on.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: Hon. members, just take your seats for a moment if you would, please. There’s a tradition in this House that I was just reminded of here, and that is that we take time out from time to time to thank the people who help us in this Assembly in order that we might be able to better help Albertans outside this Assembly. On this occasion I’m going to ask and recognize for a brief comment in this regard the Deputy Speaker with your indulgence, please.

Page Recognition

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the members of the House for their indulgence. Hon. members, it is with pleasure that we present gifts to our hard-working pages at this wonderful time of the year. These young people work exceptionally hard to make sure that the work of the members in this Assembly flows like a well-oiled machine. We are truly blessed by their dedication to the task at hand.

The following four pages joined us in 2010: Ellen McClure, the head page; Helen Cashman, the Speaker’s page; James Bonnell; Mackenzie Martin. In 2011 the following six pages joined us: Donald Ademaj, Alyssa Edgerton, Claire Edwards, Perrin Michalyszyn, Gabriella Peter, and Tierra Stokes. Finally, in 2012 we were joined by the following pages: Chantelle Bryce, Ann Dang, Stephanie Nedoshytko, Danielle Seymour, Melina Sinclair, Ben Thronson, Elizabeth Winton, and Matthew Owens.

I ask you to join me in recognizing the efforts of our diligent pages, who daily show patience and understanding of our many demands, and they are many, Mr. Speaker. They carry out their tasks with attention to duty, including some very late nights, as you recall, in the past few weeks. These gifts are from the personal contribution of every member of our Assembly, and along with these gifts we offer our best wishes. We’re honoured to have our pages work with us in the Legislature to serve Albertans.

I will now ask our Deputy Chair of Committees to hand a gift to Ellen McClure. Ellen is the head page, who is representing all of the pages today. Ellen in turn will present each of the rest of the pages with their individual gifts later.

Thank you. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. Let the record show that our pages received a standing ovation, and that they have truly earned it this session. Thank you all.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I’d like to call the committee to order.

Bill 7 Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to the bill? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. Yesterday we saw on the bill that several amendments were put forward to this government, what we would see as reasonable amendments, and they were unanimously rejected I think by pretty much every single member on the other side. One that was particularly egregious was the going back seven years to shine light on any individual that made an illegal donation to a political party. This is not just an allegation of illegality. It’s a situation where the Chief Electoral Officer has already found that an illegal donation has been made and in some cases applied penalties.

The other provision that was voted down was the requirement that if someone does not repay an administrative penalty, it be made public within 30 days and published on the Chief Electoral Officer’s website, which, again, seems very reasonable, but apparently that openness and transparency is not wanted here.

The other provision that was voted down was the requirement that the Chief Electoral Officer actually publicly disclose any findings of wrongdoing. It’s shocking, when you have a government that publicly comes forward saying that openness and transparency is a cornerstone of the government, that they would not want something like this to be made public. It was very disappointing.

The other amendment, of course, that was put forward by the hon. member of the New Democratic Party essentially increased the fines so that if someone had made, for example, a $430,000 donation, which was $400,000 over the contribution limit, there would be a $400,000 fine rather than just a $10,000 slap on the wrist.

We do have numerous other amendments, Madam Chair, and I’d like to present one right now. I have the requisite copies.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

We’ll pause for a moment while we distribute copies of that amendment, and this amendment will be known as A13, your lucky amendment.

We can proceed with amendment A13, hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. What this amendment does is that it repeals, essentially, section (a) of section 32(3).

What the government has done here is, you know, on the surface of it, made it look like there's openness and transparency by requiring quarterly reporting of financial statements for constituency associations and political parties, but in reality what it does is that it just adds more work without giving more information.

The same information, a list of donors over the $250 limit, can be filed each and every year. Making constituency associations file every quarter is a penalty on smaller parties with fewer volunteers, making it harder for them to comply with the regulations. The Wildrose wants more information to be revealed, not onerous requirements placed on volunteers to repeat information without adding anything. It's, of course, important that we limit donations with respect to corporate and union influence rather than force political parties to file quarterly. This simply makes it harder for organizations to operate.

I know that there are many constituency associations, particularly in nonelection years, that remain somewhat dormant at times, and it's very difficult to in some instances find volunteers with the requisite experience to do all these filings. It just adds red tape. If the government wants to add red tape, they can do it in many other areas, and they have done so, but the last place that they should add red tape is on volunteers in this circumstance. I don't think it provides any extra transparency to have a constituency association file something quarterly, particularly when their max donation is $1,000 per donor. I don't think any reasonable person would think that a $1,000 donation not filed until year-end somehow would have some type of perverse influence on any decision-making capacity of any Member of this Legislative Assembly.

I think this is a very reasonable amendment. I hope that the government decides not to add extra burden, extra red tape not only on the constituency associations but also on the Chief Electoral Officer. His office is now going to have to deal with, you know, a quadrupling of paper rather than simply reviewing audited financial statements from a political party perspective and the filings from a constituency association that are required to be filed annually.

I don't understand the reason for this change. I don't think it was in the Chief Electoral Officer's list of recommendations. The hon. Justice minister has always said: "We were waiting for the Chief Electoral Officer's recommendations. That's what we act on." In this amendment that he put forward it was nowhere to be found, and I think the Chief Electoral Officer didn't put it in there because he, obviously, likely didn't see any benefit to it and would just see an unnecessary increase in his workload and his staff's. Instead of investigating potential wrongdoings, they're going to be looking at paper and paper, mounds and mounds of paper, often, I'm assuming, in circumstances where they're simply going to be blank filings. Even to get signatures during summertime, when people are on holidays, is just an exceptional burden to place on volunteers, and I think it'll reduce the amount of engagement of volunteers and people that want to get involved in the political process, which is contrary to what I think the intention of these amendments are.

I think it's quite telling that the Chief Electoral Officer didn't put this in his report, and I think a lot of constituency associations, a lot of volunteers from all parties are going to be very frustrated by this ill-advised amendment by the government.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. First off, I believe that an identical if not almost identical amendment was already dealt with last night, and please correct me if I'm wrong.

My one comment is this. I find it really rich for the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills to talk about openness and accountability, which he has points on, but at the same time to oppose something that would do just that. I would indicate what I said last night, Madam Chair, that this encourages better accountability in local associations because every three months they push things through, not just pushing the receipts in at the end of the calendar year.

Madam Chair, I will be opposing this amendment. I encourage all other members to follow suit.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Parliamentary Counsel has advised me that there are different elements to this amendment.

Mr. Denis: I apologize.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. What the government is proposing doing here has similarities to, actually, the .05 legislation, that they brought forward, in this regard, that what this is doing is not going to in any way, shape, or form increase transparency, just like the .05 law is not going to improve public safety. Instead of directing enforcement resources towards things that are the problem – there are so many issues in our electoral system right now, and we all know some of those because we've had first-hand experience with it. There are things that do need to be investigated. There are things that do need to be disclosed better.

For example, we have all these different amendments that are going to actually do something to improve disclosure and so forth, and this amendment just does not do that. I mean, it's already being disclosed. Why do you need to disclose it every quarter and just tie up the Chief Electoral Officer's office even further? It doesn't make any sense. Not only that, but it ties up our volunteers. We all have volunteers in here. Some of our boards are bigger than others. Some are actually quite small. They're not very big. They have maybe a few folks on them. Why are we tying them up with paperwork once a quarter?

I mean, I could see the party maybe having to do this. Maybe they do already do this. I don't think so, but I could see the parties needing to do this, and they have the resources, generally, to do so. But regular constituency associations? I do see a lot of heads on the other side nodding to this.

Let's just be reasonable about this. There's no point in burdening our volunteers, who work very hard already, who have limited time, especially when boards do tend to shrink a little bit in off-election years, so starting next year, just because people, you know, get really going during the election and the run-up to the election. Boards increase, and there's lots of help.

It doesn't do anything. Again, if this was increasing transparency, we'd be for it, but it's not. It's increasing workload, and there's going to be an unforeseen, unintended consequence to this in that the Chief Electoral Officer is going to be tied up with useless paperwork instead of investigating some matters that do need to be investigated. His office has limited resources. He's come to a committee of this Legislature just recently asking and pleading for more cash, funding for his office, in order that he can conduct the investigations already under the act. There are, obviously, some more transparency requirements in this bill. We've got to make sure that what we're introducing here are things that are actually going to increase transparency, not things that are going to randomly, you know, just create more paperwork.

I would think, you know, there are folks on the other side who've been very clear that they're not in favour of unneeded red tape. That's what this is, totally unneeded red tape. This does not increase transparency. It doesn't increase accountability. It increases nothing except workload on local volunteers and workload on the Chief Electoral Officer.

Like the case with the .05 legislation, where we have court time and police time and enforcement resources used to go after folks who are not dangerous at all on our highways instead of using that to go after the folks that are over .08 that are killing people on our highways and roads, instead of doing that, we're using our enforcement resources on something that isn't a problem. We should be using our enforcement resources on things that are a problem, Madam Chair. As that goes just with the drinking and driving legislation, the .05 law, so it applies to this, too.

Again, I would say that this is a reason, another example, Madam Chair, why issues like this and bills this thick need more than a couple of days of debate and need to be referred to legislative committees. These are the exact types of ridiculous rules that get plugged into these bills that create just completely unnecessary hardship on not only volunteer citizens, whom we all respect and all have on our local CA boards, but also on the Chief Electoral Officer and cause costs to go up. There are things that won't be enforced under this act because workers at the Chief Electoral Officer's office will be filing paperwork needlessly.

I would ask hon. members opposite – you've only accepted two out of 107 amendments thus far, certainly nothing substantial. I will agree that this is not the most substantial piece of this legislation, but surely this is something that the majority of folks in here can agree is not necessary. The Chief Electoral Officer has not made the recommendation on it. Let's support this. Let's get one amendment and show that, actually, the democratic process works. I just know from the number of heads bobbing over there that they agree on this one, so let's pass this amendment and make it reasonable for our volunteers and for the Chief Electoral Officer.

3:30

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Chair. I hesitate to get involved in this particular portion of the debate, but I do want to just make a couple of points. First of all, the hon. member suggests that there is no value to this. In fact, I would suggest to him that there is a great deal of value. A lot of the issues and concerns that have been raised that are so-called serious infractions of the act are really just errors of process. The errors of process come because one can't know until all the reports are in exactly how much somebody has contributed to a particular area. I'll use as an example that at the end of the year I'm often in a position in my constituency association that I'm required to return funds. Why? Because there's a maximum of $1,000 per year to five constituencies, and when somebody breaks that by making a gift, we have no way of knowing that until the end of the year, when the consolidation is done and somebody can come back.

Now, that could be an infraction of the act that I could be hauled up for or that my constituency association could be hauled up for. The reality is that if these were reported on a quarterly basis, it would be caught earlier in time, and those sorts of infractions wouldn't happen. There are other types of infractions of that nature, which are mistakes that are made, quite honest mistakes that are made, because there are volunteers that do this work. They are in each of our constituency associations. There are 87 constituency associations across the province. Until all of this material goes through the receiving process through the party, you don't pick up these sorts of issues.

Again, there are other particular things that are mistakes. People sell tickets to, for example, a lobster boil. They might sell a ticket to a lobster boil and then the cheque might come from an inappropriate place. If you review that on a constant basis, those errors can be picked up. I think all of us should be alert to that. All of us should be trying to ensure that on an ongoing basis the act is being followed and that all requirements of the act are being followed. But we do work in 87 different constituency associations with respect to each of the parties, and there are volunteers involved, and there will be mistakes made.

By adding a quarterly reporting function, it just adds to the ability for all of this to be consolidated and for those mistakes to be caught on a timely basis and corrected before the year-end, because it's a year-end contribution limit, not an in-year contribution limit. So those things can be corrected while they're still mistakes and before they're actually breaches. There is actually a valid reason to have this type of reporting in.

Now, with respect to the volume of paper this does not have to be a significantly onerous piece. It can actually be streamlined quite well with respect to automated reporting mechanisms, things that we have these days, so that part of the process can certainly take place. There's no need for any of the allegations that the Chief Electoral Officer will be distracted from doing more important investigatory work.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak on this amendment, and I speak in support of the amendment. The reason that I'm speaking to it is because I just have to wonder: did the Justice minister ever have the discussion with the Chief Electoral Officer as to whether or not this would be onerous? We're all assuming that it may or may not be onerous, but if that discussion has never happened, how do you even know? Maybe this is okay in the cities, but I know that in many rural constituencies we rely on an elderly population to do some of these duties for us. Maybe, you know, they're not quite up on the automated systems that everybody talks about. More importantly, if you're asking them to disclose quarterly, literally what happens is that by the time they get the first quarter done, they're immediately starting into the second quarter, and it could take them three months to pull all this information together.

I know for a fact that in my own constituency we don't have the automatic pay for memberships. My memberships come into my constituency association, they're written by cheque, and the person who looks after my memberships collects them and submits them once a month, all at one time. And because he doesn't want to send cash in the mail, he actually drives them down to Calgary. He tries to find a day when he's got something else to do, and he drives them down to the party office in Calgary.

Not every constituency has this abundance of up-to-snuff volunteers that can just do this all voluntarily. We're relying on volunteers – these are not paid people – to do this, and we're asking them to increase their workload when, really, right now they're doing it out of the goodness of their heart.

I think everybody in this room is talking about disclosure, and there's no question that we want a more open and transparent process. But one also has to ask: is the reason they're asking for quarterly reporting so that they can see who's supporting what party, so that then whatever actions can be taken will be taken? It is a question. Why do you need to know quarterly who's donating to what party on either side of this House? It is a question that's out there. When you start asking people to disclose quarterly, there is a reason you're doing that. Their names become public. They don't mind doing that at the end of the year, but there could be some people out there who believe that there might be alternate motivations for why they would like to disclose quarterly.

The other question is that it's my understanding that the Chief Electoral Officer has come back – I'm not exactly sure in which committee it was – already saying that his office is overloaded and that he needs more dollars. If his office is already overloaded and he needs more money to do the work that he's currently doing, then Bill 7 is going to add on some more workload to him, and if we've never had the discussion with him with regard to how this will add to his workload, there might be a question as to what kind of fiscal impact that has.

The other part of this is that it's interesting, you know, that this government spent a lot of time reducing the amount of disclosure from under $375 to $250. That's fine. I don't personally have a problem with that. But if you're going to disclose quarterly, that adds a lot of workload. There is quite a difference between the person who's going to donate $250 and the person who may donate $375.01. So it would seem to me that that's going to add to the workload, too, of a volunteer who's here helping us out.

The government would have you believe that this is about transparency, but in reality it's adding a workload. It's putting more demands onto our volunteers, who already in some constituencies, especially in nonelection years, might be taxed. And it shows that, literally, going forward, the amount of reporting is still going to be equal to what we would have had in the yearly reporting. Yes, you're right; maybe we could have caught the person who donated $200 over the limits. That's possible. But we're not catching them now either. Are you honestly saying that in the last quarter that would be so much more relevant and prevalent that you could immediately stop that donation? Not likely because in the last quarter they're still working on the third quarter. Then they're submitting it, and then the fourth quarter starts.

So the person who's doing those donations or memberships or however the money is coming in is usually keeping a tally or trying their best, and if that's already an issue, then that shows that that person is probably overworked, because they're doing this on their own private time.

I understand that probably the Justice minister will decide not to support this amendment just for the sake of not supporting this amendment and that he'll say that it's to be open and transparent and accountable. Yet it's interesting that he won't support the amendment that ends the corporate donations either, and he won't support the amendment that goes back seven years, and he won't support the amendment that offers full disclosure.

If we want to talk about true openness and true accountability, then maybe we should have started there by the time we got here. But to put this onerous workload onto volunteers – and all across Alberta every single one of us has volunteers in our riding associations who do this work. Some of us have better volunteers than others, and that's great. For those ridings that can do this, that's fabulous. But that doesn't apply to all 87 ridings. What it does is that it really targets smaller parties. For that reason, I support this amendment.

3:40

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.
The President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. You know, I've been listening intently to the different views on whether or not our association should be reporting on a regular basis. I actually did talk to my association in one of our monthly meetings and asked them whether they felt that us reporting and being transparent on a quarterly basis would be onerous. I have a 'rurban' riding, so I have volunteers from the country and I have volunteers from the city. I have volunteers from two different cities, so they actually have to go from one city to another city to get to my meetings, which also sometimes causes some grief. Frankly, they made it quite clear to me that they have absolutely no problem with this. Therefore, I won't be supporting the amendment.

The other thing I would suggest to you is that the number of amendments doesn't mean that all of the amendments were of high quality and needed to be passed. If the number of amendments is very large, perhaps the quality of them isn't that good.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to be able to rise and speak for the first time, actually, on this bill, which is careening through at a breakneck pace. There are so many things wrong with this bill. I must beg to differ with the previous speaker because, indeed, the reason there are so many amendments to this bill is because it was not fully consulted on.

Certainly, anybody would admit and acknowledge that parties are stakeholders, and parties ought then to have been consulted. I can't say one way or the other whether people in the government party at some point or another got to be consulted as a result of their caucus members having the Chief Electoral Officer's recommendations for three months longer than the rest of us, but I can say that officials in our party certainly were not consulted. We are frantically now trying to deal with the issues that we have been presented with, with almost no notice, by a party that seems very interested in bullying its way through this particular piece of legislation.

It's ironic, Madam Chair, because this is a piece of legislation that governs elections, and there is no process within our democratic system which is more fundamental to notions of accountability and transparency and democracy than elections. The laws around elections should be openly discussed and consulted on equally by all parties and all members of all parties. Instead, we have this dog-and-pony show, where we're going to get about a day and a half of debate on an extremely complex piece of legislation. So I take issue, therefore, with the comments made by the last speaker because it really is quite offensive to our democratic system, this process that is under way right now.

On the motion that is on the floor, I speak on behalf of a party which, of course, here we are, the fourth party over here at this end of the Legislature, you know, one row of seats away from sitting out in the front hall. We are a small party, so it would've actually been quite nice had somebody consulted with the administrators in our party about what was a reasonable way to proceed.

I think back to the debate that went on around changes in legislation around the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. At that time, strangely, the officer of the Legislature who was responsible for that actually consulted with the agencies and the groups that would have been impacted by the legislation. One of the groups that they consulted with were small nonprofits. The fact of the matter is that small nonprofits are exempted from elements of that legislation because it would've been too onerous for them.

Had there been any consultation, Madam Chair, with our particular organization, which is a stakeholder to this piece of legislation, this government would have heard that smaller parties are oppressed by extensive administrative requirements. The fact of the matter is that we don't get $450,000 cheques written to us by Daryl Katz. We, in fact, have a principle and a rule in our party that we don't accept corporate donations. Notwithstanding that the law allows it, we don't accept them. We run on less money because we think that ideas are what matters, not just dollars.

The fact of the matter is that we don't have a gargantuan staff. We don't have electronic accounting systems as was referred to by one of the previous speakers. We have one or two full-time staff and a whole bunch of volunteers, and none of those people were consulted on this piece of legislation. None of them were consulted about what this particular requirement would mean.

Now, I find it particularly ironic because over here we have a defence saying, "Oh, this will increase transparency; this will increase accountability," but this is coming from a group of people that just last night rejected a motion that would have made their very well-funded, well-staffed party accountable for receiving donations that were otherwise illegal. They rejected that amendment. For them to then say that we're going to pile a whole schvack of administrative obligations onto parties regardless of their size or their resources and without ever consulting with them "because we believe in accountability," Madam Chair, is utterly ridiculous. It's laughable, it's hypocritical, and it is yet another one of the many statements that have come from that side of this House, which is very, very much testing the population's willingness to believe in their credibility anymore because the hypocrisy is becoming quite overwhelming.

This particular amendment is just one of many worthwhile amendments, most of which we probably will not get an opportunity to speak to. Had there been consultation either by the Chief Electoral Officer or by members of this government with one of the key stakeholders in this electoral system, which is our party, which has existed since 1963 and, before that, existed in the early 30s, which has been around as long as their party, smaller yes, but here all along, a clear stakeholder in our democratic system – not one word of consultation, Madam Chair, not one. Then we get this little proposal, that was clearly put together by a bunch of people who have a lot of office staff sitting around with lots of time on their hands and who have no trouble putting together and meeting these standards.

But democracy isn't just about folks that are in big, well-funded offices with lots and lots and lots of electronics to help them and lots and lots of money to keep all their staff working all the time. It's also about small parties where groups of volunteers come together and work very hard to make sure that they meet all the rules that are necessary in order to ensure that they run a full slate of candidates every election and that they file all their documents in accordance with the laws and the rules that they are compelled to follow. That's what we've done for – well, I don't know; we're in 2012 – 80 years in this province.

But, Madam Chair, it really is quite offensive to be in a position now where after all that time we're getting a piece of legislation like this one, which clearly – clearly – was developed in the backrooms by a small group of people, without any effort to actually consult with some of the key stakeholders in the process. This is one of the many, many, many oversights that comes from that failure on this government's part in that there is just absolutely no understanding about what this kind of obligation will do to smaller parties that work very, very hard to meet the rules that currently exist in order to ensure that even after 41 years in this province Albertans have a broad range of electoral choices.

We work very hard to make that happen. This particular clause in the legislation is going to make it even harder.

This government would know that if they had talked to us. They didn't bother. So now what they should do is accept the amendment. They probably won't. Things will carry on exactly the same as they have before, and when folks over there get their backs up and get all indignant because people on this side get a little irritated by the process and by the constant assertion of the majority to the exclusion of well-thought-out minority voices, then they're simply going to have to deal with the consequences because that's what happens when you conduct yourself in the manner that this government has. In particular, it is brought together very nicely in the way this piece of legislation has moved through the process. From the very beginning to this point now, Madam Chair, the course and the history of this legislation encapsulates the arrogance and the failure to actually take action to be accountable, to be transparent, to be consultative, to be respectful of Albertans, all Albertans. All of that is reflected in the way this bill has been handled to this point.

We certainly are in favour of this amendment, and we urge all members of this Assembly to support it. Thank you.

3:50

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll be brief. A good practice, actually, would be to reconcile monthly, certainly not annually. I think this just helps organizations to get closer to a true reconciliation, which will help them at the end of the day in the annual reconciliation and will allow them to be able to find problems as they go along, as has already been stated. In fact, when we discussed this in our caucus – and we do get a chance to discuss things in our caucus quite a lot. We talked a lot about it, five meetings, in fact, on this particular bill. We had ample chance to discuss these issues, and I did. I phoned right after one of these meetings my finance chair, who is a very, very busy person. To my surprise, quite frankly, he was a hundred per cent supportive of this. He said that in his experience – and he's been doing this for about 22 years – there'll be great support for this across the province.

Finally, I've got to say that you cannot assume that this is an extra cost to the elections people at central offices. Unless I missed something, I don't see anything in there where they're required to do anything necessarily with the information that's going to cause them a lot of work. They can simply take this information and use it how they will. The sum of the parts is the same. The four quarterly reports go in, and they are the annual.

I don't agree with this amendment, and I won't be supporting it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I actually had a chance to consult with my riding and even the Sylvan Lake constituency. Of course, you can imagine that they're more than satisfied with an annual return.

I want to comment on a couple of items. The idea that this would somehow catch somebody donating over the limit to multiple constituencies, as if that was not going to be caught on an annual basis, or the idea that this would prevent it, is just not substantiated with any facts or with any merit in the sense that someone can still make the mistake, and you still have to find the mistake, and you still have to return the money one way or the other. Of course, why should the party care? The party is not responsible. We didn't accept that amendment last night. There's really not a lot of concern on the party's side in dealing with this.

We did actually get a chance to talk about this a little bit under a different motion because we still were dealing with the quarterly filing. Goodness gracious, there were false aspersions cast at me on the issue of accountability dealing with looking up election donations. It was kind of interesting because I got accused of FOIPing somebody, an hon. member in this Assembly, or my party got accused of that. I did a little checking because it's directly related to this amendment on looking for contributions that may or may not violate the rules or regulations. What I discovered is that my own town got FOIPed – and I didn't know that – by the same people that FOIPed this other member's community. I found that the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake had her community FOIPed. Basically, what we found is that no individual was FOIPed.

There is research ongoing, and I don't think there's any merit in any personal attacks or anything such as that. It's just research. Asking that this be filed on a quarterly basis would never change that. That kind of research would still take place because there's no accountability on the party's side. We want to look at information on where party donations are coming from. We will still do our research accordingly. This won't change that. This isn't going to change people being found to be in violation any more than they would be found in violation at the end of the year on an annual return.

The idea that it won't cause any more paperwork or costs to Elections Alberta I would disagree with. We're talking about, if we just count the parties in this Assembly and not the parties even outside, roughly estimated, 1,400 filings annually. Those 1,400 filings have to be processed by Elections Alberta. They will be processed on a quarterly basis, but they still have to be processed. The amount of work that will take: well, that's just the extra number of filings less, I guess, 348. Is that really worth it?

Really, what's happening here: the increased paperwork does not increase transparency. The transparency still occurs on the annual basis; the knowledge that we're going to gain is still going to be there on the annual return. So if you look at particularly the September date, when that quarter ends, that filing would most likely be – and I'm going to assume or presume that Elections Alberta would still use their current methodology, which would allow 30 days or 60 days for a filing, whatever the dates they set. We then will be still dealing with: how important is it to get that information, say, in November or October versus January? Is that really a huge advantage? The disclosure is the same. Again, I don't see where this actually increases any transparency. Transparency remains the same, but the paperwork increases for no other reason.

To the hon. member who disparaged every amendment that has been brought forward on this bill – and I make the presumption that that includes this amendment – as being substandard or poor in quality, I would suggest that there have been numerous arguments against the amendments that have been of lesser quality and significantly so in some cases.

In particular, there was an amendment brought forward on the issue: can the Chief Electoral Officer go out and meet other parties that are registered parties but are not necessarily represented in the Legislature? I never heard one argument why, but it was rejected.

On this amendment here I'm listening to the arguments. In my view, in quality they're less than the actual amendment, if you want to go down that road. Where is the increased transparency? Is time that important in the sense that I need to know in June versus in January? I don't see the value of it. What I see the value of is holding people accountable, but we've been down that road.

Those amendments were rejected, so if we're not about holding the party accountable and just putting all the onus on the people making the donations, then the arguments against this amendment don't carry a lot of weight. We need to look at what this amendment does. What is the value of continuing with that quarterly reporting? It doesn't change this so-called error in process. If there's an error in process, we'll find it on the quarterly basis, yes, but we will find the error in process on an annual basis. It's as simple as that.

Now, on the issue of dealing with party reporting, the importance of that is significant in many regards, but nothing is, in my mind, more important than the actual election campaign return. That is the one that generally takes in the most money, and that's the one where we see the campaign expenditures.

The typical fundraising of constituencies: some constituencies are far more active, and they will draw a lot more money. But for the most part when constituencies hold their fundraising events, they generally don't spend a whole lot of money. The expenses really come in when elections are called, those funds are transferred, and an election campaign is fully under way. That's a whole different ball game, a whole different set of books.

It is important, in my mind, that maybe the party at the provincial level be held to a different standard than some of the CAs in the sense that maybe we can do a quarterly return on a party, but to pick on the CAs, I don't see the value to it, none at all.

I'll tell you something. Living in Alberta, I wouldn't go to a lobster boil. Never. I'd go to a lobster boil out on the east coast. In Alberta I'd go to a beef fundraiser because we support Alberta beef over here. I had to throw that one out. I suppose if I go back east, we'll fly Alberta beef back east and hold a fundraiser.

I just want to finish and close with the idea that this is a contradiction. Everything that this government has said up to this point, particularly where it dealt with energy, was on the whole streamlining process: let's eliminate bureaucracy, particularly the bureaucracy that doesn't really help. That's what that bill was about.

That's what this amendment is about, to eliminate overly bureaucratic processes that really don't bring any greater value to the process, which is the whole idea of all this excess paperwork for one thing and one thing only, excess paperwork. The transparency will still be there. The disclosure will still be there. This does not offer to or increase any of the transparency or disclosure. What is the importance of the quarterly statements? Why is that time frame so important? I don't see where the value is in that. Maybe the hon. member can elaborate on that, but it's not here in any of the arguments that have been given so far.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other comments on amendment A13?

Seeing none, I'll ask the question.

[Motion on amendment A13 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on Bill 7.

Mr. Saskiw: I'm very pleased to produce an amendment that took a lot of work to get prepared, and I'd like to thank Parliamentary Counsel for that. I have the requisite copies.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

We will distribute copies of that amendment now. We'll pause until members have a copy.

Hon. member, you can proceed with amendment A14 to Bill 7, Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. What this amendment does – and I'll explain it later – is that it essentially bans corporate donations in Alberta. We're here today because Alberta's electoral system needs changes, big changes. A series of high-profile scandals involving huge corporate political donations and tax dollars being funneled to political parties has shaken the public's confidence in our democratic process. Albertans want to know that elections are fair and that political parties can't be bought by special interests and that the sole stakeholder in our elections is and always will be the individual voter.

For years Alberta's electoral process has been open to abuse by donors with deep pockets. The result has been mounting skepticism from the voting public and governments that, at the very least, appear to be bound to their big-time corporate and union contributors. Even this appearance is damaging to our democracy. However, in some cases it goes beyond that. Albertans need look no further than the power line companies, their frequent appearance on PC financial disclosures, and the lucrative contracts awarded to them by the PC cabinet under Bill 50. It all amounts to this. Alberta's election laws are medieval, and the proposed changes to them under Bill 7, the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012, don't go nearly far enough. Bill 7 is a tune-up. What we need is an overhaul.

I'm proud to announce a Wildrose amendment to ban all corporate donations to political parties. This is a no-brainer. Albertans want this. They've told us they want this. Other jurisdictions have long since taken corporate and union donations out of the equation. It's time for Alberta to get with it and do the same. Ending these types of megadonations from agenda-driven corporations and unions will eliminate the perceived cloud of corruption that hangs over our system and make individual voters the sole financers of our election campaigns.

The Wildrose would also limit the maximum individual contribution from $15,000 in a nonelection year to $5,000 and from $30,000 in an election year to $10,000. This is an essential component of our package of reforms. It reduces limits that were too high to begin with and closes a loophole that would have allowed wealthy donors to sidestep the corporate and union ban. By cutting the maximum contribution by two-thirds, we'd further limit the perceived influence of big donors while at the same time allow individuals to make substantive donations to candidates and parties they believe in.

The most important change that can be made in this legislative session is if the government agrees to show leadership on this. We are calling on the government to make substantial elections reform a key part of this bill today; namely, eliminating corporate and union donations and reducing contribution limits. It's not too late for them to do the right thing and accept this change to Bill 7. It's time to get big money out of politics and give elections back to whom they belong, the voters.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I appreciate the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills's comment. At the same time I do find it rather interesting that his party has accepted over a million dollars to date in corporate donations and now suddenly wants to ban them. I don't know what the motivation is here. I don't know.

I would suggest, Madam Chair, that this new-found epiphany that many members opposite have had . . . [interjections] I'll ignore the boos and catcalls over there. This has more to do with political expediency than it does a matter of principle.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm rising in support of this amendment to ban corporate donations. As the Minister of Justice just pointed out, every member in this House probably – perhaps not this House. I don't want to speak for everyone, but I would say that most members in this House have indeed accepted corporate donations or union donations in the past. I myself have not gotten a union donation – I'm shocked about that – but I certainly have had many corporations donate to my campaign, and certainly many, many corporations donate to the Wildrose Party. That is not in dispute. Of course, literally millions upon millions of dollars have been donated to PC Party and the Wildrose Party, particularly to the PCs over the last 40 years and so forth.

What we're talking about here: obviously, I don't think our party – and I will not speak for the other parties – is interested in, as the saying goes, bringing a knife to a gunfight in our elections. We're not going to come in and all of a sudden give the governing party any more advantages than they already have. They get to write the election rules. They get to appoint most of the folks involved. They certainly shouldn't be able, clearly, to fundraise more money than the opposition parties because the opposition parties are not accepting corporate donations while they are.

What we are saying to Albertans at this time is that if elected in 2016, a Wildrose government would immediately pass legislation to ban corporate donations and union donations, and we think that there are many reasons for that and many good reasons for that.

The first reason is, frankly – and I'm going to admit very much so that for some of us who obviously consider ourselves conservatives, sometimes there's a feeling and thought, there's kind of this ideological argument that's made that all people should be able to donate as much money as they want to the political process and that there should be no restrictions. I do understand that – freedom of association, freedom of speech – and money and donating is a form of speech and so forth. I understand people want to protect that, but if you look across the world, whether it be the United States, whether it be Alberta, whether it be other places in Canada prior to election laws banning donations being put in place federally, for example, I think the evidence is just simply such that big money, big corporate money, influences not only the results of elections but influences the decisions of government. It does.

I watched a special on I believe it was CNN recently on the impact . . .

4:10

Ms. Notley: I hope it's not Fox.

Mr. Anderson: No, it wasn't. It was CNN.

I watched a special on CNN recently – it might have been on NBC; I forget – and it talked about the influence that big money has on the political process in the United States, and it was shocking. There you have members in the House of Representatives, that have to run every two years, and they would literally have to raise $3 million to $4 million, sometimes $5 million or $6 million per election every two years.

Now, of those of us running in provincial elections every four years, most of us probably haven't spent north of $100,000 in a given CA. I know that there are one or two of us in here that have. Not me, but there are, I know, others here that have spent that much money. I would say that the vast majority have not spent that much money on an election. But could you imagine $2 million to $3 million every two years that you have to raise just to stay in office? So many times, if you look at the voting records of the people that are receiving these massive amounts of donations from their large donors and umbrella organizations that are set up in order to essentially get around certain election laws so they can funnel a whole bunch of money into these accounts, it's just hard to make any conclusion other than that money is affecting their votes. The evidence doesn't lie.

Although our election laws are not as completely freewheeling as the ones in the United States are, they are certainly the most lax in the country. I feel very strongly that this is something where, when I was first elected in 2008, there is no doubt I would have said: "You know what? We shouldn't be limiting the amount that people can spend or their corporations can spend on the political process." But seeing what has happened over the last five years now, since I was elected in 2008, has completely changed my view on it. It's opened my eyes to it.

The biggest thing is the power lines. I have been absolutely shocked that this government continues this incredible debacle of building these $16 billion in new transmission lines. If you look not just at the donations from these companies that are involved but also their sponsorships, there's a loophole that allows these companies to sponsor events and call it advertising, thereby getting around the loopholes entirely. In other words, even though they might not be on the disclosure as donating, they could have donated $20,000, $30,000, $50,000 to the governing party. That is actually a regular practice, and it is used a lot. It makes one wonder when you see these things happening: how can it not affect the decision of government?

There was a former member of this House, and he is now a judge. I actually enjoyed him. I liked his sense of humour. I think a lot of members on that side of the House remember this. One of the things he would always say: I cannot be bought, but you may try. He would always say that when they would talk about, you know, the issue of people giving gifts to government and so forth. He would say: I cannot be bought, but you may try. I thought that was very funny, but the problem is that it's not a good enough standard.

Although that individual, I believe, did have that integrity and I believe many people have that integrity, that they cannot be bought – you can try to buy them off, but they cannot be bought in the end – that their vote cannot be bought, I think that the temptation for some folks in power, not just elected members but folks that are involved in parties and so forth, is just too strong sometimes when they are desperate for cash, when they need the money to be re-elected or to have a chance of being re-elected, to go down that road and change their points of view because of the money that they need in their bank account.

I think that if it's not real, it certainly is perceived, and that is just as damaging, the perception, because people believe that politicians, particularly in this province right now – honestly, there's a huge belief out there – are susceptible to being bought off by the highest bidder. Let me put it this way. I don't think it's a correct assessment, but I think it is a fair assessment. It's an understandable assessment given the amount of money that's thrown around, given . . . [interjection] The hon. Deputy Premier.

It's an understandable assessment given the amount of money that's coming around and being thrown around. I think that it's very clear and very needed that we do ban corporate and union donations for that purpose.

If Bill 50 and those power lines that are going to cause so much distress on people's electricity bills are not enough, one need only look at the issue of the owner of a local professional hockey team and the last-minute, $430,000 donation. We're not sure if it was in one cheque yet. We don't know. That is another example where people look at that and they say: "Good grief. How can we allow that to happen in a place like Alberta?" It just looks terrible. It looks terrible because of the amount. It looks terrible because that individual is involved in a project or, actually, multiple projects that involve government at different levels. It looks terrible.

So whether there's truth to it or not, whether it's true or not that the government is going to change policy or alter policy or approve anything, whether that's true or not, the thought of it and the perception are out there. I think it's an understandable perception, Madam Chair.

I think you see this in all sorts of areas. You see it for specific tax credits that are given. You see it in the way that specific regulations are changed, whether they be employment regulations that are more pro-worker or less pro-worker. I mean, there are all kinds of things that we do on a day-to-day level that involve corporate interests, and I think that we need to admit that as politicians. We need to admit that these influences are strong, and we need to admit that it is not in the best interests of Albertans and that, frankly, Albertans do not want us to be accepting political donations from corporations going forward. I think that it is clear. I think that people are tired of it. They're tired of the money. They're tired of the scandal. They're tired of questioning whether a government is doing this because of special interests or because they genuinely feel that it's right for democracy.

Now, I will note in this speech that I have not cast one aspersions, or however we're going to say it, on the other side saying that they are guilty of X, Y, and Z. I want to stick to mostly the perception of it because the perception is very real, very, very real. We need to address it, and it is the right thing to do.

Now, I don't for a moment believe that we will not be able to properly fund our campaigns in bringing in these rules. If you look at the federal rules the Conservative government is overseeing at this time, I believe it was actually brought in by the – was it brought in by the Liberals? I can't remember.

Ms Notley: Yeah, it was.

Mr. Anderson: Was it? It was brought in by the Liberals – and it hasn't been changed by the Conservatives – to ban corporate and union donations and to take the limit down to $1,000 per individual.

Now, we're not saying that that needs to come down to $1,000. The reason we keep it at $5,000 is because the thought goes that at the time they brought that low amount in, there was a per-vote subsidy that went to the political parties of a certain amount to keep, you know, the political parties active and able to do their business and so forth. We're not in favour of a political subsidy, so we would rather have a higher limit than $1,000 for individual contributors. Five thousand is not a magic number. Maybe $2,500 is the right number. Maybe $7,500 is the right number. Maybe $4,000 is the right number. We're putting $5,000 on the table, thinking that that's more realistic and more reasonable than $15,000.

We think it's a good start, and I think the federal parties are able to function, they're able to do the work that they need to do with that $1,000 limit on individual donations and the banning of corporate and union donations. I think that we would go a long way in this province to improving our democracy, to improving all of the reputations of the folks in here and all of the parties in here, who all get a lot of their donations from corporations. In fact, I was somewhat surprised to note that the Wildrose actually receives the least, as a percentage, from corporations and the most from individual donors. The PCs receive the most from corporations and the least from individual grassroots donors. I think the Liberals and NDs are in the middle there on a per-person basis.

That is something to consider. I think that, again, it's not so much about leveling the playing field. It's about making sure that people don't have the perception, real or imagined, that the government is making decisions because they are being influenced through the donations of corporations or unions or high donors, and that's why we brought the amount down. I think we should pass this amendment, we should see past the ideology, and we should do the right thing and ban these types of donations.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to be able to rise to speak with much enthusiasm in favour of this amendment. I want to begin by congratulating the staff, potentially the House leader – I'm not sure – for the Official Opposition for their stick-to-itiveness in terms of getting this particular amendment onto the floor. In case people aren't aware, what's going on here is that they are proposing to ban corporate donations, but they are not proposing to ban union donations. To be fair to them, the reason they are not proposing to ban union donations is because the bill itself was structured in such a way that Parliamentary Counsel indicated it would not be in order were we or anybody to try to bring in a motion that would result in both union and corporate donations being banned.

But as it was, the bill was structured in such a way that it was possible to at least bring something in banning corporate donations, and I must say that I congratulate the members of the Official Opposition for managing to navigate through the carefully constructed bill that would otherwise have prevented us having this good conversation. It is an important conversation.

It was an important conversation before we had the debacle which we all were subjected to, you know, a month ago, when it became clear that one particular community member had been able to write a somewhere from $375,000 to $450,000 cheque to the governing party two or three days immediately prior to the election. That's shocking, Madam Chair. That is the kind of thing that results in influence, and it certainly results in the appearance of influence. It certainly significantly undermines the credibility of this whole Assembly because the average Albertan is going to look at a situation where somebody writes a cheque for $450,000 and at the same time is lobbying the government to write back to him a cheque for $100 million. It's hardly surprising that people would be deeply disturbed by that arrangement and that relationship.

Obviously, the answer is to avoid having those kinds of relationships arise in the future. I'm quite surprised in some ways, Madam Chair, at the sort of political acuity or political intuition of the folks over on the other side because it seemed to me that the best way to deal with this issue would have been simply to go: yeah, this does not look good, and it's about time we entered the 18th century with the rest of the country and put a ban on corporate and union donations. That would have been the politically astute road to take.

Indeed, you know, there were more than a few conversations offline, as they say, between our caucus and members of the governing caucus in the hopes that they might actually see the wisdom of doing that, not only to benefit through fairness and equality within our election system but also to increase the level of credibility that we all enjoy in this Assembly vis-à-vis the rest of the population. Unfortunately, they chose not to. Interestingly, the Official Opposition chose instead to go that route.

I want to certainly congratulate the Member for Airdrie. We've had conversations about this in the past. I have to say, "You've come a long way," and I'm pleased. I'd like to think that we had something to do with that. You know, there are a few other issues that I think you're aware of that I plan to succeed on before we finish this term. We'll see where we end up. But this is a biggie; there's no question. Bringing about a 20th-century or even, as I said, a 19th-century set of election financing laws in this province would be a dramatic and fabulous and incredible step forward.

How can these situations impact government? Have we seen any indication or any record of it in the past? Well, here's an example, Madam Chair. I remember, leading into the 2008 election, there were a bunch of unions, interestingly not a bunch of unions that typically fund our party even though everyone seems to think that, you know, there are buckets of them. A bunch of unions got together and decided that they were going to engage in the political process using their dollars. According to the folks on the other side a dollar is like a vote, and a limit on a dollar is a limit on free speech and freedom of expression and yada, yada, yada. They embraced that thought, and they decided they would engage in a campaign which, I believe, was over a million dollars. It happened, unfortunately, to be a campaign that was not supportive of the governing party.

That's what happened. Then after the election – who would have thunk it? – almost immediately there were at least two pieces of legislation that were passed in this Assembly. I would suggest, Madam Chair, that both of those pieces of legislation were in direct and complete reaction to the lawful exercise of the freedom of expression by a group of unions. One was that they were sort of publicly spanked, and there was legislation brought in to significantly limit and restrain their ability to organize.

I was surprised, actually, because I really didn't know it was possible to further limit and restrict union organizing in Alberta. I thought that we had really written the book on that and that pretty much there was nothing left to do to limit union rights in Alberta. But, no, these guys found a new way to do it. They passed a piece of legislation that limited the organizing ability of certain types of unions, which happened to be the certain types of unions which had funded this campaign that was not in support of the government. Then, of course, the other thing they did was that they immediately passed legislation to make sure that third parties could not engage in the political process by running political campaigns.

You know, Madam Chair, it's just another one of these hypocritical picking-and-choosing-the-rules-that-help-us sorts of processes. If a dollar equals a vote, equals your right to freedom of speech and your freedom of expression, then presumably it means that if you give it to the Tory party or if you put it into a fund to run a campaign against the Tory party or if you give it to another political party, none of that should matter. But these guys decided, "Hmm, it wasn't given to us, so we're going to write a law to ban that and limit it," and they did.

To suggest, then, that our laws are not related to campaign financing in this province is to deny history. In fact, we see very overt examples of political financing impacting and influencing government decisions. Now, it may well be that there are many other examples, too. I don't know. We've said many times – and I will use this opportunity to say again – that this is one of the most secretive governments in the country. So how could I know?

But what I do know is what Albertans perceive. Albertans know that we have the most Wild West election financing laws in the country. We know that we have the no-spending limits, we have very limited donation limits, and we let anybody and their dog and their uncle and their bird and their cat and their nanny and whoever else donate. That's what we do. It's not keeping the process honest, and it's not keeping the process one that could ever be characterized as having a tremendous amount of integrity. So this is a way to fix it.

An interesting thing. Even though this particular motion does not ban union donations because, as I've said, it's not possible to do it because of the way the government has constructed the bill, it is interesting to note that if this motion is defeated, which I'm pretty much prepared to bet it will be, we'll be back in the position that we were in before. I remember having a conversation with one of the members on the other side and pointing out that the way they have the legislation right now treats unions differently than it treats corporations.

For instance, if you have a union that has a separate collective agreement, who is recognized under the Labour Relations Board as a separate bargaining agent, whose members never talk to anybody else in another union, who share the same name, but other than that there is no financial relationship between the two, nor is there any kind of democratic relationship between the two, those unions nonetheless are treated as the same and are subject to the relatively generous limit that we have right now: $15,000 in a year and $30,000 in an election year.

So you can have four or five unions who never talk to each other, who have nothing to do with each other – they don't bargain together, they have no financial relationship, they have no democratic relationship – and the Labour Relations Board has deemed them to be separate entities, yet their money is all put together. But with a corporation you can have a director, you can have a subsidiary, and you can have all these cute and fun ways to arrange your corporate dealings so that a corporation can – wait for it – donate $450,000. So as it sits right now, we don't actually have unrestricted corporate and union financing. What we have is unrestricted corporate financing and restricted union financing. Just to be clear, that's what exists right now in the province of Alberta. It's not fair, and one way to make it fair is to accept this particular motion.

Madam Chair, at the end of the day, as many of us have heard it and many of us have said it, votes should decide elections, not dollars, and ideas should impact votes, not advertising budgets. That's what should happen, but that is not what happens in this province.

Many of you will recall that a year and a half ago on the federal level our party, the NDP, made history by becoming for the first time ever the Official Opposition of the country. Of course, many people congratulated us at the time. It was all wonderful; look at where we might be going forward. Obviously, much of the responsibility for that success goes to the late Jack Layton, who was one of the greatest political leaders of our time, I believe. But one of the things that I always used to say to people when they would raise that issue with me was that there was something else that happened in that election, too.

The other thing that happened in that election was that for the first time in the history of our country all three major parties spent the same amount of money on the campaign. Because of the legislation that was in place, it was an equal playing field in terms of how much money could be spent on the campaign in terms of the advertising, in terms of the ground campaigns, in terms of all that stuff. The legislation was designed to ensure that Canadians voted on the basis of the ideas that appealed to them rather than the money that was thrown at them. It was an interesting thing because the first time that happened, the NDP made history and became the Official Opposition.

It's important that in Alberta we try to provide that same kind of framework and lay that same kind of groundwork. I'm not suggesting that should that happen suddenly, the NDP is going to get 60 per cent of the vote. What I am saying is that Albertans will get to weigh our ideas on the basis of their value, on the basis of the quality of what we're saying and the ideas that we're putting forward, not on how much ad time we buy before and after the Stanley Cup finals and/or before and after, you know, Survivor, or whatever the biggest TV shows are on whatever the most popular TV stations are. That shouldn't be how elections are decided.

Elections should be decided on the basis of what it is we're asking Albertans to embrace as far as our policies and our vision for the future go. That's not what happens in Alberta. The failure for that to happen happens more in Alberta than anywhere else, and that should change. If that wasn't blatantly obvious to this government before the discussion around the Katz donation, it is mind-numbingly surprising to me that it is not obvious to them now.

I suspect that their political – I don't know. It's that they're numb from power. You know all the various things that people say about power and what it does absolutely and yada, yada, yada. Really, I think that at a certain point you just get numb. You're in power for so long, you're so overwhelmed with your own sense of entitlement that you just stop thinking about what people are thinking about you. To not realize that your credibility has been significantly hurt by this spectre of a $450,000 cheque, which amounted to one-third of your campaign financing, being written two days before an election, to not see that people are nervous about that and that they are uncomfortable with the representational qualities that may be brought to the table is, in my mind, politically naive at its very best.

I would suggest, then, that this is an excellent amendment. It goes to the very heart of our electoral system. It is an amendment that would fundamentally lay the groundwork for a proper, fair system in this province. In choosing to reject this amendment, you are choosing to fundamentally reject the opportunity to lay the groundwork for a fair and open electoral process in this province. I'm sure it doesn't matter to you because you've just assumed that you'll just keep winning anyway, but I do think that it matters to Albertans, and I do think it will matter to Albertans in the future. I think that you reject this amendment at your political peril.

So I urge all members to consider adopting it and all that great stuff called democracy and fairness and all those other things. You like to have your ad agencies right at the bottom of your press releases. Maybe in the name of all that you might consider accepting this amendment and moving forward for the benefit of all Albertans rather than the corporate sector, which I believe has amounted to about 75 per cent of your election funding at this point in the game.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, for all your comments. It's hard to believe that I'm actually standing here and we're siding with the NDs, but I'm proud to have seen the light along with the hon. Member for Airdrie.

I agree that, you know, it's interesting that the Justice minister said that he couldn't figure out why we would ever put an amendment like this forward because we got a million dollars in donations from corporations. We strongly believe as a party and as a caucus and as grassroots members that it's time to put Albertans first, and Albertans should be the ones who make the decisions about who comes into office, not corporate entities.

I can honestly say that I want to say thank you to the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills because to actually make this amendment be able to come forward took a great amount of work with Parliamentary Counsel because the way the act was written certainly prevents any amendments to this portion that would have dealt with corporate donations. We would have liked to have gone further and even dealt with the union side of donations. Unfortunately, the way the act is written, the definition of a trade union is written in a way that we weren't able to do that, which is really unfortunate for Albertans because I do think that there is a great amount of room there for some review and a way to ensure that Albertans' needs are put forward and that no stakeholder has more say than any one other person. We've had recent examples of excessive corporate donations that have really shaken the public's confidence in this electoral process, and we need to make the changes to limit the influence of big business and big labour. Now, clearly, we can't make the changes to the union donations, but we certainly can start with the corporate donations.

While my hon. friend from Airdrie didn't want to cast any aspersions, I guess we're going to play good cop/bad cop now. Quite honestly, if this amendment was in place, the current government would not have the Katz donation question out there at all. It would literally be an absolute nonissue. There would have been no ability for that to happen. There would be no question of whether or not it was one cheque or 10 cheques, whether the cheques were written by one person or receipted for one person. There would be no question about: "Who should I make the receipt out to? Who should that go to?" None of that would have happened. You literally wouldn't have to worry about any misconceptions. You also wouldn't have to answer any questions in question period, not that you do anyway, but you wouldn't have those questions come in question period because the legislation would have protected Albertans from even the remotest possibility of receiving a $430,000 donation from any corporation or from huge donors, not to mention the fact that it would have been more transparent.

If we're wanting to ensure a fair and transparent process, then this amendment clearly makes sense. Albertans have said loud and clear that they want our government to be free of influence. They want our elected officials to be free of that influence from distinct groups, including corporations, and they want to know that elections and governments aren't for sale to corporate interests. In our party as well we have taken around a million dollars in corporate donations, and we're saying that that's not the right thing to be doing. If you can't sustain it with the people, then we should really be reviewing this.

The other part of this is that other jurisdictions have already adopted this ban. Corporate and union donations are illegal in federal elections, in provincial elections in Manitoba, and in provincial and municipal elections in Quebec. Literally, Alberta could be a leader along with other jurisdictions across Canada and show that leadership and take this one step further and ensure to all Albertans what some other Canadians already receive on the federal level and what some other residents already receive on the provincial level. That shouldn't be scary. Clearly, in those provinces I don't believe that anybody is crying foul that they're not getting the influence they need. I don't see that the residents of Manitoba are up in arms that corporations can't make their donations anymore.

It seems that it's healthy. Not only that, but healthy democratic elections should be citizen centred and citizen driven. Corporations and unions are not citizens. They do not have the right to vote or hold office and should not be financing candidates' campaigns. It is important that we ensure that the people that are being put here in this elected office and the people that are going forward and representing Albertans are actually representing Albertans and not the view of one corporation that might be in direct conflict.

The hon. Member for Airdrie and, I know, the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre have brought this up many, many times. We have seen what the direct link of corporate donations may sometimes do to bills that are proposed. There is an insinuation out there that bills 19, 24, 36, and 50 were and have been influenced by certain corporations to certain parties. That is what we need to eliminate across Alberta. If we literally want to assure the citizens of Alberta that they have elected officials that represent Albertans' interests, then by eliminating corporate donations, going forward they don't have to worry about an insinuation or an accusation or a perception.

There is a perception that sometimes often turns to reality, and that perception is that politicians can be bought. The hon. Member for Airdrie stood up and talked about a member in this House that used to say: I can't be bought, but you can try. Well, it should be: I can't be bought. Period. Those people who want to make donations to electoral campaigns are certainly free to do so, but there shouldn't be a given that any one candidate is more in favour than the other just because they're backed by a huge donation.

Elections belong to voters, not corporations with deep pockets. This is why we're putting forward these amendments. This puts elections back in the hands of hard-working Albertans, and this is fundamentally why we're here. Candidates should be financed by the constituents that they represent. If you're doing a good job, if the citizens of your riding or the citizens of Alberta believe that you as a candidate or you as a party are the one that they're supporting, they don't mind stepping up to the plate.

We're seeing it federally. They don't mind putting their money where their mouth is and supporting whom they need to support. If you've done a poor job, they'll pull back their money. This is basically saying to Albertans that you have a right to support whom you want with your dollars and that that won't be influenced by a corporation or a union that has more dollars than you.

By lowering – that, unfortunately, did get voted down – the high donor amounts from $30,000 in an election year to $10,000 and from $15,000 down to $5,000 in a nonelection year, you allow for average Albertans to have the same playing field all across this province. That's important because in this process we talk about a fair and transparent system that wants to make sure that this bill has the best interests of Albertans at heart. The best interests of Albertans are literally to ensure that we have integrity, balance, and fairness in the system, but we also want to make sure that every candidate across this province in all 87 ridings has an equal opportunity to run.

Now, in this province, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona mentioned, we don't have spending limits. We don't have donation limits. That may be something we have to discuss further at some point in time, have a bigger discussion on lowering the limits that we currently have and on having spending limits in place. Right now we don't even have a fair playing field. In some areas the incumbent may be the favourite, and that incumbent might be backed by large corporations who, in turn, donate large dollars, and the best candidate might not have been picked. Now, they might have been picked, absolutely, and that candidate might have just had the benefit of having large corporations in their riding, and that's fine. But a level playing field ensures that all 87 candidates regardless of party lines have the same access to running for office.

The other part of that is that we need to ensure that average Albertans can run for elected office. We don't want to create a system similar to what we have in the U.S., where only the rich can run, where we have President Obama, who is literally, you know, raising $3 million, $5 million, $10 million a day and having to spend that because that's what it takes to be a good President. It doesn't stop there. Senators are spending millions. Even when you get down to governors, the average American cannot run for governor because the stakes are so high, and if you're not locked in with that – we don't want to head there in Alberta. We want to make sure that everybody who feels that they would like to run for political office has the opportunity to do so.

I can tell you that when I was 10 years old, I never thought I'd be sitting in this Legislature. It never crossed my mind to run for political office. It never crossed my mind when I was 20. It didn't cross my mind when I was 28. It didn't cross my mind when I was 32 and owned my own business. I can tell you that in 2008, when my brother was put into a long-term care facility, it didn't even cross my mind then because I was fighting for him. But in 2010, when he died – I was 36 years old – yes, it crossed my mind.

At that point in time I was able to enter into the political scene, and I ran a campaign on $16,000. That's not a lot of money. My opponent spent $76,000. He got corporate donations. I really didn't. I got some minor farms that run as corporations, but they were not huge corporations. I was given the opportunity to go out and put my best foot forward, and the best person wins. That's the way it goes. I know members on the other side maybe don't like that the Wildrose has 17 seats, and maybe they don't like that I'm here, and that's fine, but that's democracy. It's not always about money, and it's not always about the amount of donations that you receive.

But I have to be able to tell my 10-year-old child and I have to be able to tell my grandchildren that they won't be limited in running for public office because they don't have the backing of corporations and unions. That has to be a fundamental right of all Albertans because not every Albertan has access to huge dollars. Many, many Albertans have come forward – and I know that even on the government side there are many of you that ran a campaign that was actually quite reasonable in dollars. Not everybody ran a $130,000 or $200,000 or even $90,000 campaign. There were many, I believe, on the government side that ran very cost-effective campaigns. That's what I'm saying. The same goes on the other side. I'm sure that, you know, you would have felt a little bit differently if the person you were running against won solely because they were backed by a major corporation who had influence and money. So it goes both ways. It's not limited to us or to them. It goes both ways.

Large donations from businesses and other organizations with significant financial resources can have undue influence on those who decide to run and those who get elected. There can be the opportunity for a corporation to put on undue influence to discourage someone from running or to encourage someone to run, but that's not always in the best interests of Albertans. That's why we need to have major reforms of this electoral system. These amendments go a long way to restoring Alberta's confidence in the integrity of the democratic process.

When we allow corporations and unions to make campaign donations, the individuals who control these organizations are granted more rights than other citizens because they can make donations as individuals and in the names of the corporations and/or the unions. We saw this. We see it all the time. You know, the donor makes the max donation under the corporation. Then they make the max donation under them personally and the max donation under their wife and multiple opportunities through that. Personally, that's fine, but they're also doubling down with corporate donations. It's the same person still making the donation. It just literally is coming from the corporation. Federally they've seen the error of their ways, and they've decided to make that change and make sure that it's fair for all Canadians. I think that there is room for Alberta to take a lead role and put Albertans first and show leadership on this issue.

Elections have to be transparent, they have to be fair, and they have to support the electorate. As long as corporate donations are allowed, it gives the impression that candidates can be bought by wealthy interests. Elections must not only be fair, but they must be fair in the eyes of the public. This goes back to the perception. Every time we take a look at who has donated to whom – clearly, everyone has done this. We've done it. I know that the hon. Deputy Premier has looked at our donations, and he's attacked us about whom we took our donations from. We've attacked the other side for whom they took their donations from, especially in corporate views.

Well, this would eliminate that. It would very clearly state that only people with personal interest could have a say or an influence on those that are elected. Then you get into: why would there be any reason to attack any individual Albertan on what their choice is for donation? Very simple. It makes it fair, makes it open, makes it transparent, and it ensures that there's equal access for all Albertans.

One of the bigger problems that we're seeing in Alberta is voter turnout. Repeatedly, year after election year after by-election year, voter turnout is dropping, and public cynicism about politics is growing. A big part of why that is growing is the way that the process is. Bills like Bill 7 don't go far enough to reassure Albertans that there's a reason to get out and vote, that the ideas that come to this table will be heard, that we're going to work together, that we're going to ensure that what's in the best interests of all Albertans is what we're putting forward. We see voter turnout dropping at such significant rates, and we wonder why. We need to reverse this damaging trend. We need to see that our elected officials are leading rather than impeding democratic reform, and Bill 7 could go a long way to do this, but it doesn't right now.

We've already seen, you know, that many amendments have been denied, many amendments that offered full disclosure, many amendments going back seven years instead of three years. All of those things have been denied by this government, yet each one of those strengthens the democratic process and allows for Albertans to regain trust in the system that they're losing trust in. It also allows Albertans to start thinking about politicians in a manner that is different than they do right now. They don't need to be cynical. They can literally believe: hey, what we're doing is important.

If this ban was adopted by Alberta, we would show that we are leaders, putting it in line with federal election regulations. It would help create momentum for similar changes in all other jurisdictions of this country and all other provinces.

We consistently hear in this House how we are a leader, how Bill 7 is one of the toughest and most democratic and most open and transparent and best disclosures all across this country, but it isn't. The province of Manitoba already bans corporate donation. The province of Quebec already bans corporate donations, and they've taken it one step further to ban it municipally. To say that we're a leader in this legislation, clearly we're not because other provinces are ahead of us. Other provinces put in more disclosure rules. Other provinces ban corporate donations, and we need to show that we're in line with that.

We need to make this a national standard, and substantive reform of this nature will create the momentum that provides for broader electoral reform. We don't need to be scared of broad electoral reform. If it's done properly, if it's done in consultation, and it's done in conversations with Albertans, with opposition, with MLAs, with stakeholders, it can be done right.

It was interesting before, when a member of the House on the other side said that they had had five or so meetings about Bill 7. I have no doubt that you had five or so meetings. Unfortunately for the opposition, we didn't receive the Chief Electoral Officer's recommendations until three months later. Now, had we received them when you received them, we might have been able to go to stakeholders. We might have been able to have discussions with Albertans. We might have been able to have conversations amongst our caucus. But, no, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona stated, everybody is left scrambling to fit through a significant bill that is very important to Alberta, and we're not able to do that. Why? Because we weren't given the Chief Electoral Officer's recommendations. We didn't have time to do that research. We didn't have time to take that forward.

The other part of this that I would suggest is that if you are banning corporate donations – and the Justice minister should be able to support the amendment on this issue alone – it would sure as heck make disclosing all of our donations quarterly much, much easier for both sides of the House. [interjections] I'm speaking to the choir here. You know, you get a significant amount of corporate donations. We get some corporate donations. If we all ban corporate donations, then perhaps that would make the job for our CAs much easier when they have to declare and disclose quarterly, which is ultimately the goal if we're going to go with this.

Now, we said at the beginning that we are directly affected by this amendment because we've received around a million dollars in corporate donations, and the government side has received significant donations as well. But we don't need to be scared of banning those donations. Those same people will donate if given the opportunity.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and I thank the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake for her comments on this issue. There is one thing that she mentioned, though, that is factually incorrect on the act. She made a suggestion about corporations contributing through their employees. I'm not sure if she meant funds not belonging to that individual. I do want to mention that there is an existing section in the act. I refer to section 34 of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, which states that no person, corporation, trade union, or employee organization shall contribute to any registered party, registered constituency association or registered candidate . . .

And this is the key.

. . . funds not actually belonging to that person, corporation, trade union or employee organization, or any funds that have been given or furnished to the person, corporation, trade union or employee organization by any persons or groups of persons or by a corporation, trade union or employee organization for the purpose of making a contribution of those funds to that registered party, registered constituency association or registered candidate.

I realize that that's a lot of legalese, but essentially that says that if a corporation has money, you can't give money to your employees for the purposes just of circumventing the act. That already is in the act, and of course it indicates as well in subsection (2) that no registered party, registered constituency association or registered candidate and no person on its or the candidate's behalf shall [even] solicit or knowingly accept any contribution contrary to that further subsection. In subsection (3) it also indicates that that is an offence. So that's already covered off by the existing act.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

5:00

Dr. Swann: Madam Chair, I'll be very brief. Alberta is known as the best democracy money can buy. It's high time we moved in this direction. It's clear that this government didn't get it when they first drafted the bill. It's contributed to disengagement, cynicism, and widespread concern about influence peddling in this province. Why was it not initially part of the bill? Why wasn't money the primary issue for raising this bill? Why were not the rest of the parties involved when we could have had this discussion and made sure that it was a complete bill?

This is clearly one of the areas of conflict of interest that this government deals with every day in this province when it's getting so much money from big corporations, and it's still not willing to commit itself to limiting corporate donations and union donations. They've ignored the public and the opposition for decades on this issue, and their reputation has been damaged as a result of more recent revelations about the lack of control on these kinds of donations and the revelations that have occurred with illegal donations because it's become so commonplace in this province, Madam Chair.

This can only serve all of us in this Legislature to improve reputation of parties about financing and improve reputation of politicians that we're not on the take, that we're not solely concerned with our own power and our own advancement and future relationships with these corporations, whatever they may be.

I'm surprised that we are in 2012 still debating this. We've been proposing this for many years. Both corporate and union donations need to be dropped completely, and hopefully this House will support this amendment. It's a progressive, thoughtful, and important initiative to regain some sense of integrity and some sense that democracy matters, that individual voters matter far more than corporate and union influence, and that we can have some real sense that the people are welcome, that they're going to be involved meaningfully in discussions and decisions. They're not going to be marginalized because they don't have the kind of money that the corporations or unions have.

This is a tremendous part of what I think would set a new tone for Alberta and follow in the federal footsteps initiated by the Liberal Party of Canada and universally respected in this country since they were enacted.

Hopefully, this would also, as the minister has indicated, prohibit and clearly limit any attempts by corporations or unions to funnel money through members of their organizations such that the whole purpose and intent of the bill would not be lost.

So I adjure everyone in the House: let's stand up together on this and give Alberta a reputation all Canadians can be proud of.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Fraser: Madam Chair, for the record I'm an average Albertan. I spent very little money on the campaign. I had corporate donations. I had union donations. I like to think that I can't be bought, but we always need to remain vigilant in this House, in our constituencies to make sure we're doing the right things that Albertans ask us to do.

I'd like any member in this House, if they choose, to put their hand up if they believe that this isn't the best place in the world to live, if this isn't the best place in the world to raise a family. If this isn't the best place in the world to talk about policy and how we move this province forward, put your hand up. No hands. We got here based on the fundamentals and the policies that we've had in the past, and that doesn't mean we don't work hard to make them better, but it's up to us to make sure that we're doing the right things.

I'm here. I'm going to do the right things. I'm an average Albertan. The election laws that we had in this last election – I think most of us are pretty average, come from a very diverse background. We have a very diverse caucus on this side and the other and all caucuses. I think that's important. I think that speaks volumes more than any Election Act could ever speak. We're here to serve Albertans. We'll go through this. If there is ever a time that somebody feels that this government or any government has been bought, prove it.

Second of all, I'll make sure that I always stand for my constituents and for the right thing.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Just because I haven't said it for a while, I will remind everyone that we are speaking on amendment A14, Bill 7.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I like to think I can't be bought, but I like the fact that people will try sometimes.

Mr. Denis: I've got 32 bucks.

Mr. Anglin: Keep trying. Up that more.

It's interesting. I once met with AltaLink and sat down with them, and they said: you cost us $50 million. I said: that's ridiculous; you could have bought me for $25 million. That was before I was a politician, so I'm not saying that I can be bought as a politician.

I want to talk about this amendment because it is important. I don't believe this is about – I mean, we're not naive. Money runs an election. Money has a lot of influence in our society. It was Lincoln – and I want to go see the movie real soon if I can get out of this House – who said in 1865 that there was a greater threat than the civil war that was just ending. He said: I fear the rise of the corporate power; I fear the rise of the corporate wealth. That's not a direct quote; that's paraphrasing. It's one of my favourite paraphrases. It was something that he foresaw in 1865. It was Eisenhower who warned about the rise of the military-industrial complex, which were corporations.

What we do know about corporations today is simply this: they are absolutely incapable of empathy or compassion, and they are absolutely incapable of voting in the public interest. They are by law restricted to only working in the interest of its owners, the stockholders. If a psychiatrist or a psychologist were to actually diagnose a corporate entity as they would diagnose an individual, they'd refer to a corporation as a sociopath with dysfunctional psychopathic tendencies, which is actually kind of fascinating when you think about that.

Why do we want this psychopath involved in our democratic process? It's the money. It's the corruption of money that can be put into this process. I would like to think that other jurisdictions have seen this and have dealt with this. Our federal government has seen this and dealt with this issue.

I see the value in corporations as business entities. I see what they can do to help the economy to grow. I do not see the value of a corporate entity in the democratic process. That, I say, is reserved for people and human beings and citizens, not for a corporate entity. Then the race is on. In whose interest are they actually donating? Those interests may vary, but they could be totally against the public interest. I would argue that a lot of times our environmental corporate donations are in direct conflict with the public interest.

In dealing with this issue, should we allow corporations to be in this process? I want to cite an example. One of the members brought it up earlier. It was a valid argument. He spoke about AltaLink or the power line companies and how they were involved in the donation to the party in power. But that's not it. I mean, you can make that argument, and you can show that on paper, and you can disclose at end of the year, and people can argue that, oh, they donated so much and they influenced the decision-makers. You will always get that allegation.

Our Election Act is so full of holes that a company like AltaLink can sponsor a political event, and they can actually expense that money and earn 9.2, 9.4 per cent interest on that. That's really interesting. How can that be? We as individuals donate to a party. We would get the deduction that is allowed by law. But there's a lot more funding that goes on with political parties and the political process to influence that political process that corporations have worked a nice way around.

I'm going to give you an example. The Pacific NorthWest Economic Region just held their meeting down in Idaho, I think, over our constituency break. The major sponsor of that event was AltaLink. Ironically, AltaLink testified in Calgary, I believe, and when they testified, they said: we had nothing to do with anything outside the jurisdiction of Alberta. So the fact that they would be down there is absolutely fascinating.

That's not the issue. The issue is that they get to take the money that they expense to run these types of events, like the donation that they gave to a political party for their AGM, like the donations they give for these conferences that political parties can attend, and then they can turn right around and take that expense, capitalize it, and earn a rate of return because the law says that they get a rate of return. That is a matter of record in the testimony given by AltaLink executives right up here in Edmonton on that heartland line. That's available for anyone to look up.

That is an accounting problem, in my view, but it's also a hole in our electoral process in dealing with corporations and how they can manipulate the system and get around the system. That's why I support this amendment to eliminate corporate entities and just deal with the people who have the most interest in the preservation and defence of the democratic process.

The idea that corporations or their money are absolutely necessary to the process has been refuted by the jurisdictions that don't allow it. They've already proven that it's not necessary. We can conduct an electoral process without them. The idea that it is somehow their right as a corporate entity, I would disagree with that. It's the right of the individual. Our democracy is for us as human beings and as citizens. The corporate entity is nothing more than a business entity, a contract, something that you cannot touch or see. A corporation is a creation of legislation and legislation only. Without the legislation corporations don't exist. The idea that we would let that entity or those entities influence the process or to think that they wouldn't try is I think being naive.

We can see it south of the border in the outrageous ways it has affected that process. If we think that we're immune to that, I would disagree. It's very difficult to deal with this issue when corporations want to influence the process.

Again, I will draw upon an example of how one corporate entity actually does influence the process. In December 2006 I brought a motion against AltaLink and the Energy and Utilities Board that they did not have jurisdiction over an export line. It only directly affected one company, AltaLink. Within three weeks that company had an order in council from the government of that time to give the board jurisdiction over an export line. Fascinating considering that everyone said that this wasn't an export line in the first place. But the idea that they could get an order in council that fast – and I challenge any member that's sitting in the back benches of the party in power to try to get an order in council that fast. I doubt you could do that. Maybe I'm wrong. I'd like to see that happen.

That shows the power and influence of a corporate entity. That's what we're talking about, Madam Chair, corporate entities in the political process and why we should pass this amendment and get them out of the political process. Given examples of how corporate entities can abuse it and can influence it, in my mind, speaks directly to this amendment. This is a serious issue.

I like to think that as candidates when we run, we actually run on the grassroots level. We deal with people. We shake hands. Some people are lucky enough to kiss a lot of babies. I have to travel too far a distance between babies.

The public at large is what we're here to represent. It is about the people that we represent. These corporate entities that have the ability to come in and influence the process, to me, are a virus in this democratic system. The small corporate entities like those family farms, those small businesses, that's just a business aspect to corporate legislation. To me, if they were going to give money through their local businesses, they would readily give money also personally, stepping outside that.

It is the very large corporate entities that are the biggest threat to democracy when it comes down to adversely affecting the democratic process, and that is a serious issue that we should never marginalize or minimize. That is a serious enough issue that we should always be on the defence against it.

The democratic process works. I don't just believe that; I've participated in it. I've watched in the defence of it, and I've seen it work time and time and time again. It does not need a corporate entity or the donations of corporate participation to make it work. As a matter of fact, in my view, it works better without it. It is better left up to the people who are involved in the process with the right frame of mind, what I would call the idealistic view of all politicians, which is that we can't be bought, we are here with integrity, and we are here in good faith. I believe that when hon. members stand up and say this, they believe with all their heart or they come here with the best of intentions.

I say this, and I say this sincerely: corporations do not. Corporations come with one intention and one intention only, and they can only have one intention because that is by law. They must advance the capital wealth of their owners, which are their stockholders. That is first and foremost at all costs in many ways, and we've seen that. We've seen where corporate entities – and there are lots of examples out there; Ford is a prime example – look at the penalty of violating a rule or regulation versus the profit, and if the penalty is nothing but a cost of business, decisions will be made accordingly on: "Well, the penalty is so small. Let's commit the infraction." Ford was an extreme example, but this example happens all the time.

We deal with this issue of: how do we control the influence of corporations? This right here, in my view, is the mechanism for that control. The only way corporations influence society in any kind of adverse way is really that when it gets into the political process, it upsets the political process. If we're all here in good faith, acting in the best interests of the public that we represent, for the most honourable purposes, then we do not have that corporate influence that can even be alleged if we accept this amendment. I think that doesn't just enhance this election process or the political process; passing this amendment is in many ways a defence of the democratic process. It keeps the corporate entities doing what they're supposed to be doing, which is what they're designed to do, which is to go out there in the business world and conduct business. The political process is not where these entities should be.

That may sound idealistic, but it's that issue that has bridged the gap between a left-wing party and a right-wing party because it's not a left-wing issue or a right-wing issue. It's an issue of fundamental values, of principle. I know that some of the members on the other side may agree, or maybe they all disagree. I don't know, and I'm happy to hear from them. But the negativity of many of the processes that we deal with in our election processes is not necessarily about the individuals as it is about the money that has come in that has upset the process.

One of the correlations that has been visible down in the U.S. is the negative ads. You hear a lot of people up here talk about that. They talk about the personal attacks that have taken place down in the U.S. We like to think we're above that fray up here, and in many ways we are, but if you look at what finances those personal attacks, that's corporate money. That's lots and lots of money. In my campaign and in many other campaigns I don't have time to go after it and go out and do negativity. I've got to get out the message about what we want to do, what that message is on how we would take on these various issues. To have excess money is where a lot of that stuff goes on down south.

So I would say that these election laws that would prohibit a corporate entity from participating would add significant value, not just to this process, but it would add significant value to the confidence and the trust the public needs in the process.

One of the cynicisms that represents itself out there in the public is that it doesn't matter anyways; whoever has the most money makes the decisions. I always like to disagree with people like that. I always say that the people who can get the most votes out are the ones that are going to influence the decisions. The cynicism is out there no less. Passing this amendment helps to reduce that cynicism. We want a public that is engaged in the democratic process. We want a public that's informed. It takes a lot of work to keep that going.

If you look at how corporate entities actually influence a lot of the political processes, they're able to not just outspend the public, but they're actually able to keep the public away from the process in many regards just by overinfluencing rules and regulations on how the process actually takes place. This, I say, is fundamentally wrong, and it's counter to what we want as a good operating society.

So to the hon. member that stood up and basically praised how great Alberta is and no one raised a hand: this is not what this is about. This amendment is about making sure that we don't degrade what we have. This is about an amendment that will improve what we have because we'll make sure that only Albertans are involved in this process, and the corporate entities can go do the things that they do best, which is the business that they've been designed and created to do. Let them take care of their stockholders, but let the individual participate in the democratic process. Let the individuals elect their elected officials.

With that, I encourage the members to support this amendment. I think this is an important amendment that we take forward.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Madam Chair. I wrote the following words on this sheet of paper: bogeyman, big, bad business. I guess I wrote that down because there's a lot of chit-chat here about great big business influencing great big decisions that are made, and somebody needs to stand here and talk about the small businessperson, so I'd like to do that just for a couple of seconds.

I'd like to thank the MLA for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake for confirming a $16,000 – I apologize if I have these numbers wrong – campaign versus an $80,000 campaign, and she won. I think that confirms that, you know, a lot of money – and I imagine that a lot of the $80,000 was corporate donations – doesn't influence the results that happened as a result of the election coming out.

The person that donates oftentimes is a person who wants to show thankfulness for the democratic process and to help to cover the office costs and the costs of advertising and the costs of signage and all the things that all of us incurred. I don't think that they in any stretch of the imagination think that they're going to influence any decision that anybody makes. I think we have amazing checks and balances in our democratic system such that I don't think it's possible for anybody, quite frankly, to be able to gain a lot from simply making a political donation.

More so than that, the small businessperson is the engine of our economy. Those are the people who are making things happen. Whether it's a feedlot down in Lethbridge or whether it's a person that's running a fishing operation in northern Alberta or a logger or an accountant or anybody, they're simply running their business, and they want to contribute to that process and make a donation.

I'll even make one more statement, Madam Chair, and that is that the difference between a corporation and an individual is not very thick. What I mean by that is that this motion, were it to be accepted, would chop the legs off anybody who wanted to simply make a donation through their corporation. They could very simply make the same donation individually, which is being accepted. All they have to do is write themselves a cheque for $500 and put it in their own bank account and then write the darn cheque, and when they hand out the business card, if there was something nefarious going on, it would probably say the name of the business. So I guess that we should say that any individual that has a corporation shouldn't donate because you could make the same inference that they're going to gain the same benefit.

So I don't understand this motion. I don't understand the logic of it. I don't think it works. I don't think it supports the small businessperson who simply wants to make a donation in Alberta.

I will now sit down. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Chair. Why do we have corporate donations? Individuals vote, not companies. Companies lobby. Companies supply. Companies have the opportunity to benefit financially by receiving untendered cost-plus contracts with guaranteed rates of return not just on their own investment but on taxpayers' money. The value of these contracts can be so large, the amount of money involved is not just thousands or hundreds of thousands or millions or hundreds of millions but billions of dollars. They can get contracts awarded by cabinet without proper objective needs assessments.

Now, is this theoretical? Or are we talking about Bill 50 and the gigantic overbuild on the order of about eight times the power lines that we're seeing at great, great expense to Alberta and to Albertan taxpayers? I've even heard of a corporate donor who wrote a cheque for around $430,000 when a political party was running short of money in the last election because they'd been abandoned by small individual donors who were diverting their personal donations to parties more in touch with their values.

This amendment will affect all parties but especially the governing party, so it's no surprise that all of you over there are all against it. Large corporate donors can tempt even the most ethical among us and appear to have succeeded on several occasions to the detriment of hundreds of thousands of everyday Albertans and the industries and companies that employ them.

Perception is a reality, folks. People think governments are being persuaded to do things not in the best interests of average Albertans. Are they right? I don't know, but nature abhors a vacuum. In the absence of information they fill in the blanks, and when they see an eight-times overbuild of power lines, you understand their concerns. I've heard Alberta voters say: you know, Gary, somebody is getting paid off.

You know what? You can ignore our amendments. You can keep ignoring average Albertans, the common men and women who vote. In 2016 we're going to be sitting over there. We will fix these bills because that's what Albertans want. You know, we can talk all night if we thought that would make a difference. The fact remains that these bills need these amendments. These are well-thought-out bills. These are bills that are responsive to the needs of Albertans as expressed to us, and they're based on sound philosophy. They're based on sound politics. They're based on sound principles that address issues of greed and issues of contempt and issues of temptations that would persuade almost anyone to cross over to the dark side, Luke, because there's just so much money there. We've seen it, and we're seeing it.

Anyway, thanks for giving me this opportunity to speak up on behalf of the people that you've abandoned because you're going to help us move over there.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this amendment. This is one of those amendments that we've seen come through here that when I look at it, it just simply makes sense. The Minister of Justice has stood up and questioned our intent as to: why – why – would the Wildrose Party want to do something so silly as to eliminate corporate donations? They received close to a million dollars in corporate donations in the last campaign, and he's right. You know, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar suggests that small businesses are the economic engine of our province, and to a certain extent he's right.

Eliminating corporate donations from the political process just makes sense. There are so many other jurisdictions that have caught on to this that I cannot understand for the life of me why this party opposite suggests otherwise. It doesn't add up to me.

5:30

You know, maybe I'll explore it a little bit later, but I think it's interesting to mention as well that – and I'm happy to see that he's back – the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar when running for mayor in this fine city raised over half a million dollars. I would venture to suggest that a large portion of that probably came from corporate donations as well. I think we can understand where motivation comes in for people to want to maintain that source of revenue.

But the reality is that if we want to return politics to the grassroots in this province and we want to do what's right for Albertans, which is what I hear so many people on the floor opposite say all the time – we're here to do what's best for Albertans; we're here to put the government back in Albertans' hands – well, passing amendments would allow you to actually follow through on what you're saying as opposed to just standing up and saying it. I think that it has an element of being a fair and transparent process if we eliminate the ability for someone to walk in with a large cheque.

Again, I stated this earlier in second reading, Madam Chair, that I don't believe there is anyone on the other side that would intentionally be bought in the sense of being bought. I don't agree with the Member for Calgary-Mountain View who stands up and suggests that it is happening and that it has happened. I think that that is a bit of a strong statement. That said, perception is reality. Perception will always be reality. Politics in this province is taking a hit, and the perception of politics in this province is taking a hit. [interjections] I'm sure that those members right now are interrupting me because they feel that the reason politics is taking a hit is because there's an effective opposition on this side of the floor that is raising issues that make the governing party uncomfortable; therefore, it's all our fault. I'm sure that's exactly what's being said.

The reality is that if we're actually going to be putting Albertans first and we're making legislation that makes sense in this province, we need to consider amendments like this. I would argue that, you know, part of the problem is that there is a lack of clarity in our legislation regarding corporate donations. That's what allows a loophole like what we saw with the alleged Katz cheque of $430,000 being dropped off. Again, when the hon. Government House Leader spoke about this issue in second reading, he emphatically and passionately stated: you can't buy this party; you can't buy me. Again, I think everyone here wants to believe that. I believe that most Albertans want to believe that.

But at the end of the day if the perception remains true that it can happen and that it can happen at any given time and some people believe that that's true and some people become disengaged from the process because of that perception, that's where we have a problem. That's where disengagement happens. It doesn't matter what anybody says on the other side, whether or not you can or cannot be bought, if the perception is there and if people believe it, it has a negative impact on the entire process. Taking corporate donations out of election financing and party financing is a great start, and it is something that other jurisdictions have already done.

The federal government did it many years ago. Now, they replaced some of that with a per vote subsidy, and I would never advocate for that. I don't think that's the right thing to do either. I don't think taxpayers should be funding political parties in that sense either. But they have limited it to $1,200, I believe, per person. Maybe it's even $1,100.

I think that there's some validity to the numbers that we've put forward in the limits. There's validity to eliminating corporate donations. If small businesses want to be involved in this process, they can as the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar suggested simply write a personal cheque. What difference does it make? It just is a different way of them writing off the tax. [interjection] I'm sure the Deputy Premier is often that confused.

The Deputy Chair: Through the chair, please.

Mr. Wilson: Sorry, Madam Chair. I apologize. Through the chair, I'm sure the Deputy Premier is often that confused.

It's time to fix this, and the opportunity is now. The legislation is in front of us. This government has had questions asked of it today about all the great things it did for Albertans in this session and all the great pieces of legislation that it passed. Madam Chair, I believe that question came from you. You know, if the opportunity arose for the government to actually accept an amendment outside of the two that it did, this is one of those where I believe you could proudly stand up to your constituents, to Albertans, and say: "Listen. We have done positive things here in this session. We have listened to the opposition. We have moved legislation forward together." Unfortunately, at this point that doesn't really seem to be the way things are going.

We're at well over a hundred amendments now from the opposition, two of which have been accepted, none on this bill, none on Bill 4, none on Bill 2. The list goes on.

An Hon. Member: We've been listening to our constituents.

The Deputy Chair: Through the chair.

An Hon. Member: We've already made lots of changes.

Mr. Wilson: I really wish I could hear what is being said on the other side, and I look forward to having discussions outside of this House, Madam Chair, with those members opposite who feel so passionately that they need to interrupt at this point.

The reality is that I started this asking why we want to get rid of corporate donations and perhaps why the side opposite does not and will not. They will defeat this amendment; there's no question in my mind. The reality is that our party got 28 per cent of its funding from corporate donations in the last election. The party opposite got 78 per cent. So you want the hard, cold numbers. The reason why the government will not vote for this amendment is because it would cut them off at the knees. They don't want to accept it. Perhaps they don't want to stand up and say that that's the case, but it is the case pure and simple. You know, a cheque like what Daryl Katz allegedly dropped off would fit into this, and it wouldn't have been accepted either. If 78 per cent of the funding to a political entity disappears overnight based on one amendment, that's going to be pretty damaging. It's understandable why you want to stand up and defend the rights of corporations to donate money. So be it.

If Wildrose forms government in 2016, I'm confident that we will go back and change that legislation to suggest the same.

Mr. Donovan: When we do, not if.

Mr. Wilson: Yeah, absolutely.

We have succeeded in having grassroots participate in this process, and a strong majority of the money that was raised on this side of the House came directly from grassroots. It was not represented on the other side.

I would suggest that you can stand up and say that you wouldn't be bought all you want, but at the end of the day without corporate donations that side would not be able to run a campaign, many of you would not be able to be elected, and that is why you will vote down this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, I didn't speak up in the House when we trashed the Ethics Commissioner in here, I didn't speak up in the House when we trashed prosecutors in here, and I didn't speak up in the House when we trashed the Chief Electoral Officer in here. Maybe I should have, and that was likely a mistake on my part. But to hear that the opposition feels, as their member so clearly stated, that all businesses in Alberta are psychopathic by nature, completely . . .

Mr. Anderson: A point of order.

Mr. Casey: His words.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we have a point of order. We'll deal with the point of order now.

Hon. Member for Airdrie, your point of order.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Anderson: Could the member please cite the place where the member on this side called businesses in this province psychopathic by nature?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I don't have the Blues with me at this point in time.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would refer the member to the commentary from the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre where he clearly indicated that verbiage.

The Deputy Chair: So you're saying that will be in the Blues, then?

Mr. Denis: That was my recollection, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much.

We will reserve judgment until we can see the Blues, but I did hear the statement as well.

We'll carry on. The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Debate Continued

Mr. Casey: Thank you. So the point is that I happen to believe that Alberta is built on businesses, reputable businesses. I don't think that they are corrupt by nature. I don't think that they have one purpose and one purpose only in mind. For anyone that has lived in a municipal governance role or even worked for a large charity in Alberta: tell me that you do not depend on business to step forward and help you with your programming. There wouldn't be a charity in Alberta operating today if it was not for corporate entities.

5:40

There was also some question of whether they were all important in Alberta. Well, anybody that walks and talks understands that business is the foundation of this province and that small business is also the foundation of this province. I've been in business since 1978 and – I'm sorry – I don't consider myself corrupt. I don't know anyone else that does. So to paint all businesses in Alberta somehow with this brush offends me. It totally offends me. This is a partnership in Alberta between residents, business, government, resources to make this the greatest place in the world to live, but business is an absolutely integral part of that.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I'd just remind you to make sure that you refer to amendment A14.

Mr. Casey: Okay. Thank you. So business participating in the electoral process is not out of the question, and there is nothing inherently wrong with that. Nothing. It is up to each one of us individually in this House if we have the moral and the ethical background to stand up for what is right. Then there is nothing wrong ever in accepting those donations, and there is nothing wrong with those donations being offered because they have an interest over all the province.

So, Madam Chair, I will not support this under any form. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, I am going to stand and speak in support of this amendment again, and I want to be very clear that – I mean, I didn't ever think I'd have to defend the Wildrose caucus against allegations that we were antibusiness, but apparently I do. Apparently the Kool-Aid is so thick and powerful that some of these members who've only been members of that party for less than a year now have drank so thoroughly from it that they actually think the Wildrose is an antibusiness party. That's understandable. I know how thick the Kool-Aid can be on that side of the House after you've been drinking it for a while.

Madam Chair, what I would say is that obviously our party, which has been advocating for small business, including the leader of our party, who was the director of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business for the province, understands full well the importance of small business in our system, in our province. We know that small business is, in fact, the lifeblood of our province and that they create more jobs than the public sector, obviously, and also large businesses. They are the job creators of our province, and clearly they are being suffocated in a lot of ways. If you read the surveys that they fill out, these small businesses, on regulatory burden and so forth, they're being greatly hurt by those things. We, of course, over here want to try to decrease the burden that they have on them. It's very difficult for these small businesses to compete with larger businesses who have armies of lawyers and so forth . . .

Mr. Denis: Lawyers.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah, lawyers. That's right.

. . . to deal with regulatory burden that they simply do not have. Certainly, we're very cognizant of that.

However, the problem is not small-business donations. I think that's pretty clear. The problem is big-business donations. The problem is donations of $30,000, $15,000, advertising at PC events around the province, advertising fees sometimes in the area of $50,000 or more, promises of plum positions in government relations and so forth. There are all kinds of issues. You know, most of us can see just from the pattern of patronage that occurs from the governing party with regard to who they appoint, when they appoint them, how they're appointed, I think, that it's very clear that the relationship is too cozy.

There needs to be a healthy respect both back and forth. We need to respect as members the role and the good that corporations, their actions and the profits that they make, bring to this province, which is astronomical and large. But at the same time we need to balance that with the realization that corporations much like politicians are not infallible, that they make errors, that oftentimes they do act in their own self-interest, which is part of being a business, and that's okay. Nothing wrong with that. Oftentimes they do things to help charities and do things that are very good. I know there are a lot of businesses that do good in my constituency on various levels.

However, there is no doubt that a corporation is there to make profit, and sometimes that means that they will lobby the government nonstop with donations and government relations people and gifts and parties and all kinds of fun stuff, tickets to hockey games, you name it. They will do that in order to get the ear of government, to ask that they make decisions that are in the best interest of their companies. Now, that's just a fact. We all know that, so let's not pretend that we don't know that. It happens, and it happens a lot.

I don't think Albertans want that type of influence out there when decisions are being made. I think Albertans want to know that decisions are being made in their best interest, not necessarily one particular company's best interest. Obviously, that means that if we're going to be serving all Albertans, we need to make sure that our business regulations and taxation and so forth are low, are competitive and so forth because that creates jobs, which helps all Albertans. We all agree with that. But that doesn't mean that we need to favour one business over another – that's not in the interests of Albertans – and that's what we have seen.

We saw this with North West Upgrading. I don't think I've ever been lobbied more by a company in my time over on that side than I was from North West Upgrading, for about a period of two years, with regard to getting this bitumen upgrader project going. Now, whether that project is a good project or not – I haven't seen the contract or the details in full yet because the government won't release it. It could be a good idea, using the bitumen royalty in kind, but I don't know. I don't know if North West Upgrading was the best company to do it. I know that they certainly lobbied more than anyone else. They certainly lobbied more than anybody else to get that contract. They were relentless, and they did a heck of a lobbying job. Are they the best company? I don't know. That's the point.

This government picks winners and losers. They give grants to certain small businesses for research and innovation and so forth, and then they don't give it to others who apply. They give $800 million to Shell Canada for carbon capture and storage, but they don't give it to other people. They give millions and millions of dollars, billions of dollars through people's electricity bills to AltaLink, ATCO, and so forth, and they don't give it to others. They don't even tender that to an open, competitive bidding process. They pick winners and losers.

That's the problem with corporate donations that I found. I didn't feel this way when I was first elected because, frankly, I was naive to it. But there's absolutely no doubt after five years in this building that the efforts, the lobbying, the money spent on politicians does bear fruit in this province for specific companies over other companies. Saying that that should be banned and saying that there should be an even playing field and saying that we shouldn't be in a position where they are trying to buy their way into the winner's circle of government grants and so forth, granting applications and so forth, is not antibusiness. It is pro Albertan. It is pro taxpayer. It makes sure that we take big money out of the equation.

Then when an RFP comes out and a construction company bids on it, we know that there's nothing going on, that the decision is not being made based on favouritism. The decision is not being made based on who showed up at a Tory fundraiser and who did not show up at a Tory fundraiser. The decision is being made based solely on what is in the best interest of Albertans, which means probably the lowest price for the best product. That's how all RFPs should be done.

5:50

That's why we're making such a fuss in this House right now with regard to the litigation RFP that went out because we're not sure. Tens of thousands in donations from this law firm going to this Premier's leadership campaign and so forth: do we know if that had an effect? You know, the circumstantial evidence is certainly through the roof, but I guess we'll never know whether in the Premier's mind that ever came into the equation. No one can prove that, I guess. But it sure looks bad, and that's the point.

Take this potential influence off the table. Take the bad look that this gives off, the apprehension of bias that corporate donations make in our society. Take it off the table so that everybody in this Legislature and outside the Legislature can be completely confident that the taxpayer is not being hosed, that when the government is making choices, when they are forced to make a decision about who gets a contract and who doesn't get a contract, they are doing so only on the criteria of what is best for Albertans. That's all they should care about. That's all anybody should care about when deciding an RFP or doing anything for the people of Alberta.

We shouldn't be giving out corporate grants to Alberta companies. We should not be doing that. That is not our business. The fact is that it has tainted the politicians of this Assembly and it has tainted this House, and we need to stop it. We need to move into this century on this issue. There are some things where Alberta goes it alone, which are good. We should be proud of going it alone on some things, even when it's unpopular, possibly federally or otherwise. But in some cases we should not go it alone. In some cases the rest of society has passed us, and on corporate donations this is one of those things. There's no reason for it.

I mean, I know for a fact there are members over there that feel the same way because I remember having discussions with them on it in previous times. We know that's the case. We know that corporate donations – many of you know that they should be banned, yet I wonder how many people will vote to ban them when the chips are down. I would ask that they think about that, think about it in their own experience. Have they ever seen the effects of corporate money on decisions of government? Be honest with yourselves. I think we can honestly say that they have.

That is not an antibusiness argument, and to try to make it into an antibusiness argument is, well, silly because (a) no one will buy that the Wildrose is an antibusiness party, and (b) it's just intellectually dishonest. It's silly. It's an intellectually dishonest argument – intellectually dishonest argument – because it says that if you are against allowing corporations to donate that somehow you are against corporations. It's a silly argument. But, you know, some of the hypocrisy of certain members over there, of course, knows no bounds. That's right on the amendment.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Denis: Point of order, Madam Chair, under Beauchesne's 489. The member has used the words "hypocrisy" as well as "dishonesty," which are prohibited terms.

Mr. Anderson: I'll speak to that. They're only prohibited terms if you refer to another member of the Assembly individually. You can use the word "dishonesty" in this House. There's nothing in Beauchesne's or anywhere else that says you cannot use it, except when you're talking about another member. That is what the rule says. I would not refer to another member as dishonest, clearly. I said that there's a perception of it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.
On the point of order?

Mr. Anderson: That was the point.

Debate Continued

The Deputy Chair: Yes. All right. Are you completed now in your presentation?

Mr. Anderson: No. I've got a few more things to say.

The Deputy Chair: All right. You may continue.

Mr. Anderson: All right. Now that we've got that off. It's good to know that my talk is having such a maddening effect on the Justice minister.

Mr. Donovan: You're supposed to roll over.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. Just roll over. That's right. That's what we do.

I think that it's really key, too, Madam Chair, that this government and this Justice minister continue to refuse to pass any of the amendments like this one, refuse to do it, saying that the amendments aren't any good or they don't make sense or whatever. A hundred and seven amendments. They continue to bring that up and arrogantly say that somehow the folks on this side, who represent 56 per cent of the people who voted in the last election, don't have any idea of what the people of Alberta want to see enacted. It's just beyond belief. It's that type of arrogance that is going to cost them dearly going forward. I thought that they would have learned their lesson by now.

The Deputy Chair: On the amendment, please, hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: But they haven't, which is why we need to ban corporate donations, Madam Chair, because corporate donations can lead to such arrogance, and we need to make sure that we do everything in our power to avoid that as an Assembly and as political parties. When we don't think that we're accountable to the people, when we're accountable to corporations, when that's who we're accountable to through the donations that they make to us, that means that Albertans lose, and it's not something that we should be a part of.

I certainly look forward to hearing other wonderful comments on why we should ban corporate donations and why this government continues to kick the can down the road and be the only major jurisdiction in Canada to not ban corporate donations when it is so silly.

I will continue a little bit because there are a few minutes and I have a few more things to say. One of the things that I have noticed about this amendment in particular and the hon. members' opposite response to it is that they've talked about: oh, why don't you give the money back that you've received during the election period from corporations? Well, clearly, that's silly. As I said earlier, you don't bring a knife to a gunfight. You don't go into a battle with one arm tied around your back saying: "You know what? We're going to let them raise $4 million, but we're only going to raise $200,000, and we'll see how that goes." Clearly, that's not the case.

We've just had our first competitive election in a very long time in this province, and part of that was because the money spending was relatively equal. The governing party did spend more. They used their savings account to supplement their internal deficit budget, which is . . .

Mr. Donovan: Is that deficit financing?

Mr. Anderson: Yeah.

. . . deficit financing their campaign, which is somewhat applicable to the way they run government. It's the same way they run their party in that regard.

We did not. We spent $3 million, and that's what we raised. But they did still spend more because they raided their savings account.

Mr. Saskiw: That sounds so familiar.

An Hon. Member: It's like a P3.

Mr. Anderson: That's right.

But it was competitive: 4 and a half million dollars they spent, $3 million we spent. It was a competitive playing field, and we were able to hold our own. I think the final result was 44 per cent for them, 34 per cent for us, and 10 per cent for each of the other parties.

I think it's very important that we realize that it's very unreasonable to ask the parties on principle – our folks over here aren't going to accept corporate donations while they do because, of course, that would lead to the absurd issue where they would be able to spend 4 and a half million dollars and we would only have, say, a million dollars, and they could outspend us 2 to 1 or 3 to 1. That, of course, doesn't do any good in a democracy, to have that kind of a disproportionate advantage for the governing party.

You know, I hope that some of these comments have impressed upon the government the need and the desire to accept this amendment and to ban corporate donations. I think it would be very much in their interests and in the interests of Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 4(4), we are recessed until 7:30 p.m.

Thank you.

[The committee adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Before we begin commenting on Bill 7, I'd like to talk about the point of order that was raised earlier today. Just to let you know, the point of order that was raised by the Member for Airdrie has been withdrawn.

Bill 7

Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012

The Deputy Chair: We can continue with amendment A14. The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm wondering if it would please the House if we were to ask for unanimous consent to shorten the bells for any votes that might happen this evening.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much. I'm just rising to speak on the amendment, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Yes. Amendment A14.

Mr. Denis: There are just a couple of things that I wanted to mention. The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre made some rather interesting comments about corporations. He did run a very lean campaign. I just pulled up the particular item, and there are some donations here, places like W. Pidhirney Welding, European Delicatessen, Van Giessen Growers. This is all public information. These appear to be corporate donations. Perhaps the member can correct me if I'm wrong, but it just seems somewhat inconsistent with his comments about what he believes the corporation to be.

What I will indicate, Madam Chair, is that at the same time as all the comments we're hearing opposite about corporate donations, inquiring minds want to know. I issue a challenge to any one of these members tonight to go and declare, stand on the courage of their own convictions, indicate that regardless of whether this is passed or not, they will not accept corporate donations. Then the people of Alberta will know that they will stand on their own principles about this particular amendment and that it is not simply for short-term political gain.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. What I will say about that challenge is this. We will abide by the rules. I will abide by the rules, but I am willing to forgo corporate donations, and that's what we are proposing here. Right now the rules are that corporations can donate, and I will not put myself at a disadvantage.

What I did bring forward I want to clarify because I think that there was a lot of misunderstanding of what I said, so I want to kind of just clarify that. I am not speaking out against business. That is just absolutely false if anyone makes that allegation. That's not true. Business is the cornerstone, particularly small business, in my view – and some people would disagree – of not just this province but our free-market society. I firmly believe that. Sometimes I think small businesses are underrepresented. Having run a small business and more than one, I am not speaking out against any small business. I've run proprietorships. I've run partnerships. And like most small businesses, I've incorporated. That's not the issue.

When I spoke about dysfunctional psychopathic tendencies, you need to understand where that comes from. It comes from Joel Bakan. What I was saying is this. A corporate entity is not a person. I think some of the members here confuse that. A corporate entity is nothing more than a legislative creation. It is something you cannot touch. It is something you cannot see. It is something that you cannot hear. A corporate entity is created only by legislation, and it can be removed by legislation.

People are people. I think that got missed in this, and that's what that was all about. People have compassion. Human beings have empathy. Human beings have the capacity to vote in the interests of others: the public interest, the interests of their family, the interests of their community.

Corporate entities are created by legislation. They have one primary focus, and that is to enhance the wealth of the owners. That's the whole thing behind corporate entities. They're created to do nothing but collect capital in a co-operative effort, basically, which is the issuance of stock, and it's through that that they're able to conduct business. I'm not anticorporation. What I'm saying is: put corporations where they belong. When I talk about corporations, let them do the business that the whole purpose of the corporate entity is designed to do, which is to conduct business for a society, for this free-market society we've created.

Democracy, on the other hand, and what this amendment is about is to eliminate corporate influence in the democratic process. Corporations cannot vote. They don't vote. People vote. I think some of the members here misunderstood that. The whole purpose of democracy is one person, one vote. Where the corporate entity abuses the democratic system, particularly the large corporations – I'm not talking about the mom and pop: "I incorporated my farm," or "I incorporated my small business." The large corporate entities who hire lawyers, accountants, and whatever else they hire to influence the political process for one gain and one gain only, those corporations do not donate for charitable causes unless there is something in that charitable cause that enhances their corporate image. That's what they are actually focused on.

I know the members would disagree, but they can go out and educate themselves about the psychology of it later. A corporate entity has a guiding principle, and it's in the charter. All corporate entities have that same focus in their charter. They take the investment that comes in through all sorts of investments, and their job is to enhance that investment, and if they don't do that, the CEO or the board will find themselves fired. That's the way it works.

Getting back to the very simple premise, the description I gave had nothing to do with business. If a corporation were actually a person and it went through psychoanalysis, this is how the psychoanalysis would be conducted and founded by prominent psychiatrists and prominent psychologists. It's well documented; it's not something I'm making up here. If people don't want to educate themselves on it, that's fine, but don't misrepresent what I've been saying here. What I'm saying is that only people should participate in the democratic process. Only people have the ability to have empathy or compassion.

Corporations are not people. If people think that that's what they are, they're wrong. People work for corporations. People manage corporations. But the corporate entity is nothing but this fictitious entity that's created by legislation. That's where we can get twisted, particularly when these companies get extremely large. When you get into these multinational, international corporate entities that are billion-dollar companies – and we have them here in Alberta – they can have a tremendous effect on our political system. They have the ability to do that. That's why this amendment is all about saying that we're going to lay ground rules here.

The beauty of the amendment is that this is nothing new. The federal government did it. Other jurisdictions did it. It's working well to preserve the democratic way for our communities, for our individuals because that's where the democracy exists.

I saw members sort of get confused about what I said, and I can understand that. This is not a place to debate beyond what we're debating on the amendment. I want to make it absolutely, fundamentally clear that I am pro business. I am pro small business. Anyone who would indicate otherwise is misunderstanding why I made those comments the way I made them. Those were comments that came from very renowned and respected sources who study the field.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion on amendment A14 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back on Bill 7. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment with the requisite copies.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause for a moment while we distribute the amendment. This amendment will be known as amendment A15.

Thank you very much.

Will the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills proceed?

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. This amendment states, "A contributor is prohibited from making a contribution on behalf of another contributor." What this gets to: of course, the current donation limits are $30,000 per person during an election year, and this amendment adds the rule that donors cannot submit a large cheque along with the names of friends and family members to get around the donation limits. You know, we've seen an allegation where it's alleged that somebody has given a $430,000 cheque and provided a list of names to provide the tax credits to. That, of course, is a way to make an end run around the $30,000 contribution limit.

Now, it's also an issue with tax credits. I'd have to research it further, but to make a contribution, then allocate the tax credits to someone else when they actually haven't genuinely provided the contribution, I believe, would probably violate the Income Tax Act as well. That's another reason to make it very explicit.

I think this amendment is very clear. Somebody cannot make a contribution on behalf of somebody else. The reason for this is that if you do not close this loophole, it allows the very rich to have potentially a large influence on a political party and maybe even affect the outcome of an election. I think this is a very straightforward amendment. I don't think anyone on the government side would disagree that no person or entity should have the ability to contribute on behalf of another person, and I strongly hope that they take this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I thank the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills for bringing this forward. You know, I don't disagree with the principle of this at all. I fully agree that no one should be making a contribution on behalf of another: no individual, no corporation, no union, what have you. But I will refer this member to section 34(1) of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, which states that no person, corporation, trade union or employee organization shall contribute to any registered party, registered constituency association or registered candidate funds not actually belonging to that person, corporation, trade union or employee organization, or any funds that have been given or furnished to the person, corporation, trade union or employee organization by any persons or groups of persons or by a corporation, trade union or employee organization for the purpose of making a contribution of those funds to that registered party, registered constituency association or registered candidate.

Subsection (2) goes on to prohibit soliciting these types of activities, and subsection (3) of this existing legislation indicates that this is an offence.

Now, Madam Chair, I would disagree with this member when he indicates that there are loopholes. This is quite a comprehensive piece of legislation. This section 34 is very legalese, and I think it spells out just exactly what the intent is in the fact that you are not allowed to make a contribution if the money isn't yours. So a corporation – and this is existing legislation – cannot take money and give it to whatever employees and say: hey, give this to candidate X or party Y or constituency association Z.

Madam Chair, this is already in legislation, and I do support continuing this. But I would just respectfully submit that this amendment, however well intentioned, does belong in the Department of Redundancy Department.

Thank you.

7:50

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Well, thank you for that explanation. I think we have something to work from here because the hon. Solicitor General seemed to be suggesting that he agrees with the intent of the amendment and that it's just redundant, and that's the reason he doesn't want to support it. Okay. Well, that's good. So we agree to the principle. I'm not going to put words in your mouth, hon. member, but I'm assuming that you're saying that an individual should not be able to write a cheque for whatever amount – let's say a million dollars – and then say, "Okay; put $15,000 for this person, this person, this person, this person and send them a tax receipt, and it's on behalf of those individuals." I'm assuming that's what you're saying.

If you agree with that, if that's the agreement, I think we've got something to work from because we have an issue right now, of course, where this may have been the case. We don't know for sure. The PC Party hasn't disclosed if the cheque was one cheque or if it was many different cheques, but we have a situation where it is alleged by a media outlet that they have confirmed that a cheque for $430,000 was given to the PC Party, and then tax receipts for it were distributed, or it was basically apportioned out to other individuals and companies and entities in order to comply with the donation limits. That's what's alleged.

Now, if that's the case, I guess I have to understand from the Solicitor General if he is saying that he doesn't agree that that should happen, not that it did happen in this case, but that that sort of thing shouldn't be allowed to happen, in which case I think that this amendment is truly needed. Hon. member, if you look at section 34, that you just read into the record, "No person, corporation, trade union or employee organization shall contribute to any registered party, [CA] or registered candidate funds not actually belonging to that person."

In other words, it seems from comments of the electoral officer or at least his spokesperson that he's not interpreting that section to say what you just said it means. Drew Westwater, I believe, is his name. His interpretation of the act seems to be that you are allowed to come in, donate one cheque of $500,000, then just apportion it out and say, "That $15,000 is for person A, that $15,000 for persons B, C, D," and down the line. That's how he's interpreting it. So your interpretation of this is not the same interpretation as the Chief Electoral Officer's or at least not his spokesperson's.

If that's the case, then the difference between what is being said here with the amendment is that it's a clarifying amendment. It says, "A contributor is prohibited from making a contribution on behalf of another contributor." That is an important distinction for clarity's sake. It's saying that you cannot – you clearly cannot – go in and say: I'm going to donate this million dollars, and I'm going to divide $10,000 among a hundred people that I know and a hundred entities that I know and say that that $10,000 was from that person, that person, that person, that person. It specifically says here, "A contributor is prohibited from making a contribution on behalf of another contributor."

Section 34 of the act does not say that, Solicitor General. It says that you cannot contribute to a registered party "funds not actually belonging to that person." But I guess, at least the way the Chief Electoral Officer is looking at that, it's saying: well, as long as you're paid back for that money or as long as in the end that money was paid into, say, a separate fund and then you went and just contributed it with one cheque – so all 100 people put $10,000 in a pot, and then somebody comes and contributes it – then that's allowable. Or in the case here somebody can plop a $430,000 cheque and say: "Well, really, I was just bundling, essentially. All these individuals made the contribution, and it's all good." It's a loophole.

Can you just do it for the sake of clarity? Perhaps you're right and that's what the act does say already. Perhaps you're right. But that's not how it's being interpreted. You just put an interpretation on the record that's not the same. You're shaking your head. Okay. That's fine. Then explain, please, why Drew Westwater at the chief electoral office is saying that their interpretation, at least in the first day or two of that issue, said one thing, and you're saying something else. Are you saying, hon. member, that someone should be able to walk into a party and say: here's a $500,000 donation, and it's coming from persons A, B, C, D, E, F, G, and down the line. Is that what you're saying?

Mr. Denis: I trust that the hon. member was not trying to put words in my mouth. I'll give him that because half of what he has said is not what I said at all. If you look towards the particular section 34, the title is Contributions Not Belonging to Contributor. I quoted the entire section. I'm not going to belabour that point by quoting it needlessly again. It's on the record twice today already. It deals basically with an entity, if you had a corporation and you would say, "Listen, here are the funds; donate that," if they actually didn't belong. Now, it's different if the individual, let's say, was paid money by the corporation for legitimate services rendered and then decides in their own sole and unfettered discretion to go and donate those funds. That is not prohibited as well.

I in no way contradicted the Chief Electoral Officer, and in any event this is an independent officer of this Legislature. They can have their own opinion. I'm simply quoting what the legislation says under contributions not belonging to the contributor.

Where this would not apply is, for example, where there's a law firm of three individuals. ABC LLP, we'll call it. Of course, an LLP cannot donate money to anybody. You have to apportion to that particular LLP if it was one-third, one-third, one-third, or what have you. There's nothing wrong with actually having one cheque in that particular instance as long as it is attributed and as long as the funds belong to that particular individual, corporation, union, or employee organization. That's what the law already says.

I again assert that this amendment is along the same lines as the existing legislation, and I don't see a reason as to why we would support that further.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just with respect to the Justice minister and Solicitor General's comments, what the current legislation would allow is for 60 members here, for example, to each write a $1,000 cheque, give it to me, and then me to make a $60,000 contribution. The problem with that is that the Chief Electoral Officer would then have to do an investigation, would have to go and see all the documentary evidence of who wrote what cheque to me when.

I think what this amendment does is that it makes it very clear. As a political party you simply cannot accept a cheque above the donation limit. If a political party sees a cheque for $31,000, they should send it back. If we don't have this amendment, what's going to happen is that there'll be these large cheques, for example $100,000, and then after the fact the Chief Electoral Officer is going to have to do an investigation and find out that there's been a direct flow of funds from those individuals.

I think that this is an obvious loophole in the legislation, and I would hope that the government would accept it, especially if they agree with it in principle.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have to chime in on this one because this amendment is actually not acceptable. The concept of people donating their own money is absolutely right, but the fact of the matter is – and again I'll use my own constituency as an example. My wife and I share a bank account. I write a cheque on it. It might be for both of us. There's absolutely nothing wrong with that. I might be making a contribution on behalf of both of us and attributing it to both of us. It's both of our money. We don't write separate cheques.

By the same token, we have a lobster boil, and we sell tickets. Somebody might buy a table at the lobster boil and then resell the tickets to other people – they wrote the cheque to the constituency association – and then come back and say, "Well, these are the people who are buying the tickets," and attribute the receipts to those individuals rather than to the person who wrote the thing. A law firm will write a cheque. Now, law firms in and of themselves, unless they're incorporated, can't make contributions. They will write a cheque and they will ascribe it to the various partners who have agreed to make the contribution. They might buy a table at a dinner, for example, or at my lobster boil.

There are a number of ways in which people can make contributions. It's not all by writing a cheque. Sometimes it's by buying tickets to an event and, for the sake of convenience – and there's nothing inappropriate at all about that – buying a number of tickets and then allocating them to the actual contributors, even in the case of a corporation, quite frankly. I had a shareholder loan account with my professional corporation. I could write a professional corporation cheque and then, with the permission, of course, of the people who agreed to contribute, basically assign it to the shareholder loan account. There's absolutely nothing wrong with that. It's quite an appropriate way.

People organize their lives in various different ways. It's not up to us to try and make their lives difficult. It's up to us to try and make the political process easy to participate in, whether you're contributing your time, energy, or money, and what we're after is clarity and accountability and openness. At the end of the day there needs to be: who is accountable for those contributions?

Now, if you go back to the other section, it's very clear that you cannot contribute other people's money. I can't write a cheque from my company and say: it's my company's money, but I want you to give the receipts to these five people. That's off. That's already against the law. If it's those five people's money and it happens to be in my account, there's absolutely nothing wrong with it as long as they're agreeing to make the contribution. That's what we're talking about here. What you're after is openness and accountability and transparency. We all want that. We all want it to be very clear who's making contributions to political parties. I understand that, but let's not make life difficult for people.

I have ticket sales people going out and selling tickets to my lobster boil, and I want them to be able to sell those tickets. I want people to come to the lobster boil. It's not all about the contribution. It's not just fundraising. It's also friend raising, and I want the widest possible opportunity for people to come. Sometimes that is done through various ticket sellers. Somebody will say, "I'll take a table," and they send a cheque for the table, and then they get other people who will buy those tickets. At the end of the day it's the other people who made the contribution, and that should be disclosed. This amendment would not allow that type of thing to happen, which is perfectly valid and reliable. At the end of the day it's about openness, who made the contribution, not who wrote the cheque.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Well, thank you for that explanation, and you bring up some valid points, Government House Leader. The fact is, though, that we have an issue here. I mean, I think we can all understand what the public was getting upset about with regard to the donation in question that is kind of spurring the idea behind this amendment.

Mr. Hancock: The investigation will determine just that.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. Sure. The investigation will be done, and we'll figure that out, but it's quite difficult for the administrator, in this case the Chief Electoral Officer, to go back and ask every single person for the paper trail that shows that they contributed the money to the individual's bank account and so forth. It's a bit of a disaster, in fact, to try to figure that out. I mean, you're talking about not using resources. Why not just make it simple?

First of all, it's a little bit weird because the Solicitor General is saying that this is redundant, but you're saying that it's not redundant, that it does change the law but that it doesn't do so in a good way. [interjection] Well, I agree with your interpretation. I think this amendment does change the law.

How about a friendly amendment? I wonder if the government would be open to amending this section – and we'll have to put together a subamendment in order to do this – so that a contributor is prohibited from making a contribution on behalf of another contributor in excess of, say, $1,000 or $2,000. Let's say that it's the max for a CA, $2,000, or even $15,000. If we put the dollar figure on the end of this amendment, then it would take care of the lobster boil issue, and it would take care of a leader's dinner issue because you're dealing with larger funds there. It would take those off the table. It would just be for those massive donations that are over $15,000, where we would ask for separate cheques.

I think that's reasonable. First of all, there aren't that many people that donate that kind of money. Asking them to do it in a separate cheque from bank accounts I think is reasonable. You know, if a husband and wife are going to donate $15,000 each, then they can cut two cheques. I don't think that's too much to ask of them. If they can afford $15,000, they can afford two separate cheques to do that, just to make it clear what's going on.

I wonder if the government would be open to the idea of putting a limit on this so that it doesn't become so unwieldy, with lobster boils and bundled contributions for leaders' dinners, buying tables for leaders' dinners, and so forth. If you said that a contributor is prohibited from making a contribution on behalf of another contributor in an amount over $15,000, would that not take care of the issue, Solicitor General, that you're worried about or that the Government House Leader is worried about? Would that be a possibility, that we could possibly bring a subamendment to it this time?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm standing up in support of this amendment. I would agree with the hon. Government House Leader that it does change the law and makes it more restrictive in that sense. I would agree with his description. What it would do is that it would close this loophole, particularly where people are donating on behalf of other people and trying to get around the system and abuse the system. I would suggest that it happens, and it is difficult to catch in some situations. By accepting this amendment, it would be more restrictive in that regard.

As our House leader has just indicated, I think it would be more palatable if there was a subamendment that was proposed and there was a number given as an exemption so we don't infringe upon those lobster boil fundraisers and the husband and wife and that issue. What we're trying to accomplish here and what the hon. Solicitor General was talking about is that we don't want people donating money for other people, and we don't want to see the system abused with the writing of extremely large cheques when that is being done to circumvent our election process, our political process. That's what we want to basically clamp down on and close that loophole. We call it the Katz loophole because it's the most glaring example we can come up with right now. It's a valid example, and it's one that the public has not a whole lot of confidence in.

Again, I stand in support of the amendment. I would welcome a subamendment to this to make some sort of established level. I think that would be something that we could come to an agreement on.

With that, I encourage my fellow members to support this.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Madam Chair. If I could, I'd like to take a little bit different approach to this. We've heard many good comments from my colleagues and some, actually, from the other side as well. I'd like to remind this government that during their leadership race your now Premier made several references to running a more accountable, a more transparent government. In fact, you've gone so far as to create a whole new ministry around accountability, transparency, and transformation, AT and T for short.

I don't know what could be wrong with this amendment in that it is just exactly that. It's accountability. It's transparent. That can only lead to good things for everyone that sits in this House. I would ask the hon. House leader: is writing two cheques such an onerous task that you would forgo the honest and open and transparent process? I would suggest not. Buying tickets for a lobster boil or a barbecue or whatever doesn't give someone a tax credit that they didn't actually earn.

Obviously, I speak in favour of this amendment, and I would encourage the rest of the members to as well.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Just a very brief response. Buying a ticket for a lobster boil does give you a tax credit unless you're just charging the cost of the dinner. Anything over the cost of the dinner is a contribution, so it's eligible for a tax credit. In fact, it's against the law not to give a tax receipt. [interjection] Well, no, it's not necessarily small. It depends on how much you charge for your lobster boils or for tables at your lobster boils.

That is, in fact, an issue, but the difference, I think, of opinion here really comes from a difference in perspective, and we'll probably have to agree to disagree. I come from the perspective that people are essentially honest, that people want to participate in the political process. They want to support people because they like the individual as a friend or family, they like what the individual stands for, or they like the party that the individual is running for. That's why people make contributions. I do not come from the perspective that people make contributions for personal interest reasons because they want to have access to lobbying.

I can tell you that anybody that does – and there may be a few people that do – is sorely disappointed if that's their goal because they don't get that. Now, that's my perspective on life. Some might call me naive, but I've been around 15 years actively in this House, and I can tell you that's how I've lived. That's how I anticipate everybody else will live their life.

Albertans are essentially honest, and they want to participate in a political process because it matters, because public policy is important, and because where we go as a province is important, and that ought to matter to people. We ought not come from the perspective that this is a cynical approach to life, that everybody who participates is doing so for their own personal reasons or their own personal gain. They are not.

I want to make it absolutely easy for people to participate in the process, whether it's by contributing money or contributing time. I can tell you that I used to serve on my church board. I couldn't always attend the work parties, so sometimes I wrote a cheque instead of showing up. It was my way of saying: "I'm with you. I want to participate in this, but I don't have the time to participate in the process. I'll contribute in a different way."

I think Albertans want to do that. I think the public does want to know who is contributing just in case there's an issue. The fact of the matter is that the act already precludes people from making contributions on behalf of other people. You have to give your own money. If you're writing a single cheque and it's on behalf of a number of people, you have to have their permission, and it has to be their money. One way or the other, that's in the act.

If there's a suggestion that somebody has run afoul of that, there's a process to investigate that, and the person who wrote the cheque better be able to show that they didn't give the money and attribute it to somebody else, that they wrote a cheque that involved other people's money. That's an easy thing to do, quite frankly.

Let's not make it difficult for honest Albertans to participate in this process. Let's not suggest in any way, shape, or form that people are coming to the political process in a cynical way because that's not my experience of the Albertans I know.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to respond. I reject the notion that every time we stand up and talk about what's happening in election finances or in amendments to this bill, we're somehow being overly cynical about Albertans and their engagement. That is absolutely not what we're saying.

There are many documented cases of illegal contributions and other violations of this act that have happened. We have to accept it, and we have to find a way – I agree with you all – to move forward from here but not by looking through a rearview mirror and insisting that every time we stand up, we're being cynical and putting the brakes on the political process in this province. That is, quite frankly, a little bit disturbing. We are not doing that, and I think that it's sad that that seems to be the perspective because it polarizes the debate to a point where it becomes illegitimate. It's unfortunate.

For something as serious as this, that has captured the public's mind around the alleged donation of $430,000 to your campaign, I think that we can all accept that this is one loophole we're trying to close for one circumstance, not for all Albertans who are trying to get involved in the political process and come to the hon. Government House Leader's lobster boil, which, I'm sure, is a fantastic time and that the food is lovely and the company even better.

The reality is that we have an issue here. There is the notion that the Chief Electoral Officer can suggest that there might be a loophole here. I believe that it is incumbent upon us as legislators to close that loophole. This government has never shied away from redundancy before, so I don't know why that becomes an issue either.

With that, Madam Chair, I would encourage the hon. Justice minister and House leader to find a way to make that friendly amendment that the hon. Member for Airdrie suggested. We can still allow for the lobster boil, the sacred lobster boil, to continue while still making sure that we (a) close the loophole on the back end and (b) maintain the public's confidence in the system so that we don't have to have stories breaking, front-page news about massive donations coming in and being split up in what could allegedly be contravening the act. I would again encourage the government to try and find a way to make something like this work. If you're being honest in suggesting that you agree with the intent and the principle of this, there has got to be a way to get it in there.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: You know, I would like to live in the world that the Government House Leader lives in. It's a good world. It's a happy world. It's a world of clouds and angels and harps and lollipops. It's a world where no one does anything wrong, where everyone sits and holds hands and sings Kumbaya, where oil is at $150 a barrel for the rest of our natural lifetime. It's a beautiful world. It's a world I want to be a part of. I do. Unfortunately, it's not reality, Madam Chair.

The reality is that although the majority of people are law-abiding citizens and wouldn't dream about making an illegal donation, some are not, and we've seen that over and over again. We're not talking about hardened criminals. We're not saying that people who make illegal contributions should necessarily go to jail or anything like that, but they're still illegal contributions. We've seen over and over again that those things happen in this province. It happens. To say that it doesn't happen and to point out that if we close these loopholes, somewhere we're saying that Albertans are rotten people, I mean, it's just — argh. You know, I'm in here talking about the child sexual abuse case in Airdrie. It's a terrible situation. Am I saying that all Albertans want to abuse children when bringing that up? Of course not. But we need to make sure that when problems do occur in our world, which is not perfect, and in our province, which is wonderful but not perfect, we have legislation in place that closes these loopholes or holds folks accountable.

The minister is saying that it's redundant. The Government House Leader is saying that it will interfere with his lobster boil. We're trying to bring these two gaps together and say: look, if we're going to pass a piece of legislation, let's just say that if the donation is in excess of $15,000, it has to be done in separate cheques so that there's a clear, defined paper trail, so there's no doubt that the money is coming from different accounts, that it's not just being paid for and "send the tax receipts to this person, this person, and this person." It's easy. It's a simple amendment, and I don't understand why we have to sit here and talk about an issue like this where we essentially, it seems, have agreement on the principle, but when we actually propose an amendment to allow that to happen, it gets shot down just because — I don't even know the reasons anymore.

We've dealt with the lobster boil problem. We've dealt with the redundancy problem. We've dealt with all the problems. We're proposing an amendment here, yet it's still not good enough. Anyway, I don't understand why we can't come together and make at least one decision so that we can at least justify having spent God knows how many hours in this House talking about legislation regarding transparency and accountability, yet we still cannot for some reason find one amendment that impresses the government enough to pass it and on a principle that, essentially, they say they agree with. The only reason that they would not pass this, obviously, is that they're okay with it. Clearly, they're okay with a person being able to put down a $500,000 cheque and say, "Yeah, that amount goes to that person, and that amount goes to that person on a tax receipt, and that much goes to this person," and so on, all the way down the line.

I mean, honestly, if a hundred people donate $10,000 legitimately, let's say, you're saying that any cheque of that size would have to be investigated by the Chief Electoral Officer, and they would have to track down whether every single one of those $10,000 was actually done in advance and wasn't after the fact and yada, yada, yada. I mean, come on, that's not reasonable. Our laws are already the most lax in Canada. We have the highest contribution limits in all of Canada. I mean, it's just through the roof. Surely we can find at least a way to enforce those laws. We're not even asking to lower the limit here, guys. We're talking about just enforcing the laws. Come on, Dr. No. Dr. No, come on; say no. I mean, say yes to saying no.

Mr. McIver: We'll say no to it.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. I miss Dr. No. Makes me sad.

Anyway, I'm not understanding why we can't do this. We're trying to put together a subamendment here. That's what the delay is. We'd like to vote on this, but we're going to bring a subamendment because it is so blinking reasonable that it's just beyond belief. We're saying that anybody who donates over $15,000 — over $15,000 — has to do so on a separate cheque. That's all it does. In other words it will read that you cannot donate on behalf of another person if the amount donated is over $15,000. That's all it says. That means that if a husband and wife want to donate $30,000 between the two of them from the same joint bank account, the only trip up, the only thing that they'll have to do is write two cheques, two separate cheques of $15,000, signed and done. The limit still applies.

You can still do everything that you've ever dreamed of with regard to raising money. You just have to make sure that there's a paper trail involved. You can't just donate a million-dollar cheque and figure it out after the fact. This would close the loophole that apparently the Chief Electoral Officer says exists, from the comments from his spokesperson. It would be done. It's reasonable. It's a beautiful thing.

I'll sit down and see what my caucus mates and others think about that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Associate Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm just going to make a quick comment, and it's very general in nature. I think that one of the challenges that we always have in this Assembly when creating laws and why sometimes we overburden ourselves with laws is that if there's a circumstance out there that we don't necessarily agree with, we try to create a law around it. I don't think that's a good way to make legislation.

Clearly, this government agrees with the principle that the hon. member is trying to make, and clearly what you guys are trying to prevent already is not allowed. If you think that there is some sort of offence that contravenes that, the Chief Electoral Officer can investigate it in those one-off situations and determine through his investigation whether those rules or laws were breached. I think that's the appropriate way instead of legislating ourselves to death with every single rule for every single situation. I know that in general probably the hon. Member for Airdrie, who brought this forward, would actually even admit that that's a good sort of principle in making legislation or else we just burden ourselves with too many laws, too many regulations that end up inhibiting Albertans from doing what they want to do, which the hon. Minister of Human Services had indicated. We don't want to create a law to deal with one situation or something that might come up once in a while, that then burdens the rest of the good things that happen as a result or consequence of that law.

I think that's a principle we should all try to live by. I will admit that it doesn't always happen consistently on both sides of the House, but I do think that that is one of the reasons why I certainly would not support this amendment. I think it's quite clear from the members opposite that this is an amendment that they're wanting to bring in just because they're upset about a certain circumstance. Again, if the Chief Electoral Officer believes that this was a circumstance that contravened what was currently in the legislation, then he will come out with that ruling. But let's leave it up to that process instead of trying to create a law or a piece of legislation around it that's going to burden a bunch of Albertans.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, I'm going to take a little different tack on this than the rest of my fellow colleagues. Let's look at it from the taxpayer perspective. When one of these allegations comes forward, it needs to be investigated. When it is investigated, we are using a considerable sum of taxpayer funds as resources to investigate this. What we're proposing here is something that might cost an extra 30 seconds of time to the people that are making the donation, yet what is that going to, in turn, save the taxpayer?

Really, when we think about making these rules and these regulations, not only do we need to think about what we're asking Albertans to do to come into compliance with this. We also need to look at what it is that is going to be on the back end. What's it going to cost us to enforce this? What is it going to cost us to investigate this?

I, myself, would much rather see the funds that are being used to investigate the current situation that we're talking about go towards front-line staffing. I would like to see maybe another nurse, maybe another teacher, maybe some support staff in a school rather than having to spend money on investigating something that went on in an election because there's an allegation that it wasn't quite right. Just by making one simple amendment within the piece of legislation that's before us, we can eliminate a lot of this. We can reduce the amount of investigation required so that we do have more funds to put forward on the front lines and to make sure that staff is there and that Albertans are getting the support that they need in the areas that they want it.

I don't disagree with a lot of what the hon. Government House Leader said about how the majority of Albertans are good people. They are good people. I don't know of any that would willingly mislead, but it does happen. We saw it with federal legislation. We saw it back in 2004, 2005, and 2006 when we saw some major changes to campaign contributions and electoral finance law on the federal scale. Now, this hasn't really changed the ability of Canadians to participate in the democratic process, to participate in the party process, to participate in fundraisers. In fact, it's actually empowered Canadians. It's made it much more simple for you or me or any of our constituents to get involved and make a donation and feel that that was a meaningful donation. They even went a step further. They changed the contribution limits and eliminated corporate donations and union donations. Not in any instance have I seen where this has impeded the ability of parties to fund raise. This has not impeded democracy.

8:30

In fact, not only has it not impeded democracy; it's actually promoted it. I would love to be able to stand up here and say that it's actually promoted democracy within this country, that it's restored the faith in our democratically elected officials because the public knows that there is no possibility of anybody being able to peddle influence. Federally we're not wasting funds on investigating things that we didn't need to investigate, because the system, the regulations that were put in place, were adhered to. And they were simple regulations just like separating cheques out. Honestly, myself, if I was buying a table to a lobster dinner . . .

An Hon. Member: A lobster boil.

Mr. Fox: A lobster boil. I'm sorry.

. . . to a lobster boil, I would have no problem, no problem at all, taking around that book to individual people and just asking them for a cheque. It really is not that onerous. In fact, I've actually done it before. This is not my first time going out and getting involved in the community and soliciting funds for organizations. It's actually a very simple thing to do, and I don't think it's really beyond us to ask that this be made the procedure within Alberta electoral law. It's a very sound recommendation to do this.

I have to agree with the Member for Airdrie when he's asking on the $15,000. I mean, I can't imagine a table at a lobster boil costing $15,000, but then again I haven't really paid much attention to U.S. electoral laws. Maybe down there $15,000 for a table of eight is par for the course, but in Alberta here . . .

Mr. Wilson: Have you seen the lobsters in Edmonton-Whitemud?

Mr. Fox: No, I haven't seen the lobsters in Edmonton-Whitemud. Those must be big lobsters. I'll have to go and check the traps there next time I'm in Edmonton-Whitemud.

I really don't think that this is too much to ask. This is really just a very simple request and one that would do a lot to restore confidence in our system and in our public individuals. I mean, I want all Albertans to be able to look on both sides of the aisle at all of my colleagues in here and have the utmost faith in their moral fibre because I know I do. When I look across the aisle here, I don't see anybody who would willingly mislead the Alberta public or willingly mislead the Chamber. I see a bunch of peers. I see people that I look up to, that I work with, that I think are doing absolutely everything they can to promote Alberta, to promote Albertans' interests, and to do the best job that they possibly can.

I mean, we were all sent here for the same reason. We were all sent here to speak for our constituents. It takes a special person to stand up and say: "You know what? I want this public scrutiny. I want to be able to stand and speak for my constituents." Every person in this Chamber is somebody who has had the moral fibre to stand up and do that. That's something that needs to be applauded.

By moving forward with an amendment like this, all you're doing is confirming to Albertans that, yes, we want you to have absolute faith – absolute faith – in our system of democracy. This is just one very simple amendment, and it does not change anything in this Chamber. It's something that we ask for. It's bipartisan. We just want to make sure that all Albertans have the utmost faith in our electoral system and that they have the utmost faith in both you and me. In passing this, I am absolutely sure that you will be reconfirming that faith that the Alberta public has in us.

I hope that a few of my other colleagues have some more words of encouragement on this. This is something that is absolutely wonderful.

Thank you so much for the time this evening.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, we're almost ready here. I'm telling you, our Parliamentary Counsel are awesome. They get this stuff done so lickety-split that it's just incredible. It really is awesome. I know that they love doing this – subamendments are their favourite thing – on the fly. They always say to us: "Why don't you bring more subamendments to us? We can't get enough of those subamendments."

So we are putting together a subamendment here, and it's almost ready. The reason is because I think what we need to understand here is that Albertans have clearly stated – I mean, we always talk about engaging Albertans. It's always, you know, the Minister of Municipal Affairs talking about engaging Albertans. He's very good at that, always engaging Albertans. The Member for Calgary-Klein: all about engaging Albertans.

Well, Albertans have been engaged on a couple of issues in this session, and one of them was the Katz donation. I don't think there's any doubt about that. It wasn't just this opposition party that was saying it. I mean, people were engaged. It's an interesting story, and people overwhelmingly – if you look at the comment boards, talk radio, letters, all of the social media, Twitter, Facebook, all of the different ways we engage Albertans, in the multitude of different ways it was very clear that they were not comfortable with the idea that a single donor can come in and essentially give a cheque for $430,000, and then it's up to the Chief Electoral Officer to figure out which amounts pertain to whom and so forth and actually investigate and figure that out. Well, first of all, a complaint has to be given and then investigated several months after the fact or a year after the fact to see if it was a legitimate expense.

The Member for Calgary-Klein said that we can't just react to one situation, and that's true. We can't just react to one situation all of the time. I agree with that. But look at how thick this bill is. I mean, we're passing hundreds of pages of new amendments that are going to impact people's lives, and we're talking about a measly, like, seven words here. I mean, we're not talking about massive changes here. We're just talking about making a few small changes to make sure that those who are the big donors – and that's not too many people. If you look at our lists and the returns of our filings, the people that donate $15,000 or more – I mean, that's a very small number of people and companies. It's not a lot of folks. All we're saying is that these folks, these 20, 30, 40 individuals in an election year, maybe 20 in a nonelection year, if that, should have to show an individual cheque. Think about how easy that is. It's the easiest thing in the world, as easy as making a subamendment of four words to this. It's the easiest thing in the world, and we should be able to do it, and it makes sense.

It accounts for the lobster boil issue. This was a good debate. I mean, we had the Government House Leader come in, and in a lawyerly way he found a loophole in our own amendment, a problem. I mean, I can't imagine. I don't know if he charges $10,000 a seat to his lobster boils. I wonder. I mean, his election results are pretty darn good, so he's obviously a popular guy there. There's no doubt about that. I don't think any of us charge that much money for any event, frankly, $10,000. We don't. I mean, let's be honest. A thousand dollars maybe, you know, to a Premier's dinner. I think the most I've heard of is $400 or $500 a seat, so for a table of ten you're talking about $4,000 or $5,000. That's way below what we're talking about.

We're just saying that if it's over $15,000, have a separate cheque. It's totally reasonable. It makes all the sense in the world. If in the future that is too low an amount, we can raise the limits. If the Premier's dinners one day are costing $10,000 per plate or $15,000 per plate, we can change the rules then. They don't now, thank goodness, so we need to change this.

8:40

It's funny, too, because what this does is – if we don't change it, there is such an appearance out there right now of a lack of transparency and even that people are able to get around the rules. The fact is that even if, let's say, this arena is built – and I sure hope it is because, as I say, the worst kept secret in my constituency, which, of course, is near Calgary, is that I am an unabashed Edmonton Oilers fan. Unabashed. I was ruined as a child when I grew up in Sherwood Park during the Gretzky years, and since that time I just politically, unfortunately, have to cheer for the Oilers. It's in my blood.

Mr. Denis: Nobody is perfect.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. The Flames are my second-favourite team. Really, they are.

Mr. Denis: That I question.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah, you may question that. Are you telling me I'm intentionally misleading the House?

Mr. Denis: No.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. Now, on that note, I have a subamendment, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we'll pause while you distribute the subamendment, please. This will be known as subamendment SA1, Bill 7, Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012.

Thank you, hon. member. You may proceed.

Mr. Anderson: All right. There's no reason to debate this too much further. I think I gave enough indication of where I was going with this prior to the subamendment being introduced, so I don't think we'll belabour it. All it's going to do is change it to: "A contributor is prohibited from making a contribution on behalf of another contributor where the contribution exceeds $15,000." That's all it does. So it takes care of the lobster boil issue. It takes care of the redundancy issue. It takes care of every possible issue that we could possibly talk about in here.

Mr. Denis: Go Flames.

Mr. Anderson: It does not take care of the problem that you are a Flames fan, hon. member, and that, clearly, you don't understand that Alberta's team is and always will be the Edmonton Oilers. I expect an attack ad in my constituency to that effect, I'm sure, in 2016.

I will say that this is a very reasonable subamendment. Let's do this. Maybe the 106th time is the charm or the 107th time is the charm. This is, I think, our 107th amendment as an opposition. I think it would close the Katz loophole. We could all go home saying: "Look at what we did. We made sure that democracy is safe for another four years. All in a day's work." That's what we could accomplish.

Please support this subamendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any others who wish to speak on subamendment SA1, Bill 7? The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll be brief here. I was actually pleased to learn during the debate that I heard earlier that the concerns expressed about not having adequate time to debate the legislation have obviously gone away since the hon. House leader of the opposition complained about spending hours and hours on this. Apparently, that concern has been allayed, and I'm pleased about that.

The subamendment before us, Madam Chair, tends to actually be somewhat inconsistent with the amendment made on that side of the House before. We just heard part of those hours and hours talking about how this was completely reasonable, you know, is absolutely necessary, and should obviously go ahead. This is what we heard, and then right thereafter the hon. mover of the amendment, the House leader, stands up and lessens the actual amendment by limiting it. So when you look at it just from that alone, there seems to be a lack of understanding even by the mover of the subamendment. There's an inconsistency with his debate before he moved the subamendment and the subamendment itself. Now, this is complicated just a little bit by the fact that the section in the act already is adequate and, actually, covers more than the amendment did in the first place.

When you add all that up, Madam Chair, what that means is that I will probably accommodate the members from the other side by voting no.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: With that type of mathematical skill it's an absolute amazement that we are in a $3 billion deficit right now, isn't it? It's stunning. It's stunning, absolutely stunning.

Just to bring that member up to speed – up to speed – we had the lobster boil issue. You weren't listening about the lobster boil issue.

Mr. Saskiw: We didn't know until today.

Mr. Anderson: Exactly.

The lobster boil issue clearly stated that we would have issues where the Government House Leader could not have a lobster boil, effectively, if we weren't allowed to have somebody buy tables all at once on behalf of individuals, so to speak. This is really the Katz lobster boil amendment is what this is, the Katz lobster boil amendment. I think that it's clearly a reasonable amendment. The reason we changed it – we would prefer the other one. We think that's still reasonable. But we're just saying: "Look. If you can't close the Katz loophole because of your lobster boils, then we are going to be such willing and active participants in the democratic process, we are so reasonable that we will create the Katz lobster boil amendment."

That's what this is about, and that's why I hope we will support this.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: I'm sorry. I have to stand up and speak on this because I've been hearing so much about the lobster boil amendment. "This is the lobster boil amendment." I just want to clarify one thing. If you truly want to raise funds properly, it would be steamed lobster, not boiled.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

We are debating subamendment SA1.

If there are no more speakers to the amendment, I'll call the question.

The Deputy Chair: We are moving back to amendment A15 on Bill 7. Are there any others who wish to speak on A15?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A15 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We will now move on to the bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have the appropriate number of copies of an amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. We'll pause while we distribute those copies, A16.

Hon. member, we can proceed.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm speaking on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, who is moving that Bill 7, the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012, be amended in section 100, in the proposed section 51.02 as follows: (a) by striking out subsection (1). Currently Bill 7 limits the possible disclosure of investigation results to three years, meaning that offences that occurred more than three years before the coming into force of this act will not be released on the CEO's website to the public. This amendment will delete subsection (1) so that alleged contraventions will not have any time limit with regard to when a letter of reprimand or an administrative penalty can be applied.

The logic behind this, Madam Chair, is that this amendment will make sure that the CEO can issue administrative penalties and letters of reprimand on cases that are more than three years old, and it will ensure that these potential contraventions are investigated by the CEO. Often cases of contravention that are currently under investigation may be connected to systemic issues of excessive contributions. These potential systemic problems do not adhere to any time limit of three years, so the CEO should be able to investigate the cases that extend beyond the three-year time limit currently imposed by Bill 7.

This amendment will allow more retrospective disclosure to election finance contraventions. At the moment it's unclear how many investigations currently in progress by the CEO will fall within the three-year time limit currently proposed in Bill 7 because the CEO cannot currently disclose details surrounding investigations. This amendment is going to mean that the results of more investigations will be released to the general public, which definitely fits with what this government has been talking about, which is being more open and transparent. I think it's an important step as well to increase the confidence the public has and confidence in the office of the CEO in dealing with cases of misconduct in a more adequate way.

The other thing to note about this is there have been matters that have come up in this sitting, including questions surrounding spending by individuals associated with the former Calgary health region, that would not result in public disclosure under the current draft of Bill 7. We've discussed this specifically dealing with the Premier's sister. Under the current legislation no investigation can take place. This amendment would ensure that an investigation takes place, that the public is well aware if any illegal donations were made or transgressions and would ensure that there is accountability and transparency.

I will encourage all members of the House to vote in favour of this amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else to speak on the amendment?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A16 lost]

9:00

The Deputy Chair: We will now move back to Bill 7. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. On behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Centre I'd like to propose an amendment that I think is at the table, and I'll await its circulation.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much, hon. member. We'll just pause. While you're waiting, that will be known as amendment A17.

Hon. member, you may proceed.

Dr. Swann: Thank you. This is an amendment to Bill 7, Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012, in section 4 in the proposed section 4.3 by adding the following after subsection (2):

(2.1) The Chief Electoral Officer shall not refuse to conduct or cease an investigation under subsection (2) until the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General is notified of that decision.

This, Madam Chair, is with the intention of making certain that any interdiction of investigation is accountable to someone – we're suggesting the Solicitor General as an important figure under the Election Act – and, failing that, to make the decision to cease an investigation or refuse to conduct an investigation available to the Legislature so that there is some accountability for decisions that, frankly, could be motivated by other than the best interests of the public in Alberta. There's a sense that I think all Albertans and I think all government members, too, would want to see more accountability for decisions made that have serious ramifications for elections and for governments. The purpose of this is to make decisions that interdict investigation more public.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else who would like to speak on amendment A17?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A17 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll move back to Bill 7. Is there any member who would like to speak on Bill 7, the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have the appropriate number of copies.

The Deputy Chair: You have an amendment. All right.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, you may proceed. This will be known as amendment A18.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I will move on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona that Bill 7, the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012, be amended in section 3(b) in the proposed section 4(2.1) by striking out "may from time to time meet" and substituting "must meet annually."

This, in my opinion, is a very reasonable amendment. At the moment Bill 7 allows for the CEO to meet with representatives from registered political parties to discuss any issues concerning the process or activities under the Election Act, Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, and the Senatorial Selection Act. This amendment is ensuring that these consultations take place and that they take place annually.

Electoral reform is fundamental to the democratic process regardless of party affiliation. Consultation should take place with the political parties in a structured and regular way to ensure that the CEO receives information on the challenges and opportunities surrounding the political process straight from those who understand the processes most intimately, which is, of course, the political parties. It's not enough under the current drafting of Bill 7 to allow the CEO to consult with political parties. A CEO for any reason may choose not to consult with political parties, so this amendment is going to ensure that these consultations take place by legislating annual meetings with representatives from all political parties represented in the Legislature.

There have been issues surrounding the drafting of Bill 7 itself, and the recommendations from the Chief Electoral Officer are not the result of consultations with political parties from all sides. At the moment Bill 7 will not ensure that this bad process for legislation is avoided in the future; it'll only provide the possibility of avoiding this process. This amendment is going to ensure that the problems with drafting and consideration of this bill are avoided in the future. Annual meetings with registered political parties will make sure that the CEO proposes changes to the elections legislation that works for all parties. Representatives from political parties have a direct connection to the electoral process that the CEO does not necessarily have as an officer of the Legislature. So we're providing further avenues and processes and methods for the CEO to consult with all political parties.

Political parties understand how legislation works, how it works and doesn't work, when it's actually applied to the electoral process. This amendment is going to ensure that consultations take place and they take place with all registered political parties. It seems quite logical and straightforward to me that if we want to ensure that we're bringing forward legislation that affects all the political parties, they are involved in this consultation process. You know, it's not good enough for the CEO to have the option of consulting with political parties. I don't think it's too much to ask that this consultation happens and it happens on an annual basis. I think that would strengthen our elections accountability and also strengthen democracy in this province.

So I will urge the members of this Assembly to seriously consider this amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A18?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A18 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll move back to the main bill, Bill 7. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

9:10

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment with the requisite copies.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause for a moment, please.

Hon. member, we can proceed. This will be known as amendment A19.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. This is a very straightforward amendment. The government has increased the maximum administrative penalty available from $1,000 to $10,000. This simply ups the ante and increases it from $10,000 to $25,000. Of course, in determining the penalty, the Chief Electoral Officer has a variety of factors to look at, I believe seven different factors. If there are extenuating circumstances or if there are circumstances that warrant a large penalty, this provision would allow it.

You know, the Government House Leader talked about how most people wanting to engage in the political process are good people and honest. Of course, they are. But in those exceptions where they violate the legislation and there are egregious circumstances, this does give the Chief Electoral Officer the discretion to provide a slightly larger penalty.

In coming up with the $25,000 limit for the penalty, we looked at other pieces of legislation. We looked at things like the Lobbyists Act and a few other ones. Those acts typically, I think, have limits up to $50,000. We looked at other legislation that was put forward this year where the limits were at $100,000. We thought this was a reasonable amendment. We left it at $25,000 to be consistent with the government's intention here, and we'd hope that the government would accept it.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I just wanted to add that I share this member's view about the need for proper enforcement. That's why the administrative penalties have gone from $1,000 to $10,000 under this act. I just wanted to touch on one thing that I don't believe he addressed in his introduction to this amendment, and that's that one of the three options for the Chief Electoral Officer when he or she finds a wrongdoing is to refer it to a prosecutor. That is typically done in the most serious of offences. What happens in that case is that the prosecutor would decide independent of any of my influence whatsoever whether or not they wanted to actually proceed with the actual charge. In that case, the prosecutor could seek in Provincial Court a higher amount than the $10,000.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any others?

Seeing that there are no other members wishing to speak on amendment A19, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A19 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll move on to the regular Bill 7. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I've got an amendment to table.

The Deputy Chair: All right. We'll wait a minute until we get a copy to all of the members. It will be known as A20.

Hon. member, you can proceed now with amendment A20.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm moving this amendment on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona: that Bill 7, Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012, be amended in section 100, in the proposed section 51.01(4), by striking out clauses (b), (c), (d), (e), and (g).

Currently Bill 7 gives discretionary authority to the CEO on the following grounds when considering administrative penalties or letters of reprimand under the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act: severity, wilfulness, mitigating factors, preventative steps taken, history of noncompliance, whether a person reported noncompliance, or any other relevant factors. This amendment will remove most of the clauses that give the CEO discretionary power in order to leave only the relevant and specific factors, namely severity and whether the person reported noncompliance.

Reasons behind this. Currently the bill gives too much discretionary power to the CEO when considering contraventions. The CEO should maintain the authority to investigate and decide on the severity of the contravention and whether the person in question made a disclosure to the CEO that a rule may have been broken. Beyond these considerations, though, the CEO would have too much discretionary power to avoid laying administrative penalties, and that is our primary concern.

The issuing of administrative penalties and letters of reprimand is important in cases of contravention. The caveats that would allow individuals to avoid adequate penalties should be reduced, especially in clause (g), which would allow the CEO to cite any other factors when considering letters of reprimand or penalties. It's completely vague in its scope and its application, and it allows any reason to affect the administration of penalties under this section.

Therefore, this amendment will help increase the number of cases where the CEO administers some formal penalty by limiting the vague list of clauses that fall to the CEO's powers of consideration. This is an important amendment because administrative penalties should be laid and also made public in all cases where an individual has clearly contravened the election rules.

Again, what we're trying to do is tighten up this section of Bill 7 to ensure that we're not leaving too much to the discretionary power of the CEO. This needs to be narrowed in scope and put into legislation, so I'm calling on members of the Assembly to vote in favour of this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much, hon. member.

Are there any other members who would like to speak on amendment A20?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A20 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll move back to Bill 7, the main bill.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

9:20

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Just one further amendment on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

The Deputy Chair: We'll wait for a few minutes while we distribute the copies of the amendment to the members.

Hon. member, you can proceed with amendment A21.

Dr. Swann: This is amending Bill 7, Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012, in section 52(b) in the proposed section 152(3.2) by adding "and the Information and Privacy Commissioner" after "Chief Electoral Officer." The purpose of this amendment is so that in the event of a loss or misuse or public exposure of the electoral list, the Information and Privacy Commissioner has some familiarity with the electoral list and can respond to public concerns about if and how an electoral list finds its way into the wrong hands, Madam Chair. It's a basic protective measure to assist the confidentiality and the privacy protection of electoral lists.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who would like to speak to amendment A21 to Bill 7, Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A21 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We will move back to Bill 7. Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, seeing that you have an amendment in your hand, we'll pause for a moment while you have that distributed to all other members.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you can proceed with the amendment. It will be known as A22.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. This amendment goes to the Local Authorities Election Act. Our office was contacted by the office of one of the major cities in this province, and they questioned a potential conflict of language between two sections. This section that this amendment goes to is section 147.4(1.1)(a). The rationale for this is that if a municipal candidate is unsuccessful in an election and has a surplus amount in their account, that money should be donated to a charity or else provided to the municipality. The way subsection (1.1) currently reads is that if there is a surplus, that money can go to a registered charity or to a municipality where the candidate was declared elected in a previous election, and that excludes someone who is defeated in that previous election.

I've spoken with the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, and he referred me to section 147.5(1), which seems to have different language than that section. It says that on or before March 1 immediately following a general election, if there's a surplus, that candidate shall pay the excess amount to a municipality. Then there's a provision underneath which provides the option to provide it to a registered charity.

The concern that was expressed to me is that there is a conflict here. One section provides that it only applies to a declared elected candidate, and the other one I think is more general in nature and applies to any candidate. On the issue of interpretation it's confusing. If this went before a court, I'm not sure how they would interpret two sections that conflict. There's a potential that 147.5(1) would prevail in the sense that it's broader, although on the canons of construction you could look at 147.4 and come to the opposite conclusion.

This was expressed as a concern by one of the major cities, the city of Calgary, the mayor's office. We took that advice. We agreed that there is a conflict in the legislation, and where there's a conflict, one should just make it clear. If there's a candidate who was defeated in a general election in a municipal election, that person should not be keeping a surplus amount from their campaign. That amount should go to a charity or to the municipality itself. In these circumstances I would urge the government to accept this amendment, that has the support of the mayor of Calgary's office.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Chair. I appreciate the member bringing forward the proposed amendment. I have been in contact with the municipality of Calgary to discuss with them some of their concerns over this exact amendment. I'll clarify for the record, the same as I clarified for the individuals from Calgary who contacted our office and who we spoke to. Section 147.4(1.1), if you read all of (1.1) together, Madam Chair, as it's presented in the original act, if I may, says:

If a candidate does not file nomination papers before the next general election, the candidate shall, within 6 months after the date of the next general election, donate the amount of money disclosed under subsection (1)(d) to a registered charitable organization as defined in the Income Tax Act . . . or to the municipality where the candidate was declared elected in a previous general election.

That is the previous reading of the act.

We never changed anything from the act. The only thing we changed in 147.4(1.1) is that we added sections (a) and (b). One section talks about the surplus and reads:

donate the amount of money disclosed under subsection (1)(d) to a registered charity within the meaning of subsection 248(1) of the Income Tax Act . . . or to the municipality where the candidate was declared elected in a previous general election.

It's exactly the same as the act previously read, Madam Chair, except that we added section (b), "If there is a deficit, eliminate the deficit." That's the only thing that we changed.

Then the reference to section 147.5, Madam Chair, clarifies that if the candidate in respect of whom money is held in trust under subsection (2) does not file nomination papers before the next general election, the candidate shall, within 6 months of the date of the election, direct the municipality to donate the money and interest on that money calculated at the rate prescribed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council to a registered charitable organization as defined in the Income Tax Act (Canada).

Subsection (4) under section 147.5, Madam Chair, talks about: if no direction is given to give to a charitable organization, it is automatically paid to the municipality. The only thing we changed out of that section is striking out the words "registered charitable organization as defined in" and substituting "registered charity within the meaning of subsection 248(1) of" the Income Tax Act. It's simply a matter of clarification. I don't believe this would appear before the courts in any way, shape, or form because it has never appeared to date, and this is the existing provision. The only thing, again, that we have changed is that we add "if there is a deficit, eliminate the deficit," which is the responsible thing for a municipal councillor to do.

I suggest that there's no need for this amendment and that this should stand as read. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Anderson: Just quickly, I appreciate the explanation, but again I would say that we have the mayor of the city of Calgary, and his office has contacted this minister and our opposition party and has, I think, come forward with a very reasonable suggestion. You know, again, this is the problem with rushing legislation through so quickly. If we put these things to legislative committees, especially bills of this nature, we would be able to get these types of kinks out. The mayor of Calgary, who is a very sharp individual, and his office think that this is not clear. As I read it, I think there's a contradiction as well.

I don't think it's the end of the world or anything, but just to be clear, I think this amendment as proposed by the member, essentially proposing what the mayor of the city of Calgary wanted to do in this regard, is reasonable. I think they've thought it through. I think it would clarify things. We may as well pass it. This is what it means to consult on bills. This government thinks that if you do a consultation prior to putting a bill on the table, that's enough consultation. That's not the case. You do your pre-bill consultation – that's important – but then when you put a bill on the floor, you do have to consult with affected stakeholders.

Again, the Wildrose Party and the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party were not consulted about legislation that directly affects us – directly affects us – and what we must do, yet the PC Party was consulted. Again, the city of Calgary and the city of Edmonton may have been preconsulted in preconsultations before this bill came to the floor on certain things like how long terms should be for candidates and so forth once elected and all that, but they have not been consulted since the bill has come to the floor. We have not had time to go through this adequately.

When a reasonable suggestion comes forward from a city – obviously, it's our largest city, and it's represented by a mayor who is sharp on things like this – why don't we just do this to show that we want to clarify, that we're listening? What harm could possibly come out of it? Let's support the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Madam Chair. There's some misinformation that needs to be explained. I sat down with the opposition critic from each of the parties and went through what's essentially a three-column document over the proposed changes that were being brought forward. I did the same thing with the colleagues on this side of the House, but they were not privy to the exact legislation because that would contravene the privilege of this House. So everyone in this House, including the members of this side, saw this when it was tabled in the Legislature.

Now, I've explained before, in my opening speech, Madam Chair, that I've been a minister for a short amount of time, and we had a short amount of window to do consultations. We did it over a period of just over a month, public consultations and consultations with municipalities, and only picked out very simple changes that they could all agree to because we had to pass legislation this fall so that municipalities had proper time to prepare for next fall. There was not time to do an all-party committee review or to run through all of the municipalities to see if they approved of everything. In our consultations municipalities and the public did approve of them.

I'll point out one more time, Madam Chair, that none of the amendment that they're proposing is any change that we made. All we added was a line that said, "If there is a deficit, eliminate [it]," and everyone from the public and municipalities supported that.

When we have more time, after the next municipal election, when we've got four years, hopefully, until the next municipal election, we will do a thorough and extensive consultation with municipalities and members of the public on what needs to be done, Madam Chair. I was not going to let some very key issues that municipalities and members of the public wanted fixed in seven simple amendments to this piece of legislation sit over and not take effect for the next municipal election. To the hon. member: that's why we did it.

I would ask everyone to not support this amendment and to support the original piece of legislation. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to clarify something that the hon. minister of municipalities just spoke to, where he not even insinuated but stated that all of the parties were consulted. That needs to be clarified. The parties on this side of the House were not consulted. They were given briefing notes, which is very different from being a part of the consultation process. Part of the issue that this side of the House has been putting forward via amendments to try to improve this as currently written awful piece of legislation is that it, first and foremost, was only authored with the consultation of one political party, yet it affects all political parties in this province, including political parties that aren't currently represented in this House.

So in the name of democracy I cannot accept the statement that all political parties were consulted. If the purpose of this act is truly to amend and improve our Election Act and two other acts, then all parties need to be consulted to have an opportunity to give input into authoring the bill.

I'm sure that the Justice minister will jump up in a short moment and tell me that all opposition parties had an opportunity to amend this bill. However, if we look at the track record of how many amendments have been passed by this government, we'll see clearly that these amendments put forward by this side of the House aren't taken seriously into consideration even if they are intended to improve a bill and to improve, you know, the state of elections and democracy in this province.

You know, what also needs to be stated is that parties on this side of the House only get to see the bill once it's drafted and then respond and work feverishly to come up with amendments to try to improve a bill that was already written. Had the PCs been interested in truly getting the opinion and feedback and collaborating on this bill, they would have done so long before this physical document was written.

It is for those reasons that I have an issue with what the hon. minister for municipalities just said. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Madam Chair, it's unfortunate the hon. member doesn't understand the legislative process and doesn't realize that it's against parliamentary privilege to show the bill to anybody until it's tabled in this House for all members to see. The consultations that were done for the amendments to this legislation were not done with just the members here. In fact, they weren't done with the members here at all. It was a public, online consultation and a consultation with municipalities because it is their legislation. When they came forward with agreed-on amendments, changes that they wanted to see, we worked on drafting it. We tabled it in this House.

The municipalities and the members of the public can't come into this House and make amendments. It is a privilege to be in this House and make drafts after. If the hon. member doesn't understand the parliamentary process and that it is against parliamentary privilege to show anyone the documents before, then I guess he needs some education.

Mr. Anderson: Well, it would appear that the only individual that doesn't understand the parliamentary process is this hon. minister because the hon. minister just stood up and said that this preconsultation had been done. It's almost like he's speaking about this bill as if the only thing in it is involving municipalities and involving changes to the municipalities. Well, then say that.

What we're talking about is the entire Bill 7, and we were not in any way consulted on it. The party was not consulted on it. The New Democrats, Liberals, and Wildrose were not consulted on this at all, not on your section, which I agree is less applicable to us, and certainly not on any section regarding political parties, which we've been discussing for most of the night. That's what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview was stating, and he understands the process perfectly well, especially for someone who is new to this House. I think he explained it very well.

The fact of the matter is that this is the problem with legislative sausage-making that has become the norm of this House. We stick everything into the blinking blender, and we pump it out here in, like, two seconds, and then instead of referring it to a legislative committee to actually do the work and actually make sure that we're not missing anything, what do we do? We sit here, and in two days we try to churn out 20 amendments to this legislation without the opportunity to bring in experts or even to give Legislative Counsel for that matter a ton of time to go over the amendments. We're just kind of on the fly.

It's very clear that this is not the way to make legislation. Because of that, you have a member of the public, particularly the mayor of Calgary, who has come back and said: "You know what? Whatever was in the preconsultation is just fine, but the fact is that what was discussed in the preconsultation, there's something in here that we don't understand in this bill." That's what the mayor of Calgary is saying: something in here doesn't make sense to us. It's not clear enough.

Instead of just doing what this whole purpose of Committee of the Whole is, bringing a simple amendment forward that would clear this all up, we're sitting here arguing about it, and the hon. member is making like we're trying to make this massive change, like this was the biggest thing on earth that was being consulted during his consultation process. This is simply the mayor of Calgary saying that we have a simple amendment that will clarify this legislation for all municipalities but clearly for the city of Calgary. It won't interfere in anything that the minister has done in his portion of the act. It won't change anything substantially that he was trying to do, at all. It just clarifies.

That's the whole point of the exercise of Committee of the Whole in a lot of instances: to do things that maybe were missed or maybe should be clarified. Again, we're sitting here. This is now the 108th – is this the 108th? Are we at 110?

An Hon. Member: No. Way past.

Mr. Anderson: We're into the 100-and-teens amendment.

We've had two of them accepted, over 110 rejected, and for what? I don't understand it. It is a simple change to the legislation. The municipal minister: I understand he's defensive about the legislation. It's an important piece of legislation to him. Good on him for doing the preconsultation. Wish he would have consulted with the opposition parties as well, but granted his section isn't as applicable to provincial political parties as the Solicitor General's sections were. That said, this is a simple amendment, so let's just pass the amendment, move on, listen to some of our elected officials at the municipal levels, specifically Mayor Nenshi, and we can all be happy and say that we did something constructive tonight.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion on amendment A22 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We will move to Bill 7. Are there any members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have a last amendment to be tabled.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. We'll pause for a few moments while we distribute those amendments to our members.

Hon. member, you may proceed.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm moving on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona that Bill 7, the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012, be amended in section 3, in the proposed section 4(3), by striking out clause (f). Under section 4 Bill 7 will give new authority to the Chief Electoral Officer to adapt the provisions of the Election Act. This amendment will strike out this clause, thereby taking the authority away from the CEO to adapt the provisions of the Election Act.

The reasons behind this: I mean, there are no issues other than the one specifically described in the proposed section 4, which generally pertains to election officers, enumeration, and polling stations, that should necessitate the sweeping powers cited under clause (f). Bill 7 under section 4(5) will ensure that any recommended changes will be in the future included in reports to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices. This is the proper channel for changes or adaptations to provisions of the Election Act.

It's the duty of the CEO to carry out the provisions as legislated in the current Election Act. If changes need to be made to the law itself, then there's a process for doing this: making recommendations to the standing committee, enumeration reports, general election reports, or annual reports. The standing committee will review the CEO's recommended changes to the Election Act, and then the Legislative Assembly can consider, debate, and vote on any changes that are put forward.

This clause gives too much discretionary power to the CEO without any clear guidelines for the communication of the adaptations that may be made by the Chief Electoral Officer. In other words, this clause as currently written may result in adaptations that are not clearly communicated to the Legislative Assembly. The CEO should only adapt the provisions of this act to the circumstances as they are identified by the CEO, the standing committee, and the Legislative Assembly. So this gives more direction to the CEO and, again, provides a more narrow scope as opposed to allowing decisions to be made based purely on his subjective decision.

I would ask that all members in this Chamber support this amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A23?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A23 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll move on to Bill 7. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: This is the last amendment from the Wildrose. This is tough, giving this one away.

The Deputy Chair: Once again we'll wait a few minutes until all members have a copy of the amendment. This amendment will be known as A24.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills to proceed.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. In this Legislature we've seen a government that's voted down amendments to close the so-called Katz loophole, voted down an amendment to ban corporate donations. They most recently voted down an amendment that was put forward by the mayor of Calgary, a reasonable amendment. They voted it down.

We've decided that for the very last amendment we would put the most reasonable amendment forward and see what would happen. This amendment is in respect of 51.02(2), which is in regard to the going back three years, the retrospective reporting of contraventions of the Election Act. Why this is reasonable, Madam Chair, is that the Justice minister in the press conference said that the Chief Electoral Officer must report any contravention that was made in the past three years. Must report. In fact, a reporter, after hearing that, specifically asked him the question: must they report them? He said: yes, they must.

Of course, we subsequently showed the reporter that the wording says "may," that it's permissive. So I think that hon. Justice minister misspoke that day. Again, this is the public disclosure of someone who has been convicted by the Chief Electoral Officer of making an illegal donation. Someone has been found guilty – this is not an allegation – of making an illegal donation, yet under the current act as it reads, it's discretionary that the Chief Electoral Officer disclose that. I don't think in any western democracy would that ever happen, where an illegal donation has been made – it's been found to be illegal; a penalty has been made – yet that's kept secret. That's what this legislation does.

One has to question whether this is an honest mistake, or is this something where there's some type of intention to not disclose these illegal donations? This seems to be a very, very easy amendment to make. This amendment has already been watered down. It's saying that it's going to go back three years, but of course that's three years from the coming into force of this legislation, which could be two or three years in the future and hide a whole bunch of illegal donations, which we all know were made to the PC Party.

Mr. Denis: Point of order.

Point of Order

Allegations against Members

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we have a point of order.

Mr. Denis: Madam Chair, under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j) that is an allegation that is not founded in fact. We don't know where the illegal donations went to, what parties they went to. I just would ask the member to withdraw that, please.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Well, I'm not quite understanding how he can say an allegation when documented evidence has been tabled in this House showing very clearly that that donation was made and was reimbursed. It's the documents from Alberta Health. I mean, it's been tabled. It's on the record. So black is white? The sky is green? Black is white, still?

10:00

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Denis: I think he was referring to illegal donations, and there are the 37 illegal donations. We do not know which party they went to, and it is erroneous to indicate that it is particular to the governing party.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.
The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. Of course, we subsequently tabled a press release, a document that showed the president of the PC Party indicating that there were a bunch of constituency associations under investigation. We've also provided a tabling which demonstrates that monies went to the PC Party. This is not up for debate. It's a fact.

Mr. Anderson: Just to clarify, the press release in question, that he's talking about, is not a Wildrose press release. It's a press release from your party president saying that the monies had been returned. I mean, it's right on the record, Justice minister.

Mr. Denis: No. It didn't indicate that all of the outcomes were in. That's what's erroneous, Madam Chair.

Mr. Saskiw: To clarify, if you will, I'll say that substantially all of the cases of illegal donations went to the PC Party, not every single one of them, if that helps.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member, for making that change to your comments. Would you please proceed.

Debate Continued

Mr. Saskiw: Speaking to this amendment, we should probably go through the number of illegal donations that went to the PC Party. We've seen municipalities where, in some cases, you know, there's a push to attend PC fundraisers. We saw motions that were in municipal towns and counties where they attended PC fundraising events and were subsequently reimbursed. We saw a donation from Calgary Lab Services, which is a wholly owned subsidiary of Alberta Health Services, an illegal donation to the PC Party. There's evidence that that illegal donation was subsequently returned after it was found by the Official Opposition and forwarded to the Chief Electoral Officer. We found instances where a former executive of the Calgary health region attended PC fundraising events and was subsequently reimbursed by the Calgary health region, which, of course, is a direct violation of the elections financing act.

There are numerous, numerous occasions where illegal donations have flowed to the PC Party. I'm glad the Justice minister is allowing us to bring up this topic. What this amendment would do is to make it public so that when someone has been found to have made an illegal donation, this would require the Chief Electoral Officer to publicly disclose it. I mean, if the government votes against this, then it's clearly wanting to hide this. Why would you possibly vote against this? Why? If you don't want to hide the actual finding of an illegal donation, why would you not require the Chief Electoral Officer to make it public? Why would it be discretionary?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak to amendment A24? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Chair. This is almost a repeat of the debate that we had on Monday night, in which I pointed out to the hon. member that the section that he is trying to amend is the time limit section that says that the disclosure may be made. That is a section which is intended to give effect to the fact that normally an act only applies going forward, but it gives retrospective effect to it.

The section that he's really interested in is on page 42 of the bill, and that's subsection (3) of 5.2, which is part of section 62 of this bill, which says:

- (3) Findings and decisions and any additional information that the Chief Electoral Officer considers to be appropriate shall be published on the . . . website . . .
  - (a) subject to 51.02(2), if a penalty is imposed or a letter of reprimand is issued under section 51 or 51.01.

It's very clear that if there is a penalty put in place, the Chief Electoral Officer shall publish the information.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.
The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. The hon. Government House Leader is referring to page 42 of Bill 7, and he's specifically referring to section 5.2(3), and it states that the Chief Electoral Officer . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I'm reading amendment A24, and I don't see (3) on there. I see 51.02(2).

Mr. Saskiw: That's correct. If you look at 5.2(3), it refers to 51.02(2).

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Thank you.

Mr. Saskiw: The Government House Leader is seemingly indicating that if the Chief Electoral Officer considers it to be appropriate, it shall be published on his website subject to section 51.02(2), which says that it's discretionary for the Chief Electoral Officer to disclose contraventions that go three years back. I don't understand what kind of possible interpretation you're taking.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Hancock: It's relatively simple to explain, Madam Chair. Section 51.02(2) makes it very clear that a disclosure "may be made with respect to an alleged contravention . . . but may not be made with respect to an alleged contravention that occurred more than 3 years before.” So the “subject to section 51.02(2)” in 3(a) on page 42 is clearly a reference to the three years before, not to the “may be made.”

It would not read in any logical way if you were to say that he must publish findings and decisions subject to: he may do it. That doesn’t make sense. But what does make sense is for you to read it and say that he must publish findings and decisions subject to 51.02 and that he can’t do it more than three years prior.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.
The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Government House Leader, that’s not what it says.

Mr. Hancock: That’s exactly what it says.

Mr. Anderson: It’s not what it says. It clearly says that if it’s over three years, if you’re looking back over three years, then it’s “may.” For sure. But if it’s from zero to three years back, it’s a “may.” That’s what it says in the document. How can anyone have any – okay. Are you putting on the record, just so that we know and we can put this to bed, that in this bill the meaning of the section cited is that if there is wrongdoing that is found by the Chief Electoral Officer for something that was done between the date that this act was passed and three years prior, that must be disclosed by the Chief Electoral Officer? Is that what you’re saying? Is that correct? Please put that on the record, and then we’ll sit down, shut up, and vote on this.

Mr. Hancock: I know exactly what it says.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. Even though, you know, I don’t see how you could interpret it that way, that’s what the Government House Leader says it means, so it’s in the Hansard. May all judges and Chief Electoral Officers in the future listen to what the Government House Leader said despite whatever’s in here: must publish on the website and must publish any wrongdoings. Thank you for that clarification. Hopefully, we can vote.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Just to close the amendment. Of course, as the hon. Government House Leader knows, one can only look to Hansard for the intention of the government if there’s any ambiguity. Unfortunately, there’s a very simple principle of statutory interpretation that “may” means permissive and “must” means mandatory. According to the Government House Leader, in this instance may means must. Hopefully, if there is some type of ambiguity, the people in the future can look back at this Hansard and say: here was the intention of the government through the Government House Leader that may means must in this instance and that the Chief Electoral Officer will actually publicly disclose all illegal donations that were found three years back from the coming into force of this act.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would just like to request that the hon. Government House Leader and the government then vote in favour of this amendment. I mean, if they are saying that it already says “must,” then let’s just put this amendment through, and this party will have the confidence of the whole House and many Albertans that they’re accepting an amendment where we’re ensuring that disclosure is made and that the government can finally live up to their claim of being transparent and open and accountable.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A24?

[Motion on amendment A24 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We’ll move back to the main body of Bill 7. Are there any members who wish to speak on Bill 7?

Mr. Anderson: Real quickly because I know we’re trying to get out of here soon. I just want to say that we do appreciate the robust discussion, but we want to make it very clear on our side of the House that what the government has done on several of these amendments in our view is totally unacceptable. These amendments were very well considered. They were good, solid amendments that would have contributed to this bill. This now makes almost 120 amendments that this government has voted down in this session on various pieces of legislation, including 24 here tonight. I don’t know how this is making things more transparent or accountable. For a lot of these amendments the government agreed with the principles on them, yet here we sit, and not one of them was passed.

I just think it’s so disappointing. We had high hopes that we would have a more open and transparent democracy, where opposition parties would be respected in the process. We do represent 56 per cent of the voting public. We all represent Albertans, but 56 per cent voted for our parties on this side of the House, and that’s just completely disregarded by this government. There was no attitude, intention whatsoever to work with us. We gave all our amendments in advance. Nothing. I think that it’s a real sad reflection on how they view democracy and how they view opposition in this province, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would just like it noted as well that there is one side of this House that is interested in working with all parties and trying to bring forward the best possible legislation for all Albertans. Clearly, as has been stated by the hon. Member for Airdrie, over 120 amendments have been proposed by the three different opposition parties – we're talking overall – and it's a very sad fact how many of those amendments have actually been accepted.

The fact of the matter is, you know, we've made a commitment – actually, I believe all parties of this House have made commitments of working together in order to bring forward the best possible legislation for Albertans. It's clear that the opposition parties are committed to bringing forward amendments, many of them quite reasonable, in order to strengthen a bill, again doing what's best for our constituents and for Albertans. It's quite frustrating. I think Albertans will see that one side of this House is dedicated to providing lip service to working with all Members of the Legislative Assembly, yet when the rubber hits the road, that's a different story.

It's unfortunate. Legislation could have been improved, many of the bills over the course of this sitting. Unfortunately, there is only one view that is writing these bills.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Madam Chair. I wish to thank the opposition parties for putting forth and reading into the record their views as we close the debate on this bill. I would just like to point out that the opposition parties criticized us throughout this session for hastily crafting this bill and not widely enough consulting on it, yet we're to take that over the last few days as they've tabled 120 amendments, that somehow they were all brilliantly crafted and widely consulted on, which is obviously not the case.

While you could, in fact, as the opposition parties chose to interpret these last few days, have a government not listening to the opposition parties, you could equally interpret that you have an opposition party come to the Chamber intent on not agreeing to anything that the government did despite how widely consulted the bill was.

The knife cuts both ways, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. I have to have a drink of water after that last speech. Hold on.

The fact is that this opposition over on this side of the House has voted for six bills that the government has put forth, 6 out of 10 bills. In fact, we heaped praise on the government for many of those bills. Bill 1, the Premier's bill, for example: we completely agreed with it, thought it was a great bill. And you could go on down the list.

There are four bills we took issue with. On all of those bills we agreed with the intention of the bill, the spirit of the bill.

Everything about the bill we liked the spirit of. The problem was that what was in the bill did not do what it said it was going to do. In fact, it looked like, in some cases, a very cynical attempt to say that they were doing something about an issue – lack of democracy, lack of whistle-blower legislation, lack of property rights, a single regulator, and so forth – yet we think that it didn't accomplish what the intention was.

Again, over 120 amendments, two accepted. A lot of these amendments were very reasoned, hon. member. Again, we've agreed with so much that the government has done in this House with regard to the bills they've brought forward, and there were just a few things that we thought could be improved. There was no reaching out. We did the unprecedented, frankly, step of giving all of our amendments in advance – in some cases, weeks in advance or a week in advance – to the other side so that they could study them, discuss them. There was no attempt. There was no attempt to discuss it or negotiate different wording. Nothing.

If we're ever going to improve the decorum in this House, I think it has to start with respect. [interjections] My point exactly, Madam Chair. It has to start with respect for the views of other opposition parties. You know, they can talk about decorum all they want. There are 61 over there; there are 17 over here. Why on earth are they so afraid of 17 members? It shouldn't be this hard to work with us. We're completely open to it. Our door is always open. We're always asking to be included, so just include it. You might find that if you conducted yourselves that way, guess what? Like Peter Lougheed, you would probably see your majority grow instead of shrinking, which it's doing slowly but surely – not so slowly, actually – until you don't have one anymore. That's the road that you're on because you're legislating, frankly, in my view, in a way that's completely dismissive of other parties and other viewpoints.

I just hope that next session, when we come back – the Premier has talked about moving things to policy committees. I think that's a great idea, Premier. She should do it. [interjection] That's right. We wouldn't have so many amendments that we have to do in Committee of the Whole, Madam Chair, if we would take these bills after spring session, stick them into committee, do the work of the committees in there – as the Premier has said, that's what the point of these committees is, instead of what they're doing now – and move it forward into the fall so that we come back with a bill out of committee that is something that all Albertans can support.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm very pleased to speak at this end of discussion and debate on this important bill. I guess the most shocking thing for me is that the two big issues that Albertans raised with me are the amount of donations still allowed to political parties, which is out of the realm of reasonable in the rest of Canada, and the unwillingness to even consider the possibility that corporate and union donations have undue influence on public policy. These are the two big issues that Albertans have said that they do not accept, that they find very distasteful and create a lot of cynicism among our people. Young people and older people are saying that it's time for change. Those are the big issues that I thought we were going to have some chance to see change on.

Instead, it's other issues that also needed to be cleaned up in the elections accountability, but these two big ones were entirely ignored in spite of very good recommendations that would make all of us look better and restore some sense of balance and accountability and reasonableness in this Legislature. It was a real missed opportunity. I'm afraid it was pride more than anything that stopped this government from being willing to accept any kind of substantive changes to this bill.

Very disappointing, Madam Chair, and I guess we'll all wear it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Fraser: Madam Chair, for the record I'm not afraid of anybody. When we speak to these amendments, the members on this side of the House have gone to the ministers and asked the questions about the amendments that the other members have brought forward. In fact, I dare the other side to say that I haven't contacted them on various issues in co-operation, how we could work together to work for Albertans instead of serving political ends.

I've done that, and I'll continue to do that. So there you go.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on the bill? The Member for Rimbe- Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to close out this debate also. I want to say a couple of things. One, any allegation that we here in the opposition have not come forward in good faith to try to work with this government I would say is not substantiated by the evidence of this Assembly in this sitting. I will point out to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs that I actually rose to defend against one of the motions from one of the opposition parties and articulate the very argument that he was trying to make in support of that. We did vote on various bills in support of these government bills. We thought some were brought forward in good faith, and we just thought we wanted to try to strengthen those.

I want to say something that I think is really important. There has been some animosity expressed at different times, but I will say this: when we submit an amendment and a member opposite, before that amendment is even passed out, raises it up and tears it up, I would argue that that is bad faith, that's representative of bad faith. That's unparliamentary in my view, and it's unacceptable.

Coming back in the spring, I would take the dare to the hon. members that we raise the bar on both sides of the House. I think we can do that.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Well, I'm finally going to get up and have my say. I don't get up and speak that often here, but I have been absolutely upset listening to the innuendoes from the people across the floor, especially when I take them as a personal attack. I consider myself a very honest politician. I worked hard to get where I am. I won in 2008 by 78 per cent, and somebody suggested that I was supported by 2 per cent. I won the second election in 2012 by running an honest campaign, not a negative campaign but an honest campaign. It bothers me when the other side says: Albertans, Albertans . . .

The Deputy Chair: Excuse me, hon. member. I hate to interrupt, but we are speaking on the body of Bill 7.

Mrs. Leskiw: Okay. On the bill.

What I'm trying to say is that Albertans have spoken to a lot of us, not just to the opposition. I haven't had one Albertan from my area come talk to me about half the stuff you said that Albertans spoke to you about. I mean, are Albertans only living in the opposition ridings? I have lots of Albertans in my riding that speak to me all the time. My office is open to everybody, regardless of which . . . [interjections] I even speak to people in your constituency, hon. member.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, please conclude on the bill.

Mrs. Leskiw: I will. I figured everybody else has spoken out of turn, and it's my time to speak out of turn.

I will finally sit down, but I want to say: don't brand everybody by the same brush. Just because we don't agree with you, it doesn't mean we're right and you're wrong or the other way around. Please keep that in mind. I think I do a real good job representing my people, and I believe that everybody in here does represent their people.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members who wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Little Bow. We are speaking on Bill 7, the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012.

Mr. Denis: Where's your binder?

Mr. Donovan: Right here. Thank you to the Solicitor General. I like the prompting.

I agree. I mean, maybe Bill 7 wasn't exactly what this side wanted. We tried putting some amendments forward on it that obviously didn't do well. I get that. I think the process is that we've tried, whether people like it or not. I think everybody on both sides has tried. I'd say with a little sarcasm that there could be a touch of animosity in the room every once in a while. I sense it from both sides. I think we're all here for the right reasons. I think this bill, which I'm just about to go to in the conversation on the amendments that we've been talking about, Madam Chair – and I thank you for that.

10:30

You know, we've all been here a long time. I think we had some good amendments to it, in all honesty. We put in a lot of time. It's not that the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills had nothing better to do than to come up with however many amendments for this. I think they're all here for the right reasons. We're not here just to pick – or I'm certainly not – through them for what we don't like, whether it be "may" or "maybe not" or all the rest. I'd hope at some point we could try to resolve some of these issues on how it goes. I know it's not going to be a perfect little program, but I think the amendments that we tried to propose here in Bill 7 did touch the people that we do represent in our constituencies.

I get that everybody is on both sides and that there are opposite sides and different ridings, and people call you, and people call me, and we could sit and do the whole thing on it. The point is that we're all here to pass bills, to make better legislation for this province so that we can move forward. It's a give-and-take. Obviously, we might have lost the take part on this side because we tried to give some; it wasn't received. That's fine. We'll move forward. We're big kids. We can pick up our stuff and figure it out for next time.

In the process going forward, I'd hope that we could do something a little better in the spring on the communication side of these and, like the Premier talked about, put it to committee. That way, we don't have to sit here all night and count the lights inside the dome like some of us like to do and stuff like that, which I've seen on both sides of the floor. You know, we do have things to do. We all have families to go home to. We have business to attend to. I get that everybody gets a little riled up at these things. But I think to put these things to a committee so we don't have 25 or 30 amendments to every bill that comes through isn't a bad idea.

I'll just leave it at that. I'm hoping that in the spring, after a nice Christmas break, everybody will be a little more festive then.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, I will call the question. Are you ready for the question on Bill 7, Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd move that the committee rise and report Bill 7.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Will the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley please read the report.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 7. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Do the members concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? It's carried.

Government Motions

Review of Standing Orders

19. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing may meet at the call of the committee chair to review the standing orders and report any proposed or recommended changes to the Assembly.

Mr. Hancock: A very straightforward motion, Madam Speaker. I'm advised by the table officers that because the standing orders do not provide for a mandate for the committee, up to this point it could only meet if a matter was referred to it by the House. Now, that makes sense when we're talking about privileges and elections, of course, but from time to time we do want to have the committee be able to meet to review the standing orders of the House.

10:40

The Speaker has indicated several times through the fall session that there are a number of things that he would ask House leaders to converse upon, and that's certainly what we've done over the last 15 years, have House leaders talk about Standing Orders. But it's quite appropriate if House leaders can't agree, or even if they can agree, to take it outside the hands of House leaders and have the committee meet and do it. Rather than requiring a formal motion every time we want the committee to meet, I think it's appropriate to allow the committee to meet at the call of the chair.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Anderson: Well, I am just absolutely trembling with excitement knowing that the no-meet committee, the famous no-meet committee, is going to have its day. It is going to have its day in the sun, and this should be an exciting time for us all. [interjections] Sorry? It has to be unanimous? It should be unanimous; that's right.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Airdrie has the floor.

Mr. Anderson: Anyway, I think that we're all excited about that. I think that, obviously, we've got to make up for all that pay in the past, so this will be a good start for that.

I would just hope that the members of that committee take this very seriously because the Standing Orders in our House, which is, of course, the green book, that book that we all have right here, which is what you'll be dealing with – there's actually a lot in here that addresses how we debate things in the House, how we deal with legislation in the House, when we sit, how often we sit.

I think that our province right now does not have a good reputation at all when it comes to the processes that we follow in this House with regard to passing legislation, debating legislation, reviewing legislation in committees, and even some of the issues in question period are very unclear. I think that it's really important that whoever is on that committee – I'm not on that committee, unfortunately, but I probably will attend some of the meetings because it's just such riveting stuff and I want to make sure it's a fair process.

I think that for the government members in particular, because they hold the majority, Madam Speaker, it is absolutely imperative that they use their discretion wisely and their power wisely, that they don't turn this into an activity to further curb debate in what is already, frankly, one of the least democratic Chambers in Canada. I think we see that by the number of days that we sit being among the fewest, certainly the fewest among the major provinces. We see that with the fact that in our question periods the opposition is not given as many questions as in other Chambers and so forth around this country. We see it with the fact that we have two days, for example – and our orders allow for this – to debate Bill 4 and Bill 7 in this Chamber, two very substantive pieces of legislation, huge pieces of legislation. Two days? I mean, that is brutal. That's what I'm saying.

When the orders are debated in that committee, Madam Speaker, it's just important that you please do not abuse the power that you have. Please make sure that it's democratic. Let's try to improve opposition party involvement, not curb it further. I just hope that the Premier, the Government House Leader, and all members of the government and on this side of the House will take that into consideration. Let's not use this as a gimmick to pound the opposition parties into submission further than we are already pounded.

With that, I'll take my seat.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on Government Motion 19?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[Government Motion 19 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:45 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, December 5, 2012

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. May the spirit of Christmas and the festive season permeate our hearts, comfort our minds, and make us ever mindful of the expectations entrusted to us by the citizens we are so privileged to serve. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly His Excellency Werner Wnendt, ambassador of the Federal Republic of Germany. The ambassador is accompanied by Mr. Reuscher, honorary consul of the Federal Republic of Germany at Edmonton. I had the pleasure of hosting the ambassador at a luncheon earlier today, and I'm confident that this visit represents a growing relationship between Alberta and Germany as we identify new opportunities for moving forward. The ambassador and honorary consul are seated in your gallery. I would ask that our guests now rise, and I would like to invite all of the members in the House to send our best wishes along with the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Canada's heroes, members from the Jasper Place Legion in Edmonton-Meadowlark, good honest men and women who put themselves into harm's way without a second thought so that we may enjoy our freedoms today. In your gallery are Doreen Morgan, president; Basil McKay, past president; Ron Evans, chairman; Marian Youngs; Bill Cormier; Shirley Lauman; Pat Cerir; Sharon Gullberg, past first vice-president; Dennis Gullberg; and Ken Young, a veteran of the Second World War.

I met these great folks on Remembrance Day, and every Remembrance Day is so that we may remember their fallen comrades. I would like all Albertans to remember that we live in the best province in the best country in the world because of the sacrifices of them and their comrades. [applause] It's so important for us to remember to keep our end of the sacred covenant to care for them and their families each and every day, for all members of the armed forces, past, present, and future. May God bless our superheroes, Mr. Speaker. I'd like all members of the Assembly to rise and give them a warm welcome to the Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. For several years the Legislative Assembly has supported the regional Historica Fair held every spring, providing an opportunity for students from schools in the surrounding area to present projects celebrating Canada's heritage. In 2007 the Legislative Assembly Office initiated an award to recognize Historica Fair participants who demonstrate outstanding achievement in celebrating an aspect of Canadian parliamentary democracy, governance, or political history with a specific focus on Alberta.

It's now my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly this year's award winner. Nicholas Pacholok was a grade 6 student at Vital Grandin Catholic elementary school in St. Albert last spring when he created an excellent presentation on democracy from Athens to Canada, a very interesting topic indeed. Mr. Speaker, Nicholas is joined today by his parents, Barbara and Ken, all of whom are seated in your gallery. I would now ask that all members join me in celebrating as they stand and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 63 grade 6 students from l'école Meridian Heights school in my outstanding riding of Stony Plain. These bright and energetic young people are here for a tour of the Legislature and to see how our democracy works. They are escorted today by teachers Mr. Art Muz, Mr. Marcel Turcotte, Mrs. Natacha Schubert; parent helper Donna Crowe; student teacher Chelsea Strachan; and their bus driver, Mrs. Sally Tuininga. Also included in this group is our Sergeant-at-Arms' niece, Dominique Hodgson. I know they were thrilled to have a picture taken with you earlier today, Mr. Speaker, and I was able to have a picture taken with them myself this afternoon. The motto of l'école Meridian Heights school is Be the Best You Can Be. These young people certainly exemplify that idea. I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise to introduce to you and through you two classes who are here from the stunningly beautiful historic Academy at King Edward, which resides in the centre of my constituency. I have here 23 visitors from grade 9, who are accompanied by their teachers and assistants: Ms Ashley Mourgelas, Mr. Chris Giasson, and Mrs. Debbie Sugiyama. Then there are also 34 visitors from the grade 6 class at Academy at King Edward, who are accompanied by their teachers: Peter Beirsto, Mona Luth, Maureen Munsterman, and Colleen Cooper. I can say that I had the wonderful privilege to visit with the grade 6 class at the Academy at King Edward through reading week, and we had some wonderful conversations about public health care in Alberta. I would like to ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you today to all members of this Assembly a group of several constituents who are here for a variety of reasons. I'd like to introduce them to you, then ask them to stand at the end. First is Dee Ann Benard. She is the executive director of the Alberta Rural Development Network, an industry-leading network of 21 public postsecondary institutions working with rural communities to enhance rural research and learning. I had the opportunity to do a member's statement on one of their projects earlier this week.

Also, Milt Miller and Margo Mohr are here from Providence Grain Solutions, an industry leader in agricultural development.

Milt, who is the president and CEO, brings with him new-found knowledge of international agricultural practices from a recent trade mission to China with the government of Alberta. With him is his executive assistant, Margo. As many of us know, our EAs are essential to our success.

Finally, we have a great family here from Fort Saskatchewan, who attended a recent open house of mine to show their support and appreciation of the government's newly passed Education Act and asked if they could attend the session.

I would ask them to rise as I call their names and receive the traditional warm greeting of this Assembly: Ms Dee Ann Benard, Milt Miller, Margo Mohr, Paul Nawrocki, Dominika Nawrocki, and Ian Novakowski.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House Adele Andriashek. She's here today representing the Tomorrow Project, which is a Canada-wide longitudinal study that's helping scientists discover the causes of cancer and other debilitating diseases. The project is seeking the participation of 50,000 Albertans, and they still need to sign up 20,000 people to accomplish this goal by March. To that end, they've distributed blue and green wristbands to all of the members. I would encourage all of the members and their staff to join the project and to encourage their constituents to sign up for the project, too, through various advertisements. Adele is seated in the members' gallery this afternoon. I'd ask her to rise and please accept the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you two visionary Albertans from my diverse constituency of Drumheller-Stettler. They are Charlene Preston and Patrick Turnbull. Charlene is my constituency assistant in Hanna, and Patrick is my constituency assistant in Drumheller. I'd like them both to receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a constituent, community volunteer, and a friend, namely Mr. Dave McNeill. Dave is the incoming president of the Association of Alberta Registry Agents as well as the president of the Hastings Lake community league, a very active community group in my constituency. Dave is seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask that he now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Calgary-Hawthood.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly two courageous seniors who head up the Alberta association of Seniors Helping Seniors. They're here to remind this government of the unfulfilled promise of Premier Klein to restore seniors' benefits cut in the '90s. Could Mr. Mike Marlowe and John Munnikhuis please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Helen Nolan. I first met Helen in 1998, when I was a beat constable along 124th Street. She was the executive director for the 124th Street and area business revitalization zone, a position she held for 13 years. Passionate for small business, community, and safety, she's also an accomplished singer of notable demand. After retiring, she accepted a contract with the city of Edmonton to form a BRZ in the area of 91st Street and 82nd Avenue, called the French Quarter, which extends from Mill Creek to Bonnie Doon. [some applause] The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is certainly very appreciative of this contract.

This BRZ was passed by city council on November 17. I'll ask Helen to rise and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Please proceed with your second introduction, Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, my second introduction is another special guest, Alex Zeidler, a student from L.Y. Cairns high school. Alex is currently on a work placement in my office and those of my caucus colleagues, and he resides in the constituency of Edmonton-Riverview. If I could ask Alex to rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Legislature His Worship Martin Shields, the mayor of Brooks. Mr. Shields is definitely no stranger to this Legislature. As an active public servant he sits on many boards and associations throughout this province. Just to name a few he currently sits on: the Alberta libraries board, the Bow River Basin Council, he is vice-chair for the Shortgrass regional libraries board, the board of directors for our federal Conservative constituency association, director for cities under 500,000 on the AUMA. There are many more, but I don't think we have enough time to list them all. I also want to add that he did recently beat Lanny McDonald in a mustache contest. This hard-working Albertan also just recently received the Diamond Jubilee medal. I would ask His Worship to rise, as he has done, and receive the warm traditional greeting.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Government Relationship with Physicians

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week all members of this Assembly received a very powerful letter from a local doctor working here in Edmonton. As time does not permit me to read it in its entirety, I would like to take this opportunity to read part of that letter.

I am a recent graduate of the University of Alberta, where I completed my medical degree and then followed it with specialist training. . . This entitles me the privilege of a career that most people cannot fathom, or even begin to understand. As an anesthesiologist, I am able to provide care to the sickest of patients at life-threatening moments, and I consider it a privilege to carry this title with my Alberta colleagues . . .

We are here in the middle of the night when the woman in labor starts bleeding uncontrollably. . .

We are here when your elderly father needs emergency brain surgery for a ruptured aneurysm . . .

We are here when your precious son needs to have pins put in his broken arm . . .

We are here to care for our patients. We are here to save lives.

The recent actions of the Alberta government against their province's [doctors] is unfathomable . . . I have the obligation to express my indignation that the Minister of Health and . . . government is refusing to negotiate an agreement with the AMA.

She concludes her letter by saying that Alberta should boast the fact that most medical residents stay within Alberta following their training to provide service in our province, but this will likely change if the Alberta government does not listen to its doctors.

A very powerful message, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's doctors deserve to be taken seriously and treated with respect by this government. I hope the Minister of Health has taken the time to read this letter and has taken the message to heart. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Long-term and Continuing Care for Seniors

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Associate Minister of Seniors recently referred to seniors as "our most precious commodity." Now, the government would say that his words were simply a slip of the tongue, but the reality is that under this government seniors in Alberta are often treated like commodities. That reality endangers not only seniors but our entire health care system. Alberta has 1,366 seniors waiting for care; 459 of those seniors are waiting in acute or subacute care spaces.

It shouldn't be news to this government that they'll never address hospital occupancy rates or wait times without addressing our long-term care shortage. The government knows that by 2020 Alberta will need almost 50,000 long-term care spaces. That's a frightening number considering that Alberta currently has 1,450 long-term spaces, the exact same number that the province had in 1992, Mr. Speaker.

Seniors who are waiting for care would be right to doubt the government's commitment to provide that for them, but even when Alberta seniors get into long-term care, they face problems with understaffing and with quality of care. Over the years the NDP has tabled thousands of forms from Steelworkers, AUPE, and CUPE locals that illustrate just how much pressure is put on staff to do more than they possibly can. These forms show the real problem behind seniors not being bathed and cared for regularly. They tell the story behind dementia patients wandering away without supervision, patients getting scalded by bath water, meals delayed and missed, and the fact that seniors are actually sometimes lucky to get one bath a week. That story, Mr. Speaker, is chronic short-staffing and a failure by this government to put staffing and care standards in place.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's seniors deserve more than misleading promises to add beds, and they deserve more than empty promises to look into it when gross failures in care are brought to our attention. What they deserve is the quality of care they need when they need it and to be able to receive that care with the dignity and the respect that they have earned. This government simply must do better for Alberta's seniors.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we start the clock, I've received some notes from opposition members and also from certain government members with respect to the 35-second rule, so let us be ever mindful that the chair will do his best, obviously, to ensure that questions do not exceed the 35-second time frame, nor any answers. As you will note from reviewing Hansard, I have on occasion had to stand and ask people to sit and curtail their questions or their answers because they have violated the clock.

I would ask you to also be mindful that on occasion the Speaker can receive three, four, six, 10 notes all at once. Yesterday, in particular, I think we set a record from all sides of the House, all members. I received over 30 notes yesterday on various issues. So I'll try and do a better job of policing the clock, and I'll ask you to do a better job of policing yourselves.

With that, let us start the clock and begin question period with Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition leader.

Physician Services Agreement

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Premier bemoans the opposition's questions about accountability and prefers questions about policy, so today I'm going to ask about her policy of reneging on deals and breaking promises like the deal she had with the AMA before the election. During the election the Premier announced 140 family care clinics would be built at a cost of at least $3 million to $5 million each, and after the election the Premier scrapped the agreement in principle with the doctors to do it. Is it any wonder that the AMA doesn't trust this Premier, this minister, or this government?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is absolutely true that prior to the election there was an agreement between the government of Alberta and the AMA with respect to ongoing negotiations. After that election, one of the parties, not the government of Alberta, decided to renege on that agreement. In those circumstances, the government of Alberta continued to bargain in good faith, keeping the money on the table to make sure that health care was going to be delivered to Albertans.

The other thing is that the work we are doing with respect to family care clinics is continuing. We're working with the College of Family Physicians. It is going well, and we will deliver.

Ms Smith: I will table the doctors' ad, where it talks about the government rescinding their support for the agreement, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the Minister of Health doesn't know what the cost will be and given that the doctors estimate $700 million will come directly from the budget for physician services to pay for it, will the Premier confirm just how much physician services will be cut to pay for her family care clinics?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, the wonderful thing about the resources that we have right now in our Department of Health is that we have the ability, with commitments that have been made by this government, to support practitioners, to support licensed practical nurses, and to make sure that we are delivering those services. It is very clear to the people that are working in this system through primary care networks and family care clinics that it's going to be entirely possible for us to fund these. We are committed to funding these. Again, we see numbers thrown around with no support, and I don't think that the hon. member has any reason to believe them either.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, given that there is no explanation about how these new clinics will work, that there's no evidence that they are any better than primary care networks, just a heck of a lot more costly, $62 per patient versus $300 per patient, and given that the current troubles with the AMA negotiations are a direct result of this poorly conceived scheme, can the Premier explain why she thinks that cutting doctors out of delivering primary care is such a good idea?

Ms Redford: Doctors across this province are delivering excellent primary care. Mr. Speaker, over the last seven months what we've heard from Albertans and from doctors is that primary care networks and family care clinics are going to deliver and are delivering through pilot projects even better health care. We made a commitment in the last election to ensure that there is better access for Albertans to health care, and that is our job, to represent the interests of Albertans. It's the AMA's job to represent the interests of doctors and, apparently, the Leader of the Opposition's.

The Speaker: Hon. leader, your second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: I make no apologies for standing up for doctors, Premier.

Omnibus Question

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, in keeping with the questions about the government's policy of renegeing on deals and breaking promises, on October 30 I asked about meetings that the Finance minister had with the Katz Group when they were told no on the request for arena financing and casino licences. I asked for details on when and where those meetings took place, who attended, who arranged the meetings, and how the no decisions were made and communicated. Now, the minister said: "I'd be pleased to get you the dates of the meetings. It's not a secret." It's been more than a month since he made that promise. When is he going to keep it?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I think if you were to review other areas of Hansard, I actually did say where and when I met at the two meetings that we had. I also indicated that the lobbyist that was on file at the time was a gentleman named Peter Elzinga, who is known to many people in this House. So I'm not exactly sure what other details the hon. member might be looking for.

Ms Smith: I'll put it in writing, Mr. Speaker.

I have another question. Given the previous answer perhaps we could also ask the Premier if she would now be willing to keep her promise of a full public inquiry and extend the queue-jumping inquiry to include past queue-jumping, also include the excessive emergency room wait times, and to include the bullying and intimidation of our front-line health care providers?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, from what I've been reading in the newspaper, there is a public inquiry going on with respect to exactly what we committed to do. I'm very pleased that it's taking place. I don't know what the results of it will be, but I'll tell you what we did do. We kept our promise.

Ms Smith: Well, I'll try on a third one, Mr. Speaker. Given the government's promise of more openness and transparency, we might also ask if the government would now be willing to release all of the expenses for all of the executives for all of the health regions going back to 2005?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess this is déjà vu week, and we're going to review questions that have been asked and answered incessantly over the course of this session. The opposition has made it very well known to this House that they are very adept at using the processes that are available to them through the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act to access this information. Today there are a number of expenses, additional expenses, that have been posted on websites that are also available for their review.

Mr. Speaker, we are interested in being the government in 2012. If the opposition wants to talk about 2005 and other years, that's entirely up to them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Tobacco Recovery Lawsuit

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier insists that hand-picking a firm led by her transition team leader and long-time confidant for a $10 billion government lawsuit was the best choice for Alberta, but her own words state, "No . . . consortium stood out above the others." Why does this government refuse to release the terms of the contract when the firm already gave its blessings to make the contract public? Just release it.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, same question yesterday, same answer today. We have received advice from that very firm that the member mentions about how this could endanger our case and our chances to recover money that is owed to Albertans from big tobacco. This member is a lawyer himself. He should appreciate that contingency fee agreements are very rarely released. At this time it is not appropriate. I am going to take my seat.

Mr. Saskiw: We put Albertans first, not lawyers.

Premier, will you, in order to ensure that Alberta taxpayers aren't being ripped off for potentially hundreds of millions of dollars, confirm to this House that the contingency percentage offered by JSS in their proposal was, in fact, the lowest of all the proposals looked at by the Ministry of Justice?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely pleased to stand up in this House and say that I can't answer that question because I didn't make the decision. [interjections]

Mr. Saskiw: Wow. Sorry. I'm just trying to catch my breath here.

The Speaker: Hon. members, please. We have a long-standing tradition of allowing whoever has the floor to in fact enjoy it. The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills is clearly enjoying his moment. Let's not take away from that.

Please proceed.

Mr. Saskiw: I am, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

Given the obvious conflict why didn't the Premier direct her deputy minister to decide which proposal was in the best interests of and the best deal for Albertans, or is it this government's normal practice to politically direct the public service to make government deals based on political cronyism instead of the public interest? How many other deals are like this?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've seen this opposition in this House yesterday, today, and all of last week continue to come up with baseless allegations that aren't about governing Alberta. [interjections] I'll tell you what we've done and what we've delivered for Albertans. We've delivered elections financing legislation. We've delivered whistle-blower legislation. We've delivered an Education Act. We have completely transformed the regulatory process to ensure that we have environmental sustainability and competitiveness. That is what Albertans voted for in April, and we delivered. [interjections]

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let's observe our decorum, please.

The leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Expense Reporting

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before the election the Premier tabled a fudge-it budget, and the day after we were at a $3 billion deficit. Albertans want to know where their money is going. According to the report of selected payments last year MLA pay and perks cost taxpayers $14 million. The Premier ordered an independent review, but the PC-dominated Members' Services Committee has failed to establish a new independent process in reviewing the pay. Instead, it cherry-picked what it liked and didn't like from Mr. Justice Major's report. To the Premier: how do you justify your government's failure to establish a truly independent process?

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: Hon. member, be careful with words like "fudge-it budget." I heard a government member a week or so ago use the same thing, and I'm going to admonish the government side as well. It's the context within which you use it that sometimes leads to some disorder in the House, and I would really like to avoid that disorder. Let's just be careful of some of these little slips that sometimes happen inadvertently, sometimes deliberately.

Expense Reporting (continued)

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, maybe I can answer that question by quoting something. "We do recognize that the fully taxable amount of $134,000 does constitute a significant pay cut for most MLAs. If you look at the report from last year, there were some government MLAs making . . . $150,000 to $160,000," and I recognize that it caused a hardship, that it was a pay cut. I'm quoting the leader of the Wildrose Official Opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I had asked for the Premier to rise.

Given that in his recent report the Auditor General expressed repeated concerns about questionable expense claims and use of corporate credit cards, specifically regarding postsecondary institutions like ACAD, SAIT, and the University of Alberta, can the real Premier, you, Madam Premier, please tell us if anyone in your government knows exactly how widespread the abuse of taxpayer money really is in these institutions?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I am so glad that we're actually repeating so many questions from question period earlier this session because it makes the answers so much clearer, and it gives us an opportunity to reiterate real information for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, we have an independent Chief Electoral Officer, whose job, rightly, is to ensure that if there are challenges or difficulties or concerns that people have, they assess the information and deal with them. I understand that the Chief Electoral Officer has done that in every case that has been brought to their attention. I'm pleased that our election finance legislation will confirm and enhance that, and I look forward to any of those results. If the hon. member has any questions, he should refer them to the Chief Electoral Officer.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier has done a good thing by posting her expenses and they clearly show that she has good taste in first-class flights and fine wining and dining – these are the same tastes that many senior executives at AHS had as well, the few that were looked into. My question to the Premier: given that only 1 of 380 agencies, boards, and commissions has disclosed the information and 50 per cent of taxpayer dollars is spent by these agencies, boards, and commissions, how much more money is wasted that could go to . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, as the Premier said, the more these same questions are asked, the better opportunity we have to make the answers even clearer.

Mr. Speaker, the only question that is of relevance here is whether expenses that were paid at any point in time were paid in accordance with the policies and procedures that were in effect at that time. At this time this government has the most aggressive and the most open and transparent expense policies of any jurisdiction in the country. All agencies, boards, and commissions under the jurisdiction of my ministry have been asked and have indicated that they will act in accordance with those policies.

The Speaker: Just to clarify, hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, any member of Executive Council is empowered by our rules to answer a question or not.

The hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thanks. Mostly not, Mr. Speaker.

Tobacco Recovery Lawsuit

Mr. Mason: I'm quoting from the Conflicts of Interest Act, section 3. "A Member breaches this Act if the Member uses the Member's office or powers to influence or to seek to influence a decision to be made by or on behalf of the Crown to further a private interest." To the Premier. The words there are "influence or to seek to influence," not "sign the final contract." Did you or did you not influence or seek to influence the decision to hire the International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I am so glad that the Official Opposition is sharing their questions with the NDP. I think that's fantastic. I think yesterday it was with the Liberal Party. But again it's an opportunity to clarify that that is simply not the case. Just because an hon. member makes the allegation, as I always tell my 10-year-old, doesn't make it true.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier is happy to share her nonresponsiveness with Albertans, can the Premier explain why she stands by her decision to sue big tobacco, but she won't stand by her signature on documents from the Justice ministry that prove that she sought to influence the decision to hire the International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, if the member won't accept the answer from the Premier, maybe he'll accept it from me, but the answer will be very much the same. The fact is that the Premier will stand by her promise to sue big tobacco because that is the right thing for Albertans and our health care system, unlike some other parties across the way. Our Premier will always stand by her word, and Albertans can trust that what she says is dependable.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. I'll thank the Premier for sharing her Deputy Premier with the House.

Given that the Premier's signature is on the documents and given that evidence from her own department officials proves her involvement, my question to the Premier is: how can Albertans trust her when she continues to deny the facts?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, every day since I got elected in this House in 2008, I've stood by my word.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Calgary-North West.

Long-term and Continuing Care for Seniors

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fall session is quickly coming to an end, and this province has some very serious issues facing it. Seniors, their loved ones, their caregivers are concerned about the direction this government is going regarding closure of long-term care nursing beds in this province. Albertans are expressing concern that this government is not listening, that this government is pushing forward a continuing care model that is not meeting the needs of our most vulnerable seniors. As I always tell my 10-year-old, seniors come first. This is causing turmoil not only for those in care facilities but also for the hundreds of seniors waiting in long-term care. To the Minister of Health: can you assure Albertans in this province that you will no longer close any more long-term care nursing beds?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what I can assure Albertans is that this government is keeping its word. We are adding 1,000 continuing care spaces per year to this province, by far the most aggressive infrastructure campaign for continuing care that I'm aware of in Canada. We're on track to meet our goal of 5,300 spaces. I can tell you that all of the new beds that we are adding are built to a long-term care standard for the specific purpose of allowing our seniors to age in place, remain with their spouses, and as much as possible stay in their home communities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Minister of Health would not even answer the written question put forward to him by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek as to how many long-term care beds we have in this province, how can this minister stand up and assure Albertans that he is not closing long-term care beds in nursing or continuing care centres for even the next six months?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question would be very simple. This government is in the business of funding the care needs of individuals regardless of where they live, and that includes everything from home care right through to supportive living and long-term care. As we have said time and time again, the philosophy of this government differs distinctly from the opposition in that we believe in supporting Albertans to age in place, to stay in couples whenever possible, and to live as close as possible to their home community. The business that we're engaged in is the quality of life for the seniors of this province, not the bricks and mortar discussion that the opposition continually wants to engage in.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Minister of Health talks a lot about this care for seniors and the need for long-term care nursing beds but just closed the Little Bow continuing care centre – there are many more on the list; we've asked for that list – will the Minister of Infrastructure protect Albertans and provide a list of any closures, necessary upgrades, or new long-term care nursing and continuing care facilities assessed by your department today?

2:10

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've consulted with my colleagues and Albertans across the province, and I can tell this hon. member that Infrastructure has no plans to close any long-term care beds in this province.

Expense Reporting by Cabinet Ministers

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, some folks in my constituency want to see the government's expense claims, and they can't find them, and if they can't find them, I'm guessing a lot of Albertans can't find them. To the Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation: what do I tell them?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to be here today. The government of Alberta has proactively disclosed expense claims for all members of cabinet, continuing to deliver on the Premier's commitment to an open and transparent government. Our proactive disclosure of our ministerial expenses goes back to the election. Following the release of the Premier's expenses earlier this fall, that proves that our commitment to accountability starts at the top.

Ms Jansen: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: how can my constituents in Calgary-North West expect to see these documents easily given that you've deposited them in a library in Edmonton? Are we being transparent or merely opaque?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, we are being transparent. The expense claims that we deposited in the Legislature Library can be found on the library's online catalogue for all Albertans to see. Going forward, we have the most aggressive expense disclosure policy in Canada. Every Albertan is going to be able to see the expenses of every minister and senior government official. It's all going to be online starting in mid-December. That's transparency. We're delivering it.

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us allow people to have the floor. I've asked earlier, and I'm going to have to get out my list pad again, I see, and perhaps penalize some of you for not maintaining the proper decorum in the House, to be polite.

Hon. member, you have the final supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Finally, to the Minister of Service Alberta, Mr. Speaker, who likes to talk about Alberta leadership on this issue: how can your ministry make this claim?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think that in the interest of transparency it'd be very nice if you had a very transparent version of that list pad as well so we could all see and all members across this province could see which members in this House cause ruckus unnecessarily. Let us respect this institution, this fine institution of democracy, this fine institution, and this fine government that has made expense disclosure policies that lead this country. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, you can see why I'm doing my best to enforce these rules that we're all asked to live by because if I don't, you will have more disruptions, and then we won't get through the list at all.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Calgary-Fort.

Mr. McAllister: I really enjoyed the last performance, Mr. Speaker, I must say.

Collective Bargaining with Teachers

Mr. McAllister: Contract talks, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, we know are not going that well with Albertan teachers, and the issue isn't about money, it's about workload. Teachers are being snowed under right now in a blizzard of paperwork. Does the Minister of Education recognize that this is a serious problem for today's teachers, and is he willing to help reduce the mountain of paperwork and let teachers spend time doing what they do best, and that is teaching our children?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. Yes, we need to make sure that we have the world's best in front of our children. We need to make sure that they're doing the high-value tasks, and they're focusing those skills on the things that are going to help our kids succeed. We absolutely want to have some discussions and dialogue, and we've got some strategies to move forward on addressing some of the workload issues with teacher, but one area where we do differ is that we don't think those workload discussions should be wrapped up in putting hard caps on the amount of minutes a teacher, who's a professional, a noble professional, should be able to work in the classroom per day.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I appreciate the honest answer from the minister.

Given that this PC government had no problem, though, working out a five-year contract with teachers during an election, given that the Premier had no problem finding $100 million for the teaching industry during a leadership campaign, does the minister recognize that Albertans are starting to wonder if the only time the government does what's right in education is when there are votes to be had?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I think we can all take exception to that. Obviously, we're doing what's right in education today. The Premier made some great promises over the last year and has delivered on them. She promised to reinstate $107 million in the education system; she did that right away. She promised to give school boards predictable and stable funding so they could manage their business and make good, solid decisions; she did that. She promised to bring the Education Act forward and get that delivered; she's done that. Now what we're trying to do is get another long-term deal province-wide with teachers to put the students at the centre of this thing and make sure that it's about the students. We're not going to rush into a deal unless it's got the students at the centre of the deal.

Mr. McAllister: We acknowledge and applaud the Education Act, Mr. Speaker.

Again to the minister: even though this is not about money, is it hard to negotiate with teachers and work out a deal when they look at you and your government and recognize that you've just voted yourselves an 8 per cent raise?

Mr. J. Johnson: Well, I think maybe the hon. member should read his leader's e-mail that was just written here a few minutes ago. It seems that they're not quite on the same page.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to negotiating with the teachers, no, it's not easy. There are a lot of complicated issues here. It's very simplistic to think that one quick solution is going to get us a deal for four or five years across the province, dealing with 35,000 people in over 2,000 different schools, different communities, dealing with different classrooms and different kids. We're trying to recognize some of those nuances. We want to move to a system that has more and more differentiated learning, that recognizes diversity in the classroom, and that can give teachers the supports they need for those unique kids in those classrooms.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A business owner in my constituency told me that the volatility of electricity in Alberta makes it extremely difficult for their business operation. In a letter to me he said that the maximum capacity of installed generation in Alberta is posted at 14,400 megawatts. The real availability of maximum capacity is closer to 13,000 megawatts, and the provincial system is hovering at about 9,000 to 10,000 megawatts. However, the pool price is a 40 per cent increase. My question is to the minister. What is the reason for these massive price spikes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the question from the member. You know, you don't have to take the facts from me. We could actually go to the Manitoba Hydro survey earlier this year of Canadian electricity bills. If you look across the country, Halifax was an average of 118 bucks, Toronto was $108, Saskatoon was $98, and here at home, in Edmonton, it was $91. This province has a system that works and delivers cost-effective electricity to all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given the fact that deregulated power generation has increased greatly the amount of electricity in Alberta without taxpayer dollars being involved, what options do businesses have so they are not held hostage by the volatility of electricity prices?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously, those of us who have been in business understand that having a nonvolatile input like electricity to a business is an important aspect. There are several ways to do that. One of them is to actually contract with a provider for electricity. In Alberta there are more than 40 different choices on the market that Albertans can access, that small businesspeople can access, and that individual Albertans can access as well. Many also have gone to self-generating projects. That's all about customer choice. We think that's a really important aspect for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before continuing with my question, I just want to say that I'll table the letter of my constituent later for the hon. minister to reply to.

To the same minister: how can this government ensure that we are meeting the power requirements in Alberta with the rapid growth of our province?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's actually a very important and relevant question for all of us. It turns out that since 1998 almost 7,000 megawatts of new electricity generation has been created in this province. I say that that has come about completely with private-sector investment and not one dollar – not one dollar – of debt on the public books, the way you find it in virtually every other province in this country. The private sector does it here in Alberta, and they will continue to do so. It's between $10 billion and $15 billion of investment by the private sector.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

2:20                      Emergency Medical Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since Alberta Health Services took over the emergency medical services, there has been a steady loss of Edmonton EMS staff to other centres and services due to unacceptable high levels of stress, red alerts, and poor response times. Rural ambulances – rural ambulances – are still frequently called in to assist Edmonton and Calgary EMS. To the minister: what has the minister done over the last six months to fix the broken EMS system and the demoralized EMS workforce?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the first thing I did was take the opportunity to go on a ride-along with some EMS staff in Edmonton to observe first-hand some of the challenges that they are facing in their work on a day-to-day basis. I would certainly agree with the hon. member that emergency departments are busy. They are still experiencing high volumes, including ambulances that arrive. But the good news is, of course, that many improvements have been put in place to try to alleviate this problem. One of the most important is the ability now for EMS staff to be able to hand off care of a patient while they wait for an emergency room to another EMS crew in order to allow the EMS crew to get back out on the road. As the hon. member knows, there is a larger review under way on this.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The challenges continue. Will you today tell Alberta Health Services to stop hiding EMS response times and post them online, which they haven't been doing for a month?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's quite a serious allegation, and I'm not sure exactly what the hon. member is referring to, but I will take the opportunity to look into it. I can certainly tell the House that both Edmonton and Calgary wait times for EMS departments by hospital are now available online on the Alberta Health Services website.

As the hon. member knows, we commissioned a large-scale review of EMS in the province by the Health Quality Council of Alberta. That report is expected to be delivered to me shortly, and I'll be sharing the results and the recommendations with all members of the House.

Dr. Swann: I wasn't talking about ER wait times. I was talking about EMS response times.

What do you say to the Ardrossan individual who last week was choking and waited 30 minutes for an Edmonton ambulance because the Ardrossan ambulance was here in Edmonton helping them cope?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure how the hon. member would expect me to answer that specific question about a specific case. If he has information that he would like to share with me and ask me to look into that and get back to him, I'd be very happy to do so.

What I can tell you is that one of the issues I've asked the Health Quality Council to look at is the impact of the borderless ambulance system, which is a system that provides in many cases for faster response times in some areas of the provinces but also on occasion draws ambulances away from their home area to assist in areas with higher call volumes. We have had reports of that having in some cases negative impact on local communities. We're looking into that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Bridge Repair and Construction

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties says that funding for bridge replacement needs to be increased to at least $70 million per year. The Department of Transportation's own capital plan says that it needs $90 million per year, but this PC government is only budgeting $25 million per year, less than one-third of what's required. Will the Minister of Transportation tell us which bridges the PC government plans on closing?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would say that there are no bridges that we're planning on closing. I would also say that the recent Auditor's report does point to an upcoming bubble in the requirement for money to fix bridges. We're aware of that. I've taken that up with my staff, and in the upcoming years as that need progresses and increases, we will have to include that in our budgeting. Right now we are quite confident that the budgeting we have in place is adequate to do the job, and we will continue to do that job.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, given that the Department of Transportation's own capital plan for 2012-17 says that its strategy to manage the shortfall includes closing bridges across Alberta, can the minister explain how it's possible to accept bridge closures that will literally put roadblocks in the way of Albertans?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I suppose that depends on how you look at it. I know that there are several bridges under repair right now. As they get old, sometimes you close one and replace it with another. The network, I can assure you and I can assure Albertans, is in good shape. The audit itself actually said on page 5 that there's no evidence of unsafe bridges. This government continues to monitor the situation and look after the bridges as required. I think the Auditor's report made it quite clear, actually, as well that we're doing a good job of that very thing.

Mr. Bilous: That could be debated.

Given that numerous systemic problems were identified by the Auditor General, including a no-meet bridge and maintenance committee, lapsed inspector certifications, and failure to collect information on the quality of inspections, and given that this government has no information on 68 per cent of bridges in Alberta, does this minister honestly think that blind faith is strong enough to hold up bridges in Alberta?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the Auditor also was aware and said in his report that we have very good systems. He pointed out some administrative shortfalls, all of which have been solved. So Albertans can have complete confidence in the bridges that we have, whether they're on top of them or underneath them, any place that they are because they're in good shape, and Albertans know this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Edmonton-Manning.

South Saskatchewan Regional Plan

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency of Cypress-Medicine Hat will be completely affected by the South Saskatchewan regional plan. My constituents are concerned about how the implementation of this plan will affect them, especially given that this government has a long track record of ignoring legitimate concerns of landowners. Government officials are in Cypress-Medicine Hat this week and claim to be asking Albertans for input. To the minister of sustainable resource development: why should Albertans think that this is anything more than just another PR exercise?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleague, who is at the United Nations climate change conference in Doha . . .

An Hon. Member: There is one?

Mr. Hughes: There is one. Actually, they believe that the science is settled, and so does the rest of the world.

Mr. Speaker, the South Saskatchewan regional plan is a legitimate initiative of this government to ensure that we protect property rights, that we protect water rights, that we protect the environment in southern Alberta, and that we're all proud of what we leave to our kids and our grandkids.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that the lower Athabasca regional plan proposed a number of conservation areas and given that this resulted in the cancellation of 19 oil sands leases, can the minister assure my constituents that no property rights, leases, or private lands will be affected or expropriated for the creation of conservation areas in the South Saskatchewan regional plan?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, that's an easy question. As we would all know, in the lower Athabasca regional plan area there were needs to establish in an essentially largely uninhabited area long-term plans for the long-term needs of the community. Southern Alberta, as you will know, has been settled for, you know, a good century and more. There are well-established practices. There are some wonderful parks throughout southern Alberta. The answer to your question is that there will be none of that kind of stuff going on.

Mr. Barnes: Given that the government was there nine months ago and didn't listen to the people, given that ranchers in southern Alberta have held some of the Crown leases for over a century, given that ranchers are, without question, the best stewards of the land, and given that grazing is very beneficial for the land and for species at risk, will the minister personally guarantee that these long-term Crown leaseholders will not have their property rights violated?

Mr. Hughes: You know, Mr. Speaker, I'm the perfect person to answer that question. I'm the grandson of ranchers, and I'm the son of ranchers. I can tell you that I actually understand this issue. You know, people have been out there raising concerns, unfairly disturbing people from their livelihoods, telling them all kinds of things. None of that stuff is going to go on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by Little Bow.

2:30 Heartland Electricity Transmission Project

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The heartland transmission line connects with the Ellerslie substation and will run next to many homes and businesses in my riding of Edmonton-Manning. My constituents have a number of questions about the project and feel like they have been left out of the process. My first question to the Minister of Energy is this: why are the transmission poles being put up in my riding when the heartland project is before the courts?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the heartland project, as we all know, was something that was approved by the Alberta Utilities Commission. That was the trigger to commence construction on the project. The province, of course, deemed this critical infrastructure in 2009. The Alberta Electric System Operator identified it as an important project in 2005. We all know that the Industrial Heartland in this province is actually driving growth in the province, and it needs reliable energy.

Mr. Sandhu: My second question is to the same minister. Do my constituents have any recourse to stop this project?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Utilities Commission held extensive hearings and consultations on the routing of the project. In fact, that included reaching out with more than 47,000 information packages and approximately 1,200 personal consultations with stakeholders. They conducted a public hearing for all affected landowners. I know that the hon. member has worked hard on behalf of his constituents to ensure that they also had a chance to have their input into the process. There were 27 registered individuals who participated and 163 registered witnesses.

Mr. Sandhu: My second supplemental question is to the same minister. Why were monopoles approved to be used near Sherwood Park and not in my riding in north Edmonton?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, whether there are monopoles or other styles of poles installed along the route is entirely a technical decision that is made by the Alberta Utilities Commission. They've taken into account all of the concerns raised by people through those many months and years of consultations with residents who might be affected or who are adjacent to the line. As a result, the Alberta Utilities Commission has the authority and the responsibility, and the last thing any of us would want is to have political interference in that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by Calgary-Glenmore.

Postpartum Depression Counselling Services

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is botching health care as evidenced by the doctors' negotiations mess, the family care clinic mess. But I want to raise a different issue today, one that is critical for the people that are touched by it. Moms who received postpartum depressing counselling in the MD of Foothills and surrounding areas have been told this service will end before the end of the year. To the Minister of Health: why would they try to save money by targeting the vulnerable mothers and babies?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for contacting my office late this morning and advising me that he would be asking this question. Thank you. My staff did look into this with the Calgary zone of Alberta Health Services, where we were unable to obtain any confirmation that any program cut is planned. If the hon. member has more detailed information about the situation that he'd care to share with me, I'd be very happy to look into it further.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the minister for that because that's what we're here to do, to get some answers. This is a critical service that affects mothers, spouses, and children. Why would you try to target these things?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're certainly not trying to target this. As the hon. member said, postpartum depression is a serious issue. It is, in fact, far more prevalent than I ever realized until I had the opportunity to have some discussions about the prevalence of different types of depression in our province. So I support the hon. member in raising the issue, both with respect to a specific community and more broadly. As I said, if he'd be prepared to furnish me with some details, I'll certainly look into it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government targeted Down syndrome services in Edmonton recently, and they had to reinstate it. Will you please commit to reinstating this much-needed service as well?

Mr. Horne: Well, in this, Mr. Speaker, you know, I must object to the hon. member's language, first of all, to suggest that the government is targeting a particular group in society, let alone a very vulnerable group. This is not reasonable and not accurate and not an appropriate way to frame a question. In that particular instance I believe I was asked in the House a couple of times about the situation, and that service has not been affected. The nurse that provides those case management services to those families is still in place, and the service continues. If this hon. member wants me to look into the situation in his community, he needs to provide me with some details.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Persons with Developmental Disabilities

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Twenty years ago the United Nations declared December 3 annually as International Day of Persons with Disabilities to focus on issues that affect people with disabilities world-wide. My questions, therefore, are for the associate minister of Human Services, who is responsible for the disability file. Cases of persons with developmental disabilities are increasing in Alberta. How is the minister preparing for this dramatic challenge?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the member for raising the issue and marking the international day and also the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, who gave a statement on that earlier this week. We are not only managing an increasing population but an increase in complexity of cases, and it's a great concern to us. The first step is integrating all of Human Services under one ministry, which has really allowed us to work on integration and breaking down silos. Under the great direction of the Minister of Human Services in our social policy framework we're building a new framework for disability services that will provide better integration, focus on outcomes measured by results-based budgeting.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Minister, for these initiatives. Unfortunately, for parents and families of disabled children there is a very heavy and demanding administrative burden as their child turns 18. For instance, one department may request . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, let's just get on to the question, please.

Ms L. Johnson: Okay. With the situation of formal trusteeship and guardianship can the minister simplify the requirements for parents?

Mr. Oberle: Well, the simple answer is yes, Mr. Speaker. We can do a lot to streamline, and that's another advantage of integrating all of Human Services under one ministry. We can do a lot to streamline services there, and I'll mention specifically the issue of guardianship and trusteeship and streamlining. We can work towards that, but we will always work to protect the rights of the individual.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents are also considering a family-managed care plan. Does that have a huge administrative burden as well, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the option of family-managed care under persons with developmental disabilities is always available, where a family member, a close friend, or an individual themselves can specify that they want to enter into a family-managed care contract. It's not for everyone. It provides a management or an administrative burden, but it does allow for flexibility and control over the situation. Anybody interested in family-managed care can start by working with their local persons with developmental disabilities board or, just for information, visit our departmental website.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Leduc-Beaumont.

Budget Review Challenge Panels

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since this government does not like to answer questions on accountability, let's try one on policy and see where we go. The Finance minister has bragged about his results-based budgeting program and has told us that wonderful benefits will flow from it. Part of the process is the challenge panels, which are supposed to challenge the government's spending plans. Can the minister explain to us how he came up with the public members of these challenge panels and what steps were taken to prevent conflicts of interest?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It actually is a good question. What we did was that we used the agencies, boards, and commissions governance outlines that we have for all of our boards and commissions. We looked for people that had skill sets that would be attributed to asking the right questions of the civil servants. This is not about trying to find cuts in budgets. This is about trying to make sure that we're doing the right thing for the right objectives, and these challenge panels are there to simply do that. They're not there to change policy. They're not there to cut budgets. They're there to help our civil servants do the best job they possibly can.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a quick glance at the list suggests that at least seven individuals on the six challenge panels are mentioned in the lobbyists registry, does the Finance minister really think he will get impartial advice from folks who have registered to lobby the government on a variety of interests, including one individual who has lobbied on behalf of his own interests?

2:40

Mr. Horner: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, the role of the challenge panel is not to lobby their interests. The role of the challenge panel is to ask piercing questions of the civil servants. The role of the challenge panel is to ensure that the plans that we're putting forward are going to achieve the objectives that we're setting out. The role of the challenge panel is then to review the progress of those plans as they progress through the period of next spring and through the rest of the year. The role of the challenge panel is then to ensure that the results that we're getting out of that are actually achieving the objectives that taxpayers want, not the challenge panels and not the ministers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I see that Martin Kennedy, the VP of government relations for Capital Power, is on the municipalities challenge panel. Now, given that the city of Edmonton is the largest shareholder in Capital Power, isn't there a conflict having their VP getting insider details on the preparation of Municipal Affairs' and regional planning budgets?

Mr. Horner: Again, Mr. Speaker, the role of the challenge panels is not to provide advice. The role of the challenge panels is not to take policy decisions or even to lobby on policy decisions. The role of the challenge panels is to challenge the questions. There is no conflict of interest on any of the members.

The Speaker: Just before we move on to Members' Statements, the continuation of which will start with Calgary-South East, I wonder if we could just take a moment to salute for the first time in this Assembly a birthday of a significant member of the Assembly who's never had the honour of having her birthday during a sitting day in her 23 or 24 years of being here. Today, Lesser Slave Lake, it is your lucky day for your milestone.

Congratulations. Hon. members, we seldom if ever reveal ages, but suffice it to say that she is the rock of ages.

Hon. members, 20 seconds from now we will continue with private members' statements. [Members sang Happy Birthday]

Hon. members, that was 20 seconds well used. If any member of your caucus has a milestone and you wish to alert the Speaker to that milestone, I would be happy to pay a tribute to you as well.

Let us move on with Calgary-South East.

Government Achievements

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, the last time I checked, we lived in the best place in the world. The last time I checked, Alberta's real GDP was forecasted to expand by 3.7 per cent this year, nearly double the growth forecast for Canada and the United States.

The last time I checked, an election was held and Albertans voted for a government that represented their values and their vision for the future. The members elected to this House are honest, hard-working, and credible people in their communities. The last time I checked, we were elected to pave a way for the future of this province based on respect for all Albertans and a love of this province.

Mr. Speaker, the last time I checked, Albertans expected us to debate policy in this House and pass legislation that is meaningful. The last time I checked, politics in Alberta was about policies and had never been about personalities. The last time I checked, Albertans expected us to debate policy in this House, not tabloid or Twitter rumours.

The last time I checked, Albertans were expecting us to keep this province prosperous and competitive in world markets, to support the communities who need our help, to build an economy that supports businesses large and small, to partner with municipalities and communities where people don't just make a living but make a life, to build a province that people are proud to call home.

Mr. Speaker, the last time I checked, Albertans elected members of this House to represent them and respect them. The last time I checked, Albertans wanted us to listen to them and have their MLA deal with issues that affect them and their families. The last time I checked, Albertans wanted us to hear those issues and have them addressed in this House, not fabricated scandals over and over again.

The last time I checked, this government was passing legislation to address the issues that concern Albertans. The last time I checked, Mr. Speaker, the Premier was striving to keep focus on those issues. The last time I checked, that's what this House was intended to do. The last time I checked, a person was presumed innocent until proven guilty in a court of law, not in a headline or a hash tag.

The last time I checked, Mr. Speaker, this government had a job to do. We will govern with respect, integrity, and purpose, and I'm here with my colleagues to get that job done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Providence Grain Solutions

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville is proud of our petrochemical industries, but in addition we are just as proud of our agricultural sector. Providence Grain Solutions is one example of just how vibrant and dynamic this industry is not only in my constituency but across Alberta and Saskatchewan. Providence Grain Solutions is celebrating their 10th anniversary this year, and I am so excited that they can be here today as we highlight the true community partnership that they provide.

The value added to our community by Providence reaches far beyond my constituency and into many of my colleagues'. There are elevators in Strathcona county, Waskatenau, Viking, a joint venture in Mundare, and holdings in Clyde and Crossfield. I am personally impressed that Providence Grain Solutions is primarily farmer owned and operated as this is so often representative of our hard-working agricultural sector.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans are well known for our ability to nurture small businesses and to support local initiatives. In the last decade Providence has grown from the little grain company that could in Fort Saskatchewan to a national company with the capacity to fill 125 CP or CN railcars at any one time at their terminal in Alberta's Industrial Heartland.

Recently Providence became part of a Canada-wide group of firms who will handle product for farmers who choose to continue to sell their grain to the Canadian Wheat Board. As we move forward exploring alternative energy measures, Providence Grain continues to evolve as they handle the procurement of soft white spring or ethanol wheat to Growing Power Hairy Hill, Canada's first integrated biorefinery.

Mr. Speaker, I am so proud that Providence Grain is a member of my constituency and that they demonstrate the truly Albertan value that no matter how big they become, they will always remember their roots.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

International Volunteer Day

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. December 5 is recognized around the world as International Volunteer Day. This is a global celebration that should have meaning for every Albertan. There is not a citizen in this province who has not in some way been a beneficiary of the amazing contributions of everyday heroes in our communities. If there's a community hall in your town, if you've ever stood and cheered the local kids to victory, if you've ever enjoyed the fun of a local festival, then you have seen first-hand a local volunteer.

Mr. Speaker, the quality of life that we enjoy in our great province would not be possible were it not for the dedication and generosity of our volunteers. These individuals and the organizations they support deliver programs and services valued at over $9 billion annually to our youth, families, and the most vulnerable citizens in our communities.

Many leave the comfort and security of their homes to travel to areas around the world, lending their time and skill to help those in need. With humility and devotion to duty, they bring honour to our province and to our nation. The government of Alberta is proud to return that honour. Earlier today my colleague the hon. Minister of Culture, Heather Klimchuk, presented the stars of Alberta volunteer awards to six incredible Albertans. Stars of Alberta is one of the ways that the Alberta government is recognizing and paying tribute to not just those who have been selected for awards but to those who day to day in their lives make a difference to all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I ask all the members of this House and all Albertans to take the time today and every day to remember and to thank our incredible Alberta volunteers, each one an everyday hero.

The Speaker: Just a polite reminder, which I think the hon. member reminded herself of, that it's inappropriate and not allowed to raise the actual names of members of this Assembly.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I actually rise proudly wearing my In 4 Tomorrow wristband in support of that good cause.

2:50 EQUUS Rural Electrification Association Ltd.

Mr. Anglin: Mr. Speaker, rural electrification associations are an integral part of keeping the lights on in rural Alberta. Last week Albertans from as far north as Barrhead all the way down to the U.S. border welcomed the newest REA with the merger of the Central Alberta Rural Electrification Association and that of the South Alta REA. Members of both associations voted in favour of the merger at meetings held in Innisfail and Lethbridge.

The result is that as of January 1, 2013, the EQUUS Rural Electrification Association will be the largest member-owned utility in Canada. Reports indicate that meetings were well attended by members, and the decision to merge the two REAs received an enthusiastic majority of 91 per cent voting in favour of the merger. As a result of the merger, EQUUS REA will have an Alberta service area of 28 counties, accounting for a broad swath of the province. The merger will help maintain the association's focus on providing quality service to rural areas.

I welcome the news of the formation of the new EQUUS REA and congratulate the members on their economic vision in planning for the future of enhancing electricity delivery for rural Albertans. The merger will make EQUUS REA stronger and more competitive as well as provide rural Albertans with customer choice.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed with the Routine, might we have unanimous consent to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you a group of very special Albertans seated in the members' gallery who have been enjoying question period. They are the stars of Alberta. Today I had the great honour of accompanying our hon. Premier in a ceremony presenting them with awards to recognize their dedicated service as volunteers. I'd ask each of them to rise as I say their names: first, our youth winners, Jocelyn Davis from Calgary and Rimbey's own Samantha Sperber; next are George Heidt from Edmonton and Bev Toews from Olds, our adult category winners; lastly, Wendy Birdsey and Norm Brownell of Calgary, the winners of our seniors category. Please give these outstanding volunteers the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Bill 208 Seniors' Advocate Act

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 208, the Seniors' Advocate Act.

This act would create an arm's-length seniors' advocate, reporting directly to the Legislature, not to government. It would be modelled after the Child and Youth Advocate. It would protect seniors, advocate for seniors, and give an independent voice to some of the most vulnerable people in our province. Unfortunately, I realize this act will not make it into debate. I'm disappointed in that, but I hope at some future time to bring it forward again.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 208 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have copies of a letter from my constituents to table.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter I received from a local doctor, which I referenced in my member's statement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings. The first one is a news release from the Alberta government dated December 5, 2012. It's Redford Government Leading Canada on Expense Disclosure. I think it's a good thing.

Number two is from the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, talking about posting expenses of Alberta ministers online, dated December 5, 2012. Five copies.

I have five copies of page 167 of the report of the Auditor General from October 2012 pertaining to "systems over costs for internal working sessions and hosting guests" for the University of Alberta.

I have five copies of a newspaper article by Kelly Cryderman, dated December 5, 2012: Alberta MLAs' Pay, Perks Cost $14 Million Last Year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Bhullar, Minister of Service Alberta, the Alberta vital statistics annual review 2010.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Hancock, Minister of Human Services, pursuant to the Government Organization Act the Alberta College and Association of Chiropractors radiation health administrative organization annual report for the year ended June 30, 2012, with attached financial statements dated June 30, 2012; the Alberta Dental Association and College 2011 radiation health and safety program annual report from January 1, 2011, to December 31, 2011, with attached financial statements dated December 31, 2011; the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association radiation protection program 2011 annual report with attached independent auditor's report dated December 7, 2011; the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta radiation health administrative organization annual report for the period January 1, 2011, to December 31, 2011; the University of Alberta authorized radiation health administrative organization annual report 2011-2012; the University of Calgary radiation health administrative organization annual report for the period April 1, 2011, to March 31, 2012, with attached financial statements for the year ended March 31, 2012.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 7 Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to move third reading of Bill 7, the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we've had a rather robust debate the last week or so, spent about 12 hours on this. I'll try not to rehash it all, but there are a few points that I just wanted to make. I believe that the proposed amendments will ensure strong governance, greater transparency of provincial elections and campaign financing, and overall improve Alberta's electoral process. As I've indicated before, we've relied very heavily on the Chief Electoral Officer's recommendations here, an independent, nonpartisan body that reports directly to this Legislature. He provided 101 recommendations; we have accepted 90 of them.

The first one I just wanted to mention is that there has not been a lot of debate, Mr. Speaker, about the new enumeration policy around income tax based enumeration. No longer will you have people knocking on your door, at a cost to the taxpayer, collecting information, which can be inaccurate. We are going to be moving to a system whereby people can simply check off on their income tax. What I would envision happening is that on the provincial income tax we'd have three questions. Number 1, are you a Canadian citizen? Obviously, you have to be a Canadian citizen to vote. Number 2, have you resided in Alberta for at least six months? That is the qualification under this act as it remains. The third is: do you wish to be on the provincial list of electors? I have spoken with the Privacy Commissioner about this very issue, and no particular issues were raised.

Mr. Speaker, essentially, this process of income tax based enumeration is going to result in a better voters list for less money. B.C. is the only other province that has embarked on such a policy, and from their website they expect a $25 million saving. The federal government has been doing it for a number of years, and the federal government estimates an 84 per cent compliance rate of people who want to be on the list. Of course, this is going to be voluntary.

I wanted to thank the members opposite. There appears to be some bipartisan support for this change, which I think will be very positive towards our democracy in Alberta.

I wanted to touch on some other amendments. Amendments to the Election Act will ensure continuous improvement to the electoral office by allowing political parties to have input through the development of the electoral process through discussion with the Chief Electoral Officer. The Chief Electoral Officer will also provide his recommendations to the Legislative Assembly in reports laid before our Assembly.

We will increase transparency by requiring the disclosure of name and contact information of the sponsor of election advertising. Mr. Speaker, in one of his documents the Chief Electoral Officer indicated that he had received 800 to 900 complaints about autodiallers, which are referred to as demon dialers or robocalls, throughout the last election. We are not in any way restricting the usage of these items, but at the same time, we're just putting some parameters around it so that people will have to put their name on it, who the sponsor is, where the phone number is. Hopefully, that will encourage some political parties, candidates, constituency associations, third-party groups to use this important tool in a more responsible fashion.

I wanted to mention as well that the amendments to the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act will increase accountability by applying to leadership contests. All donations over $250 will have to be reported. It will also lower the threshold of these contributions, which used to be $375 – again, it's now down to $250 – and, of course, Mr. Speaker, require quarterly disclosure, which will encourage openness and transparency but will also advise the public not only just on an annual basis but every three months as to any donations over $250.

Mr. Speaker, amendments to the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act will also help increase compliance. The chief financial officers of political parties will be required to make reasonable efforts to ensure prospective contributors are aware of the provisions of this act. Contributors will be responsible for ensuring that they are not making illegal contributions, and I will always believe the primary onus has to be on the donor because they know their individual circumstances best. Parties, constituency associations, and candidates will be subject to sanction if they solicit or accept a contribution that they know or ought to know is illegal. It is a dual-pronged approach but with the primary emphasis on the donor.

Regarding enforcement under both the Election Act and the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, Mr. Speaker, the Chief Electoral Officer may impose an administrative penalty, issue a letter of reprimand, or refer the matter to prosecution, the latter of which typically happens in the most severe case. With respect to illegal contributions the Chief Electoral Officer will have the authority to impose sanctions upon the donor and the recipient. I do want to also highlight that the ceiling for administrative penalties is being increased from $1,000 to $10,000. There can also be more severe penalties imposed, but again that must be referred to a prosecutor.

We also had some disagreements with the Chief Electoral Officer. We maintained that the current legislation allows him to disclose any issues where there's been an administrative penalty, where there's been a referral to a prosecutor, or when there has been a letter of reprimand. Regardless, Mr. Speaker, it's time to get past that. We are fixing the issue. We're moving back three years, which is the limitation period under section 52 of the act. The Chief Electoral Officer will have the authority to go and disclose any and all information where there has been a letter of reprimand, an administrative penalty, or a referral to a prosecutor over the last three years. Of course, that does apply during the last election. The Chief Electoral Officer will be authorized to disclose this information with respect to offences that occurred within three years prior to these amendments coming into force.

These amendments, again, will come into force upon royal assent, not proclamation. The proposed amendments of Bill 7 will promote fairness and transparency in our electoral process.

Mr. Speaker, I'd be remiss if I didn't thank a few people throughout this entire process. This has been a long process, and I hope that we are coming to the end of a long road here. I wanted to thank, first of all, our legislative drafter, Peter Pagano, and his staff, who've worked tirelessly on this entire matter. I'd like to thank the hon. Minister of Human Services and Government House Leader, who's been very helpful, and, of course, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, who will be speaking later in third reading as much of this bill deals with the Local Authorities Election Act.

Thank you very much for the time to address you in third reading, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've just been asked to clarify the process. Very briefly I'll do that. There is no 29(2)(a) after this particular speech that has just been given, and there's no 29(2)(a) after the next speech.

The next speech is from the Leader of the Official Opposition, and she has up to 90 minutes. The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure you now have everyone terrified that I'm actually going to use the full 90 minutes.

The Speaker: It's all yours.

Ms Smith: I will aim to be brief because I have already spoken at length on this.

I do just want to start by providing some context because this will be the last opportunity I have to speak in the Legislature this session before we return again in the spring. I know that there have been some sanctimonious members' statements directed our way, I'm quite sure, about the way in which this House has conducted its business. What I will say is that for the most part I believe that the business of the Chamber has moved on in quite a collegial way. If you look through the 10 bills that have passed in the Legislature, I would say that the members of the Official Opposition, the majority anyway because we do have free votes in our caucus, have been supportive of the bulk of the government's agenda in this fall session.

For instance, there was majority support for Bill 1. I think there was unanimous support, in fact. We also were supportive of the Education Act, though we did attempt to make a number of amendments to it. Both of those, Bill 1 and Bill 3, were the only bills where the government accepted any opposition amendments.

Bill 5, the New Home Buyer Protection Act, enjoyed widespread support, including in the opposition ranks. Bill 6, the changes to the OHS and safety codes also enjoyed support. The changes to Bill 50, which was renumbered Bill 8: although we had significant change we wanted to see to that, generally we were supportive of the direction of returning an independent needs assessment back to the Alberta Utilities Commission. Bill 9, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2012, to make some housekeeping changes: supportive of that. Bill 10, the changes that were made to the Employment Pension Plans Act: supportive of that.

I think there has been a great deal of work that has been done, and in many cases it has been with the support of the opposition. We certainly have been open to being supportive of those things that we could agree on. Where we've seen difficulties and where we've seen differences of opinion, of course, have been on three major bills: Bill 2, which is the Responsible Energy Development Act; Bill 4, which is the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act; and, now Bill 7, which is the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012.

I have to say that if we're talking about respect, integrity, and purpose, I can tell you that it certainly didn't show much respect, integrity, or purpose for the members opposite to vote down virtually every single amendment that was proposed not only by this opposition party but by the third-party opposition and the fourth-party opposition as well. I think that the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview – unfortunately, he isn't here – was keeping a better tally of this than I was, but I believe there were 119 amendments that were proposed to these various bills. As I've already mentioned, the government only chose to support two.

Now, I know from the conversations that we have in our caucus – and you've seen that we have had free votes on a number of issues. We've had our members voting differently, and I suspect you will see that there will be members voting differently on this bill as well. I find it very, very hard to believe that 61 Progressive Conservative MLAs looked at 117 amendments and couldn't find a single one that was worth supporting. I find it very hard to believe that this is rising to the level of respect, integrity, and purpose that the hon. member opposite was just lecturing us all about. In fact, I've heard very many sidebar conversations have taken place over the last couple of weeks about how some of these amendments were quite good, but they couldn't be supported because they were being proposed by the opposition.

There is a term in psychology called "projection," and projection is where you actually accuse your opponents of exhibiting behaviour which you yourself are actually demonstrating. I think that what we're seeing, for all of the whining and complaining to the media that the members opposite do, is a little bit of projection because I have to say that I have never seen such blatantly partisan behaviour as I've seen of the members opposite for this entire process.

I do want to congratulate the members from the other opposition parties. I think that we've enjoyed having a number of late nights debating a variety of amendments. We've appreciated the support that you've lent to our amendments. I hope that you've appreciated some of the support that we've given to your amendments. I only wish that I could congratulate the members opposite for being equally open minded.

With that in mind, moving to the issue at hand, Bill 7, I had initially risen to speak generally in favour of Bill 7. As I've already mentioned, we do have a split in our caucus. There are some members who do support the legislation because of the fact that there are many amendments – many amendments – that I think are worth supporting. When you have 90 out of 101 recommendations that have been put forward by the Chief Electoral Officer accepted by the government, that's a very positive thing, so this is a bill where it isn't all bad. I think that much is very clear.

Some of our members are inclined to support some of the positive aspects of it like student voting, like the fact that there's disclosure of the leadership campaign donations and the fact that there's greater disclosure around the issues of surveys and polls. I think everybody was driven crazy, quite frankly, by all of the dialing and robocalling that took place during the last election. So I think that there are some good reasons why you would see some members support this bill.

I personally, though, am not going to support this bill. I think it's quite clear to me that this bill fails to reach the standard of accountability and transparency that the Premier keeps promising that she's going to deliver on. This bill does not raise the bar in the way that I think the Premier had given the expectation that she would when she became leader of her party and then subsequently Premier of the province. Let me go through the significant problems that we have with this bill that could have been corrected and that the government, unfortunately, chose not to, which is the reason I'll be opposing it.

First of all, let's remember how we got to this point in the first place. We had a series of high-profile scandals involving huge corporate political donations and tax dollars being funnelled to political parties, which has shaken the public confidence in our democratic process. Albertans want to know that our democratic elections are fair, that political parties can't be bought by special interests, and that the sole stakeholder in our elections is and always will be the individual voter.

In the spring the Justice minister began this whole process in the four days of question period that we had by seemingly refuting that we needed to have a change in legislation at all. There seemed to be some confusion on that side about the restrictions that they had placed on the Chief Electoral Officer to speak openly and candidly about the results of his investigation. There was confusion about whether he was permitted to release the results of his investigations when he found wrongdoing, and he has found wrongdoing.

In a July press release his office indicated that he had commenced 81 separate investigations – we know that there are many others that could be initiated – of which in 37 he found wrongdoing, in another 14 he found wrongdoing and only indicated a warning or an administrative penalty, and in the remaining 30 he found no wrongdoing. The fact that he was not permitted to release these results was the very reason why the Justice minister was ultimately pressed to bring forward the legislation that he did.

Now, in combination with that, we knew that there was going to be a change to the four-year election cycle for municipalities. I think it's unfortunate that he smooshed these two bills together because I think that there are many hon. members who actually are more in favour of some of the changes made to the municipal elections law than they are of the paltry attempts to fix the electoral financing law, and you may have found that there would have been more support if this had been split into two different bills.

Let me go back to some of the reasons why we are also here. I do find it interesting as well that the Justice minister finally did end up accepting the majority of the recommendations proposed by the Chief Electoral Officer when it was the previous Chief Electoral Officer who did not have his contract renewed after having put forward recommendations. It was quite clear that his recommendations ran afoul of what the government wanted at the time. I suppose better late than never. But it is unfortunate that there were some significant proposals that were put forward by the Chief Electoral Officer that were left on the table.

It is also unfortunate that we will never know the 19 files that the former Chief Electoral Officer had put forward to prosecute, which the then Justice minister, now Premier, chose not to act on. It's unfortunate that we will never know what those cases involved because we think that it would have gone a long way towards actually putting teeth into this legislation if you actually had a Justice minister and a government that were committed to prosecuting when they found wrongdoing.

We're glad, in any case, that it's closing some of the loopholes. However, it certainly doesn't go far enough in closing all of the loopholes, and as it is written, Bill 7 does actually very, very little to improve accountability and transparency in our democratic processes.

I do want to go through the amendments that the members opposite rejected of ours, because I do know that in sidebar conversations at least some of the members were supportive of them, and just remind them that it's their own party's inability to allow free votes – again, another broken election promise from the current Premier and leader of their party – and the fact that they have whip votes on that side that has prevented them from being able to support some of these, I think, quite reasonable amendments. I'll just run through them again because, hopefully, at some future point, when these amendments come back, there might be another opportunity to address them.

In the first case, we wanted to see an amendment that would have rejected the demand for quarterly financial reporting from the constituency associations. This was not a recommendation that came from the Chief Electoral Officer. It's a bit strange that it's in there, especially since we know that this is going to create a huge amount of additional paperwork burden on all of our constituency associations.

We know that they're volunteers. We know that during election periods a lot of the activity of our constituency associations does end up curtailing – this is going to create an additional enormous burden of paperwork without really getting at the issue of some of the transparency. We already have limitations at the local constituency level. It's not the local constituencies that we're worried about receiving a $430,000 cheque from a single donor. That's actually happening at the political party level. The fact that the government has chosen to put this in and would not listen to some of the arguments about the excessive paperwork burden I thought was unfortunate.

We also know that the government and the Justice minister made it quite clear that they think it's the donor's responsibility and that the burden should be on the donor to share the responsibility or most of the blame for illegal donations. We tend to take the other view. It's the political party that should know what the election rules are. Most donors don't wake up in the morning and say: gee, I'm going to cut a cheque for $430,000, and I need to find a way to get around the rules. That is something that is solicited from a political party, and it's the political party who should bear the burden of the blame and the burden of the penalty when that occurs. The government quite clearly wants to continue to keep the burden on the donors. We think that the burden should have been placed on the political party, and of course they rejected that.

We also believe that we needed to close the Katz loophole or the Katz lobster boil loophole, as I think the hon. House leader saw the debate go. We knew that it was some of the smaller pooled contributions that the hon. House leader on the opposite side was concerned about, so we were willing to propose a sub-amendment to try to address some of the concerns that he had. It's still unfortunate that the government did not see fit to make the changes, that we know Albertans are asking for, to close this loophole that allows huge donors to be able to cut a single cheque and then write multiple tax receipts to friends, associates, and family members, skirting around what the law clearly is designed to do.

There would have been a very simple way for them to close that loophole. The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills proposed it, and of course it was voted down by the members opposite. So it didn't do anything, I think, to restore public confidence that we have a system now that can be trusted going into the next election.

We also wanted to make taking action on violations mandatory for the CEO, not optional. This is something that even the Justice minister talked about when he introduced his legislation. I was over at the press conference, and he was quite clear that the Chief Electoral Officer must release the results of the investigations. But, heck, when you went and looked into the actual legislation, it didn't say "must"; it said "may." I don't know why it is that the Justice minister would tell the media one thing out in the public, and then when he was challenged in here to actually make the legal change in the wording to give weight to what he had said, he rejected the amendment out of hand. I think that this was an error.

What people need to know is that when wrongdoing is found, when an investigation takes place, when there are fines or administrative penalties, the Chief Electoral Officer must release that to the public so that we will know who has done wrong, so that there is that element of public shaming. Part of the reason why all of these illegal donations have been able to go on and on and on, year after year after year, where some say, "well, it was just our common practice," is because no one has ever suffered a penalty for anything. There has been no public disclosure when wrongdoing has been found. There's been no disclosure of fines. Having this mandatory is an essential component of making sure that people follow the rules. Again, I think that this is another missed opportunity on the part of the government, and it will go not one step further towards restoring public confidence in the system.

We also wanted to see publicizing the failure to pay the penalties on time. We all recall what happened to Toronto Mayor Rob Ford in the last couple of weeks. One of the things that the integrity commissioner requires is that you have to pay the fine and you have to show proof that you've paid the fine. One of the ways in which this issue kept returning and became a matter of public concern was that there wasn't evidence that the penalties had been paid and that they had paid on time. Publicizing that failure to do so is just one other aspect of the public scrutiny that should be put on these kinds of illegal donations in order to make sure that they stop. It would have been a very simple administrative issue, very simply setting up a website. It wouldn't have required a whole bunch of additional forms or paperwork or enforcement officers, yet once again it was rejected, unfortunately, by the members opposite.

3:20

Another amendment: extending the statute of limitations for punishing and publicizing illegal donations. We wanted to make this retroactive seven years. We know that wrongdoing has gone back further than that. We know that the government had attempted to clarify what the rules were back in 2004. No one seemed to listen. And why would they? There was no serious effort being made on the part of the governing party or the Chief Electoral Officer to root out the wrongdoing, stop it, and publicize those who had done wrong.

We know that there is a lot that needs to be cleaned up. We would have argued that since most people are required to keep their tax returns going back seven years – and this really is a tax filing issue, so people should be able to keep their tax forms related to donations to political parties – it would not have been a hardship for anyone to make this a bill that would be retroactive seven years, not the three years that has been proposed.

We think that seven years was rejected for, quite frankly, political reasons. We know that there's a family member close to the Premier who would get caught up in the issue of illegal donations. We think that this is a period of time that was set deliberately to prevent the prosecution and investigation and disclosure of wrongdoing in that circumstance. I think that's unfortunate. These laws that we make should be made for the benefit of the public, not for the benefit of any particular private interest, not to benefit or shield any particular person from prosecution. I fear that's what's taken place in this case.

Another amendment that we proposed. We worked with the mayor of Calgary, Mayor Nenshi, to try to correct an apparent error. This should have been a very straightforward amendment. It looked as though only candidates who are elected would forfeit their surpluses to charity. What Mayor Nenshi had proposed is: let's just make the wording change so that it's quite clear that if you're a losing candidate, you also have to donate your surplus to charity. Once again, what seemed to be a very straightforward, simple, logical amendment was rejected by the members opposite probably for no other reason than that it was proposed by the opposition party rather than proposed by a government member.

Making a CEO report of wrongdoing mandatory, not optional, is absolutely essential if we're going to prevent actions of wrongdoing in the future. You have to be able to have all of the files reported in a mandatory way.

We also wanted to see a lowering of contribution limits. We were pleased, actually, that the NDP put forward a contribution limit. We had proposed that we would see an amendment that would lower donation limits from $30,000 during an election to $10,000 and from $15,000 in a nonelection year down to $5,000. But the NDP did propose a $3,000 max that would take place during an election year or nonelection year. We also liked the approach that they took of suggesting that you would have a $3,000 max as well for the constituency associations because we know that a lot of the election expenses these days take place at the local level as well. We thought that that was a reasonable amendment, so we were prepared to support that, but once again the governing party voted that down. We think that what we need to see is some limitation on the upper limit for what the contributions are during an election campaign so you can once again restore in the public the confidence that there isn't any relationship between the dollars contributed to a political party and any influence that might take place on political decisions after the fact.

I think, unfortunately, the reason why we're even having this discussion is because we have seen instances where huge, huge corporate donations or individual donations have been made, with the appearance that they intended to influence government decisions because there have been significant decisions before the government at the time that those decisions have been made. There would have been a very simple way for them to address that, and that would have been by limiting the contribution limit.

One other way that they could have limited it was by banning corporate donations. Now, we have already mentioned, of course, that we as an opposition party raised a lot of money in the last election. We also would have been impacted by a ban on corporate donations, but we felt so strongly and received feedback from our members at a recent AGM that this is something that they want to see. They want to see election financing returned to individual voters. They want to remove the influence of corporate and union donations from the apparent effect that it has on political decision-making. Unfortunately, the government once again voted that down.

We would have liked to have seen them propose an amendment that would have allowed for the same ban to apply to trade unions. We did the best we could putting forward an amendment that would have ended corporate donations. Unfortunately, once again, that amendment failed.

We also would have liked to have seen, finally, the raising of the maximum penalties for those who have done wrong, for parties and for individuals. The government has proposed $1,000 to $10,000. We would have liked to have seen that go a little bit higher, to $25,000. We know that the government is increasing fines for administrative penalties across a whole range of different types of violations. We think that these kinds of violations are very, very serious because it draws into doubt the integrity of our democratic process when we have seen repeatedly, year after year after year, our Election Act violated. We think that having a serious penalty levied not only against those who are the donors but also those who are the recipients of these donations would have gone a long way towards ensuring that we could restore some integrity to the elections financing legislation and also the way our elections are conducted.

There are a few things that we wish we had seen in this legislation. We know that the Premier, when she was running for leader of the Progressive Conservatives, promised a fixed-election date. Of course, she didn't deliver on that. She doesn't deliver on many of her promises, Mr. Speaker. She delivered a fixed-election window. But I noticed, once again, the Chief Electoral Officer said all of the benefits that would be derived from having a fixed election date – I'm not quite sure how the government members can be so double-minded about this. They kind of accept the idea of a fixed-election date for municipalities, but they reject the idea of a fixed-election date for provincial political parties. I think the idea is that they want to be able to continue to manipulate the choice of the election date to be able to choose the election date when it's an advantage to the governing party as opposed to having one where it's fair to all.

We also would have liked to have seen an amendment if we were going to go through and change the elections law – I may as well say it. We would have put forward an amendment for recall because I can tell you that with some of the things that we've seen in the last few months, I can imagine that there are a few MLAs who would be facing a recall petition today. So we'll have to save that one until after the next election.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I certainly would have liked to have been able to support this legislation. I know that my caucus was looking forward to being able to have a reasonable debate, putting forward a reasonable argument for reasonable amendments, and they thought that the members opposite would give some reasonable consideration to them. They did not, and as a result, instead of passing a bill that I think this whole Chamber could be proud of, we're passing a piece of flawed legislation that falls well short of what it is that the Premier promised in her election campaign and well short of what the Justice minister, I think, could have accomplished had he been able to see his way through to supporting some of our amendments.

Let me just summarize the main things that we believe this legislation has not done. We thought we needed to address the issue of corporate and union donations and ban them. Not done. We needed to make sure that there were rules in place to have more strict contribution limits and also that they could not be skirted around. That was not done. We wanted to make sure that illegal activity was reported not just for the last three years but going back, the same period that we're required to maintain our tax records, seven years. That was not done. We also wanted to know that the results of all of these investigations would be revealed. Not done. We wanted confirmation that any fines that were levied would be paid back. That was not done. We wanted confirmation that any illegal donations would also be paid back. That was not done.

We put forward a package of potential amendments for this bill, and quite frankly the government just simply ignored them. Many of these proposed recommendations had been endorsed and proposed by the Chief Electoral Officer, so there was an extra level of validation to what we were proposing, but once again the government ignored them. I think the government ignores its own democratic deficit at its own peril.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will be opposing this bill.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've received notes from several individuals from virtually all parties regarding the speaking list, so let me just clarify what I have based on the order in which it was received and bearing in mind the standard practice of alternating between government members and the other opposition party or parties as the case may be.

We've heard from the Minister of Justice, who moved third reading. We've heard the response from the Official Opposition. I have now a spot for a member from the governing party, which will be Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Airdrie, followed by another member from the governing party. At that point, which will be the fifth spot, in other words, the rotation that I have in mind is a member from the government side, so to speak, followed by NDP, followed by Liberal, followed by Wildrose, and it'll start over. Now, that doesn't mean that everybody will use that rotation, but that's what I have.

Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Airdrie, and Standing Order 29(2)(a) will be available starting with this next speaker.

3:30

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I heard words like "blatant partisanship" and, I suppose you could say, "playing politics." What I'd like to talk about is a couple of grand flip-flops as they pertain to this bill, particularly regarding corporate donations, an area that I spent a lot of time thinking about and pondering because it is a philosophical area. It's an area where we've got to make sure that we get it right. I came to the conclusion, as I stated in the debate last night, that I don't see a problem with corporate donations, particularly as that pertains to the small businessperson.

Regarding those corporate donations I've done a little bit of research and found that while working at an esteemed Calgary newspaper, the MLA for Highwood, the Leader of the Official Opposition, commented on the imminent removal of corporate donations from the federal scene. At that time, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-24 was the imminent removal of the corporate donations; therefore, corporate donations on the federal scene would not be there anymore. I quote from that article of May 2003: Bill C-24 is unconstitutional, and he, Mr. Prentice, wants the Tory party to challenge it in court to prevent it from becoming . . . [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. member, just please have a seat.

Hon. members of the Wildrose who are shouting out some interjections, please be reminded that the purpose of third reading is not to go through the bill stage by stage, step by step, clause by clause. However, in deference to your leader I did allow her to go through some of the amendments because I thought that they were important for her to enunciate, and I allowed her that full freedom. I did not have to, but I allowed it. Now I would ask you to please allow some consideration for the member who's speaking now.

Hon. member, I will remind you, however, that relevance under 459 of Beauchesne's is important and that we don't need any more points of order.

Let's keep this at the same level that we kept it when the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition was speaking. I would ask for all of your concurrence in that regard, please. This is an important bill. We recognize that. It's at a very critical stage in this House. Let's just preserve the decorum and hear what members have to say and give them the floor to say it.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, please proceed relevant to Bill 7 at third reading.

Debate Continued

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The context is that I want to stand on the record as being in favour of particularly small business being able to make corporate donations. Of course, we understand that on the federal scene that was removed.

If I can continue: the Tory party to challenge it in court to prevent it from becoming law; if the Tories don't, the Alliance should. Mr. Speaker, I think that speaks to, you know, the feelings that were in existence at that time relative to the need to keep corporate donations in our system and to allow corporate citizens to be able to donate.

There's another issue, Mr. Speaker. While I listened carefully to the Leader of the Opposition discuss the points that they had in deference to the bill and speaking to their rejection of it, I listened carefully to hear the donation limits. I just wanted to confirm a couple of things going back, because I did do some checking back into any discussions relative to this issue in the past: I'm in favour of the donation limits as they exist now and as they will exist in this bill because they did not get changed although I do believe that we had some amendments in that regard.

I want to go back to Hansard of May 4, 2009, and the conversation regarding Bill 205 at that time. I'm referring to page 941. This was a conversation that the MLA from Airdrie had at the time. "Contributions by donors to this account would be set at a fair limit of $30,000 during an election year and $15,000 in a nonelection year." Indeed, the same kind of comment was in the November 16, 2009, Hansard, page 1787, wherein those same fair limits were commented on.

I do think, Mr. Speaker, that we have got the right decision made relative to corporate donations. We've got the right limits in this bill, and I'm supportive of it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I show the Member for Airdrie next. You're relinquishing your spot to the Member for Little Bow?

Mr. Donovan: No, on 29(2)(a).

The Speaker: Oh, I'm sorry. Standing Order 29(2)(a). My apologies. I was sidetracked here with another flurry of notes.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available, hon. member.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hear the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar talk about back and forth and articles from back in 2003. I think we're really trying to move forward on this bill. I think all people in this House are trying to move forward on it. If we could all try to move forward and not go back to eight, nine, 10 years ago on stuff that's being dug out just to prove a point politically, I think everybody would appreciate that. I'd hope the member over there would also appreciate that.

The Speaker: Any others under 29(2)(a)? I have the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, I just wanted to ask the member – and we chatted a bit about this last night – if he has no problem with a corporation spending $30,000 on a particular candidate in a particular election. That's part of what happens when you open it up to corporations. They have undue influence, and the average voter doesn't have that.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, as I said, I have never in my lifetime experienced any donations that have affected a decision that's ever been made in this House.

An Hon. Member: And you're old.

Mr. Dorward: And I'm old, according to the good member in front of me here. So I just don't buy that logic. It doesn't make any sense to me.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I have Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona under 29(2)(a). We have three and a half minutes left.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I mean, now, I actually am a fan of holding people to account for their record. I think that on occasion when someone has something on their record and then they make a considered decision to change their mind and they outline in some detail why it is that they've changed their mind and they take responsibility and are very accountable for the fact they've changed their mind, that's totally appropriate. But I'm just wondering why it is that this member thinks it's appropriate to go back to 2003 when we're about to pass a piece of legislation that doesn't allow us to go back past 2009.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Dorward: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that the whole concept here is the flip-flop. We have had flip-flop discussions in the press. We've had flip-flop discussions in this House here. We've heard those words yelled back and forth. I guess I do agree. There are times when we should be able to change our opinions based on what Albertans want to hear. But if that's the case for one side of the House, let's have it be the case for the other side of the House.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was wondering if the hon. member would actually answer the question because the question was actually one of the amendments. How do you reconcile going back to 2003 yet voting against the amendments to hold the government party in power accountable for at least seven years? That was voted down unanimously by the party in power. I'd like to know your reconciliation of that conflict or contradiction.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I'm honoured. I've sat here for six weeks and desired to be involved in question period, and now I kind of feel like I am, and I'm really honoured.

I know what an apple is, and I know what an orange is. I know what it is to go back and look at a potential flip-flop. I know what it is to go back on election bills, and one goes back three years, and one goes back more than that.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark on 29(2)(a).

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar: do you honestly agree that for one individual or a group of individuals that based on a certain issue, it's a good thing for them to donate $430,000? It's something that may have very likely influenced the outcome of the election. Do you think that is a good decision to allow those types of donations to improve our democracy? Are you serious?

The Deputy Speaker: Do you care to respond, Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar?

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, I think there's an investigation on that going on.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Still on 29(2)(a)?

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). You've got 50 seconds.

3:40

Mr. Anderson: You know, this member and I have a history. I always thought the idea of repentance was that when you realize that you've done something wrong, you go back and admit that you made a mistake. You own up to that mistake, and you make penance for that mistake. Hon. member, you're killing me here. I mean, that's what I thought good people of the world were supposed to do from time to time. This member obviously feels the same as I do. With the ideology that we once had on this issue, once we saw the corruption that happens in politics because of money around the world, in fact – you know what? – we were wrong. We're willing to make that statement in the House. I know it's hard, but listen to me again. We were wrong, and we are going to do everything possible to undo the wrong.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Airdrie on third reading.

Mr. Anderson: All right. Enough with the theology, I guess.

All right. There is a great quote in Alice in Wonderland, a novel that, hopefully, most of us have read. It's about: how can you say that these words mean what you say they mean? The answer to that – I believe it was from the Cheshire cat – was: the words mean whatever you want them to. The words mean whatever you want them to. Now, this Premier is a big fan of Alice in Wonderland. We know that from her budget to the way that she interprets her own words.

The fact is that the last time I checked, truth matters. The last time I checked, people are responsible for the words that they say, and they're responsible for the acts that they do. The last time I checked, we believed in this House in accountability and transparency. The last time I checked, political parties shouldn't be able to be bought off by the highest bidder. The last time I checked, Bill 7 was supposed to be about accountability.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, third reading.

Mr. Anderson: All right. And the last time I checked, we need to talk about the bill on the floor in third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: Third reading, hon. member. Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. So we will do that.

Bill 7, Mr. Speaker, is a huge disappointment. It is a massive missed opportunity. We had an opportunity here to really set a new standard in this country, and instead, to quote the illustrious Deputy Premier, we have decided to remain the bottom-feeders of democracy in this country. This bill does nothing to change our status as the least democratic province in this country. It's a sham. It's a shame. It does very little of what we were hoping that it would accomplish. Very, very little.

The Government House Leader in this House yesterday talked a lot about how we need to just trust that all people are good people and that we shouldn't put any kind of constraints on the ability of people to participate in the democratic process because people are good people. All people are good people. As I said then – I'll say it now – I love the world that that House leader lives in. It's a beautiful world. It's a world of unicorns and rainbows and lollipops. It's a world where everyone holds hands around the campfire. It's a beautiful world. It's a world that I want to be a part of. I want to be a part of that man's world.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that that world is a fairy tale. The fact is that although most people are honest, there are dishonest people. Although most people don't want to wrongly interfere in election results and wrongly interfere in the outcome of elections and aren't only in it for big dollars and so forth, there are some that are. I know that's miraculous for some folks and that this is a huge epiphany for some folks, that there are people that if given the opportunity in a democracy will use every means at their disposal to manipulate with their money, with their time, with their resources and do anything that they can to change the way government functions. There are some of us – there are some elected individuals, I will say – that are perhaps somewhat susceptible to that influence. It has happened time and time again in every democracy across the world.

That goes to the heart of some of the key amendments that we brought forward. There is no doubt that from an ideological point of view, a must protect free speech at all costs, no constraints, no restraints whatsoever view, that an individual should be able to come in and spend $5 million, $10 million, split it up among all his friends with 5,000 different tax receipts and say: "You know what? That's fair game. There's nothing wrong with that."

That's a possibility of what happened. It surely looks like a possibility of what happened in the Katz affair. It wasn't $5 million; it was $430,000. Granted, there is an investigation going on, I think. We don't really know, but we think. We think that it looks like $430,000, one cheque, which the government has never denied and which was reported in two newspapers. Now, they could be wrong. Granted, they could be wrong, so we'll wait for the investigation to conclude, but the government hasn't denied it. That amount, $430,000, was split between several different donors, and the tax receipts were sent out.

Now, apparently the PC Party says that's all above board. Okay? All right. Well, that's great. The problem is that the public is extremely offended by what happened. They are offended by it. They think that it is ridiculous that somebody should be able to come in when the donation limit is already an astronomical $30,000 per individual or corporate entity or union – it's already through the roof, the highest in the nation, anyway – and be able to circumvent that rule, that already kind of out-of-the-park rule, by signing one cheque and giving it and saying, "Now send the tax receipt to this person for $15,000, this person for $15,000, this person for $15,000," and down the line.

How is that in line with the spirit of the elections law that's on the books? It isn't. It looks awful. It feels awful. It feels icky, Mr. Speaker. Doesn't it feel icky? I think it feels icky. It does feel icky and not just because that was used last week in the most amazingly well co-ordinated fear-and-smear campaign that this province has ever seen by that side of the House. Not only is it icky because it funded that, those personal attacks. We know that that side doesn't like personal attacks except during the last week of the election, when they call us all bigots and racists: oh, don't question us on our accountability, you bigots and racists. Like, come on. The double standard is just a little much to take.

Mr. Horner: I'll say.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah, exactly. It's brutal. It's amazing the double standard that does occur in this Legislature.

People are absolutely disgusted that an individual – it doesn't matter who the individual was – is able to come in and influence an election in that way. Then you put on top of that the fact that $100 million right now is being sought by that individual or the corporation that that individual is a part of to get a new arena in Edmonton.

The Finance minister says: I was never influenced on that. That may be true, Finance minister. I'm glad you say that. I'm hoping to believe you on it. In fact, I may even take a chance here and say that I do believe you on it, but the optics are awful. They're brutal. It makes it look like this government is open to being bought by the highest bidder on this issue. That's what it looks like, and we can't have that. We can't have those optics.

The Deputy Speaker: On the bill.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. This is on the bill.

We have to close that Katz donation loophole. That's why we brought that amendment. It doesn't pass the smell test. We brought two amendments, an amendment and a subamendment, on this issue. One was to say that you cannot make a donation on behalf of individuals. Then the Government House Leader eloquently stood up and said that that would affect his ability to hold a lobster boil. So we said: okay, we're going to make sure that that Government House Leader is able to have all the lobster boils his heart can imagine, and we are going to bring in an amendment that says that you can't make a donation on behalf of someone in excess of $15,000. Still that was unreasonable because, apparently, the Government House Leader charges $15,000 a plate at his lobster boils. That's the only reason I can think of that he would reject that. It is absolutely ridiculous for this government not to accept that. So that was the first major one.

Dr. Sherman: Lobster?

Mr. Anderson: That's right. It was the Katz lobster boil amendment. It was a beauty, and it was rejected.

Now, the second. I love how this government across claims to be progressive, so progressive: look how progressive we are. Then it's the Wildrose with the support of the Liberals and NDs that comes forward and says: "You know what? We have seen the stench and the stink that big money has on the democratic process, that it has on government decisions, and we are not going to take part in that any more as a province." That's what we should be doing. This government's comeback is: "Well, you guys took corporate donations before, too. So you've got to be principled here and not do it anymore." Well, obviously, as a party we are not suicidal. We are not going to bring a knife to a gunfight.

Obviously, until the rules are changed for everybody, we are still going to accept corporate donations. [interjections] Oh, horror. I know. Horror. That's right.

The fact is that on day one – well, I don't know about day one, but in the first year: can we say that, hon. leader?

Ms Smith: I think so.

Mr. Anderson: In the first year of a Wildrose government we will ban corporate and union donations. That is what Albertans want to see. Get big money out. Get it out, especially as it appertains to corporate and union donations. I know that's not the most ideologically pure thing for a conservative to say, but the fact is that when you see the effect it has had on the transmission line debacle, on this whole Katz issue, and on many other issues, I just think it's the right thing to do, and I think most Albertans feel it's the right thing to do.

There are many other issues. We saw 24 amendments brought forward by the opposition. Our hon. leader did a remarkable job of listing all the different amendments that were rejected by this government out of hand. I do want to say that I find it absolutely offensive, in my view, that this governing party undertook to change election laws involving political parties. They went to the PC Party, and they asked them for their thoughts on amending the election laws. Guess what, Mr. Speaker? They did not consult at all prior to tabling the bill or having the three-column document in front of them. They did not go to the NDP Party, did not go to the Liberal Party, did not go to the Wildrose Party to ask for any input.

This whole idea that this government believes in consultation is garbage. They believe in consultation with their friends. That's what they believe in. They consult their friends on every bill and say: what can we do for you? They put it in the bill. They don't talk to anybody that might disagree with them, that might have a different perspective. No matter whether it's land-use legislation, whether it's election legislation, whether it's legislation about lollipops and unicorns, they only talk to their friends on the legislation, and it's ridiculous. They're invited guests.

Then this Treasury Board president keeps saying: "Well, why didn't you show up to some of these consultations on the budget, for example? Why didn't you show up to some of these?" Because we tried to show up for the health ones, and we were told we couldn't come in. We just assumed we couldn't go to the financial ones.

It's absolutely ridiculous. Absolutely ridiculous.

Mr. McIver: Burn your bra, Rob.

Mr. Anderson: Well, the Minister of Transportation just told me to burn my bra, or in my case it would be a 'mansierre.' I'm not going to burn my mansierre. I quite like my mansierre. I think that this shows again the decorum on that side of the House. Once again, just amazing decorum. Amazing decorum.

I will say, Mr. Speaker, that this is not a bill that I can support because it is a bill that is in my view completely hypocritical in every way, shape, and form. Now, because we have this foreign concept of free votes that just seems to defy all logic for some folks over there, there may be one or two folks over here – or three or four or 10; who knows? – that are going to vote for this bill because they believe that it is a start.

We just finished potty training my children, for example, and we give them Smarties when they go in the toilet. Even when they miss it nine times, if they get it once, we give them a Smartie. I think that's kind of the idea here. Some of them want to give a Smartie because they hit the toilet on a couple of things. Unfortun-nately, they keep missing the toilet on everything else. That is the problem, and that's why I cannot give them candy and support their bill.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Sherwood Park, would you take your seat, please.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's not entirely a pleasure to get up and speak to Bill 7 on third reading, a bill that we will in our caucus be voting against. [interjections] I know it's a big shocker over there. I gave some thought to how I would approach this issue and how I would talk about it.

You know, today in question period I thought about the workings of the Election Act and how important it is to Albertans. Today in question period I heard the Premier say again, over and over, that she did not make a certain decision. She said that even though there is not one, Mr. Speaker, not two, not three, not four, but five documents from four separate people, including the Premier herself, which say that she made that decision.

Now, I understand that the Speaker of this House has made a ruling about that. Apparently, we all need to determine inside this House that it's possible to have two sets of facts, two sets of the truth, and that's why it's okay for the Premier to have said what she said, notwithstanding the documentary record, which is clearly there for everybody to see.

The relevance of that issue to this bill, Mr. Speaker, is that at some point, somewhere, somehow the Premier needs to be held accountable for having a version of events which clearly only exists in a different dimension, in a different galaxy somewhere. This bill is extremely important because this bill includes the rules around the process through which Albertans will eventually be able to hold this Premier accountable for advocating a set of facts which are contradicted by not one, not two, not three, not four, but five separate documents. Sooner or later she has to be held accountable, but she will only be held accountable if we have an Election Act which ensures genuine fairness of the process.

So let's talk about that Election Act and the process that led up to that Election Act. Well, like everything else in this Legislature, Mr. Speaker, that process was flawed, and that process was geared to ensure that people on one side of the House got unfair access and unfair influence as to how those rules were devised. Now, it's fine when you are in government. Of course, we all understand how legislation works. We understand the role of the executive branch of government in coming up with legislation and discussing it with the governing caucus and putting that to the Assembly. We all understand that. But there are certain areas, certain issues which rest appropriately not in the executive branch of government, not over in the government caucus, but squarely in the centre of this Assembly because those are rules which impact this Assembly as a whole.

One of those areas is elections law. It is fundamental to democracy that elections law is developed fairly. That's why we have a Chief Electoral Officer, and that's why usually in the normal course of things in healthy democracies, which this is not, but nonetheless, the rules are developed through the recommendations of the Chief Electoral Officer with fair and open consultation with all elected members of the Assembly.

But, Mr. Speaker, that didn't happen in this case. In this case one side of the House got the recommendations three months before the rest of us did. The government got the recommendations. The government got the rules, and they got to play with them, and by the very admission of one of the speakers on that side they got to talk to their party volunteers. They got to consult with them on it. We had it dumped on us a little over a week ago. Then we had the government bring in a notice of motion to give themselves the authority at any time to sever debate to four hours. They use that as a means of bullying their way into having this bill discussed at this point in the day with very, very little debate.

As has already been outlined in a great deal of detail by the Official Opposition leader, there have been copious amendments proposed to this legislation by opposition members in an effort to restore the balance that exists within this legislation. In amendment after amendment after amendment after amendment the folks on that side voted it down, and they voted it down in a very fast way, without really having a fulsome discussion because, again, they wanted to get out of here at a certain point. They used the threat of closure to negotiate a severed debate, a shortened debate, on this issue when they've already had three months to deliberate on it and we've had one week. Mr. Speaker, I mean, it's just part and parcel of how things run here.

You know, I said it yesterday, but I'm going to say it again. When people over there complain about decorum in this Assembly, I say: look in the mirror. Because when you play it that way, you get what comes to you, and you need to own the consequences that you create. Again, it sounds like I'm talking to kids. Everyone keeps having this analogy where you're talking to kids, simple basic rules that you apply to kids, and once again I'm in the position of having to do that just as previous speakers on the opposition side were. I wish that wasn't the case. I wish we didn't need to speak that way to members of the government.

Anyway, we have a flawed, flawed piece of legislation, and we're being asked to vote on it. For that reason, we will vote against it because it is so incredibly flawed.

Now, there were a lot of amendments that were put forward, and it's hard in the brief amount of time that I have, Mr. Speaker, to speak to this. I think I have – I don't know – about nine minutes left to really go over in great, great detail all the problems that exist in this legislation. Let me start by saying that what you need to be able to do is ensure that every different type of stakeholder in this system is represented. I outlined before that we have at least two elements of this legislation which quite intentionally discriminate against small parties. You know, it's to be expected. You get a big party that goes behind closed doors, comes up with their own set of rules, rams it through. Hardly surprising that we come up with a set of rules that discourage the success and ability of small parties. Not only in terms of the filing requirements but also in terms of the shortening of the nomination day, there's a clear intention to make it more challenging for small parties. Hardly surprising.

When you look at the funding limits – and this has already been outlined – these guys think that it's totally reasonable for somebody to walk in and write a cheque for $30,000 to their favourite candidate. Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the median individual income in Alberta is $36,000 a year. How many folks are going to walk in and write a cheque for $30,000? I'll tell you how many. I'll tell you who they are. I hate to use an oft-referred to phrase, but they're the 1 per cent. Those are the folks that are going to say: "Oh, 30 grand? Whatever. I'll write that. Go. Then I'll call you after you're elected, and we'll have lunch. We'll have a conversation about some of my issues. No pressure, but here's your cheque for 30 grand." That's how it works. But the median income in Alberta after taxes is less than what these guys want to be able to accept from their friends and insiders.

Again, it ensures that the big parties who are in control get to stay in control. It's the winning team. Apparently, part of winning is that you get to hire the ref and you get to remake the rules so that next year everyone is really surprised when you win again. That's what this government is doing in terms of accountability, transparency, fairness, all that kind of stuff.

What else are they doing? Well, according to the Justice minister they're planning on not just supplementing their enumeration process; they plan on eliminating in-person enumeration and going to a system of solely relying on tax records. I have some extreme concerns about that. I've had concerns about the effort of the Chief Electoral Officer and the resources that he's been provided, through a majority decision of the committee that oversees him, in terms of being able to get everyone on the electoral list who's often left off of it. People who move often, who are marginally housed, students: those people are less likely to be on the voters list. Certainly, with the new plans they are less likely to be on the voters list. Hardly surprising that this is the kind of thing that provides an advantage to the governing party.

Expense limits. Again, our party proposed that there should be a cap on how much people spend on elections. There are election spending caps throughout this country, Mr. Speaker. Federal election spending caps for ridings which are three times the size of our provincial ridings are lower than what a significant number of members on that side of the House spent on their election last time. There is no need to have to spend as much as you want to get elected. You know, if an MP can get themselves elected with $85,000 or whatever the limit is – it's something around that – there is no reason why an Alberta MLA cannot get themselves elected for half that. But, no, we're not going to put a cap on expenses. We're going to keep open the opportunity to buy our path to victory. That's really important for them.

Probably one of the single biggest things when it comes to funding, of course, is the very unfortunate debacle that we've had to observe with respect to the Katz donation, the loopholes that exist in our legislation, and the resolute refusal on the part of this government to close that loophole because it's a loophole they want to be able to reach through at any time and take full advantage of. Again, this legislation does not deal with the fact that somebody can walk in, write a cheque for $450,000, and provide up to a third of the money raised by a particular political party three days before the election.

I don't know how you can look at that situation and not get worried about the integrity of our electoral system. I think the average person, when presented with those facts, is perplexed at the unwillingness of this government to fix the problem, and they are left to draw their own conclusions. Mr. Speaker, those conclusions are not positive ones.

The other thing this legislation fails to do is that it fails to ban corporate and union donations. I had an opportunity to talk about it yesterday. Again, it's the kind of thing that makes sense to make sure that our electoral system belongs to citizens and not to bank accounts. That's what we tried to do on the opposition side. The government, clearly aware that the majority of their funds come from corporations, the very folks who then call them up and ask them to go out for lunch a few weeks later, was unwilling to close that loophole. Again, this does not reflect well on the integrity of the folks on the other side.

The final thing that I want to talk about is the way in which this government has structured the regulation of this act to cover up their past misdeeds. They had the gall, I would say, to argue that this legislation opens up disclosure. That, Mr. Speaker, is quite ridiculous. Yes, a bit of information going back three years will come forward; i.e., information, files that have already been opened. Not all of them, just to be clear. According to the Chief Electoral Officer roughly 40 per cent of them will be lost to that three-year limitation period, so a lot of that information, a lot of that illegal activity will never be made known to Albertans. This government fully knew that when they identified the three-year limitation period.

They then added a new limitation period, Mr. Speaker. It used to be that the Chief Electoral Officer could impose an administrative penalty as far back as was necessary. Now they can only go back three years. Just to be absolutely clear so everyone understands this, this new elections act will ensure that the Premier's sister will never be subjected to any penalty, nor will we ever know about anything that would happen to her – well, actually, it wouldn't matter because she'll just never be subjected to any penalty.

The fact of the matter is that this was an extremely self-interested crafting of the legislation. It was crafted by one team in the tournament. They kept it to themselves. They were very intentional in how they put it forward. They ensured that the rules were constructed to bring about their advantage and no one else's advantage. It is a travesty to suggest that this is anything bordering on fair, transparent, or accountable.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, to go back to my original point, the fact that the Premier got up today and said that she did not make a decision, a statement which was contradicted by not one, not two, not three, not four, but five pieces of documented evidence – I am not entirely sure that she'll ever be held accountable by Albertans because the rules have been crafted in such a way as to give as much advantage to the Conservative Party as possible.

It will really be a challenge for Albertans who are truly interested in having a Premier who will give them the straight goods, who will tell the truth in a way that . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I recognize the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to hear your comments, hon. member, about what impact you think this process and this outcome will have on the average Albertan. Do they care about the Election Accountability Amendment Act?

Ms Notley: Well, I think the Member for Calgary-Mountain View raises a really important question because I think that what's happening is that Albertans are becoming very alienated by our democratic process. They're alienated by the rule-fixing that goes on over and over, and they feel disconnected from their democratic system. There is absolutely no question that this set of rules will only serve to enhance that particular feeling. So, ironically, the very interest that ought to be there for this particular piece of legislation is probably being thwarted by this piece of legislation and has been thwarted by the conduct of this government over many, many, many years.

It's certainly my hope that at a certain point Albertans will see what this legislation is designed to do, what it's designed to hide, what it's designed to keep from them. I guess we'll only see three and a half years from now, not at a particular date, of course, because notwithstanding the fact that the Premier promised to give us an exact date when we'd know when we'd next have an election, she didn't do that either. So at some point in the future during an election window, season, time, phase of the moon we may find out what Albertans think about the credibility of this government on issues of honesty and integrity and fairness.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others on 29(2)(a)? The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the hon. member if she would still think it was important or beneficial to have the ban on corporate donations if the $3,000 maximum would have applied as the most that any corporation or any individual could donate and especially coupled with real teeth in the legislation, where the allegation of the $430,000 couldn't apply, where people have to actually donate their own money from their own funds?

Ms Notley: Well, that's an interesting question. There's no doubt that had there been a cap on the donations, bringing it down from $30,000 to the $3,000 that our caucus proposed, the issue of who's making those donations would become somewhat less important. But I do think at the end of the day that corporations don't vote; unions don't vote. People vote. People are the ones who should donate. So there's another objective that is met there by banning union and corporate donations. But the member raises a good point, that had the government been prepared to drop the limit from $30,000 to $3,000, part of those issues around corruption, around influencing, all those kinds of things could have been addressed.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 7. I've always taken the vantage point that when the government does something that makes sense, that's in the public good, we should support it regardless of which party we're in. If it's something that's actually of good intent, which is, you know, half or 60 per cent good, we should have an opportunity to suggest improvements so that we could make it 95 per cent good, maybe 100 per cent. But when it's complete nonsense, then opposition should absolutely oppose.

Now, there are some good things in this bill, Mr. Speaker. There are some good things in this bill. I'm glad that university students can vote. That's a good thing. I'm glad that they followed many of the recommendations of the Chief Electoral Officer.

Now, the problem with this bill is that it's analogous to an omnibus bill, where you lump in a whole bunch of good ideas with a whole bunch of rotten ideas. All the elected members are in a quandary, where you actually want to support these good ideas, but you can't support the rotten ones. If you vote for the bill to support the five, six good ideas, then you're actually voting to support the rotten ideas as well. That's a problem with these omnibus bills when you stick four major bills into one thing.

You know, it's teamwork, Mr. Speaker – it's teamwork as good as it gets – to unanimously vote down every amendment, every idea offered by everyone else in every political party, who says: "You know what? Hey, a good try." In fact, let us all work together as elected members to try to make this 95 per cent. We all agree: hey, this thing is at about 60 per cent, maybe 65 per cent. But I'll tell you that in the world I come from, that ain't good enough; 65 per cent is not good enough. In the world in which we live, in this province, as great as it is, the citizens demand 95 to 100 per cent.

I can't believe 100 per cent of the recommendations got unanimously voted down. Now, Mr. Speaker, I can understand teamwork. I came from that team, and I can understand the tire tracks that will be on your back if you disagree. I'm still trying to wear some of those tire tracks off my back. I know the tire tracks on the whip's back over there. He's constantly under the bus, regularly, and he honourably does it.

Mr. Speaker, this is really about democracy. It's about trust. It's about rebuilding trust with the public. We are here to serve the public. Government's job is to equalize, to create equality of opportunity for all Albertans, to give everybody a fair chance. In Darwinism, survival of the fittest – well, jeez, even Darwin wouldn't support this bill because this has given a bigger opportunity to the guys that already have an unfair chance, who are already doing extraordinarily well. But I will give them a C plus for a college try.

You know, the opposition parties have raised many issues. What I'm a little surprised about – this is a conservative party, a conservative party, the federal Conservative Party. Now, guys in the Wildrose, please stop calling them liberals because there ain't nothing liberal about these guys. Nothing liberal about these guys.

Mrs. Forsyth: What are they?

Dr. Sherman: Well, they're neither progressive nor conservative, just corrupt and incompetent.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, you have the floor.

Dr. Sherman: Even the federal Conservative Party and the federal Liberal Party and the federal ND Party and the federal Green Party abide by setting donation limits of $1,100 maximum and limiting corporate and union donations, limiting influence from a small group of people, an influence that will affect a decision on a majority of people.

Well, you know, I can sort of understand because it's a really old, tired, 41-year-old party. They're still living in the past. Our decisions are to improve our democracy for the future. Now, there are many intelligent members on that side. There are many intelligent members – I know them – very smart people. But in the words of the hon. member from the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, this legislation is feeble, it's weak, it's pale, it's insufficient, and it's poor. It's poor, and it does not address the deficiencies in our democracy.

4:20

Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about the deficiencies in our democracy. Last time I checked, we've got Illegal-donationgate going on here. We tabled all this Warlord-politics Donationgate. Many members of Alberta said: hey, this is just how business is done here, forcing universities and colleges and municipal leaders, everyone . . . [interjection] We brought 40 of these forward, and we still haven't got answers. The last time I checked, we got Tobaccogate. The last time I checked, we got Intimidationgate. The last time I checked, we got Fudge-it Budgetgate. The last time I checked, we got Showergate. Showergate: "If you're a disabled or vulnerable Albertan, we'll give you one shower – that's it – because the buddy that gave me that donation won't make any money if he gives you a second shower." Holy cow. We've got a family plan.

The Deputy Speaker: Are you still on third reading of the bill, hon. member?

Dr. Sherman: Oh, absolutely, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Please continue, then.

Dr. Sherman: This is the worst decision money could buy, the worst government money could buy, corrupt and incompetent government.

The last time I checked, we got Environmentgate. Mr. Speaker, these guys have been given a lottery ticket. A lottery ticket. Any province, any state, any country in the world would love to have a 4 per cent unemployment rate, $90-a-barrel oil, the hardest working labour workforce on the planet, hard-working men, women, and children from across the planet in search of a dream and opportunity. But what did the money buy? What did the money buy? The last time I checked, it bought Princess Flip-flop as a Premier. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, please.

Dr. Sherman: The last time I checked, Mr. Speaker, it brought us one of the biggest spending governments, with the worst outcomes and results in the country: one of the lowest high school completion rates in the country, one of the lowest postsecondary participation rates in the country, one of the highest spending, lowest performing health care systems in the country. We're nickel and diming the wonderful people – the veterans, the seniors – who built this great province and this great country. We're nickel and diming them.

Now, we've got to get back to the election campaign finances and contributions rules. We've got to fix these rules. Interested parties that donate tens of thousands of dollars, hundreds of thousands of dollars from some, for leadership campaigns and for election campaigns are able to get decisions that are not necessarily in the best interests of the people.

I challenge every political party in this Legislature to run an election campaign on a $150,000 central budget. I tell you that even the NDP outspent us 4 to 1, and they're good guys.

But I can understand why they need $4 million, $5 million for an election campaign. If she had to work hard, door to door, and earn it, with no money in the bank, they wouldn't win. I question if they would be able to win. As a Liberal in Alberta you get 9 per cent of the vote, and you pick up five seats. We spent next to nothing.

It's no surprise that they don't want a level playing field. I'm glad they've decided to put everything public. That's a good thing. But they're really rubbing it in people's faces, saying: "You know what? We're going to keep making these decisions, and we're going to keep getting the donations, and there's nothing you can do about it. We're going to keep winning."

Mr. Speaker, I would really urge the government – you know what? I would actually urge the backbenchers in that government. Government is really the Premier and cabinet. The backbenchers in that government are new. Well, many of you are new. I would urge you to vote against your government's bill because what you're actually going to do is endorse a lot of this stuff. You're going to pass a bill that's only 65 per cent, and you're going to be held accountable in the next election. You are. I caution you because on the off-chance that the Liberals get one $15,000 donation, if we have half a million dollars in a campaign – I'm keeping my Liberal vote next election and stealing the real progressive vote back from you.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let's try to improve democracy, the trust in decision-making. You know, I'm disappointed that good people across the way have an opportunity to do something fantastic.

Mr. Speaker, the last thing I want to say: to lower the limit to $250 almost seems as though they're going after the little guy, the little guy that has given, you know, 300 bucks. Three hundred bucks ain't a heck of a lot. It almost seems like they just want to find out who their donors are by lowering the limit. Because these guys raised a million bucks under $375, you'd almost sort of question whether part of this bill was actually intended to get their donors to give less. They're going after the little guy. This is the big-guy bill going after the little guy.

Now, it would be a fair and balanced bill if they did that but combined that with decreasing maximum contributions. Guys, would you consider five grand? Would you consider three grand? One grand?

Mr. Mason: Let's make a deal.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Dr. Sherman: Let's make a deal. Let's consider eliminating corporate and union donations. Even the NDP wants to get rid of union donations. I think that's a good thing. [interjection] Oh, they don't? I'll take that one back, Mr. Speaker.

You know, I would fully support what we've done in the federal government, limiting leadership campaign finance donations. I think $30,000 is too much. I think 20 grand is too much. I think 15 grand is too much. I think 10 grand is too much. I think five grand is too much.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask every member on that side to reconsider, especially the backbenchers. I recognize that you're not in government, but at the end of the day the true people who have power are the backbenchers. Private members on that side, you have more power than cabinet right here. You do. Consider not supporting this bill unanimously.

Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for this opportunity. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this bill. I cannot support this bill although there are many very good elements in this bill. They are some very good elements in this bill. To some of those organizations: I'm so sorry. I would love to support those elements if it just wasn't an omnibus bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Mr. Fawcett: I love the rhetoric coming from this hon. member. I just pulled up the election finance disclosure from the Liberal candidate that ran against me in the last election, went on to his disclosure. Remember that I believe the donation limit to a candidate in an election year is $2,000, right? This candidate received a donation from Blake Rand, an in-kind donation of $8,782; from the Belfry, $5,440; and from Quality Hotel, $10,000. I'm not sure that this leader and his party have the moral authority to really speak on this particular legislation in the way that he is.

Speaker's Ruling Third Reading Debate

The Speaker: Hon. members, your Speaker has been listening to the debate even from elsewhere. However, I'm going to remind you again that the purpose of third reading is not much different than the purpose of second reading. What is always at purpose is relevance. Relevance has many different ways, shapes, and forms of being described, but one of them is to stick to things that are in the bill. That applies to all of you equally. So let's please try and keep the debate on third reading of Bill 7, which is correctly titled Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012.

Debate Continued

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of the allegations that the member brought up, the donations. I ask him to table them in the House, and I ask him to refer them to the Chief Electoral Officer.

4:30

The Speaker: Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, you were not rising under 29(2)(a), were you?

Mr. Anglin: A question under 29(2)(a), that's correct.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Anglin: That's correct.

The Speaker: Then proceed, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Anglin: I just would like to ask the hon. member: if the allegations are correct – I won't dispute whether they are or not – how would that affect your reporting your party as far as compliance if it was greater than three years?

The Speaker: Well, again, hon. members, you'd better tie your response to the bill, please. Okay. Thank you.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, hon. member. I don't know what he's talking about. I personally in my own constituency have a policy of not looking at who donated and how much they donated because I don't want any decision I make to be biased. The Liberal Party makes decisions that are in the best interests of the public and the best interests of the people, and we advocate. We've never been in the position to make the ultimate decision. If the hon. member has any allegation of any impropriety, I ask him to table it in the House. I ask him to refer it to the Chief Electoral Officer. In fact, I ask them to pass legislation where the Chief Electoral Officer brings this up. [interjections]

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, please.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the President of Treasury Board. Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Mason: We're still on 29(2)(a)? I would like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark to talk a little bit about spending limits as opposed to donation limits. I was wondering what position he took on that.

Dr. Sherman: I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood for asking a very important question. You know, I believe we need to take a holistic, comprehensive approach to election and leadership campaign financing rules. I think we should have a debate on what is the maximum amount you should spend. I believe that's a very important debate to have. In fact, perhaps we should look at what the federal government has done. Or – you know what? – you get X number of votes; you get X amount. Every political party gets an opportunity to run a fair election in each constituency, and every party has the resources. I think that's a very fair question by the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker, it's hard to have a debate here when the party that makes the ultimate decisions shoots down every amendment that any opposition party makes and limits the time on how long you can debate these ideas, and then they run out of the Legislature as fast as they can because Santa is on his way.

To the hon. member: a very good question. I'm very open to having that debate. Like I said, hey, it would be great if you set campaign expenditure limits for political parties at $150,000. I'd love to see how these guys can compete, although $150,000 is probably unreasonably low.

Thank you, hon. member.

The Speaker: The President of Treasury Board. Seven seconds.

Mr. Horner: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member said he doesn't know who or how much they contributed to his campaign, yet it's going to change his decision.

The Speaker: Time has elapsed. We'll move on to the next speaker, the hon. member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I won't take too long. I know that this bill has been thoroughly addressed by the Leader of the Official Opposition as well as the Government House Leader, but I am pleased as the Wildrose Justice critic to rise today and speak to the Election Accountability Amendment Act. However, I'm not so pleased with the content or, rather, the lack of substantive content in this act. To fully understand how this act came about, it is helpful to look at the events leading up to Bill 7, and for my constituents it hits close to home.

Last year there was a CBC investigation that revealed that a municipality in my constituency of Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills had made significant and ongoing illegal donations to the PC Party. From this investigation it became clear to my constituents, indeed to all Albertans, that the PCs had blurred the lines between government and party, with municipalities stuck in the middle. They broke the law consistently over a number of years. The PC Party solicited heavily for these illegal donations, with the implication that if municipalities didn't pay up, they wouldn't get funding. This put municipalities, colleges, and other prohibited corporations in a tight spot.

Further news reports revealed that this problem was not confined just to my constituency of Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. It appeared to be a deliberate and methodical means of raising funds, more or less exploiting the taxpayer, by the PC Party in government. This is just wrong, Mr. Speaker, and nothing in this act has changed that.

Now, many people throughout Alberta thought that the government, embarrassed by scandal after scandal after scandal of illegal donations, would do something to fix the problem. In my constituency as Justice critic I've heard time and time again that laws regarding political donations need to be strengthened so this can never happen again. The government has commended itself for bringing forward Bill 7, but let's please hold the applause because it seems that while pretending to respond to the ongoing scandal of illegal donations to the PC Party, Bill 7 does absolutely nothing that could in any way be interpreted as putting an end to the illegal donations, illegally solicited and accepted by the PC Party. Bill 7 does nothing to make political parties caught red-handed pay back the money they've accepted. There are no provisions to penalize political parties that do this and nothing to punish repeat offenders like the PC Party, which seems to rely heavily on illegal donations for its lifeblood.

What the Wildrose has done is called for the full disclosure and evidence that illegal donations have actually been repaid. Of course, we've called for this to be retroactive seven years and for a mandatory requirement that the Chief Electoral Officer publicly report any transgressions or any wrongdoings. Unfortunately, the act as it stands now only goes back three years, and it only goes back three years from the date of proclamation. That could be a year from now, and a bunch of illegal donations that have been found by the Chief Electoral Officer will never be brought to light. I think that's a shame, that where someone in this province has been caught with illegally soliciting or accepting a donation, it will never be made public, Mr. Speaker. No other modern democracy currently would allow such an outdated method of elections financing.

Next, after a single donor was allegedly caught making a $430,000 donation to a particular party, one that appeared to be a bailout of that party in a time of need and a time of despair, one may have assumed that the government would be seeking to clarify rules so that such an instance would never happen again. The Wildrose put forward an amendment to ensure that one person or entity cannot donate on behalf of another entity. That seemed to be a very reasonable amendment to stop that type of situation from happening. One can only assume that by rejecting that amendment, it was a deliberate attempt to allow that loophole to continue, and I think that's wrong, Mr. Speaker.

The problems with Bill 7 don't just stop there. Bill 7 continues to allow corporate and union donations. In today's age the public just doesn't feel comfortable with unions and corporations and big money exercising undue influence in the electoral process.

I think that Albertans think a lot differently than the government on this, and I've heard a lot from my constituents on it. Bill 7 in the end virtually allows and ensures that election scandals will occur and will continue to occur. We could have had a first-class piece of legislation that led our country, led western democracies. Instead, this bill falls flat. Albertans deserve better.

I will not be supporting this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:40

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Speaker's Ruling Third Reading Debate

The Speaker: Let me just take 20 seconds to briefly remind all members in an educational sense about House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 788, with respect to third reading. It says in a nutshell: "Debate at this stage of the legislative process focuses on the final form of the bill. The amendments that are admissible at this stage are similar to those that were admissible at second reading stage." Let's just keep that in mind as we move forward.

Debate Continued

The Speaker: Seeing that there's no one under 29(2)(a), we'll move on to the hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to third reading of Bill 7, the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012. I want to begin by talking about how election finance and election legislation ought to be developed and contrast that to the way that this bill was developed.

The major stakeholders in election financing legislation are, first and foremost, the citizens, the people who make up the democracy and whose participation in the process is essential to make sure that we have a free, fair, and completely above board electoral system. There are other stakeholders, Mr. Speaker, and primary among those are the political parties themselves. They are significant stakeholders because their actions, their functions, and their activities are governed by this legislation. They are major components of our electoral democracy, and they deserve to be consulted in the development of legislation.

Unfortunately, that did not happen in the development of this bill. We don't know what consultation took place with the Progressive Conservative Party. I think we may never know that, but I certainly assume that it was significant and extensive. I do know that there was no consultation with any other political party in the development of this legislation.

When I challenged the Minister of Justice on this very point, he attempted to argue that the bill briefings that were offered to the caucuses that are in the Legislature comprise consultation. Of course, Mr. Speaker, that is absolute nonsense. Once the bill was drafted, then the opposition parties were given the courtesy of a briefing as to what's in the bill. It's not to the party; it's to the legislative caucus of the party. They are two different things, at least in our party and, in my experience, in the opposition parties as well. They're not the same thing. The LAO, for example, is quite vigilant to make sure that there's no crossover or confusion between the legislative caucus of a party and a political party. In fact, I think they go to extremes from time to time in their diligence in enforcing that principle.

There are many political parties in this province that are not currently represented in this Legislature, and they, of course, would not be given the courtesy of a bill briefing because they're not part of the Legislature, all of which puts the lie to the argument that somehow political parties other than the Progressive Conservative Party were in fact consulted on this legislation. They were not. We were not. We know that the Liberals were not. We know that the Wildrose was not. We know that other smaller political parties that aren't here were not consulted either. Now, if you contrast that with the consultation that did take place, for example, with postsecondary students, with municipalities, and so on, you'll see that the government is capable of actually consulting with stakeholders if they want to. Clearly, they did not want to in this case.

So the bill, Mr. Speaker, is tainted from the beginning because of its one-sided development by a government who intends to hold onto power at any cost. The bill is not going to do anything, does not contain any provisions which might be contrary to the interests of the Progressive Conservative Party and to holding onto power. You can see that when you get into the meat of the bill, when you see the provisions that are there.

This bill will provide a limit of three years on how far you can look back at illegal donations. Many significant cases involving illegal donations to the Progressive Conservative Party, by Progressive Conservative operatives in many cases, took place before the statute of limitations imposed by this bill, and there are almost a hundred documented cases, Mr. Speaker, of illegal donations that have been made. We know that some of them have been investigated because we've asked and other political parties and some citizens have asked in some cases for these to be investigated. Of course, the Chief Electoral Officer has refused to disclose the details of the investigations or penalties or the persons who were involved.

This will change for offences that occurred within the last three years but not before, so the government has closed the door on investigating these things. In fact, the government seems to be very keen on making sure that all of the transgressions in the past are forgotten and that we look to the future. They ask us to accept their assurances that when it comes to expenses from health authorities or when it comes to illegal campaign donations or when it comes to many other things, they've changed their stripes, that they're not the same old cat that they used to be, and that the 41 years that they've had in power are no longer affecting how they operate.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't accept that. I don't think that many members on this side of the House or many Albertans accept that this PC government is going to operate in a more honest and straightforward way. They are, in fact, the serial offender when it comes to illegal campaign donations in this province, and I have scant hope that the provisions in this legislation will change that.

Another thing I think is very important, and it's been raised by other political parties here. I know that the Wildrose made an amendment to eliminate corporate donations, which was of course shot down by the PC majority. I would like to personally welcome the Wildrose to that position. I know it's a new one for them, but I think that it does provide for a government and an electoral process that is less controlled by big money and by special interests, and I think that that's very important.

Mr. Speaker, we did a little bit of research. The Progressive Conservative Party in the last election got 65 per cent of its campaign donations from corporate interests. Sixty-five per cent. You know, you can't be surprised about that if you look at their legislation, if you look at the kinds of things that they stand for and the interests that they serve. The oil and gas industry is a major one. Law firms do very well by this government, as does business generally.

You can look in all sorts of areas: how they approach issues, why they are always flirting with private health care. The government spends I think close to $12 billion on health care. Most of it goes for public goods and services. Now, the private interests that see this – yes, the private interests that see this – money being spent are pretty excited by the possibility that some of that could come to them, so they make contributions to the PC Party.

We see the result of that in the approach that the PCs take in this area and in all sorts of areas. The lack of environmental oversight in terms of oil sands activity, in terms of fracking, in terms of conventional oil and gas: all of those things place corporate interests ahead of the environment. They place corporate interests ahead of the interests of ordinary people. You don't have to look much past their appalling labour legislation, the worst in the country. It makes it very difficult to form unions, provides no protection to farm workers. All of this is a reflection of who's financing the PC Party and, therefore, making sure that the influence that they have with the government remains dominant.

So those are things that we would like to see. We would like to see limits on spending overall. A more level playing field in terms of election finance is, in fact, in the best interests of the public, but it's not in the interests of the PC Party, obviously, and that's really why they wouldn't support it. There are a range of changes that we would like to see, Mr. Speaker, to make things more open, more fair, more balanced, to take big money out of politics, to make sure that the ordinary citizen is the driving force and the subject of the political activity of this province.

Before I conclude, I want to say that there are some positive things here with respect to making it easier for students to vote, for providing more clarity and openness with respect to municipal election financing, and so on.

I'll just mention that there are some components here amending the Senatorial Selection Act, Mr. Speaker. We would just as soon get rid of that altogether. We were the first party to talk in this country about Senate reform, and we believe in the triple-A Senate: abolish, abolish, abolish. They're redundant. We don't need more government, more elected politicians, or more appointed politicians to govern this country. That's my hope for the Wildrose's next step in their political development, that they will come to see that true Senate reform involves the abolition of that house of patronage.

Ms Notley: Climate change.

Mr. Mason: My honourable colleague says climate change, but I can't hope for the moon. But I do think that getting rid of the Senate and these silly Senate elections would be a very positive step as well, Mr. Speaker.

In conclusion, I want to say that the bill was flawed from the beginning because it was developed by a government that only talks to itself. It doesn't talk to other political parties. It doesn't think they have a legitimate role, and we've seen that from the conduct of business in the House during this session. The government's arrogance, disdain for the democratic principles of this Assembly, and contempt for the opposition have been more than evident. They won't answer questions. They won't hold people accountable. They won't take responsibility. It's pretty clear that the flaws in this bill have their root in the same flaws of how the government is dealing with the entire legislative agenda that we've seen in this fall session of the Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, as I've indicated, there are a number of positive aspects of this bill that we'd like to support if they were separated, but it's joined as an omnibus bill, which really includes a poison pill. You can't vote for the stuff that you would like to see without also voting for stuff that you just find completely unacceptable. So it's with regret that I have to indicate to the House that I'll be unable to support this bill, and I urge members of the Assembly to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, section 29(2)(a) is available.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, I appreciated the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I noticed he didn't choose to make any comments about unions and their current inclusion in donations to parties. Would he like to make any comments about how he would like to see the role of unions in elections?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, we have been even-handed in our approach all along.

An Hon. Member: All along? When?

Mr. Mason: Well, when we originally took this position a number of years ago – I think it was after the 2001 election – we adopted the position of eliminating both union and corporate donations, treating them together, and I think that that's an even-handed and fair approach. I don't support the suggestions that have been made by some members in the House that unions themselves have no business getting involved in political activity, but I do think their role in giving campaign contributions needs to be eliminated along with corporations'.

I think unions have very clear interests, their members as a whole, and they have a right to be politically active, to take positions that are democratically arrived at by their membership. Those that would try to limit that I think are on pretty dangerous ground. What's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. You would have to see, in my view, similar restrictions placed on corporate political involvement. They're not the same thing. The financing of elections is a part but only a part of a broader involvement in politics, which I think we curtail at great risk to the rights of working people and to the rights of freedom of speech.

The Speaker: Anyone else under 29(2)(a)?

If not, let me recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise and speak in third reading to this important bill, that I think all Albertans were anticipating with some eagerness, especially those who have any involvement in political activity. I think this was going to be – and I think it will be – the cornerstone of how people evaluate the credibility of this government. They had an opportunity. They recognized over the last few years that as a government of some 40 years some rot had crept into the political system, and they wanted to address it. Under this new Premier they made a commitment to look at issues around financing and limits and accountability with, well, I think the only word is "scandals" that have been plaguing this government for a number of years around how money is influencing political decisions and buying access.

There was, I think, a genuine attempt in bringing this bill forward to address some of these concerns. Like others in the opposition, I think we're profoundly disappointed that the two elephants in the room, the amount of donations and the fact that unions and corporations can still dominate the whole electoral process with their deep pockets, still rankle and, I think, are not going to be lost on Albertans, who will look at the terms of this and see no essential change in the big, big influences, the big, as I call them, elephants in the room that have not been addressed with any change. We still, Mr. Speaker, in 2012 have to acknowledge that we are the best democracy money can buy.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Dr. Swann: I heard affirmation from the other side.

I want to talk just a bit about the concept of wilful blindness, Mr. Speaker. Wilful blindness is a medical condition wherein an individual organization seeks to avoid liability for a crime or a civil irregularity by making themselves deliberately unaware of facts which could make them liable either in the public civil courts or in the criminal courts. That's based on a definition that is online.

Wilful blindness, of course, protects people in situations where people make deliberate attempts to excuse themselves from liability.

5:00

What we've seen in this session and in this government is a profound case of wilful blindness, I would say. They do not want to see what is clearly evident to all Albertans and certainly to those in the opposition parties, who see a government that continues to do the same things over and over again and is surprised when not only the opposition parties but the media, under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, begin to show the rot that has infested this government and its decision-making, a government that is consistently and more obviously every day showing how money does influence decisions, how it favours certain interests over others, and how it fails to provide for the long-term interests of Albertans, whether it's in social supports, early intervention for children, mental health care, or whether it relates to labour issues and farm workers, as has been mentioned, ignoring some of the gross inequities and lack of accountability that has crept into this government.

They refuse to see it. Quite consistently we've seen in this session and on this bill, the Election Accountability Amendment Act, a refusal to acknowledge any good in any of the amendments, over 100 amendments, brought forward within a week of our having seen this bill for the first time. As has been said, there was no genuine effort on the part of this government to make us aware of what was going to be in the bill and what kinds of changes they were looking at.

It speaks for itself. I think Albertans, unfortunately many, will be so discouraged by the lack of progress in the whole electoral financing issue and the accountability issue that they will simply pull away further from the democratic process. We had the lowest turnout in history in 2008, and we had only a slight improvement in our voter turnout this past election, I think in part because people are so cynical about the way corporations and money continue to influence and provide advantage to incumbents and particularly this government of 42 years.

The decisions made in this bill have reinforced widespread cynicism about not only the electoral process but us as politicians, that we're looking out for our own interests, for party interests over better public policy and longer term decisions on behalf of the public. Why should people believe in democracy when it continues to be subverted by this 42-year party with the agenda, primarily, of getting re-elected? It has demonstrated a lack of accountability on revelations of illegal donations, conflicts of interest, flip-flops on openness and accountability, and decisions made before and after the elections. With a government that's still committed to having its own MLAs set our salaries and benefits, what does that say to a populace that is in many cases struggling with a very high cost of living and a median salary that is well below anything that we see in the House?

The two elephants in the room, as I indicated, Mr. Speaker, are the practice of allowing alarmingly high donation limits, $30,000 in an election year and $15,000 in a nonelection year. Huge influence. I spent little more than $30,000 in my election; I can't imagine getting one cheque of $30,000 from a corporation. The second elephant in the room, of course, is allowing corporations, who do not have a vote, to have inordinate influence. Up to two-thirds of the donations across the way in this government are corporate, and it, again, speaks to the power of the corporations that they're unwilling to make the changes that Albertans are asking them to make. I mean, it's so blatant. Well, wilful blindness, I guess, is the only term.

As a physician I know it's difficult for people with a condition to do anything about it, but one would expect educated individuals who have a commitment to the office to look seriously at those two elephants in the room and acknowledge that their whole ethos is undermined. Their whole ability to govern, their ability to have credibility not only as leaders in public policy but in their own constituencies are being undermined by the complete failure to address these two major issues.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, I among all of the opposition parties, I now gather, will be voting against this and making it very public that this government has once again abandoned its responsibility not only to better public policy, which this electoral act had an opportunity to do, but to democracy and the opportunity to really bring us to the level of most other countries and most other provinces in this country, which have set serious limits and acknowledged that, actually, money does talk. Albertans know that.

We missed a real opportunity here as a Legislature to bring more people into the democratic process, including our children and those who have for many different reasons become disengaged from the political process, to all of our loss. When people are not engaged, we don't have the best of ideas. We don't have communities working together on issues. We just have a sense that the powerless or the haves and the have-nots continue to separate themselves because they feel, especially at the bottom, the 99 per cent, that there's no point, that the power has been concentrated so heavily for so long that there's no point in being engaged at all. It is very dangerous both socially and politically to have that kind of ethos that we're now living with.

With that, I'll take my seat. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing no one, I'll recognize, then, the next main speaker, which will be the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with somewhat mixed feelings. I'm not going to support this bill, and I'm going to explain why. There are good parts to the bill that I would be supportive of – and I'm happy that they are in the bill – particularly the four-year civic election, the fixed election date for municipal elections. That's not to say that that's not problematic in some cases. There are people who have some concerns about a four-year term, and I'm going to make the presumption that they were weighed. I'm still supportive of four-year terms for the municipalities.

I'm not supportive of the bill as a whole because I do not agree with the hon. minister that it does what they said that it was supposed to do. The hon. minister will stand up in the end and say how this increases transparency, and I just don't see that. I cannot measure that in this bill. The transparency that we have will remain for the most part. Quarterly reporting won't increase transparency. It will just show it in a different time frame. It's not going to prevent what I would call the loopholes that currently exist.

I will give one example of that, and I think it's a significant example. There were some situations that were troublesome to me. I know things can get contentious across the aisle, and lots of people are guilty at different points, which requires the Speaker or the chair to stand up and bring us back into order. I will tell you this. To claim that every amendment that we brought forward was somehow less than standard – I won't use some of the words that were used – that in itself I just fundamentally disagree with. To believe that 67 members on a statistical basis would agree unanimously on all those amendments – and there were 100-plus amendments brought forward – well, I would like to have those odds when I play the lottery, to tell you the truth. It's not believable.

So there had to be some amendments. I know there are valid arguments against some of the amendments we brought, that they did not want to support those, and I can understand that, but there were other amendments where there was no real good argument why the amendment should not have been accepted, because it would have strengthened the bill. That was the whole purpose of bringing those amendments, for no other reason than to try to strengthen the bill and make it work.

I'll tell you where the hon. members lost me and lost me significantly in this debate. It was when a member tried to convince me that permissive language was somehow prescriptive language. I could not believe that a judge looking at this legislation would make that same determination. We would have to go back to the debate and debate whether or not "may" was permissive or prescriptive, and I just would disagree with that.

5:10

I think what happened with this bill is that it came forward with the best of intentions. I believe that. When I speak to the individuals involved, I think they had the best of intentions in submitting this bill. I just think it never got to the level that they had hoped it would get to. The bar was not raised. What we did – and I think it is really problematic – is that we are not going to basically look at some of these offences that were made public that caused the public itself to lose confidence in the system or to be cynical about our system.

We did FOIP a number of towns. I found that out when I investigated. They even FOIPed my own town, which actually was before the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. The town of Rimbey had contributed to the PC Party – and this we found out a couple of years ago – and not all that money has been paid back. I know this because I spoke with the town after I found out they got FOIPed recently. But that's not the issue here. The issue here is that they need to be held responsible. All these communities need to be held responsible.

I think that when it's pointed out to them, they are responsible in many ways. I just want to point that out because this is where this bill does not go the distance and prevent this. When I asked one of the former councillors about this contribution that was expensed to the town – it was a political contribution – his first response was: but we've always done it that way. He was sort of confused that we would even raise the question.

They didn't see a problem with using taxpayers' dollars to fund a political party. They didn't do it out of malice. They didn't do it because they knew they were breaking the rules or regulations. They just thought that that's the way it was done. That's incomprehensible today, but that was the way they thought when they were first asked about this. I would say there are still some councillors out there that have not gotten the message, but we don't know where that's at, and of course the party never will have responsibility in the sense that this act does not hold the party responsible.

In my view, it's just sort of a benign bill. It tried, but it didn't succeed, and for that reason I will not vote for it.

I want to talk about the decorum here in the Assembly in dealing with some of these issues. We took a lot of criticism a little bit earlier – and we'll take it again in the closing – about some of the amendments we brought forward. I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the process is simple. A motion is made, the amendment is then brought forward, and we have to wait until the amendment is passed out to the Assembly. When I see a member from across the way take the amendment, before even reading it, rip it up or crumple it up, and throw it away, I will tell you that that sends a clear message on what the level of decorum is. That, to me, is fundamentally wrong.

I think that regardless of whether you support the amendment or even want to oppose the amendment, out of respect for the people you represent, you should at least read the amendment and make an argument one way or the other rather than send that type of message. I really believe that. Again, they are the party in power. They are the government. They set the level. They set the standard.

I'm going to finish with one of the issues that is really paramount in my objection to the bill. It is corporate influence. I was very supportive of that measure when it came forward. Now, I brought forward a number of arguments in a different venue. It was interesting because they got misinterpreted as if I were antibusiness. But I will tell you this. As president and CEO of a company I donated on a corporate level because I was allowed to by law. We did donate for the whole purpose of making sure that we supported the candidates or the party that best represented the business that we were in. We wanted to do that, and that's what we did. I have run and operated small businesses, and I've worked for large corporations, so to accuse me of being antibusiness would be a false and misguided application.

I will tell you this. On the corporate influence side we seem to be stuck or focused on just the donations, but there are so many loopholes that have gone unplugged here. They should have been addressed, and I would have liked to have seen them addressed.

I'm going to use a corporation that is a prime example of that, and that's the corporation AltaLink. AltaLink is incorporated in this province. It is a partnership. I've formed many partnerships, and I know why individuals do it. I know why corporate entities form partnerships. AltaLink is owned by a company called SNC-Lavalin, who has been investigated for money laundering. They have been investigated for bribery. They are currently under investigation on these charges. They have had one CEO convicted of fraud. The former CEO here in Canada has just been arrested most recently and charged with fraud. Here is a company that has a no-bid contract that is worth approximately $5 billion.

How does that relate to this bill? I'm going to explain that. The executive vice-president of this corporate entity was lobbying on behalf of this company because he was a registered lobbyist under the act legally. They were lobbying for a transmission line for which there is actually no evidence that it is needed, not on a technical level. How did they get this? How did they get a multibillion-dollar contract when there's no bidding process, no proper vetting process? The instruments, the documents this government relies upon, have been refuted by the people who drafted them. That is significant in many ways, and nobody is asking these questions.

Now, this company has all sorts of avenues at its disposal to influence the process. They get to spend money on advertising, which most companies have to expense. But when AltaLink spends money and you hear them on the radio, they earn over 9 per cent return on the amount of money they spend. So if they spend their political donations correctly and capitalize on that, not only are they spending money, but they're earning a rate of return on that. The fact is that that comes back to this influence on the election process.

The hon. member said earlier, even during question period, that all of this has taken place without public money, that this is private investment dealing with electricity, but that's not true with AltaLink or with any other transmission line companies. When they spend money, they charge it back to the ratepaying public and everyone here in this Assembly, and then they also get to earn a rate of interest on that money, a rate of return. They get paid, they earn money by trying to influence the political process. That hasn't been covered in this bill. That's just not there.

I want to close with just one item here because it is significant. We're not questioning now the facts of the matter. What we are doing is that we're accepting comments that are unsubstantiated. We're doing this in every avenue that I can see now, whether you go to the Tobaccogate issue or whether you deal with the transmission lines or whether you deal with corporate influence on the political process.

I will tell you this. The hon. Minister of Energy stood up when one of the members asked about the cost of a transmission line, what it would cost on your bill. He basically said – and it's in the Hansard on, I believe, October 31 – that it will cost about 60 cents on every individual's bill. But the AESO now has come out publicly and said that those costs are going to rise 400 per cent. I challenge any member in here to check the facts. Go home and pull out your electric bills. Look at the cost of transmission and ask yourself: is 400 per cent equal to 60 cents? I'll guarantee you that it probably will not be. We need to deal with facts. We need to deal with substance. On this bill, when we brought forward these amendments, we brought forward examples of how this could be improved, and we were denied at every turn. That just does not cut the mustard as far as I'm concerned.

Again, we are dealing with a company that has a significantly bad reputation now, who has a no-bid, multibillion-contract with this province. Its executive vice-president was the vice-president of the PC Party, who, by the way, is a nice man, in general. I like him. But he was an executive vice-president of the PC Party for no other reason, in my view, than to enhance exactly what he was supposed to be doing. He was getting paid to be there to do one thing. That is something that we need to look at as far as the conflict of interest.

We need to look at how these companies can usurp the current laws to influence the process. Even though I will play by whatever rules this party in power sets, I am of the view that business is a good thing, that corporations are a good thing when you're dealing in business for getting capital for investment purposes, but I will tell you that in the political process they have a tremendous record of doing a lot of detrimental damage to the confidence and to the integrity of the democratic process.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing no one under 29(2)(a), let us move on to the next main speaker. Our rotation would show, I guess, that the next member will be Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I haven't made up my mind, I should say, I guess, on whether I'm supporting or not supporting this bill. There are, as the hon. leader of the Liberals said, some good points and there are some bad points, and we saw that with Bill 2 also. You know, there were some very good parts of that bill, and there were some very bad parts of that bill.

I think that as with the other bills that we've seen go through this House in the past, we come back in the future to amend them, so I'm guessing that's what's going to happen with Bill 2 and this bill and Bill 4. You know, we're going to try them out for a while, and after the outrage of the Alberta people we'll be back in here fixing them.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

In this bill some of the negative points that I see are on the banning of the corporate donations. As the other members have stated, you know, it's the perception. We don't know what goes on on the other side of the House in their party meetings about what they do with the money and how much influence that money has on the party. The perception is not good. It leads to being persuaded by those companies that donate such large amounts of money. You know, there are lots of examples all over the world, in the U.S. with the Congressmen. I mean, there are hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of thousands of dollars donated, and I'm sure that there are many phone calls made after hours that say: "Hey, remember that donation? If you want more money, well, you'd better vote this way or that way."

Also, another point is the illegal donations that are to be repaid. Now, we all know that people make mistakes. I've had this conversation with some of the members on the other side of the House, you know, talking about this. If we have fundraisers, different events going on, the volunteers that are taking these donations in for us may not realize that they're illegal. Fine. We can't be everywhere. I think that it is our job and the party's job to ensure that we minimize that to the maximum so that this doesn't happen, but if that mistake happens, then it should be paid back. If those donations are not paid back and we know that they're illegal, well, then that should be public knowledge.

That goes to the whole perception, again, of our parties and of us as representatives. If it's, you know, not made public and you don't repay that money, then it's hidden. We talk about transparency and accountability. This is a way to show that we're transparent and accountable to the people that make these donations and who support us to get where we are. We all know that it takes a lot of help and a lot of work and a lot of money to get us to where we're at today. If we can minimize the negative feelings that are out there towards politicians and actually practise what we preach about being more accountable and transparent, I think it'll go a long way to help our image.

You know, it says that the Chief Electoral Officer may release details of investigations in the last three years. Well, that should be a must. I mean, what have we got to hide? If we've got nothing to hide, put it out there. If we're being open and transparent, then he should be able to produce those records, make it public.

Going a little bit deeper into the bill, where we talk about the CAs and reporting quarterly, there are many CAs that don't have a whole host of volunteers to choose from, and this just puts a lot more work on them. I can see, you know, that during the election campaign people worked very, very hard to get us here. Again, if we are doing the proper reporting yearly, if we're not taking illegal donations – if mistakes were made, if we're making those payments back, if there was something that happened and we made an illegal donation or received one through volunteers or whatever process, that should be paid back. Those statements can be found in your annual reports.

Another one is with the municipal elections. There should be no reason why the members that lose the election don't have to give that money to a charity. Why should they be able to pocket that money? Who knows what they'd do with it? Those monies were made from the public. They should be put back into the public, not into the pocket of the person who was not so successful. There's no reason why they should be able to keep that money.

You know, I do believe that the penalties should be raised. For many of these corporations, if they continue to be allowed to donate, a $10,000 fine – it costs some of them that much to wake up in the morning. There are many private citizens that are millionaires and billionaires that can donate. You know, $10,000 to them is nothing. We need to make those fines substantial so that maybe they will think before these donations are made.

In going through this process the last few weeks – and one of the other members mentioned about taking baby steps – I think a lot of this process that we go through is steps, as we saw with the other bills that we had to come back and amend. I think this is going to be another step that we take to improve the positive aspects of this bill. Those points will be well received in the public, the negative ones not so much. This, I think, will be a first step in making some progress. We'll have to continue on and make some more adjustments as we go, which I think we'll be doing in many of the steps.

As the hon. Member for Airdrie said, I wish I had – I was asking around for a box of Smarties to hand out some Smarties because, you know, I think there are some good points in this bill. There are many good people over there, and they have good intentions.

There are some good things with this bill, on the students. I had students from my area that were going to school, to university, and it was a real hassle for them because that's where they were living, where they were getting their mail, but it wasn't their hometown. They went to vote, and they were turned down. They couldn't vote. I think it's good because many of those students are there for, you know, two, three, four, five years. They make those cities their home, and they should be able to vote where they're at.

This bill does address most of the concerns of the Chief Electoral Officer. He's the one in charge of this elections process, so hopefully he's happy with the input that he's had into this bill. From what I've heard and what I've read, they've taken into account most of them.

Mr. McAllister: I think I'm leaning toward not supporting this.

5:30

Mr. Hale: I'm not done yet.

You know, I do have some friends and some supporters that were not physically able to go into the polling stations. I don't see anything wrong if the elections officers that are at those ballot stations, if a person cannot make it in – my father was in a wheelchair for 40 years. There were many times that he couldn't get down the street or get out of the van because there was too much snow. We always joked that we had to make a set of chains for the wheelchair so he could get through some of those adverse positions. We never did get around to that. It was only two-wheel drive, so he was buggered anyway.

Mrs. Forsyth: You can't say that.

Mr. Hale: Well, he was.

You know, there are some instances where I think there should be some leeway. They could take the ballot box out to the vehicle – we have scrutineers that can go with them – and allow them to vote. They've paid taxes, they've lived here all their lives, they've helped make this province the great place it is, and they should be able to vote. [interjections] That's exactly right.

I think with a lot of these bills, you know, we're so adamant that they have to be perfect. We all know that it's not perfect. We all know the amendments that we put forward would have gone a long way to make them a little more perfect. A good friend of mine years ago said that when you run into problems – it was his advice to me – walk slow and drink lots of water.

I think we're going to continue to work with the government, and hopefully the government can continue to see our worth over here and maybe realize that some of these amendments that we're putting forward are substantial. It'll save us a lot of time and energy coming back year after year and making amendments.

On that, I think I'll let my colleagues get up and speak, and I'll continue to listen and make my decision as we carry on. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to my colleagues for allowing me to jump the queue. Not the queue that's in the newspapers right now, but our own personal one.

I am disappointed that the Local Authorities Election Act is included in Bill 7. As the Municipal Affairs critic I would have preferred to have had two separate bills to deal with. So that's left me in a bit of a quandary. I will be supporting Bill 7, and I will support it because it addresses the issues that have been brought forward by municipalities. But I want to make it very, very clear that I'm certainly not pleased with the accountability sections of the bill or, rather, I should say, the nonaccountability sections of the bill.

I'm left in a quandary here. I feel that I have to support it simply because it does do for municipalities what they've been after for a long time. I will probably differ with my colleagues, and I'm proud to be able to say that I can do that.

I will close with that, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much for the opportunity.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to stand and speak on third reading of Bill 7. This legislation was presented as, you know, groundbreaking. It was going to change the world.

An Hon. Member: So was Bill 4.

Mr. Hale: That was Bill 2.

Mr. Wilson: That, too. As was Bill 4, as was Bill 2, Bill 7 was another unfortunate disappointment in the long list of government bills that we saw in this session.

From the start we saw deficiencies in it. Although 90 of 101 recommendations from the Chief Electoral Officer were included in this bill, there were a number of recommendations that were not. It's very unfortunate that the Justice minister decided to leave out the recommendation for fixed election dates. I think that that could have really levelled the playing field for all parties when we move into election season in this province and could have taken away the unfair advantage that the governing party has by knowing exactly when that date is and being able to have their campaign in readiness, fully prepared and ready to go, and then opposition parties are just waiting for the drop of the writ. It is an advantage. It's unfortunate that you decided to keep it, but I guess it shouldn't really come as that much of a surprise.

You know, we're also severely disappointed that they decided to keep a three-year time limit on the release of the information. The Chief Electoral Officer made no recommendations around time, yet the government imposed this, again, probably as a self-preservation tool.

There were areas of concern that we were in contact with His Worship Mayor Nenshi in Calgary on, where he brought a number of recommendations in areas where he thought there could be progress. But again this government decided that they knew better than those who were actually running these types of municipal elections on the ground and doing what could be best. They again shut down another amendment.

This one miraculously – it boggles the mind as to how something like this is even written in the law, where all candidates who are in a municipal election who do not win cannot keep a campaign surplus, or if they choose not to run, even though they've been fundraising as a registered candidate, are not mandated by law to do something with that money. I think that the government missed a giant opportunity to add and change about four words in one part of this act. You've left that hole open, so pat yourselves on the back.

Concepts that the Minister of Justice added with absolutely no input from the Chief Electoral Officer again can only be interpreted as perhaps malicious.

The idea of having CAs report quarterly to the Chief Electoral Officer is going to damage every single one of us. The reality is that there are two reasons. One is that our CAs are run by volunteers. We're now asking them every three months to file a disclosure statement with the Chief Electoral Officer. On the back end of that, we've now got a Chief Electoral Officer who – and I sit on the Legislative Offices Committee – is going to come back to us, and he's going to require more staff, more money, more pension, more benefits. All for what? For nothing. To have CAs come back and report quarterly. It doesn't make any sense. There's no logical justification. The government can stand up and say that it's all about disclosure and that we're the party that's been asking for disclosure, but at the end of the day it's burdensome, it's onerous red tape for volunteers, and it adds needless expense for the Chief Electoral Officer.

That being said, there were some positives in this bill, and I do want to give credit where credit is due. Increased access for postsecondary students to vote during an election campaign: definitely a positive step in the right direction. Adding enumeration in tax assessments provincially, hopefully, will start to clear up some of those voters lists and get rid of, you know, 17 families living at one address.

I think that there's room for appreciating some of the things that the government chose to put in this bill as well. Four-year terms for municipal elections: again, a positive step in the right direction. Allowing for the disclosure of illegal contributions: it was something the Chief Electoral Officer asked for; it's something that was put in the bill. Yes, we were upset with the time frame that was imposed, but again a step in the right direction.

Now, this party here and the parties next to us put forward many, many responsible amendments to this legislation. Unfortunately, as has been said much today, 24 in total; not one accepted. Banning corporate donations: still allowed. Closing the Katz loophole: no, don't want it. Reducing the maximum donation limits: why would we need to do that? Making action on violations mandatory for the Chief Electoral Officer: not an option; who needs it? Extending the time limit for punishing and publicizing illegal donations: three years is good; it'll cover us. Correcting what must be an oversight in ensuring candidates in municipal elections donate surpluses to charity, not just successful candidates: kind of covered that one. You know, again, it doesn't make a lot of sense.

A lot has been said today and in the last couple of days about the issue of respect on what's happening in this House and with the hundred or more amendments that the opposition put forward. I just thought I'd offer my two cents here. The reality is that I've been told by members opposite that, you know, maybe if we were talking about policy issues and not issues of accountability and if we weren't focusing on issues that Albertans are asking us to focus on and maybe focused on issues that the government wanted us to focus on, they'd look at our amendments with a bit of a different lens and perhaps some of them would actually pass. Yet we also have members standing up and saying: "I'm here to do what's best for all Albertans, Mr. Speaker. I'm here to represent the interests of everybody. But I'm going to be vindictive when it comes to amendments regardless of if it makes policy better, regardless of if it makes the legislation better. I'm not going to do it because the opposition is mean."

5:40

It boggles my mind. You know, what are we supposed to do? Do we stand up and ask the same puffball questions as some of your backbenchers, with the exception of Calgary-North West, who seems to be able to knock them out of the park? Is that what the government wants us to do? That is now going to allow us to strengthen the legislation? I highly doubt it.

Actions are louder than words. If you truly want to run an accountable, open, transparent government, that option is all yours. You are the majority. You have 61 seats. It's on you.

Despite the many shortcomings, the many holes left unplugged in this legislation, the fact that no input was taken for the opposition or the mayor of Calgary and that the government has again demonstrated that its version of democracy is better than anybody else's, my litmus test for support of this bill is: are we better off before this legislation or after? I'm going to hold my nose on this one, and I'm going to support it because I do believe that Albertans in general are better after this bill than we were before.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the hon. member if he ever considered a different litmus test. When I was considering supporting this bill – and I am not supporting this bill – I read time and time again how Alberta has Canada's weakest election laws. We've also heard time and time again how although the opposition offered many, many good amendments to make it stronger, they were totally disregarded, without consideration it appears.

I'm wondering if you considered that the government did have a higher duty of care, could have done better, should have done better, especially with something as important as elections, where it's the government's job to make things fair, equitable, and run as well as possible. Never mind the illegal donations. Never mind not closing the Katz loopholes. The quarterly reporting I know is going to be a huge problem in Cypress-Medicine Hat.

I'm just wondering if you think that your support of this bill may lead the government to not doing their best job in the future.

Mr. Wilson: That is a good question. I would like to thank the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat for it. I do not believe that supporting this bill will impact it. Whether I support this bill or not, they're going to do what they do. I think we've seen that in this session, that it really doesn't matter what we say over here or what we do.

At the end of the day I'm going to support this bill because, as I said, I do believe that we or Albertans or the constituents that put me here are going to be better off, that they're going to have a better run system after this legislation than they did before. That's my test, and that will be why I support it.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others on 29(2)(a)?

Are there other speakers? I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand up – I think I'm pleased, but I'm not really sure if I'm pleased – on Bill 7, the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012, in third reading. I, like some of my other colleagues, am struggling on whether or not to support this bill. I guess the one thing that I like about being a member of the opposition and that I particularly like about being with the Wildrose even more is the leader from Highwood, who truly, truly believes in free votes.

We've discussed this, why you'd be supporting and why you wouldn't be supporting. I, like my colleague from Calgary-Shaw, look at the bill and say: well, when we started here we had nothing. Now we've got probably an 84-page bill. That's something, but it's not great. You know, it's one of those situations where you're damned if you do and you're damned if you don't, situations that make it very difficult for some politicians. And I say that with all honesty.

I guess what's troublesome for me is the 24 amendments that were brought forward in this Legislature to strengthen this bill. You know, I keep going back and back and back to when the Premier was running and she talked about her democratic renewal strategy in May. She was talking about whistle-blower legislation and how she was going to make it the best in Canada and all of that. We all know – and the member from Fort McMurray who carried the bill still to this day stands up and says what a wonderful piece of legislation it is, knowing that every other person across this country has said that it's the worst bill in Canada. So we have this Bill 7, this Election Accountability Amendment Act.

Government has been right on with some of the things that they brought forward, you know. They've talked about making it easier and more accessible for young kids. Well, nobody is going to argue that. I mean, we all think it's important that our youth start getting involved and become more accountable, and we want them to get out and vote because, quite frankly, they're our future. It's something that's been a challenge for myself, how we start engaging youth. I think we've kind of figured that out. We've got a good strategy that we're going to move forward on and start getting more youth involved.

But, gee whillikers, Mr. Speaker, you look at what happened with Katz. You look at banning the corporations. I was with the leader when she got scrummed today and was asked: were we not going to take corporate sponsors? Her answer was perfect.

I always live by this slogan, and I've lived by it all my life. People will see me driving around in my little RAV that's got a little pig on it. That pig is there as a reminder because it's a saying that I love: you don't get off the horse to fight the pigs. It's very tough in this Legislature to stay on that horse. The leader has reminded me, hence, why I have a horse in my office and the pig on the car. It continually reminds me of the horse-and-pig story.

I guess for me it's going to really come down to the vote. I was listening through all this debate, and I was hoping that the Member for Calgary-Hays would get up, someone who was formerly a counsellor and, obviously, ran for mayor. I was expecting him, quite frankly, to get up and speak in regard to the money left over from his mayoral campaign. What he did with that, we still haven't heard. It's a good amendment. There's nothing wrong with an amendment like that. Donate the darn money to charity. Do whatever you can, but at least on behalf of your constituents stand up. I'll still ask the Member for Calgary-Hays, once we start getting out, in regard to: what did you do with your money? I know the money that I had left over from Calgary-Fish Creek from the last election – and I haven't run in a municipal election – I returned back to the constituency. If I get on my horse four years down the road, it will stay there. It will stay there either for the next candidate to get some money to go on, you know, or I will donate it to charity.

There are so many questions with even fewer answers. I have to tell you that I'm struggling. I'm hoping that a couple more of my colleagues will get up and speak so I can come to a conclusion on this bill and, when the bells ring, I'll be able to have a decision on behalf of my constituents.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Seeing none, the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 7, the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012. I believe this bill was a good first step. It was reassuring to see the government put importance on changing the perception of the electoral system and to show that this is a priority. As a new MLA to the House I was moved by this. I looked forward to being part of the process, to having input, and to ensuring that those Albertans whom I represent had a voice at the table. Sadly, that wasn't so. This government brought forward a bill in a manner and at a pace that prevented collaboration, consultation with Albertans, and restricted input.

This government consistently released legislation claiming to be world leaders, but in practice they brought in an act that is embarrassing compared to other jurisdictions. I wish this didn't apply to Bill 7, but it clearly does. There are really only two main reasons – my colleagues have already gone over most of them – why I cannot support this bill, and they're pretty clear.

To disagree with an amendment that bans corporate donations, to me, is clearly disturbing. The hon. Member for Airdrie gave a clear indication about how, yes, we accept corporate donations, and we've seen the light, as the other two parties have as well, as to why and how they can influence the electoral system. By allowing corporations to make campaign donations, we run the risk of allowing individuals who control these organizations to be granted more rights than Albertans. Elections must be transparent and fair if they are to have the support of the electorate. When corporate donations are allowed, it gives the impression that candidates can be bought by wealthy interests. It's not enough to say that elections should be fair. They must also appear to be fair to all Albertans.

Alberta should be a leader in electoral reform. We could have raised the bar and created momentum for similar changes in all other jurisdictions in Canada. We could have made this a national standard. Mr. Speaker, we're seeing all across this world citizens rising up. They're fighting in the streets, and they're dying for the democratic right to vote. People are literally asking, begging, and dying for open, fair, and transparent elections. We had that opportunity here in this House. Elections should be focused on citizens and be in the best interests of citizens. Corporations are not citizens. They do not have the right to vote or hold office and should not be financing candidates' campaigns.

Alberta is seeing decreased voter turnout. Public cynicism about politics is growing. This government had an opportunity to go a long way to reverse this trend and assure Albertans that government has not been bought and paid for. Candidates should be financed by the constituents they represent. If citizens believe that they've done a good job, those candidates will be able to raise adequate funds. If they've done a poor job, then they should have and will have more difficulty raising funds for possible re-election. Large donations from businesses and other organizations with significant financial resources can have an undue influence on who decides to run and who gets elected.

The second and more important reason is the inability of this government to see the light and make all illegal donations public. Period. This defect in Bill 7 is the lack of public accountability that this government has so clearly said they want. The refusal to amend the act to ensure that all illegal donations are made public is disturbing. The fact that this government has made a conscious choice to ensure that those who have made public donations will never be held to account is reprehensible. For this government to tell Albertans that the Premier's sister will never have to account for or pay back taxpayer money for making political donations while being an AHS employee is terrible – this does refer to the act, sir – or that the Wood Buffalo housing corporation will not have to pay back a $2,500 donation to the PC Party, using funds that were meant to help the most needy looking for affordable housing.

The real tragedy in this is that there is still a belief that not disclosing illegal donations of any party somehow benefits Albertans and is open and transparent. That's tragic. The lack of concern that taxpayer dollars from municipalities, government agencies, housing corporations, and public institutions are making donations to the PC Party and that this is acceptable is disturbing. The role of legislators is to provide openness and transparency and ensure that Albertans can have faith in a system that is meant to protect democracy. Rather than ensure a fair and transparent and accountable elections amendment act, this government is telling Albertans: "Don't worry about the past. Only look into the future." However, illegal is illegal, and as legislators we are bound by Albertans to do the right thing even when it has a negative effect on a personal or party position.

The amendments from the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Anne provided clarity and transparency to Albertans, which should be our main goal, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McAllister: St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mrs. Towle: Sorry. Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. I apologize.

In closing, I just have a few quick comments. The last time I checked, the role of the opposition was to be a check and balance. The last time I checked, the role of the government was to ensure co-operation with all parties. The last time I checked, the government voted against over 105 amendments put forward by all opposition parties. The last time I checked, legislative bills should be in the best interests of all Albertans. The last time I checked, Bill 7 was supposed to ensure openness and transparency. The last time I checked, Bill 7 was supposed to be the best, most comprehensive bill in Canada. The last time I checked, corporate donations resulted in Bill 50, which was devastating to landowners. The last time I checked, illegal was illegal. The last time I checked, those who do illegal acts should be held accountable. The last time I checked, this government was clearly covering their behinds.

For those reasons, I will not support Bill 7.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if it would be appropriate at this time to ask for unanimous consent to shorten the bells in the event of a division?

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard the motion by the Government House Leader, that requires unanimous consent.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: Are there other speakers to the bill?

Seeing none, the hon. Government House Leader to close the debate.

Mr. Hancock: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for third reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:55 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, December 6, 2012

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, today's prayer is dedicated to innocent victims of violence.

Let us pray. Life is precious, and when it is lost, all of us are impacted. Today we join with Legislatures right across Canada and honour the National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence against Women. This day of remembrance marks the anniversary of the 1989 massacre of 14 women students at l'école Polytechnique in Montreal. Hon. members, please join me in observing one minute of silence. Amen. Thank you.

Just before I invite you to be seated, please know that the flags on the Alberta Legislature Building here have been lowered since sunrise this day and will remain lowered until sunset this evening in honour of these innocent victims who were massacred because they were women. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of individuals in the galleries today who play a key role in the democratic process in the province of Alberta. The employees who work in our constituency offices often provide the first point of contact for our constituents and represent our offices and this Assembly. These special individuals are here today participating in the winter constituency employee seminar, which provides an opportunity for them to network with other LAO staff and obtain an overview of numerous programs and services available through the LAO.

Each year the services and contributions of these individuals are celebrated with an employee recognition dinner, which you, Mr. Speaker, will be hosting later this evening. Today over 75 constituency office employees are with us from all corners of the province. I would ask that they please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you, indeed.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you today to all members of this Assembly on behalf of the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake a group of 46 students from Holy Cross elementary school in Cold Lake. They are seated in the members' gallery today, and accompanying them are teachers and group leaders Ms Jo-Ann Ward, Mrs. Bev Armbruster, Mrs. Nadia Corriveau, Miss Kristin Bertrand; and their parents, Mrs. Denise Reid and Mrs. Charlene McKay. I would ask that they all rise and receive the traditional warm greeting of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my honour to introduce to you and through you today a constituent of mine, Mr. Andre Harpe. Mr. Harpe has worked for many years volunteering on lots of different boards in my constituency to make our community better for all of our community members. I believe Mr. Harpe is in the city today serving on the Northern Alberta Development Council board as well. I'd ask Mr. Harpe to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Ms Dawn Harsch, owner and operator of ExquisiCare, a facility offering residential and supportive living accommodations and care for the elderly, located in my constituency of Edmonton-South West. I've had the opportunity to tour the facility with the hon. Minister of Health and appreciate the service that ExquisiCare provides to the residents. The personal care philosophy of love, home, purposeful living, and meaningful work is practised on a daily basis at ExquisiCare. With Ms Harsch today is Ms Lori Seemann, with Canadian Natural Resources. I ask that the two guests seated in the members' gallery today please rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you a very special guest seated in the members' gallery. April Lamb, who was born and raised in Medicine Hat, is a student at Mount Royal University studying to achieve her bachelor of communications with a specialization in journalism. April served in my ministry as a summer ministerial intern this summer and now works as an assistant in the hon. Premier's southern Alberta office. I would ask April to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you 17 Wildrose constituency office staff members here today. These fantastic people work hard for Albertans and our Wildrose MLAs every day, and without them our jobs would be incredibly difficult. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly, and thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: I do have guests coming, but I believe they're not in the gallery currently, so I'll ask to revert at the end of question period.

The Speaker: We'll come back.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, if your guests are here, proceed.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some of the bravest Albertans, the staff of the Alberta Liberal opposition. They're also rumoured to be pretty darned good dancers in a recently released popular video named Sherman Style. I'd like them to rise as I call their names. Jonathan Huckabay, our chief of staff, and the team: Justin Benko, Denis Lapointe, Jon Mastel, Amy McBain, Tyler Mudrey, Carmen Remenda, Kevin Tam, and Nicky Walker. There may only be nine of them, but they do the work of 300, and without them we could not do what we do each and every day to hold the government to account for our real bosses, the people. Please join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Legislature a long-time friend and a mentor of mine, Ms Honey Forbes. She's up in the visitors' gallery. After spending the majority of her life in my fantastic constituency of Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, Honey and Daryl and their family moved to Duncan, B.C., on Vancouver Island, where she is now a coroner at the medical examiner's. The last time Honey was here was when she was here with her daughters in grade 6. One of those daughters grew up to be one of my youth campaign workers. I am very proud to be able to introduce Honey to this Assembly today and to ask that she rise and that we give her the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Mayor Brian Allen. Brian has been mayor of the town of Grimshaw for multiple terms. He's a tremendous supporter and is also here to do NADC business. I would like Mayor Brian Allen to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, you have a guest?

Mrs. Sarich: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and privilege for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly a very special guest and long-time resident of Edmonton-Decore, Mr. Jimmy Ragsdale. Mr. Ragsdale on many occasions drops by the constituency office to simply say hello, and it's a welcome breath of fresh air when he does that and is welcomed by the staff that works in the constituency office. The Alberta Legislature has such a rich history of traditions and democracy, and Mr. Ragsdale is here to observe the Assembly in action this afternoon. I would ask that Mr. Ragsdale now please rise – he is seated in the public gallery – and ask that we give him the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I believe you're up.

Personal Code of Conduct

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In May you asked us to come up with our own personal code of conduct in this Assembly. I have some thoughts for you. Firstly, I will never disrespect the hallowed walls of this Assembly. We teach children daily on tours that this House represents the very democracy that we enjoy. That includes respect for you and your position in this Assembly. I will never hold up a sign calling you a name. I will never swear behind your back. I will never walk out on this Assembly in the name of political protest. I will not bend your rules or your rulings. I understand the difference between governing party, loyal opposition, and politics.

Mr. Speaker, I will never disrespect the Premier of our province. She is duly elected as the Premier of the people. When she is attacked and disrespected, every member in this Assembly is disrespected, the government is disrespected, and every citizen of this province should feel disrespected.

I will choose not to use every opportunity I can for political opportunism in this Assembly. I will not use valuable and costly Assembly time on endless political speeches largely unrelated to the business before the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I will not lie in this Assembly. I will not bend the truth in this Assembly. I will not leave out truths that show the complete story, indeed. I will speak frankly and on topic in the Assembly. I will not bring potty language to this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for challenging us in this way. What a contrast between the behaviours in the Assembly this fall. There are those who have held a high standard and those who have wallowed in misunderstanding of what we're about.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Physician Services Agreement

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our health care system is fragile after several years of reorganizations without a clear plan. Recent breakdown in the relationship of physicians and this government in a season of likely increased demands makes this even more dangerous for citizens of Alberta who absolutely rely on timely access and effective care, even those among us. The mutual blame game must stop in the interest of all Albertans. What has become clear is that a heavy-handed approach by the Minister of Health and his unwillingness to respect the rights of the AMA, as the bargaining agent, to return to good-faith negotiations based on principles rather than a fixed position is blocking progress. Inflammatory public ads on both sides do not help the search for resolution. Earnest negotiation and, ultimately, binding arbitration as supported by the Canada Health Act must be the focus.

Adding to the barriers to good-faith bargaining has been the failure to honestly consult with physicians about the plan to build 140 new family care centres without evidence, consultation with primary care networks, or a budget plan. This needs to be acknowledged and addressed. We know the minister and the AMA share the goals of improved access, excellent quality, and cost-effectiveness, and these must form the basis of renewed discussions, with an intermediary as previously agreed to.

The need for more prevention programs and additional resources for community care to keep people out of this health care system is essential to strengthening it and ensuring future sustainability. Preventable delays, complications, even deaths are a real and present concern today in Alberta. Nothing can justify adding these challenges, nor do we want fear or lasting bitterness to add to morale problems festering amongst health professionals today.

In all our interests we treat both sides: return to discussions with a third party, resolve outstanding issues. Albertans deserve no less.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

FireSmart Funding

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government recently announced $500,000 in FireSmart community grant funding for 16 forested communities. [interjections] I agree. Funding supports projects that reduce wildfire risks such as planning and development controls, tree thinning, public education, training, and emergency management.

In my constituency of Banff-Cochrane the investment will go a long way to FireSmart three communities sharing $105,000 in grants. The summer village of Waiparous and the Kananaskis improvement district will each receive a grant of $50,000 for FireSmart planning and vegetation management while Canmore will put $5,000 towards FireSmart education. Two other communities in the area that will receive funding are Crowsnest Pass, who will receive $50,000 towards vegetation management, education, and training; and Mountain View county, who will put $15,000 towards a FireSmart training exercise. All five of these communities have embraced FireSmart practices and share a responsibility for good stewardship of Alberta forests.

I would also like to take this opportunity to recognize the work of members of the Kananaskis improvement district's FireSmart Committee, who were invited to a workshop in September led by the researchers from Oregon State University, the University of Alberta, and Charles Sturt University in Australia. The Kananaskis improvement district's FireSmart Committee was chosen to participate in the project to share their best practices and to provide researchers with feedback for a fire management guide they are developing.

Please join me in commending the Kananaskis FireSmart Committee for their important work and to congratulate the summer village of Waiparous, Canmore, Crowsnest Pass, and Mountain View county as recipients in this latest round of FireSmart funding.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we start the clock for question period, I'll remind you that all the rules are in force as always. I may come back and make a comment in general about private members' statements at the end of the day.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Tobacco Recovery Lawsuit

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we're having a difficult time getting to the bottom of the tobacco contingency arrangement. We've asked four times, and we're going to ask again. In the Premier's December 14, 2010, memorandum she wrote that the International Tobacco Recovery Lawyers would be the best choice "considering the perceived conflicts of interest, actual conflicts of interest, the structure of the contingency arrangement and the importance of a 'made in Alberta' litigation plan." Can the Premier assure Albertans that in her examination of the bids, the winning proposal was the one that offered the lowest contingency fee?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this was the question that was asked yesterday by the opposition, and I answered the question.

I'd like to take a moment to pause and think about what the opposition has actually done this session. I'd like to ask the Leader of the Official Opposition a question. While we have had repetitive questions that have been answered by this side of the House on a regular basis, Mr. Speaker, this hon. member, who claims to be the critic for International Relations, Aboriginal Relations, and cities, in 22 days has asked one question with respect to those issues that she cares about.

I would refer the hon. member to my answers that I have answered continually in this House with respect to the other matter, and I look forward to a question on something she tells Albertans she cares about.

Ms Smith: No wonder Albertans are losing confidence. She can't answer a simple question.

Even if we were willing to pretend for a moment that up is down and the sky really is green and that the Premier did not make the decision on this issue – fair enough – but when the Premier looked at the bids, did she see that the Jensen consortium's contingency proposal was indeed the lowest contingency fee?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This question has been asked and answered many times. The final decision was made by the succeeding Justice minister, who is currently the agriculture minister. As we keep moving on, we are on the side of the average Alberta taxpayer, not big tobacco. How about this member?

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, you were very kind in acknowledging the staff who support you today. Let us think about what you're showing them today as well. Please, no more interjections. No more heckling is needed here. We're all grown adults. We'd like to hear each other ask questions. We'd like to hear the answers as well.

Hon. leader, please proceed with your next question.

Tobacco Recovery Lawsuit (continued)

Ms Smith: Okay. With tens, perhaps hundreds, of millions of dollars at stake we just want to make sure that the winning bid had the lowest contingency fee. That's what I'm asking again. Yes or no?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday, our own counsel has advised us that in the event we would disclose the contingency agreement, it would be in the interest not of Alberta taxpayers but of big tobacco. And if you don't believe him, go to the former president of the Law Society, Perry Mack, who said the same thing.

The Speaker: Let's try one more time, shall we?

Hon. leader, you have the floor.

Details of Meetings with Katz Group Inc.

Ms Smith: We'll try to get an answer to another question, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I asked the Minister of Finance to make good on his October 30 commitment to give details about his meetings with the Katz Group when the government said no to arena funding and casino licences. Now, the minister brushed off the questions, saying that he'd already answered them. But he didn't. On October 31, responding to a different question about lobbyists for the Katz Group, the minister provided the name of Peter Elzinga, who was indeed registered as the lobbyist for this group in 2010. We are trying to figure out who the government met with from the Katz Group in 2011 and 2012. When will he keep his promise and provide the details that I originally asked for?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I think is fairly common knowledge in this House, during 2011 I was otherwise occupied and was meeting with a lot of people during that period of time. In the 2010 time period was the original meeting which I spoke about.

As I recall, in response to my answer yesterday the hon. member said that she'll put it in writing, so I'm waiting for her to put it in writing.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, you've told us often that when a minister answers, he's answering on the part of government, so that's what I'm asking. Given the minister told the Assembly back in October that it's not a secret, why won't he keep his promise and provide the details of all of the meetings the government had with the Katz Group in 2011 and 2012?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I wouldn't know whether the Katz Group has met with other members of the cabinet in either 2011, in a previous government, or in 2010. I did make the comment that I would provide the date of the meeting that I had with them either in 2012 or 2010, and I will do that.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I asked for it on October 30, and we still haven't received it. It now looks like the minister is just giving us another brush-off. Is this just another example of the government's policy of reneging on its commitments and breaking promises?

Mr. Horner: Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. I've made the commitment that I'll find the date. I don't actually have the calendar in my memory right now as to the exact date when we met with representatives of the group. I will say this. The answer was no in 2010. The answer, as I understand it, was no in 2011. The answer was no 2012. The answer will be no in 2013. I think the hon. member is chasing a dead horse here.*

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Third main set of questions, and no preambles on the sups this time, please.

Opposition Amendments to Bills

Ms Smith: Yes. Thank you. You'll be happy with these questions, Mr. Speaker.

I want to acknowledge all of my opposition colleagues for the great work we did by proposing more than a hundred amendments to government bills, but despite the Premier's stated goal of more free votes, more time between proposing and voting, more collaboration, the government rejected pretty much everything we put forward. It's another case of the Premier saying one thing and doing another or, as with the tobacco deal, doing one thing and saying another. To the Premier: how does unanimously rejecting more than a hundred amendments square with the desire for more free votes and more collaboration?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this has been a fantastic session, where we have passed 10 pieces of legislation that matter to Albertans. We've delivered on an election act, elections financing legislation, whistle-blower legislation, homebuyers' protection legislation. We've acknowledged posttraumatic stress disorder, and we have ensured that the regulatory process will protect the property rights of landowners. [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, what we do as a government is that before we bring legislation to this House, we consult with stakeholders. We ensure that our legislation is strong, and we're proud of our legislative record this . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Smith: What about the amendment that would close the Katz loophole that allowed huge donations from a single source? Why did your government reject this?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the legislation that was passed reflects what Albertans want to see with respect to integrity and honesty and independence in this House. I can't speak to the fact that the opposition may have introduced amendments that were erroneous, irrelevant, and not important, but what I will say is that Albertans voted for a government that was committed to transparency and to honesty. The issues we've debated in this House have been a result of changes that we on this front bench have made with respect to transparency, and that is the record that we will stand by.

Ms Smith: What about the Lynn Redford amendment that would have opened up details of illegal contributions dating all the way back to 2005? Now, we can guess why that was rejected, but why doesn't the Premier tell us?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, to me this question period is nothing but an exclamation point on the decorum that has been inappropriately shown in this House. I will tell you that there are a lot of processes in place, that we put in place, with respect to disclosure, with respect to inquiries, and with respect to expenses, which is the reason that the opposition can ask these questions. [interjections] I will tell you that from what we have heard in our caucus over the last weekend, these sorts of comments are entirely inappropriate. They do not dignify this institution, and I'm not surprised to hear them from the Leader of the Opposition.

The Speaker: Hon. members, you can see what happens if one or two interjections get thrown in and cause some distraction. They lead to some disruption.

We're going to proceed with the leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition, followed, maybe, by the leader of the New Democratic opposition.

The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

Personal Care Standards in Seniors' Facilities

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. 'Twas the last day of session, and all through the House a Premier was sitting as quiet as a mouse. Christmas is coming, and we're all filled with cheer, except for the seniors, that we hold so dear. Today we heard about the gift that Randa Wheaton gave her elderly friend in long-term care, money for an extra bath every other week for a year. In a province blessed with so much wealth, it would be easy for the government to honour the sacrifices of our pioneers, entrepreneurs, and veterans by giving them the gift of basic dignity. To the Premier: why won't you open up your heart this Christmas, as Randa Wheaton did, by giving every vulnerable Albertan in care the gift of more than one bath a week?

2:00

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Premier gave the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition some good advice a few minutes ago, I think, when she suggested that the hon. member take a pause. I suggest that this hon. member do the same. If members of this House want to have a debate about protocols with respect to bathing, that's one thing. If they are actually suggesting that the health care workers of this province are inappropriately caring for personal hygiene of the residents of our long-term care facilities, that's quite another, and frankly I think they should have the guts to stand up and allege that.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, given that what's missing in the words "health care" from the government's point of view is the key word "care," that's what my question is on. Again to the Premier. You promised to put families and communities first. Will you do so today by ordering a change in government policy in funding more than one bath a week? Please, Premier, will you?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what is, in fact, disingenuous is poetry added to innuendo to suggest that in some way the health care workers of this province are not providing appropriately for the personal hygiene needs of residents in our province. As that hon. member should know, care plans for residents are determined by the residents and their families in consultation with the workers that provide care to them. If this hon. member wants to have a debate about standards or protocols at an operational level, I suggest he find a way to do it besides a cheap poem.

The Speaker: The hon. member, with no preamble this time, please.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, given that every prisoner locked up in our province's jail system is allowed to have a shower a day and given that even the Grinch had a change of heart, my final question to the Premier. Please afford me the dignity of standing up and answering this question. It's Christmastime. Will you order your government to treat vulnerable Albertans, many of whom are veterans, better than the common thief by ordering that they get more than one bath a week?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, a question like that doesn't deserve the dignity of an answer from the Premier of this province. As this hon. member knows, we have a process in place to determine care plans for residents in our seniors' facilities. We have said earlier in response to other questions this week that the hon. Associate Minister of Seniors, in whose judgment I trust, is looking into the matter with respect to the specific protocols. We have requested some information from Alberta Health Services in this regard to support the review, and we will respond accordingly and with dignity.

Speaker's Ruling Insisting on Answers

The Speaker: Hon. members, given that last exchange and some comments and actions that followed, let me refer you to House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 510, chapter 11, with respect to questions, and here's what it says. "Members may not insist on an answer nor may a Member insist that a specific Minister respond to his or her question." You are reminded to read onward after that for more comments.

Ms Blakeman: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: A point of order has been raised at 2:05 by Edmonton-Centre. It's been noted.

Let's move on now with the hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition.

Donations to Political Parties

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have been demanding answers on a number of matters, including the massive donation from Daryl Katz and his associates, what the Premier knew about her sister's illegal donations, and if she was in a conflict of interest relative to the award of a lawsuit contract to the tobacco firm. To the Premier: why won't she come clean about the $430,000 donation from Daryl Katz and his associates, release the cheque, and stop hiding behind the Chief Electoral Officer and his secret investigation?

Ms Redford: These questions have been answered more than once in this House, Mr. Speaker. There is a system in place that ensures not only that when these questions are raised, the government answers these questions but that there are independent processes in place to ensure that Albertans can have confidence that the answers that the government is giving are correct and true. Those processes are terribly important for all of us to ensure that we as politicians, as people involved in this House, and as citizens of Alberta can have confidence in these institutions and will respect them.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given that these questions have been asked over and over and given that they've been answered never and given that there have been dozens and dozens of illegal donations to the PC Party and that one of them apparently included a donation by the Premier's sister, why has the Premier refused to tell Albertans what she knew about this and when she knew it?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, correct me if I'm wrong, but I think you have made rulings on matters relative to political parties. Notwithstanding that, we also note that in this country, unless something has changed overnight, nothing is illegal unless somebody had a fair process and was found to have done something illegal. No one is in conflict of interest unless he or she has gone through a process and was found to be in conflict of interest. These questions, these allusions are simply inappropriate and can be very hurtful to individuals who are not here to defend themselves.

The Speaker: The hon. leader, with no preamble, please.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the government has turned up the arrogance dial to overload, given that the Premier walks out on people in the middle of questions, what has the government got to say about the supreme arrogance that it has shown in this session, the absolute contempt for the democratic traditions of this Assembly, the absolute contempt for the opposition, the attempts to sideline the media, and complete disregard for the interests of the public, that are represented by people in this Assembly?

The Speaker: Hon. members, please, let's not hit any notes lower than have already been hit in this session.
Someone to respond?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I think that not only the Premier but every member of the front bench and of cabinet has answered many of these questions on many occasions. There seems to be some delusional belief on the other side of this House that if they spend the entire session asking a set of five questions 55 times each, somehow they think they will get a different answer. There is only one answer for every question because there is only one truthful answer for every question. They have been receiving it. They simply don't like the truth. It's unfortunate that they won't let the truth get in the way of their work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Travel and Expense Reporting

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Summer Olympics continue to provide entertainment for all Albertans. In addition to huge bills for the Premier's plane tickets and all those empty hotel rooms, now we see the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation actually using her government credit card to pay thousands of dollars for flights for her family. How on earth can this minister think that it was really okay and an acceptable action by a minister of government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am the minister, I am the MLA, and I'm responsible for my expenses. I needed to have paid closer attention to the manner in which they were being processed, and for that I've apologized to Albertans. Again, I want to convey to Albertans today that for me this job is about doing the best work that I possibly can. Going forward with the travel and expense policy that we have initiated as a government, I feel very confident that Albertans are going to be able to see that this government truly understands and truly wishes to ensure that we use taxpayer dollars effectively.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sure, the minister paid it back, but Albertans are left to wonder if she would have done so if she hadn't been caught as a result of opposition pressure for more openness, accountability, and transparency on government expenses.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again I will say what my commitment is to this province. This province can see from me that I am going to be committed to Albertans: to developing trails, to ensuring that we have after-school programs for children to be active, to ensuring that I meet with my stakeholders in order to find the best ways possible to encourage and improve our industries. That is what I intend to be here to do regardless of what the opposition will try to convey to Albertans.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that athletes lose their medals when they get caught using performance-enhancing drugs, what will this minister lose now that she's been caught using entitlement-enhancing items like her golden government credit card?

Ms Cusanelli: Mr. Speaker, there is one thing that I have always been committed to in any of the careers that I've endeavoured, and that is integrity. Where these expenses were incurred, I ensured that they were reimbursed or allocated appropriately. Albertans can expect that from me going forward, and Albertans can expect that this entire government, this cabinet, this caucus are committed to ensuring that we are transparent and that we are accountable for our actions. I have shown that here today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by Airdrie.

Fall Session Accomplishments

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been a raucous and emotional fall session of the Alberta Legislature, but through it all this Assembly did pass 10 pieces of legislation. My first question is to the Government House Leader. Can you please tell us what you consider to be the most significant accomplishments of this fall session?

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it is appropriate for us to focus at the end of the fall session on the good work that's been done by this Legislature on all sides of the House. We have dealt with 10 substantive pieces of legislation in a relatively short period of time, because the fall session doesn't afford a long period of time, and good work in terms of PTSD support for our front-line workers, the Education Act, regulatory reform, protection for new-home buyers, a lot of very significant legislation notwithstanding the other antics of the House in trying to insinuate that somehow integrity is the issue.

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The Speaker: Hon. members, as you all know, the purpose of question period is to seek information and to hold the government to account, so let's see how you do with your supplemental.

Ms Kubinec: My first supplemental is to the same minister. Can you please tell us: what are the disappointments or regrets from this session in terms of implementing government policy?

The Speaker: Hon. member, really? Frankly, I've never heard that sort of question before, but given that it's been asked by a new member, I will allow it this one time. If somebody from government wishes to provide an answer, I'd be most anxious to hear what it is.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my view and the 15 years of experience I've had as a member of government as well as a Member of the Legislative Assembly, what I really find exciting about this House and why I really love the opportunity we have in this House is because it's at the apex of the process. The work that we do here ensures that all the other work – consulting Albertans, putting together solid pieces of legislation, being able to bring forward that legislation to the House so that we can examine it in detail here but making sure that in most cases it's ready to go by the time it gets here – has been done by the time we achieve this.

Ms Kubinec: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: could you please tell us why all 106 amendments were not passed?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As House Leader I often have said to members opposite that when they have the opportunity to be briefed on legislation, which they usually are before the legislation hits the House, and when they see the legislation, if they have amendments that they want to bring forward that make appropriate changes to the legislation, make the legislation stronger, and if they share them with us so that I can share them with caucus and we can look at any unintended consequences, we're more than happy to deal with those amendments. If, on the other hand, they have amendments which are simply political platforms, they'll be dealt with as political platforms on the floor of the House.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: A point of order by Airdrie has been raised at 2:15 and has been noted, and on that note let me recognize the hon. Member for Airdrie for his set of questions.

Justice System

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, we now have more proof of just how dysfunctional our justice system has become due to a lack of Crown and court resources. Jetandar Dhillon recently pleaded guilty in Ontario for driving his semi truck into a fire truck while under the influence. Incredibly, Mr. Dhillon had been awaiting trial in Alberta for an alleged DUI for almost two years at the time that he got into the accident. And guess what? His charges were eventually stayed in Alberta because of court and Crown delays. Minister, how many people need to suffer before you and the Premier take responsibility for and address the critical lack of resources in our justice system?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, that is a bit of a mendacity. I would agree with the member that it's unfortunate when cases don't make it to trial, but let's stick to the facts. Let's stick to the truth here. In this case it was not because of unreasonable delay. Rather, it was a prosecutorial error. Now, I'm in no way throwing the prosecutor under the bus. He has a very strong history with our department. This case is also under review for appeal, and I hesitate to comment in detail because I want the Crown to have its own independent look at this and see if we should appeal.

Mr. Anderson: There was a 10-month delay, Mr. Speaker – a 10-month delay – between the mistake you talked about and the next time the court got to look at the case.

Given that victims are entitled to their day in court and given that we must not trample on the Charter of Rights of an accused to be presumed innocent until proven guilty, instead of giving lengthy suspensions of licences prior to a person actually being convicted of a DUI, which is probably not constitutional, as we may soon find out, why not invest the resources necessary to unclog our courts, empower our Crown prosecutors, and get these menaces to society off Alberta's streets?

Mr. Denis: Again, Mr. Speaker, for the exact same reason that this member identifies, that is why we're putting more judges on the bench, we're looking at more Crown prosecutors, and we're even looking at where we can expand our judicial system throughout this entire province.

Mr. Anderson: Given that you have not done so, Minister, and given that the Keeping Communities Safe report from 2007, chaired by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, specifically recommended that your government publicly post all of the cases stayed due to court and Crown delays, will you agree to accept and implement that recommendation, and will you use that information to craft a strategy to unclog the justice system and ensure that criminals are convicted and that the innocent are acquitted as quickly as possible? Will you not do those things?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, as I've indicated, this government has taken many kinds of steps, but I'll point one thing out to this particular member. If our Bill 26 law on drinking and driving, which this member opposes, had been in place, if this had happened before September 1, this particular individual would have been taken off the road and lost his licence. It's time for this member to admit that this law saves lives.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Results-based Budgeting Review

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents in Calgary-Varsity are asking me some pretty tough, informed, and I think appropriate questions about fiscal discipline, including questions about our ability to keep operating costs in check. My first question is to the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance. How can I assure my constituents that the results-based budgeting process will be a catalyst for more disciplined approaches to operating cost management by this government?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the results-based budgeting is a comprehensive process, and it will examine each and every program and service government delivers. Each review will determine if the program or service is relevant to Albertans, whether it's being delivered efficiently and effectively, and if it's achieving the outcomes that Albertans expect. Essentially, results-based budgeting is about outcomes. Results-based budgeting will help the government move away from the incremental budgeting that we've been prone to in the past. Instead, we'll be funding allocation of resources to the results.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: how in depth will these reviews be? For example, will they examine whether the purpose of the programs is in line with the goals of government, not just looking at the operating costs within a program but the need for the program itself?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, no one size will fit all. As described in the first-year progress report, which was tabled in the House, we are going to put some flexibility into the process. In one form or another the reviews are to include questions around the relevance, the efficiency, and the effectiveness of our programs. These programs and services would have been put in place for Albertans to achieve some objective. We want to make sure that that objective is still relevant. In addition, we have 31 Albertans that have agreed to participate in the review process by sitting on the challenge panels to make sure that they are in-depth challenges.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Again to the same minister: what about the consequences? Can you tell us what the consequences will be if the challenge panel identifies programs that are no longer achieving their intended outcomes or if the desired objectives can be achieved better through other means?

2:20

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the objective of the whole exercise is to do exactly that, ensure that we have relevant programs and services that are providing value for Alberta taxpayers. If the findings of the review of a given program or service are that it's no longer achieving its intended outcomes, then we will change so that we can achieve those outcomes if they're still relevant.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Child Labour Standards

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Paid child labour, interfering with schooling in some cases, is being publicly acknowledged by the Wild Rose Agricultural Producers president, Lynn Jacobson, quoted in the Taber Times this week saying: "Child labour is getting to be an issue in a lot of areas, and maybe in southern Alberta more so." Also this week a letter from the vice-president of McDonald's foods acknowledges child labour concerns, and I'll be tabling that today. To the Minister of Human Services: how many major corporations like Pepsi, Frito-Lay, and McDonald's as well as agricultural producers are needed to get this government to bring in child labour standards in Alberta?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do have child labour standards in Alberta under the occupational health and safety standards and the workplace standards. You can't employ a child under 12 except in certain specific categories without a specific permit, which you can apply for, so that there can be an investigation with respect to whether that's an appropriate job. You can only employ children between 13 and 15 years of age in certain circumstances and not interfere with their education. For those over 16 there are other regulations. There are many standards with respect to the employment of children in this province.

Dr. Swann: Well, the minister effectively avoided the question of agricultural operations.

With Alberta's injury centre identifying recently increased rates of child injury as well as deaths every year, as the minister is well aware, some as paid farm workers, and the Judge Barley report of four years ago calling for health and safety standards on industrial farming operations, how long must children wait for action from this minister?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the Judge Barley report had nothing to do with child labour on farms, and I didn't hear him refer to farms in his first question with respect to child labour standards.

I think that it's important that we do have appropriate safety processes in place in every industry across the province, that we encourage the agriculture industry, like every other industry, to take safety seriously and to ensure that there are appropriate safety standards for all their workers, not just children. The one thing that we do need to be clear on is that we use statistics appropriately in this House and in this discussion because it's a very serious discussion. Every death on a family farm involving children has not been related to the workplace. In fact, most of them, as you read the statistics, have to do with . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, you have one final supplementary.

Dr. Swann: A final supplemental. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll try the Minister of Finance, former agriculture minister. Will the Finance minister act to press this government to protect our agriculture industry's reputation and enact workplace health and safety with child labour standards in industrial farming operations? When will this government take action?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That would actually fall into the Human Services portfolio. I can assure the hon. member, as I have before, that I am working very closely with the minister of agriculture in terms of how we work with the agriculture industry sector, not the family farms so much because we do have to make the distinction about how people live in their own homes. The agriculture industry is important, and we do need to work with respect to safety standards. We do need to be certain that we not only have educational programs in place and industrial programs in place putting safety first but that we also look at what legislation might be effective to ensure safety for our agriculture industry workers.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Now the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Judicial Inquiry into Health Services

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When allegations of queue-jumping first emerged, the NDP asked the RCMP to investigate, but they could find no evidence of wrongdoing. Now with every witness so far unable to recall names, it looks like the government is spending $10 million on an inquiry so that Albertans can be told the same thing once again. To the Minister of Health: will he admit that this inquiry is merely a costly bait-and-switch tactic to avoid a judicial inquiry into political interference and doctor intimidation in our health care system?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, first of all, before going any further, let's deal with facts. The inquiry, as I understand, didn't remember the names because the Leader of the Official Opposition came up as the only name that is in any way related to this matter.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Let me remind this House that about a year ago every member of the opposition was rising and asking the Premier for an independent judicial inquiry on queue-jumping. This inquiry is taking place. It is independent. We will not interfere with it, and I believe that they should be left to their own devices so they can proceed independently.

The Speaker: The point of order by Airdrie at 2:26 has been noted. Let's proceed with the supplemental, please.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker. Given that the president of the AMA lambasted the terms of reference of the queue-jumping inquiry as too narrow to properly get at the issue of physician intimidation, will the minister admit that this inquiry is merely an expensive and cynical issue management strategy designed to ask the wrong questions and elicit irrelevant answers so that the Premier can once again wriggle out of a promise, in this case the one to call a public inquiry into physician intimidation?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I'd just like to clarify my first answer. I must apologize to the Leader of the Official Opposition. The name that I understand has been remembered and the only name remembered is the leader of the Liberal opposition.

The Speaker: Final supplementary, no preamble. You have the floor, Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Given that the queue-jumping inquiry is more evidence of yet another broken promise by the Premier and given the apparent inability of the inquiry to get any of its witnesses to name names, government member names, let alone talk about the widespread physician intimidation found by the Health Quality Council, will the minister finally do the right thing, stop plastering over the truth, and call an inquiry into the real issue of physician intimidation?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the Premier of this province promised an inquiry into allegations of queue-jumping in our health care system, and that's exactly what she's delivered. The hon. member can stand and editorialize on the inquiry that is currently under way. As the hon. Deputy Premier has indicated, this is an independent process. As we have pointed out on this side of the House during the fall session, we intend to let that process proceed independently. If the hon. member has concerns about the way the commissioner is conducting the inquiry, I suggest she take them up with him.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Physician Services Agreement

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the health inquiry was announced last spring, many made note of its narrow terms of reference. The Wildrose has been calling on the government to include the issue of physician intimidation, to no avail. Now a new issue seems to be cropping up. Last night the Minister of Health gave an interview where he seemed to blame the doctors for the problems we're currently seeing and righteously denounced their personal attacks against him. I guess we had it wrong. Apparently, it's the Minister of Health who has been victimized by a culture of fear. Recognizing this, I'd like to ask the minister: when will you expand the scope of the inquiry to include the emerging issue of government intimidation by doctors?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, sometimes you just don't know where to begin. What I will say to the hon. member is in reference to the interview last night and also with reference to the very articulate member's statement by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View. The opinion I expressed last night was that I believe that the Alberta Medical Association and this government have much in common in terms of our agreement on the issues that need to be addressed. We have further agreed that a facilitator, a third-party facilitator, would benefit us greatly in restarting these discussions. I think the question that everyone should be asking is: why are we not at the table?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Towle: A mediator. Hmm.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the cloud of fear the minister lives under with ongoing bullying of the government, I can understand his fear. To the Associate Minister of AT and T: when will he start holding doctors accountable for their continued efforts to hold this government accountable?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I can attest that neither of us is afraid to stand up and answer the hon. member's question.

The fact of the matter is that we have a situation in Alberta where our physicians have been without an agreement for over 20 months. I want to assure the House that this government is as concerned about that on the part of physicians as we are with respect to patients in Alberta and our health system generally. We have much in common with the Alberta Medical Association in terms of the issues that they want to address, and we're willing and available at any time to resume those negotiations, perhaps with the benefit of a third-party facilitator.

Mrs. Towle: Given that, in all seriousness, the deteriorating relationship between this government and the physicians of our province has many Albertans concerned and given that the Minister of Health is clearly on the mend after the barrage of attacks and criticisms, will the government's master of diplomacy, the Premier's right-hand man, the Deputy Premier, be able to find time in his busy ministerial schedule to step in and settle this dispute?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that all members of this government and the government caucus take the issue that we do not have an agreement with the Alberta Medical Association most seriously. All efforts have been made in an attempt to get an agreement. As hon. members opposite have referred to, we have had not only one but two agreements in principle with the Alberta Medical Association over the last 20 months.

Mr. Speaker, the issues in health care are complex. The Alberta Medical Association has an important role in representing physicians in negotiation matters. The government of Alberta has a responsibility to represent the interests of all Albertans, including physicians, and we will do so in resolving this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Affordable Supportive Living Program

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A surplus school site in my constituency is in the initial review stages for consideration to be transformed into a long-term care facility. A nonprofit group has been working with the city of Edmonton to help develop this facility. This is indeed welcome news as we have more and more seniors every day in our province that require government support. All of my questions are to the Associate Minister of Seniors. Given the fiscal realities in our province what funding is available for Edmonton area development of long-term care facilities?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the member for his continued effort to represent his constituency and the needs of seniors in the Edmonton area. I'll tell you that each day I work with Alberta Health to determine the hot spots, we'll call it, in Alberta where we need to identify projects. Whether they be in opposition ridings or in Edmonton ridings or in Whitecourt ridings, we need to identify our efforts where the need is based. I can tell you that last year we had 13 projects based all across the province. I'll get on to that later.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given our already strained support system for seniors how will the minister continue to ensure that Alberta seniors in need of long-term care are taken care of?

Mr. VanderBurg: Again, Mr. Speaker, we have identified in our five-year plan that we're going to build over 5,000 units in this province. Already, two years into the program, 2,100 have been built. I make a commitment that we'll meet our commitment of 1,000 this upcoming year. We have $25 million in the budget. On an ongoing basis we have three years committed, $25 million each year.

I can tell the member that just in the last round Edmonton All Seniors Care, 60 units were funded; the Beit Horim—Our Parents' Home, 55 units; in Medicine Hat, in the opposition ridings, Park Place Seniors, 80 units; Medicine Hat again, CORE Association, 10 units.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister is a bit more specific. Mr. Minister, how many ASLI units were funded in the Edmonton and capital region area?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that our 5,000 goal is on target. Whether it be in Edmonton, whether it be in Calgary, whether it be in Medicine Hat or St. Paul or Smoky Lake, wherever the need is, where Alberta Health Services identifies a need, that's where we'll put our resources.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Calgary-Hawkwood.

Awesome Questions

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we can all agree that it's been a long session, and I can honestly say that those of us on this side of the House have learned a lot. Particularly helpful have been the deep, probing questions posed to this government by its own members. Indeed, we on this side of the House have been inspired by the tone and tenor of these PC backbenchers over the last six weeks, so much so that I'm going to take a page out of their book. To the Minister of Energy . . .

Some Hon. Members: Why are you so awesome? [laughter]

The Speaker: Like all of you, I'm just dying to hear the answer. However, let's be reminded of the rules. Questions ought not seek opinion. But we did allow one new member some leeway; we'll allow this one as well.

Let's hear your answer, hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, the 13th Prime Minister of Canada, the Rt. Hon. John George Diefenbaker, was fond of pointing out that when you're hunting big game, don't get distracted by rabbit tracks. This government has been hunting big game for Albertans. We've been building the province, we're building the future, we're building relationships, and they would have us all chase rabbit tracks.

The Speaker: While the Speaker can't possibly imagine the supplemental, I'd be most anxious to know if you have one, Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister formerly known as Doctor No or, for those not familiar with the hon. member's past, the Transportation minister: given that you have showered money and gifts all over our great province in the form of roads, bridges, and interchanges and every Albertan should be grateful for those gifts . . .

Some Hon. Members: Why are you so awesome? [laughter]

The Speaker: You know, if I allow it once, I have to allow it again.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I couldn't possibly live up to what just happened, but I do remember an advertisement for a game when I was young, and the answer to the question was: it's in the wrist action. Mr. Speaker, I think that would be a good place to stop.

The Speaker: Hon. member, did you have a final supplemental?

Mr. Wilson: I do, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. Finally, to the Deputy Premier. Don't worry; we haven't forgotten about you. As someone who has been dealt a somewhat unfortunate follicle hand and has to sit across from you daily and be taunted by your proverbial royal flush . . .

Some Hon. Members: Why is your hair so awesome? [laughter]

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, it is so awesome because it rises every time I hear questions coming from the other side. It rises every time I realize that taxpayers actually are paying their salary for this. It rises knowing that all these members on this side are working for Albertans. They're trying to build hospitals, schools, seniors' homes, and are working for aboriginal communities, and this is what they're getting from Her Majesty's Misguided Opposition.

Thank you.

The Speaker: A bit of levity is always welcome, hon. members, and we've had our fair share. Let's hope that the public shares in that fair share equally. I was prompted to almost rule that as a personal attack, but fortunately I did not.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is very hard following that, but I can appreciate that a little bit of humour in our House can bring us together.

Long-term and Continuing Care for Seniors

Mr. Luan: I do have a very pertinent question that my constituency has been asking for a while, and I'm very happy to have a chance to bring it up today. This is in regard to continuing care for seniors. As we all know, baby boomers reached their retirement age last year, and we can reasonably predict that in the coming years the demand for seniors' services, in particular nursing care, will be very, very high. To the Associate Minister of Seniors: what is the government of Alberta's strategic response to this surging social need?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood for standing up for the seniors in his constituency and working so hard for the people of Calgary. Yes, he's right. You know, there are a lot of us that are going to turn 65 in the next number of years. Every 15 minutes an Albertan turns 65, and it's kind of interesting that every day someone turns a hundred in this province. We're finally starting to age. We will be guided by our continuing care strategy, and part of this strategy is investing in our communities.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is specifically related to one of my communities, Silver Springs. It's a well-established community of over 30 years. People living in this kind of community are familiar to the community. They've lived there for over 30 years. However, their needs change, and when they need nursing care, as we stand now, they have to move a far distance – most of the time it's in suburban areas – to get into nursing care. To the same associate minister: what is the government of Alberta doing to help established communities like this one so seniors do not have to move?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the programs that we're going to be announcing shortly is the ASLI program. We will target, as I talked about earlier, parts of this province that are most in need as identified by Alberta Health Services. I can tell you that the Calgary area is in need. You know, just in this last go-round of the ASLI grants in Calgary the AgeCare health services in Walden Heights received funding for 77 units; the Chinese Christian home association, 25 units; the Calgary Golden Life association, 100 units; the Calgary Intercare Corporate Group, 24. And we need to do more, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental question is to the hon. Minister of Finance. I understand that building such community infrastructure costs money and takes time, but seniors in my community don't have the luxury to wait another 15, 20 years before this happens. To the minister: can you help me to help my constituency and answer how you're going to finance such community development facilities?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is part and parcel of what we've been talking about in the House pretty much this session. We do intend to bring forward a capital plan that will be fully funded, and we look forward to building the infrastructure that Albertans need today, as the hon. member has suggested, not defer it out into the future, where it'll probably cost more.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, Airdrie has risen on a point of order at 2:43. It has been noted.

Time has run out on question period. However, the rules do provide for clarity to be expressed, and the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board has requested an opportunity to make that clarification, which will enable the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition to pose another question and then for that minister to give an answer to that new question.

Hon. President of Treasury Board, please proceed.

Details of Meetings with Katz Group Inc. (continued)

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today the question of the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition was: on what date did I meet with the Katz Group this year, in 2012? My office, listening attentively to question period, has advised me that the meeting date was July 17 at 9 a.m.*

I would also add, Mr. Speaker, that I have met with Edmonton city officials on numerous occasions about a possible large recreational-cultural infrastructure within the city as well as, frankly, with proponents of similar type structures in Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Finance minister: who was it, and were they registered as a lobbyist in the lobbyists registry?

Mr. Horner: I'm not a lawyer, Mr. Speaker, but as I understand the requirements for registering in the lobbyists registry, you would have to be registered as a lobbyist and doing a hundred hours or something like this. This was actually Mr. Katz himself, who happens to be the owner of the company in question. He doesn't do lobbying as a profession, so he doesn't necessarily need to be registered as a lobbyist as I understand it.

We had one meeting. The answer was no before the meeting. The answer was no when we left the meeting, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed with Members' Statements, might we please have unanimous consent to revert to the introduction of guests. We have two.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, thank you. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly four individuals who are particularly interested in the introduction of Bill 206, who I hope are here today. I'd like to introduce Janis Seville and Barb Borkent of the Lung Association of Alberta, Vikki Pym for the Campaign for a Smoke-Free Alberta, and also Les Hagen, Action on Smoking & Health. These individuals have worked tirelessly for the promotion of health in Alberta, and I am pleased that they are able to join us. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and to all of my colleagues in the House. It doesn't happen very often that we lose some information, and given the amount of paperwork we all deal with here, that is truly a miracle. But somewhere in the transition we lost the information about the group that I had in earlier. I promised I would read their introduction into the record if you would be so kind as to allow me to. We had with us today 13 people from the Careers in Transition program. They were all GED students. They came with their teacher, Tanis Harder. They did watch most of question period with great interest and had all kinds of questions when I ran out and caught them. So would you please warmly welcome my group in absentia.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The next order of business is Members' Statements, and in 20 seconds we will start with Calgary-Fort.

Members' Statements (continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Christmas Greetings

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the occasion of the coming Christmas and new year, I would like to bring best wishes from my constituents to all members of our Assembly and also to bring warm greetings from our Assembly to my constituents. I wish all of you and your families an abundance of blessings, good health, and happiness.

Mr. Speaker, my thanks go to each member of my election campaign team, volunteers, friends, and voters who have helped to renew my constituency contract for the fifth time. Most of all, I am very pleased that the collective wisdom of Albertans has prevailed in choosing the stability and continuity of a strong government with its reliable long record of great achievements that will continue with the new administration and leadership. During the current global economic turmoil our government provides Albertans with stability, security, sound leadership, and progressive plans for growth.

On a personal note, along with my wife, Kim, I was promoted to the rank of grandparent of the first order by little Dylan and then grandparent of the second order by little Maxwell. I'm elated and extremely proud that I have been given this great promotion. As a grandparent I certainly can speak for seniors, and I am also a strong advocate for Alberta's youth as they are my grandchildren's future.

Looking ahead, I'm confident that the global economy will soon pick up more strongly. Our government has continuously placed Alberta in a much better position than any other jurisdiction. Only by working together and by focusing on things that really matter can we bring Alberta to the world and take on any challenges from our global competitors.

Mr. Speaker, as an additional note, the coming year is also the lunar Year of the Snake, and the snake is a good omen for full harvest.

I wish every Albertan Merry Christmas, Happy New Year, and a smooth slide to success in the Year of the Snake.

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Fall Session Comparative Statistics

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in this House the Member for Calgary-South East gave an inspired address to MLAs about the last time he checked. He said, "The last time I checked, Albertans expected us to debate policy in this House." And he's right. But we have some doubts about the last time he checked on that particular point because the last time I checked, I found a few interesting facts.

During the fall session a total of 843,503 words were spoken in this Assembly during bill debate. And the last time I checked, about 132,000 of those words were spoken by PC members of this Assembly, and over 513,000 words were spoken by the Official Opposition. Mr. Speaker, the last time I checked, that means Wildrose MLAs carried 61 per cent of the debate in this Legislature while the PC MLAs carried a paltry 16 per cent.

Now, if we assume that people were speaking at a rate of 150 words per minute, that means Wildrose MLAs debated legislation for 57 hours, Mr. Speaker. The PCs: 14 hours. So while the Member for Calgary-South East is right that we are expected to debate policy in this House, the last time I checked, it's painfully clear which side of the House is meeting that expectation.

But let's keep on going, Mr. Speaker, because the last time I checked, I rose 249 times to speak in debate in this Legislature during this fall session. My colleague from Airdrie rose 192 times. My colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre rose 189 times. In contrast, the associate ministers of Health and Finance, presumably members that should have a lot to say, rose 6 and 7 times respectively, and the Member for Calgary-Cross, well, didn't say a single word all session. I think we know what Lynden Dorval would say about that.

The last time I checked, the Wildrose Official Opposition is leading the way on debating policy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Calgary Cultural Achievements

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with my member's statement on behalf of Calgary, the cultural capital of Canada for the year 2012. It was particularly fitting as several of the city's cultural cornerstones are marking their centennials this year, including the Calgary Stampede, the Calgary public library, and the Pumphouse and Grand theatres. From the city's earliest days Calgary has been recognized for its unique combination of geography, people, and traditions.

Converting this honour into action happened as a result of partnerships between the federal government, the city of Calgary, and the government of Alberta. The collaborative nature of the celebration extends to the operational side. Calgary 2012 is co-chaired by the Calgary Arts Development Authority and the Calgary Stampede, with partnership from the city of Calgary recreation, Calgary public library, Tourism Calgary, and Calgary Economic Development.

Calgary 2012 has showcased Calgary's culture and will create legacy projects to encourage future achievements. These activities include an artist-in-residence program, a national and international cultural exchange program, the creation of a municipal cultural plan, and a mass participation in lip dub that occurred during the fifth annual Alberta Culture Days in September.

I am proud the government of Alberta helps support Calgary's cultural scene, and I thank the minister for her support as well.

Author Chris Turner, a Calgarian not by birth but by choice, wrote in the June issue of The Walrus magazine that: "Calgary is a city whose best stories haven't been told too many times . . . it's a city whose best stories maybe haven't even been written yet." Those stories will be told, Mr. Speaker, through the formal completion of Calgary's cultural capital celebrations in March 2013. The positive effects will be felt for years to come within Calgary and throughout Alberta.

Thank you.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's my pleasure to table with the Assembly today five copies of the report of the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services entitled Review of Compensation of Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta dated December 2012 in my capacity as chair of that committee. I want to thank all members of this all-party committee and inform you that copies of this final report are going to be delivered to you immediately as I sit down after tabling it.

Thank you, all.

Introduction of Bills

Bill 206

Tobacco Reduction (Flavoured Tobacco Products) Amendment Act, 2012

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce a bill being the Tobacco Reduction (Flavoured Tobacco Products) Amendment Act, 2012.

Mr. Speaker, just by way of a very brief introduction, it's my pleasure to introduce this as a private member's bill on behalf of a group of high school students in Lloydminster who conducted a province-wide campaign to engage their colleagues and their peers in trying to improve the health of all Albertans.

I look forward to the debate on this bill, which is entirely in keeping with our government's tobacco reduction strategy which was recently announced by the Minister of Health.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 206 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the Associate Minister of Finance.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings to do, two on behalf of colleagues. The first is a transcript that gives the facts on Randa Wheaton and her decision to, as a Christmas present for her friend, buy him an extra shower, just to confirm that that's what was quoted correctly. That tabling was from the leader of the Liberal opposition.

The next tabling is on behalf of my colleague for Calgary-Mountain View. These are the tablings from which he quoted during his question in QP on McDonald's Restaurants of Canada I think not wishing to pay children. But don't quote me on that.

The final tabling that I have, Mr. Speaker, is the appropriate number of copies of a really good examination of how taxes, fees, and licensing is breaking down in Alberta between urban municipalities and counties and districts. It's well worth a very careful read. I shall certainly be doing that over the break and be coming back with lots of suggestions based on this.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Finance, followed by the President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the required number of copies of a document that I referred to in an exchange with the leader of the Liberal opposition. It's a candidate financial statement for the Liberal candidate in the Calgary-Klein riding, where he accepted over $25,000 of in-kind contributions, three of which were well over the $2,000 limit: one for $8,782.65; one for $5,440; and one for $10,000.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? I'm sorry. The President of Treasury Board. I got four notes at once here. Carry on.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I don't table very often, but today I felt the need. I want to table a couple of documents given that this is probably our last day in the session. The first one, with the required number of copies, is a letter from Lethbridge College, signed by the chair. I won't read the letter, but it's about:

The Board discussed the option of long-term financing of long-lived capital assets and unanimously supported such a move by the government . . . A planned approach ensures that critical assets such as [theirs and others] move forward when needed while reducing the financial risk and ultimately improving the investment return made by the Province.

The second one, Mr. Speaker, is a release today by the Consulting Engineers of Alberta, where they are very pleased to hear that "the Alberta Government is undertaking a strategy of sustainable infrastructure investment. It is the healthiest approach for Alberta and will ensure our province's long-term [stability]." They state: "We believe disciplined borrowing makes sense if it means pay a little now or a whole lot later."

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, you did catch my attention when you glanced up at the clock. Did you wish to address the hour and the Routine?

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In the event there are more tablings, I would certainly ask for the consent of the House to extend the Routine.

The Speaker: Hon. members, does anyone object to unanimous consent being given to conclude the Routine for today?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Hughes, Minister of Energy, a report entitled Responsible Actions: A Plan for Alberta's Oil Sands progress report 2011 prepared by the Alberta government.

Projected Government Business

Mr. Anderson: Pursuant to the standing orders we're very excited to learn what business we'll have to work on next week. Let us know, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can advise the hon. member that I likely will be making a motion pursuant to the standing orders in about a minute. Therefore, there will not be a next week, at least this fall.

3:00

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us then proceed with the points of order. I have one at 2:04 p.m. from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, who will undoubtedly begin with her citation. Proceed, hon. member.

Point of Order

Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

Ms Blakeman: Indeed. Under our House Standing Order 13(2), that "the Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision on the request of a Member," I have two requests. The first is on his reference to page 510. Now, the remarks that the leader of the Liberal opposition had said in his third question were: please, Premier, afford me the dignity of answering my question. My question to the Speaker and my request is if he could explain his ruling, which called upon: "Members may not insist on an answer." Now, given the tone and the actual words that were chosen for that, I'm curious as to what the member said that would make the Speaker believe that it was an insistence.

The Speaker: Hon. member, thank you.

Is there anyone from the government side that is interested? No.

This is to me. I am pleased to provide some clarification, hon. member. I don't have the Blues at hand yet. However, I did quote House of Commons Procedure and Practice page 510, chapter 11. I believe what I said was the following quote, which I'll read in a moment, and then I said: hon. members are encouraged to read onward or words to that effect. It's actually the second line that I probably should have read because it would have probably avoided the point of clarification.

Nonetheless, on page 510, chapter 11 in the House of Commons Procedure and Practice it states:

Members may not insist on an answer nor may a Member insist that a specific Minister respond to his or her question. A Minister's refusal to answer a question may not be questioned or treated as the subject of a point of order or question of privilege.

However, anticipating where that was going, there seemed to be just a little bit of disorder that followed right after that because the person to whom the question had been directed chose to have someone else from the front row answer it. So I thought I would try and prevent any further disruption by reminding people of that rule.

That is the clarity under which I offered that particular comment, and I believe it was helpful at the time. I would ask hon. members to please read further on. I won't take up any more time right now.

Let's move on to the next point, please. At 2:10 I have again Edmonton-Centre. You raised another point of order?

Ms Blakeman: So you cautioned my member in advance of something happening later. Okay. I've got that one, I think.

Point of Order

Questions to Members Other than Ministers

Ms Blakeman: I'll refer the Speaker to page 492, please. There was a question from this side directly to the Government House Leader, and I note on page 491 under chapter 11, Questions, that the very first sentence says, "The right to seek information from the Ministry of the day and the right to hold that Ministry accountable are recognized as two of the fundamental principles of parliamentary government." It goes on to talk about how important this is, but what I'm picking up is the word "ministry."

The Government House Leader, as precious as he is to each of us, is not – there is no ministry of Government House Leader, so I'm wondering why the Speaker allowed the question to proceed. He did caution and break in at one point but then allowed all of the questions to proceed. So I'm curious as to – it's clearly laid out here – why he cautioned the member and then allowed all three questions to proceed. Could he explain that decision under 13(2), please?

The Speaker: So it's not a point of order? Just a point of clarification is what you're actually seeking? Just so I'm clear.

Ms Blakeman: The point of order is the use of the citation 13(2), which says, "The Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision on the request of a Member." This member is requesting that you explain why, when it doesn't allow for questions to be asked of government other than to a ministry or to a member representing a ministry or to the Premier, the Speaker allowed a question directed to the Government House Leader to proceed through all three questions.

The Speaker: I'm sorry. So you're asking me to clarify a point here. I'd be happy to do that. I think you're referring to the question that was asked by Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock? Is that the exchange, to be clear?

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Correct.

The Speaker: We don't have all the Blues at all, hon. member. It's Thursday, and as you know, we're not able to . . . [interjection] Thank you. That's correct. You're nodding. I appreciate that.

I think I said – and if I didn't, let me say it again – that over this fall session there have been a number of occasions where I have risen and either clarified things or reminded members of rules or admonished some in some cases. In other instances I also commented at some length that there are a lot of new members who are using this particular session as a learning session. I shouldn't say that they're using it; it's just turning out that way.

There are thousands of pages of rules and decorum and so on that we are asked to abide by and adhere to, and the Speaker has been quite lenient, I think, in my opinion at least, in allowing new members some of that leeway. Now, I've allowed that leeway for three of the four parties, who actually have new members. In the case of the Liberal opposition you do not have any new members, so I wasn't able to extend the same courtesy, perhaps, if you had expected it somewhere. But I did extend it to all other members, and I've received a lot of, shall I say, complimentary phone calls and some nice notes saying: thank you for letting us do that.

In this particular case I could have and should have at the time reminded Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock that questions in question period not only ought to seek information and hold the government to account, but they must also not be hypothetical, and they must not seek opinion. On that point, I would uphold where you were coming from, hon. member.

I'm going to read that into the record now, and it has been read into the record. I won't get into the citations involved, but there are citations to that effect, as you would know. That will conclude that matter.

Now we have: at 2:15 the Member for Airdrie rose on a point of order. Please proceed with your point.

Point of Order

Tabling Cited Documents

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This will be very brief. The Deputy Premier – and he did clarify it in a subsequent answer. Of course, this would be 23(h), (i), and (j). He specifically stated that somehow the Official Opposition leader was involved in asking the government for a person to interfere with the queue-jumping or to allow for queue-jumping in the system. The Deputy Premier did clarify that subsequently, but I want it on the record that, of course, the Official Opposition leader was not elected at that time and had nothing to do with that. That's been withdrawn, I believe, and I think it's been dealt with on the record.

The other one is section 37 of the standing orders. Obviously, when we read things in this House and when we quote things in this House, we table them. The Associate Minister of Seniors in an answer to a question specifically was reading off of a document a list of different facts, figures, projects, and so forth. If he could table that list, that would be good. I would ask you to ask him to table those.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you are quite correct. Members are encouraged actually to not quote extensively from documents, but when they do comment and quote briefly from a document, the expectation, of course, is that it will be tabled. I'll allow the hon. associate minister to comment or the Government House Leader to comment, one of you.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would just note that the question was raised under Standing Order 37, and Standing Order 37 does not in fact say that at all. Standing Order 37 says that "five copies must be tabled of a return, report or other paper required to be laid before the Assembly in accordance with an Act or with any resolution or Standing Order of the Assembly." It's a facilitating standing order, which requires tablings to be in proper form, et cetera. It says nothing about a minister answering a question and referring to notes while doing so.

The Speaker: That is a very correct reference. I've just looked it up myself because I didn't recall it there. But the point that I'm making is that when members do quote from documents, there is an expectation in other citations, which I just don't have at hand, that they will be tabled.

Hon. associate minister, I'll recognize you now.

Mr. VanderBurg: The first opportunity I have, I'll make five copies and table it for the House. In the meantime I'll give it to the member, too. It's public information.

The Speaker: Thank you very much.

3:10

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, just a point of clarification on that. The reason why I made the comment, the interjection – because I had no idea whether the hon. member wanted to table it or not. But as members might know, there would be briefing binders that people have, and it would not be, even if one happened to refer to a briefing binder, in my submission, in order to require the tabling of the binder or a briefing note that was being consulted as part of answering a question.

The Speaker: Thank you very much.

I've just received a note here. For reference purposes I'm looking at the sixth edition of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms. I know members are interested in the educational process that occurs here. I can recall being a first-time member myself and being overwhelmed at the time by how many rules there are. I would refer you to read Beauchesne 495 under the headline Documents Cited. It explains the process there. It's rather lengthy, so I won't go through it all, but suffice it to say that it's clearly spelled out here. We'll leave it to the hon. associate minister to figure out how he wants to handle it from there, and that will conclude this matter for today.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Government House Leader rose earlier and indicated that there was no further business as such to be brought forward at this time, so I'll recognize the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 3(4)(b) it is my privilege to advise the House that there is no further government business to be dealt with in the fall session, so I would now move that the Assembly adjourn.

The Speaker: Hon. members, yes, it's been an interesting session.

The hon. Government House Leader has advised that there is no further government business and has moved that the Assembly do now adjourn.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:12 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(4)(b)]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, welcome back.

Let us pray. Dear Lord and Great Creator, as we begin the third sitting of the First Session of the 28th Legislature, we ask for guidance in fulfilling our duties for the enduring benefit of all Albertans. As Members of this Legislative Assembly let us also be reminded that we have all pledged to faithfully serve the citizens we humbly represent. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's good to be back.

I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly a group of young students and teachers from the George P. Nicholson school, located in the constituency of Edmonton-South West, that I'm so honoured to serve. Accompanying these 20 bright and energetic students is their teacher, Mrs. Marcie Syme, and parent Ms Michele Saul. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that the students and guests from George P. Nicholson please rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise before you and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly teacher Ms Amy Antony and 22 of her best and brightest students from Madonna Catholic school in Sherwood Park. I am pleased that they are able to be here today to take part in activities that will help them learn more about the workings of our government. I would ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's nice to be back.

It is my pleasure and honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 51 fine and very energetic students from Meyonohk elementary school. Meyonohk is a Cree word meaning a nice place to be. I think it's the right spot in Alberta right now to appreciate our democracy. They're visiting our Assembly today accompanied by teacher Deb Sitter. Now I would request them to please rise and receive our warm traditional welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm excited to be back.

I would like to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members a group of elementary school students visiting from my constituency. The 17 grade 6 students from Spruce View school are sitting in the gallery along with their teacher, Carmen Abraham; vice-principal, Glen Brooke; and parent volunteers Bobby-Jo Stannard and Kim McKain. I hope they enjoy their time at the Legislature. I'll ask them to please stand as my hon. colleagues provide the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some very special people and exceptionally talented artists that you had the opportunity to host earlier this morning. I'd ask each of them to stand up as I introduce them. First of all, Jeff de Boer is an artist and sculptor from Calgary. He is also a board member at the In-Definite Arts Society, which supports arts and people that are working with artists with developmental disabilities.

Megan Gilmore is from Calgary as well and is a contributing artist representing the In-Definite Arts Society. Brad McCaull is also from Calgary and is a contributing artist from the In-Definite Arts Society. Tony Goodison is from Calgary and is a contributing artist as well; of course, as we heard earlier, he took his first plane ride today to come up here. Monique Morley is also a contributing artist. Johnny Davenport is also from Calgary and a contributing artist. As well, Alyssa Hatton is here with her parents. Alyssa is from Chestermere and is a contributing artist. Of course, there are also many people in the gallery from the Edmonton and Calgary PDD community.

Mr. Speaker, you'll know that under Mr. de Boer's guidance we had the opportunity today to take a look at the collective work of A Meaningful Life, which is a collection of work by 24 artists that are living with developmental disabilities. It's a showcase of everything that is truly wonderful about Alberta and about making a commitment to our lives and to our community. I'd like everyone to give this wonderful group of people in both galleries, yours and the members', a warm welcome to this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you well know, this is National Social Work Week, and I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly seven registered social workers from the Ministry of Human Services and from the Alberta College of Social Workers. Every day social workers contribute to the health and well-being of Albertans, often in challenging circumstances. Their efforts deserve recognition because we all benefit from the many positive outcomes of their work when we see people in our communities doing well and overcoming difficulties in their lives. In addition to four employees from Human Services, we have here today three representatives from the Alberta College of Social Workers. The college is a valuable partner in developing and supporting a skilled workforce and strong leadership within the social work field.

Mr. Speaker, I'd ask the following people to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the House: Sabrina McConnell, a child intervention specialist from Grande Prairie; Shirley Cunningham, a caseworker from Jossard, with the Lesser Slave Lake regional council; John Dunn, strategic initiatives and child care specialist from Edmonton, serving the Métis settlements; Pauline Hunter, a caseworker from AKO Child and Family Services in the Montana First Nation, Hobbema. Representing the Alberta College of Social Workers: Valerie Kinjerski from St. Albert, Charity Lui from Edmonton, and Lori Sigurdson from Edmonton. I'd ask you all to give these wonderful workers for humans in Alberta a warm traditional welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

1:40

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a dedicated group of nursing students from Medicine Hat College. This group of bright young students has been working hard to promote and build support for a much-needed online organ donation registry in Alberta. The gaping hole of not having an online registry is costing Albertans dearly, some with their lives. The students are in the gallery today with some of the community partners of their focus group as well as two of their instructors. We have students Ashley Anctil, Caitlin Beck, Jarvis Butac, Desiree Ehresman, Gabrielle McDonald, and Bryson Daudlin. With them today are community partners Lynda King, Helen Markussen-Brown, and Ken Martin. Also with them are two Medicine Hat College instructors, Susan Sexsmith and Denise Hellman. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Premier, your second introduction. My apologies for not catching your eye earlier.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was very glad to come back to Edmonton yesterday and to be in the House. Of course, in politics we meet an awful lot of people through different walks of life. Something I've never done before in this Legislature is introduce someone who is not only married to one of my colleagues but has become a very good friend, and that is Sherry Drysdale, who is married to our Minister of Infrastructure. The reason I wanted to introduce her today, I think on behalf of most MLAs that are sitting in this House today, is to thank the spouses that support us every day in the work that we do here as we enter into a long session.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, there is much excitement this week. One of those pieces of excitement this week is that it is Sherry's birthday tomorrow. It is my birthday on Thursday, and it is budget day. So it is a festive week in the Legislature. Sherry, I'd like you to rise and receive a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs has an introduction.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an extreme pleasure today to introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly my biggest supporter, my best friend, my partner in business and in life for the last 35 years, my wife, Joanne Weadick.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there other introductions? The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you. It is indeed an honour to introduce an individual who is the backbone of the lady that was introduced earlier. Wayne Cunningham hails from my constituency. He's seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I'd ask that he stand and receive the warm welcome because he is truly the backbone of his wife.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

A Meaningful Life Collaborative Sculpture

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Your recognition of persons with developmental disabilities in the Legislature rotunda this morning was a perfect way to open today's session. We were all honoured to meet the many outstanding individuals responsible for creating the beautiful sculpture titled A Meaningful Life, that was showcased today.

Three years ago people let Alex Hillyard, CEO for PDD Calgary, know that they didn't want to have a traditional business plan, that they wanted to have something that was unique. Artists with developmental disabilities and their families talked about what a meaningful life meant to them, and five themes emerged: Connecting to Community, Contributing to Society, Independence, Relationships, and Dignity. Over the next two years they worked with acclaimed artist Jeff de Boer, and their vision soon became a reality. Twenty-four very talented artists with developmental disabilities created beautiful individual art pieces to represent each of the five themes. Their art was created with heart and soul. It was unveiled in Calgary on April 1, 2012, and A Meaningful Life sculpture was then created to capture this interwoven journey. It is clearly inspirational, and it is also memorable, Mr. Speaker. It is building a legacy for the PDD community because it speaks to the five themes, including dignity and respect, that are important for everyone in the community. We all want this for our families, our friends, our neighbours.

Congratulations and thank you to the 24 artists, Jeff de Boer, PDD Calgary, Prospect Human Services Society, and the Indefinite Arts Society for your passion and your inspiration. I know that this morning you heard our Premier invite you to consider having the Alberta Legislature be a permanent home for your impressive sculpture, and we're really hoping that you'll agree.

Congratulations.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a delight to be back. I'm looking forward to debating issues with my colleagues not only on the opposition benches but also my colleagues opposite.

Integrity in Government

Ms Smith: Public trust is sacred. It is the foundation on which everything we do as elected officials rests. We all must work hard not only to earn it but also to preserve it and protect it. If we lose it, watch out; we won't last long in these seats.

Mr. Speaker, this government has a problem with trust. The fall session ended three months ago with the government under a cloud of scandal and broken promises. There are no less than four full-scale investigations currently under way into this government's questionable conduct. Illegal campaign contributions, health care queue-jumping, privacy breaches, and, of course, the infamous tobacco litigation contract are all under scrutiny, with reports expected in this session. Now the Premier's promise to run a balanced budget and stay out of debt lies in tatters next to the rest of the pledges that she campaigned on and she will not be able to deliver. It's no wonder that more and more Albertans are losing trust in their government every single day.

This government has a monumental task ahead of itself to rebuild that trust. Trust is difficult to earn and almost impossible to get back once it's been broken. We need to look no further than the baffling messages this Premier continues to send on the upcoming budget. She says that she won't raise taxes or cut spending and will balance the budget, all while putting money back into savings and building everything that she's promised to build. Mr. Speaker, if you can find a grain of logic or consistency somewhere in there, please feel free to point it out.

It all comes back to trust, Mr. Speaker, trust and credibility. You can only say one thing and do another for so long until you start to lose both. Now, my advice to the Premier is this: don't promise what you can't deliver, and if you do promise, make sure you do it. If you won't listen to me, listen to Albertans because they are sending you the exact same message.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Fallen Four in Memoriam

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Candles again dotted the landscape at the Fallen Four Memorial Park in Mayerthorpe, Alberta, on March 3 as a community gathered once more to remember. They were there to bring light to the darkness that descended eight years ago when four young police officers were shot and killed in the Whitecourt-Ste. Anne constituency.

I ask you to join me in remembering the vibrant lives of constables Peter Schiemann, Leo Johnston, Brock Myrol, and Anthony Gordon, that ended tragically on March 3, 2005. We remember them, and our thoughts go out to their families, their friends, their troop mates, their co-workers, and the communities of Whitecourt, Mayerthorpe, and the surrounding areas that embraced them.

Thanks to the Mayerthorpe Fallen Four Memorial Society there is a beautiful six-acre memorial park that was built to honour Peter, Leo, Brock, and Anthony plus other police and military forces. It also reminds us that wounds heal and that new beauty is possible in time through nature and community spirit. In this park four bronze statues stand on guard with a 24-foot centre obelisk that salutes all peace officers, policemen, soldiers, and all who have given their lives for their uniform. The volunteers who built this park, maintain it, and bring everyone together for the candlelighting service are true Albertans, proud of those who protect us and ensuring that those who are gone are never forgotten.

Today I wear my Fallen Four pin with pride as a reminder that the brave are forever remembered, and I ask everyone in this House to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Provincial Fiscal Position

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to be back for this third phase of the First Session. In my first-ever question in the Assembly last May I pointed out that there was already a $2 billion hole in the budget, and I warned that it could climb to as high as $5 billion, and here we are. The Liberals want to raise income taxes to bridge the gap, the NDs want to raise royalties, we in the Wildrose think the government has enough revenue, but we don't really know what the Premier thinks. She promised a balanced budget, more spending, no debt, increased saving, and no tax increases. How can all of this be possible?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, on April 23 last year Albertans said that they wanted a government that they could trust to govern through good times and bad times. On April 23 last year times were good. In fact, we knew even then, in a responsible way, that we were going to anticipate challenges with respect to our fiscal plan. I believe the Leader of the Opposition was at the same Economic Summit that I was at three weeks ago, February 9, when industry leaders stood up and said that what we're seeing right now is unexpected. Regardless, we know that we can guide this province forward. That's exactly what we're going to do when we table the budget on Thursday to support families and communities and infrastructure.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Dow Jones just hit an all-time high today, not exactly a sign of hard times.

Given that Alberta gets $40 billion in revenue but the Premier likes to spend $44 billion, isn't the simplest solution simply to control government spending?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, it's really interesting news with respect to the Dow Jones, but anyone who actually understands how an economy works understands that it's a heck of a lot more complicated than that. Albertans understand that, and Albertans understand a differential. [interjections]

I would suggest that if the Leader of the Opposition wants to see how a governing party builds a budget, pay attention on Thursday.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I know you've forgotten a few rules from before. One of them is to be polite and respectful and honour the dignity of other members. Whether they're asking a question or answering one, they deserve the same respect.

Please proceed with your final supplemental.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are looking for leadership, and they have yet to see it from this Premier. Can we have a clear commitment today that in the budget on Thursday the government will not try to fudge or hide or bury or obscure the true size of the cash deficit?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, our Minister of Finance has clearly set out every quarter since the last election and before that what the fiscal plan is and what the fiscal situation is for this government, and there is no reason to presume or to even suggest for any reason that that would be any different on Thursday.

The Speaker: Hon. leader, your second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: I look forward to seeing whether the Finance minister keeps that commitment.

Fiscal Responsibility

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the fall session ended three months ago with the government under a siege of scandals, ethical lapses, and spending blunders, and here we are again. The only thing that has changed is that we can't ask questions about the tobacco litigation that's being investigated, the illegal donations being exposed, the queue-jumping being probed, and the privacy breaches that are under review. But we can ask about their disregard for fiscal prudence, which has us looking at a $4 billion, $5 billion, $6 billion deficit. It's no wonder Albertans have lost trust in this government. What big promise will they break next?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, you know what else hasn't changed since last session? The tone from the opposition; not the questions but the tone.

I'll tell you that as we move forward and we present the budget on Thursday, it has been built in consultation with Albertans based on what we talked about in the election that ended April 23 when Albertans elected a Progressive Conservative government that has built a successful economy that is leading Canada and continues to make that commitment. That is what Albertans voted for, and we will keep our promise to Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm awfully sorry if my tone is hurting the Premier's feelings.

Given that the Premier first characterized the fiscal mess as a revenue problem until she acknowledged, once at least anyway, that it may be a spending problem, how can Albertans have any confidence that the Premier can provide a solution if she doesn't even understand the problem?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, as usual what we see from the opposition is extremism and ideology that does not actually understand how to build a government that provides services to Albertans, continues to invest in families and communities, is prudent with taxpayers' dollars, and also makes sure that we're continuing to build our economy and open markets outside of our borders. That's what Albertans voted for. That is what we will deliver. That is what people will see on Thursday.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, running balanced budgets isn't an issue of being right wing or left wing; it's an issue of being competent or incompetent.

Now, if the Premier is ruling out a tax increase and she's committed to meeting all of her spending promises and she's going to balance the budget and she won't admit to taking us back into debt, how can we expect that this budget is going to be an honest reflection of Alberta's true fiscal situation?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said, I've got an awful lot of confidence in our Minister of Finance. The other thing I will say is that Albertans have confidence in that minister. When we start talking about decisions that we need to make in government, we will build community and we will build infrastructure. You know some of the places where we'll build that infrastructure? Even though that opposition party says that we need to cut back on infrastructure, we are investing in schools in opposition ridings and in government ridings to ensure that kids have places to go to school, to ensure that there are hospitals being built so that people have access to health care services everywhere in this community. That is good government. It is not ideological. It's balancing the interests of Albertans in a way that allows everyone to thrive in the future.

The Speaker: Hon. leader, your third and final set of questions.

Ms Smith: Clearly, the Premier hasn't read our 10-year, $50 billion, debt-free capital plan. I'll make sure to send her a copy.

Medevac Services

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Health minister just keeps making a mess of things. You remember how he bungled the closing of the Carmangay seniors' centre and then blamed AHS for a communication mess? Then, of course, he claims that the health expense scandal is all in the past, but it's clear that the lavish spending continues. He's botched the negotiations with the doctors, created issues with rural ambulance service, and now there are medevac concerns in Alberta's north. Now, I know the Premier issued a statement today trying to reassure people, but we're not convinced. What's the plan?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, let's remember that medevac is used for two purposes. It's used to provide emergency support for patients, and it's also used to allow patients to commute with their doctors, when they're already in the health care system, to Edmonton for treatment. The Health Quality Council gave us a very specific plan with 18 points, 18 recommendations, that we have followed completely to ensure that medevac in northern Alberta continues to be available and safe and will support families. The worst thing that we can do – and, unfortunately, we continue to see it – is to fearmonger and scare people. It is not necessary. The Health Quality Council has said that medevac will work, and we have confidence that it will.

Ms Smith: I'm still going to try to seek some clarity, Mr. Speaker. Given the release from the Premier that says that "Government of Alberta aircraft will begin flying out of the Edmonton International Airport on March 15" and given it also says that "government employees will no longer be boarding flights at the City Centre airport", it makes me wonder: will government planes full of cabinet ministers still be landing at the Edmonton municipal airport? [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Premier has the floor.

2:00

Ms Redford: No.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, you have to understand that we often have these lawyerly nuances from our Premier, so I just want to get a firm commitment, because the Premier's statement wasn't really all that clear, that all government aircraft will end service in and out of the City Centre Airport on March 15.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this question has been asked; this question has been answered. This statement has been made for the past month. This is simply another example of wasting time in this Legislature on issues that are not directly related when the information is clearly available. However, what I would suggest is that if the opposition is concerned, maybe they'd like to send one of their researchers out with a camera to start taking pictures from the 15th on to see whether or not what I'm saying is actually the truth.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's good to be back.

Provincial Tax Policy

Dr. Sherman: It's well known that the Premier was once a great admirer of progressive leaders such as Joe Clark and Peter Lougheed, who believed in tax fairness. Even Ralph Klein used it to balance the budget. But now the government of the richest province in Canada is broke because it abandoned progressive income tax in favour of a 10 per cent flat tax. To the Premier: why is it okay for the government to give away billions to the wealthy few while asking everyday Albertans to foot the bill?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, it's ridiculous for the hon. leader to stand up and say that this province is broke. We have a heritage fund. We have savings. Every single citizen of Alberta has the right to be entitled to say that we have net assets in this province. We are the only province in Canada with net assets on a per capita basis. One of the reasons that we are in that position is because we've ensured that we have a competitive tax position to the rest of the country. We don't need to change it, and we're not going to.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, what's ridiculous is that in a boom they can't balance the budget.

The Premier doesn't have the courage to ask the wealthy to a pay a little more. That would help the Premier to keep her promise of sustainable, predictable funding for health care, education, municipalities. Instead, the Premier is ignoring common sense, reason, and the 70 per cent of Albertans who are calling for a progressive income tax instead of cuts. Why, Premier? Why are you ignoring 70 per cent of Albertans, who want tax fairness?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we have made a commitment to be prudent, to be responsible, and to be accountable. We are tabling a budget on Thursday that is going to ensure that we make that commitment to Albertans so that we can keep building for families and communities, we can do it in a responsible way, and we can continue to grow the economy. We can do all of that because we have the understanding, which years of experience has brought to us, that if you integrate the work that you're doing, you can make this effective, and you can ensure that generations will continue to succeed in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Final supplemental.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Finance minister said that it was important for this government to show how lean and mean it can be. Again to the Premier. Who exactly is your government planning on being mean to: nurses, teachers, students, the mayor of Calgary, or seniors trying to get more than one bath a week? Clearly, the government is pretty nice to their wealthy donors.

The Speaker: Hon. Premier, if you wish.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] That's absolutely right. There was a question in that.

On Thursday we are tabling a budget that is going to ensure that we are prudent and that we are responsible, that we are continuing to provide sustainable funding to vulnerable Albertans, and to make sure that we're making the right decisions this year to ensure success for future generations. That's what Albertans asked us to do last year, and that's what we'll do.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition.

Health Care Funding

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You just can't trust this PC government to keep its promises. During the election the PCs made many promises to improve health care, including 140 new family care clinics and 5,000 new long-term care spaces, but while they promised there wouldn't be service cuts to health care, we've already seen layoffs and cutbacks across Alberta. To the Premier: considering that her government will not deliver a throne speech to outline their priorities, can the Premier explain why she's already broken her health care promises to Albertans?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this may very well be the perception of the leader of this party, but it is not the reality. The fact is that we as a government are continuing to invest in the services that matter to Albertans, including health care and including education. Those are the choices that we've made because we understand that those are Alberta's priorities. The budget on Thursday will clearly set out those priorities. Those priorities reflect what Albertans asked us to do on April 23 last year, what they talked to our Minister of Finance and Associate Minister of Finance about all through the summer. Also, consultations with respect to health care were fundamental to the decisions that we made. All of that will be reflected on Thursday. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I think they're just thumping past the graveyard.

Albertans simply cannot trust this government to keep its promises on health care. Given that the WestView hospital in Stony Plain is facing a $450,000 cut to its services and the transition unit at the Royal Alexandra hospital has been closed, will the Premier admit that this government has failed Albertans with a string of broken health care promises?

Ms Redford: You know, Mr. Speaker, what we have in this province is a system of health care that allows people to get some of the best health care in the world, and that's because of the doctors and the nurses and the researchers that we have here. One of the reasons that we're going to be able to continue to maintain that level of service is because we have people that are providing us with advice, and we have a Minister of Health that understands that we need to make decisions along with Alberta Health Services that allow us to streamline services and deliver services in an effective way because we're concerned about health outcomes. It's why we're investing in primary health care, it's why we're investing in aligning services, and it's why we have facilities such as the Stollery and the Alberta Children's hospital, that provide services in a very different way to families. It's effective.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Final supplemental.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, Albertans just can't trust this government to keep its promises on health care. Given that this PC government promised that they would meet the needs of thousands of seniors waiting for long-term care and given that the government is closing public long-term care facilities across the province, including in Carmangay, Bashaw, and Red Deer, when will the Premier admit that her government has failed Albertans with yet another broken promise?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is certainly not failing Albertans when it comes to continuing care or any other part of the health care system. This government has repeatedly kept its promise to add a thousand new continuing care spaces per year. We are on track to reach our commitment of 5,000 spaces over five years. We can look across the health care system in many other areas for reminders of how the government continues to invest and how our dedicated health care professionals continue to deliver.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Health Quality Council reported that this government's decision on EMS was sloppy and mismanaged. Today the government is poised to make an even bigger mistake by moving medevac to the Edmonton International Airport. In 10 days this fundamental change will affect all northern Albertans, adding at least 40 to 50 minutes in emergency wait times. STARS air ambulance says that it's too early to know if they can fulfill the new role envisioned by AHS. Will the Premier do the right thing, delay the relocation of medevac, and consult with doctors to ensure that any changes to medevac services will not cost lives?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this fearmongering is not constructive. Doctors have been involved. Technical advisers who actually understand emergency services have been involved. Clearly, a decision has been made by the people of Edmonton and the city of Edmonton that we are no longer able to use the municipal airport. Because of that, we have made the responsible decisions, the right decisions, and the decisions that will continue to protect families in northern Alberta. Medevac will work.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a total of 58 doctors have signed a letter saying that the relocation of medevac will cost lives, do you think it is okay for this government to shortchange northern Albertans and put their lives at risk when you can just delay the decision to explore every possibility in order to save lives?

2:10

The Speaker: Please be reminded that questions that are speculative ought not be asked in that way. We understand the intent of it – we don't normally call for opinions – but if somebody from the front bench wants to answer it, go ahead.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government can do a lot better than the speculative questions that are being proffered by the other side. The opinions of people that live in the communities across the province are going to be informed directly by the quality and the accuracy of information that is presented to them by all of us as Members of the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, planning for this move began well over a year ago, when Edmonton city council announced its decision to close the City Centre Airport. I can assure this House as the Minister of Health that there is absolutely no compromise to patient safety or quality of care as a result of this transition, and anything short of that in a message to the public is fearmongering.

Mr. Saskiw: Fifty-eight doctors say differently.

Given that this Premier has previously said – and I quote – that we need to ensure that we are providing as a provincial government the services that northern Alberta needs, how can Albertans trust this Premier if she won't even keep just this one promise and provide northern Albertans with timely access to emergency medical care? Listen to the doctors and delay the closure. Listen to the doctors.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, let's remember that north of Edmonton there are thriving communities with hospitals and doctors and health infrastructure currently. It is not as if everyone who lives in northern Alberta, the minute something happens, is shipped on a plane to Edmonton in order to have their health care needs met. We as a Progressive Conservative government have made a commitment to health care in northern Alberta. We are continuing to make that investment in things such as the new Grande Prairie regional hospital, enhancements in Fort McMurray. We know from experience that strong health care professionals across northern Alberta are providing effective health care services. Medevac is part of that, it will continue to be, and Albertans can trust that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now we get to the real questions.

Keystone Pipeline Project

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, last week the U.S. State Department issued a draft environmental impact study on Keystone XL which concluded that the project would not significantly contribute to the warming of the planet. Despite this, some critics still suggest that Alberta has not done enough to help push this project through and bolster much-needed market access. My question is for the hon. Premier. Considering that this fight isn't over, what is the Premier doing to help get Keystone XL on track?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd actually think that the opposition would be interested in this since they spend all their time talking about how not enough has been done. One of the things that was really important in the environmental impact assessment that the State Department issued on Friday was that there was Alberta data in that, data that was provided by the government of Alberta as an intervenor with respect to the hearings in Nebraska and the hearings in the regulatory process in the United States. So not only has there been political involvement – working with Ambassador Jacobson and Ambassador Doer, my four trips to Washington, which we're going to continue to pursue on the advice of Ambassador Doer – but to know that the data that's in that report is having compelling reasons with respect to environmental impact is very important for Keystone, and we're still very optimistic.

Speaker's Ruling Use of Electronic Devices in the Chamber

The Speaker: Clearly, someone has an alarm clock or something else that has rung three different times now. Whoever it is, please don't put it on silent; just put it off. Otherwise, you and that piece of equipment will be asked to be put off for a while. Whoever has that going, please stop it now. Thank you.

The hon. member.

Keystone Pipeline Project (continued)

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Also to the hon. Premier: with all this attention being paid to Keystone and the U.S., has the government lost sight of market diversification and seeking out new markets?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the work that's going on right now with respect to Alberta's export economy is fundamental, and that takes a number of forms. The first, of course, is continuing to pursue other pipeline options. We're having tremendous success right now and good progress with Premier Alward in New Brunswick and Premier Marois in Quebec. We think it's going to be very important to ensure that we get Alberta's product to tidewater as soon as possible so that Albertans, who own the resource, get a fair price for that resource. That's fundamental.

The other work that we're doing is with respect to refining and upgrading so that not only do we have other markets to go to with bitumen but with other products that would also be able to access different markets. It's fundamental to diversification, and we're going to continue to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. member. Final supplemental.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Also to the Premier: given that there are some who believe that the Canadian energy strategy is nothing more than highbrow motherhood and apple pie, can the Premier tell me how a Canadian energy strategy will help establish increased market access? [interjection]

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I am not at all surprised to see the opposition jeer at this, but the reason we're having success with respect to the eastern pipeline, the reason we're able to work with people like Premier Wall, who is in Washington today talking about Alberta's environmental record, is that Canadians understand that working together, developing an integrated energy economy, is our greatest opportunity for economic success so that we can continue to be a leader in energy. I do know that, very particularly, the opposition a year ago were quite surprised by this, didn't understand what it was, clearly still don't. But we do, Canadians do, the Prime Minister does, the Premiers do, and this is what's going to lead to success for Alberta and Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Emergency Medical Services

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Premier. This government continues to make a mess of our health care system, and it continues to lose the trust of Albertans. Yesterday's Health Quality Council report shows that this government has its fingerprints all over deteriorating patient care when it comes to the EMS system. Despite recommendations there still remain outstanding wait times throughout Alberta. Here in Edmonton the response time has continued to increase since 2009. That is precious time that can mean the difference between life and death. Does this government have any actual plans to improve response times?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, the hon. member missed the substance of the news conference that was held yesterday, where the Health Quality Council presented a very clear road map to address many of the issues with ground ambulances. As this House will know, in 2009 a previous government made a policy decision, which we support, to recognize the fact that EMS is part of health care and should be part of our provincial health care system. It is true that there were some delays in consolidation of dispatch services in the province and some of the other very large-scale initiatives that are involved in creating a provincial EMS system, but this review provides a clear road map, and I've provided clear direction to Alberta Health Services to implement these recommendations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that FOIP documents reveal that the amount of time ambulances in Edmonton are on red alert has ballooned from a total of three hours in 2009 to 76 hours four years later, when is the government specifically going to make sure that patients don't suffer?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the very dedicated doctors and nurses and other professionals that work in our system make sure, in fact, that patients' needs are addressed and are addressed well each and every day. The hon. member should know that wait times in emergency departments are primarily a function of flow within the emergency department and in the hospital generally, not a function of the EMS system. Alberta Health Services made some very great strides in the last year in reducing occupancy rates in our hospitals, in eliminating much of the need for alternate levels of care placements for people who are waiting for continuing care, and in many other initiatives that have greatly improved the flow within our system at the same time as we see a huge growth in population and the number of visits, consequently, to ER departments.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, given that this government seems to be having trouble understanding the impact of minutes in emergency care and the danger of leaving our first response teams on red alert, when will this government stop running out the clock and put the interests of patients first?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we most certainly do put the interests of patients first, and part of that involves looking at objective evidence, taking expert advice, and forming opinions and making decisions based on that as opposed to hearsay and other measures that are intended, I can only see, to scare the public.

Mr. Speaker, we have a very, very busy health care system in Alberta. It's a function of our economic prosperity. It's a function of the facts such as the number of Albertans – I believe 100,000 came to this province last year – and it's also a function of our commitment to continue to invest in health care. The issues that are discussed in the Health Quality Council report are issues that you would find in any major, growing centre across the country. What's important is the action that we're taking to deal with those. That is what Albertans can take away from it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we've heard, the City Centre Airport is closing, and medevac services are being relocated to the Edmonton International Airport. The Health Quality Council of Alberta review stated that "the main patient safety concern is that an increase in journey time for critically-ill . . . patients could have a negative effect on their well-being." The U of A hospital is a 30-minute drive from the EIA, and the Royal Alex is a 37-minute drive from the EIA. To the Minister of Health: how can you assure northern Albertans that your department is addressing transportation times that will be increased as a result of the medevac relocation?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. When Edmonton city council announced their decision to close the City Centre Airport, we asked the Health Quality Council to conduct a study of the most appropriate site for the medevac facility immediately. That report was completed over a year ago. As was mentioned earlier, it contains 18 recommendations. One of the things that it emphasizes and that we continue to emphasize is that the vast majority of these flights are for scheduled services that are provided in our major tertiary care hospitals.

The other thing, of course, Mr. Speaker, that's important is to recognize, as members opposite do not, that before patients are medevacked, they are actually in the health care system. They have been treated, they have been stabilized, and with the aid of the Health Quality Council recommendations, we know they will be cared for properly in transit and upon their arrival.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Also to the Minister of Health. The Health Quality Council of Alberta reviewed the relocation of medevac services and made 18 recommendations to ensure patient safety is upheld after the services are moved. How can you assure my constituents that these recommendations are being acted on and not swept beneath the carpet?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, we have tracked and reported on the progress in implementing those 18 recommendations. As the hon. member would know, all of them were accepted. My understanding is that almost all of them have now been implemented. There are a few that are in the process of final implementation. With the aid of that and with the knowledge of the fact that our patients' care begins before they leave for their medevac flight and with the knowledge that physicians and other health care professionals are supervising that transit and that care, Albertans can have great confidence in the quality and safety of this system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allen: Thank you. To the same minister. Paramedics in my constituency have told me that the patients with severe trauma are already being treated in our Fort McMurray hospital without having to be transferred to Edmonton. How can our hospital continue to play a key role to prevent transfers?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. the Premier mentioned in answer to an earlier question, we have some fine, fine health care facilities across northern Alberta. Northern Alberta residents have access to CT scanners. They have access to other specialized care in or near their home communities. That care assists us in providing as many resources as possible to prevent the need for patients to be transferred for scheduled services here in Edmonton. But when patients do require that transfer, we know that the medevac system is safe, it's of high quality, and it operates efficiently in order to bring them here for the care we need.

We will continue to invest, Mr. Speaker, in hospital expansions in Grande Prairie and in other communities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Emergency Medical Services (continued)

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At a time when Alberta has increases in population, including seniors, and increased complaints about the lack of community care, this government has frozen home-care services, which means an increase in EMS service demands and emergency room visits. Does the minister not see how cutting home-care services is going to worsen the EMS situation?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, home-care services have not been cut in Alberta. Last year in the budget this government committed 45 million additional dollars to providing enhanced home-care services to allow patients who can be appropriately treated in the community to come home sooner. Alberta Health Services has made some very important operational changes in the last few months that will see greater numbers of residents in various communities across the province having access to home care who otherwise would not have, as a result of more efficient home care delivery. We know and the hon. member knows that much of the future of continuing care in this province remains contingent on continued investment in home care. We're committed to keep doing that.

Dr. Swann: Of course, the minister doesn't mention that most of that money went to private providers.

Seven Albertan communities have EMS staff that are shared between fire and ambulance, integrated. It's working both efficiently and well. Tell us how your EMS plan will strengthen, not destroy, the relationship between EMS and fire.

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, at the press conference yesterday we discussed this matter, and I made it very clear that volunteer fire departments and our fire services are very closely tied with our municipalities, who also contract and decide who operates 911. It's very important that they still have control at the local level to manage that. I've appointed our associate minister to work with our fire services to make sure we have the integration necessary so that every single person in every single community knows that when they pick up 911, whether it's fire, police, or ambulance, they're going to get the care they need.

Dr. Swann: To the Health minister: how will the problem of poaching ambulance services from rural areas to urban, leaving rural areas vulnerable, change under this plan?

An Hon. Member: Good question.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is a good question, and this is an issue that the Health Quality Council talked about at length yesterday, when the report was released. The answer is to complete dispatch consolidation across the province. We began with over 35 dispatch services across Alberta. That number has been gradually reduced. The end result will be consolidation of dispatch in two main centres, Edmonton and Calgary, with a satellite service in Peace River. The dispatch consolidation allows EMS staff to see all of the ambulance fleet across the province. It allows them to strategically and appropriately deploy ambulance services as close as possible to the scene where ambulance services are required and to enable that backup to be provided.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Education Funding

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You cannot trust this government to stand up for Alberta schools. Public education in Alberta has been a train wreck, and the trail of broken promises leads straight to the top. This PC government won an election promising stable funding for schools, full-day kindergarten, and new schools in places like Fort McMurray, which hasn't seen a new public school in 26 years. My question is to the Minister of Education. Why is this government breaking its promises to improve Alberta schools at a time when they need it most?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Train wreck? Really? You have the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom who says that Alberta's public education system is amongst the best in the world. Others say that Alberta's public education system is the best in the English-speaking world. We invest very heavily per child in Alberta, we have the best paid teachers in the country, and we are proud that we've got the best standard across this country.

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, given that the Education minister used teachers' private e-mails to contact them with his PC ad campaign and continues to interfere with local negotiations by telling school boards what they can and cannot offer teachers and given that this minister, as well, blew off a golden opportunity to settle with teachers in the fall, when will this government take responsibility for the failure of provincial contract talks and stop interfering with local negotiations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that that member calls the hard work of Alberta teachers and school administrators and our parents and our students a train wreck, I think that member over there really needs to check the facts and really understand that we have one of the best education systems in not only Canada but the English-speaking world. We're proud of that. We put forward a fair and reasonable offer to our teachers. We're disappointed that it was not accepted, but we have a strong system. We're proud of that, and we're going to continue to maintain it.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, you rose on a point of order at 2:29. It's been registered.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, given that there are less than 50 modules available for the more than 500 that are needed across this province and given that this minister had limited modules and portables so that hundreds of families, for example in south Edmonton, had their lives turned upside down by having to move their school kids from school in the middle of the next year because of the shortage, why does this government not take action to prevent overcrowding and start improving Alberta schools instead of empty, empty, windbag promises like you're giving here today?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Those that make promises are those that the public doesn't trust to run a strong education system like we have. The fact is that we have actions to demonstrate the success of Alberta's public education system. It's a great system.

We've committed to continued infrastructure investment, 50 new schools. I would ask the member to pay attention to the budget on Thursday, where we continue to show that we're investing in families, that we're investing in our communities. We're going to make sure that Alberta is one of the best places to live, to work, and to go to school.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Supports for Couples Aging in Place

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently I travelled to 23 towns across Alberta to hear directly from seniors. I spoke with a 91-year-old woman whose husband of 68 years had Alzheimer's. He was in acute care awaiting placement, and she was able to visit and care for him. Sadly, the acute-care bed was needed, sending her husband to a bed more than a hundred kilometres away. That's 68 years of marriage dissolved by a single stroke of the government pen. A month later the man died all alone. To the Associate Minister of Seniors: will you please revisit the policy that forces families to be split apart so that no other couple has to leave a spouse dying more than an hour away?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. Everybody knows how well we've done over the last number of years adding continuing care spaces to our communities. Whether it's in Hanna, whether it's in Lacombe, whether it's in Calgary, whether it's in Red Deer, whether it's in Boyle, whether it's in Sundre, we're going to continue to add spaces around this province like you've never seen before.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sadly, that's not the truth. People are being removed from their communities.

Given that this government is ignoring the trend of separating couples and is all talk and no action on allowing Albertans to age in place together, when will the decision-makers on that side of the House realize that seniors built this province and make it a priority to ensure that all couples are able to age together?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, the dignity and respect for our seniors aging in place is very, very important to me and very important to our government. Every one of the spaces that I just talked about, every one of those communities where we opened up new living spaces had opportunities and have opportunities for couples. Every one of our spaces going forward – we just closed the ASLI grant on February 22. All of those communities will have an opportunity for couples to age in place.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we heard of another senior who was told that his wife would be sent 100 kilometres east of Hanna and the husband would be sent 100 kilometres west to Sundre, leaving them more than two hours apart after 60 years of marriage, will the Associate Minister of Seniors trust Albertans and end the policy that forces seniors into divorce by nursing home?

Mr. VanderBurg: Like I stated earlier, Mr. Speaker, we always strive to keep people as close to their homes as possible. The health care providers will always determine the best place, the safest place for an individual to go to. I have to say that it's not always in our own communities in remote places in the province that we have that safe place for them to be discharged to from an acute-care facility, but we always strive to get them home, as close as possible to their families and their loved ones.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Medevac Services

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. People in northern Alberta are calling for the province to expropriate the City Centre Airport in order to keep it open for medevac services from northern Alberta. My questions are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Would this even be legal for the province to do?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The province does have the legal ability to expropriate the land utilizing the Expropriation Act, but anytime the province considers utilizing the Expropriation Act, we do it with a lot of consideration for the landowners, in this case the city of Edmonton. I find it incredibly ironic that Keith Wilson, who's the advocate that's associated with the party opposite, is travelling around telling everybody that we should just expropriate, do the largest expropriation in the history of the province, with no consideration for the city of Edmonton. We protect property rights, and we respect individuals' ability to utilize those property rights.

The Speaker: Let's be careful about referencing people who aren't here and able to reply.

The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the fact that it's legal to do so, Mr. Minister, if the province were to expropriate this land, what would you expect it to cost?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, we've heard an incredible variation in the numbers. I know that our department has reviewed it. This would have to be a process, if we followed through with it, that would go to a board for a hearing. It's very difficult to assess. We have some people who would support expropriating the land, saying that it's only a hundred million dollars, and we have the city of Edmonton, that says that it's close to $2 billion, and we have other people that say that if you have to pay the municipality for the lost tax revenue that would come from such a large, valuable piece of property on the outskirts of the downtown of a large metropolitan centre, it could be $6 billion. We don't exactly know, but it's a lot of money when it does not impact one iota the delivery of medevac services to the north.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given the concerns of people in northern Alberta about continued and timely access to medical facilities in Edmonton, will you consider undertaking a detailed study into the potential for expropriating this land and keeping the medevac services running?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Mr. Speaker, the short answer to that question is no, and the long answer is no. It would cost money to do a detailed study, and quite frankly none of it impacts medevac services, so we're going to allow the city of Edmonton to develop the land as they see fit and continue to pour our attention into supplying medevac services to people in the north.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Calgary-South East.

Subsidized Social Housing Program Abuse

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week we learned about six-figure income earners living in taxpayer-subsidized social housing – some of the residents in question are earning as much $112,000 per year – this gross abuse of a program in place to assist Alberta's hard-working low-income earners. It appears this program is being gamed by individuals with more than enough means to support themselves while less fortunate Albertans are left to compete for affordable housing. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: how did these egregious cases of abuse just sail through your department undetected for over a decade?

Mr. Griffiths: You know, Mr. Speaker, it's incredibly sad that the opposition would attack the Heart River Housing foundation, who manages those housing complexes for those who need affordable housing. Now, I know that they'd rented it out at market value – they give the implication that they gave it to them for free – in a very small community, and the Heart River Housing foundation felt that they weren't sure if they wanted to sell it because they were always worried that a week later somebody who needed affordable housing in the community might need it and that it was better to rent it out at market rate than to close it and leave no options for those who need affordable housing in that community.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the ministry's own website suggests that the housing programs are responsible for "ensuring Albertans of modest means have access to affordable housing that meets their basic needs," can the minister explain how on earth a six-figure salary met the criteria for modest means and why Albertans should trust in your ability to manage the program?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, let's try this again. We have a very small community, where they just have a couple of units for affordable housing, and nobody needed the housing for 11 years, so it was rented out at market rate rather than sitting there vacant and deteriorating. They thought that they could get some value, and that money was poured into other affordable housing units to support those in need. I'd like to know what this member would like to do. Would he like to sell it off and leave that community in the lurch with no affordable housing or maybe just leave it vacant and let it deteriorate? This is sound management. They're going to evaluate their properties to see if they need to sell it or keep it for that community.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Finance minister: given that an individual earning $112,000 a year was somehow deemed by this government as having a revenue problem, is this how you can look Albertans in the eye with a straight face and suggest that a government earning $40 billion a year also has a revenue problem? [interjections]

2:40

Mr. Horner: Hon. members, the question was to the Finance minister. We thought he was going to talk about the application process, so cool your jets.

Mr. Speaker, I will be honestly telling Albertans on Thursday about the financial situation of this province and the drop in revenue that we have had and experienced in this province, as had just about every jurisdiction in the country, including Canada's GDP.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, you rose on a point of order at 2:39 during the Minister of Municipal Affairs' first answer, and that has been noted.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

National Social Work Week

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today to recognize that March 3 to March 9 is National Social Work Week, like hon. Minister Dave Hancock has already mentioned. This is a time when we can acknowledge registered social workers for their contribution to our province. As you know, I was a social worker myself before being elected. This is a helping profession, and I am passionate about it. Social workers help families stay healthy and resilient, help children to be safe, and assist others to make positive changes in their lives. This often results in creating caring and strong communities in our province.

Mr. Speaker, as Albertans we're always proud of our richness in natural resources. We are rich in energy production, but I like to think that we're also rich in caring people and communities. Alberta is being recognized increasingly in the world as one of the best places to live, to work, and to raise a family. I think the work that social workers have done over the years has definitely contributed to that.

The theme of this year's Social Work Week is Advocating for a Just and Equitable Alberta. Our government is very privileged to work in partnership with the Alberta College of Social Workers to promote this cause further. Strategies are under way to help develop and maintain a skilled workplace and leadership within the social work field.

On this occasion, Mr. Speaker, I want to encourage all Albertans to join our government in saying thank you to social workers in their community for the differences they are making.

Thank you.

Volunteer Support for Stranded Motorists

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, Albertans believe in the good-neighbour policy, and on Sunday, March 3, when a powerful winter storm hit southern Alberta and forced the RCMP to divert travellers off the highway into the nearest town, the people of Claresholm, Fort Macleod, Nanton, and Oyen proved that they are indeed good neighbours. I asked for a list of the volunteers from these communities so that I could honour them on behalf of the government for their extraordinary acts of kindness as they sheltered, comforted, and fed people from a disastrous blizzard. I received three pages of names of businesses and individuals who worked alongside the first responders and their community council members to help those who were stranded. Claresholm Fire Chief Kelly Starling told me that there were over 350 registrations at the reception centre, and people were still lined up to register when the highway finally opened after 6 p.m. He told me that the town CEO, Kris Holebeck, did not hesitate to open the arena for shelter and to call on council members and town employees to help the stranded travellers.

It didn't take long for many other volunteers to step up in these communities. They assisted with registrations, organizing billets, serving meals, and pushing cars out of ditches. Kieth Carlson's Roy's Place restaurant donated 200 hot servings of hearty stew, almost worth being stranded for. Individual families opened their homes for those who were too weary to travel and billeted them overnight.

Mr. Speaker, although I told you the story of Claresholm, I know that this story repeated itself in the communities of Fort Macleod, Nanton, and Oyen. We want to thank the RCMP, the fire departments, the municipal councils, the volunteers, the churches, the Royal Canadian Legions, the service organizations, and all the businesses who stepped up and donated everything from shelter and a shoulder to lean on to warm blankets and hot food. Although there's not enough time to name everyone, you know who you are, and in your communities they know who you are.

Thank you from the bottom of our hearts.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Medevac Services to Northern Alberta

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Medevac services to northern Alberta in a very literal sense are the lifeblood of their communities. So often we speak about northern Alberta and the tremendous economic potential that lies beneath the soil, but I think this government has forgotten about the people who actually live on top of it. I don't know how else to explain this reckless, irresponsible, and utterly absurd decision to reroute medevac services away from the downtown airport to the Edmonton International Airport effective March 15.

The bottom line here is this. The rerouting of medevac services is going to add between 40 and 50 minutes to every emergency. That's between 40 and 50 minutes added to a dying patient's trip to the hospital before he or she even sees an OR. That's between 40 and 50 minutes that he or she won't spend in life-saving care but in the back of an ambulance on a highway. Mr. Speaker, this isn't about rural versus urban or province versus city. It's about right versus wrong. To allow this decision to proceed and deny residents of my constituency and all northern Albertans the life-saving health care they need is just wrong.

In her party's leadership race the Premier said, and I quote: we need to ensure that we are providing as a provincial government the services northern Alberta needs. Premier, I'm going to hold you to those words. Northern Alberta needs those services. They have a right to those services. The decision to reroute to the Edmonton International Airport isn't going to cut it. Don't take my word for it. Take it from the 58 doctors who put their names to a letter urging you to reconsider.

Delay this decision, Premier. On behalf of the residents of northern Alberta I am pleading with you. Keep your promise for once. Do what is right for once. Don't cut northern Alberta off from life-saving health care.

Thank you.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I'm pleased to table five copies of the committee report, dated March 2013, containing its recommendation for the appointment of the Public Interest Commissioner. The copies of this report are being distributed to the members today.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to give oral notice of the introduction of Bill 11, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2013.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to be tabling on behalf of the hon. leader of the third party a tabling which reflects the comments that he made during his question, comparing the current government's slashing of spending and previous Premiers'.

Thank you very much. May I continue with my own tablings?

2:50

The Speaker: You have a second tabling?

Ms Blakeman: I have a tabling for myself aside from the tabling I just did on behalf of Edmonton-Meadowlark.

The Speaker: Please continue.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much.

I am now tabling the appropriate number of copies of a fascinating presentation called Municipal Revenue: An Examination for Discussion. I want to point out that all of the data used in this does come from the Alberta Ministry of Municipal Affairs except where it is noted. This is really starting to break down the way the combined low – I'm missing the right word – assessment works, which is really creating a difference.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings. I will try to do them relatively quickly. The first is from a constituent of mine, Ms Susan Younggren. She is a pharmacist with a number of years of experience. She is concerned about some of the changes the government is contemplating on reimbursement charges. It's a very good letter. I have forwarded it to the minister.

The next is a letter from another constituent, Ms Lori Rosmus. She's highly concerned about the state of Alberta schools. Many of them, as you are aware, are in need of repairs, and the backlog in maintenance is becoming apparent and the size of school classes as well.

The next is an article by Dr. Roger Gibbins. It's entitled Alberta Must "Double Down" on Heavy Oil. Included in that, on the second page is a specific reference to the need for Alberta to change its fiscal structure, and if that's too cryptic for everybody here, to raise tax revenues to allow us to do both predictable, sustainable funding as well as to save for the inevitable day when we run out of this stuff.

The last tabling is comments made by a former MLA, a colleague of mine, Mr. Harry Chase, at the health care inquiry. As we know, Mr. Chase was very passionate about fighting for the issues that many people care about in this province.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of postcard submissions that Albertans made to our prebudget tour, that we conducted in the last few weeks. I have some comments and interesting input from Robert, Bill, Helen, Sharon, Don, Lynne, and others. For example, Robert would like to see the government change the flat tax back to a progressive income tax. Submissions like this clearly show the priorities of Albertans and how out of touch this PC government actually is.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has already tabled. Hon. members, I have a tabling as well, then, unless there are some others. Are there any other tablings? No? Thank you.

I am going to table something pursuant to section 39(3) of the Legislative Assembly Act, and that is five copies of the following orders that were passed at the December 19, 2012, meeting and at the February 7, 2013, meeting of the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services: specifically, item 1, Members' Services Committee Order 10/12, Constituency Services Amendment Order No. 26, effective April 1, 2013; item 2, Members' Services Committee Order 01/13, Members' Committee Allowances Amendment Order No. 10, effective February 7, 2013; item 3, Members' Services Committee Order 02/13, Executive Council Salaries Amendment Order No. 09, effective February 7, 2013; and finally, item 4, Members' Services Committee Order 03/13, Members' Allowances Amendment Order No. 25, effective February 7, 2013.

Hon. members, I believe we have a couple of points of order. I think, Edmonton-Strathcona, you were first off the mark. Would you like to proceed with a citation and your point of order, please.

Point of Order Inflammatory Language

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to raise a point of order under – I'm sorry; I should know this – 23 (h), (i), and (j). I should have this memorized. Clearly, it's my first day back. I should have been chanting it last night as I was falling asleep.

Anyway, the reason I rise is in relation to the comments made by the Minister of Service Alberta in response to the comments made in a preamble of a question put to the government, to the Minister of Education in particular, by the Member for Edmonton-Calder. In his question the Member for Edmonton-Calder outlined in his preamble his concern that the public education system is a train wreck. In supporting that suggestion, he pointed to specific issues. He talked about broken promises, Mr. Speaker. He talked about promising long-term, sustainable funding. He talked about promises of full-day kindergarten. He talked about promises of new schools. He talked about the difficulty or the spectre we've had with the Minister of Education being under investigation for having inappropriately communicated potentially, just potentially obviously, with teachers around bargaining.

He also talked about the issue which we saw on the front page of the Edmonton Journal today, where 500 or so children are being asked to move to a school in another part of the city because of difficulties with respect to capital construction in the education system. So those were the things that he was talking about, and he was talking, in essence, about the public system.

The Minister of Service Alberta responded by suggesting that the Member for Edmonton-Calder was actually saying that the work of Alberta teachers was a train wreck, and that, of course, was not what the member had ever suggested. To suggest that the member was accusing Alberta's hard-working public teachers of having work that equates to a train wreck is, of course, everything that breaches 23(h), (i), and (j) in that he made allegations against the member and he imputed false or unavowed motives to another member.

It's particularly, Mr. Speaker, with respect to subsection (i) because essentially here was the Member for Edmonton-Calder using his first question in this session this year to raise concerns about the quality of our education system, concerns that he had heard about as our Education critic in his work meeting with probably now thousands of teachers and ATA locals and school board people across the province over the course of not only our budget tour but also in terms of his day-to-day work as our Education critic. He was taking their concerns into the Legislature to raise the concern that they have about what's happening to our system as a whole.

Then to have the Minister of Service Alberta turn around and impute a motive to him that somehow he didn't think those teachers were doing a good quality of work is really, I think, designed to create disorder in the Legislature and clearly implies an unavowed motive to the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Ms Blakeman: As well as maligning.

Ms Notley: Indeed. He was maligning the Member for Edmonton-Calder by suggesting that he would make such statements.

The member was speaking about specific elements of the public education system, which, I would argue, can fairly be characterized as a bit of a train wreck when you look at everything that we've seen happen in our public education system; i.e., those things that are under the control of this government, which, of course, are the appropriate things for the member to ask the question about, those things which are under the control of this government. Those things he can talk about, and he can characterize it as he characterizes it because that's his right.

The issue is: are those things the things which are within the control of this minister or this cabinet? At no time was he ever suggesting that teachers in this province don't work desperately hard. In fact, they work increasingly hard every day, Mr. Speaker, as a result of the bad decisions and the broken promises that have been made by the people across the way in cabinet, which is the appropriate issue for us to be discussing here in this Legislature during question period.

I would ask that the Minister of Service Alberta withdraw the suggestion that the Member for Edmonton-Calder would ever suggest that teachers are not hard-working people whose quality of work is very good and whose work, in fact, deserves our support and commendation every day.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with some delight that I rise to deal with this particular point of order. I would start by indicating that it's no surprise that the hon. member would forget 23(h), (i), and (j), making allegations against another member and imputing false or unavowed motives, because she so seldom has the opportunity to raise those against the members of the government. It so rarely happens. I'm not surprised that she wasn't up last night chanting them, but I am surprised that she fell asleep because I would have thought she would have been trembling with excitement at the context of a new session starting.

Mr. Horner: Weren't we all?

Mr. Hancock: I was.

With respect to her point of order there is, with respect, Mr. Speaker, no point of order. This is a classic definition of the term "hoist with his own petard". The hon. member threw a bomb in talking about the train wreck of the education system when he could have raised some questions, if he had legitimate questions, about some of the things that could be fixed. There are always things that could be fixed. There are always things that could be improved. But no. He tried to explode the whole education system as being a train wreck. In doing so, the shrapnel caught the whole education system, including the most important part of the education system, the thing that holds the education system together and makes it among the best in the world, and that's, of course, excellence in education, excellence in teaching. That's what we have in this province: excellence in teaching.

When the hon. member gets up to raise a question and starts with hyperbole, talking about the train wreck that's the education system – the most important part of the education system is excellence in teaching, which is excellent teachers – he cannot possibly hoist that petard without blowing himself up. It's clearly not the hon. member saying something bad about or casting a false and unavowed motive against the member who raised the question. He did it to himself.

The Speaker: I really don't think we need to prolong this any further unless somebody feels compelled to add something that we haven't heard so far. I've risen so many times on points of order where all we're really doing is trying to seek clarification for something.

Let me give you all a reminder here on day 1 that I'm not going to suffer unparliamentary language in this session, and I'm telling you that right now. If you're going to abuse rules that otherwise call for decorum and dignity in the House and civility, you should observe the rule that talks about not using inflammatory language that is likely to lead to disorder.

That's probably what happened here. One person hears it this way, another person hears it that way, and we have two varying opinions on it. How did he use it, or how did she use it? That leads to a point of order, and that takes up the House's time. That takes up my time, which takes up your time, and that doesn't roll the ball forward. Both sides have aired their differences on this matter, and we're going to move on.

Second point of order. Airdrie, please.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Anderson: I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker. We will endeavour on this side to do so and hope that the government will as well.

Quoting from the book of Standing Orders, chapter 23, verses (h), (i), and (j), is the citation here. The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw specifically questioned the Municipal Affairs minister on a matter regarding public housing and folks who are making six-figure incomes being able to get subsidized housing in some cases. The member specifically asked how something like this could get through the Municipal Affairs ministry over a 10-year period without it being detected. It was a very clear question.

The Municipal Affairs minister then retorted, for some reason alleging baselessly that the member for Calgary-Shaw had impugned the folks that were working on the front lines, who are working on the social housing file in different agencies and so forth, saying that they weren't doing their job. Well, you know, I would say that anybody with a good understanding of the English language – and I know this minister does have a very good understanding of the English language. He's written books that would show that. He's a smart individual. He understands English. Clearly, that was not what the Member for Calgary-Shaw said. Clearly, he was asking this minister how his department had failed. He was not in any way blaming or casting aspersions on the agencies that do that hard front-line work.

I don't want to belabour this, but I would ask that in future the minister just answer the question instead of saying that when we ask a question about health care, we are casting aspersions on the doctors; if we're asking a question on education, it's the teachers; and so forth. I mean, we're not going to get anywhere in here if that's the case moving forward, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I did hear that the hon. member had cast aspersions on the Heart River Housing foundation, that manages it locally. The Alberta Social Housing Corporation, which runs under Municipal Affairs, gets audited by our Auditor General, and we review those. We take submissions after the local Heart River Housing foundation, the one in this case, does an audit by an independent outside contractor, and they submit the report from the auditor to us. But we don't have all of the details.

The insinuation was that we did something wrong, but obviously the control lies within the Heart River Housing foundation's control. To insinuate that somebody had done something wrong was a direct attack on the Heart River Housing foundation. At least, that's the way I took it. I assumed that the member didn't honestly understand that they manage those affairs. They get very defensive, Mr. Speaker, because they are hard-working people who did their best to manage things at a local level and to serve the needs of local clients. So I did get defensive and accuse them of attacking them because they're the ones who manage it.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Well, both sides have had a chance to clear the air. Is there anyone else who feels compelled to add anything to this point of order?

If not, let me just remind people again about not only the language used but the tone, the intent, the timbre with which it is delivered. Quite often we do get a little bit carried away, frankly, on both sides of the House, so we just need to pay a little closer attention to that.

At the same time I might just remind you of Beauchesne's 494, where it says, "On rare occasions [certain things] may result in the House having to accept two contradictory accounts of the same incident." I think that's at play a little bit here. Accordingly, I don't find there to be a point of order, but I do find it a point of clarification. It has been had.

Thank you.

Statement by the Speaker

Oral Question Period Time Limits

The Speaker: Now, while I'm on my feet, let me just address a couple of other points that were quickly delivered to me over the last little while. It concerns the 35-second rule. Some of you will recall that in a procedural letter that I sent to you, I indicated words to this effect. I read them to you back in May of last year, and I'm going to read them briefly once again.

Members asking a question will be entitled to a main question and two supplementary questions. There should not be preambles to the supplementary questions. However, in keeping with the practice of the last Legislature, questions and answers should be no longer than 35 seconds each. The chair will enforce this time to enable the maximum number of members possible to participate in question period.

So far I've received two notes asking me about the 35-second rule. In fact, in both cases both hon. members indicated that they felt that in some cases we had gone up to 40 seconds and in some cases today we went up to 45 seconds. I want to clarify something for you, and that is that the clock for the 35-second rule does not technically start until the person starts to speak. Okay? So that will probably neutralize a couple of the questions. With respect to the other ones I'm going to check the tape tonight as I do every night after question period, and I'll do some of my own timings. So thank you very much.

In the meantime, please also understand that there are times when I have to cut off a government minister, there are times when I have to cut off an hon. member from the opposition or a private member from the government side who's asking a question, but there are also times when I let them complete a sentence when I see that they're almost ready to wrap up. Please leave that discretion with the chair; otherwise, we're going to have to have a sharp guillotine that none of you are going to enjoy.

Thank you. Let us move on now.

- B Be it further resolved that the amendments in this motion come into force on passage.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This standing order is necessary to help us proceed with, essentially, the process following the budget. There are a few minor pieces in there which I would point out. Subsections A(1) and A(2) deal with simply removing the Routine called Projected Government Business (Thursday) and then provide that that projected government business will be supplied to the Clerk's office and printed in the Order Paper. That's basically an unnecessary process that we go through every week.

We also in subsection A(3) reduce the number of members on standing committees from 21 to 18. There are three standing committees that had 21 members, and we're asking that they be reduced to 18.

Subsection (4) does the same thing by changing the size of the legislative policy committees from 25 members to 18 members and by moving the responsibility for the Department of Aboriginal Relations from Alberta's Economic Future Committee to the Resource Stewardship Committee.

Those are our processes, and I think everybody would agree with those. We've had some conversation around those in the past. We started with 25 members on the committees and 21 members on the committees in the interest of ensuring that every member of the opposition had an opportunity to be on one of the committees, but I think everybody agrees that the sizes of those committees are too large to be appropriately functional. With the substitution rules that we have, any member who wants to participate – first of all, any member can attend. They now by protocol get notice of all the meetings. Any member that wants to attend a committee meeting can, and they can participate in those meetings but for moving motions and voting. If they want to participate by moving motions and voting, the substitution rules allow that rather well. Those are fairly routine pieces.

The meat of this motion is really about the procedure for estimates. Members will recall that in the standing orders as they're printed now, every department goes to either a legislative policy committee or the Committee of Supply essentially for three hours. It doesn't matter whether there's $12 billion in the budget or $1 million although I guess there are none with $1 million but maybe $30 million or $60 million; they go for the same time to committee. Opposition House leaders and I have talked over the years about how we could do it better, how we could allocate more time for larger departments, how we could ensure that there's enough time.

Also, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we're cognizant of is that now there's a fewer number of ministries. We've gone down now to essentially what would be 18 ministries, including Executive Council. Under the old rules that would only allow for 54 hours of consideration of estimates. I know that the Member for Edmonton-Centre for one has always argued that there ought to be more time, not less, for the consideration of estimates. In acquiescence to her desire to continue with a lot of time for the appropriate consideration of estimates, we're proposing here that, in fact, all estimates go to the legislative policy committees, including the Executive Council estimates.

The legislative policy committees can determine the length of time for each ministry, a minimum of two hours and a maximum of six hours. We've tried to create the greatest possible latitude in the standing orders for the scheduling of meetings: not Monday mornings because members are arriving from across the province to attend, and there are other things that need to be done on Monday mornings; not Thursday afternoons because, as we determined a number of years ago, we want to get back to the constituencies to have an opportunity to be there to consult with our constituents on Fridays and over the weekends, and for some travelling, clearly, they can't make their travel arrangements if we have a late or even a normal adjournment hour of 6 o'clock on Thursdays. So not providing for scheduling on Monday mornings or Thursday afternoons, but otherwise during the week every available time could be made available, including adjourning the House right after the Routine to allow the LPC to sit and meet and consider estimates provides the greatest amount of flexibility for scheduling.

We will still have a horrendous job – and it is a horrendous job – of sitting down, first of all, with the House leaders in the opposition to look at what is the art of the possible and then to consult with the legislative policy committees, which is a new step and one that I embark upon with some trepidation as I'm reminded eloquently from time to time by, again, the Member for Edmonton-Centre that that creates some difficulties in the process. But I think it's important. We've said that the legislative policy committees, the all-party committees of the House, have an important role. One of their important roles should be to own their agenda. That means they should have a say in the setting of the agenda. That is the purport of (6) in the proposal. It's really to set up the maximum possible times. I can tell you that I've heard from the House leaders opposite that they're not particularly interested – in fact, I would think they stated it a little bit more strongly – in morning meetings. I understand that.

We've always been reluctant to schedule two committees at a time, but we also have to determine an appropriate length of time to deal with the budget estimates and get appropriation acts passed on a timely basis. Our hope would be to do that this year by the end of April. So within that time frame we have the latitude to schedule the estimates. We'll work with the opposition to schedule them. We won't be pleasing everybody all the time, but we will do our very best to make it a palatable approach and one which gives primacy to the idea that we should spend the time necessary to appropriately examine our estimates, to hear the ideas that might come forward – and I'm sure there are some good ideas – as to how we could do better with them, and then follow through on that.

Because estimates are so important and because it is hard work – and I wouldn't want anybody in the public that may be listening right now to think that this is not hard work. The estimates are a heavy read, and getting in behind them is heavy work. So we're saying in these amendments that other committees shouldn't meet while estimates are being considered. We should be able to have members focus their attention on the estimates and not have to be running off to other legislative committees at that time. I think there's a proviso there that allows something to happen in an emergency.

By the same token, while we're talking about the House adjourning after the Routine each day to allow LPCs to meet in the afternoons, to provide more time for that, we do reserve the right, on appropriate notice, to call for government business in an afternoon and evening and, if we do, to then make appropriate adjustments to the schedule.

We've asked that Standing Order 59.03 be amended to allow for greater participation by officials in the estimates process. Normally, in fact, in Committee of Supply ministers are there and respond to the questions. Then we changed the rules to allow officials to come in so that answers could be more complete, and then we changed the rules to allow the opposition to bring someone in to assist them with it. We want to take this one step further and say that where appropriate, officials can answer the questions. It's an appropriate addition because the concept here is to get the best information out and to appropriately respond to questions.

That's the meat and substance of this. It does provide that there are issues with respect to the Appropriation Act. The Appropriation Act has usually been interpreted in an appropriate way, but if there are two competing appropriation acts on any given day, the question has always been: "If one gets voted, what happens? Do you pass the time to vote the other one?" This provides clarity that they're voted in succession.

The vote would remain exactly the way it is in the standing orders now, where amendments could be moved in legislative policy committees but not voted. The legislative policy committee reports are reported with any amendments to the Committee of Supply. We then vote on the estimates by voting on any proposed amendments first, any so-called pullouts that any member has decided they want to be voted on separately, and then a rollout vote of the rest. What is in the standing orders here is sort of a clarification of the time, whether it's in the afternoon or the evening, when that vote will be held if it hasn't been previously called on the day it's been scheduled.

Then a little piece here, and I have to admit to it being somewhat personal. After the Committee of Supply reports to the Legislative Assembly that the estimates have been considered, we amend the standing orders to allow for an automatic reversion to Introduction of Bills. Now, I'll have to admit that we used to do this as a matter of practice. We used to ask for unanimous consent of the House every time for reversion to Introduction of Bills so you could introduce the Appropriation Act following the report of the Committee of Supply.

I forget what the incident was where I earned the umbrage of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, but I will take full responsibility for the fact that I did something which caused her to be mad at me and promise that she would never again give unanimous consent, and she hasn't. She has kept her word. She has not given unanimous consent ever since that point to reversion to Introduction of Bills. However, it's time that we moved past the individual personalities of the Member for Edmonton-Centre and the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud for the better good of the province and put in here that we can revert to Introduction of Bills so that the Appropriation Act can come in and be passed on a timely basis. So that's a little story for the record but one that I think is important to point out, that's it not just me with a heavy stick. It's really for the good of Alberta that we do these things.

Then there is a provision for the interim supply estimates, just clearing up that the time in which they are to be determined is not less than three hours but an amount of time that's actually set in the motion. That's because we have some practice of having it shorter if they're smaller and more than one day, as it used to be called, for larger ones.

Then a piece in the proposal, in the amendment, Mr. Speaker, allows for moving ahead with private bills. Members will know that under our current standing orders at the beginning of every new session there's a time set by the Clerk for receiving petitions for private bills. This year we're not starting a new session, so there's no opportunity for members of the public who wish to have a private bill to petition for one. So we wish to make a change there because that's an unintended consequence of not having a new session, to allow in each year that time period to be started whether a new session starts or not so that private bills can come forward. We don't have that many every year, and some years we don't have any at all, but as long as we have that privilege in our precincts to allow that, we should give people the opportunity to do that. There are, I think, two or three waiting in the wings to come forward this year. So that would be the end part of the session.

Of course – and I have to blame this on the Clerk's office, Mr. Speaker – for the last three years, at least, maybe four, they've been wanting to raise the fees. The last part in that does allow for the raising of the fees. They haven't been raised for I don't know how many years, maybe 20. I'm not sure that's the right number. But for a long, long time fees for private bills have not been raised. There's considerable work that goes into them in the Clerk's office. It was seen appropriate. This was the appropriate time for the Clerk's office to win that particular argument and have included in the standing orders the increase of fees.

It goes on further to provide that the amendments, Mr. Speaker, would come into force on passage, and that's, of course, so that we can immediately utilize them following the delivery of what I know will be a fantastic budget for Alberta on Thursday.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I really appreciate the courtesy extended to me by the Official Opposition in allowing me to come in front of them in order to present some support and a few suggestions to make this Government Motion 24 better. The standing orders, as everybody knows and loves, are the rules that we all agree to work by. It is the smallest book that we have in our arsenal. These are our rules. We develop them. We agree to work by them. So changing them is important. I have in my time seen two major rewrites and about a dozen minor rewrites of these.

I do want to say that the Government House Leader is very kind in crediting me with a number of things. Perhaps I should just be credited with being annoying enough that he feels he has to change things. I prefer to see it as that I am upholding democracy and making sure that we continue to allow the government to have enough days in session to be as transparent as they would like to be. Isn't that generous of me? There we go.

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

There are a number of very good suggestions here in Government Motion 24. The idea that we would get rid of the necessity of the somewhat archaic point of having the Official Opposition House Leader stand and formally ask for what the projected business would be: you know, we can do that now electronically and in a number of other ways of sharing information.

I am particularly pleased to see the opportunity to improve our budget system. I had reached the point, quite frankly, after last year that I wasn't going to participate in budget debates anymore because they were so useless. I know that's crushing news to the Government House Leader, but honestly they just weren't. The format of them wasn't working.

3:30

The fact that we would debate the Department of Health, that had a budget of $9 billion and a number of complex departments under it, for the same amount of time as we would debate any number of other ministries that had much smaller budgets or much simpler components underneath them just didn't make sense to me. We have been able to agree amongst the House leaders that we would in fact look for ways in which we could spend more time on the more complex and higher budget ministries than on some others, and I'm pleased that we have been able to get that far.

I do have some concerns with some of the things that have been raised, and ever looking forward to improving our experience in this House, I do have an amendment to Motion 24 – it's at the table now – if we could pause for a moment and have it distributed to the members.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. We will pause for a moment while those papers are handed out.

You may now proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. I have noticed some tendencies from the government over the last number of years while I've been working with the standing orders, and I am trying to dampen the government's enthusiasm for those tendencies because I think that ultimately they do not serve this Assembly well. I know that it's an inconceivable thought by hon. members opposite in the government, but honestly, if they had to consider some of the standing orders and some of the proposed changes as having to work under them as opposition members, they wouldn't be quite so keen to have them passed. I'm just looking out for the best possible for you. In case you ever do end up in opposition, I will have made it a little less difficult if you will support me by passing my amendments.

One of the tendencies that I have seen is an increase in the sitting times per day but a steady decline in the number of days that we are actually here in the Assembly. For those of you that are keeping track, fewer days in this Assembly is fewer question periods in this Assembly. So, again, in trying to help the hon. members in the government be as transparent as they say that they'd like to be, the more question periods that are provided to them, the better off they will be, and the better off we will all be. I'm trying to stop that tendency to shrink the number of sitting days in a session.

The other tendency I've noticed is an increasing number of motions which the government puts forward that cannot be debated. We've already had a couple here this afternoon; for example, the evening sittings. Well, that's now worded in such a way that when the Government House Leader introduces a motion that we will have evening sittings, it goes to a vote without debate. So we're no longer able to talk about this, how it affects our families, how it affects our ability to do our work, or anything else because it's another motion that under the standing orders goes to a vote without debate, and I don't think that's the best thing for democracy.

One of the final points I wanted to make is that although I appreciate and I think it's helped all of us to have staff on the floor with us during the estimates debates, I have one hesitation. I will call it – I can say the name of someone who used to be here, right? – the memorial Gary Mar concern. When Mr. Mar was a minister of the Crown and I used to appear opposite him in Public Accounts, he was not keen on being there, I'll admit. We were kind of stuck because if he wasn't there to answer the question, nothing could happen because we weren't allowed to question his staff. That's moved a long way now. We can now have staff on the floor to assist ministers. But what I don't want to see is the point where the minister disappears entirely, which our former colleague was wont to do, wander off to the back and get on his cellphone and indulge in whatever goodies were backstage there. Just my little request that we not end up with that kind of a situation happening, in honour of that particular minister's behaviour in the past.

Now, let me go to the amendment to Motion 24 which has been brought before us. I'll go through the sections that I've got here and tell you why I've asked for this.

Ms Blakeman moved that the motion be amended in Part A as follows:

A. Section 2 is amended in the proposed Standing Order 8(2.1) by striking out "provide notice to the Clerk" and substituting "provide written notice to the Clerk and all House Leaders".

B. Section 5 is struck out.

C. Section 6(a) is amended in the proposed Standing Order 59.01

(a) by striking out suborder (3) and substituting the following:

(3) Following the announcement of the date of the Budget Address, but no later than the date of the Budget Address, the House Leaders shall prepare a proposed schedule for consideration of the estimates by the Legislative Policy Committees and shall transmit that schedule to the chairs of those committees.

(3.1) Following the receipt of the proposed schedule under suborder (3), but no later than 3 sitting days following the Budget Address, the Legislative Policy Committees shall meet to consider and, if required, make changes to the proposed schedule for consideration of the ministries' estimates that stand referred to them.

(3.2) If the House Leaders are unable to reach an agreement on the proposed schedule under suborder (3), the Legislative Policy Committees shall prepare the proposed schedule for consideration of the ministries' estimates that stand referred to them.

(b) in suborder (4) by striking out "suborder (3)" and substituting "suborder (3.1)".

(c) in suborder (5)

(i) in clause (a) in subclauses (ii), (iii) and (iv) by striking out "8 a.m. to noon" wherever it occurs, and

(ii) by striking out clause (c).

D. Section 8 is amended by striking out clause (d).

E. Section 9 is amended in the proposed Standing Order 61

(a) by striking out suborder (1) and substituting the following:

(1) Subject to suborder (1.1), interim and supplementary estimates shall be considered for not less than 3 hours.

(1.1) When supplementary estimates

(a) total more than $1 billion, or

(b) affect 8 or more ministries, the estimates shall be considered for not less than 6 hours.

(b) by striking out suborder (3).

The first section, A – forgive me for this because you've got to kind of follow along like one of those complicated agendas. My sections A, B, C, D, and E are the sections in order to note what I've done here, but if you read on, section 2 is actually what you will find on the outside of the Standing Orders as they appear in your Order Paper, okay?

Section 2 is amended in the proposed Standing Order 8(2.1) by striking out "provide notice to the Clerk" and substituting "provide written notice to the Clerk and all House Leaders." The reason I've done this is just to clarify. We stated earlier that we really didn't need to have the Official Opposition House Leader standing up and asking the government to reel off into Hansard, just to stand there and do it, frankly, the projected government business. Fair enough. But the way Motion 24 was written to refer to this is that information would be provided to the Clerk.

I just wanted to clarify that that information would be provided to the House leaders so that we can then work with our staff and our MLAs to make sure that we've got it soon enough. I didn't want to see a situation happen where information went to the Clerk, it turns up in the Order Paper, but we don't get an early Order Paper; we see one Monday morning. Tough to schedule your colleagues when the first time you hear about the projected government business is Monday morning. This was just an amendment to make sure that the House leaders would also get the written information and would get it on the Thursday that we're in here, a small change but an important one for opposition members.

Section B is striking out section 5 completely, and that is section 57 in our standing orders. Now, Standing Order 57 is a long-held tradition of this Assembly, and it says that when the Assembly is in and sitting, no other committee may meet. You think: well, what's the big deal? Well, it is a big deal. We're all in here, in the Assembly, to do the work of our constituents, and it's difficult at times to do the work of our constituents if there's business going on in the Assembly and you are required to be sitting in a committee that is meeting somewhere else. So we've always had a rule: no other committees when the Assembly is sitting.

We've had occasions where we've done all-nighters, and it comes around to Wednesday morning. It gets close to the 8:30 time, when Public Accounts is going to start, and Public Accounts can't happen because the Assembly is still sitting, and neither should it happen because we want the full attention of members to be on the Assembly. The Assembly trumps the committees, in other words.

What I don't want to see is a situation where the Assembly is meeting and we're sending people out of here and off to do work in committees. That is not a good idea, as far as I'm concerned. It splits the focus of people, and frankly we can't all do the good job that we came here to do on behalf of our constituents and on behalf of Albertans.

I have asked for that section to be struck out. It's a section that is being amended to say that the LPCs, the legislative policy committees, which are doing our budget estimates, could meet at the same time as the Assembly is in.

There's a second point later on, where it talks about if the business of the Assembly is still continuing – for example, if we went past the usual time because we had a point of privilege or a Standing Order 30 emergency debate – again, this would allow the LPCs to go off and start. I just don't think that should be allowed. I don't think that's in all of our best interests.

Interestingly enough, it also allows the government to continue to shorten the time that we sit. So aside from the conflict that is created and a lack of attention on the business of the House, it also manages to get two things done at the same time and shorten our total sitting time.

Section C, which is amending 6(a) in Government Motion 24, which in turn amends Standing Order 59.01, is really about how we negotiate the schedule of the budget debates. I wanted to make sure here that we didn't do something unfair to the committees, and that is just kind of dump on them: "Okay, you guys. Go off and figure out the time schedule." I've sat in enough of these committees where we all struggle with our electronic devices to even organize the next meeting of the committee, and most times it ends up being deferred to the clerk, who has to do some sort of straw poll, a call-out to all the members to find out when the members of the committee can get together for the next committee meeting. Oh, my Lord, can you imagine having to try and organize a budget debate of all of the departments of the government, doing that at a committee? It's just not fair to do that to the people that are on that committee.

What I proposed was that the House leaders together would present a schedule in a certain timing to the LPCs. The LPCs would be able to pretty much review it and just make sure that we hadn't, you know, gone astray for some reason. That's not usually going to happen because you've got three opposition parties and the government, and if they can all agree, that's about as good as you're going to get. We also as House leaders make sure that each of our caucuses adheres to the agreement that we've made, so we guarantee that everybody will pull along behind it.

That's what I've done here, just adjusted it a little bit to present it to the LPC. The LPC can review it, change it if they need to, and then if we can't agree, it goes to the LPC to do the best they can. In the end, it all goes back to the Government House Leader because it's about that time that some of our beloved ministers remember that, oh, indeed, they had been scheduled to be in Berlin, so no, they couldn't do it that day, and could we please rearrange the whole schedule for them? That then gets punted into the lap of the Government House Leader, and good luck to him. That's what we're trying to do.

Thank you, by the way, for reducing the size of those committees. Twenty-five people was just unworkable, and we're down to 18, I think, in most cases.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I hate to interrupt you, but I neglected to give your amendment a name. Just for the record we will call your amendment A1.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, and I would like to move acceptance by everyone in the Assembly of amendment A1, which is an amendment to Government Motion 24 as appearing on the Order Paper. Thank you so much.

Just continuing on with the amendments that I have in front of you here, section (b) is amending suborder (4) by striking out "suborder (3)." That's really just a renumbering to make sure that the reference that appears in the next section is actually referring to the right thing now.

Section (c), suborder (5). Oh, boy, this is complicated. You can see why I would really feel bad about putting all of this in front of a committee.

Standing Order 59.01. Okay. How could I have missed this? I believe that we all work hard. I do. No matter whether you're urban or rural, you're in the government or not, I think we work hard. What's interesting is that we have a better sense on the opposition sides of what the government's kind of schedule is and where your heavy load is. For some reason the government just never quite clicks into the fact that for opposition members morning is a heavy workload. That's when we get a lot of the stuff done that you see now. So to propose that we would meet in these legislative policy committees to debate budgets from 8 a.m. to noon and then from 3:30 to 6:30 and then from 7 to 10, aside from the fact that I'm sure there are child labour laws that don't allow that somewhere, not that we're children: we can't do that. We just can't.

I didn't want it to sit in there. I mean, your Government House Leader is a good man and would not abuse this, but I didn't want it to sit there in case it might be used by an evil twin in some years in the future. I think we should just strike it out and not leave it lying about to be tumbled over by somebody in the future.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Finally, the second part that I was talking about, where the legislative policy committees may commence consideration notwithstanding that we're still sitting in the House, and the final bit turns up in section 8, and that is about departments and ministries – oh, it's the last piece. Okay. If the minister calls this the Laurie Blakeman memorial amendment because I wouldn't give him unanimous consent, this is not right, and the member knows it's not right. We have a long-standing tradition in this Assembly that money bills get four days: first reading, second reading, Committee of the Whole, third reading. They get four days, and you cannot introduce an appropriation bill until you have voted on the estimates. This ends up putting them together. No, no, no. Tsk, tsk, tsk. It is queue-jumping, and once more, folks, if you're paying attention, it cuts one more day off the number that we're here. I know that those members present on the other side desperately need that additional day to be transparent in question period, and I'm helping them with that.

Finally, the last section, section 9, is what I call the Laurie Blakeman memorial amendment. I have always said that if we are looking at a supplementary supply in which more than a billion dollars is being considered or more than eight ministries are under examination, we should have more than three hours to do it. So my final section in the amending motion is to make sure that if that is the case, we would have a minimum of six hours to debate in Committee of Supply. Some of you happily have not been here when we've had to do that, but honestly I have had supplementary supply budgets of well over a billion dollars with up to 14 ministries being debated, and you've got three hours. I mean, nobody, even the chipmunk singing family, can talk fast enough and get questions out of government fast enough, so it does no one a service.

Those are the amendments that I am proposing. I believe that they're all reasonable. I've kidded you a bit about some of things I've proposed. I do really support the Government House Leader for the work that he's done here, but I am making those suggestions because I think it will result in the best rules for us all to agree to work by, to make it the most fair to members of the opposition, and because a good opposition makes a good government. There's nothing in these amendments that should scare anybody over there. I'm not pulling any fast ones. It's all pretty easy to look at. I would ask that you support me in this amendment to the Government House Leader's Motion 24.

Thank you very much for your attention, and I look forward to your support.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Airdrie, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anderson: Hi, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to refer to Beauchesne's 688, on page 205. We've done this traditionally. Where we have something like this, where we have a motion with multiple parts in it, we sever the vote so that we're voting on each individual one because there are ones in here – and I'll get to my comments in a moment, but could we have that courtesy extended to us so that when we vote on this, we could vote on each of the different sections in amendment A1? Would that be appropriate for us to do?

3:50

The Speaker: It's certainly okay by the chair. Let me seek the consent of the House on it because this is a very complicated motion with many parts to it, and the amendment approaches it from a similar standpoint. Is anyone objecting to that? If not, let's just do it that way. We'll debate the amendment and then the motion as amended, or not, in its entirety, but we'll come to the vote, and we'll do it section by section if that's the wish of the House. Let's do the amendment first. You're asking about the amendment first, right? Are we agreed with that, then?

Ms Blakeman: To vote the amendment separately.

The Speaker: Yes. We'll deal with the amendment in that fashion, then.

Mr. Anderson: Right. Sorry. The amendment, not the motion.

The Speaker: Okay. Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: I'd like to speak to this amendment and the motion generally but certainly the amendment. I have mixed feelings about this motion for several reasons. I am very happy with the idea that we as opposition House leaders and the Government House Leader sit down and go through the standing orders and talk about the standing orders on a semiregular basis, anyway, not always all of them but certain parts of them virtually every time we meet, or most times that we meet, and talk about ways that we can improve the business of this House and how we conduct our affairs here in the Legislature to be more parliamentary and to allow for better debate and hopefully better serve the people of Alberta's interests. I'd like to thank the Government House Leader for that opportunity. I think that there are some very good things in this particular motion that is addressed by this amendment.

The problem is that although a lot of these things have been discussed and agreed to by the opposition, several of them have not been agreed to. It's a little disconcerting because they're actually pretty important pieces. It's a little bit frustrating because we do have these meetings, and they're enjoyable meetings, but I sometimes feel we come out of these meetings and I think we're on the same page until I see the Order Paper, and then I realize that maybe we weren't on the same page after all. So I do have some concerns.

One of the concerns I have – and this amendment does address it – is the issue of morning sessions. I've had the opportunity to be both in government for a couple of years and in opposition for three years now, and I can tell you that the morning period of time is a very different time. Mr. Speaker, you've had this opportunity, as well. You know that it's different for an opposition party in the morning. We have to prepare many, many questions every single day. We have to caucus about our strategy on a day-to-day basis as an entire caucus because, unlike the government, who can plan things in advance and ramp things up when it's time, as an opposition we have to react on a day-to-day basis to what's going on and what the government is putting forward and so forth.

The morning time. You know, I know the staff start our day at about 6 a.m., a couple of them even earlier than that, but it's about 6 a.m., 7 a.m. Most of the MLAs are in there by 7 or 7:30 a.m., and we immediately go to into a strategy session, a caucus session on what questions we're going to ask, what members' statements we're going to make, what press releases we're going to put out: all these different things. Then we put that plan into place, and then basically from 10 to 1 we are just madly getting ready writing and editing and practising and doing all the things that opposition members need to do to do their job effectively.

The problem with putting estimates from that 8 a.m. to noon period is that it really does cut into that preparation time. It's very unfair. It's an unfair advantage for the government. The government hitherto has been very good at giving us that time in the morning.

We do meet for Public Accounts in the morning. That's the one committee that does sit in the morning regularly. That's for several reasons. Ideally, that would be changed, too, but nonetheless it is what it is. As chair of that committee I'm going to respect the tradition. Ideally, it would be changed, but because we want to have access to departmental staff on a week-to-week basis every single week during session – and, of course, most staff go home at 5 o'clock or 4:30 – it's not really practical to have entire staffs coming into Public Accounts after hours, which is what would be needed in a lot of cases.

So we do have some exceptions to that, but generally speaking we don't get into the habit of taking up the time of opposition parties in the morning and interfering with their work. This motion doesn't do that, but it allows for it to happen. It gives the option of it to happen.

I think that this amendment, specifically clause C(c)(i), is very appropriate and absolutely should be voted in favour of by this Assembly. Let's just take that off the table. We don't like these all-night sittings. I don't think anybody likes it when we go all the way to 10 p.m. It rushes the work. I agree with my colleagues in the opposition that it's unnecessary. We get paid a handsome amount of money to sit in this Assembly, and we should be able to work, you know, certainly from the first week of February to, you would think, mid- to the end of June and just work sane hours during that period of time before we break for summer instead of piling everything up like we do. We haven't done that for a while. We've had night sittings for a long time, so I don't argue at this point with the fact of doing estimates in the evening like this.

I would argue completely with any move that a legislative committee made or the House leaders made in this regard to put concurrent sittings together. That's when you have two estimates going on at the same time. The Official Opposition probably can handle that. It's not easy, but we can handle it. It is grossly unfair to the third and fourth parties. Grossly unfair. I have complete empathy for them on that because I went through that as a member of a four-member caucus previous to the last election. It's not a fun thing, and it's not a fair thing to do.

We obviously have our views on the budget and come at things a certain way as the Wildrose caucus. The Liberal and ND caucuses obviously come at it from a different viewpoint, and they shouldn't be forced into a situation where with a very small, small research staff and four or five members they're having to deal with two concurrent committees. That's just not fair, and it's not appropriate. Forcing the opposition to do that should be below the members on the other side if they truly do believe in transparency, accountability, and fairness. I hope that they will make sure that they do not use the discretion that these orders give them to do concurrent sittings for estimates and having two committees meet at the same time or mornings.

Now, one thing I didn't see in here, Mr. Speaker – and that was also disappointing – is that we as opposition asked the members opposite to consider extending the time that we sit on Thursdays, even for just half an hour, so that we could do some of the estimates on Thursday afternoons. For some reason that did not make it into this motion. I thought it would at least be an option. It hasn't been. I don't understand that.

I come from around the Calgary area, obviously Airdrie. It's a long drive home. It's longer for many others. I do think that because it's estimates, not everyone has to be at estimates, just the people on the committees. Surely we could delay it a half an hour before we go home on Thursday and work till 5 or – who knows? – maybe even 6 one or two days. That wouldn't be the end of the world, and it would allow the government to achieve their goals of getting through the estimates at an even quicker pace without interfering with morning estimates or with the morning routine of the opposition parties or caucuses. I think that's a very reasonable request, so I urge the government – hopefully, we can convince them in future days here – to add another motion that would allow for that. It's half an hour we're talking about, but it would shorten the session because we could put a lot of two-hour estimates into those Thursday slots. Therefore, we wouldn't have to put them somewhere else. It would make a lot of sense to do that. That is certainly one of the issues.

I do note that the motion says:

- (5) The schedule for consideration of the main estimates shall be subject to the following requirements:
  - (a) Legislative Policy Committees may only meet at the following times.

It says "may." It doesn't say "must" meet at the following times or "can only" meet at the following times. I'm assuming that the legislative committees, once we get in there, will have some discretion. So I'd ask those chairs, certainly, and we've asked our Wildrose members who are deputy chairs of those committees to not schedule meetings on mornings or to schedule them concurrently one with another. I hope that we as House leaders can help them with that by coming up with some reasonable guidelines or schedules for them to look at as options in making that determination.

Other than that, there was another issue with regard to a troubling piece in here, which is section 6(6), where they talk about how time will be allocated in the estimates. Now, what we've done here – and, again, I think that this is a good thing – is that we've extended the amount of time that we have for estimates, so we can examine some of these larger departments for six hours instead of three. It's still not enough. I mean, we still should be able to examine Health for, certainly, nine to 12 hours. It's 40 per cent of the budget. Certainly, it should get, you know, 15 per cent of the time. Nonetheless, it's an improvement. It's an improvement.

One thing that is disappointing here, though, is that in the first three-hour block the Official Opposition gets one hour to question them. In the second three-hour block for a large ministry the Official Opposition is not given that hour. It's not even given half an hour under this. That's ridiculous. That means that the Official Opposition – and we all, I think, understand the role of the Official Opposition here – will get less than one-third of the time allocated for the estimates of these departments. That's ridiculous. Really, we should be approaching half of the time, but certainly a third is reasonable. I again hope that the House leaders can come to an agreement on that and allow the Official Opposition at least a compromise so that we have an hour and a half, an hour in the first three hours, half an hour in the second three hours, for those larger ministries. That would be a lot more fair, and that is not addressed.

Those are the main issues, that are addressed in this particular amendment, that I am concerned with as I read this over. I don't like the idea of the legislative committees having to deal with all of the different scheduling and so forth for the various caucuses and putting together the schedules for this. I think it's a lot to ask the chairs and deputy chairs. I would hope that at the very least the House leaders would get together, give some proposal or direction because they're going to be able to know what their caucuses need for time and so forth – I think it would go a lot smoother – rather than just putting it into the legislative committees and saying: go at it. I mean, it would waste a lot of their time, too, just dealing with time allocation and things like that, I would think.

Mr. Speaker, those are my comments on this amendment and this motion. I just hope that the Government House Leader will respect these reasonable amendments and support the amendments of the Member for Edmonton-Centre and our ideas as well as we go forward so that we can make this process as smooth as possible without any unnecessary friction between the caucuses on issues where I think we have general agreement.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has ceded his spot temporarily to allow Edmonton-Strathcona to go next.

Edmonton-Strathcona, the floor is yours.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you also to the member.

The Speaker: Pardon me. I'm sorry.

Was there anybody under 29(2)(a)? I didn't see anybody anxious to pursue. None? Okay. Thank you.

Ms Notley: Thank you also to the member from Rimbey for giving me an opportunity to get up and speak on this very important set of amendments to the motion that has been put forward by the Government House Leader.

I want to start, Mr. Speaker, by saying that unlike my other two Opposition House Leader colleagues, who are taking a very reasonable and restrained approach to the motion that's been put before us by the Government House Leader, I am not – I'm sure it will shock people – feeling terribly reasonable or restrained. In fact, the motion that's been put forward by the Government House Leader is indicative to me of a very significant change in – dare I say it? – tone on the part of this government. It is indicative of a decision on the part of this government to use its majority to change the rules to make things work for them as quickly and easily as possible so that they can get out under the cover of darkness as quickly as possible to deal with the many challenges facing their rather old and tired government.

I say this from the perspective of one who has been here for a long time, since 2008. It's like I've been here forever. But I will say that in the previous four years – certainly, the Government House Leader can correct me if I'm wrong – my recollection is that there has only been one time where the government used its majority to come in with a series of changes to the standing orders where we had not had agreement with the House leaders collectively. Of course, there was always sort of the impending threat that they would do that, but we still managed to find some means of negotiating. Instead, what we've got here is this extremely lengthy and complicated and impactful set of amendments that are coming forward from the Government House Leader in the absence of consensus and, indeed, over the very strenuous objections of all three opposition House leaders. This, Mr. Speaker, is indicative of an overall change of tone. So when the Premier next gets up and begins to complain about tone in the House, she needs to begin by remembering that on this very first afternoon of this very first day of session this year her Government House Leader came in with a whole series of changes to the rules which allow them the discretion to do a whole bunch of stuff faster and to exercise their majority in a way that undermines qualitatively the degree to which members of the opposition can hold this government to account for critical decisions that are made on behalf of the citizens of this province.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that this government has said repeatedly over the last two weeks that this next session is going to be almost entirely about budgeting details. So what do they do? They come in here with a series of changes which give them the potential to actually run six committees a day. Six ministries a day. I mean, they could get us through budgetary debate in three days with the rules that they have just given themselves in this amendment.

An Hon. Member: Shame.

Ms Notley: It is quite shameful.

Of course, you know, the Government House Leader will say: "Oh, well, we're still going to sit down with the House leaders although we've now changed the rules so that we don't actually have to do that either. We're still going to sit down and try to make it work, but in fact we've used our majority to give ourselves the discretion to potentially have six ministries a day dealt with in estimates."

The proposals that were put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Centre are an attempt to change ever so modestly and cautiously and in such a deferential way some of these proposed changes by the Government House Leader so as to limit this damage somewhat. So what is she talking about? Well, first of all, she's suggesting that we should not give the government the authority to have committees sit when we are here in this Assembly otherwise engaged in Assembly business. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we have a right and a responsibility to sit on these committees and to participate in them. To then suggest that we should be doing that at the same time that we're in this House debating other matters is inconsistent. It's irrational. It in effect says to everybody in this House as well as to all Albertans: "We don't care that you elected opposition representatives. We think we've got a plurality, not a majority but a plurality, of the vote. Therefore, we're entitled to make all the decisions we want when and how we want to make them." That's what these rules are doing.

The proposals made by the Member for Edmonton-Centre would simply ensure that we revert to the process that's been in place, I think pretty much forever, that we do not schedule committee meetings at the same time that the House is sitting. Hardly revolutionary what she's proposing. Instead, what she's trying to do is stop the damage.

4:10

Now, the next thing that she outlines is the whole question of the role of the House leaders. I've already talked about how historically House leaders worked together collaboratively, including the Government House Leader, to come up with proposed changes to the standing orders that work for everybody. One of the changes that the Government House Leader wants to make is that the schedule will now be done not by the chair and the vice-chairs, by the way, hon. Official Opposition House Leader. The vice-chairs under these rules are given no authority, no opportunity for input into the scheduling of estimates. Be very clear that this set of rules sets out that it will be the government chairs of the committees who will make the decisions about people's schedules, not the vice-chairs. So no role at all for the opposition in the process through which we schedule the budget. And, just to review, if this goes forward, they are going to give themselves the opportunity to have six ministries a day considered.

My experience in committees as well has changed. I would like to say evolved, but it's definitely not the case. It has devolved over the course of the last five years as a sitting member of this House. When I first got elected, it was the case that committee chairs were quite respectful of the opposition members on committees and attempted to schedule meetings in a way that understood and reflected the relatively small nature of the opposition and the need for opposition members to be able to attend committee meetings.

Since the election of the new Premier that ethos has changed. My personal experience is that I have come up against committee chairs repeatedly saying: "No. This is when we've set it. Sorry." There's no opportunity to talk to opposition members or for opposition members to say if they're available or not. That's been my experience in the last year under the new Premier, so there's no reason for me to believe that this process that the Government House Leader is setting out through these rules will be any more respectful of our situation.

Now, the hon. Official Opposition House Leader made the obvious point. Depending on the size of your caucus, this becomes more or less onerous, more or less difficult to meet your obligations as a Member of the Legislative Assembly. I was a member of a two-person caucus from 2008 to 2012, and at that time it was possible. We negotiated with good faith, we scheduled things with good faith, and it was possible for a member of our caucus to attend every set of government estimates and to ensure that we were able to participate fully because – you know what? – that's what we were elected to do. The rules that are proposed under the Government House Leader's amendments, if not changed as per the motion put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Centre, will potentially negate what has historically been an ability on the part of our caucus.

To me that's a very clear decision. That's a very clear choice that this government is making. Ultimately, it's a choice that this Premier is making. It is a choice about the quality of debate in this Legislature, the breadth of debate in this Legislature, the opportunity for debate in this Legislature, and the transparency of debate in this Legislature. That is a choice. This particular set of rules, put forward by the Government House Leader, if unamended by the amendment that the Member for Edmonton-Centre put forward, will significantly undermine many of these key principles that I'm talking about.

Now, another thing that the Official Opposition House Leader mentioned as well as the Member for Edmonton-Centre is this notion of a.m. meetings, morning committee meetings.

Now, again, for the years that I've been here, with the exception of Public Accounts it has always been the case that the government has recognized that the daily routine of members, depending on which side of the House that they sit, is different and that opposition members are incredibly busy and incredibly committed in the mornings, before Orders of the Day or the question period rotation begins. That's just the way it is. That is the rotation of the day. They fully understand what that looks like for us. They fully understand our availability in the mornings, and all three opposition House leaders made it very clear to the Government House Leader that under no circumstances did we see this as anything but, quite frankly, a bit of a hostile action, the notion of having budget debate in the morning when we are otherwise and historically always have been very much occupied. Again, it can't be interpreted as anything but a very intentional decision to try and constrain the ability of the opposition to do its job, Mr. Speaker. That's all it can be seen as.

Now, the Government House Leader will say: "Well, we're not necessarily going to do this. We just want to give ourselves the potential in case we can't reach agreement." Well, if you're not going to do it, don't put it in the rules. If you think you might do it, then that's why you put it in the rules. Be very clear. This little set of rules, once we've had a chance, if it passes unamended by the Member for Edmonton-Centre, is going to be a fabulous example for us to trot out of how this government has absolutely no respect for the work being done in this Legislature.

The other matter that is addressed by this motion is the issue of – I'm losing my train of thought again. Gosh. Already. It's like it's, you know, 2 in the morning and we've been here for three months. But no; it's the first day. There is another critical point here, but I just cannot remember offhand what it is.

All of this is to say, though, that this really is a walk back from negotiating with the House leaders. It's a walk back from ensuring that the opposition members are able to participate in a way that gets the best commentary, the best review from them. It's a walk back from working collaboratively going forward with the House leaders. It's a use of their majority to essentially shorten this whole process. That's really what it comes down to, Mr. Speaker. This whole set of rules is designed to limit the amount of time that this government has to spend in the Legislature because it doesn't work well for them. Every time we get into the Legislature, for the increasingly short periods of time that we actually manage to get here, this government does very poorly. Their record, quite frankly, is one which no one could reasonably defend. What this is about is shortening all of that debate.

We as opposition House leaders proposed a schedule that would have extended the time to debate the budget by all of three days. All of three days. It wasn't our first choice. Our first choice was, of course, to actually maybe do one set of budget estimates a day. Heaven forbid, you know, that we actually do it so that the media and the public can keep up with everything that we're doing. We came up with what I thought was a pretty reasonable process. We agreed, heaven forbid, to stay till 6 o'clock on Thursdays. I mean, I know Albertans will be shocked at the horrific conditions that we were prepared to adopt on their behalf. There we were, ready to do that, but apparently the government is just not prepared to accept the idea that people, for the four months of the year that we're actually here, might work in this House until 6 o'clock on Thursdays.

Had we done that, we could get through budget debate in a perfectly reasonable amount of time and leave the government lots of opportunity to have further discussions about legislation should they ever come up with any ideas on that end.

4:20

I urge all members to accept the motion put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Centre. Frankly, it's an eminently reasonable compromise to an otherwise almost bullying set of proposals put forward by the government. It is at the very least that. Frankly, if you want to maintain any credibility on issues of democracy, you can't vote it down.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise for the first time in this sitting, and it's a pleasure to be here again as an Official Opposition member. Now, as my colleague first spoke to this amendment, I rise in support of this amendment, and in particular I rise in support of the other opposition parties. The Member for Airdrie has already articulated the position that I share with him and with many in my caucus.

There's another layer here that is being overlooked, and it's not necessarily just the technicalities because much of what's happening here in amending the rules is how we're going to police and administer ourselves. There is another aspect to this that, in my view, is being missed, and that is the dignity of this House and the respect for the democratic process.

What the amendments here are trying to do is to allow particularly the second and third opposition parties a reasonable opportunity to schedule their time to participate in this process as part of the opposition. Now, we have enough members here. We looked at the original proposal, and we understood that we could deal with this issue. It would be a burden. We would have to have members out of the Assembly when the Assembly was sitting, and those members would go to committee. But for the parties that are smaller, that's problematic, and that does put an added burden on them.

Now, this idea of dignity and respect for the democratic process is simply this. They do represent not just constituencies. They also represent a segment of the population that voted that are also Albertans. They deserve the same respect as any other party, any other representing member. That is why I'm rising now to speak to the amendment to the motion, to make sure that we allow that respect not just from what I would say is the government's view but to look at it from the opposition's view, particularly the second and third parties in opposition, that they put themselves in their shoes on how they're going to participate.

I understand this party has been in power a long time. Maybe that won't happen next time. That's my job. But the reality is this. The opposition does have a certain function, and as tedious as that sounds sometimes to the government, it is a mandatory value to our democratic process that this opposition works effectively, not just having an opposition but having an effective opposition. The second and third parties play a very important role in that effective opposition.

I'm speaking specifically to the 8 a.m. to noon, section (ii), which is to have the estimates in the morning for three hours. The opposition has a tremendous amount of work to prepare for the day. I'm not going to presume that the government does not; I know they're very busy. But our preparation is based on the government actions of either the day before or what they're planning on doing that day. There's a lot of work to be done. When we're going to convene these committees for the estimates at these hours, that puts a burden that, in my view, is too great, particularly on these other parties. It still puts a burden on the opposition as a whole, but I would argue to you that their participation as an effective opposition, as an effective representative of not just the people who value their ideological views but their own constituents, who expect them to do their job – the fact is that what we're saying here is that we want to participate. There's nothing preventing us from, rather than squeezing more work into the day, sitting a few days longer. We could sit earlier. I mean, that is totally the prerogative of the government to make that decision.

I don't think it's unreasonable to ask, when we look at this amendment, that we look at it as a reasonable person would and say: this makes sense. You may not particularly like it as the government, but the fact is that it is not just respectful of the opposition; it's respectful of the public. It's respectful of Albertans to accept this. This is about the respect and dignity of the democratic process. It is incumbent upon this government and, I would say, incumbent upon the party in power to make sure that the public as a whole enjoys the same respect right across the public and the same dignity, make sure that this process works. This amendment is designed to do nothing more than to make sure that the process works.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 29(2)(a)? I didn't see anyone last time. and I don't see anyone this time. Okay, then? Thank you.

We'll move on to Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've listened with great interest to all of the House leaders and the hon. Member for Rimby-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, and I'm going to echo many of their comments that have been laid out as arguments as to why the eminently reasonable amendments put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Centre should be established.

I'll talk about those, but before I get to that, we have to get to an understanding in this House that the object is not to get in as quickly as possible and get out as quickly as possible. That is not the role of the Legislature. It's not the role of the democratic process. In my view, for far too long in this province we have treated this honourable House as a place where the people's concerns aren't addressed as much as they should be.

I think it's fair comment, if not actual fact, that this legislative body has had a history of not sitting as long as other provinces have. You can go through the records of other Legislatures, and there is no doubt that they are sitting longer, having more question period days, having more debate time on budget estimates, and the like. The work of the people is being done in an open and transparent nature by the nature of us being present in this Legislature.

When we're not in this Legislature, of course, the work of government continues, but it doesn't continue in as open and transparent a fashion as it is done when we are all here. When we are all here, the opposition has an opportunity to ask legitimate questions, probe legitimate issues, and get answers from the government on the record as to what is happening in and around this province.

Actually, it is shocking to me that despite the fact that we left this Legislature last in December and we arrived here today for the first day, this government motion to revise the standing orders first came to our attention in a written format yesterday afternoon. It seems to me that this has been sprung upon opposition parties with little notice to allow for the government to carte blanche change these, with no real opportunity for us to respond, with no real opportunity for us to try and call this to public attention, with no real opportunity to try and ensure that the democratic process for allowing it to be done as best it can is accomplished.

So here we are, with a little more than 24 hours' notice that substantial changes are going to be made to the standing orders as a result of the government wishing to push through things on their timeline, things on their agenda, things that correspond with what they want to see happen. I'm sorry, but that doesn't appear to be fair. Well, I guess fair isn't really the right word. It doesn't appear to be in the best interests of the democratic process, which is what we should be seeking to achieve at all times.

In listening to all three House leaders, it appears that they are in agreement that these are substantial changes to what has happened here in the past. What it can do is that it can allow for us to have morning sittings, multiple evening sittings, and other things like us not being able to be present in this Legislature to debate issues that are occurring in this Chamber when we may be forced to go attend budget debates elsewhere. In my view, that is not in the best interests of how I can best serve my constituents, nor is it in the best interests of any member in this honourable House, whether they are part of government or opposition.

With that, I believe that that proposal should be revisited and revised to ensure that we are allowed that, I think, fundamental right we get as elected representatives in this province, to be present in the Legislative Assembly when issues of concern are brought up. That, I believe, is our fundamental right in being elected in this province. We should not have conflicting obligations going on at the same time.

Another issue that is of primary concern to opposition members is the use of morning times. It is the time when we get to prepare our issues of the day, the strategy we are going to pursue, to read any government releases or issues that they have put forward the previous day or even that morning, and to prepare to respond to those issues. Oftentimes the government has been working on these plans for months if not years, and opposition parties have sometimes a morning to try and assess whether those plans are in the best interests of the people of Alberta. Without having that time to deliberate, to debate, to assess whether government issues or agendas are the correct direction for this province, if we don't have that time in the mornings to prepare and come to an assessment of the situation, in my view we are neutering the opposition further by forcing us to be sidetracked into a whole host of different directions and avenues that may not serve the people of this province the best that we can.

After listening again to the opposition leaders, we have an eminently reasonable proposal made to, I guess, reflect more the opposition's role in this Legislature, to reflect that we do play a part in the process of good government, to reflect the fact that different caucuses have different challenges as a result of not only numbers but research staff and time allocation. Simply put, in a party with five members here it is more difficult to schedule, to get everyone organized, to get people where they need to be to best serve the Albertan people. It is like that as well for the fourth party. As we heard from the hon. House leader for the Official Opposition, he understands that conundrum, having worked in a caucus of four in the last elected body of this honourable House. In my view, this is eminently reasonable. It allows us to do our work in a more reasonable fashion.

I'll finish the way I started. What is the hurry to get out of here? What is the hurry to not allow for us to have full and sober debate and full and detailed analysis of what the government is putting forward to the people of Alberta? In my view – I've held this view for a long time – we should be sitting longer, not shorter. The motion put forward by the government: if we allow the government motion to go through, if they avail themselves of the options they wish to avail themselves of, in my view it will serve to undermine the democratic process further, and it's something we should not be striving for.

On that note, I urge all members to support these amendments put forth by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre and allow us to do our work as both government and opposition members in this great province. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Anyone wish to question or comment?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was going to wait until all speakers opposite had spoken to the amendment, but I'm happy to respond to some of the concerns raised.

It's interesting to me that people immediately go to the worst possible interpretation of anything to describe what's going to happen. If you look at the standing orders that we have today, estimates would be scheduled with Committee of Supply in the afternoon and possibly two at a time every evening three days a week, and we would have them done, in essence, in two weeks. This is hardly an amendment that's going to shorten the amount of time in the House.

In fact, what I've said to opposition House leaders and what the plan is is to take four weeks to do estimates. Instead of doing 54 hours, which the current standing orders provide for, we're talking about 75 to 79 hours of time. Instead of three hours for major ministries, that have $12 billion in funds, it's up to six hours to do them. I sit here and hear people say that democracy as we know it is going to be dead because – we're doing what? – we're changing the standing orders so we can do a more robust planning process to say: how can we handle the estimates properly?

I acknowledged right up front that members of the opposition don't want to sit in the mornings. I understand that. I don't want to sit in the mornings either, quite frankly. I don't think any members on this side want to sit in the mornings. We all have work to do in the mornings. We all get up early in the morning. I think we all do. I certainly leave home by 6 or 6:30 in the morning most days. Often I'm surprised that the Official Opposition lets their staff get in ahead of them. I don't think that happens very often on this side of the House. We usually show leadership by getting in there first, but I digress.

The fact of the matter is that this isn't about changing democracy as we know it. It's about trying to find a flexibility in the standing orders which will allow us together to plan an estimates process, which will allow for a robust investigation and discussion about the estimates of each department. That's what we plan to do. Yes, the motion that I put forward does provide the potential for morning meetings. I would anticipate that we likely won't have morning meetings, but possibly we will need one or two in order to get it done on the schedule that I've set out of having the Appropriation Act passed by the end of April, which is in two months. It's a pretty good amount of time. It allows people to do their constituency weeks and their research, to have the time. It allows for people to focus on the estimates if we don't have other committees meeting at the same time. It's a fairly robust process.

We will work. We will talk with the opposition, as I always have and always will, to find out what their needs are, to find out how we balance to make sure that the critic is showing up at the same time as the ministry and those sorts of things. That's always been how it works. It's not in the standing orders, but that's always been the way we've done it, and that's the way we'll continue to do it because that makes for a good operation of this House. We tend to do that. Sometimes we disagree. Sometimes we do end up disagreeing on a matter, but lots of times we work out that schedule in an amicable way, in a way that allows us all to get on and do our jobs.

To speak specifically to some of the comments raised, I don't have any problem with section A1A, actually, because that's our practice. You give the projected government business, and you send a copy of it to everybody at the same time. It would be our intention to continue that, whether it's written in the standing orders or not. If you want to write it in the standing orders, that doesn't cause me any problems.

4:40

Section A1B, on striking out section 5, is a little problematic because if you want what used to be Committee of Supply to meet for three hours in the afternoon, you've got to sort of start on time. If you don't start on time or if you've moved off the clock, as we did today with a few points of order and things like that, you end up losing that time. Section 5 would not abrogate the opportunity for members to attend and participate in the House for business of the House, but it would say that you don't actually have to sit around and watch us – although it's scintillating, I'm sure, because I'm usually participating in them – debate the standing orders and whether there's been a point of order or not.

The only other time that that would come into play is if there was a Standing Order 30 and we adjourned the ordinary business of the House to discuss a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. As members know, there's no motion that's voted on in that. It's a debate. People can participate in that debate, but not everybody typically sticks around for those debates either. That's the only circumstance under which you would have the committee meeting while the House was still meeting. I'm not even sure about the Standing Order 30 one. I'm not sure if a Standing Order 30 would be able to come up in that circumstance, but I stand to be corrected on that. In the ordinary business of the House we'd adjourn right after the Routine, and there wouldn't be time for the motion to come forward. But, in my mind, I don't know. I'd have to go and have a look at that. In any event, that would be the only circumstance where a committee would meet.

Now, with respect to subsection C the practice has always been, in my experience – and I have about 15 years of it as House leader – that we discuss the schedule with the opposition. We prepare a schedule because you have to start someplace, so a straw-dog schedule. We send it to the opposition. They typically come back and point out where we've erred in terms of their critic's availability relative to the minister's availability. Quite frankly, in the past that's been a very difficult schedule to prepare because we have had small caucuses on the opposition side and an inability to match critics to ministries, with small caucuses trying to be in two places at once.

We've had in earlier times A, B, C, D committees, four subcommittees of supply that met and did it. We've had designated committees of supply that met on a Friday morning. We have done estimates in a number of different ways. One of the things that's been consistent, in my experience, through all of those ways is that the opposition has wanted more time and more flexibility with respect to the committees, which we've built into this motion, and they've always complained about two committees sitting at the same time, which I understand thoroughly and completely.

But if you want to do it in an appropriate time frame and you want to allow for as long as possible to do it in terms of the number of hours and the flexibility of scheduling, then you have to sort of look at it and say: "Okay. What are the building blocks that make this happen? What are the mornings, afternoons, and evenings that are available to schedule? How do we do it and minimize the number of things that disrupt the business that we all do every day in terms of mornings or in terms of two committees sitting together in the evening?" I think we can do that. I think we can work that out. But I don't believe it's something you're going to be able to quantify in the rules. I think you have to have the ability to do that.

Now, I don't agree with section C(a)(3) because while we actually will probably do that and always have, we haven't sat down and made it sort of an agreement piece, and there's a reason for that. The Government House Leader has to have the flexibility to work with opposition critics' schedules, ministers' schedules, and a number of other things that come up to try and get it all together, and we do that. But we don't sit down and do that; we send it back and forth. We don't sit down in a meeting and try and hammer it out, but we achieve the same result. I would suggest that that's a good way to do it.

What I suggest is that we send it to the committees because the committees ought to at least nominally be in charge of their schedule. Nobody would suggest that we send it to the committees without giving them a straw-dog schedule to look at. The committee chairs don't meet with their committees without, as I understand it – and it certainly would be an appropriate practice – sitting down with the vice-chairs to work out what's happening and then put it on the table for the committee to discuss. Then, of course, if there's something that's missed or somebody has a point to make, the committee can do it. That's what we've provided for, and I don't see that A1C(a)(3) adds any value to that or that (3.1) or (3.2) add any value to that. It's a process, and it can't be fully codified.

Now, suborder (5), the deletion of the morning meetings. Well, as I've said, we probably won't have any morning meetings other than perhaps on Wednesdays. There's already a meeting anyway on Wednesday, so it's not going to disrupt anybody's schedule any more than it's already disrupted by that meeting.

Section D: that's the one reversion. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre said: well, you have four distinct days. But she would know as well as anyone that when you introduce a bill for first reading, there's actually no debate. There are supposed to be very short introductory comments. Sometimes they do go on a little longer than they probably are supposed to, but there's no debate on it. Whether it comes in on the night of Committee of Supply, as it has in my experience for the first 10 years of my life in here up until about five years ago – I could be wrong by a year either way – reverting to Introduction of Bills was the norm, and it was only disrupted by my inadvertent stumbling about and causing umbrage to the hon. member. It doesn't shorten anything, really. I will say that you could save a day on that, no question. That's probably what made you upset in the first place now that I think about it.

With respect to section 9, again, we have had sort of an informal practice of saying: how many days do we need to sit in Committee of Supply for supplementary estimates? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is absolutely right. She's one of the authors of this sort of understanding that we've had that if it's over a billion dollars, it ought to have two days, as we used to call it. But there was uncertainty in there, and we're proposing in the standing orders amendment that we have to provide that certainty, that it can be referred for not fewer than three hours. I think the clear implication is that it can be referred for more than three hours. There's no reason to believe that the protocol won't continue.

The amendments, I think, other than A1A, don't significantly add value. They do create problems with respect to the process. With respect, there is no intention here to subvert democracy or to bludgeon the opposition. It's really about how we do this process in an appropriate way.

I do hear the Official Opposition and the other opposition parties talking about the need for the mornings, and I can understand that it takes them a full morning to get ready for the questions that they have in a 50-minute question period. I can understand that it might take that amount of time to prepare for that. They are reactive – there's no question about that – rather than proactive in that process. I don't mean in any sense to diminish the work that they do. One of the speakers earlier said that a good opposition makes a great government. I think the corollary for that is that we must have a good opposition because we have a great government. We want opposition to work well. There's no question that we should want opposition to work well. It's good for democracy if opposition works well.

There's no question that we work long hours and difficult hours – particularly around budget it's difficult – so I would like us to develop a schedule that works for us. I would like us to develop a schedule which allows us to have a thorough examination of every department, including the time for larger departments. I think we need to understand that it is a portion of our work, not all of our work but a very important portion of our work. The two months, including, I understand, constituency weeks, ought to be enough time for us to actually deal with the estimates and pass an appropriation bill.

There is no way that anybody is going to talk about six committees a day, that Edmonton-Strathcona raised. That's just not on. It's a worst-case-scenario type of thing. You know, the rules should allow us to have the flexibility we need to sit down and work together as parliamentarians to devise a calendar that works for all of us. Yes, in certain circumstances one group or the other will feel aggrieved about something, but they won't feel aggrieved about the whole thing. It'll work for this House and for Albertans. That means that, yes, we need the flexibility to say that in some circumstances there might be a requirement for two committees to meet at a time. It shouldn't happen routinely. It shouldn't happen very often. But we do it now, and it has worked, and it can work when necessary.

Okay. I've got one minute left. The Order Paper with these motions on it: Calgary-Buffalo, I think, indicated that he hadn't seen it in writing. It was available at 8 o'clock yesterday morning, not late in the afternoon, and it's certainly consistent with what I put on the table in our discussion earlier. There are no surprises in it. Is it a work-in-progress? Yes, I think we should consider it a work-in-progress. We have agreed to meet and talk about the rules again. Whether we revisit these specific ones or not I'm open for discussion on, but we need to have something on the table.

The budget is coming down on Thursday. I, for one, like to plan my life and like to plan the lives of my colleagues to the extent that it's my responsibility to do so. I'd like to get on with planning that schedule for estimates, and if we make some twists and changes in it, so be it. But let's pass this motion unamended. Let's defeat the amendments except for amendment A1A, pass the motion, get on with getting the schedule together, and work in good faith, as we always have. It's my continuing commitment that as House leader I try to do that to the extent possible, and I think we can have a very good session and a very good examination of the estimates.

The Speaker: I believe, Edmonton-Centre, that you're rising under 29(2)(a).

Ms Blakeman: I am indeed.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. The surprise, to me, in looking at what actually came out in the Order Paper yesterday, was that the government had not moved on anything. I thought that after the discussions we'd had, there would have been some movement from government on something. That was the surprise for me.

Now, let me just go back again. I appreciate the support on section A, but I'm going to ask the Government House Leader and the rest of the members on the government side to consider section C again. I can see I'm not going to win the argument that the committees should not meet while the Assembly is in. I continue to think that that shouldn't happen, but okay; I'm not going to win that one. I do honestly believe that I improved what the government had in section C, and therefore the government should not fear codifying what is already done. You should not fear the opposition, and neither should you fear yourself. I believe that you can change this now if it turns out to be a tremendous problem. Let's face it. The government has got the majority. They can come back the next time and change it if it has turned out to be a tremendous difficulty for them.

All I've done here: I've actually codified what we tend to do, and I think that gives us some certainty to go forward with. It's fair. It contains the flexibility necessary. It does say that if the committee doesn't like what we did, they can change it. If the House leaders don't manage to agree, which does happen, surprisingly, then we have a fail-safe in there about who would start to put this together. In the end, I left the section that sends it back to the Government House Leader to be able to work with the last-minute declarations of travel plans for ministers, God bless them, each and every one, and their tiny white socks. But I believe this is a very reasonable amendment to be made, and I would ask the Government House Leader to look at it again because I think this does make it better. It does offer some certainty. It does show that there's no evil intent from government.

You know, the morning thing: if for some reason government wants to use it to pick up the time, we will work with you to find another time to do this. We were more than willing to add on to Thursday afternoons to do it, and that's the same reasoning that the Government House Leader uses to say: well, you know, if there's business in the Assembly and you have to go off and do committee, that can be worked out. Same thing. If we've got people that have to get on the bus or the plane or the car or their bicycle and go home on Thursday afternoon to get back into their constituency, fair enough. Let them go, and the rest of us will stay and work on whatever we have to work on on Thursday afternoon and extend the period from 4:30 to 6.

I think I've been very reasonable. This one is important to me. I think it sends a number of signals about responsibility and flexibility. I would ask the Government House Leader to reconsider that, and I'm going to give him enough time to say anything he wants in the last two minutes.

The Speaker: Is there anyone else who wishes to speak?

Mr. Hancock: I know that's questions and comments, but I didn't hear any questions. I heard a lot of comments. But I think I answered all the questions that were raised. I understand her desire. It is normally the opposition's desire to codify everything, and it is usually the government's desire to provide frameworks within which to work. That's a distinction that always happens between government and opposition. I actually prefer the frameworks because it gives us the flexibility to sit down and make it work out the way it should work for all of us, and I am committed to doing that. I know that at the end of the day there will be things that they will be upset about, and I know that at the end of the day there will be things that my caucus will want to kick me in the butt for. That's the way the system works, and that's the burden we bear as House leaders.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do actually have a question for the hon. member. I would ask him to clarify a comment you just made concerning having committees meet simultaneously and how it works for the members. Most recently a member of the third party had to run between meetings, back and forth, to get a vote in one meeting, then run to another meeting to get a vote in another meeting. If you could elaborate, how does that actually work? From where I sit, that's ineffective, where he can't participate completely in a full committee meeting and has to leave a committee and ask someone to call him back when the vote happens on his own amendment.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Just before I go to the final speaker on my list, which is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, I'll just remind you that in the case of a division the bells will ring for 30 seconds, and then there will be an eight-and-a-half-minute silence, and then there will be a one-minute ringing of the bells to bring people back in. Just to refresh your memories, because we haven't been here for a while, that's how a division would work if any divisions are called.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this amendment A1, brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Centre, on Government Motion 24. As I sort of moved through Government Motion 24, I was changing from ambivalence to several distinct issues that I could see, problems that were being brought forward here. They've been articulated mostly by several other speakers here previously, but I guess I just wanted to put this in perspective. Of course, I had participated in budget debates previously, before we changed to this new, slightly byzantine and confusing system that you're using here now, where we're breaking out of the Legislature somehow, breaking out into different rooms.

You know, I question that fundamentally. It seems as though this is one of the most basic things that we do here and are elected to do here in the Legislature, and I wonder why, first and foremost, this has somehow changed, that we've moved out of this Chamber and the rules and the things that are associated with this Chamber into these different committee rooms, doing debates on ministry budgets at the same time.

Now, all of the obvious things have been described here already, with people perhaps having to run from one ministry to another and so forth, but, you know, I would just like to say that having the debate in this room, with all of the things that are surrounding us, the amenities and the things that are afforded us here in the Legislature, I really think is fundamental to our responsibility as legislators to demonstrate the budget to the public in the most transparent way possible so that people can understand it in the simplest way possible as well. It's not just an overload on smaller parties and legislation by exhaustion, Mr. Speaker, by doing this system. I think it's an overload on the public, too, and the media and the interest groups that need to study and adjust their businesses and so forth to meet the new budget demands.

There's an incredible level of sophistication that goes into a budget and often a great deal of money in each area. So I find it really challenging, and it goes against my instincts and best principles to consider that we even break out from this Legislature to debate these budget estimates as seems to have been the practice in these last four years. That being said, that seems to be the new normal here.

You know, it's interesting that I have an opportunity to speak last on this because there are certain sections of the hon. member's amendment here that just seem so eminently reasonable that I implore each member in the House to have some sober second consideration. It seems as though amendment A1A is meeting the needs of the government, so I'm hoping that we will in fact see this amendment actually pass. Let's do it. I mean, if it's eminently reasonable and it meets the needs of all different parties in the House, let's go ahead.

The same with the morning committee idea. You know, I noted a tone of sarcasm with the House leader talking about the mornings, but it's so much more than just preparing for question period. It's a way by which we help to reach out to the public and to the media and to prepare a myriad of different things that go on during the legislative session. If we somehow diminish that, if we diminish the time surrounding that, we so, too, diminish the relevance and the importance of this legislative body to the public that elected it to do the job of governance here in the province of Alberta.

You know, be careful what you wish for. People take steps, small steps, away from democracy whenever democracy is diminished in the eyes of the public amongst the legislators that are elected to conduct that and the media that reports on it as well. I simply don't want to be participating in that sort of diminishment, Mr. Speaker.

Committees taking place at the same time: yes, we do have to codify these things. Yes, we do need the provisions that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre put into subsection (3) of this amendment, because while intentions always may be good – right? – we can't always guarantee that such a fine House leader as the one we have now will be in that same chair. Maybe someone with less honourable intentions might take that same place. You know, that's what we do. We make laws expecting the best from people but legislating to ensure that we protect from the worst, right? I made that up, but I'll bet you I'm paraphrasing it from somebody else and somewhere else.

Anyway, those are some of my concerns, you know, the same: section C, the codification. If it's appropriate practice, if it's best practice, if it's conventional wisdom, there's nothing wrong with putting it into law.

Perhaps the most interesting thing that the House leader said – and it's fun to be speaking last instead of you speaking last because I can get the last word – is that this is always a work-in-progress anyway. Well, that's fine. Then there should be nothing wrong with putting some of these things into codification. We can always change it later as the standing orders are wont to do from time to time. We change them. So instead of perhaps looking at this as, you know, that we're putting something in stone here, we are looking for best practices and refining those best practices over time.

Mr. Speaker and all members of this House, I would strongly suggest that we do in fact vote in favour of amendment A1. It's eminently reasonable, and ultimately I think it is a reflection of the responsibility we have as legislators here in this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any questioners or commentators? None.

Are there any other speakers to the amendment?

If not, then we'll proceed with the vote on the amendment section by section since that is the wish of the House. What I'll do is read out A1A, and then we'll vote. Then we'll do A1B, and then we'll vote, then A1C, D, and E. If that's agreeable to members, we'll proceed like that.

[Motion on amendment A1D lost]

The Speaker: Now A1E.

[Motion on amendment A1E lost]

The Speaker: We are now back to the main motion. Are there any other speakers to the main motion? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's unfortunate that some of those amendments are not going to see the light of day, but I sort of planned for that. I thought that we would run up against this brick wall, so I just hived off one part of the amendment here, that I think is just so eminently reasonable, and I made it an amendment myself that I would just like to pass out to everyone. The original is the top copy there. I will make my comments after it is passed out, right?

5:20

The Speaker: Hon. members, would it be acceptable to the House for the hon. member to continue with his speech while the amendment is being distributed to you in writing?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Speaker: Is that agreeable to you, hon. member, with the amendment?

Mr. Eggen: Yeah, absolutely.

The Speaker: If so, please proceed, then, while the pages continue to distribute it. Thank you.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. I appreciate that. I just have some small comments. The amendment that I have here says that Government Motion 24 be amended in part A in section 6(a) in the proposed Standing Order 59.01(5) by striking out clause (f) and substituting the following: "no more than one Legislative Policy Committee shall be scheduled to consider estimates at any one time."

Now, I think we've heard the arguments around this fairly clearly, Mr. Speaker. Just reading out that amendment again speaks to the eminent wisdom and common sense of not having more than one estimate scheduled at the same time. As I've said, it's not just for the sake of smaller parties, right? Please be cognizant that nothing ever stays the same. Smaller parties get larger, and larger parties smaller, too, right? So think about the future, you know. Think about yourselves in the same situation, sooner rather than later, I'm sure.

You know, it's also to speak of this issue of the public and the media and special interests being able to absorb and analyze those estimates as they unfold and not having more than one at the same time, right? Again, going back to my original assertion, why shouldn't these budget estimates take place in the place that was built to debate this expenditure of public money in the first place, which is this House that we are all sitting in today? It's not as though we don't have enough time to do that, Mr. Speaker. We certainly do. We have the spring and the months ahead of us to debate one committee at a time.

Certainly, my amendment does not preclude the possibility of having them scheduled in different places either. I shouldn't be confusing it with my personal opinion that the budget should be moved back here to the actual legislative Chamber. This motion, that is in front of each person now, is specifically designed to prohibit estimates from happening concurrently like they did last year, where for the first time they had two committees meet in the afternoon and then one in the evening, apparently.

This, of course, hugely prejudices certain parties that have more than one critic area to their responsibility, of which I am one. You know, combining this, if it does fail, with the idea of morning estimates, I think, leads to potential catastrophic failure of our ability to debate these estimates in a reasonable and timely sort of way. Like I said before, this idea of legislating by exhaustion – and it does not just apply to the members here. I think it applies to the public as well, to which we are responsible. Further, if committee chairs are allowed, as proposed above, to schedule estimates, then it's possible that opposition critics will be compromised in this way.

My amendment is a very modest proposal, Mr. Speaker. It just allows that space to operate in a functional way but, I think, also in a philosophical way.

You know, I find it a bit strange that all of these changes are coming so quickly on this first day of our spring session here. I don't think it speaks well to the tone that the government is trying to set here to work together with all members of the Legislature and the media and the public but, rather, perpetuates this idea of things happening behind closed doors and with a degree of secrecy and not full disclosure, that I find disturbing and that I think many people in the public do, too.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any questions or comments to be made under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, let us proceed with the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had actually raised this issue with the hon. member earlier under section 29(2)(a), so I'll bring this up right now on this amendment, which is exactly what I was talking about, with the opposition members, particularly the third party, going from one committee to another committee. Having the House leader refer to two committees meeting simultaneously having been done in the past: from my experience even in the last sitting, that did not work very well for the smaller opposition parties. Again, I would state that position, and I will support this amendment for that very reason. Particularly for these members who have to race from committee to committee, not being able to sit in for an entire committee meeting and listen to other people debate: in my opinion, I think that is ineffective. Unless somebody can argue something to the contrary to convince me that it's somehow effective, I will certainly stay and support this motion.

The hon. member has a chance to clarify those comments that were made earlier on the effectiveness of having simultaneous committee meetings. I'm interested in hearing that.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there any other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak on this amendment. It is an amendment that I will support, although I know it'll probably be a fruitless effort. You know, I appreciate the robust discussion that the hon. Government House Leader has allowed for the estimates debates. I think that there's a lot of positive movement on the government side in allowing for more time in certain ministries and allowing for more debate. I think that's definitely a positive step.

But the reality is that earlier today we had the Premier lament the tone of the opposition. I'm going to stand here today, and I'm going to lament the tone of the government because the tone of the government hasn't changed from the fall session, where every amendment that was put forward, the strong majority of them, was immediately dismissed. Many were laughed off, and we're seeing it here already right now. The amendment is being laughed off.

The idea that opposition parties require time to prepare in the morning for question period is being sloughed off.

I'm sure that the majority of the government caucus isn't burdened with having to read bills and, you know, prepare speeches on them because we haven't seen many of them actually do that, Mr. Speaker. The reality is that most members of the opposition do do that, and they speak to every piece of legislation. We did on all 10 of the bills that came through the House in the fall session, and we saw very, very few of the government members actually speak to legislation unless they were specifically challenged or upset by something that an opposition member said.

This is about the democratic process. For a caucus of four, as much as this amendment may not pass – and the Government House Leader has suggested that in good faith he will negotiate. I would strongly hope that he negotiates with the understanding that when there are critics in the third and fourth parties that have multiple committees, not in any way, shape, or form on any day shall one of those critics be faced with having to choose between two committees that they are the critic of. I think that that is a reasonable request, and I hope that, you know, with his ability and knowledge of the way this process works, wisdom some would say, that should be very easy to achieve.

Again, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be speaking in support of this amendment, which I'm now assuming is A2. Is that correct? Did we name it?

The Speaker: Yes, hon. member, Parliamentary Counsel has noted this as A2.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if there is anyone who wishes. No?

Okay. Let us move on, then. Are there any other speakers?

5:30

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, ever-optimistic gal that I am . . . [interjections] I'll tell you that some days are worse than others.

We have the Member for Edmonton-Calder moving his amendment A2 to section 6(a) to essentially make sure that no more than one policy committee is scheduled at the same time. We've touched a bit on this in the previous amendment that we made. I hear a lot of supportive statements from the members on the other side that they understand but that they really need flexibility and that they don't want to codify any of this because they might need it sometime. You know, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I've got to say: hooley. It is said with great love, great kindness. But, honestly, I think there's a difference between wanting flexibility to deal with circumstances that occur to us occasionally or perhaps rarely, that kind of flexibility, and a fairly rigid adherence to an end date.

You know, at one point I called some of the stuff that the Government House Leader was trying to bring in through a change in the standing orders überclosure because that's what it would have been. It would have been a gigantic way of closing off any debate because at that time we were talking about coming to an end date that was finite and that everything would be done by then, and if it wasn't, it would all get voted on that day. It was like a huge garage door or a – what's the thing that comes down and chops people's heads off?

Some Hon. Members: Guillotine.

Ms Blakeman: Or a huge guillotine that just came down and chopped the end off all the bills that were still up. I think I rightly called it überclosure.

What I'm seeing here is an adherence to a timeline that has that same kind of zeal included in it. The Government House Leader is saying: oh, come on now; we've got two months on that. Well, actually not true. Yeah, I'm going to let that statement stand because we, in fact, don't start debating this budget according to the flexible plans that are before us until the middle of the month. So there's a week, and then we all get to go back and try and make up for lost time in our constituencies and work like the devil there for two weeks, and then we come back here, and we've got three weeks left in April before that guillotine deadline that the hon. Government House Leader has referred to. So, no, it's not eight weeks. That's a very strange kind of math if you want to do it that way. It's four weeks: one week here and three weeks once we're back in April.

We are actually trying to rip through – what's the total budget we're looking at now? – $39 billion, $40 billion in four weeks, so $10 billion a week. The government, you know, agrees that it wouldn't want to call more than two committees at one time and that it wouldn't likely do that but says: well, we probably will be sitting on Wednesday mornings so that we can get it in. So we're talking two on Monday night, one Tuesday afternoon, two on Tuesday night. That's five so far. Wednesday morning is six, Wednesday afternoon seven, Wednesday night eight, nine. That's it. We could still get through nine slots a week. That's pretty fast because in some of them the slots could be two different departments at the same time.

What we've done here is an improvement in that we can spend more time on some of the more complex or larger budgets, but we didn't go as far as we should have done. Actually, it's kind of funny because what we've got is the Government House Leader saying: "Trust me. It's okay. Really, trust me." I know that I have a dewy freshness to my visage, but I am not that young. I did not just fall off the turnip truck. There will be no trust here because they haven't earned it, quite frankly.

You know, I say all of this in fun, with a happy look on my face, and underneath is this writhing pool of rage. You'd never know it by looking at me. But that is what we're . . . [interjections] I'm sorry. Now I'm amusing my colleagues.

But what's at the essence of all of this is important to me because it does make a difference. If you've got somebody that is in the Assembly because they're arguing a point of order, what does that mean now? We shouldn't call points of order for fear that our budget debate is going to be called? So we better not do a point of order, even though it's outrageous what's just been said, because your particular critic area is going to be coming up in a committee, and if you stay to do the point of order, then you're going to be late for your own budget committee.

You know, none of that is too much of a sky is falling, Chicken Little sort of scenario because I've been there. I've done all of these different variations of budget debate. Frankly, I've had to run – actually, we used to have one set of budgets in 512 and one set here, and the elevators were really slow in this building, so you just pounded your way up and down those stairs. Very good for the fitness level, not so good for being able to keep all your documents together, and you know how much I love my paper. So I was heaving up and down these stairs back here between two committees when I was critic for both of them. It definitely happens, and I think it will happen here.

It just seems that this government, with such a big majority, that is supposed to be so open and transparent and generous and kind – I don't get it. Why can't you be open and transparent and generous and kind? I don't see you being that. I see you being narrow and focused and sometimes a little bit mean about how this stuff goes on.

I'll admit that I probably have not swayed anyone to my side with the speech that I just gave. I'm just guessing, but I'm pretty sure I didn't convince anyone to support this. I apologize to my colleague because I have let my disappointment at losing the previous motion kind of spill over into this. Nonetheless, that is the point of it, to try and do a good job.

I've said before that my previous boss, the previous Member for Edmonton-Riverview, had said to me at one point that if we became government – at that point it looked like a possibility – he would allow me to be the Minister of Revenge because I harbour so many daylight revenge dreams in my head. But, honestly, there are days here when my biggest revenge dream is that all of you over there will be sitting over here because you will have to work under these rules that you have now done to yourself.

In most provinces that would have happened, and you would understand what it's like to have been in the opposition. You talk to anybody that's served, like, three terms in Ontario or Manitoba or B.C., and they've been in the opposition. They know what it's like, and they wouldn't be passing rules like this.

It's a sad thing that we can't share our experiences in the way other people might be able to, and I think, actually, that's to your detriment. But, you know, I'll just keep on with that very well detailed revenge scenario in my head.

Mr. Eggen: Karma. It will be karma.

Ms Blakeman: It'll be karma. You guys would just not believe it if you were over here.

I'll end with that – thank you very much – and I do urge everyone to support amendment A2, which tries to make it so that we don't have two legislative policy committees meeting on budget debates at the same time.

Thank you so much.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments to the previous speech?

Seeing none, let us move on, then, to the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm cut to the quick. After all these years of negotiating and deliberating and sitting down with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to make sure we have an eminently reasonable calendar of estimates, she bears a grudge and has now openly indicated that grudge. I'm astonished.

I do need to say that the hon. member should reflect that the standing orders that we've had over the past number of years have been changed from time to time. We've always tried to find a better way to accomplish the concerns of the opposition and to maintain the schedules that are needed to keep government business going and to keep the system working. We have had A, B, C, D committees, where we worked out schedules. I think that you were part of helping to work out those schedules, where A and C met and D and B met, and they were upstairs and downstairs and in the ladies' chamber and all over the place.

The fact of the matter is that we've become a lot more refined now. We have two committee rooms that have been purpose built, which are much more satisfactory for committee meetings, so that officials can come in and people can be heard. They operate much better, and that works well. Thanks to the Legislative Assembly Office for creating those spaces. So if there happen to be two meetings, there are now about 30 or 40 steps between the two, not up and down the stairs. We've improved your life already dramatically, and I can't even take credit for it. It was Leg. Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, we used to have members come back on Friday mornings for designated Committee of Supply, and that was an all-morning committee. Good heavens. It took all morning, but we sat all morning to have Committee of Supply that way.

In the 15 years that I've been here I don't believe we've had more than one year when there hasn't been two committees sitting at a time. But having said that, it was our goal – and it was our goal with the original proposal that we put out – to arrange it so that members had one committee at a time to sit at, whether that was a morning or an afternoon or an evening committee, that they would only probably have one a day that they had to attend, or if they were attending two a day, they wouldn't have to attend one the next day, so there was plenty of time for them to be prepared for their particular critic responsibilities or, if they're on the government side, their particular interest areas.

You know, we actually put on the table a very open schedule which would lengthen the time in some departments. It would give more time than the standing orders currently provide, which, as I said, would be 54 hours, not the 75 to 79 hours that we're talking about. In order to accomplish that and still accomplish the goal of passing the budget within a reasonable period of time, i.e. the end of April – in most parliamentary jurisdictions the real challenge is to try and get a budget passed by the end of the fiscal year. We have tried to do that in a good number of years, but we've also understood that sometimes you wait for a federal budget, sometimes you wait for some of the fiscal situations to clarify, and sometimes there's just an awful lot of work that goes in and it's not fair to make officials work over the Christmas holidays so that we can get a budget in on February 1 or whatever. That's happened in the past, too.

What we've tried to do is what we've always tried to do and what I've done with the hon. member opposite for longer than I care to tell you and with new House leaders now for a shorter period of time, to develop a good estimates schedule so that all members can do their jobs well. I think that with the proposal on the table, yes, there will be a little back and forth as to whether we can have a morning meeting here or two committees meeting there, but nobody's talking about all the committees meeting at the same time every day so that we can rush out of here. Nobody ever suggested that.

In fact, what was put on the table is a longer time for estimates, an eminently reasonable period of time for passing the Appropriation Act, you know, within a month after the fiscal year ends. Not a bad plan to have, to try and get the budget passed early in the year. It is eminently reasonable, and I would challenge the hon. member to say when I have ever been unreasonable with her when we've been talking about the estimates. We've jostled back and forth. We've had to move things around so that we haven't had, you know, a critic having to be in two places at once.

Actually, it's the fourth party who's had a tougher problem in past years when they only had two members. Now they've got four members. It's going to be so much easier for them this year because they've got twice as many people to go to all those meetings.

Yes, when you're a smaller caucus in this House, it is tougher. But, you know, that's just life. That's life. With a small caucus you have to work harder because you are the critic. If there are 16 departments – there are more than that – you do have four departments that you have to be the critic of. Sorry. I can't change that for you. I wouldn't want to change that for you. It's something you should have, something you should hold on to, something you should treasure.

Mr. Speaker, what we've put on the table is something that provides a framework of flexibility. We'll sit down and negotiate and work on – negotiate is the wrong word. We'll sit down and collaborate on a schedule which works for most people most of the time. It will be rough. It will have some rough edges. There's no question. There's always a time when you have to sort of say: well, we've gone about as far as we can go, and we can't move the blocks on this Rubik's cube any further, and that's about done now.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that members defeat this amendment, pass Government Motion 24, and let us get on with planning our work and working our plan.

The Speaker: Any questions or comments from anyone?

Seeing none, are there any other speakers to amendment A2?

Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: The question has been called.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Speaker: Are there any other speakers to the main motion?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the question has been called.

Are you seeking a point of clarification, hon. member?

Mr. Anderson: No. I would like to speak to the main motion.

The Speaker: Well, the question has been called here.

Mr. Anderson: I know. I'm trying to get back into the swing of things.

The Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member. Perhaps you can get your comments done some other how.

Let us carry on, then.

[Government Motion 24 carried]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members and guests, let us pray. Dear Lord, let us all be mindful of the high principles that unite us in this Assembly and in the communities we serve. May we always strive to fulfill our duties and to be role models for others who look upon us for leadership, good stewardship, and effective representation. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's indeed a rare privilege to introduce a group of individuals who are connected to an event that has made world history and put Edmonton into the Guinness world book of records. Today is one such privilege. Therefore, I'd like to introduce a number of people who have contributed significantly to Quikcard Edmonton Minor Hockey Week's success of 50 years. I'll ask each of them to rise and wave as I read their names and to remain standing, please, until all have been introduced, and then we can thank them all together. I will go through these quickly, so the quickness that you show on the ice: show it here.

Chair Terry Brown; Vice-chair Rod McMahon and his wife, Dina; Mr. Central, Bill Ross, and his wife, Bev; Hockey Edmonton rep Dean Hengel; Minor Hockey Week rinks manager, Shaun Mitchell, his wife, Dawn, and their hockey son from the KC Sabres, Liam; executive director from Hockey Alberta, Rob Litwinski; president of Hockey Edmonton, Betty Chmilar; referee-in-chief for the Edmonton region, Curtis Nichols; zone referees Duncan MacDougall, Allan Bracuk, Sam Crocker, Joshua Read, and Trais Preston and an AA Edmonton official, Jon Kikuchi; one of the original helpers and builders of Minor Hockey Week, Orest Zaozirny, and his wife, Joanne; and finally, three young folks who represent to us what this is truly all about, from the Whitemud West Warriors Nikhil Reynolds and Reece Antler and from the Laurier Lightning Miss Taylor Young.

Please, let's welcome all of these guests. Thank you.

Minister of Human Services, you have a school group?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You've introduced two young Whitemud Warriors, but I want to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 90 enthusiastic, bright, and inquisitive students from St. Mary elementary school in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. Accompanying the students today are teachers Therese Coates, Tracee Laba, Bev Terletski, Sandie Melnychuk, Greg Chin and parent helpers Laura Dust, Nikki Crook, Maureen Douglas, Cindy Law, Connie McAndrews, John Young, Lisa Dobson, and Dave Rumbold. I didn't have an opportunity to have a chat with the students today because it was so busy down on the steps this afternoon, but I hope to get out to the schools and answer their questions because I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that their questions are among the best we get in this Legislature. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you very much.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to introduce his school group, please.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my honour and privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the very fine students of Edmonton-Mill Woods' Minchau school. They are accompanied by their teacher, Jayne Schroffel, and teacher helpers Mila Gordon and Tim Southernwood. Now I would request them to rise, please, and receive our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Lee Cutforth, Alberta's Property Rights Advocate. Mr. Cutforth is a graduate of the University of Saskatchewan law school, a good law school, is a respected lawyer from southern Alberta, and is proud of his farming background. He enjoys the confidence of members of both sides of the House. I'd ask that he please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House Miss Carlene Siu, presently a student taking international relations in her third year at the University of Calgary. She's doing her co-op semester in my office from January to April this year. Carlene is seated in the public gallery, and I would like to ask her to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of Albertans known simply as the Sociables. These friends have been a staple at the Brier over the past five years, travelling the country and bringing their unique flair to the game of curling. Every day they dress in a different theme, and I think a few others have joined them. Perhaps in honour of your role here in the Assembly today they are CFL referees. They add excitement to the crowd and dedicate their time to engaging with the fans, hanging out in the Brier Patch, and have stopped in at the Legislature today to spend what I'm sure will be about the only time this week they will not be seen with a beverage in their hands. Another tradition of the Brier is the trading of pins, and I am proud to wear their pin on my lapel today. I would ask Nathan Woynarski, Tyson Woynarski, Richard Yacyshen, Charles Pullan, Mike Verdonck, Michael Chez, Kim Mazyn, and Jamie Yakimishyn to please rise, and I would also ask all members to embrace their fun-loving spirit, raise their glasses in a ceremonial sociable, and provide them with the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm so honoured to introduce to you and through you some extra special visitors from my constituency of Edmonton-Glenora who are seated in the members' gallery. They, too, are part of the Quikcard Edmonton Minor Hockey Week celebration. Please remaining standing as I call your names so that we can thank you all at the end. First of all, from the Marshmallows team Sydney Kendall; from the Hurricanes team Avery Kendall, Melissa Flemming, Kalei Nguyen, Miri Licis, Kyle Licis, Madeline McCarthy; and from their fan club we have proud parents and grandparents Grant Kendall, Andrew Flemming, Justine Dien, Lisa Licis, Glen McCarthy, and coach Jason Kendall. Welcome, and thank you all for coming. Join me in welcoming them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my delight to introduce to you some of the guests from my area of Edmonton-Mill Woods who are seated in the public gallery and are also part of the Quikcard Edmonton Minor Hockey Week. I would request that when I call your names, please rise and keep standing until I finish the entire list. I have from the Raiders team Brayden Ruzyski, from the Griffins team Hunter Boychuk, from the Bruins team Matthew Brown and Gavin Borg, and parent helpers Lisa Ruzyski, Tatiana Niemeier, and Patti Brown. Thank you all for coming and celebrating this week.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First of all, I know that he was referred to by you earlier but I'd like to introduce him officially since he's one of my constituents and someone I've known for over 20 years, Mr. Orest Zaozirny. He's been involved with Minor Hockey Week going back to the beginning. I've known him in that association and in association with the Northeast Zone Sports Council, which has been a very active organization for many years in northeast Edmonton. He's a pillar of minor hockey, a community leader, and someone I'm very proud to call my constituent. Would you please help me recognize Mr. Orest Zaozirny and his wife.

1:40

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker, is Ian Young. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Mr. Young. He's a local advocate for the disabled population and a recent recipient of the Glenrose award of courage. Over the years he has served on numerous boards, including the city of Edmonton Advisory Board on Services for Persons with Disabilities and the Alberta Brain Injury Association. Ian is also a motivational speaker who has shared his story across Canada and the United States and has addressed the House of Commons in Ottawa in support of an injury prevention strategy. I'm quite proud to say that he's a constituent of mine as well. I would now ask Ian to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure and honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly six wonderful Albertans and, amongst them, two heroes. I will ask them to rise as I mention their names: Vera and Julius Lazarenko and their daughter, Sharen Van Fossen; Amber Torvalson and her husband, Shawn Sagert; and Donna Parker. This is a wonderful Alberta story. It all started with them taking their Nissan to the shop for a regular checkup. Julius' heart suddenly stopped, and he collapsed. Immediately Donna and Amber jumped to action by giving Julius CPR and saving his life. Not only did Donna save Julius' life; she herself had a heart attack a year earlier and was advised to avoid strenuous activity. Amber gave resuscitation. They are here today, living examples of good Albertans knowing CPR. They're asking every high school, every high school student, and all of us to give the importance of CPR to all Albertans. I'd ask them to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guests, who are representatives of Alberta's postsecondary students: Amanda Nielsen, from the Alberta Graduate Council; Miranda Holman, from the Alberta Students' Executive Council; and Duncan Wojtaszek, from the Council of Alberta University Students. Amanda, Miranda, and Duncan are concerned about the possibility of cuts to postsecondary education in the upcoming budget, cuts that would have a negative impact on the quality, access, and accessibility of education in Alberta's postsecondary institutions. I would now ask that Duncan, Amanda, and Miranda stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Fiscal Position

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday, in advance of tomorrow's budget, that will plunge Alberta back into debt for the first time in a decade, the Premier repeatedly said that we live in challenging times. No doubt she is attempting to somehow justify her government's complete mismanagement of Alberta's books, but let's do a little bit of mythbusting.

In Alberta are we really facing challenging times as she alleges? Well, here are the facts. Alberta currently leads the nation in economic growth, unemployment rates, employment growth, resource revenues, housing starts, and private investment. [interjections] Challenging times, guys. Challenging times. Per capita investment in Alberta is more than double the national average and is far higher than anywhere else in the country. Our provincial GDP is growing at twice the national rate. Last session the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar gave a very detailed breakdown about how Alberta leads the pack in virtually every single economic indicator out there.

Funny that the Premier is now saying that Alberta is in challenging times. I think that what she secretly means, Mr. Speaker, is that her government is in challenging times because with everything going our way, with growth steady and prosperity abounding, this government has gone from riches to rags. Year after year of unrestrained spending growth, mostly on pet projects, pay hikes, lavish expenses, too many managers, and wasteful nonpriorities, have put Alberta's fiscal books on the brink. Deficits have gone from temporary to structural, our savings have evaporated, and we will soon return to debt. Soon enough we will be spending hundreds of millions in finance charges just to keep the creditors off our backs. None of this is because of challenging times, as the Premier would have us believe. It is simply because the PCs have failed to manage our finances responsibly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta New Democrat opposition.

New Democrat Budget Consultation

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta New Democrat opposition spent the weeks before session travelling the province to speak with Albertans about tomorrow's budget. With the Premier and the Finance minister giving bleak warnings to Albertans about a difficult budget tomorrow, we wanted to talk to Albertans about their perspective on the services that are important to them, promises like building 50 new schools and refurbishing 70 older ones with stable and predictable funding. They promised to end child poverty in five years. They promised 140 new family care clinics at a cost of $3.4 billion. They promised to build a thousand new long-term care beds every year until 2017. They promised a new oil sands technology and research centre. They promised $650 million of increased funding to our colleges and universities. This is about $6 billion worth of election promises that the PCs never costed because they never intended delivering on them.

We warned Albertans that the growth revenue outlook was deliberately optimistic and that their promises could not be paid for. Sure enough, the Premier is now blaming a fictitious bitumen bubble for her broken promises and her betrayal of Alberta families. The services that ordinary Albertans rely on, including health care and education, are threatened by cuts. This PC government cannot be trusted to stand up against the Wildrose Party's race to the bottom, to protect schools, teachers, nurses, long-term care facilities, or the most vulnerable Albertans.

Only the New Democrats will stand up in the Legislature to fight on behalf of ordinary Alberta families to ensure that they can get the public services that they need and that they are delivered effectively. The New Democrats believe in putting families first in this budget. It's time to ensure that the wealthiest corporations and Albertans in this province pay their fair share instead of cutting services that kids, seniors, and vulnerable Albertans depend on. We listened to Albertans on our prebudget tour of the province, and Albertans can depend on the New Democrats to work for them every day in the Legislature, defending the services they need and standing up for improvements to health care and education.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Quikcard Edmonton Minor Hockey Week

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to an amazing event that has stood the test of time for 50 years. This event is the Quikcard Edmonton Minor Hockey Week, which was recently recognized by the Guinness book of world records as the largest hockey tournament in the world. It still happens every year right here in our capital, the city of Edmonton.

Credit for this incredible tournament goes to thousands of volunteers: the parents, coaches, officials, organizers, sponsors, and, most importantly, the young players themselves. My daughter Taylor, who plays for the Laurier Lightning team, is one of those players, and she is seated in your gallery here today. I'm so happy she is here today to be part of this tribute. I'm also delighted that so many other volunteers are here today that can personally receive our thanks and admiration for their efforts.

Mr. Speaker, 2013 marked the 50th anniversary of this amazing tournament, which involved more than 500 teams, 3,000 volunteer organizers, well over 3,000 coaches and managers, almost 9,000 players, and about 200 referees who donated about $35,000 worth of their time to referee over 700 games in 14 ice arenas throughout Edmonton.

Thank you to all for helping our youth be active, learn about team play and fairness, and become good citizens of tomorrow. Congratulations to everybody involved with Quikcard Edmonton Minor Hockey Week. Thank you as well, Mr. Speaker, for organizing the tribute today, and also thank you for the 50th anniversary souvenir pucks, which everybody should have gotten.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Toupee for a Day

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I proudly wear this toupee today in support of Wellspring Calgary. Toupee for a Day was conceptualized as a means of providing visible support for those who are living with cancer and those who love them. Each multicoloured toupee represents a different type of cancer, and today's participants will wear this toupee to raise money and awareness for Wellspring Calgary.

This is a cause that is close to my heart as my own mother passed away from cancer, and I wish she had the opportunity to experience the support that Wellspring Calgary provides.

1:50

Wellspring was founded in 2007 and provides support, resources, and programs for anyone living with cancer as well as added support for their loved ones. It's the only charitable organization of its kind in western Canada, and the programs offered are free of charge and do not require referral.

It's the volunteers that work tirelessly to support the needs of those suffering from cancer that make Wellspring the successful organization that it is today, led by executive director Patti Morris, Kevin Kaminski from Wellspring Calgary, and doctors Glenn and Marilyn Hundleby from Wellspring Edmonton, who are with us in the public gallery today. A special thank you goes out to cancer survivor and Calgary-South East constituent Heather Dougall, who planned and organized this event.

Our government caucus put on the toupees and took a group photo in support of this important cause, and this photo is being released today to gain awareness for Toupee for a Day.

Organizations such as Wellspring are crucial to building a stronger and healthier Alberta. Wellspring is a prime example of the charitable spirit that many Albertans share and demonstrate with their willingness to give of their time and of their talents.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all of my colleagues to raise awareness today for Toupee for a Day. Thank you very much.

Oral Question Period

Health Services Preferential Access Inquiry

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, it's no wonder Albertans don't trust this Premier. Her government is being investigated for all kinds of issues, from illegal contributions to dodgy contracts to privacy breaches and, the big one, the judicial inquiry into health care queue-jumping. Of course, the Premier broke her promise to hold a full and complete probe, yet despite that, Justice Vertes exposed evidence that deserves further examination. Will the Premier agree to raise the bar on accountability and transparency and grant Justice Vertes all the time he needs not only to prepare his report but also to call new witnesses?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I am proud of the fact that this government and our party decided to hold this inquiry because what we heard from the opposition for a long time is that there were all of these allegations with respect to challenges in the system, that political interference was involved, that politicians were involved. From what I see on the outside, there's a lot of evidence that's been called, and we're looking forward to the result of that. We're quite happy, as the chair of the inquiry has asked for, for an extension to continue writing his report. In fact, the chair understood and said to us publicly that he had finished calling evidence, wanted time to write, and we're happy to give him that.

Ms Smith: I understand he asked for an extension until the end of August, and I don't believe that that's what the Premier has offered.

Mr. Speaker, given that Justice Vertes heard testimony from medical personnel under oath that individuals referred by the Helios clinic had wait times shortened from years to weeks, will the Premier agree with me that if this indeed did occur, it is not private medicine; it is simply corruption?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the reason that we have a judicial inquiry is exactly so that we do not have this debate in this House on these very important issues that we have asked a judge to oversee and make inquiries into. I would ask the Leader of the Opposition, first of all, to respect the independence of the inquiry, which she has not demonstrated she has been able to do so far, and on top of that to check her facts and to see that, in fact, the extension that we have agreed to is until the end of August.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. member, this is a very serious inquiry, so let's be careful when we use words like corruption in the context in which they're raised.

Proceed with your next question.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to hear that. Unfortunately, the justice has also said that he doesn't have the power to act on any of the allegations that come forward before this inquiry. Given that the Official Opposition has written a letter to the College of Physicians & Surgeons, which I'll table today, to investigate the Helios clinic and given that charging patients to get preferential access to public services is a violation of the Health Act, will the Premier join us in asking the college to suspend Helios's licence while they investigate whether or not any laws have been broken?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I think this is awfully rich coming from a party that ran on private health care in the last election.

Nonetheless, the reason that we have an independent inquiry, Mr. Speaker, is because we want to make sure that an independently appointed judge can assess the evidence and provide a final report. Having the opposition stand up in the House three-quarters of the way through that process and make allegations interferes with that process. It is not respectful, and we will wait for the final report.

Some Hon. Members: Time.

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Time Limits

The Speaker: Hon. members, I am well aware of the time. I do not appreciate or need your reminders, and I don't want to hear any more of them. Okay? I think it's fairly even on both sides. I'll decide what the time is based on the signals I get from the Clerk's table, if you don't mind. Thank you very much.

Hon. leader, please proceed.

Access to Budget Lock-up

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's no wonder that Albertans don't trust this government. They expect and deserve a complete analysis of tomorrow's budget so that they can understand the implications of the government's plans to send us back into debt. Yet the Minister of Finance refuses to allow legitimate advocacy, stakeholder, and policy groups to participate in the briefing process known as the lock-up. The Canadian Taxpayers Federation, the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, the Fraser Institute, and Public Interest Alberta as well as others have been barred. Now, the Premier backtracked this morning and is going to allow the Taxpayers Federation in, but why does she always have to wait to be arm-twisted to do the right thing?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I had a very good conversation today with Scott Hennig from the Canadian Taxpayers Federation. We reviewed the fact, as I said yesterday, that the Canadian Taxpayers Federation has had the opportunity to meet independently with the minister, participated in the Alberta economic summit. But I will say one thing. We received some very constructive and helpful advice from the Member for Little Bow yesterday. He sent me a note and said: you might want to reconsider this. I thought that was good advice, and we're prepared to take good advice from the opposition.

Ms Smith: Too bad your Finance minister didn't get the memo because he was still sending out letters last night explaining why they weren't going to be allowed in.

Given that what actually happened is that we needed to resort to complex workarounds to be able to get different voices into the budget lock-up process and given that the Finance minister says that he wants only those groups impacted – and that's his word – by the budget to participate and given that the AUPE and Public Interest Alberta are still excluded from the lock-up, does this mean that provincial employees won't be impacted by this budget?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the lock-up started out with us providing the media with a little bit of a heads-up to the documents that are in there, which are quite lengthy, as you'll see tomorrow. Then we added the members of the opposition for an opportunity to be ready for the debate and then stakeholders to understand the impact on them. This year we added members of our results-based budgeting challenge panels. So special-interest groups like the CTF, like Friends of Medicare have never really had any right to be in the lock-up.

I note that the wild alliance has signed up Derek Fildebrandt as an employee.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order.

Mr. Horner: I knew he was working for them, but I thought he wanted the job that was vacated by their campaign manager.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: I can see the Finance minister still didn't get the memo because it sounds like the CTF is going to be allowed in.

The Premier said in a year-end interview in 2011, and I'm quoting here: "Alberta does not have debt, and we will not incur debt. That's fundamental to what Albertans are proud of, and we're committed to make sure that continues." Given that the actual debt will probably approach $5 billion to $6 billion, is that why she is trying to block stakeholders from being able to do a full analysis on budget day?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. leader.

Hon. minister, before you proceed, a point of order by the Member for Airdrie has been noted at 1:58. If you wish to address that in the last five seconds, I'll give you an additional five seconds.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Let's keep this in perspective. We are providing a secure lock-up area for special-interest groups, to which the CTF will be invited. They will be in lock-up from 1:30 to 3:15. All Albertans have a right to see what's in this budget, and we allow a privileged few to get a head start on all of the others because it's been something that we've always done. I will undertake a review of this process this summer, of the whole budget process, and I commit to Albertans that we will ensure that it's reasonable and it's fair and it's not to be used by any party or their employees to politically grandstand over it.

And I apologize. I think I said wild alliance. That's an opinion. The name is Wildrose Alliance.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I assume you're satisfied with that, Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Whatever.

The Speaker: Let me recognize you, then, for your set of questions.

2:00

Provincial Tax Policy

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, being Premier must be a very tough job. Trying to share your plans, with all the noise of the media and the opposition is getting in the way: it's no easy task. I want to give the Premier the opportunity to clearly reiterate her long-standing commitment that she will not introduce or increase taxes of any kind prior to the next election. Madam Premier, here's your chance, your moment to show everyone how paranoid this opposition is. Premier, will you recommit to not introduce nor raise any taxes prior to the 2016 election?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I don't think this side of the House has to spend very much time proving how paranoid the opposition is. They do a good enough job themselves.

However, I want to reflect on some comments that were made a little bit earlier with respect to Alberta, and then we'll actually have a real conversation about this. The Leader of the Opposition stood up and said that Alberta is the economic engine of the country, and she's absolutely right. You know why? Because Progressive Conservative governments built that economy. Today this is the best place to live because we built it, Mr. Speaker. Tomorrow's budget will set that direction, and we'll keep building further.

Mr. Anderson: So close to an answer, Mr. Speaker, yet so far away.

Given, Premier, that we all know there will be no tax increases in Budget 2013, as you've said many times, and we take your word on that, and given that we in the Wildrose profoundly thank you for the courage to stand up to all those Albertans that want higher taxes – yes, they are out there – will you please answer my question this time? Will you keep your commitment to not introduce new taxes or increase existing ones, not just in Budget 2013 but prior to the 2016 election? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll tell you that one of the reasons we've made that commitment is because we know that Alberta's tax advantage is one of the reasons that we have the strongest economy in the country and perhaps in the world.

I'll tell you something else, Mr. Speaker. I was reflecting on the Leader of the Official Opposition's comments with respect to challenging times and where we are right now. The reason that we are bold and brave and strong is because we are able to understand that in order to make the decisions that need to be made for continued economic success, that allow us to continue to invest in families and to be prudent and to open markets, you can't be short sighted. You have to be long term. That's why we won on April 23.

Mr. Anderson: Given my understanding that this is question period and given that I was always under the impression that after a question is asked, a Premier would be capable of answering the question, and given that sometimes there are questions that can be confusing and disorienting, I will repeat the question one last time for clarity. Will your government be raising taxes or introducing any new taxes prior to the next election, at any time prior to the year on our Canadian calendar known as 2016? Yes or no?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we're tabling a budget that's going to set the direction for the future of this province. As a government we will not do what the opposition does, which is to take extreme and ideological positions with respect to the long-term planning of this province. The opposition is very happy to stand up and say that times changed and everyone should have understood. What the opposition needs to understand is that in a complicated world we build our budget one year at a time. What you're going to see tomorrow is a long-term plan that puts in place Albertans as our first priority, not the ideological approach of the opposition.

Labour Negotiations with Teachers

Mr. Hehr: In November the minister and Alberta teachers had essentially agreed to financial terms, wage freezes for the first two years and a modest 1 and 3 per cent increase in the final two years. Two weeks ago the minister made a lower offer. Now the minister directed school boards that any terms reached cannot include money previously offered. That means less money for teachers. If I was trying to get my neighbour's kid to mow my lawn and he rejected my offer of $20, I don't know why I'd go back two weeks later and offer $15. To the minister: maybe the minister can enlighten me on this unique technique to try to reach a negotiated settlement.

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the negotiations with the ATA and the ASBA have been going on a lot longer than since November. These negotiations have been going on for two and a half years, and there have been a multitude of proposals shared back and forth. Obviously, the economic climate and other things have changed over the last two and a half years. There are many things that we had on the table in the last proposal, two weeks ago, that we did not have on the table in November. We pushed ourselves, and we pushed the Alberta school boards as far as we possibly could go. We were very uncomfortable, as a matter of fact, with that proposal, and I was very shocked and disappointed that the ATA turned it down.

Mr. Hehr: Well, given that you have threatened legislative settlements, sent e-mails directly to teachers, an affront to the collective bargaining practice that actually may be offside of Alberta's privacy laws, and that you've brought up the divisive concept of merit pay, do you think these tactics have been helpful in reaching an agreement?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I think it's been really important for us as the government to be able to communicate with teachers, who are professionals in our province and entitled to be communicated with by the government, in a way that allows us not only to communicate through the union. I think it's really important that we recognize the fact that if we want to have a real discussion about how important teachers are to our families and our kids, we have the ability to include teachers in the dialogue. From my perspective as we're able to talk through what long-term planning looks like for education for schools and curriculum, to implement Inspiring Education, this is the way forward for negotiations, and I'm very optimistic that we're going to reach a settlement.

Mr. Hehr: My final question is to the minister or the Premier if she wants. Given your government has walked away from the promise of three years' predictable and sustainable funding, has walked away from the promise of full-day kindergarten, has walked away from the promise of reducing class sizes, is it any wonder that teachers cannot trust your government to sign any agreement where teacher workload is not included in the finalized agreement?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, this government is delivering on a number of the promises from the Premier. As a matter of fact, the Premier promised to reinstate the $107 million in funding. She did that. She promised to pass the Education Act. She did that. She promised 50 new schools and 70 modernizations. We will do that. She's promised to put kids first. We are doing that.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Long-term Care for Seniors

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This PC government cannot be trusted to protect our Alberta seniors. Yesterday the government finally reversed their one-bath-a-week policy for seniors, ignoring the fact that seniors' homes are already seriously understaffed. At the same time, the new patient-care-based funding model will result in the loss of 180 new jobs from Capital Care and the Good Samaritan Society alone. My question is to the Premier. What's the point of announcing a policy of two baths a week for seniors when there's not enough staff to guarantee them even one?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's fundamentally important that we respect the dignity not only of seniors but of individuals that are living in long-term care. Some of them aren't seniors; they're younger people. These are very important issues to their personal dignity. Personal care plans are exactly that. They allow us to put in place an approach that is client centred and that ensures everyone who's in long-term care is getting the support that they need.

I want to congratulate our minister responsible for seniors and also for the programs with respect to long-term care for taking the time, which was important, Mr. Speaker, to ensure that when this policy was introduced, it could be implemented so that they weren't hollow words. This is a minister who cares about the people, the programs he's supporting, and that's fundamental to our commitment.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This regressive preservative government can't be trusted to protect our seniors. Given that in the last Legislature the NDP tabled thousands of working-short forms showing the inability of the underresourced staff in these facilities to meet even the most minimum of standards, can the Premier tell us how laying off 180 front-line staff will cause anything but a deterioration in the already inadequate care of our seniors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you'll see tomorrow, the budget is a thoughtful budget that cares about the needs of our seniors, that cares about the needs of vulnerable Albertans. We will see. The proof will be tomorrow, sir.

2:10

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, Albertans can't trust this government to keep their promises. Will this government reverse its inhumane policies towards seniors and ensure that the people who built this province get the care they need in their later years? When will this government stop simply warehousing seniors?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, I really take offence to the word "warehousing." You know, we have licensed facilities all over the province. We have people that serve with care and compassion. These are Albertans that live in a home. They don't live in a facility. This is their home, and I really take exception to those words that were used.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I would like to remind the hon. member, too. The point is a serious one. I thought you were doing so well in trying to make it. But terms like that tend to lead to disorder at some point, so let's reconsider them.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by St. Albert.

Medevac Services

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier accused the opposition of fearmongering for identifying the reckless and dangerous decision of relocating medevac services, but in a letter signed now by over 65 doctors in the north with over 20 alone just in Grande Prairie, they state that the government's "relocation plan is flawed" and conclude that "moving the medevacs on March 15th is unnecessary, costly, and will have fatal consequences." To the Minister of Infrastructure: with no expected building of a tertiary hospital in the north any time soon, are you going to negligently ignore the warnings of the 20 doctors in your area?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've consulted with my constituents and these doctors I've met with. It's not Infrastructure's job to build hospitals. We build them but in consultation with my colleagues. We are building hospitals in the north. We're building three hospitals at this present time, I will add, including one in Grande Prairie that's going to help replace the services that we're doing in Edmonton.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that these 65 northern doctors have stated that "for the critically ill and injured people of the north, the extra transport time will result in needless deaths and disability," Minister, are you honestly asking northern Albertans to trust this government over the doctors? Really?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I observed yesterday when similar questions were asked by the opposition, people's perception of the move of the medevac facility is going to be a direct function of the quality and accuracy of the information that they're given. We know – we know – that there have been several meetings in northern Alberta where inaccurate, misleading information has been presented about this change.

The fact of the matter is that the government is not going to wait for the city of Edmonton to functionally close the airport. To do anything less would be irresponsible. We started our planning over a year and a half ago. We are delivering a state-of-the-art medevac facility for the residents of northern Alberta, and 67 patients . . .

Mr. Saskiw: Given that four Fort McMurray doctors have now signed the same letter and concluded that moving medevac on March 15 is unnecessary, costly, and will have fatal consequences, will the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation confirm that no northern doctor will be bullied, intimidated, or called a fearmongerer just for standing up for their patients and standing up for northern Albertans?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, it's arrogant and ignorant, quite frankly, of the opposition to ignore the request of the city of Edmonton and their plan to go forward with the closing of the municipal airport.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Griffiths: Health care has worked very hard, Alberta Health Services, to make sure that medevac services are not compromised and are in fact enhanced in many cases. The building of three hospitals in northern Alberta means that we're moving services to Albertans, not simply expecting them to always medevac in. We're building the north and building Alberta for the future of this province, not just for today.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, you rose on a point of order at 2:15. Your point of order has been noted.

Let's move on now to the hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Pipeline Development

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] We'll try this again.

The Speaker: You have the floor, St. Albert.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In recent months the government has spoken often about western Canadian select crude discounts as a result of the bitumen bubble. The government has invested an awful lot of time explaining this problem to Albertans. My question is to the Premier. Now that most of my constituents in St. Albert understand the issues around the bitumen bubble, what are we doing as a government to offer them solutions? [interjections]

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, regardless of what the opposition might think, I think this is a pretty relevant question to how we move forward as Albertans, so I might just answer that question.

I had an opportunity this morning to have a very productive conversation with our Minister of Foreign Affairs, John Baird, who was just in Washington on Sunday and Monday building on the work that the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development and I were able to do last week. Mr. Speaker, the work that we're doing right now in Washington with respect to Keystone is fundamental in terms of Canada-U.S. relations and ensuring that decision-makers understand our commitment to environmental sustainability. The work that we're doing with the federal Minister of the Environment is fundamental to that because opening our markets is what's going to allow us to ensure that Albertans are getting the fair price that they deserve for the resources that they own.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Market access for Alberta's energy has been acknowledged by government as a crucial issue. Given that we can't get a pipeline through one province, how does the Premier realistically expect that we can get our energy to the east coast of Canada?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, it's very interesting, when we talk to Premiers across this country, how different Premiers understand the priorities of the economy differently. Of course, you'll know that Premier Marois and Premier Alward, from Quebec and New Brunswick, fully understand what the economic benefit to their provinces will be if we're able to put an eastern pipeline through. I think there are interesting conversations going on in British Columbia right now as well. Fundamentally the Canadian energy strategy is what's allowing us to pull this together. We're making very productive progress through eastern Canada to work with New Brunswick and with Quebec. Being able to get to tidewater, whether it's on the east coast or the west coast, will make a difference to Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is again to the Premier. Given that the main roadblocks to pipeline access appear to be environmentally motivated and given the acknowledged challenges in meeting our province's climate change targets, can the Premier tell this Assembly whether the government will or will not meet our climate change targets?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, as opposed to the other side of the House, we actually believe that it's important to talk about global warming, and we're prepared to acknowledge that the science is settled. I'll tell you the reason that we need to do that. Go to the CBC debate during the election and take a look at what that debate was about. I'll tell you that being able to talk about the reduction of emissions, which the federal government is doing, which we're doing, which the government of Saskatchewan is doing, is exactly the conversation that we need to have with customers in the United States and in other parts of the world. This is actually the way of the future, not the past.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Airdrie, you rose on a point of order at 2:18 during the final answer just given.

We'll move on now to Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Labour Negotiations with Teachers (continued)

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Might we first congratulate the Member for St. Albert on asking his first question in this House.

My questions are for the Minister of Education. He's not very popular, nor is his government right now, with teachers in Alberta. The reason is pretty simple. Alberta teachers feel like they have been deceived. They were promised one thing before the election only to have another delivered after the government got their vote. Everybody in this province, regardless of their political stripes, ought to keep our kids top of mind in these negotiations. If teachers are not respected, it does not bode well for the classrooms. To the Minister of Education: why aren't you listening to teachers?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it's a great question, and I've got to say that I am listening to teachers. As a matter of fact, we're reaching out to teachers every possible chance we get. I've been attending teachers' conventions, visiting schools, even sending e-mails. I've got a binder full of e-mails from teachers telling me how happy they were that we reached out to them. It's very interesting that that comment would come from a party whose leader said to CBC not so long ago, "So our very best and most skilled teachers no longer are in the classroom."

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, I'm pretty sure my hon. leader would have been referencing the fact that this government loves to put a lot of teachers in boardrooms instead of classrooms.

Given that teachers have been pretty clear that this is not about money, Mr. Speaker – this is about working conditions – and given that all we really want to do and all everybody should want to do is what's best for teachers so they can do what's best for our kids in return, why won't the minister commit to working with teachers in trying to resolve this?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'd encourage the member to read the proposals that were made to the ATA. That's exactly what we're trying to do. I completely agree with him. If he's suggesting that we actually want to impose hard caps across rural Alberta for assignable time, I'd welcome that input, maybe even in this House. I don't believe that's the right way to go, and it's been proven not to work in Edmonton and Calgary. Taking that kind of flexibility out of the system has been the big key rub in these negotiations, one thing that we couldn't bend on. There are many other ways that we want to look at workload, invest in workload studies, decrease instructional time for teachers. We're still willing to do those things.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, it's one thing to say that you're going to listen to teachers about workload and another to actually do it. That's the problem that we're having. Given that the minister sent a letter to boards outlining what they can do and what they can't do, what they'd like to see them do in terms of negotiations, given that the minister reached out and sent a personalized letter, which he probably shouldn't have, to every teacher in this province, it seems like he has a predetermined outcome in mind when it comes to negotiations. Does the minister recognize that boards and teachers are finding it tough to negotiate when you appear to have already dictated a settlement to them?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I don't think it's inappropriate for the Education minister to take an interest in the education system. The sustainability and the quality of this education system is a great responsibility that I take very seriously and why we've been working closely with the Alberta School Boards Association and the ATA on a whole number of issues. I think it's entirely appropriate that the chair responsible for regulating the teaching profession would reach out to those professionals to talk about that profession.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Little Warriors Program Funding

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to bring to light a situation I've personally been made aware of in the last few weeks. For almost 10 years Edmonton's Little Warriors society has been working to create awareness of the tragedy that is child sexual abuse. I've spoken to many of my friends and constituents who are concerned that the government has reneged on a commitment to provide funding to the society for the construction of the Be Brave Ranch, a one-of-a-kind treatment centre in Canada offering treatment to victims of child sexual abuse. My question is to the Minister of Culture. Can the minister please explain why her department and the Department of Human Services have rescinded support and financial commitment to Little Warriors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I first want to say that Little Warriors has done a great job of promoting the awareness of child sexual abuse. This department through the community initiatives program has provided support of over $130,000 over the last couple of years. What's really important to note with respect to the application is that there is information that's missing. We've not received it yet. It's about the viability of the program, and it's about the treatment plan as well. So I look forward to receiving that information.

Mr. Jeneroux: This time to the Minister of Human Services and asking as a father. Supporting victims of child sexual assault is extremely important. Like me, Albertans want to know that their government sees this as a priority. Why aren't we providing these services?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government and this minister think that this is the ultimate priority. The prevention of child abuse and helping abused victims recover is absolutely one of the most important things we can do. We spend over $18 million a year on prevention and treatment in this area. We support the Zebra Child Protection Centre in Edmonton, the new Child Advocacy Centre in Calgary. Nine sexual assault centres receive $1.8 million annually. The child sexual exploitation program receives $6.7 million. Ten million dollars is spent regionally on counselling services and placement for victims of child sexual abuse and their families.

I personally have been a very strong supporter of the work that Little Warriors has done in terms of raising awareness. They do great work raising awareness. What we need to find out is if they do great work in the ranch.

Mr. Jeneroux: That's all fine and good, Mr. Speaker. Lots of that is just numbers.

To the Minister of Human Services again. This request is only for $650,000. Why can't this government find just this small amount to fund work by the Little Warriors society to protect and heal our children?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is really a crucial question. It isn't just $650,000. The capital request for $650,000 to buy the ranch is just the start. Then you have to look at the business case for how the ranch will operate and the medical case with respect to how the treatment plan will work. That's the information that we've requested before we approve it. That's what we would ask of anybody who comes to government for public money: what is the efficacy of the program? What results will be obtained? Is it the best investment to achieve the result in this area? All of us support children who have been sexually exploited. It's the worst thing one can do to a child. All of us want the child to recover. We want to make the best investment possible to ensure that that happens.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Combined Low-expenditure Tax Assessment

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's pretty obvious that Alberta is an urban province; 83 per cent of us live in cities or towns. Well, it's obvious to everyone but this government, which allows for one kind of tax to come out to $28 for every person in a city or town but almost $2,000 per person for folks in rural districts and counties. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why does this government discriminate against urban areas by restricting their access to the nonresidential linear property tax component under CLEA?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, this is a great question. I've had many discussions with the AUMA, the AAMD and C, and municipalities both rural and urban about this. Most municipalities work very hard to attract businesses, to attract industries, and to build new subdivisions so they can grow their tax base. I know that there is some tension between municipalities on this particular type of revenue, but I encourage municipalities to make sure that they work it out amongst themselves because there isn't a single solitary individual, whether they live in a county or they live in a town, who isn't a member of a community. Every single bit of those resources, whether they come from rural or urban communities, needs to go into supporting that community. The solutions are best reached at the local level.

Ms Blakeman: To the same minister. I heard that minister at the AUMA conference tell councillors that there was no point to making changes to CLEA because then Calgary and Edmonton would get two-thirds of the money. Well, since those cities have two-thirds of the population, what would be wrong with that?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, rural Alberta has very tough challenges when investing in building and infrastructure. My point was that most of the communities in this province, in fact 328 of them, are not Edmonton and Calgary. They're the rest of the province and are just as desperate for resources as anybody. When those small municipalities were asking for money from the linear assessment from rural municipalities, they had to be aware that if it was a provincial solution that came up, it would wind up in Edmonton and Calgary and we would pull resources from rural Alberta which were generated in rural Alberta. That's why I encouraged them to find a local solution.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Back to the same minister: how is it fair to have MDs, counties, and specialized municipalities receive $1.4 billion for 17 per cent of the people in this province while the other 83 per cent of Albertans get to share $81.5 million?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, this is the problem where sometimes the opposition puts this us-versus-them mentality into this discussion. I've always said that there is no us versus them. There's only us. It could be asked by rural Albertans why 17 per cent of the population that lives in rural Alberta, that has all the oil and gas revenue, does all the work, all the farms, all the agriculture and everything associated with it, supports urban Albertans, who sit in high-rise condos and don't necessarily contribute to the grassroots of this economy. [interjections]

I will not do us versus them. I will support every single municipality to work together to build strong communities for the future of this province.*

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I sense an emergency press conference over that one.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Ms Notley: Albertans are learning that they cannot trust this government to keep promises. When it comes to postsecondary education, Albertans were promised a stable and predictable 2 per cent increase in funding, a minimal requirement to address among other things the growing thousands of qualified students being turned away from our overcrowded institutions every year. To the minister of advanced education: will you acknowledge that breaking the promise on funding to universities will hurt Alberta's students, their families, and our economic future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for that question. I can say that our minister is taking very seriously advanced education and the funding for all our postsecondary education institutions in this province and that we will put a system in place to make sure all of our students have a first-class education.

2:30

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that this government also promised to help aboriginal and rural students access postsecondary education with a new bursary program and given that the failure to keep that promise will mean more struggles for aboriginal and rural students, will the minister of advanced education and the Deputy Premier tell Albertans if the new bursary program is on or if these students should start looking for a second, third, or fourth summer job to pay for another broken Tory promise?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, the budget will come forward tomorrow, and I'd ask the opposition to sit tight and hear what the minister has to say when the budget is released.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the president of the U of A recently raised the spectre of tuition increases in her state of the university address and given that this government's broken promise on funding will see students and their parents digging deeper and deeper into their own pockets, will the minister of advanced education admit that Alberta's students and their families will be the ones paying for your broken promises on postsecondary funding?

Mr. Campbell: Again, Mr. Speaker, the budget comes out tomorrow, and I ask the opposition to listen closely to that, and they'll get the answers they've asked for.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Calgary-Currie.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On February 26 the ERCB imposed a high-risk enforcement action against Plains Midstream for an illegal oil spill. The investigation found Plains guilty of spilling 28,000 barrels of oil due to inadequate backfill operations, inadequate maintenance, inadequate leak detection measures, inadequate response procedures, and inadequate emergency plans. To the minister: how do the ERCB enforcement actions prevent or reduce the likelihood of another catastrophic oil spill?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to have a question. This enforcement action by the ERCB is an important enforcement action, and in fact, as we move to the new regulator, fines that the regulatory authority could impose for infractions like this will be even higher. You know, in this province we have over 400,000 kilometres of pipelines. That's enough to go around the world 10 times. We have a lot of important materials moving through pipelines throughout the province, and we're all dedicated to ensuring that it is done safely and in an appropriate manner.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the only consequence of this high-risk enforcement action imposed upon Plains Midstream was to hire a public relations firm, how does forcing a company to hire a public relations firm qualify as a consequence or an incentive to reduce or prevent the likelihood of another catastrophic oil spill?

Mr. Hughes: Well, if that was true, that would be unfortunate, wouldn't it, Mr. Speaker? But it's not the only consequence to the operator. The operator also was prevented from actually shipping, which had the consequence of a very substantial financial implication for the company, and in addition to that, they have been required to step up the game as well. So this is part of what we're doing in this province. We are working hard with the pipeline industry. The ERCB has been working closely with them as well. I expect to receive soon the report that I requested last summer, that helps ensure that we perform at the highest possible level.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government is marketing its environmental protection record to support building international pipelines like the Keystone, given that Syncrude's penalty for killing ducks is $3 million and Plains' penalty for spilling 28,000 barrels of oil is the cost of hiring a public relations firm, how can anyone trust this government to protect the environment when the penalties are inconsistent and just don't make sense?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, under the new Alberta energy regulator the fines could be half a million dollars, but more importantly the financial implications for the company are millions of dollars in impact because they cannot use those pipelines if they have had an issue like this, and the industry knows that well.

Services for Adults with Developmental Disabilities

Ms Cusanelli: Mr. Speaker, it's with great honour that I rise to ask my first question in this House on behalf of my constituency, Calgary-Currie. Our constituency has many notable facilities offering supports and services to Alberta's most vulnerable. My constituents are worried for the future of their adult children with developmental disabilities. Families don't know how to go for assistance with planning when they're no longer able to continue in the role as a caregiver for aging developmentally disabled children. All my questions are to the associate minister of persons with developmental disabilities. My constituents want to know: how are we being responsive to families who are looking for this type of assistance?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we age, it's incumbent on all of us to arrange our financial and legal affairs, to ensure that they're in order, to plan for own future and that of our family, and that's particularly important when we have a disabled person in our family. I would certainly advise Albertans to seek the advice of accountants and legal advice, but with respect to planning I can advise that the offices of the Public Trustee and the public guardian are always available for assisting in planning, and with respect to actual service delivery I can assure you that the government stands ready to assist.

Ms Cusanelli: Given that by 2015 the number of seniors with developmental disabilities is expected to grow by 74 per cent and by 2020 will have increased by 169 per cent, how does this government ensure that the offices of the Public Trustee and the public guardian are prepared to meet the demands of a growing and vulnerable population here in Alberta?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of studies. This is no surprise, this coming change in demographic. In fact, there's a good one by PDD Calgary, done in 2010, that's posted on our website. That was one of the reasons for the amalgamation of the Human Services department and breaking down the lines between traditional service arms and involving all of those service arms in more of a continuum of care delivery. The office of the Public Trustee and the public guardian are involved in that continuum and in the planning for the future of our clients, and they will be there when they're needed.

Ms Cusanelli: Well, given that older adults with developmental disabilities are living longer and, more significantly, are showing signs of aging far sooner than the general population, how are you going to help them with accessing provincial help when eligibility is based on the chronological age of 65 years?

Mr. Oberle: Actually, it's not, Mr. Speaker, and I want to assure Albertans that the services are there and are delivered independent of age or legal status. We are there to serve when people are in need. We will provide services in accordance with need so that people may lead rich, rewarding lives in our province and contribute as they're able to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by Calgary-Bow.

Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Health. After nearly five years of transitioning ambulances from municipalities to AHS, the Health Quality Council report acknowledges a loss of local community knowledge, a culture of mistrust, and a perceived lack of adequate EMS resources to meet the needs of Albertans. Municipalities are left filling service gaps that this government created. They are expecting local fire departments to backstop these gaps in service. Why is this government going back on its word and downloading the costs onto the backs of our municipalities?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's question does a very good job of acknowledging the great number of stakeholders that the Health Quality Council of Alberta conferred with in developing this report, among them mayors and elected officials across this province, EMS workers, and others.

With respect to questions around fire and municipal services I'll ask the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs to supplement.

The Speaker: The hon. minister?
The hon. member.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that local ambulances are being sent to cities to pick up patients and may not be available to our rural communities when needed, how does this minister plan to remedy this government's mismanagement, that is causing ambulances to be taken away from our rural communities?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the report provides a very clear road map to answer that question, and that is that the report recommends the completion as quickly as possible of the consolidation of dispatch services around the province. I observed this issue first-hand when I visited the Edmonton dispatch centre last week. We saw that municipalities that are not yet part of the provincial consolidated system are not visible to central dispatchers in Edmonton. The same would be true in the other two provincial centres. The answer lies, as the report recommends, in completing dispatch consolidation as quickly as possible.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, Albertans just don't trust this government. Given that in the news article that I will table later, dispatch times in Lacombe since the government established AHS are reported as woefully not meeting the previous standard under the municipality of two minutes, what will this government do to make sure that residents in my constituency and all Albertans are receiving timely emergency ambulance service when they need it?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I wouldn't want the hon. member's question to leave Albertans with the impression that we have fewer resources in our ambulance service today. We, in fact, have the same or more resources across the province. The issue is the consolidation of dispatch services. One of the things that the report points out as a consequence of this in the past, prior to the creation of Alberta Health Services, is the lack of available data to make accurate, valid comparisons about then and now with respect to response times.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Home Education

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. While opposition members are busy looking for government bogeymen under every rock, their constituents have some real-life questions. Cardston-Taber-Warner constituents are concerned that when new Albertans choose home education, they are unfortunately choosing no education at all. I am familiar with some excellent home-schooling. To the Minister of Education: what is being done to ensure that all Alberta's children who are home-schooled receive the education that they deserve?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, one of the great things about the Alberta education system is its diversity and the choice for parents. I can tell you that home-educated children are visited at least twice a year by a certificated teacher to make sure that we know how they're doing, and there are a variety of tools available to help the parents as well. I can tell you that I have been to Taber. I have met with that community, that school division, the municipal leaders. I do have some concerns there, but my department is working with those local folks to make sure we understand what the requirements are, and we can help make sure these kids reach their full potential.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what options do you have if a child is not making progress in a home education situation?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we do have the ability to go in and do extra monitoring, but it's important to know that people choose home education for all sorts of different reasons. We do monitor those children to make sure that their progress is as expected. For the kids, in particular, down in that Taber area in the Low German-speaking Mennonite community, we are doing some extra monitoring in that area, and we are working with the community. I just want to assure Albertans that we continue to monitor all the approximately 8,000 kids that are home-schooled, and many of them are receiving an excellent education.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the minister of human resources. I'm told that some parents are choosing home-schooling so that their children can work on the family farm instead of spending time in the classroom. Is that of concern to you?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the employment standards regulation does have a provision that says that one cannot take a child out of school to work, that schooling has to come first. That's not precisely the way it's written, but that's the import of it. I think it would be quite inappropriate for one to use home-schooling unless they could actually meet both the spirit and the wording of that particular regulation. That being said, I could tell this House that the federal government is very interested in at some point in time over the next two years adhering to the ILO standards with respect to child labour regulations, and we are looking at our child labour regulations very closely to make sure that we adhere to those standards.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, that concludes the formal part of question period. However, the Minister of Municipal Affairs has indicated that he may wish to offer a clarification, which would allow the original questioner to ask another question. Pay attention to how this works, please.

Combined Low-expenditure Tax Assessment (continued)

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my 11 years as an MLA I've been to 328 communities around Alberta, and I get very frustrated when I hear people talk about how we need more because they have too much. In rural Alberta – and I argued the point – they're just as vehement that they feel like they contribute to the province's economy but don't get as much in return. All that serves, whenever somebody says, "They have more, and we want to take it," is to pit the city versus rural or urban versus rural or town versus country, and that does not serve to do anything for the focus that we're supposed to have on making sure that every single one of the 422 communities in this province is well served.*

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, I believe you were the original questioner.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, clearly not a fan of urban Albertans is our minister. I'm wondering if that's the reason behind why the government's election promise of a big city charter for Edmonton and Calgary has now been whittled down to a civic something or other vague thing. Would that be why?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I'm a big fan. I have a property here in the city of Edmonton, like most rural MLAs do. I'm a big fan of the cities. I'm just not a big fan – of course, those members don't have a single rural member and don't have to give a hoot about rural Alberta, which is evidenced by their question.

We're working on a civic charter, and I call it a civic charter because there are five other cities that would also like to have some service. A civic charter is designed to make sure that we can adequately provide for our citizens no matter what municipality we live in. We're months ahead of schedule for signing it, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: A point of order from Edmonton-Centre was noted at almost 2:47.

In 30 seconds we'll move on with members' statements from Lesser Slave Lake and Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Members' Statements (continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Lake with her member's statement, followed by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Rural Education Symposium

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past Monday I attended the second annual Rural Education Symposium in Canmore, where more than 200 education stakeholders from across Alberta came together to address the fact that rural educators face unique challenges such as declining enrolments, school closures, and issues around transportation. This symposium provided a venue to discuss these important challenges and solutions and to share best practices, dialogue, and create partnerships with each other so that rural education remains viable and supported in this province.

The theme of this year's three-day conference was innovation and collaboration, and examples of that in rural education are many. Some of the best examples of engaged thinkers, ethical citizens, and the entrepreneurial spirit live in rural Alberta. I applaud all rural educators for ensuring rural students are being provided equity of opportunity.

I believe that all Albertan kids from Gift Lake to Grimshaw to Canmore deserve a quality educational experience, and that was exemplified by the Minister of Education's keynote address on how his continued vision for Inspiring Education is being brought to life in rural Alberta, not only by this government's support of funding rural education but through SuperNet, our Wi-Fi on buses pilot project, the eMerge one-to-one laptop project, and literacy projects, to name a few supportive examples. Some of the impressive projects I heard about are examples of the collaboration happening in rural education through partnerships and the unique ways to provide educational opportunities, and this forum was key.

Anyone who's rural knows that rural communities and school boards do an amazing job at leveraging local resources to overcome the challenges that occur in rural Alberta. It certainly speaks to the passion, commitment, and dedication for putting students first. Mr. Speaker, all Albertans should be proud of the work that's being done in rural Alberta to support students and inspire education. As a rural MLA, I know I am.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Personal Care Standards in Seniors' Facilities

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday for the first time in a long time Alberta's seniors and people in care heard great news. After months of relentless questioning and pressure from opposition members as well as a single brave member from the other side of the House, the government finally recognized that offering only one bath per week to seniors is not only insufficient and unhealthy, but it's frankly degrading to those in care. I commend and I thank the ministry for doing the right thing.

What's troubling to me, Mr. Speaker, is the initial reaction that we in opposition received from this government. Every time we speak up for Albertans regarding policy failures affecting people in care, we are dismissed. We saw it last spring with the food quality issue in seniors' care facilities. It was pretty obvious from the pictures, the reviews, the stories from seniors that that food was disgusting and changes had to be made, but instead of trying to protect Albertans in all levels of care, the government instead moved to protect themselves, saying that the food was good enough. So my colleagues in opposition and the AUPE went to battle for Alberta seniors, and a couple of months later the Minister of Health changed his tune. He even went so far as to acknowledge that he wouldn't feed this food to his mother.

Again, I'm thankful changes will be made. But why is it so difficult to get the government to do the right thing? Alberta seniors built this province. They spent their lives sacrificing for future generations so that we can have the best opportunity to live in the best province in the best country in the world. When these people enter care, it's not just our job to care for them; as legislators it is our duty to put them first. I sincerely hope that going forward, when opposition brings forward concerns from Albertans, the government's response won't be to simply brush it off, to shuffle their feet, or claim we're fearmongering. In this case we should all be reminded that we're not just offering seniors another weekly bath; we're offering them their dignity.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in my capacity as a member of the House, and I'm pleased to table some reports. This came to my attention just yesterday, when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, who is generally a fair-minded person, made the statement that public education has been a train wreck in this province. I daresay I find that offensive to many people, probably. I'm pleased to report today, because I recalled this as a result of those comments, the results of the most recent program for international student assessments from the OECD. In these reports – the requisite numbers are there – Alberta students placed second in the world in reading and first in Canada, second in the world in scientific literacy and first in Canada, and eighth in mathematical literacy. As parents, with my spouse, Denise, of three teenage children in public schools in this province, we know this is a very good system.

The Speaker: Hon. minister and others who have tablings coming forward, please remember to just state what the tabling is about as briefly as possible. I know that some have more experience than others in that regard, but let's all be reminded to be mindful of the clock.

The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got the requisite five copies of a letter that was sent by our Health critic and MLA for Calgary-Fish Creek to the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta asking for an investigation into whether or not Helios has broken the Health Act or any other legislation.

I also have five copies of an e-mail that was sent out from the office of the Finance minister and Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert regarding the exclusion of the Canadian Taxpayers Federation from the stakeholder consultations.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of the FOIPed Alberta Health Services document referred to yesterday in question period by the hon. Member for Calgary-

Fish Creek. These documents show that in 2009 Edmonton had critically few dispatch units for an average of three hours a month, a number that's increased 10 times to 30 hours as of last month.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is one by Ms Jennifer Marcotte, making its rounds on the Internet, with 2,000 shares and 1,000 likes, describing the good work that Alberta teachers do in our classrooms.

The second one is a tabling of a report done by the Parkland Institute called Stabilizing Alberta's Revenues. You'll remember that yesterday I tabled an article from the Canada West Foundation. Dr. Roger Gibbins said that we have to have different revenue streams, i.e. taxes. This report by the Parkland Institute summarizes the same thing if we're ever going to have predictable, sustainable funding or ever save any of this one-time resource that we have.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of postcard submissions that Albertans made to our prebudget tour, visiting seven cities in the last few weeks. I have some comments here from Paul, Carolee, Cecily, and S.M. Demers talking about the need for more long-term care facilities.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague for Lacombe-Ponoka I have the five requisite copies here for the Assembly of, I believe, a quote that he made in a newspaper.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have three points of order. I think we can probably deal with them quite quickly. Nonetheless, let's hear what they are.

Hon. Member for Airdrie, I believe you're first. You have the first two. I assume you'll be doing them separately.

Point of Order Insulting Language

Mr. Anderson: I can do them all together just in the interests of time. It's from the book of standing orders, as I reference it, chapter 23, verses (h), (i), and (j), Mr. Speaker. It was funny. Yesterday, I think, we were very happy to see that the government had taken a new approach to how they were going to change the tone in the building here. I thought it was impressive, and we were excited about it over here, so we came ready to engage in a good conversation, scale back the tone of our questions as per your suggestions, and so forth. Well, we weren't reprimanded once. That's an improvement. We certainly were trying our best.

Then what did we hear? Well, we heard the Deputy Premier, the Finance minister and Treasury Board president, refer to us as the wild alliance, which, of course, Mr. Speaker, you have on multiple occasions told us and him, that member as well as all of us, not to do. Then when you asked him to correct it, he took the time to take the shot again before misquoting our name again as Wildrose alliance, which it is not. We are the Wildrose Party or the Wildrose caucus for the purposes of this Legislature. I know it's a hard couple of words for the minister to memorize, Wildrose caucus, but if he could perhaps do that, that would be very much appreciated.

He also attempted to tie, I think in a very disturbing way, our party to the comments of a former campaign manager on a recent issue that has, I would say, disgusted a lot of people in this House if not all. I would hope all. I think that that should be below the Finance Minister and Deputy Premier of this province.

The Premier called us extreme. The Minister of Municipal Affairs, before he got himself into some hot water later on – that was a good one – called us arrogant and ignorant, and there were many other such examples of that.

Now, I'll tell you what, Mr. Speaker. I would hope and challenge the government to do what I would like to do and, I think, what they would like to do – certainly, I know what that House leader over there would like to do – and that is try to have a good debate in here, a good, sharp, strong debate but without hurling insults and creating disorder by saying things that are patently untrue about other parties and, certainly, the name-calling, at the very least the name-calling.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that that Deputy Premier should absolutely memorize the name of our party because we are the party that went from zero to 17 seats in less than four years, and we're the party that went from 5 per cent to 34 per cent in just four years. We are the government in waiting that is waiting patiently for our opportunity in four years to replace that government and show you all what good government looks like.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was a wonderful speech but not a point of order. It did clarify some things for us. Of course, while admonishing the Minister of Finance for using incorrect names, he called him the Deputy Premier, which, of course, as we all know, is the Minister of Municipal Affairs at the moment, not the Minister of Finance.

An Hon. Member: What?

3:00

The Speaker: Excuse me. I don't know who just yelled out, "What?" but that is extremely inappropriate, and if I catch you doing it again, you will pay a penalty, whoever it was. Be reminded, please, that there's decorum to be followed here.

You have the floor, hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In any event, the Minister of Municipal Affairs is currently the Acting Deputy Premier. When we get into this issue of whether you're using the right names, you know, it's very clear that sometimes you can get the name wrong, particularly if you're referring to people who are still searching for their identity and have changed names over and over again, unlike others who have had the same name for some 40 or 50 years.

There is a difference of viewpoint sometimes, and it's not wrong to have a difference of viewpoint. I do actually agree entirely with the hon. member when he says that we should stay away from things that are patently untrue. I would appreciate it if in the future we can stay away from allegations of corruption because that is not the Alberta that we know and love and live in. The Alberta that we know and love and live in has parliamentarians who respect this province and who do their best for this province even when we disagree with each other as to what the best is. So if we want to stay away from things that are patently untrue, I would think that would be a good thing to do.

I do actually appreciate the idea that we should have decorum in the House, but sometimes it's not inappropriate to refer to an individual's position as extreme or to a party's position as extreme when it is extreme. There are nuances that must be adhered to, obviously. Obviously, we should not be using language which diminishes or denigrates members or parties, for that matter. We should stick to things that are true. We should stay away from the hyperbole. I can assure that hon. member that if he will work with his caucus to make that happen in the House, my caucus will respond with alacrity.

The Speaker: Thank you. I don't assume there's anyone else who wishes to chime in on this. Clearly, this is a point of clarification to a degree. However, let me remind both sides of the House. In this case, I'll start with the government side. You know, you've got to be extremely careful when you toss around words like arrogant and ignorant. Take a look at the context within which you're using them. They're not helpful. They're not particularly polite.

We've heard other comments here in the last two days, comments such as corruption, which I commented on, comments like warehousing of people, comments that so-and-so or such-and-such organization or whatever it was is deceitful or is purposely deceiving or whatever, terms like that, and train wreck from yesterday and so on. You know, surely we are all above those kinds of comments in the context in which they were delivered. Surely we're there. Quite appropriately, citation 23(j) says that members should not use "abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." I would agree. So let the reprimand stand equally to government members and ministers as it does to opposition on that point. That clarifies that.

I assume we can move on now to the point of order. Edmonton-Centre, I believe you had one.

Point of Order Allegations against Members

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I raised the point of order toward the end of the exchange between the Minister of Municipal Affairs and myself. In fact, it was, I believe, during the additional offering he made. I was a bit surprised because I was expecting a bit of a retraction or an explanation of why he would say such things against people who live in rural Alberta, putting out that they somehow didn't carry their share of the workload and didn't deserve to have any share of the money. But, no, in fact he got up and kept swinging or kept digging; I'm not sure which.

Under 23(h), making allegations against another member, he did go on at a certain point – again, you have the benefit of the Blues; I don't – to say that I and members of my caucus didn't give a hoot about rural Alberta and didn't understand them, et cetera, et cetera. Well, this is clearly a comment that is meant to inflame. It is meant to create debate in this House. It was meant to demean. I think it was quite pointed. I mean, I've made no secret of the fact of how proud I am of my constituents living in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, most of whom do live in high-rise buildings and condominiums and apartments. It wasn't hard to understand that this was a direct insult to me and to the people that I represent. Not acceptable to me, Mr. Speaker. You know, sticks and stones will break my bones, and I've taken a heck of a lot of that from the other side, but don't you go dissing my constituents, and that's what went on here.

A point of order is raised against an individual member in this House, and I understand that. I would not be quite so exercised about this if it was just another shot at me because, as I said, I've had a lot of them, and I'm still standing. It must annoy the heck out of you guys. But the minister did utter words that were meant to create a disturbance. They were meant to inflame a discussion. They were meant to demean. They were meant as an allegation that we didn't care about people who reside in rural Alberta, and that's simply not true.

Now, if the Speaker would like and would give me a bit of time, I can go back and start pulling the debates, because I talk a lot in this Assembly, where I have brought forward issues of concern to people in rural Alberta, where I've received letters from them, where I've raised issues that they wanted me to raise in this House. I believe that what the minister has said is both untrue and was intended to be insulting.

I know that the Speaker is very fond of quoting Beauchesne 494 and saying: well, you know, both of you can say something true at the same time. With respect, Mr. Speaker, I don't think that that fits the bill in this case. It was meant to be insulting to me and my constituents, it was meant to demean, and it was meant to put me in a position where I and my caucus members were being put out to Albertans as that somehow we didn't care about those that reside in rural Alberta, and that's simply not true. There's no compelling argument coming from him that would make me believe that it was or make anyone else believe that it was, so I would like that member to retract that statement, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before that – and I specifically wrote it down because it stuck in my head when the question came, before I responded and made those comments – the quote was: not a fan of the cities. I was accused of not being a fan of the cities. I've lived part-time in the city since I've been an MLA. As a rural MLA you yourself live – not yourself, but the previous Speaker did – half the time in the country and half the time in the city because we work here. I'm more acutely aware of, I think, as many of my rural colleagues . . . [interjection] I did not interrupt you.

I more acutely know the challenges that go on in rural Alberta and in urban Alberta because we spend half of our time in both places. I have worked very hard with every single municipality from Fort Macleod to Fort McMurray, from Edmonton to Edgerton, and from Calgary to Cold Lake, Mr. Speaker. I've been to 328 different municipalities in this province and met with the councils and talked to them over the 11 years as MLA.

All I meant to point out – and I know that the hon. member said: don't go dissing my constituents. Well, rural Albertans are my constituents, too, and I get very frustrated when anyone suggests: "Oh, rural Alberta has money. We need to pull it out and put it into the cities." As I explained, a rural Albertan will stand up and say: "We're the ones that drive the economy. You guys get all the breaks, and you get fantastic schools, and you get all sorts of facilities while we sit out in rural Alberta and drive the economy." They're just as frustrated sometimes, Mr. Speaker, by the discrepancy that goes on, and they feel they overcontribute and get less back.

Just as the member pointed out, right now she feels that urban Albertans get less back than what they contribute. Mr. Speaker, every single jurisdiction – if I go to Fort McMurray, they say that they drive the economy. If I go to an agricultural district like Brooks, they say: well, we employ a lot of people and drive the economy. Every single place in this province contributes to the economy and probably feels like they don't get as much back. We have limited resources. Any time we start off with a question that says, "They have more; let's take it," it creates an us-versus-them atmosphere, and I have no patience for us versus them.

Edmonton and Edgerton and Calgary and Cold Lake are just as entitled to resources as anybody else. It's not about who has more because, as many colleagues will attest, you don't make yourself richer by stealing from somebody else. We're all in this together. We're all Albertans. Every single community deserves the resources available to try and build itself up, to make itself stronger so that we have a stronger Alberta, Mr. Speaker.

I know the member got emotional and said: don't you go dissing my constituency. She also said that I'm not a fan of the cities, which I take exception to. I also took exception to the fact that it sounded like she was trying to steal resources from rural Alberta. I'm not a fan of that either, so I got defensive, but I didn't say anything different than this member did on any plane.

3:10

The Speaker: Okay. I've heard enough. Thank you.

You know, it just illustrates the point here that clarifications are sometimes absolutely necessary. We've heard from Edmonton-Centre where she stands on this issue. We've heard from the Minister of Municipal Affairs where he stands. I'm grateful for the clarification.

Just for the record I lived in four different locations in rural Alberta over almost 15 years, so I get a pretty good feel for what urban and rural life is like, and I, like every single member here, appreciate both because that's what's made this province so strong. Let's keep it at that high level. Thank you.

Let's move on.

Orders of the Day

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Supplementary Supply Estimates 2012-13 General Revenue Fund

The Chair: Before we commence this afternoon's consideration of supplementary supply, I'd like to review briefly the standing orders governing the speaking rotation. As you know, the Assembly approved amendments to the standing orders that impact supplementary supply consideration. As provided for in Standing Order 59.02, the rotation in Standing Order 59.01(6) is deemed to apply, which is as follows:

- (a) the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may make opening comments not to exceed 10 minutes,
- (b) for the hour that follows, members of the Official Opposition and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (c) for the next 20 minutes, the members of the third party, if any, and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (d) for the next 20 minutes, the member of the fourth party, if any, and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (e) for the next 20 minutes, private Members of the Government caucus and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak, and

(f) any Member may speak thereafter.

During the above rotation speaking times are limited to 10 minutes. Once the above rotation is complete, speaking times are reduced to five minutes. Finally, as provided for in Government Motion 23, approved by the Assembly yesterday, the time allotted for consideration is three hours.

The Committee of Supply has under consideration the estimates of five ministries. They are Education, Enterprise and Advanced Education, Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, Municipal Affairs, and the Ministry of Transportation.

We will start with the Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm rising on behalf of the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance. I would like to move the 2012-13 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund. These estimates are consistent with the amended 2012-13 fiscal plan presented in these estimates and will provide additional spending authority to five government departments. When passed, the estimates will authorize increases of about $401 million in voted expense, $55 million in voted capital investment, and $77.5 million in voted nonbudgetary disbursements of the government.

The estimates will authorize increases for the Department of Education, the Department of Enterprise and Advanced Education, the Department of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, the Department of Municipal Affairs, and the Department of Transportation. The ministers responsible for these departments will be happy to answer any questions from the members of the House.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

I'll recognize the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: All right.

Mr. Anderson: Just a second. I just wanted to clarify something, Mr. Chair, if I could. Do we now get an hour, with ten minutes back and forth? Is that how this works?

The Chair: That's correct.

Mr. Anderson: So the government is done with their comments, and now we get the full hour?

The Chair: That's correct. Back and forth in ten-minute blocks.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. I just wanted to clarify that. Thank you.

The Chair: I recognize the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Well, this is the first time that I've participated in the supplementary estimates process, so you do have to forgive me if I am shuffling through papers and getting myself organized here as I go through. I have noticed as we're going through and looking at the specific ministries that I'm not quite certain how these questions are going to be answered. Is it the minister who introduced that I should be directing my questions to on all of this?

The Chair: Through the chair, please.

Ms Smith: Through the chair? All right. That sounds good.

I guess let me just start out by saying that when I got the supplementary estimates document yesterday, I thought it told a pretty disturbing story. We had a government that began the year saying that we were going to end up with a deficit of somewhere around $900 million. Now, of course, we look at these estimates and we see that the government hopes that that number is going to come in at $3.9 billion, but that isn't the total cash deficit as we know. We know that the government is also adding more in debt financing, and we suspect that total cash deficit is going to add at least another $2 billion and that it will be closer to $6 billion. So we recognize that this document still doesn't tell the whole story.

There are a couple of things that I do want to go through as I'm talking about the areas where we are seeing the requests for additional dollars, but I do want to provide a little bit of context first. It was interesting to be quizzed in the press scrum coming in. Apparently the government is quite proud of the fact that it has net assets that are exceeding other provinces. Of course, I think it's important to remember the context for where these dollars are coming from to be able to cover the cost. There are only two places. One of them is our sustainability fund, and the other is our debt. We'll get a better idea, hopefully, of what the debt is when we see the budget tomorrow, but I do want to point out for the record that the sustainability fund once hit a high-water mark of $17 billion. These estimates say that it will end the fiscal year at $2.7 billion, assuming that the news for the rest of this month doesn't get even worse. So the government has vaporized over $14 billion in savings. That is pretty much the size and the equivalent of the heritage savings trust fund.

When you look at the level of spending that was approved in budget last year, I'm also reminded of the argument that was made and the commitment that was made by the previous Premier, who had talked about how there was going to be more discipline in managing in-year spending. I had anticipated that what that would mean is that we would never have one of these kinds of debates again, where getting to the end of the year, we're running out of money, and we have to make sure that we vote so that the government can continue to pay its bills, especially when we look at how much spending was already approved in the last budget.

The Premier often likes to say that we don't have a spending problem, that we have a revenue problem, but I think we need to point out some of the issues around revenue as we're talking about the government's need to have additional dollars for spending. This year revenues are still estimated to be $37.9 billion. That is the fourth-best revenue year ever in the history of the government of Alberta.

Now, just to give some other interesting statistics, just so that we can see how badly out of whack the government spending is this year as they're seeking our approval to give them even more dollars to spend, this number falls just short of the boom years. In 2006-07 we had revenues that were only $128 million higher than are being proposed today. In that year we weren't running a deficit. It was an $8.3 billion surplus that was able to go into the sustainability fund and other savings accounts.

There's another year as a benchmark, 2007-08. Revenues were $288 million more than this year, again, just marginally more than this year. In that year $4 billion was set aside in the sustainability fund and other savings accounts. In previous years the predecessor of our current Premier was not only able to have an equivalent amount of revenues and not run deficits in those two years, to actually run significant surpluses, but a total, if you want me to do the math there, of almost $13 billion was able to go into the sustainability fund, that has been wiped out in the subsequent years.

Here we are in the year that we had record revenues, 2011-12. There was $1.368 billion more than is being brought in this year, and that year is when we started seeing this turning point. In a year when we had record revenues, the government consumed $3 billion out of the sustainability fund. Where are we today? We are only $1.368 billion off an all-time record revenue in this province, and we're headed to a $4 billion to $6 billion deficit. If you look at it this way, even if we had the very best revenue ever, if we had managed to match the year that we had the all-time best revenue ever, we would still have at least a $2.6 billion deficit year. This is not a revenue problem that this government faces.

The question is: why is it that here we are at the end of the year seeing the kind of spending that we approved in the last budget, having a commitment from the government to say that they are going to find in-year savings, saying that they're going to have more discipline in managing the spending in year, and we're now here debating adding an additional $659 million above what was approved? The amount being requested for the vote today: $535 million.

It is quite obvious to me and, I think, quite obvious to Albertans that this government has absolutely lost complete control over its spending. I think they're asking whether there is a single fiscal conservative over on the other side. We talk about this issue of results-based budgeting. The Premier trumpeted it, saying that this was going to make all the difference in the world, that we would be finding all kinds of – and I seem to recall the Finance minister again and again and again saying how throughout the year he was finding all this evidence of in-year savings that could be reallocated. Yet here we are at the end of the year having to vote over half a billion dollars in additional spending for a government whose spending is already completely out of control.

How will this end up? We were supposed to spend a staggering $41.15 billion. Now we find out it is actually going to be $41.8 billion. How does this break down? Well, I want to go through each of these because I do find it quite interesting the ways in which the budgeting has been badly managed. You look at the issue of Education, for instance. This is a $4.4 billion spending envelope. They are asking for us to find an additional $24 million, which is going to a good cause. They underestimated what the number of students would be and they have to flow that through to the school boards is what it looks like. I guess the question is: with the Premier's and the Finance minister's results-based, zero-based budgeting process, which they claim to have started months and months and months ago, why couldn't they find .5 per cent of the total budget of in-year spending to be able to reallocate to this higher priority item?

That's what this exercise is all supposed to be about, moving money from lower priority areas to higher priority areas. In fact, this whole exercise reminds me a little bit of an episode of Yes Minister that I once saw. In that episode of Yes Minister Jim Hacker goes and talks to his senior civil servant, Sir Humphrey, and is trying to get a 5 per cent reduction overall on government spending. The entire episode goes through all of the ways in which it is impossible for them to be able to find a 5 per cent reduction. We hear this often from the civil service. Not only are they cutting to the bone; they're cutting to the marrow. There's no possible way that they could find in-year savings. What happens at the end of this episode? Well, of course, the senior civil servant, Sir Humphrey, discovers there's something he wants, so he manages to get all of his people to find that 5 per cent in every single department that it was asked for in the first place.

I think this is what we're seeing here. This is the thing that I find very frustrating about the government saying one thing publicly, and then we see the numbers that appear when it comes down to these supplementary estimates. I find it impossible to believe that the Education department, that spends $4.4 billion, 10 per cent of government's overall spending, cannot manage to find in-year savings of $24 million to direct to this high-priority item.

On the issue of advanced education we have a situation which is kind of the opposite, which is a bit strange, and I look forward to hearing some response as to why this would be the case. In advanced education if you look at the amount of the student loans, support for adult learning was initially supposed to be $272 million. Now it looks like they need another $77 million to be able to make that support work. Well, that means that they're off on that budget line item by 28 per cent.

The Chair: Hon. leader, I'll just interrupt you for a minute. The first 10 minutes have expired. I would offer a member of Executive Council a chance to respond if they so choose. If not, then you or another member could continue.

Mr. Campbell: I listened quite interestedly to the Leader of the Official Opposition's comment about savings. I am looking forward tomorrow to our budget deliberations, when Albertans will see the work that we have done as a government to bring our spending in line and make sure that we're investing in the Premier's key priorities. Education is one of them.

I think that when you look at what the minister is asking for, the fact of the matter is that while we are seeing, you know, increases in revenue, we'll actually see a decrease because we'll have about $6 billion less revenue than we forecasted. But we're also seeing dramatic increases in population in this province. This year alone 97,000 people into the province of Alberta, which is the size of Red Deer. If you look at Red Deer and you look at the infrastructure that Red Deer has as far as housing, as far as schools, as far as roads, hospitals, we are having to play catch-up to get that built for all Albertans.

When we look at all of our priorities, Mr. Chair, I can tell you that through results-based budgeting our departments have done a very good job of sitting down and looking at what's important to the priorities of this province, to all Albertans. Our Premier has made it very clear to all Albertans that we are going to look after our most vulnerable. We've taken that into consideration.

I think that when we look at the different departments and the estimates that they're asking for, some of them are things that you can't budget for such as disasters. While we have an emergency fund, the fact of the matter is that you can't budget for the number of disasters we're going to have in this province. I look at what the minister of SRD is asking for in the area of wildfires. Again, we've already this year decided that we're getting into the wildfire season a month early. We already had a fire down in Lethbridge a couple of weeks ago. I can tell you, Mr. Chair, that out in my area, you know, the snowfall is not what it was last year. The forest industry plays a very key part in this province to a number of rural communities, and we have to make sure that we have top-notch firefighters and programs in place to deal with those disasters when they happen.

I look at the mountain pine beetle, Mr. Chair. Again, living on the eastern slopes of the Rockies in West Yellowhead and looking at forest-based communities, it's important that we get control of the mountain pine beetle. I can tell you that with the work we do with industry and with the federal government, again, we are just maintaining our status in the sense that the pine beetle is not progressing as rapidly as it could. I'll say to you that when I look at the warm winter we've had this year, I wouldn't be surprised if we're going to see another infestation of the mountain pine beetle, so that's going to have an effect on our forest industries right up and down the eastern slopes, from down in Rocky Mountain House and up to my area and up to Grande Prairie and Peace River. Those are rural communities that depend on forestry for a living, so we have to do a very good job of maintaining the mountain pine beetle program. I think it's money well spent.

Again, going back to firefighting, you'll see in SRD's estimates they're looking to fix a bomber. We have a very good program for water bombing. I think it's also important, Mr. Chair, to say that we share our firefighting programs with other provinces and with the northern states and even Mexico. They come up into my riding and actually do their training at the Hinton Training Centre. They reciprocate when we have incredible fires and we need manpower. So it's important that we keep that fleet up because not only are we helping Albertans; we're actually helping people in B.C., Saskatchewan, Ontario, the northern states, and, as I say, even as far south as Mexico.

So it's easy to sit here and say that it's easy to find 5 per cent here and it's easy to find 5 per cent there, but, Mr. Chair, I sat through the budget deliberations with my cabinet colleagues, and when I look at the priorities of our Premier and at the number of programs that are under fire by Albertans and the number of people that are coming into this province and who are using these programs, I think that what we're asking for here is very reasonable under the circumstances. I think that all Albertans will be happy to see that we have taken a very reasonable and a very measured approach when we bring our budget forward tomorrow, Mr. Chair.

Thank you.

3:30

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I think that what the supplementary estimates show is that the results-based budgeting process, that they continue to talk about, actually has been a failure this year because you should be able to have covered the amount that is being requested here by moving from low-priority items to high-priority items if you're doing that process right. If you're not doing it right, then I suppose the government needs to take a closer look at how they might modify that process so that we can find some of these savings as we go forward, when it's going to become even more important.

I do have a number of questions that I want to ask. I'm not sure; can we go back and forth? That's fantastic. But I do want to just point out a couple of other things before I go back to the question and answer. When I look at, for instance, ESRD – and I'll return to that one – the government had budgeted in one area $484 million for disaster relief. They blew the budget by $286 million, a 59 per cent increase over what they had budgeted. Again, I will return to that in greater detail.

In Municipal Affairs, again, it's a $39 million increase, which is 4.5 per cent. It goes back to the point I was raising. If you're truly serious about results-based budgeting, why couldn't they have found $39 million within the budget envelope to be able to move from lower priority items to higher priority items? Transportation: same thing. The $39 million represents 3 per cent more than what was budgeted. It's mystifying to me, if this results-based budgeting process is working, why $39 million could not be found within the budget.

I want to go back to the issue of disaster relief because this is the area where the government consistently year after year after year continues to budget in the same way when we know that what we're doing is not working. Let me go through and read you some history of SRD requests for disasters and fires. The 2003 supplementary estimate was for $113 million; 2004, a supplementary estimate for $125 million; 2005, a supplementary estimate for $80 million; in the 2006-07 budget year a supplementary estimate for another $251 million. What was happening in 2006-07? Well, there was a large fire in the Edmonton neighbourhood of MacEwan. That was one of the major issues that happened, with $25 million in damage.

In 2007-08 another supplementary estimate, $152 million. What happened that year? Well, there was flooding in Calgary. In 2008-09 another supplementary estimate, $134 million. What was happening that year? Well, there was a wildfire in Grimshaw. In 2009-10, a supplementary estimate for $150 million. What happened there? Drought in northern Alberta. In 2010-11, a supplementary estimate of $156 million. What happened that year? Well, we had flooding in Irvine, down near Medicine Hat. In 2011-12, a supplementary estimate of $280 million. What happened that year? Wildfires in central and northern Alberta, in Slave Lake. Now, of course, we're looking at 2012-13, disasters in Mackenzie county in northwest Alberta and, additionally, wildfires.

Here's the point I'm making, Mr. Chair. We do not know where a disaster will be in the province, but this record demonstrates year after year after year that we will have a disaster somewhere, and it will be significant, in the order of $100 million to $200 million more each and every single year than the government budgets. So if you have this record of getting it wrong every single year you try to do it, why wouldn't you actually change the way you do your budgeting? That's what most people would do. They'd look and say: "Gee, you know what? We consistently are off budget. Why don't we budget more so that if by some miracle things don't go wrong, we'll have leftover, we'll have a surplus at the end of the year? Then we can talk about what to do with that surplus rather than talking about how we're going to have to go back to the Legislature to ask for a supplementary estimate."

I would ask the minister to comment on why it is that we now see this pattern year after year after year of them continuing to budget in the same way, which has demonstrated that it doesn't work.

The Chair: Hon. minister, do you care to respond?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Chair, I think all I will say to that is that basically what the member is asking us to do is maybe overbudget, and she's saying that we'll have a surplus at the end of the year. The fact of the matter is that we know we're going to have disasters. What we don't know is the extent of those disasters. Again, we can't predict the weather.

I don't think anybody would have predicted the fire in Slave Lake and the devastation that occurred up there, but we were able to have the money through the Alberta emergency fund to look after that. Nobody could predict the flooding that we had down in the Medicine Hat area, and again we had the money available to look after that. The fact of the matter is that we do have the funds available through our disaster funds and our emergency fund to look after those disasters. I think that the fact that we're asking for this money at the end of the year is saying, you know, that we do know that we have disasters happening, we do fund for some of it, but we know that we can't fund for all of it all of the time, and we just continue to do what we do, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, Mr. Minister.

The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I am going to make a prediction. I made a prediction with my very first question in the Legislature that we would end up the year with $5 billion. I'm going to make a prediction that if the government continues to budget for disasters this way, we will be talking a year from now about how they're going to need an extra $150 million or $200 million for some disaster that no one could foresee because year after year after year after year after year after year we have demonstrated that they are not budgeting for it properly. But I'll leave that point right now. Just do note that that is my prediction of what we're going to be facing next year.

What I do want to know, though, is why it is that with an all-time record in tax take and with income and other taxes exceeding the budget by almost $800 million – we don't talk about that a lot. The Premier likes to talk about the bitumen bubble and bitumen spread, but what we don't end up talking about is how many additional dollars we're getting because of the booming economy from income tax revenue, corporate income tax revenue, and other revenue. Why is it that with getting an additional $800 million that they did not expect from all of those other areas, they are also on top of that now asking for an additional $600 million in spending? Why is it that they talk about having a revenue problem when it's quite clear that we don't?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Chair, that's out of my pay grade. I'll take the question under advisement and have the Minister of Finance respond to the Leader of the Opposition.

The Chair: Okay. Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Also, out of curiosity, I was wondering why it is that our transfers from the government of Canada came in under budget. I would have anticipated that we would have a pretty good fix on what those revenues would be. Why is it that they came in under budget?

Mr. Campbell: Again, I will take the question under advisement for the Minister of Finance and get an answer back to the Leader of the Official Opposition.

The Chair: Thank you for that.

Ms Smith: Well, I gather that none of my questions are going to be answered, but I'm just going to ask them all the same. There are going to be a couple of questions that I'd like to ask on Transportation, and hopefully we'll be able to get some answers for that, or maybe the minister can talk to his colleague and we'll be able to get an answer then, or we can bring it up in question period.

The supplementary estimates presented for capital investment, totalling $1.282 billion, are $35 million higher than the estimates presented with Budget 2012. That pegged capital investment at $1.247 billion. Now they are asking for an additional $39 million on top of that $1.282 billion. I'm just curious. The difference between the initial Budget 2012 estimate and the $1.282 billion is $35 million. Where did that $35 million come from to bridge that gap? Was that through previous supplementary estimates – again, I don't recall us going through this process before – was it a carry-forward from Budget 2011, or was it through a special warrant?

Mr. Campbell: Well, the supplementary estimate approval is comprised of the following, Mr. Chair: $100 million for the construction of the northeast Anthony Henday ring road in Edmonton, and this was added to fully fund the project after final approval was received for this P3; $28.6 million for twinning passing lane projects along highway 63 as part of the funding approved to twin the highway from House River north to Fort McMurray. This is partly offset by $89.6 million being lapsed due to the lower than budgeted spending on other capital investment projects, which included the interchange at Queen Elizabeth II highway and 41st Avenue S.W., the twinning of highway 43 west of the Sturgeon Lake Indian reserve, the paving of highway 88, the twinning of highway 2A, and the work on the Little Bow reservoir.

What we've been able to do, Mr. Chair, is basically offset a large amount of that money on the fact that we've had other budgeted spending come in lower than expected, so we're asking for the approval of the $39 million.

Ms Smith: Well, I don't think I was all that clear, so maybe I can help the minister by walking through a couple of pages here. If you go to page 5, it says on the Transportation line item that the original estimate was $1.246 billion, and now it says that our current estimate is $1.282 billion. That's where the $35 million difference is that I'm curious about. How did that gap get bridged? I know that he's now asking for an additional $39 million on top of that, but these numbers don't seem to match.

3:40

What I'm concerned about is that there was an original estimate that was approved in Budget 2012 of $1.246 billion, and now we're being told that the current estimate is $1.282 billion. I'm just wondering how we actually got $35 million of additional spending to get us to that before you're asking for this additional $39 million. Is this borrowing? Is this a special warrant? Were there some supplementary estimates that I missed? There does seem to be a mismatch in the numbers in this document that I'm just having a hard time figuring out.

Mr. Campbell: I'll make sure that the Minister of Transportation gets the answer back to the Leader of the Official Opposition.

The Chair: Thank you.

Ms Smith: How much more time do I have, Mr. Chair? I must be getting close to the end of my time.

The Chair: You have another 34 minutes. Other members of your caucus can speak as well, hon. leader, if you so desire, no more than 10 minutes at a time.

Ms Smith: Am I at the end of my second 10 minutes?

The Chair: You can continue, or you can have someone else start.

Mr. Anderson: You have 26 minutes left.

Ms Smith: Twenty-six minutes left. Got it.

Well, let me just ask one more question – again, it goes back to the issue of the disaster relief – and then I will hand it off to my colleagues to ask a few questions as well, the critics in different areas. I know my Finance critic has some questions that he wanted to ask as well.

The question I had on the issue of the nine disasters declared in 2012: which one in particular resulted in the need for $59.4 million more for disaster recovery?

Mr. Campbell: I can get more information for the hon. member, but there were 15 disaster recovery programs announced this fiscal year, with the majority of the disasters being overland flooding. To support the recoveries from those 15 disasters is where the $59.3 million is required. I'll get the detailed breakdown for the Leader of the Opposition.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms Smith: Just so I'm clear and he knows which area I'm looking at, this is, again, under the Municipal Affairs estimate. It's gone from, again, a $1.3 billion current estimate with a supplementary estimate of $59 million. It looks like that amount is under the Alberta Emergency Management Agency disaster recovery. That is different than the disaster recovery amount that we've been talking about under Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

I guess I'm not all that sure about why certain disaster recovery dollars get allocated to one department and why disaster recovery dollars get allocated to a different department. Once again, going back to the point that I had raised earlier – and I haven't looked at this to see if this one is consistently year after year after year after year over budget as well – it is pretty remarkable to budget $44.7 million for disaster recovery and then turn around and have to ask for that essentially to be doubled, over $59 million, so you end up with a total of $104 million. There seems to be something going on there that we either need to see corrected in an upcoming budget or to have some better understanding about how those costs got allocated to that department to make the numbers so out of whack with what was initially approved.

The Chair: Hon. minister, will you get some other information for us?

Mr. Campbell: I'll make sure that both the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the Minister of ESRD get back and show the differentiation between the two of them.

The Chair: Thank you.

Ms Smith: Well, let me just finish by saying that because I'm new to this process, as are my colleagues, I guess I just kind of figured that the whole reason we're going through this is so that we could actually get answers to some of the questions that we've prepared for. I don't know if perhaps we needed to see additional help for the minister so that he would be able to answer some of these questions, but it does seem to me that this is a bit disappointing for me as well as my colleagues. We're doing our work to prepare for the estimates, to be able to ask questions, to go through the numbers. I guess I would just comment that it is unfortunate that we haven't seen the same amount of preparation and work on the other side.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. leader.

Are there other members of your caucus? The Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. First bill of the third phase of this first session, I guess you could say. These are frustrating bills for many reasons because why on earth would we – the first idea that comes to my mind with regard to this is: why are we here? Once again, I've been here five years now. This is the fifth time that one of these has been plopped on my desk, and this document is just as useless in year 5 as it was in year 1. It has huge amounts of money being approved: Education, $24 million; Enterprise and Advanced Education, over a hundred million dollars; over $300 million in Environment and SRD; $60 million in Municipal Affairs; and almost $40 million for Transportation. So over $500 million in total if you take the entire amount.

It's frustrating because, again, like I think the Leader of the Official Opposition made very clear, we know that every year we're going to have emergencies. We know it's going to happen. So if we're going to have emergencies every year – and we know we're going to have them – why don't we budget a reasonable amount of money? We're not going to be dead on every time because, obviously, you can't predict where the fire will be or how bad it will be and so forth.

You know, it's kind of like a family budgeting in their household. What you do – I mean, what I do anyway; maybe others don't do this – is you put a little bit aside for maintenance of the vehicle, home repair, things that you're not planning on spending, that you don't want to spend, but if you look back on your previous budgets, you know there's a real good chance you're going to have to spend around a certain amount of money. You put that money aside – maybe it's $1,000 or $2,000; maybe it's a little bit more; maybe it's a little bit less – so that when the car needs a new fuel pump or whatever, you've got that money. You don't have to borrow the money. You don't have to take it out of your grocery money. You don't have to do that sort of thing. It's just basic, prudent planning that all households do, I would think, or most households do.

We know from what the Leader of the Official Opposition pointed out very clearly that it averages over the last 10 years or so about $100 million to $200 million in emergency funding that we need. Some years it's a little higher than that; some years it's a little lower. But, mostly, it's in that $100 million to $200 million range. So why does the government not budget for that?

The great thing is that it's just like with the household budget. If the money is still there at the end, that's great. You can put it into savings. You can take that money and you can go on a nice vacation, you know. You can buy a dog. You can do all kinds of really cool things with that extra money that you have that you were hoping not to spend and it turned out you didn't have to spend.

This is the point here. Budget for the disaster. Put about $150 million to $200 million there. Make it a budget item, approve it, and then if you don't use it, fantastic. Then in really bad years, only when you have years where you've got an extremely bad emergency, kind of a 1 in 10 years emergency, where it costs $300 million to $400 million to deal with it or whatever it is, you can come in with one of these bills and pass a supplementary supply bill. That's fantastic. That's a good thing to have the ability to do, and we could do it once every 10 years or once every five or six years or whatever. But to do it every single year: it just doesn't make any sense to budget in this way.

So I think that's a critical reform that we need to make in order to make sure that when we present a budget, it's a budget that is reflective of what we will actually be spending. Anybody that has to come in the last month and ask for more money every single budget year clearly doesn't have their act together, Mr. Chair. I would hope that as we go forward, this government would change that practice. Anyway, we'll see what happens.

3:50

Now, I am a little puzzled because we did have, as the Official Opposition leader noted, the former Deputy Premier, the now Finance minister, say many times during the year that they had found hundreds of millions of dollars in in-year savings, $500 million here, $400 million here, $300 million, $700 million, I mean, just numbers everywhere, you know, from this – what is it called? – zero-based, value-based budgeting.

Ms Smith: Results-based.

Mr. Anderson: Results-based budgeting. That's right.

If that's the case, if there are all these in-year savings in there, then why on earth are we back here asking for $500 million? Is it because, perhaps, the government is addicted to in-year spending and they just have to go over the budget or that they just can't stick to a budget? Could it have something to do with that? It probably does. Despite them saving all this money in year, we're still back here asking for half a billion dollars.

Again, very poor budgeting. And it does make one wonder if we're getting the straight goods from the Finance minister with regard to this in-year savings program that they're talking about because we're not seeing the in-year savings or else we wouldn't be here asking for half a billion dollars more. The money that was passed already would have been sufficient because they would have been spending $500 million less in other areas that they could have applied towards what they need here for emergency relief and so forth. I don't buy it, and I think that we need some truthfulness from this minister when it comes to the results-based budgeting process.

I would like some clarifying comments from the minister on that, and then I'll have a few other questions after.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Well, I want to thank the member for his comments. I'm sure that the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance will be more than happy to answer the questions that the hon. member has brought forward.

Again, I think that when you look at the budget that comes out tomorrow, you'll see that results-based budgeting is working. Our minister is a very honourable individual, and he has set forward a program that is going to make sure that we are well looked after into the future in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Anderson: Well, Member for Edmonton-Centre, I am just so happy that we are here to spend these three hours as a group so that we can get answers from the government on this supplementary supply.

Ms Blakeman: In the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Anderson: In the fabulous urban, condo-rich constituency of Edmonton-Centre. It is a fantastic place.

I would note that it is a little frustrating. Actually, I don't want to be too hard on the current minister doing his best to fill in. The fill-in is doing his best. There's no way anybody could possibly know what's going on in all these different ministries, especially the ones at issue here: Education, Enterprise and Advanced Education, Environment and SRD, Municipal Affairs, and Transportation. It is too much to ask somebody who holds none of those portfolios to be here answering questions about the spending in those portfolios.

Again, one would ask: what is the point of this exercise? But here we are, and we will make the best of it in the short time that we have. This is how we do business in Alberta. This is how we approve $500 million. Is it any wonder that we are going to be introducing our sixth straight deficit in this richest-in-the-nation province that we have?

My next round of questioning goes to that point. I have a hard time understanding how a province who has literally one of the greatest deposits of natural riches on Earth in a First World country, with the ability of First World technology, with a world-class educated workforce not just from Alberta but from all over the world – they come to work here in order to take advantage of this treasure trove that we have. How on earth are we sitting here on the eve of an election talking about a supplementary supply bill? Eve of an election; sorry. Eve of a budget. No, no. No more elections, please. Three more years. Actually, it wouldn't be a bad idea to have one right now, but we can wait three more years.

It's difficult for me to understand how we can be talking about adding onto – essentially, what this does is add onto the current deficit that we have. We have a $5.25 billion cash shortfall. People often wonder: why do the Wildrose and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and the Taxpayers Federation use a different number than what the government uses? The government says the budget deficit is going to be about $4 billion; we say $5.25 billion. The reason is because the government doesn't count capital spending on provincially owned assets as an expense when they calculate the deficit numbers offset as an asset on the balance sheet.

We add that into the total amount that we're spending. The best way to look at it, really, is that you take the amount the sustainability fund decreases in a year, and then you add in any debt taken out that year, and that will be essentially what the government's shortfall is because, obviously, if they didn't have a shortfall, they wouldn't be draining savings or going into debt. That's kind of an easy way, a quick one-minute way to look up what the real cash deficit is, for those folks who are riveted at home right now listening to this. That's the reason for the difference.

What I don't understand is how we could be here talking about a $5.25 billion deficit for last year – and this, of course, will only add to that deficit – when we had in the last year some of the largest revenues in our province's history, not the largest but top three. Was it the second?

Ms Smith: It's the fourth.

Mr. Anderson: Sorry. It was the fourth-largest ever. The second-highest tax revenue haul, right? Anyway, the point is that that's lots of money coming in, tons of money coming in.

How can we have all this money, Minister, have the fourth-largest amount of money we've ever had on record, yet we're running – we'll take your number – a $4 billion or $5 billion deficit, a cash shortfall? How does that work? What got us here? Does your government recognize what got us here? Are you admitting that, in fact, there has been mismanagement in the past and now we're going to start things new and do things differently? Or is it just kind of: we've always done things right, and there is no blame to go here; we're just onward and upward, the same thing we've always done?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Chair, I think that as a government we've met the needs of Albertans over the years understanding that, yes, we're very lucky as a province and that we are a leader in this country. But, you know, I can remember when I came into office in 2008 the Finance minister saying that, you know, we're looking at about an $8 billion surplus. I can remember in September or October of that same year that all of a sudden we were going to run a deficit because of natural resources, just because of the price differentiation.

I mean, I follow the paper quite closely. I follow the stock market. I follow, you know, the predictions on what the price of oil is going to be. I can say that in the five years that I've been here watching it, nobody has ever correctly identified it yet. I think that as a government we've been very responsible in taking a very conservative approach of what we saw as our revenue resources, what that figure was going to be.

Again, Mr. Chair, I look at 2008 when the recession hit. This province didn't miss a beat. It didn't miss a beat because of the fiscal responsibility of this government. It didn't miss a beat because of the money that we spent on infrastructure from the sustainability fund. It didn't miss a beat because this government had the foresight to put that money aside so that we had it to be able to spend it on infrastructure.

I remember talking to the construction contractors, especially the small construction contractors, that were so pleased that we were able to take that money and invest it into infrastructure so that those people could keep working. The number that comes to mind with me, Mr. Chair, is that about 70,000 people worked in the construction industry during the recession in this province because of the foresight of this government.

Mr. Chair, again, the world has not turned around. We see what's going on in Greece. We see what's going on in Europe. We see what's going on with our biggest trading partner to the south, the United States. Again, I think that the foresight of this Premier and the foresight of our Finance minister and the vision that they have of what we're going to do going forward is going to serve Albertans very well. I think that people are going to realize that in this budget we as a government made some very tough decisions. We wanted to continue to invest in health care because Albertans said to us that that's important. We wanted to continue to invest in education because Albertans said to us that that's important. Albertans want us to continue to invest in infrastructure, so building new schools, new hospitals. I've already said that we have to look after our most vulnerable.

Mr. Chair, I can tell you that we're going to do all those things, but that comes with a cost. I can tell you that when I look at the budget and I look at what's going to come forward from our Finance minister tomorrow, I'm proud to have him as our Finance minister. I'm proud of the vision that he's going to bring forward as Finance minister because it meets the priorities of our Premier, and that's looking after families and communities, making sure that we have economic outcomes in this province, and making sure that we're real stewards of our resources.

It's easy to sit on the other side and say: well, I would have done this; I would have done that. The fact of the matter is that on this side of the House we did things. We've done things to make sure that this province is going to be successful not only today but in the years to come. We've done things to make sure that we have a first-class education system, we have a first-class health care system, and we are going to look after our most vulnerable.

I'm looking forward to the budget tomorrow. I understand that this is an exercise that frustrates people – unfortunately, it's an exercise that has to happen – but I suggest to you that when the Finance minister tables his budget tomorrow, we'll have a lot different discussion in this House.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Just for the information of the opposition, you have 13 minutes and 51 seconds left for this portion.

Mr. Anderson: Absolutely. Okay. Well, let's talk for a second about how the minister brought up the allegedly great job that this government has done managing this economy. I guess I would beg to differ. You know, first off, there are the confusing mixed messages. I thought that this was not our fathers' PC Party, first of all, so I didn't know that they were still claiming the good that had been done by Premier Klein and others before him, mainly Premier Lougheed, as some of the things that they have done. I thought this was an entirely new party, that the good old boys weren't involved in it anymore, but I guess you're still celebrating their accomplishments as your own. I don't really understand that. You can't have it both ways. Nonetheless, it is what it is.

Now, let's talk about the fiscal management that has got us to this $500 million ask and $5 billion deficit. I just confirmed it with our researcher – actually, I thought this was the case – that this year, 2012, had the most tax revenue we've ever taken in as a province. It is a huge year. We had a pretty good year resourcewise; about $8 billion, it's going to be. It's going to be a pretty good year, not the best ever but good. We move forward.

People need to understand how grossly mismanaged the public's finances have been over the last long while. Between the Don Getty, Ed Stelmach, and this current Premier's administrations we have taken a $17 billion fund, a sustainability, rainy-day fund, that was meant to deal with what the minister just talked about – it was meant to deal with one year, two years of dips in revenues where we just weren't ready, and we had a little extra money to tide things over so we didn't have to go into debt and didn't have to interrupt our capital building and so forth. One or two years. We had a recession three quarters long in this province, let's say a year-long recession, okay? Since that year-long recession we have spent almost $17 billion in five years. It will be $17 billion by the end of year 6. It's $14 billion by now. We have spent $14 billion in five years to fund the operations and the capital spending of government despite record-high tax revenues and overall revenues, historically high. We've maybe had one or two years where it's been higher than the last four years. It has been a bonanza.

I mean, the other side loves to claim all the great things that they've done policywise. Sorry, guys. There were some good decisions made to lower taxes and to open up the oil sands with low tax regimes – and those were made a long time ago – and we are blessed with incredible resources. It is not you that have done this. It is the people of Alberta and the entrepreneurs of Alberta that have done this. They are the reason why we are doing well. They are the reason why we have 4 and a half per cent unemployment and the reason why we're bringing in such record revenues. It's not the Alberta government that has been responsible for that.

Now, could you have been more of a hindrance? Yeah, and you have been, with things like the royalty review, which was a complete disaster, and other regulatory issues that you brought forward. Don't talk about good fiscal prudence when you somehow drain a fund from $17 billion to $3 billion in five years despite record revenues. It's insane.

But you know what? As bad as that is, with the sustainability fund being essentially gone because of this mismanagement, there's one thing that is so inexcusable, so outrageous that I honestly think it is intergenerational theft of unprecedented proportions, and that is what this government has done, or not done, I would say, with Alberta's heritage fund.

Alberta's heritage fund was started in 1976 by a very visionary Premier and a very good Premier, Premier Lougheed. He put money into the heritage fund, and they put a certain percentage of resource revenues into the heritage fund until about 1986. They had grown the fund to a pretty good level. Since 1986 $150 billion have been collected by this government in resource royalties.

An Hon. Member: Three hundred and fifty.

Mr. Anderson: Since 1986. Since 1986 it's been $150 billion, unadjusted, in royalty revenues.

Less than 2 per cent of that $150 billion – that's $3 billion – was deposited into the fund during that time. So since 1986 you've put in a whole $3 billion, but remarkably, unbelievably, during this time $30 billion in interest generated by the heritage fund has been removed from the fund, placed in general revenues, and spent. The result: Alberta's heritage fund is worth less now when adjusted for inflation than it was when Premier Lougheed made the first deposit back in 1976. That is despicable. There is no other word to describe it.

I'm telling you that 20 years from now our kids and grandkids will look back at this and say: "You did what? You took that much money and you squandered it? You threw it away? You spent it on yourselves? You couldn't control yourselves? You left nothing? And now the oil and gas isn't worth near what it was. We can't get it out of the ground, so it's not worth anything to us now because of all the new technologies, and oil is plentiful, and there's no reason for it." What are they going to say at that time to us? We spent every dime. It's pure plundering. Everyone over there should agree with it and do something about it going forward, especially the new folks. You're not to blame for any of this. Do something about it. Turn the ship around. Turn the ship around.

Think about this, guys and gals. If we had just left the interest in the heritage fund, that $30 billion that we skimmed... [interjection] Sorry?

The Chair: Through the chair, hon. member.
