A point I'd like to make which has to do with this motion to refer, Mr. Speaker: I don't know if you're aware of the number of days that this Assembly sits in a given calendar year, but it's quite surprising. You might be quite surprised when you compare how many days we sit in the Alberta Legislature compared to many of our sister provinces. If you guessed that we are one of the ones who sit the fewest number of days throughout the country . . .

Ms Blakeman: They'll argue with that because they count evenings as a full day.

Mr. Bilous: I will qualify that. Thank you, Member for Edmonton-Centre.

However, you know, Mr. Speaker, it's quite interesting when I talk to friends and colleagues outside the Legislature. They're quite surprised as to the hours that we often keep in this Legislature, the hour of the day that we're debating legislation. Friends and constituents will ask: well, why are you debating in the wee hours of the night or into the morning important bills that are going to become legislation, that are going to become law, that are going to affect the lives of all Albertans? If we took more days to sit, to have a proper process and a substantial amount of time to debate legislation, we wouldn't have to be in here at 11 p.m. or 12, 1, 2 in the morning debating legislation. [interjections]

I can hear the hon. members from across the aisle saying that they enjoy it and they like it. Well, I'd like to ask them to look around the Assembly. The challenge with debating important pieces of legislation at this hour of the day is, I think it'd be safe to argue, that most members are not at their sharpest point at 2 in the morning. They're not the most wide awake. It really is taking away from fruitful and valuable debate, Mr. Speaker. The other thing is that there are members, understandably, who have families, who are called away, who can't be here late into the evening.

It just seems to make sense that – debate is important, and if we want to have the best quality of debate on bills before they're passed, then why not sit for more days throughout the calendar year to ensure that we do our bills and the constituents who we represent a service and do them just cause in ensuring that we get all the different perspectives on record, debated, discussed? You know, I think that that's something that's very important.

Mr. Speaker, part of the reason why this needs to be referred back to committee – again, there were few amendments that were put forward in the short 25-minute Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 21. I can tell you that I have significant concerns with the way the bill is currently written. This bill has multiple parts to it, but the biggest problem that I have with it is that, quite simply, the minister of SRD has too much power and authority via this bill. We need to ensure that there are counterbalances and that we're not just bestowing a substantial amount of power to one person or one post or a set of responsibilities.

There is clearly a need for new environment monitoring programs and processes. On that I will agree with the sponsor of this bill. However, giving those powers almost exclusively to the minister is not the way to go about this. This really should be removed from government to an arm's-length organization that can be impartial.

Again, you know, something that is positive, a small step forward, is the increase in the amount of spending that will be on the monitoring from up to $50 million. But how we're going about the process of establishing the agencies, of who's on them . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. The time has expired.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I recognize the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: A very brief comment, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. My comment with respect to this amendment that would send it back to committee is just five words. [Remarks in Latin]

Ms Notley: I can't ask him what that meant. Okay. I'd love to, but I don't think I can.

The Deputy Speaker: To the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

An Hon. Member: That's Latin.

Ms Notley: I get that it's Latin. Thank you for that.

I'm just wondering if the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview could quickly sort of outline some of the specific changes you might want to see if we had had the opportunity to make some amendments.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much. I'll thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona as well. I'm not sure if the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill was just demonstrating another language or what he was saying. Je peux parler en français. [Remarks in Spanish] Or I can switch into Chinese as well, but I don't know how fruitful the discussion would be.

Ms Notley: You speak Chinese, too? Wow.

Mr. Bilous: Yes. [Remarks in Mandarin]

To get back to the question from the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I think there are a few things that we need to ensure. One is that, you know, when we're talking about strengthening our targets, we need to look at strengthening or putting caps not just on intensity targets, but we need to actually have some hard caps. Unfortunately, on environmental monitoring in Alberta we don't have the best track record, to put it in a very soft way. The Member for Edmonton-Centre is giving me a look. Actually, our track record on environmental monitoring and protecting the environment is quite atrocious. Unless we pick it up, Mr. Speaker, I'm concerned for future generations and the state that the province is going to be in and the direction that we're heading.

I think again, you know, we do need to have a significant amount of monitoring. I'm frustrated by our federal cousins and how they've been shirking their responsibility, passing it on to individual provinces, where again had we strong legislation in this province to ensure not only that industry complies with our regulation and monitoring but that there are enforceable penalties for industry or polluters or those who are not complying with our environmental standards, I think that would be a step in the right direction. I mean, it's kind of ironic, Mr. Speaker, when you have a company that's bringing in $10 billion of profit per quarter or let's just even say per annum and they're slapped with a hundred thousand dollar fine. Well, it's a joke, quite frankly. There's not much incentive. Again, if punishment is merely a slap on the wrist for going against legislation, then I think it's not really going to act as a deterrent.

I think there are two different ways to look at this. We could look at positive reinforcement for companies that are working toward either lowering their pollution levels or coming in under what the targets are. I think the targets need to be reasonable. I think we need to look at what other provinces, other jurisdictions are doing and then to also have, like I said, repercussions for those who aren't going to abide by the law and who aren't going to work toward finding more sustainable approaches and methods of development in whatever industry that may be.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to make a few comments in regard to this amendment, that was brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, moving that the motion for third reading of Bill 21, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 21, Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013, be not now read a third time but that it be recommitted to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of reconsidering sections 2, 3, and 6.

This is actually my first opportunity to speak on Bill 21. I missed the whole rigmarole from yesterday, I guess. I think the big reason to have this amendment, of course, is because of the confusion that did take place yesterday in regard to Bill 21. You know, the fact is that I missed the opportunity to be able to speak to it as a result, so we are looking for some further time and capacity to debate the bill.

[Mr. Amery in the chair]

It's a very reasonable amendment, I think, especially considering sections 2, 3, and 6. It's sort of in the tradition, Mr. Speaker, of this Legislature that House leaders of every party work together in order to schedule things properly. It's no coincidence that we have the House leaders of at least three out of the four parties here tonight because, of course, this is kind of what drove them to this point. So I guess we are making a point here. By doing so, I think that we have to remind ourselves of the democratic tradition in this House and how it functions not just on paper but in a practical sort of way.

Being able to have clear means of communication I think is a perfectly reasonable way to go. When we have variations to the schedule, then even more so we need to communicate properly between the House leaders, and that disseminates down to all 87 members of the Legislature. You know, there's a sense of trust that's associated with that, and when trust is broken, it takes a little while to repair although we are a very trusting bunch, ultimately, and we're willing to look past it because we look to the present and the future more than to the past. Certainly, I know that things will get fixed here in the immediate and long-term future.

In regard to the legislation in general thus necessitating this amendment, you know, we just think that Bill 21 gives the minister too many new powers, and then that really stretches to all aspects of the bill. The minister is being given too much power in regard to designing the new environmental monitoring system when it should be done by an independent body. This bill also gives the minister too much power when it comes to exempting persons from the requirement to hold a PIN when moving hazardous materials. Finally, Mr. Speaker, this bill gives the minister way too much power when it comes to removing any personal liability for those who may wish to delegate their authority as well.

Mr. Speaker, this amendment is reasonable, and I think it makes its point quite abundantly. I am glad to have had just a few minutes to speak on that, but now my comments have come to a conclusion.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. Members: Question.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there any other speakers?

The question has been called.

[Motion on amendment to third reading of Bill 21 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: Back to the bill. The next speaker. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, you haven't spoken yet.

Mr. Eggen: No, I haven't spoken yet, and I will do so very briefly, Mr. Speaker.

In our view, this bill has not had very fair evaluation by the Assembly, and during second reading of this bill the NDP opposition has made it clear that we did want to debate a number of sections of this act. The NDP opposition also indicated to the Government House Leader that we had amendments. Oh, I'm sorry. And the Liberals, too, of course, and the Wildrose. I just got carried away. Thank you very much. I appreciate that. It was very appropriate nonverbal communication. The government did not honour this request. As a result, we weren't permitted to bring up some concerns about the bill.

As I've said before, the bill gives considerable powers to the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development to design and implement environmental programs in the oil sands, and she could do this with these new powers in this bill without the input of Albertans, First Nations, or the scientific community.

More importantly, this bill flies in the face of the government's commitment to Albertans to establish an independent, arm's-length body to conduct real and credible monitoring in the oil sands. This bill also makes changes, Mr. Speaker, to the current rules around personal identification numbers, which we believe could lead to misunderstanding or even fraud.

Further, this bill extends the immunity from liability for damages to anyone and everyone the minister chooses. This could likely apply to many contractors who will work for the government one day and then for an oil company the next. This has profound implications, Mr. Speaker, for the ability of Albertans to protect themselves and be compensated for nefarious behaviour committed by individuals who have not taken an oath to the government.

On behalf of Albertans we do demand that this bill, in fact, be hoisted so that the government has time to reconsider these mistakes. Albertans are demanding a real and independent monitoring of our important industry. This bill does not achieve this. The opposition from all opposition parties should be allowed to speak on behalf of the thousands of Albertans who, in fact, do oppose this bill. We believe that Albertans, Mr. Speaker, deserve better, so I am choosing to hoist this bill at this time. I have a motion to do so here, the amendment with the appropriate amount of copies with the original on top. If we could just distribute those.

The Deputy Speaker: We'll just pause, hon. member, to circulate the amendment. This will be amendment RA2.

You may proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will for the sake of expediency just read as we're distributing the amendment. I will move that the motion for third reading of Bill 21, Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 21, Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

2:00

The Deputy Speaker: Other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I thank the hon. member for moving the hoist, and that does entitle all members to speak again. We could carry this on for a considerable amount of time longer, but I think we have made our point. So I would propose that we vote on the hoist and then vote on third reading of Bill 21.

[Motion on amendment to third reading of Bill 21 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: We're back to the bill. Are there any other speakers on the bill?

Seeing none, does the hon. Member for Calgary-North West want to close debate?

Ms Jansen: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: The question has been called.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

Bill 24 Statutes Amendment Act, 2013

The Chair: Are there speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Well, this is wonderful. Thank you so much for the opportunity to be able to speak to Bill 24 because I along with, I'm sure, many other members of the Assembly do try and get out and do community events and get out from underneath the dome. In fact, I've been engaged in a number of those over the last couple of days, so I haven't been able to be present while this bill was moving through second reading.

This bill is not a record-breaker, but it's a new step, not one that I particularly approve of. No. I disapprove of it absolutely because what this is is another step this government is taking away from democracy and taking away from this Legislative Assembly. This is where people go: "Oh, my goodness. Two o'clock in the morning. What is she going on about?" But that's, in fact, what's happening.

We have had a very long tradition of what's called miscellaneous statutes in this House, and it was an opportunity for the government to make some very minor changes, not on content, nothing consequential. It was typographical and, you know, name corrections when a bill got changed but never anything big, where it changed the content or the meaning of the bill. The deal was that it went through very fast, it tended to be brought in at the end of a session, and it would go through without debate.

The exchange for that was that the opposition had an opportunity to ask for anything they felt was not fitting within that definition of miscellaneous statutes to be removed and brought forward. Then the government could decide what they wanted to do. Whether they brought it forward as a stand-alone bill or whether they combined it with something else that was on the same theme was up to them. That was the exchange. So the opposition could ask for sections to be pulled out and could dispute that it was, in fact, minor, and the exchange was that when it came before the House, it went through without debate.

The interesting thing that's happened is that over the years a number of the bills have been disputed and, therefore, pulled out. Why? Because they weren't inconsequential. They weren't minor; they were fairly major. In some cases they were completely rescinding bills. There had been a mistake made in the drafting that was a flat-out mistake, and they needed to fix it, but the sponsor was embarrassed to admit that there was a mistake and didn't want it brought forward as a big old bill, so they wanted to slide it through miscellaneous statutes. In some cases way back they actually used to try and slide stuff through, hoping that the opposition wouldn't notice.

There are a number of examples where pieces have been pulled out. I know that when some of the parts of this bill were discussed and it was proposed that certain pieces be included in miscellaneous statutes, I for one had indicated that it wasn't minor. As a result, the Government House Leader or the government – I don't know who – has decided to create a whole new being called the Statutes Amendment Act which does not need the involvement of the opposition. They are not allowed to pull anything from it, but the exchange is that we get to debate it. So we will make sure to take advantage of that and, I hope, proceed with a fulsome debate.

The other piece that's long standing in here is that the speaking time that members have had has been consistently eroded over the last 18 years. Originally there was no limit on speaking times for any member in this Assembly. Then there was a limit of 30 minutes on any given bill and longer if it was an omnibus bill. So if there were more than two acts being changed in a bill, then it got even more time. That was then reduced to 20 minutes of speaking time for a government bill for any member, and then that was reduced to 15 minutes of speaking time for a government bill plus the 29(2)(a) for comments and questions. The speaking time for private members' bills has been reduced from 20 to 10. The total amount of speaking time for any member speaking in this House has been steadily eroded. If you put those things together, it is a taking away. It is an erosion. It is denying the opportunity, particularly for members of the opposition, to be able to contribute to what's going on here.

I know that the really right-wing view of Legislative Assemblies is that they should sit as little as possible, and I've often heard my colleagues across the way express admiration for Texas, which meets once every two years whether they need to or not. I know that some members on the other side were very keen on that idea.

What we have before us with the Statutes Amendment Act is that we're amending the Condominium Property Act, the Emblems of Alberta Act – there's an interesting story behind that one – the Perpetuities Act, the Surveys Act.

Then there's a long section on the updating of portfolio names. I thought the purpose of the government act was to be able to keep track of all of that stuff outside of actually going through and changing the legislation every time, but evidently not, because we're cutting and pasting a number of names and department names with the associated Societies Act, Alberta Housing Act, Animal Health Act, Auditor General Act, Crown's Right of Recovery Act, Health Disciplines Act, Fur Farms Act, Health Facilities Review Committee Act, Health Professions Act, Horse Racing Alberta Act, Hospitals Act, Judicature Act, Municipal Government Act, Notice to the Attorney General Act – boy, I didn't even know about that one – Proceedings Against the Crown Act, Public Trustee Act, Professional and Occupational Associations Registration Act, blah, blah, blah.

I think there are 15 pages of it where they're adjusting what delegated administrative organizations fit underneath and where "Minister of Justice and Attorney General" turns into "Minister of Justice and Solicitor General," with changes in the way that particular ministry is now referred to. At different places "Justice and Deputy Attorney General" is being replaced with "Deputy Minister of Justice," blah, blah, blah.

What's really coming forward in here? I did ask for and receive some explanation on the Emblems of Alberta Act. I thank the Minister of Culture's assistant for providing me with that information. But my questions are always: why do we need legislation? Why does this have to be handled by bringing it before the Assembly? What was the problem that made it have to come forward before the Assembly? Is it going to be fixed by legislation, is it going to be fixed by this legislation, and who's going to be really unhappy about it? Those were the questions I put forward to the minister's assistant, and in fact he answered them, so a gold star to him.

The Emblems of Alberta Act is being amended to add in the provincial shield of Alberta. The shield is what appears above the Speaker's chair there. It's what we commonly think of as the emblem that goes on the flag, with the wheat field and then the mountains and the sky and St. George's cross on the top. Then there's the actual crest, which is the one that you usually see in gold with the stag and the griffin and all that hoo-ha on either side of it. It, in fact, was not included as an official emblem of Alberta. [interjections]

The government deputy whip has a voice that particularly carries, so if I might be able to invite him to take his discussion outside, that would be very helpful. He talks well but doesn't listen. And there he goes. Okay. Good.

They had not in fact included it. You know the various emblems that we have. In fact, the most debate I've ever seen from government members ever on any bill was on the grass bill. Naming rough fescue as the grass of Alberta got more debate – I heard from more people on the government side than I've ever heard any of the government members debate on any bill before or since.

Mr. Mason: Even on the debate on the official rodent, which would be the prairie dog?

Ms Blakeman: There is no official rodent, leader of the fourth party. For shame.

But there is the official rock and the official bird and the official mammal and the official fish and the official tree and the official grass, and then there's the tartan. Then it turns out that we did not actually have the shield that was included, making it an official emblem. What this is really about is – ta-dah – control. It gives the government the ability to . . . [interjections] Everyone is being terribly jolly and having little chats. Now, isn't that nice?

Mr. Mason: What about the official song? There was a good debate on that.

Ms Blakeman: No, no, no. We are not including any reference to the official song. We are so not including that. No. It's not in here.

So this is to include that and to give the government power to say: you may use this, or you may not use it. It's particularly interesting, given the age of enhanced technology now and digital printing, that lots of people are taking a screenshot of the shield and putting it on their letterhead: businesses, et cetera, et cetera. They don't even know to ask for permission, and frankly at this point they wouldn't have had to because the shield was not included under the act.

The interesting part is that when I said, "Who wants this?" or "What was the problem?" I was told that the Senate had requested the use of the shield for an Alberta Senator, and that's when it was discovered that the province couldn't give permission because they didn't have control over it. That's one of the stories. The other story is that the government was really PO'd that the Wildrose used the shield as part of their campaign literature. That's what really got everybody riled up. We'll let the minister stand up and tell us which one is true, but I suspect it's the Wildrose one because now they're using the official flower. Fingers on your buttons everybody. The official flower of Alberta is the wild rose. That would be an interesting copyright debate, about whether or not they get to use the little flower.

That's the reasoning behind the emblems of Alberta. Of course, they have to go through describing the whole thing and then making sure that they're putting it in as the provincial shield. Then the minister – oh, my God. How many times? They must just cut and paste it into every bill. The minister may make regulations respecting the dot, dot, dot and then fill in the blanks. In this case it's the use and display of it and how people are allowed to copy it, et cetera.

It's a reasonable explanation. Thank you. It was offered to me. Thank you again because, unfortunately, what the Government House Leader supplied to me didn't give me the information about why this was necessary. You know, surprising to all of you, I really don't like to make more legislation than we need to here. Those are always my questions. What's the problem? Do we need legislation to fix it? Is this legislation going to fix it? Who's going to be upset about it? Another way of saying: who benefits, and who doesn't? I'm fine with that.

The other problem that these omnibus bills cause for people like me is that I go: "Okay. I'm fine with that. I'm happy to vote for it." And then I look at something like the Perpetuities Act. You know what? I should be careful about what I say here because I have not read every single word in this. I got the impression that what was happening here was that if someone who owned land leased it to someone for a specified period of time – I'm sorry; this is where I need to do more work – this now gives the lessor the ability, once the specified time has run out, to continue on and actually to go further than they would have been allowed to previously except that it doesn't apply to a mineral lease. Oh, boy. I need to read more on that one. I'm sorry. I'll come back to it. This is Committee of the Whole. Great. I'll read through that one as fast as I can.

The Surveys Act, again, is pretty straightforward. I actually would have let it go through miscellaneous statutes. They seem to be having a heck of a time getting someone to take the job of director of surveys, so they're actually having to change the act. In order to put somebody in the job, they've changed the description of the job. They're striking out "an employee under the Minister's administration who is" so that it just says that the minister shall designate "a surveyor as the Director of Surveys" rather than it being someone in the minister's own department. I don't know whether it's good or bad that they can't find someone in the minister's own department to take that job. I actually can't comment on that, but it sure does raise a question. I'm okay with the Surveys Act as well, and as I say I would have left that in miscellaneous statutes.

What I wouldn't have left in miscellaneous statutes is the Condominium Property Act because that's a bigger piece and a bigger change than something pretty minor. It's come about because of a court ruling and also because the state of our condominium act in Alberta is currently less than optimum. It's fairly antiquated, and it's just not covering a lot of the bases that it needs to cover.

Once upon a time – I don't think they do it much anymore; at least they don't do it in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre – they used to allow what they call bare-land units to be purchased. What's happened is that money was collected from the bare-land condominium owners and put into a fund and then used to fix up the roof or the exterior of the building or whatever. This is most often used in townhouse kind of complexes. A group of bare-land condominium owners took them to court and said: "You don't have a right to do that. We actually own the land. You can't take our money and then use it for that because I own this, and I've got the right to make the decision." And they won.

So now the government quickly had to react to this and change it. They could have brought forward an act. In fact, they did bring forward an act. I don't know why this put the Minister of Service Alberta at the point where he felt he had to work with the Government House Leader to completely eradicate a process that had worked quite well for a number of years and take the opposition out of the mix here. But he wanted to win, and I guess he did. I don't think that's a good thing for democracy, but he certainly knows how to throw his weight around and get what he wants, I must say. So very impressive. He could have just brought it forward as a change to the Condominium Property Act in the same way that he's now sponsoring the Statutes Amendment Act.

I will try and get up to speed really quickly on the piece that I wasn't clear on, which is the Perpetuities Act, and let others speak to this if they wish. [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired.] My timing is perfect.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have but one question on the Perpetuities Act. I'm hoping that the hon. member could answer the question for me. The issue of mineral rights with regard specifically to freehold rights owners is a concern. Like many of the other opposition members, I haven't had time to go into the act in depth. I'm not a big fan of omnibus bills, but I understand why some of these omnibus bills are brought forward. If the hon. member could explain to me how freehold rights are protected within the Perpetuities Act with the transfer of mineral rights, that would go a long way to resolving or allaying some fears that particularly the freehold association might have.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Chair, I'll try to address that briefly for the hon. member. Essentially the Perpetuities Act sets out some rules. It's an embodiment, I guess, of the rule against perpetuities, which basically says that you can't have a contract which goes on forever. It has to stop at some point in time. Under the old English common law the rule against perpetuities essentially was, I think with respect to most things . . . [interjection] Sorry?

Dr. Brown: Life in being plus 21 years.

Mr. Hancock: Yes. So it was life in being plus some years, something like that.

Anyway, there was a rule against perpetuities. Like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, it sort of seemed archaic, and I didn't remember the whole thing. We have perpetuated the perpetuities in our Perpetuities Act. What we basically said in the Perpetuities Act is putting some time frames around how long a contract without end can last. In the case of certain properties, including real properties, there's essentially a 40-year limit, and after 40 years there's no reversionary interest. In other words, after 40 years, unless there's something which specifically designates a renewal term or point or something which would break up the lease and allow the owner to reassert their ownership, they would not be able to claim it. It's somewhat akin to what we used to call squatters' rights. If you live on a piece of land over 10 years and nobody claims that you're on their land, they might lose the right to assert their claim. That's what the section of the Perpetuities Act essentially says, that after 40 years you lose your right to assert your claim.

There are a number of mineral leases in the province, private owners who own mineral leases who have entered into contracts with some company to develop those leases, to create performance on those leases, and there may be clauses in those leases which call for a prove-up rent or a continual rent, whether or not they're pumping, to keep the lease alive. If they haven't in those leases taken care of the issue around the Perpetuities Act, there's a question that's been raised as to whether or not they will after 40 years lose their interest. That question was raised in an article in a blog by a University of Calgary law professor. Now, it's not necessarily universally agreed that he's right, but it's raised the issue.

This is important now because the Perpetuities Act is just about 40 years old, so it's been just about 40 years since that rule came into place, and there may be leases out there where, if the professor is right about his interpretation of the law, a mineral owner who has leased their lands and has not taken care of this issue in the lease and is not getting renewal leases and that sort of thing and hasn't exerted their authority as an owner could lose their reversionary interest. In other words, the oil company or whoever took the lease might be able to forestall the owner from asserting their rights again if, in fact, they defaulted under the other terms of the lease. That was not intended in this circumstance.

This has been drawn to attention by somebody who's been teaching perpetuities and discovered a place where he might expound on this concept. I think that out of an abundance of caution it makes sense to protect the mineral owners who perhaps entered into those leases that may or may not have the clauses in there which will ensure that they get to continue to own and assert their ownership rights over that land, over that real property, those mineral rights that they have. We want that to happen, so it's necessary to pass this amendment to the Perpetuities Act to indicate that this 40-year guillotine, if you will, that may cut off their right to assert their ownership interest, doesn't apply to mineral leases that were entered into in that circumstance.

The Chair: Are there other speakers?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: The question has been called.

[The clauses of Bill 24 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, May 9, 2013

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members and guests, let us pray. Dear Lord, our God and author of all wisdom, today we pray for those individuals whose circumstances are less fortunate than our own for it is they who truly need our help. Let us also pray for our friends and families, from whom we have been separated this week in order to fulfill our duties and obligations in this Assembly. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, today I'm pleased to recognize two special guests who are seated in my Speaker's gallery. Dr. David Carter was first elected to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta on March 14, 1979, for the constituency of Calgary-Millican. He was subsequently elected as the Member for Calgary-Egmont in 1982, 1986, and 1989. On June 12, 1986, Dr. Carter was elected Speaker of this Assembly and was re-elected to the position on June 1, 1989. Many books on the Legislative Assembly of Alberta were published during his tenure, including some he has written himself, and this Chamber in which we sit today was refurbished and modernized during his tenure to help to celebrate the 75th anniversary of the Legislative Assembly. Welcome, Dr. Carter. [applause]

Hon. members, with Dr. Carter is former Sergeant-at-Arms Oscar Lacombe. Mr. Lacombe commenced his service as Sergeant-at-Arms in 1981 and was the first Métis Sergeant-at-Arms appointed in the province of Alberta and in all of Canada. After his retirement in 1993 he was recognized with the lifetime title of honorary Sergeant-at-Arms. Mr. Lacombe is a highly decorated Korean War veteran. He is also the great-grandnephew of Father Lacombe. Please welcome Mr. Oscar Lacombe. [applause]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us begin with some school groups. Edmonton-Meadowlark, the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, I believe you have an intro.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a class of elementary students from the Centre for Learning@Home located in my constituency of Edmonton-Meadowlark. Accompanying their class is Samantha Quantz, recreation co-ordinator, and parent helpers. I'd ask Samantha, her students, and parents to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Medicine Hat, I believe you have a school group.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 65 absolutely brilliant and politically engaged grade 6 students from Crestwood elementary school in Medicine Hat. This is the school's 24th consecutive yearly visit to this Legislature. Would the students and staff and parents now please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly?

The Speaker: Are there any other school groups?

Let us proceed with guests. Hon. Minister of Education, you have some introductions.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly five individuals seated in the Speaker's gallery who are here to help us celebrate World Catholic Education Day. One of the reasons Alberta has such a world-class education system is because it's built on a range of educational choice, and the separate school system is an example of this. The Member for Edmonton-South West will be making a member's statement later this afternoon, but for now I would like to introduce – and I would ask them to stand as I introduce them – the Most Reverend Gerry Pettipas, Archbishop of Grouard-McLennan; the Most Reverend David Motiuk, Bishop of the Ukrainian Catholic Eparchy of Edmonton; the Most Reverend Greg Bittman, Auxiliary Bishop of Edmonton; Mr. Tony Sykora, president of the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association; and Mr. Dean Sarnecki, executive director of the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association. I'd ask the House to join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly four members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Foundation. The RCMP Foundation was formed in 1994, and it supports the voluntary efforts of members from across the country to work in their communities, particularly with youth at risk. Our guests are in Alberta to raise awareness as to what they do and how they raise money. Their community programs support things like child safety, drug awareness, crime prevention, literacy, Internet safety, antibullying, victim assistance programs. They work with the corporate sector, Canadians from all walks of life, and their own members. If they would rise and remain standing as I introduce them, the members are Marie Delorme, foundation board member from Calgary; from Ottawa Mr. Fred Semerjian, foundation president and CEO; RCMP superintendent Greg Peters; and Kelly Ledingham, foundation marketing and program co-ordinator. I know Albertans are grateful for the work that they do, and I ask the House to give them our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What a pleasure it is to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly council members and staff from the Northern Alberta Development Council. We had a very interesting session this morning and, as a matter of fact, last night as well. I'm really pleased that they are here today. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I ask that they stand as I call their names. Williard Strebchuck is vice-chair, and he's also from Whitecourt-St. Anne and one of the greatest vice-chairs I've had. Brian Allen, member from Grimshaw, Berwyn, and Fairview: he's also an individual who makes no bones about what his position is. John Brodrick is a member from Manning-High Level. Now, there's an individual who I think always says what he thinks. Ken Noskey, member from Peavine-High Prairie-Grouard-Sucker Creek-Driftpile First Nation, is another individual who stands strong. Pat O'Neill is a member from St. Paul-Lac La Biche. He's a very staunch member of this august committee. Eva Urlacher, member from Bonnyville-Cold Lake: she's short, but she's mighty.

Mr. Speaker, I also have staff members, and I ask that they stand: Cathy Goulet, executive director; Allen Geary, director of projects and research – and he's in the back there – Audrey DeWit, manager of programs and co-ordination; Chelsea Ferguson, executive assistant to council. These are the backbone of the council and the chair, and I know that we want to say a special thanks to them for all the work they do.

I'd ask this Assembly to give a wonderful group of go-getters a raucous warm welcome from this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An honour and a pleasure for me to introduce Brenda to you and to all Members of the Legislative Assembly. Brenda is the mother of a son totally dependent on PDD supports and is deeply troubled by the cuts both to day programs and group home services, his only opportunity to get out and recreate and find a quality of life. She's also concerned about the inappropriate pressure on her and her son to get him out to work. Brenda is particularly concerned about broken promises of this government that will create more suffering for the most vulnerable in Alberta. Hon. members, she's standing already. Let's give her a warm welcome in the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you my guests Navtej Singh Brar, Nachhattar Singh Mann, and Harpreet Singh Gill. Nachhattar Singh Mann came to Canada at a young age. He's worked hard and has become a successful entrepreneur and small-business owner. He's known for his philanthropy and his community service in the Punjabi community and is the proud father of two children. Navtej Singh Brar belongs to a well-known family back in Punjab. He came to Canada to realize his dreams and is now also a successful small-business owner. Accompanying both of them is Harpreet Singh Gill, the political editor at Asian Vision. I would now ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent of mine, Pat O'Neill. Pat has experience as a municipal councillor and significant experience in the agricultural and recreational sectors. He's worked with the St. Paul Municipal Seed Cleaning Association as director and chairman of the board. He's a former director of the Alberta development corporation appeal board and was instrumental in developing the St. Paul breeders' co-op. He also has a very strong passion for hockey both as a player and a coach, and he's one that you would want on your side. I'd ask that he rise and that all members give him the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, your first of two introductions, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, I'm really delighted to be able to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very proud big sister. I'd like to introduce to you Laura Winton, who is sitting in the public gallery. She's here to watch her younger sister, Elizabeth Winton, who is one of our pages. You can just see the pride from Laura for what Liz is doing. Laura has a degree in sociology and a master's degree in library and information studies, both from the University of Alberta. She lives in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. I would ask you all to please welcome Laura to the Assembly.

I have a second introduction, Mr. Speaker. I know that the leader of the Liberal opposition is going to do a statement later on women in Alberta and on mothers, so I would to introduce a couple of women. First of all, Louise McBain is a constituent of the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. Stand up, Louise. Louise is a botanist who, God bless her, ran the labs for the sort of 100 series of biology at the university for a long time and is now retired. She's been a neighbour of mine for over 25 years, a supporter, and a friend. She is a mother to Faye McBain, who will rise beside her mother. Faye is one of those amazing people who can talk to anybody, anywhere, any time, so she's particularly good at sales and swinging deals and making people feel really comfortable. Faye attended Vic school in my riding and was one of those little ballerina people with many costumes and blue eyeshadow. Also with them is another daughter, Amy McBain, who, of course, is the amazing director of communications for the Alberta Liberal caucus.

Thank you very much for coming today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions. First of all, it's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you my guest, Judy Cabral, and her two sons, Jeff and Jaret. Judy is very concerned about the cuts being made by this PC government to PDD services across the province as both Jaret's and Jeff's quality of life depend heavily on these services. Jeff is part of SCAN, a supported community access program which is an adult day program that provides employment support and recreation opportunities, and Jaret receives support from the Elves Special Needs Society. Both of these programs are absolutely crucial in providing Jaret and Jeff with the support they need. I would now like to ask Judy, Jeff, and Jaret to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guest, Trudy Grebenstein. Trudy worked for over 35 years as an accountant for Edmonton public schools and is also a long-time labour activist. For almost a decade she served as the president of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, local 3550. In the 2012 election Trudy was a candidate for the Alberta NDP, running in the constituency of Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, and she is now enjoying a well-deserved retirement with plenty of travel. I would now ask Trudy to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce two individuals to you today. The first is Ambere Rosborough, who is the executive director of the Edmonton and northern Alberta Crime Stoppers. It is the largest Crime Stoppers organization of its kind in the world. With her today is Mary Lynne Campbell, who many of us will know is the executive director of the Public School Boards' Association, but what we may not know is that she is also a board member of Crime Stoppers. I would ask the House to please provide them with the traditional warm greeting.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly John Buhler, Angeles Espinaco-Virseda, and their son Karsten Buhler-Espinaco. Karsten is a grade 1 German bilingual student at Forest Heights elementary. I met Karsten at Chinese New Year. He has brought along a special guest, Cuddly Dudley, who had to wait with security. Dudley is a penguin puppet that each child in Karsten's class takes home for several days, during which they write about Dudley's adventures, and coming to the Legislature is one of those adventures. I would ask Karsten and his family to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

It's also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you four special women in my life. First, my mother, Santosh Sherman. Mom, thank you for giving me the gift of life and three wonderful brothers and for being a loving wife to my late father. Thank you for sewing all of the Edmonton Oilers jerseys when they won all those Stanley Cups. Also with my mother is my mother-in-law, Rita McCrary, who I thank for raising such a loving and nurturing daughter. She also happens to be a constituent of mine, and her daughter is my better half, my much better half, Sharon MacLean, who is also the mother of two beautiful daughters. To all three of you, happy Mother's Day. Last but not least, my pride and joy – it's her first visit to the Legislature – is my daughter, Sameena Sherman. She's a student at the University of Alberta. She got me into politics at the age of 14 when she was one of the youngest delegates at a federal Liberal convention in 2006. I'm here because of her. Thank you. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? Edmonton-McClung, did you have an intro?

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly the parents of Melina Sinclair, one of our current pages. Charlene and Steven Sinclair are here today to observe Melina in her role as a page. My constituents Charlene and Steven have lived in the community of Lymburn for the past 20 years. They enjoy watching question period on TV, but this is their first time watching the session live. I would like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, let me just commend members. Today's introductions took an average of 30 to 40 seconds only. They were well done. As a result, we got them all in. I would ask House leaders to perhaps consider that as a possible benchmark for the future.

Thank you, all.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Northern Alberta Development Council Anniversary

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to pay tribute to an organization that has had a tremendous impact on northern Albertans for the past 50 years. The Northern Alberta Development Council recently celebrated its 50th anniversary, half a century of working to enhance the lives of northern Albertans. In fact, on March 28, 1963, the Northern Alberta Development Council Act was passed. The council was given a mandate to investigate, plan, promote, and co-ordinate practical measures to foster and advance development in northern Alberta. The first chair of the NADC was the hon. Ira McLaughlin, a seven-term MLA, just like myself, from Grande Prairie, who also served in the provincial cabinet.

Mr. Speaker, economic and social development in a region that encompasses 60 per cent of our province but is home to only 9 per cent of our population presents unique challenges. In the past 50 years members of this council have dedicated themselves to encouraging economic development in 207,000 square kilometres of the province's north while also providing a voice for northern communities on issues like industrial development, agriculture, and transportation.

Over time those issues have evolved, and new issues have emerged such as education, health care delivery, economic diversification, and transportation. The NADC has developed and implemented creative, practical solutions to address those challenges over the last 50 years.

Mr. Speaker, I've had the pleasure of being the minister responsible for this council, and I'm proud to be the current chair of the NADC. Of course, I thank our Premier for that. The one constant in the work of this council throughout its 50-year existence is, of course, people. The passion, commitment, and love for this province demonstrated by NADC members, whom I have also introduced today and who have come to this organization from all walks of life, has generated opportunities while maintaining a vision focused on building healthy and strong communities for future generations.

Mr. Speaker, as chair of the NADC I would like to pay tribute to all of the past chairs and the hard-working council members and staff members over the past 50 years. I wish the Northern Alberta Development Council every success as we begin the next 50 years with a new and energized vision of the north.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. First main set of questions.

Generic Drug Pricing

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Health minister has managed to stumble his way into a pretty good news story on pharmaceuticals. It was reported last week that even though 115 drugs went up in price and 535 stayed the same, 2,150 generic drugs have been reduced down to 25 per cent of brand name prices. That's what other provinces are doing, and that's what we've been saying that Alberta should be doing all along. It's true. He even got 80 medicines down to the 18 per cent, and that's pretty good, but what an ordeal to get there: protests, closures, service interruptions. Will the minister just accept this success and give up his ill-advised fight with pharmacists?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're indeed very proud of the fact that generic drug prices have come down in Alberta. Just to complete the hon. member's account of this success for this House, that has resulted in an annualized savings of $80 million to the taxpayers of this province, a fact she failed to convey. As well, we're continuing to invest in pharmacies and pharmacists across the province. We added $40 million in additional support to pharmacists recently on top of $80 million in transitional support over the last few years. As a result pharmacists are now full members of the health care team in this province, and Albertans are paying less for drugs.

Ms Smith: Here's the problem, Mr. Speaker. If the minister continues to press ahead for an across-the-board cut to 18 per cent on all generic drugs, it's creating a big mess in the real world that pharmacists operate in, pharmacists like Debbie Boyle. Now, you may remember her. She's been operating the Britannia Pharmacy in the Premier's riding for two decades, and she's been asking for a meeting with her MLA for months, without success, to describe the specific problems the minister's changes are creating. The Premier told the Assembly that she would be glad to meet with Debbie, but she won't. So what's the problem?

Ms Redford: Well, in fact, Mr. Speaker, I know for a fact that Ms Boyle has had the opportunity to meet with her MLA, who is the MLA for Calgary-Glenmore, a number of times and has also had the opportunity to meet with a number of people in my office. My understanding is that those are discussions that perhaps Ms Boyle isn't satisfied with, but certainly that constituent has had an opportunity to meet with her MLA. I have certainly met with constituents in my riding, where her pharmacy is located, who do not share the same concerns as Ms Boyle, but I'm certainly glad that she had an opportunity to bring her concerns forward.

Ms Smith: I'll table the letter so the Premier can read it, but here is what Debbie wants to explain to the Premier. The drug benefit list keeps on changing, and here's what that means. Suppliers don't have some low-cost drugs available. Other supplies are delayed. Pharmacies risk losing money trying to clear out their old inventory. Procedures for reimbursement involve double and sometimes triple filing, with no compensation for the waste of time. Unless the minister accepts where we're at, the drug list is going to change again radically in August, so the confusion is going to start all over again. Why doesn't the minister see the problem?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the problem here is that the Leader of the Opposition clearly does not know which side of this issue she is on. This government is on all sides of the issue with respect to lowering generic drug prices in the province, and a sophisticated understanding of the facts would tell any hon. member of this House that they need to be on more than one side of the issue. These changes have resulted in lower generic costs for Albertans. They have resulted in increased support for pharmacists. The hon. member might be interested to know that the drug prices list changes on a regular basis in Alberta, and she might care to take a look and see the history of those prices, especially over the last year.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: The minister just doesn't know when to accept victory. Quit while you're ahead.

Breast Cancer Diagnostic Test

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we got some disturbing health news last week from a former political colleague. Sue Huff, the former leader of the Alberta Party, revealed that she has breast cancer. They've caught it early, so there is every reason to be hopeful, and I'm sure that we all wish Sue the very best. It's an appropriate time to raise the issue of a medical test that helps determine if chemotherapy is the appropriate course of treatment for a breast cancer patient. It's called Oncotype DX, and it's been reviewed and recommended by the Alberta breast cancer group and has also been approved for funding in Ontario, Quebec, Newfoundland, Saskatchewan, and Nova Scotia. Why isn't it available here?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, Ms Huff is a very good friend of many members on this side of the House as well, and we certainly wish her the very best with the challenge that she is facing.

Mr. Speaker, we make decisions about the use and listing of drugs in this province based on two things, the results of common drug reviews that are presented to us by CADTH, the Canadian Agency for Drugs and Technologies in Health, and also on the basis of the expert committee in Alberta that takes those recommendations and investigates them further and their appropriateness for use in our province.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, up to 30 per cent of breast cancer patients get needless, expensive, and potentially damaging chemotherapy. This test could prevent that, yet the approval is being delayed, and oncologists want to know why. Earlier this year in a letter to AHS Dr. Alexander Paterson, a professor of medicine at the University of Calgary, wrote: "we are beginning to despair at the inordinate time [it takes to make] decisions regarding the well-being of our patients." Oncologists want to know: why is it taking so long to approve this test?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know if the Leader of the Opposition is applying for the position of manager of the drug plan in Alberta, but I can tell her very, very clearly that this government relies on evidence provided by experts to make such critical decisions. The budget for drug coverage in this province now exceeds $1.1 billion. We have a very sophisticated process in place, that is used in conjunction with other provinces across the country, to use the best evidence and apply that evidence when making these decisions. They are not political decisions.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta breast cancer group reviewed this test three years ago. Ontario agreed to cover the cost of Oncotype DX for breast cancer patients also more than three years ago and have reported a success rate of 97 per cent. Here in Alberta the decision seems to be lost in the vast AHS bureaucracy. Patients who have received the terrifying diagnosis of breast cancer need to know the best course of treatment. When will the government stop foot-dragging and fund this important test?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is seriously misguided if she thinks that decisions around the application of specific drugs for specific patients are decisions that are made by politicians. These decisions are made by clinicians on the basis of the appropriateness for a particular patient. They are based on best evidence. That's best practice. That's what high-performing health systems do, and that's what Alberta does.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Third main set of questions.

Ms Smith: I'm just asking the minister to look into it. Would you do that, please?

Youth Addiction Treatment Services

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, in 2007 a young man named Taylor Argent, who struggled with a drug addiction, was at a private treatment centre, the central Alberta recovery centre. He had previously received a five-week course of treatment there. He had relapsed and was there to attend AA meetings and see about getting back in. Sometime overnight Taylor drank a lot of antifreeze, and despite the best efforts of medical personnel, he died. A fatality inquiry three years later made a number of recommendations about staff training, standards of care, and government oversight. Have the recommendations been put in place, and is the government providing any funding to help?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is going to continue to ask specific questions about individual circumstances, she could get her answers a lot more easily by simply approaching my office, unlike the approach that was taken yesterday in response to some other concerns. [interjections] If the hon. member cares to . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, the minister is trying to answer a question about a very serious issue. Please. We gave the courtesy of silence to the person asking the question. Let's give some silence so that he can respond.

Continue, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as we've said before, the quality of the answer will depend directly on the quality of the question that's put forward. If this hon. member is truly interested in the welfare of this individual and in the circumstances surrounding this very unfortunate death, she'll forward the particulars to me along with some specific questions, and I will get back to her.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I was just asking if the recommendations had been put in place.

The Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre treats 12- to 17-year-olds with addictions. They often have severe addiction issues that other facilities haven't been able to solve. Carly was drinking daily by age 16. She graduated from AARC in 2007 and is now succeeding in university. Keegan was smoking dope in grade 7, drinking in grade 8. He graduated from AARC in 2010, has repaired his relationship with his family, and is pursuing a career in acting. Hundreds of others have been helped by AARC. What's the government's position on supporting successful addiction treatment centres like the Adolescent Recovery Centre?

Mr. Horne: Of course, Mr. Speaker, the government's position is that we continue to improve and expand upon the very successful addiction treatment and recovery program we have across the province. We are working to open a new detox facility in Medicine Hat. Plans are under way for other facilities across the province. It's wonderful that the leader will acknowledge so many of the success stories that we hear about each and every day as a result of the addiction treatment services we're able to provide.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, of course, when a child gets clean, it's a blessing for the parents. One parent says this: AARC saved our family and our son's life. Most of their funding is private.

AARC's only government funding in the last few years has been a contract for $323,000 per year, but this year that funding has been cut from $323,000 to nothing with just 90 days' notice. Wouldn't it be better to treat kids with serious addiction issues rather than waste $350,000?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as I said in my answer to the last question, we provide a wide range of addiction treatment services across the province. Alberta Health Services makes decisions about where those services are allocated in response to patient need. They have a budget to do that. They're allocating it appropriately. Again, if the hon. member wants to continue to use question period to ask about specific instances in specific facilities, she can get that information very easily by contacting my office.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Municipal Sustainability Initiative Funding

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Edmonton's mayor seems convinced that the government promised more money for the downtown arena, and he's right. This Premier did promise to increase MSI funding but has only managed to deliver a fraction of it. She's about half a billion dollars short. Another promise made, another promise broken. As a result, council had to postpone the arena vote, hoping the Premier would find the courage to keep her word. To the Premier. You made a promise to Edmonton. When are you going to keep it?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, we made a commitment in the last election and through this budget to continue secure, stable funding to municipalities, knowing full well that they have obligations to build infrastructure for the population increase of about a hundred thousand people per year that we have in this province. We managed to keep that secure, stable funding, the same amount of funding this year as we did last year. Every municipality I've talked to has said that that's a blessing so that they continue to deliver on the services and the infrastructure that people in their communities need.

Today the city of Edmonton, which is starved for funds, had to go cap in hand to the Capital Region Board to secure $25 million for the downtown arena project that the Premier failed to deliver. Alberta Liberals have been asking this PC government to fund cities as promised and address the gross inequality in tax revenue between municipalities and rural districts and counties. Again to the Premier: if you're not going to keep your MSI promise, when will you find the courage to fix this tax inequality?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, today the Minister of Municipal Affairs and I had a very productive meeting with the Capital Region Board, and I was really gratified to hear their thanks to this government for maintaining our support to MSI. Funnily enough, they also gave us complete support with respect to the decisions we've taken to build infrastructure long term in this province. We have made a commitment to local decision-makers that if they want to use infrastructure funds to support infrastructure priorities, we are fully there behind them, but those will be their decisions, and we've been consistent on that for more than two years.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the Minister of Municipal Affairs claims that 87 per cent of Albertans are high-rise condo dwellers who don't carry their weight and his Premier breaks promise after promise to municipalities, cities like Edmonton and Calgary are being forced to come up with creative ways to pay the bills, and while the Premier waits for the smoke to clear from the Katz affair, costs continue to rise. To the Premier. You promised a big-city charter that included granting increased taxation power to the government closest to the people. Why have you not kept your promise to Edmonton and Calgary? Why, Premier?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, the cities, the municipalities, small and large, continue to have exceptional funding, the best funding in the entire country to help support the priorities of people in those communities. We continue to work with the two largest cities on the charter that we had promised. It may be a little more complex. That member should be the first to realize that it is not my sole discretion to write it, sign it, and make it happen. It's a partnership between municipalities. We have more work than we thought we needed to do, and it's going to take us through to the fall, but we're going to continue to work on it. It's our commitment that it's a partnership to build a better Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Alberta New Democrat opposition, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Edmontonians don't want their tax dollars to go to hockey billionaires.

Alberta Energy Regulator

Mr. Mason: Yesterday we asked the Minister of Energy about the PCs' latest industry insider appointment, Gerry Protti. Mr. Protti, aside from being a donor to both the Premier's leadership campaign and the most recent Tory campaign, most recently represented a group of oil and gas companies and lobbyists that donated nearly $200,000 to the Tories during the last election year. The all-too-cozy relationship between the Tories and their corporate donors is far too obvious with this appointment. Will the Premier step in and direct the Energy minister to find someone neutral and objective for this job?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, we as a government are very proud of the fact that we have a close working relationship with business leaders across this province to drive the economy as opposed to this party on the other side, whose federal leader goes down to Washington and claims that what we're doing in Alberta is somehow hurting the environment. When they do that, they hurt the economy. We will continue to work in partnership with industry leaders, with environmental groups, with community stakeholders to put in place a single regulator that allows us to continue to be competitive, to open markets, and to build this economy.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Only a government in power for more than 40 years could say that to disagree with them is to hurt the province.

Not only is Mr. Protti obviously a long-time Tory insider, but he also has a record of misrepresenting the environmental impact of large energy projects. While at EnCana Mr. Protti publicly took a position that drilling over 1,200 wells in a protected wildlife area was a sustainable practice. The regulatory board didn't agree, Mr.

Speaker. Will the Premier take action to remove Mr. Protti and put in someone who can properly balance development and the environment when considering energy developments in Alberta?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, I've asked for all Albertans, including the hon. member opposite, to be fair about this. What we're building is a world-class, next generation regulator that's going to ensure that we get the right balance between economic development and environmental sustainability and landowner concerns. Actually, we're well on our way to accomplishing that. We've got top, world-class leaders for this organization and the chair of the board. That's the governance board, that we'll be filling out with other world-class leaders as well. We have an exceptional chief executive officer as well, who has broad experience.

The Speaker: Hon. members, while I have the floor, let's be careful, again, to not malign individuals who are not here and able to defend themselves.

Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, my second supplemental.

The Speaker: You're done. [interjections] Did you have one more?

Mr. Mason: Yes.

The Speaker: Oh. My apologies, hon. member. I thought you were done.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can understand, given the answers, that we could all get confused.

Leadership, Mr. Speaker, is not this government's strong suit. They would much prefer to appoint Tory friends and insiders to important positions and then claim that their biased chair won't make day-to-day decisions, as is their excuse. That lame excuse doesn't fly. It's obvious that Mr. Protti's role involves setting the overall direction for energy regulation in our province. He's not the right person for the job. Will the Premier prove that she's right for hers, take leadership, and remove Mr. Protti from that position?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, leadership is putting in place a structure that allows us to balance energy development and environmental sustainability and to do that in a way that allows us to be competitive. Once again we see this opposition party leader stand up and malign systems and structures. If anyone actually believed what he said, it would hurt economic growth and development in this province. I expect nothing less from him, and that's all I've got to say.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

PDD Funding

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the alternate reality this PC government operates in, a tax is not a tax, a raise is not a raise, a decision is not a decision, and now we learn that a cut is not a cut. In Calgary last week, despite cutting $42 million from community access programs, the minister of PDD suggested that he, quote, will not take services away from people that need them. I'm sure the minister can understand the confusion amongst many Albertans. Will the minister please explain how he can possibly guarantee that everyone who needs support will still receive it after he personally signed off on a $42 million cut to front-line services?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for being in Calgary last week and for meeting with many of the concerned citizens there. I imagine that while he was there, he didn't share any discussions about $2 billion that they would plan to cut out of their budget.

Nonetheless, that member was present when we did estimates, and it's pretty clear, I thought, that my budget went up by 3 and a half million dollars to a total, I believe, of $694 million. I was also very clear in the budget discussion that we plan to transition from community access services to community engagement services, including employment. I stand by that promise. I also said that people that need services will get services.

Minister, given that you continue to insist the $42 million gap in funding will not take services away from our most vulnerable, are you actually suggesting that there are people in the system today that are receiving services who do not require them?

Mr. Oberle: Well, we are currently doing needs assessment, Mr. Speaker, and that could well be an outcome of the needs assessment. We'll have to wait and see. But people that need services will get services. End of story.

Mr. Wilson: This minister has insisted that he will fill the $42 million gap with an additional $2 million out of his employment budget. Can't the minister see that $42 million and $2 million just don't quite add up?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I can't say it more clearly. We are going to do a transition from community access supports to supports that provide for inclusion and engagement in the community, including employment supports. We do have budgetary money on the Human Services side for employment supports, and we will focus on employment supports. But I'll say it again. People who need supports will get supports.

Online Student Learning Assessment

Mrs. Leskiw: Mr. Speaker, I have stood in this House on many occasions to speak about the challenges with the provincial achievement test. As a parent and a former teacher this is an issue that is very dear and near to my heart. Earlier today I participated in the Minister of Education's announcement of the province's new assessments that replace PATs. My question is to the Minister of Education. Can this minister guarantee that the new student assessments will be more focused on student success?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, this member certainly has been a strong advocate for changing the assessment of Alberta students, and I commend her for this. I announced this morning that under the Premier's leadership we are eliminating the PATs and phasing in a new assessment model, the student learning assessments. These new digital assessments will be administered at the start of grades 3, 6, and 9 as just one of the changes, very positive changes. Alberta parents, students, and educators asked for these changes, and under the Premier's leadership we are putting the student at the centre of these efforts.

Mrs. Leskiw: To the Minister of Education: how soon can we expect students to start using these new online assessments in the Alberta classrooms?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, soon. This will be the last year for grade 3 PATs. We will be starting pilots for the grade 3s in the fall of 2014, and we will be rolling out pilots for the digital fall student learning assessments: grade 3 in 2014, grade 6 in 2015, and grade 9 in 2016. This comes on the heels of our commitments, the Premier's commitments. Promise made, promise kept.

Mrs. Leskiw: Again to the same minister. You sort of answered my last question. We are starting with grade 3, which is a great start, but how long do we really have to wait for changes to occur in grade 6 and grade 9? Hopefully, not as long as we did with the grade 3s.

Mr. J. Johnson: No. Mr. Speaker, as I said, these are going to be phased in over three years. That's strictly to make sure that we're doing them right, and it's strictly to make sure that we've got the capacity and we've got the funds. We're going to do this right. The concept has been developed in partnership with the ATA, the Alberta School Councils' Association, the parents, the Alberta School Boards Association. Everyone standing with us today was there when we announced this, a very positive announcement for parents, for teachers, for school boards, but most importantly for students.

Health Facilities Infrastructure

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, the kitchen at the Foothills hospital, which serves a thousand patients, has been identified as a public health risk. In fact, it is so serious that it has been issued several public health citations. It has mould and asbestos and has been ignored by this government for over six years. Meanwhile this government has somehow come up with $350 million to get rid of mould and asbestos in the new federal building when building plush new offices for themselves. To the Infrastructure minister: why are the new MLA offices more important than fixing the hospitals?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, my department works together with our colleagues from Alberta Health and Alberta Health Services. We have an infrastructure maintenance program. Alberta Health Services brings their requests to Alberta Health, and they send them on to Infrastructure. For anything over $5 million Infrastructure grants the money; anything under is in the budget in the infrastructure maintenance program. They have money in the budget to fix those.

Mrs. Forsyth: It's Alberta Health Services' priority. We FOIPed records from the department.

The MLAs' office building is more important to this government than hospitals. Why, Minister?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, our government was elected to build Alberta, and that's just what we're doing. We continue to build public infrastructure that Albertans require to have quality of life. We've got five major hospital projects on the go right now all over Alberta, and we continue to meet the needs that Alberta Health Services and Alberta Health bring to Infrastructure.

Mrs. Forsyth: Honestly, Minister, that answer is embarrassing.

Given that mould is also a problem at the Rockyview hospital, why have three mould projects been put on hold? Is the Minister of Infrastructure using the money to build the private PC rooftop garden on the federal building instead of fixing the mould problems?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, I won't go through it again. I just described the process for maintenance. They have money for their maintenance.

Mr. Speaker, this is really rich coming from a party that during estimates – the amendment they made in my estimates when they were debated in this House was to take a million dollars out of maintenance for infrastructure in the province. So I'm not really sure . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Capital Region Municipal Planning

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ever since the city of Edmonton refused to support industrial expansion in the Acheson area of Parkland county, the Capital Region Board has experienced noticeable tension. My first question is to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. Given the veto power that large municipalities like Edmonton have, does your ministry plan to review voting rules to help mitigate disputes on the Capital Region Board?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Premier and I had the pleasure of visiting the Capital Region Board this morning and having a great discussion. We always draw the same conclusion. The Capital Region Board is like a family. They work out solutions together. They have challenges, and sometimes they have arguments or impasses, but I'm proud of the Capital Region Board because of the work that they've done to overcome most of those things and make some tremendous decisions that make the Capital Region Board and the entire capital region a real network, drawing people in from around the world. I know that they can continue to find ways to work together, and they'll continue to do that in the future. If they ever come up with ways to work better and they need my assistance, I'll be there to help them.

Mr. Lemke: To the same minister: given that the city of Edmonton has this veto power with over 70 per cent of the population, how can my constituents and other constituents of Parkland county and Stony Plain be assured that their wishes for growth are seen through?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, the Capital Region Board will have some of the same challenges as the country of Canada. You try and balance a population with political regions that are represented. They have a double majority vote type of system. The question suggests that it has to be us versus them. We've always indicated in this department and in this government that there is no us versus them. It's not about one political jurisdiction succeeding and the other one failing. It's about how they're going to work together to make sure all of the capital region and every single person that lives in every one of those municipalities benefits, grows, and is prosperous for an entire generation to come.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the Calgary region has eight governments for 1.2 million people and the capital region has 24 governments for 1.1

million people, do you see a need for a reduction in the amount of government in the CRB?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a good question. I know that I've had suggestions from other places that perhaps if some municipalities amalgamated, that would be better. I don't conclude that that would be the way to make it work better. We've seen that 98 per cent of the time all the members of the Capital Region Board come together. They work on trying to come up with a solution together that's good for the entire region. Ninety-eight per cent of the time they make decisions that have constantly made the capital region a draw for people from around the world to move to because they know this is the place to be if you want prosperity.

Education Funding

Mr. Hehr: Talk about conversion on the road to Damascus. Congratulations to the government on cancelling the provincial achievement tests for grades 3, 6, and 9. Parents, teachers, students, and the Alberta Liberals have been calling for this for 25 years, but I guess it's better than spending 40 years in the wilderness like Moses.

Even with this good news there are still big problems in our education system. Due to budget cuts our Calgary high schools will have an average of 38 kids per classroom. To the Minister of Education: does the minister not recognize that this far exceeds the recommendations in the Learning Commission report of a decade ago?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad the hon. member agrees with the direction of the government. We've made some incredible announcements this week and last week. Obviously, Calgary was a very happy city when we announced nine capital projects there last week. We've had announcements throughout this week that are transforming the education system, from dual crediting to high school flexibility programs to digital diploma exams to the great announcement today of student learning assessments to modernize the standardized assessments, that are so important. That's something that our Premier promised to do, and now we've delivered.

Mr. Hehr: Things are so bad in Edmonton's public system that they're facing a $53 million shortfall from what they would need just to keep services as they are. Instead, they're going to have to cut educational assistance for special-needs students and have fewer teachers in their classrooms. That means larger class sizes. They've even cut music programs. Is this really what the government promised just one year ago in the election campaign?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, there's no question that this is a tough budget. No one has ever said that it isn't. We've also pointed out that Education is one of those ministries that the Premier has gone out of her way to protect. It's obvious to anyone that actually looks at the budget and compares the different ministries that that's the case. We've gone to great lengths to look elsewhere first to make sure classrooms are not impacted and to make sure that the base instructional grant for every student is going to be the same next year and that every new student coming into the system gets funding. So we've looked at it. We've eliminated administration. We've eliminated some of the funding in maintenance, in transportation, and the AISI programs, that are important things, but they are not instruction in the classroom. We think that Alberta has the great tools and the funding to deliver fantastic education.

Given the lack of predictable, sustainable funding for our K through 12 system, Edmonton public is considering putting a specialty tax on the next civic election ballot because this government breaks its promises. If this government is too gutless to raise revenue despite all evidence that it's necessary – see comments by Ted Morton if you don't believe me – will this minister return full taxation powers back to the school boards so they can properly do his job?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, school boards do have the ability and they always have had the ability to requisition dollars from their constituents if they go to plebiscites, so the Edmonton public school board is certainly welcome to do that, and if the parents and the citizens of Edmonton wish to do that, then of course they have that local power to do so.

There are other things and other places we can look at. I know that in Edmonton one of the areas is the capital. We've got a tremendous amount of excess capacity in capital in Edmonton. There are 35 schools that are under 50 per cent capacity. There is literally enough space in the Edmonton public school division to fit the entire Edmonton Catholic school division. There are a lot of places to look to make the system more efficient.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Airdrie.

PDD Northeast Region Funding

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We knew the Premier had broken her promises to Alberta's most vulnerable citizens, but we didn't know the full extent of the damage. Now service providers in the northeast PDD region have been notified of a 40 per cent cut overall, a deeper cut than anyone could have imagined. In the north, at least, this is about far more than day programs. This is about basic life supports. So will the associate minister admit that his terrible cuts are jeopardizing the basic safety and well-being of persons with disabilities in Alberta?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the member was present during the estimates, six hours of estimates in front of committee, and during the votes on the budget in this House, so the member is very well aware of what my budget is going forward, and she's well aware that it actually took a 3 and a half million dollar increase. She's also well aware that we were crystal clear that we are going to transition from community access supports to supports that provide better inclusion, better engagement with the community. We are working collaboratively with the providers in the northeast, and we are discussing numbers. Nobody has a contract. Nobody is aware of any cuts. I most certainly will not admit that we are doing anything to jeopardize the health and safety . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that there is a memo out there that says that the overall northeast PDD budget of $23 million has been slashed by $9 million, not the $2 million that you suggested would be the case during estimates, and given that service providers have told us that they are going to be forced to cut 24-hour supports, eliminate one-to-one aides, and move people from group homes into unsupervised apartments in that area, will the minister tell us how his decision to cut 40 per cent of funding to northern Albertans with disabilities is not a complete betrayal of his responsibilities and a dereliction of duty?

Mr. Oberle: First of all, I never said any such thing in estimates. I didn't know then and I don't actually know now what the actual regional budget allocation to the northeast PDD will be, Mr. Speaker. I can tell this hon. member that her fearmongering here is not going to be helpful in the discussion. Across this province service provider PDD organizations are in support of what we're going to do. [interjection] I would like to state an answer, hon. member, if you would allow me to. Across this province there are service providers in PDD communities that agree with the transition that we want to go through. The difficulty here is the speed of the transition. I am absolutely sensitive to that, and we're going to try to work with them.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, it's not fearmongering when there is documented evidence of what the cuts are.

Now, given that funding to one particular Barrhead PDD service provider is being cut by nearly 50 per cent, putting supports for all 68 individuals under their current care at risk, and given that the CEO of that agency has told us that 65 front-line workers will lose their jobs if this PC government doesn't come to its senses immediately, will the minister admit that he's created utter chaos for disabled Albertans, their families, and front-line staff? Or is he so out of touch that he can't see or won't let himself know what his decisions are doing to people on the ground?

Mr. Oberle: Well, I know very well, Mr. Speaker, what impact the spending by my department has on people on the ground because I've been out there listening to the people on the ground, not watching phantom e-mails come over the system. And I will continue to do that. In the next two weeks I'm in 20 communities across this province listening to what Albertans have to say.

I'll say again that the service provider that she indicated does not know exactly what their budget will be. They do not have a contract at this point, and they're dealing with half of the equation. They don't know what other services we are planning to provide. We'll get there.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, your point of order was noted at 2:30 during that last exchange.

2:30 Investigations into Commercial Crimes

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday I asked what is being done to address a barrage of alleged real estate scams that have cost roughly 25,000 Albertans over $2.2 billion. As Maclean's magazine put it, Alberta is fast becoming "a wild west for small investors." Yesterday we received a tip from an individual in the RCMP commercial crimes unit stating that they have literally hundreds of such files that warrant a full criminal investigation but haven't the staff needed to do so. To the Finance minister: are you aware of the severe shortage of resources to investigate commercial crimes, and what are you doing to address it?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Securities Commission is performing enforcement activities as we speak. As I mentioned in my answer to the hon. member previously, there are a number of these things that are currently in court. There are a number of things that are being presented to the RCMP. I'm sure the RCMP will be very interested in the tip that the hon. member received.

In 2011 the Alberta Securities Commission completed just over 400 investigations, Mr. Speaker. They do have a very large and robust investigation piece. They imposed over 9 and a half million dollars in administrative penalties. There were six criminal prosecutions and 18 court proceedings that year as well. We are going aggressively after what we can in the process.

Mr. Anderson: With respect, Minister, clean out your ears. We're talking about the RCMP, not the ASC. Come on. Listen.

Minister, we were also informed that this shortage of case officers for commercial crimes is a huge problem in the Edmonton Police Service as well. This is, of course, a provincially funded organization. To the minister: how are you planning on ensuring that victims of commercial frauds, including these kinds of real estate scams, get their money returned to them when our police forces lack the resources needed to conduct the necessary investigations?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I heard him very well. My ears don't need to be cleaned out. Perhaps the hon. member would like to clean out his eyes so that he can read what we put into the budget of Justice and Solicitor General, so that he can see that we're adding prosecutors, and so that he can actually listen to what I have to say.

I'm telling him that a portion of what he's talking about is an Alberta Securities Commission investigation, of which we did 400 last year. They're doing investigations this year as we speak. Not all of them are criminal, and not all of the ones that the hon. member refers to, where Albertans lost their money, are actually on the criminal side. There are many of them that are on the civil side, and we are assisting the investigation.

Mr. Anderson: I've never cleaned out my eyes before. I'd welcome some instruction on how to clean one's eyes out. That's interesting.

Minister, given that these 25,000 investors have now formed an organization called the Alberta Investors Protection group and have several proposals this House could implement to help protect Albertans from being victimized by such real estate scams in the future, would the minister be willing to meet with this group as soon as possible to begin that discussion?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I was simply referring to the Wildrose-coloured glasses that the hon. member likes to look at things through. [interjections] It's Thursday.

Mr. Speaker, I'm not familiar with an invitation to me to meet with the group as yet, and I'd be more than happy to entertain that invitation to meet. My office is always open to those sorts of things, and if the schedule permits, I'd be more than happy to meet with them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

Tourism Funding

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is blessed with a vibrant and growing economy supported by many sectors. One of these, tourism, generates $7.9 billion annually and employs over 139,000 Albertans. To the Minister of Finance: given that tourism is ranked third as an economic driver in Alberta, can the minister explain why there is no reference to tourism in the 2013 fiscal plan economic outlook, yet agriculture, energy, forestry, and others are referenced?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is absolutely correct. Tourism is an extremely important industry to our province. The numbers that he quotes are absolutely accurate. We do have almost an 8 per cent increase in the budget for Tourism, Parks and Recreation over the next three years. The tourism levy brought in over $70 million last year. It's one of the pillars of Alberta's economy. Like other sectors – financial services, nanotech, ICT – it is a critical piece and is actually found across all sectors of our economy in terms of agriculture, in terms of oil and gas. We do very much understand the importance of tourism.

Obviously, I know the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation will be more than happy to help us out.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Casey: Thank you. To the minister of tourism: given that tourism is one of the fastest growing sectors world-wide, what is being done to ensure that Albertans remain competitive?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To my hon. friend: certainly, representing the constituency of Banff-Cochrane, he certainly is aware of just how critical tourism is to the Alberta economy. Our government understands that, and our government has had a sustainable funding model in place that is, in fact, the envy of all other jurisdictions. It provides for a way to have sustainable, predictable funding going forward to fund not only tourism promotion but, in fact, tourism product development as well. We're proud of that. We're proud of the fact that we talk about that on a regular basis. That plus the fact that Alberta has got the most beautiful landscapes in the world and tourism infrastructure to offer to our visitors: we think we're in a very good position in tourism in this province.

Mr. Casey: Thank you. All that said, given that capital is essential to grow any industry, what is being done to attract investment into Alberta's tourism industry?

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, I call this a division into specific and nonspecific measures. The specific measures include measures within my ministry to go out and seek and encourage investors from around the world and from around Canada and, indeed, within Alberta to invest in the tourism sector. Beyond that, we have the nonspecific, and that is the positive business environment that we have in this province, the fact that we have a low tax structure, the fact that we have an excellent labour force, the fact that we have infrastructure that is grown and maintained on a regular basis. That's the Alberta advantage that grows not only tourism in this province but all of our industries, indeed, to help the Alberta economy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Acute-care Services in Consort

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2011 the government temporarily shut down acute-care beds in Consort because of lack of physician services. The bed closure was only supposed to be temporary, but months turned into years. It looks like another broken government promise. I raised this issue in March, and the Associate Minister of Seniors assured me that the government would work with the community to get this facility reopened. To the minister: what has been done since March to make sure Consort will get back those acute-care beds they deserve?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, what Alberta Health Services is doing in Consort is what they are doing with many communities across the province that face similar challenges in recruiting physicians. As the hon. member would know, it is a challenge in some communities to provide physicians with sufficient work to interest them in full-time practice and, ideally, full-time residence in those communities. That work will continue as it continues in other parts of the province.

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Speaker, given that the reason for the temporary closure was a lack of doctors and given that the people of Consort went out and successfully found these physicians who want to work and live in the community and succeeded where this government has failed, why does the minister continue to stonewall the people and leave them in the dark instead of giving them these acute-care beds?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the decision around matching physician supply with the ability to open acute-care beds is more complex, of course, than simply the availability of physicians. There are many other support staff that are needed. Of course, there are considerations around quality and safety. I know that this is a priority, as it is in many other communities across the province. We have to do our best to match the services that are required with the resources that are available both in terms of facilities and physicians, and we'll continue to work with the people of Consort.

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Minister, will you commit today for the people of Consort to a clear and acute timeline for when these acute-care beds could be reopened?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I will do is that I will look into the matter with Alberta Health Services and see if I can get any further update on the status of this. But as the hon. member would understand, there are a number of factors to be considered. It is heartening to hear, as I've heard before, about the willingness and the interest and the hard work of the people in the community to have those acute-care beds open and to have physicians to staff them. We'll continue to work with them to try to make that happen.

Support for the Film Industry

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, there has been much discussion in the film industry this week. It was good to see recognition by all parties for support to an industry that contributes to Alberta's cultural persona and to our economy. Looking for progressive and sustainable ways to protect and bolster this industry is worthy of careful consideration. Other provinces, including Ontario, Quebec, and British Columbia, make use of tax credits. Alberta currently doesn't have a film tax credit but instead offers incentives to producers in this sector through the Alberta multimedia development fund. My question is to the Minister of Culture. Why haven't you already made a move to introduce these tax credits to our industry along with the rest of the country?

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to see the interest in this important sector, but everyone needs to recognize the pros and cons between a film tax credit and the approach that we take. We know that this grant system we have is tailored to fit Alberta's industry, provides up to 30 per cent return on all Alberta production costs, and directly benefits Alberta filmmakers. That's from money spent here in Alberta – creative personnel, film crews, studios, jobs in Alberta – and it's equivalent to a labour-based tax credit of 55 per cent.

Mr. Dorward: Minister, don't you want to get out of the business of picking winners and losers? Grants allow you to do that.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me make it very clear. I certainly do not pick which productions get grants. Grants are based on very specific criteria of the program, and I do not censor any grant application. All applications meeting program criteria are indeed funded. Production grants are not subjective. Grants are based on the amount of money spent in Alberta, not just for labour costs but for any production expenses such as hotels, transportation, construction. It's about buying in Alberta.

Mr. Dorward: To the same minister: will your ministry get out there and find some other options for Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's remember that this grant system was designed with input from the Alberta film, television, and digital media. There's always room for growth and change. Producers tell us what they like about it. They like the quick payout times. They like that the administration to process the application is easy, and its flexibility adjusts to the needs of a production on a set. What I will do is to continue to work with the Alberta Film Advisory Council and other industry members to keep our production alive and well so that jobs stay in Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Thank you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, for demonstrating that supplementary questions can be brought forward without any preamble whatsoever. Bonnyville-Cold Lake had one of two as well. Well done.

In 30 seconds from now we will continue with Members' Statements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Affordable Child Care

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sunday is Mother's Day, one of my favourite days of the year. I think it's great that we set aside an entire day to celebrate and honour the women who have given us so many gifts: the gifts of life, love, and sacrifice on our behalf. On Mother's Day we show our appreciation for these great gifts by giving gifts of our own, but no matter how expensive or heartfelt those gifts, they are small compared to what we have received.

This Mother's Day let's also remember that a price is paid because as a society we do not involve women as full and equal participants in the life of this province. A price is paid because as a society we make it very difficult for women to return to the workplace and reap the same benefits as men. A price is paid because the workplace is missing the intelligence, energy, and creativity of so many great women who would go back to work if only they could afford to.

This is due largely to the shortage of quality, affordable child care spaces close to home or close to work. The result is that when our mothers retire, they have less money even though they can expect to live longer than men. Far too often what happens is that we have a poor senior. Mr. Speaker, this is wrong. Today on behalf of the Alberta Liberals I want to suggest that we give a truly meaningful gift to the mothers of Alberta, quality child care that is affordable to all, $10 a day child care. It pays for itself in the long run, it is socially just, and in a province as rich and wealthy as Alberta, we certainly have the money to set it up. This would be a truly meaningful Mother's Day gift to Alberta's mothers. Let's give it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Banff-Cochrane.

World Catholic Education Day

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak about World Catholic Education Day, which is being celebrated world-wide. The Minister of Education had introduced guests earlier this afternoon, and I would like to acknowledge them as well and thank them for joining us here today.

Mr. Speaker, this day is a time for Catholics around the world to take a moment to reflect on the importance of Catholic education and its values of peace, justice, and respect. It's also an opportunity to reflect on how Catholic education has served students and parents over the years. This year's theme, You Will Be My Witness, will be celebrated by Catholic schools, boards, and parishes across Canada.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's world-class education system is built on a range of educational choices, including separate, public, charter, francophone, and private schools. The availability of choice strengthens our education system and supports the rights of students and parents to have the options that meet the objectives of the School Act. This range of choice continues to bring new ideas and innovative approaches to learning that ultimately benefit all our students and help them to perform amongst the best in Canada and around the world. I'm personally proud of our Catholic education system, including the two schools in my constituency, Monsignor Fee Otterson and Sister Annata Brockman.

I would like to wish everyone a very happy World Catholic Education Day, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to our guests for being here today to celebrate this important day.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Tourism Industry

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak to the Assembly today about an industry that I feel has huge untapped potential and with the appropriate support will become an important driver of economic diversification in Alberta. Tourism has been and continues to be one of the major economic generators in the province of Alberta. It may surprise hon. members to learn that the tourism industry employs 139,000 Albertans and generates $7.9 billion annually. Tax revenues to various levels of government amount to $2.4 billion federally, $1.17 billion provincially, and $430 million municipally.

With this huge impact tourism should be regarded as more than a nice-to-have. It needs to be perceived as an essential part of our economy and industry, no different than forestry, agriculture, or manufacturing. In virtually every other industry important to Alberta's economic future incentive programs exist to encourage investment and reinvestment in order to grow and reach the full potential of those sectors. We need to develop similar programs for the tourism industry. If tourism is ever to recognize its true potential as a major economic force in Alberta, then it is important that we as government invest in the development of this industry, as we have with others.

Mr. Speaker, we need to begin to appreciate the value of tourism as an industry essential to Alberta's future. None of this is to suggest that the current minister or past ministers have not done an amazing job keeping this industry alive and vibrant given the tools at its disposal. However, if we want to realize the future potential of tourism, the members of this Assembly must start to treat tourism as an industry, in the same context as we do energy, agriculture, and forestry, and afford it the same opportunity.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by St. Albert.

Parent Preschool Program of Southern Alberta

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about an important matter affecting families in southwestern Alberta. Due to cuts in the Advanced Education budget an important preschool program may be eliminated or severely reduced.

The parent preschool program is nonprofit, operates in seven rural communities, offering 14 classes for young children. It does not have money to pay all staff but has been able to use second-year students from the early childhood education diploma course at Lethbridge College. The program has offered practicum placements for early childhood education students, enabling them to directly apply what they've learned in school. It's a great opportunity for both the students and the parent preschool program. One letter I received from a parent in need of child care stated that she would always choose someone who has experience with children over someone who doesn't.

It's the kind of hands-on opportunity that can't be equalled sitting in a classroom or through an online course. This is a priority not only for the families that have children in the program but also for the students, who get priceless teaching experience. However, due to the government's fiscal mismanagement the budget cuts may force Lethbridge College to cancel the course. This puts the parent preschool program's existence at serious risk.

Mr. Speaker, the government finds money for all sorts of unnecessary pet projects, whether it's hundreds of millions of dollars for fancy offices or $350,000 for partisan, party-coloured propaganda. This government is demonstrably unable to set priorities and keep promises. With cuts to postsecondary education it has caused college administrators to slice front-line programs while being forced to keep staff filling out government forms instead. It's time for the government to clean up its act, balance the books, and stop placing colleges and universities under the knife to make up for its own fiscal follies.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

International Offices

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The world's marketplace is becoming much more competitive, and our government is facing new economic realities. In the wake of these realities, increasing market access and ties with jurisdictions around the globe is at the top of Alberta's list of priorities. We must be well equipped to respond to recent economic and geopolitical shifts. We have a choice to lead internationally and prosper or follow and fall behind.

Over the years Alberta's international offices have become and I know will remain critical to Alberta's continued economic productivity. Whether it's advocacy, trade, or investment, our 10 international offices give Alberta a key edge in an extremely competitive marketplace by having an on-the-ground presence that can quickly tap into policy development that impacts Alberta. For example, our Washington office has been instrumental in helping Alberta overcome the BSE crisis and more recently in helping Alberta's advocacy efforts on market access, specifically the Keystone XL pipeline. The offices also serve to help facilitate important introductions for businesses into a foreign marketplace. Last year alone our offices helped assist 640 Alberta companies as they explored international opportunities.

The Alberta-Korea office has supported a number of Korean heavy-industry companies in establishing their presence in Alberta that saw investment in energy-related projects. The Alberta-Mexico office co-ordinated a mission to Mexico for a delegation that included five Alberta agrifood companies. As a result of this mission, three of these companies started negotiations with local buyers to enter the market. Additionally, the Alberta-Japan office arranged discussions that led to an MOU between an Alberta company and a Japanese company with the Advanced Scientific Technology & Management Research Institute of Kyoto. This allowed for joint research and business collaboration between Alberta and Kyoto nanotech companies and academia.

These examples are merely a snapshot of the vital link Alberta's international offices create between our province and the world. It's a link I know Albertans want to see fortified and a link we're ready to take advantage of.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a petition to the Legislative Assembly brought forth by nursing students from the U of A. This petition was signed by over 200 people from the Sherwood Park and Edmonton areas urging the government "to introduce legislation that will require all drivers and passengers of All-Terrain Vehicles (ATVs) to wear Canadian Standards Association (CSA) approved helmets while operating an ATV."

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you. Hon. member, can we assume that it was approved as to form by Parliamentary Counsel?

Ms Olesen: Yes, it was.

The Speaker: Thank you. Let's be reminded to say that at the beginning. It saves the House time.

Ms Olesen: I'm sorry. Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure that I rise on behalf of the Premier to give oral notice of a motion: "Be it resolved that Bill 207, Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013, be moved to Government Bills and Orders on the Order Paper."

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta or someone on behalf of.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the Minister of Service Alberta today I'm pleased to table five copies of the Alberta vital statistics annual review 2011. This report summarizes all vital events that occurred in Alberta during the 2011 calendar year: live births, marriages, deaths, infant deaths, stillbirths, adoptions, and legal changes of name. Finalizing the report can take up to one year. The data provided by hospitals, municipalities, and other organizations must first be compiled and verified. This report fulfills Service Alberta's mandate under the Vital Statistics Act and provides the public and health care professionals with a resource document of provincial vital events statistics data. After the report has been tabled in the Legislature, Service Alberta sends the report to universities and libraries who have requested copies.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on behalf of.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. I'd like to table a letter to the Minister of Human Services sent by a mother raising her concerns about her daughter's future in light of this government's substantial cuts to the persons with developmental disabilities community access program. The letter closes by stating:

I appreciate that we are in difficult . . . times. I ask that more consideration be given to the implementation of the current course of action that has been chosen for people who cannot make decisions for themselves.

The second set of tablings, Mr. Speaker, comes from a community resource worker and is also directed to the Minister of Human Services. It is raising her concerns about this government's cuts to programs serving persons with developmental disabilities, cuts which she believes will bring about transformational changes. The letter closes by stating:

I ask you to reflect on how cutting funding to community access programs might displace many individuals who rely heavily on the support that they receive while attending programs and how it will impact their lives when they are no longer able to attend [these programs].

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Either today or at the beginning of next week this House will take up the business of the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act. I have two documents I want to table today. One is a statement letter from Treaty 6 First Nations given to me by Chief Darren Whitford, and the other is the speaking point letters that the 17 nations of Treaty 6 also sent out with regard to this proposed bill. I have the requisite copies right here.

Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Actually, the tablings I'm doing today are on behalf of my colleague the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. The first is an e-mail from people actually currently in California, Joni and Brad Stenning, but writing through people in Cochrane, care of Ernie and Marie Evans. They are concerned about the cuts to PDD because their brother, Mark Evans, is cognitively impaired, and they feel that he benefits very much under the programs under community access. So I'll table that.

I also have an e-mail to Calgary-Buffalo from Gary Simpson, which was CCed to me, which is expressing great disappointment in the 56 per cent cut in funding for students taking courses from Alberta Distance Learning, which he feels is defeatist.

The next is to Calgary-Buffalo from Tammy Johnson regarding cutting support programs for people with disabilities. She is a person with a disability working and contributing to the community and appreciates that she's very fortunate in what she's had but doesn't want to see other people subjected to poverty and difficulty.

To Calgary-Buffalo from B. Kerley, also raising concerns about seniors and the proposed pharmacare program. This person is afraid that as seniors they will have to provide for the likelihood of a worst-case scenario. It's quite distressing to her to think that she could be looking at a possible decrease in benefits.

To Calgary-Buffalo from Jason Walker, with concerns about the PDD cutbacks. He has worked with persons with disabilities and is really struggling to understand why those supports would be taken away from individuals like those he's worked with.

Finally, an e-mail directed to members of the Legislative Assembly from a Ben Graham in Calgary. He has also worked in the field of disability services and is bringing concerns about the proposed cuts affecting services.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. I'll just interrupt proceedings to acknowledge the Government House Leader given the hour.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If we might have unanimous consent of the House to extend past 3 o'clock pursuant to the standing orders.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Government House Leader has requested unanimous consent so that we can complete the Routine. It requires your unanimous consent. Does anyone object to giving it?

The Speaker: Let us continue on, then, with Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the Minister of Human Services, and then Highwood.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The law of physics that states that nature abhors a vacuum is also true of human nature. When programs or changes are announced, people without enough sufficient information fill in the blanks. Sometimes they're drawing conclusions, according to the government, that aren't justified. Nevertheless, because of the lack of information regarding PDD and how it's going to impact people, I continue to receive many letters and calls, two examples of which I will table today in addition to the many others I've already tabled.

One is from a concerned mother who describes the help that her son is currently getting and hopes that it will be allowed to continue. She desperately hopes that.

Another is from the principal of Magrath elementary school, commenting about the programs that are currently run by SASH, the Southern Alberta Society for the Handicapped, the good work that they're doing in the school, and the esteem the workers are receiving for being able to do this work from the people that are being helped. I have the requisite number of copies and would like to table them with you today.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the requisite number of copies today of two letters which were earlier delivered to the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, responding to Written Question 37 and Written Question 39.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm a bit backlogged on my tablings. I've got a few from earlier in the week. I had made reference to a letter that I received from Justice Vertes in response to my inquiry about whether or not they could expand the timeline for the inquiry. I just would like to table his response to me with the five copies required.

I also have a tabling of the letter received from the Minister of Health regarding the couple in Crowsnest Pass that were satisfied with the resolution that was proposed and that he's intervened on and that I thanked him for, so five copies of that.

I also have five copies of an e-mail from the owner of Britannia Pharmacy, Debbie Boyle, and some of the concerns that she wanted to express to the government about the impact the pharmacy changes are having on her business.

In addition, I want to file five copies of the letter that was written to Alberta Health Services from Dr. Paterson with regard to the breast cancer test, to be able to determine the course of treatment; five copies of that.

In addition to that, five copies of an article which is in the latest version of one of the docs' magazines about, also, the impact of delaying the decision on the approval of this drug test and the impact it has on patients. Five copies of that as well.

The Speaker: Calgary-Fish Creek, did you have a tabling as well?

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. I am tabling from Alberta Health Services on their priority list the project named Foothills Medical Centre Kitchen Renovation and the urgency with which they have asked this government to remove the asbestos and the length of time that they've been waiting. It also includes several public health citations and the environmental issues. I would hope that the government will pay attention to this.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw an article with regard to his question today, Calgary Crowd Vents about Disability Program Cuts. He referenced it in his question and wanted to make sure you had it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any others? Edmonton-Strathcona, one more tabling.

Ms Notley: I'd just like to table the appropriate number of copies of an e-mail that I referred to in my question today to the associate minister of Human Services from the Alberta Council of Disability Services. Within that e-mail it says:

The total NE Regional target reduction is almost $9 million out of a [full] $23 million budget, with Agencies reporting cuts ranging from a low of 18% to a high of over 50%, this will translate to about 260 FTE positions in the . . . Region [being lost]. Individual service reductions range from 1% to 75% for July 1.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Griffiths, Minister of Municipal Affairs, a response to Written Question 4, asked for by Mr. Barnes on December 3, 2012.

Have all the applications to the 2010 Southern Alberta Disaster Recovery Program and the 2010 Spring South Eastern Alberta Disaster Recovery Program been finalized, and how long did it take applicants to receive a first assistance payment once they had provided all required information?

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Horne, Minister of Health, response to Written Question 11, asked for by Mrs. Forsyth on December 3, 2012.

Which physicians, psychiatrists, or pharmacists were consulted on the Creating Connections: Alberta's Addiction and Mental Health Strategy dated September 2011?

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Bhullar, Minister of Service Alberta, response to Written Question 12, asked for by Mr. Fox on December 3, 2012.

What are the criteria for determining the location of new registry offices in Alberta and do the communities of Blackfalds, Chestermere and Redcliff meet these criteria?

Response to Written Question 13, asked for by Mr. Pedersen on December 3, 2012.

What Government of Alberta infrastructure projects are currently scheduled for Medicine Hat, and what are the projected costs and completion dates for each infrastructure project?

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we go on with the point of order, I too have a tabling. I rise to table five copies of a memo from the Member for Edmonton-South West, who would like to request early consideration of Bill 203 to proceed to third reading directly after Committee of the Whole on Monday, May 13. Thank you.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I believe you have the point of order today?

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Associate Minister for PPD, while the budget is as it was presented in the House, the member is prepared to withdraw his remarks if the member found it offensive or unparliamentary.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I assume you're acknowledging that that is acceptable to you, are you?

Ms Notley: That is acceptable to me. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you very much.

That concludes our Routine for the day.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 24 Statutes Amendment Act, 2013

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta, to move third reading of Bill 24.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to move third reading of this bill. I think we've had a very robust and fascinating discussion on this bill. I enjoy the support that all three parties have offered to this bill; therefore, I move third reading.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour here to rise today to speak to third reading on Bill 24. I will be very brief.

What is great about this bill is the work that was done to initiate some of the changes by the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, particularly on the issues dealing with the condominiums act and the bare-land titles. We've seen in this Legislature in the past year that as the Official Opposition we've driven issues like that. We saw that we advocated on things like parent choice in education. We succeeded in that. We succeeded in home-cooked meals and two showers per week for seniors. We succeeded in getting a faster twinning of highway 63. We succeeded in getting some stronger government expense rules. We succeeded in getting free parking for veterans. We succeeded in getting some transparency on illegal donations. We succeeded in demonstrating the debt that this government is putting on future generations, and we succeeded in poking holes through this government's whole budgetary process. Then recently we succeeded on the film tax credit, getting that motion passed and putting the pressure on the government to actually initiate it.

Here, again, the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, through his hard work, through his consultation really pushed forward this issue that has been lagging for years and years and years. As a result of him working hard, putting the initiative in, demanding answers here in the Legislature, demanding answers from the minister, the minister finally saw the light and put forward this bill which rectified some of the very serious issues that were in the condominium area that created a load of uncertainty in the industry.

Again, this is just another feather in the cap for the Official Opposition. We've succeeded in multiple, multiple changes both in government policy as well as government legislation. Again I have to commend the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka for driving this forward but also the minister for finally reacting to our steadfast work on this to try and get these necessary changes done.

With that, Mr. Speaker, given the bill as a whole, the only issues that you have when you have these types of miscellaneous pieces of legislation: preferably some of those, if they're substantive in their material, should be in some respect kept as stand-alone pieces of legislation. Miscellaneous acts are good for minor changes. You know, the change to the Perpetuities Act may be considered a minor change. Some would consider it material, and if it is material, those types of changes should in fact be put in a separate bill for a separate discussion instead of amalgamating everything into one entire bill.

The other thing that we saw with this bill, Mr. Speaker, was with respect to the Perpetuities Act. There was some concern in terms of the interpretation from a professor from the University of Calgary, Professor Nigel Bankes. What this has done is, I would say, clarify any type of potential misinterpretation that could be formulated at the court level if someone wanted to litigate on this. It's one of these things where that type of amendment as well as the condominiums act amendment may be considered to be material. If they are, let's have those in separate bills so that we could have wholesome debates on it rather than having it in an entire amalgamated act like that.

Other than those minor issues, Mr. Speaker, I will be supporting this bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise and speak to Bill 24, the Statutes Amendment Act, 2013. As outlined previously, there has been a precedent in the past among all parties in the House here where the miscellaneous statutes amendment bill is introduced only after each amendment included in the bill has been informally approved by all parties in the House, and in the past if any critic rejected a proposed amendment, it was not included in the bill. At that point, then, the bill proceeded through the House with no or very limited debate because consensus had been reached beforehand.

I feel compelled to get up and speak to this bill because of the different pieces that are put into this. It's unfortunate, but it needs to be noted, Mr. Speaker, that this PC government has broken this precedent. There was not unanimous consent. The Minister of Service Alberta is and was well aware of our concerns, the Alberta NDP's concerns, with including a significant piece to this legislation, speaking specifically about the bare-land condominiums changes.

Now, at the onset, Mr. Speaker, we agree. As the minister well knows, I was in attendance at several condominium meetings throughout the city. I can appreciate the fact that there are many Albertans who are part of bare-land condominiums who have tens of thousands if not hundreds of thousands of dollars that are tied up, that are inaccessible to the condo boards, stopping them from doing what they need to do, whether it's repairs or to improve their common property, and I do acknowledge the fact that that wasn't an issue until one court case, which occurred a few years ago and set the precedent for these funds. So there is a need for that piece of Bill 24, Mr. Speaker.

However, you know, the concern, again, is the fact that this is really an omnibus bill, where we've got several pieces of legislation that are all thrown into one bill, which, I would argue, Mr. Speaker, detracts from the ability to speak to and give the due attention that the pieces need. Normally the miscellaneous is for more housekeeping types of aspects. Looking at the Perpetuities Act and the Emblems of Alberta Act that are part of it, they do seem to fit within the spirit of this miscellaneous statutes bill.

However, as I've stated regarding the bare-land condominiums, the Alberta New Democrats would have preferred – and we did not provide consent to the Minister of Service Alberta because we wanted to debate this bill on its own. We felt that it's important enough to be its own bill as opposed to clumped together with a few other miscellaneous statutes.

As well, Mr. Speaker, another concern that I have with this bill is the change, or the amended piece, in the Surveys Act. The fact that the director of surveys is no longer required to be a government employee begs the question: why are we contracting this out? I haven't heard any logical or rational explanation from the government as to why this needs to be a private contractor. The position has been filled by a public employee for a significant amount of time. The fact that we're trying to again privatize certain services without any explanation leaves me questioning the logic behind this. I'm not really comfortable with that piece being in this miscellaneous bill.

As I've said, Mr. Speaker, I do agree with the changes that the minister would like to bring to the condominium act. This is something that many Albertans have been pushing for. I can appreciate the fact that the minister is bringing this in now as opposed to waiting for the review of the MGA. I think this will be well received around the province. I know that the minister and I have spoken on numerous occasions, and he knows that my position and the position of the Alberta New Democrats is that this is something Albertans have been calling for. So I applaud the minister for listening to Albertans and responding in a timely fashion and, as well, on that end, respecting the opinions of, I believe, all opposition parties, who agree that this needs to be amended, that this needs to be done not just judiciously but at a very expedient rate. For that reason, I'm satisfied with the minister.

But, as I've said, the fact is that this should have been a stand-alone piece, given its own attention. As I've outlined, Mr. Speaker, there are other elements of this omnibus bill that I'm not comfortable with and where I do not like the amendments proposed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there any other speakers to this bill at this stage? None?

Do you wish to conclude debate, then, hon. minister?

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move that we vote on Bill 24. This is a very important piece of legislation that brings relief to thousands of Albertans living in bare-land condominiums.

This piece of legislation has actually enlightened me a lot about the workings of the House. I have learned that when you go to hon. colleagues and discuss certain ideas with them, sometimes they like to take credit for it. That's okay, Mr. Speaker. That's okay. Why? Because we want to bring results for the people of Alberta. So if other people feel good about work we're doing, that's just fine. If they feel good that we're bringing relief to nearly 40,000 Albertans living in bare-land condominiums, I'm fine with that. There are enough good ideas and great things that the Progressive Conservative government is doing for all members of the House to take credit for the greatness of the PC government. We've gotten results for bare-land condominium owners, we've moved swiftly, and we're doing a complete, comprehensive review of the Condominium Property Act.

At this point I would ask us to vote on this. I thank all members for their very, very positive comments and their support. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 22 Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and move second reading of Bill 22, the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act.

Alberta has a duty to consult with aboriginal people when land management and resource development decisions may adversely impact their existing treaty or other constitutional rights. Bill 22 respects the treaty rights of First Nations people and provides them an opportunity to be more engaged in Alberta's consultation process. The focus of the bill is allowing Aboriginal Relations to implement a mandatory levy that would help First Nations participate in consultation in a meaningful way. The bill also supports alignment with the Alberta energy regulator.

Let me give you an overview of the bill and how it would support an improved, fair, open, and transparent consultation process. The idea for a levy came up during discussions with First Nations and industry as part of the development of the draft consultation policy. Under the bill a levy would be paid by industry proponents for resource development projects and land management activities when there is a duty to consult with First Nations. The levy amounts received from industry proponents would be paid into a fund which would be managed and administered by the government. In fact, government may also pay into the fund for Crown-led projects. Mr. Speaker, revenues from the levy would only be used to support Alberta's consultation initiative. The funds would be redistributed to First Nations so that they have adequate resources to engage in a full and meaningful way in the consultation process. This process provides greater resources to support the consultation capacity of First Nations.

An information disclosure mechanism on financial arrangements between First Nations and industry proponents resulting from consultation would also be set up. This disclosure mechanism would allow Alberta to determine gaps in funding and give us the opportunity to bridge those gaps. Bill 22 requires an annual report summarizing the operation of the fund, including audited financial statements of the fund, to help ensure an open and transparent consultation process.

As Minister of Aboriginal Relations I would also be authorized to require disclosure of information from proponents arising out of the consultation process. While we would protect people's privacy, we would publish aggregated information derived from these arrangements. This would only apply to agreements arising out of the consultation process and would not include other business agreements that industry and First Nations enter into.

In conclusion, First Nations, industry, municipal associations, and other stakeholders have all asked for more clarity and consistency in the current consultation process. This bill will enable us to address their requests in an effort to build stronger and more sustainable First Nations communities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks to the minister for yesterday giving me a briefing on Bill 22 and what it sets out and intends to do. I think there is a potential for us in the Official Opposition to be able to support the general approach being taken in Bill 22, but I have to say that I'm increasingly alarmed by some of the press releases and e-mails and letters I'm getting from First Nations communities over the course of the last couple of hours. As a result, I will be putting forward a motion to refer this to committee so that we can have a full and proper consultation with our First Nations.

I think I misunderstood the nature of the consultation the minister says that he has done with First Nations communities. I have to tell you that I find it quite troubling that in a bill which is called the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, there has been virtually no meaningful consultation with any of the First Nations. I am quite happy to read to the minister some of the comments that I am receiving today from Treaty 8 representatives. One, for instance, says that they are shocked to learn about it and that considering the protocol renewal agreement was given a 30-day extension and is up for renewal, Bill 22 breaches the protocol agreement and that the minister met directly with all of the chiefs, but with the introduction of this, it is a slap in the face to the consultation process. Treaty 8 also feels this violates article 33 of the United Nations, that it causes a lot of concern, and chiefs in the area are outraged. The protocol agreement does not acknowledge a government-to-government relationship; it's completely disregarded. That's Treaty 8.

We also have additional alarming comments from Treaty 6, who are also shocked to learn about the introduction of the act. They're claiming that it has completely disregarded constitutionally protected rights by providing no notice to First Nations regarding the legislation, regarding that it was imminent at all, and that it has not consulted with First Nations on the act whatsoever, again, kind of alarming considering the name of this bill is the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act. Treaty 6 has indicated to the minister that they're opposed to a levy on First Nations consulting. They're also opposed to the requirement to disclose agreements between First Nations and natural resources companies. They claim that the minister has failed to explain how these measures are going to work for First Nations communities and also failed to explain how they will work for the resource sector as a whole, the benefits to either.

Instead, what they are saying is that they want to actually have meaningful consultation. They say that there has been no meaningful consultation on this act whatsoever, and what they fear, by reading through what they have now seen in this act, is that it looks like the minister does not even understand the scope or breadth of the constitutionally protected treaty and aboriginal rights. They say that it shows that Alberta is demonstrating a complete lack of respect in proceeding without their basic engagement. Now, they have also indicated that they're going to be holding a meeting of Treaty 6 chiefs very soon and that – I'm quoting here – they're going to be considering a co-ordinated and forceful opposition to this act.

Now, it does seem to me that if you're going to try to create a new environment for aboriginal consultation, you would think that the individuals named in that consultation act would be brought fully onboard with what is being proposed. That does not appear to be the case. I have to wonder where the minister was during the Idle No More movements, when highway 2 was shut down. When you actually hear First Nations talking about co-ordinated and forceful opposition, what you're doing is that you're creating a situation where you're going to have more conflict, and you're making things more confrontational as opposed to what this is supposed to be trying to do, which is to resolve the issues that we're facing in resource development.

Let me explain a couple of the reasons why Treaty 6 believes that this has to be pulled back so that we do not end up making a mistake in passing a consultation bill without proper consultation with the stakeholders. There are three main reasons. I had mentioned one of these in my briefing with the minister yesterday, and at the time he didn't seem to indicate that it was a problem, but the Treaty 6 First Nations chiefs think it is real problem. For instance, they believe that the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act is discriminatory. What they are saying is that the act would require the disclosure of details of First Nations private agreements and relationships with natural resource companies solely on the basis of whether or not they're aboriginal.

Now, of course, we know that there are all kinds of agreements that are being negotiated for access between energy companies and landowners, but the reason this is discriminatory is that it would be saying that only aboriginal agreements have to be subject to disclosure and not nonaboriginal agreements. I have to wonder. How do you get away with putting forward a bill that has one set of rules for disclosure on aboriginal citizens and not the same set of rules on those who are not aboriginal? The other issue, of course, that they're wondering about is: how on earth would this be enforced? How do you enforce the disclosure of these agreements, once again, on one group of individuals and not another?

They also believe that in this legislation Alberta has overstepped its constitutional authority, that provincial governments do not have the authority under the Constitution to legislate regarding aboriginal identity. There is a section in this act where the minister makes it clear that he would make a determination of who qualifies under this levy proposal and who does not.

What the Treaty 6 chiefs say is that they have an inherent right to govern their own identity and membership. The right is protected by Treaty 6 and the Constitution, and it's acknowledged by the United Nations. They go one step further in their analysis of the bill, saying that it violates the UN Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples. There are a couple of points I would note here. The United Nations declaration prohibits discrimination against indigenous communities and nations, requires government to consult in good faith on matters that affect their rights, to obtain free, prior, and informed consent before adopting and implementing legislative measures that may affect them.

Well, I can tell you that if I'm getting this kind of feedback from Treaty 6 chiefs and from Treaty 8 chiefs – and I've got a call out to see how Treaty 7 is responding to this – I would say that that provision has not been met in bringing this bill forward. It also says, as I mentioned before, that indigenous people have the right to determine their own identity in accordance with their customs and traditions. They're wondering why it is that the Alberta government, through this legislation, is choosing to disregard international standards in the treatment of aboriginal people.

I can tell you what the request of the Treaty 6 chiefs is. They're demanding that the government immediately withdraw the proposed Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act from the legislative process and take immediate steps to respect the treaty, aboriginal rights, the Constitution, and the UN Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples.

I'm framing my comments in this regard because I have to say that I'm a bit taken by surprise that there is such vehement opposition to a bill that is supposed to be designed to improve our relationship with our First Nations people. It's supposed to be designed to ease the way for additional communication, consultation, transparency, openness in regard to our natural resource development. I have to say that it doesn't sound like the minister has done the background work that he needed to do on this bill whatsoever. The notion that we should be proceeding with passing a piece of significant legislation like this in the face of what is quite clear opposition I think would send a terrible message to our First Nations leaders and our First Nations communities.

On the content of the bill itself I think there probably is a way for the minister to be able to salvage this but certainly not by trying to press this through not only in second reading today but then Committee of the Whole amendments, third reading, and proclamation by – when? Tuesday? Is that when the government wants to end session? I mean, how on earth could you pass a substantive piece of legislation like this in the face of the concerns that they have about its constitutional validity as well as in the face of such opposition over the issue of consultation in a matter of a few days without doing a thorough and proper review?

I have to say that I am personally shocked at the difference in the process the minister took in passing the Metis Settlements Amendment Act versus the approach that he is taking with our First Nations community. Those who were here for that debate for the Metis Settlements Amendment Act may remember that I attempted to put forward seven fairly modest and reasonable proposals about how we might be able to actually empower the general council on Métis settlements even more, give them more oversight over the administrator that was receiving new powers. What did the minister say? He said that there wasn't possibly any way any of those amendments could go forward because he wouldn't be comfortable making any decision to make even modest changes to the act without going back and talking to all eight of the representatives from the Métis settlements because it had been a negotiated agreement, because they spent hours and hours, days and days, months and months coming to a deal, and there was no way that he was going to even change one word in what they had come to an agreement on without going back and consulting with them.

Meanwhile, we've got a bill in front of us that fundamentally rewrites the relationship that Alberta has with our First Nations people on the issue of consultation, and Treaty 7 chiefs and Treaty 8 chiefs say: "We didn't even know it was coming. You didn't ask us. We don't agree with the provisions that are in here. We don't think that you can do this." I have to say that I'm a little concerned and confused about how it is we could have two such entirely different approaches to aboriginal peoples in this province. I think both of them should start from the same level of respect. I fail to understand why it is the minister would not have taken the same approach in developing this piece of legislation to get the First Nations community buy-in that he took when he was developing the Metis Settlements Amendment Act legislation.

Let me go through in a little more detail some of the additional concerns that we have from the perspective of the First Nations community. Here's the thing. Regardless of whether the minister has got some industry buy-in on this, there are two players in developing this legislation. It's not just a matter of passing legislation that the energy sector wants. We know it's important for our public-private partnership with the energy sector for them to be able to develop our resources on our behalf so that we can achieve full value. We know that there was a hole in Bill 2, the act that created the single energy regulator, because it missed this piece of what happens with aboriginal consultation. But that is no excuse to rush through a piece of legislation in the last couple of days of spring session without evidence of proper consultation with the people being impacted by it and, in fact, with a clear indication that there's going to be massive opposition to it if we proceed on it. I think that we've put ourselves in a very dangerous position by thinking that this is the kind of legislation that you can force through without doing the proper amount of consultation.

The concerns that they have in particular are on the issue of the levy itself. I think that there are a number of things that they have raised here. The issue with the levy is that it's supposed to be used to support the aboriginal consultation initiative. I can tell you that the comment by the First Nations community in the document that my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre tabled earlier today is that "the levy on industry is so vague we can't meaningfully comment on this. No one, except perhaps Alberta, [even] knows how [it's going to] work."

I have to say that I would love to have some confidence, giving enabling legislation to the minister, that he had done some of this initial consultation and groundwork in being able to propose this new type of approach to raising revenue for the purpose of aboriginal consultation. But I have to tell you that when the Treaty 6 chiefs are saying that it's so vague that they have no idea what the minister is talking about, I have to wonder what this levy is going to look like at the end when it ultimately comes out through the process of regulation.

The other thing I would point out from the perspective of the First Nations communities – and I think this is an unfortunate indictment of the government and the approach that they have taken over the last number of years – is:

It is the common and frequent experience of Treaty 6 First Nations that Alberta disregards the requirements of its own Consultation Policy and guidelines whenever those requirements are an inconvenience. Many of Alberta's decisions on consultation have been inconsistent and arbitrary.

Sadly, here we have another example of this. In a piece of legislation that was supposed to be a landmark first step towards creating a new environment and a new relationship with our First Nations community, I have to say, Mr. Speaker, that it looks to me like the minister kind of blew it. I think that that has to be taken under advisement, and I think that as a Legislative Assembly we have to listen to what the stakeholders are telling us.

One of the other things that they're telling us is that the consultation that they're having right now between First Nations and industry is actually working not badly, from their perspective. The way they put it is that it's "working better than consultation with the Crown." What you have is the Crown, the provincial government, inserting itself in a relationship between First Nations and industry at a time when First Nations have lost complete confidence in their ability to be able to have meaningful negotiation with the province that is now passing this legislation.

Keep in mind that this is only the first part of what the minister's plan is for a comprehensive framework for aboriginal consultation. If you can't get the first step right, how on earth are you going to be able to get step 2 and step 3 and step 4 and step 5 right? I think that this has been a major misstep, and I think that it is important for us to let the minister know that he's got to do a bit more work on this. So when I put forward a motion later on to put this forward to committee, I would ask for the members to support that.

The new policy, also according to Treaty 6, "is not an honest and accurate representation of the Crown's constitutional duty to consult and accommodate." The notion in the bill that Alberta says the Crown should consult before making decisions is, I think, in the opinion of Treaty 6, at odds with what we have seen in case law being established. What the courts have ruled on this is that it's not just that they should; it's that they've got a constitutional duty to consult. The fact that they have not recognized that through the language that they have used has left the treaty chiefs wondering whether or not the government understands its obligation under section 35 of the Constitution and its limitations under section 35 of the Constitution.

They do acknowledge that First Nations may not have a veto, but the courts have been equally clear that the province cannot act unilaterally, especially in changing fundamentally the relationship that we have with First Nations. So any statement about First Nations having no veto in the policy has to be accompanied by a statement that the Crown cannot act unilaterally and must substantially address the concerns of the First Nations. I think that in this first step we haven't substantially seen the concerns of First Nations being addressed.

We also know that the nature of the consultation cannot be done in a vacuum. The nature of the consultation has to be informed by the particular nature of the treaty rights at issue, and not all treaties are written in the same fashion. Again, that is one of the other concerns that has been put forward.

The recognition in here as well from the treaty chiefs' point of view is that Alberta has to recognize and acknowledge that the ability to take Crown lands for development under the treaty is limited by aboriginal rights to hunt, fish, and trap as before the treaty. My understanding of the resource transfer act makes this quite clear. We have rights to use provincial land. They are lands that are Crown lands under provincial management, but within that context is that if there are unmet treaty obligations and land claims that do end up getting met through negotiation, Alberta has to accommodate with its land base to be able to ensure that we're not violating the rights as they've been determined through negotiation and through the courts. I think the fact that the bill doesn't recognize that is another red flag for the First Nation chiefs in Alberta.

The other issue that they have is the blurred lines between procedural and substantial aspects of consultation. They're quite concerned that it appears to be "left to industry to assess the potential impacts of industry projects on our rights." I mean, we wouldn't be in the situation that we're in today, where we do have conflicts, if the relationship was working perfectly. We do recognize that. But there's a balancing act that has to be done here. There has to be a balance of rights between what industry is allowed to do when we sell mineral leases and what we're required to do in our obligation to First Nations.

Also, I think it's of particular note that one of the things that is a source of frustration for First Nations in consultation is that they don't believe that the government lives up to the standards that they're imposing on First Nations communities. They first of all say that they're "tired of demands from Alberta to respond in 21 days" to the Crown. That's the existing policy, but the province for its part fails to respond to First Nations or does so after months. It's not responding in the same period of time. This is, again, one more indication that the relationship between First Nations and the minister and the government is not at a level where they can proceed with this substantial overhaul of the consultation framework without doing a lot more consultation.

The other issue that I think is important to make note of is that the Treaty 6 First Nations say that there is a minimal amount of requirements set out in one of the court decisions that we've already had about the Crown's duty to consult, principles set out in Mikisew as a starting point. I think that that is something we should take under advisement. I do think that that may be something for the second stage. The issue that we have is that we can't even really get to the starting point of talking about what it is that the government is trying to do if we have First Nations communities that haven't been convinced that they know what it is the government is trying to do, that were completely blindsided by a piece of legislation, and clearly are not supportive of the approach that the government is trying to take.

Now, once again, as I say, I think we can probably get to some level of resolution because I support the notion of what the minister is trying to do. What the minister is trying to do is to create more transparency, more openness, more understanding on a broad-base level of what the industry agreements are that are out there, of what the requirements of aboriginal communities are when it comes to the issue of consultation.

I think that by going through and building the capacity in First Nations communities, we'll be able to slowly build that capacity with all of the First Nations communities in the province, which will then, once we've built that capacity, improve the relationship between First Nations and industry in their consultations. But you can't get to that stage if you end up stumbling out of the block and you end up creating a lot of distrust and uncertainty and you don't have buy-in. I think that that is the question that we're facing today, whether or not, by proceeding with a bill that clearly has more work that we need to do on it, we end up setting back the cause that the government is trying to achieve.

I know that industry needs some certainty around here. I know that this is one of the big issues that industry has raised as a piece that is unfinished business in the legislative framework that we have right now. I understand why the minister is interested in being able to have a parallel process going alongside the development of the single regulator. We have said, though, that the timeline that was proposed for establishing the single regulator was too short. We tried to slow that bill down as well, if you recall, Mr. Speaker, because we knew that there were some key, important pieces that needed to have more consultation before they could be implemented.

We think now it's probably more realistic to be looking at a June 2014 timeline for the single regulator to be fully operational. I think that that's a reasonable time frame to be able to consider for this major piece of work, that needs to be accomplished now. You can't make up for years of inaction by trying to cram a hasty response into a couple of days of legislative debate or a couple of weeks or months of trying to cobble something together without the buy-in of the major stakeholders who are going to be a part of this. If this is set up for the benefit of First Nations, they surely don't realize that, based on the correspondence that we've received today.

I understand that the minister is attempting to set up a fund that will allow for First Nations communities to be able to access those resources so that they could do the proper consultations. I think that there is a way for him to be able to salvage what he's begun, but you can't do that by having the conversation in these walls. You have to do that by going to the First Nations communities and talking to them.

I'll be doing exactly that over the summer. I plan to visit at least 15 to 20 First Nations in the Treaty 6, Treaty 7, and Treaty 8 areas, mostly the Treaty 8 areas, and I have to say that I welcome the opportunity to have this bill to take with me as I go to understand what it is that their concerns are. Then we could come back in the fall, and we would be able to do a more thorough and fully informed debate on an issue that is quite clearly causing concern among our chiefs.

The other option is for us to task the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship to do this work over the summer. We know that we're not going to be back until – I think the standing orders suggest we're not back until the last Monday in October – October 28. We've got a huge opportunity over the summer to do some of this really important work.

I hope that I've convinced the hon. members of the concerns that are raised by the individuals who are going to be impacted by this, the fact that they want to be engaged. They want to have the discussion. They want to be part of it. I think they're open minded about being able to move forward. The chiefs that I have met with in this province want to be fully participating partners in the prosperity and in the economic growth of Alberta. They want better opportunities for their people. They want to be able to have job opportunities and education opportunities for their people. They want to be able to be contributing members to the Alberta economy. As a result, you've got a lot of goodwill there.

We have a lot of goodwill there. Let's not blow it by passing a piece of legislation that is misunderstood, that has not been properly consulted on, that is missing elements, that does not fully lay out the mechanisms by which this will work, that potentially violates the constitutional rights of our aboriginal peoples and on its surface appears discriminatory. I don't think that's what we want to be known for in Alberta, bulldozing ahead because we've run out of time and we're feeling a hasty rush on an arbitrary timeline that the government has set, that the government can stretch out so that we can do this right.

We have just seen this so many times. When rights get in the way, the government just bulldozes ahead anyway, and they alienate people. They create problems. What happens after a year or two? Well, then they end up coming back. They say: "Well, gee, maybe we shouldn't have passed that so quickly last time. Let's maybe make some amendments and see if we can get this right." We have an opportunity not to make the same mistake, and in this case the levers and the constitutional protections that our aboriginal people have over their land base, their access to resources, and other aboriginal rights have that much higher a bar.

Perhaps the government felt they could get away with taking draconian actions against private landowners because property rights are not protected in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, but aboriginal rights, section 35, are protected in the Constitution. I, frankly, think that we end up creating more problems by passing a bill that doesn't have the buy-in, potentially facing a constitutional challenge and then actually derailing the efforts that the government is trying to put in place to provide certainty for our industry. I think we may end up delaying all of that. The point is that we have to take the time to do this right.

I would like now to put forward an amendment if I may, Mr. Speaker. You'll have to tell me if I'm in order in doing this. I would move that the motion for second reading of Bill 22, Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, be amended by striking out all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 22, Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

Can I continue to speak to that?

The Speaker: Let me have a look.

Hon. members, what we have here is essentially a referral motion by way of a notice of amendment, which is in order.

If you'd like to continue with your reasons behind the notice, please do so.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that it goes to the issue. I sat in on the debate yesterday evening, listening to my colleagues in the NDP opposition talking about their extreme frustration with some of the process issues that they're facing, and I face this as well.

When I met with the minister, we talked about when the timing for this might be, and he did indicate that it was likely to come forward next week on Monday. I thought that would be great because that would have given me an opportunity to be able to consult with First Nations communities. I initially indicated to him when I met with him that, to me, the provisions that he put in the legislation seemed to be reasonable, that they seemed to be something that our caucus might be able to support but that I wanted to consult with First Nations leaders just to be able to ensure that they, too, were onboard with this.

Imagine how surprised I am about how quickly business is moving along, that we had to speak on this today. But I am grateful for the fact that our First Nations communities did take the 24 hours or so in which the bill had been on the paper to go through it with their lawyers and put together a briefing document so that we didn't race ahead and pass this without having some understanding of how the main players were going to be impacted by it.

It goes to the broader point about the process that we're using in this Legislature to pass legislation. It goes to the broader point. The Premier had talked numerous times throughout her campaign about slowing legislation down, giving more time between readings so that you could actually take the time to do it right. This is an opportunity for the Premier and the government to show that they intend to live up to that commitment, to show that they intend to actually make good on that promise and understand that the way that this Legislature often passes legislation is not in the interest of the people that we're trying to serve.

We're all trying to do the best for Albertans, and I recognize the government is, too, but the government doesn't have a monopoly on good ideas. Sometimes the opposition parties have a point or two to raise that ought to be worked into legislation. We're listening to the people as well. We're listening to stakeholders as well. We're getting feedback and e-mails as well. We're making the phone calls, too. When we hear about these kinds of significant concerns, that are being raised by members of the community that are going to be severely impacted by a piece of legislation, hearing that they're going to have a co-ordinated approach to defeating it, we have to take that seriously and bring the temperature down. We have to bring the temperature down by making sure that we do this right, by making sure we have a process.

If the minister wants to proceed, as I'm suggesting here, with the all-party committee process, I think it will go much more smoothly. We will all hear the same information from the same people at the same time. We will all be able to assess what we're being told by the individuals who are being impacted by this. We can also call in members from the energy sector, from CAPP, from the other large industrial associations who are impacted and who are pressing for legislative change. We would be able to get both sides on the table. All four parties would be able to listen to that.

We would be able in the process to educate every stakeholder about what this legislation is trying to achieve, plus be able to take the time to see what the regulation should be, get some feedback on that. What should the levy look like? How should it be implemented? Is it really right that you've got legislation that applies to one group of individuals on the basis of their race that doesn't apply to others? How do we rectify that? How do we create disclosure? How do we create buy-in for disclosure? I recognize that these are important elements to being able to provide certainty to industry, to the energy sector, but we can't just bulldoze ahead with this kind of legislation.

I'm pleading with the minister now, and I'm pleading with my other colleagues in this Chamber. We have already seen what happens when a relationship with our First Nations communities becomes damaged. The reason I made myself aboriginal critic for our party when I got elected is because I recognized the approach that Premier Ralph Klein took with our First Nations communities. He recognized that it's a relationship, that you have to begin with trust. You have to begin with friendship. Once you begin from those starting points, you could have these kinds of negotiations about tough things that need to be done, but if you already start off saying, "We know better, and we're just going to foist this on you," you're going to end up tearing the relationship, and it will take years and years and years to be able to repair. I'm urging the minister not to make that mistake.

I'm urging the other members of the Assembly to support this motion to put this over to committee. Let's take the time over the summer to debate this, to do this right, to bring it back in the fall and hopefully have all-party support and, more important than that, not just all-party support but energy industry support and the support of treaties 6, 7, and 8 First Nations members as well so that we can make sure that we're able to put forward an aboriginal consultation policy that will be the envy of the country. We already have that with our Métis settlements legislation. It's the envy of the country. Why can't we do things right in developing a new relationship with First Nations on consultation that takes place at the provincial level so that this becomes a model for what other provinces should do? I think the minister has a huge opportunity to be able to do that. I would urge other members to support this motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview on the amendment.

Mr. Bilous: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak in favour of this motion. I would like to thank the Member for Highwood for proposing this referral motion. I think there are numerous reasons, which I plan to outline in detail, as to why Bill 22, the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, is problematic and needs to be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, which, I think, is a very applicable and appropriate choice. Also, I'm excited at the thought because that's one of the committees that I sit on.

I just want to give some reasons as to why this needs to go back. I mean, you know, first and foremost, Mr. Speaker, that if we're drafting legislation in this House that directly affects specific groups of Albertans, they need to be consulted and included. I was extremely surprised to learn from Treaty 6 and Treaty 8 that they were not consulted.

You know, it frustrates me, Mr. Speaker, because there is a great deal of mistrust in this PC government from all Albertans across the province because of a failure to live up to promises that were made, that are continually being broken. It's quite disheartening. I mean, I've had the opportunity to speak with quite a number of chiefs around the province, including grand chiefs and members of council. You know, the number one thing I'm hearing is that they want to be included. They want a seat at the table. They want to be a part of developing Alberta and moving forward.

When we're looking at rights that deserve to be respected, I mean, first and foremost, treaty rights are at the core of this. You know, the fact that aboriginal groups and leaders that I've spoken with have been asking for meaningful consultation – in fact, there's been clear definitions of what consultation is and what it constitutes – and the fact that they're told that they're going to be a part of something and then they're not, again, promises made by this government that have been continually broken.

So where to begin in detail, Mr. Speaker? You know, I think the biggest flag that I hope the government pays attention to is the fact that this bill has been – I believe first reading was yesterday or maybe two days ago, sometime within the last 24 hours. Sorry. The days and evenings and mornings are blending together. [interjections] Well, you know, I'm being asked by hon. members as to why that is, and that's a great question. We do sit the fewest number of days out of most jurisdictions, and that is a choice made by our PC government. Many Albertans have said: "Why don't you sit more days. Sit in the afternoons. Have adequate time for debate, for opposition to put forward amendments and ideas, as our parliamentary system was designed for."

Ms Blakeman: Because that would challenge them.

Mr. Bilous: Well, I can appreciate the fact that this government doesn't like to be questioned and likes to run roughshod over many things.

Coming back to this motion, this is a great example of running roughshod over our First Nations and over people that deserve and that have a right to be consulted with and be included. As has been stated, the chiefs from Treaty 8 are not only opposed to this legislation, you know, they are shocked and dismayed at the introduction of this bill. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, they were blindsided. I'm still waiting to hear back from other bands and from Treaty 7 to find out their response and reaction to this bill.

Part of the challenge, which I spoke to at great length last night, or this morning, I should say, is the fact that when the government tries to put forward legislation at breakneck speed, it does nobody any service, Mr. Speaker. It doesn't provide the opposition the opportunity to do our job, to thoroughly go through a bill, to draft amendments, and, most importantly, to consult and critically and meaningfully engage with the different groups and people that the legislation is going to be affecting. This is both direct and indirect.

Mr. Speaker, similar to, I'm sure, my colleagues from the other opposition parties, we are all in the midst of trying to talk to the different leaders in the First Nations communities as quickly as possible because of, you know, how fast this government wants to put through legislation. I'm sure when we reconvene next week, we'll have even more information directly coming from the groups that are going to be affected by this.

Again, Mr. Speaker, this motion to refer – honestly, we're doing the government here a favour by referring this to committee. You know, the government talks about wanting to build trust with First Nations and aboriginal groups. You'd think that after being in government for 40 years, they would have learned a thing or two, but clearly not. It begins with trust. It begins with developing relationships. And trust isn't: hey, we're going to write something up and ram it down your throats, and maybe we'll talk to you once it's already been passed.

By sending this to committee, the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, I honestly think it will give an opportunity for that committee, which is an all-party committee, to engage with the different First Nations groups, to invite them to come speak with the committee. It will give time to rewrite this piece of legislation so that it is appropriate and acceptable to our First Nations peoples, whom this is going to be directly affecting.

You know, the other thing, Mr. Speaker, is that this really is a piece of legislation that affects three different bodies, not just the Crown and their relationship with our First Nations peoples. This is also affecting and impacting industry. I find it interesting that Treaty 6 has talked about how the consultation between First Nations and industry is working better than First Nations and the Crown. That tells me that there is a willingness on the end of industry to work with First Nations groups. They want to sit down at the same table and look at ways to include them, to respect their treaty rights, to consult with them. But I find it ironic and somewhat hypocritical that the government can't get it right.

Yet, unfortunately, even after many assurances I've had from the minister and from members of the government that they are consulting and speaking with the different groups, the e-mails and conversations that I've had with different members of Treaty 8 and Treaty 6 clearly show that that is not the case. Again, this is only going to continue to hurt an already damaged relationship between the government and the different bands.

It makes me want to ask the minister, and I will: how can he possibly do something that would imperil that relationship, the relationship that needs to be built on mutual trust, honour of the Crown, you know, and the inviolable treaty rights of First Nations? I mean, there are different aspects of this bill – quite honestly, Mr. Speaker, I think what I've heard and learned in communication with different treaties is that they find parts of this bill quite offensive. The fact that you've got the minister having the power to declare and decide who is aboriginal and who is not seems quite absurd to me, and that issue is from section 2 of this bill. Well, first of all, the province does not have that right, and it could very well be in – what's the word I'm looking for here? – violation of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I've been a member of this House for a little over a year and have been advocating that this government adopt and accept the UN Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples. I know the Alberta New Democrats and, in fact, our federal cousins have adopted that policy officially. That guides us in our decisions, in conversations, in consultations with aboriginal peoples, and I've been a strong advocate. I would love to see, in fact, all parties of the House adopt that document and keep that as a guiding piece when parties are developing their own policies, especially when the government is drafting legislation.

Other concerns that I have with this bill. You know, there's talk of – well, obviously this is a levies act, so they talk about levying dollars, yet we don't know the costs associated. They are not outlined in the act itself. We don't know the costs associated with administering this act. But there are other concerns. Section 9 provides no way for us to review or question the minister's decisions. Again, this is a blank cheque for the minister to have the power to do what he wants, when he wants. I think there's a danger in that. Section 10(k) allows the cabinet to make regulations exempting a proponent or class of proponents from requirements of all or part of this act and its regulations. Mr. Speaker, it's quite unacceptable to give cabinet the power to let some companies or some proponents avoid paying the consultation levy altogether and base that decision on whatever they choose to.

I'm concerned with the fact that funding for consultations may actually decrease. Some members in the House may not be aware of this, but there are monies that industry does give to some First Nations bands for consultation. I can appreciate the fact that this bill would like to level the playing field so that it's done equitably and for all First Nations bands around the province. That belief or philosophy behind this bill I agree with a hundred per cent. However, it's interesting, Mr. Speaker, because during my briefing with the minister it was discussed that the new levy may collect about $70 million to go toward First Nations abilities to consult.

Now, that may seem quite significant and good except when one is aware of the fact that that's less than half the current funding for consultations that are currently provided by industry and the government. This could be a step backwards, Mr. Speaker, not a step forwards. You know, I'm not sure what assurances there are. I don't have any assurances at the moment that this is not a means to further reduce funding to First Nations for consultations. I'm not sure if the minister can give me any assurances that that funding won't decrease.

Mr. Speaker, something that troubles me greatly – and I see that I'm going to have to bring this to a close shortly – is that the government's new consultation policy will never be introduced in this House.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there other speakers? The hon. Minister of Energy was next on the list, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Ms Blakeman: For 29(2)(a)? That's what I was trying for. I'm sorry. My knees are bad.

The Speaker: Okay. Proceed quickly with 29(2)(a), then.

Ms Blakeman: I don't have the ice today. I had the ice last night.

Mr. Speaker, the member stopped talking mid-way through his final sentence, so if he could just complete that, I'd appreciate it.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will conclude shortly here. My biggest concern – no. I have multiple concerns, but one of them is just that I've learned that the consultation policy will never be introduced nor debated in this House. Well, first of all, the PC government believed they could just introduce this policy without attaining agreement from First Nations and without bringing it forward for public debate or giving the opposition the opportunity to debate that policy, which really will be the guiding policy from here moving forward and likely for some time.

You know, Mr. Speaker, Treaty 6 outlined in a 21-page letter written back in December that they had numerous concerns about the government's proposed consultation policy and unanswered questions regarding that. In April of this year Treaty 6 made additional comments, in fact another 14 pages of comments, on the new draft of the consultation policy.

The grand chief of Treaty 6 wrote that any new policy to disclose agreements between First Nations and industry will result in the rejection of the policy by First Nations, and this is a major – thorn doesn't even cut it as far as a metaphor – issue that many of the First Nations bands have, the fact that this government is trying to force First Nations to make public their agreements with industry, which is problematic and, as the Member for Highwood outlined, is creating two classes of Albertans. You've got the one class, where they don't have to publicly disclose, and then you've got your First Nations groups, that are forced to disclose. That's creating two classes of citizens in this province, Mr. Speaker, and that is extremely problematic.

I'll continue. You know, the grand chief went on to talk about how the Crown has a responsibility and a duty to consult and to have meaningful consultation and accommodation with our First Nations members. If anything, the Crown should be consulting before it drafts any type of legislation or bill, not afterwards and leave it up to the opposition, who are doing their best to engage in conversations with the different treaty chiefs and different chiefs and band councils around the province in an attempt to get feedback, which clearly this government failed to do.

Mr. Speaker, this goes beyond a government shirking its responsibilities to First Nations and First Peoples of this province. I mean, this is beyond neglect. This is a failure to live up to their duties, their responsibilities, and for that reason, again, I think this motion of referral is the right thing to do. It gives us all time in this House to go back and speak with the different First Nations communities. It gives us time to draft amendments, to rethink this bill as it sits, and I strongly encourage all members of this House to support this motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, there are a few seconds left. Is there anyone else under 29(2)(a)? Okay.

Well, I'll take those few seconds very briefly just to review the purpose of 29(2)(a). It says:

Subject to clause (b), following each speech on the items in debate referred to in suborder (1), a period not exceeding 5 minutes shall be made available, if required, to allow Members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses to each Member's questions and comments.

As such, it should not be viewed as an opportunity for a member to conclude their comments. That is not what the spirit – the spirit – of 29(2)(a) is all about. I know it well because I was here when we created it. So, please, let's just keep that in mind in the future. It's meant to engage us in a healthy discussion back and forth in Q and A style.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I'm delighted to have a chance to participate in this discussion today as somebody who has a long history working with First Nations communities. It goes back to the fact that my family had probably almost a century of experience working with First Nations communities in the ranching business in southern Alberta and with particular families as well. You know, I grew up near Eden Valley reserve. I grew up in the community and went to school with the kids from Eden Valley. I saw the opportunities and the challenges that those kids faced relative to the challenges that other kids faced in our community.

When I got elected in 1988, I actually volunteered to serve on the Aboriginal Affairs Committee in the House of Commons, and I ended up shortly thereafter as the chair. I was very proud of the fact that we accomplished five all-party unanimous reports under that committee over the course of two years, including the report on Oka, which was, as you can imagine, a bit of a challenge. So I come to this topic with some deep experience and deep commitment to building relationships with First Nations communities. I'm happy to shed some light here because some things have been said where it's clear that people don't know what they don't know, and it would be helpful for everybody to know what some of us know.

I'll share with you that there has been a very deep engagement with First Nations communities in this province. Here we are now, one year plus one day since this cabinet was sworn in. The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations – and this is on the amendment, to ensure that we're on topic – has worked hard travelling throughout the province to work with First Nations communities to develop those relationships. We know that relationships are not built overnight. They're not built without a great deal of work and time and commitment on the part of all parties.

I have also been part of many discussions as well. Right from what would be an unprecedented meeting of First Nations leadership – all of the chiefs of the 48 First Nations in the province met with the cabinet back in December over the course of a day and a half – I've been in additional meetings since then with all of the First Nations leadership and several others.

This amendment speaks to the fact that a great deal of engagement has already been undertaken, a great deal of work has been undertaken, and referring the subject matter of the bill to a standing committee actually would delay important work that needs to be done. An immense amount of work has been done by the hon. minister and supported by people like me and supported by work with industry as well. All people who are affected by this legislation have been deeply engaged.

You know, First Nations communities are just like every other community. There's a diversity of opinion. I'm sure that members opposite are hearing from some members of the leadership of some First Nations across this province. It would be a shock to me if that was not the case. It should not be a shock that they actually do hear from some leadership in the First Nations communities across the province, as has the minister, I'm sure.

What is important is that we're moving forward in order to ensure that there is a constructive relationship between the First Nations and the government of Alberta and industry, that we create the groundwork to ensure that First Nations have the opportunity to fully and in a constructive way share in the benefits of the wealth that is created by the energy industry in this province, that they continue to be full participants in the leadership and providing leadership in their own communities on their own terms in ways that are constructive for those communities. This bill takes us in that direction. Deferring this bill does not help take us in that direction, Mr. Speaker.

With that, I'd just like to make that small contribution. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you. I appreciate that the Energy minister has had many meetings and probably some very constructive discussions over the last year and indeed, it seems, in his previous life also. I wonder if he can shed some light, then. It's not just a chief. It is Grand Chief Craig Makinaw, Confederacy of Treaty Six First Nations, who had written this letter expressing extreme concern on behalf of his other member chiefs in that treaty. I just wonder if he could shed some light on why they would have such extreme opposition if indeed what the minister is saying is the case, that there has been sufficient consultation.

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, it would appear that the chief and perhaps other chiefs for whom he may be speaking – I haven't seen the letter, but I believe the suggestion is that he speaks for the group as well or a majority of the tribal council. It would appear that they have a difference of opinion with where this is going or the speed at which it's going or the direction it's going, but that doesn't mean, as I alluded to earlier, that one or two chiefs or a group of chiefs speak for all chiefs. There are 48 First Nations in this province. We need to respect the diversity of those 48 communities.

Just as the nonaboriginal community is immensely diverse, you know, no one political party speaks for all Albertans in a consistent or coherent way, nor should we expect First Nations to speak in a consistent or coherent way. They have alignment of interests, but not always are they aligned in terms of their expression of their ambition for public policy.

Ms Smith: I still am a bit confused, though, about why it is that this grand chief would say that they were provided no notice to First Nations that this legislation was imminent and that you have not consulted with First Nations regarding this particular act whatsoever. I mean, I think there's a problem here in trying to reconcile what the minister has said with what we're hearing from the members of this community.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I can say that I met with the grand chief personally. We met about three weeks ago. He was made aware of this bill. He agreed to this going forward. I explained to him why it had to go forward at this time. One of the situations they had talked about was that they wanted more time on the consultation policy itself for their draft, and I agreed to that, but they said that they understood why this bill would go forward at this time. For the grand chief to say that he wasn't aware, I have an issue with that, but the grand chief and I are meeting tomorrow, and hopefully I can resolve that matter with him tomorrow and the grand chief from Treaty 8.

Ms Smith: I also appreciate what the Energy minister had said, that perhaps one chief does not speak for all, but I think that goes to the point of why we actually need to defer this to a committee, to be able to have the broader consultation, to be able to hear from all of the chiefs so that we are actually making sure that we're proceeding. Again, if the Energy minister could clarify how his comment that we do have this diversity in the community and that therefore that means we would consult less seems to wash with what this bill is trying to achieve, which is to have more consultation and more buy-in.

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader would of course not try to impute comments to me that would never come out of my mouth. I would never suggest that because there's greater diversity, we should consult less. That's an absurd thing to say and irresponsible.

In fact, we have done extensive consultation. Members of industry have done extensive consultation and continue to. I have as the Energy minister. Our Minister of Aboriginal Affairs has been tireless in his commitment to this engagement and the consultation. This is a bold and important initiative that helps serve the interests of all Albertans and, particularly, First Nations communities to help ensure that they are able to participate in a really constructive way with the wealth-creation capacity that this province has.

The Speaker: We have about 10 seconds.

Ms Smith: I would like to acknowledge that, but I have to say that I think we would have greater certainty that we had broad-based buy-in, as he's claiming, if we actually did the full range of consultation through the course of this summer with this committee.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, the clock has hit 4:30 p.m., and I am obliged under Standing Order 4(2) to declare the Assembly adjourned until 1:30 p.m. Monday next.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:30 p.m. to Monday, May 13, at 1:30 p.m.]

Activity to May 09, 2013

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Bills numbered 1 to 199 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 200 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at (780) 427-2217. ## Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, May 13, 2013

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, let us pray. Let us pray for those who hunger not but for food alone but also for purity, sanctity, and the pursuit of justice for all. Amen.

Ladies and gentlemen, please remain standing now for the singing of our national anthem, led by M. Paul Lorieau. Please join in in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you very much.
Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have several school groups here today. Let's begin with the Minister of Human Services, followed by the Minister of Culture.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, the Minister of Health, to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of 15 students from Duggan elementary school in the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. They're seated in the public gallery. Accompanying the students is their teacher, Ms Roxanne Hamly, and educational assistant Laurie Grabia. I would ask that the students, their teacher, and the educational assistant please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture, followed by Stony Plain.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very happy to rise to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a group of 21 bright young minds from Brightview elementary school, located in my constituency of Edmonton-Glenora. This past Friday I visited their classroom, and their questions were absolutely fantastic. They're here today with their teachers, Mr. Tyson Mastel and Mrs. Joanne Landmark. I would like them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege today to stand and recognize a group of students from Muir Lake school in my constituency of Stony Plain. They're here all week participating in the School at the Legislature program. They're accompanied by their teacher, Debbie Wayken, educational assistant Denise Gibbons, and one of the parents, Fiona Majeau.

Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

Let us move on, then, to other guests. The hon. Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my honour and pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the first half of the visiting members of the Ethno-Cultural Council of Calgary. With us today from the council are those from the Vietnamese, Chinese, Ethiopian, Jamaican, Sudanese, Filipino, East Indian, and Somali-Canadian communities. I believe the first half of the group is seated in the public gallery. I would like to ask members of the Assembly to join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, followed by the Minister of Culture.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly nine volunteers and students from Project Adult Literacy Society, otherwise known as PALS. Low literacy rates are a significant problem facing Alberta. Did you know that 1 in 3 adults do not have literacy skills and 1 in 2 have low-level math skills? PALS is a community-based literacy program that addresses the learning needs of adults with low-level literacy and math skills. Their mission is changing lives through literacy, and I commend them for their work. I would ask them to please rise as I read their names: Trish Derkach, Marilyn Shannon, Shirley Sandul, Monica Das, Adam Rupp, Quentin Broadwood, Dorothy Lane, Luiting Hudson, and Ali Elhag. I ask all members to give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm also very pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly some professionals from Alberta's film industry. We have here today industry experts who are representatives from the Alberta Media Production Industries Association. I'd ask that they rise as I call their names: the board of directors president, Joe Novak; the vice-president north, Connie Edwards; director Tom Cox; and last but not least, the executive director for AMPIA, Bill Evans. I'd like to thank you for coming today and for all the excellent work you do with Alberta Culture and AMPIA. I would ask that my colleagues provide you with the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly four pharmacists who have come to Edmonton today to urge the government to halt the changes in pharmacy without proper consideration and due diligence. They are armed with a petition with over 25,000 signatures – this is just part of it – that we'll be introducing later today and throughout the week. The pharmacists are Al Hodgins, Rita Lyster, Kit Poon, and Jody Shkrobot, who is also the former head of the Canadian Pharmacists Association. I'd ask that these hard-working pharmacists please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Ibrahim Cin, Junaid Zumrutpynar, and Malik Muradov, who are here today to help us recognize and celebrate Turkish culture. They are seated in your gallery. Along with them I'd also like to introduce 43 members who are seated in the public gallery and 12 that are seated in the members' gallery, who are all here to celebrate Turkish culture. I'd ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by Lesser Slave Lake.

Mr. Webber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three guests from Neerlandia, Alberta, which is near Barrhead. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they stand: Mr. Wes Werkman and his wife, Gloria Werkman, and their beautiful five-year-old daughter, Saige Werkman. Saige Werkman at the age of six months had a heart transplant at the U of A Stollery hospital here in Edmonton. She is now five years old. She is a beautiful young lady, and she is ready to take on the world. I had a lovely meeting with them today. They are in strong support of my bill, Bill 207, the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, which will come up for second reading tomorrow. I thank the three of you for coming out. Please give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, I'm so pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a group of very hard-working elected individuals. The municipal district of Lesser Slave River reeve and council members are here and were very instrumental in the fire recovery process in their area. I'm sure they didn't get elected thinking that they'd have to deal with the devastation of the century, but they did and in a collaborative and positive way. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they rise as I call their names: Reeve Denny Garratt, Darcie Acton, Jeff Commins, Murray Kerik, Darren Fulmore, Brian Rosche, and Robert Esau. I'd ask this Assembly to give them a warm, warm welcome.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, let's proceed elsewhere.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Thank-you Letter from MD of Lesser Slave River

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In May 2011 the town of Slave Lake and the Sawridge First Nation and communities within the municipal district of Lesser Slave River were subjected to major wildfires. In this time of crisis and need this government stepped up and provided much-needed support for the people and communities of Lesser Slave River.

I've been asked by the municipal district of Lesser Slave River to read their letter thanking the Premier and the government of Alberta for all they did during these difficult times.

Dear Premier and Government of Alberta,

On behalf of the Council, staff and residents of the MD of Lesser Slave River, I would like to personally extend our sincere thanks to those that helped us the most in our time of need, the Alberta Government.

In our battle against the natural disaster that shook our community – the 2011 wildfires – the Alberta Government was a tower of strength. When the extent of our fires became apparent, our residents' safety was quickly placed above all else and resources committed to assist with rescue and disaster relief missions. This wasn't politics, this was real leadership.

I have to say, and this is something every elected official and every resident of Alberta should know: if you're in trouble and you don't have any idea how to start solving it, you couldn't live in a better province. We could not have fought the fires, brought our people back, developed interim accommodation and begun to rebuild our communities without the huge contribution made by the Alberta government. We were provided with people, materials, logistical support, and of course, funding. I don't think any other province or state in North America could have done it as well, and as quickly. I can't begin to express how grateful we are.

And even today, the Alberta Government continues to be a tremendous support. The funding that was given to help with ongoing infrastructure and social recovery is what has carried us through. It allowed us to develop a strong partnership with the Town of Slave Lake and Sawridge First Nation and helped us get our region back on our feet and to make it better than before.

To that end, I'm pleased to say that we are now moving forward. In what will be the two-year anniversary of the event, I believe our region has recovered. We are now safer, stronger and more resilient, and this is a result of your support.

Again, thank you for your thoughtfulness and generosity, and for the significant role you played in helping our community heal.

Sincerely,

Denny Garratt, reeve of the MD of Lesser Slave River, and council members

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, followed by Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Generic Drug Pricing

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The problems around generic drug pricing just aren't going away, and now everyday Albertans are getting fed up.

Earlier today we introduced Jody Shkrobot to the media. He's also seated here in the gallery this afternoon. Jody is a pharmacist from here in Edmonton and also served a term as president of the Canadian Pharmacists Association in 2011-2012. He is here to present a petition to the Legislature with 25,000 signatures on it urging the government to ditch its across-the-board plan to force pharmacists to sell generic drugs at 18 per cent of brand name prices.

For months Wildrose has joined advocacy groups and pharmacists in sounding the alarm over what these centralized price controls will mean for patients. We argued that by forcing pharmacists to sell a product at such an unreasonably low rate across the board, government was risking the viability of pharmacies and ultimately the availability of medicines for Alberta patients. We said it would result in drug shortages and price spikes as drug companies struggle and in some cases outright refuse to co-operate with a plan that they weren't consulted on.

Not surprisingly, the government said that we were fearmongering. But here we are today, and less than 2 per cent of generic drugs are selling at the government's desired rate of 18 per cent below brand name prices. In fact, Mr. Speaker, more drugs have increased in price than have achieved the 18 per cent target.

The reality is that drug companies are trying. They've managed to bring down most drug prices to 25 per cent of brand name prices, a good solution for patients and a workable model for pharmacists, but this minister is insistent that 25 per cent isn't good enough. He is steamrolling ahead with his 18 per cent, at-all-costs approach. This is a bankrupt business model that is putting patients at risk. If this minister won't listen to us, maybe he'll listen to the 25,000 people who are telling him to listen up.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

County of Grande Prairie Sports Complex

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to rise today in order to highlight one of the largest construction projects that the county of Grande Prairie has ever undertaken, its first sports complex. The County of Grande Prairie Sportsplex opened its doors on January 2, 2013, and has been extremely well received by all of the constituents and the surrounding communities. Boasting twin NHL-size ice rinks, an indoor soccer pitch, the largest north of Calgary, and a high-tech running track plus workout facilities, this project provides the region's residents with a state-of-the-art facility to train our future sports athletes.

Moreover, the Sportsplex boosts the local economy and showcases the region as being a world-class training destination that will attract sports tourism. The facility is expected to welcome over 500,000 guests a year, including myself. When finished, it will span over 176,000 square feet, and because of its architecture and its situation close to a major highway, it will be accessible to all potential users.

In order to complete the project, funds from the county's reserves were used as well as the MSI program from the province. Our government's commitment to building Alberta through fostering the growth of families and communities is clearly evident with the County of Grande Prairie Sportsplex.

No Albertan should be prevented from being able to pursue fitness and lead a healthy lifestyle. Mr. Speaker, community facilities like the Sportsplex allow all Albertans to access the supports to live active and healthy lives, and that is why I am proud to be a part of a government that promotes this.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Fort McMurray Field Trip by Garneau Students

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise in the House today to take this opportunity to recognize 21 grade 6 students from Garneau school in Edmonton who headed up to Fort McMurray in the first week of May to learn about oil sands development and the responsibilities of the various levels of government. Most impressive was that this trip was solely on the students' initiative, and they enthusiastically undertook a significant fundraising effort in order to achieve that goal.

Garneau school is in the constituency of Edmonton-Strathcona, and I've had the opportunity to communicate to the member how impressed I was with these young men and women. They asked some very intelligent questions about the region during a Q and A session. I was joined by Mayor Melissa Blake of the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, and we were both put on the hot seat. We were grilled on a range of topics from climate change, oil sands protests, highway 63 safety, protection of animals, to environmental footprint. Perhaps the most interesting question asked was about how we would deal with the negative media attention on Fort McMurray and the oil sands. As many of you know, it's been a bone of contention for many of our residents. More often than not Fort McMurray gets painted with a single stroke, a very narrow-minded, one-sided view of the region that neglects to tell the stories of the real community.

Towards the end of our session Mayor Blake asked the students if the trip was different than what they had expected, and many hands shot up. One student thought that it would all be polluted and smelly and gross but came here, saw the clear blue sky, and was completely blown away. Family-friendly spaces, art, and extracurricular activities were some of the other comments made.

Our community leaders in Fort McMurray have held many conversations to try and change this perception of us, and it's been a tough challenge. Yet from this one visit these students have kept an open mind and formed an opinion based on what they saw, not just what they heard.

I have to thank those students for their interest and for the incredibly enlightening Q and A session. Our children are our future, and I feel at ease knowing that these intelligent young men and women will be our future generation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, we'll finish off Members' Statements shortly, but in the meantime let's go on with Oral Question Period, starting with the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Health Facilities Infrastructure

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, on Saturday I attended the Sikh parade in Calgary celebrating Vaisakhi. They had 40,000 people there and fed most of them out of the temple kitchen, which had undergone a recent $500,000 renovation. It got me thinking about another kitchen renovation, the one we've been asking about at Calgary's Foothills hospital. Now, I've done some checking around on other hospital kitchen replacements. There's one in Delaware for about $7 million. In Atlanta for $30 million they're getting an entire new floor plus new beds, a new patient recovery area, and a new kitchen. So how in the world – and I ask this question to the Infrastructure minister – can the kitchen at the Foothills cost $32 million?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, we continue to invest in health infrastructure right across this province. AHS's multiyear capital plan is submitted to government on a yearly basis, listing AHS's top 10 priorities for their budget cycle. We receive many priorities from all government departments and take each one seriously and determine what projects go forward. We can't build every project that everybody asks for – and I'm sure the opposition would be the same way – so we determine the priorities. They put in the list, and that's what we build.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is in AHS's top 10 priorities.

Mr. Speaker, here are some more: a kitchen renovation at St. Joseph's hospital in Syracuse, $6 million; the kitchen at the University of Michigan hospital, $8.5 million. Thirty-two million dollars is a staggering amount for a kitchen even in a specialized setting like the Foothills hospital. We know they've been asking for years for a kitchen replacement, yet the request gets rejected over and over again. If it's because it's too expensive, maybe someone can call the folks down in Syracuse and Delaware and get them to help us put together a cheaper plan so that we can actually get a new kitchen built at the Foothills.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, as I said, Alberta Health Services puts their priorities to Alberta Health, and they bring it to Infrastructure. This priority has not been brought to Infrastructure yet. It hasn't made it through the process, but that doesn't mean it won't be in this year's cycle. May 31 is the deadline to bring the projects forward, and it may show up this year.

This is the kind of thing that points to the need for a public prioritized project list like the Wildrose has been advocating for all infrastructure needs. The way this government operates, there is no criteria, no list, no priority, no information. If your project gets approved, they put it on a list. If the projects don't get approved, well, you don't know why. They don't know when. They don't know if. When will the government stop playing politics with infrastructure and publish a public prioritized list of projects?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, as I've said many times, the approved capital projects are on our website. Those are the projects that'll be built in the next three years. I'm not going to speculate five and 10 years down the road. It would be irresponsible because people's priorities change.

It's quite interesting, Mr. Speaker. Our capital project budget is much larger than the opposition's would be. I don't know how they would get this project done with a reduced budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: It's got mould and asbestos in the kitchen, Mr. Speaker.

Restructuring of PDD Services

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this government is undertaking a massive restructuring of services to persons with developmental disabilities, and understandably the families affected are nervous about what the changes will mean and how their loved ones will be impacted. The minister attempts to smooth things over with calm reassurances, but it rings hollow because the minister's only answer to all of the specific questions we've been asking is in essence: trust me; it'll be fine. To the Premier: assuming there is a plan, how can such sweeping changes affecting so many vulnerable Albertans be so poorly communicated and so badly managed?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't agree with the premise of the member's question. Actually, they are well communicated. This is the implementation year of changes that have been going on and were agreed to six, seven years ago with the service providers, the families, the agencies, PDD, everybody else. So here we are. Yes, there are some nervous parents out there. There are some nervous caregivers out there. I'm travelling the province.

I'm in 20 communities in the next two weeks. We're working through our issues. I can only say again that if you need care, it will be there. If you need services, they will be there.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, letters have gone out to a number of organizations who provide PDD services that they may not be funded anymore effective July 1. A lot of organizations are in smaller centres, where resources and alternatives are scarce. Does the minister have other organizations lined up to take over these critical services for PDD clients as of July 2?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, in the interests of openness and honesty we have talked about potential worst-case-scenario numbers with some of the providers, and some of them are nervous. We do not think we're going to lose any providers. I was just in the northeast today talking to service providers. We don't think we're going to lose any. We're going to achieve contracts, and this will be fine.

Ms Smith: I guess the answer to that was no, Mr. Speaker.

The minister thinks that his promise that everyone who needs services will get services is going to satisfy clients and families and staff, but it won't. He's travelling the province soon, as he mentioned, in another example of after-the-fact consultation, but isn't it a better idea to get it right before implementing sweeping changes rather than going around the province on a PDD apology tour?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is, in fact, right. We have different ideas of what consultation is. We're out there talking about the facts. They're out there talking about conjecture.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Third main set of questions.

Ms Smith: We'd love to have some facts if only the minister would provide them.

Severance Payments to Premier's Office Staff

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has boasted about her government raising the bar on accountability and transparency, but that's just in a speech. In real life they are secretive, closed, reticent, and cryptic. Take the issue of staff severance. The Premier changes staff quite regularly, we've noticed, and the departing staff get nice packages, more than $2 million so far. These severance and employment arrangements have been made public by her predecessors, but the Premier is hiding behind what she claims are privacy concerns. The Privacy Commissioner has already ruled that such arrangements must be disclosed. Will the Premier comply?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, under the leadership of our Premier this government is delivering unprecedented transparency. We delivered an expense disclosure policy that is the gold standard in Canada. We delivered whistle-blower legislation. This is a government that is not only talking about transparency; it is delivering transparency.

Ms Smith: In that case, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to the minister tabling the documents detailing the severances.

I asked about this issue in Executive Council estimates. I wanted the Premier to give us a separate line item that stated the costs and the details of who got let go and at what cost. The Premier said no at the time, but in recent media interviews she agreed to do it next year. Why is the Premier so reluctant to provide a full accounting of these kinds of expenses? How bad is it?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, on this side of the House we have a respect for independent processes. There is an independent Privacy Commissioner. That is the proper process for requests like this to be dealt with. That's exactly where it is, and that's the right process to follow.

Ms Smith: The Privacy Commissioner gave permission. They should just release it.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier's office has a pretty large staff, especially on the communications side. There's been a lot of turnover there already, but the school kids communication blunder followed by the junk mail in PC Party colours suggests that there might be more severance ahead. Will the Premier comply with the previous Privacy Commissioner's rulings and release the information about who is getting what?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the only severances I see forthcoming would be about 17 after the next election. [interjections]

Let me tell you this, Mr. Speaker. It's been a tradition not only of this government but, I imagine, all governments in this country that when a FOIP request comes in, those decisions are not political. They're never made by politicians. Information that is requested, if appropriate, is released. Please put in a specific request, and if it is appropriate according to our FOIP legislation, it shall be released.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we learned that the Premier's office has spent a whopping $2.1 million on severance payments in the past three years with absolutely no details regarding the exorbitant expense. That's a lot of money, guys. Secrecy, waste, and golden handshakes: hallmarks of this Conservative government that continue despite the new leader. To the Premier: how big are these payments, and why won't you reveal how many people received these severance payments?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, this member has been in the Legislature long enough to know how FOIP processes work. When any member of the public, media, or the opposition puts in a request, that request is reviewed by FOIP officers, and if it's appropriate, if it doesn't breach any laws, that information is routinely released. As a matter of fact, they probably cost taxpayers more than any member of our Premier's office in putting in FOIPs. They know how the process works. I'm not sure what that question is all about.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I've been in the Legislature long enough to see these guys waste a lot of taxpayer money; in fact, $586,000 in Premier's office expense severance payments in the last year alone. That's more than twice the $220,000 in funding required to keep the music enrichment program at Victoria school of the arts alive. The fact that the Premier is trying to conceal information about the cost of high turnover in her office at a time when so many programs are being cut is simply outrageous. Premier, why are golden handshakes for former staffers more important to your government than this popular and valuable music program and other programs important to Albertans?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, like with any employer, there is a rotation of staff. When there are contractual obligations, those obligations are paid. That happens in the private sector. It happens in the public sector. We treat our employees properly. However, if that particular member has any questions relevant to any settlements, if they are within the scope of legislation, if we are able to release them, we obviously will. The fact is that individuals who work for the government of Alberta expect some of their information to be kept private, but whatever is available for release will be released.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, it's a generally accepted principle in the public and private sector that high turnover is a result of either bad employees or a bad boss. To the Premier: which is it? Will you please fix the problem? It's costing us a lot of money.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to tell you that we pride ourselves on all the employees. I know that accusations often fall from the opposition, accusing employees of the government of Alberta, Alberta Health Services, and others, who work really hard every day and make great decisions and deliver great services for Albertans. But perhaps some of them don't like to work in a caustic environment like this, as caused by the opposition, so they move on, perhaps into the private sector. This government will always defend our employees. They're doing a fine job.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier's office has spent more than $2 million on severance since 2010. In the Premier's first year in office alone that number was nearly $1.3 million. Whether it's bad judgment in hiring staff in the first place or bad management once she's hired them, it doesn't matter. What matters is that this Premier obviously expects Albertans to pay for her office's outrageous severance costs without explaining who this money is going to and why. My question is to the Premier. Why won't you release the details of the outrageous severance costs of your office?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's good to know that all three opposition parties read the same newspaper. That's really good research. But that member in particular should know that if he has any questions relevant to remuneration, terms of employment, or any information relevant to the government of Alberta, there is a very transparent FOIP process. As a matter of fact, it was recently known to be the golden standard of Canadian FOIP processes. Put in a request. Ask for specific information. Don't throw spaghetti against the wall and hope that something sticks. Be specific. You shall receive the answers.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're not throwing spaghetti, but there are some meatballs involved here, I think.

This Premier's office has become a very expensive revolving door. With severance payments like this, obviously not all is well in the Premier's office. Only this government would force the opposition to go through an expensive, time-consuming process under FOIP legislation to get public information and then blame the opposition for the costs. Albertans deserve to know whose severance they're paying for and why. Will you release this information without a FOIP process, and if not, why not?

Mr. Lukaszuk: What this member is actually asking in other terms is: will you bypass the law and release information here simply because I'm politically grandstanding? The answer is no. If there is any particular information that you want access to that pertains to Albertans, employees of the government of Alberta, fine Albertans – individuals' privacy must be protected, must be secured – put in a proper request. You shall receive the answers.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, is the Deputy Premier telling us that if the government releases information that's not covered by FOIP that should be publicly disclosed and has been routinely publicly disclosed in the past, the government is breaking the law?

Mr. Lukaszuk: No, Mr. Speaker, that's not what I'm saying at all. What I'm saying is that – thank you for underlining the fact that this information is routinely released. The reason it is routinely released is because proper FOIP requests are being put in. If you put in a proper FOIP request – again, just like you said earlier, routinely that information is released – it shall be released to you as well.

Bathing Protocols for Persons in Care

Mrs. Towle: Mr. Speaker, there's another government failure affecting seniors in care. You'll recall that the government finally agreed with the opposition that one bath per week was unconscionable and implemented a two-bath-per-week policy for all seniors in care. That was the promise, but the reality is very different. Seniors in care are not getting two baths a week, and they're lucky to even get one bath per week. Minister, help me understand how this works. You're the minister, your government made the promise of two baths per week, yet it's still not happening. How can this be interpreted as anything other than another broken promise?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, I find it interesting from this member that she, too, like I and every member here, wants the best that we can do for our seniors in this province. The bathing issue was brought to the table. We responded, and we said that over time this would be resolved. The bathing issue was defined as baths, showers, sponge baths, full bed baths and would follow the care plan that was given by professionals and families that were consulted with.

Mrs. Towle: Wow. What a very disappointing answer. They're not even getting two baths a week, two showers a week, two sponge baths, however you want to do it.

Given that recently in a facility in central Alberta a senior was forced to go an entire week without a bath after having an accident because one of the two bath team members called in sick and given that this means the senior didn't get a bath that week at all, does the government honestly think that it's acceptable for a senior to sit in their own mess for more than a week after promising two baths a week?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, the only thing that's acceptable is the best possible care that our seniors and our loved ones can get in our facilities across this province. We have caring, loving people that take care of our seniors. We have policies in place to make sure that the seniors get that care. I can assure you there's not a week that goes by that I don't travel to a seniors' facility, that I don't question staff, that I don't question residents, that I don't question families, and that I don't get questions and concerns, too. I have to tell you that nowhere else in this country do seniors get the quality care that they deserve as in Alberta.

Mrs. Towle: Let's be clear. These questions are coming from all over Alberta, and they're taking care of their loved ones, and those front-line staff workers are taking care of their loved ones. Given that we all agree that two baths a week in a seniors' facility is not a luxury and given that this government made a promise of two baths per week and seniors are barely even getting one, how can the minister expect anyone to believe this claim that no one cares more about seniors than the Premier?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you again. Not to politicize this issue – this issue is very, very serious, and it's about the care of our loved ones in our facilities – but I will strive to do everything I can to the last breath in my body to make sure that the seniors in this province get only the best care possible, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Market Access for Alberta Products

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Building market access to ensure we get fair value for our natural resources is economic job one for this government. However, there are small and medium-sized businesses and agricultural producers throughout this province who rely on more diverse markets for their products. My question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. What are you doing to support the needs of these business owners?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dallas: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is correct. When we speak about bolstering markets, we're talking about a broad range of products and services available to businesses right throughout Alberta. There are several departments, including my own, that can provide services to small and medium-sized businesses, whether they're in the agricultural community, manufacturing, technology, a number of different areas. Of course, they can utilize our trade offices internationally to support that. Last year 640 businesses did just that.

Mr. Casey: Thank you. Given that information and access to these services is often difficult to find, what is the minister doing to ensure services are available to small-business owners?

Mr. Dallas: Well, Mr. Speaker, I recently had the privilege of visiting around Alberta to 10 different communities, talking with small and medium-sized businesses, community economic developers, community leaders about the opportunities and about what government can do to help them get ready to export. These communities learned more about the services that the Alberta government provides. As well, we provided an overview of international trade opportunities, a presentation on Alberta's economic picture, and, of course, took a look at services that were available.

Mr. Casey: To the same minister: given that we're in competition with other regions and countries in the world, what is his department doing to break into markets like India and China, where a rapidly growing middle class clearly needs the food and energy Alberta can supply?

Mr. Dallas: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is right. We are in a very competitive global economy. Of course, the timing of the question is perfect as our Premier's vision is that we need a more focused, strategic process for the province's international relations. Very soon we'll be introducing a renewed international strategy, and of course we'll make sure that we're working towards common goals and making the most of our opportunities in these new markets.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Calgary-South East.

Postsecondary Education Program Eliminations

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Last month in response to a question about program cuts at Alberta colleges and universities the minister of advanced education said that no program would be eliminated without his approval. Well, we are starting to see the impact being felt in postsecondary institutions from cuts. A quick count shows five institutions have released their planned program cuts, and that would result in 28 programs being cut or curtailed. We need clarity for students trying to plan their future and for postsecondary institutions trying to set their year's agenda. Will the minister be signing off on these cuts, yes or no?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, last week that member scheduled a meeting with me in my office to sit down and talk about those things. He simply didn't show up. It's unfortunate because I would have had the time to explain it to him.

However, the process remains the same. Colleges and universities will be sending forward a list of programs that they're planning to eliminate, and then the department and my office inclusively will be reviewing that list and making sure that programs that are eliminated are ones that can otherwise be reasonably delivered to students in a different fashion or ones that are simply not subscribed to by many students.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, your point of order at 2:13:30 has been noted.

Proceed with the second question.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, I assure you that if I had scheduled a meeting, I would have been at it. I did try and do a meeting when the budget was announced. The minister was on a beach at the time if you'll recall.

Mr. Speaker, given that many of these potential cuts involve courses that train for positions in desperately needed front-line services such as licensed practical nursing, health care aides, and pharmacy technicians how can the minister say that this is good for students, much less the province, when there is a workers' shortage in many of these occupations in Alberta?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, on the other hand, did show up for that meeting. We both waited for that member. He did find out that we will be looking at programs from the vantage point of: what was the level of enrolment? We will be looking at whether these programs can be delivered otherwise, through different institutions. But at the end of the day there will be some difficult decisions to be made, and we will be making them in view of what's best for the student.

Mr. McAllister: That gets us to the heart of the matter, what's best for the student, Mr. Speaker.

Given that we are losing programs in practical nursing, engineering, disability studies, aging studies, prenatal and neonatal nursing, sign language, health care, just to name a few, and given that we still haven't seen a cut list from three other colleges and five universities, including the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary, aren't you concerned, Minister, that your quest to find savings is hurting students and, in turn, the Alberta economy?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I can't be more clear. No programs have been lost. The review hasn't happened.

This is rather rich coming from the Wildrose Party, that wanted us to cut deeper and more drastically. Imagine what programs would actually definitely be eliminated if we listened to their budget. But what's more interesting is that advanced education doesn't even appear in their budget document, so that member has very little credibility to speak about cuts in education.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Road Construction Safety

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today. Alberta is a beautiful place, and it's definitely beautiful in the summertime. All Albertans are out and about and planning their summer and getting ready for a summer vacation. You know what? This province is facing a lot of growth, a hundred thousand people a year. To the Minister of Transportation. We expect our roads and bridges to take us where we want safely and securely, but, you know, the people that actually build this province, the Albertans on the road doing that work: what are we doing to keep them safe, Minister?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Public safety is one of the Premier's priorities. This morning I had the privilege of launching the Partners in Road Construction Safety annual event. That's very important because most years there are a thousand incidences of collisions in actual construction areas. We've got Albertans out there working to make the roads safer, to make them more efficient both for our economy and for our quality of life. We work with partnerships. One of the most important partnerships is with the drivers on Alberta roads.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, given that I've been a paramedic and I've gone to those scenes where people have been working on the roads and have been fatally hurt, can the minister explain to this House and to all Albertans how they can be part of the traffic safety solution?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, we get to talk about this all the time, and it's important that we do because it's an important topic. I guess one thing that I would say to Alberta drivers is: hang up the phone. That's a good start. I would say: pay attention. When you're in construction areas, just obey the flag people. Actually, it's sad that I'm saying this out loud and that I have to, but the fact remains that a certain number of Albertans actually don't do that. Because of that, some of our workers get killed, get injured. We're not asking; we're demanding. Through the Justice minister we'll ask the police to go out and write as many tickets as we can because our workers deserve no less.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, everything starts with a plan, and as Albertans get out there to plan their summer holidays, can the minister tell me how Albertans can go online and find out where road construction is taking place so they can plan effectively?

Mr. McIver: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. You know, one of the things that we do is that we ask drivers, when they can, particularly if they're going to be in a time crunch, to do a little research to find out what's going on. We recommend that they go to the website 511.alberta.ca. They'll find orange pylons on the map there that tell them where construction sites are. They'll get road conditions. In fact, some Albertans are catching on. Since we launched this program, there have been more than 33 million web hits, more than 250,000 phone calls, 10,000 Twitter followers. We would encourage all Albertans, particularly during the summer season with lots of construction, to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

All-terrain Vehicle Safety

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A year ago the Minister of Transportation said that he would carefully examine the costs and benefits of mandatory helmet use for all-terrain vehicle use in Alberta. An average of 14 deaths occur every year in Alberta, including children. The Canadian Paediatric Society and the Alberta Centre for Injury Control & Research have proven that helmets save lives, reduce severe injury, and reduce health costs. They, along with 84 per cent of Albertans in this government's own survey in 2008, said that they want mandatory helmets. To the minister: why does the government continue to drag its feet on this basic public health issue?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the member for the question, and I know it's coming from an honest place from him. I actually have done what I said to the hon. member. I've looked into this. But also on the same survey 93 per cent of the respondents said that it's the responsibility of parents, adults, and guardians to ensure their children use helmets. Nonetheless, we are not finished doing our research. We are going down this road. We're going to try to make a decision that's in the best interests of all Albertans, and when we do, we will most certainly announce it to this House and to all Albertans.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back to the minister: what information exactly is the minister looking for to make this decision?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I understand the member's impatience, but it's important we get this right. I would also say that while this is about public safety, I'm a motorcycle rider, and one thing I can tell you is that already this year we've heard of several deaths of motorcycle riders. You have to wear a helmet to ride a motorcycle in this province. I only say that to indicate the fact that helmets will not solve all the deaths. They are a piece of public safety equipment, and they're important. But we have an education program. We encourage parents and responsible adults to behave properly, and that's the number one thing, but we'll do the research on the others still.

Dr. Swann: Well, it's a puzzle to me, Mr. Speaker, what extra research the minister is looking for unless it's political. This is a life-saving measure. We're talking about children dying every year. What is a life worth, Mr. Minister?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, you know, there are two things Albertans that want to be safe can rely on, for adults their own common sense and for children their parents. Helmets are something we are looking at, but no one should think that it's any kind of magic elixir, a silver bullet. A lot of the deaths on ATVs are from crushing injuries, where the vehicle rolls over on top of them. Helmets in many cases won't stop this. Nonetheless, the hon. member has a legitimate concern. We're legitimately going through the process, and when we get finished going through the process, as I said earlier, we will announce it to Albertans and to this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Aboriginal Consultations

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This PC government failed to consult with First Nations while developing legislation about a consultation levy with First Nations. The irony of this is so overwhelming that even the most trusting and optimistic observers are rolling their eyes. To the Minister of Aboriginal Relations: can you tell this House and First Nations why, when developing legislation regarding consultation with First Nations, they failed to consult First Nations?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, I won't talk about the levy because it's being debated before the House right now, but I can tell you that in the last year I've spent all my time on the landscape visiting with First Nations communities, meeting with Métis settlements, talking to chiefs and communities. I can tell you that one of the Premier's mandates to me is to make sure that we put a proper consultation process in place that deals with the socioeconomic problems that our First Nations face in this province and this country. I can say to you that we will continue to consult with First Nations, and we will make sure we have programs and the educational tools in place to make sure First Nations have a proper place at the table.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, given that on Friday the Minister of Aboriginal Relations told this Assembly that this PC government had consulted with treaties 6 and 8 and given that treaties 6 and 8 stated that they were not consulted on this government's newest policy affecting a First Nations consultation levy, is the minister calling treaties 6 and 8 liars?

The Speaker: Let's be careful with our words, hon. members.

Minister, would you wish to dignify that with an answer?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can say to you that I have consulted with Treaty 7, Treaty 8, and Treaty 6 at the grand chief level. I can tell you that we've talked about the levy. I can tell you that we've talked about the levy within our technicians' meetings with the three different treaty organizations. We've talked to the chiefs about the levy. If there is any issue, there might be some misinformation between the meetings between the technicians and the chiefs. But I can tell you that since we've started this consultation process, we've been very clear with the First Nations about the levy, and we've been very clear to industry about the levy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, that's not what they're telling the opposition.

Given that for years this PC government has refused to treat First Nations as equal partners or to engage them in meaningful consultation and given that First Nations are fed up with being ignored and patronized by this government, to the same minister: when will this government end its hypocritical and dishonest relationship with First Nations and finally treat them as equal partners?

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't like the word "dishonest," and I think maybe the member should be careful with some of the words he uses in his questioning.

I will say this. We have a very healthy relationship with the First Nations in this province, and we continue to build that relationship. I can tell you that our Premier and her cabinet met with the First Nations on December 1 of last year. I can tell you that I've visited now 30 First Nations communities in this province. I can tell you that the respect and the trust is growing, and we will continue to work with our First Nations partners to make sure they have a seat at the table and that we solve the socioeconomic problems that they're facing today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Generic Drug Pricing

Mr. Saskiw: This government's centralized price controls on generic drugs has backfired. Albertans have been hit in the pocketbook with dramatic price spikes for some medications, and the program has failed to meet its targets. Today Jody Shkrobot, an Edmonton pharmacist and the former president of the Canadian Pharmacists Association, is speaking out. He has brought a petition to the Legislature with more than 25,000 signatures on it urging the government to reconsider this risky scheme. To the associate minister of Health: if you won't listen to pharmacists, will you at least listen to the 25,000 everyday Albertans who are begging you to back down?

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the comments. To the people that have come here today to watch this question, I want to tell you that we will strive to reduce drug prices for all Albertans. We believe that there is an opportunity for some cost savings for all Albertans in this venture. We know that in our first month of drug price reductions Albertans have seen savings and will continue to.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the associate minister of Health: given that pharmacists are trying to co-operate with your reckless plan, will you stop forcing this bankrupt business model on pharmacies that is needlessly putting patients at risk? Please answer the question.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, I think the member is trying to get to the point that there are reported drug shortages. Through this plan there will be absolutely no drugs that will be delisted when there's not an alternative in place.

Maybe the member would like to come out to Whitecourt for the opening of the new drugstore that we have in our community. There are still business opportunities that our druggists see and our pharmacists see. They are valued members of our communities. They are valued businesspeople. I've heard from many of them that there's an opportunity with the drug price reduction.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the associate minister of Health: given that your reckless and centralized plan is causing administrative nightmares for pharmacists with constant and unpredictable changes to the drug list, will you hit the brakes on this plan, replace it with something workable for pharmacists, and for a change ensure affordable and accessible medicine for all Albertans? Please answer the question, sir.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you to the member for the question. I think that, like his leader, we do agree, when pharmacists aren't in the audience, that savings for Albertans are very, very important. We know that overall drug prices have come down and will continue to come down. This is very, very important. We think that there are savings of up to $90 million of Alberta taxpayers' hard-earned money. We respect that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Inquiries into Violation of Legislation

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are for the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General. The Election Act and the Conflicts of Interest Act lay out a process whereby an investigation can be launched into specific violations of the legislation. How is it that anyone in Alberta can make accusations against another Albertan when the sole purpose may be to besmirch their name?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Both the elections legislation and the conflicts of interest legislation allow for the findings to be posted online. The purpose of the legislation, again, is to ensure that we have an independent authority deciding these. It's not to run people's names through the mud. At the end of the day if that's been done, anybody in the Assembly who has done this inadvertently or advertently should just simply go and apologize.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, is there a mechanism to offload the costs of an investigation, especially if it's found to be more of a witch hunt than an investigation?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, I definitely agree that there have been witch hunts in this area as well. Unfortunately, an unintended consequence here is that they are paid for by the taxpayer. These are offices that are funded by the taxpayer. The least the individuals could do is to simply go and apologize. I'm not suggesting that they resign, but we need an apology.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, if government money is involved, how do we prevent this leakage of government dollars to frivolous claims?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, there actually is a screening process, in which case the independent authority here, be it the conflict-of-interest commissioner or people at Elections Alberta, can actually punt claims, and it has happened before. Realistically, again, I think that every person in this Chamber should act honourably and not submit frivolous or vexatious claims. Let's let the process work itself independently.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Edmonton-Riverview.

Nordegg Wildfire

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday residents in the hamlet of Nordegg were put on a one-hour evacuation notice due to an out-of-control forest fire. From Thursday through Friday no updates appeared on the ESRD website. Given the immediate danger why wasn't the ESRD website updated with current information in a timely fashion?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We were working very carefully with the community, with the reeve, and the council to make sure that they had all the resources that they needed. Job one for us is to make sure that the citizens are protected, that we get the fires under control, and that we do everything we can to help the rural and urban municipalities get the situation under control. Then we make sure that everyone else is notified. They have done an excellent job: our wildfire teams, all emergency people, and both municipalities.

Mr. Anglin: I'm not talking about the wildfire teams.

Given that on Saturday afternoon residents were told that the fire had been contained and less than an hour later a notice of evacuation was posted on the website, can the minister explain why residents that voluntarily left their homes were directed back into harm's way?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, this just speaks to how little this member understands the situation. We cannot control Mother Nature. Although we may want to, we don't have control. We worked with the community to make sure all the systems were in place in the event the winds changed. We thought the winds would change; they did change. I was there last evening, Mr. Speaker. I was at the EOC, at the evacuation centre, and at the SRD building, making sure that they had everything they needed in place. That community and the people that worked and are continuing to work on that situation are doing an outstanding job. Shame on this member for not commending them for that.

Mr. Anglin: Shame on you for putting my friends in harm's way.

Knowing the lessons we learned from the Slave Lake fire of a couple of years ago, can the minister explain how the residents that do not have telephones, cellphones, Internet, or Twitter get information under these emergency conditions?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, shame on him for that comment.

The county has worked extremely hard, as have SRD and the emergency management system, to make sure that all of those constituents and residents were taken care of. The Red Cross was there last evening, and if the member had stopped in, he might have seen that. They have done an outstanding job working over the four days so that in the event – and unfortunately that was the event that happened yesterday – that we had to evacuate, everybody, first and foremost, was taking care of the people and their pets and making sure that they were safe.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by Medicine Hat.

Postsecondary Institutions Land-use Regulation

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under the Post-secondary Learning Act there are three Alberta universities – Lethbridge, Calgary, Alberta – that have an exemption from local planning processes. The associated land-use regulation lays out that primarily commercial development is not exempt. The regulation also outlines consultation requirements. To the Deputy Premier, Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education: with the expiry of the land-use regulation, will you commit to a consultation process with the communities and municipalities about potential changes to the regulation?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the short answer is yes, most definitely. But I have to qualify it with the fact that the existing regulation actually has worked quite well in most areas of the province, and I imagine that universities and neighbours of our fine universities have done very well by each other. There have been situations where from time to time there was a conflict, as often occurs when a new development takes place, where perhaps some additional consultation would have helped. We will review this regulation because at the end of the day we want our communities to be welcoming of universities and for both of them to work together.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's been a lot of disagreement about what consultation is. Will the minister provide clarification on what constitutes consultation under the current regulation? Is it simply providing information after the fact about what has been decided, or is it involving the stakeholders in the process?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, at the end of the day, we want to make sure that the consultation is meaningful and that input from both parties – the developer, in this case the university, and the neighbours – is taken into consideration and also provides the basis for how land will be developed. We expect universities, much like we expect any developer in the province of Alberta, to engage with their potential future neighbours because at the end of the day they will have to live side by side for many, many years to come.

Mr. Young: What are the timelines for this consultation, and will you commit to working with the community organizations South Campus Neighbourhood Coalition and Preserve Garneau, that were formed in direct response to this exemption, when you're conducting this review of the regulation?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, as with all consultations, we will open them to the general public, and those who are interested will be more than welcome to participate. So if there are groups – and I know there are some – who are organized around particular developments, they will have ample opportunity to provide us input. Also, the universities and other neighbours will be giving us information that will be required to draft the new regulation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Restructuring of PDD Services

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's cuts to day programs for vulnerable Albertans are causing fear and confusion. A resident in my constituency doesn't know what she's going to do with her adult son after these cuts take effect. He has Down syndrome, diabetes, and celiac disease, and he wants to enter the workforce but simply can't without the added supports from the front-line groups that are being cut. The PDD minister's cross-your-fingers-and-hope-for-the-best approach is a failure of leadership. Will the minister admit that he has botched this service transition, delay the July 1 deadline, and make sure that Albertans' fears are addressed?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I think I pretty clearly signalled that we're out there working with the service providers, talking to them. We're talking to families as well. I understand the concerns that are out there. We believed that we could achieve a July 1 deadline, and in some respects I still believe that, but I also said pretty clearly in here and out there that we need to work together with the service providers. I clearly get that transition is an issue, and I'm working on it.

Mr. Pedersen: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister was practically booed out of a recent meeting in Calgary because he couldn't provide essential details of his transition plan, can he now fill us in on where he is taking these programs, or is he just making it up as he goes along?

Mr. Oberle: I was not practically booed out of a meeting in Calgary, Mr. Speaker, and I don't recall accidentally wandering into a Wildrose meeting, so I'm not sure what the member is talking about.

Mr. Pedersen: Mr. Speaker, given that this minister's best response to the pending July 1 changes is "We'll see how the transition goes," does the minister not realize that his own lack of confidence and planning is causing a world of distress and worry for affected Albertans?

Mr. Oberle: I absolutely do realize that, and I think I just said that a minute ago, Mr. Speaker. I absolutely do realize the concerns that are out there, and we're working to address them. I've talked to a heck of a lot more people than that hon. member has, and I will continue to do that. We're going to work with the people.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Farmers' Markets

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are very proud of our agricultural industry and the innovation of our producers in developing markets for their locally grown products. I and my family alike enjoy going to the popular Alberta farmers' markets, but a good business case needs good metrics. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. Can you give us an indication of the economic value of farmers' markets?

Mr. Olson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. The farmers' markets, as I'm sure we are all aware because we observe it, are becoming more and more popular. Just even in the last number of years they've actually tripled in their value. Since 2004 they've tripled in size to about $724 million worth of business, and $600 million of that is for locally grown produce, locally made products, so obviously it's something that Albertans value greatly.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that this sector of the agricultural economy has such a huge impact, what is the ministry doing to further develop and promote farmers' markets?

Mr. Olson: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're supporting farmers' markets in a number of ways. We provide advice and support through my department. We also have been undertaking a study just to see what other types of initiatives, what other types of options might be appropriate. We're looking at things like farm retail and agricultural box programs, specialty restaurants, those types of things. My understanding is that the study is complete, and we're now looking at these options and seeing how we might be able to help. But it's certain that the regional exhibitions and other community groups that are running these are seeing just an explosion of interest.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my understanding that Albertans within the urban centres are able to visit farmers' markets throughout the year. In your study will we be able to see what will assist in creating these farmers' markets in the winter in the rural areas as well?

Mr. Olson: Well, Mr. Speaker, it would make sense that in the rural areas, where the produce is coming from, it should be available in the winter. I'm sure that that will happen; it already is happening. I know from my own experience. This is something that's growing. We're seeing more and more markets opening. Just for the May long weekend, now, we'll see a lot of them opening. There are 130 authorized farmers' markets. Many of them are now operating year-round. They're certainly working year-round. If somebody wants to know where they can find a farmer's market, there is a website. It's called www.sunnygirl.ca, all small case.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, through your good co-operation 102 questions and answers were delivered today. That is a proud moment for all of you.

Secondly, the point of order enunciated by Airdrie at 2:13:30 has been withdrawn by the member himself, so there will be no point of order later.

Before we go back to Members' Statements, might we have your consent to revert briefly to introductions at this time? Is anyone opposed to that?

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you two members of the WCB that are visiting us today, Janet Welch and Laurie Dobbs. Janet Welch is the manager of government relations with the WCB. With her is Laurie Dobbs, one of the three government relations advisors. Janet and her team have many years of experience. Janet has been with the organization 16 years. Laurie has 23 years of experience. Obviously, they both started when they were 12. They take pride in their role of assisting all MLAs with WCB inquiries. I'd ask them both to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others?

If not, then in 22 seconds from now we will resume Members' Statements, and we'll start with Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Calgary-McCall.

Skills Canada Alberta Competition

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really excited about an event that's taking place this week. I'd like to recognize the competitors, their families, certainly the sponsors always, the volunteers, and the organizers of the 2013 provincial Skills competition. It's taking place Wednesday and Thursday this week. The nearly 700 competitors from across the province are competing in more than 40 trades and technology events from website development and robotics to culinary arts and cabinetmaking.

These competitions are high school and postsecondary related, mostly students who have demonstrated exceptional skill, determination, and commitment. They know that a career in the skilled trades is a great choice and wanted to put the knowledge and expertise they've gained to the ultimate test. They're gathering at the Edmonton Expo Centre at Northlands in the hopes of achieving goals that they have set for themselves. I welcome all to drop in. For some this could mean earning an opportunity to represent Team Alberta at the national Skills competition in Vancouver next month.

The provincial Skills competition is a wonderful showcase of the value and importance of the skilled trades and technology in our province. It speaks highly to the calibre of Alberta's youth, our schools and postsecondary institutions, and the strength of the province's apprenticeship and industry training system.

Through this competition young people have an opportunity to build on the skills they've learned through initiatives like the registered apprenticeship program, career and technology studies, dual credit programs, and technical training in our postsecondary institutions. They are learning leadership, teamwork, problem-solving skills. This will help them prepare for future careers as skilled trades professionals, business owners, managers, teachers, and instructors.

Once again I'd like to offer good luck to all the competitors and my sincerest thanks to Skills Canada Alberta, the volunteers who are working so hard to make this happen, and to the many sponsors of the competition.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Asian Heritage Month

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May is Asian Heritage Month, a time to celebrate the contributions of immigrants from dozens of countries in Asia who have been choosing to make Canada their home for more than a hundred years. We are a nation of immigrants, and Canada is richer for the many rich contributions of the Asian community in areas such as business, science, engineering, and the arts.

One of the reasons immigrants have been able to enjoy such success in this country is that governments have helped by providing opportunities for newcomers to move to Canada in the first place and by providing ESL and settlement services, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, we are seeing governments at the federal and provincial levels move away from these good policies. The federal government has made it more difficult for people to become permanent residents, but they have allowed an increase in temporary foreign workers, men and women who are often exploited.

Alberta Liberals want to see more permanent residents, Mr. Speaker. If somebody is good enough to work here, he or she is good enough to settle here. We also want to see an increase in ESL funding so that all newcomers can gain the language skills they need to integrate into their new communities and to reach their full potential. I'm an immigrant myself, and I know how important these programs are.

Mr. Speaker, Asian Heritage Month is a great time to remember the contributions of immigrants and their children to this great country. Let us strengthen the programs which help to make that happen so that new immigrants can build on the contributions of those who came before them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: Hon. members, I think I have a couple of indications here of petitions to be presented. If there are petitions to be presented, could you please ensure that among the first words you use are these, that "this petition has been approved as to form by Parliamentary Counsel," and then go on.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to present a petition, with the appropriate number of copies, with 1,560 signatures and approved by Parliamentary Counsel. The petition demands that government keep the Michener Centre "open for the vulnerable Albertans with severe developmental disabilities who have called Michener home for decades, which would allow them to live out their lives with peace, dignity and stability." This petition shows how this particular broken promise is out of touch with the priorities of people at Michener Centre.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. member, has that been approved as to form by Parliamentary Counsel? That's what I was asking.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah, it sure has.

The Speaker: It has?

Mr. Eggen: I did say that as well.

The Speaker: Okay. Thank you.

Calgary-McCall, let's try your version.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a petition to the Legislative Assembly brought forth by concerned Alberta pharmacists and their patients. This petition has been approved as to form by Parliamentary Counsel. This petition was signed by thousands of people from across Alberta urging the government to "implement policy that will ensure that the access to and quality of the services currently provided by community pharmacies and pharmacists in Alberta is preserved.”

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your leave, I have two petitions that have been reviewed and approved by Parliamentary Counsel. I rise today to table a petition, this chunk of it, that has been signed by over 12,000 Albertans. It reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to implement policy that will ensure that the access to and quality of the services . . . provided by community pharmacies and pharmacists in Alberta is preserved.

That’s one of them.

The second petition I have, that has also been approved, simply maintains the same statement, but at the end there’s a slight difference. It states that the policy be maintained rather than preserved.

The third petition that I have is a petition that was collected in the constituency of Drumheller-Stettler and states:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to implement policy that will ensure that the access to and quality of the services currently provided by community pharmacies and pharmacists in Alberta is preserved.

There are 1,173 signatures from that particular constituency.

I have a final petition that is, I believe, from the constituency of Banff-Cochrane, and there are a bunch of signatures from Lethbridge as well. It also states that they want the current policies to be preserved.

I think the number of these signatures from all across Alberta demonstrates the need for the government to reconsider its ill-advised approach.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This petition has been approved as to form, and it is to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta in the Legislature assembled:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the [Alberta] Legislative Assembly to keep Michener Centre in Red Deer open for the vulnerable Albertans with severe developmental disabilities who have called Michener home for decades, which would allow them to live out their lives with peace, dignity and stability.

I have the requisite number of copies with 1,560 signatures each.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, can we assume that your petitions were all approved as to form?

Mr. Saskiw: Yes. Every single one of them. Thank you.

The Speaker: Every one? Thank you.
Are there others?

Hon. members, just before we proceed on with the next section, could I beg your indulgence to return briefly to Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees? Yes? Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Standing Committee on Private Bills has had certain bills under consideration and wishes to report as follows. The committee recommends that Bill Pr. 1, Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Canada Act, proceed in the Assembly with amendments and that Bill Pr. 2, Wild Rose Agricultural Producers Amendment Act, 2013, proceed in the Assembly with amendments. As part of this report I will be tabling five copies of the recommended amendments to Bill Pr. 1 and Bill Pr. 2. I request the concurrence of the Assembly in these recommendations.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the member who has just spoken has requested concurrence in the report he just read. Those of you who concur, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Speaker: Those who do not, please say no. So ordered and so carried.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to give oral notice of the introduction of Bill 26, the Assurance for Students Act.

I would also give oral notice of a second motion.

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 77(2), Bill 26, Assurance for Students Act, may be advanced two or more stages in one day and that if Bill 26 has not yet been introduced, then immediately following the passage of this motion, the Assembly shall revert to Introduction of Bills for the introduction of Bill 26, Assurance for Students Act.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture, followed by the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate numbers of copies of a letter sent to the Edmonton Journal and Calgary Herald, that was printed today. The letter was written by Bill Evans, the executive director of Alberta Media Production Industries Association, AMPIA, who was introduced earlier. It is a response to an article printed in the Journal and the Herald on May 8 titled Film Tax Credit Earns All-party Support. This letter is intended to clear up some inaccuracies that AMPIA found within that article, and I believe it will bring some clarity and understanding to recent discussions in this House regarding tax credits for the film industry.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m very excited today to rise and table some important information about worker safety in our province. The WCB runs a partnership in injury reduction, PIR, program in concert with Alberta Human Services, industry partners, safety associations, employers, and labour groups. PIR offers premium incentives to registered employers who obtain a certificate of recognition, and those employers can earn rebates of up to 20 per cent by reducing the number and impact of workplace injuries.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to have two tablings in regard to this initiative. First is a list of 37 award winners, who were invited to luncheon banquets in Edmonton and Calgary.

The second is a list of over 9,000 employers who received rebates in WCB premiums. Mr. Speaker, those over 9,000 employers will be sharing over $89 million in PIR refunds this year. My personal thanks from this government to those great employers out there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to table a letter sent to the Minister of Human Services from a woman who has provided quality community access programs to adults living with developmental disabilities in Lethbridge for more than 25 years. She is very concerned about this government's cuts and believes they will bring about a negative quality of life to those who access her programs.

Thank you.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago during question period the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View misled the House and advised that he never had a meeting scheduled in my office and de facto insinuated that I am misleading the House. Here is a letter sent from the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View's office indicating that he is happy to meet with me on the 7th of May at 9 o'clock in the morning. The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner had shown up for that meeting; the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View had not.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton Centre, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling here that is around the Michener Centre, put together by the friends of Michener Centre. It's done in the form of a petition, but it's not in order to be presented to the House as a petition. They are asking the Legislative Assembly to keep Michener Centre in Red Deer open for the vulnerable Albertans with severe development disabilities who have called Michener home for decades, which would allow them to live out their lives with peace, dignity and stability.

I'm tabling the requisite five copies of that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Lacombe-Ponoka, please.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table three e-mails that my office received. Two letters I quoted from last week when we were speaking on the bare-land condo issue. The third e-mail I received this morning from Anne Murgg about the impending closure of the Michener Centre. She states that closing Michener Centre is "the worst thing this government can do . . . Closing Michener center will be devastating to the people that have called this home." I have the requisite number of copies.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? Hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, did you have a tabling?

Ms Calahasen: Yes, I've got a tabling, Mr. Speaker. This is five copies of the letter I read on behalf of the MD of Lesser Slave River in my member's statement earlier today, for any individual to be able to have access to this wonderful, wonderful thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Lukaszuk, Deputy Premier and Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education, pursuant to the Agrology Profession Act the Alberta Institute of Agrologists' 67th annual general meeting report, dated March 26, 2013; pursuant to the Architects Act the Alberta Association of Architects' 2012 annual report; pursuant to the Engineering and Geoscience Professions Act the Association of Professional Engineers and Geoscientists of Alberta's 2012 annual report; pursuant to the Regulated Forestry Profession Act the College of Alberta Professional Forest Technologists' 2012 annual report.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the Routine for today. Let us move on.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: I call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 203

Employment Standards (Compassionate Care Leave) Amendment Act, 2012

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It is an honour and privilege for me to speak to Bill 203, the Employment Standards (Compassionate Care Leave) Amendment Act, 2012, which has been brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-South West. I must say that I want to give the member some incredible kudos on his bill, and I'm so thrilled to hear that he's brought this forward.

Bill 203 would amend the current Employment Standards Code to include provisions for up to eight weeks of unpaid compassionate care leave for workers who are charged with the task of having to care for a dying loved one in their final days.

Mr. Chair, I recognize the value of this bill because I've recently faced this gruelling task. When you're facing a task like this, you are in a somewhat difficult position, where you think: I can't believe this situation is happening to me. Words alone cannot express how much I appreciated the opportunity to be able to spend some quality time with my mom. It gave us the opportunity to laugh. It gave us the opportunity to cry. It gave us the opportunity to share the good times and the bad times, and yes, the unbelievable opportunity to say goodbye. I can't even imagine not having this opportunity, and it saddens me in so many ways that people don't have the opportunity or the time to spend with their loved ones.

I spent six weeks between the hospital and the hospice, and there's no monetary value that could ever be placed on this. The unique experience that I had in the hospice is something that I'll never forget. Watching people come to visit with their loved ones touched me in so many ways. The idea of being able to party in your room, bring the family pet for a visit, the opportunity to visit whenever you wanted, whether it was day or night, means so much to families.

This bill will recognize the compassionate side that is so important not only for the loved one as they face their dying days, but it also allows a family member to spend the quality time that is so much needed. The mental stress, the guilt one feels at not being able to be with their loved one is something that doesn't go away after that loved one passes on.

We as a society respect each other's human dignity in birth, in life, and in death. It is fundamental to who we are as people. Work is measurable – it is something we do – but as I indicated, the final moments with a loved one are something that you never get back. I support Bill 203 because it promotes an agreeable level of human decency and affords peace of mind for all Albertans who have to go down this terrible road.

As they say, death is simply a fact of life, and the death of a loved one is something everyone will have to deal with at one time or another. The incredible ability to be there as they make their way into the next journey of their life is something I will never forget, and I want to thank the member from the bottom of my heart for bringing this bill forward.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, and thank you to the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for sharing her personal story today. It's a pleasure to rise during the Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 203 Employment Standards (Compassionate Care Leave) Amendment Act, 2012. I would like to thank my colleagues from both sides of the House for sharing their thoughts, comments, and support over the course of second reading. I would also like to thank organizations like the Canadian Cancer Society and Pilgrims Hospice, who are here in the gallery today, and other stakeholders across Alberta who have endorsed this bill as beneficial to all Albertans.

First, I would like to quickly review the key components of Bill 203. This bill was created to improve the lives of Albertans. It was designed to allow individuals the opportunity to provide care for terminally ill loved ones without having to doubt their job security.

This bill is highly important and timely in what it provides for Albertans. All hon. members are aware that this bill would make Alberta the last province to include a provision for compassionate care leave in its employment standards legislation. However, the structure and content of this bill is similar to that of existing provisions for other types of leave such as maternity and reservist leave.

I would like to briefly discuss section 1, which reads, "The Employment Standards Code is amended by this Act." This section highlights the Employment Standards Code as the proper piece of legislation under which to address the issue of compassionate caregiving.

Mr. Chair, stakeholder consultations have made clear that end-of-life scenarios resulting from severe illness, advanced age, or other causes are greatly impactful on the family. As such, it is not surprising to find that those who have entered a palliative state prefer and often require care in their own homes and, moreover, care and comfort that is provided by loved ones.

Clearly, in order to make this type of care available to those who need it, the question of caregivers' employment must be addressed. While it is well and good that many employers see fit to grant their employees this type of leave to care for loved ones, no standardized piece of legislation is yet in place to guarantee consistency in this regard. Thus, section 1 of the bill directs the amendment that would facilitate this province-wide consistency to the piece of legislation that protects the rights of employees in the province. No individual can adequately fulfill the substantial burdens and responsibilities of compassionate caregiving and job retention when it's a constant worry. As such, it is under the purview of employment and employment standards that compassionate caregivers must be protected, much like those requiring maternity leave, for instance.

Mr. Chair, I'd like to discuss division 7.2. This is a section that defines compassionate care leave and, importantly, who is eligible to claim for it. This definition is given in what would become section 53.9 of the Employment Standards Code. It is under this section of the bill that individuals entitled to take compassionate care leave are identified and defined. Perhaps most important among these is defining what constitutes a primary caregiver and a family member. Section 53.9 would define a family member in relation to an employee as a spouse or common-law partner, the employee's child or parent, as well as a child or parent of the employee, spouse, or common-law partner. The final part of the definition of family member also includes "any other person who is a member of a class of persons designated in the regulations for the purpose of this definition." This section defines primary caregiver as, "an individual who has primary responsibility for providing care or support to a seriously ill family member for that family."

Bill 203 could go a long way in helping family members acting as primary caregivers to ill loved ones to perform that role while also retaining gainful employment. Clearly, Mr. Chair, Bill 203 provides great benefits to Albertans. It could impact our lives on many different levels. It is essential that we as government and as elected members of this Assembly continue to address the importance of compassionate caregiving to our society as a whole, to our families and communities, and to our health care system.

Alberta is already the best place to live and work in the world. Bill 203 would only enhance that. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, what Bill 203 proposes has the potential to make all the difference in the world.

Mr. Chair, I look forward to the committee debate on Bill 203. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise with some interest and pleasure to speak to Bill 203. I believe it's my first opportunity to do so, and I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West for bringing this forward. I think that there's a lot of good to be had here, and we would like to offer some suggestions to perhaps make it even better.

Under current federal legislation, Mr. Chair, workers are entitled to take up to eight weeks of leave within a six-month period to care for a relative who is at risk of passing on. The leave is unpaid, so workers can apply for employment insurance, right? However, it's up to the province to ensure that workers still have a job waiting for them when their leave is over. In every other province provincial legislation guarantees your position when you are taking compassionate care leave. Saskatchewan has 16 weeks of protected leave, Quebec has 12, and British Columbia eight weeks.

I think we are correcting an obvious problem that needs to be adjusted here, and I'm glad that we are finally doing so. I would like to offer my first amendment, then, in regard to this bill if I could pass that forward.

The Chair: We'll circulate it. Maybe just pause for half a minute. Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: We'll call this amendment A1, hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Now known as amendment A1, I'm presenting this on behalf of my colleague for Edmonton-Strathcona. She is moving that Bill 203, Employment Standards (Compassionate Care Leave) Amendment Act, 2012, be amended in section 6 as follows.

Part A, in the proposed section 53.9 strikes out subsection (2) and substitutes the following:

(2) Subject to subsections (3) to (7), an employee is entitled to compassionate care leave of up to 8 weeks to provide care or support to a seriously ill family member if the employee is the primary care-giver.

Part B, in the proposed section 53.9 strikes out subsection (6) and substitutes the following:

(6) An employee may take up to 8 periods of compassionate care leave totalling no more than 8 weeks, but any subsequent period of leave must end no later than 26 weeks after the first period of leave began.

The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona worked in conjunction with the Canadian Cancer Society to craft this amendment, and I would like to as well express my thanks to the public policy analysts and legal researchers at the Canadian Cancer Society who worked with the Alberta New Democrat caucus to ensure that this amendment would be brought forward today. I do hope that members of all parties in this House will see fit to support these very reasonable changes.

As I read into the Hansard already, the first section removes any reference to an employee having completed at least 52 consecutive weeks with an employer. The second part allows employees to take up to eight compassionate care leaves totalling no more than eight weeks within half a year. This amendment, Mr. Chair, is designed to ensure that all Albertans can take compassionate care leave and at the right time that they need to.

Part A of this amendment removes that reference to employees having the service of one year. This amendment will ensure that compassionate care leave is accessible to all employees regardless of how long they have been with their current employer. It should be noted that the threshold to qualify for EI care benefits is 600 hours of work in the previous 52 weeks, which need not have been with the same employer. Thus, under Bill 203 as it's currently written, if they changed jobs in the last year, Albertans could have enough hours to apply for EI compassionate but still not have the protection of this bill because they didn't have the 52 consecutive weeks with a current employer. This amendment resolves that problem, Mr. Chair.

Section B recognizes that two instalments of compassionate care leave are not, in fact, practical. EI compassionate care benefits can be taken in instalments as short as one week, with no maximum of instalments, to an eight-week maximum ceiling. Thus, EI compassionate care benefits are flexible enough to be taken in up to eight one-week instalments, but Bill 203 as it's currently written would not provide that job protection to Albertans who need to break their leave into more than two instalments.

As we are all aware, caregivers are often needed most when their loved ones are undergoing radiation or other treatments with severe side effects such as nausea and, of course, pain. Individual treatment schedules can vary considerably. Based on the needs of the patient, requiring caregivers to schedule their leave in no more than two instalments would make it difficult or even impossible for some people to be there when they're needed the most. Alberta's Employment Standards Code as well should allow compassionate care leave to be broken up into as many as eight one-week instalments within the 26-week benefits period.

Again, I would like to thank the Canadian Cancer Society for working with us, the Alberta New Democrats, to bring this amendment to the floor of the House. I would urge all members to give their support to this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm just rising to request unanimous consent of the House that all divisions today up until the adjournment this evening be on a one-minute bell.

The Chair: Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, in anticipation of your request I did do a little bit of checking, and it turns out that our rules require that the standing orders can only be waived in the House. Since we're in committee, unfortunately, I can't put that question.

Mr. Denis: You learn something new every day, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, sir.

I will then recognize the next speaker. Speaking on the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you to the hon. members for Edmonton-Strathcona and Edmonton-Calder for bringing forward this amendment. It's almost like we were anticipating something like this as I have speaking notes ready to go.

Section 53.9(6) currently reads: "An employee may take up to 2 periods of compassionate care leave totalling no more than 8 weeks, but any second period of leave must end no later than 26 weeks after the first period of leave began." Mr. Chair, the period of leave as currently defined under Bill 203 was determined through careful consideration and consultation. It should be noted that a maximum leave of eight weeks is the standard time frame allotted by most other jurisdictions, with a few exceptions as noted by the Member for Edmonton-Calder. Thus, as it currently reads, Bill 203 is consistent with similar standards of compassionate care leave legislation, including those at the federal level.

As it impacts caregivers and others affected by this legislation, a careful account had to be taken to balance the needs of caregivers with fairness to employers. Mr. Chair, as important as it is to ensure that caregivers are given everything they need in order to fulfill their roles in supporting their loved ones, they're not the only people who are impacted by this legislation. The needs of employers and small businesses must also be considered. This is why section 53.9(6) defines both a limit on leave length and the window of opportunity within which leave can be taken.

Consultations revealed that any terminal illness will likely run its course within a period of 26 weeks. This is why 26 weeks was chosen as a reasonable time frame within which to take compassionate care leave to care for a terminally ill loved one. Accordingly, Mr. Chair, section 53.9(3) states that a physician's note that an employee would present to his or her employer would indicate that the ill family member is at “significant risk of death within the 26 weeks.” The eight-week period was decided upon as a reasonable length of time that balances a caregiver’s needs with those of his or her employer, who, understandably, cannot always afford the luxury of losing employees for indefinite periods of time. This is especially the case with employers in smaller businesses.

Compassionate caregiving is a multifaceted and impactful topic, and it affects many people both directly and indirectly. This is why Bill 203 was designed in a manner that protects and takes into account the diverse range of people that can and will be affected by it. This is why I feel that the length of the period of leave as currently laid out in the bill is reasonable and appropriate.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

3:20

The Chair: Are there other speakers on amendment A1?

Seeing none, I’ll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill. I recognize the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I’m pleased to see the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West’s bill reach Committee of the Whole before time runs out this session. I think this piece of legislation is incredibly pertinent to the situations that many of our constituents find themselves in today. When we have an aging problem, we know that finding solutions to meet the needs of and to care for this demographic is important to improving the overall quality and availability of health care in Alberta, but we also know that we have to balance this need with the reality of employers and what they have to face, especially those running smaller operations.

As a former employer I want to speak to how section 53.9(6) achieves this balance. Subsection (6) reads as follows: “An employee may take up to 2 periods of compassionate care leave totalling no more than 8 weeks, but any second period of leave must end no later than 26 weeks after the first period of leave began.” In short, employees must confine their eight weeks of leave to a 26-week period. This section relates to section 53.9(3)(a), which requires the employee to provide a certificate from a physician stating that “a family member of the employee has a serious medical condition with a significant risk of death within 26 weeks.”

It’s my understanding that this 26-week period was borrowed from and is, therefore, consistent with that which we see in other provinces in Canada. British Columbia, Manitoba, and Ontario all use this 26-week time frame. Saskatchewan, on the other hand, allows an employee to take the leave within a 52-week period. Mind you, Saskatchewan also allots double the amount of time an employee is allowed to take as leave. It’s 16 weeks.

When we’re looking at the 26-week time period, we have to look at the practicality of this legislation for employers. It seems to me that an employee needing to take off eight weeks intermittently would create a lot of uncertainty for the employer, knowing that oftentimes leave is requested at the last minute, without much notice, in this circumstance because illness is unpredictable. I think that insisting upon a 26-week time period would help mitigate the uncertainty caused by an employee’s absence. This allows the employer to know that it’s only for 26 weeks that this uncertainty exists and that after that, they would regain the full commitment of the employee who was on leave. It provides a degree of certainty for the employer, knowing that necessary arrangements to deal with the shortage of the employee need to be made but only for a six-month period. From the perspective of an employer allowing the eight weeks to be taken during, say, a 52-week period does leave things too open ended. So I think this 26-week time period mitigates any unfair disadvantage or inconvenience for employers.

I also think that to remain consistent with other parts of the legislation, it makes sense to maintain the 26-week time period. To recall, subsection (3)(a) states that the family member must have “a serious medical condition with a significant risk of death” within the 26-week period. It also makes sense that the employee taking leave must use it within this 26-week period; otherwise, time taken off would no longer be to provide compassionate care. Time taken off beyond the 26-week period would have to be categorized as something else such as time off for grief. To reiterate, this 26-week time period makes sense to me.

I support this legislation as a whole, and I would like to commend the hon. member for taking into consideration the various aspects of compassionate care leave that would impact the employer and the employee. This 26-week time period is an example of the balance this legislation strikes between practicality and sympathy. It’s consistent with other jurisdictions and found to be effective and workable, and I see no reason why Alberta cannot offer the same.

Thank you for the opportunity to share my comments. I look forward to the rest of the debate and urge all of my colleagues to support this bill. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I’m going to recognize the hon. Deputy Government House Leader. Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, I did some research since we last spoke. Your motion to shorten the bells for the rest of the afternoon would not be in order, but a motion to shorten the bells for committee would be. Any subsequent motion for the House would have to be done once we’re back in the Legislature. So if you’re willing to make a motion to shorten the bells for the duration of committee, I would entertain it.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I would ask for unanimous consent of all members to shorten any bells in Committee of the Whole to one minute.

The Chair: I recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It’s a great pleasure for me to speak on Bill 203, Employment Standards (Compassionate Care Leave) Amendment Act, 2012. I also have a personal experience as my mom passed away in November. I know how hard it is for a family working and trying to take care of a loved one at the same time. I have first-hand experience. You know, we were lucky because we’ve got a big family, so many family members were out there to be with my mom. Somebody was always there to look after her. Those 26 weeks: you know, a doctor can give a note that a person is going to go in two weeks or three weeks, but sometimes it goes on forever. In my mom’s case it was a long time.

Definitely this is a very good bill. It’s very timely and needed. This will help a long way for the families who take care of their loved ones in their last days. This will allow more time for the families to be together with their loved ones, you know, to share their laughs and to probably share their grief and all of that.

I just have, you know, one concern here. We have taken a long time to amend this code. In that time, many citizens, presumably mostly women, have had to suffer the financial difficulties that arise from the government dragging their feet on this. My only concern is that 52 weeks is long compared to maybe other jurisdictions. What if a child becomes very ill on the employee's 51st week of work? Perhaps a three-month period of time may be in order as this is the typical time it takes to decide the employee's suitability for retention by a company. So, I mean, that's a little sticking point there.

I think other than that, Mr. Chair, I want to congratulate the Member for Edmonton-South West for bringing this bill. This will finally help the families who are in need of this.

With that, Mr. Chair, I will be supporting this bill. Any shortcomings probably can be straightened out later on if not now. I think we should do it right the first time so that we don't have to go back to the bill again.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's an honour and a privilege to rise once again to support Bill 203, the Employment Standards (Compassionate Care Leave) Amendment Act, 2012. Many people know and have heard probably one too many times the story of our family and the difference it made for my mom to be able to stay with my brother at all times. Unfortunately, she was not able to take advantage of the kind of leave that this bill would give to many employees across Alberta. I know that she would have appreciated the opportunity to have been given leave to spend 24 hours a day with her son while he passed versus just any other minute that she possibly had.

Interestingly enough, this weekend our family lost our grandma. Our family took care of our grandma. My husband's family took care of our grandma every day. They're farmers. And while this leave doesn't extend to them, I saw first-hand the value that you get when family members have the opportunity to spend time and take care of their loved ones in their home. I was very fortunate that my husband's grandma was taken care of by my wonderful mother-in-law, who every day would go over and make sure that she was well fed, dressed, you know, bathed, all of those things, so that she was able to live independently on the farm with her son and his family, being my father-in-law. And she appreciated that.

She did not want to go into a facility. She did not want to be cared for. What that showed to us in our family was the value that family members bring to the table when they're taking care of someone. Although we're one of the last provinces to adopt a law such as this, we know that across this province, as many times as we're able to make sure that we're out there taking care of our loved ones without fear of losing our job, without fear of losing our seniority, without fear of having any negative retribution for us just for doing the right thing, it's always a better day for Albertans when we can do that.

Especially, I think the timelines of this bill are incredibly important. As a small-business owner myself I can appreciate the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park's comments about how this is a delicate balance and a good balance between the needs of the employee, who we're looking out for here, but also the needs of the employer, that it's not a cost to the employer, that there is a way to be compassionate, that it actually can be seen as a benefit for employers to be offering this kind of leave to employees as well.

We've seen it at the federal level. They're implementing this type of bill. Now we're following suit, which I think is a very positive step. I applaud the Member for Edmonton-South West for all of his hard work on this bill, I applaud the member for bringing forward a bill that all parties can support, and I also applaud the member for his hard work and his diligence in explaining to Albertans and explaining to members of this House the value and the compassion that a bill like this will provide to all Albertans.

I thank him for this bill. I will support this bill, and I encourage every member of the House to do so.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to stand today to speak again in support of Bill 203, which will extend compassionate care to so many hard-working Albertans. As we know, this bill will expand the ability for people to take leave from their employment. This leave must be certified by a physician, and there are still reasonable limitations to this. It's a good bill. It provides leave for those who wish or need to take care of dying family members. It provides them with the job security they need.

As we know, Alberta is the last province to adopt this protection for workers, and this is a good step forward. If someone takes compassionate care leave, they keep their job, they keep their benefits, they keep their level of pay, and they keep their seniority. I think we can all agree these are good things.

There are some downsides to the bill, as there are with almost everything we do. I wish to raise them although I don't think these outweigh the positives that will come from this bill. First, it doesn't go nearly as far as the Wildrose palliative care proposal, which would provide EI-style coverage for family members caring for their loved ones.

Second, this bill has some severe repercussions potentially for small businesses. When an employee leaves for up to eight weeks, it can leave a gaping hole in a small organization and cause headaches and bottlenecks for them. However, I think there are very few small-business owners who would not be willing to grant compassionate care leave. They've probably been doing it now already.

Overall, Mr. Chair, I'm glad to rise and speak in support of the bill. This expansion of compassionate care leave for hard-working Albertans is overdue, and with the passage of the bill, we'll become the last province to ensure job security while Albertans are caring for their loved ones. It will reduce worry and hardship for people that are already under an immense amount of stress and will no longer force Albertans to choose between their families and their jobs.

With that, I look forward to voting in favour of this bill. I appreciate it being brought forward, and I look forward to it becoming law. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

If there are no other speakers, I'll call the question on the bill.

Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 203 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Hon. Government House Leader, do you wish to make a motion?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yes. I would move that the committee rise and report Bill 203.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 203. I wish to table copies of an amendment considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Bill 206
Tobacco Reduction (Flavoured Tobacco Products)
Amendment Act, 2012

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and present Bill 206, the Tobacco Reduction (Flavoured Tobacco Products) Amendment Act, 2012.

Typically we go off some of the notes that have been prepared for us. I think people know that quite often I like to speak from my heart. You know, yesterday I was running in south Fish Creek park, and as I was running, I was remembering my mother, seeing as how it was Mother's Day. A few years back, in late 2009, roughly, my mother passed away. She passed away after she battled cancer. Being a paramedic, I've never seen anybody have to battle cancer in such a, I guess, disheartening way.

From being her son, I mean, it went from receiving the call one day – again, having some strained relationships with my mother over the years, as she left us when we were younger, as we started to repair, I guess, our adult relationship, to have her call me was kind of out of the blue. I knew immediately when she called that something wasn't right. I heard it in her voice. This is a lady that I know, the person who taught me how to fight, in fact, Mr. Speaker, the person who taught me how to get down in the ditches and work your fingers to the bone, and the person that, unquestionably, while not to perfection, taught me how to be tough.

Mr. Speaker, at a very young age my mother started smoking. And there's no doubt, with my health background experience, that it was the smoking that killed her. It was the tobacco and the chemicals and everything that took her life all too soon and never gave us the opportunity to actually build our relationship as adults, for me as an adult to understand some of the pain that she might have gone through that made her make the decision to leave us at a very young age.

So, Mr. Speaker, when asked to take over and sponsor this bill, it was an easy thing for me because it essentially speaks to how we are marketing tobacco products to our children. Essentially, what this is going to do is that it is going to take away the opportunity for children to make a poor choice, to be able to afford cheap cigarettes, those flavoured cigarettes.

I guess, Mr. Speaker, when we think about it, when we think about confectionery or we think about candy, we think about tasty treats and things. We think about Willy Wonka & the Chocolate Factory. I mean, it becomes very clear that when we talk about confectionery and candy products, when we think about cherry or strawberry or chocolate flavouring and all these things, we think about kids. We think about a happy time. Instead, what we've seen is that the people who produce these types of products are duping our children into becoming addicted or making a choice based on a false premise. Again, you know, part of the reason why I ran and why I'm sure everybody in this room ran was to help our children to make better decisions and not be duped into decisions that could ultimately shorten their lives or shorten their ability to enjoy life to its fullest.

Mr. Speaker, you know what? I don't believe for one second there's one person here in this House or anywhere else – and in some of the tobacco groups that have actually come and talked to me about this bill, not one of them smokes. Not one of them uses those products. So we know. It is not condemning those who smoke or anything else, but this is to curb the appeal of these products that ultimately kill our loved ones. They kill our mothers, our fathers, our aunts, our uncles, and other people that we've known throughout the years.

Mr. Speaker, I won't continue to talk. People know I like to talk, but with something as important as this, I hope that all members of this House support this bill as part of a tobacco reduction campaign within this government to protect the people that we love.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Before I recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, the Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd rise again to ask for unanimous consent of the House for one-minute bells during this afternoon.

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard the motion by the Deputy Government House Leader, I'll ask one question. Is anyone opposed to the motion?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 206, the Tobacco Reduction (Flavoured Tobacco Products) Amendment Act, 2012, brought forward by the Member for Calgary-South East. I'm yet again surprised and somewhat pleased, if I may say, to see that we have a preamble in a bill – I think it's the second one I've seen. I can't comment so much on private members' bills, but I know that when I was speaking to the government bill, the Children First Act, it was the first time in a long time I've seen these whereases in the preamble. I always find them quite interesting and quite enlightening. You know, they're what you call the guts of the bill.

I want to read into the record what the Member for Calgary-South East has brought forward. It talks about:

Whereas the popularity of flavoured tobacco among youth is increasing their risk of developing a dangerous and lasting addiction to tobacco products;

Whereas other jurisdictions have recognized the need to restrict the sale of certain tobacco products that are designed to attract young persons; and

Whereas there is a need in Alberta to curb consumption of tobacco products among youth by restricting the sale of flavoured tobacco.

It goes on to:

Therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, enacts as follows . . .

Then we go through the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be able to stand up in this Legislature and support the bill from the Member for Calgary-South East. I know that that may surprise some people. As members of the opposition we're always supposed to be against what the government does. You know, we're never against complimenting the government if they bring forward something that we like.

I had spoken in favour of the Children First Act from the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud because I thought, initially looking at the bill, it was a solid piece of legislation. I mentioned in my speaking notes when I first got up to speak to the bill in second reading that I liked what was contained in the bill and that I would like to take the weekend to look over the bill and then, you know, listen to what people have to say, which is the role of any MLA in this Legislature. We're now seeing amendments come forward.

I have to say that I like what is contained in this bill, and I think the member has captured a lot of good things in this bill. Having said that, we all know that when a bill is going through the processes of government, somebody always comes up with a better idea, and sometimes they have some suggestions for the bill. I think when we're in second reading – and I can't imagine this bill going through the entire process in this Legislative Assembly – it'll give people the opportunity to digest what's contained in Bill 206, including myself and all members of the Assembly. Then they can go home, and they can get some feedback if this is what needs to be contained in the bill.

You know, the reason I say that is that we had the scrap metal bill introduced into the Legislature sometime ago and passed a couple of weeks ago, I guess, but I can't even remember how many amendments had been brought forward to strengthen that particular bill and make it a better bill. I'm hoping that as we proceed through the summer, we will be able to have time for some of the people out there to take a look at the bill and say: well, gee; this needs to be done to strengthen this bill.

Interestingly enough, Mr. Speaker, I have a long history on this smoking issue. It goes back to 1993 – and there you go, aging yourself again – after attending a policy conference with the PCs and getting into quite the debate with one of the advocates against smoking. I notice that he's up in the gallery, Mr. Les Hagen. He and I had quite the debate way back when about smoking. I had all of this in my mind about people's freedom to choose, the rights of individuals, and all of those things. Sometimes in life you get a rude awakening. Sometimes there are people that are a lot smarter than you are and a lot more knowledgeable than you are on some issues. I went home as this new MLA thinking I knew everything about anything, and I decided that I wasn't as smart as I thought I was in regard to smoking.

So now we're on Bill 206 on the flavoured tobacco, and for all members of the opposition and, I'm sure, all members of the Assembly it's been a very, very busy time with us being in the Legislature, and as members of the opposition we have to do a lot of research on a lot of bills that hit this Legislature floor. As everybody knows, I had to take some time off when I was spending some time with my mom as she was so sick. So I have to admit that I haven't done a lot of research on this particular bill, but in the couple of hours that I've had, I've pulled out some interesting articles in regard to flavoured tobacco. I have to say that I was quite taken aback in regard to the articles that I did find on the number of children or youth, if you may call them that – I guess they're called youth at this particular age – that have taken up this flavoured tobacco.

I pulled an article out of the Journal – and it's interesting because Mr. Hagen is up there, and I guess it was a press conference that he attended – in regard to stats. One of the stats that I found enlightening was that of Alberta students surveyed who said they used tobacco, 64 per cent were consuming some kind of flavoured product. That ranked ahead of the national average, which was 59 per cent. I love to brag about Alberta, but I certainly don't think we should claim bragging rights on flavoured tobacco products.

The survey found that the most popular product was flavoured cigarillos that come in a container that looks like lip gloss and cost about $2. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to tell you that I'm not up on flavoured tobacco, and I'm not up on cigarillo information. I wasn't even aware, to be very honest with you, that they had flavoured tobacco or flavoured cigarillos other than Colts, which have been around forever. I forget what flavour it comes in, but it's been around for a long, long time. But I was quite startled to see that we had all of these wonderful flavours. My kids are grown, so I'm not dealing with those teenage years that some of the members in this Assembly probably are. I guess I have to be a little more open minded and a little more observant of what's happening.

Alberta students also ranked ahead of the national standard in consumption of menthol cigarettes. I didn't even know they still made menthol cigarettes. I was raised in the era of du Maurier, Player's. All of these things are starting to – spit tobacco. This one is interesting: water-pipe tobacco. I hadn't even heard of such a thing.

What is interesting is the flavours that these come in. One of the articles that I pulled off the Internet said that they have the same flavours as they have in ice cream. I found that quite fascinating. Flavoured additives are used to mask negative attributes of smoking such as flavour, unpleasant odour, and packaging aroma. All of these things are something that we don't normally like about smoking.

I'm one of those ex-smokers, but I'm not one of those smokers that go around shaking my finger at everybody. I just know that it's very addictive. I'll fall off, and then I'll climb back on the horse, and then I'll fall off, and then I'm back on the horse. There isn't one thing I personally like about smoking. Not one thing. It doesn't relax me. It doesn't calm me down. It doesn't make me feel any better about myself. It's that incredible nicotine and that incredible addiction that this nasty, nasty habit gives to people.

Flavoured tobacco makes inhaling the products seem easier and makes the smoke milder. Studies have shown that flavoured tobacco is popular with minors, which I talked about, particularly in the form of cigarillos. Cigarillos are small cigars that resemble a cigarette in look and feel and are packaged to look like candy, lipstick, and/or markers.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will sit down and tell the hon. member that I will be supporting his bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the next speaker, the Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise to speak to Bill 206, the Tobacco Reduction (Flavoured Tobacco Products) Amendment Act, 2012, and I congratulate the Member for Calgary-South East for bringing this bill forward.

Cancer is an issue all over the world, and Punjab back home is one of those belts. Lots of people are suffering from cancer, but that's a different kind of cancer. Anything we can do for people to stay away from tobacco products will help us, you know, save money in productivity and health care. This bill will do that, especially curbing young folks, maybe, from trying these products.

The general purpose of this bill is to limit the introduction of tobacco to young Albertans so as to attempt to avoid addiction to tobacco early in life. This bill also prohibits the sale of all flavoured tobacco products in Alberta, and all delivery methods, including water pipes, are covered under this new legislation, so whatever wasn't covered before, Mr. Speaker. This act will amend the Tobacco Reduction Act.

In 2011 Health Canada revised the Tobacco Act to reduce tobacco marketing to youth. The legislation was developed to protect youth from tobacco industry marketing practices, and this didn't apply to water pipes. Quebec prohibits the use of water-pipe smoking regardless of whether the product contains tobacco or not. The city of Vancouver has a bylaw, too, that prohibits the use of water pipes in public places, Mr. Speaker. Two water-pipe shop owners in Vancouver have tried to challenge that, but, you know, we will see.

Flavour additives are used to mask the negative attributes of smoking such as flavour, unpleasant odour, and packaging aromas. Flavoured tobacco makes inhaling the products seem easier and makes the smoke feel milder. Two common flavours, licorice and cocoa, have been found to produce carcinogens when burned.

Studies have shown that flavoured tobacco is popular with minors, particularly in the form of cigarillos. Cigarillos are small cigars that resemble a cigarette in look and feel and are packaged to look like candy, lipstick, and/or markers. These harmful products come in flavours that appeal to children such as fruit, candy, and even ice cream flavours. Because cigarillos are rolled in tobacco leaves rather than paper, they are exempt from regulations that require health warnings and restrictions on packaging sizes. Cigarillos are easily affordable for minors as they are available as singles for less than $2 at a convenience store. Only 2 per cent of adult smokers use flavoured tobacco.

A study done by the University of Waterloo, a youth smoking survey between 2006-07, has shown that 35 per cent of Canadian youth have tried cigarillos. Health Canada stats show that unit sales of cigarillos skyrocketed to more than 80 million units in 2006. They were just 50,000 units five years earlier. The 2007 Canadian Tobacco Use Monitoring Survey revealed that 30 per cent of teen smokers between ages 15 and 19 have used flavoured cigarillos in the past 20 days and that most use this product exclusively. The survey also revealed that 60 per cent of all cigarillo users were teens between the ages of 15 and 19. This bill will go a long way, Mr. Speaker, to curbing those teens from getting hooked on nicotine.

Water-pipe smoking is another delivery method of flavoured tobacco in Alberta, Mr. Speaker. In February 2012 the chief medical officer of health issued a report regarding water-pipe use in Alberta. "A typical waterpipe session lasts between 45 to 60 minutes. [In that] time, a waterpipe user can inhale the smoke equivalent of 100 cigarettes." That's lots of cigarettes to be having in 45 to 60 minutes.

A recent study also found that 38 per cent of North American college students had reported using a water pipe at least once. It was found that 23 per cent of young adults in a Montreal sample had used a water pipe in the previous year. The 2008 Alberta Youth Experience Survey found that 10 per cent of students between grades 7 and 12 had used a water pipe.

Water-pipe smoking in Alberta, Mr. Speaker, appears to be increasing, and businesses in Alberta are not required to have additional licences to offer water pipes to their customers. There are currently about 30 businesses offering water pipes in this province. Allowing water-pipe smoking in restaurants and bars reinforces the myth that water-pipe smoking is less harmful than cigarettes. This bill, I think, will curb water-pipe smoking, too, in Alberta.

There was a bill by the leader of the Alberta Liberals to have smoke-free vehicles. That bill has not been proclaimed, Mr. Speaker. You know, I think it would be a good idea to proclaim that bill after we pass this bill. I mean, any efforts to make Alberta smoke free and to keep tobacco products out of the hands of kids would help our economy for a long time to come. It will help the health of Albertans, it will save money on health care, and it will help our youth.

I will be supporting this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Sherwood Park.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to lend my support to Bill 206, the Tobacco Reduction (Flavoured Tobacco Products) Amendment Act, 2012. I think this is a good bill that will help us to curb youth smoking.

We want to aim at certain types of flavoured tobacco using regulation. I think that it's worth while pointing out, though, Mr. Speaker, that this is not a ban on all flavoured tobacco, which was called for by the campaign for a smoke-free Alberta. This is kind of a slightly smaller version of what I think was asked for by a coalition as well, which included the Alberta Public Health Association, the Canadian Cancer Society, the Heart and Stroke Foundation, and the Lung Association as well. Plenty of research shows that youth are using the flavoured products, as was outlined by previous speakers, and there are lots of these flavoured products that have been around for quite a long time.

You know, it's the marketing and the way that these new products are perhaps being packaged as well that I think are a concern for all of us. We see that there is an exemption for menthol cigarettes, and that, I guess, is really a flavour when you think about it.

I know that there is some limitation here to what we have on this particular bill, but you've got to measure one thing against the other, Mr. Speaker, and on the whole Alberta New Democrats do support Bill 206. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Sherwood Park, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to speak to Bill 206, Tobacco Reduction (Flavoured Tobacco Products) Amendment Act, 2013. This bill is yet another step toward a tobacco-free future in Alberta, and I'm so very proud to be part of this process. When I was mayor of Strathcona county, we passed the first nonsmoking bylaw in Alberta.

This fits nicely into Alberta's tobacco reduction strategy. I want to speak about the strategy because it frames Bill 206 within the context of other tobacco reduction initiatives. Alberta's strategy is a framework to guide to the development of initiatives within the province and decisions around policy. Since the introduction of the Alberta tobacco reduction strategy in 2002, tobacco use in Alberta has declined significantly. While that's very good news, Mr. Speaker, there is a worrisome upswing in youth smoking rates after years of reductions, and nearly 1 in 5 Albertans continues to use tobacco.

Alberta's new tobacco reduction strategy, Creating Tobacco-free Futures, builds on the momentum of the last 10 years and sets out a framework for tackling the challenges still in front of us. It's a commitment to taking steps to help people quit using tobacco, reduce harmful second-hand smoke exposure, and make tobacco products less enticing for youth. This strategy is about practical and effective initiatives, Mr. Speaker. Some of them are directions to look at into the future; others will be implemented in the short term. In particular, this strategy targets young Albertans, pregnant women, and at-risk populations. It calls for and supports action by government, health care providers, stakeholders, educators, and communities because we all need to work towards creating a tobacco-free future.

Since the Alberta tobacco reduction strategy was introduced in 2002, Alberta has achieved significant reductions in tobacco use. Smoking rates for Albertans 15 and over have fallen from 25 per cent to 19 per cent. The reduction in youth smoking was particularly encouraging. The smoking rate for youth aged 15 to 19 dropped from 24 per cent to 17 per cent. Despite this decrease, however, the 17 per cent marks an increase in youth smoking compared to the previous year, when the smoking rate was only 12 per cent. This increase illustrates that we must focus on youth going forward. Because we know that flavoured tobacco can be a gateway for youth to use other tobacco products, Bill 206 is an important step in line with this government's focus on tobacco reduction in youth.

Alberta's Prevention of Youth Tobacco Use Act prohibits youth from possessing, smoking, or consuming tobacco products in public places. Alberta has also introduced strong anticontriband legislation and enforcement measures. Over the past 10 years Alberta has made significant tax increases to make tobacco products less affordable and has also implemented a tobacco reduction school strategy. The school-based and postsecondary tobacco reduction framework uses a comprehensive school-health approach that targets children in key transitional grades. This includes the development of wellness-related school curricula that acknowledge the stresses students face, especially in times of transition such as the move from junior high to high school.

Youth and young adults are engaged in tobacco, tobacco-like products, and smokeless tobacco prevention through consideration of initiatives such as supporting the expansion of evidence-informed peer leadership programs province-wide and developing and implementing youth and young adult engagement campaigns using successful campaigns in other jurisdictions as templates.

Mr. Speaker, other successes have occurred at the community level, where bylaws have been implemented to further protect Albertans from second-hand smoke. In addition, community grants have made it possible for local communities to develop and implement tobacco control initiatives. Alberta has also implemented comprehensive tobacco cessation services, including a telephone counselling line, a web-based service, and group cessation counselling.

While Alberta was markedly more smoke free in 2012 than in 2002, it's critical that tobacco reduction remains a focus. That's why Alberta has developed a new strategy. Initiatives and policies relevant to this strategy will be examined for implementation over the next 10 years.

In the short term, however, there are some significant steps that can be taken. This strategy has launched a series of important initiatives and will continue to do so over the next two years to kick-start another decade of successful reductions in tobacco use. It is anticipated that they will be funded through monies already targeted towards tobacco reduction. Any request for additional funds, should they be necessary, will become part of future budget approval processes.

The priority initiatives focusing on youth in the first three years include the development and implementation of a social marketing public awareness campaign to address the harms associated with tobacco; expansion of school-based programs, with a focus on reducing tobacco use; development and implementation of a youth engagement campaign and expansion of peer leadership programs; and expansion of community supports to enhance protective factors and reduce risk factors known to influence tobacco use.

To ensure that Alberta stays at the leading edge of tobacco reduction, this government is developing a comprehensive research and evaluation framework to measure the impacts of initiatives under the strategy.

Mr. Speaker, these early initiatives will continue the momentum of actions taken over the last 10 years and help set the groundwork for other initiatives contemplated under the 10-year time frame. As well, the strategy will adopt a phased implementation, with initiatives being introduced over the next 10 years. Phase 1 initiatives are planned to commence between 2012 and 2015, phase 2 initiatives are planned to commence between 2015 and 2018, and phase 3 initiatives are planned to commence between 2018 and 2022.

Test teams consisting of tobacco control stakeholders from across Alberta will be established to guide the implementation of the initiatives. When we look at this larger context of Alberta's tobacco reduction strategy, Bill 206 just makes sense. I think it is our duty to do whatever we can to reduce opportunities for youth to access and enjoy tobacco use. This is a critical component to prevention.

As such, I am proud to be supporting Bill 206 and trust that it will work well with this government's other tobacco reduction initiatives. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise to speak to Bill 206, the tobacco reduction amendment act, which I will be supporting today.

As the daughter of a father who smoked his whole life, I came from that traditional family back in the day when both mom and dad smoked. You came home from school, and you had the blue haze in the house. That was acceptable. Then we went out to the patio, and the blue haze just kind of came along with that. That was acceptable. I even grew up in a time when they smoked in the office, they smoked at the town office, and they even smoked at the doctor's office at that point in time. But times have changed, and this tobacco reduction amendment act would amend the Tobacco Reduction Act to make the sale of tobacco products with certain flavouring agents illegal in Alberta.

Now, I'll be the first one to stand here and say that my dad didn't get cancer from flavoured tobacco. He got it from a good, old-fashioned cigarette. He smoked his whole life. My mom has smoked since she was 11 years old. Luckily, I never took up the habit, but my brother, who is now gone, took up the habit. In my family all three of them smoked, and I did not. The end result was that my mom has had cancer twice, and my dad had throat cancer, which has now resulted in him breathing through a hole in his throat.

I can tell you that my dad was diagnosed with throat cancer at the age of 18. My dad is a very important man in my life, of course. He went from being a very strong, self-employed oil field person to a person who could no longer have a job because he now had a hole in his throat, and he no longer qualified to go on any rig site. He now coughs and breathes through the hole in his throat. It's difficult for him to be outside when there's dust. It's difficult for him, really, to be anywhere around smells and all of that. I've watched over the last 20 years the impact it had on him. He's been very fortunate that he was diagnosed with this terminal disease, and he's still here 20 years later. I have called him other names for that because I think he's stubborn. He'll probably be here for a hundred years, and I'm happy that he will be, but his smoking habits certainly didn't help him with that.

That was from a regular-flavoured cigarette, just a regular cigarette. Now they're introducing a whole different methodology with cigarettes. When you go into a convenience store today, it's astounding how many new smoking and tobacco products are available. They're sold in neon packages. They're flavoured to appeal to nontraditional tobacco users. I've been in those stores. You know, I have an 11-year-old, who sees the pretty colours and that sort of thing, but then when you tell her it's tobacco, luckily it's been pounded into her head about the problems with smoking.

Needless to say, the tobacco industry is evolving to match antismoking efforts across the globe. This is nothing new. Tobacco companies have always known their survival depends on there always being another generation of smokers who are ready to replace the current generation. In the '80s advertising firm R.J. Reynolds came up with the concept of Joe Camel. We all know Joe Camel. He was the cool, animated mascot for Camel cigarettes. Back then the regulations surrounding cigarette advertising were very relaxed. In '91 the Journal of the American Medical Association did a study that found that as many young people could identify Joe Camel as they could Mickey Mouse. Since then, though, antismoking groups have worked very hard and have made great strides in denormalizing tobacco use in general society. Health agencies have reiterated the risks and costs associated with smoking in public.

I can tell you that I'm one of those people that hounds my mom every day about why she still smokes and why she wants to walk 50 metres from the nearest door to have her cigarette. Governments have taken steps to ban smoking indoors and in areas vulnerable to citizens. Yes, we've come a long way, to cite another past cigarette campaign, but major problems remain.

While the overall rates of smoking are on the decline, rates of smoking in young people have remained constant and disproportionately represent the overall number of people who smoke. In 2011 8.3 per cent of 15- to 19-year-olds and 24 per cent of 20- to 24-year-olds self-identified as smokers. About 64 per cent of high school age smokers said that they smoked flavoured brands. While these numbers are about on par with the national average, I think it's important to note that Alberta represents 40 per cent of the total smokeless tobacco market, with flavoured brands leading the way.

You could go as far as to characterize these neon flavoured brands as a starter or gateway tobacco product because they start our young people on a life-long battle with addiction that's costly for the individual and for society. Smokeless tobacco products like chewing tobacco create an even greater risk component to the smoking problem as just one can of snuff contains as much tobacco as 60 cigarettes. This makes chewing tobacco significantly more addictive than smoking regular cigarettes.

While tobacco products may be changing, the fact remains that tobacco use is the leading preventable reason for premature death in Alberta. The relationship between tobacco and cancer has been well established. This year alone more than 2,000 Albertans will be diagnosed with lung cancer, and 1,500 of them will die from their disease. More than 4 out of 5 lung cancers can be attributed directly to smoking. Old habits die hard, but they can be stopped before they start.

Bill 206 is necessary because, I believe, the government has failed to deliver on previous smoking reduction promises like a ban on smoking in cars and a ban on flavoured tobacco products as well as other goals that they've listed in their 2012 strategy for tobacco reduction.

Now, we know that protecting young people from harm is important, and this is no different. We know young people can be susceptible to this kind of clever marketing, and it is up to us as legislators and, more importantly, adults to take real action on this issue.

I know that many people will make the argument: well, if we really want to ban tobacco use in our youth, then just have more enforcement. I am one hundred per cent in favour of more enforcement of exactly that law. Stores should be heavily penalized for selling tobacco to young people. A person who's selling the tobacco even should be heavily penalized. We need to make sure that if we're going to have laws in place, we're actually enforcing those laws because that's where the fundamental problem is. But in the absence of that, which is what we have right now – right now the government isn't enforcing those laws – we need to make sure that we're not encouraging them even further by adding to the problem with flavoured tobacco.

I can tell you that I already know that there are going to be some in my caucus who are not in agreement with me. That's the wonderful advantage of free votes that we have in the Wildrose, and I'm excited to see that. But we all have different life experiences. My different life experience is that I lived with cancer – I saw what it did to our family directly – and I'm opposed to smoking. I think we should do everything we can to reduce the effects of smoking and do everything we can to encourage people to quit smoking if they want to, and I don't see that we do enough there. But I'm a hundred per cent opposed to doing anything that promotes smoking, that actually encourages people to take up smoking, but that goes even further, that actually encourages our young people to take up smoking.

Nine provinces have provincial legislation in place to curb tobacco sales to minors. Alberta is the only remaining place without such legislation. The alarming number of young people who smoke is evidence. Current federal legislation that bars the furnishing of tobacco to minors in public is not enough to beat this problem. We need creative efforts from provincial legislators if we're going to get serious about curbing smoking in our youth. Reducing the prevalence of smoking through real legislative efforts will result long term in a healthier population and a reduction of smoking rates, which, in turn, reduces health care costs for the province and, additionally, costs to the taxpayer.

In 2000 the government passed the Prevention of Youth Tobacco Use Act. It was updated in 2004. It's a perfect example of what I mean when I say that current legislation doesn't do enough to protect our young people from tobacco companies. Essentially, the act prevents youth from possessing or smoking tobacco in a public place. I think all members can agree that this policy actually fails our youth. I personally know of many, many youth who have the ability to smoke or have access to cigarettes, to purchase cigarettes, and that shouldn't happen. So if we're actually going to do our part here, then we'd better make sure we put in legislation that we can actually enforce. If we're not going to enforce the nonselling of tobacco products to minors, then we'd better make sure that we start enforcing the rules on the tobacco companies to make sure they're not encouraging minors to start.

Last month we wore daffodil pins as we recognized Cancer Awareness Month, and we showed our support for the ongoing fight against cancer. We honoured the long and life-altering road to recovery that cancer patients in this province are on. I'm going to show my support by doing my part to prevent our young people from picking up that first cigarette. Starting our children off on the road to a tobacco-free lifestyle is one of the greatest gifts we can give them.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 206, the Tobacco Reduction (Flavoured Tobacco Products) Amendment Act, 2012, introduced by the hon. Member for Calgary-South East. I would like to thank the hon. member for his efforts on this bill. Bill 206 focuses on an important issue, reducing tobacco use, and, most importantly, reducing tobacco use among young people and first-time users.

Mr. Speaker, tobacco use is one of the most preventable causes of death in Canada. Smoking not only affects the health of those who smoke but also of those who inhale second-hand smoke. Our government works very hard to promote healthy living through several tobacco legislations by regulating underage access to tobacco and prohibiting smoking in many public places. Our government has the responsibility to ensure that the youth of this province are raised in a healthy environment and that they are able to make healthy choices. Education combined with strict tobacco regulation is necessary for achieving this goal.

The government of Alberta has authority under the Constitution Act, 1867, to prohibit the sale and to regulate advertisement of tobacco products. Bill 206, which would expand our current Tobacco Reduction Act to include prohibition of flavoured tobacco, would fall in line with our government's mandate of preventing youth smoking. As such, this would help Albertans lead healthier lives and, in effect, reduce smoking-related diseases.

Alberta has always played an active role in regulating the sale of tobacco products. Bill 206 aims to reduce the allure of tobacco products to persons under the age of 18 by prohibiting the sale of flavoured tobacco products. Historically, flavoured tobacco has been used as a way to mask the harsh flavour of tobacco. Tobacco companies have been inserting additives into tobacco products for a long time in order to make their products less harsh and more flavourful. For young people and first-time smokers flavoured tobacco products could be a tempting choice. Bill 206 would ban the sale of flavoured tobacco products within Alberta, making tobacco products less attractive to our youth. Doing so would align with the government of Alberta's strategies for reducing tobacco use.

Mr. Speaker, over the years our government has put in continuous effort to limit tobacco use. We have legislation in place that prohibits tobacco in public places, in front of doorways, and near air intake vents. The consumption of tobacco products by those less than 18 years of age is always prohibited by law.

Despite the government's efforts and intentions to reduce tobacco use, the reality is that there is still underage tobacco use. In 1999 tobacco use among youth aged 15 to 19 was 26 per cent. As outlined in Alberta's tobacco reduction strategy, which is the province's overarching plan to reduce tobacco consumption, our target was to reduce this age group's smoking rate to 9 per cent or less by 2011-2012. I'm happy to note that our tobacco reduction strategy is working, and there is a decrease in tobacco use in Alberta, Mr. Speaker. In 2011 the rate of smoking among those 15 to 18 years of age was 8.3 per cent.

On April 1, 2003, the Prevention of Youth Tobacco Use Act came into force through proclamation. It was created in order to recognize the Legislative Assembly of Alberta's responsibility to promote the health of young people by restricting their access to tobacco products. On January 1, 2008, the Tobacco Reduction Act came into effect. At first it made smoking in public places illegal. Then the second phase of the act prohibited the advertisement and display of tobacco products. Many Albertans can remember seeing cigarette displays in many retail establishments, but that was no longer the case as of July 1, 2008.

Since 2009 the province has banned the sale of tobacco products at pharmacies, health facilities, and postsecondary institutions. Additionally, Mr. Speaker, last year the Legislature passed the Tobacco Reduction (Protection of Children in Vehicles) Amendment Act, 2012, which banned smoking in vehicles when minors are present.

Our province's antitobacco legislation has shown the commitment of this government in fighting tobacco use. As such, Bill 206 would move Alberta forward in combating tobacco use. However, there are still pending issues that are yet to be answered by this bill. Although Bill 206 could enhance the current Alberta tobacco reduction strategy, its actual effectiveness should be carefully evaluated. Our current tobacco legislation already dictates that the sale of flavoured tobacco products to minors is illegal, yet there is still a significant percentage of minors who smoke.

Some might argue that the enforcement of existing laws is more important than implementing new legislation and amendments. Making sure that we actually prohibit minors from consuming tobacco products should take precedence over banning certain products.

Flavoured tobacco products, as attractive as they might be for young people, also have a market among adults. For many Middle Easterners and Europeans flavoured tobacco use is cultural and traditional. Prohibiting the sale of flavoured tobacco could be seen as an infringement on such cultural practices. Although the province has a legal role in regulating the sale of tobacco products, we also need to respect all stakeholders' opinions in this input. Mr. Speaker, I agree fully with this bill's intent of helping the fight against underage tobacco use, but any decision we make could potentially affect other adult users, not just the youth.

Nonetheless, the Bill 206 objective is in line with the government's tobacco reduction strategy, and I want to thank the hon. member for his efforts in bringing this bill forward. I fully support this legislation.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is an honourable intention by the member, to bring this bill forward, but I will not support the bill. I will not support it on a number of grounds. I want to point out that I don't smoke, and I've never smoked. I don't chew – and I've never chewed – tobacco. I also lost a parent to smoking, so I am definitely sympathetic to anyone who has gone through those experiences.

But there comes a point in time. Where do we stop government's authority? I just want to point out that this bill says, "No person shall sell or offer to sell a tobacco product that contains a flavouring agent." When you look up what a flavouring agent is, it's over a thousand molecular agents. I know the example is, "Let's get rid of cherry-flavoured tobacco, peach-flavoured tobacco" and that type of flavouring. But that's not what the law says is flavouring agents, and that can be interpreted in many different ways.

Now, is this in line with the government's objective? I don't deny that. It's an honourable objective, to reduce the amount of tobacco use in our society, to keep children from using it. But our laws are many, and they are prohibitive in the sense that it's illegal to sell tobacco products to youth. Yet Alberta has a terrible record on its sales to minors ratio. Nothing in this bill is taking care of or even addressing that issue. There's absolutely no reason why our rate of selling tobacco to youth should exceed that of other provinces.

Ironically, one of the things that we're missing here is: what is the damage of tobacco? When you look at the addictive agent, nicotine, there's nothing about reducing the amount of nicotine. As a matter of fact, tobacco companies have been accused in the past of raising that level and basically increasing the addictiveness of the tobacco that they're selling. The other issue is all the carcinogens, the various agents that are in the cigarettes. There's nothing to restrict that or control that. What we're going to control are the flavouring agents.

So we have a conundrum here. What we're attempting to do, although admirable, is actually, in my view, breaching this line of the nanny state, trying to do something where I do not see that we're going to make very many gains, but we will restrict just various flavours of products.

Now, the typical thing that jumps to mind when people discuss this issue is the flavoured cigarettes, but there's a tremendous number of people that chew flavoured tobacco. Many youth do. Again, it's illegal. They're not supposed to sell tobacco products to youth.

How do we take care of this public health hazard in the sense of reducing tobacco use? Well, nobody is proposing making this health hazard illegal. The health hazard is there; it's present. We know it. It is the nicotine, it is the carcinogenic agents within the cigarettes, within the tobacco that cause the problems that we deal with in our health system, but nobody is going down that road. What we're saying is that we're just going to ban flavoured products, but there's no real definition of what flavoured products out of the thousands of molecular agents that are considered flavouring agents.

Where does this reach? This isn't clear. It won't be clear until we see what the regulations look like. But will it achieve the desired outcome that it professes, which is the goal, and actually reduce usage? I will tell you that I come from an era when children – I don't think they're any different today. They want to be grown up so fast. When they see movie actors that are their heroes or the ones they want to emulate, particularly when they're smoking, that's what they look to do. I think there are some parental issues here. I notice it in my own communities, the parents that do not mind their 12-year-olds and 10-year-olds smoking. Those 12-year-olds and 10-year-olds smoke. I'm very fortunate. Neither of my children use any tobacco products, but neither did my wife or myself.

My opposition here is strictly on the strength of what we're trying to do as a government, that we will go after flavour but we will ignore the real stuff that actually harms. We basically, by our own silence, admit that we cannot go after reduction in nicotine, that we cannot go after reduction in the carcinogenic agents in the cigarettes that actually cause the harm, so we go after the flavour. To me, it's one of those issues where we avoid the real issue and think that we're going to reduce the harm.

It's an overreaching of the power of the state, in my view. I told my members that I can't support it for that reason, as troubling as it is, because I do believe that this is an extremely harmful product. I do not argue with the member's statements on its health effects. It goes along the same line as what the mayor of New York did a couple of months ago: banned a certain size of soft drink. Now, the idea was that it would reduce the amount of soft drink that people would consume, but the fact is that they would maybe buy two or three soft drinks versus one very large one. Again, should the power of government extend that far? That's how I view this. It's admirable, it is on track, and I understand why the member would bring it forward, but it doesn't actually address the real issue, which is the agents within the tobacco that cause such significant harm to our health.

With that, I will not be supporting this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now that both of my parents have passed away, I can confess that I did start smoking in grade 8 behind the frosty bar across from Donnan junior high school. Fortunately, I ended smoking after the first one. I had never ever been attracted to smoking or other things at the time, actually. Fortunately, back in those days they didn't have flavoured tobacco. I'm very concerned about that. I also have travelled for years up to Nunavut and into the Arctic and have seen the effects of tobacco in the northern communities and, you know, feel compassion for the individuals who are affected by tobacco.

I think it's a good bill, and I'm pleased to rise to support it. My intention today, Mr. Speaker, is to go over some of the legislative scenarios that have happened in the province of Alberta and federally relative to tobacco.

The aim of the bill, of course, as we've heard, is to prohibit the sale of flavoured tobacco products such as cigarettes, cigarillos, and smokeless tobacco. This would be done with the goal of eliminating the temptation of tobacco for persons less than 18 years of age. I believe we all recognize that the issue of underage tobacco use is one that we need to take seriously and with all due consideration. Antitobacco legislation is one way in which the fight to protect youth from tobacco use has been carried out. Therefore, when discussing antitobacco legislation, it's prudent to take a careful look at the history. As I said, I will go through that history now.

In Canada early efforts to prohibit tobacco use came about in the late 19th century. Antitobacco movements were at the time joined together with temperance and prohibition movements. Tobacco use was seen as a moral issue akin to drinking and gambling. Legislative controls can be traced back to 1903 and a free vote resolution in the House of Commons that did support a full ban, Mr. Speaker – a full ban – on tobacco products. The private member's bill that followed three weeks later failed to entrench this resolution in law as it was withdrawn on a technicality. In 1904 the same resolution was passed through the House, but it failed to receive the proper approval before the end of that particular parliamentary session.

Successful antitobacco legislation was later passed in 1908. The Tobacco Restraint Act prohibited the sale of tobacco to persons under the age of 16. Those caught selling tobacco to those under the legal age were fined $10 for the first offence, quite a sum at the time, $25 for the second, and $100 for the third and subsequent offences. Persons under 16 were not permitted to smoke or chew tobacco and faced fines from $1 to $4 for noncompliance.

The next wave of dramatic antitobacco legislation came about in 1986 and 1987, with the introduction of bills C-204 and C-51. I remember them well. Bill C-204, the Non-smokers' Health Act, was a private member's bill introduced in the House of Commons in October 1986 which proposed to reduce smoking in federally regulated workplaces as well as on planes, trains, and boats. Prior to that time I remember being, well, on all of those – planes, trains, boats, and buses – and having wafts of smoke come towards you. Mr. Speaker, you may have experienced that as well yourself.

Bill C-51 was introduced later, in April 1987, as a government bill rather than a private member's bill, and it quickly garnered a high public profile. Bill C-51, called the Tobacco Products Control Act, sought to ban tobacco advertising and sponsorships and to require health warnings on all tobacco products. Both bills met with significant industry resistance before finally passing through the House.

The federal government attempted to tackle the issue of flavoured tobacco in 2009 with an act to amend the Tobacco Act, Cracking Down on Tobacco Marketing Aimed at Youth Act, 2009, which went into force in 2010. The act outlines three measures designed to reduce marketing towards children: firstly, that no person shall sell cigarettes or cigarillos except in a package that contains at least 20 cigarettes or cigarillos; secondly, that no manufacturer or retailer shall sell a cigar without a health warning label regardless of the number of cigars being sold; and thirdly, that no manufacturer or retailer shall sell cigarettes or cigarillos that include a flavouring agent other than sugar, tobacco, or tobacco extracts.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, these measures displayed only very limited effectiveness in achieving their goals. Tobacco companies simply responded by slightly altering their products such that their cigarillos were branded cigars, for example. These and other innovations effectively allowed tobacco manufacturers and distributors to circumvent sale, packaging, and flavour restrictions. Thus, at the federal level the struggle to regulate tobacco has been an arduous battle.

However, Alberta has also tackled the issue here in the province. On January 1, 2008, the Tobacco Reduction Act came into effect. It was an amendment to the Smoke-free Places Act. The goal of this act was to reduce the prevalence of tobacco use within Alberta. To accomplish this goal, the act put into place some restrictions that would gradually be placed on tobacco use over a period of time. The primary target of the Tobacco Reduction Act was the elimination of second-hand smoke in public places. To accomplish this, the act made smoking in public places illegal effective January 1, 2008. Fines ranged between $1,000 and $5,000 for individuals and much more for businesses, up to $100,000 for violators.

On July 1, 2008, the second phase of the Tobacco Reduction Act came into effect. This phase targeted the advertising of tobacco products. It stated that retailers were no longer allowed to advertise in any way the sale of any tobacco products. This restriction on advertising also included point-of-sale displays such as the wall of cigarettes often seen in corner stores.

The final phase came into effect on January 1, 2009. That phase stipulated that tobacco products may not be sold by pharmacies, health facilities, and postsecondary institutions.

Just recently, Mr. Speaker, in 2012, this Legislature passed the Tobacco Reduction (Protection of Children in Vehicles) Amendment Act, 2012, which banned smoking in vehicles with minors present. This government has pledged to proclaim the act as part of an update to the Alberta tobacco reduction strategy.

The government has also taken legislative action to protect youth specifically, Mr. Speaker. The Prevention of Youth Tobacco Use Act came into force through proclamation on April 1, 2003. The act was created with the recognition that the Legislature of Alberta has a responsibility to promote the health of young people by restricting their access to tobacco products. In fact, the act states that no person under the age of 18 years may possess or consume tobacco products in a public place. Punishment for violation included a fine of not more than $100. In addition to the fine placed on the unlawful tobacco user, peace officers may seize the tobacco products.

As we can see, Mr. Speaker, both Canada and Alberta have a long history of working to curb tobacco use and abuse not just in adults but in the populations of youth and minors. Let's carry on that trend. Combined with the Alberta tobacco reduction strategy, we're well on our way towards a future in which smoking tobacco products is on the decline. Ideally, it would be nonexistent.

Thus, I thank the hon. Member for Calgary-South East for sponsoring this bill. It is a good bill. I'm thankful to be able to stand before you and speak to it. I believe that the conversation that we're having today will go down in history as reducing this evil of tobacco to nil for youth.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to speak to Bill 206, Tobacco Reduction (Flavoured Tobacco Products) Amendment Act, 2012, being brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-South East. I would like to thank him for taking on such an admirable cause, especially one that affects the lives of many of our province's youth. I would also like to thank him for sharing his personal story and let him know how touched I am by his words and by the courage of his leadership. As a father of a young family myself, much like the Member for Calgary-South East, I'm very pleased and honoured to stand in support of my hon. friend's bill.

Many of us in the House know about the damaging effects that smoking has on our health, especially the high incidences of cancer-related deaths of millions of people around the world. Smoking-related death is the most preventable type of death in Canada. Smoking is known to cause a multitude of respiratory illnesses and diseases, namely cancer. Mr. Speaker, because of smoking's connections to preventable death and disease, proactive measures have been taken in order to protect the well-being and health of our families and our communities. Legislation has been implemented in order to dissuade tobacco use and promote the health and well-being of our citizens.

It's hard to believe that it was only during the mid-80s that antitobacco legislation first restricted smoking in federally regulated workplaces. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar spoke quite eloquently about, this included planes, trains, and boats with the introduction of bills C-204 and C-51. I think most of us in the Legislature today are old enough to remember the lunacy of the smoking and nonsmoking sections of airplanes.

I cannot imagine going into a public space such as the supermarket, the post office, or a shopping mall and having my lungs unwillingly filled with second-hand smoke. This, Mr. Speaker, is something that I do not take for granted. I'm grateful that the health of our citizens is being protected, and I'm grateful for those who came before us to enact these laws. Overwhelmingly studies have shown that inhaling second-hand smoke has tragic consequences and has proven to be as lethal a killer as actively smoking tobacco itself.

Since the federal government began cracking down on smoking, our province's rate of tobacco use has decreased from 26 per cent to 17.7 per cent of our population, this occurring between 1999 and 2011. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, youth tobacco use among those aged 15 to 19 has also significantly dropped, from 26 per cent to an astonishing 3.3 per cent between 1999 and 2011. As the father of a 15-year-old I'm grateful for this decrease. As the numbers indicate, putting these regulations in place has had a significant effect on the decline of underage smoking in Alberta, in Canada as a whole. Although 3.3 per cent is a drastic change from 26, it is 3.3 per cent too much.

The Tobacco Reduction Act, which became law on January 1, 2008, as an amendment to the Smoke-free Places Act, helps strengthen antitobacco laws. The main objective of this act, Mr. Speaker, was to eliminate the exposure to second-hand smoke in public places and, more importantly, to protect the health of our citizens. The act outlines several provisions regarding smoking and how tobacco products were advertised. Some might take it for granted now, but this act prohibited smoking in all public places and workplaces, and for that, we should all be thankful. The act also banned retail displays, the marketing and promotion of tobacco products, and barred the sale of tobacco products from all health care facilities, public postsecondary campuses, pharmacies, and stores housing pharmacies. Banning smoking in public places meant that nonsmokers no longer had to fear that they were somehow putting their lives in undue jeopardy because of second-hand smoke exposure.

Mr. Speaker, several tobacco products were specifically targeted in the act. These included cigarettes, cigars, cigarillos, pipe tobacco, and specialty tobacco such as chewing tobacco, snoose, and snuff. Any person who contravenes the act may be subject to fines ranging from $1,000 to $5,000. Businesses that contravene the act face fines ranging from $10,000 up to $100,000.

Mr. Speaker, after this act was put in place, you could hear a sigh of relief throughout the province as families could now go to any public place without fear of exposing their young children to the dangerous chemicals contained in second-hand cigarette smoke. More importantly, all nonsmokers could rest assured that their lungs were not unduly being filled with second-hand smoke and that their health was not being threatened. Health Canada estimates that there are at least 800 deaths per year that are related to second-hand smoke. Many of these individuals die from lung cancer and heart disease brought on by second-hand smoke.

There are over 4,000 chemicals contained in tobacco smoke, and more than 70 are known to initiate or promote cancer. Mr. Speaker, these chemicals, known as carcinogens, are agents that increase the risk of cancer. They are widely known to harm one's cardiovascular system as nicotine increases the demand for oxygen by increasing heart rates, making one's heart work harder than normal. Prolonged effects of smoking can lead to stroke, heart disease, and, of course, cancer. Nicotine may also increase the buildup of deposits in the arterial linings, which impairs blood flow.

Mr. Speaker, Health Canada also deduced that the average age most smokers start smoking is 15 and that daily smokers consume an average of 16.2 cigarettes per day. After a lifetime of day-to-day smoking, I cannot even begin to imagine the adverse effects this would have on one's system, let alone the increased risk of heart disease and cancer. Of course, we don't have to imagine since studies have shown time and time again the negative effects that prolonged smoking has on one's body.

In terms of lung cancer related cases Health Canada estimates that there are between 14,500 and 18,200 new cases every year. Alberta Health Services states that over 47,000 people die from smoking every year in Canada, with an estimated 3,400 being Albertans. Furthermore, costs related to smoking-related illness in Canada total around $4.4 billion. Imagine how many schools and health centres we could build by saving on that money.

Given that there are so many second-hand smoke related Canadian deaths in any given year as well as billions spent on health care due to smoke-related disease, it makes sense that our province would actively promote decreased tobacco use, particularly amongst our youth. The Tobacco Reduction Act's ban on tobacco displays, for example, has helped reduce the prevalence of tobacco use in teenagers, who may be swayed by manipulative advertisements that glamorize smoking. As a result, Mr. Speaker, fewer of our children will be exposed to and have to experience smoking-related diseases or have their right to live in a smoke-free environment infringed upon.

Mr. Speaker, the intent of Bill 206 is commendable as it may help in the battle against smoking-related diseases, and I am interested in hearing the rest of this debate. Once again, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-South East for bringing this bill before the House.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that we now call the motion to close debate and take the vote. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

If there are no other speakers, I'll invite the Member for Calgary-South East to close debate.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's pretty clear, from what we've heard today, that based on the facts, based on the emotion, based on personal experience, smoking is bad. I guess we could put it into terms when I talked about: the aim of this bill was to prohibit the sale of flavoured tobacco products in cigarettes, cigarillos, and the smokeless tobacco. Again, I'll reference the Willy Wonka factor. When we talk about Willy Wonka & the Chocolate Factory, we think of a happy time, our kids, and we think about confectionary and candy. We don't think about tobacco. We don't think about the adverse effects. I guess that if Willy Wonka and the Oompa-Loompas were to put it their way, they'd say: oompa oompa, doompadee-doo; I've got some news for you; smoking is bad for you.

I guess, as we move forward, like I said, the evidence is there from a clinical and medical perspective, but it's also there from a social perspective. Again, this has nothing to do with admonishing those people who do smoke. Colleagues and friends and family, we simply wish you would quit because we love you, and for our kids that we held in our arms with their soft skin and their coos and babbles, we want to do everything to protect them from the temptation of something that will not perhaps one day kill them, but it's just a matter of when it will, when they'll get the bad effects of smoking.

Mr. Speaker, in short, it's the right thing to do for all members. We all know – we all know – in this House that we need to ban these products from our kids. I urge every member of this House to vote in favour of this bill, protect our children, and do what's right.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 206 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the clock I'd move that we call it 5 o'clock and move on to Motions Other than Government Motions.

[Motion carried]

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Enhanced Viability of Rural Communities

511. Ms Kubinec moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to complete a report, to be tabled in the Assembly, which examines various strategies utilized around the world that enhance the viability of rural communities and to help retain rural families.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and open debate on Motion 511. I am proposing this motion because I believe that communities and families are the lifeblood that sustains rural communities. Motion 511 simply urges the government to explore rural retention initiatives and strategies used in other areas of the world.

To me, exploring options to support rural life means looking at supports and legislative tools for both existing and future possibilities of further innovation. Many rural communities see their youth flock to urban centres, be it for education, employment, or entertainment. Mr. Speaker, this is a troubling trend for many rural families and communities.

I believe that young people can make a fruitful life for themselves and their families in rural Alberta, and we have examples in my own family who have done just that. But there are various obstacles that face other families. The lack of options for child care and concern that children may not receive the same educational or extracurricular opportunities as those in urban centres are recurring themes when I speak to my constituents.

I want to tell you a little bit about the Alberta Distance Learning Centre, which is a shining example of a success story on that education front where they've done amazing work to make sure that education is well taken care of.

Addressing some of these concerns is a recent initiative that has caught my attention. It's called the return to rural. It is a community economic development project aimed at attracting and retaining early- and mid-career families to and in rural Alberta. Their guiding philosophy is the idea that by blending technology and youth, it is possible to create an environment in which rural is a viable choice for youth to live their dream life. Their strategy leverages the Internet, social media, and advances in communication technology to connect, engage, and match young people with the opportunities that are now available in rural Alberta. This is a great initiative, and as a government I think it is our duty to support what such individuals and entrepreneurs are doing to further explore options that can make rural life more viable for young families.

Now, as we will hear from the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, this government is already doing a lot to promote and support a sustainable rural Alberta. In no way does this motion assume that good work isn't already being done, but I think we can greatly benefit from broadening our research horizons to include other areas of the world. Australia, for example, has done a lot of work to support its rural communities, and my thought is: why shouldn't we look at Australia to see if there's anything that they are doing successfully that we can do here?

Sharing information is key to the development of best practices. That's why, in the drafting of the Alberta rural development strategy, other jurisdictions were looked at in order to determine how we can best support our rural communities. My understanding, however, is that this interjurisdictional scan was limited to North America. Many strategies and individuals in North America have seen great successes, including in my son's community, where they have successfully developed and implemented a model for a rural child care centre in Manitoba. They identified a need, they knew what they had to do, they worked with the government, they fundraised, and they opened a 24-space child care centre.

I think we are missing out on a great deal if we don't investigate success stories from other areas of the world when crafting legislation and policies to create our own success stories. I believe that by doing this, the government can further contribute to rural retention and sustainability, two things which are very important to my constituents and indeed to many Albertans.

Whatever the outcome here today, the debate and awareness surrounding this motion will be valuable. I hope the debate will help inform current efforts to improve the sustainability and viability of rural communities.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this government is already doing much to support rural families and municipalities, but I believe that a government must not stop at trying to improve our province every day. To solve this issue will require leadership from both the government here in Edmonton and from our municipal government partners. I urge all hon. members to follow this debate with interest and consider fully the advantages of studying potential solutions found in other countries around the world.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Calder and then Little Bow.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise here today, and the Alberta New Democrats certainly are in full support of Motion 511. I would thank the member for bringing it forward. It's very important that we do support our local and rural communities as strongly as possible. There are a number of very difficult problems that you have to deal with through regulation and through guidance from different levels of government. The natural process that we see not just in Alberta but in other provinces around the country and, indeed, around the world is urbanization, right? To mitigate against that, it's important that we do face this problem and work with it actively here in bodies such as this Alberta Legislature.

I think that if we can build a report that can be commissioned to highlight some of the issues that our rural areas are facing today, that would be good. You know, we want to look at areas in particular such as the shortage of doctors and nurses and health care professionals and the time-worn infrastructure of those health services around rural Alberta. At the end of March 2013 we saw there were 8,399 physicians registered – and this was a decrease of only .6 per cent from the last quarter and an increase of 4.7 per cent from last year – and 366 specialists. In the rural areas is where we are seeing movement, considerable negative movement in this area. Studies have shown that doctor shortages impact the economy of rural communities. Physician shortages lead to increased absenteeism for employers and employees that have to look for medical services elsewhere. Doctor shortages, Mr. Speaker, also make it harder for small-town businesses to recruit people.

The government seems to have a strategy to centralize certain medical services to the detriment of rural and smaller centres. We saw the lab testing, for example, go from rural hospitals to larger municipalities, which, again, erodes the jobs and the capacity for smaller centres to look after themselves. Just today we were highlighting that very thing with Wainwright, Westlock, and Vermilion losing their central microbiology and hemoglobin analysis to Edmonton. We can regulate and fight back against these kinds of centralization processes if we choose to do so here in this Legislature.

For example – and this is a perfect one because it's happening here today – if rural hospitals lose that lab capacity, the first problem is that we do put patient safety into compromise, right? We saw it also for other tests in the last few years. For example, the Westlock hospital has an orthopedic surgery and a stroke centre. They do lots of blood tests there, and they do very good work looking for infections after surgery and so forth. Those blood and test fluids are going straight to an incubator, and then they finish them off straight away, often on the same day. These tests are important to many aspects of medical services, and they include letting the doctors know if surgery recipients are suffering from infections and so forth and what can be done, let's say, with a stroke victim, right? So moving those central services to Edmonton not only puts those things in jeopardy but also fights against this idea of making our rural and smaller communities stronger.

Another issue that I just want to bring forward quickly here, Mr. Speaker, is in regard to the loss of family farms here in the province of Alberta. You know, we've lost many jobs in the agricultural sector over the years, and we do see some provinces, in particular Nova Scotia, making an active investment back into promoting family farms since 2009 – indeed, they're the only province that has seen an increase as opposed to losses like everybody else – investing in things like local food campaigns, providing funds for farmers' markets, and extensive supports to new farmers. The Nova Scotia government also set a goal – right? – an active goal of 20 per cent for locally grown food products being bought and sold and eaten by Nova Scotians by 2020. We could use these kinds of best practices from other jurisdictions. The hon. member mentioned Australia. I'm mentioning Nova Scotia for actively promoting local economy growth and, in this case, agriculture in our rural areas.

I think we know that events such as the BSE crisis that we saw were particularly hard on our rural areas, and it's important that we fight back to support our beef producers. For example, when the prices plummeted, we didn't see the money going back into family farms; rather, they tended to be scooped up by corporate agribusinesses. It's really important that we don't let that sort of thing happen again and that we mitigate against losses that can happen in the beef industry but also for other commodities as well, other grain commodities and so forth.

Further, the access to water, I think, is a new concern for people living in rural communities, to good, quality drinking water as well as water for agriculture and industry. As we move to water markets, in some areas we see, you know, the potential for rural development to be sidetracked or to be distorted as some people may get left out in the cold or left high and dry, so to speak, without water permits.

Other things that we need to mitigate against, Mr. Speaker, include free trade deals that we have with other countries. Those are all well and good for certain industries, but it's important that you protect certain indigenous, vital, essential industries, our agriculture products being one of them. Making investments into AgriStability, for example, and AgriInvest are very important. The money has been taken out of those systems and those subsidies, and I'm quite concerned about that.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, you know, lots of people are concerned about land rights in Alberta. Bill 24, the Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, declared that all pore space under the ground belongs to the government. Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, divides the province into land-use regions but allows as well the cabinet to extinguish existing rights held under licences, permits, leases, and approvals. Finally, Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, was used to force through transmission infrastructure to the detriment of individual landowners. Again, these are sort of cumulative things that make it more difficult for the integrity of rural development to proceed in a reasonable sort of way.

I think we just need to allow more control to regions to make their decisions over important things such as health care and education, for municipalities to have greater autonomy in their ability to develop their municipal areas and expand as they see fit, expanding health care clinics and attracting professionals to the rural areas, working with rural school boards to attract teachers, making sure that we have access to high-speed Internet throughout the rural areas, increasing and expanding and ensuring bus service to rural communities, Mr. Speaker, improving the monitoring and management of our watersheds, and ensuring that everyone has access to good, quality water for their own domestic consumption and for agriculture and industry.

I think a buy-Alberta-local initiative would help considerably, making sure that we stand up for individual farmers' rights in regard to their ability to sell their products, particularly seed, not extinguishing property rights without fair compensation, as I said before, and protecting Alberta's farmland to ensure continued accessibility to Albertan families to promote and to pursue agriculture, especially in the immediate vicinity of rural areas.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'm very happy to support this motion and to speak on these issues. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to stand up today and speak to Motion 511. I think the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock has brought forward a very good motion here for the government to work on to promote rural Alberta. Being an MLA from a rural riding and an active farmer myself, I think it's key to keep rural Alberta thriving, and it's a key point to how this province is going to maintain where it's at and how to move forward. The Member for Edmonton-Calder brought up a couple of good things which I had later on in my speech here.

I think some of the key things we need to remember are rural jobs, rural growth, and economic security. I think that's needed in this province to be able to move forward. As we've identified with the bitumen bubble and energy, Alberta is very reliant on our income off Alberta energy, being oil and gas, and we need to look at the other large renewable resource we have in this province, which is agriculture. Now, of course, I'm a pretty strong advocate of that, and I'm always happy to see that our Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development is also a strong advocate of that and has promoted it through numerous things. I always give kudos where they're due.

One of the positives I saw during constituency week. I was in Vauxhall at the graduation of the school there, and I think there were about 50 to 60 kids that graduated. Now, when I graduated from high school, I was going to farm. My dad had a stroke when I was 17, and I knew through grade 12 that I was going to take over the family farm, so I knew naturally that I was going to farm. There was not another soul in High River at Senator Riley school out of the 120 kids that graduated that said that they were interested in agriculture and were going to go on to it.

Now, when I was in Vauxhall at the end of the constituency week, about 25 per cent of the kids got up and talked about how they were going to go to school in an agriculture-related thing and that their plan after three years was to return to the family farm. I was just glowing after that because you never hear that when you go to a school anymore. We have so many years of kids – you heard parents talk about it. “We're going to get our kids educated and get them off this farm so they can go make a real living.” I think now people have started to figure out, you know, that we have to feed the world. Numerous things I've been to: we're going to have 9 billion people to feed by 2050. That goes back to agriculture in rural Alberta and how we have to keep rural communities vibrant and sustainable. So to be glowing about that was an understatement.

I'm very happy. My stepson is 18, and he has rented a half section this year. Last year he rented a quarter, and this year he's rented a half, so he's involved in agriculture. He grew up in an urban situation. He had no desire, but you have to show them that there's a possibility and teach them the bonuses of being in rural Alberta.

So to me, when I was in Vauxhall, that was just an absolute great moment in my life, to sit there and listen to kids talk about how they want to be part of rural Alberta and move back. They want to go to school in the urban centres, whether it be Lethbridge or Calgary or Edmonton, and get their basis, their college or university. And it's needed because it's a business now. Agriculture used to be, you know, that if you pail fed 200 head of cows, you could kind of get yourself out of any problem in the winter. That's probably why a lot of kids decided they didn't want to farm. It was because of all the hard manual labour to it. Being an active farmer is a lot more book smarts now. You can make more money by hedging and things like that as far as marketing and managing.

Mr. Hale: Triple-A farming.

Mr. Donovan: Yeah, triple-A farming. It's not quite that easy, Member for Strathmore-Brooks, but it's very close.

I think one of the big things – and Edmonton-Calder touched on it – is rural doctor retention, to keep rural doctors in our hospitals. Now, I was lucky enough, when I was on county council, to be on the retention committee for that. That's a key thing because when people look to retire or age in place, they're looking at towns to see: are they going to be able to have all the facilities they need there? If you don't have the doctors staying around for that, you've got a huge problem because it's hard to age in place if you're not going to be able to get the care and level of care that you need.

I think that's something that this province has to work on. I know they've struck a committee on a couple of things that they need to identify on that. I think that's something we really need to push, and I'd promote for our Health minister to look at how we keep doctors in rural Alberta. We have so many people now that are going through medical school and want to be a specialist on knees, hips, elbows – pick your item – cardiologists, but nobody wants to be a family physician anymore, and that's something that we truly need. We need family physicians. How are we going to encourage them to stay in rural Alberta?

Now, one of the things I find is that when people get out there – the two family doctors I know in Vulcan, for instance, I don't think ever planned on making Vulcan their home for life and raising their kids there, but once they got out there and found the small-town values, that it was a nice place to raise your kids and it had a lot of bonuses, then they became comfortable in staying there. Now they promote it, and they're very strong advocates. I appreciate that both of the doctors have been there for a number of years.

Things have changed a little bit on that because not everybody wants to be a doctor till they're 85 like it once used to be in the small towns. I mean, you always had your doctor. He was the doctor when you were born and when your parents were born. You start wondering if, you know, they're keeping up on everything. But I think doctor retention is key.

One of the things that I think we need to look forward on is the fact of aging in place. Now, I got christened last summer with a closure in Carmangay, which I think everybody in here heard about. If you didn't, I can give you a quick refresher on it. That's one of the things we had on aging in place and what kept rural Alberta vibrant.

Now, through the FOIP process, which the Deputy Premier talked of earlier today during question period and how well we use it as opposition – I almost wish I hadn't FOIPed that whole thing because I was a little bit sick after reading it, about how AHS knew the deadlines, knew the dates they were closing the facility, and that they put in there, through the FOIP information that we got: don't let that out, whatever you do; they don't need to know we're closing that in September. They actually went along, and it seemed like there was a whole process of: "Oh, we truly do care. We're going to come in and see what's wrong with that facility. Maybe there's a problem with it." And they knew right at the beginning that they were going to close it. I'm a pretty honest person. If you don't want to keep a place open, just say: "It's closing September 10. Get over it, and move on."

We put on tons of miles. We did tons of tours. But, I mean, the beauty of FOIP is that we got to sit there and go through it and find out that it was known right at the beginning when their closing date was. There were memos that were sent around in AHS saying: "Make sure you don't put the date on it. We don't need that date on there. They're really going to fight once they know that there's a drop-dead date to it." We went around and heard from the Minister of Health at the time that there was no deadline. There's no deadline. Now, whether he wasn't privy to the information that was going around AHS, I don't know, but we're now finding out the facts afterwards.

I guess it goes back to rural Alberta and how to keep things going. Let the aging-in-place facilities still be there. That was pretty disheartening to see.

Now I'd like to move forward from that as it's gone now. So how to move forward. I think we've got to sit here and touch on the great things we have in rural Alberta. We have great schools. The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock brought up about distance learning and stuff like that. That's key. We talked about Australia. I was lucky that in previous years, before I was married and had any kids, I went to Australia for six weeks and toured around. One of the big things they have in Australia is distance learning. Kids stay at home. There are vast areas out there. For one family at the one cattle station their driveway was 35 miles. Nobody else lived out there. Their driveway was 35 miles. I mean, you sit and put that in perspective, how scarce the population is in some of the rural areas. But the reason they keep functioning and keep going is because they supply the distance learning out there. It's key, and it works.

That's something I had hoped that we could keep on in Alberta, the education in rural schools. You know, there are some colleagues from different parties who touch on whether they should be private or public or what we do from there, and that's a different debate for a different day. But I think the key is that we've got to keep focusing on rural jobs, rural growth, and rural security. Security ties back into knowing that you have hospitals, knowing that you have good education, and knowing that you have businesses that can thrive in your smaller communities.

Like most families when they move to an urban centre, one of the things they look at is recreation. I've been a strong advocate for that. Now, how to juggle it all is always a challenge, how to keep recreation plausible and financially secure in the smaller centres so that people have all of those things.

High-speed Internet is one thing. I mean, I'll give the government credit for over the years putting in the high-speed Internet line and that to all of the communities. That's been key. People have been able to keep up. I think everybody in here had snail mail, going over the telephone lines with Internet then. You were pretty happy if you could download something in a half-hour or 45 minutes. I remember that you used to sit and click, and you'd walk away and, you know, half hour, an hour later – poof – your file was there, and you thought: "Wow. This is technology. Look how fast this stuff moves." I mean, now if we don't get something downloaded on our phone in five seconds, we're a little chippy.

But I'm in support of this motion. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to say a few words today regarding Motion 511, which urges the government to complete a report that examines various strategies used around the world to enhance the viability of rural communities and to help retain rural families. I want to, first of all, though, thank the hon. member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock for bringing this matter forward. I feel that we don't often enough speak about issues relating to rural Alberta and agriculture, so I want to thank her for creating this platform, this opportunity for us to have a discussion.

Like her, I'm from rural Alberta as many members here are, and we are passionate about issues relating to rural Alberta. When I was first appointed, about a year ago, to this ministry, the Premier gave me a mandate which included raising the profile of agriculture and rural Alberta. I fairly quickly realized that this is not the type of thing that any one government department can do because it involves so many aspects of a person's life, as has already been mentioned by some of the hon. members: health care, transportation, tourism, municipal affairs, education, and so on. It really does take a broad, government-wide approach, I think, to move the yardsticks, and that's certainly what we're about here.

I want to speak a little bit about the importance of rural Alberta and the rural Alberta economy to the province. There was a report issued by the Conference Board of Canada in 2012, so just recently, talking about the economic footprint of the rural Alberta economy. The numbers are very impressive. It's a $79 billion a year impact, the rural economy, to this province. That includes $1.3 billion in provincial tax. So it's very important for us.

We continue as a government and in my department to invest in initiatives that support rural communities. I am going to take a few minutes to talk about some of them because I think it bears repeating. There may be some things that not everybody knows about. There are the obvious things, the obvious grassroots supports to things like ag societies and also agricultural service boards, who provide support for agriculture around the province and to rural municipalities. In terms of the ag societies we have 294 agricultural societies; 284 of them are what we call primary, or local, ag societies. So that's the smaller ag societies. Then we have the regionals, which include those in some of the medium-sized cities around the province or at least centred there. Then we have the two large ag societies, Edmonton Northlands and the Calgary Stampede.

All of these organizations are very strongly driven by volunteers. If it were not for those volunteers, the activities of these societies would be greatly, greatly curtailed. They provide support for important events in communities, everything from rodeos and things like that to farm safety seminars and everything in between. They also provide great infrastructure support. They manage and maintain community halls, curling rinks, hockey rinks, and the types of facilities you see in rural communities that are multi-use facilities. We talk a lot these days about infrastructure and the importance of multi-use facilities. Well, community halls get used for everything that happens in a community, including provincial elections, federal elections, even in some cases, I would suggest, church meetings, and anything that is of importance to people in that community.

We also have a program called the agricultural initiatives program in my department that supports infrastructure and activities. It's a grant program that we're very proud of and that has done great work, is of great assistance in communities. I can think of a couple of recent examples just kind of off the top of my head. A week or two ago I was in Medicine Hat and was able to present a cheque to the Medicine Hat Exhibition & Stampede for $73,800. What's interesting is the variety of things that that money was going to be used for, everything from a new waterline to graveling the parking lot to equipment in the kitchen. On that same trip when I was down there, I was able to present the Duchess Ag Society with a cheque for $75,000 for their new ice plant.

The hon. Member for Little Bow mentioned that we also support rural utilities, and I am proud to say that we have been supporting and continue to support gas co-ops, rural electrification co-ops. We also have been supporting the final mile rural community program, which is creating Internet infrastructure around the province and in remote areas of the province. That's very important because it has been quite properly pointed out by other speakers that for rural Alberta to be on an even playing field with the urban areas and with other parts of the world, they need to have access. They need to have the ability to communicate, as everybody else does, by Internet. It could be farmers checking out crop prices and weather reports. There are all kinds of uses that this infrastructure is good for in terms of a rural economy.

A few weeks ago I was up in DeBolt at the 40th anniversary of the East Smoky Gas Co-op. One of the very interesting things I learned there, besides, again, the great volunteer support that has made that co-op successful, was the story about the entrepreneurial spirit of those people in terms of creating Internet capacity and coupling it with the activities of the gas co-op, piggybacking one on the other and really bringing some much-needed capacity to their community.

We also have made a major investment in rural Alberta and rural Alberta development by way of the rural Alberta development fund. Now, I know that this motion is about doing a study. Studies have happened before. There's been lots of discussion about how we do rural development, how we support rural Alberta. The rural Alberta development fund was created in 2006 and that flowed out of a previous report. The fund was an investment of $100 million that went into 85 different projects. The idea of that fund was to identify creative projects that could serve as good examples for other communities so that people across the province could benefit from innovative initiatives.

I want to give just a couple of examples of some of the interesting things that were done arising out of that. One that's very immediate for us and one of the most recent grants out of that program is the $3.5 million that is going to the Alberta Peloton Association for the upcoming tour of Alberta, which a lot of us have been hearing about. It's going to happen September 3 to 8. Now, this is something that is going to create world-wide attention for Alberta. It's a wonderful opportunity for us to showcase what we have here in Alberta, and in rural Alberta it's going to create economic development. It's certainly a wonderful tourism tool, and it's also encouraging wellness just by way of the physical activity in the sport that we are showcasing. Coupled with that, I know our Ministry of Culture has also been working very hard to make sure it's a festival so that communities celebrate the event as it passes through their area.

Another initiative that flows out of the rural Alberta development fund is the $970,000 which was awarded several years ago to the FarmOn Foundation from Bashaw, which is not too far from where I live. These are innovative people who are focused on young farmers and people who need help with ideas as to how they can get into the business. It involves social learning. It involves web learning. Their website address is farmon.com. [Mr. Olson's speaking time expired.] I have so much more. I'm sorry.

5:30

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I'll recognize the hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to get up and support the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock and the motion that she's brought forward about rural communities and the importance and viability of them. I just want to comment on the remarks from the minister of agriculture about other reports being done. You know, we have done other reports. This is important, but I think it's also important that we do do some action.

Mr. Speaker, you know, Alberta is a pretty diverse province, and a strong economy is presenting many challenges for rural Alberta communities. I want to talk a little bit about West Yellowhead. I want to talk a little bit about the north, and I want to talk a little bit about aboriginal communities and how they tie into the rural landscape.

In West Yellowhead the attraction and retention of professionals like lawyers, accountants, and doctors is proving to be difficult. While the professionals may like the community, their families prefer larger centres, where there are more options for things like shopping, culture, and recreation. Mr. Speaker, I can speak personally to that because my family doctor came to Hinton, stayed for about a year and a half, and his wife said, "We just can't live there anymore," and they got up, and they left and left me without a doctor.

Mrs. McQueen: Was it you?

Mr. Campbell: It wasn't me. It was the fact that there were no piano lessons.

In one community in my constituency there is a huge demand for lawyers but only a few practising. Again, in fact, one lawyer who was recently practising had so much demand for his services he often worked seven days a week, leaving no time for his family. He ended up leaving the job for a larger centre to allow him some time with his family and a more balanced lifestyle. This is creating even more demand on those that remain in the community, and the same challenges occur with our doctors and our other professionals. I can say, Mr. Speaker, that in the town of Hinton two doctors, Dr. Caffaro and Dr. Armstrong, are two very competent individuals who lead the rural strategy for doctors in this province and do a very good job and actually bring a lot of young people into my riding, and some of them actually stay, which is great for the people there.

In West Yellowhead, you know, housing is an important issue. Again, in a lot of rural communities demand for rental units throughout the province is causing some concerns. In my riding, where the communities are doing quite well and the forest industry, coal mining, oil, and gas are all doing very well, rates are anywhere from a thousand to $1,600 a month and basically zero vacancy. In West Yellowhead, Mr. Speaker, we actually put up four affordable housing projects in the last four years, I think to the tune of about 180 units. We still have a waiting list for those.

Even though our government has provided approximately $1 billion to create 22,000 affordable housing spaces and actually used that money to work with industry to create even more money to provide more housing spaces, it's still creating some real issues for us, and it's really difficult for families to find affordable housing within our rising economy, especially out in rural Alberta. So as we try to attract young professionals, when they come into Hinton, for example, or Edson, there's just no place for them to live. All of the communities suffer because of that.

Mr. Speaker, rural communities face some very significant challenges in our growing economy, and of course in my riding our communities all face similar issues dealing with growth and increased infrastructure demands. We need to look at best practices and ideas from other jurisdictions so we can continue to build on our successes.

Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I didn't talk about aboriginal issues as it relates to Alberta's rural development. As chair of the NADC for four years, you know, it was hard to differentiate between aboriginal and nonaboriginal people as we looked at the challenges that are faced in the north.

I just want to bring up some excerpts from the 2010 progress report from Alberta's rural development strategy. They talked about strategic partnerships between aboriginal organizations, industry, and governments to enhance aboriginal participation in the economy. Again, you could just use any word. Instead of aboriginal groups you could just talk about people.

Aboriginal Economic Partnerships provide Aboriginal communities and organizations with funding and advisory support to build capacity leading to employment and business development opportunities in the Alberta economy.

Providing... [funding] for capacity development... improving educational attainment and employment opportunities...

For example, we do that with the six Métis nations regions, which cover large areas of rural parts of the province, especially the north.

Develop an Aboriginal Wellness Strategy that outlines activities and initiatives to improve the health status and well-being of Aboriginal people...

Promote Aboriginal heritage by collaborating with communities on heritage preservation and renewing exhibits.

Again, Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump is an example.

Mr. Speaker, looking at mobile diabetes screening initiatives, making sure that people within northern communities have the ability to have themselves tested through portable testing equipment to screen for diabetes and its complications. The team also does health promotion/diabetes education... where possible [and] encourages linkages with local health care providers. To date, 25 unique communities have been visited... many of them a number of times...

Through the Learning Clicks Program, ambassadors visit rural junior and senior high schools and communities across the province to motivate both youth and adults to pursue further education and training and to assist potential learners in how to navigate the Campus Alberta system. The program has developed unique strategies in partnership with community leaders to engage Aboriginal students on and off reserve...

Numerous supports for teachers to northern Alberta are available. They include the Supporting Beginning Teachers Program.

I know that through the NADC we've set up the northern teachers' bursary program, where we pay for the third and fourth years for northern students to get their degree and then go and practise in the north for a period of time, and that's worked very well.

Mr. Speaker, I want to leave you with some excerpts from Alberta's rural development strategy 2005 report, A Place to Grow. The following actions were to be taken on a priority basis to begin implementation of this comprehensive new strategy for rural Alberta. The objectives were to Ensure that Aboriginal Albertans participate fully in rural development opportunities across the province.

Some of the priority actions were to Facilitate strengthened relationships [between] Aboriginal, federal, provincial and local governments, industry and other interested parties to enhance the participation of Aboriginal people in the continuing development of rural economies and communities.

Fully implement the First Nations, Métis and Inuit Policy Framework developed jointly by Aboriginal people and the provincial government...

Expand opportunities for Aboriginal youth to become involved in 4H programs designed and adapted specifically for aboriginal youth.

Implement the First Nations Training to Employment Partnership program.

Develop and implement a First Nations Economic Participation Strategy.

Work on priority actions identified in this new Rural Development Strategy will begin immediately. In future years, the provincial government will rely on the advice provided through the new Rural Citizens' Voice to adapt and modify the strategy to meet changing needs.

Mr. Speaker, I think this last comment says it all.

A Place to Grow is not designed to be the solution to every challenge in rural Alberta but to act as a catalyst for action in communities across the province – actions that will sustain a rural way of life that was vital to our past and is just as vital to the future of our province.

I think the member's motion sums that up, and I'm more than happy to support her on her motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency of Cypress-Medicine Hat has a large rural component, so I rise to speak briefly to Motion 511, which urges "the government to complete a report, to be tabled in the Assembly, which examines various strategies utilized around the world that enhance the viability of rural communities and to help retain rural families."

It is a fact of life that many Albertans move from rural areas to urban areas and tend to stay there. Anything that can be done to enhance the viability of rural communities, to help people remain in their rural community is certainly worth looking at.

Another fact of life is that this government says one thing and does another. They have not yet learned that their actions speak louder than words. The words in this motion sound great. Who would not support examining different strategies that would enhance the viability of our rural communities? But I want to take a few minutes to take a look at the actions of this government and how these actions have impacted our rural communities. I do so because I believe a strong provincial and rural economy is based on property rights, stable electricity costs, and a minimum of government interference. Repealing bills 36, 24, and 19, as others have mentioned, would be a great place to start. The illogical idea of high capital investment in these industries and uncertain property rights is no doubt going to lead to more problems in the rural area.

Also, in the last election the Premier promised stable, predictable funding of a 2 per cent yearly increase to school boards, but the action taken in the budget was to significantly reduce funding for education. Recent budgets have decreased funding to Prairie Rose school division in my constituency by an incredible approximately $2.8 million. This type of severe funding cut to the front line of education makes it extremely difficult, especially in rural areas. In fact, in the past five years Prairie Rose school division has had to close five schools, rural schools, a very difficult problem, especially where you need some for growth. The government talks about the importance of rural education, but again look at the action taken in the budget: nothing – nothing – to help rural schools, everything to make their job a lot harder. The hardest hit will be the students in the rural areas.

Our province is desperately short of family doctors – and again this is even more prevalent in rural communities – yet at the same time spaces at the U of C medical school recently dropped to 155 for new entrants, the lowest in five years. This is going to contribute significantly to the shortage we already have – how could it not? – at a time when the province is growing. What actions did the government take? They've been in an all-out war with Alberta's physicians, and the budget also significantly reduced funding to postsecondary institutions.

No one in my constituency has forgotten about Bill 50, the legislation that gave cabinet the power to say that transmission lines were critical infrastructure without a public needs assessment. As a result, Albertans are paying billions for four transmission lines when there's no proof that these lines are needed. The Bill 50 lines will raise the costs of electric bills for every Albertan, and in rural areas, where costs are higher, it is rural Albertans who will be hit the hardest.

Infrastructure that's actually critical infrastructure such as roads is another area in which the government is failing rural Albertans. Albertans don't know what rhyme or reason the government uses to determine which projects to undertake. In Cypress-Medicine Hat the government announced that 40 kilometres of highway 61 would be reworked, repaved, and widened. Twenty kilometres of that work was completed, and the work stopped with no explanation. The project was deleted, dropped from Alberta Transportation's tentative project list. This is an important roadway in our area and a dangerous road. Again, actions speak louder than words. The government promised 40 kilometres of maintenance; work was only done on 20. People take notice of that, Mr. Speaker. In a commodity-based province the ability to move our grain, livestock, oil, gas, and timber around safely and efficiently is paramount.

Many of my rural constituents have also expressed frustration with the government's AgriStability program. The administrative red tape for this program is overwhelming, the forms are unclear, and many people actually have to spend more on professional fees to navigate the program than they receive from the program. Huge improvements can be made here.

If Motion 511 passes and the government does in fact complete a report about strategies in other parts of the world that might work for rural Alberta, I urge the government not to sit on the report and to release the report to the Legislature within 30 days of the completion of the study. I also hope but will not cross my fingers that the government will not spend thousands of taxpayer dollars on outside consultations for such a report when there are qualified people already within the public sector who would better perform this task. Better yet, just go have a real consultation with rural Albertans and ask them what they would think.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I'll recognize the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to rise and talk about Motion 511. I do agree that we need to continue to look at ways to make rural Alberta viable, sustainable. I think the best thing is that instead of looking around the world, we need to continue to look at home. You know, we have some very, very great entrepreneurs in our own backyards, people that are trying to improve the sustainability and viability of rural Alberta. I find it funny that the government is putting this motion forward to get this study going when, on the other hand, they're taking so much away from rural Alberta.

A great example of that is the pharmacies. Since they came out with this pharmacy plan, I've had over a dozen rural pharmacists come to me and say: "We may have to shut our doors. We will not be able to keep the staff we have." They're going to lay people off. This is coming from the pharmacists. I'm not making any of this up. You've heard day after day after day in question period that we're being contacted by pharmacists that are in trouble and going to be in trouble. That's a fact.

You know, the doctors in our rural communities: it's tough to get doctors to stay. We don't have as much to offer as a big city. It's totally different living in a rural community. The people that live in these communities do great work, and they do great things to keep these doctors and the nurses and the health care staff, but it's tough when we see Carmangay closing and in Strathmore they're closing 25 beds in the hospital. That community has grown. From when that hospital was built, in 1985 – I think they had about 3,500 people there – it's grown to over 13,000 and, then, even more if you count all the rural areas around it. The hospital is getting cut in half. You know, the lab is the same size as when it started, but the population has drastically increased.

They need more doctors in Strathmore, they need more doctors in Bassano, and they need more doctors in Brooks. It's getting tougher and tougher to attract these doctors. I got a letter from a doctor in Brooks that came from South Africa. He said that he has colleagues that would like to come over, but with the contracts and the workloads and everything that they have to go through, why would he want to come to a rural hospital when he can go to a big-city hospital and pick his shifts and live his life?

We had a doctor from South Africa come in, our doctor in Bassano, a good friend of mine. You know, he stayed there for I think it was a couple of years, and he's actually given his notice. As of July 1 he's leaving. So now we're going to have one doctor on staff in Bassano. He's going to have to cover the whole hospital now by himself. I mean, we have to keep working with associations like RPAP, you know, whatever we can do to get these doctors and professionals we need to continue to do it.

Another huge issue in rural Alberta is the pheasant release program. We heard that from Red Deer-North. She put forward petitions. We had the pheasant hatchery in Brooks. It turned out thousands of pheasants a year. They're not the exact figures, but there was a study done, and it was about $3 million that that pheasant release program brought into southern Alberta, about $10 million provincially. Now they're looking at getting the birds from out of the country, from the States.

We talk about rural sustainability and things we can do to improve rural Alberta, yet we're cutting things, programs that actually bring money in and keep it viable. You know, that's an issue that needs to be looked at. What can we do, what do we need to do to grow our own pheasants and get all these hunters to come up from out of province and out of the country and bring money into our communities?

Agriculture is a huge, huge part of rural Alberta, and as the Member for Little Bow mentioned, our population is increasing. We're going to have to continue to produce more food, and it's getting tougher with the property rights laws that came in. Why should someone who has been on that land for that many years have to take direction from a government? They know how to run it. They know how to do everything better than the people up here telling them how to do it.

There are some very, very good examples of programs that are going on to improve attraction to rural Alberta. A very good example is our Bassano school. At the end of January they were the first school in Canada to implement the health, recreation, and human services program using a high-fidelity patient simulator, the first high school in Canada to do this. This is going to allow community partners through the hospital to come in and start showing these children, our students, how the medical industry works. You know, they can work on a simulated patient that does everything that a live person will do. That's a great thing to attract students into the medical profession. It's a great tool for the community to use. Newell Further Ed is an adult education association in town that helps educate adults. You know, they put on courses in first aid, CPR. Those different courses will be able to use the simulator, so that's a great attraction.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt you, hon. member, but Standing Order 8(3) provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate.

I would now invite the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock to close debate on Motion 511.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The goal of Motion 511 is to promote rural retention and sustainability in Alberta. We've heard here today that the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development has spearheaded a lot of work in this regard already – I wish he could have finished telling us all the wonderful things that have gone on already – but my constituents are still concerned and want us to broaden our research horizons by looking into what other countries are doing to promote rural regions.

I know that in my own community of Westlock there's a lot of concern right now with the discussion of the removal of some lab services. We are concerned because it will affect jobs in our community. Families have been attracted to Westlock because of the amazing reputation of our hospital. Our RPAP committee recently put on a skills competition day for lab, medical, and physio students to come to see what we have to offer in Westlock, in rural Alberta. The students were very, very impressed with what they saw.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 511 simply urges the government to explore the various strategies used around the world that enhance the viability of rural communities. I value and respect my colleagues' comments regarding this motion, particularly my colleague from Little Bow. In our family we could see that our sons wanted to farm quite early on. We implemented what we called the four-year rule. "You have to go away for four years. You can come back and work in the summer. There might be an opportunity for you when you come back if you choose to." They all went away, and they got engineering degrees, an ag degree. One went to Olds College. They are all now proud farmers who are making a living at doing that job.

I would like to thank everyone who participated on this motion today and urge all members to vote in support. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 511 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was slow to rise because I thought people might want to have a standing vote there.

Seeing the hour, I would move that we adjourn until 7:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:53 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, May 13, 2013

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you. After some consultation with the opposition, I'd like to make a motion that all bells this evening be one minute.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader has moved that any division bells tonight be one minute in duration. This requires unanimous consent, so I'll ask one question. Is anyone opposed?

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Deputy Speaker: We'll proceed as usual.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 22 Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act

Ms Smith moved that the motion for second reading be amended to read that Bill 22, Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Debate adjourned May 9]

The Deputy Speaker: Additional speakers? The hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: A point of clarification. Are we not dealing with a motion to defer? Is that how we adjourned this?

The Deputy Speaker: This is the referral motion. I'm sorry. Hon. members, we are dealing with referral motion RF1.

I'm looking for other speakers. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On this motion to defer, I listened to the hon. members last week when they talked about consulting with the various bands. Unfortunately, that's not the information we're getting back. That's just the way it is.

The Confederacy of Treaty Six writes – this is an interesting point. I know you can mock this, but this is the chief of Treaty 6. He quotes the minister, his May 9 statement in this House:

I can say that I met with the grand chief personally. We met about three weeks ago. He was made aware of this bill. He agreed to this going forward.

What the chief writes back is:

This above statement is false on all accounts. The meeting that took place was a dinner meeting and the mention of a levy was made as a casual statement, there was no indication of Bill 22 or that the Alberta Government had any law drafted.

So we have a difference. We have a difference of opinion on consultation. The government is saying that it consulted. The people that they claim to have consulted with are saying that they didn't consult.

Clearly, that alone is enough that this government should take that in caution, that you cannot claim consultation has taken place when one party to the process is claiming that it did not, particularly in such a short period of time. That's important because an amount of the feedback that we got dealing with this bill, dealing with this issue, clearly shows an incredible amount of confusion and objection to what these various bands and treaty nations have now come to know as Bill 22. This motion to defer is a logical step. It only makes sense so that we can clear up this so-called confusion of whether or not consultation took place.

I would like to add that the bill should have been brought forward with pretty much an agreement of the First Nation bands. There should have been not just consultation in the sense of what landowners have become accustomed to, but because these people are separate nations – this is an intergovernmental relationship – there should have been something in the order of a memorandum of understanding, an agreement in principle before the act was actually brought forward. That is a logical process that would normally take place.

With that, the minister could then have a rightful claim to having consulted, but right now that's in dispute, and it shouldn't be. With the feedback that we've gotten from the Treaty 6 First Nations, from Treaty 7, particularly Chief Weaselhead, from the Blood Tribe, and many others who have now written us over that very short period of time since this was introduced, by all accounts they were not aware of this, so clearly there was a miscommunication.

Now, I do not dispute that the minister is under the impression he consulted, but what I dispute is that consultation has actually taken place when one party is saying that it did not. That's a dispute that needs to be resolved. That's a dispute where we cannot move forward with that not having come to some sort of conclusion. To take this process and refer this back to a committee so that the various parties can come in and be part of a process before this moves forward seems only logical to me and seems like the right course of action.

There's just one other question that the minister didn't answer or didn't give information for; hence, the question: is there a rush for this? What's the rush? If I understood him correctly, he said that this was years in the making. It's understandable if it was years in the making. What's not understandable is the various First Nations saying that they were not consulted. But if it was years in the making, what's the rush right now to put this through and pass this before we go home for the summer? Why not just put this out to the committee so there is ample time to do what is necessary to make sure all the parties are onboard?

Clearly, the government wants this act – that's why they brought it forward – but where are the other parties? That's the most important point. There are two sides to this agreement. In business deals I don't know how you get a business deal unless both parties agree to it and are willing to be a signatory to some sort of agreement. That's not here. That's not present.

With that, I would ask that the members of this House defer this bill and support this motion to defer it. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, on the amendment.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to stand and speak to the amendment on Bill 22, which has, I think, caught many people by surprise, particularly perhaps the government and the minister who promoted the bill. It certainly wasn't part of the briefing that I received from the minister.

It sounded like there had been full agreement on this bill, but within the few days that we've had since the bill was tabled, we're already having a tremendous response from First Nations, particularly leadership, as was indicated, and not just contact but real frustration, real anger, a real sense of being betrayed because decisions that were made were not discussed in some of these consultations. It may well be that principles and values and some ideas around a levy, some ideas around the ministerial powers, the delegation in some cases of powers to the provincial level that have had some federal credibility are new for some of these issues for the provincial authority.

But, more particularly, I think section 8 and the disclosure of negotiations and financial information between the First Nation and the corporation are quite unique. The First Nations are not shy about pointing out that when corporations make this negotiation with private landowners, they're not required to make it public. They are offended by the fact that we would treat them differently from other stakeholders in this instance. In the context of this bill section 8 is a key barrier to any support First Nations can give. I'm now talking primarily about Treaty 8 and Treaty 6, which are in this area of the province. I haven't heard exact details from Treaty 7 in the south but a very strong reaction from Treaty 6 and Treaty 8.

Section 15 of the Charter, dealing with the equality of rights, again raises the question of why there's a double standard here. Why has this government placed responsibility on First Nations and their relationship with corporations that they don't put on other organizations, landowners, and interested parties?

Another detail is the possibility that even once these negotiations are concluded, they could be FOIPed. That, again, violates some of the basic market principles of Alberta, that private industry and the private sector are not subject to FOIP. There's a real sense that this government and this minister have lost connection to the basic rights of First Nations. I'm curious why in some cases the government of Alberta, who has not traditionally been involved in this way, has now become an intermediary and in some ways is downloading its responsibility for funding and for proper consultation to the First Nations and the industry. Therefore, it is not only downloading the costs but is downloading the conflict that may arise and the resolution of the same.

One has to wonder what the motivation is behind this and why there is such haste when clearly these are contentious issues, important issues to First Nations and have not had the full discussion that they need.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot but support this amendment and motion. I would very much hope that the government would see the wisdom of this in terms of developing a stronger relationship with First Nations, extending the time that may be necessary for further consultation, and getting this right the first time. This will have implications not only in the First Nations community but across Alberta if we can't find a respectful, inclusive, common approach to this critical issue of an industry-First Nations relationship.

We on this side also will be recommending some amendments at an appropriate time. At this time I would support the amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to support the motion that the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, Bill 22, not be read a second time at this time but referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, and thereupon, I would hope, they would hear interested groups make their presentations.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 22 begins with a preamble, and it says:

Whereas the Crown is committed to consulting with First Nations and other identified aboriginal groups in respect of provincial regulated activities that might adversely [affect] their exercise of treaty rights.

It goes on to say:

Whereas the Crown is committed to consulting with First Nations and other identified aboriginal groups in respect of provincial . . . activities that might [affect] traditional uses of land.

Then it goes on to say, "Whereas it is desirable to assist First Nations and other . . . aboriginal groups" that participate in consultations and so on and so on and so on.

Mr. Speaker, this is a situation where the irony is overwhelming, where, in fact, a government bill that starts with all kinds of fine words about consulting with aboriginal groups was not consulted on with those very same groups in the development of this legislation, and they are now opposed to this bill. They're strongly opposed to it, and they're denying that the consultation claimed by the minister ever took place. I wonder what kind of bill of goods he's trying to sell us when he baldly makes the statement that consultation has occurred and that First Nations are onside with this particular piece of legislation.

Well, we find that they're not. We've done some consultation. The chiefs of Treaty 8 are not only opposed to the legislation; they're shocked and dismayed. They've gone on to say that this violates the intent of the protocol agreement on government-to-government relations and that it's been breached at the very time that negotiations are going on with regard to the renewal of the protocol arrangement.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of reasons – and we can get into this – why Treaty 8 and others oppose this bill, but I just want to deal with the fact that the ministers claim they've consulted, and they're categorically stating that they have not been consulted. On Monday – I guess it's still Monday, that is today – they issued a release in which they state that the Treaty 8 First Nations of Alberta fully opposes Bill 22 in its entirety. Now, we didn't get that information from the minister when he introduced this bill. We heard from him that everybody was happy and had been consulted. I want to say that Treaty 8, particularly Grand Chief Twinn, has gone on to say, "We will not support this bill and continue our opposition of it until proper consultation is conducted with the First Nations of Treaty 8."

Now, Treaty 6 has said that there was a meeting of the chiefs of Treaty 6 ten days ago. They said:

There was zero indication that any levy would be placed into law, nor was it mentioned that the law would arrive five days later. In this respect, the Chiefs of Treaty Six feel that the Alberta Government is once again moving forward with their own agenda and ignoring the recommendations and terms of First Nations leaders.

Mr. Speaker, you contrast that with the statement made the day before, on the 9th, by the minister, who said, "I can say that I met with the grand chief personally. We met about three weeks ago. He was made aware of this bill. He agreed to this going forward." That statement is false on all accounts. The meeting that took place was a dinner meeting and the mention of a levy was made as a casual statement, there was no indication of Bill 22 or that the Alberta Government had any law drafted.

Simply notifying First Nations or any other group does not count as consultation. You can tell them what you're doing. That doesn't mean that you're actually consulting with them.

You know, I can't understand, and I can't believe that we're going to debate a bill that talks in its first principles about the duty to consult First Nations and other aboriginal groups and they weren't even consulted on this bill. What is it besides words, then, Mr. Speaker? Why should anybody place any confidence or hope in anything this government says when this kind of situation can happen?

So I think it's very important that we refer this bill back to committee, and I would hope that the committee would then invite submissions from concerned organizations and individuals, including First Nations, so that all members on all sides of the House can hear first-hand the views of First Nations with respect to this piece of legislation.

This is yet another sorry act of betrayal in a long, long line of acts of betrayal, Mr. Speaker, and I think that to pass this bill at this stage would be not only a serious mistake but an insult to First Nations. I urge all hon. members to support this motion and refer it back to committee for further study.

Thank you.

7:50

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Before I recognize the next speaker, may we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour tonight to stand and introduce to the House and to you three leaders of First Nations organizations that are here specifically because they're deeply concerned about Bill 22 and the flaws in Bill 22. I'll ask them to stand as I introduce them, and we'll recognize them collectively after. Assembly of First Nations Regional Chief Cameron Alexis; Chief Ahnassay of Dene Tha', specifically deeply concerned about the lack of an appeal process in section 9, which I commented on in my comments; and Mr. Rob Houle, who is executive assistant and the acting grand chief liaison for Treaty 6, representing Grand Chief Craig Makinaw tonight. The main message from Treaty 6 is that at no point was the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act agreed to, contrary to the minister's comments on May 9, and at no time was the content of the bill discussed with Treaty 6 chiefs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, did you have an introduction as well?

Mr. Bilous: I do, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly several of our guests. First, the grand chief of Lesser Slave Lake regional council. She's also the chief of Driftpile First Nation. She is strongly opposed to Bill 22 and is here to show her opposition to this bill and that it needs to be rescinded. As well, the AFN regional chief, Cameron Alexis. There are other chiefs, council members, and treaty representatives from Treaty 6 and Treaty 8. I would ask all of our guests to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Bill 22 Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act (continued)

The Deputy Speaker: Are there other speakers to the amendment? Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on the amendment to second reading lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 7:53 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

For the motion:

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 22 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: We'll go back to the main motion.

The next speaker, the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 22. It's too bad that we just got defeated on the motion that our hon. leader from Highwood put forward, trying to refer this bill to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship so that we could take more time and consult with First Nations and aboriginals and industry to get it right. As that has passed, we will now carry on.

I'd like to begin by saying that I was pretty happy with how this bill initially came forward. I believe that the minister did work with our leader and our caucus to give us a briefing on the bill, and I do respect some of the bill's broader intentions. The Crown has a commitment to consult with First Nations and other aboriginal groups about potentially regulated activities that may adversely affect their treaty rights or traditional uses of land. Companies who want to proceed with energy or other forms of development are obligated to carry out any consultation under the direction of the Crown.

This act seeks to direct resources towards First Nations to support their participation in consultation. It does so with the creation of a levy to fund consultation with First Nation communities regarding developments that might adversely impact traditional uses of land. Mr. Speaker, the creation of this levy is a matter which industry and aboriginal groups and First Nations could support. It would help both sides streamline development and positively affect this province.

However, this PC government has brought forward a bill plagued with problems. The first problem is that this bill hasn't adequately been consulted on with industry or First Nations. Bob Small of Treaty 6 said that none of the First Nations of this treaty had been consulted, and similar concerns were heard from Treaty 8. Only this PC government could put a major consultation bill like this forward without actually consulting with stakeholders.

The bill not only lacks consultations with First Nations and aboriginal groups, but it also lacks consultation with industry. I've been hearing from people in industry that were not consulted, and this bill doesn't help alleviate problems that can occur during development on First Nations and aboriginal lands. Industry has asked for more clarity and consistency in the current consultation process. If this bill provided that, I would be happy to support it, but Bill 22, especially with First Nations and major stakeholders speaking out against it, only adds more confusion to an already convoluted process.

Additionally, stakeholders are asking if the levy will take the place of consultation fees that are already being paid out. Mr. Speaker, industry is already paying similar fees to First Nation and aboriginal groups. For example, I spoke to a person in industry who already pays when they are looking at developing on or around aboriginal or First Nations land. These fees vary, but they're often dictated by what sort of project they are doing and how big that project is.

For example, a company may pay $500 a well, and for five wells that's $2,500. That money is given directly to the aboriginal or First Nation groups in that region. Will that money stop with the passage of Bill 22, or will it continue and industry have to pay more fees and experience more red tape to get through? I'd be curious to hear the minister's thoughts on this.

Finally, for this bill to be responsible legislation, the levy should be calculated on the basis of the magnitude of the project, the duration of the impact, and the certainty of the impact, but in the bill these details have been left to the regulations. This, like Bill 21, leaves too much power in the hands of the minister, and one has to ask: why is this necessary? Including that the levy should be calculated due to the parameters around the project, the duration of the impact, and the certainty of the impact would allow for the levy to be fair every time, but this bill ignores that concern entirely. Bill 22 is putting more power in the hands of the minister to make decisions as opposed to outlining the limits of authority in the law.

Also, will this levy be capped? At this time there are no restrictions or indication of the potential costs to industry. This causes uncertainty in industry and First Nations. This is not what Alberta needs. This PC government has failed to consult with industry as well as First Nations and aboriginal groups. What we have is a bill plagued with problems.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, we have to do better for industry, and we have to do better for First Nations and other aboriginal groups in this province. This bill fails to deliver an aboriginal consultation levy that stakeholders can agree on, and I implore the government to do the right thing and rethink this act.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the next speaker, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to begin my comments on Bill 22 with two letters, one from a senior official with Treaty 8 and the other from Treaty 6. The first, then, from Greg Posein, communications co-ordinator with Treaty 8:

Bill 22, the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, is set to go before the Alberta legislature today and is being met with strong opposition by the Alberta First Nations of Treaty No. 8.

Grand chief of Treaty 8 First Nations of Alberta, Roland Twinn, states "We oppose this new legislation, created without meaningful and proper consultation and view it as a continuation of a paternalistic attitude that our Nations have struggled against for decades."

The new bill, according to an Alberta Government announcement, "is aimed at strengthening the First Nations consultation process to ensure that it is appropriate and meaningful. It is important First Nations have the capacity and funding available to do a proper job on consultation and that is what this legislation is about."

This, however, is not sitting well with Treaty 8 . . . First Nations, "This bill does nothing to ensure the consultation process is appropriate and meaningful. It is instead creating a consultation levy fund that has the potential to impact Treaty Rights and our ability to consult, it is more likely to hinder than to enhance," says Grand Chief Twinn.

In particular, two sections of the bill are causing the most concern. Section 8 of the new act deals with private industry providing copies of agreements they have with First Nations, to which the Grand Chief responds "Private companies and their agreements, are not subject to public scrutiny. Any private company, First Nation owned or otherwise, is answerable only to their board of directors. This legislation is attempting to change the way business has always been conducted in Canada for one specific segment of the business community. This action could be taken as discriminatory."

The other section causing concern deals with the Minister's authority to make final decisions that are not subject to review. "By removing First Nation's ability to appeal you deny them a measure of justice. Why shouldn't First Nations have access to legal recourse against government? Does this also apply to industry, if they have concerns as well? The issue becomes one of administrative fairness, if no one can appeal one man's decision we are entering dangerous territory. This new authoritarian stance is alarming to say the least," states Grand Chief Twinn.

"We will not support this bill and continue our opposition of it until proper consultation is conducted with the First Nations of Treaty 8 . . ." finishes the Grand Chief.

A second letter, Mr. Speaker, I think is important to put into the record.

[Dear Minister Campbell, with reference to Bill 22, the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act] We were shocked to learn about the introduction of the proposed Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act . . . in the Alberta Legislature. The Government of Alberta has completely disregarded our constitutionally protected rights by providing no notice to First Nations that this legislation was imminent and has not consulted with First Nations regarding the Act whatsoever.

To the limited extent that First Nations have had any opportunity to date to discuss the proposed new Consultation Policy with you and other government representatives, the Confederacy of Treaty Six First Nations has been clear that we are opposed to a levy on First Nation consultation and any requirement to disclose agreements between First Nations and natural resource companies. Alberta has failed to explain how such measures will work or benefit First Nations, or the resource sector. Instead, your government has introduced the Act in the face of those concerns, before a meaningful consultation process on the proposed new Consultation Policy has completed, and before any consultation about the Act whatsoever. Your government's decision to introduce this legislation makes it abundantly clear to us that you do not understand the scope or breadth of our constitutionally protected Treaty and Aboriginal rights. Of even equal concern is the complete lack of respect Alberta is demonstrating by proceeding in this manner without our engagement.

We will be holding a meeting of the Treaty Six Chiefs as soon as possible to review the proposed Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act and provide further detailed comments, and to consider a coordinated and forceful opposition to the Act. Our initial concerns are set out below.

I'll simply itemize the headings, Mr. Speaker, in the interests of time. Number 1, the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act is discriminatory. Number 2, Alberta has overstepped its constitutional authority. Number 3, the legislation violates the UN declaration on the rights of indigenous people. This letter is signed: sincerely, Grand Chief Craig Makinaw.

Well, clearly, Mr. Speaker, this government has to take a second look at this in the interests of long-term, sustainable, healthy, constructive relationships with First Nations. There's a clear indication here that there's been a breakdown. At the same time, many of us in the initial presentation of this bill heard from the minister that consultations were followed by agreement by First Nations that this was an important contribution to the First Nations themselves. There's a very serious disconnect here that I think needs to be addressed, the main elements of which have been discussed.

This government has now this evening refused to accept a referral of this act to a committee that would present a reasonable review of it, provide the research, do the extra consultations if needed, and come back with what could be an acceptable bill for First Nations. It's clear that there's an unwillingness in this government to actually embrace the principles and values that they talk so much about in this House of democratic process, full consultation, accommodation of interests, and a willingness to actually build a long-standing relationship based on trust, on saying what you mean, meaning what you say, and then following through on that decision.

These are critical times in Canada for First Nations. We've seen a federal Conservative government bring into power two omnibus bills which take away unilaterally the rights and responsibilities of First Nations, shift responsibility for waterways and fisheries to the provincial government without negotiation, and take away some treaty rights from First Nations with respect to private ownership of land and the sale of land on reserves. It's clear, I think, that both levels of government, provincial and federal, Alberta and their federal cousins, are looking for shortcuts. They are consolidating more and more power unto themselves, making arbitrary decisions, talking about legitimate process, talking about consultation, talking about the meaning of democracy, and demonstrating something very different.

I think we're all going to suffer if we don't find a respectful common ground to work with our First Nations. We have a legacy of over 150 years in which we have done such damage to our relationship with First Nations that we are now seeing tremendous costs both in terms of human suffering and human potential and, obviously, costs to the systems that are dealing with the fallout – mental health issues and criminal justice issues – because we haven't got it right. We haven't listened. We haven't respected due process and given at least the most critical elements of these relationships due attention, time, and a process that not only allows for decisions to be made in the short term and the longer term in terms of economic well-being, social well-being, environmental security, and social stability but allows a healing process to occur between the dominant society, shall I say, in Canada and our First Nations and within First Nations themselves. They're interconnected.

The healing process that has to happen between First Nations and mainstream Canadian society has to be given a priority. Everything we do in relation to decision-making around First Nations has to be seen through a screen of a tremendous amount of damage and harm done because of failure of process, failure to integrate some of what we understood to be human rights, justice, due process, recompense for damage done. We have failed to see the opportunity that should be there for all of us. We're all treaty people. I'm sure many of us have heard this over and over again. We are all treaty people. Our forefathers signed the treaties. Our First Nations signed the treaties. That makes us all part of treaties that have to be in some way made to work. They're not working now.

I would submit that this bill, Bill 22, has the danger of adding more fuel to the fire of the Idle No More movement, for example, which so vehemently rejected the omnibus bills of Prime Minister Harper in the last year and are now going to gather new fuel in Alberta around a bill that is clearly not representing what First Nations understood it to be, if they understood the bill at all, if they were given the opportunity to see the bill. They were told they were consulted. They do not feel that they have been meaningfully consulted and that this does not represent their interests.

I hope the minister will take this under advisement and that the members opposite will see the wisdom of simply delaying this, at the very least, and throwing it out if they honestly respect our relationship with First Nations and want to see a more constructive, healthy relationship going forward. We will be bringing forward recommendations and amendments, as I indicated, at a future time.

We certainly support the changes that the First Nations themselves are saying need to be made. Without very, very substantial change there is no willingness to support this bill by First Nations, and therefore there should be no willingness to support this bill in this House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. You've quoted extensively from two letters. I assume you'll be tabling those tomorrow. Thank you.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know that we reverted already to introductions, but I just want to state for the record that there are also representatives here from Treaty 7. I apologize for omitting them in my initial introduction.

The reason I stand, Mr. Speaker, is to speak strongly in opposition to Bill 22 and to urge this government and all members to completely withdraw Bill 22. I will outline all of the reasons. You know, I think it's very important to note, first and foremost, the number of guests that we have joining us this evening. The reason that they are here tonight is to let their presence be known, that they are strongly opposed to this bill. Members from all three treaties find this bill to be quite offensive and completely disrespectful.

I think it's necessary for members, especially government members, to get a better understanding of the word "consultation." It's been stated this week by the various treaty representatives that notification is not consultation. The term "consultation" I think has been thrown around too loosely in this House and elsewhere. You know, the minister requesting a meeting with a band or with a chief or a grand chief to talk to them about either what's coming up or to ask them for some input is not necessarily consultation.

Consultation and meaningful consultation is, first of all, acknowledging that the people at the table are equal partners and have an equal voice and are there to give and to receive. It's not one way – this is what we're doing, and you need to accept it – and then let's call that consultation.

You know, I find it quite disturbing, Mr. Speaker, that this government loves to throw around words like "accountability" and "transparency" and "honesty," yet I don't know if in the last 42 years there's been a more opaque and, you know, unaccountable government representing the province. The fact is that in 42 years of being in power, they still do not know how to hold meaningful consultations, how to have a conversation, how to treat other orders of government as that, as an order of government, and respect governance and procedures as opposed to ramming through this government's own agenda.

Despite the fact that in this House the minister has stated that representatives from all three treaties were consulted on Bill 22, it's clearly not the case. The fact of the matter is that there were some conversations over the last few months. I've been told that rarely did the levy come up. This was more of a concept that was batted around last fall, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the fact that there are some First Nations groups that are struggling to be able to consult with industry on all the proposed projects. When travelling up north, I spoke with different chiefs who said that sometimes they have up to 60 different projects they're trying to consult on with very minimal resources, which just seems absurd.

I can appreciate the spirit of wanting to have a level playing field for all 48 First Nations within the province. However, first and foremost, the process which the government went through to arrive at this bill did not involve consultation in the least. In fact, as other colleagues in the House have stated, many chiefs were shocked, were blindsided by the fact that this levy was introduced and, beyond that, the fact that it's riddled with problems, Mr. Speaker.

First and foremost, as I've stated, this bill needs to be pulled completely. I mean, we talk about a trust, and the government talks about building the relationship with First Nations. Well, I'll tell you this much, Mr. Speaker. This is a giant step backwards in the relationship building with the First Nations, introducing an act which they were not consulted on, were not informed of.

Mr. Speaker, there have been several press releases that have gone out in the last five days from different organizations explaining the issues and the problems with this legislation. You know, the fact that in this legislation First Nations bands will be forced to disclose their agreements with industry seems discriminatory at the outset. It seems completely absurd, considering that if there was a bill that was passed where, you know, negotiations between landowners and industry had to be completely disclosed – well, guess what? – many people throughout the province would be up in arms, and that would never pass. So why this government feels they can impose a discriminatory clause in a bill on First Nations peoples is beyond me. I can't get my head around that, and I think it's safe to say that neither can many different representatives from the treaties.

I think as well, Mr. Speaker, that the fact that any decision that the government and the minister make cannot be appealed, cannot be overturned – there is no process to appeal that decision – seems to go counter to all of the laws that we have governing us not just in the province but also in Canada, that there is a process to appeal decisions. I mean, correct me if I'm wrong, but I believe that's part of the reason we have a Supreme Court of Canada and how decisions can continue to go up the chain. The fact that that has been completely taken away – that's a right that First Nations deserve to have and is completely pulled with this bill – is, well, not only just offensive. I would think that that even calls into question constitutional rights that treaties have.

As well, Mr. Speaker, you know, the fact is that different treaties have been putting forward consultation policy papers to the government. For example, Treaty 6 has been issuing papers since 2009, helping the government by saying: these are the things that should be included in your consultation policy. I guess I shouldn't find it surprising at all, but if you wanted to guess how many of those recommendations have been included in the government's proposed consultation documents or policies, you guessed it right if your guess was zero.

It's ridiculous that the government wants to bring forward legislation or a policy this fall on consultation, yet in a bill that they have tabled this spring, Mr. Speaker, they failed to consult. I don't know if the irony is lost on some of the members in this House, but it's pretty thick to me.

Mr. Speaker, another issue with Bill 22 and why I can't support it is, again, the fact that in this bill the government wants to have the right to decide which groups are classified or deemed as aboriginal and which are not. I think, first of all, that this government has no jurisdiction in that determination whatsoever.

You know, in addition to that, I think it's shameful that the province has not committed to respect the UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples, Mr. Speaker. I mean, this is a very important document that I urge the government to adopt. In fact, there is a party in this House that has adopted the UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples and included it in all of the decisions that we make. Yes, the Alberta NDP has fully adopted that document and has created an aboriginal policy framework that guides all of our decisions to ensure that any decision or policy that is made by the Alberta NDP is done in consultation, in discussion with First Nations groups, not done behind closed doors and served to them, on the one hand, saying, "Oh, no; you were consulted in this," when clearly they were not.

I know another issue with this bill is the fact that it gives cabinet sweeping powers to let some companies avoid paying the levy, so you've got it as up to the minister's discretion who the levy is applied to. Again, any time we give the minister or cabinet sweeping powers, there is the potential, whether it's now or in the future, Mr. Speaker, for a person in that position to abuse that authority and power. Clearly, there is no reason that I've been given – I'll ask the minister to enlighten me – on why that clause is a part of this bill.

What else can I talk about, Mr. Speaker? I mean, the fact that it's – I guess that was section 10(k) that exempts a class or a proponent from paying the levy.

Mr. Speaker, there are other issues I have with this. In a briefing meeting, not a consultation but a briefing meeting – I feel I need to clarify that for all members of this House – the minister indicated that at the moment some industry does provide some compensation to some First Nations to help them to be able to consult on proposed projects. There are some dollars from the government and from industry that are going to some First Nations.

Now, again, I appreciate that the spirit of the bill is to ensure that all 48 First Nations have access to funding to be able to complete or participate in consultation. However, what's interesting is that the dollar amount the minister gave me was around $150 million right now per year that is going out, whereas – again, neither of these numbers are actually in the bill – the minister informed me that they were thinking the levy would be around $70 million. I'm no math wizard, Mr. Speaker, but it sounds like we're going backwards as far as ensuring that different First Nations have the resources to be able to consult with industry and make informed decisions.

Another issue with this is that there is no stipulation, there is no minimum, there is no mention of the amount that the levy will be in the proposed Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act. It seems like that's a pretty big piece of information missing from a bill that this government would like members of this House to pass. That's just one more issue that I have with this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's time that action follows words. I know I'm a newer member to this House, but I'm already growing tired of the government's promise to consult and talk about consultation yet failure to act on those words. You know, the attitude that this government has had toward First Nations, as an outside observer, has been one that is completely paternalistic. It's one where, if anything, it's a relationship that is not on an equal playing field. I completely understand and am sympathetic with why so many First Nations in Alberta are completely frustrated with this government. They've been calling on the government for meaningful consultation. The government can't get it through its proverbial thick head.

You know, it's interesting, Mr. Speaker, that the government has written a consultation matrix, yet the representatives, chiefs, and councils that I've spoken with have had no input on the consultation matrix, and we've got regulations that are going to be imposed on First Nations, including within this matrix a time period of up to 21 days, which begs the question: where did that come from? That clearly was not negotiated. That was not discussed. Again, that's another example of the government imposing its will. What is it based on?

Mr. Speaker, it's no surprise that this government every day is losing . . .

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. On 29(2)(a), hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Smith: Yes. I wonder if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview can talk about the issues that he is hearing raised from those he's been consulting with. Is the issue that the bands and the chiefs are affronted by the lack of consultation and they do believe that there can actually through consultation be some kind of meeting of the minds where we can come together with something that will work for the First Nations as well as the energy sector as well as the government? Or is it his view, having spoken, that this bill cannot be amended? Is it possible to amend this bill and make it work on a go-forward, or is it his view from talking with members of the First Nations communities that, really, it should just be scrapped so they can go back to the drawing board?

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. Member for Highwood for those two questions. I'll do my best to address them both. First and foremost, the greatest concern that I'm hearing – I mean, there are several, and it's difficult to number them or prioritize them, but it all boils down to the fact that there was a lack of consultation and there was a lack of engaging in meaningful dialogue with the very groups that this bill is going to impact and govern through the aboriginal consultation levy. I think the greatest frustration is not only that the different First Nations were blindsided by this levy – again, there was talk of an idea, a concept, of a levy last fall but very little mention since then. I have not met one representative from any band who said: "Yes. We knew the government was going to introduce a levy in this spring sitting that's going to govern and really affect how First Nations govern themselves in regard to working with industry."

I find it really interesting that there are some First Nations that feel they have a better relationship with industry, that industry of their own accord is going out and consulting with different First Nations better and on their own initiative. You know, when you compare that to the fact that the government isn't and the duty that the Crown has – there have actually been three Supreme Court case rulings, Mr. Speaker. One of them that I find is – well, all three are worth mentioning. It was many years ago. When we look at Treaty 6, they were very clear when they submitted a policy paper in 2009 that the Mikisew set out minimal requirements of the Crown's duty to consult in the treaty context and that the consultation policy has to contain the principles that the Mikisew set out as a starting point. At the moment the policy, the levy, does not include any of these provisions. I'll be happy to table this document tomorrow.

To answer the hon. member's second question, "Can this bill be fixed?" honestly, the only expression that's coming to my mind, Mr. Speaker, is that this bill is holier than the Pope. I'm not sure if we can fix such a flawed piece of legislation. To be honest, what I'm hearing from different representatives is that this bill should be pulled in its entirety. Even though the opposition is going to bring forward amendments and attempt to improve this as much as possible, the fact of the matter remains the same, that First Nations bands were not consulted on this bill. Therefore, if the government wants to do the right thing, it needs to throw this bill out, go back to the different First Nations representatives, and have a meaningful discussion on what a levy bill would look like. Until that happens, I cannot support this bill at all and will continue to speak in opposition and to be a voice that actually is speaking with and on behalf of our First Nations sisters and brothers.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others?

Before I recognize the next speaker, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand and speak to second reading of Bill 22. Well, the government has offended many, many groups, especially since the budget came down. There are children who have special needs, teachers, health care professionals, trade unionists, people who live in the Michener Centre and their families. The list goes on and on. It seems like they left one group out that they hadn't offended yet, so they're making a special effort to come back and make sure they get everybody. I can't think of something that is more likely to antagonize and to worsen relationships with First Nations than how the government has gone about this bill, how they have failed to consult and then claimed that they've consulted. I think that's outrageous, Mr. Speaker. I know we have rules in this House about what you can say about what other people have done, but I think the minister has done a real disservice not only to First Nations but to this House by attempting to lead us to believe that, in fact, proper consultation has occurred when it clearly has not.

Then I think there's the lack of understanding of basic principles that should apply to our relationships with First Nations, which is not the same relationship we might have with a community group, for example, or something like that or some multicultural group. It is between equals, as it were. The First Nations have signed treaties, as have we, at the level of the Crown, the level of federal government. I think the lack of understanding or appreciation or even caring about that principle of equality is what's fundamentally undermining the relationships with First Nations and undermining this piece of legislation.

The Alberta NDP has developed a policy for indigenous peoples under the leadership of one of our bright young leaders, Mr. Cardinal, and I want to read the preamble of the NDP indigenous peoples policy. It says:

The Province of Alberta was founded on the traditional lands of Indigenous peoples that predate confederation. Treaty No. 6, Treaty No. 7, and Treaty No. 8 with the Crown allowed for the opening and development of these lands to the benefit of Albertans. Since 1905, the people of Alberta have prospered from this unique relationship with Indigenous peoples. Indigenous peoples, however, have not prospered equitably and have had, and continue to have, their Aboriginal/Indigenous rights, legal rights, and human rights violated. Through the efforts of assimilation and dispossession, these violations have directly contributed to the disparity in health, poverty, social justice, cultural survival, and self-government. It is, therefore, the ethical responsibility of the Alberta New Democratic Party . . . and the duty of the provincial government to ensure that all the rights of Indigenous peoples, as found in the treaties and other legal agreements, and their basic human rights and dignity are upheld and maintained in the honor of the people of Alberta.

The following policy statements are built with former and updated policies from the former policy section "Aboriginal Affairs, Section Q" of the Alberta New Democrats Policy Manual 2008 and the 2007 UN Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples. These policies are meant to apply equally to women and men. As well, the Alberta NDP recognizes and celebrates the unique relationship between the Indigenous peoples in Canada and the Crown and provinces. This therefore, will set the foundation for policies in the Alberta NDP and for a NDP Government in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, that is the appropriate cornerstone, I believe, for an effective policy between the government of Alberta and First Nations. Our policy is based on the declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples by the United Nations, and it's something that I believe should be recognized by the government of Alberta.

Instead, I think we see many features of this act that fundamentally are in opposition to those principles. For example, according to a submission by Treaty 8 First Nations this bill does nothing to ensure that the consultation process is appropriate and meaningful. It is instead creating a consultation levy fund that has the potential to impact treaty rights and their ability to consult, it is more likely to hinder than enhance.

In particular, two sections of the bill are causing the most concern. Section 8 of the new act deals with private industry providing copies of agreements they have with First Nations, to which the grand chief of Treaty 8 responds:

Private companies and their agreements, are not subject to public scrutiny. Any private company, First Nation owned or otherwise, is answerable only to their board of directors. This legislation is attempting to change the way business has always been conducted in Canada for one specific segment of the business community. This action could be taken as discriminatory.

The other section causing concern deals with the minister's authority to make final decisions which are not subject to review.

"By removing First Nation's ability to appeal you deny them a measurement of justice. Why shouldn't First Nations have access to legal recourse against government? Does this also apply to industry, if they have concerns as well? The issue becomes one of administrative fairness, if no one can appeal one man's decision we are entering dangerous territory. This new authoritarian stance is alarming to say the least," says Grand Chief Twinn.

He goes on to say:

"We will not support the bill and continue our opposition of it until proper consultation is conducted with the First Nations of Treaty 8."

Now, there is another aspect, and I think Treaty 6 talks about that, Mr. Speaker. It says:

With its legislative approach, it appears as though the Government of Alberta is moving forward with the notion that, as stated in their Consultation Policy Paper (2013), Alberta has the constitutional right to manage and develop provincial Crown lands and natural resources in the province to benefit all Albertans and to take up land for such purposes.

This statement alone has been widely contested and continues to be questioned to this date as many First Nations view the natural resources transfer agreement as illegal and invalid. But I want to stress that Treaty 6 also goes on to say:

Any terms of sharing resource revenue must be negotiated together with First Nations, not simply imposed in a unilateral and colonial fashion through a minuscule levy.

Continuing with the colonial approach, the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act grants the power of determining who is an Aboriginal to the Minister of Aboriginal Relations. Not since the Constitution Repatriation has the definition of Aboriginal been approached, a definition that was largely contested, yet Alberta feels obligated to grant themselves the ability to create their own definition. First Nations have prior to contact defined themselves through their inherent right to self-determination, and continue to express this right through the enactment of First Nations laws. Alberta does not have the right or ability to define Aboriginal groups, nor were they transferred this ability.

The United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples . . . states that [First Nations] have the right to own, use, develop and control the lands, territories and resources that they possess by reason of traditional ownership or other traditional occupation or use, as well as those which they have otherwise acquired.

Mr. Speaker, it's clear that the consultation couldn't possibly have occurred because the principles being followed by First Nations and by the government are contradictory, and they could hardly have arrived at a satisfactory agreement.

Now, I want to talk just a little bit about the ability of the minister to recognize aboriginal groups. I'm old enough to remember a conflict that occurred 20, 25 years ago in the province of Alberta over resource development with the Lubicon Cree. When the Lubicon Cree could not be brought to an agreement, there was an attempt, and I think a largely successful one, at least according to some accounts, on the part of the federal government to divide it into two groups. It was the traditional colonial approach of divide and conquer. I suggest to you that the minister's ability to define what is an aboriginal group that the government will deal with does in fact give the minister the power to create and to divide aboriginal groups as a way of advancing the government's agenda. I think it's a dangerous component of this legislation and one of the main reasons why I think we should be rejecting this piece of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, all in all, I think the government has failed badly on this piece of legislation. It's clear that First Nations reject it. It's clear that First Nations reject the minister's claim that they were consulted with, and the very fact that it's an act that talks about consultation but was reached without consultation I think is a fatal flaw which fundamentally undermines the government's credibility in this piece of legislation.

I believe this Assembly should reject this piece of legislation. I'm very surprised, frankly, that the government is forging ahead with it given the opposition that we have seen already. But I've given them political advice before, and they don't take the political advice. They just keep going down and down and down in public opinion. So I guess I'll just keep giving them advice, then, because they do the opposite. I think the government, just from its own point of view, its own self-interest, is making a terrible mistake by pushing ahead with this bill, against the opposition and First Nations in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't always listen to the hon. leader of the NDP opposition's advice, but sometimes I do, and I think his advice is quite valuable. I'm curious about what his . . . [interjection] Well, he did a training video with us during our first year in office, where he taught us how to be in opposition, so I did appreciate that advice.

But I would be interested in his advice on this point, on what approach his party would take to fill this consultation gap. It sounds like his party has done quite a bit of consultation or development of policy. If his party could start from scratch, what would they do to repair the relationship with First Nations so that you could actually move to a point where you could develop a consultation bill that would have buy-in? What would be the steps that he would take over the summer that he would provide to the government as advice for how they could repair the damage they're causing?

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. leader.

The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much to the Leader of the Official Opposition for the question. I think the first thing that has to be done is to realize that First Nations are nations who have reached treaty agreements with the federal government acting on behalf of all Canadians and that they need to be dealt with accordingly. The treaty arrangements are not with the provincial government but, nevertheless, affect how the provincial government needs to conduct itself.

They have attempted to establish a protocol that I think is seriously flawed, but I think the first thing to do, Mr. Speaker, with respect to this legislation and other pieces of legislation is to sit down and negotiate with First Nations and recognize that we ought not be proceeding unilaterally in any matter without first attempting to get an agreement with the First Nations, which means actually giving them all of the information about what you're doing and what you're planning to do and why you're doing it and waiting carefully for their response and thoughtfully considering it and incorporating it where possible. If the government approached it in this fashion, I think that we could not only repair the relationship between the government and First Nations but actually improve the lives of First Nations people. That doesn't seem to be on the government's radar either.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The green slips are flying around tonight as people are reading from various letters, and I suspect we're reading from some of the same letters. I have five in front of me.

There's no way this bill can be fixed unless these people that have come here on a Tuesday night agree to what's being put into this bill.

Mr. Bikman: Monday night.

Mr. Anglin: Monday night. It might as well be Tuesday night. We're going to be here tomorrow night doing the same thing.

To force this bill through at this hour, at this time, makes no sense given the facts of the matter. We were told that consultation took place. It did not take place. The people are here. Nobody comes to this Legislature at this hour to sit upstairs and watch us in the evening because they have nothing better to do. They're here because this is a problem. Some of you can joke about it, but this is extremely serious. You have not consulted.

You've done this to the landowners. You've done this with Bill 36, you've done this with Bill 50, you've done this with Bill 19, and you still don't believe it. You sit there and you think: we consulted because we said so. Well, that's just not true. You didn't do it, and you can't convince these people who showed up here today that you did. There's something wrong here. Unless they buy into this bill, this is a bad bill. You've got to satisfy them. You don't have to satisfy us, but you have to satisfy them, and you're not taking that step. Just saying that you've consulted does not make it so.

We have a bill here, and in my view, it's incredible when you think about it. If I came into this Legislature and said that anybody of Chinese descent had to disclose their agreements with an oil or gas company, that would be called racist. If I said that all Asian people had to disclose their agreements with oil and gas companies, that would be considered racist. What we've done in this bill is said that because somebody declares themselves to be aboriginal, they have to disclose this, and that's good. Where do you come off thinking that that's good? How do you... [interjection] Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, you can mock me all you'd like, but go tell these people right to their face.

Mr. Dorward: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: There's a point of order.

Hon. member, a citation when you raise a point of order.

Mr. Dorward: Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j).

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. Would you state your reasons for the point of order, hon. member?

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Dorward: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Standing Order 23(i) says, "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member." I was speaking to the good member here. I was not addressing the other member; I was listening to the other member.

The Deputy Speaker: Speaking to the point of order, hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Clearly, I realize this might be a difference of opinion on the facts of the matter. But what remains is that when you get the mumbling from the other side, whether it's coherent or not, it appears to be heckling. I will tell you and will make my case that that member has been fairly consistent in making comments in this House, so for me to make a determination based on the mumbling, I would consider that to be heckling. Now, if he was speaking to another member so loudly that we all heard it, well, that might be a different issue.

Clearly, I would say that what we have here is a difference of opinion on the facts. I'll await your ruling.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, thank you, hon. member. I think I've heard from both members that you agree that we have a difference of opinion, so I will find that there's no point of order.

However, I would remind all members that when another member has the floor, you're courteous. If you're speaking maybe in a very quiet voice, you can allow the next member, whoever that member might be, to have the floor so that he or she may be able to express themselves, and the rest of us, particularly yours truly, are able to hear that member.

So no point of order. Proceed with your comments on the bill, hon. member.

Debate Continued

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to at this time introduce a notice of amendment, a motion. I have the requisite copies right here.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you. Please circulate that, hon. member. We'll stop the clock until a copy gets to the table. We'll let you proceed in just a moment.

Hon. members, this motion that we have before us is, in effect, a hoist. This will be amendment H1.

Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 22, Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, be amended by striking out all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 22, Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

Now, this gives us an opportunity here to deal with the very people that showed up tonight to listen. I don't know if this bill can be fixed. I don't know if we need to scrap the entire bill and start over or if we can actually get a consensus so that we can fix this bill. But I do know this. The answer is with the people who came here to watch. They're the ones that have to be consulted. They're the ones that have to come to an agreement. They're the ones that have to have input to say: this is how you fix it. If they say that it can't be fixed, then we have to and we are compelled to listen to them. That's what consultation is.

I will tell you that this government has a strange sense of what consultation means. I like to always say that consultation is what takes place when I sit down with my wife. I know exactly when I've reached a limit, and it goes no further than that. I've lost the battle. She has an absolute say: we are not doing that, Joe. That's consultation. I have consultation at the kitchen table.

Going to meet people and saying later that you talked to them and that that was consultation: that's just not true, just telling somebody something, saying that now we've consulted. Consultation is a communication amongst equals, where people have respect for each other and have the ability to say no, to say: "I do not agree with that, and I will not agree with that. Hence, it will not be an agreement."

We don't have an agreement here. What we have is a government that is saying: "We consulted; hence, we're going to put this bill through. Oh, by the way, based on your race, you have to tell me now what the agreement was that you entered into." I'm not sure that's going to stand up, and I hope it never stands up in this country because that's not what we're about.

The other thing that is offensive – and we've seen it in bill after bill after bill – is where the ministry has concentrated its power, and they've done so in this bill, where the minister's decision is both final and binding. How does anyone come to an agreement? That's something that I do with my son. I go into consultation with my son, and then I say: "No. This is the way it's going to be. It's final, and it's binding." But, realistically, it's not consultation. That's parental guidance. Hence, the paternal aspect of this bill. It's ugly. It's ugly, and it's wrong. It discredits this House, and it discredits this government. They're better than this.

All we're asking here is one thing. There's no rush. Delay this for six months. Consult. Meet with these various bands. Meet with the various treaties and talk to them. Get input, listen to them, and talk to them one on one. That's all.

Now, I would love to hear from some of the people here who claim to be very ardent defenders of aboriginal rights, but they're not here tonight. I wonder why, and I suspect why. That's interesting because this is the issue tonight. This is ground zero for whether or not we're going to abuse an agreement on this consultation process, where somebody is saying, "We've done this," when it's clear now, without any hesitation, that we have not consulted. We are looking at three major treaty areas that have come out and basically said: "This is wrong. You did not consult with us even though you're saying that." Not only that, but point by point by point they have looked at this fairly small act and said: we do not agree to these points.

We need someone from the other side to get up and defend it. We need them to tell these people who have come here to watch us tonight why this is a good bill, why they should accept it even though they say that they've not been consulted. We haven't had that answer yet, and I think the people up there deserve that kind of respect if we say that we respect them. They deserve it. This is an issue that is haunting this government. It haunted this government with the land rights issues, with the bills that have diminished and degraded property rights of different property owners.

I like to quote a friend of mine who is a member of the Montana band. When I was arguing against Bill 36, he said: Joe, we've been dealing with this stuff for 600 years. He didn't put it quite in that language. He said: welcome to my hell. I think he had a lot to say about that. We've talked so far in this Legislature about, historically, some people's connections going back a hundred years. That was not the greatest of times in dealing with any aboriginal issues, any First Nations issues. I would tell you that one thing for sure is that the white man has been consistent. Here we are with another bill. We've not talked. We've not consulted. What we've told the First Nations people that showed up is: yes, we have. That doesn't make sense.

It's time to do what's right. It's time to start changing the way this government is acting. Slow it down, listen, get involved, and consult. It's got to go beyond mere words. It has to be action, and that action is sitting down at the table with these bands, with the chiefs, with the people and negotiating what is going to be a fair and accurate agreement so that we can go forward with this act.

That's why I'm asking for just a six-month delay. I'm asking for all members here to support this motion. Let's start getting this right. Let's start treating these people with respect.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.
Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, there's a lot of phrasing over there depending on where you're aiming that. A lot of people on this side have worked with First Nations, some of the bands that are here tonight, have been with them in their best moments and some of their worst moments. So I caution the member, when he talks about what we think about and what we care about, to understand that we do care about the outcomes on these First Nations lands and what happens to their people ultimately. Do you ever take into consideration the work that was done beforehand with the people and where we came from and what we've been doing for people before we even got into government?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not only do I take it into consideration, but what I really take into consideration is the action. Not the words, the action. Your action tonight in how you vote is what's going to speak loudest to these people who are watching you. You can say what you want to say, you can speak what you want to speak, but the only thing that matters tonight is how you vote. They're here to watch how you vote. It's the action that means more than the words. That's where this government has gone off the rails continuously. It's not the words that have been bad; it's the fact that the words go this way and the actions go that way. They're going in two different directions. They used to call it a forked tongue, but it's still two different directions. It goes way back.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others on 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the next speaker on the amendment, the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to support the amendment to hoist this bill, which would allow it to come back sometime in mid-November, after a summer of consultation. There are several reasons why I would ask the hon. members to also support this amendment to slow this bill down. What we've seen in this Assembly is really a tale of two bills. I just find remarkable the different approach that the minister took towards the Metis Settlements Amendment Act versus the approach that he is taking with this Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act.

Let's remember what happened the day that he introduced the Metis Settlements Amendment Act. He had all eight of the settlement chairs standing in the gallery. He introduced every single one of them. Every single one of them by their presence here demonstrated that they supported the process that the minister went through to get the amendments in that legislation. We had confidence in this Chamber that when he said that he had done his consultation, he had done his due diligence, that he had lived up to that because they were here supporting exactly what he had said.

It went even further than that. When we made amendments to try to change some of the wording to even strengthen the general council's administrative oversight role, the minister told us that because they had done such extensive negotiation and consultation, he would not feel comfortable changing even one word in the amendment act without going back and negotiating on every single word to make sure that he had the agreement of the eight settlement chairs.

In addition, in the Metis Settlements Act, in the bill, not just the amendment act but in the bill, it says – it's enshrined right there in the legislation – that if the minister wants to make any legislative changes to the wording in the Metis Settlements Act, he has to give 45 days' written notice to the settlement chairs, and he has to receive written feedback on any of those regulatory changes before he can go ahead and make those changes. That's the level of due diligence, of consultation, of buy-in, and of respect that the minister showed to our Métis settlement leaders. That's why it is so perplexing that he would take such a fundamentally different approach in putting forward the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act.

It's quite clear that had the minister done what he had said he had done, which was proper consultation, what we would have expected to see and what the hon. members opposite should have demanding to see was that the grand chief of Treaty 6, Chief Craig Makinaw; the grand chief of Treaty 7, Charles Weasel Head; and the grand chief of Treaty 8, Chief Roland Twinn, would have been standing in the gallery demonstrating that they had been consulted thoroughly, that they were standing here representing all of the bands, all of the chiefs who are in their treaty areas and providing that affirmation that the minister had done his due diligence.

I would even go one step further. Had the minister done appropriate consultation, not only would those three grand chiefs be here, but we would have had representation from CAPP, the Canadian petroleum association, from IOSA, the In Situ Oil Sands Alliance, other pipeline groups, other oil and gas industry groups because this is impacting both sides. We've talked this evening about how First Nations don't feel consulted, but I can tell you that many industry representatives, many industry groups, when they look at this legislation, have got a lot of questions as well. They have a lot of unanswered questions that they feel that they need to have further consultation on.

The fact that the minister did not have representation from either First Nations or from industry groups when he brought forward this legislation should have been a clear indication that this bill is rushed, that there isn't due diligence, and that it should be delayed and deferred until the proper consultation can be done.

Other speakers have made reference this evening to the various press releases and letters that we have received, but I have to tell you that this is the best headline that I have read in a long time, from Treaty 8 First Nations of Alberta: New Consultation Bill To Strengthen Consultation Created without Consultation. That is the way in which Treaty 8 is summarizing what they observe to see in this legislation, and for that reason we have to hoist this bill so proper consultation can be done.

We have been speaking with a number of First Nations community leaders and legal counsel and getting some of their concerns about the legislation, and I will read into the record why I think we have this great divide in the way the government looks at their due diligence on consultation and why we, the members opposite, look at it quite differently. I think what the government calls consultation is actually notification. Notification means a formal notifying or informing; an act or instance of notifying, making known, or giving notice; a written or printed notice, announcement, or warning. What consultation is is the act or process of consulting, a conference at which advice is given or views are exchanged. We have seen numerous examples of one-way so-called consultation on the part of this government. This is not consultation. It's notification.

Having dinner with a chief and telling them what you're going to do in a casual discussion over dinner is not consultation. That may satisfy what the minister thinks of as notification and due diligence, but I can tell you that it is not the process that our First Nations leaders expect. It's certainly not the process that he went through with the Métis settlement chairmen, and I think that this is a fundamental difference between the approach that the governing party would take versus the approach that you would see the members in the opposition Wildrose take.

9:20

Let me go through the fundamental problems in this bill, which is why it should be withdrawn and not simply amended. It starts right at the preamble, when the preamble talks about:

Proponents of provincial regulated activities must, at the direction of the Crown, carry out any required Crown consultation with First Nations and other identified aboriginal groups in respect of those provincial regulated activities.

The reading that First Nations community members read into this: they believe that this has a diminished view of treaty and aboriginal rights. They believe that what is happening is that the province remains substantively responsible for consultation, and they're abdicating their role under the Constitution by attempting to delegate this away in the course of the preamble.

That's not the only problem that is identified with this bill and why it should be hoisted so that there can be proper consultation. In section 1 it talks about:

- (d) "First Nation" means a band, as defined in the Indian Act (Canada), with reserve land in Alberta.

The fundamental problem that we have here is that in Alberta there are bands who are not considered Indian Act bands for the purpose of this legislation. My understanding is that we have at least three bands who fall into this category. The Lubicon is probably the most known example of a band that does not have a defined territory under the Indian Act.

Another problem with the act is the definition of a proponent.

- (h) "proponent" means a person who undertakes a provincial regulated activity, but does not include . . .
- (iii) a municipality as defined in the Municipal Government Act.

The question is being asked: why is it that a municipality would be excluded from consideration under this legislation? We have heard stories, for instance, of municipalities undertaking development activity without consulting with neighbouring First Nations and of the kind of impact that has on traditional hunting, trapping, and fishing territory as a result. So there is a grave concern that there hasn't been full thought or discussion to the exclusion of municipalities as one of the proponents.

There is also a problem with section 1(2): "Nothing in this Act is to be construed as creating a trust in favour of a First Nation or other identified aboriginal group." We are hearing the exact opposite. What First Nations are telling us is that they actually should be setting up this fund as a trust so that all of the monies that go into it are held in trust for the purpose specifically identified in this legislation. Not setting it up that way is one of the things that has raised a flag for First Nations leaders.

The other section that First Nations say has to be removed entirely is section 2, the identification of aboriginal groups. It says, "The Minister may by order identify aboriginal groups for the purposes of this Act." Now, other speakers have spoken to this, but Alberta does not have the constitutional authority to identify or define what aboriginal communities are. It's an overreach of their constitutional authority, and it's offensive language for First Nations members who have read the legislation.

The other part of the problem is in section 3. In section 3 we talk about the payment of the consultation levy, but once again, oddly enough, in a piece of legislation that's supposed to be about aboriginal consultation, it doesn't mention the duty to consult. The duty to consult: when they are talking about the amount of consultation levy to be paid, when they are talking as well about how the consultation levy is going to be defined, the fact of the matter is that that should include also a duty to consult, to make sure that First Nations are included in that process. It doesn't. Under section 3 we have another problem. Again, this is another section where First Nations say that the provision that it be held in trust should be underscored.

On the issue of the annual report, section 7, it talks about having an annual report with certain factors to it, but once again First Nations are saying that they need to seek input into what that annual report should include. We've heard some suggestions about what should be in that annual report, but the fact of the matter is that this legislation has been written without regard in many sections to including the First Nations in being able to define some of those parameters.

Section 8 is the really problematic section. My colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre was the one who spoke about it at length in his hoisting motion. The notion that we would have a piece of legislation requiring disclosure for one group of people on the basis of race is raising the hackles of so many First Nations members. If you look at all of the letters that we've received from treaties 6, 7, 8, the press releases that they have done, it is this aspect of discriminatory legislation that they find the most outrageous.

Section 8 goes through and talks about the minister making regulations specifically for aboriginal agreements that require the disclosure of "third party personal information, records and other documents, including copies of agreements relating to consultation capacity and other benefits" pertaining to the issue being raised here with this consultation levy. That is one of the issues that First Nations have, and they say that that section in its entirety should be eliminated.

We have to realize what we're trying to do with this piece of legislation. The government has put forward in its business plan the idea of creating a geomapping of the entire province so that industry leaders and First Nations are properly consulted when activity and drilling takes place on lands that are outside of the defined reserve areas. If that's the information that we're trying to collect, then the bill should be written with that in mind. It should not be written to be a catch-all for all types of information, financial and otherwise, from a specific group of people and miss the main point, the main point being getting the geomapping data that we want. Section 8 needs to be eliminated because it is completely offside of what we're hearing from industry, that they actually need to be able to have a proper consultation policy with respect to First Nations.

Section 9 is another one that we are hearing should also be repealed completely, that "a decision of the Minister under this Act is final and binding and not subject to review." Mr. Speaker, I have to tell you that this, again, is offside of what we see in the Metis Settlements Act. In the Metis Settlements Act they talk about any decision being made being subject to appeal in the Court of Appeal after the proper process has been undertaken. The fact that that would be written into the Metis Settlements Act and not written into this legislation is quite clearly an oversight and also something that has created a great deal of concern among First Nations. They believe that section should be eliminated.

The other issue, of course, is that throughout there has to be a built-in acknowledgement of and commitment to consultation with First Nations about the development of the regulations that are anticipated in section 10. You read section 10, and there is sweeping power given to the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make regulations on a whole range of issues, yet it doesn't talk about the absolute need to be able to consult, the demand to consult with First Nations in developing those regulations. Once again, as I've already mentioned, this is offside of the approach that we've taken under the Metis Settlements Act, where any change in regulation impacting the rights of Métis has to be given 45 days' notice plus an opportunity for a written submission, and there has to be some meaningful response on the part of the ministry to address the concerns that they have heard.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would ask others to support this motion to hoist. As you can see, we in the Wildrose as well as the members of the other two opposition parties are in alignment. We're hearing the same voices. We're hearing the same feedback. I'm not quite sure why government members aren't hearing what we are hearing.

Let me just maybe speak in terms that the government can understand. We know that the Premier has a leadership review coming up in November. If we hoist this bill and they do the proper due diligence over the summer, it will come back sometime in mid-November. Rather than fighting First Nations communities all through the summer camping trip, the Premier could actually do some consultation over the course of the summer, come back with a win a week before that critical leadership review, and have something she could take to her members. If she won't listen to what we're saying this evening about the imperative of negotiating in good faith with the First Nations for the sake of it, maybe she'll do it for the sake of her own political skin.

I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we are very worried about what will happen if this bill barrels ahead without actually having the proper consultation, without having the proper buy-in. We believe the repercussions will be very serious. We do not want to see chaos in this matter. We want to see an agreement with First Nations, an agreement with industry that we can all feel good about supporting. At the moment we certainly can't feel good about supporting it. I have to say that because they have created so much damage already with First Nations communities, we would say that the only way to repair is a complete retreat, a mea culpa, to say: "Whoops. We're sorry. We were wrong. We shouldn't have barrelled ahead with this. We thought we'd done our due diligence. We now recognize that we haven't, and we're going to take the time to do this right."

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would ask other members to support this hoist motion.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. leader.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, in terms of saying that you've made a mistake: what would Ralph have done?

Ms Smith: I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I did have this conversation today. One of the things that has been raised with me again and again is that Mr. Klein took a very different approach with our First Nations communities. He understood that the very first step you have to take is you have to build a relationship because when you build the relationship, you establish trust. You establish credibility so that when you have to make these kinds of changes, you've already begun from a position where both sides at the negotiating table believe the best about each other.

The problem is that since Mr. Klein left office, this is a relationship that has been allowed to deteriorate. You can't just allow a relationship to atrophy over the course of seven years and then have a couple of dinner meetings, come back with a massive piece of legislation, and think you've somehow earned the credibility and trust and built the relationship enough to be able to pass this kind of legislation without any serious ramifications. I think that's where the government has erred.

I recognize that the minister is doing his very best to build relationships, but I have to tell you that if the minister continues on and passes this legislation in the face of all of the opposition, then he will demonstrate that he actually hasn't learned anything. He will be sending a message to the First Nations communities that it's just window dressing, that it's just smoke and mirrors, that it's not meaningful, that he is not really listening to what they have to say. I have to tell you that if he was going to take meaningful consultation and do this bill right, he would have done it in exactly the same way that he did with the Métis settlements. I'm not quite sure why the government has taken so seriously its obligation to negotiate with Métis and seems to be so cavalier about its obligation to negotiate with First Nations.

What I would observe from having been a student of history, looking at the record of Mr. Klein, who had an immense amount of respect for First Nations communities, an immense amount of friendship and loyalty within that community – and it went both ways – is that I think this is the kind of legislation that must have First Nations feeling like they've been completely blindsided. I can't imagine that this is the kind of approach that a prior incarnation of this government would have taken. I, quite frankly, think that they have an opportunity to not make a mistake. That's what we're trying to do here, trying to prevent them from going down a path which we know is mistaken.

We know that there is the possibility to take the same kind of approach that the minister has demonstrated he can take – he has done it before with other aboriginal leaders – and just walk through one by one, getting the commitment, getting the agreement, and making sure that the provisions of this legislation are in alignment with what First Nations see to be the interests of their community.

I think that there is a solution here, but you don't start a consultation process that is going to expand much more broadly than the provisions of this legislation by failing to consult on the first step; you only make step two and step three and step four and step five harder. But if you go back and you do step one right and you develop those relationships and you develop that attitude of trust between the parties, then it makes the other steps that much easier to follow.

I would hope that if they're not going to listen to us and they're not going to listen to the Liberal opposition and they're not going to listen to the NDP opposition, they might just look at their history books and ask what Ralph would do. I think they would take a quite different approach.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak strongly in favour of this motion, of this hoist. I mean, I won't mince words. I hope that the hoist delays this by six months and that this bill dies on the Order Paper, and that's just because, again, I don't think there is anything with the best of intentions that all of the opposition parties collectively can do to salvage this bill or to make amends for the lack and failure of this government to consult with First Nations bands around the province. I want to go through specifically and outline, if I may, each of the points that I've taken issue with in this bill, on advisement from various representatives of treaties 6, 7, and 8, hopefully to show the government members, who I know are listening intently, exactly why this bill is so flawed.

Section 1(1)(d), first of all, is the interpretation of the act, and the bill defines First Nation. According to the bill "First Nation" means a band, as defined in the Indian Act (Canada), with reserve land in Alberta." Now, I've been instructed that many First Nations take exception to referencing the Indian Act this way. First and foremost, they see themselves as having a right of self-government with respect to their own identity and membership. This is also problematic as First Nations have a legal existence in common law quite apart from the Indian Act. Indeed, treaties were concluded in Alberta prior to many First Nations being Indian bands under the Indian Act, which is problematic in and of itself. Further, there are at least three First Nations in Alberta that the Crown currently consults with that are not Indian Act bands. Alberta has agreed that they have section 35 rights and must be consulted. Where do they fit in in the bill as it's currently worded, Mr. Speaker?

Section 2 needs to be removed completely, entirely. Alberta does not have the constitutional authority to identify, which is another way of saying to define, aboriginal communities. Mr. Speaker, this is an exclusive federal authority under section 91(24) of the Constitution Act of 1867 and is an infringement of the rights of First Nations and Métis communities to self-determine their own identity.

Moving on, Mr. Speaker, section 3(3) should be added to say: the minister acknowledges the duty to consult with First Nations regarding the development of regulations and commits to doing so.

On section 4, as one of the other members said this evening, Mr. Speaker, the funds that are collected in and through this levy act should be held in trust for the exclusive benefit and use of First Nations and Métis communities for the specified purpose of consultation and not taken back into general revenues and spent frivolously, as often we have seen this government do.

In section 7 the minister should commit to consulting with First Nations about the annual report and seek input on the report. This should be detailed in the bill, Mr. Speaker, to ensure that the government does it and does it in a very regular and methodical way as opposed to on the whim of whoever happens to be the minister at the time.

Section 8, Mr. Speaker, is an extremely problematic section in this bill. According to First Nations this section needs to be taken out entirely. First Nations do not accept the forced disclosure of agreements, and I'll go into some specifics here. First of all, it's unnecessary in terms of accountability. New federal legislation already puts onerous financial disclosure requirements on First Nation governments, and industry is bound by anticorruption legislation and sections of the Criminal Code prohibiting the bribery of public officials. Industry often references these things in agreements with First Nations.

This is also a blatant violation of the United Nations declaration of indigenous rights and section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Other landowners and people do not have to disclose their agreements with industry, so why do aboriginal people have to disclose? I think it's quite clear that this government feels: well, they have to because they are aboriginal. I feel that's completely wrong and discriminatory, Mr. Speaker, in addition to being legally and morally repugnant.

On section 9 decisions of the minister under this act should absolutely not be considered final and should be subject to a review or appeal process. Again, all Canadians and Albertans have the ability to appeal and to have a decision heard for further review. The fact that this bill takes away that right, Mr. Speaker, is quite simply wrong. Section 9 also needs to be completely deleted from this bill.

There should be a built in acknowledgment and a commitment to consultation with First Nations about the development of regulations that are anticipated under section 10. In section 10 there needs to be a clear statement that the levy is intended only to pay for the costs of consultation processes with First Nations regarding resource projects, and the statement should indicate that funds cannot be construed as compensation for infringements of treaty and aboriginal rights or accommodation. I mean, that's something that's separate. Again, there needs to be fines laid out, Mr. Speaker, should industry fail to pay the appropriate levy.

You know, there are other concerns. As I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, we have no idea how much money is going to be collected for the levy in this bill. Section 3(2) states that the levy amounts will be determined by regulations. I find that dangerous. I also find it extremely difficult for the government to expect members of this Assembly to agree and vote in favour of a bill regarding levies for consultation, yet we have no idea what those levies will be. As I've stated, one concern is that the levy that may be collected, as the minister indicated to me in a conversation, is around $70 million. However, that's less than half of the current funding for consultations provided by industry and government today. I mean, how and why we would support a levy that goes in the wrong direction and takes us back a step is beyond me.

Another question: what assurances are there that this isn't a means to further reducing funds to First Nations for consultations? Are there any assurances that the funding will not decrease?

Again, as I've stated, we've seen and colleagues in the House here have talked about and cited letters and press releases from all three treaties. In recent meetings with Treaty 8, they've indicated that Bill 22 was never mentioned. You know, the introduction of this legislation undermines the government-to-government relationship between First Nations and the government of Alberta. I find it interesting that in a press release that came out today, Treaty 8 has stated very succinctly and clearly that they fully oppose Bill 22 in its entirety. What else can I say, Mr. Speaker?

As well, I think it's worth noting that on May 9, 2013, the Minister of Aboriginal Relations stated in the House – and this is from Hansard – “I can say that I met with the grand chief personally.” He's talking about Grand Chief Makinaw of Treaty 6. “We met about three weeks ago. He was made aware of this bill. He agreed to [it] going forward.” Mr. Speaker, there are no two ways about this. All indications and communications I've had with Treaty 6 are that the above statement is completely false on all accounts. The meeting that took place was a dinner meeting. There was a mention of the levy, and it was made as a casual statement. There was no indication of Bill 22 or that the Alberta government already had this bill drafted.

Time after time the proof is that this government is continuing to break the trust between First Nations and the Crown and has shirked their responsibilities, their duty to consult. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I strongly support this hoist motion.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank all of our guests from treaties 6, 7, and 8 for sitting in the House this evening at this hour to make their presence and their minds known to this government, that they strongly oppose this bill. To them I say: hai, hai.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll be brief. The statements have been made and remade – and I hope the government is getting it – that there is serious opposition to this. This isn't spurious. This isn't grandstanding. This is a serious commitment to trying to rebuild something that is rapidly breaking again. There's an opportunity here to build a healthy relationship with First Nations by reviewing this particular bill, coming together, talking about it, looking at some of the problems, sorting through them one by one, and coming back to this House with something that First Nations can believe in, something that they can feel encouraged by, that builds trust, that builds a sense of them having some control over their future and the well-being of their economy, their social and environmental well-being.

There is a risk that this bill will reinforce a long history of paternalism, disrespect, and a lack of meaningful consultation and accommodation. Alberta took a leadership role in about 2005, when they brought forward one of the first provincial consultation bills. Since then, we have fallen, I guess, both in terms of implementing it and showing First Nations as well as all Albertans that this is a very critical process that has to be followed and seen to be followed, experienced to be followed in its authenticity by First Nations people themselves.

At best, what we're going to see if this bill goes through is a loss of trust, a wrangling, an ongoing frustration. At worst, I see a lawsuit coming against this government and against this bill. Clearly, these First Nation chiefs are saying that this is not acceptable. This is what I would call an honourable out for the government. It's an honourable way to say: “We may have made a mistake. We want to review this. We want to put it on hold. We want to see what can be done, if anything, to resurrect this in the interest of First Nations and our collective relationship to avoid serious breakdown over the coming months and years. We want to take a time out, for want of a better word, and think about what the real implications of this bill are and hear from the people most affected.”

I'm hoping that the government will heed this. It's no disrespect to the government to say: let's pause and review this. Obviously, a serious reaction. Obviously, serious implications for them. We perhaps can do better. It isn't a huge loss for government to say: we may have to review this; we must review this, in fact.

The process was poor. That was clearly indicated. The outcome is also poor from the respect of the leadership of First Nations here. Perhaps not deliberate, but that's the outcome. The initial hope and respect in the original process that was designated seems to have fallen by the wayside, and we have to acknowledge that the current recommendations in this bill, the current law and changes it would bring about will potentially damage relationships for decades if this is allowed to be pushed through.

The government is quite capable of pushing it through. We all know that. You have the majority; you can do whatever you wish. We are trying to open up, I think, the possibility of a win-win for the people of Alberta and the First Nations by pausing, taking a few months, and reflecting on what the First Nations are really trying to tell us. The paramount importance here is to build trust, to foster healing, to develop a working relationship that can go forward with real positive energy.

I hope people in the House will seriously consider this, and I hope, in fact, that we will support this hoist. Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker, the Member for Little Bow, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be brief in speaking to the amendment to hoist this. It's just come down to trust and relationships. Unfortunately, it looks like we've had quite a hiccup in it. It's pretty basic. The right thing to do is to let this sit for six months, try to go back, try to have the proper consultation and deliberation with the First Nations people. It's simple. It's accountability. It's respect. It's teamwork, honesty, and straight communication.

I'd ask the members from all sides of the House to support this motion, this amendment to hoist it, to let it have six months so we can actually have some proper deliberations. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Seeing none, the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with a little trepidation that I stand to speak on this issue. I tend to be a little pedantic sometimes. When you get to be my age, you've had a lot of experience in a number of different things, and you think you maybe know something that somebody else a little younger than you perhaps needs to learn and could benefit from learning from others' experiences and mistakes rather than making them all themselves.

There is a little principle that has guided me well and helped me in situations like this. It takes a lot of courage and humility to say: "Oops. Maybe we got a little carried away here. Maybe we moved a little too fast. Maybe we didn't have the understanding we thought we had." That takes courage. You have to be very self-aware and have a good self-image, too, to be able to say that. All of us who are married have had some experience with that, so we should be a little bit practised in doing it. I submit that this is a very important time to do it given the seriousness of the potential fallout from forcing through a bill that is not really fully accepted by all the parties involved, the two parties, I suppose you could say.

The principle is, "Seek first to understand, then to be understood." If the First Nations people, represented by some who are here tonight, really felt like we understood, that this government understood what their concerns were, had listened, prepared – and when you listen seeking to understand, you're prepared to change your mind and change your opinion. That takes courage and self-confidence and humility, recognizing that you really want to be able to see this situation from the other person's point of view or the other side's point of view, again recognizing that everyone acts rationally, from their own point of view.

So what is their rationale? Clearly, the minister thought he had an understanding or an agreement, that he had consulted, but the definition of consultation appears to be different, as has been pointed out numerous times tonight. The letters that have been written and quoted from freely give clear indication that that understanding hasn't occurred. You may think you understand them, government, but they don't feel like you do. Until they feel that confidence, until you're prepared to listen so intently and sincerely that you'll change your opinion and your approach, they'll never have that confidence. You'll never be able to rebuild that trust.

I hope that you will accept and vote in favour of this amendment that's been suggested, this delay of second reading, so that you can try and build these bridges, build these paths, these pedways, these ways to walk, and, to use the old phrase, walk in their moccasins, see life from their point of view, see this issue of this relationship that's been described by them as more paternalism and seen and sensed by them as being presumptive. I'm not sure that I'm capable of seeing things from their point of view yet, but I want to. I want to try to. I have in my riding the largest reserve in Canada, I believe, centred at Stand Off, the Kainai reserve. I want to make sure that I understand and can represent them properly, and I believe I am right now by speaking in favour of this amendment, which will delay a presumptive action and prevent the fallout that will come from that.

This government has been in power for a long time, and sometimes that can lead to the mistaken sense of ruling by divine authority. I don't think that the finger of any divine being has reached down and etched in stone on the top of a mountain that this is the way that we should deal with the situation, the challenges, the problems that may exist in the current system of negotiation. I think that this needs to be revisited in a fashion that allows time to occur so that we can give some sober second thought, so that we really can go back and say: "Oops. Sorry. I kind of got ahead of myself. What concerns do you have? What can we do to help strengthen this act so that it truly represents you and the oil producers and the explorers and all the others that the Leader of the Opposition referred to a few moments ago, so that all sides are considered?" If you don't bring all sides to the table or at least visit with them one at a time until they feel understood, you're not going to have buy-in.

You've got the power to force this through, but is that really going to give you the result that you want? I don't think that it will. I think this is another example of: ready, fire, aim. I think we need to go back and do some aiming to make sure we're targeting, focusing on the issues that are really important to our friends, the First Nations people, show them the respect that they deserve because they really do deserve it. In the end, by admitting that we haven't done it correctly, I think that we will be able to approach them again then and really, truly have a consultation that will produce the result that we desire.

I hope that you'll give serious consideration to the words of counsel from an old-timer like me. Of course, I've just been quoting Stephen Covey when I say, "Seek first to understand, then to be understood." There's my bona fides for suggesting that that's a pretty good approach to government, a pretty good approach to management, a pretty good approach to marriage and to child raising, too.

I recommend that we give sober second thought. Let's put this off for six months. There's no rush to get this through before we form the government. You've got almost three years.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to be able to join this discussion on the motion to hoist the bill for a period of six months to allow for a new approach to what is being proposed in Bill 22, the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act. Many people have spoken very well on what's going on here. I'm not going to repeat their words, but I will definitely put my vote behind them.

I will say that I am more cynical and less hopeful than some of the people that have spoken before me because I'm a process person, and what I see is a repeated process that's used by this government. It's what happens when you've been in power too long. Every time they try something new and they get away with it – the world doesn't end, the sky doesn't fall, and there aren't thousands of people outside in protest – they go: "Okay. Well, it's all right, then." It then becomes part of their regular process. I am quite concerned at the number of times I see this government go for dinner or coffee with somebody or have a casual chat and in the course of that mention a couple of things that they might be working on at some point. Then we come into this Chamber and find out that it's a bill or a motion and it's done, that everybody over there knew that and it's going to go through. It's going to go through because the government has a honkin' big majority.

If I could ask the good people that have joined us in the gallery to please remember that this is what happens when you give someone that large a majority. They just ram stuff through. Please remember that at the next election. To anybody that's watching these proceedings at home or following online: please remember that. This is what it comes down to. So when you're wondering at the next election, "What difference does it make?" this is the difference. I see a government that no longer really cares whether people protested.

We've got a bill coming in tomorrow that is going to override a process that the government itself had in place about how a teacher's contract is going to be ratified. The process said: if one school board objects, that's it; the whole thing stops, and you go back. Well, guess what? One school board objected; actually, many school boards objected. Now they are going to override it by bringing in a bill that – I'm guessing; I haven't seen it – I imagine is going to say: well, we're just going to take it that everybody agreed and put it through.

Welcome, Madam Speaker.

That's what this government has come to believe, that they know everything, that they're always right, and if someone disagrees with them, well, then they're just wrong or stupid or misled in some way, shape, or form. That's what we've come to in this province, and I think that's what's wrong.

People who raise a dissenting voice, who object to what the government is doing, who bring forward an alternative or criticize the government in any way, shape, or form are, one, demeaned personally; two, their issue is trivialized; and, three, the whole thing is dismissed out of hand. "It's not really a problem. It's no big deal." They're going to do it anyway. That's the situation that we've come to.

Unless we see a huge push-back from the people that are involved in this, I think the government is just going to go ahead. They're going to pass second. They're going to pass committee tonight, probably in the middle of the night, and tomorrow they're going to pass third, and it'll be done. The fact that people really objected, the fact that people felt that they had been – I don't know if deceived is too strong a word. Yeah. People are kind of going: yeah; it's on that level. Okay. Not heard, certainly. Not consulted, certainly. We've all heard that. That has become a modus operandi of this government.

I am not happy to be standing here and talking about the government in this way. I wish I could say many other more positive things, but I can't because what I've watched here, particularly in this spring sitting, does not back up any optimism that I see from anybody in this Chamber. The proof of the pudding is in the eating, and we've been eating a lot of antidemocratic puddings from this government.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I would call on the Member for Chestermere-Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Just Airdrie now.

The Acting Speaker: Airdrie.

I'm going to very briefly speak in support of this motion, and I think that it's important that I get on the record with regard to this on behalf of my constituents. I like the intent of this bill. The intent is good. Obviously, it is to improve the consultative process between our First Nations, our aboriginal populations, and the government and also between our aboriginal and First Nations people, the government, and industry, which is important. This has to be done, and it's good. It's good intent.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The problem is in the delivery method. You cannot entitle a bill the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, use that word "consultation" in the title, then pretend throughout the process that you've consulted with the First Nations on this, and then the day that it's being debated in the House, we find that virtually no aboriginal group in Alberta supports the bill and not only doesn't support it but doesn't feel consulted on it. It's a slap in the face.

This is the type of legislating that ruins relationships. It will no doubt ruin many relationships between the governing party and our First Nations citizens, but it'll do much more damage than just that. If that was the issue, well, then, okay. Big deal, right? If they lose a few political points, well, that's not the end of the world. But the problem is that it will do much more damage than just that. It will damage the long-term relationship that our aboriginal friends and citizens and neighbours have with the province as a whole, with the people of Alberta as a whole, which, of course, they are a part of, with the population as a whole, with industry, with industry moving forward in not just the oil sands but across the province.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot pass this bill right now until it's done right. That's the thing. There's just too much of a history in this government of rushing legislation through without proper consultation. It causes a lot of damage, and in this case it's going to cause a lot of damage in the relationships. It's going to cause suspicion unnecessarily between our aboriginal groups and industry as well as government. There's no need for that.

So why don't we table this legislation? Let's wait six months. Let's have proper consultation. Let's have the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and the Premier and other interested parties go around and make sure they get this right. Then as we move forward, I think that we could come back here in six months and have a very good, solid piece of legislation that could certainly win the support of this opposition party and, I would suspect, the other two opposition parties although I won't speak for them, obviously.

I think that you have a chance to have a very bipartisan if not multipartisan agreement on this, but most importantly, Mr. Speaker, it'll be a piece of legislation that our aboriginal communities, our aboriginal First Nations can get behind, support, and feel good about and improve the relationship long term, moving forward, rather than setting us back because we wanted to rush through this without properly consulting them.

I don't for a minute claim to know all about the aboriginal culture. We all have friends, of course, who we're close with who are members of First Nations and so forth. I don't pretend to understand it fully, but what I do know from my friends and constituents who are from aboriginal communities is that consultation and dialogue and respect, mutual respect in conversation, are critical in that culture. They are critical to having any kind of enduring, long-term relationship of trust and to have progress on many numbers of fronts. By taking the short cut, by ramming this through without that buy-in, we're doing a lot of damage here long term. It's going to take years and probably a new government in some form to undo that damage, and it will take a long time to undo that damage. That's not in anybody's best interests: the government, the opposition, anybody, certainly not the aboriginal, First Nations' best interests either.

With that, I hope that we would really consider delaying this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, 29(2)(a).

Mr. Barnes: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the hon. Member for Airdrie: I'm listening to everybody, and obviously it's a total failure for the government again to properly consult, but I'm curious as to the hon. Member for Airdrie's opinion. If our hoist motion was successful, what would the onus be on the government to consult?

I recall sitting in the Cypress Centre in Medicine Hat about eight or 10 months ago. There were 260, 270-some landowners there all totally in agreement, totally in agreement to the point that the Stantec moderator walked to the middle of the room and said something like: we've heard you all; we've heard you loud and clear; repeal Bill 36. Amazingly enough, the next day in the paper: oh, my goodness. One person in Lethbridge said something like "Don't repeal the bill; don't start all over," compared to what the 260 people had said. It was a waste of our time that night for all 260 of us.

I also now have a constituent who just received a letter from the AUC about two industrial lines going in their area. The letter appears to have been mailed on the 2nd, received on the 6th. The meeting is the eighth. That is called consultation? I don't think so for two seconds. I also know the case with some of the government tours that have gone around, where the forums and the direction appear to be so predecided that it doesn't seem to be a fair process.

So if the Member for Airdrie doesn't mind, I'd appreciate hearing his opinions. During the six-month period, if the hoist was successful, what onus would be on the government to consult?

Mr. Anderson: That's a good question. I don't think there's an onus per se that would come out of the consultation. I just think the right solution would come out of the consultation. It would allow the government to craft a piece of legislation that our aboriginal First Nations community can get behind and can agree with and will allow industry to participate in as well. That's important, too. There are three partners in this relationship. I think without that proper consultation we're doing a real disservice long term to the relationship of trust between government and aboriginal peoples in this province and also to industry and economic development in this province.

Look. We spend a lot of time in here talking about going to the United States and going to different countries to promote our oil and gas development. We spend a lot of time in that regard. However, what good is it to build a pipeline to the United States if we can't even take care of business at home and make sure that we have buy-in from our First Nations and that slowdowns and other things that can come about by not properly involving our First Nations on their treaty lands and so forth are taken care of? We have to take care of home base first, and this is home base. If we don't get this right, you know, there's not going to be much oil to put in the pipelines if we can't develop it at the pace that is needed. That takes proper consultation and a relationship of trust that endures.

I hope that answers your question.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise to speak in favour of this motion. I want to start by thanking the member for introducing this motion. I think the point of it, which is to simply end the progress of this bill and to invite a situation where everybody can get back to the table in the respectful and meaningful consultative process that I think some people are talking about and others expect, is a good thing, so I appreciate the member bringing it forward.

I will be relatively brief. Our aboriginal affairs critic, the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, has spoken on this bill quite a bit and has outlined in some detail, as have others, the significant concerns that have been raised with respect to the components of this bill at this point. I mean, we have had a number of people here today, representatives from various treaties, who are here to listen to the debate. I think it is worth a comment to just make sure that everyone over on that side understands that their presence here and their listening to the debate itself does not amount to consultation. It does appear as though there is that kind of misapprehension over on that side. Simply having somebody hear about your plans does not mean that they're onside. I do appreciate that when you've been in charge for 40 years, you start to think that that's what consensus looks like, but it's really not what it looks like.

I think that things would be improved a great deal were the government to actually go to the table and sit down and speak in great detail about the various components of this bill. Notwithstanding some of the concerns I've heard about what the total amount of funds collected will be as a result of this bill in relation to the total amount of funds directed to consultation right now – there's some concern raised that this might actually result in a net decrease in funds that go to support consultation capacity building. But assuming that that's not the case for the moment, I mean, I think this bill was theoretically put together with a view to achieving good things. Unfortunately, it was done in a way that did not achieve good things.

Of course, the irony is that, you know, here you've got a consultation levy act, and you failed to consult. I mean, really, Mr. Speaker, you know, who does that? Really. Who does that? The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood previously made a comment: you know, only this Premier could turn a school construction announcement into a political embarrassment. And apparently only this government can turn a consultation act into a failure to consult. I mean, it really does surprise one, the degree to which they're able to stumble on their own boot toes or something.

Anyway, that being the case, there are a number of important areas that previous speakers have outlined. There's the issue of sort of the combined effect of section 1(1)(d) and section 2, which effectively appears in the minds of the drafters of the bill to negate the common-law rights which indigenous peoples in Canada have won, at least partially, through our judicial system. So that is obviously a problem, and their counsel is pointing out that that is a problem. That's something that needs to be addressed.

Also, there are concerns, of course, around the issue of whether or not this bill could be more clear about the positive obligation to consult. I mean, we're talking about consultation levies, but should there be a positive obligation to consult within the bill itself, not exactly on the consultation policy? When you consider that there's all this work going on on consultation policy – and that is not going to come before this Legislature, apparently – one would want to see somewhere in legislation a positive obligation to consult, and perhaps the bare minimum parameters of what that consultation would look like would be set out in legislation. At this point it doesn't appear to exist anywhere. So that is a concern, especially when you see some of the work being done by the federal Conservatives to undermine and generally undercut their obligations to consult with and in many different ways demonstrate a meaningful respect for First Nations in our country. It's unfortunate that there's not a positive obligation to consult that's outlined in here.

There, of course, are other elements of this bill. One would have expected that there was a statement that it's not the minister that decides this but that in consultation with First Nations and indigenous people certain parameters would be put in place and certain standards would be put in place. That, too, is missing from this legislation.

Finally, we also, of course, see that lovely piece that, you know, we find in many different pieces of legislation, where we say that the minister is godlike and therefore shall not be subject to judicial review. Again, I'm not quite sure why we need to go that far in this legislation. Why do we have to do that? Why can't we have legislation that would allow for a review of the government's actions in the same way we would in many other cases?

Those are just a few of the difficulties that we see in this legislation. Now, we again have heard the minister and other representatives of government suggest: no, no; we did consult on this. I'm sure the minister was not intentionally trying to mislead people. I'm sure he believed they were in the same room – they were talking – and clearly the minister thought that was adequate, but it's also equally clear that many of the peoples who are impacted directly by this legislation do not agree that they were consulted. Given the very singular purpose of this legislation, which is to facilitate capacity for consultation efforts, it truly is quite mind boggling that we wouldn't start this piece of legislation on the right footing and that it would itself not reflect the outcome of a positive, mutual exchange of ideas and decisions that ultimately led to consensus between two equal parties around this process.

If this simple piece of legislation cannot even reflect or create or be founded on consensus – they really are relatively simple, the tasks that are outlined in this legislation, Mr. Speaker. This is not a broad, complex thing. It's one piece that this legislation is looking for. If this simple piece cannot be founded on consensus that arises from meaningful, substantive, genuine consultation, then how is the rest of the process going to flow? I mean, it does not lay out a particularly optimistic map of the future.

I join with many of my opposition colleagues from all three parties to respectfully request that the members of the government really give some serious consideration to going back to the drawing board, re-establishing that relationship, having the kinds of conversation that you need to have. There was a time when this Premier could not walk through a door or flip her hair without saying the word “conversation.” It really ruined the use of that word for me for a real long period of time.

Ms Blakeman: Now it's collaboration.

Ms Notley: Now it's collaboration.

You know, she talked so endlessly about the need to have a conversation with Albertans. I would suggest that she ought to have a conversation with the representatives who are here tonight and with other representatives who have outlined their very serious and real concerns about this piece of legislation. Then when there is consensus, we can come back into this House in the fall, and with everybody onside we can all happily vote through this piece of legislation and celebrate the fact that Alberta's First Nations and indigenous peoples have achieved, in conjunction with this government, a piece of legislation that's going to work for everybody.

It is with that in mind, Mr. Speaker, that I urge all members of this House to support the motion that we are debating at this time. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak in favour of this notice of amendment to delay this second reading for six months. I think what it boils down to is: who is this bill for? It's for industry, and it's for First Nations and aboriginal groups. Well, obviously, we saw by the letters we received that treaties 6, 7, and 8 are not in favour of this, and that's who this bill is for. Why in anybody's mind would you think, “Let's carry on and go ahead” when they're saying no? They don't want it. I mean, if you don't like the message, you don't have to shoot the messenger. We're just relaying the message, hoping that we can get it through that: look, they are not happy.

What it boils down to on part 2 is respect, pride, and honour. Those are three of the biggest values that I've come to know in my relationships with First Nations. I've grown up with many individuals from the Siksika reserve. My family has lived in that area for a hundred years. It started with my great-grandfather. My grandfather, my father, and myself: we have generations of First Nations that have been our friends. It's great to see. My kids, you know, have good friends that are friends of my friends and my father's and my grandfather's. It's a great thing.

They have such pride, and it comes down to respect. We must show them the respect they deserve. I was fortunate enough to be asked to be an honorary pallbearer at a funeral on the reserve a few years ago. It was an amazing honour for me to be asked to come out there and take part in this funeral. When you experience a ceremony like that, you see how much pride and honour and respect they have.

If we continue on with this bill that takes that respect away from them, that's something that we cannot do and should not be allowed to do. I urge the government: put your pride in your pocket, think about who this affects, and vote for the good of the bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been a number of speeches tonight with respect to the hoist amendment. That's the type of amendment that was put in place. I think it's necessary just to make it very clear. I know some members of the opposition who've been here a long time understand that when they're saying that it will come back in six months, it will not if the hoist amendment is passed. In fact, a hoist amendment by parliamentary practice and procedure is one which is actually a hoist, so what it means is that the bill leaves the Order Paper and never comes back. A number of speeches have propounded this fiction that by approving this amendment, people would have the opportunity to go out for six months and have consultations and come back when, in fact, the net effect of passing the amendment is to defeat the bill. Therefore, I would have to say that I cannot support the amendment, and I would encourage members not to support the amendment because that would be a defeat of the bill.

Now, why should the bill go ahead? Well, there are a number of reasons. First of all, there were a number of points that were raised that I think need to be dealt with. The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview was concerned about the definition of First Nation, and I understand that concern because I had that concern. I might say that I've had a particular interest in this area for a long time. I grew up in two communities which essentially were aboriginal communities: Hazelton, which is where my tie comes from, actually, by happenstance today, from the Gitksan Nation in the Hazelton area in northern B.C., and then Fort Vermilion, where the Tallcree Nation lives, very close to the First Nation at Little Red River.

I acted for First Nations when I was in private practice, and then my first portfolio in government was intergovernmental and – actually, we changed the name of the portfolio from federal and intergovernmental affairs to intergovernmental and aboriginal affairs to respect the fact that the approach taken by this government was a government-to-government approach with respect to First Nations matters.

The definition that's in this act is perhaps problematic, but the reality is that it's the legal definition that's used federally and provincially across the country. While one might want to start a motion or movement to try and change that definition in all of the acts to a better or more profound definition, that is, in fact, how you describe a First Nation in law today, and it makes sense for another act coming in to maintain that consistency until somebody can get the federal government, which has responsibility anyway, to change the definition to a more modern definition.

"Identified aboriginal group" has been raised – that's definition 1(1)(f) – and then section 2, "the Minister may by order identify aboriginal groups." Well, the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview himself gave the answer to the question, and that is that there are a number of aboriginal people in the province who are not necessarily identified by having reserve lands; the Lubicon, as an example.

The settlement that has just most recently happened is at Peerless Trout, where it hasn't actually been completed and put into effect yet; therefore, they are without land so do not fall into the traditional definition that's in the act. Therefore, you have to have a mechanism to have other identified aboriginal groups who are entitled in our practice of government-to-government relations to be engaged with in consultation with respect to developments that might happen with respect to natural resources and other things, both in their traditional land areas and in areas that may be designated for reserve when those settlements are completed. So that piece makes sense.

The third piece, the payment of the consultation levy, is actually what this act is all about. This act isn't an abrogation of the right to consultation. It's not a statement about the aboriginal consultation process. That process, as every member of the House knows, has been the subject of ongoing discussion about what appropriate consultation process and procedure should be established. What this act merely does is say that those people who are applying to do development with respect to lands which might affect the rights of a First Nation, either with respect to their reserve lands or traditional lands, need to be part of the consultation process, and because they're the ones that are proposing the development, they're the ones that ought to pay.

I would think the members of the Wildrose Party at least might agree that a user-pay process is in order for people who are proposing to do a development – they're the ones who should pay the levy – and that that levy should be available to assist First Nations with respect to capacity development to be able to be part of a meaningful consultation process. That's all this act really does. It doesn't set out what the consultation process is or should be. That is the subject of consultation with First Nations and under discussion and has been under discussion for a considerable period of time. I'm not sure when that will come to fruition, but I'm sure it will.

The establishment of the consultation levy fund, the establishment of the right to a levy to a so-called developer or, as this act describes them, a proponent, and then the right to invest those funds, the right to add to those funds from government funds or through public funds, through monies from a supply vote, a vote appropriated for the purpose of the fund – the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, again, was talking about a number. I don't know where he got his number. But it's very clear that the consultation fund can be made up of both the levies to the proponents and additional monies that may be added to it.

Then payments from the funds. "The minister may make payments from the Fund." That's section 6. That's very clear. I mean, that's what happens, actually, now all the time. Every time there's a consultation – and I've been familiar with this over the 15, 16 years I've been involved – there is a request for monies to provide capacity so that people can engage in meaningful consultation. There has to be a process for that. Someone has to do that, and in this case it's the minister because those funds are actually in the hands of government to manage on behalf of the public of Alberta.

Then there are provisions for reporting.

There's been a lot said about the collection of information and records, et cetera. Now, when we do development in this province, we require developers, people who want to pursue mineral leases or pursue oil and gas leases, to provide certain information about what they're doing, and that information goes into the ERCB or to the appropriate place within Energy or Environment, and that information is used with respect to making decisions. Sometimes that information is public, and sometimes because of economic rights that the proponents might have, that's private.

By the same token, when you're talking about a consultation levy and you need to know what monies have already been paid and what agreements have already been put in place with respect to that, let's be very clear. That section limits the request for that information to agreements relating to consultation capacity and other benefits pertaining to provincially regulated activities. It's very clearly limited to the same things that you would demand of an oil and gas company if they wanted to go in and do a development.

Those pieces are all very straightforward. They have really nothing to do with the aboriginal consultation policy, how much consultation needs to be had, what constitutes appropriate consultation. It is about, simply, a levy to proponents to put into a fund so that funds can be provided from time to time to First Nations who need resources to assist them in developing capacity so they can engage in the appropriate consultation. That's simply what it is.

The minister's decision is final, is binding. Well, what decisions can the minister make under this act? Good question.

Mr. Mason: Who's a First Nation?

Mr. Hancock: Well, not who's a First Nation – that's already defined by the act – but who are other aboriginal groups that are not included? Yes, somebody has to actually determine who fits into that category, so that's one determination. That does not, however, in any way limit a person's ability to take whatever action they might have before appropriate bodies, including the provincial government or the courts, if they believe that they should be consulted with respect to the development. It's simply a question of: who fits into this category of whom we will be funding out of the development levy fund for consultation processes? That's essentially the limit to the decisions that the minister might make.

I guess the other one would be the amount of the levy. The interest of who might appeal that would be the person asked to pay the levy, but that's not something which should be a concern that would be raised by a First Nation because that's not an issue that they're being asked to pay.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very interested, obviously, in the issues that have been raised and in the rationale why some of the First Nations may or may not feel that they were appropriately consulted with respect to the act. I know the minister has very clearly indicated and I know that personally he's had a number of discussions with First Nations about the consultation policy but also about how we might do a better job of ensuring that funds were available for the development of capacity so that the proper consultation processes can be engaged in. That's all this act does.

I would suggest that if anybody supports an amendment to make this act go away, what we will end up with is a continuation of the current situation, which is private arrangements between oil and gas companies or other proponents with First Nations which are not necessarily in the interests of the people who are supported by the First Nations, the First Nations themselves, and that are not open and transparent processes with respect to the support of consultation as required at law in this country and as recognized by this government, the requirement to consult.

This is actually a step forward. This is an important part of the process. It's not the be-all and end-all. If there are deficiencies in it – I don't particularly see any deficiencies in it – that can be part of the ongoing consultation process with respect to how aboriginal consultation is undertaken.

One thing I know for certain, Mr. Speaker, and that is that the appropriate, sustainable development in this province is absolutely necessary. It happens in areas, to a great extent, that affect people who need to be consulted, and when they need to be consulted, they need to be able to have an equity in the consultation processes, which means that they have to have access to resources which allow them to be at the same table with the same kind of information and research and processes that the proponents have. This act helps balance the playing field for them, and it's a very important piece of the process.

I would encourage all members to defeat the amendment. Then, of course, it being a hoist amendment, we would move on immediately to the vote, and I would ask them to support the vote for Bill 22 in second reading.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). The Member for Edmonton-Centre to speak on the amendment.

Ms Blakeman: Yes, please.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceed.

Ms Blakeman: What an excellent suggestion, Mr. Speaker. Thank you so much. Under 29(2)(a) I would like to point out to the government that they, of course, are in control of the agenda. Although a hoist is, generally speaking, accepted as being the disposal of a bill and that you're postponing it for three to six months, for the benefit of anybody that's listening, generally the sessions were shorter than that. So if you said that you were going to postpone it for six months, you were actually saying: after we're all gone. It was a way of getting rid of a bill, most generally used, by the way, by the government to get rid of private members' bills. Certainly, this government has only passed hoist amendments on their backbenchers' bills.

In fact, the government can bring forward a bill at any time, can it not, Mr. Government House Leader? They can either bring this bill back under a different number or name in the fall as per the six-month hoist, or they could next week bring forward another bill that is exactly this bill with a different name and number. The agenda is always in the hands of the government, and they may bring forward any bill they want at any time. To say that this bill is gone forever is not accurate. It's gone forever as Bill 22, but the government can bring back the content and intent of this bill at any time. Is that not correct, Mr. Government House Leader?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No, in fact, it's not correct. Parliamentary Counsel would also look at a bill, and if the bill that comes back is exactly the form and content of the bill that's there and it's already been defeated once in that session, it's not likely to be allowed as a bill to come back.

Now, there are ways you can get around that, and certainly one can draft things in different ways to bring a thing back. No question that the government can bring another bill forward, but there's also another parliamentary practice in the parliamentary system, and that is that if you defeat a government bill, you may in fact defeat a government. It may not be around to bring it back if this bill was hoisted because, in essence, it's the defeat of the bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there other speakers on the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 22 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: The hoist amendment having been defeated, I'll call the question on second reading of Bill 22, the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 25 Children First Act

The Chair: Comments from the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to rise at the very outset of this Committee of the Whole and under the authority of Beauchesne 684, on page 204 of the sixth edition, I'd like to bring forward a motion proposing an instruction to this Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Chair, if I could briefly explain to you the motion I'm proposing and the authority upon which I make the argument that it's in order at this point. The motion reads as follows:

Be it resolved that this committee requests the Assembly to issue an instruction to the committee to summon the Information and Privacy Commissioner – an independent Officer of this Legislature – and receive evidence as to the likely effects of the measures proposed in Bill 25, Children First Act.

The Chair: You can speak to your motion, please, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chair. What I will do first is begin by speaking to why it is my view that this motion is in order. As members are well aware, this is a rare and somewhat extraordinary motion that I'm bringing forward, and I'm doing it only after careful consideration and research. However, I do so for several reasons.

First, we have under consideration an important and substantial piece of legislation, the Children First Act, which makes considerable changes involving statutory authority and information sharing with respect to children, parents, and front-line staff.

Secondly, an independent officer of this Legislature, who reports only to this Legislature, has raised serious questions and concerns about the impact of this legislation, concerns which were immediately and publicly dismissed by the sponsor of this bill, the Minister of Human Services.

Thirdly, the government has refused to refer this bill to a legislative policy committee, where members would have been able to hear from a variety of witnesses, including those who support the legislation, those who have raised concerns and questions, and those who see opportunities to strengthen and clarify the legislation. It is, of course, common practice to hear from witnesses at meetings of the legislative policy committees, and I regret that this government has not seen fit to allow members to hear from such witnesses with respect to Bill 25.

Fourthly, due to the government's unwillingness to refer this bill to a legislative policy committee and coupled with the serious concerns raised not only by stakeholders but specifically by an independent officer of this Legislature, I see no alternative, then, to bringing forward this motion, which asks that this committee, the Committee of the Whole, take the steps necessary to hear testimony from and pose questions to the Information and Privacy Commissioner.

Now, as I said, this is a rare motion, and I want to take a few moments to outline the practice and precedent surrounding both instructions to committees as well as the appearance of witnesses during Committee of the Whole. Beauchesne's section 681, on page 203, outlines the practice of issuing instructions, which is what this type of motion happens to involve. An instruction is defined as "a motion empowering a committee to do something which it could not otherwise do, or to direct it to do something which it might otherwise not do." As members know, hearing from witnesses is something that the Committee of the Whole, in the absence of this instruction, would otherwise not likely do.

However, to pose such a motion is certainly not common practice either, but merely because a motion is rare does not mean that it is out of order. Indeed, there is precedent for this practice within our parliamentary tradition and within provincial Legislatures across the country. There are a wide variety of practices across the country.

In British Columbia there are no explicit rules in their Standing Orders regarding the calling of witnesses at the Committee of the Whole stage. Standing Order 72(1) in British Columbia states, however: "Witnesses may be summoned to attend before any Committee of the House upon a motion to that effect being passed by the Committee." However, there is not an instance of a witness being called during Committee of the Whole.

Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Ontario, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick also do not have specific rules that govern witnesses in relation to the Committee of the Whole. However, the Principal Clerk of the Saskatchewan Legislative Assembly tells us that on April 14, 1997, the chairman of the Board of Directors of the Regina general hospital was summoned to the bar of the Chamber to respond to questions posed by the committee.

In Quebec La procédure parlementaire du Québec does speak to this specific issue. Indeed, from 1992 to date there have been at least 15 occasions where witnesses have appeared before the full committee.

Both the Northwest Territories and Nunavut have specific standing rules for their Assembly which allow for Committees of the Whole to hear witnesses.

At the federal level witnesses have also been called during Committee of the Whole in both Houses notwithstanding that their Standing Orders are silent on the issue. In his 2005 text entitled Taking It to the Hill: The Complete Guide to Appearing Before Parliamentary Committees David McInnes writes on page 38 that witnesses can be called before the Committee of the Whole, although it is not usually a practice in the House, and will actually sit in the Chamber to take questions.

The calling of private-sector witnesses is not that common. For instance, it occurred in December 1997 during consideration of the back-to-work legislation to end the postal strike. In House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, 2009, on page 925, in footnote 74 it states:

In 2007, exceptionally, and by Special Order of the House, a group of approximately 10 witnesses was admitted to the floor of the House for a sitting of a Committee of the Whole, in order to answer questions from Members who were considering emergency legislation related to the resumption of the operation of a nuclear reactor at Chalk River. . . . During the sitting in Committee of the Whole, the witnesses were seated near the Table of the House and some were given the opportunity to make statements.

I've also found evidence that witnesses are able to appear before Committee of the Whole in the Senate. Indeed, on February 18, 1999, the Privacy Commissioner of Canada was called before the Senate during Committee of the Whole. I feel that it's appropriate to quote from his comments at that particular time. He said:

I must start by saying that this is quite a thrill. It is an extraordinary occasion for us. This is the first time I have been called to appear before a Committee of the Whole of either House.

In my early days as a press gallery reporter here, about 40 years ago, appearances of witnesses before committees of the whole house were quite commonplace. It is now somewhat out of fashion, which is too bad.

He goes on later to say:

If today's session represents the beginning of a revival of the process of Committee of the Whole, forgive me for attaching some special distinction to my appearance. I hope this does become true – at least for that small band of people who are known as officers of Parliament. That is, the half dozen or so of us whose appointment alone in the entire federal establishment requires a vote of approval by both Houses of Parliament and who answer to no ministry whatsoever but only to Parliament and who make our reports directly to the Speakers of both Houses.

Indeed, Mr. Chair, that is what my motion here tonight will endeavour to allow. We as the committee of the whole Assembly will call upon one of our officers of the Legislature, the Information and Privacy Commissioner, to hear fully the serious concerns she's raised with respect to Bill 25 and to clarify the nature of the consultation that the minister claims has occurred with her office.

Now, in my comments thus far I have concentrated on other Assemblies throughout the country and also on the federal Parliament. I am, however, very pleased to say that there is indeed precedent for this motion within this very House. This month, in fact, marks 30 years since a similar motion was introduced by the then member for Edmonton-Norwood. On May 31, 1983, he rose at the outset of the Committee of the Whole's consideration of Bill 44 to move that the committee request the Assembly "to issue an instruction to the committee to summon expert witnesses and receive evidence as to the likely effects of the measures proposed in Bill 44, Labour Statutes Amendment Act."

Thirty years ago this member, who would go on to lead the New Democrat Official Opposition, saw fit to introduce this motion because the PC government of the day was committed to the "mistake of hurrying," to use his words as recorded in Hansard. Today this PC government is intent on doing the very same thing while ignoring the serious concerns raised publicly by an independent officer of the Legislature.

I've addressed the procedural issues pertaining to whether this motion is in order, but I'd like to briefly speak to the substantive issues if I could. First of all, the Children First Act was introduced on Tuesday, May 7. On Wednesday, May 8, just one day later, the Information and Privacy Commissioner released a statement in which she stated that Bill 25 erodes individuals' ability to control what happens to their own personal and health information by broadening the ability to share information without consent. The ability to say yes or no to the sharing of one's own information is, fundamentally, what privacy laws are intended to provide – control.

She goes on to say later:

Individuals will not necessarily know what information has been collected about them, by whom, or for what specific purpose. This is contrary to fundamental privacy principles of transparency, openness and accountability, and reduces individuals' ability to exercise their rights to complain or ask for a review under existing privacy laws.

She then says:

Bill 25 may authorize information sharing with non-profit organizations that are, for the most part, not regulated by privacy legislation and not subject to any independent privacy oversight body.

She says:

Bill 25 provides legislative authority for sharing information "for the purposes of enabling or planning for the provision of services or benefits." This is a very broad purpose that could include any number of activities undertaken by a service provider.

In short, she says:

Bill 25 is a legislated solution to an education and awareness problem... [which] increases the overall complexity of Alberta's legislated privacy framework.

She concluded by recommending that Bill 25 at the very least be amended.

Now, in response to these serious concerns raised by this independent officer of the Legislature, the Minister of Human Services stated on May 8 in this Assembly that consultations occurred throughout January, February, and March. He also said, and I quote from Hansard:

The FOIP review that was promised in the throne speech will allow a thorough review of the FOIP Act, but there are things we need to do now in the best interest of children. It's been very clear from all of the stakeholders.

He went on to say:

I can say that there have been discussions between our department and the Privacy Commissioner's office, and we made some changes to the wording in the act to try and accommodate the concerns that were being raised by them. I'm disappointed in the news release, to be perfectly frank, because it was my view that we had accommodated all of the issues that were raised. But we can get into that discussion.

Now, that's interesting. It does sound a lot like what we heard from the previous minister about consultations with First Nations. Anyway, the parallel just occurred to me.

The reason it is of value to have the Privacy Commissioner come here, Mr. Chair, is because the Privacy Commissioner reports to and through this Assembly. It is an unfortunate situation that we are in now, where the Privacy Commissioner outlines some very significant, fundamental concerns with this piece of legislation, and meanwhile the minister tells us that he thinks that those issues have been accommodated through conversations that he had and consultations that he had separate from this Assembly.

Now, getting away for the moment from the whole issue of the relationship between an officer of the Legislature and the minister and whether or not the Assembly can have a role in that, the fact of the matter is that the clearest way to address this problem is to have the commissioner come here and speak to all of us who appointed her into that position and to answer questions from all of us here about her concerns. She oversees a body of law in a way which, with the exception of, you know, five other pieces of legislation, is unique to all other law that we pass in this Legislature. She does so, Mr. Chair, because we as an Assembly have identified that the issues over which she has jurisdiction are so important that they must be addressed in totality through this Assembly. It is rare for a Privacy Commissioner to even begin to comment on legislation in a public way.

Really, the way it needs to be done is here in this setting, with the benefit of all members of this Assembly having the opportunity to exercise their rights as members of this Assembly to question this independent officer on her opinions about this piece of legislation. We have seen fit, Mr. Chair, to elevate her jurisdiction in a way that is different from many other pieces of legislation such that she's accountable to this Assembly. So this committee, then, is the right place for her to come to answer questions about the very serious and significant concerns that she has raised.

Now, I understand that the minister has since had some discussions and is potentially even considering making some small changes. I'm not sure. But it may be there, and that's good. Again, because this commissioner is an officer of this Legislature and of this Assembly, we should have the benefit of having her input on the efficacy of those changes should they come forward in Committee of the Whole as well as the detailed concerns that her expertise drives her to raise with respect to this legislation.

I suggest that we should, as a result, invite the Information and Privacy Commissioner to join us for this discussion so as to clarify the difference of opinions regarding the impacts of this legislation as well as the difference of facts between the minister's statements, where he said that he thought he was consulting, and what the Privacy Commissioner was actually recommending.

It bears repeating that an independent officer of the Legislature reports not to the minister but to the Assembly. If the minister does not accept clear recommendations made by that officer, I think it is the duty and responsibility of this Assembly and each and every member of this Assembly, exercising their rights as individual members of this Assembly, not as members of caucuses but each member of this Assembly, to fully understand what our commissioner is saying. If this minister thought a few changes to the wording would satisfy the commissioner, it is clear that he was mistaken.

In conclusion, Mr. Chair, this motion will allow us to clarify this situation, to hear from the Information and Privacy Commissioner, and to proceed with a full resolution of this issue on this very important piece of legislation, which has a significant impact on the privacy and transparency rights of all citizens in Alberta.

Thank you.

11:10

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, the chair has concerns about the propriety of this motion, but I'm prepared to hear from one speaker from each caucus before ruling. With that, I'll recognize the Member for Airdrie, followed by Edmonton-Centre, and then, I suspect, the minister.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. This is certainly a rare motion that is being done, but I think it is not without merit. I think that the arguments were very clearly stated by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. This is why, once again, we in this party supported a referral motion during second reading on Bill 25, in order to try to get this into a policy committee during the recess so that we could go through this bill and make sure that any issues were taken care of. What the Privacy Commissioner has done here is really – I mean, I haven't been here long enough to say it's unprecedented, but I've never seen this during my time here.

As I looked at the Privacy Commissioner's concerns, some of her concerns I think are valid. A couple of them I tend to actually disagree with. I think that there's a balance that has to be put forward between keeping people's information completely private and then, on the other hand, making sure that there's enough information sharing that's going on to make sure that children are being protected in the system. I think there is a balance there. Sometimes we have to give a little on one end in order to get what we're looking for on the other.

That said, good decisions on this bill with regard to the recommendations given by the Privacy Commissioner will be – it would be a much better exercise or a much better way of doing things here if we took the time to go over those recommendations by the Privacy Commissioner and have him come forward and answer questions.

Some Hon. Members: Her.

Mr. Anderson: Her. Sorry. My bad. Have her come forward and answer those questions.

I think that that's very important. As opposition members and as government members voting on this, I think we'd all like to understand a little bit where the Privacy Commissioner is coming from on several of her recommendations. I think that that can only be done if we hear from the Privacy Commissioner in detail. I have many questions that I'd like to ask her concerning this bill to see where the right balance is.

That's not to say, again, that I agree with everything that's been recommended, although I do agree with some. Maybe my view would change one way or the other depending on what her testimony is concerning this bill. Without knowing that testimony, it's very difficult to feel that I'm getting all the information that I need in order to make a properly informed decision on this bill. I mean, this bill has already been rushed through as is in very short order.

Generally speaking, it's a good bill. It's a bill that I support in principle. I think that it has parts in it that I'm unsure of, and I think that Albertans and others would be unsure of certain parts of it as well. I think that for the Assembly to do its job properly, we need to hear from the Privacy Commissioner specifically regarding the unprecedented recommendations that she gave while this bill was in second reading. That's really unprecedented in my time here. Possibly it's been done before, but certainly I've never seen it.

I think that in order to do our jobs, Mr. Chair, we need to hear from the Privacy Commissioner, and this would be the opportunity to do that. So I support the motion.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, can I just clarify that you wanted us to argue the propriety of considering this motion before the committee?

The Chair: In favour or against the motion.

Ms Blakeman: In favour or against. Okay.

The Chair: Specifically to the motion.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. I'll do both, then. Thanks.

First, I want to argue that this motion is in order. Our standing orders make it clear that we as an Assembly are in control of our own business. We can proceed as we wish. Thus, you witness a number of times a request for unanimous consent, and if it's given, we can do things that normally wouldn't be done here. We can revert to an order of business and introduce a bill, for example, when we've already passed through the Routine and would not be allowed to do that regularly. So if we agree that we're going to do something, we can do it. If we're really doing something unusual, it would take unanimous consent.

In this case this is a motion that's brought before us for consideration, and we can ask that that instruction be given to the Assembly to follow through on this. Namely, the instruction is that we want the Privacy Commissioner to appear before us, whether at the bar or at the table, to answer our questions and talk about what effect it is that she sees following from this bill. That's how our standing orders address this. They don't specifically talk about instructions.

When I go a layer up to Beauchesne, 683, 684, and 687 all speak to this specifically. So does 681, but the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has already dealt with that. Rules 682 and 683 talk about a permissive instruction and a mandatory instruction. The permissive instruction is more ordinary, and it gives the committee authority to do something that it wouldn't usually do. In this case that would be to ask the Assembly to bring the Privacy Commissioner forward.

Now, we're still in control of our own business here, and the House, in fact, can look at the recommendation from the committee and say, "Nah; no thanks," but the instruction can be given. Or there can be a mandatory instruction that says, "The House will do this," that is defining the course of action that the committee will follow.

Beauchesne 684 talks about when it has to be done, and in fact the member did comply with that. "The time for moving an Instruction is immediately after the committal of the bill." She has done that. It's been committed to the committee. "The Instruction should not be given while the bill is still in the possession of the House," in other words, during second reading, "but rather after it has come into the possession of the committee." So her timing is bang on with that one. She's done it exactly right. And if the bill has been partly considered at all, it can't entertain an instruction.

Finally, 687, which, just for reference for the members that are here, is when an instruction is considered inadmissible. "No Instruction is permissible which is irrelevant, foreign, contradictory or superfluous to the contents of the bill." I would argue that none of those inadmissible prohibitions can be called in this case. In fact, this is very much a bill that is dealing with privacy and control of information. The Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, the Health Information Act, and the Personal Information Protection Act, which are the three different acts that this House has passed that deal with collection, use, and disclosure of personal information and health information by government, by health custodians, and by the private sector, are all addressed and named in this bill, so it is very relevant to what we are doing. I don't know how you could make an argument that it's contradictory.

The minister sponsoring the bill has said that he did consult the Privacy Commissioner in doing this, but clearly the Privacy Commissioner felt compelled to issue a press release that outlined her concerns with it. So this is all very much in play, and I think I would urge this committee to follow and, indeed, to approve this motion.

Finally, there are references to it in chapter 16, page 752, of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice mostly noting that federal process doesn't use this very much because they don't, as we do, go immediately from second into Committee of the Whole. We do, so it is in order to do that in the way that we, particularly, conduct our business. So as far as parliamentary process is concerned, I would argue that the member has met all of the criteria.

This is a difficult bill. We're trying to accomplish two things. It is trying to balance the provision of services to children against collection, use, and disclosure of a child's, a parent's, or a guardian's personal information, and achieving that balance is difficult. You will hear later tonight arguments about how the government has achieved it or believes they've achieved it and how others believe they've not achieved it. So the usefulness of the Privacy Commissioner, I would argue, is integral to what we are trying to do with Bill 25.

I won't take any more time, but I think this is important. It's a great opportunity for us to be able to hear how we should be seeking to make this balance and getting the information, indeed, from the expert that we as an Assembly have hired to be an expert for us in these matters.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would, first of all, like to congratulate the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on reaching into the arcane back volumes of Parliamentary Procedure and Practice to find a process that hasn't been used in this House in my 16 years and, as I think the hon. member admitted, hasn't been seen for 30 years and bringing it forward. I like that. It's very inventive and resourceful. However, it's totally unnecessary and inappropriate, so I would encourage you and the House to reject this particular motion for instruction.

This House has operated very well over the years examining bills on a clause-by-clause basis in committee to determine the policy under which the province should operate. Once the policy is created, the officers of the Legislature are there to implement that policy and, yes, to give advice to us and to the Legislature, not to the government, on that policy. It is entirely appropriate for government to consult with leg. officers when they're dealing with policy issues to make sure that they have the full benefit of that advice in drafting legislation, and from time to time I think it's appropriate, certainly, for the Leg. Offices Committee to hear from officers of the Legislature as to what they believe should happen in policy.

But legislation that's being brought forward and discussed and passed in this House is the purview of the Legislature, not the purview of the officers, so I would suggest that bringing an officer before the House in this particular circumstance, while it might be interesting and even useful in terms of information, is not a step that I think we should take lightly and not a step that I think is either necessary or desirable in this particular instance.

The issues that are before the House with respect to this bill are relatively straightforward, and there's a balance that needs to be struck. That balance needs to be struck between how we allow and encourage professionals working in the education system, the police and justice system, the children's services system, and the health system to work together for the benefit of children.

We've seen in this province in the not-too-recent past, certainly not as long as 30 years ago, tragic circumstances whereby children have been failed by us as a province and a society because we didn't share information appropriately; we didn't handle the circumstances. I would suggest that the members opposite, particularly the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, would be the first to leap to her feet to excoriate government for failing children in those circumstances, yet the real failure is that people are not in a position to share information among themselves.

We're not talking about tossing information out on the street. We're not talking about people who don't know and understand the importance of information. We're talking about professionals working together in the best interests of the child. That is a policy decision that needs to be made. Let there be no mistake; there is a clear decision that needs to be made as to how far privacy rules should go and when the best interest of the child needs to take precedence. Yes, it's very difficult in legislation to come up with a line. At some point in time you do have to provide for judgment calls, and it is our view and certainly my view that that judgment call from time to time has to be put in the hands of the professionals who are working in the best interest of the child and the family.

While it would be interesting to hear from the Privacy Commissioner with respect to privacy policy, I think there would be an opportunity to do that as the FOIP Act is reviewed and as the Health Information Act is reviewed and as PIPA is reviewed and as PIPEDA is reviewed and all those overarching acts which set the overarching privacy policy in this province. Certainly it would be appropriate to hear in that circumstance. In this circumstance what this bill does is try to set a standard which allows for the sharing of personal information with respect to children, when it's in their best interest, between professionals who are working together as a team in that child's interest. That's what this act does.

There's a clear distinction. It's a policy decision, and it's not a policy decision which we need to bring the Privacy Commissioner in to tell us about because we clearly understand. I don't think there's any question where the Privacy Commissioner stands on this particular issue, and there's certainly no question where I stand on this particular issue. What we really need to know tonight is where the Legislature stands on this particular issue.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Chair's Ruling Motion Out of Order

The Chair: Hon. members, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has proposed that a motion resolving that the Committee of the Whole request that the Assembly issue an instruction to the committee to summon witnesses to appear before it, namely the Privacy Commissioner. I'm prepared to rule on the admissibility of such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 48.

I'd first mention that a similar motion was moved in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta on May 31, 1983. On that date a member of the ND opposition moved as follows:

Be it resolved that this committee requests the Assembly to issue an instruction to the committee to summon expert witnesses and receive evidence as to the likely effects of the measures proposed in Bill 44, Labour Statutes Amendment Act, 1983.

It should also be noted that the admissibility of the motion was not ruled on, and the motion was moved and, after debate, defeated. Alberta Hansard, May 31, 1983, at pages 1267 to 1278.

Since 1983 the procedures and practices of the Assembly have evolved. With the introduction of policy committees first, the policy field committees, and currently the legislative policy committees, members of this Assembly have the opportunity to move a motion referring a bill to a policy committee pursuant to Standing Order 74.2 or Standing Order 78.2. It is upon referral that the committee may hold public hearings and hear from expert witnesses on a bill.

Bill 25 was in fact the subject of a motion for a referral last week. On May 8, 2013, the Member for Calgary-Shaw moved that Bill 25, the Children First Act, be referred to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities. This motion was subsequently defeated.

Currently both the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, Bill 205, and the Standing Committee on Families and Communities, Bill 204, have bills referred to them by the Assembly.

I would also like to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to an instance in which the federal House of Commons dealt with the matter of admitting witnesses to appear before the Committee of the Whole. The incident is referenced in note 74 on page 925 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, which describes how "exceptionally, and by Special Order of the House" on December 11, 2007, "a group of approximately 10 witnesses was admitted to the floor of the House for a sitting of a Committee of the Whole." It should be noted, however, that the witnesses were admitted by special order of the House, which was agreed to by unanimous consent and not through a request from the Committee of the Whole to the House to issue an instruction to the committee. House of Commons Journals, December 11, 2007, at pages 295-296. Therefore, while the House of Commons heard witnesses in Committee of the Whole, it did not follow the process that is proposed in this motion tonight.

Accordingly, pursuant to Standing Order 48 the motion proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is ruled out of order.

Debate Continued

The Chair: We will now move back to the consideration of Bill 25. The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm quite impressed that you were able to put that together on the fly there. Very well done.

It's great to stand up for the first time after being back in here for four hours and, you know, at 11:30 make a speech about some potential amendments to Bill 25, the Children First Act. I want to make it clear that I do appreciate the Minister of Human Services' intention, I guess, throughout the process. It started before the bill was tabled in this House, when he had a briefing with me and some staff of all parties and really went through the bill and made it very easy for us to engage and ask some questions, which we certainly did take advantage of at that time.

You know, we did have a couple of concerns. Some of those we brought forward during second reading. I also was encouraged by the sharing of some potential amendments that we had brought forward to the minister, and I'm also very encouraged that it appears at first glance that he may be ready to accept some of our amendments. With that, I will speak to the areas in which I am going to propose an amendment, Mr. Chair.

The first one is around the children's charter. As much as we do, I guess, in theory accept what it is that the children's charter is all about, what we originally had a big concern with . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, are you moving an amendment?

Mr. Wilson: I will be eventually, yes.

The Chair: Oh, I see. I thought you were ready.

Mr. Wilson: Would you like me to move that first?

The Chair: I'm asking for clarification, hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: Well, it's up to you. If it pleases the chair, I am more than happy at this time to table an amendment.

The Chair: Well, are you ready to speak to your amendment, or did you want to speak prior to your amendment?

Mr. Wilson: Well, in Committee of the Whole – I may be incorrect – I’m pretty much allowed to speak to . . .

The Chair: You have 20 minutes, hon. member, so you can speak and then move the amendment. I’m just clarifying what your intentions are.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you for the interruption. I appreciate it very much. I will still table the amendment at the behest of the chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

An Hon. Member: Good luck.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you. I appreciate your well wishes of luck. Are you a betting man?

The Chair: Carry on, hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Chair. I will do just that.

The amendment itself has two parts, that you will see, and the first part is about the children’s charter. We were concerned with section 2(3), which gives the minister the right to review and amend and repeal and replace the charter at any time that he considers appropriate. The children’s charter is indeed an ambitious project that will have a lot to say about how the Alberta government approaches children’s programs, and we certainly did not want to take that lightly and do not want to take it lightly. Our overall sense as a caucus was that this just gives the minister a bit too much power and discretion over the actual wording of the charter and the imposition of it.

Because it’s a document that will be providing oversight and guidance for all children’s programs and services, any changes to it, we felt, should be considered by the Legislature as a whole, Mr. Chair. We would prefer that the charter come back to the Legislature as something that would require approval because it is such a wide-reaching document, or it will be eventually. When the children’s charter is ready, we do believe that it should be passed by the Legislative Assembly and then used to give formal direction to programs and services. We also feel that any, I guess, amendments to it, changes, or repealing of the children’s charter should also come back to the Legislative Assembly for consideration.

That covers one part of the amendment that was tabled, Mr. Chair.

The second part speaks to some of the privacy concerns that were raised by the Information and Privacy Commissioner in her press release that came out the day that the bill was debated in second reading. It is specifically a follow-up in section 4(4), which would read that a service provider or custodian must in accordance with the procedures set out in the regulations maintain as a record information about a disclosure. Now, obviously, there are concerns about information sharing that’s going to be going on, but we do believe that it is in the best interest of children to essentially make sure that the information that can be shared is done so in a way that it’s still recorded. We do believe that the minister has got the best intentions for children and putting children first and not the fear that they’re going to be in violation of one of the three acts.

Bill 25 expands the power for educators, police, government agencies, and service providers to share information so that children at risk can be taken out of dangerous situations without waiting for the danger to be so serious or harmful. It is a good change, but we need to remember that this will affect some privacy laws. The amendment does not affect their new ability to share information, but it does at least require that when the agencies share information, they must keep a record of the disclosure. The main concern is that it is inevitable that some of the people with access to private information will abuse that power or make mistakes that affect people, and without a record of disclosure, concerned citizens will have a barrier to going back and finding out what was released about them. We think that this is a very reasonable requirement, one that the Privacy Commissioner has asked for as a minimum requirement in her press release.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will happily sit down and move that . . .

The Chair: Amendment A1.

Mr. Wilson: . . . amendment A1 be accepted by this House. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Speaking to the amendment, the hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have had the opportunity to discuss a number of potential amendments with the hon. member. We are obviously not able to agree on everything, but there are a couple of things which do make sense. I would suggest that this amendment embodies two of them. The fact that when we do a children’s charter, it is important that the House sees it: I think this amendment allows it to be laid before the House for discussion and with respect to any repeal or replacement as well. That particular amendment adds, I think, to the bill, and I would encourage support of it.

The second, section B, with respect to the procedures set out in regulations, maintaining records, it should be clear that this act does not exempt itself from the provisions of FOIP or the Health Information Act. Those acts still remain paramount. The whole issue around how data is collected, how information is collected is still subject to the controls set out in those acts. One of the things that could be clarified is that a service provider or custodian, in accordance with the procedures set out with the regulations, should maintain a record about disclosure of information under this section. That’s good practice. That would be expected of service providers, that they would do that.

One of the reasons why we suggest it in accordance with the regulations, of course, is that you have different types of service providers. For example, you have educators. They might operate in a slightly different way than other service providers in terms of the comprehensive nature of health records or the comprehensive nature of children’s services records. I think this is a good compromise of that particular discussion.

Then, of course, section C provides for the regulation-making authority to set out those procedures.

I would encourage the House to support this amendment.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I want to congratulate the Member for Calgary-Shaw but also the minister and say that this is probably the first good experience I’ve seen where something substantive has been introduced into a bill by an opposition member. It was just a matter of having a good conversation in advance of tonight. I really appreciate that the minister was willing to work with this hon. member on bringing this amendment forward and not playing any of the games that can be played in those circumstances, where the government can bring an amendment forward and borrow the idea, so to speak. I just think that's a good example. I think a lot of the other ministers would do well to follow that example. It's just good parliamentary practice, and it's about respect. It shows a willingness to work with the other side, and we see that far too little.

Now, obviously, we still would have liked to have seen this entire bill referred to committee. We've made that argument several times. We still think it needs more time; however, obviously, we've lost the vote on referring it to a standing policy committee out of session.

The second best solution is to propose some amendments and get those on the table. He's right; there are a couple of other amendments. There's one other amendment we'll be bringing forward. But the rest that we had put forward the minister was willing to talk through and discuss, and we're here today.

I specifically am very gratified by the first one there: in section 2 by adding the following after subsection (3):

- (4) The Children's Charter and any amendment or repeal and replacement of the Children's Charter require the approval of the Legislative Assembly.

That is very important to me personally and to my constituents.

One of the things I promised myself when I became a member in 2008 for the first time was that I would always stand up for the rights of families and particularly the rights of children and parents. I find that in today's society sometimes it's just too easy to forget the important role that parents play in the development of their children and in the oversight of their children and in developing and raising a healthy, functioning child and helping them become a highly functioning and contributing adult.

I think there's far too much emphasis on a lot of, you know, programs and engineering and things like that and not enough emphasis given to the role that parents have with regard to raising their children and making sure they get the best possible chance in life because there really is no replacement. There really is no replacement. There is no program. There is nothing that can replace the power and the effectiveness of a loving mom and dad raising their children. That goes for whether it's an adoptive parent, whether it's a guardian or two guardians that treat that child like one of their own.

You look at every independent analysis that has ever been done on social ills that children fall into in their teens and even earlier than their teens sometimes, unfortunately, and into adulthood. The empirical evidence is just unquestionable that when there is a stable and loving family unit in place, it just makes all the difference in the world to children. That is not in any way to undermine the heroic efforts of our single parents, of our foster parents, grandparents that step in when sometimes things don't work out the way that people had hoped when they had their child in the first place. That's part of life. Those heroes that come in and raise those children in incredibly difficult circumstances and that, frankly, against the odds, raise wonderful children are just as amazing. What would we do without them as well?

Still, we should always remember that it really is the family unit that has just done so, so much for our society, and we need to make sure that that's why taking custody away from parents, taking away the rights of parents needs to be the last resort, needs to be the absolute last resort. But when they have derogated their responsibility and denigrated it, frankly, by not acting as they should, then that's when the state, the government, however you want to say it, needs to step in and make that child a ward and make sure that child is safe.

Generally speaking, statistics aren't very good when that happens for that child. We hope that it works out. We hope and pray that it works out for that child. It's so unfair to him or her in those cases. It makes your heart break. You know, I think of my own adopted sister, whom my parents adopted from a girls' orphanage in China. It shatters your heart to think about what happens to the majority of those little girls in those situations. It's a last resort, but it's something that needs to be done, and there is a role for government in those hopefully rare cases. They're becoming more common, unfortunately, but that's the case.

That's why I support this amendment and why I am happy to see that the children's charter, the final charter after the consultation process is done by the minister, will be brought back to the House for final verification because I think this is very important. Children's charters are not common documents around the world. Obviously, there are some children's rights enumerated in the UN declaration of human rights. There are also parental rights in the UN declaration of human rights and some other things in there. But this will be a rather new thing, and I commend the Minister of Human Services for putting this on the table because I think it is important.

There is no one more precious in our society than our children. They're our future, and they just make us all better, you know, because just the touch, having a hug from your son or daughter or nephew or niece or whoever, and seeing the innocence and wonder in their eyes when you take them out to the mountains or, frankly, into your backyard to look at spiders: whatever it is, they make us all better. They make us all better human beings. They're so innocent that they sometimes don't know when they've fallen into danger, so it's good that we are going to recognize that might is not right and that children have rights as well as adults. I think that that's very important, to recognize that they have rights and even in some cases, I would say, special rights.

I wanted to read into the record why I'm supporting this motion. Obviously, the privacy concerns are a piece as well, but I'm not going to spend much time on that other than to say that I'm going to assume that by this amendment, when information is disclosed and shared, if somebody wants to go and figure out what was shared about them, they'll be able to find that out immediately. I think that's important, and I think that's what this amendment is supposed to be doing.

I would like to read the principles that the children's charter must recognize and why I support the idea that's happening here.

The Children's Charter must recognize the following principles:

- (a) that all children are to be treated with dignity and respect regardless of their circumstances;
- (b) that a child's familial, cultural, social and religious heritage is to be recognized and respected;

That is a very key clause in there.

- (c) that the needs of children are a central focus in the design and delivery of programs and services affecting children;

Of course.

- (d) that prevention and early intervention are fundamental in addressing social challenges affecting children;

As a parent of an autistic child I can testify that that is completely accurate. Early intervention is absolutely critical when it comes to helping children who have issues that they're dealing with and challenges that they're dealing with reach their full attainment.

- (e) while reinforcing . . .

And this is very important. I'd like to strengthen this, and we'll be bringing an amendment further on about this, but it's getting there.

. . . and without in any way derogating from the primary responsibility of parents, guardians and families for their children, that individuals, families, communities and governments have a shared responsibility for the well-being, safety, security, education and health of children.

I would like to see that strengthened a little bit because I think it's more than just a primary responsibility that parents have; it's paramount. It's not absolute, but it is something just below absolute. It is paramount, not primary. Primary to me says 51 per cent. It's not accurate, frankly. Parents should always have the primary and paramount responsibility for their children.

Those are the principles, and that's why I am supporting the idea of a children's charter. These are sound principles. But sometimes you can put sound principles and the end result into a charter, and all of a sudden you can flip a few words around, and it might have a meaning that, frankly, wasn't exactly in line with what people think of when they read certain principles. That's why this amendment will bring it back. When the final charter is done after the consultation period is finished – and I would hope that the minister would include the opposition in that consultative process somehow so we could give our input as well – it could come back here, and we can approve it as a body, as the people's elected representatives, and if there are changes and so forth, we can approve those changes. Something like this shouldn't just be given to the minister of the day, whether it be this minister or any future minister, to just come and change the children's charter however they feel.

So I support it. I thank the minister for working with our side on this and showing that some things can be nonpartisan. I wholeheartedly support this amendment and would encourage all members of this House to do the same.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. Well, I'm happy to support this amendment except for the regulation part, but, you know. In fact, I have a motion in front of me that I was going to propose that is essentially the same thing. I would've gone a bit further. But let me do this in order.

First of all, the first section, section A, amending section 2 in the bill following subsection (3) so that the minister can review the bill, but if he is going to propose an amendment, or repeal, or something else in here, he would have to bring it back to the Assembly. You know, no surprise, but I've talked a lot in this House about how what's done in the House should be undone or changed in the House. It should be brought back here. I would have said that any piece of legislation where major pieces are being changed should be brought back to this House.

But the current and the previous governments got into the habit of creating bills in which the essential principle was laid out, and then all other changes henceforth were to be done by regulations as the minister saw fit. So I'm very pleased to see that this would bring the bill back before this House if there was any desire to amend, repeal, or replace the children's charter in the legislation, absolutely what I constantly advocate should happen.

Section B is amending section 4 by adding a subsection (4), which would set out that "a service provider or custodian" – a service provider is going to be somebody that's covered under FOIP or PIPA, and a custodian is going to be someone that's operating under the Health Information Act – "shall, in accordance with the procedures set out in the regulations," which proves the point I just made, "maintain records about the disclosure of information under this section."

Now, remember that personal information is always in three stages. It's always collection, use, and disclosure. The second piece that you want to remember about that is with consent or without consent. Those are the major pieces that you're always trying to consider. It always has to be dealt with in three stages:

collecting the information, using the information, disclosing the information.

I would have gone further in my amendment, which does exactly the same thing. It's amending section 4 and adding after subsection (3) a subsection (4). I would have said that a service provider must protect a child's personal information and health information by making reasonable security arrangements against such risks as unauthorized access, collection, use, disclosure, or destruction. I'm a bit pickier. I'm a bit more militant about protection of privacy. What I was proposing and what, I guess, I'm not proposing anymore – so this becomes good one-sided recycled paper – was a bit more stringent.

But if the government is willing to accept this – and I'll just remind everybody following along at home that the government doesn't usually accept this kind of stuff. Sometimes you're working under the principle that it's better than a kick in the ass with a frozen boot, and I'm going to accept this as a result. It's a new Laurie Blakeman standard that I'm introducing into the House tonight, but it's a worthy standard, and I'm going to use it in this particular instance.

The final section is amending section 6, which is the regulation section and once again giving the government carte blanche to come up with all kinds of regulations to put section 4, the previous one, in place. Uh. I really wish the government wouldn't do this, but I don't seem to be able to wean them off this addiction to empowering themselves through legislation to be able to do whatever they want through regulation. It's harder to find. It's harder to understand when it's coming out. There are a bunch of other problems about it. But using the new standard of better than a kick in the ass with a frozen boot, I am going to support even the regulation part just to make it happen.

I'm happy to support the Member for Calgary-Shaw for bringing it forward and for negotiating this successfully with the government. I would have been a bit tougher than you, but that's okay. We're going to accept this and be happy. Given that, folks, you should be happy, too, and accept this amendment. It's the best advice I can give you.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise to speak to what I suspect is the first of a number of amendments this evening. I guess, to sort of start with this, I think that we can all agree on one thing, that we all care very deeply about ensuring the best for children in Alberta. There are times when I'm a little bit cynical about that, but I do believe that most everybody in this House actually does want to achieve the best for children in Alberta.

I also, however, believe that that's almost the point at which opinions begin to diverge. We have some very profound differences in opinion on how one goes about doing that, and I'll be the first to say that my view of how you go about achieving the best for children in Alberta differs largely from both the government as well as the Official Opposition in many respects. As we talk about the particular elements of this bill over the course of the next few hours and the many amendments that we will be putting forward on it, we will have the opportunity to at least delineate and discuss in more detail and refine some of those sort of profound differences and the way in which they are reflected through each section of the act.

I just need to put out there that, really, there are some fairly deeply felt value-based differences of opinion that certainly exist, as I say, between our NDP caucus and the government caucus and the Official Opposition caucus. Certainly, some elements of that will be found because we're going to be making some amendments to subsection (2) of the children's charter to add to the principles that we would like to see being considered by the government in their copious consultation over the course of the next little while with respect to the charter.

That being said, the very minor sort of amendments that we see reflected in this first proposed amendment that have been accepted by the government certainly don't strike us as being something that we would vote against. I don't know that they go very far towards fixing those fundamental value-based differences in terms of how we go about really, truly protecting children in Alberta. I don't think they go very far in that regard, but they certainly don't hurt, and it gives us an opportunity to raise this issue and discuss this issue again in this Legislature. Quite frankly, the more opportunities we have to talk about how we go about best protecting and ensuring the best interests of children in Alberta in this Assembly, the better. That is good. Certainly, I'm happy to support Section A of this amendment.

Now, in terms of Section B I have a question, which I'm happy to direct to either the mover, the Member for Calgary-Shaw, or to the minister, who responded to say that the government would be accepting this amendment. That's the amendment that outlines that the service provider or custodian would maintain records about the disclosure of information that occurs in that section. I have a genuine question. In doing that, does that mean, then, that the person whose information was disclosed would have access to that record, and they would have a right to see the record of how their personal information or health information was disclosed? I'm getting a bit of a negative nod from the Member for Calgary-Shaw. I don't know if the minister wants to weigh in to clarify whether that is true or not. I think, of course, that's what's really important.

I mean, we'll talk in greater detail about how some of this at this point can go sideways, but, you know, I'm going to create a picture of somebody whose rights I'm going to be trying to protect over the course of the discussion tonight about balancing privacy against the need to keep children safe. Think for a moment, then, about a 14-year-old girl who is temporarily in the custody or care of the government, shall we say, who has an abortion. Because the criteria is best interests and because it's so broadly described, it's very possible that that information might be the exact kind of information that is transferred from a service provider to a service provider if they believe it's in her best interest for that information to be transferred.

I worry about that girl living in a small town and it being transferred from an educator to somebody that provides after school care although I guess a 14-year-old wouldn't be dealing with after school care, so that's probably not a concern, but somebody that perhaps provides some counselling services through a nonprofit in the small community, that kind of thing. I worry about that being transferred, and I wonder what right that 14-year-old girl will have to go to those various service providers and find out when or what information was disclosed, particularly if she's making a decision, if she's deliberating on whether or not she should continue to live in that town of 2,500 people or whether she needs to move somewhere else because of, you know, the way things are in towns of 2,500 people. I can speak as someone who grew up in a town of 2,500 people. These things happen quite regularly, that this kind of information just gets out there, right?

My question is: can that 14-year-old girl check with that service provider to see what information was disclosed? Let's say it was a counsellor at a school talking with somebody that's providing after school outreach for a child at risk, for instance, that kind of thing, some kind of programming that way. Can she check to see what's been disclosed? I'm hearing no from two opposition members. I'm happy to have the minister tell me if I'm incorrect. It says: in accordance with the regulations. Typically when you talk about a record of disclosure – I can't remember if it's implied that people have access to that record of disclosure or if needs to be stated.

Anyway, that's my question, and I shall leave my comments on this particular amendment to those questions and those introductory comments and look for an answer.

The Chair: Other speakers on the amendment? The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd be happy to weigh in on that. The answer to that really lies in what an individual's rights are to access their information under FOIP and under the Health Information Act. This does not derogate from those rights. In fact, if a person is entitled to ask for that information, which they are under FOIP, for example, if it's not readily disclosed to them, there's a process by which they can request it, and they would be entitled to such information. They'd be entitled to under that.

Now, my experience is that you can apply to get your information. I know of certain circumstances with respect to Human Services, for example, where people have asked for and received their information. Sometimes it's a question of a disclosure of the information directly without the FOIP process. In some cases there have been issues, and it's only come to my attention after they've complained to me in writing because I don't see the FOIP processes. So there is both a direct request approach and a FOIP approach which can be used to access information. Those apply in this circumstance as well.

With respect to the disclosure provision the approach here is to ensure that appropriate records are maintained, but it should be very clear that this act does not give professionals acting in the best interests of the child the opportunity to disclose any information they want to disclose. There has to be purpose, and they can be held accountable to the purpose. The issue is really one that, yes, there may be a question of some level of trust, if you will, about what's appropriate to disclose, but there are provisions later on in the act which say that you can't disclose information, for example to a parent, if the child says no.

In those circumstances it's quite appropriate. There would be circumstances where if the child that you're talking about, for example, had some severe emotional issues surrounding the pregnancy and the abortion, it might be quite appropriate for discreet disclosure of information among the necessary professionals, not a wide dissemination of the information among all of them but a discreet dissemination among the professionals that were involved in that particular interest on behalf of the child. Other than that, if that wasn't the case, then there would be no reason for anybody to have that child's personal information, and there would be no reason to disclose.

Ms Notley: I do appreciate the minister engaging in this conversation.

There are a couple of issues there that I would raise when I deal with other amendments. He talks about severe emotional issues, and I think that there are ways of getting at that with more refined language than the best-interests-of-the-child language that he's currently using, but we'll talk about that later.

The thing I want to clarify, though. The minister talked about how a child has the ability to get access to their information, but that's not really what we're talking about. What we want the child to be able to do is to get access to who else has their information. It's not a question of them getting access to their file. We understand that they all still have the ability to do that. What they want is to have access to who knows, who else has access to their file. That's the question.

Now, are you telling me that that is naturally part of their personal information? Currently the service provider wouldn't necessarily be covered by FOIP because they are contract. They'd be under PIPA. Under PIPA, I think, there's a difference around access to the actual information versus access to the record of the disclosure of the information. That's actually information about the actions of the service provider versus information about the actual person. Do you see what I mean? I just would like to get that clarified.

Mr. Hancock: It's certainly my understanding – and I've had some experience in this with respect to people requesting access to their information, including who their information was shared with – that that is an actual extension of the question of accessing information about themselves. In fact, that's the reason why this amendment is important. If it's available, it ought to be part of the sharing, and it ought to be shareable.

Now, the question as to which service provider and which act. If it's a service provider who's doing business under contract with the government, then they come under the regulations for the government, so they are bound by that process, and we ensure that that happens.

I'm quite confident that, in fact, people would have access to not only the record of their personal information but if they request it, who that information has been shared with if, in fact, this type of regulation is in place or without this type of regulation if, in fact, they've practised good practice and they actually did record as we're asking them to do.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much for recognizing me, Mr. Chair. This is why we should have had the Privacy Commissioner be able to appear before us. It is this kind of discussion, in which nobody is quite sure. I would argue with the minister that his interpretation of this is not accurate. One, the information has been collected without somebody's consent. When you're a child, you've got no rights. In particular, in this act the information is being collected about them without their consent, so they don't know who has it to start with, never mind who talks to somebody else about it. Secondly, the principles of transparency and accountability that would usually accompany personal information and privacy are also not in this act, so we're hard-pressed to find out what got shared with what other service providers.

Now, I'm supporting this act because it does at least require that records are maintained about who else got told. But I think that there is a question about whether who else got told is going to be part of the information that someone could access. Let's remember that a child cannot access this. Until you're over 18, you can't get this stuff. If the 17-and-a-half-year-old, this imaginary girl that we've dreamed up that had an abortion at 14, wants to consider staying in that town or that school or a number of other possibilities, she cannot find out who else knows because she's a child.

Until she's over 18, she can't try to access that information. Then when she's over 18, she's going to be struggling here into where the paramountcy is and between which service providers.

That's the other thing that's getting interesting here. Is this a service provider that is included under FOIP, which means that they're a public service provider and they're contracted by the government, or are they a not-for-profit or a private business, which is subcontracted or contracted directly by the government? They're covered under two different acts, and the service providers are covered under different acts. So whether they're able to access that information as an adult – you are supposed to be able under all of the acts to look at your record and ask for corrections to the record and have a review done if you wish.

Now, no surprise to anyone, I have an amendment coming that's going to do that. In the meantime, given that the minister will actually accept a strengthening, I'm going to urge the members to approve what's before us in amendment A1, put forward by the Member for Calgary-Shaw, because it is better than a kick in the ass with a frozen boot.

Yeah. That is the problem that we are struggling with here. How do we actually figure this out? You know what? In the end run it's going to end up coming before that very same office of the Privacy Commissioner. If there is a complaint at some point in time or a court battle about this, it's going to end up coming before that Privacy Commissioner to be decided.

That's just a bit of a shout-out to the member for trying to get the Privacy Commissioner in front of us in which we could have asked those questions but also just a little small admonition to not let us miss the opportunity to strengthen it a little bit and for me to argue with the Government House Leader and the supporter of the bill, of course, about privacy information.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there others on the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: Now back to the bill. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, I believe you have circulated an amendment.

Ms Blakeman: No. I have one at the table, and I will get to it.

The Chair: You will get to it. Okay. Carry on, then.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Congratulations, Calgary-Shaw.

I didn't get an opportunity to speak to this bill at second, but I have a lot to say in committee. I know that there is good intent from the government, but this is where ideology comes into conflict with good intent, I think. I understand that what the government is trying to achieve is a more fluid transition from a child in protection or a child that is classified as a person with developmental disabilities and is accessing services under that, transitioning from 17 years, 364 days to one more day. Now they're 18, and they're going to graduate out of that child place and move into adulthood and into a different set of requirements and privileges and rights and responsibilities. And we have been trying to get that better.

I, in fact, brought a woman into the gallery and asked a question on her behalf to the then minister of children's services, saying: good heavens; I mean, what on earth change or difference was there in her son, who is developmentally delayed, between him being 17 years, 364 days and the next day, when he turned 18? She literally had to take him through new doctors' appointments, pass a number of new tests and criteria, in order to prove that, in fact, he had not miraculously recovered overnight and could now be classified as not a person with a developmental disability. I brought that person forward and into the House. You know, I'm partly responsible for this because I pushed hard that we should be able to deal with this. That involves some kind of co-operation between, I would have said, government departments.

Where I am having more trouble is with this very loose definition of "service provider," which is just about anybody, to be perfectly honest. The service provider is detailed in the definitions section, which, for those of you following along at home, is always the beginning section in a bill. You get the preamble, and then you get the definitions so that we all know what we're talking about. In the definitions section, which is section 1, of course:

- (g) "service provider" means
  - (i) a department,
  - (ii) an educational body as defined in the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act;
  - (iii) a police service as defined in the Police Act;
  - (iv) an organization as defined in section 1(1)(i) of the Personal Information Protection Act that provides programs or services for children.

That's it. That's a service provider. That's very wide. If we have these organizations that you find in subsection 1(g)(iv), if they're contracting additional resources, let me put it that way, it can get even further out. Part of what this act is doing is moving the decision-making, the responsibility, and the authority out to those front-line workers.

I understand where the impetus comes from, but I think we need to be more cautious than the government has been because we have less ability to define things for those front-line service providers. You know, how is a police officer going to look at this as compared to a social worker as compared to a benefits worker as compared to a daycare person? You start to see how different people in the front line are going to interpret certain things differently, and this can be the same child. So I'm very hesitant about the change that is going from the director making the decisions, things like on page 7, amending the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. Then it goes through that incredibly valuable metric called a whack of other bills, changing essentially the same thing. Every time it strikes out a "director" as being the decision-maker and substitutes "child intervention worker."

And then the next one: "child intervention worker" means a person designated under section 129.1 as a child intervention worker." And it keeps going that way, you know, on kinship care provider, again striking out "a director." Sometimes it moves to the Crown; sometimes it moves to the front-line worker. Again, in section 12 on page 11 it's doing the same thing, striking out "the director" and substituting "a child intervention worker." That's when I start to get a little worried.

But sometimes, Mr. Chair, magic happens, and we had a little bit of magic happen. So if I could get the amendment that I'm going to propose distributed, that would be a helpful thing.

The Chair: This will be A2, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: This would be amendment A2.

The Chair: Proceed, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. This amendment has two sections. The first is under section 1(g), which coincidentally I just talked about. It's the definition of a service provider. What is being proposed here – and I've had co-operation and collaboration from the government, all those good C-words. Section 1(g) currently reads:

- (iv) an organization as defined in section 1(1)(i) of the Personal Information Protection Act that provides programs or services for children, which you know that I objected to on the grounds that that really means that it's a step farther out from government. It's not necessarily a public agency. It could be a private agency.

This is going to replace that, so the definition would now say that a service provider means: all of the other clauses. Then you get to

- (iv) an individual or organization that provides programs or services for children under an agreement with a public body . . .

Very important.

. . . as defined in the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

Then under the criteria of better than a kick in the ass with a frozen boot is the next amendment, which would be

- (v) any other individual or organization provided for in the regulations.

I'm going to be happy about that, Mr. Chair, and we're going to recommend that everybody else be happy about it because it is allowing that we're talking primarily about people inside the public sphere; in other words, not privatized.

The second section is amending section 6, which is the regulations section, and adding on to it:

- (a.1) respecting individuals or organizations for the purpose of section . . .

Stay with me.

. . . 1(g)(v),

which is the one we just put in there.

I am urging people to support this. It does give us a service provider definition that is oriented towards a public contract, which is one of the things I'm worrying about. It does allow for that flow of information that the government is looking for, but I continue to be quite concerned – I will talk about this in some other amendments but won't take up a lot of your time on this one – that we have in place that penultimate responsibility and liability of the government to protect that information about that child and to collect the least amount of it and use the least amount of it in providing services to the child.

I agree the services need a better flow of information. I really would prefer that the flow of information stay in the public sector, meaning government, which also covers municipal governments, for example. So I'm much happier about this. I think it goes a long way towards achieving the balance that we're talking about here between privacy of personal information and provision of services to kids with some of the silos that have been built up.

Let me just leave it at that and say that this is a good amendment. There's been collaboration and consultation between the government and myself, and I am bringing forward this amendment under my name because I think it's worth doing. So I urge everyone to support this amendment. I think it makes the bill stronger.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I again would encourage members to support this amendment. There was some concern raised. In fact, the Privacy Commissioner in her comments raised concerns with respect to information sharing with nonprofit organizations. While it's clear that under the social policy framework and under discussion about social policy it's absolutely necessary that we have not-for-profit and NGOs assisting with social issues and that there are circumstances in which some of them provide services with respect to children, it's necessary in those circumstances that they be inside the tent and part of that discussion.

I think – and our legal people agree – that this could tighten up the definition a little bit and perhaps deal with some of those issues of concerns that, quite frankly, we believed were quite low risk, but I think it's appropriate to provide that assurance.

I appreciate the hon. member stepping a little bit outside her normal comfort level and adopting a definition which does provide for some flexibility in terms of the any other individuals or organizations piece and then the regulations that need to support that. I think that I would want to acknowledge that the hon. member has come some way to accept the need or the requirement for that piece in it. Hopefully, we've worked together to achieve a more substantive definition that can achieve some of those goals.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A2.

[Motion on amendment A2 carried]

The Chair: Now back to the bill. The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. I would like to distribute an amendment. I would like to propose the amendment – well, I'll let you name the amendment there.

The Chair: Sure. We'll call that A3, hon. member. I would suggest you start to speak to it while they distribute. You're moving this on behalf of the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills?

Mr. Anderson: Oh, yeah. Sorry. I move this on behalf of the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

The Chair: Okay. Carry on.

Mr. Anderson: The amendment states – I'm just going to flip to it real quick. Section 2(2)(e) references the children's charter and the following principles that the children's charter must recognize. It goes through those principles, and in (e) it says:

While reinforcing and without in any way derogating from the primary responsibility of parents, guardians and families for their children, that individuals, families, communities and governments have a shared responsibility for the well-being, safety, security, education and health of children,

Replacing "primary responsibility" in that sentence with "paramount responsibility" would mean that while reinforcing without any way derogating from the paramount responsibility of parents, guardians, and families for their children, individuals, families, communities, and governments have a shared responsibility for the well-being, safety, security, education, and health of children.

I'm proposing this for several reasons. The first is that – and I know that this is somewhat about semantics, and I understand that – I think that it is important that there be a recognition of the roles and responsibility of parents, guardians, and families for their children.

I think that "primary" is too trite a word to use in this case. Primary to me, I think, is like a 50 plus one. It's saying that, yeah, parents have the primary responsibility, you know, for their children and families and so forth, for their well-being, safety, security, education, and health. It's the primary responsibility, but it's not really indicative of, I think, what is the actual fact, which is that parents, families, guardians, and so forth actually have, in my view, much higher than a 51 per cent or a 60 per cent responsibility for their children. They really are the paramount caretakers of their children and have the paramount responsibility. They don't have the absolute responsibility.

There are some things that the state clearly needs to provide, and we talked about some of those issues earlier. For example, where there's abuse, the parent can't say: well, too bad; it's my kid. Obviously, that would be deplorable, and in those circumstances that's when children's services would come in and take the child and put them in protective care and so forth. There are other examples of situations where the state would have a role in the well-being, safety, security, education, and health of children. Providing access to immunizations, providing rules regarding children's safety, having to be in a car seat until a certain age or weight and so forth: all these different things are out there.

The state certainly does have a role, but it is not a primary role, and I wouldn't even call it a secondary role. It's a role that comes about in most cases, in the case of taking the child, in a very limited, kind of last resort, if things break down type of situation. I think that by using the word "paramount" instead – again, it's not saying absolute; it's just saying that we really hope that parents will take full responsibility or as much responsibility as possible for the well-being, safety, security, education, and health of their children.

I think it's important to let parents know and to signal to parents and guardians and families that that is the expectation. The expectation is that they will be there for their children, that they will be there to protect them. To do that is their paramount role as parents. It's more than just a primary responsibility. It just doesn't seem like enough.

I think that a lot of folks – I remember that during the Education Act there were some things in there that rubbed parents the wrong way, and a lot of parents felt the need to really make it clear that theirs was a paramount responsibility for what their children learned, their health, their safety, their security, and so forth. In that case it was education, of course, what their children were taught and that parents should have the paramount responsibility or ability to decide that. In this case it's the responsibility for the well-being, safety, security, education, and health of their children.

I think it's a reasonable compromise. I don't think it ties the government's hands in any way, shape, or form. I think that if I said "absolute responsibility" or if it said "the only responsibility" or, you know, had something to that effect, there would be reason to not put that in there, because parents absolutely should not have an absolute right to their children. There are clearly exceptions, and we've talked about those. But I think it needs to be more than primary.

I think it needs to be clearly enumerated here so that when the children's charter comes out, we don't get into this situation where parents are feeling uncomfortable because there is some wiggle room for the state to say: "You know what? We think we know what vaccines the children must take for their health, and we're going to supersede what a parent might feel about a certain vaccine, et cetera, that they might not be comfortable with, whether it be for health or religious grounds. Because the health of the child is at risk here, we're going to use this clause and say that although it's primary, it's a shared responsibility, and the state has essentially just as much say in the matter, we're going to pass this law." I think that that would be unacceptable, and I think that it's important. There are many examples, and we can go through a hundred such examples, but I won't bore everybody.

I think using that language would set not just the right message to parents on their rights regarding their children but also that they have that responsibility and that that's not a responsibility to be taken lightly, that we as a province expect our parents to do their job, which is to raise their children and make sure that they're healthy, well educated, and safe and secure. I hope that members will support this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I hope that my next words won't take away all the goodwill that was addressed by the hon. member earlier in the evening, but I have to encourage the House not to adopt this amendment. It's not that one doesn't agree with a lot of the sentiment that was expressed about the role of parents and the obligation of parents to their children and the role of parents in making appropriate determinations for their children and, in fact, that the state or the community should not, ought not interfere with the proper raising of children by families. It's not the government's job to become the parent to all children, nor is it society's job to become the parent to all children, but there is a role, and I think the hon. member expressed it.

When children are being abused, when children are being neglected, when there are problems, then there is a role for society and there is a role for the community, and that role is usually expressed through their governments and in this case through the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, for example, which provides a role to intercede, first of all, to support the family so the family can be stronger and fulfill their obligation to their children and then, secondly, if that is not successful and the child is at risk, to apprehend or to intercede on a temporary and then, if necessary, on a permanent basis. I think that's a well-recognized role for government and for society.

Now, the problem with what the hon. member says is with respect to the word "paramount," which has legal connotations. The question then becomes: if the parent has the paramount right, is there any opportunity for government or community to intercede? I would argue that the term "paramount at law" provides an overarching right which cannot be interfered with. It's the paramount right.

That is actually not the case. It's not the case that parents in our society have the paramount right against all other rights. In fact, the child's right to safety and health does come ahead of the parent's right to parent their child. You know, the right of the child to safety, to be free from sexual interference from a parent or others, a right to be cared for: those rights do come ahead, and those rights can sometimes be exercised by someone on behalf of the child other than the parent in appropriate circumstances.

No one, I don't think, would disagree with the concept that in our society we believe very strongly in the family. We believe very strongly in the role of parents. We believe very strongly that parents should and do have the responsibility to raise their children, and that should be interfered with only in the most serious of cases. But to say that it's a paramount right at law puts in — with the people I have consulted with respect to the drafting of this act, we tried to choose words that would clearly give that concept of the primary responsibility of the parent without disassembling the rest of the laws which allow for intercession on behalf of a child when that intercession is necessary.

Sometimes there's a judgment call involved in that, and that's why we have time frames and processes and courts and other things, because sometimes there's disagreement as to whether it's an appropriate intercession or not. But there has to be that opportunity, and saying "paramount" would suggest at law, in my view, that there is not that duty on behalf of others to ensure that the child's rights are appropriately upheld.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. There is a problem with this, and this is why clarity in drafting legislation is so important. For an average person who looked this up, you actually do get definitions that are very close, so you need to know that it's the legal definition that tends to get referred to in legislation. If you look at "primary" in the dictionary — and I'm using the Oxford dictionary, the world's most trusted dictionary — it says that primary is "of chief importance," "principal," "earliest in time or order," "not . . . caused by, or based on anything else." Then it goes into a number of other, lesser definitions. When you look at "paramount," it says: "more important than anything else," "supreme," "having supreme power."

So which is it, primary or paramount? Well, we know that the law looks at paramount, and we talk about paramountcy clauses in bills, which means that this particular clause or this bill takes precedence, is more important, and covers any other bill. That's the first thing, the clarity of the language. We know that parliamentary process refers to the court language that's been defined, and in this case paramount is more important, takes a higher ranking.

You know, this act is not about great community parenting. For the most part this act is about situations where the government has to step in as the parent. It does say that the government has the ability and the right and the paramount right to step in where a parent or a guardian has failed. So I would argue that parents don't have paramountcy, and the fact that the government can step in over top of what the parent wants where there are cases of abuse is proof of that.

Now, this actually occurs under the section that's talking about the children's charter, which is a sort of more open, huggy, kissy, kind of everything-is-going-to-be-wonderful clause in this bill, and it is recognizing the following principles, so I think the Member for Airdrie was right to bring the amendment forward under this particular clause. It is saying that, you know, kids are supposed to be treated with dignity and respect, that their family and culture and social and religious heritage are supposed to be respected. The needs of the kids are to be the focus. Prevention and early intervention are fundamental. Thank you for that and for recognizing that.

Then it goes into this clause that the amendment is about.

- (e) while reinforcing and without in any way derogating from the primary responsibility of parents, guardians and families for their children, that individuals, families, communities and governments have a shared responsibility for the well-being, safety, security, education and health of children.

Then we go into the reviewing. The minister can review the charter, and with the amendment that's already passed about to amend or repeal, it has to come back before the Assembly.

I think we can be pretty much agreed that this is anticipating where that section has failed, so it has to allow the government to step in and have paramountcy in order to do the work it needs to do, where we have parents or guardians that have failed children.

I'm going to leave it at that because I'm just going to dig myself into a really deep hole if I go any further.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak to this.

The Chair: Are there other speakers on amendment A3? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased as well to rise to speak to this amendment. The Member for Airdrie raises some interesting issues that, of course, have been debated in this House before in different contexts, have been debated in this House previously with respect to the Education Act, have been debated in this House in other settings as well.

I think a lot of the points have already been made, so I won't go on for great length, but I think it is absolutely true that this act does deal for all intents and purposes primarily with those cases where the family is at risk and is in some form of crisis. That's typically where this act would actually begin to apply. It's to be read, of course, in conjunction with the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, which lays out the responsibilities and the duties of the government.

That Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act actually was renamed – I don't know – seven or eight or nine years ago, something like that, to specifically add to the notion that we need to enhance families. We do understand and agree to some extent with what the Member for Airdrie is saying, that the family is the best place for a child to reside and to be raised and to receive all the resources and supports they require throughout life. The idea of that act, of course, is that the government needs to actually support the families that are in crisis in order to give them the tools necessary to provide the basic care needs of their children. That being said, it's not always the case that that happens, and most often that doesn't happen as a result of poverty and illness. That's going to be sort of the short version of things. That's why it doesn't happen.

Sometimes there are other reasons it doesn't happen, though. I think some members of this Assembly were at the different Daughters Day commemorations that have risen over the course of the last year, year and a half. You know, in that case there's a particular group of parents that are quite open about the fact that there are some families out there that do not treat their daughters in the way that we would expect under our laws and, in fact, quite specifically prohibit them from getting an education, prohibit them from basic rights that we would expect would flow as a matter of course to anybody living in this province. In a case like that, for instance, I'm not convinced that I believe that the beliefs that generate those kinds of decisions, which are so hurtful to the daughters, ought to be given paramountcy.

Of course, I used sort of the most benign example, where basically girls are told that they can't go to school, but in fact they also become subjected to violence from family members where they're perceived to be engaged in simple socializing with people outside of a certain set of parameters. That's an example where it's not actually a health issue or a poverty issue; it is actually another issue which is in play. Clearly, those young girls deserve our support, and they deserve our attention. So there are examples out there where parents do not necessarily make decisions which are in the best interests of the child, and it's not just about, you know, different kinds of medical treatments, vaccines/no vaccines, gluten free/gluten, vegetarian/meat, sugar/no sugar. Yada, yada, yada.

I mean, I was saying to somebody that this is one of the problems with the whole definition of the best interests of the child. You can go to any mothers' group and sit down for half an hour, and you will be exposed to much chatter about three or four different very strongly held views about what is or is not in the best interests of those particular children: the types of toys they play with, whether the little boys are allowed to dress up as girls if they want to, whether they should go to school or not go to school, whether they should go to a private school or a nonprivate school, whether the parents should engage, get active in their socializing or whether they should just let it happen on its own.

Theories just abound out there, and parents love to talk about them because they care about their kids. So they research, and they develop opinions, and they talk to each other. Best interests means a whole bunch of different things. In that kind of setting, of course, the decisions of the parent should always be the first decisions that are in play, and they should be the primary decisions, but if those decisions move to a point where the child is being put at risk in some fashion, then I think there we need to allow for the fact that other players need to come in.

You know, there's that long-standing phrase out there which, of course, I've relied on to a great, great extent over the last four years: it takes a community to raise a child. Of course, once I got elected, I went around, and I would say to everybody: "Hello, people. It takes a community to raise my child, and I expect you people to roll up your sleeves and chip in because I'm busy." A number of times I had other parents from my children's classes phoning me and saying, "By the way, your kids didn't have lunch today," or "You forgot to pack lunch," or "You might want to know that there's this talent show tomorrow, and they probably lost the notification on the way home," that kind of stuff. [interjection] Absolutely.

I rely a lot on the wonderful community in which I reside to ensure that my children are generally kept on the straight and narrow and manage to make it to school and stay healthy and all that good stuff, so I do believe that there is a role for community to make sure that children are safe and cared for. Of course, just to be clear, I'm being somewhat facetious. I think my children are still safe even if the community wasn't there.

Nonetheless, that being said, the value is there that we are all a community, and we should, I hope, all look after and care for our children and each other's children if we ever believe that they are truly at risk. I think that's reflected in the language as it currently exists, so in this particular piece I'm quite satisfied with that and would not suggest that we make any changes.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A3.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: Back to the bill. The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much. I am pleased to rise and to talk a little bit about other elements of this bill and some changes that I will be talking about in a moment through some proposed amendments.

Now, when this bill was first introduced, we were told that it essentially deals with three things, I believe. The idea was that it would enhance communication between service providers. That was sort of one of the big themes. Another big theme was that we were going to deal with the issue of a family violence review committee, and we were going to deal with those issues. The third thing was that we were going to do a little bit of restructuring inside the ministry in order to make sure that those poor foster parents who could never sign permission slips would have the ability to do that.

What I'd like to talk about is whether or not the changes that are proposed in this piece of legislation are in fact the best changes that are necessary to achieve this end of allowing foster parents to sign permission slips. In fact, what it really is doing is it's fundamentally restructuring the way this ministry does its business. Mr. Chair, I am quite concerned that what this is actually doing is laying the groundwork for a fundamental shift in the way this government approaches the task of child protection.

As I said earlier when I rose to speak to one of the first amendments, I think we all agree that we want to protect children, and we want to do a good job for children. But I also think that there are some profound and fundamental value-based differences in how we think that should be done. One of the examples of that relates to this issue of this restructuring that the government is proposing.

I'm going to start simply by having my amendment distributed, and then I will speak to the amendment, and we can discuss that.

The Chair: This will be amendment A4, hon. members.

Hon. member, you may speak to your amendment.

1:00

Ms Notley: Thank you. What this amendment would do is make a number of changes. It essentially strikes out section 7, parts of section 9, parts of section 10, section 11, parts of section 12, section 17, parts of section 20, parts of section 21, and section 24. In essence, what this amendment is geared to do is to simply undo the change that the government is proposing to its delegated authority, who holds authority ultimately for major decisions that are made under the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act.

What the government is proposing to do is to remove what I think the courts have referred to as residual authority from the director of child protection. As things exist now, the director of child protection can delegate authority to child intervention workers, but as a result of some previous judicial consideration, there have been clear indications that the courts believe that authority cannot be fully delegated and that what happens is that the director retains a form of residual authority and, as a result, responsibility.

We saw the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench in October of 2009, the Ouellet decision, which held the director in contempt of court for not complying expediently with a court order. Now, it's of value to review a little bit about what happened here because, just to be clear, it's not that the state of affairs that was described in the Ouellet decision is a state of affairs that we think should necessarily exist. That state of affairs was itself rather damning of the government and of the organization within children's services. The difficulty is that, in our view, the solution that exists in the Children First Act is not the right solution.

To begin, let me just review a little bit about what the judge said about the status quo as it exists now in the ministry. It was first of all concluded that there was a fundamental confusion between how lawyers in Alberta Justice were interpreting the existing legislation, the director's statutory authority, and the practice of delegating authority to front-line workers. That was contrasted with the Court of Appeal's interpretation of the legislation.

It also revealed an administrative structure within the department that was not suited, really, to the existing statutory authority in the legislation. Mr. Justice Côté ruled that the director's ability to delegate authority to staff below him did not remove his original powers and authority. He went on to comment on what he characterized as the "extremely convoluted and puzzling [administrative] structure" of the child protection system in Alberta and that "the complex administrative structure suggested by the evidence tendered here must exacerbate opacity and the opportunities for deniability."

Then it's interesting. The lawyer for the then director of child protection said that, well, if Mr. Justice's interpretation was to stand, it would "necessitate restructuring the whole child protection [system]."

Anyway, the real solution to the problem identified in the Ouellet case was not to completely reorganize the legislated authority within the system but, rather, I would argue, to establish proper internal information-sharing and reporting systems, which is what I would suggest we should do rather than delegating all this authority to child intervention workers, of course, whose qualifications and, indeed, employment relationship with the government are completely up to the minister to define at some point in the future.

Now, this provision represents a fundamental change to the way this work is done in the child protection system. It's interesting because last week the minister suggested that he had consulted at great length with everybody that might possibly be interested in this legislation. Since that time, we have heard from, first of all, the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, who represents the child intervention workers who would actually be the recipients of this delegated authority. They, of course, have raised very serious concerns about this. They have also said that they were never consulted, so that's the first thing.

In addition, the other group of people that would be substantially affected by this is the College of Social Workers, the licensing body, the professional body. They, too, were shocked. They knew nothing about this bill; they had no idea that it was coming. So not only were they not consulted in the meaningful world of consulted; they weren't even given a heads-up in the government's world of consulted. There was just nothing. It wasn't until we phoned them, you know, or people started phoning them and saying: well, what do you think about this? They had no idea what people were even talking about, so this is really significant.

Now, the concern that has been raised, Mr. Chair, by both the AUPE and the College of Social Workers is that what's going on right now in this ministry is not a status which is going to facilitate effective delegation to these child intervention workers without creating a whole bunch of problems. Basically, what we're hearing is that within the ministry itself there is a turnover amongst child intervention workers, that over 50 per cent of them have been hired in the last two years alone. So the turnover is quite remarkable within the ministry.

The second thing we're hearing is that the majority of them are not actually social workers and/or members of the professional body.

The third thing that we're hearing is that almost all of them are feeling like they are under a tremendous amount of stress and that their workload, their caseload, is completely out of control and that they have been unsuccessful at getting this government to deal with their caseloads. They also state that a high percentage of staff is off on medical leave due to stress.

This is the group of people to whom the government wants to delegate all authority for child protection decisions. Let's just talk a little bit, Mr. Chair, about what these decisions mean. These are not little decisions, like the minister would like to have you believe, about who can go on a field trip. No. These are decisions about whether someone is or is not a biological parent. These are decisions about whether a child can or cannot continue to reside in their family unit. These are decisions that go to the very heart – I mean, I haven't had the chance to do the research on this, but this goes to section 7 rights, I would say it suggests, like life and liberty.

You do not break up families on a whim. You do not remove children from their parents on a whim. These are really important, tough decisions. Quite frankly, they should be made by professionals, and they should be made within a context where the people who have the actual authority to marshal the resources to ensure that these decisions are made wisely and cautiously and carefully share responsibility for these decisions. You cannot, Mr. Chair, delegate decisions of this magnitude to people who have been working for the ministry for less than two years, who may or may not have a six-month diploma in child intervention, and ask those people to make decisions about whether a child can or cannot live with their family. These are hugely impactful decisions, and they cannot be taken lightly.

This proposed change under Bill 25 sets up a situation where these decisions will be forced to be taken lightly. The very people who do have the authority to marshal the resources, to make sure that these decisions can be made in the context of the best practice, the best research, the best resources are being let off the hook in terms of the authority and the responsibility. That, Mr. Chair, is a fundamental problem.

Now, the second issue that is at the heart of this is that this legislation as it currently is written allows the minister the authority to designate as child intervention workers people who are not even directly employed by the ministry. Then we've got these huge life and liberty decisions, whether a parent can keep their child or whether their child will be taken away from them, being made by people who are not even directly employed by the government but are contracted agencies. Mr. Chair, that, to me, is a breach of a very fundamental trust.

Going back, in fact, to the points that were just made by the Member for Airdrie, we do all understand that the integrity of the family unit is truly important, and you don't mess with that without really having a strong sense of what you're doing and why. Frankly, I don't think you should ever be allowed to mess with that without a whole bunch of credentials standing behind you. Even then, it's something that needs to be reviewed and reviewed and reviewed. This legislation allows anybody to make that decision. Now, the minister will say, "Oh, it doesn't mean anybody. You can trust me. I'll make sure it's not just anybody." But, then again, this is a minister whose child intervention workers, half of them, have been hired in the last two years because the turnover within his ministry is so great.

So I don't think that the record of this government is one into which we can put our faith to let this government decide how much education the person has that makes those decisions, how long they've been with the ministry, to know whether or not they should make those decisions, whether or not they're even employed by the ministry or whether they're employed by a service provider or whether that service provider is even a volunteer group. It is not clear. All of those options are available to the minister under this legislation.

It's not that I am sitting here solely because I want to be here at whatever hour we are at now, at 10 after 1 in the morning. You know, as much as the Minister of Energy loves to talk about some members of the opposition occupying the grassy knoll, the fact of the matter is that the map to the grassy knoll is very clearly laid out in the social policy framework that was introduced by the minister. The social policy framework says very clearly: government wants to get out of service provision, government wants to get out of funding, government wants to be a convenor, and it wants to be a facilitator, whatever that means.

I am very concerned that they are simply going to delegate this authority, this fundamental authority that goes to the very liberties and rights of the family unit. I do think the integrity of the family unit may well have been considered by the courts under section 7. I'm not entirely sure. But it really, to me, potentially bumps up against constitutional rights. In any event, that authority is one which should be exercised with the greatest of care and the greatest of caution, and this legislation gives the minister the authority to throw caution and care to the wind. Maybe this minister won't throw caution and care to the wind, but there's no reason to believe that the next one won't throw caution and care to the wind.

The other thing I just do want to point out is that the minister argued that this whole set of amendments and changes was because we have these poor foster parents out there who can't send their kids on field trips. I am assured by a multiplicity of social workers that, in fact, they can. They maybe can't send their foster kid out of the province, and they may not be able to arbitrarily authorize the ability for the foster kid to go on a ski trip if the cost is 500 bucks or something, but that's a different issue. Those are resource issues. Frankly, it's not like the foster parent gets to write themselves a cheque. "Oh, you know what? My foster kid has extra expenses this month, so I'm going to write myself a cheque for an extra thousand dollars."

Just to be very clear, the money part of it is not going anywhere. That decision rests very clearly still with the Crown. It's just the responsibility for the outcome of not having the amount of the money that the person to whom the authority is delegated has to deal with. They don't get to deal with whether they've got the resources. The minister says the resources are irrelevant to child protection and child care. I disagree profoundly, very deeply. That is the wrong view of the issue. We'll get into that later in some of our other amendments.

That being said, foster parents can sign permission forms, so this set of changes is not just about foster parents not being able to sign permission forms. Even in the case of the foster parents who have to get approval to spend more money for an expensive field trip or the foster parents who have to get approval to send their foster kids out of the province, that could be changed without fundamentally restructuring the way we deliver child protection in this province.

You know, you might even have been able to talk me into thinking this was a good idea if we'd had this in committee and I had a bunch of people come to me who had been consulted, who are front-line workers, who do care about this issue, to give me the examples of why this is necessary. But we don't have that. We know the front-line workers haven't been consulted. We know the social workers haven't been consulted. We haven't had an opportunity to get a really thorough understanding of why this incredibly major restructuring is going ahead.

For that reason, what this amendment does is that it just says: "No. Don't do that. We're not doing that yet. We don't know enough about it. This is far too impactful." Frankly, if the minister wants to engage in major restructuring, then he should actually consult with the people who are affected by it, which is his staff, and he should do that in a transparent fashion so the rest of Albertans can see what those front-line workers have to say about it.

I urge everybody to vote in favour of this amendment so that we can ensure that we move with the caution and the care that is necessary to deal with these very, very traumatic situations, where a child must be separated from their family, in as responsible a way as possible. Unfortunately, I'm afraid that under the act as it is being proposed, we cannot be assured that that's what we're going to get.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It will come as no surprise to anyone that I would encourage the House to reject this amendment. It goes to the very root of what we're talking about here. It's the height of absurdity to suggest that people haven't been consulted when the union which represents the front-line workers very clearly in their news release says, "Frontline workers in Children's Services have been asking for many of these changes." That's what the AUPE news release says. Now, it goes on to talk about some of their concerns with respect to operationalizing those changes in terms of workloads and other things, but they very clearly acknowledge in their news release that front-line workers have been asking for these changes. So to suggest that they haven't talked, haven't been listened to over the last 18 months is absolutely absurd.

To suggest that the government would willy-nilly delegate authority to people who are unqualified to exercise that authority while very clearly retaining responsibility in terms of accountability, in terms of any legal liability is absolutely absurd. Why would you delegate to somebody an authority and retain the responsibility and then give that authority to people who weren't qualified to exercise it? That doesn't make any sense at all.

The fears that the hon. member raises are absolutely unfounded. In the act it very clearly indicates that it will be child intervention workers. Child intervention workers will be defined, and the parameters of who can exercise that authority as a child intervention worker will be very clearly defined by regulation. Nobody in their right mind would delegate authority to people who weren't qualified to exercise that authority and then say: "Make all the decisions you want. I'll accept all the responsibility." That would be absurd.

What we're trying to do is to create a system where people who are appropriately trained, who have the appropriate skill sets can make the appropriate decisions in the best interests of children on a timely basis and on a nimble basis and, of course, working together as teams, as they do now.

Now, the Member for Calgary-Mountain View said earlier in a discussion I had with him: well, many of these authorities are delegated now; there are the forms. He showed me the forms. That's absolutely right. I mean, a lot of this stuff is already delegated from the director to front-line workers to make certain decisions. But as I think the hon. member herself pointed out, the system is quite complex, the ability of people to understand the system is less than easy, and there are many reasons why we should actually make this a much more straightforward process. That's exactly what this act tries to do. I would suggest that all of the issues raised by the hon. member, while I believe they are raised in good faith – the fact of the matter is that we have far too many children in care. We have far too many children who can't get out of care and find permanent placements. We have a far too high representation of aboriginal children in the child welfare system.

There are a number of things which we need to deal with, and we can deal with that if we systematically go through and look at the causation piece, how we can strengthen families better, how we can make decisions to intervene with families rather than having to write a whole set of rules and checklists and those sorts of pieces when in lots of cases it's a common-sense piece where someone appropriately skilled can make that decision and do it. But let there be no mistake. The Crown is still responsible, and we aren't going to give away the authority to make those decisions to someone who is not going to do that in a careful, considered way, backed up with the experience and education that they need and supported by a strong team.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Now we're getting into the fun of it. My thanks to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. You know, she's really got ovaries, because she nailed it. That is what's wrong, in my opinion, with this bill. [interjection] Yes. You should all aspire to this.

We don't know what an intervention worker is. In fact, in this act on page 7 under section 9(1), which is amending the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, it does reference: "child intervention worker" means a person designated under section 129.1 as a child intervention worker."

I said: yay, a real definition. So I've pulled the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, and here's what it says under section 129:

129(1) The Minister shall designate one or more individuals as directors for the purposes of this Act and the Protection of Sexually Exploited Children Act.

Hmm. Okay. Not giving me what I was looking for.

(1.1) An individual designated under subsection (1) must have the qualifications required by the regulations.

Okay. What would that be?

(2) A director or a director's delegate when acting under section 19, 45, 46 or 48 has the powers of a peace officer.

And then the third section is repealed.

So we still don't know, without looking at some regulations, which I don't have access to even in this Assembly, what a child intervention worker is.

Now, I take the point from the minister that they wouldn't just walk onto the street and appoint someone walking by as a child intervention worker. Yes, I believe that. I think that's true. But by going through the process that I see the government going through, we don't have a definition of who this is.

This may well be a very logical minister who is going to follow through on this, but this becomes legislation, which transcends the lifetime of any minister. We have no idea what the next minister is going to do, and believe me, I've sat through some – I'm trying to be careful with my language here – really interesting choices for people as minister and, you know, some interesting expressions from people in the government caucus about how children should be treated.

I'm reminded of one member of the backbench who really thought that child prostitutes should just be spanked and that that would bring them under control because, really, they just needed a firm hand. That was a firmly held belief by someone, and I'm sure they were advocating for that kind of definition in their caucus. So when we do – and it has a double meaning; indeed, it does. I'll just leave that with all of you.

But this is why we need that kind of certainty that we get out of definitions. Who is this supposed to be? We actually don't have a definition here, but it is in regulations, which can be changed at any time by the minister through an OC or a ministerial order. Even then, without us knowing this, that definition that exists now under a well-meaning minister could be changed to something else under someone who decides to take it in a different direction and also believes that they are well meaning and doing the best that they can. We have no professional scope outlined here, we have no standards, we have no licensing, and we have no discipline.

Now, most of you will be aware that professions in Alberta are determined under a number of different pieces of legislation; for example, the Health Professions Act, which sets out that you have to have a college, that sets out things like standards and monitoring and compliance and appeal process and a disciplinary process. Then you also have an association side, which represents the actual members. We're not getting this here. It's not available in this act. It's not available in the referencing clause of this act either. So we don't know who's supposed to be included. I'm assuming the minister has left it this loose because he wants to be able to appoint a police officer or a social worker or a daycare operator or a benefits worker or an addictions counsellor or a health professional as the child intervention worker of the day in a given circumstance. I think it's, one, too wide open; two, dangerous; and three, not stable enough.

Several people have referred to the social policy framework that the minister has been working on with the blessing and, I understand, the support of the Premier. I've been tracking this social policy framework from the side, and indeed a whole bunch of people are really excited about this and really feel that the minister is interested, that there is a blessing upon it from the Premier's office that it is going to drive forward.

But I look at the kind of work that these people usually do, like the Edmonton Social Planning Council, the – oh, I'm going to get in trouble here – reduce poverty now action group. There's another one out of Calgary called movements, I think. There are Boys and Girls clubs and just a whole bunch of agencies that have been involved with this. They all believe that this is being done for the best, but I wonder if they have been able to read this act and understand the implications and how that's going to affect what they're saying. For example, when we say to reduce child poverty by five years – I'm sorry; is that it? – how is that going to affect a group like the one that's run by Joe Ceci, the end poverty now action group? I think that what he believes are the right things to do are not what is contained inside this bill and the directions that the – I'm sorry if I'm boring the chair, but it's my job, and I'm going to do it. [interjection] Yeah. Exactly.

I also think that there are reasons that we have rules and procedures in place. You know, a lot of people complain about: "Oh, those bureaucrats. Why can't they make an exception for me? Why do they insist that everybody has got to follow these stupid rules?" "Well," I say to them, "because we have a bureaucracy that is going to deliver government programs and services in a way that is fair, that they do treat everybody the same, that they do use the same criteria every time, that, well, I hope that they don't have a disproportionate effect on one group of people over another group of people. That is the point, that everybody does get access to the same resources and programs through that system that makes it fair and balanced and stable and consistent and all of those things.

I don't see any of that in this act. I don't see the framework that sets that stuff out, nor do I see any referencing of that. So when I look at what the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has proposed here, I actually think she's right because she has gone through and systematically removed every time that child intervention worker is referenced in this new legislation, has struck it out. We're going back to the point where the director is completely responsible, and we don't have this unnamed, undefined, no rules, no procedure child intervention worker. I know where the minister is trying to go. I understand where the community is trying to go. I understand why everybody is so excited about this. I just don't think this undefined child intervention worker is the way to go, and I have not heard that from the community.

Now, I will immediately say that these are not the groups that I tend to navigate through on a regular basis. The arts, yes. Absolutely. You know, privacy folks and seniors and condos. There are lots of other places and issues that I am well versed on. I'll admit that I don't spend a lot of time in social services except through my office, and then we do an enormous amount of work trying to connect our constituents to the resources that are there. I am just quite concerned about the lack of things that can be pinned down in this act. It's deliberate on the part of the minister to leave it that, for want of a better word, loosey-goosey at this point in time. But it does mean that you can treat people in a different way, you can have different sets of rules, and you can have people that are working with different professional scopes or who perhaps don't have access to a disciplinary body.

Who is in charge? You know, if a child intervention worker does not perform as they are supposed to, where do you go? Who do you complain to? What is the system? What is the process that we use? Now, currently you would know what to do. You would go to the College of Social Workers. They have a system in place. They can tell you about it. It's on the website. Look it up. Go and do it. What the heck do you do here? I have no idea, nor do I know how to find out. If I can't figure that out, what are people that are in the community supposed to be doing to figure out what's going on with their children and how they access stuff?

I think it's well intentioned but not well thought out. For that reason, I will certainly support the member's amendment to remove all of the references to a child intervention worker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to it.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak in favour of this amendment, and I'll try to be fairly concise in my reasons behind that. You know, first and foremost, the New Democrat opposition has some concerns about the downloading of the statutory authority to front-line staff. I can tell you that as Bill 25 is currently written, it's going to transfer that statutory authority for children in care from senior officials, directors, who likely, one would hope, have achieved their position because of previous experience exercising judgment, their qualifications, their professional criteria, et cetera, to front-line workers, who are defined in the act as child intervention workers. I should rephrase that. They're not defined; they're actually quite ill defined in the act as it stands at the moment.

You know, the concern is that because it is not detailed in this bill, it's extremely difficult with this one piece to support this bill, Mr. Chair. That fact of the matter is that there are some folks who have professional certification, professional qualifications who will fit under this designation of child intervention worker. However, there are others who have been working in the ministry for under two years, and reasons for that range from the level of burnout that many front-line workers face to massive caseloads. In some parts of the province caseloads for some social workers are up to 50 clients, which is absolutely absurd considering that some of them are extremely high needs, require much attention and time, and are quite demanding of the workers that work with them. Because of that there is quite a high turnover within the ministry.

Now, under this bill you've got front-line workers who don't have the experience, who may not have the training, the qualifications to make decisions which, quite frankly, Mr. Chair, are going to impact and affect the lives of children, of young people, and of their families for the rest of their lives. I'm not comfortable passing that authority on to some front-line workers who are either inexperienced, new to the job, or who may not have the judgment or the experience to be able to make these decisions. I mean, this is part of the reason we have a working structure, a hierarchy, where there's different authority and decision-making authorities as you go up the chain. To download that onto folks who may not have the qualifications is scary.

As my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona outlined, there was a court case. What's interesting is that, you know, the outcome really wasn't that there needs to be a complete reorganization but that, instead, there really should be an establishment of internal sharing and reporting systems as a solution, not rewriting, redefining some of the front-line staff that work with some of our most vulnerable citizens, Mr. Chair.

I was quite surprised – actually, to be honest, Mr. Chair, I wasn't quite surprised that again the government failed to consult some of the people who are directly working with these young people. As we debated earlier this evening, the word "consultation" just seems to fly over the heads of this government.

The Alberta College of Social Workers, who represent many of the front-line workers, was surprised, was completely caught off guard. The fact that they weren't consulted – you know, I think it's worth mentioning that despite the fact that members of the government on the opposite side of the House may think that some of us in opposition like to get up and just oppose things for the sake of opposing, they need to keep in mind that we are constantly in communication with different groups and organizations and individuals who are going to be affected by legislation that we pass in this House, Mr. Chair. Although the government likes to provide lip service to that, the folks that we've been speaking with – again, from the Alberta College of Social Workers to front-line workers of AUPE and many social workers within the province – were not consulted, were not asked.

Again, it's interesting that the conversation is similar for Bill 25 here as it was for Bill 22, and that is that negotiation is not consultation. One-way conversations are not dialogues.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Notification is not consultation.

This amendment, Mr. Chair, at least is looking at improving this one piece within the bill.

I mean, another concern that I have that fits with this is, again, you know, the government moving to contract workers as opposed to workers within their ministry, so moving toward privatization of the work that's being done, again, with some of our most vulnerable citizens, which is cause for great concern.

As well, Mr. Chair, it's not good enough to just delegate responsibility and authority to front-line workers or a new set of workers without ensuring or providing as well adequate resources for them to do their job and to do their job effectively.

Again, I'll sum up by saying that a real issue I have, Mr. Chair, is the lack of a definition of child intervention worker. You know, for myself it's not good enough to leave this in the hands of the cabinet minister or the cabinet to define a child intervention worker as they see fit. The qualifications for child intervention workers will be established by cabinet through regulations. We have no idea as members of this Assembly what that will look like. Again, the tremendous authority that is going to be bestowed upon the child intervention workers is a cause for concern for some of those that will be designated child intervention workers.

I've mentioned before, Mr. Chair, where I've had the opportunity to work with various organizations that have a classification of workers that they call youth workers. Now, these are individuals who care greatly about their job and what they're doing and the clients they serve. The concern is that there is no standard or qualification for a person to be designated a youth worker. In other words, a person could walk in off the street having never worked with any youth whatsoever and suddenly have the title of youth worker.

Well, you know, to give them the authority to be able to make decisions, monumental decisions, as in whether a child stays with a family or is removed or put into care or taken out of care, in my mind, is just absolutely absurd, to give that authority to just any individual who may be moved into a position when we have no idea what that criteria is, what the standards are. This is why professional organizations like the Alberta College of Social Workers exist. There is a standard and a set of criteria for one to have that designation from the Alberta College of Social Workers.

Mr. Chair, you know, this amendment does respond to concerns that have been raised by front-line workers that have communicated directly with myself, with my colleagues, and the Alberta New Democrats. It's a solution that, again, is the tip of the iceberg. I'm sure that my colleague and I will speak to other areas that we would propose to amend, but I would urge all members of the Assembly to vote in favour of this amendment and to take a step in the right direction.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I'll be very brief. The minister chose to reference one or two lines from the press release that was put out by the AUPE on Friday. I just thought I would complete the reference. The minister had said the first part:

Frontline workers in Children's Services have been asking for many of these changes, but only if staffing levels are increased. We are carrying huge caseloads, with some employees carrying 24 to 30 files, and as many as 50 in some regions. The old standards ranged from 12 to 17 files per worker.

Further on in the press release:

Adding these new responsibilities will burn out skilled people and drive them out of the system, leaving at risk children without appropriate protection.

This, of course, is from within a system that, as I've said, we've already identified as having 50 per cent of their staff hired within the last two years.

This is another quote:

"I'm equally concerned that without defining who qualifies as a 'child intervention worker,' the Act gives 'child intervention workers' the powers of a peace officer, the ability to determine who a child's biological father is, and the power to remove children from abusive homes," said Cooray.

AUPE's concerns have been increased by the government's move to cut costs and examine what services can be privatized as part of "results-based budgeting."

I just thought it would be helpful to the debate to have the full context of the AUPE press release read into the record, just to reinforce the fact that they're not happy. I can certainly give my own indication that in contacting them on I believe it was

Wednesday, they had not yet read the act, and they hadn't known it was coming.

Again, I think we need to rethink how we use the word "consult." It is one of those C-words, as you know – converse, collaborate, consult – that hasn't made the message box yet, clearly, but perhaps it ought to have. Maybe we should give some thought to what it actually means.

I urge all members to vote in favour of this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A4.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. I'll try to start moving this along. Those of you on the other side, if you want to lobby your House leader to adjourn the proceedings and resume all of this tomorrow, you certainly have the power to do that, but other than that, I have eight or seven amendments to go, plus whatever everybody else has got, so a long night. Once again the government has put us in a position of dealing with really complicated, long-serving legislation in the middle of the night. Again, that has to do entirely with the government's choice about when we sit. If I called for adjournment right now, I wouldn't have the majority to do it, so that's on your side, guys. If you wish to do that, go right ahead. I will happily come back tomorrow and continue.

In the meantime I will move amendment A5, which, I believe, is in your possession.

The Chair: Amendment A5, hon. member. If we can have that distributed. Thank you.

You might as well start speaking to it, hon. member. [interjection]

Ms Blakeman: Oh, someone is already starting to move against it. Well, it's nice to know that there's a good give-and-take of debate and ideas in this Assembly. Not.

This amendment is section 5.1, which appears on page 4 of the bill and is under the title Information-sharing for Research Purposes, and it's talking about the anonymous health information that they're collecting. I'll read it into the record.

5.1 Nothing in this Act absolves or limits in any way, the Crown's liability and responsibility for children and their protection even when a service or function is delegated, contracted out or otherwise performed by an entity other than the Crown.

Now, you've already had assurances from the minister responsible for this act that, of course, they still have responsibility and liability, and that's part of the trust-me clause that is always a subheading of this government. In fact, I don't trust them, so that's why I asked for this amendment or helped to prepare it, to be clear that nothing else in this act absolves the Crown's liability and responsibility for children in their protection.

The concepts of responsibility and authority are really important here. You cannot ask someone to be responsible for completing a task unless they have the authority to do it, which is why we have so many delegating authorities and the power to do that is written in our legislation all over the place. It says, you know, that the Crown can delegate to this particular group to do something. Just imagine if somebody asked you to be responsible for taking on a task but then didn't give you the authority, didn't give you the resourcing, didn't give you any kind of instructions or criteria on how to do this or how well you're supposed to do it. You can imagine how impossible that task becomes.

I did this because I wanted to make sure that it was clear in this act – and no one could pretend otherwise now or in the future – that by contracting it out, the Crown's liability and responsibility for these kids wasn't somehow absolved or removed. I think that is the direction we're moving in. There seems to be a willingness from the community to take on more officially, if I can put it that way, the delivery of service, and in some cases, frankly, they deliver it better and cheaper than the government does. I think that the argument that's following there is that, well, then, they might as well do it officially. But I think that it's important that that ultimate liability and responsibility remain with the Crown.

Now, we've already heard the argument. The Ouellet case, when it was argued, said: "Ha, ha. Nice try, but you're not getting out from underneath that one. The director of children's services is responsible." We've seen in other parts of this bill that the government is trying to change it from the director to a child intervention worker, thereby pushing that responsibility further out onto those undefined front-line child intervention workers.

There are too many missing pieces in this act. There's too much that's being undefined and left loose, and this causes me great concern, particularly when the primary objective behind this bill has to do with information sharing and a loosening of the protection around information.

Let me remind everybody that children don't have rights. Except for the one exception that's written into this bill, they have no ability to withhold their consent to have any of this personal information or health information collected from them or from their guardian. In some cases the information can be collected about the parent and about the guardian and shared as well as information about the child. You know, we're tending to gloss over that part of this bill, and to me that's really important. If you can't control your personal information, we don't really have meaningful privacy laws in this province.

I'm concerned that even kids don't get to be asked and that they don't get to give or withhold their consent that this information be taken. Furthermore, they don't know what information has been taken. We've already talked about the fact that they won't be able to find out who has the information, but at this point they don't even get to find out what information is being held by organizations, and that is contrary to the fundamental principles of privacy protection.

I have brought forward this amendment in an attempt to try and solidify where the responsibility and liability remain and to be clear that that's where they remain. I hope that answers any questions anybody has. If you have any more, stand up and ask them, and I'm happy to get up and respond to you. That's the intent behind this legislation, to provide clarity and consistency about who is ultimately responsible. Where does the buck stop, and who's ultimately liable for those decisions? That cannot be delegated to these child intervention workers and even further contracted out, possibly to the private sector.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It goes without saying that I would suggest people not support this amendment. Obviously, the Crown is liable for its actions. People who work for the Crown:

the Crown is vicariously liable for their actions, and you can't contract out of your liability.

Ms Notley: Well, yes. I mean, I find that somewhat helpful from the minister, but the Member for Edmonton-Centre just stated: well, then you shouldn't object to this amendment. Really, I agree with the Member for Edmonton-Centre that we should be clear. There's no question that in the Ouellet decision the whole question of what is delegated and what remains residual was, in fact, the crux of that legal decision. At the time there was confusion and argument, legitimate legal argument, about whether the authority and the responsibility were fully delegated or whether residual authority remained with the Crown or the directors such that they were accountable.

I think that what we're getting at here – I mean, I remain concerned that authority, even a part of the authority, you know, 50 per cent, is being delegated or might be delegated to someone who could potentially under this bill not be working for the government, not be a member of the profession. The other issue becomes, certainly, as the minister himself has stated: "Hey, if we continue to have residual authority and residual responsibility and residual liability, then you can trust us that we won't delegate it out to the dog walker. We'll make sure that the people that get the delegated authority are qualified to do it." That issue was one that was subject to a fair amount of legal discussion.

Then the question becomes: where in the act does it state that ultimately the Crown retains liability and responsibility? If the minister is saying that we don't need to say it because it just is, then why would we object to putting in this section? I'm not quite sure. If everyone agrees that ultimate liability and ultimate responsibility continue to remain with the Crown and if the minister cannot point to a section in this act that clearly states that now, why would anyone object to including this amendment and passing this amendment? Then we're all on the same page, and we all agree to the same thing, and we want to make sure it all happens.

If, on the other hand, there isn't a place in the act where we can point to that residual liability and responsibility remaining with the Crown even after they've delegated, then presumably because we all want to make sure that happens, this would be a lovely addition, and we can all thank the Member for Edmonton-Centre for bringing it forward. If we can't point to it in the act yet we still suggest that we shouldn't be voting in favour of this, then that just raises the flag. Well, what really is the status with respect to residual liability and responsibility?

I think that there can be nothing but grand consensus achieved by us all voting in favour of this amendment. I urge my consensus-seeking colleagues throughout this building to vote in favour of this amendment.

The Chair: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I have, to nobody's surprise, another amendment that I would like to put forward on this bill. I shall retain one copy for myself and ask if we can distribute the remainder of them.

The Chair: You can start speaking to amendment A6, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Thank you. This is, yes, A6. What this amendment proposes to do is to substantially amend section 2(2), the principles that should be recognized in the children's charter. Now, as many of you who, I know, are listening aptly to this debate will recall, earlier on in the evening I started talking about sort of the points at which our views diverge around the best way to protect and ensure the best interests of children. This is one of the things that I was talking about.

[Mr. Khan in the chair]

Let me just start out. I appreciate that section 2(2) in the bill as it currently exists is simply a statement of the principles that need to be recognized as a bare minimum in the charter once it is consulted on and everybody gets to have their input in terms of what is included in the charter. So this is just a statement of principles. Given this government's, you know, record just in the last 48 hours in terms of consultation and taking what they hear in consultation and putting it into legislation, I figure there is some value to perhaps articulating a little bit more definition in terms of the principles that need to be included in this.

In short, although this is somewhat lengthy, let me just say that all of this language comes from, with one or two exceptions, components of the UN convention on the rights of the child. It basically can be broken down into three sections. It's either talking about the obligation of the government or the right of the child to three things, which go above and beyond that which was included in the list provided by the minister in the current draft of the act.

Here are the three things. The first one – and this goes right to the heart of one of the disagreements between the NDP caucus and the Progressive Conservative caucus – is the notion that you cannot separate the economic well-being of a child from their best interests. There are certain economic resources that must be dedicated to a child if we are going to get rid of poverty and if we are going to ensure their best interests. One of the components of this revised set of principles that need to be included in the charter is the notion of a child having a right to good nutrition, three meals a day, and a roof over their head. I know; I sound like a communist here.

Ms Blakeman: You radical.

Ms Notley: I sound radical.

Here we are in Alberta. You know, everyone loves to brag about how we're the wealthiest jurisdiction in Canada, which is one of the wealthiest countries in the world, yet I'm betting that some people over there, although I'm sure they will certainly at the end of the day approve my amendment, are wondering: oh, do we want to legislate a child's right to a roof over their head and food on their table? As things exist right now, children in Alberta do not have a right to a roof over their head or food on their table, and this government is quite reticent to suggest that they have a right to a roof over their head or food on their table. But the language in this charter is about the government having an obligation to provide and the child having a right to demand, in essence, a roof over their head and food on their table. It's not written exactly that way, but that's basically what we're talking about. That's the first component of our revision.

The second component of our revision relates to the right of special-needs children in Alberta, and that's something that was not identified in the principles that exist in the current draft of section 2(2). In my view, in some areas, when it comes to children with disabilities in Alberta, we have actually led the way every now and then on a couple of things, but generally speaking, we've lost the edge in that regard, and we're falling behind. Certainly, when it comes to our education system, we know that we are no longer truly giving meaning to the right of special-needs children to equality.

As anyone here who's studied the notion of equality to any degree knows, equality does not mean being treated equally. Equality means ensuring that every person has their opportunities maximized to the degree possible and understanding that that sometimes requires different treatment. It may well be that child A and child B can both score 90 per cent on their diploma exam in grade 12, but it may well be that child A needed a whole different path to get to that 90 per cent on that diploma exam by grade 12. Treating child A the same as child B will not result in both kids getting that 90 per cent on that diploma exam by the end of grade 12. If child A is the child with special needs, then they have a right to have the support that is necessary to get them to that 90 per cent on the diploma exam if such a strategy exists.

Again, this is in the context of a province which is arguably the wealthiest province in the country in one of the wealthiest countries in the world. This notion of ensuring that special-needs children in Alberta will be given whatever supports are necessary to equalize and maximize their opportunity is one which I think is a little bold, but it's also one for which the principle should drive elements of the definition of the charter.

The third overall principle that this amendment includes is the principle that no charter is of any value if it is not enforceable. You know, we had a health charter that preceded the election a couple of years ago. There was lots of self-congratulatory back-patting and loads of press conferences and even more press releases and lots of tweets and all of that kind of stuff that the government likes to do when they think they've done something they deserve some credit for. That was all around the patient bill of rights – I think that is what they called it – or maybe it was the patient charter. I can't remember. Really, all it was was a preamble to the legislation and had literally no effect, no impact, no enforceability, no legal impact, no legal effect of any type. It was just an opportunity for the government to give itself some good press.

Now, I don't want the government to fall victim to the same type of cynical analysis which essentially made people think that, really, there was nothing to that and that it was just a lot of hot air. I want this charter to mean something. But the only way this charter can mean something, Mr. Chair, is if the charter is enforceable through some mechanism. Otherwise, it's just a big press release, and it is meaningless.

The third sort of component that is included in our revised list of principles that need to be reflected in the charter is the notion that whatever charter is ultimately constructed through the preleadership vote consultations that the Premier is going to undertake must be enforceable, and they must be enforceable by a child as well as their guardian. If you don't make it enforceable, not only that which the minister is proposing but also that which I am proposing, then it is nothing but hot air. None of it is meaningful if it's not ultimately enforceable.

That's the shortest summary of what we've added now. I think we've probably doubled the number of clauses. The minister had (a) to (e), and we've now added (f) through (o). That's quite a bit. But if you look at it from those terms, understanding that essentially what we're doing is that we are addressing those three issues – economic security both as a right of the child and the obligation of the government, the right of special-needs children both as a right of the child and the obligation of the government, and the injection or the introduction of the notion of enforceability into the charter – that's essentially what this rather wordy set of additions amounts to.

As I say, we didn't just pull all of this out of our ear. We sat down. We read through the UN convention on the rights of the child. We looked at submissions that had been provided to us by advocates who are attempting to eliminate child poverty. We looked at research that had been done on this issue. We looked at what it looked like in other jurisdictions. That's where we came to this idea of including some of these elements.

Now, as I think I briefly touched on when we talked about this in second reading, you know, again, this is not new stuff. In I guess it was 1980, 1981, when there was a lot of debate going on about the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which I believe was voted in in 1982 if I'm not incorrect, even then there was talk about including a section on the right to economic equality, the right to have a document that allows people to insist upon minimum levels of poverty. Again, if we can't do it in Canada, where can we? If we can't do it for children, who can we do it for? I don't know. This is something that has been discussed in Assemblies and parliaments in the past. It's not a ridiculous idea. It's an idea that really goes to substantive equality, substantive antipoverty issues.

The minister has said, particularly in a debate with the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, that the NDP caucus believes that all you have to do is just throw money at something, that, really, the way to fix a problem is to be creative and collaborative and consultative and have conversations and be innovative and also engage in a bit of, you know, review of your programming and yada, yada, yada. I have nothing against innovation or collaboration or review of programming to maximize innovation and all that other great corporate buzzwordspeak. All of that's good, and sometimes it's actually meaningful and substantive in and of itself, but you can't create something from nothing.

The fact of the matter is that we are the only province that has a limited or nonexistent school lunch program. We have families that are living in utter and dire poverty, where it is simply not mathematically possible to provide adequate levels of food to children. We have homeless children in my riding. We have children in the care of this government seeking temporary shelter at the emergency shelter, seeking shelter and living in the ravine three blocks from my house. I mean, that's what's happening right now in this province. I think it deserves debate, and I think it deserves fulsome discussion by more than just two or three members of this House, quite frankly.

I am frustrated that we are having this conversation at 2:15 in the morning. Very frustrated. Here we are talking about principles that should be included in a charter. Here we are raising the issue of whether we can talk about economic fairness and prosperity and equality in a children's charter, and we are compelled to have this discussion at 2:15 in the morning. Yet the government tries to tell us that children come first. I don't know. You know, I really think that if this bill mattered and if the issues that are touched on by this bill mattered to this government, we would be having this debate in the light of day at a time when Albertans could hear the conversation and weigh in on it.

One other thing. Yeah. Sorry. There was one other piece in it that I think I accidentally overlooked when I talked about sort of the three global things. The other thing that we added to this, again, that comes from article 32(1) of the UN convention on the rights of the child is the idea that all children have a right to be protected from work that is hazardous, interferes with their education, or harms their physical, mental, and social development. That's from article 32(1) of the UN convention on the rights of the child.

Of course, as you know, Mr. Chairman, in this province we allow the youngest workers in the country, so sort of the laxest protection as a result, and, of course, we refuse to do any kind of protective measures or legislation around farm workers. You know, you would think that clause (h) would simply be something that would be reserved for Bangladesh and places like that. Indeed, we do need to sometimes remind ourselves that children have a right, as I say, to be protected from work that is hazardous and interferes with their education.

I'm just checking to make sure that I've spoken to all elements of it even if I did not go through a clause-by-clause analysis of it. I think the final one that I will just briefly highlight is clause (g). That one just talks about the right of children to be protected from all forms of exploitation that is prejudicial to any aspect of their welfare. This is based on article 36 of the UN convention, and it's a broad and encompassing principle that no child should be exploited in any way – no sexual exploitation, no economic exploitation – and recognition that childhood is a time of life that should allow all children to learn and develop their potential, their world views, and their skills, and it should also be a time of play. I don't anticipate disagreement from members on that.

I really urge you to take a look through what is in here. I don't know that there's anything in there that is easy to dispute or to suggest that it should not be included. Yes, it's a little bit more prescriptive than what existed before. Again, given that consultation is somewhat of a bit of an evolving concept in this province, shall we say, I thought that there was some value to be added by specifically stipulating these elements. I'm not sure that there's anything in here that would generate a lot of controversy. There's very little in there that should attract any kind of objection because, really, we're talking about children having a high-quality public education, being healthy, being warm, being well fed, not being exploited, having a roof over their heads, not living in poverty, and then giving them the ability to enforce that. I don't think that's that revolutionary.

I hope people will give some really due consideration to accepting this amendment and offering just a little bit more of a fulsome description of what could be included in a children's charter if we were to really embrace the notion of making some major change soon.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. minister, if you care to respond.

Mr. Hancock: I would again encourage members to say no. It's really ironic. The hon. member has spent most of the evening berating us for not consulting and then tries to write the charter herself without any opportunity for Albertans to engage. What the hon. member really ought to understand is that the power of a charter, the power of a social policy framework comes from the public being involved in the discussion and owning it, not in writing it ourselves. All of us can sit down and write policy documents. At least, those of us that have engaged in this process for a long time can sit down and write these things ourselves. That's not the point. The point is to have the public engaged in the discussion and to own the result, and that results in effective public policy and effective results. So let's not write the whole charter into the act. Let's let the public get engaged in the discussion of what should be involved in a charter.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. Well, that was a really interesting comment from the minister. I'm speaking to amendment A6 here, which is striking out section 2 and substituting a number of other requirements for the charter. It's really interesting that the minister just said: well, you know, it's about the people having input into it. I'm not sure where that actually appears under his part of the charter. It says that the minister would establish this charter to guide the government and the departments in the development of these policies, programs, and services affecting children and guiding collaboration. So where does everybody else get to have their say on what goes into this?

Then it says that "the Children's Charter must recognize the following," goes through the clauses that we're all fairly familiar with now, ending with the part about how the minister can review and the new amendment that if anything is going to be amended, repealed, or replaced, it has to come back to the Legislature. Where exactly is the collaboration piece that he's talking about, that the development is going to be done and owned by the public? I don't see that in here.

Mr. Hancock: That's because we don't write everything into the act.

Ms Blakeman: The minister is telling me that you don't write everything into the act, but you would think that if that was a key piece of it, you would've written it into the act. He's saying no, so although he says that the purpose of this is to do that, years from now, when somebody is actually reading what's here, it's not there. So this only lasts as long as the minister happens to be in charge of the department, and then someone else can have a different unwritten expectation of it.

I think the only thing I want to point out about the amendment brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is that there's not an expectation – I hope there's not an expectation – that the principles she's set out are to be delivered exclusively by government, because I don't think they should be. I agree that she has a good argument in that the resourcing of this is important. It's mostly going to come from government, but I think there's also an opportunity for it to come from other places. It shouldn't necessarily be mandated to come from other places, but I wouldn't preclude it.

I think we have to be clear that it's not only the government that has – oh, yeah. Where she expected the government to do something, she said it; for example, "(b) that the Government of Alberta has a duty to provide funding for support programs to ensure that no child lives in poverty." She's spelled out where she expects the government to take the main responsibility for that, and the rest of it is a shared responsibility, as we've all said, between the community and individuals and agencies and other levels of government.

She's absolutely right to put an enforcement clause in. As we know, the enforcement of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms has undergone a number of tests, and the ability of the courts to interpret what's there and then to enforce it is very important. In fact, this government has had a number of interpretations enforced upon them. They had to bring through legislation and correct what they were doing. So it's important to recognize that.

The one other point that I just want to make here is that we need to remember that children do not exist – you know, we all talk about how this is all about the community and the neighbours and all the public and all of that stuff, but children are not Cabbage Patch dolls. They don't exist separately from the families that they're in. So when we talk about children not living in poverty, we have to remember that that means families are not living in poverty. That does connect to other departments like his colleague's, now the minister of advanced education, who managed to put through a two-tiered minimum wage system that means anyone that's working in a restaurant that's serving alcohol now gets to work under a lesser minimum wage. These things connect.

I mean, how those parents manage to make enough money to lift themselves out of poverty so their child is not in poverty is a bit of a sticky wicket when we have other levels of government that seem to be consistently engaged in a Walmart economy to drive down the wages of a number of other sectors and seem to constantly be inventing a way to have people with less training get paid less to do more or less the same thing. We've seen that in health care, in policing, in corrections. Those are the examples I can think of at this time, but I am certain there are other ones.

I'm willing to support this as long as it's clear that we don't expect the government to do all of it. I really appreciate the enforcement clause.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I rise in hopeful optimism that all members of this Assembly will see the value in increasing, strengthening the principles of the currently written children's charter and, as well, see the value of the enforcement mechanism that my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona spoke of.

I find interesting some of the minister's comments. I mean, first and foremost, these are principles. This amendment is expanding on the principles of the rights of a child based on the UN convention on the rights of the child, which, for the members who are unaware, Canada signed on May 28, 1990, and was ratified on December 13, 1991. These are principles and a guiding document that should be guiding all legislation when we're looking at anything that affects children.

I would ask the minister if, therefore, in speaking against this amendment, he feels that children shouldn't have access to high-quality public education or proper housing or be protected from all forms of exploitation or be protected from working in hazardous situations or doing any work that could be hazardous – protecting the rights of all children, including and especially children with disabilities, and ensuring that they have the right to a high quality life and also have access to equitable opportunities. You know, clearly, that was a rhetorical question. I'm sure the minister would say that, yes, he does believe that children have all of those rights.

Let's put that in legislation. I mean, again, these are guiding principles. Yes, it's clear that this isn't the actual charter, if I can use that term. This is talking about the principles of the charter. This isn't the charter, itself. Sorry, Mr. Chair. That's what I was trying to say here. At this hour I might be a little tongue tied.

You know, I think that it's important that we expand on this list and that it's very inclusive. Again, I think, as the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona pointed out, creating a children's charter is a very interesting idea. It is somewhat unique. I think that we as members of the Assembly of Alberta have a real opportunity to create in this legislation principles of a charter that are detailed enough to ensure that they cover at least in principle all of the different rights that children are entitled to and that we wish to protect.

I think it's extremely appropriate that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona's amendment is based in large part on the UN convention on the rights of the child. You know, I think most members would agree that we're trying to increase the robustness of these principles and that as parents and lawmakers we want to ensure that the rights of the most vulnerable are protected. As the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona pointed out, we're talking about equitable opportunities and talking about ensuring that our children are cared for in all senses of the word.

Mr. Chair, I don't need to go on much longer other than to say that the principles in this amendment are merely an expansion, a clarification of what is currently written in the bill. Again, as the minister has said, these principles are not the charter itself, but they will help to guide and inform the creation of the charter. I think it's very useful in the creation of the charter to ensure that all of these principles are at the forefront when the charter is created and written.

My hope is that these expanded-upon principles will contribute to creating a charter that meaningfully reflects and embodies our aspirations and the rights of Alberta's children. I will urge all members of the Assembly to pass this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Okay. Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A6.

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Chair: Back to the bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. I have another amendment at the table, which I'll ask to have distributed. There is a change to be approved to be read in by the chairman. Specifically, the numbers now have changed as a consequence of an earlier passage of an amendment. I was looking to amend section 4. It's still in section 4, but we would be inserting it following subsection (4), and that would make this subsection (5). While you're still getting this passed out, I'm going to launch into this.

The Chair: Hon. members, for the record this next amendment will be A7. I do concur with the comments made by the Member for Edmonton-Centre that relative to an earlier amendment that was accepted, "following after subsection (3)" has been changed to reference (4), and where it says (4), that has been changed to reference (5).

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. I'm trying to put back into the bill or to clarify some privacy protection for children. Specifically, this amendment is saying:

- (5) A child whose personal or health information is collected or shared by a service provider or custodian has the right as a child or when the person becomes an adult to
  - (a) know what information has been collected about them,
  - (b) be able to request corrections to that information, and
  - (c) ask for a review by the Information and Privacy Commissioner.

Now, these are very standard clauses that exist in all of our privacy legislation: FOIP, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act; HIA, the Health Information Act; and PIPA, which is the Personal Information Protection Act.

The concept that you have the right to look at your own records and to ask for corrections if the information is wrong or incorrect in some way or missing and to ask for a review of that by the Privacy Commissioner is integral to the concept of protection of personal information. It's not in this bill. I think that the inclusion of this amendment in no way negates the direction that the minister and the government are trying to go in; that is, for more information sharing. This is not stopping any of that. It's just saying that the person has a right to look at the information, that they have a right to ask for corrections to it, and they have a right to a review by the Privacy Commissioner. Very standard. There's nothing scary about this. I think it's important.

Again, the ability of the child or the adult that the child becomes to ask to look at the information about them that's been collected, used, and disclosed by the government is, I think, a basic right. I am upheld in that belief by the Privacy Commissioner, who in her release commented specifically about that.

I'm asking that the members opposite support this amendment. As I said, this is nothing unusual. It's not stopping the government from proceeding in the direction they want to go with the Children First Act. It just makes sure that someone that is covered under this act gets a chance to look at the information that's been held on them, to correct it, and to get a review by the Privacy Commissioner.

I'll just remind everybody that the last time I looked, the verifiable information, the amount of information held by different sources under privacy law which is inaccurate or can't be verified can be up to 40 per cent. You say: "Holy mackerel, how could anybody possibly have 40 per cent of the information wrong?" Well, actually, it's not hard. You know, files get added or attached to somebody else's name, so you literally have the wrong information attached to your file. In some cases the government has allowed information that wasn't factual and verified to be incorporated into databases, and if that information is picked up, then you have something that isn't a fact, for example. It's someone's observation or someone's opinion that is now in somebody's record, yet they don't know that that's been said about them.

I think we can all think back to job applications we've had where we went in and thought we aced the interview, and then we didn't get it. More than that, there seems to be something out there about your work product or the way you perform that you can't quite get your finger on. You never get a chance to go back and find out what the heck was said about you after you left that room that's having such an influence on how you're proceeding through the rest of your life.

So very straightforward, very simple, privacy based, not interfering with what the government is trying to do. I hope you can all support that.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is a surplusage. FOIP is paramount. The provisions that the hon. member referenced with respect to access in FOIP are there. This is unnecessary and would enhance people's belief that this act is a stand-alone act and does not fall within the information and privacy generic, if you will. I would urge you to not support this.

Ms Notley: Well, again, I'm just looking for a bit of clarification from two people in the room who I think know a fair amount about what they're talking about, the minister but also the Member for Edmonton-Centre, who really does know the privacy legislation like the back of her hand. I've seen her go through it, and there are more stickies in her books than there are papers. There are, like, three stickies per page sometimes. It's really quite neat.

Anyway, she does know a lot, and she's saying that the difficulty is that under the current legislation children don't actually have the rights that adults would have and the protections that adults would have through FOIP or HIA or PIPA. Then the minister is saying that they do, so I am confused. I'm just wondering. Maybe the Member for Edmonton-Centre could just clarify that, that children don't have that right. In some cases children are living on their own at 14, 15, 16; as we know, even children in government care, of course, are often asked to just live on their own at that age. What are their rights? They should have a right to know what's been said about them, to whom, and where and when. Maybe you could just clarify that for us, Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Well, I'm sure somebody can augment this, but it's my understanding that children are not autonomous decision-makers until they hit 16, at which point they can get a driver's licence, they can be authorized by various government benefit programs to live on their own and to receive benefits, to make decisions about, you know, whom they associate with and even where they go to school. Prior to that, kids don't have that decision-making power, that control over their own life. That's my concern with this.

The minister keeps saying: "Oh, it's okay. It's all covered by FOIP." Then we have a number of things here, I would argue, that are not covered by FOIP. Certainly, it's not clear by looking in the act that it's covered by FOIP. I previously tried to put forward a fairly innocuous amendment that said that notwithstanding anything else or just for further clarification, this is the way it is, and they were not willing to pass it, which makes me a little suspicious of why they would have such hesitation in doing that. If it's no big problem, then why can't they put it in the act?

I continue to have those fears, and I think they're justified given the concerns that have been brought forward by the Privacy Commissioner, in which she outlines that it's eroding "individuals' ability to control what happens to their own personal and health information by broadening the ability to share information without consent," which is part of what I'm addressing here. I mean, if in the way the information is being collected, you cannot go and see it and correct it yourself, there's a problem. She goes on to talk about how they won't know what information has been collected about them. We heard earlier that they don't even know who will have collected it or have information about them and for what purpose.

So that's contrary to the concepts, the principles of privacy information. It reduces the individual's ability to exercise their right to complain or to ask for a review under existing privacy laws. There's another example of where the Privacy Commissioner is saying that this is eroding something that is under existing privacy laws. I say: then man up, admit that that is what's happening, and allow these clarifications to go into the act. It's not going to cause you any trouble. It's not that big a deal, and it's not going to hamper the direction that the government wants to go with this.

That's all I need to say about this except for one more point here. The Privacy Commissioner also notes that "Bill 25 authorizes information sharing that in many ways is already permissible under existing Alberta privacy laws." Well, then you shouldn't have to permit a wider use of it. Those uses are always accompanied by consent being sought and given. The cases where you can do something with someone's personal information without their consent are very specific both under health information and under FOIP and PIPA. So I would argue that this is exactly the kind of clause that should be put into Bill 25.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A7.

[Motion on amendment A7 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I am now going to go back a little bit to the issue of to whom we are now delegating all of this new authority and talk a little bit about that and take another shot at trying to find a way to fix what's going on in this legislation. Now, as you may recall, I started by proposing a number of deletions that would have essentially stopped this act from restructuring the way authority is delegated and to whom it's delegated and the nature of its delegation and extent of its delegation as it currently exists, stop this new act from changing it from the way it was before. We talked about the reasons for why I would recommend that that happen. Unfortunately, the majority of members voted against that.

Now what I've got, then, is a proposed amendment that will put some parameters on the unrestricted authority that is now being delegated through Bill 25. In particular, the minister has suggested that it was absurd – I think “absurd” was the word he used – to suggest that the government would ever delegate authority for things like whether a child gets to stay with their family, whether a mother gets to keep custody of her child or father gets to keep custody of his child, those kinds of major life and liberty kinds of decisions. It would be absurd to suggest that the government would ever delegate that authority to anyone who is not eminently qualified to make those decisions.

The Chair: Hon. member, could you officially move amendment A8, which will be this next one?

Ms Notley: I could do that.

The Chair: If you would, that would be wonderful.

Ms Notley: There we go.

In order to just ensure that that absurdity never happens and to test the absurdity, I guess, I have the following motion. The motion is that Bill 25, Children First Act, be amended in section 9 by striking out subsection (62) and adding the following is added after section 129:

Child intervention workers

129.1(1) A director may designate social workers as child intervention workers for the purpose of this Act.

(2) An individual designated under subsection (1) must be an employee of the Government of Alberta and a regulated member of the Alberta College of Social Workers in accordance with Schedule 27 of the Health Professions Act.

(3) Where a child is in the custody of the Crown or the Crown is a guardian of a child, a child intervention worker may exercise all the powers and perform all the duties and functions of the Crown as custodian or guardian of the child.

(4) A child intervention worker when acting under section 19, 45, 46 or 48 has the powers of a peace officer.

It essentially carries on everything that the bill purports to do, but rather than simply using child intervention workers who can be defined some day in the future by the minister through regulation and who can work somewhere – we don't know where – what this amendment would do is that it would ensure against the absurdity which the minister assures us would never occur. Just in case someday someone else took over and they didn't really think it was quite as absurd as this minister does that we would consider delegating this major authority to someone who was less than qualified to make these decisions, and should a new minister come along who did not think it was absurd to delegate this major authority to a provider who was not directly employed by the government, then we would have this amendment that would ensure that that absurdity would never actually occur.

Now, we know that there are a number of service providers who are currently contracted to the government to do child support and child protection and child enhancement work. We know that that's happening already. Not only are nonprofit agencies doing that work; there are actually already for-profit agencies that are doing that work in Alberta. It's a very disturbing trend, let me just say. It also, in fact, increases the patchwork nature of this service provision, it results in a general suppression of wages, and it enhances the disconnection and the lack of communication that the minister is decrying and suggesting that this bill would correct.

That being said, the way it exists right now is that it is child intervention workers who are employed by the ministry who ultimately have to sign off on things like kid goes home to parents or, more importantly, kid is no longer allowed to live with parents. Those kinds of major decisions are still signed off on by a direct employee of the government. There may be an indirect employee – a contractor, a service provider, a corporation, a volunteer organization – that's providing front-line care and support services, but those major custodial decisions still must be signed off on by somebody who is qualified to make those decisions.

Under this new act that would no longer be the case. My proposal is that even though we have restructured the residual liability and responsibility of the director under this changed act, we would still ensure that these fundamental custodial, life and liberty sorts of decisions are not made by someone who is not directly employed by the government and is also a member of the College of Social Workers because then we can assume that they have that minimum level of professional responsibility. It's not only the education that gets you into the College of Social Workers but also the code of conduct and the self-monitoring that comes from being part of a profession and adhering to a professional code. We know that we have that extra protection in there to make sure that these major, major decisions are not being made frivolously or thoughtlessly or in the best intentions but with not the best of resources at their disposal.

This amendment is just another effort to simply limit the parameters of who a child intervention worker is for the purposes of the delegation of authority under the act, and it's fairly clear. It results in good decision-making. The minister tells us that we should trust him to make these good decisions, but as we've often said, often legislation lives long past the minister of the day. This amendment would ensure that good decision-making is injected into the process whereby we are identifying who can make these family-changing, monumental decisions in the lives of children at risk in this province.

I urge all members of this Assembly to embrace this amendment and then approve of this amendment and vote in favour of this amendment so that good decision-making can live past the tenure of the current cabinet and be assured to continue well past it into whatever cabinet might in fact follow on their heels.

Thank you.

The Chair: Other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in favour of this amendment. I just want to say to all members of the House that, you know, the purpose of these amendments is really to strengthen the bill and strengthen the legislation and, again, to ensure that we've got perspectives represented through this House not only from all parties in this House but from all Albertans.

This amendment speaks specifically and directly to concerns that not only Alberta's NDP opposition have with this bill. Other members from other parties have spoken about a concern with a lack of a specific definition for child intervention worker. This amendment clarifies that, provides parameters around who is defined as a child intervention worker to ensure that there are standards that are met for a person to have that designation. As it's currently worded in the bill, a director can designate a person as a child intervention worker as long as they have qualifications required by the regulations. However, again, that doesn't provide enough assurance for all members of the House to support this bill.

Again, Mr. Chair, I, my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona, and our other colleagues from the Alberta NDP have consulted with many front-line workers, many of them staff from AUPE local 6, who at the moment have no idea what qualifications are going to be included in the cabinet regulations.

The government is asking us to pass a bill where there is no definition for child intervention worker and to have that faith and trust in the cabinet that they will come up with an acceptable set of parameters for that. Well, you know, Mr. Chair, unfortunately, my faith in the government's decisions and in consultations with Albertans that are affected directly by legislation, including, especially, staff who are going to be exercising powers as outlined in this bill – it really does need to be clarified.

This amendment, Mr. Chair, outlines the parameters by which a child intervention worker will be defined as a social worker who works for the government of Alberta and is a member of the Alberta College of Social Workers. I think that by having these parameters set, Albertans, families, children, children in care will have the assurance and the knowledge that the workers who are going to have new authority and powers designated to them have the proper credentials, the certification, the backing. They can be assured because there are the two different bodies that are overlooking their certification, their professional qualifications, especially that they have experience in exercising their judgment and making decisions that, again, are – significant is an understatement. I mean, we're talking about decisions not just about signing off on permission slips; we're talking about decisions on whether or not a child remains with a family or a child goes into care in a foster home or in a group home.

I mean, this has significant lifelong impacts, so we feel it necessary that if the government wishes to have support from parties other than its own, there are provisions in this bill that will give us the assurances that children will be looked after and cared for by professionals and not just some omnibus definition of a child intervention worker. No one at this point is aware of what that means or what that doesn't mean.

For those reasons, Mr. Chair, I strongly advise all members of this Assembly to support this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Are there other speakers?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A8 lost]

The Chair: We're back to the main bill.

Member for Edmonton-Centre, I believe you have another amendment.

Ms Blakeman: Yup. This would be amendment A9?

The Chair: This will be A9, hon. member. You may start speaking to the amendment.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you.

The Chair: We'll have to make some changes on this because of the sections as well.

Ms Blakeman: The change was already done, and I did photocopy the changed number.

3:00

The Chair: Just for the record, hon. member, you are referencing subsection (3), which has now become (4), and then subsection (4), which has become (5) based on the changes.

Ms Blakeman: True. They're subsections of section 4 . . .

The Chair: That's it.

Ms Blakeman: . . . based on an amendment that's already been passed here.

This is another privacy-based clause that I would like to see accepted and worked into the bill. Specifically, under section 4, which is the information sharing section, appearing on page 4, under the new amendment section, which is now (4), I'm proposing that we have a subsection (5) that says: "A service provider must notify the Information and Privacy Commissioner immediately if a child's personal information or health information in its possession is lost, stolen or accessed by unauthorized persons."

Again, I think it needs to be spelled out in the act that that is the expectation for a service provider. I'm sure the minister will stand up and say: we're running under the rules, and this is covered under the existing rules. Hmm. Not exactly. That's why I want it in the act, where you can read it, and it's clear to anybody that if you're a service provider under the definition in this act and you are aware that your organization or an individual that you're working with, whatever their particular affiliation or designation is, if that information has been lost or stolen or accessed by someone that shouldn't be accessing it – which we know is the major problem in privacy breaches, by the way. It's not computer glitches or software problems. That's not where it happens. It actually is human beings that know the act and decide that they're going to breach it. That's where the big problems happen. Unfortunate but true. It's deliberate human action, which is why I've been very careful to say "accessed by unauthorized persons."

You know, folks, this is somebody's life. It's bad enough that we will have collected this information without their consent. But to not be willing to immediately report it if it has been lost or stolen or authorized by someone that shouldn't, a service provider, I think really weakens the act. I want this to be clear. I want anybody that reads the act to be able to see it without having to hunt for the associated regulations or to have to go to another act to be able to look it up. I want it in this act so people understand that that's the deal.

I ask you to support this. This is where I'm going to cut it off. It's a good amendment. I ask for support.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other speakers to this amendment? The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: I will simply rise to say that we support this amendment based on the numerous statements of concern, that have been reviewed already many times tonight, that were put forward by the officer of the Legislature who has been assigned responsibility for overseeing privacy and transparency rights and obligations in the province. Obviously, she has a number of concerns, and I believe that this amendment is geared towards getting at some of those concerns. I'm disappointed at the lack of real responsiveness to such an important set of representations on this piece of legislation. Certainly, allowing this amendment would go some small distance towards fixing that flaw.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll make this quick. I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Centre for bringing forward this amendment. It seems like not just a reasonable amendment – and I'm actually surprised that this isn't already in the bill – but it only provides more accountability. I am just trying to put myself in the shoes of a person whose information has gotten lost. I think it's crucial that our Information and Privacy Commissioner is immediately notified if it's lost, stolen, or accessed by unauthorized persons.

It seems that this is just a very logical, fail-safe mechanism that should be included in this bill, so I strongly urge all members to support this amendment.

The Chair: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A9.

[Motion on amendment A9 lost]

The Chair: Back to the bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you. This is fun. Okay. I now have an amendment that also deals with the issues around information sharing for purposes of providing services and the concerns that have been raised around that. I will just give the original and several copies for distribution to the table and representatives thereof and speak to this amendment.

The Chair: This will be amendment A10, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Yes. This amendment would be made to section 4 of the act. The point of this amendment would be to essentially change the criteria under which all these service providers can freely share information with one another. As things exist now, in the current bill it says that for the purposes of enabling or planning for the provision of services, a service provider may collect and use personal information about the child or the parent or the guardian and also health information about the child, and for the purposes of enabling or planning for the provision of services, a service provider may disclose health information and also personal information of the child or the parent “if, in the opinion of the service provider or custodian . . . the disclosure is in the best interests of the child.”

What we are doing is proposing to change this section so that rather than the criteria for this information being shared be that it's in the best interests of the child, instead the criteria would be: “if, in the opinion of the service provider or custodian making the disclosure, the disclosure will serve the physical or mental health and safety of the child.” So the idea here is to close the criteria a little bit, limit it. Okay? We're all here talking about how we want to protect our kids, particularly the kids that are at risk. We want to protect their safety. We want to protect their health, both mental and physical.

This criteria – this safety and this mental health and physical health – is a standard which already exists to some extent in the Health Information Act as well as in FOIP and PIPA, but you definitely see it in the Health Information Act. Instead of it being a case where you've got somebody saying, “Oh, in the best interests of the child it makes sense for me to share this information with this service provider and that service provider and whoever else,” we're actually focusing on the safety of the child or the mental or physical health of the child.

The reason for that, Mr. Chair, is that it's even more important now that the government has so dismissively rejected our proposals for improvement. What you've got right now is “the best interests of the child,” but, of course, we have no idea who it is that will be making that judgment call. Who's going to be making the judgment call about what's in the best interest of the child? Well, it may not be a professional. It may not be anyone bound by a code of conduct. It may not be anyone who's a direct employee of the government. We don't know. For all we know, it could actually be, you know, a very junior worker with a two-month diploma who's employed by a religious service organization. We don't know who it will be that is making that decision about sharing information.

My belief of what is in the best interests of a child may well be and almost definitely is not the same as everybody else's belief of what is in the best interests of the child. I don't mean to say that everybody has one view and I alone have a different one. I believe that if you put 10 of us in a room with a little bit more sleep and some coffee and we sat around and had a nice chat about what we thought was in the best interests of the child, we'd probably come up, amongst the 10 of us, with five different ideas of what that means.

Now, usually that's not a problem if the people interpreting and applying that particular phrase are professionals who have experience and accountability and a professional code of conduct and a great deal of education to make that call. But if, instead, that's not who it is that's making that judgment, if it is, in fact, someone with a two-month certificate who's not even directly employed by the government that is making that call, well, then we have a problem. Then we have pretty much open season on sharing information about the child, about the parent, about the guardian, and we've got that information being shared amongst a number of organizations who are service providers.

We know that when a child is in care, they come into contact with a whole schwa of service providers. They really do. It's interesting to just read the very tragic circumstances that were delineated in the decision around Bosco Homes on Friday, the judicial decision where, among other things – say what you will about the ultimate decision of the judge about guilt or innocence – there was quite a description of the many different service providers and agencies that came into contact with that young man over the course of, I think, a month or two months. It was crazy, the number of organizations. It was really quite something. So if you've got that many organizations that have access to information simply because somebody thinks it's in the best interests of the child, then you're running all over the place trying to chase down information about the child.

We're mostly talking about the child tonight, but I think it's also important to talk about the parent and the guardian because we also are giving an unprecedented ability for the service provider to share personal information about the parent or the guardian. That, too, is troubling, very troubling, Mr. Chair, because you could well have a situation where, you know, the parent had postpartum depression six months after giving birth to the child, a very serious form of it, and somebody comes along who thinks that the best interests of the child are reflected in that child not being cared for by that mother in that situation. Then that piece of information could well follow the child and the mother from service provider to service provider to service provider for years because there's really no limit on it. So it becomes very difficult.

One of the things that we need to understand here, Mr. Chair, is that, you know, the sad fact of the matter is that the parents and the guardians who are typically impacted by this legislation tend to be low income, tend to be indigenous, tend to be marginalized. Not always. Of course, there are always exceptions, but, generally speaking, there is a much higher proportion of people who are impacted by this legislation who are in other ways already marginalized by a number of systemic factors within society, and now we're going to further marginalize them by significantly undercutting their rights to privacy and their right to control their own information. I do want to go back to this. It seems like we're all being very complainey, you know, and I guess we are because there are some fundamental difficulties with respect to this legislation.

On the flip side, I mean, I do share the belief that where a child is at risk or where anybody like a reasonable, common-sense person thinks there's a possibility that a child's health, mental or physical, is at risk or their safety is at risk that – you know what? – you've got to do whatever you can to make sure that that child is safe. You do. If sharing information that you have could help ensure that safety and protection, well, then you've got to do it. I am not fighting against that part of it. I really am not.

I do believe the Privacy Commissioner when she says that a lot of the barriers can be solved by education because, quite frankly, I've seen it myself. Enough people go to a de facto sort of fallback position that: "Oh. We can't do that. FOIP won't let us." And then you really unpack it, and you go: "Well, actually, no. That's not true. FOIP doesn't prevent you from disclosing that information, not at all. Here is what the rules are. You can absolutely do it." Indeed, this government has a tendency to say, "We can't release this information because of FOIP," when in fact if you unpack it, no, of course you can. You just have to remove the identifying information.

You can absolutely release that information. People have a tendency to overrely on it, and sometimes it's for political reasons, as with this government, but sometimes it's from being overly cautious and not being well educated about the application of the FOIP Act. So I do believe the commissioner is quite correct when she says that a lot of the problems can be resolved through education.

That being said, if we want to say that maybe it just won't work fast enough, then I can even support a certain amount of enhanced information sharing if the parameters are better defined. But as things stand now, with the parameters simply being Joe Anybody's definition of best interests of the child, well, then those parameters are virtually nonexistent. It means that under almost any circumstances you can share that information. That's just not good enough because we are so significantly trampling on the rights of that child and so significantly trampling on the rights of that parent.

When you combine it with the fact that this government has steadfastly refused to put in parameters around who's making these decisions around best interests, not accepting our proposal to have it be a social worker, not accepting our proposal to have it be a direct employee of the government, not accepting any of those efforts at remediating the problems in this bill, then what we need to do is to close the gate by limiting the circumstances under which that information can be shared. That's what this amendment proposes to do. It proposes to identify health, mental or physical, and safety of the child. That's where information can be shared but not simply best interests.

I mean, there are wonderful, caring organizations out there that do very, very good work, but there are also organizations out there that, for instance, because of their sort of foundational principles, would say that disclosing for the purpose of counselling against, say, an abortion is in the best interests of the child, notwithstanding the fact that that's not what the child, who at that point has the right to make the decision, would say. So that's one example.

Another example is, you know, if the child has an STD, whether that is something that needs to be disclosed. This whole concept of value judgments starts to be injected into best interests of the child, and it's not tempered by a professionalized understanding of the best interests of the child or an interpretation of the best interests of the child which is circumscribed by a professional code of conduct.

This would fix that. It's a little bit awkward. It's not my first choice for how to fix it. But it's another effort to fix it and to close the gate somewhat. The gate is still open, but it's not wide open. You can still get through it, but you've got to line up to get through it. You can't all run through it. One horse at a time, maybe a skinny horse, can get through the gate as opposed to, you know, 10 horses across can run through that gate.

That's what we're trying to do. I urge members of this House to consider that and, again, to consider the disproportionate impact that this change to privacy legislation has on certain marginalized members of our society and the need to balance that and to keep in mind that we don't need to pile on in terms of the systemic inequities which they are compelled to shoulder every day.

I hope you will give some due consideration to this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. The one thing that I hope is included in this is that the purpose of the information sharing is not just for the physical or mental health and safety of the child. I think the other piece that needs to be recognized is that there is service provision for culture for kids, for recreation, for economic reasons. There are a wide variety of reasons why information would be shared in order to provide a service. The services aren't only just about physical or mental health or the safety of the child. You've been quite specific there, so I'm hoping that that's included. I guess I'm giving you the opportunity to explain that.

For example, the city of Edmonton ran a pilot project that was, I believe, wildly successful. They heard about this from the States, which always really baffles me. It was a project in which they ran three different groups. The first group was provided with nothing extra, the second group was provided with limited access to recreational facilities and cultural facilities, and the third group was provided with wide access to those two. Then they tracked to see whether that improved the family dynamics, the quality of life, whether the kids were healthier or better socialized. In fact, it turned out that the group that had the access fully provided was far better off, demonstrably far better off. All of the metrics worked there.

There's an example of something where, yeah, you could argue that it was for their physical well-being, but the culture component usually wouldn't be included in that, and it made such a difference in the families' outlooks. The specific piece of this was that it was for single-parent families. It made, really, a remarkable difference in their mental health and social interactions with their community, their state of stress or depression, all of those things that we find happen so often with people that are in stressed economic circumstances. A really successful program. I just wanted to make sure that programs like that could be enabled under the amendment that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is moving.

The Chair: Are there others? The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, yeah. I just want to rise to answer the question. Unfortunately, I think I might be a little bit disappointing in it. The amendment talks about, "For the purposes of enabling or planning for the provision of services or benefits to a child," and it talks about collecting and using this information. Then it goes on to say, "For the purposes of enabling or planning for the provision of services or benefits to a child," they can disclose, but the disclosure is limited because the disclosure is just "if, in the opinion of the service provider or custodian making the disclosure, the disclosure will serve the physical or mental health and safety of the child." You're quite right. That does limit the interagency sharing of information for some of those broader, softer, for lack of a better characterization, services that are provided.

The reason we're talking here more about issues around health and safety is because that was really the rationale that was provided to us by the minister at the outset. I mean, the minister was quite successful at convincing sort of key opinion leaders out there that this was a good act because he brought in not one but two law enforcement people to say that this is really about preventing these horrible tragedies and making sure that information the police had could be shared with the doctor, could be shared with the social worker, could be shared with the teacher. It was really about these horrible tragedies, and it wasn't about just sort of that more generalized service provision.

I think the way to deal with the information-sharing problems around service provision is to not have this ridiculously patch-worked, fractured system of service provision. That aside, that was the rationale that was provided, and probably the minister's most convincing validators were those who were in the field of preventing crimes against children. Those were the most convincing validators that the minister was able to bring forward. And they are convincing. That's why I'm trying to have this amendment line up with those validators so that we are focusing on preventing crimes against children and ensuring the safety of children but that the information sharing doesn't go beyond those limited things because then you get into the potential of the balance shifting the wrong way.

I mean, you want rational service delivery that is premised on the best information possible, but that has to be balanced against the privacy concerns of both the child and the parent. I think one of the ways to balance that effectively is to limit the degree of interagency delivery and, instead, to not sort of have 14 different little contractors providing all of these different little services for one person.

In the absence of that balancing mechanism, the way I would balance it is that you look at the circumstances in which the information is shared. If you're simply sharing for best interest, then I think that the sharing is weighted too much and the rights of the child and the family to privacy lose. I would only start to pick at those rights in the interest of the child's safety and their health rather than, you know, their ability to participate in a recreational program or something.

That's why the language does actually limit it because I worry about the sort of unfettered sharing between agencies. There you go. That's my rationale.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak strongly in favour of this amendment. I think, you know, there's always a danger when the Assembly looks at passing legislation where concepts and terms are left undefined or are vague or ambiguous or unclear or all of the above. I would argue that the way the bill is written at the moment, referencing "in the best interests of the child," can be quite problematic because one person's definition of best interests and another person's can be quite different. What would cause one child intervention worker, if I can use the term as laid out in this bill, versus another – you might have two different front-line workers with totally different experiences, different qualifications, different education, different backgrounds. One may be day 2 on the job; another may be day 2,000 on the job. Unnecessary information or sensitive information may be disclosed, may have a harmful effect. In that moment the front-line worker may believe they're doing what is in the best interests of the child, yet there may be some serious and far-reaching harmful consequences because of that.

This amendment, Mr. Chair, seeks to clarify that and to ensure that there is a more specific definition that can be applied and that will be used, not just on reasonable grounds. Again, the backstop here is that disclosure will avert or minimize a danger to the health and safety of any person. I think, you know, that part is extremely important.

A reason why I think the hon. minister and all members of the Assembly should be able to accept this amendment and, if anything, to accept it in the form of a friendly amendment, is that the wording conforms to an act that was already brought in by this government, section 35 of the Health Information Act. This specific wording is just a continuation of applying consistency as far as defining what is in the best interests of the child.

I mean, my concern, Mr. Chair, is that, again, we're leaving this open to judgments. There are times when I believe all of us as being human beings have made poor decisions, poor judgment calls, and this clarification, this amendment, just seeks to cut down on the possibilities of that happening. Again, I would argue that none of our front-line workers are going to be making decisions, that they are consciously aware of, with the intention that it's going to bring harm to a child or to a family, but this cuts down on the possibility of that happening.

You know, Mr. Chair, I'm going to reference a dark mark on Canada's history. What the concern for the best interests of the child made me think of was that when we go back in history – and, sadly, we don't have to go that far back – once upon a time it was commonplace and the norm to pull children out of their homes and to put them not just into foster care. Especially when we look at the history of our aboriginal peoples in this country, the reserve system was built on the concept of what was in the best interests of children, and they would literally be ripped from families and communities by people that were carrying out orders on behalf of the government but doing it in the best interests of the child.

I'm sure, Mr. Chair, that if you talked to folks who were carrying out their orders and removing aboriginal children from their parents, their families, their communities, they would tell you that in good conscience they were acting in the best interests, in their opinion, of the children. Today many people still do and will for some time feel the effects of Canada's reserve system, where children were ripped from their families. Again, the fact of the matter is that I don't think that leaving in the phraseology of "in the best interests of the child" is actually going to serve the best interests of the child.

This amendment will cut down on the chances of children being removed from their homes or decisions being made which, again, in the moment may seem like the right decisions, may seem like they would benefit but down the road may turn out to do quite the opposite, Mr. Chair. Making sure that we have a clear definition within this act by laying out the fact that it'll either avert or minimize danger to the health or safety of any person I think is not only reasonable, but it safeguards more so than the currently written bill against potential harm that could come either immediately or down the road to some of our most vulnerable Albertans.

For these reasons, Mr. Chair, I would strongly urge all members of the Assembly to vote in favour of this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A10 lost]

The Chair: Back to the bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I have another amendment at the table, which I would ask you to distribute. That would make this amendment . . .

The Chair: A11.

Ms Blakeman: . . . A11. Thank you very much.

While we're waiting for that to be distributed, I can make you all a little bit happier by telling you that I won't be able to move one of my amendments because it has substantially been covered in the amendment that was called A1. [some applause] I knew that was going to brighten somebody's day.

The amendment that is currently being proposed is to add a new section following section 5, so this would be numbered 5.1, which says that

- (1) A special committee of the Legislative Assembly must begin a review of this Act within one year of the coming into force of this Act, and must submit to the Legislative Assembly, within one year after beginning the review, . . .

So they've got a year to start and a year to finish.

. . . a report that includes any amendments recommended by the committee.

- (2) As part of its review, the committee must consider the impact of the information sharing provisions of this Act on privacy.

We have done this in the past with the other privacy-related bills. FOIP, HIA, and PIPA all came in for – I don't know. Let me be careful here. FOIP for sure came in for a two-year review and then a five and then a 10. The other ones, I think, may have just come up at the five-year mark. I chose one year here because of the number of concerns that have been raised by members not of the government. The government has refuted all of these, not well, I would argue, but, you know.

I am asking that this review be considered. I think it's important to be able to track with some kind of metrics how well this act is performing and if it is meeting the expectations that people had or if some of the concerns that were raised have in fact come true.

This is not an unusual request. As I said, we've done it, I think with longer review periods, but we've done it with all of the other privacy acts except for FOIP, which had a shorter review period in the beginning, and then it went into a five-year and then a 10-year review period.

That's the amendment. Those are the reasons behind it. I hope I can get the support of a majority of the members in the Assembly.

The Chair: Are there other speakers to amendment A11?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A11 lost]

Ms Notley: Oh, it's a joy to get up again. Okay. You'll be happy to know that this is my last amendment, anyway, but I certainly make every intention to stick it out for the whole debate and to engage as much as I possibly can in all other amendments that might be coming forward because there are important things that we are discussing here.

This amendment relates to an element of this bill that has not yet received a great deal of attention in our discussions this evening. In particular, I'm talking about that part of the bill that focuses on reviews of I believe it is called domestic violence.

The Chair: This will be amendment A12, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Yes, A12. I'm just looking for the section right now. What it attempts to do is to amend section 19(6) by striking out the proposed section 18 and substituting the following:

- 18(1) On completing a review, the Committee shall prepare a written report that must contain
  - (a) its findings respecting the incident that is the subject of the review, and
  - (b) its advice and recommendations for legislative, regulatory and policy changes.
- (2) The findings of the Committee must not include any findings of legal responsibility or any conclusion of law.
- (3) Upon completion, the Committee shall make its report public.
- (4) The Committee's report must not disclose the name of, or any identifying information about, the individual whose death is the subject of the review or any other individual involved in the death.

This basically deals with family violence death reviews.

Now, generally speaking, this part of the bill is a good thing. It's one of those things where you sort of say: better late than never. We are one of the few jurisdictions that doesn't have this mechanism at this point, so it's good that this is coming forward, and I congratulate the minister on moving forward on this.

As many people have already stated in discussing this part of the legislation, it's much needed because Alberta enjoys the unfortunate distinction of having the highest domestic violence rate in the country. Now, that, of course, will probably not be remotely ameliorated by this committee review. Well, I won't say remotely. This committee and its review and its report, should they be used appropriately, ought to be able to assist in reducing the incidence of domestic violence, so it's helpful that way.

Now, there are other things that need to be done as well, of course. We need to provide more support for women's shelters. We need to provide more support for mental health services in Alberta. We have probably the worst record in the country in terms of our provision of mental health services, and that does relate to the incidence of domestic violence in Alberta along with treatment for drug and alcohol addiction because often you'll find that domestic violence occurs in conjunction with untreated drug and alcohol addiction. That is another area where we fall down, unfortunately, quite significantly in this province.

Of course, I am at this point, as you can imagine, doing a little bit of stream of consciousness in my discussion of these issues. Nonetheless, earlier tonight the Families and Communities Committee, one of the legislative policy committees, the existence of which, unfortunately, precluded the opportunity to have our Privacy Commissioner come and speak to us and answer some questions for us tonight, at one point was engaging in some reasonably effective work, some preliminary work in assessing the state of mental health service provision in Alberta. Just even on that preliminary basis we quickly became aware of the degree to which this province falls far behind in that area. Certainly, this is inextricably linked to the high frequency that we have in this province of domestic violence cases.

That being said, certainly one piece to the puzzle is to evaluate what's going on and to identify the kinds of things that can be done differently. There is no question that there are some things that can be done differently with a minimum of cost simply by enhancing communication and enhancing education sensitivity of law enforcement officials.

Back in the day, when I served as a ministerial adviser in the Attorney General's office in B.C., we actually launched – this was back in the mid-90s – a series of initiatives designed to enhance the sensitivity and the capacity, shall we say, of our law enforcement agencies to properly address issues of domestic violence and to ensure that there was intervention before these things accelerated to the point of tragedy. I'm talking about a series of amendments that relate to part 2, which you can find on page 58 of the bill.

We did engage in a lot of those initiatives. From the perspective of being in the minister's office, I was certainly able to become very aware of how, really, these tragedies could have been avoided and weren't because of lack of education on the part of law enforcement officials and a lack of education and sensitivity on the part of Crown officials. We had two or three horrible family tragedies, where, you know, it was not only a spouse but also the children who were victims in that case. It became clear that there had been repeated attempts on the part of the victims or relatives of the victims to secure intervention from law enforcement officials, and it just didn't happen.

It became increasingly clear to us that there needed to be some major changes in the way law enforcement officials responded to and dealt with domestic disturbance complaints and domestic violence and protection orders and all those kinds of things that are associated with that. There's no question that work could be done successfully by sharing that information and holding the government – and we were the government at that time – accountable for the decisions that were made by law enforcement officials in the course leading up to these tragedies.

I think that this panel, then, is a good thing. The difficulty that we have, however, is that this panel will only do its work effectively if the decision-makers are also held accountable. We can have a committee review what went wrong, and then that committee can present its report to the cabinet, but if there's no other mechanism for holding the minister and/or the cabinet accountable for those elements that went wrong, then we cannot be sure that the appropriate changes will be made because it will be subject to a whole number of internal considerations which typically govern decision-making processes in cabinet.

What we are looking to do through this amendment is simply to change the obligations with respect to making these fatality reviews public. That's all. We're just asking for the act to be written such that it is not simply a function of ministerial discretion whether or not these committee reports will be made public. As it exists right now, the minister will make the publicly releasable version of the report public at a time and in a form and manner the minister considers appropriate. That gives the minister unfettered discretion on the release of that report.

You know, I don't know why we would treat this kind of review differently than, say, the way we would treat a fatality inquiry or a judicial inquiry. Why would we somehow allow the minister the ability to keep this secret when other fatality inquiries and judicial inquiries must be made public? That makes no sense to me, Mr. Chair. If we really care about the incidence of domestic violence in this province and the prevalence of it and the growth of it and if we are really interested in keeping ourselves accountable not only as government but as a community as a whole, keeping ourselves accountable to take the steps necessary to reduce this shameful statistic, if we really care about that, then the first step is to make sure that that information is always made public. There is no good reason for not making it public as a matter of course in the same way you would a fatality inquiry, in the same way you would a judicial inquiry.

This sort of almost gratuitous discretion that the minister is insisting on keeping to himself to control when and how this information is released is unnecessary, and it is the symptom of a government that has simply been in charge for way, way, way too long. This is the symptom of a government that uses secrecy as probably one of its fundamental ideological principles. It has actually evolved to the point that if you were to describe the Conservative Party ideology, one of its central tenets would be secrecy. There's no other reason for keeping a report like this quiet. It should just as a matter of course be made public, and there's simply no justification for it not being public.

I urge members of this House to accept this amendment and to make whole what is otherwise a very positive change in the act. This part of the act is a good part of the act, but it really undercuts itself if the minister gets to hold onto it quietly, secretly in his back pocket for however long. Why would you want to undercut what is otherwise a very good set of changes contained in this part of the act? I don't understand why you would. I don't understand why you wouldn't treat it the same way you would other types of inquiries and, in so doing, give yourself something substantive about which you can really congratulate yourselves.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm rising to speak in favour of this amendment. It's interesting that, again, the family violence death review committee is supposed to prepare a written report with its findings about a particular incident under investigation as well as its advice and recommendations to the minister. The concern with the bill as it currently reads is that that report will never be made public. It's going to remain a secret, as are far too many other areas that this government likes to do. I mean, this seems to be the typical course.

The challenge of the question, Mr. Chair, is why there needs to be a publicly releasable report, or one that the government or the minister feels could be shared with the public, and one that's going to remain secretive and private for the government. As the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona explained so well, this report should really function in the same way as a fatality report, where it is made public, especially when we're looking at the issues surrounding family violence. This is a very serious issue. As the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has shared with the Assembly, the number of family violence incidents and victims in Alberta is disproportionately high, is actually alarmingly high. You know, this is an issue that not only is very serious but that cannot be kept a secret or in the backrooms or under wraps.

Mr. Chair, when a death occurs due to domestic violence, the committee's recommendations and findings must be made public. We need to have a debate that is in the light of day, that is public in order to be able to not only address the issue of family violence but in order to be able to cut down on the future incidence of this. I think it's important to note – and members on all sides of the House will be keenly interested in the fact – that this amendment maintains the provisions that no identifying information is released, so there will be the protection of identities.

You know, Mr. Chair, this amendment really does strike a balance and, I would argue, a proper balance, keeping personal information confidential yet allowing recommendations and debate for policy changes, legislative changes to be made public for all Albertans so that we can get the full participation of Albertans throughout the province.

I disagree with the way the bill is currently written, Mr. Chair, that the minister has, you know, a privileged prerogative or has the ability to pick and choose what measures, if any, he would like to implement or that will be made public. The issue is that reports should not remain behind closed doors, behind locked doors, and if we truly want to address the issue and seriousness of family violence and domestic abuse, then reports made by the review committee should be made public, should make their way to the public sphere, should be debated and deliberated publicly as opposed to having two different versions of a report, one that remains secretive and classified and one that is made available to the public.

This amendment, Mr. Chair, gets to the heart of the matter and does strike a balance between keeping personal information private and respecting that yet at the same time ensuring that reports are made public for public disclosure and debate.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there others on amendment A12?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A12 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. There's another amendment at the table to be distributed, and that would be amendment . . .

The Chair: A13.

Ms Blakeman: I will move that onto the floor now.

I realize that there's a great deal of unhappiness in the backbenches. I can hear somebody muttering about the time and expense, but I do remind you all that it is the choice of government to be here at this time. You could adjourn at any time.

I'm more than happy to come back and do this during the day tomorrow. [interjections] Oh, that got a reaction. Well, that woke everybody up.

The Chair: Proceed to speak to your amendment, hon. member, please.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much.

Well, you know, in talking about the amendment, we're talking about what time we're here. I would far prefer to do this during the day, and we were scheduled to come back and work until June 6. But it appears the government has only two bills left, maybe three, and for some reason they're making us do this all in the middle of the night, which doesn't need to happen. It's not me that's keeping you here; it is the majority government that's keeping you here. I'll just remind you all of that.

Amendment A13 is a for-greater-certainty amendment. I have tried to get a similar one passed. Essentially, what this is doing is adding in after section 5(3):

(4) For greater certainty, if a provision of this Act is inconsistent or in conflict with a provision of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, the Personal Information Protection Act or the Health Information Act, the provision in those Acts prevails to the extent of the conflict or inconsistency.

In other words, if we have deliberately or by commission or omission created a situation where it would appear that the originating acts do not prevail, this act will make it clear that they do. Again, this is going back to all of the hard work and the many nights in here by your predecessors to make sure that we had the tightest freedom of information act, Health Information Act, and Personal Information Protection Act that we could possibly have.

Then to bring in another act that references them but does not step up to the plate at the same level is (a) disheartening and (b) does not respect the work of your colleagues that came before you.

This is not changing anything the minister is trying to do. This is not degrading it in any way, shape, or form. It's just saying that if there are any inconsistencies between the protection of privacies that would exist under the current three acts and Bill 25, the Children First Act, the protection of privacy acts prevail. Nothing difficult about this, pretty straightforward, and, again, I think, part of what we were warned about in the notice from the Privacy Commissioner. I hope there's support for this. There certainly should be. I do urge everyone to support amendment A13.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other speakers to amendment A13?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A13 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. If I could get this picked up. Sorry about that. I've been delivering them to the table so that you didn't have to do the 50-yard dash here.

Mr. Chairman, this would be amendment A14, that I'm moving onto the floor at this time.

The Chair: Amendment A14, hon. member. That's correct.

Ms Blakeman: There have been a couple of attempts tonight. There's great unease about the phrase "best interests of the child."

I do not feel that it is clearly enough defined although it's a common phrase, I'll admit. I would prefer to see something more along the lines of what I am presenting in amendment A14, and that is to strike out wherever and specifically in section 4 "in the best interests of the child" and substitute with "reasonable" in subsection (2) and in subsection (3)(b) and by adding the following after subsection (3):

(4) The standard to be applied under this Act in determining whether the disclosure of personal or health information is reasonable or unreasonable is what a reasonable person would consider appropriate in the circumstances."

It's how I often judge what we're doing in some of the committees that we sit on or some of the proposals that come before the House.

The Chair: Hon. member, if I may interrupt you for a minute, due to the passage of A1 we need to make an adjustment as well. In clause (c) it should read, then, "after subsection (4)" instead of (3). Then (4) should read (5) under (c). We're referencing the passage of A1 for the record.

Ms Blakeman: Right. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: If you would continue to speak to that, that would be just fine. Please proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Right. That's okay.

You know, it's why I always sit across from the window, so I can look out the window and see people going by and going: how would I explain what we're trying to do here to that person? Does this make sense? Can I explain it to them? Do I think they would agree with what we were trying to do? I remember one time we were giving people raises. I said, "What is your justification for this?" and a person said, "Well, I think they're a good guy." I looked out the window, and I thought: how would I explain that to this person walking by, that I can see walking through the Legislature Grounds? "Yeah. We just gave someone a bonus of" – I don't know what it was; it was tens of thousands of dollars – "$20,000 or $30,000, you know, your annual salary, to someone as a bonus because they were a good guy." It helps me to focus on whether what we're doing makes sense or not.

What I'm trying to do here is to say: can we not use a recognized legal test of reasonableness? I actually, with the help of Parliamentary Counsel – I'm sorry; credit where credit is due – pulled this description of reasonableness out of the PIPA Act to be all the more useful to us here and to know that, in fact, the description and the test had passed the House previously. That's what I'm trying to do, put a test in place that is based on these changes in section 4, on reasonableness rather than on whether it's in the best interests of the child.

To put it in context for you, very quickly, this is following under information sharing for purposes of providing services. This is around "a service provider may collect and use either or both of the following" and, again, personal information. Subsection (2) talks about provision of benefits. We get down to the new section that we're adding in, which actually defines that the standard is whether disclosure of personal or health information is reasonable based on what a reasonable person would consider.

I am hoping that this will receive the approval and support of the House, and I ask you to please do so. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other speakers to amendment A14?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A14 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill. Have we exhausted all speakers?

If that's the case, then, are you ready for the question on the bill?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 25 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. With great pleasure I'd move that the committee rise and report Bill 25.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 25. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Motions

33. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that Bill 207, Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013, be moved to Government Bills and Orders on the Order Paper.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hesitate to trouble people with this motion tonight, but we hope to be debating it tomorrow in second reading and can only do so if it's actually moved to the Order Paper so that we can accomplish that. It is an important bill. It's a bill which I think there's a general agreement on that it should move forward, and we want to get it moving forward so that we can deal with this very important topic. I'd ask everybody to pass this motion with alacrity.

4:10

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Are there other speakers?

Did you want to close debate? We'll consider it closed.

[Government Motion 33 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It would seem that the hour has come when we should probably adjourn until 1:30 p.m. today, and I would so move.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:11 a.m. on Tuesday to 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, May 14, 2013

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us pray. Dear Lord, help us to find the strength we need to fulfill our many duties unto those who gave us the privilege to serve them, and help us to be ever so humble in that service. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very, very proud to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two individuals seated in your Speaker's gallery. The first is my dad, my father. Yup, my dad, Dr. Neil Webber, and he's from Calgary. My dad is the past MLA for Calgary-Bow and a past Alberta cabinet minister here in the province, serving for 15 years right here in the Assembly. He served under the leaderships of Premier Peter Lougheed and Premier Donald Getty. His numerous cabinet portfolios included associate minister of telephones and utilities, minister of social services, Minister of Education, and Minister of Energy. He is currently founder and president of Webber Academy.

Accompanying my father, Mr. Speaker, is my sister Barbara, also from Calgary. I'd ask that she stand. She is a retired 27-year undercover police officer and sergeant here at the Edmonton Police Service and in B.C. at the Saanich Police Department.

Both my father and my sister have been such a huge influence on my life, Mr. Speaker, and I'm truly blessed to have such wonderful role models. I'd ask that they both stand one more time and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us carry on with school groups, starting with Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 175 grade 9 students from St. Jean Brebeuf junior high school in the Brentwood community in the constituency of Calgary-Varsity. Accompanying this group are several teachers and parents: Ms Allison McDougall, Kaitlin Van Geel, Marie Sondergaard, Kerry Higgins, Kyle Hagan, Sara Paisley, Alex Ball, Lisa Varner. The parents include Marc Verones, Cheri Gray, Lili Bunce, Rita Thibodeau, Delia Dasilva, Antonia Lanza, and Karen O'Connor. I invite all the students, their teachers, and parents to rise so that we can respect and honour them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

Seeing none, let us move on. The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you today three of the 14 participants in the 2013 Alberta student ministerial internship program. These particular interns have been assigned within my office here at the Legislature, and I'm delighted to have them in the House today. First, I'd like to introduce Marc LeBlanc. Marc will be working in my communications office over the summer. He graduated from the Waterloo School of Planning in 2011 and last year served as executive director of the U of A food bank. This fall Marc will begin his master's of science in local economic development at the London School of Economics. He brings with him an array of international work experience in just the last couple of years, following placements across Canada, the United States, France, and Belgium.

Next, Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce Hamreet Sekhon. Hamreet will be working in my office, assisting with day-to-day operations and policy development. She graduated from the University of Lethbridge's public health promotion and policy program in 2013 and has described as one of her most rewarding and humbling experiences when she participated in a four-week global field study in Malawi that centred on both HIV and malaria prevention for youth living in rural and urban areas across Malawi. Today is Hamreet's birthday.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce Katherine Perron. Katherine will be spending the summer working in my tours and scheduling unit. She is currently attending the University of Alberta as a third-year international business student, focusing on European studies and the French language. Katherine ultimately hopes to develop her career in the field of international government relations.

I'm thrilled to welcome these interns to the Legislature today. I hope that their summer will be both educational and productive and that they will be able to have particular exposure to political dialogue and to the executive branch of our government. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier, followed by the Leader of Her Majesty's Opposition.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to introduce to you and through you to members of our House a young man who will be a very important part of my team in my office. Dylan Hanwell is a political science student at the University of Alberta and will be entering his third year of political science. He is originally from Pigeon Lake and came to Edmonton two years ago. Dylan is involved in student governance at the University of Alberta. For the summer Dylan will be working as an intern in my office. He will have the opportunity to learn more about Alberta's postsecondary education system and how government supports it and about the opportunities that present themselves in Campus Alberta. Please join me in welcoming Dylan to our House.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you some remarkable members of Alberta's First Nations. They've come here today to watch us deal with serious and important matters regarding constitutionally required aboriginal consultations. I'll call their names, and as they rise, I would ask all members to give them the traditional warm greetings of this House. Please bear with me. I've got 22 names to introduce: Brian Lee, who is the acting chief of Ermineskin tribe; along with Daniel Wildcat; Dennis Whitebear; Sam Minde, who is also with the Ermineskin tribe; Bob Small with the Treaty 6 Confederacy; Regional Chief Cameron Alexis, Treaty 6 Confederacy; Chief Casey Bird, Paul First Nation; Chief James Jackson, Whitefish (Goodfish) Lake First Nation; Rob Houle, with the Treaty 6 Confederacy; Marilyn Buffalo, Samson Cree Nation; Kevin Ahkimmachie; as well as Freida Cardinal and Victor Horseman from Treaty 8. We also have Chief Rose Laboucan from Driftpile First Nation; Herb Arcand from Alexander First Nation; Phyllis Whitford from the O'Chiese First Nation; Chief Brad Rabbit from Montana First Nation; Chief Russell Threefingers from the Louis Bull Tribe; as well as Josh Alexis, Caroline O'Driscoll, Edwin Paul, and Lorraine White. Thank you so much for being here. Please give them the warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services, followed by the leader of the Liberal opposition.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the House my friend and constituent from Edmonton-Whitemud, Barb Esdale. Barb is the co-chair of Alberta Donates Life Coalition, a group of several health organizations and individual advocates from around the province who have come together to encourage the government of Alberta to co-ordinate organ donation, create an organ donor public awareness campaign, and create an intent-to-donate registry for the citizens of Alberta. I should also note that Barb held a career in Alberta Education for some 30 years. Barb is here today in support of and to observe the discussion of the private member's bill that's now on the government agenda, Bill 207, and to observe second reading of Bill 207. She's seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask that she please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have two introductions. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Maxine Cook. Maxine is here advocating against the hundred-kilometre radius policy regarding the placement of seniors. She's concerned that seniors are separated from their spouses, family, and community at a time when they are at their most vulnerable. These are the people who built this province, and it's unconscionable that we are denying them the best care we can give. We must ensure that they have adequate space, professional public care, and are kept with their spouses within distance of their family. I would ask Maxine to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Your second introduction.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. In-Young Chang, who immigrated to Canada 40 years ago with his family from Seoul, South Korea. He's a retired businessman, a Vietnam war veteran, and he served in the famed Tiger division from South Korea on the allied side of the forces. He's a past president of the Canada Korea Business Association. In 2006 he became the recipient of the highest honour for a civilian from South Korea, the order of the Republic of South Korea, for the work he did over the years in facilitating improved relations between Canada and South Korea. In 1990 he was asked by Premier Gary Filmon to run as an MLA in Winnipeg, but he preferred to serve in other ways instead. He is joined here today by his family: his loving wife, Susan; his son, Dr. Jason Chang; Jason's loving wife, Dr. Alanna Chang; and their two-year-old daughter, Amelia. Hon. members, it's Asian Heritage Month. Please help me welcome a proud Asian-Canadian who has helped build this country.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Shami Sandhu. Mr. Sandhu is the current chair of the Edmonton Police Commission, a position he's held since 2009. In addition, he presently serves as the chair of the Alberta Association of Police Governance. Over almost 20 years he's been a tireless volunteer community member here in Edmonton.

With him today is Mrs. Kyla Knight. Mrs. Knight is a realtor in Edmonton with Re/Max River City and an active community volunteer, supporting the Stollery hospital foundation, the Children's Miracle Network, and Little Warriors.

I would ask them both to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First, it's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly our ministerial intern Mariel Aramburu. She recently completed her studies at McGill University, where she majored in political science and international development. She has spent summers with the world food program in Panama and working on inter-American policy in Washington, DC. Mariel comes to us from Calgary and is very excited to be working with IIR and looks forward to gaining a deeper perspective into government. I'd ask Mariel to rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it's with mixed emotions that I do my second introduction. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members our IIR press secretary, Mark Cooper. Mark will be leaving us next week to work with industry in Calgary. Mark has served the people of Alberta through the government of Alberta for 13 years, working in nine departments for eight ministers. I can tell you that he has been of terrific service and support to the work that we do in our ministry. Mark, please rise, take a bow, and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the Associate Minister of Wellness.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour and privilege for me to stand and introduce to you and through you to the House Sandi Kaser. Sandi is a hard-working Alberta accountant, who is finding it very difficult to continue her work. This is because Sandi is one of many on the wait-list for completely new corneas. The wait-list is three years long. Sandi is concerned about transplant wait times for Albertans while her ability to work, her quality of life, and her freedom to go about everyday activities deteriorates. She's excited about the changes to Bill 207, Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013, and hopes this will encourage people to donate their organs and tissue to those in need. Please stand, Sandi, and we'll give you a warm welcome from the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour to introduce two representatives from one of Canada's most respected charities, the Canadian National Institute for the Blind. Since 1918 the CNIB has been dedicated to independence and self-determination for Canadians with vision loss, and their work is critical considering the sobering statistics. Seventy-five per cent of vision loss is avoidable, yet another Canadian loses their vision every 12 minutes. Thankfully, the CNIB passionately provides community-based support and knowledge, and along with consumer organizations, they ensure that Canadians who are blind or are partially sighted have the confidence and skills and opportunities to fully participate in life.

With us today during Vision Health Month is John McDonald. You might recognize his name. He's the former publisher of the Edmonton Journal and CNIB's new executive director for not only Alberta but also the Northwest Territories. His list of accomplishments is a long one, and he looks forward to applying those experiences to ensure that blind and partially sighted Albertans receive the services they need.

I've been looking forward to this introduction for a while, Mr. Speaker. With us today is the incomparable Diane Bergeron, national director of government relations and advocacy. Diane is joined by her beautiful guide dog, Lucy. Lucy is a working dog. Along with working for the CNIB and volunteering for numerous organizations, Diane is a truly inspirational athlete. As a matter of fact, July 7 will be a magical day. Diane will be participating in the Great White North Half Ironman as the only blind participant. Yes, Diane is that amazing.

John and Diane are in the public gallery. I'd ask all members to join me in offering the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a fellow Rotarian and good friend, Michael Kuzek. He's accompanied by our rotary club's exchange student from France, Sixtine. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you Mr. Paul Nemetchek, who through his involvement in the Wildrose has become a close friend of mine. We share a deep commitment to church and a passion for aviation. I'd ask him now to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my honour and pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly – would you please stand as I mention your presence – members of the Singing Strings orchestra and their conductor, Petar Dundjerski. These young people gave us one of the most beautiful renditions of O Canada and the famous Chinese piece Jasmine Flower today.

Also with us today is the organizer for the orchestra and the luncheon that we enjoyed today, Mr. David Tam, and his beautiful family; chef and TV personality, Miles Quon; our O Canada soloist, Atiya Datoo; and the dancer who led us through the energetic Bollywood dance this afternoon in the rotunda, Anjana Babbbar.

Last but not least is Catrina Foldessy, my summer co-op student at my Calgary constituency office.

I want to thank all of you for coming to spend your time with us today and for helping to celebrate Asian Heritage Month. I would ask members of the House to join me in giving the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Calgary-Foothills. If we're quick, we should be able to squeeze them in.

Mr. Jeneroux: Great. I'll be quick, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you Leigh Allard. Leigh is the president of the Alberta-Northwest Territories Lung Association, a constituent of Edmonton-South West, and also a strong supporter of both my bill, compassionate care leave, and my friend the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills' bill, Bill 207, Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013. I'd ask Leigh to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Webber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll try to be quick. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you 16 individuals seated in the members' gallery who are here today in support of my Bill 207, the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013. I'd ask that they stand as I read their names. From the University of Alberta hospital are transplant surgeons Dr. Norman Kneteman, Dr. Lori West, and Dr. Atul Humar. I don't know if he made it today or not. We have the executive of the Alberta Donates Life Coalition, Nancy MacDonald. We have a co-chair of the Alberta Donates Life Coalition, who was introduced earlier. Barb Esdale is here. Another co-chair of the Alberta Donates Life Coalition, Sharon Marcus, is here as well. Sharon's son Ben Kanee is here today and is a kidney recipient. We've got Tony White, a liver recipient; Kim O'Reilly, a lung recipient. We've got Flavia Robles and Tammy Fifield from the Kidney Foundation of Canada and Rachelle Sandy from the Canadian Liver Foundation. Leigh Allard, who was introduced early, from the Alberta Lung Association is here as well.

Also in attendance as supporters of Bill 207 are Candace Webber from Calgary, who just happens to be my wonderful sister-in-law; and her mother, Eunice Hogan, from Edmonton.

I thank you all sincerely for your support here today, and I'd ask that we give them the warm welcome. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the clock requires us to move on to Oral Question Period. I know you know this, but let's be reminded that the House sat until 4:10 a.m. Therefore, I would ask for your patience with each other as we go through this next 50 minutes.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. First main set of questions.

Breast Cancer Diagnostic Test

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, Angelina Jolie, the film actress, has brought the issue of breast cancer front and centre with a column she wrote today in the New York Times. She revealed she took the drastic step of undergoing a preventative double mastectomy because she was at extreme risk for a very aggressive form of breast cancer. Many other young women are facing these kinds of dire decisions as they decide the best course of treatment. The Oncotype DX cancer test, that I mentioned to the minister last week, is a test that helps determine which treatment is the best for a breast cancer patient. Can the minister tell us when Alberta women might expect a decision on this test?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Oncotype DX test is very useful technology and, as the hon. member noted last week, has been adopted by some provinces in Canada. As is the case in Alberta, we have a health technology assessment process for new technologies. This is a very important test. I've asked my department to expedite the review process, exercising, of course, the due diligence that's required, and we will come forward with a decision as soon as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to hear that. I did meet with some members of a group called Rethink Breast Cancer in my office earlier today. They're focused on breast cancer education and advocacy for young women, and that's why the timely approval of the Oncotype DX cancer test is so important. It's a test that can prevent needless chemotherapy. Now, the test has been approved and recommended by the Alberta breast cancer group and five other provinces. Will the minister tell us when he thinks we might get a decision on when this would be covered in Alberta?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as we reviewed in an answer I gave to a similar question last week, the process of assessing health technologies for adoption in Alberta is a rigorous one. It's evidence based, and it is one that does not involve politicians exercising judgment. We'll take the appropriate time to review this test as quickly as possible. There are many new technologies that are available on a monthly basis that could be introduced in the health care system here or across the country. We'll look at the evidence, and we'll make a decision as quickly as we can.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the women I met with today told of her experience with chemotherapy. Her mother was diagnosed with breast cancer at age 31 and died at age 39, and she received her diagnosis at age 33. As a result of her chemo treatment, she went through early menopause, and it has ended her chance to have children. That's a real-life story of the negative effects of chemotherapy. It is exactly the type of outcome that the Oncotype DX test can prevent. Isn't the quick approval of a proven test that can reduce negative health consequences while saving millions of dollars something that Alberta should be doing right away?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the appropriate review process involves an examination of evidence, including experts within my department but also broadly, in our universities and in other centres of research. It also involves looking at the basis for similar decisions by other jurisdictions. I'm sure the hon. member would not want to suggest to this House that any of us as elected people should be solely determining whether or not new technologies are made available. They must be safe, they must be accessible, and they must demonstrate the results that they're alleged to demonstrate. In the case of Oncotype DX the results do appear very promising to lay people. We'll wait for the experts.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. leader. Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been three years. I hope I don't have to ask this question again in the fall.

Severance Payments to Premier's Office Staff

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, there are problems the Premier is facing that strain her claims of exemplary government accountability and transparency. Staff severance packages are way out of whack, more than $2 million over the last three years in the Premier's office. Her predecessors made these kinds of severance and employment contracts public, but this Premier continues to hide them, raising even more questions about how things operate in her office. The Privacy Commissioner has previously ruled that such arrangements must be disclosed. When will the Premier comply?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, under this Premier's leadership this government has delivered unprecedented transparency. [interjections] That's exactly what this Premier has promised to deliver, and that's exactly what we're doing. There is an independent process, and that independent process should be followed. That's exactly where this issue lies.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, that $2 million covers the severance for 18 employees – that's the information we managed to squeeze out of the Premier's office – but that's an average of about $115,000 per employee. Now, it's one outrage for the Premier to hire a bunch of staff with six-figure salaries, but can she explain why she's signing off on contracts with six-figure severance packages?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, as I said, we have unprecedented transparency. We have an expense disclosure policy. We have taken steps to disclose more information, that is unprecedented in this province. [interjections] We are providing incredible access, but we also have processes that should be followed. We have processes that should not be politically interfered with, and I think you should join me in respecting the autonomy and the independence of those processes. We have a Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, and that should be respected. The act itself says that it should be independent. That's what you should respect. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've asked for your patience and your respect. People asking questions have the right to ask them. People answering them have the right to answer them. I would ask you to please give them the floor when they are recognized to do either of the two.

The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the Premier is going to make the AT and T minister answer the question, she could at least brief him so that he could give us proper information.

If the Premier gives you the heave-ho, you either get a golden handshake or you get a soft landing somewhere in the administration. Just in the last year nearly $600,000 went to departing employees, many of whom had worked in the Premier's office for just a few months. Doesn't the Premier agree that she needs to be transparent and accountable to Alberta taxpayers about how she rewards the people she fires?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, it's very interesting to me in this House that we're having two debates going on right now, both with respect to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. I remind this House that there are two parts to that act. One is freedom of information, and one is privacy. I find it ridiculous that when we're having a debate around the children first legislation that we have the opposition say that we can't breach privacy, but when they want to score political points, it's okay.

The Speaker: The hon. leader for your third main set of questions.

Ms Smith: As the Premier knows, the Privacy Commissioner has already ruled on this issue of disclosing the severance packages.

Member for Edmonton-Manning

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, when a member of this Assembly faces allegations of wrongdoing, all of us are affected. The Member for Edmonton-Manning faces a very serious allegation today and deserves the opportunity to clear his name and restore his reputation. To that end, we have asked the Premier to take the appropriate steps and appoint an independent prosecutor to examine the evidence. The matter goes beyond the Conflicts of Interest Act and beyond the mandate of the Ethics Commissioner. It's a question of illegality that requires a proper investigation. Does the Premier agree?

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have been advised that this matter is under investigation by the Ethics Commissioner, so let's be very, very careful about any further questions in this regard.

Government House Leader, if you wish to comment in light of what I've just said, I invite you to do so.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a matter involving a private member. The private member has done the honourable thing and asked the Ethics Commissioner to investigate. He's also indicated to the Premier and to me as House leader and to the caucus whip that he will be recusing himself from caucus during the process of that investigation so as not to interfere with government progress and government business. He has done the honourable thing. I think we should respect that. We should also respect the fact that this is a private matter with the member. It's a matter that, allegedly, is before the courts, and it is an allegation still.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this is not about an ethics inquiry. There are two very different accounts of events that need to be examined. On the one hand, there is a sworn affidavit, signed by the member, claiming he was in India looking after a family issue during the time in question, but there are Legislative Assembly filings that place the member in Calgary at the same time attending meetings on behalf of the government. They can't both be true. The maximum penalty for swearing a false affidavit is 14 years. Again, will the Premier agree to order an independent prosecutor to investigate the matter?

Mr. Hancock: The allegations the hon. member raised are with respect to an affidavit that was filed in a court proceeding. That's the best place for anybody to determine whether the affidavit is correct or not. If the process that's undertaken there determines there's a problem with an affidavit that's filed in that process, they're the ones to make the appropriate recommendation.

The Speaker: Let's be very careful going down this line much further, hon. member. I'll invite your final question.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, it's small comfort that the member has stepped down from government caucus and asked the Ethics Commissioner to look into possible violations. Other, larger questions remain. Why does existing legislation allow for such information about an MLA's business practices to go unreported, and why does it take an expensive FOIP request or a tip to the media to expose it?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, these are allegations, and they are allegations being appropriately investigated at the request of the member.

Support for Palliative Care

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I pointed out that the $586,000 that the Premier's office paid out in severance in the last year alone would be better spent on programs important to Albertans. A great example and one this government is decimating is palliative home care in Calgary. Twenty-four part-time registered nurses are being laid off, equivalent to seven full-time positions, for an alleged saving of $490,000. To the Premier: why are your ex-staffers more deserving of public funds than dying Albertans and their families?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants to talk about home care, we're very, very interested in talking about home care. The fact of the matter is that home-care staff across the Calgary region are being redeployed in an effort by Alberta Health Services to deliver better care and better outcomes to patients. There has been an increase in the number of licensed practical nurses involved in that program. Discussions are under way with the United Nurses of Alberta and AHS as to how to redeploy the balance. Patient care is not affected by this change.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, you understand how important this issue is. When you were Health minister, you visited my dying father in his dying days at home.

This House passed the compassionate care bill yesterday, and I commend the Member for Edmonton-South West for introducing that important act. Unfortunately, however, this Premier's inhumane cuts to palliative home care in Calgary have greatly diminished his achievement. This government is withdrawing essential support from dying Albertans and their family members. Premier, beyond the cold calculations of accounting, how do you think cutting palliative care supports makes any sense?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, that is a gross exaggeration, a misrepresentation of the facts in this case. The hon. member has no interest in talking about policy with respect to home care. What he is very good at is apparently picking up an article in the media today and commenting on some staff redeployment decisions that have been made by Alberta Health Services.

Mr. Speaker, as I've said, these changes will not affect patient care. AHS has a responsibility to deploy staff across the system in the most appropriate way to ensure that we have better care, better outcomes for our population, and better value for taxpayer dollars.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I don't know when this guy became a health care expert when we've got doctors and nurses that will tell you differently.

According to the United Nurses of Alberta these cruel cuts will result in only one registered nurse being on standby after hours. If that nurse gets called out to give comfort and care to another Albertan in his or her final moments, families will be forced to call 911, Mr. Speaker. Patients will end up in the ER, and they will die in a cold hallway. Premier, you may think you're saving $490,000, but I'll tell you that it costs a heck of a lot more when you end up in the hospital in acute care. If for no other reason, Premier, will you just please cancel these heartless cuts for humane reasons?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I am not at all surprised to hear the leader of this party stand up and make these wild allegations. This seems to be what he does every single year. It is not appropriate to make any suggestions that are going to allow people to feel afraid or not have confidence in the public health care system. We have Alberta Health Services, which is in place to make the decisions with respect to how to ensure that we have the most effective patient care. That is their job, and we have confidence that they are doing it well and not impacting patient care.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Edmonton-Manning is facing some very serious allegations. The member has apparently announced that he will withdraw from the PC caucus for the present and has referred the matter to the Ethics Commissioner. My question is to the Premier. In the interests of maintaining public confidence in this government, will she clarify the member's status and tell the Assembly what actions she is prepared to take to rectify this situation?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, as has already been clarified in the House, the hon. member has himself asked the Ethics Commissioner to do the investigation and clear his name. He has himself indicated that he has withdrawn from caucus and from government activities during the course of that investigation. I would remind the hon. member that these are allegations with respect to a matter which is before the courts. The courts themselves will determine whether or not the affidavit is in an appropriate form or not. There's no better place than a judge to make that determination.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I think we have had this clarified now four times. If you have some new angle there that is within the rules and guidelines, let's hear what it is.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Member for Edmonton-Manning signed an affidavit stating that he was out of the country when, according to documents that I will table later, he was in the province attending committee meetings of the government. Under section 131 of the Criminal Code signing a false affidavit is perjury, a criminal act. It is not an ethics matter for the Ethics Commissioner; it's a matter for the police. To the Premier: will she ask the police to initiate an investigation into whether or not there was a violation of the Criminal Code by the member, and if not, why not?

Mr. Hancock: Asked, Mr. Speaker, and answered.

The Speaker: Final question.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The government certainly has not answered that question at all.

Albertans have a right to expect the highest ethical standards from their elected officials. Instead, Mr. Speaker, we're getting the counsel for the defence here and not straight answers. In order to restore public confidence with the government and the Assembly, will the Premier immediately ask the police to investigate whether or not the Member for Edmonton-Manning violated the Criminal Code by committing perjury, and if not, why not?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, there are two essential elements. One is the question with respect to filings to the Ethics Commissioner, and the Ethics Commissioner has been asked to investigate by the member. The other is with respect to an affidavit that is part of a court proceeding, and the best place to determine the veracity of that affidavit and whether there's any issue with respect to that affidavit is within that court proceeding. If there's an issue with it, that will be referred by the courts. If there's no issue found in that proceeding, one would assume it should end there.

Conflicts-of-interest Legislation

Mr. Saskiw: Mr. Speaker, this government's facade of accountability can't seem to hold together for very long before yet another investigation has to be called. Ethics scandals and complete ignorance of right and wrong have all become hallmarks of this PC government, of what has become known as the PC culture of corruption. It undermines the confidence Albertans have in all of us elected individuals. With the review into the Conflicts of Interest Act currently under way, will the Justice minister commit to cleaning up this loose legislation?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, as many people have said before me today, we have independent processes that this government has established that work. We have a Conflicts of Interest Act. We have an Election Act, that we have brought in ourselves, that allows unparalleled transparency, as the Associate Minister of AT and T had indicated. I think that this member – I know he is very well trained in the law – should get behind this and realize that Alberta is a leader in this area.

Mr. Saskiw: Given that neither the conflicts legislation or the office of the Ethics Commissioner caught these alleged indiscretions, will the Justice minister admit that it is now time to reform the law, or is he scared that more skeletons are going to keep falling out of the closet?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, there actually is a conflicts-of-interest review going on right now, and I welcome that member to make his own submissions. This is fully independent, again, of any political interference.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we've now seen former cabinet minister Evan Berger sail right through the conflicts-of-interest legislation and that this Premier has promised to raise the bar on transparency, does this Justice minister agree with me that if he continues to just sit there and do nothing about this legislation, all Albertans are going to lose any confidence they had left in this government?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, again, it saddens me the lack of respect that this member has for the independent processes of this Legislature, which have been proven to work time and time again.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Domestic Violence

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Instances of domestic violence in Alberta are unacceptably high and stretch across all demographic groups. This isn't just a big-city problem. It stretches to rural Alberta and all types of communities across this entire province. My questions are to the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General. Where can our abused women go to get help?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Domestic violence is more than a social problem. It actually attacks people where they should be the safest, in their home. I often encourage people to go and report it. If you feel that there is domestic violence, please go and report it to the local police or RCMP. I've met with many women, and they often say to me: "Well, why didn't anybody report it? The neighbours heard something. They didn't report something." We all have to be vigilant in getting rid of domestic violence in Alberta.

Ms Olesen: To the same minister: what are you doing to combat domestic violence?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned, this is an issue that Alberta Justice takes very seriously. We've funded 21 projects since '08, totalling $15.7 million. This includes the integrated domestic violence treatment program in Leduc, the Airdrie and District Victims Assistance Society, the Connect family and sexual abuse network, and Taking Shelter with Literacy. We simply could not combat this problem if it wasn't for these community-based partners.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Olesen: Thank you. Lastly, if you think a friend or neighbour is a victim of domestic violence, how do you go about reporting it?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, first, I would indicate that you can call the family violence information line at 310.1818. There is information and service available in 170 languages. I also would be remiss if I didn't mention that I don't think this is just an issue for one gender or the other. This is an issue for everybody. I think that in many cases men have to stand up, report it, and create an example for the next generation.

Labour Negotiations with Teachers

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, on March 15 this government rolled out the red carpet in Calgary to proclaim it had finally reached an agreement with teachers. The problem is that they spiked the football before they got to the end zone. Here we are nearly two months later, and we still don't have a deal. The supposed agreement reached in March in reality wasn't an agreement, so now we're going to have to legislate one. To the Education minister. We all want what's best for kids, and we all want stability in the education system. How did it come to this?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Question, this is a very good... [interjections] Mr. Speaker, you know, it's been a long couple of days already.

Mr. Speaker, that's actually a very good question. You know, the announcement in March was a great milestone. It was a great announcement, but it was announced as a tentative deal, and that deal needed to go out and be ratified by 62 ATA locals and 62 school boards, which is a huge task and why we've been working so hard with the ATA and the ASBA and all school boards for the last two months.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, I will give the Education minister some credit. I know he's had some very long days and nights of late.

Given that Alberta school boards, though, saw the supposed agreement for the very first time on the same day that the Premier and the Education minister, as I said, rolled out the red carpet and gathered the TV cameras around to announce a deal in Calgary, doesn't the minister see that the way he went about this process was all wrong and that he should have involved the 62 school boards of elected officials from the beginning?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, this is a concern that's come up, and I'm happy to clarify. The school boards have been involved from day one. This has been a three-year process. This has not been a two-month process. It's spanned three ministers. These negotiations were stalled and started several times. What I can tell you is that the deal that was presented to the ASBA and the ATA in March is substantively the same as the deal that was presented to both those bodies February 20. Their input helped build that.

Mr. McAllister: Again to the Education minister. Given the clumsy handling of this file from broken-down negotiations to premature celebrations of victory to potentially proposed contracts and given that there are more than a few boards who say that they've signed out of pressure and feel like they were bullied, I'll ask the Education minister: what are we going to do to fix this problem going forward so we don't wind up in this situation again?

Mr. J. Johnson: You know, Mr. Speaker, another good question. It is a clumsy situation, and it's a clumsy situation because we realize that for the sake of our kids the best thing for the education system is to have a province-wide deal and to have long-term deals. In order to do that, the province has to have a seat at the table. We don't have a bargaining structure that permits that, so for the last three years we've been the moderator, the facilitator, the meat in the sandwich, trying to get a deal done. Now that we're there – and we are there, and I want to give credit to the ATA and the ASBA – we need to also work together going forward to build a new bargaining structure that's right for Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, followed by Calgary-McCall.

Openness and Transparency in Government

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government made a commitment to increase the transparency and accountability of government operations. However, there is still criticism about this government's information-sharing record, and that criticism continues. To the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation: what steps is this government taking to follow through on its commitments to Albertans?

Mr. Scott: I'd like to thank the member for the question. Under this Premier's leadership, as I said previously, we're delivering unprecedented transparency. We have an excellent record of responding to FOIP requests. In the year 2011-2012 we received approximately 4,200 FOIP requests. Ninety per cent of those FOIP requests were responded to within 30 days. We're building upon a very strong foundation of transparency. [interjections] The other side doesn't enjoy listening to the good work that this government is doing. They stand there heckling half the time. [interjections] They should be listening to the good work that this government

...

The Speaker: Hon. members. Edmonton-Centre, please. Whoever has the floor has just as much right to it as you do when you rise, and I'll stand up and defend you as well if I need to. Please, show some respect.

The hon. member. Second question.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many constituents, including some in my constituency of Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, who work with freedom of information requests are getting bogged down with requests and process. What is the government doing to make information more readily available?

Mr. Scott: Our Premier committed to doing a review of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, and that's exactly the work that we're going to undertake. Our commitment to openness and transparency has been demonstrated. We have what's been described by the Canadian Taxpayers Federation as the gold standard for an expense disclosure policy. I'll just give you the quote. "This new website and disclosure policy makes Alberta the gold-standard for expense transparency and an example for the rest of Canada to follow." That's a good foundation to build upon, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. He talks about a foundation to build upon and suggests potential changes. When can we expect to see some of those changes?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, our work has already been under way. As I said, we've done one of the most comprehensive and well-regarded expense disclosure policies in Canada. We've done whistle-blower legislation. Our work to review FOIP is under way. In addition to that, we already disclose a lot of material. We have ministerial office expenses that are being disclosed. We have aircraft manifests that are being disclosed. Workplace fatality and injury records are disclosed. Alberta has an excellent record of being accountable and transparent. Our Premier has committed to building upon it, and that's exactly what we're going to do and deliver.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

FOIP Legislation Review

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday and even today this PC government is grandstanding about the strengths of Alberta's FOIP legislation, but let's not forget that in her mandate letter to the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation the Premier called on him to review the FOIP Act and recommend changes. To the minister. Either the minister failed to complete this review, or he has refused to make it public. Which is it, Mr. Minister?

2:20

Mr. Scott: I'd like to thank the member for the question. We are delivering a review of that act. That work is already under way. We're going to be doing a very comprehensive review. On this side of the House we want to make sure that we're engaging all Albertans. It's going to be a thorough review. I would encourage anybody in Alberta, even members of the opposition: if you have a point that you want to make, if you have input, we're going to take that into account in building an even better freedom of information and protection of privacy law.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that a 2012 freedom of information audit conducted by the newspapers of Canada gave Alberta a failing grade, saying that while FOIP requests are processed quickly, too little information is given out, and the same report questions the high level of fees associated with these requests, have you studied this, and what are you doing to pass next year's test?

Mr. Scott: Thanks again for the question. That's exactly why our Premier has shown leadership on this issue. During this process she is committed to making sure that the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act is reviewed, and that's exactly what we're going to be doing. There are challenges among many of the laws in Alberta. We have a good foundation that we're going to build upon, and we're going to do a very thorough consultation. I would encourage you and anyone who has concerns about the law to get engaged in the consultation. We want to make sure that every Albertan has an opportunity. At the same time, we're going to make sure that freedom of information is balanced with privacy.

Mr. Kang: Thank you. There should be a legislative review, not behind closed doors, Mr. Speaker.

My final question is to the same minister. Given that the Premier's mandate letter also called on him to develop transparency legislation, is this something we will see in the future, or is it just smoke and mirrors?

Mr. Scott: Thank you for the question. It's definitely not smoke and mirrors. The only smoke and mirrors I see is coming from the opposition.

We are delivering an open and transparent government, and that's exactly what we're going to continue doing. As I said, we made a commitment to review the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, and that's exactly what we're going to do. It's not going to be behind closed doors. Every Albertan is going to have an opportunity to get engaged.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. By using legislation to force a contract on teachers and school boards, this government has lost sight of what is best for education in this province. It's no coincidence that the two teachers' locals that rejected the government's proposal, Elk Island and St. Albert, have a front-row seat to witness the tremendous growth in the economy of Alberta while they, the teachers, are forced to take an effective 10 per cent cut in wages over three years. To the minister. The money is there if we had the will to make it so. We saw the doctors get theirs and plenty more. Why is this government unwilling to provide a fair deal for teachers?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very fair deal, and we worked very hard on it. I'm not the only one that thinks it's a fair deal or thought this was a fair deal. Listen to this. This is from the Calgary Herald of March 15. "This is the time and place to make a deal . . . The teachers have given several years of zeros in exchange for improving classroom conditions and considering the austerity budget that this government has, it would be foolish (for them) not to make a deal here and now. The time is right." Guess who said that? It was the member opposite, from Edmonton-Calder. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, enough of the interjections. Let's carry on with the second question.

Mr. Eggen: Well, given that this Education budget has removed hundreds of millions of dollars from schools, which results in larger class sizes, teacher layoffs, and program cuts, I ask the minister: how is it even remotely possible to believe that any assurance to improve working conditions for teachers is anything but just another empty, broken promise?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I think we're going to have a chance to debate that at length here this day because those things are actually written into the agreement. That is one of the main things that the ATA wanted to see move forward. We helped facilitate that, and the SBA embraced that.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that using legislation to force an agreement makes a mockery of collective bargaining, undermines the authority of democratically elected trustees, reduces the integrity of the teaching profession, and punctuates this government's attack on public education in general, why won't this government restore funding before we see long-term, irreparable damage to our public education system?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the member talks about democracy. What is he going to say to those 60 ATA locals that voted in favour of this? Are they going to be overridden by two ATA locals that voted against it? He talks about the integrity of the teaching profession. What about the integrity of the 97 per cent of teachers that voted for this deal? Are they going to be held hostage because we've got a broken bargaining structure?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Wholesale Electricity Market Pricing

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's handling of the electricity market is hurting small and medium-sized businesses as prices soar. The Market Surveillance Administrator's own study finds that a small oligarchy of generators is the primary cause for the price spikes in electricity. Will the minister admit that there is a small group of companies controlling the market, or will he state here and now that the Market Surveillance Administrator's findings are wrong?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, one of the joys of responding to questions from that hon. member is the fact that he's able to take points of data from here and points of data from there and connect a completely illogical connection.

Mr. Speaker, the answer today is that electricity prices – I don't know; the regulated rate option average for May was 7 cents. This is hardly skyrocketing prices for electricity.

An Hon. Member: Try again, Joe.

Mr. Anglin: Try facts again, too.

Given that five major companies own 70 per cent of the electricity generation in the province and these companies can legally withhold electricity from the market to elevate the price, can the minister explain how these five major companies compete to serve more than 3 and a half million Albertans?

Mr. Hughes: Well, just to keep the hon. member up to date, it's 3.8 million Albertans. Actually, 3.8 million Albertans represents approximately 20 per cent of the consumption, and a whole industrial base represents 80 per cent of the consumption of electricity in this province, Mr. Speaker. That is a very competitive market, and the Market Surveillance Administrator is one of the watchdogs that's in place to ensure that there is fair and in-the-public-interest competition amongst all players in the supply . . .

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. They're the ones that are saying that the market is being organized here.

Given that this month's electricity prices are on pace to set an all-time high and given that a committee of MLAs appointed to review the retail market will not be reviewing the wholesale market, will the minister commit to reviewing the circumstances that are contributing to the price spikes in the wholesale electricity market?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, once again, unconnected facts trying to connect unconnectable dots. I would just point out that the regulated option average year to date for all providers is 7.85 cents per kilowatt hour. This is not evidence of a growing increase in prices. The hon. member is trying to frighten people with evidence that is unconnected to what people pay for electricity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Westlock Health Care Centre Laboratory Services

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have heard from many constituents with regard to the Alberta Health Services decision to remove microbiology, immunochemistry, and other testing from Westlock health care centre laboratory. This decision is a concern for two reasons. The most important one is patient care, and the second is the effect the associated job losses will have on the local community. To the Minister of Health: what impact will this decision have on patient care in my constituency?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question and certainly commend her for advocating on behalf of her constituents. The answer to the question regarding patients is that they will not see any change in their care, and physicians won't see any changes in the way that they order lab services in Westlock. A collection of tests will still be done locally, and in most cases specimens will be processed on the same day. Alberta Health Services is consolidating lab services across the province. This involves the redeployment of lab centres. We can expect to see more of this as time progresses.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that, like many other rural community hospitals, Westlock health care centre is a major employer and helps keep the local economy strong, how will AHS address the fact that 5.15 jobs will be lost in this area?

2:30

Mr. Horne: Well, there is no doubt that in small communities across Alberta our health system does provide some very important job opportunities. There will be changes as we work to improve access to patient care and in this case lab services. There will be changes in job programs and services, but these will be done, of course, ensuring that patient care remains a priority. As much as possible, Mr. Speaker, the staff reductions are managed through attrition and, of course, within the guidelines of the Health Sciences Association of Alberta collective agreement.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Health. As late as last night the town of Westlock council put forth a motion to ask for a six-month moratorium on the decision to move the lab services until the medical and lab staff have been consulted and are part of the solution. Would this be possible?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, it is not possible. The changes I've explained are about consolidating services to make the best use of our health care dollars to provide high-quality and sustainable lab services for Albertans. While I certainly empathize with the member and I empathize with the members of the council of the town of Westlock, I'm sure they will understand that Alberta Health Services is striving to keep everyone whose position is affected working within the organization and that these reductions may be managed as much as possible through attrition.

Thank you.

Postsecondary Education Program Funding

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, the minister of advanced education has done a good job jeopardizing the future of our province. Because of his heavy-handed cuts to front-line education 32 workers at Red Deer College will be out of a job, much-needed programs will be lost, and our students will be forced to go elsewhere to find the education that they need. Minister, you can only bury your head in the sand for so long. How does the minister's heavy-handed cuts to education fit the government's plan to build Alberta?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, they're basing their opinions on assumptions. One, we know for a fact that programs can't be eliminated in this province until the minister reviews the proposals and decides to sign off on them. That is based on what is best for students, what is available for students, and what alternatives are available for students. If there are administrative positions that are being eliminated within colleges, I appreciate the fact that schools are making difficult decisions. They have budgetary realities to live with, just like we do. One thing I can tell him. If they had to live with their budget, they'd be firing many, many more people.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that your budget is cutting programs at Red Deer College such as pharmacy technician, early learning and child care, health care aide, and automotive service technician and given that Alberta already has a worker shortage in many of these areas, how can this government claim to be building this province yet shortchanging Albertans on the skilled professionals we need for our future?

Mr. Lukaszuk: This government has made a commitment to advanced education by increasing advanced education's budget to the degree of 49 per cent over the last 10 years. Now, that shows real commitment, and the commitment is to work consistently with schools and with presidents and with chairs, Mr. Speaker, unlike the opposition. They choose to be NDP on certain days when they want to protect programs, but then they want to be an ultra right-wing party when they want to cut budgets. Our schools know what they're dealing with, and we have a very good relationship with those schools.

Mr. Fox: Well, Mr. Speaker, we aren't the party that is introducing politburo-style programming on our universities.

Given that the president of Red Deer College said that this minister has created the most difficult experience that faculty and staff have ever had to go through and given that despite this government's pleas to the contrary times really are pretty good here in Alberta, why is this minister cutting the legs out from underneath our students and our postsecondary institutions while at the same time claiming that this government is building for the future?

Mr. Lukaszuk: I didn't quite hear the question. He lost me at politburo. Let me tell you, if I may, what we are doing right now. We're working with all presidents and all chairs throughout Campus Alberta. We're making sure that administrative efficiencies are found. We're making sure that a variety of programs exist for students to choose from. We're making sure that if there are any programs that are eliminated, those programs will be otherwise available to our students. We're making sure that we prepare our students for the opportunities and careers that exist and will exist in our province in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Condominium Property Act Consultation

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the inner-city riding of Calgary-Currie we're growing upward, not necessarily outward. Calgary-Currie constituents continue to seek clarity and certainty that will protect owners who need repairs and maintenance of managed property. While it seems the bare-land condominium amendment will help bare-land condominium owners, I ask the Minister of Service Alberta: now that the bare-land condominium amendment has been passed, exactly how will the bare-land condo owners be protected by the Condominium Property Act?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank this member for her advocacy on this issue. She's brought up issues relating to condominium owners repeatedly, and she's also helped facilitate discussion at a local level with many, many condominium owners, something I hope others will actually engage in, having real conversation, dialogue, and real ideas. We've had about 5,000 responses to our condominium consultation, and now we're compiling all of that information to see how best we're able to bring forward changes that further continue to protect Alberta condominium owners.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that boards rely on condominium managers for day-to-day operations and maintenance and advice on issues dealing with legislation and their bylaws, what kind of safeguards will ensure that managers meet specific standards that are going to instill trust in bare-land condo owners?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Based on early indications from the results of the consultation, it appears that a great majority of Albertans are very much inclined to support the notion of having further regulation or licensing of condominium property managers just because their role is so significant. This is something that we're looking to pursue. I would invite all members of this Assembly, before they stand up and take credit for our ideas, to actually put forward some ideas. Maybe they'll do that this time around.

Ms Cusanelli: Again to the same minister . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: You have the floor, Calgary-Currie. Carry on.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that owners, as has happened in my constituency, are often forced to give up their disputes with condominium boards rather than force a drawn-out and costly court battle, what is the other recourse that can be taken to help boards and owners resolve disputes effectively?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank members of the opposition for pointing out how youthful I am and how vibrant I am. I very much appreciate it. [interjections] Much appreciated. Very vibrant. Thank you, Member for Airdrie, for also repeating that.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that just as I think sometimes in this House you have to play the role of mediator in disputes and you have to play the role of finding resolutions to disputes that often take place, I feel that we need to find a similar role for condominium owners. We would in fact be one of the first provinces to come out with this. We're looking at what the best ways are to protect condo owners, and we actually deliver results, not just press releases.

Funding for Hospital Infrastructure

Mr. Barnes: This government continues to ignore critical health care infrastructure priorities. Alberta Health Services has identified an obstetrical department redevelopment as an immediate need in Red Deer in its 2011 capital submission. This project is required in order to meet existing demand due to higher-than-expected birth rates and significant population growth. The provision of a dedicated C-section operating room would relieve pressure on the main surgical unit. To the Minister of Infrastructure: what is this government waiting for?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've explained in this House quite a few times that we work with colleagues from Health and other departments, and we build the priorities that they bring forward to us. We have a very aggressive build in our capital projects going forward. We've got $5.2 billion this year, and we've got $15 billion over the next three years, but every day in this House the opposition brings forward their pet projects. Apparently, they don't think $5.2 billion is enough money to be spending. I think they want us to spend more, and in order to do that, we've got to borrow.

Mr. Barnes: Given that Alberta Health Services considers this an immediate need because, quote, there is no access to an operating room for an emergency C-section, which presents a high patient-safety risk, will the Minister of Health explain to residents of Red Deer and area why this government is delaying this project and putting mothers and newborns at risk?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, my colleague the hon. Minister of Infrastructure makes a good point. Of that $5.2 billion in the provincial capital plan, $2.1 billion is allocated for Health. I'd further agree with him that it's an open question as to what the opposition thinks is an appropriate amount. What I can tell the hon. member is that this is one of several high-priority projects for Alberta Health Services. We have worked with AHS consistently to try to approach these projects in order of priority need. It's interesting. When the hon. member doesn't agree that his constituency's project is the top priority, we get these sorts of questions.

Mr. Barnes: It's about priorities again, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the government failed to acknowledge the immediate need for this project and given that we only became aware of this pressing need through yet another FOIP request, will the Minister of Infrastructure finally commit to releasing the government's list of infrastructure projects by priority so Albertans will know when they are getting their projects, and once and for all, will he be open and transparent and stop being so secretive and political?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know how many times I have to say it in the House. Our priority list is our projects that are approved. There's $5.2 billion approved this year. That list is on the website. Obviously, that's not enough. If they want us to borrow more and build more, stand up and say that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Small-business Assistance

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Small business can be a powerful engine, an opportunity for economic growth. As is the case in Alberta, small businesses account for 96 per cent of all businesses, 27 per cent of our GDP, and 36 per cent of employment in the province. The success of small business depends on many factors, including financial incentives offered by government and by lending institutions. Our neighbour to the south, the United States, employs legislative measures that guarantee that a certain percentage of government contracts are awarded to small business. My questions are to the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education. Is this measure something that we have considered here in Alberta, and if not, why not?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, in Alberta we pride ourselves as government on having an open procurement process. There are no preferential bids being extended to any particular size of business. As long as government requirements relevant to whatever product it is that is being procured are met and as long as we get it at the lowest possible price within the right time parameters, that is the business that gets the order. We do appreciate that small businesses are very important, and that is why this government continuously strives to develop a climate for small businesses to thrive in.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: what other programs and incentives does Alberta have so that we can maintain a thriving small-business environment?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of them, too many to list right now. Business Link is one that definitely comes to mind, that assists small businesses in cutting through some administrative processes that they have to go through. Another one is a recently opened up website on alberta.ca where you will find, for example, all the regulations listed. You can review regulations, see the expiry dates of regulations, and see which regulations pertain to your business. There's a great deal of assistance to small businesses not only during the start-up phase of a business but as they continue to prosper.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question: how much financial support does Budget 2013 provide for small business, and is this a change from previous years?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we continue to fund the services that I mentioned. There are a number of them. Some are delivered directly by government; some are delivered indirectly. We will continue to make sure that in this province we develop a climate within which small businesses can start and can thrive in the future. We will definitely not create any preferential treatment for any particular genre or size of businesses, but we want to make sure that they have ready access to information and that our administrative regulatory system is not a burden to growth.

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we go to Ministerial Statements, could we have your permission and unanimous consent to revert briefly to the Introduction of Guests? Does anyone oppose that request?

Introduction of Guests (continued)

The Speaker: We'll have the Minister of Education, followed by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to members several members in the gallery that we have joining us here today from the education community, some stakeholders that were in the building to get briefed on what we're going to do with the legislation with the education settlement here. They're here to see first reading. The stakeholders include – and I believe we've got them all up there – Jacquie Hansen, president of the Alberta School Boards Association; Dean Sarnecki from the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association; Joan Carr, metro director of the College of Alberta School Superintendents; Kath Rhyason, the executive director of CASS as well; Jeanne Fontaine, the president of the Association of School Business Officials of Alberta; and I believe that's Mary Lynne Campbell, the executive director from the Public School Boards' Association. If I've missed others, I apologize. I think we can give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my absolute pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Brian Storseth, Member of Parliament for Westlock-St. Paul and all-around defender of personal liberty.

First elected to Parliament in 2006, Mr. Storseth currently sits on the Standing Committee on Agriculture and Agri-food and the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. Another key aspect of his portfolio is his chairing of the mining caucus. His work on eliminating the federal hate speech provision is, I am sure, encouraging the Premier and Justice minister as they look to make good on their word to repeal Alberta's hate speech, or hurt feelings, provision.

He is known in Ottawa and across Canada as a true tough-on-crime Conservative with a strong record of standing up for Canadians under the leadership of Prime Minister Harper. I'd ask that Mr. Storseth please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Government House Leader has caught my attention.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In anticipation of Ministerial Statements and other matters, might we ask for unanimous consent now to extend the clock past 3 o'clock to complete the Routine.

The Speaker: Hon. members, you've heard the request for unanimous consent. Does anyone object to giving that unanimous consent?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Hon. members, once again today we had 102 questions and answers in spite of a few testy moments, which is a good indication that we're moving toward allowing as many people who want to ask questions to get up and ask them and for answers to be given. I want to particularly commend Sherwood Park today for not having any preamble whatsoever to her questions. It's a good lesson for others to learn. Yesterday's shining example was Edmonton-Gold Bar. So, obviously, the two of you are doing very well, seated where you are.

Let us move on, then.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Transitioning Services for PDD Clients

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to inform this House and Albertans of the situation we face in our efforts to provide supports to persons with disabilities. We're all beginning to hear from parents or guardians who believe they will see significant cuts in services for their loved ones. They believe that service reductions are driven by the resources available within the disabilities supports budget. This is evident in questions asked in this House, in concerns expressed by my colleagues, in the communities I visit, and in the letters and e-mails I receive.

Mr. Speaker, we're not adjusting services to individuals because of fiscal capacity identified in the budget, though clearly we have signalled that we intend to change the form and the purpose of the supports we provide. Changes in service levels, increased or reduced, will happen as a result of the fact that we are able to assess need, and we're going to allocate services based on need.

We're currently doing assessments of need for all of the individuals we support based upon the supports intensity scale, or SIS, as it's called. Those assessments show that there are a number of individuals whose support levels are greater than their measured need would indicate. I do not mean for a second, Mr. Speaker, to make light of their circumstances or to indicate that they do not require any support, but I do mean to highlight that there are people who get supports beyond what is needed.

Mr. Speaker, the system identifies the needs of individuals on a scale of 1 to 7, with category 1 identifying those with low support needs and category 7 indicating that extraordinary behaviour supports are needed. We're finding that a number of individuals who are currently receiving significant supports do not appear to have the needs that such support levels would indicate. Many of them fall within category 1.

Among those, Mr. Speaker, who fall within category 1, we are currently providing an alarming range of services, from one individual who receives $114 per year in supports to one individual who receives just under $300,000 per year in supports. This clearly underlines the fact that for some individuals the supports are currently allocated based on reasons other than need. I cannot support such a model because it's not defensible or sustainable. People who need services have to get services, but we cannot provide services beyond need.

Added to this reality, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that there are certainly real transitions identified in the budget. We intend to move from an emphasis on community access supports to an emphasis on supports that provide for inclusion and engagement in the community. As a result, service providers who offer supports are hearing that they could face contract impacts, sometimes significant ones, as we move to renew contracts. We are working collaboratively with service providers, so some of them have seen potential dollar figure impacts that are indeed very significant. These service providers are concerned, and they have expressed their concerns to parents. They have suggested that they may not be able to offer certain supports in the future, and that heightens the anxiety. I understand these concerns, and there is actually another side to this story, which I will discuss shortly.

First, I wish to further underline the scope of the supports situation. This has to be dealt with because I need to ensure that we provide supports to people who need them and that the system is sustainable. Consider this. Based on information from Statistics Canada, there are about 430,000 Albertans who have some form of disability, something that serves as a barrier. About 100,000 of those rely on natural and community supports, or they have found ways to engage and belong without assistance. They get no support, and they do not request any.

But there are about 330,000 people who have a range of more moderate to severe disabilities, who may have barriers to employment or community engagement, Mr. Speaker. Three hundred and thirty thousand. Our current disability services funding provides support for 25,000 people, or less than 10 per cent of that population. Some of that population may not need support – that's true – but many do and actually are currently asking for it, yet they are often excluded from the system because of their inability to access programs or because of entrance barriers like the IQ test. This is not the right or the responsible way to provide services.

The right thing to do is to provide supports based on need. That need first has to be fairly and impartially determined by conducting a scientific, internationally recognized assessment, which is what SIS is, Mr. Speaker. SIS does not fully consider the individual's circumstances, and because of this it cannot be used as a sole determinant of funding, but it is a credible measure of need. We will use SIS and factors like personal circumstances to determine service allocation.

The supports have to be considered on the basis of need, but they also have to be provided with compassion to people who we clearly understand are vulnerable. We will do so, Mr. Speaker, and ensure that there are appeal mechanisms for assessments and for service decisions.

I do need now to talk about the other side of the story, that I referenced earlier, Mr. Speaker, when I talked about the impacts to service providers. At this point the providers have not actually seen a new contract. They do not know what impacts they face. When we implement the changes to the community access supports, there will indeed be impacts, but they will not be as severe as has been suggested. We are now working at the individual provider level. We are working on a way to ensure that the impacts to a provider are more manageable during this transition. To accomplish this, we will access supports from the budget in Human Services, and we may yet require additional support, which I will seek if necessary. This is going to be difficult, but at this stage I believe this goal can be accomplished.

Moving forward, we will continue our transition from community access supports toward supports that provide more engagement and inclusion in the community. Service providers who wish to contribute to this transition will find ample ways to do so, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we could not do this without them. This transition will ensure that persons with disabilities who can work, who want to work, including volunteer work, will have the supports in place to help them do so. We recognize that there are people who cannot benefit from such supports, who require community access supports as their only way to engage the community. The supports will be there for those that need them.

Mr. Speaker, that is the situation and the work we need to undertake. We have much to do, not the least of which is to finish the SIS assessments. This must be done in order to determine need going forward and to begin the work of allocating services based on that need. This will be difficult – and I signal that now – but we will transition this in a caring and compassionate way. We will not begin by withdrawing services. We will begin by having conversations with families and guardians and together finding a solution.

Mr. Speaker, I have described the difficult structural issues we face today and the significant amount of work that needs to be done. I am confident that we can make the changes we need, and I'm going to drive hard to do so because in the coming years the goal is to make further transitions. In the coming years I would like to remove the artificial barriers that currently exist at ages 18 and 65, transitions that disrupt lives while often adding no value to supports. I would like to remove the IQ test that prevents so many individuals from accessing supports that would allow them to pursue their goals.

Mr. Speaker, I have been mandated by the Premier to provide services and supports to all persons with disabilities through a system that provides for supports based on need, that provides a continuum of supports as people age and change, and that provides supports in a compassionate manner. I am also mandated to ensure that the support system is open, transparent, measurable, and accountable, and it has to be sustainable. I am honoured to take that task on, and with the partnership of an incredible group of dedicated individuals in the department this will be done.

I make that promise, and I am prepared to be measured by it. I will make one more although I've already made this one. If you need services, you will get services. End of story, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I did receive a few notes. There is no set time limit that I'm aware of for ministerial statements. The tradition is typically observed as being about five minutes. This one went on for about 11 minutes, so you might want to visit that, hon. members. It's all very serious stuff, so we allowed it to go on. Please, let's keep that in mind for future reference.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, a point of clarification under section 13 of the standing orders. I would just like to know for future reference how much time the opposition will have to give responses. If it's a five-minute statement, do we get five minutes to respond?

The Speaker: Thank you. I'm sorry. It doesn't work that way, hon. member, but I will clarify this a little bit further, just at the end of this.

Let's just move on and hear the statement from Calgary-Shaw in response.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Minister, for attempting to clarify what your planned reforms to PDD funding will mean. Unfortunately, I don't believe this statement provided any clarity at all, and it's an unfortunate reality that the minister felt that he needed to deliver this ministerial statement at all.

The minister's remarks must be understood in the context of the fear and anxiety many Alberta PDD families have over the impending July 1 transition of services. For months this minister has pushed the transition on those who receive PDD supports from the province with precious little in the way of detail on how it will go. Understandably, Mr. Speaker, this is causing tremendous worry for families of vulnerable individuals who have come to rely on these supports. In many cases these supports are what allowed them to thrive. I can't tell you how many Albertans I've talked to who are terrified of what this government's ill-defined transition plan will mean for their loved ones or how many front-line employees would gladly forgo their so-called wage increases to ensure that those they care for daily do not have their supports cut.

While attempting to reform the system to serve clients better is a worthy pursuit, doing so with blinders on, as this government is doing, is a recipe for disaster. Mr. Speaker, this minister talks about the ongoing assessments based on the supports intensity scale – an interview based on hypothetical scenarios – and how those outcomes will determine what supports an individual receives.

To illustrate just how badly this transition has been handled, PDD families were promised the exact opposite. They were told the SIS assessments would not determine funding for supports. They were assured the SIS was simply a pilot project. My own parents, who help care for my sister, who receives PDD support, were told exactly that. Now here they are along with thousands of other PDD families and caregivers awaiting the results of an interview and finding out which number between 1 and 7 they will be assigned to determine which supports they will get. [interjections] Minister, you are reducing people's lives to a number between 1 and 7, and for some unexplainable reason, you don't see a problem with that.

Mr. Speaker, this PDD transition is simply following in the footsteps of so many PC policy failures. It has been underconsulted, poorly communicated, and rushed ahead despite warnings and red flags from everyone impacted. It is government knows best at its worst, and this time it's hitting our most vulnerable.

I along with many Albertans was hoping to hear something more substantive from the minister today. I was hoping for some long-promised clarity and solid evidence that supports will not be lost, as the minister so often likes to remind us. Instead, I suppose Albertans will just simply have to take his word for it. But given what this government's word has meant of late, I'm sure you can forgive them for being a little skeptical.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, ministerial statements and responses to ministerial statements are similar to private members' statements. It's not customary to heckle each other during them, and it's certainly not customary to interrupt them when they're being delivered. If we could please remember that, that would be helpful.

Secondly, I've received a request from the third and fourth parties to join in this discussion and to offer their brief comments. That requires unanimous consent.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It has become a recurring theme with this government to act first and deal with unanticipated effects as they arise, from dramatic health care changes to an adequate seniors care policy to First Nations policy and now to persons with developmental disabilities. Decisions are made without proper research, consulting, and review of best practices.

Then a critical piece, Mr. Speaker, examining the process of change, change that will minimize the pain of change. This government is now trying to placate PDD clients, their families, and service providers with half-truths and assurances that everyone will be better transitioning to a new needs-based service delivery model with a "greater focus on achieving positive outcomes." I ask you: positive for PDD clients and their families or positive for this province's bottom line? Why can we not in 2013 learn from the boom-bust nature of our economy and provide stable, sustainable support for essential human and government services?

Our most vulnerable have been speaking out loudly and clearly for decades. They are fearful because of this government's erratic and inadequate supports. They are jaded because they have faced a chronic shortage of service. They are tired of not being consulted. They are angry when not having their concerns heard and acted upon. The Alberta Association for Community Living, Alberta Council of Disability Services, and Alberta Disability Workers Association have all joined together against these rapid and dramatic changes.

Make no mistake; this new service delivery model will negatively impact PDD clients and their families in real ways, ways that the rest of us have no understanding of. The least our government can do is ensure stable and dependable funding, proper consultation, and careful, thoughtful implementation of change to improve care for all vulnerable people. Persons with developmental disabilities deserve the very best we can give, and they're not getting it, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. House leader for the New Democratic opposition.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that the minister has taken the time to try and offer additional information to explain the rationale behind his draconian cuts to services for people with development disabilities. However, his statement is profoundly disappointing.

First of all, he refers to the supports intensity scale as somehow demonstrating that a whole bunch of people are receiving services that they don't need. However, I must remind members of this Assembly that over two years ago when I first raised the impact of the SIS, I was assured by at least one and possibly two different ministers that this new assessment tool would not be used to cut services to people who currently receive them. I was also assured that the limits imposed by IQ tests would be removed at the same time that the SIS was implemented.

It is now very clear that these assurances amount to yet another broken promise by this PC government. Indeed, this government started by cutting services. They did so when they chose to take at least $42 million out of the budget for PDD. Let us be very clear, Mr. Speaker. The minister continuously tries to confuse the issue by suggesting that because his overall budget went up ever so slightly, he is not reducing services. This is simply not accurate. His budget went up for two reasons. First, he needed to fund his partially kept promise to increase salaries for front-line workers. Second, he needed to find $10 million extra to fund his arbitrary decision to close Michener Centre.

Once those two new expenses are factored out, his ministry actually lost money, a lot of money, and this money is coming at the expense of community access support. The notion that you can somehow increase community inclusion through employment while cutting half the money that would assist in this revised focus is ludicrous, Mr. Speaker, and the minister knows it.

In addition, the minister suggests that another rationale for cutting this community access by almost half is that there are a whole bunch of other disabled Albertans who do not receive funding through PDD. Now, this is absolutely true. But if this was actually an issue about redistributing the resources more equally among a larger number of eligible Albertans, then the money would not have come out of the system. It would not have been cut. Indeed, if equal access to resources was really the issue, Mr. Speaker, funding for PDD would be increasing, not decreasing. Yet it did decrease by at least $42 million.

As I stated last week, in some areas it looks like the cuts may be even greater than was initially predicted. The Alberta Council of Disability Services said that the total cuts to the northeast region are close to $9 million out of a total budget of $23 million. If these cuts were just to community access, the number would have been closer to $2 million. Instead of just having a 40 per cent cut to community access, the northeast is facing a 40 per cent cut to their whole budget. These cuts mean that not only will Albertans with disabilities in the northeast region lose support to attend community programs but many will lose essential services. Some high-needs individuals will be losing necessary one-on-one staff support, and others will lose residential care or overnight staff support as organizations lay off nearly half of their staff.

These are draconian. The government needs to do the right thing. They need to restore trust and funding . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Speaker's Ruling Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: I want to provide just a little bit of clarification to what's just occurred here regarding Ministerial Statements. I want to refer you, first of all, to House of Commons Procedure and Practice, starting on page 443, where under Guidelines it reads the following.

During "Statements by Ministers", Ministers are expected to make brief and factual statements on government policy or announcements of national interest. Members speaking on behalf of parties recognized by the House are normally the ones who speak in response to a Minister's statement. However, with the unanimous consent of the House, independent Members have been allowed to respond. In responding to the statement, Members are not permitted to engage in debate or ask questions of the Minister. The length of each response may not exceed the length of the Minister's statement; Members who exceed this length are interrupted by the Speaker. The rules provide no explicit limitation of time allotted to the Minister or the overall time to be taken for these proceedings, although the duration of the proceedings can be limited at the discretion of the Chair.

It goes on, and then it closes by saying:

It is customary as a courtesy for Ministers to advise opposition critics in advance of their intention to make a statement in the House. However, should no such warning be given, custom does not prohibit a Minister from making a statement.

Now, that's according to the guidelines of House of Commons Procedure and Practice.

However, it has been a long-standing tradition in this House for the many, many years that I as Speaker can remember, both as a minister and a private member, that ministers typically, when they request to give a minister's statement, deliver it in that sort of five- or six-minute time frame as a rule. Then the lead critic for the Official Opposition has usually delivered a response within a convention of three minutes. That's been the understanding. Then if there are third and fourth parties in the House, they can certainly request unanimous consent to deliver what has usually amounted to about a one-minute response.

Now, there are variations to that. Sometimes it's two minutes and so on. But in having observed this over the years, many of them are delivered in one minute. When you add all of that up – five minutes on the part of a minister, three minutes on behalf of the Official Opposition, and then one to two minutes or thereabouts for third and fourth parties – it comes to about 10 or 12 minutes, not 20 or 21 minutes, as we've seen today.

Again, it's a very sensitive issue, but typically when ministers get up to speak on issues, they're always sensitive and important issues, and they're just as important to opposition members. Nonetheless, I would ask you to please try and abide by the long-standing tradition of the House, which is somewhere in the neighbourhood of the minutes that I've just given, and as chair I will do my best to try and enforce that going forward.

Point of Order Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

Mr. Mason: Yes. Under Standing Order 13(2) I would like to request an explanation. Given that the minister was allowed to go on for 11 minutes without interference from the chair, my first question is: why, then, was the member from the fourth party cut off when she had not even reached half that length of time? I don't know the exact time, but it certainly wasn't 11 minutes.

Secondly, with respect to the time limits that you've just indicated, could we see some citations or precedents for that so that we could know where that came from?

The Speaker: Well, with respect to the first question, hon. member, I've already addressed that. The minister who delivered the statement was here when I first commented on it, and I'm sure that he will read what I just said now, when I spoke for a second time on the matter.

Now, there is no hard-and-fast rule that says that a minister can only speak for this many minutes. We don't have a rule like that, hon. member, and everyone here knows that. Similarly, when the Official Opposition rises to speak, it's a matter of convention, usually, that it has been a three-minute response, but there's nothing in our standing orders dictating that either. Then when we get to the third and fourth parties, who wanted unanimous consent to speak today, there's nothing in the rules that says that it has to be one minute or two minutes or three minutes. But the general rule overarching all of that is that none of the responses from the opposition should exceed three minutes, and that's why the bell rang when the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was speaking.

This is another area that House leaders might want to address. I've read to you the citation that I had from House of Commons Procedure and Practice. If you followed that one, then equal time would be given to opposition members. If the minister here speaks for 10 minutes, then you might be welcome to speak for 10 minutes as well. But the convention of this House has been to limit opposition comments to three minutes. That has been the long-standing practice.

As such, that matter is now clarified and closed. But I do invite the House leaders to again address a number of these housekeeping issues.

Thank you.

Ms Notley: Pursuant to 13(2) one very quick follow-up question. You talked about the different conventions, and you talked about how there had been a breach of conventions by different parties. It had always been my understanding that there was another convention, that decisions are to be distributed equally. I'm just curious as to why the remedy of cutting off a speaker was not applied equally to all speakers who may have breached . . .

The Speaker: It does, hon. member. I've already clarified that. Sit down, please.

I've already clarified that, hon. member. Now I've invited you as a House leader to meet with other House leaders and the Government House Leader and talk about that. If you want to put in place a rule with specific time limits, then I invite you to do that. Otherwise, I've read you the citation that I have been following, and that closes the matter. If you wish to raise it again in your own ways, then please do so. Otherwise, I will enforce it as has been the convention of the House.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West for a member's statement, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Significance of Postsecondary Institutions

Mr. Jeneroux: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to stand today in the House and express my passion and support for postsecondary institutions within our province. Fortunately for Alberta, we are home to a number of first-rate institutions of higher education, some of which are internationally renowned.

There are countless ways in which our halls of learning benefit us. The University of Alberta, my alma mater, for instance, is home to a number of first-rate programs, including the Alberta School of Business, that continue to lead the world in ground-breaking research and in producing some of the most highly trained professionals in the world. The Faculty of Engineering, for example, is able to claim a good deal of credit for the prosperity of our oil and gas industry and is helping to lead the way in finding innovative ways of limiting our environmental footprint.

No less important is the intrinsic value to be drawn from pursuing an education for its own sake. It's no mystery that an educated citizenry is a thoughtful, active, and engaged citizenry. That is precisely what our province needs going forward and growing forward. We have cultivated some of the best professors and continue to attract experts from around the globe. However,

Mr. Speaker, sometimes we need to adapt, enhance, and grow to ensure we continue to have world-class postsecondary choice. This is why I'm confident that by fostering the growth of our postsecondary institutions and encouraging Albertans to take advantage of opportunities to develop their skills, talents, and minds, we contribute to ensuring a strong and vibrant future for Alberta.

We have a strong tradition of world-class education, cutting-edge research, and strong graduation rates. Because of this, I am very excited about our province's future in postsecondary education, and I'm confident that this tradition of excellence will continue for many years to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Calgary-Bow.

Labour Negotiations with Teachers

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for all you do.

It looks like we are finally on the verge of a teacher deal in the great province of Alberta. Now, this is good, and I know that every Member of this Legislative Assembly would agree with that. Certainly, every parent wants what's best for our kids and labour stability in education. How we got to this point, though, Mr. Speaker: this is a serious issue. You see, March 15 the government held a press conference to announce a much-needed victory. The problem is that they really were spiking the football before they were in the end zone.

There are 62 elected school boards in Alberta, and they did not see that contract proposal until the day the government announced it. No wonder there is push-back from boards. They are elected officials, and they are a valuable partner in public education. As such, they ought to be part of the process. They are right to have raised this issue. Now, nearly all of them have signed on the dotted line at this point but many of them begrudgingly so. I have spoken to many of them. Many of them are saying that they are scared of possible ramifications if they did not. That's not exactly cultivating a good relationship going forward.

Now, teachers will be taking a wage freeze for three years. I applaud their commitment to the province of Alberta for doing so. There was initially some resistance on that front, and seeing as the government did not campaign on that, I think we can understand why. They waited until after the election to announce it, not to mention the fact that they wouldn't be honouring their promise of predictable, long-term, stable funding.

The minister says that the bargaining process is broken, and on that point I think he might be right. But what he failed to point out is that his government created this bargaining process. When it comes to accepting responsibility and being accountable for your actions, a former teacher of mine used to remind me and other students of this, and I think it applies. If the shoe fits, wear it. We might have a deal, but as much as the minister owns it, he has to own what has happened up to this point as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Tartan Day

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to recognize that April 6 was Tartan Day. Tartan Day celebrates people of Scottish heritage. It brings attention to their accomplishments and contributions to sports, science, technology, and the economy of Alberta.

On April 6, 1320, the declaration of Arbroath was signed, and thus Scotland was declared an independent and sovereign state. The declaration urged acceptance to the Pope not to take the English claim on Scotland seriously, and thus Scotland's freedom was recognized.

Here in Canada the Scottish influence on our democracy is clear. Alberta was settled by pioneering Scots like North West Mounted Police Colonel Macleod and Colonel Irvine. Also of Scottish descent were our first Prime Minister, John A. Macdonald, and Alberta's first Premier, Alexander Rutherford, as were both the first mayors of Calgary and of Edmonton.

In light of these significant past contributions made by the Scots to the present-day province of Alberta, I hope all members will join me in paying a belated tribute to Tartan Day, celebrated on April 6.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Cuts to Health Care Services

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This morning we heard that half of the palliative home-care nurses in Calgary are being laid off. This means that services for people needing end-of-life care in Calgary will be drastically affected. It's a direct hit to the quality of care that we give to the elderly and the sick in this province. There will only be one nurse on call in the evening for all Calgary patients.

These cuts are just the latest in a series of layoffs and service cutbacks to health care in our province. There are layoffs or impending layoffs in community care, speech pathology, interpretation services, and laboratory services. All of these cuts belie the Premier's campaign promise that there would be no service cuts. Mr. Speaker, Albertans who need health care deserve much better than this. The government has been trying to sell Albertans on their claim that the effects of this budget on crucial services like health care and education will be minimal. That's simply untrue.

The loss of 40 jobs in Calgary for palliative care nurses is the drastic result of this government's broken-promise budget, and it takes comfort and quality of life away from dying Albertans. Cutting laboratory services in Westlock, Vermilion, and Wainwright is another broken promise, leading to reduced services for rural Albertans. Because of increased wait times for blood test results, stroke patients might be sent to Edmonton in an ambulance for treatment.

This PC government is cutting health care for Albertans instead of asking the wealthiest Albertans to pay their fair share in taxes. This government is taking care away from the elderly and the sick. Albertans were promised more, Mr. Speaker, and Albertans deserve better. It's clear the only way that they're going to get it is to elect an NDP government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, unless my notes are incorrect, we have two more members to speak, but I only show one at the moment. That's Calgary-Shaw. Is there a second member? There isn't? Okay.

Let's go on with Calgary-Shaw as the final speaker for today, then.

Trust in Government

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we wind down this spring session, mercifully for the members opposite, Albertans are learning that there is even more scandal and incompetence plaguing this PC government than anyone could have originally thought. We've seen promise after promise broken and scandal after scandal unfold. This government's credibility has been taking a beating and with it their approval rating.

But with everything we've seen in the last two months, I have to ask: is it any wonder? Is it any wonder Albertans don't trust this PC government to manage their finances when they've plunged Alberta back into debt after promising to balance the books? Is it any wonder Albertans don't trust this PC government to administer justice in a timely manner when the system they have created has delayed court cases involving serious crimes for so long that the accused is able to walk free? Is it any wonder Albertans don't trust this PC government to manage their education when they've delivered some of the most heavy-handed cuts to the postsecondary system Alberta has ever seen after promising not to balance the budget on the backs of students?

Is it any wonder Albertans don't trust this PC government to manage their health care when they lost the support of doctors, nurses, pharmacists, caregivers, and have allowed health bureaucrats to make off with millions and millions of taxpayer dollars in undeserved bonuses? Is it any wonder Albertans don't trust this PC government to uphold the principles of good ethics when the Premier herself refuses to release information about millions of dollars paid out to insiders after promising to restore transparency to her office?

Broken promises, Mr. Speaker. This isn't rumour or imagination or fearmongering. These are facts, and this is just how bad it's gotten. This is not what Albertans voted for in 2012, and if this PC government won't hold itself to account, I look forward to Albertans showing them what accountability looks like in 2016.

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, do you have a petition to present?

Mr. Eggen: Yes, I do. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition that calls on the government to increase postsecondary funding rather than drastic cuts to colleges and universities. I have a tabling of 1,377 signatures today.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: Minister of Justice, did you have a notice of motion?

Mr. Denis: Yes.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, sir. I rise today to give oral notice of the following government motion:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 22, the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, being a money bill, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Bill 26 Assurance for Students Act

Mr. J. Johnson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce Bill 26, the Assurance for Students Act.

This legislation will make the framework agreement that this government presented to the Alberta Teachers' Association and the Alberta School Boards Association earlier this year, which was presented after two years of negotiations and which has since overwhelmingly been supported, binding on all school boards, the Alberta Teachers' Association, the Alberta School Boards Association, the Crown, and the Minister of Education.

Mr. Speaker, when I say overwhelming support, I mean it. Over 96 per cent of Alberta teacher locals voted to ratify, and all but one of our 62 school boards supported the agreement. However, the current framework, because of our bargaining structure, requires unanimous support to proceed. Therefore, in the interests of Alberta's 600,000 students and their parents as well as the vast majority of school boards and teachers across the province who supported the agreement, we are introducing the Assurance for Students Act. This agreement is good for kids, and that has to be our number one priority.

With that, I move first reading of Bill 26 and ask the Assembly to support it.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have several tablings of returns and reports today, so I'll ask you to please be brief.

Let's have a demonstration by Edmonton-Calder on how that works. You have some tablings today?

Mr. Eggen: Yes, I do, and I'm glad to be an example of a good example, Mr. Speaker.

I have the appropriate number of copies of a tabling. It's like a petition, but it's done in their own way, 1,560 signatures demanding the government keep the Michener Centre open to vulnerable Albertans. This is one of many, many piles of these that I have to table.

The second one, I have the appropriate number of copies of a CBC news investigation with supporting documents outlining the allegations against the MLA for Edmonton-Manning.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Is that it, Edmonton-Calder? Just those two?

Mr. Eggen: Yes. That's correct.

The Speaker: I had you listed for four or five.

Let us move on, then, to Calgary-McCall, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five requisite copies of National Freedom of Information Audit 2012, which I mentioned in the questions I asked during question period.

I've got one more here. I'm tabling the appropriate number of copies of the press release issued by the United Nurses of Alberta regarding the layoffs of palliative care nurses. Heather Smith, the Alberta UNA president, has written a letter to the Alberta Health Services president and CEO, Chris Eagle, requesting an immediate itemization of all the upcoming layoffs and other anticipated changes due to these staffing changes.

I also have five copies of petitions asking the Alberta government to keep Michener Centre open. It's done in such a way, Mr. Speaker, that it has been signed by thousands of Albertans. The Michener Centre has been a home to vulnerable Albertans with severe developmental disabilities for decades. This document shows the support from Albertans across the province. They want to keep the Michener Center open.

Thank you.

3:30

The Speaker: Thank you.

Edmonton-Centre, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Three tablings today, Mr. Speaker. The first is from a constituent, Tyler Stephenson, a PhD candidate in chemical and materials engineering, who writes to express his concern over government cutbacks to education. He is a born-and-bred Albertan. His family is the second generation to run a cattle ranch in High River. He wants to point out that the lack of government funding for education is directly affecting his research progress and that he is an individual who falls well into the category of people the government wants working for them. This wise investment is going off the rails. That's the first one.

The second one is a report from the fabulous Edmonton-Centre constituency office with a copy of an Internet mailing campaign to councillors and MLAs in support of the city of Edmonton's upcoming application for a municipal sustainability initiative grant for Edmonton's downtown development. I received 96 e-mails, and I will table my report. You will notice it's not every one of the letters.

The second report from the fabulous Edmonton-Centre constituency office is an Internet letter that is supporting the Downtown Vibrancy Coalition to fund the arena project and kick-start $3 billion in public and private investment. Those e-mails were signed and sent by 1,317 people as of yesterday. I will table copies of that letter and the names of people who sent them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite copies here of a report prepared for the Alberta Market Surveillance Administrator. Specifically, I refer to page 26 in the report and the five major generators controlling the market.

Mr. Speaker, the second report I have is a snapshot from the Power Pool of Alberta of the price of electricity yesterday, May 13, at noon. What's important about this is that it gives the average price for the last 24 hours as $258 a megawatt. Yesterday's average at noontime was $234 a megawatt. The seven-day average is running at $210 a megawatt. The 30-day average is $225 a megawatt, which equates to roughly just above 25 cents a kilowatt hour real-time price. The difference between myself and the minister – and I don't know if the minister realized it – was that the price he was quoting was 60 to 90 days old in real time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This actually was a petition, so if it's inappropriate to table it, I'll do it tomorrow.

The Speaker: If it is a petition and it's been vetted as to form past Parliamentary Counsel, then it can be tabled tomorrow during petitions. Thank you.

Are there other tablings? Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll make this very quick. The petition that I attempted to put forward on the table yesterday was not to form, so I will table it now. It is 1,560 signatures put together by those who were protesting the closure of the Michener Centre. The requisite copies are here.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there other tablings?

Hon. members, I don't show any points of order, so let us move on.

Orders of the Day Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

34. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that:

- A. Pursuant to Standing Order 77(2) Bill 26, Assurance for Students Act, may be advanced two or more stages in one day;
- B. If Bill 26 has not yet been introduced, then immediately following the passage of this motion the Assembly shall revert to Introduction of Bills for the introduction of Bill 26, Assurance for Students Act.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is an important consideration today. We've seen Bill 26 introduced today for first reading. The Minister of Education had indicated to the House previously, I think during the introduction, that the confirmation of the agreement by all parties was due yesterday, that when the deadline passed at 3 o'clock yesterday, all parties but one school board and two ATA locals had agreed to assent to the agreement, to affirm the agreement.

This bill essentially puts in place that agreement that well over 95 per cent of teachers and well over 95 per cent of school boards agreed to. It's important and timely that it be dealt with quickly. The agreement fails if it's not assented to by all parties. It's important that this bill, which puts that agreement into place, be dealt with by the House expeditiously; therefore, we would request the consent of the House to pass this motion and allow Bill 26 to proceed to second reading today.

The Speaker: Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I'm not feeling particularly good about this motion. We have the time available to us to go through this bill in the normal sort of way. We have plenty of time here this week. It's not as though suddenly everything will dissolve and be gone if we just use the time normally, as we do with any other bill. I think that we don't see this sort of legislation forcing agreements very often. Since I've had this in my hand from just a moment ago or so, I think it's only fair to all parties considering this legislation, including here in this Chamber, that we just move through the bill as we normally do with any other bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there other speakers?

Seeing none, to close debate?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: I am sorry. Chestermere-Rocky View, did you wish to speak?

Mr. McAllister: Yeah. I may be confused, which happens from time to time, so I beg your forgiveness. For clarity I thought we were putting forth a motion to go to second reading. Is this actually second reading?

The Speaker: This is not a bill, hon. member. This is a motion, and it is debatable. If you wish to speak to it, then I would welcome you to speak to it. The question has been called, however.

Mr. McAllister: No.

[Government Motion 34 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 207 Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 207, the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013.

Mr. Speaker, over a year and a half ago I met a wonderful lady at a dinner party. Karen is her name. During our conversation I was told that her liver was slowly failing and that she would eventually require a liver transplant. Without significant improvements to our human donation procurement system and transplantation infrastructure here in Alberta, the likelihood of Karen receiving a liver is slim; in fact, slim to none.

The enlightenment that evening at dinner, Mr. Speaker, about the dire condition of our organ procurement system here in Alberta begs to ask a number of questions, questions of why. Why are there currently 4,000 Albertans on kidney dialysis at a cost of $60,000 a year per patient? Why do we currently have 672 patients on our most urgent transplant waiting list? Why is it that over the past five years 214 Albertans have died waiting for organs? Why is it that only 8 per cent of people who are donor candidates coming through the emergency room doors actually made it to the donor process?

Mr. Speaker, I have a quote from Dr. James Shapiro, who is a U of A transplant surgeon. He said in an e-mail, and I quote: the liver waiting list is almost the worst I've known it in 18 years as a transplant surgeon here in Alberta, and our patients die by the day while waiting. Those lucky ones that get transplants are often close to and sometimes almost through death's door, not the perfect time to transplant. The organ donor rates in Alberta are now close to the worst in the country when they used to be one of the best. This is disgraceful, especially since Alberta has truly flagship programs in all organ systems. We have to be better at organ donation. We need the infrastructure at each and every hospital in Alberta. If a life cannot be saved by maximal medical means, organ donations should be seen as the highest next priority. Unquote.

Mr. Speaker, I along with Karen's good friends and everyone up here in our members' gallery that was introduced earlier have taken on the challenge of doing whatever we can to lobby whomever we can to give Karen and her family hope and to give hope to the thousands of other Albertans who are battling life-threatening organ failures.

I've talked about the issue of organ donation here in the Assembly on many occasions, sounding like a broken record to a number of you, I'm sure. I've had a number of members' statements, numerous questions to the hon. minister, and many presentations to caucus and to committee. There have also been many attempts made in the past here in the Assembly to improve our human organ procurement system. Back in April of 2000, for example, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek chaired the Alberta Advisory Committee on Organ and Tissue Donation and Transplantation. It is a wonderful piece of work. I know that Dr. Norman Kneteman was a member of this committee as well. I thank you and the doctor for such wonderful work here back in 2000, yet it was put on the shelf until I dusted it off. It has been a huge resource for me, so thank you, hon. member.

In 2004 a past MLA, Mr. Ron Liepert, who was a private member at the time, brought forward a private member's bill regarding the opt-out clause with respect to organ donation rather than the opt-in. It didn't go too far, Mr. Speaker. The current Edmonton-Manning MLA just last year, in 2011, passed a private member's bill. It was Bill 201, the Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011, allowing individuals who wished to donate organs upon death to sign the back of their Alberta health cards. Great work, and I applaud the member, but Bill 207 will significantly expand on that initiative.

Two weeks ago, as we all know, Mr. Speaker, I introduced a private member's bill, Bill 207, and now, thankfully, it has been converted to a government bill. So I thank all of my government colleagues, and I thank the hon. minister and the Premier for their support in converting this to a government bill, hoping that it will expedite the process of getting this bill through. I want to thank opposition members as well, my opposition colleagues, for their support. I assume I have their support. I guess I will find out here sooner rather than later.

But I especially want to thank the many people in the transplant community – the Dr. Knetemans, the Dr. Lori Wests, the Dr. Atul Humars out there, Dr. James Shapiro, of course – for the wonderful work that they do at the University of Alberta hospital, and all of the patients that I've interviewed. I've interviewed a number of patients waiting for the gift of life. It's heart wrenching, Mr. Speaker. I've talked to many organ recipients as well, on a happier note, Mr. Robert Sallows being one of them. I've introduced him here in the Assembly, a young fellow who had a double-lung and heart transplant, a good friend of mine. I want to thank all of the people and organizations who have provided me with valuable information, guidance, and advice on this bill.

Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in first reading, Bill 207 deals with the establishment of a corporation in Alberta to be known as the Alberta organ and tissue donation agency. The agency's objectives would be to plan, promote, co-ordinate, and support all activities relating to the donation of human organs and tissues for transplant here in Alberta, including activities relating to education and research in connection with the donation of organs and tissues.

The Alberta organ and tissue donation agency would co-ordinate and support the work of designated hospitals, specifically ICUs and emergency rooms, around the province in connection with donation and transplant and also manage the procurement, the distribution, and the delivery of organs and tissues. The agency would be responsible for the managing of waiting lists and establishing a system to fairly allocate the organs and tissues that are available and establishing and managing an Alberta electronic donation registry and creating a robust awareness campaign around that registry.

Other jurisdictions, Mr. Speaker, such as British Columbia, Nova Scotia, Manitoba, and Ontario all have registries. Ontario's Trillium Gift of Life is the only government agency that we have for organ procurement here in Canada, and it should be a template for us here in Alberta. There has been a dramatic increase in organ and tissue donation in Ontario since its establishment.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I propose in the bill that Alberta drivers have the option to express on their drivers' licences their willingness to donate upon death.

Mr. Speaker, there are many, many people, including myself, who are extremely passionate about improving the donation rate of human organs here in this province. Not only do we need to get this bill passed here in the Assembly but to move forward and establish this agency. We must act now. Our government is acting now, and I thank the hon. member again, the Minister of Health, for all his work. I look forward to the debate on this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you. It is indeed a pleasure to stand up again on the importance of human tissue and organ donation. I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Foothills. I have a huge amount of respect for this particular member. As a former member of the government I have learned to listen to this particular member because he's very passionate and stands up for what he believes in. What's bothersome to me – and the Member for Calgary-Foothills alluded to it in his speaking notes – is: why, why, and why all of these things that he wants to bring forward haven't been done?

Well, Mr. Speaker, let me give you a lesson, a little trip down memory lane. In 1999 I brought forward a private member's bill. The member alluded to it. From there the Premier of the day, Premier Klein, asked me to chair a committee. A Framework for Action: A Coordinated and Integrated Organ and Tissue Donation and Transplant System for Alberta was the report of the Alberta Advisory Committee on Organ and Tissue Donation and Transplantation. The member alluded to this, and he spoke about the good doctor up in the gallery and the many, many people that spent hundreds of hours with me on this particular report. It was a framework for action and what needs to be done to improve organ donation and transplant and all the things that had to be done to make organ donation successful.

I honestly sometimes don't know what the government does with reports. I think they have a separate building somewhere in this province where they take all these reports. If they like them, they go to one place, and if they don't like them or they want to do something with them later, they go into this building that nobody knows about and they collect dust. The Member for Calgary-Foothills alluded to the dust that he probably had to wipe off on this report.

Then we had a bill come forward with the hon. Member for Calgary-West, I believe, a former minister of Energy and Education, who's not a member anymore. That was former member Mr. Liepert, and he was sitting at that particular time as a private member.

We had another bill on organ donation that actually was well read in the Assembly, and it was called the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Act. We've spent a couple of hours, research has, and I want to give credit to my researcher James Johnson, who has worked his little buns off to collect some of this material and provide us with some information. That was the next report.

Then we came in with Bill 201, the Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011, from the Member for Edmonton-Manning. Vigorous debate again. Vigorous acceptance in this Assembly. That was April 29, 2011.

Now it is 14 years later, and we're still having the same debate, once again with what started off as the private member's bill called Bill 207, the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013, from the Member for Calgary-Foothills. We've recently been notified that we've changed it to a government bill. Well, thank the Lord for that. Maybe, just maybe, we'll get some action in regard to the government realizing the importance of organ donation and transplantation.

All of us in this Assembly can talk about people we've met who were waiting for organ donation. I had a cousin – notice I said had – who was waiting for a double transplant, and she's no longer with us. It was just that one unfortunate circumstance where to be a recipient of the transplant, someone else had to be able to donate. We've heard thousands of stories in regard to thousands of people who are waiting for organ donation and transplant, and we have heard hundreds of stories about those lucky enough to receive a transplant.

I recall watching the news a few weeks ago in regard to a very tragic incident. Out of that tragic, tragic incident six lucky Albertans are here today because they were recipients in an incident where the family thought – and I don't exactly know the details on this – about the wishes of that particular individual. It comes to mind that the parents at a very, very difficult time decided that they were going to donate the organs so someone else could enjoy them.

I guess for me – it's May 14, 2013; fourteen years later we're still talking about this – I would like to have some reassurance from the Minister of Health on when he's going to proclaim this and give this bill royal assent. We've all seen how long bills can sit without receiving royal assent. I know the Member for Calgary-Foothills very well and alluded to the fact that I like him very much. I have a deep respect for him, and I actually trust him. I do honestly believe that he's going to be a little bit of a pit bull in regard to making sure that the Minister of Health gets this bill through the process so that it receives royal assent.

I have looked at this bill, and I think it captures some of the things. I'm going to continue to work with the Member for Calgary-Foothills to make sure that this bill doesn't get caught up in the bureaucracy of Alberta Health Services and does what it's intended to do, set up an organ donation line.

It's interesting. I found it absolutely fascinating today as I was doing a brief amount of research. I went to the Alberta Health Services website, pressed a button, and I ended up at the Canadian Transplant Association, I think it was, or the CST, whatever that is. I'm thinking: well, why am I going there when I'm trying to check on something that's happening in Alberta? So there are many, many things that obviously need to be fixed in regard to what the web page shows for just Alberta alone.

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to spend a lot of time on this bill because I have spent thousands of hours standing up on this both as a member of the government and as a member of the opposition. I have absolutely pages and pages and pages of Hansard from when I've spoken in support of organ and transplant donation starting back from 1998, for goodness' sake. I could read into the record some of the things from when I introduced this bill on March 18, 1998, and it goes all the way through to what I said on April 11, 2011, on this organ and transplant issue. I don't need to tell anybody in this Assembly and, for that matter, any doctors and people that work in this how I support this bill.

I am going to leave the members of this Assembly with the same words that I said in 1998 and again in – I don't know; it just goes on and on – 2011. "Don't take your organs to heaven; heaven knows we need them down here."

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's both a privilege and an honour for me to stand and speak today in support of Bill 207. Of course, my first duty and a pleasure this afternoon is to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills for his leadership in bringing this bill forward. There are many other people to thank, and I hope to get to that through the course of these brief remarks. This legislation is of vital importance in Alberta for many reasons that have already been stated. It has my support as Minister of Health and the support of many people directly affected by the need for organ and tissue transplants in Alberta.

I note that you, Mr. Speaker, and this Assembly welcomed a host of public supporters in the members' gallery when Bill 207 was introduced for first reading. Physicians in this province were among those who first showed their support, including a transplant cardiologist at the Stollery children's hospital. Among those who came to support Bill 207 were people who received or were here on behalf of people who have received hearts, kidneys, livers, and lungs. Some have been living with these donated organs for more than 20 years. They're raising families, they're running businesses, they're holding down jobs, and they're contributing in huge ways to leading their communities. Most importantly, they are advocating for an increased focus and allocation of resources to support organ and tissue donation in this province. For that I most humbly thank them.

One supporter was a willing kidney donor known to everyone in this House. These people were here on their own initiative, and many were here as representatives for their organizations. I want to name them once again, Mr. Speaker: the Canadian Liver Foundation, the Canadian Transplant Association, Goodhearts Mentoring, the Alberta Transplant Association, and the Alberta Donates Life Coalition.

I think the question before us, Mr. Speaker, is: what would bring so many people from across Alberta to the members' gallery to show their support for Bill 207? It's because they know first-hand that organ and tissue donation is a life-saving gift that they want others to benefit from. It's because they know first-hand that these gifts of life are also gifts of health and they are gifts of service back to their own communities. That means these gifts of organs and tissues benefit all of the people of our province.

So many people came to show their support because this bill will establish a long-awaited Alberta organ and tissue donation agency. That agency would become the Alberta leader in planning, promoting, co-ordinating, and supporting activities relating to organ and tissue donation. It would manage the procurement, the distribution, and the co-ordination of delivery of organs and tissues. It would co-ordinate and support the work of designated facilities in connection with donations, and it would be responsible for managing wait-lists for transplants that will oversee a fair allocation of available organs and tissues.

Mr. Speaker, as has been stated by many members in this House and most recently by the hon. member opposite, there are many colleagues in this Assembly, present and past, who have advocated for further work and emphasis on organ and tissue donation in our society. I'm pleased to join my colleague in acknowledging the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning and, most particularly, acknowledging the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, who began leadership on this issue long before I and others had the opportunity to serve in this House. Most importantly, I thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills for having the willingness to bring this issue to a head, so to speak, in our province, to challenge us in our thinking not only about the mechanics of organ and tissue donation, the need for an online registry, but the need for a very real and substantive discussion in our society about a critically important issue that we have ignored for too long.

On the public awareness front the new agency under the leadership of the Ministry of Health will educate the public on matters related to organ and tissue donation and help others to provide education. It will provide valuable advice both to me and to any future Minister of Health on this very important issue.

I know that advocates, Mr. Speaker, have long been asking for an Alberta organ and tissue donation registry. The new agency, that I mentioned earlier, would manage such a consent-to-donate registry that would establish information-sharing agreements with relevant agencies in Alberta and beyond our borders and conform to legislation consistent with Alberta's Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to the online registry, which is something that we hope to have up and running very soon after the hopeful passage and proclamation of this bill, there are many opportunities to build upon successes that already exist in Alberta. We were the first in Canada to have an electronic health record, Alberta Netcare. We are among the first to have and will soon be announcing further enhancements to the personal health portal, which is the portal that allows Albertans to receive information about health and health care and very soon will allow them to view information about their own health.

Both of these vehicles are going to be absolutely critical in our ability to make Albertans' intent to donate easier to register, to do so online, and to hopefully have that information linked to their electronic health record so that at the time of need the intent to donate and the other relevant consents that are required can be more easily accessed by our health care professionals. By making it easier for people to register their intent to donate and by raising awareness of the need, we can dramatically increase organ and tissue donations across the province.

Mr. Speaker, I think the statistics in our province bear repeating, and I hope Albertans will take note. The province's decreased organ donation rate was 16 to 17 donors per million population from 1995 until 2005. By 2011, for reasons that I think we need to discuss in the course of debate on this bill, the rate had dropped to 5 to 7 donors per million population. This compares to 16.3 donors per million population in Ontario and to 11.8 donors per million in British Columbia in 2011.

Mr. Speaker, I know and I believe that most members of this House will also know and will attest that Albertans would be well served by an agency dedicated to increasing organ and tissue donations to help others locate and receive the organs and tissues they need to live healthy and productive lives. Through public education Alberta's innovative tissue and organ donation agency will have a positive and profound impact on provincial and national donor rates that will help save lives. By supporting research, it will establish Alberta as a leader in transplant medicine.

Bill 207 makes all of that possible, Mr. Speaker, but what it also does in a very significant way – again, my thanks to the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills for his leadership – is that it serves as a call to action for all of us in this House and all us who are citizens of this province to set the stage to increase those organ and tissue donation rates, to dedicate public resources to better sourcing and supply of organs and tissues, and, most of all, to appeal to what I think is a very real sense of responsibility on the part of Albertans to use their gifts to help make life and quality of life possible for more and more of us in the future.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks on second reading. I again thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills for his leadership and for the expected support I hope we will receive from all members of this House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing order 29(2)(a) is available, hon. members.

Seeing no one under 29(2)(a), let us move on to Edmonton-Caldor.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with some interest in being able to speak to and support Bill 207, Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013. I'm very pleased that we have some forward movement on this important issue here, and I certainly appreciate the Member for Calgary-Foothills doing this work. Good for him.

Now, we know and I think it's been said that across the country organ donation rates have been flat and that particularly in Alberta it's been really on the decline and low. We have reason, I think, to make some amendments to increase this process that we have here in the province. The registry I think is something that the experts have been looking for for a long time, so this is welcome news. We believe that the new agency would be beneficial in helping to co-ordinate activities as well as to raise public awareness, making sure as well, though, Mr. Speaker, that the agency is run in an open and transparent manner and run by experts that would have to be arm's length from the political side of things.

As I go through the bill, I think that, again, there's a great deal of detail that is good. It makes it, I think, to be mandatory for adults to be asked whether or not they will be donors. This is an important thing when you are seeking or renewing an operator's licence. Of course, there are quite a lot of people that don't have a driver's licence, so I was hoping that maybe this provision could in fact extend to everyone who gets photographic identification, not just a driver's licence. The photo ID looks very similar to the driver's licence, so we could probably extend it to that.

Another question I wanted to ask about was providing valid consent through an online registry, that it is not signed by witnessing. I don't understand how this might work. Right now, today, Mr. Speaker, you sign the back of your donor card, right? Living transplants require an additional signature from the donor before any procedure. Deceased donors must have the next of kin sign off. I don't know if the bill actually changes this process or not. I just wanted to maybe put that into the mix to see if we are streamlining or improving that aspect of the process.

As well, just to put it out there, the organization or the co-ordination of this thing: I'm just wondering if it's going to be subject to performance measures. I'm also curious to know how much this new agency might cost. Those are, I guess, my four or five questions that I'll put to you. In the next 24 hours or so we can work through them.

Again, as I say, Alberta New Democrats certainly support an expanded registry that will allow us to meet the needs of donors and to meet the needs of transplant patients. I think this is an awesome step in the right direction.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Standing order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing no one under 29(2)(a), let us move on, then, to the Minister of Infrastructure, followed by Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would first like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills for putting this bill forward. It's about time, and good on you for all your hard work.

This bill aims to increase the rate of organ and tissue donation in the province, a commendable goal. This goal is even more vital when we compare Alberta's and Canada's organ and tissue donation rate to the rest of the world. In 2001 Canada's donation rate was 3.5 donors per million. In 2010 the rate had increased marginally to 13.9 donors per million. Despite a continued need, the rate barely changed over the course of a decade.

These rates are not in line with other developed nations. Spain, for example, recorded 32.1 donors per million in 2010. This is a huge shift from 14.3 per million in 1989. Spain's performance shows that progress is possible and that Canada's low performance is not beyond repair.

One of the reasons the Spanish experience has been more successful is because of the switch to opting-out standards of organ donations instead of opting in, but what is more important for Alberta is their expertise in engaging the public, promoting organ and tissue donation, and designing systems to allow for society-wide tracking of consent of donors. Canada's performance lags despite efforts such as the national organ donor week, which was established by federal law in 1997.

Mr. Speaker, this bill aims to establish an Alberta organ and tissue donation agency, superseding current regional efforts to co-ordinate and encourage organ donation. Having a province-wide body to encourage more donors to sign up could help find efficiencies and expand partnerships to encourage organ donation. These centrally co-ordinated promotions could lead to more engagement with potential donors with a similar amount of expended resources.

This ties in to what I view as the more significant portion of this bill, the creation of the Alberta organ and tissue donation registry. This registry aims to simplify the registration of people's consent for organ and tissue donation. In my mind, this would be a great way to ensure that potential donors' wishes are respected. At the very least it's an excellent step forward from our current system of endorsing the back of our Alberta health care card, which many don't realize is there or simply forget. With the establishment of this registry amazing things become possible.

On a personal note, Mr. Speaker, I know first-hand how many amazing things can happen when organ donation is considered. On July 3, 2001, my son Troy was removed from life support after suffering brain damage from a dirt bike accident six days earlier.

Yes, he was wearing the best helmet money could buy. Also, the health care system in this province is second to none. Not once in that week did we as a family ever think he wasn't getting the best care possible thanks to the U of A hospital. Also, the air medevac worked very well in this province.

While many tough decisions had to be made that week, one decision that came without hesitation was to donate Troy's organs. My family is very close. We knew that should anything happen to one of us, giving the gift of life through organ donation would be a given. My son was all about giving. He was training to be a firefighter and dedicated his life to helping others. That's why when we faced the question about donating his organs, my wife, daughter, and I did not hesitate. Because of our family's decision Troy dramatically changed and altered 28 lives for the better. Yes, 28.

We know that a single mom raising a 10-year-old boy on her own received one of his kidneys. Before she received the kidney, she had to go to the hospital for dialysis, bringing her son with her each day. Since her kidney transplant she no longer needs dialysis. Even more importantly, we know that our family has played a part in giving her child his childhood back.

A man in Saskatchewan received Troy's heart, giving him the gift to watch his grandchildren play soccer. One of the first joint liver-pancreas transplants in western Canada was performed using Troy's organs.

If I can leave you with one message today, it would be this. Talking to your family about organ donation is critical. There are many misconceptions about what it involves, but the more you talk, the more you learn. Should what happened to our family ever happen to you or your family, your decision will be automatic. Deciding to be an organ donor is the first big step. Telling your family is the next. Making organ donation top of mind will help it become a more popular choice for all Albertans.

That said, I was pleased to see the section of this bill where the question of opting in as an organ donor would be asked when registering or renewing your driver's licence. I believe the registry and the requirement for stating a preference would greatly increase the awareness of organ and tissue donation along with the opt-in rate. The more people we have donating organs, the more people who can have a chance at life.

What we need is a clear call for action such as, "The next time you renew your licence, give the gift of life" or something similar. Alberta should realize rate gains over the renewal cycle of a driver's licence. I have no doubt that the Alberta organ and tissue donation agency and the Alberta organ and tissue donation registry would be a powerful combination to increase Alberta's organ and tissue donation rates. By reminding Albertans of their important choice about becoming organ donors, there would be increased discussions in families about donation preferences, making end-of-life decisions just a little bit easier.

I miss Troy, but I am grateful for the legacy he left behind. I know that our loss was not for nothing. There are many families who have benefited because of what happened and because of the decision our family made, but I can say for sure, Mr. Speaker, that organ donation is the right thing to do. Weeks and months later I would still think about the recipients, and a smile would come to my face.

Mr. Speaker, I see many benefits to be found in this bill, and I would like to again thank the Member for Calgary-Foothills for bringing this bill forward. I will be voting in support of this bill, and I encourage my colleagues to vote in favour as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available, technically. I think the standing ovation that you just received speaks well to 29(2)(a).

Let us move on. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to stand and speak to this important bill, Bill 207, Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013. My thanks to the Member for Calgary-Foothills for his leadership on this and his tenacity, hard work.

This is going to make the right choice the easier choice. In health we always talk about trying to make the healthy choice the easier choice as a way of changing human behaviour. This is one aspect of human behaviour that hasn't necessarily been tapped appropriately to ensure that we get the most donations, the most awareness, the most support, and the most contributions for this important medical service, that has really revolutionized a lot of health care in the developed world in the last few decades.

The identification of a new agency, the Alberta organ and tissue donation agency; the importance of co-ordinating and supporting donation organizations that are already out there; educating the public; managing, delivering, and encouraging the use of the online registry; monitoring and measuring the system; and performing other functions are absolutely critical to a kind of cradle-to-grave, if I can use those terms, system that identifies individuals, identifies recipients in a timely way, and makes these organs accessible and healthy in the timely transport and transplant. It's critically important, and I hope this will bring Alberta into a new age relative to the rest of the world, the developed world at least.

Having said that and saying that I fully support this bill, I can't help but take the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to talk about opportunity costs in the health care system and what a difficult challenge this minister has, this government has, all of us have in deciding where health care dollars should go. When so much of what we see in our society is preventable, it's impossible to overlook the fact that we are continuing to pour more and more money into end-stage problems, crises, accidents after they happen. We continue to spend less than 4 per cent of our health budget on prevention, health promotion, and opportunities to reduce the impact. Obviously, we have to address the whole continuum of illness and injury.

I guess I have to say, once again, that we are challenged as a government to recognize there are opportunity costs to investing more and more and more into the issues after the problem has developed. There's no increase in prevention programs in this province. I am aware that roughly 5 per cent of our population consumes close to over 50 per cent of the health care costs. There's a tremendous opportunity for prevention. Whether it's in heart disease, cancer prevention, injury prevention, there are tremendous opportunities that are not being tapped and are hardly being discussed in this Legislature. Maybe they're discussed, but no money follows.

The kind of commitment that I see here, which is laudable for transplant, we also need to see and hear in relation to prevention. The world standards in prevention, which we see in some of the Scandinavian countries and even in some of the developing countries where they recognize they don't have the money for these expensive technologies and important interventions, really should give us pause to look at how much we could be doing in primary prevention in relation to injuries, whether they're injuries in the home, injuries in the community, sports injuries, motor vehicle injuries, or recreation vehicle injuries.

It takes leadership, and it takes investment. Still in 2013 we spend less than 4 per cent of our massive health care budget on prevention. That should give us serious pause. This is an opportunity, as we look at end-of-life issues and the tremendous expense associated with some of these important but very costly interventions in people's lives, to think also about earlier stages of well-being, community supports for people, psychological supports, mental illness, and some of the opportunities for early interventions in childhood and school that return hugely on human productivity, human well-being, and costs to the health care system.

It's just a reminder, as we debate this very important bill, to acknowledge that we talk about prevention a lot, but we don't do a lot about prevention. In some cases kidney disease and kidney transplants could be prevented if we had better management of high blood pressure, of chronic kidney infections, of some of the chronic conditions that need to be identified through a primary care office and then closely monitored through a primary care office. It's ultimately much less suffering, much less cost, and much greater human potential. Whether it's heart disease, injury, cancer, or infectious diseases with vaccinations, we know that prevention is a tremendous investment.

I just want as a matter of process to remind us all that it's not enough to talk about prevention. We have to start investing some of our multibillion-dollar health care budget in prevention, or we will never deal with the load of demands and possible options that we are increasingly allowed to use. We have the finances and the technology and the science to do so.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, let us move on to Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, then.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to start off by saying thank you so much to the Member for Calgary-Foothills, I believe it is, for bringing this bill forward, Bill 207, Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013. I know that it's been a long process. I was actually surprised to learn, when I was speaking with the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, exactly how long that process has taken. She brought it to my attention that she had worked on this bill or a similar bill in 1998 and again in 2011. As we all know, she has been a very active advocate for health. I appreciate the efforts that the Member for Calgary-Foothills has done and the attention and the awareness that you've brought to organ and tissue donation. I also appreciate how dedicated you've been to the process of bringing this forward, and I thank you for that.

I also would like to take a moment to thank the government. I know it doesn't happen often from this side – I know – but Wildrosers always give credit where credit is due. I thank the government for making this a government bill. The reality of it was that when we saw that it was a private member's bill, many of us in our caucus thought it should be a government bill. I'm glad that the government was able to see that that was the right thing to do and were able to kick it up to where it should have been and actually pass it in this session.

I applaud the government for doing the right thing. I applaud the Member for Calgary-Foothills for making it happen. I applaud every single PC member for supporting this bill – I'm assuming it's all of you – and doing the right thing for Albertans. I'm more than willing to give credit where credit is due, and I think today is one of those days. Thank you very much to each and every one of you.

I'd also like to go even further to say to the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti that what you were just speaking to was incredibly moving, and I thank you for putting a human face on this issue. We stand in the House many times and talk about our personal stories. I'm probably one of the worst offenders for that, and I do it because I wear my heart on my sleeve when it comes to that. To hear your story, I think you really put into perspective exactly why we need to have this discussion with our families. Not any one of us in this House is expecting to go home today and have something happen and have to make that decision. I applaud you and your family. My heart is with you and your family. I thank you for putting a human face to this issue so that we can all understand it better. Thank you very much.

I want to talk a little bit about what this legislation means to us. This legislation will allow Alberta to take a leadership position in organ donation throughout Canada as only Ontario, B.C., and Manitoba have online registries. I'm actually quite excited to see this option come forward as I myself am a donor. I choose to be a donor on the back of my Alberta health care card. I think it's great that the online registry allows us to go in and make a conscious choice, have that choice be noted, and actually allows us to say what we want to happen with our own personal body.

In Alberta there remain several issues with organ donation. We know as of today there are 25 to 40 Albertans who lose their lives every year waiting for organ donations. Now, I have to admit that I personally have not been touched by that situation of waiting for an organ donation. However, I do know members of my own riding, who are constituents, who have brought to my attention their wait period. I know a member of my riding who passed away three years ago. He awaited a heart transplant, received the heart transplant, and unfortunately six months later it was not successful. He passed away. However, his two-year wait for the heart was a very dramatic and very traumatic time for him and his family, so I'm aware of the situation as that goes through.

We know that over the past five years the numbers are heartbreaking in that there have been about 214 people who have lost their lives waiting for a donation. I can only imagine what it must be like to be that person who's waiting for the call to say, "I have a heart for you; I have eyes for you," you know, whichever. Equally I can only imagine what it must be like to have to make that decision. I can't imagine having to sit with my spouse, if that's my son or daughter or my mom and dad, and having say to somebody else that I know that this can help X number of people. That's why I think it is so important to hear the story of the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti and to talk about how difficult that decision was but also talk about all the positive outcomes and to know that as he proceeds through life, he knows that the life of his son lives on in others and all of the good that his son was able to bring to so many other families.

Alberta has the longest wait-list in Canada for cornea transplants. We know that there were about 800 people on that organ donation wait-list in 2011. It would be exciting to see that this online registry would be able to reduce that wait-list. I can only think of the joy it would bring to someone who couldn't see today to then have a cornea transplant and actually be able to see the world in vivid colour like so many of us take for granted.

We also know that the cost to our health care system of having patients wait for organ donations can be extraordinary. The Canadian Institute for Health Information, or CIHI, estimates that the cost of kidney dialysis can be up to $60,000 per year. Now, that's just the cost of dialysis. We know that those costs could increase, of course, if they get sick, the longer they wait, all of that. We also know that for many people who are waiting on the wait-list, their health deteriorates. You start off thinking you can get the organ donation, and by the time the organ becomes available, you may or may not be a candidate anymore. That devastation or that triumph for the family would have roller coaster emotions and be very difficult for each and every person in that family.

If we compare the costs of all of these health treatments, the cost of setting up a hundred thousand dollar registry is really quite negligible. You know, a hundred thousand dollars in today's terms is very little money, and if that amount of money can help people get off the registry wait-list and help people to become healthier and more vibrant Albertans and Canadians as a whole, then it's a good investment of our money. It's also the right thing to do.

We can make a difference. I think we heard stories like that today. We heard the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, who talked about what propelled him to come to this stage and why this is so important to him. We've heard the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, who's been advocating for a very similar registry for years. We heard the hon. Minister of Health stand up and speak to this legislation, and I have to say that I applaud him for doing that because I think it's very important when the Health minister takes a personal interest in a health bill, essentially, and basically endorses it. That ensures that Albertans know this is a priority for this government and has the power to actually take it forward and enforce it and provide a solution to many, many Albertans. I'm excited to see what a difference this will make.

It was interesting as I listened to the conversations that we're having in the House today that, you know, we're all very much on the same page. However, I did find it interesting to hear that less than 5 per cent of people donate, and I think a lot of that is just noneducation. I can understand why people fear donation. Not very much is known about it. They worry that there is some sort of other reason that you might want their organs, and I think they worry about harvesting organs, those kinds of things. But that's really not the case here. This legislation really allows people who want that choice to make their choice known and to register to do so.

I can tell you that in my own household we're torn on this decision. When I went back to my constituents about this bill, it was interesting because the majority of my constituents were very much in favour of this bill, and I support it as well. However, my husband does not. My husband does not agree with organ donation, and I'm an organ donor, so that led to a very interesting debate in the home.

Mr. Wilson: Who won?

Mrs. Towle: Well, I will win. I haven't won yet, but I will, and the registry will help me do that.

What I found very interesting was that when I was talking to my husband about this issue and when I was talking to other family members who maybe don't share my enthusiasm for the registry, what I understood and what I realized was that it was really just a nonunderstanding of exactly what this registry was going to do, and there was a fear. There was a fear that for some reason, in some way, somehow that my life, should I be in an accident, or the lives of our children, should they be in an accident of some sort, may be propelled to end early because of organ donation needs. When we had this robust discussion, I basically, you know, put it down to: that's just not the way the system works.

I don't think there's a physician out there who's pushing someone to pass away so they can harvest the organs and get you out of the box sort of thing. My experience with physicians and my experience with front-line caregivers is that they're incredibly sensitive and incredibly aware of the needs of the family during these very, very difficult times. I think they do everything they can to make sure that our wishes are known and that that pressure is not there. But if you do choose to be an organ donor, there are certain timelines. There's a reality there.

It was a very good discussion. Since we were having it, I looped in our 11-year-old at the same time. I figured, you know, I might as well gang up on my husband. As I said, I will get my way at some point. I expressed very clearly to my 11-year-old my wishes and what that meant. It was interesting because she absolutely, one hundred per cent agreed with me and is now working on her dad to support your bill. So I think the fact that we're even having this discussion in households is a huge step forward. I don't know that we were having it before this bill came forward, so thank you.

The other part of that is that I can tell you that when my brother was diagnosed with Huntington's, we went through that discussion with both my mom and dad, but mostly my mom. It was a difficult discussion to have with a mom about a 32-year-old man. The discussion was: how could we help other people given Ron's tragedy and his diagnosis? I can tell you that the information that came to us was great. It was very positive. It was very clinical. My brother had never explicitly said that he wanted to donate his organs, but I knew that once he was diagnosed with Huntington's, he wanted to donate parts of his body for research, which is integral to part of finding a cure. So we went through the process of trying to do that, and we were not able to just because of the nature of his disease. It didn't leave anything for donation, unfortunately. But it was a good exercise for us to go through. It was a traumatic exercise, but it was by our choice, so I think that that was helpful.

I'm glad to see that probably going forward, with the existence of this registry, that direction will be made much more clear to family members. There's one huge advantage to this registry, and that advantage is that your wishes can be made clear. Your wishes can be stated explicitly, that you want to do it. You attach it to your driver's licence, and there's no question. You know, this can be divisive in some families, so that would be very, very positive.

Another positive part of this legislation is that by asking Albertans if they want to join the registry, when they apply for the registry, they can take a proactive step in doing most of the workload to solve the issue of organ donations. They can literally have a one-stop area where they can go. Nobody has to wonder where their health care card is. Nobody has to wonder if this is by choice. They're able to do it at one stop. When they renew their driver's licence, it's a simple: would you like to be a donor or not? Yes or no? If they're not sure, then it's a simple: well, I need to go home and have this chat with my husband or my family. I think that that is very, very positive.

Also, I think with the fact that it's done through the driver's licence, you know it's their consent. It's not what someone else is pushing or what someone else's agenda is. It's their consent. They're making a very clear statement of what they want.

The only caution I have about this bill is that I hope the government is able to look at other provinces who are already doing this registry and are doing it for a very efficient cost. We know that B.C., for example, is doing it for approximately $350,000 a year. I only caution you to please be aware so that this doesn't necessarily balloon into a huge bureaucracy. It can easily be managed. Other provinces are managing it. As I understand it, U of A and Foothills, I think, do offer this service already, so I hope that this government will consult with those who are already doing this.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the last speaker that I have on the list is from Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill. The hon. member.

Dr. Brown: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to say a few words in support of the bill. I think the notion of the organ registry is a great step forward, but I do want to say that it's not the whole answer. If we really are serious in this House about increasing organ donor rates, we need to go to the next step, and that is presumed consent.

[Ms Pastoor in the chair]

The Minister of Infrastructure mentioned the example of Spain. Spain is one of those jurisdictions that found a marked increase in their organ donor rates when they went to a system of presumed consent. Now, what is presumed consent? Presumed consent is when you're presumed to consent to the donation of your organs after you pass away. That would not take away anyone's individual rights or the freedom to not have your organs donated or to the disposition of your body in whatever manner you saw fit, but it would greatly increase the rates.

There is empirical data that shows that presumed consent will increase organ donor rates by anywhere from 25 to 30 per cent. I just want to mention, Madam Speaker, if I could, some of the countries that already have presumed consent laws. They include Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Estonia, Finland, France, Greece, Hungary, Israel, Italy, Latvia, Luxembourg, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Slovak Republic, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden, and Turkey. So this is not a shot in the dark. It's not something that is unknown in other parts of the world.

I would say that if this Legislature at some point wants to take a bold and progressive step towards increasing organ donation rates that we ought to consider bringing in legislation for presumed consent.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. We have 29(2)(a) available.

Are there any other speakers? Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a great pleasure to speak on Bill 207, the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013, and I want to congratulate the Member for Calgary-Foothills for bringing this private member's bill.

The Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill was talking about presumed consent, I believe. You know, I think is a great bill. It's a step in the right direction, and I think we can expand upon this bill. We had a bill like this from the Member for Edmonton-Manning before, so this is a further extension of that. This bill will amend the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Act, 2006.

[The Speaker in the chair]

To donate an organ or tissue, one must currently contact the AHS facility in Edmonton or Calgary to start the process and the paperwork. This new agency, the Alberta organ and tissue donation agency, would be created and would report to the Minister of Health. The LG can make regulations regarding the online registry; the information that may be included; its collection, use, and disclosure; the collection of registry information by Alberta registry agents; and the location of the sticker on one's driver's licence.

As we know, according to the Canadian Institute for Health Information, in 2011 there were 324 Albertans who were waiting for a kidney transplant, 94 people who were waiting for a liver transplant, and 57 more who needed either a single- or double-lung transplant. Another 17 Albertans needed a heart transplant. I know a friend who has been waiting for six years for a liver transplant.

I think that with this bill, you know, there's more education needed. We have to educate more families, more people, more family members. I think that if we could educate more people on this, there would be more people willing to donate. This bill is a good bill. I think this bill will encourage at least, you know, discussion in the family household. I definitely will be talking to my family members when I go back, and we always do this. Some of my friends have already donated for medical research. There's already a dialogue going on that lives can be saved by donating organs. I think the education part is lacking in this. Definitely, this bill will increase the number of donors in Alberta, and it will definitely increase the number of donors which will save lives. No doubt about that.

There are potential privacy issues, you know, with this bill. Every Albertan would be asked at the issuance or the renewal of an operator's licence whether they would like to be a donor. This could cause undue stress and maybe embarrass someone signing up. If people are educated, they will be prepared for this question when they go to renew their licence, and they will be more willing to put their check mark on that. While section 12 of the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Act provides confidentiality of the information collected, the Privacy Commissioner is not included in the wording of the act or this bill. Most of the information in the registry would be governed by regulation, not by legislation, so there are some privacy concerns here. I think education will be the key in succeeding to get more people to become organ donors.

I congratulate the member for bringing this bill forward. It will definitely help increase the number of donors, and it will definitely, you know, go a long way towards saving more lives, Mr. Speaker. I will be wholeheartedly supporting this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Are there any other speakers?

Would you like to close debate, hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills?

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, all. I thank everyone here for participating today in second reading of this Bill 207. I especially want to thank the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti for his heartfelt speech right from the heart. There were some good points made here this afternoon, and I look forward to discussing them in Committee of the Whole. Until then, I would ask to call the question.

The Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 207 read a second time]

Bill 26 Assurance for Students Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this evening to move second reading of Bill 26, the Assurance for Students Act.

This legislation reflects the importance that we as government and as a province place on our education system. It also represents almost three years of hard work by the Alberta School Boards Association, the Alberta Teachers' Association, and many folks inside my ministry. I want to particularly thank Jacquie Hansen, the president of the Alberta School Boards Association, and Carol Henderson, the president of the Alberta Teachers' Association, for their tireless efforts on behalf of their respective members and on behalf of kids and Albertans, and I thank the staff in my department, that have worked so hard on this.

While we would all have preferred not to have to legislate this, I'm very pleased with the overwhelming support that the framework agreement has received to this date nonetheless.

Mr. Speaker, 60 of 62 ATA locals along with the provincial ATA executive support the framework agreement that this legislation puts in place. Those locals represent 95 per cent of our teachers across the province, and all but one school board support the agreement. That's 61 of our 62 boards. They support it not because it's the best, the greatest deal ever drafted or because it's perfect or because they don't have reservations with it. They support it because it's good for kids, and they realize that they're not just voting for themselves. They're also voting for all Alberta students. I want to thank them for taking that broad perspective.

This deal offers stability for Alberta families and assurance that school will go on without disruption. It offers cost certainty for school boards, who are doing a great job facing very difficult budgets. It offers workload solutions for our teachers. But most of all it allows all of us – teachers, trustees, government, and parents – the opportunity to focus our efforts for the next four years on making education better for Alberta's kids. Long-term, province-wide labour peace with our teachers has served this province extremely well over the last five years, and this legislation will ensure we continue to benefit from that stability.

We've been able to do a great deal of amazing work in that time. We've been able through Inspiring Ed and through Setting the Direction and Speak Out and other initiatives to reach out and talk to thousands of Albertans and help paint a vision, a picture of what we want this education system to look like well into the future. It was those conversations that led to the development of the new Education Act, that passed in the House last year. It was those conversations that led to the exciting five announcements that we had last week, making some significant changes in our system, taking one of the strongest education systems in the English-speaking world and making it even better, Mr. Speaker. Together with the labour stability that this bill gives us, we'll be able to do even more.

Now that I've outlined where this legislation will allow us to go, let me take a quick moment to step back and remind you where we've come from. Since 2010 the government has been working on a new province-wide deal that would be in the best interests of teachers, school boards, and, most importantly, Alberta's 600,000 students and their parents, and I want to commend the previous two ministers, now the Minister of Human Services and the Deputy Premier, who also worked diligently on these negotiations.

Over that time, Mr. Speaker, our government has made a number of offers to the ATA and to the school boards, offers we believed would have ensured stability in the system and be beneficial. As all of us here know, those several offers were turned down, and work behind the scenes continued to try to get a deal.

For almost three years work continued. We met with the ATA. We met with the ASBA. We met with both of them together. I met with each individual school board, all 62, to hear about what needed to be in place for them for a deal.

All of that work and collective effort went into the offer presented on March 17 of this year, and in spite of reports to the contrary, we presented that framework, that offer on the same day to the Alberta School Boards Association Board of Directors and the Alberta Teachers' Association provincial executive. While the provincial ATA supported the agreement, the ASBA eventually asked for it to go to all boards for consideration. I respect that decision, and that's exactly what we did.

For the last two months, while the provincial ATA took the agreement to their members, my ministry has been working very diligently with boards to get the support needed to make the proposed agreement a reality. As I have said before, I firmly believe that the framework agreement is in the best interest of teachers, school boards, students, and their parents. The agreement would see compensation for Alberta's 40,000 teachers frozen for three years, one of which has almost passed since the end of the previous agreement. That pay freeze will be followed by an increase of 2 per cent in the 2015-16 school year and a one-time lump-sum payment to be funded by government in that same year. This will ensure the cost stability the education system needs in order to focus on students in the classroom, and it also gives school boards certainty on the funding that they need from the province.

Even with three zeros this agreement maintains Alberta's teachers as the best paid among all Canadian provinces, but as the ATA is quick to point out, salary has never been the issue for the teachers this round. Teachers have been concerned about workload, and that's also a central aspect to the agreement this legislation puts in place. The framework agreement requires a school board without hours of instruction restriction in its collective agreement to take steps to bring the number of hours a teacher spends in front of students closer to a provincial threshold of 907 hours per school year. For about 60 per cent of Alberta's teachers this is already in place, so that won't be an issue. It will be a challenge for some of our smaller rural boards – and I recognize that – which is why we allowed time to reach the goal and ways for our small rural schools to be excluded where appropriate.

We're also looking at workload in other ways. We've committed to conduct an internal review in addition to a third-party study that will look at how teacher workloads can be adjusted in the context of the 21st century. Similar reviews will be carried out by each of Alberta's school boards, and the result of these workload reviews will be an improved educational experience for both Alberta teachers and, most importantly, their students.

We've been working hard to get this agreement for the better part of three years. Going back to the drawing board now is simply not an option. Our students, their parents, and, indeed, all parties in the education community simply cannot wait any longer. We must take the necessary steps to ensure and protect the sustainability of our world-class education system. Albertans want the education system to continue to meet the needs of a new generation of learners and bring the vision of Inspiring Education to life, and that can only happen in a stable labour environment. Therefore, in the interests of Alberta's 600,000 students and, like I said, their parents and teachers across the province, I am seeking the support of the Legislature for the Assurance for Students Act.

This legislation will make the framework agreement binding on all school boards, the ATA, the Alberta School Boards Association, the Crown, and the Minister of Education, and this includes the 61 school boards and 60 ATA locals who have already ratified it as well as the one board and the two locals that did not. Again, Mr. Speaker, I accept that this legislation is by no means an ideal way of concluding labour relations or negotiations, but as Education minister I must put the needs of our students first, and this proposed legislation provides for an outcome that is as close as possible to the actual framework agreement with a couple of minor changes.

The legislation allows for more than one exceptions committee rather than only one three-member committee should they be needed. This is to allow for more quick and efficient decision-making by these important committees and for them to represent both metro and rural perspectives. This is a concern I heard from boards when I met with them to discuss the agreement, and it's a reasonable change, a minor change that will ensure faster decisions and not change the spirit of the agreement.

The legislation also changes the role of the ASBA slightly. While the insight and perspective the ASBA provided over the last several years was invaluable, it became clear that they want us to work more directly with their boards when it comes to labour agreements. That doesn't diminish the critical role they play at all. It simply recognizes and respects their wish to allow local boards to consider what's best for them. I'll remind you, Mr. Speaker, that in this case all but one board decided to support the agreement.

Bill 26 removes the requirements for the ASBA to formally approve the ministerial order about teacher workload, something that has effectively already been done by the acceptance by 61 of the 62 school boards of that memo within the framework over the last several weeks. It also allows me to develop a ministerial order to clarify the role of their organization but only within the context of this agreement should that be needed. Otherwise, the legislation merely implements the deal already agreed to by the provincial executive council of the Alberta Teachers' Association and ratified by 95 per cent of ATA bargaining units and 61 of our 62 school boards. With that much support, it is inappropriate, would not be fair, and shortchanges our students for one board or two locals to obstruct an agreement that has been overwhelmingly approved by so many.

I've said many times, Mr. Speaker, that the bargaining process needs to be fixed – and it does – but I'm not about to do that today without consultation and without those involved: the school boards, the ATA, and, of course, parents. The role of school boards has evolved, and I want to make sure that whatever bargaining structure Alberta may put in place recognizes and respects the critical role that they play and the role the province plays, but for today we need to move forward, and we need to get this deal done. We need to safeguard the education of Alberta kids in a stable and supportive learning environment and help ensure we live within our means, especially given these challenging financial times.

The Assurance for Students Act will help ensure Alberta's education system remains among the best in the world. It will ensure that our teachers, school boards, and government can focus on realizing the vision set out for us by Albertans in Inspiring Education. I sincerely hope that my colleagues in the Legislature will join me in supporting this important piece of legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. It is a pleasure for me to rise and support Bill 26. I will also say that I have been happy that the Education minister has extended an invitation to work with members from all caucuses through this process. We were able to meet again last night in his office, which has to be half a dozen times, formal or informal, that we've been able to have those discussions. I'm grateful for that.

A deal with teachers has been, as the minister just communicated, a very long time coming. As the education advocate for the Official Opposition in Alberta, as a parent, and as an Albertan I recognize that labour stability in the classroom for teachers is certainly the best thing for our kids, and I'm grateful for that. Having to legislate the deal is not ideal, and I believe it does require some discussion so that we don't wind up here again.

We are, at least on paper, as the minister just pointed out, I believe, at 96 per cent buy-in or close to that when it comes to the ATA locals, and one board has not signed on. It is a big board, it should be noted. I think they represent 20 per cent or so of the students in the province. We did get to that point – that is all very good – but there has been very strong resistance from more than just a few boards along the way. In fact, some have said that they are only signing on here and supporting it because they're concerned about ramifications if they do not. Some of the discussions that have been had – you know, could boards potentially be amalgamated, or could boards be dissolved? – give you the impression that there are legitimate concerns, and that may have forced some to the table.

Now, initially there was a lot of backlash from boards, and a lot of that had to do with the bargaining process or lack thereof. I think everybody in this Legislature recognizes that there needs to be some improvement on that front. Mr. Speaker, the point that we do need to address also is perhaps: what has caused this to go the last few months to the degree that it has? You see, the government celebrated this deal before it was actually done. The truth is that at the time government really needed a win. We all see the headlines. We all know what's going on, and most Albertans do as well. They pulled out all the bells and whistles in front of the TV cameras to make it known, but they didn't have agreement from a very important organization, and that was the Alberta School Boards Association, the very respected and influential provincial association of locally elected school boards.

The ASBA is, I think, one of if not the leading voice advocating for public education in Alberta. Now, why didn't the government have the ASBA support? Well, it's because they haven't proposed that latest version, that contract, to the boards to review. I know that they did involve the ASBA throughout the two-plus years of negotiating. That was the sticking point from the boards on I believe it was the 15th of March. I would ask the 87 members in here to reach out to your boards when you go home on break. I think you'll find that the messaging you get is different from what we see publicly. I don't blame them for that. It's tough to be critical of the process when you're a school board.

They saw the deal for the first time the morning the government was presenting it to Albertans as a done deal, at least this particular offer. Now, put yourself in the shoes of your locally elected trustee for a moment and consider this. The government, who should be working with you in public education and, I believe, for the most part does a very good job of it – remember that as a trustee in their shoes you are elected – is announcing a deal that you haven't seen or has not been presented officially to you, much less discussed or voted on, to accept. Now, for clarity, the ASBA president had seen the deal a couple of days before but was told that it was embargoed. It was brought to the ASBA board of directors on Thursday. The board saw it Friday morning. Again, that's the day the celebratory announcement was held.

Now, I've heard from more than one trustee on this front, and I completely understand how they would feel. Imagine that your constituents, that have elected you, in seeing this grandiose press conference, are calling you and asking you questions about it, and you're saying: we haven't had time to review it as a board; I'm not sure we really support it. Up until that point I believe there was great communication. I don't know if somebody just got entirely frustrated with the process and said: look, we've got the ATA onside; we're going to move this along. But bypassing that step was not wise.

The system might be flawed, but what the minister did with this timeline was flawed. If elected officials hadn't seen it until that Friday morning – and that's the day that the press conference was called – I think we can understand why trustees are feeling the way that they are and boards are feeling the way they are. They needed time to see it. They are elected officials. I don't think it's a shocker that the ASBA, to my recollection – I can always be corrected – was not at that press conference on that morning.

All that said, as I said off the top, I am supporting this deal, this legislation today. I've recommended that to my caucus. You know, everybody has a free vote over here, but I'm confident that they will. From a fiscal sense the government did get some things right, a lot right. Teachers are taking a zero per cent increase, as the Minister of Education just said, for three years. Now, if I'm a teacher, I'm probably not doing cartwheels over that, but given the rate of pay and the rate this province is taking on debt, it is the responsible thing to do.

Here again, in my view, the government itself created a problem in negotiating by building up false expectations. You see, before the election – remember the election campaign – there was no talk from the governing party about freezing salaries. They were going to do everything for public education. They were providing predictable, long-term, stable funding for school boards. If it was said once, it was said a hundred times in this Legislature and out on the campaign trail. Predictable, long-term, stable funding for school boards: it was basically a campaign promise.

Now, there was a party that did say: wages would have to be frozen. There was a leader that was honest about that with Albertans and said: because of the fiscal reality, we would have to look at a wage freeze. I proudly sit right behind that leader, who is not here presently.

Mrs. Towle: You can't say that.

Mr. McAllister: I can't say that, and I should not have said that.

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I knocked on doors and were honest with those that we talked to, and this was not an easy subject to broach. Generally, it was people at the doors that would broach it, frankly: "Hey, we heard about this wage freeze. What do you think of this? I mean, wait a second. This is my livelihood."

I remember a call I received, in fact, from a teacher who I knew was supporting me, or at least I believed she was because her husband was working on my campaign team, a great friend of mine, a guy I grew up with in Medicine Hat a long time ago. His wife said to me: "Bruce, you know, this was being discussed today in the staff room, and there are a lot of people looking the other direction because of this. This is not something that most people are approving of at this time." Now, granted, things have changed a lot, but this was during the election campaign. You know, I believe I got her vote anyway. But the point I raise is just that it was a difficult conversation to have. I think we looked at the fiscal reality and saw where we were going – I know we did – and were honest about it. When I talked to people at the doors and they asked about it, whether I kept their vote or not, I was honest on what our leader proposed, and that was what we would have to do with wages.

Now, you wonder why there was more push-back on the teacher deal, and you wonder why it took so long to get here – you can make an argument for times changing; I've heard that so often in here – but effectively you said one thing and did another on this front, and that's frustrating. This same staff room has since had the discussion. Whether they view what I say or what the Minister of Education says as verbatim – well, actually, I don't think they view either as verbatim. What I have heard from that staff room is that they were appreciative that I was honest because that teacher went back to them and told them that, yes, I did support and agree with that discussion raised by my leader to freeze the wages. But you didn't campaign on the wage freezes for teachers, and we did, and I feel it's important to make that note.

As for the bargaining system itself, well, if we're two and a half years in getting a deal done and all these countless meetings – yeah, I think it is broken. If the shoe fits, as I said earlier today, wear it because it is the government that created this bargaining system and the changes that have been made along the way and the discussions that are held in the backrooms. Everybody in the education circle knows what has happened. I would say to the Education minister and I have said to him to his face several times that I appreciate the work that he has done on this file, but it doesn't absolve him from the fact that his government has created a mess when it comes to these negotiations. The bargaining structure, Mr. Speaker, is what the party made it. Now, the majority of boards might be supporting it. Whether they are holding their noses to a degree is debatable. I believe some of them are.

I've just gone through Bill 26 here and, obviously, was aware of much of the content from others beforehand, and I would just make a note that there are people raising concerns about the exception committees on the autonomy front. I would ask the minister, going forward, to be aware of those if he isn't already. Board members wonder if, depending on how this all plays out, the locally elected boards will wind up with less autonomy. Clearly, they won't be happy with that. The minister has spoken several times about maintaining the autonomy of the locally elected official, so I hope, you know, he honours that, and clearly we'll be watching that going forward.

The capping of hours, I know, is very challenging for several boards also. We don't want to back any schools, particularly smaller schools, into the corner with this agreement.

Now, I don't pretend for one second that negotiating a deal with tens of thousands of teachers or at least their bargaining units and 62 school boards can be easy. I know that it has not been, but I do stand today as the critic/advocate for the Official Opposition in Alberta to say that I am thrilled that we have finally gotten to this point, although it's not ideal, for sure, that we have to legislate.

I, like my colleagues, want what's best in the classroom for our kids, so, you know, I'll be recommending that we support it. I appreciate the time to speak to it today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the opportunity to speak to Bill 26, the Assurance for Students Act. You know, I must say that I haven't been in this situation before, where a bill has been brought forward like this, obviously in response to ongoing developments in labour negotiations. It's not a back-to-work order because, of course, the people are not on strike, but it is a legislated agreement for teachers here in the province of Alberta.

I have been reflecting on this considerably for some time, and it's not any great ease or straightforwardness initially that would cause my concern with this. Of course, first and foremost, we want the smooth operation of our public education system and the ongoing, continuous functioning of our education system. You know, I know first-hand, having been a teacher for more than 20 years and having been involved in a labour dispute before, how difficult that is and how contentious and fractious it can be, so really it's the last thing that I would want anywhere any time.

However, I think that on a point of principle and reasoned reflection, I'm finding a great deal of difficulty with this bill and for this body to be legislating the agreement instead of using the procedures of collective bargaining and so forth that we have in place between the school boards and the teachers.

You know, I know that Albertans, Mr. Speaker, are concerned about education and about how things have been going recently in our public education system. This budget is like a slow-moving train wreck, really. I'm getting almost by the hour these new layoffs and program cuts. People are starting to see the actual effects in schools around the budget that is now just being implemented and will continue to be unfolding into the fall.

You know, these are negative effects on the classroom, Mr. Speaker. Some of the effects that we expect to see are that class sizes will increase, right? Teachers are already getting notifications of being laid off. It is often young teachers that are getting these notifications, which I find particularly troublesome because, of course, if we're not renewing our profession, then it makes it difficult to move forward.

I went back to teaching part time, and I was very surprised and gratified to see this new generation of teachers, these young teachers, that are very well trained and very astute and tuned into their profession. You know, the idea of having opportunities for them in the future being compromised with a budget such as we see here today, Mr. Speaker, really, really bothers me a great deal. I just don't believe that that's necessary. We can do something considerably better.

With the budget cuts and with the things that I just mentioned, really, it's not just a bad deal for teachers, but it's a bad deal for students as well because you end up with larger class sizes and special needs and extra attention having to be compromised somehow as well. That is another unfortunate result, Mr. Speaker.

Now, of course, the whole budget and this deal are predicated on the idea that we don't have sufficient money to support our public education system, as we had been doing moving forward, and cannot support the teachers with modest increases to meet the cost of living, increases that we all experience living in the province of Alberta. You know, of course, I think most Albertans find that to be a false premise because as we look all around us in the province, we see our economy growing considerably. We see our population growing. So public services, especially education, have to keep pace with those natural expansions, right? If we don't do so, then you are running the risk of compromising the quality of education that you can deliver to our children from kindergarten to grade 12 but to postsecondary as well. You know, I find that a difficult starting point. It's a starting point where I begin to doubt the necessity for Bill 26.

I guess another issue that I want to bring forward is this idea of negotiating and using a collective bargaining process and then pulling away from that in sort of a very arbitrary manner. Yes, it's true. Almost all school boards did come around to a version of this, as did most of the locals, right? It just tells me that there must be a way by which we could push this through without having to use the legislation to bring it back. When you do use legislation, it's not just this one thing, this one time, but it's a categorical mechanism to use only, I think, in extreme circumstances.

The circumstance that we're in here today doesn't seem to warrant that extreme thing, where we are legislating a deal for teachers. You know, imposing a deal on teachers is an affront not just to the teachers but to the basic rights of unionized workers here in Alberta, to collective bargaining. By legislating a deal in this fashion, the government is compromising the collective bargaining process in this province not just for teachers but for all sorts of other workers as well and, I think, probably using this as a tool, quite an aggressive tool, saying: "Oh, well, you know, if you don't take what we are selling, then you can see what happened to the teachers. We will legislate you back. If you don't take a zero, this is the way it works."

It's not just this one circumstance here with the teachers' agreement, but it applies to a whole range of workers that will be going into negotiations over these next two years. You know, we're in negotiations for over two years with this particular deal. By legislating a deal, with all of this work that we did in the past, the right for teachers being struck through collective bargaining has essentially evaporated. It's not something that we take lightly. I know that there's always that tension between the employer and the workers in this regard, and I recognize that that tension is not going away. But you can't expect that if you remove the collective bargaining process and you use legislative actions to secure deals, there will not be a push-back. There will be.

You know, you talk about this idea: "Oh, well, everybody signed up to it. Everybody is good with it." I don't know about that. As I said, I had to reflect on this carefully over time and come to a personal decision that I could live with in regard to this deal. Discussing it with our New Democrat caucus, we came to the same solution. It's not as though we're making a categorical thing here. It's a question of: what's the right thing to do at the right time?

I don't deny that the minister has worked very hard in these last weeks and months. I've watched him, and as the New Democrat critic for Education I've certainly had a good relationship with the minister. I recognize how he and his staff as well have functioned with some earnest faith in trying to come up with something.

What I'm saying is that there are larger issues at question here, that I think can't just be taken aside or compromised for this one particular circumstance and so forth. I hope that people do recognize that and recognize the value and the role of constructive criticism from other viewpoints that can hopefully give us guideposts for the future because we're not just doing this for now. Whenever we do something in this Legislature, we set a precedent for how the future will unfold. I just want to, you know, let it be known that legislating and dissolving collective agreement processes is not necessarily something that we would accept now or in the future.

I guess a measure of the tepid response to the way everything has gone down is that the Alberta Teachers Association was looking for a deal, but the president said that he, referring to the Minister of Education here today, had to do this in order to keep the deal alive. "We will accept it, but it's not our preferred solution." It's not exactly a wildly enthusiastic response. I think that the ATA is trying to predicate their position with the fact that they are very concerned about how budget cuts are affecting the quality of education here in the province.

We look at, for example, this idea of trying to negotiate better working conditions for teachers. Well, as I said in my questions earlier this afternoon, if we have these other cuts rolling through, then even the best of intentions in trying to improve working conditions are undermined by the larger class sizes and so forth that we'll see in these coming weeks and months as this budget unfolds.

You know, as I say, perhaps more emphatically when we're in question period but still the same here today, if we can restore the funding to the levels that we had even last year, look for an investment in wages that meets the cost of living for teachers here and other education workers in the province, and make an investment that's commensurate with the increase in our economy and in our population, then we will do well. We have a very, very good education system here in this province that is internationally recognized. It is producing high-quality students and a high degree of professionalism from the classroom right through to the school boards and, I believe, to the ministry as well. I just refuse to stand by and sort of say, when anything compromises that, that I will not speak and push back or provide some constructive criticism.

Mr. Speaker, I do have a motion that I would like to bring forward here now. It's a notice that the motion for second reading of Bill 26, Assurance for Students Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 26, Assurance for Students Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

I have the appropriate copies here, including the original.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. If you'll just circulate those to the page and if the page would bring us a copy up here, please. Thank you.

Hon. members, while the pages distribute the bill – please carry on distributing, pages – I will just note for the record here that this is a notice of amendment on Bill 26, Assurance for Students Act, and it has been read into the record. Essentially, it's a referral amendment.

If there are any speakers to this, I would entertain them now. The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. Sure. Thank you. This referral, of course, is looking to put the bill to the committee. You know, I just think it's an overall demonstration. Again, we're seeing time limits effectively put onto Bill 26. We've had another procedural thing, where we're allowed to have more than one reading of a bill in a day with Bill 26. I just put this referral as a way for us to just pause and remind ourselves that we're not in such a big rush here, right? It's not as though there's a strike on or whatever. It's a normal procedure.

It's been a long time coming, but as we move through trying to create something that people can live with and find resolution with for teachers and school boards and the government and the people of Alberta all together, collectively, I don't think that rushing it is necessarily part of that whole equation, right? Haste makes waste and all that. Mr. Speaker, I'm just trying to be the voice of some caution here so that we can maybe take a breath or two and think about what exactly is best for education here in the province.

You know, I know that there are a lot of different opinions out there, and I know that the opinion is evolving on this bill and on exactly where we're going with it, so I just want to make sure that the people of Alberta know, too, that we're not jamming something through here that was not in the best interests of our students and of Alberta education in general. If people can read this over carefully and think about it and perhaps think about accepting it, I would be very grateful.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Calgary-McCall under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Kang: My question is to the member. How is it going to help the students if we refer it to the committee? How is referring this to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities going to be helpful to the teachers or to the boards or to the students?

5:30

Mr. Eggen: Well, sure. That's great. I think part of what we've seen in the last few days and weeks – you know, I've thought about this carefully, right? It is not as though the schools are not functioning now. They are, right? The schools are functioning, and teachers are teaching, and the schools are moving ahead. If we take a bit more time to try to work something out here and perhaps put the money in that's necessary to in fact meet the limits of school class sizes and so forth and have a sober second look at the budget cuts that have taken place in the last few weeks, that are slowly unfolding, then, in fact, we might just find a way by which we can improve the situation that we are in now.

You know, sometimes we all rush around with this idea that, well, kids come first, and this is all in the best interests of the students and all that. Okay. Well, yeah. Absolutely. That's why I'm putting this forward here today, right? If something doesn't happen in the next 48 hours in regard to Bill 26, the sky will not fall – right? – the schools will carry on teaching, and, in fact, maybe people can take a little breath of fresh air and not think that they're being steamrolled down the highway here with something that's not in the best interests of students.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Seeing none, are there any other speakers to the amendment?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: Question has been called.

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 26 lost]

The Speaker: We're back to the bill. Are there any other speakers to the bill? Calgary-McCall, did you wish to speak to the bill?

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: All right. Proceed.

Mr. Kang: I'm also glad to speak on Bill 26, the Assurance for Students Act, Mr. Speaker, although we were hopeful that the teachers' deal would be signed and, you know, we would move on, and life will be smooth after that. Sixty-one of the 62 school boards signed on, but one didn't, and two of the teachers' unions also didn't sign the deal. At stake is long-time peace in the classroom. The budget cuts surely would affect maybe the whole process, and school class sizes are going to be large. Because the population is growing, that's going to strain the resources of the school boards.

The school boards were concerned about the hidden costs that may come up. Two of the unions were also a little reluctant to sign on, and the school boards were a little reluctant, but they signed the deal. Six hundred thousand students right across the province will be affected if the deal is not signed.

Majority rules, and the majority of the boards have signed onto the deal and the majority of the unions have signed on. Although nobody likes a legislated settlement, I'm worried about what kind of precedent this bill is going to set for future negotiations, you know, if they fall apart. I think we should have a little more time to discuss this bill. I think we're just rushing through it. You know, the sky will not fall if the deal is not signed today.

We will be supporting this bill, but there should be more scrutiny and discussion on the bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there any other speakers to Bill 26?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: There are no other speakers, and question has been called.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 25 Children First Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise to move third reading of the Children First Act. I believe this to be a very important piece of legislation for this House in this spring session, carrying out some of the promises made by our Premier and our government with respect to putting a focus on early childhood development, putting a focus on children in poverty, putting a focus on ensuring that children get a good start. This bill is, of course, not the be-all and the end-all on that. It's just a good start or a good continuation, I guess, of the progress that's been made.

Through the results-based budgeting process we are examining everything that we're doing to determine that we're getting the most effective result and that we're achieving outcomes. That's an important process. But, Mr. Speaker, I think it's also very important to make sure that we take steps that people out there in the community have been telling us are necessary steps, and one of those is fundamental in this bill. We spent a lot of time talking about it last night, but it is absolutely fundamental, and that is the provision which makes it clear that professionals who are working together in the best interests of children to help children overcome barriers to success, to protect children at risk, to protect children in harm's way, to assist with the safety, education, and health of a child, can actually get together at the same table and share their information in the best interests of that child.

I think it's very clear that that's not licence to put the information out on the street or to the public, that privacy is important, but so is the appropriate sharing of information. We have very strong privacy legislation in this province, and as a result, we've developed a culture which defaults to no. That's not right for our children. That's not right for the kids of Alberta. This act goes a long way to set the proper stage for the collaboration of agencies.

There's no better example of that, Mr. Speaker, than the Sheldon Kennedy Child Advocacy Centre in Calgary, where the community came together and worked with government agencies. So we have the co-location of the Calgary city police, Human Services, and a number of agencies. They're located on the same floor of the building. There's a place there where children can be brought in. There's a play area for them. They can be comfortable. There are interview rooms so that they can be interviewed in the case of children who have been the subject of sexual assault or other physical harm. They can be interviewed once. They don't have to tell their story over and over again. They don't have to be revictimized. The counsellors are co-located. The information is there.

They can only do their work appropriately if they are allowed to share information, so they have been strong advocates. The Calgary chief of police was here when the bill was introduced, and his response I think said it all. He said: thank you for listening to us and for responding to what we've been asking for. The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek indicated that when she was Solicitor General and I was Minister of Justice, we heard over and over again people saying: we need to be able to collaborate for the kids' sake; we need to be able to come together and share the information appropriately. That's what's happening.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that my wife has been an educator for 35 years. She's been the principal of a high school in Edmonton for the last four years and previous to that principal of a junior high in Edmonton for seven years and previous to that occupied a number of other leadership and teaching positions with the Edmonton public school board. I can tell you that every single year she has come home throughout the year with issues with respect to children: children who are at risk for suicide; children who have attempted suicide; children who have been abused in some way; children who have challenges and barriers to success; alcohol and drug addictions, either themselves or their families; issues with respect to mental health relative to coming out of depression as the result of a loss of a loved one or a family breakdown or some other situation. There are challenges out there for our children, and there are challenges for the people who want to serve our children.

Our educators are at the forefront of that. They're in the position where they get to see it on a day-to-day basis and have a relationship with children and understand when there's a change in a child's life. They can identify that change, and they can understand that the child needs some assistance.

What they don't have are the resources to be able to actually provide that assistance on an ongoing basis. They need to reach out to a child care worker or to someone in the health system or sometimes even someone in the police system, and they need to be able to communicate what's happening and communicate with those other people in our community who are working with them to be there for the children.

This act is a great leap forward, in my view, in that particular area, but it does more. It provides for the development of a children's charter so that we can actually be focused on the things that we need to do when we're developing policy to understand what's in the best interests of children and how we can make children's lives better so that they can grow up to be successful citizens and contribute back to the community like members here. The review provision suggests that we should look at all of our legislation and policies so that we put that focus on it to say: what do we need to do to remove barriers to success, and what can we add to help achieve success?

Particularly, the information-sharing piece with respect to the research side, information sharing for research purposes. A number of years ago Iris Evans, the minister at the time with children's services, was instrumental in setting up the Alberta Centre for Child, Family and Community Research for the purposes of facilitating research with respect to children and setting up a child and youth data lab so that we could take the information that we have, anonymized data that we have, and use it for research purposes to help us drive understanding, drive longitudinal analyses of the effectiveness of programs and those sorts of things. Then, through our privacy legislation, we essentially shut them out of the very data that they needed to be able to do that research. This act will open that door and make it much easier to do that.

Mr. Speaker, in my experience we've had very good and desirable goals, but as a result of those goals, we've developed a protocol-writing business in this province, where if you wanted to share information with a data lab, you had to have the lawyers working. There's nothing wrong with lawyers; lawyers do a great job. But I don't think we need a protocol-writing industry to write protocols on how we should share information between government departments and between departments and agencies in appropriate circumstances.

When I was in Education, we celebrated the fact that we finally developed a protocol agreement for information sharing with respect to children in care between children's services and Education. When a child was apprehended and was in the custody of the Crown, we needed to be able to talk with Education, the department, and the school boards where that child was and share information about the child. It took us three years to develop a protocol agreement to do that. People who were doing that were doing their work. They were doing their job. They were operating within the parameters that we gave them, and it took them three years to do that.

This act will change that. This act will make it possible for those things to happen on a timely basis, for people to understand that they can work together to share the information, that we can share the information appropriately with the child and youth data lab and the research centre, and that we can learn from our information and help drive better decision-making.

There are many other aspects in this act, Mr. Speaker. I won't go through them all because we have discussed them. Setting up the family violence death review committee, a very important step so that we can learn from the tragedy. The only greater tragedy than death from family violence and intimate partner violence is if we don't learn from that to see if we can do a better job.

Why does that belong in the Children First Act? Well, we know that family violence is cyclical, that often people who are perpetrators of family violence were victims of family violence in their own lives. We know that children in poverty often live in families where there is family violence. All of these social issues are connected, and if we deal with these social issues, we can deal with the issues of child poverty, we can get children into school and properly educated so that they, too, can become successful citizens, whatever success might mean to them because every child has different gifts. That's the key. It's to have every child be able to maximize their personal potential, maximize their gifts.

There are other parts of this act that are key to protecting children. Just lowering the bar a little bit so that instead of there having to be an imminent danger to the health or safety of a person before you can disclose information, a risk of harm for that child would be the bar. Why should we wait until a child is teetering on the edge of a cliff before we reach out to save them? Why should it have to be that imminent harm? Well, this act changes that, Mr. Speaker.

There are many other aspects that I could go into here, but I think it's been good work. I know there have been suggestions that we needed more time and more thoughtful analysis and all that. Mr. Speaker, we could always take more time, and we will have more time.

We will have time over the next six months and perhaps even longer to work together to collaboratively develop the children's charter. We will have time over the next six months to a year to collaboratively work together to review programs, policies, and legislation relative to children and come back and visit that. We will have time over the next little while to work on a poverty reduction strategy with respect to children and families. We will have time over the next six months to talk about family violence and renewal of the family violence strategy. We will have time over the next six months to a year to work on the early childhood development initiative, which we're pleased to lead with Health and with Education in this government. There are lots of things on our table. We do not need to take more time for stuff that we can do now.

Mr. Speaker, I'd ask that we pass this bill in third reading and get on with the job.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to this in third reading. I will be brief. I do believe that this bill, inasmuch as it is quite large, is going to be a lot of positive steps forward for the children of this province. I'd like to thank and congratulate the minister for bringing this forward and, you know, finding ourselves where we are with it today.

I think it is rather aptly named as well, Children First Act. I know the minister likes to point out and remind us why he wears the pin on his lapel, and I think that it's quite nice that this bill does actually put children first in the sense that there was a time prior to this bill being passed – it obviously hasn't yet but will be probably shortly – where protection of information sometimes came first, before the protection or the safety of a child. I think that this recognizes that that is not necessarily the way it should be, that we as a society should be doing absolutely everything that we can to protect our children at any given time, and there are a number of areas where that happens in this bill.

I would also like to thank the minister, Mr. Speaker, for the way in which he conducted his ministry's business around presenting this bill. We as opposition parties were invited to sit down with him and go through a briefing. It is obviously a fairly thick piece of legislation. He was open to questions; he was open to answering our questions. To be quite frank, if I may, throughout the process of dealing with amendments and potential amendments, I think we saw two amendments pass from two different opposition parties, and that's the first bill that we can say that we've had that happen in the 28th Legislature.

I think that perhaps some of the other ministers across the way might like to look to the Minister of Human Services as a bit of an example as to how to pass legislation and how to do it in a way that makes opposition feel as though they're valued in the process as opposed to stonewalled. I truly do feel . . .

An Hon. Member: Valued?

Mr. Wilson: Perhaps. There are others noticing that as well.

That being said, I think that it allowed us to truly strengthen the bill in a couple of ways and to collaborate with the government, and I think that we'll walk out of here thinking that it's a bit of a win-win on passing this bill through third reading.

I look forward to the consultations around the children's charter – I know that the minister has also suggested that opposition will be invited to the table during that process – and bringing it back to the House as a separate piece or a separate motion and debating it as a group again, as it should be done, in the fall or whenever the minister is ready for that.

That being said, I'm proud to have played a role in this, a small role, as it were, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McAllister: A bit part.

Mr. Wilson: Yes, a bit part.

I'm very happy to see this pass. As a father, as a legislator, as a public servant I do believe that the province is better with this legislation than it would have been without it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to speak on Bill 25, the Children First Act. I have seen the minister wearing the pin I think as far back as I can remember. We all agree that he's got the best interests of kids at heart. It would be great if there were some poverty reduction programs in place so that the kids that go to school don't go to school hungry.

Sure, there has been much debate on the bill, and the minister is promising a lot more for the children's charter. You know, in the next six months he will be doing a whole lot to maybe improve on this bill. But this bill is a first step in the right direction, and I hope we can work together to strengthen this bill further.

There were some privacy concerns raised by the Privacy Commissioner. I hope those concerns will be addressed in the near future. Somehow they have to be addressed to make it a perfect bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there any other speakers?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: The question has now been called.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 25 read a third time]

Private Bills Second Reading

Bill Pr. 1 Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Canada Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise and move second reading of Bill Pr. 1, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Canada Act.

This bill is administrative in nature, and my comments for the most part will reflect that. However, a bit of historical context will allow the Assembly to better understand the need for the bill. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, colloquially referred to as the Mormon or LDS church, is a global hierarchical Christian denomination with nearly 15 million members world-wide. There's no paid clergy. All those that serve in the church serve as volunteers and have regular jobs and responsibilities in communities and families and homes.

Mr. Speaker, church members first settled in southern Alberta in 1887. They brought with them an understanding of farming in dry climate and how to use irrigation properly. They built strong communities, taught the love of family. Today the church has over 182,000 members in Canada, including approximately 77,000 in Alberta. The church currently has 208 congregations in Alberta.

In 1897 church members successfully petitioned the Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories for an ordinance incorporating the church's Cardston Stake under the name the President and High Council of the Alberta Stake of Zion. This ordinance was among the earliest charters granted a church in the Northwest Territories.

In 1927 church members successfully petitioned the Parliament in Ottawa for a private act incorporating the church's Lethbridge Stake under the name the President of the Lethbridge Stake. This private act was replaced by a further private act of Parliament in 1981.

In 1951 church members successfully petitioned the Legislative Assembly of Alberta for a private act incorporating the church's Taylor Stake, now the Raymond Stake, under the name the President and High Council of the Taylor Stake of Zion.

The church presently operates in Canada through a trust formed in 1968. The executive trustees of this trust are the presidents of the church's six stakes in Calgary. A stake, by the way, Mr. Speaker, is a collection of seven to 10 congregations. The trust is a registered charity with the Canada Revenue Agency. The church, as I said, does not have a paid clergy at the congregational or stake level. Rather, such clergy or volunteers have careers in various fields. The senior stake president of the six Calgary stakes, the petitioner who has brought forward this bill, is Dr. Stephen Miller, an orthopaedic surgeon.

The church also has a social service agency, LDS Family Services of Canada, and a for-profit ranching company called Deseret Ranches of Alberta. The current structure as described is unwieldy and cumbersome. It causes a great undue burden to volunteers to do all of the administrative work. The best way to simplify the church's Canadian legal structure and the purpose of this bill is to incorporate the trust in Alberta and amalgamate into that the corporation of the three existing incorporated stakes, as mentioned.

This simplification, which is made possible in the case of the President of the Lethbridge Stake by the recent Canada Not-for-profit Corporations Act, requires that a private bill be enacted by the Legislative Assembly. The private bill includes provisions suggested by Legislative Counsel to address registration and financial transparency issues and by Service Alberta's registry branch, who have met with the Private Bills Committee of the Assembly. At this time I'd like to thank both Legislative Counsel and Service Alberta for their assistance, Mr. Speaker.

With that, I'd call the question on second reading of Bill Pr. 1, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Canada Act.

The Speaker: Are there other speakers?

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Merely a formality, Mr. Speaker. What he said I support. And I'll sit down.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: Seeing none, the question has been called.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill Pr. 1 read a second time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, in light of the hour I'd move that we adjourn until 7:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:56 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Tuesday, May 14, 2013

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just asking if we could ask for one-minute bells for the duration.

The Deputy Speaker: I take it, hon. member, that you're asking for unanimous consent that for the duration of the night for the House and Committee of the Whole we would have one-minute bells?

Mr. Donovan: That's how I was trying to roll that out. I just had a little supper still in my mouth.

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard the motion by the hon. Member for Little Bow, I'll ask one question. Is anyone opposed?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Private Bills Second Reading

Bill Pr. 2 Wild Rose Agricultural Producers Amendment Act, 2013

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on behalf of the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky I move second reading of Bill Pr. 2, Wild Rose Agricultural Producers Amendment Act, 2013.

Mr. Speaker, Wild Rose Agricultural Producers is Alberta's biggest producer-funded general farm organization made up of farmers and ranchers who provide expert advice on the agricultural industry in our province. Key initiatives of the organization include striving to generate and maintain sustainable farm income levels, establishing stringent fair trade practices, improving the social and economic viability of our rural communities, and being a beacon of information for producers regarding current farm practices. Additionally, Wild Rose Agricultural Producers strives to offer our farmers important information on farm labour issues, farm safety initiatives, environmental issues, and taxation issues. The organization is available as a reference point for our farmers to utilize in order to obtain accurate information on innovative farming practices. The overarching goal of the organization is to provide a voice for Alberta's farmers at all key operational levels.

Mr. Speaker, the main intent of Bill Pr. 2 is to simply change the organization's name from Wild Rose Agricultural Producers to the Alberta Federation of Agriculture. The word "federation" implies strength in numbers and cohesion. It also exemplifies the strong, overarching vision of the organization; namely, the sustainability of our province's thriving agricultural sector. As we all know, our agriculture sector is an ever-evolving industry that demands long hours and intense physical labour.

More than ever I am realizing that this is a strong sector, playing a key role in the diversification of our economy as the government continues to build Alberta. As we all know, the success of this industry is also tied to a number of unpredictable and sometimes volatile factors such as shifts in weather. However, through the sharing of best practices passed down from generation to generation, our farmers are able to adapt and consistently deliver the high quality of products our province is known for both on the domestic and international stage. This is also a goal the Wild Rose Agricultural Producers aims to foster and pass down to future generations.

That is why I ask on behalf of my colleague that all hon. colleagues pass Bill Pr. 2. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising in favour of this bill. It would definitely clear up some confusion sometimes between the Wild Rose Agricultural Producers and the Wildrose Party.

Ms Blakeman: You're serious?

Mr. Donovan: Yes, I am.

I went to their AGM last year. They are a strong agricultural group. It always does add some confusion. With an up-and-coming party that's probably going to take over one day, it'd be sure nice to get the names cleared up. I thank everyone for the support on that.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 2 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: I'll call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 22 Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act

The Chair: Are there comments to be offered?

An Hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Saskiw: That was very, very hopeful, and I wouldn't put it past him.

It's an honour to speak here in Committee of the Whole with respect to Bill 22, Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act. What's happening here, of course, though, at least what's been indicated by a bunch of reserves as well as treaty members from treaties 6, 7, and 8, is an indication that there has been absolutely no consultation on this by the Aboriginal Relations minister.

Before we get into the substance of the bill, I think it's imperative to look at what processes transpired here. With the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013, there was obviously extensive consultation with the settlements throughout Alberta. They got agreement among the respective partners in that field. There was just an extensive amount of consultation. If you look at the flip side, the Aboriginal Relations minister has apparently, according to the sources at least, rushed Bill 22 and hasn't fleshed out the act.

I think if you look at an act, you can really tell that there hasn't been enough work done on it, that there hasn't been enough consultation in advance, when you see how thin the act is, but with respect to regulations that come thereafter, the act gives the minister an extensive, broad range of powers to do almost anything he wishes to do.

What he's asking us here today is to somehow pass a piece of legislation for which the key stakeholders that will be affected by this legislation have been indicating that they have not been consulted. They're asking us here in this Legislature today to give the minister extensive powers, powers to make regulations on essentially any topic within this bill. I don't think Albertans would want to give such an extensive amount of power to a minister no matter how well intentioned he may well be – or she. There could be a shuffle. You never know. There may be after this one. Someone's vying for this portfolio.

You know, this is one of these things, Mr. Chair. We have a process where you do extensive consultations with individuals and stakeholders in advance of putting forward a piece of legislation. Instead what the stakeholders are saying right now is that this piece of legislation was put forward, and now the minister wants to pass a law and then consult after the fact and then make a bunch of regulations based on that new consultation. It's backwards. You know, it's unfortunate because it looks like the minister did a good job with respect to consulting on the Métis amendment act but has completely failed in this consultative process.

Mr. Chair, what we would have liked to see here, of course – and this was done in second reading – is that because this bill is so poorly drafted, hasn't contemplated very much of anything other than the statement of, you know, a framework and a few other enactments of it, rather than trying to go through Committee of the Whole, rather than making a series of amendments trying to breathe some semblance of reasonableness into this piece of legislation, trying to take something that's so bad but with a series of amendments trying to make it better, our caucus had suggested that this be referred to a committee, a committee that over the summer could do the proper consultation, could listen, get feedback, and then put forward the amendments in an amendment bill afterwards.

Unfortunately, Mr. Chair, it looks like this minister wants to ram this bill through. We just got this bill late last week. Again, stakeholders from across the province were unequivocal that they did not feel that they were consulted, that they were, to quote some of them, blindsided by this piece of legislation, but here we are tonight with this legislation put before us. Somehow we want to make this work, this little bill with about five pages where all the power is in regulations. Look how thin this is. It's almost like this was an afterthought. After no consultation: let's just put something together before we head off for the summer.

Instead of doing that, why don't we refer this to a committee so that they can do the consultation so you can flesh out this piece of legislation rather than put everything in regulations? If you actually look, Mr. Chair, at the regulations that this minister can make orders on, they are basically on everything. It's hard to see many pieces of legislation that just put everything into regulation. It's completely improper in terms of the legislative process to not flesh out some of the key, core principles right in the enabling legislation itself.

So, Mr. Chair, I would hope that the minister would reconsider, not proceed with this now, do the proper consultation, consult with stakeholders, make some substantive amendments to this. Even if we were able to pass all the amendments that we could on this bill, the bill is just in such poor form that it would be very difficult to make it palatable to us. Let's hope that he would listen to some of the amendments, you know, at least hear them out, and we hope that he would accept some of them.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I concur with the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills in wondering whether or not this bill can be amended and saved. I highly doubt it. I know that the minister has been busily doing last-minute consultations and meetings with various treaty chiefs, hoping to salvage the legislation, and, I think, hoping at the last minute to try to get some buy-in on it, all of the work that he should have been doing up until introducing it. But we're going to try to do his work for him and try to propose some of the amendments that we have heard the members of the different treaties bring forward as very serious concerns that they have.

I don't think that's going to go far enough, quite frankly, Mr. Chair. I think that the only way for the minister to actually re-establish the relationship with First Nations that he's so badly damaging is for him to refer this to committee, take the summer to do the consultation and make sure that it comes back with some of the major issues that they're addressing revised in the legislation so that we can actually move forward with something that we know has buy-in not only from First Nations but also from industry.

That being said, because we're in Committee of the Whole, I'll play ball. I'll go ahead and put forward amendments. I would have liked to have been able to have the opportunity, as I did in the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013, to provide them to the minister in advance. With the great rush that we are going through, having just had second reading on Monday and now being in a process where we have to go through Committee of the Whole, I have great respect for Parliamentary Counsel, who has been madly rushing to try to put the amendments together.

I will have seven or eight amendments. I have four of them here this evening, but they'll be coming as we go. I would have liked to go through the amendments one at a time in the order of the bill, but that's just not quite the way Parliamentary Counsel has been able to deliver them to me. No criticism whatsoever on my part to Parliamentary Counsel, but I think the government ought to recognize the kind of stress and pressure they're putting on our legislative staff in trying to ram this through and not being able to give them the proper amount of time to be able to put the amendments together. I do thank them for the incredible work that they are doing in trying to accommodate the government's rushed time schedule.

The issues that I'm going to attempt to address fall into a number of broad categories. I had heard about 13 different areas of concern with this bill from the First Nations chiefs that we consulted with and their legal counsel. I'm not proposing amendments to address all of them. In some cases it was difficult for us to put forward language that would be able to adequately address their concerns. So for the members of the First Nations communities who are here this evening, understand that it is an imperfect process. We're dealing with a bad piece of legislation, a flawed piece of legislation. We're doing our best to try to address the concerns that they have raised with us, but I think it is an imperfect process and certainly not the one that we would have followed if we were government.

Issues that the First Nations raised in the last couple of days, just to remind the minister. They're very concerned that the preamble presents a diminished view of treaty and aboriginal rights. I'm going to try to put forward an amendment that will address that. They're also concerned about the potential that Alberta is abdicating its role in the Constitution on consultation. They don't like the way in which the Indian Act references the definitions for what a band or First Nations ought to be. They don't like the fact that the minister gives himself the power to determine aboriginal groups for the purposes of the act. We're hoping to address some of that.

They are concerned as well about the issue of whether or not these funds should be held in trust. They're concerned as well, they're telling us, about the use to which the funds will be put, making sure that they are for the exclusive use and benefit of the process. We're going to address that. They also want more consultation built into the provisions in the legislation, and we've got an amendment that will address that as well. They're also very concerned about the discriminatory nature of a section of the act which seems to indicate that agreements for First Nations are going to be subject to disclosure, which is not the case for nonaboriginal landowners who have similar agreements with the energy companies, so making sure that we're getting the kind of information that First Nations were told the minister was setting out to collect in the first place.

With that in mind, I will table my first amendment. I'll be happy to give some time while this is circulated.

The Chair: Just give us half a minute, and then I'll let you speak to it.

Ms Smith: Thank you.

The Chair: This will be referred to as amendment A1.
Please proceed, hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Under this amendment I would move that Bill 22, the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, be amended in section 7(1) by adding "as well as a list of the recipients of the grants for each project" after "audited financial statements of the Fund." I'll just direct you to the section under question. The section under question is the annual report, and this section reads: "The Minister shall, as soon as possible after the end of each fiscal year, prepare a report that summarizes the operation of the Fund during the preceding fiscal year and includes the audited financial statements of the Fund." That is where we would add "as well as a list of the recipients of the grants for each project."

Now, the legal counsel for the First Nations communities that we spoke with indicated that what they would prefer to see is for the government to actually consult with them on what the contents of the annual report ought to be. But in the absence of the government being willing to do a full consultation with our aboriginal communities to find out what it is they do want in the report, at the very least we believe that having a list of the recipients of the grants for each project provides a certain level of transparency so that we can understand and know the kind of progress that the government is making in being able to do its mapping of the different claims in different communities.

We also need to make sure that we have an opportunity to have that information shared. I would note – and I'll be making reference to this in other points throughout the debate this evening – that one of the government's main goals in the minister's business plan was to have a "coordinated approach to Aboriginal consultation and land claims [which] enhances resource development certainty."

The issue that the minister had described in estimates when we were talking about this was that the kind of information that he was attempting to collect was information that would lead to "the development of GeoData maps with First Nations' input to help guide decisions related to consultation on resource development projects, facilitate more consistent notification for consultation, and help satisfy the Crown's duty to consult." If the government was going to achieve that goal, certainly being able to have an enduring, ongoing record of the types of groups that had been consulted as well as those who had received grants to be able to do some of this mapping, some of this traditional land-use planning or land-use claims in the different overlapping areas of different aboriginal groups – having a reporting function so that we can have that information publicly available would also indicate to various industry players where some of this work had already been done.

I think part of the issue that the minister is facing is that there's a lot of this information being gathered in a bunch of different places. There's no central place for it to be collected. There's not a lot of sharing back and forth. By being able to amend the act in the way that we're proposing, having the list of recipients of the grants for each project, we think that this would facilitate the government's and the minister's achievement of goal 2, being able to move along with the geodata mapping function that he's identified as one of the principal goals for his ministry over not only this year but also over the next three or four years.

I do encourage other members to speak to this amendment. I do encourage others to support this amendment. We think that this will be one of the many amendments that would improve and give greater clarity to what it is the minister is trying to accomplish with this act.

With that, Mr. Chair, I'd be happy to hear from others.

The Chair: Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm going to rise to defend this amendment and ask my colleagues to support it. In particular, I just had an opportunity to speak to members of the O'Chiese band, who happen to occupy lands northwest of Rocky Mountain House. In my short tenure as an MLA I've come to know Chief Darren Whitford, and I've gained a lot of respect for him and for his leadership and for some of the work that that band does for its people.

It's disturbing that they weren't consulted whatsoever. They were shocked to find out that this bill has come forward. They feel that they've been deceived. We have a government that even till today will not listen to the people who have shown up in opposition to this bill. We're railroading this bill through.

We have an amendment here now that at least asks for a list of the recipients that receive a grant of the fees that are going to be charged so that we have some sort of accountability. But I want to make one note here. The O'Chiese own their own pipeline company. They own their own industry companies dealing in the oil patch. The question that they have never received an answer to is: will their industry companies be charged a fee according to this act? As I read this act, I don't know. If they are working on their own lands, do they get charged a fee to consult with themselves? I guess it's a little akin to the way this government has been consulting lately; it doesn't really mean a whole heck of a lot. It's just a question that's never been answered, and they deserve that right to have that answer.

I don't understand why this government has continued to push this. What's the rush? What's the rush that this has to be done now, tonight, and voted on tonight and then again tomorrow night in third reading? Nobody has explained to me the mandate that this has to be done now. Why could we not take the time, even take something like this amendment and go back to all the First Nations to get some input and say: "Listen. The opposition is willing to put in this amendment. Would that suffice? Would that make it better?"

We've not had the opportunity. As a matter of fact, this thing has been rushed so fast that we can't even submit these amendments in the order that we wanted to because the legal counsel here has been just overworked and pushed to try to keep up with this time limit. That is a signal that tells us that something is wrong. There's absolutely no rush. To have to go through this so that we cannot do this in an orderly fashion, so that we cannot consult properly and get everybody involved that this is going to directly affect: that's a shame.

I don't know how you go back and speak to the people that have come here on a Tuesday night now. They had no idea this was coming forward. They didn't know, and they made it clear that they didn't know. How do you look them in the eye and say: "We're going to push this through regardless. Oh, by the way, this is a consultation bill." That doesn't make sense. That's not logical, and you can't sell it. So why are we doing it to these people?

It gets to the point where you've got some serious questions in here. As we look at this amendment, I notice one thing that it's missing. It doesn't list any race. Curious, because when we look at the bill, it says that if you're aboriginal, you have to divulge your private contract with a private company, but it doesn't say that if you're white, you have to do that. It doesn't say that if you're Chinese, you have to do that. You can laugh over there, but the people up there are taking it seriously. They're taking it seriously. I'm not sure that's going to stand up constitutionally, and I will tell you that nothing would satisfy me more than to have the Supreme Court of Canada shoot down this law for just that very reason.

I think this is a serious matter. I think these people deserve better, and they deserve to be consulted on each and every amendment that comes forward, and we don't have the time to even do that.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. I rise in support of this amendment. It seems very reasonable. We always seem to have to pull this information out of the government. I'm thinking back to the lottery grants. You know, for a long time that was sort of a big mystery, and now we've managed to get them, first of all, to publish it. We could get it if we asked, and then they finally put it on the website. You think: what's the big deal? Why do they need to hang on to this information? What do they think is so secret about it?

This is perfectly reasonable and is actually an amendment that helps the government as they attempt to stumble down the road to more transparency and accountability. I have to admit that they haven't done very well on that. Therefore, I think it's very kind of the Wildrose caucus to help them in their transparency attempts by proposing an amendment that would require them to make available a list of the recipients of the grants for each project under the annual reports section of Bill 22.

In addition to that, the next section talks about that the report has to be tabled in the Legislature if it's sitting, and if it's not, within 15 days after the commencement of the sitting, which, of course, makes it available to everyone – the opposition, the media, the public, whomever – because it's now publicly available.

It's perfectly reasonable, enhances transparency of the act, shouldn't cause anybody any harm at all. I definitely support it. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

8:00

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. You know, I don't know where to start on this.

Mr. Anglin: Consulting.

Mr. Campbell: Well, we have been consulting, Member. I've spent the last eight months on the ground when I wasn't in here. I've visited 30 communities now. I'm visiting some more. I just received some more invitations. I've visited the eight Métis settlements. So I'm on the ground, Member, and I am listening to what's going on.

You know, we've heard lots of talk about consultation. Let's put this bill into perspective. This is a money bill, period. This gives the government the ability to collect funds from industry. That's the only reason this bill is here. This isn't about the consultation process in the broad sense. This isn't talking about the consultation office. This isn't talking about the consultation matrix. We haven't even had the chance to sit down with First Nations and talk about the regulations or how we're going to collect the levy. This just gives us the ability to do that. I've made a commitment to all the First Nations chiefs that we will sit down and talk about the regulations with industry at the table, about how much money we're going to collect, how that money will be distributed, and moving forward from there.

You know, the reason that this bill is here and the reason that we do consult is because the courts have been very clear about treaty rights and that we have a duty as a Crown to consult when it impacts on their treaty rights and impacts on traditional land use. That's what we're doing, and that's what the consultation is about. To say that we're ramming anything through, I disagree. I've spent eight months talking about this.

Mr. Mason: To whom?

Mr. Campbell: To everybody. I've attended four Assembly of Treaty Chiefs meetings and talked about consultation. I've had a number of different meetings with industry and technicians from First Nations talking about consultation and what it will look like. As we move through the process, I'll table some comments later from my speeches and the dates in which I talked about this.

Mr. Chair, again, one of the conversations that we had is that First Nations are very wary about divulging their information. That's one of the reasons that we did what we did with 7(1), to leave it that we will provide an aggregate amount of the monies coming out of the fund going to First Nations because the chiefs have made it very clear that they aren't comfortable divulging the monies that are coming in.

Again, the question that you asked about whether they have to pay a levy on their own land: it's the first I've heard of that, Member, but I will get you an answer. I will suggest that, in my mind anyway, I can't see the O'Chiese oil company paying to do work on the O'Chiese reserve, but I'll get an answer for you on that very quickly.

I will not be supporting the amendment, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much, Minister, for getting up and at least saying that you now will go look for that answer because that's the question that I was told was asked more than once. Now we have it on the record, and I hope you will get back to the O'Chiese as soon as you possibly can on how that works.

I will say this. This is not just a money bill. I know what you're telling me, but when I look in here, it says that the decision of the minister is final. That's it. No appeal beyond that. That's how it's taken. That's how that wording is read, and as long as that wording is there, that's offensive in many regards.

I will read one thing to the hon. minister.

Mr. Dorward: On the amendment.

Mr. Anglin: Mr. Chair, do I have to get heckled again by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar? I mean, that's a bit ridiculous. We've got people here willing to listen, and I will tell you . . . [interjections]

The Chair: Hon. members, the hon. member has the floor. Please proceed.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much.

The entire Confederacy of Treaty Six First Nations: "At the outset . . . we again express concern that Alberta has declined to engage the Confederacy of Treaty No. 6 Nations and our member First Nations in a meaningful fashion." That's a significant statement from the people that are involved on the other side of what you're saying, that you've consulted. That, to me, is fundamentally wrong. I just don't get it. You're telling me, and I want to believe you, but the people have shown up tonight. The people showed up last night. When you have an entire treaty nation here and you have other chiefs from the other treaties coming in saying that they have not been consulted, that they are completely opposed to this, that are talking about constitutional rights, something has gone wrong. Something has definitely gone wrong. To me, it's so easy for you to fix, and you have not yet explained to me what the rush is.

When I say that this is being pushed or this is being railroaded, what I'm looking for is: why the time frame now? You've already mentioned you're going to meet with them. I think that's great. That's absolutely great. If you have that plan to meet with them, then what you can do is table this thing, cancel this bill, go meet with them, get the buy-in, and then bring a law back that they agree on. That's the way to do it. That's consultation, not passing this law first and then going out and telling them what we just did to them. That's a terrible thing.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are there other speakers?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: Back to the bill. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I think we have to remember what it is that we're trying to accomplish with this legislation, and this is why I mentioned the issue of the geodata map goal that the government has set. Part of the issue that we're facing is that those lands that are not covered by defined reserve areas have multiple traditional uses for multiple different bands. So when drilling activity takes places in those areas that are outside the reserve areas, there are multiple bands who have to be consulted and who have to make sure that their rights to hunt, fish, gather, and other traditional uses are not impacted.

The problem is that we do not have comprehensive information on this, and when you look at the minister's performance measure, in '11-12 they had zero per cent of this mapping done. The target in 2013-14 is to get 30 per cent of the mapping done. The target in '14-15 is to get 60 per cent of it done. The target in '15-16 is to get 90 per cent of it done. If this is the data that the government needs to collect to be able to facilitate resource development and activity on Crown lands, then let's be specific about this being the data that the government is going to collect in legislation.

With that in mind, this is the set-up to my next amendment, Mr. Chair, which is going to be an amendment to section 8.

The Chair: Please send me the original.

Ms Smith: I'd be happy to send you my copy.

As this is being circulated, let me just tell you the feedback that we are getting from First Nations legal counsel. Section 8 has to go entirely. Keep in mind that this is bolded and underlined in the document I have before me. First Nations have broadly panned this entire section and will not accept the forced disclosure of agreements. In their view, it is unnecessary in terms of accountability because new federal legislation already puts new onerous financial disclosure requirements on First Nations governments and industry.

They also say that it is a blatant violation of the UN declaration of indigenous rights and section 15 of the Charter. Other landowners and individuals who are nonaboriginal do not have to disclose their agreements with industry, so why would someone who is aboriginal have to disclose their agreement just because they are aboriginal? It is discriminatory, it probably would not stand up to a Charter challenge, and it is the reason why I've suggested this additional amendment, that would remove the existing section 8 and replace it.

The Chair: Hon. leader, I believe that's been circulated to everyone now.

Hon. members, we will refer to this amendment as A2.

Please proceed.

Ms Smith: I move that Bill 22, the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, be amended by striking out section 8 and substituting the following:

8 The Minister may, in accordance with the regulations, require a proponent to provide the Minister with information related to aboriginal traditional land use studies for one or both of the following purposes:

- (a) to assist in determining the amount of funds to be provided to First Nations and other identified aboriginal groups;
- (b) to plan and facilitate any required Crown consultation in respect of regulated provincial activities that are occurring in the areas under development.

As you can see, this new replacement for section 8 would negate subsection (2) in the existing legislative proposal and negate subsection (3) as well.

I think this is important because this is why the minister's so-called consultation is such a mismatch with what we've seen in the actual legislation. In the minister's consultation I think he gave the impression to First Nations communities that they would be having a very narrow amount of information that was going to be gathered. In fact, I look at the government's draft report, the Corporate Guidelines for First Nations Consultation Activities, an April 2, 2013, document. This is where they were out there consulting with First Nations communities, saying that the kind of reporting and data that they were going to be collecting was all related to consultation records.

The proponent [would be] required to compile their consultation record as directed by the consultation office, detailing the activities that occurred as part of the consultation, and provide it to the consultation office and the First Nation. The consultation office [would then] use this record to assess the adequacy of consultation. The consultation office may also ask the First Nation to provide their consultation records.

May also ask the First Nation to provide their consultation records.

If the consultation is considered inadequate, the proponent will be given further direction on what is required. The consultation office will manage the consultation process and conduct the final assessment of adequacy.

Once the consultation is considered adequate, the consultation office will inform First Nations, project proponents, the appropriate regulatory bodies, and (if different from the project proponent) the consulting party of the result of its assessment.

The entire act is supposed to be centred around determining the adequacy of the consultation so that proponents know whether or not they have gone forward and done their due diligence. The only records that the government has said that they want to collect and have been out consulting with First Nations on and saying that they're going to collect are related to determining the adequacy of consultation.

Now, that is not what the legislation as it has been presented by the minister actually says. The legislation as presented by the minister is much more broad than that. It says:

8(1) The Minister may, in accordance with the regulations, require a proponent to provide the Minister with information, including third party personal information, records and other documents, including copies of agreements relating to consultation capacity and other benefits pertaining to provincial regulated activities, for one or both the following purposes.

That is the reason why First Nations are feeling blindsided by this legislation. The intention of what the government says that they want to create out of this consultation office, the information they have told them that they want to gather is much more narrowly defined than what the minister has put into this section of the legislation.

If landowners who are nonaboriginal are not required to deliver to the government by mandate all of the agreements that they have with an energy company, we can't be asking for aboriginal communities to be providing an excessive amount of information that others are not required to.

This is why I have proposed an amendment that narrows the scope of the information that the government would be collecting. The information the government needs to collect is information related to traditional aboriginal land-use studies. That's what we need to understand. We need to understand where it is that traditional land uses have been taking place by different nations so that we can ensure that the consultation to be able to determine those areas and to determine the adequacy is reimbursed to those nations and other identified groups and also to be able to plan and facilitate Crown consultation in respect to all of the provincially regulated activities that are taking place on that.

The language that is being used in the current act is not only discriminatory but is way too broad. As a result, they have to have all of these additional addendums to it.

- (2) Where any information, record or document provided by a proponent to the Minister . . . is subject to any kind of confidence or is supplied, explicitly or implicitly, in confidence, the providing of that information, record or document does not waive or negate any confidence attached to the information, record or document, and the confidence continues for all purposes.

And then, of course:

- (3) Notwithstanding . . . the Minister may publish in aggregate form any information collected under this Act.

Well, you don't need to have those two sections qualifying the first section if you actually narrowed the scope of the information that was going to be collected in the first place.

I think what has happened here is that the government is giving itself a wide latitude to collect pretty well whatever it wants. It's soft comfort to First Nations communities that the government says, "Well, we'll consult after the fact, and we'll put it together in regulations; just trust us because the consultation will come later," when the consultation didn't come in the initial drafting of this legislation to begin with.

This is why the trust is breaking down between the minister and First Nations communities. As we say, it's not too late for him to be able to change course and do a fundamental redraft on some of the language in this legislation, but barring that, I would hope that other members would see that part of what we're doing here is trying to make the legislation and the scope of the information collected nondiscriminatory and also more palatable to the First Nations so that we can actually move forward with trying to get some kind of legislation passed that is not going to cause an uproar in our First Nations communities.

With that, I would ask for other members to weigh in. I hope that I can get their support for this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise in support of this amendment, and I ask my colleagues to support it also. What this amendment does is that it puts parameters around what information would be required and for what reason. It removes this broad authority to just say that we can collect pretty much any type of information with regard to their agreement or their contract.

I just want to read a statement from the numerous letters that have appeared and have been tabled in this Legislature in the last couple of days: other landowners and people don't have to disclose their agreements with industry, so why aboriginal people; is it just because they're aboriginal? It's a very interesting question, and it was written because of the frustration with this section. To amend it at least to a limit and to put parameters on the information that the minister could require is a step in the right direction.

I will support the leader of my party for bringing this amendment forward, but I will state categorically that this does not go far enough. It does not go far enough. The aboriginal people and the First Nations treaties and the First Nations within those and the bands within that have not been consulted, in my view. They've said so, and I take their word on that. Until they're consulted, there's no value in this bill. There's only trouble ahead. It's not good for industry, it's not good for relations with First Nations, yet we're forcing it through. What we can do is to at least try to take a step in the right direction. I will tell you that this is not a step that I think anyone can be absolutely proud of. We need to consult. Bottom line: we need to pull this bill. We need to sit down with First Nations. We need to have an agreement with them in principle. They are a separate and distinct people. They are proud, and they have their own nation. This is government to government.

You shake your head no, Deputy Premier, but it's true. It's true by treaty; it's true by the Constitution. That's what's going wrong here. They need to be negotiated with as if they are an equal, not something less. That's really what is the problem here all along. We need to stand up and do what's right, and it's just a simple process. Negotiate first. Come to an agreement first. Bring the law after you have a full consensus. Nothing less is any good. That is just where we are at right now.

Thank you very much. I ask my colleagues to rise and support this.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. Let me start off by saying that there is no intent in the broadest scope to intrude on the constitutional rights of self-government. We understand that First Nations have self-government. We understand the government-to-government relationship.

Mr. Chair, what this does is give us the ability to check with proponents that are paying money into consultation, and we're just talking about consultation, the adequacy of consultation. We're not talking about impact benefit agreements. We're not talking about economic opportunities. We're talking about the consultation piece itself.

You know, the member brought up about mapping and about our targets. Right now a large amount of money goes into First Nations to do mapping. The fact is that they won't share that information right now, so we have to work to get that done.

The other thing is on traditional land use. Again, the member talked about that there are various First Nations that have traditional land uses that overlap. Actually, a couple of chiefs said to me: you know, we'd like to be able to sit down and see if we can work that out because we understand the issues it causes.

Mr. Chair, this does not infringe on any rights of the First Nations people. You know, I'm getting a little tired of the member across the way continuing to say that we don't care about aboriginal people and that we don't consult and we don't meet. As I've said, I've spent the last eight months on the ground visiting First Nations people, and we've talked about a number of different issues. I mean, I made it very clear to First Nations people that sometimes we're going to agree to disagree. There are some things that I'm not going to be able to deliver that they want, but that's not going to stop us from moving forward and working in the right direction.

You know, I give my colleagues and the ministers from different departments full kudos for opening their doors to sit down with First Nations and talk about a broad scope of issues from water to education to economic opportunities to health care to housing to children in care to domestic violence to opportunities for aboriginal women.

Mr. Chair, I'd be quite happy to sit and talk about the intent of this legislation, but I am getting a little tired of hearing the patronizing remarks from the member across the way that this government does not believe in aboriginal rights.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I hope you're getting tired. I hope you're all getting tired. I hope that when you leave here tonight you're sick and tired because they can't come down here and tell you how sick and tired they are. They don't have a voice. This is your job. I understand you, and I'm not picking on you as an individual, but what I'm saying is that you're missing the point.

They don't come here on a Tuesday night because they've got nothing better to do. There are a lot of better things to do. They're here because they're upset and they're concerned. This bill is going forward. You say that you're consulting. We saw all the chiefs that came here yesterday. We heard from the various chiefs, and we got all this contradictory information, and what you're telling us is: don't listen to the contradictory information. Well, then we're going to have to agree to disagree because we are listening to this. That's what consultation is. You reach out and you communicate and you find out that – wait a minute – there isn't an agreement here. There are a lot of people upset, and they haven't been consulted, and they've got significant issues in dealing with this.

Again we're back to the question I asked, and I'll ask it again. Hopefully, you'll get sick and tired of it. What's the rush? Why do we have to push this through now? You said that you have appointments to meet with them. Let's get rid of this bill. Meet with them, come to an agreement, then come back here when those people agree on the bill.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, I have to tell you that the rhetoric that I'm hearing in this Chamber right now is somewhat disturbing and really disappointing. If these members of the Wildrose from across the way would have chosen to avail themselves of just a little bit of information, just ask the minister . . . [interjection] And now they won't let me talk.

Just ask the minister for the information: how many bands and First Nations peoples has he met over the last number of months? I can tell you, Mr. Chairman, that if there is one cabinet minister that has been on the road virtually 24/7, it is the Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Saskiw: How many? Tell us how many.

The Chair: I think he's trying to do that, hon. member, if you'd let him. Thank you.

Please proceed, Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There are a number of issues that come up in this Chamber from ministry to ministry . . . [interjection] Mr. Chairman, would you please advise this member that I would like to talk, and maybe he will give me an opportunity to talk.

Mr. Saskiw: Sure.

The Chair: Proceed.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There are a number of issues that this government is dealing with relevant to situations arising with our First Nations. I know that from economic development to education to advanced education to health care there is amazing work going on between this government and leaders of our First Nations and rank-and-file community members both on reserves and in urban communities. I don't see this passion and excitement on the other side of the House to contribute and to support that and to work with that.

Here, Mr. Chairman, what we're seeing is an opportunity to wrap themselves in this political veil of being very supportive of First Nations rights and simply trying to exploit what they perceive is a wedge issue. It isn't, Mr. Chairman, because leaders of First Nations have been consulted and will continue to be consulted and always have been. [interjection] That member will not stop, will he, Mr. Chairman?

The Chair: I'm sure he will, hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: If there is a government in this land, Mr. Chair, in Canada, that has a great relationship with our First Nations, it's the government of Alberta. Historically our Premiers – Premier Klein, Premier Getty, Premier Stelmach, and now Premier Redford – have had phenomenal relationships with our First Nations. Why? Because we always work together, we always collaborate, and we always consult. That history simply is undeniable.

Mr. Chairman, to stand up and to profess to be the righteous defenders of aboriginal rights when they know that this bill, as a matter of fact, is designed to assist First Nations in the long run with economic development on reserves, with elevating First Nations – if he knew the fact that this particular minister wants nothing more than to make sure that our First Nations reach equity in this country and enjoy any and all benefits that every other Canadian enjoys, if he knew that this minister is working right now with leaders in aboriginal communities on education, making sure that children on reserves receive the same funding for education, if he knew of all this work, maybe he would actually support this minister in the work that he's doing as opposed to trying to politicize the issue.

You know, Mr. Chairman, in this country we have 150 years of politicizing native issues, and this is where we have ended up. This minister is trying to take leadership, as a matter of fact, and not politicize the aboriginal community, do the right thing for them as Canadians because they are just as Canadian as anybody else. But this is what you get. You get exactly what has been happening in this country for the last 150 years, the politicizing of issues, trying to use aboriginal communities for wedge issues to score cheap political points. We won't stand for that. We will be working with our aboriginal communities, and we will make sure that they get to benefit from the same privileges and rights like every one of us in this province does despite the rhetoric and the patronizing comments that we hear from the opposition.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, Deputy Premier.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Edmonton-Centre. [interjections]

Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, please. Let someone else have the floor. Thank you.

Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, please proceed.

Mr. Mason: That speech from the hon. minister, the Deputy Premier, I think, deserves a response. His job apparently in the government is to pour oil on troubled waters, but I think what he does is that he usually pours gasoline on troubled waters and then throws a match down.

I just want to make a few points. First of all, it's the words of the First Nations leadership itself that we have been using and quoting in this debate. It's their statements that they don't support the bill and that they feel they have not been consulted with that form the basis of the opposition of all three opposition parties, Mr. Chairman. That's the first point. So to try and make statements about how the opposition is trying to make use of First Nations to score cheap political points is a nonstarter. It's just not there.

Then there is the question about politicization of these issues. The government has been using this a lot lately whenever the opposition raises a concern among people, for example, who haven't got proper treatment in health care or others. They say: "The opposition is politicizing the issue. Just bring it to us, and we'll deal with it." Mr. Chairman, that's very disingenuous. Those issues are very political because when the government decides that they are going to continue major tax breaks for corporations, keep some of the lowest royalties in the world, maintain a flat tax that gives huge tax savings to the wealthiest Albertans, and at the same time cut programs that needy and vulnerable Albertans depend on, that's political.

That's a political decision, that you're favouring the rich and the wealthy in our society at the expense of lower income and middle-class families and people who are vulnerable. That's a very political debate. We take the opposite view. We think that it's in fact the people who are most in need that deserve the most help from the government, not those that already have the most wealth. That's a political debate. So to say that there are no politics here or we should avoid politics is absolutely ridiculous.

It's more ridiculous when you apply it to aboriginal issues because it's been the politics of aboriginal issues by patronizing and colonial governments both at the provincial and the federal level that have driven many of the issues that we are still trying to sort out today. It's the politics of aboriginal issues, hon. member, that is at the root of all of these issues. To say that we're trying to politicize it is ridiculous. It is politicized. It's politicized by you. It's politicized by First Nations. It's politicized by the opposition parties. It is a political issue. So to say it's political is like saying, you know, that there's sunshine. It's just a ridiculous statement.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. You know, I have to say that I really appreciate the government's current track record of a scandal a day and offering the opportunity to the opposition parties to be able to offer our alternatives up in response to their scandal a day. It's really nice of you to offer us that. We appreciate it because you're just putting it in our laps every day. I wonder what the scandal will be tomorrow.

The Chair: On the amendment, hon. member, please.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, Mr. Chair, I'm sorry. On the amendment, which would be amendment . . .

The Chair: A2.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Good. Thank you very much.

This issue of: it's not political. Of course it's political. It's also specifically discriminatory. I'm sorry. I probably didn't need to use both of those words in the same sentence. But the gist of this bill is to be able to collect information on aboriginal interests in the oil and gas sector and publish their participation and their interest, but there is no attempt to publish anyone else's, so it is very specifically directed at publicizing what they're doing and how much. That is very much to the benefit of the current oil and gas industry because they get to find out what's being proposed on aboriginal land, and nobody else has to say anything or bring any information forward.

To say that it's, you know, not political is a ridiculous statement, and knowing this member, it's probably done in great fun to give us all an opportunity to stand up and extend the evening. I know he takes a childish delight in that, and we're all duly on our feet around it, so it worked. Indeed, we have him giggling right along with us.

The other part of this is that concept of consultation. You know, I believe that the minister was out there. I've worked with him for a while, and I have some respect for him, but . . . [interjection] Yeah. That was a compliment.

Mr. Mason: That's the best you're going to get in here.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. Probably.

I think that this government's understanding and acceptance of a definition or a standard, let me say, for a consultation is different than what many others would do. I've negotiated with various ministers on various subjects and the Government House Leader many, many times, and what I find is that a couple of things happen. Either a concept or an idea or a plan is mentioned very briefly in passing in a social situation. It's interesting to hear it, and you maybe give a little bit of a reaction but not much because you didn't really have it fully explained. It was just in passing. You move on and, you know, finish your smart snacks, and on you go to the next event. Then you come into the House or go into a committee or whatever it is and find out that this little idea that was just mentioned in passing has become a full-fledged bill or motion or a plan that is being implemented by the government, and you think: "Whoa. Whoa. Whoa. That is not what I would have called consultation."

I've also been in negotiations where we got right down to the nitty-gritty of it. Every word counted. Interestingly enough, I reviewed every single version of it word by word because I would find that deals that had been made previously disappeared, and the wording got changed back to what it was before. Now, maybe this was an oversight. Maybe people were tired. Maybe people weren't wearing the correct glasses and they missed the fact that there was a change to it. I don't know. All I know is that a number of times when I would go back and review the deal word by word, I would find that in fact it had reverted back, and all that work was gone. If I hadn't read it word by word, I would have missed the fact that that was now gone, and I had to say: "No, no, no. Remember? We had this agreement. It needs to go back in again, and this is the wording that we agreed upon." "Oh, right." So it was a very slow process and a very thorough process to move that kind of thing along, and admittedly not very many people are as directed towards the minutiae of this kind of thing as I am.

Those are two ways that one group of people like the minister would believe that he had reasonably raised this issue and had talked about it and for people on the other side of this to believe that they'd never heard it. It's quite possible for those two conflicting points of view to be absolutely true in this case.

But I think that this government has become so used to implementing in a hurry what they believe is the right thing to do, and they used to talk about it in their caucus, I know. I'm not so sure that's happening now. Based on some of the things that have happened, I am sure that the backbenchers would not have allowed this to happen. Let me assume that, you know, they've talked about some things; their staff has been working on it for quite a long time; things have been presented.

You know, there's a whole process in government where there are all kinds of initials for it. There's a request for a decision, and there's a request for information and all these different processes where it keeps coming back before them, so as far as they're concerned, they've looked at this issue – what? – four, five, six times by the time it spits out the other end of the pipeline and is a bill or a motion or a committee understanding or whatever. They think they've done it a lot but, in fact, for the people on the receiving end they may have heard it once or twice without understanding the weight of the issue that that discussion about, "Well, we'd like to follow up on this," and "We're thinking of implementing such and such," actually has in a cocktail setting or a social setting or a dinner or a coffee or even just passing in the hallways. That actually carries a lot of weight, and people need to know that and pay attention and follow through.

It took me a while. I got had a couple of times but good before I figured out that that kind of minutia is necessary and that kind of follow-up and that kind of ear for the slightest change in tone or wording. I think that is what's happened here. This government has reached a point where they believe themselves omnipotent. I spoke once about the hubris that is experienced and demonstrated by members of this government, that they are above the gods, that they are so amazing and all knowing that they don't have to use the usual processes that man, humans, need to use. I think that's part of what's happened here. We've certainly seen that demonstrated in this sitting. [interjection] Thanks.

How have we seen that? Well, you know, we have, for example, a deal with teachers. There is a process in place, and it says that if everybody doesn't vote for it, then it's kaput. That happens, and government says: "No, no, no. We won't accept that. We're going to bring through legislation and, more than that, we're going to do more than one stage in a day." That is a big deal, Mr. Chair. There's a reason why our standing orders and all the other parliamentary books say that you can't do more than one stage in a day. It's to allow the public to hear what's going on, the media to hear what's going on, people to give input, opposition to think about it and research it. You know, there's a good reason for why that kind of thing happens. To truncate that, to squish it all together in the timing and to run it through in a day or less than a day is really a dramatic step. So there's one example of what's going on: we are above criticism; we are above having to use the standard processes.

When we're talking about consultation with a group of people, this is what's happened. The government is so used to acting that way that they have put themselves above what everyone else, what a reasonable person and the reasonable person test would consider adequate consultation. I believe this minister did go out. I believe he did meet with people and pitch these ideas, and he probably does have speeches of where he talked to people. But that nitty-gritty of saying: "Okay. Everybody good with this?" – you know, I'm a bit pushy. What I do is say: "You have to look me in the eye. We're going to have to communicate that this is what we're understanding this to be." If that doesn't happen, it's easy to have somebody that believes that a deal is had when it's not, that something's been agreed to or that wording has slightly changed this time around that actually changes the whole thing.

As we know in this Assembly, a word like "may" versus "shall" is a big deal. Three letters; five letters: you wouldn't think much of a difference, right? But the difference in importance in legislation between, you know, the government shall do something and the government may do something is a huge difference, so the wording is really important.

Gee, it's just so much fun sitting at night with the Deputy Premier, who just gets everybody all fired up.

I'm sure I'm near the end of my 20 minutes. That was a wonderful opportunity. Thank you so much. I am speaking in support of the amendment that is proposed.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd ask for unanimous permission to briefly revert to introductions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Chair: Proceed, hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to introduce to you and through you some members of our First Nations communities. Chief Herb Arcand from Alexander First Nation is the acting grand chief of the Confederacy of Treaty 6, which is 35 miles northwest of Edmonton. He would like to welcome everyone to Treaty 6 territory. He also wanted us to indicate that the minister has never visited to discuss this bill with the Alexander First Nation, so he's just wanting to correct the record there. Also in the gallery we have Edwin Paul from Alexander First Nation; Donna Ahkimmachie and Kevin Ahkimmachie from Treaty 8; Phyllis Whitford, proxy for O'Chiese; Cherish Cardinal from Bigstone and Frieda Cardinal from Bigstone; and Shannon Pastion from the Dene First Nation. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. Thank you for being here.

The Chair: Thank you.

Bill 22 Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act (continued)

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak in favour of this motion that's put forward, and I'd like to clarify a couple of things for the Deputy Premier and for other members as well. You know, it's very important to recognize the fact that much of the information that the opposition has been sharing over the last 48 hours regarding Bill 22 has been coming directly from direct correspondence – letters, e-mails, phone calls – and face-to-face meetings with members from all three treaties and from First Nations communities.

I think it's interesting that the Deputy Premier in his own words had talked about the work that the Minister of Aboriginal Relations has done and the number of groups that he's met with. I'm not going to try to argue that in the least, Mr. Chair. I know that the minister has met with many different aboriginal groups and many different First Nations chiefs and councils, but I do need to clarify for the record that meeting with a group or an individual is not consultation. One of the frustrations that I'm hearing from members of the First Nations communities is that the term "consultation" is being thrown around, I think in some contexts incorrectly and improperly.

There has been context established, or I'll say a precedence established. There have been different cases that have gone before the Supreme Court. I know yesterday I had talked a little bit about the Mikisew and their court case, so there has been discussion around consultation. There clearly are different interpretations of that term. I just wanted to clarify what I'm hearing from many representatives of the different treaties. Part of their frustration with this bill and why there has been so much outrage about Bill 22 is because of the lack of consultation on it. The intention of this bill was mentioned in passing in meetings, not in a sit-down, back-and-forth consultation as far as the government proposing bringing forward a levy.

Now, the intention of this levy to allow an equal playing field for all First Nations throughout the province to be able to have the capacity to consult I agree with, and I don't think there are any bands that would disagree with that. But the process by which the minister and this government went about drafting this bill, without proper and meaningful consultation with different First Nations bands, is quite simply, Mr. Chair, disrespectful.

I know some of the members from the government side have talked about the intent. The reason I rise to speak in support of amendment A2 is because with what we pass in this House, Mr. Chairman, it's extremely important that we're conscientious of every word that is being either approved or disapproved. Although a bill, an amendment may have the intention of doing well or bringing about positive consequences, there are sometimes unintentional consequences that come about and that especially come about when we use ambiguous or vague language or don't have proper definitions or very defined definitions.

This motion narrows the gap in section 8 of this bill. As some of the hon. members have said, this is a section that has been the most or one of the most contentious sections for several treaties. I just want to get into that a little bit and maybe shed some light for some of the members across the way as to why this is so offensive. I mean, first and foremost, you know, requiring First Nations to publicly share or disclose sensitive documents, agreements between industry and First Nations: first of all, as other members have said, in no other context, in no other group are they required to disclose this kind of information, and it really begs the question as to if this section was either intended or not intended to be discriminatory.

The fact of the matter, Mr. Chair, is that agreements between landowners and industry are private. That's between industry and landowners. They are not required to disclose this information. The fact that in this bill there is a section requiring First Nations to disclose this is ridiculous. As other members have quoted, you know, yesterday there was a press release put out by Treaty 8 where Grand Chief Roland Twinn had talked about how private companies and their agreements are not subject to public scrutiny. So this section can be interpreted as discriminatory. As mentioned yesterday, First Nations will not accept this section as it is written.

I mean, again, when we talk about accountability, it's unnecessary. First of all, there is federal legislation that puts onerous financial disclosure requirements on First Nations governments, and industry as well is bound by anticorruption legislation – okay? – in sections of the Criminal Code which prohibit the bribery of public officials. The point of this is that in the eyes of different First Nations bands this section 8 of Bill 22 is a blatant violation of the UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples and of section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Other groups do not have to disclose this information. Why is it that aboriginal groups have to disclose this information? For that reason and many others, Mr. Chair, I'm opposed to Bill 22 in its entirety.

However, speaking to the amendment, this does attempt to plug one of the many gaping holes in this piece of legislation, I do think, and I urge all members of this Assembly to vote in favour of this.

You know, the last point I'd like to make, Mr. Chair, is that I think there are many people around the province that may disagree with the hon. Deputy Premier when he speaks about how the Crown, or the province of Alberta, has this fantastic relationship with First Nations communities. That's something to aspire to, but I think we're far from that. I do think it's worth mentioning for those who maybe weren't aware that both yesterday evening and this evening we have guests, representatives from different First Nations communities who are here to make their presence known, that they are completely opposed to this bill.

There have been numerous press releases – many of them, I believe, have been tabled in this House – where we have grand chiefs, chiefs, and councils all speaking in opposition to this bill primarily because of the lack of consultation. If the Deputy Premier thinks that's how you build a great relationship, that you draft a piece of legislation and you ram it down someone's throat and you try to push it through this House as quickly as possible, then it's no wonder there are so many frustrated and discouraged members of First Nations communities, you know, who feel patronized by this government and do not agree with the Deputy Premier's sentiment that they have a great relationship.

A great relationship starts with trust. It starts with, well, building trust and having a conversation, a conversation or multiple conversations which lead to consultation, where they are equal partners with an equal voice at the table. From everything that I've been told in communicating with different community members, that has not been the case. There have been discussions, but discussions and notification is not consultation.

Hopefully, that clarifies a little bit for members of the House.

I will conclude by saying that I strongly urge all members to support this amendment.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I am so grateful that the Deputy Premier has chosen to enter this debate. I think the last time I debated him, I didn't. He ran out. [interjections] Oh, that was Sylvan Lake. I'm sorry. [interjections] Oh. Correct me, please.

The Chair: Are you on the amendment, hon. member?

Mr. Anglin: I'm going to speak to the amendment. But I want to say something here. Isn't it ironic that a bunch of white men down here are talking about what's good for aboriginal people? That just doesn't make sense. That's almost a comedy in the making.

The consultation process has to be engaged with the First Nations. The Deputy Premier asked: how many First Nations people did I meet with? Well, I did. I went out, and I met more than a few times with the O'Chiese band. I brought the Leader of the Opposition with me once. We had a great meeting. I've gone to the Sunchild more times than I can count. I know various people individually, and I have met them in an official capacity. The reason I'm here speaking today is because they've come to me to bring their concerns because you have not listened to them. That's why they'll come.

Clearly, what we have here is an amendment coming forward dealing with an issue that requires exactly what the Deputy Premier has sort of hinted at, so I would like him to respond. He asked the question: do I know how many bands the hon. minister has met with to discuss this bill? The answer is: I don't, and neither do the people up there. Please, somebody tell me. Give me a list of every band that you met with that agreed to this so you brought this forward. Please give us the list. Then we'll go check that list. I think that's reasonable. Then we'll find out.

9:00

We had Treaty 6 here. We have Treaty 8. We have Treaty 7. We've got bands represented from all around the province who say that they have not been consulted. Let's get right down to the bare facts, and let's find out. If the hon. Deputy Premier will divulge who has been consulted and who has agreed, let's create the list – it's a little bit like our infrastructure list – let's go check on it, and let's find out if it's real. You know what? That's not hard to do.

The people that this most affects are not here on this floor to discuss it, and they're upset, and that's why they're here to watch in, probably, frustration. They have a lot to say. It shouldn't be between us. It should be between the minister and them. That's where it belongs right now, and that's where it should stay right now until there's an agreement.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there other speakers on the amendment? The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Just jumping off the point that the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre put forward, I think that the Deputy Premier has offered us a very good opportunity to ask the minister to table exactly what the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre and the Deputy Premier himself have asked for, which is the full list of those who were consulted with, the full documentation that showed that the minister has put on the table all of the different aspects of this bill as well as the letters of support for the approach that he's taking, in particular in section 8.

I think that that the Treaty 8 First Nations of Alberta press release has been read into the record several times, but it's worth noting again. I will mention the others that I have here. Grand Chief of Treaty 8 First Nations of Alberta Roland Twinn states:

"We oppose this new legislation, created without meaningful and proper consultation and view it as a continuation of the paternalistic attitude that our Nations have struggled against for decades."

The new bill, according to an Alberta Government announcement, is "aimed at strengthening the First Nations consultation . . ."

But according to First Nations

"this bill does nothing to ensure the consultation process is appropriate and meaningful. It is instead creating a consultation levy fund that has the potential to impact Treaty Rights and our ability to consult, it is more likely to hinder than enhance."

I'll be happy to table this tomorrow. That is just from Chief Twinn.

We also have a letter from the Samson Cree Nation, authored by Chief Marvin Yellowbird, which goes on to say:

As Chief of the Samson Cree Nation, both I and my Council are shocked today to learn about the introduction of the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act in the Alberta Legislature. The Government of Alberta provided no notice to First Nations that the legislation was imminent and has failed to meaningfully consult with First Nations regarding this legislation. Indeed, Samson has been absolutely clear in our discussions with [the minister] personally about the proposed new Consultation Policy that Samson Cree Nation is opposed to a levy on First Nation consultation and a proposed requirement to disclose agreements between First Nations and the natural resource companies. Alberta has been less than clear as to how such measures and such a mechanism will work or benefit Samson Cree Nation or the resource sector. [The minister's] government's approach to this legislation clarifies one thing only – [they] simply do not care what Samson Cree Nation has to say about consultation.

It goes on to say that they would request that he attend a meeting of Treaty 6 chiefs as soon as possible to review the act. They want to provide a thorough response, but their initial concerns are very serious. They're around the nature of what this amendment proposes, that we have to modify section 8 so that we take away the discriminatory element and so that we also take away the aspect of them having to disclose their agreements. That is Chief Marvin Yellowbird's.

I also have a letter here from Chief Charles Weasel Head of the Blood Tribe, and in it he states:

I recently learned about the introduction of the proposed Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act . . . in the Alberta Legislature. The Government of Alberta . . . has completely disregarded our constitutionally protected rights by providing no notice to First Nations that this legislation was imminent and has not consulted with First Nations regarding the act whatsoever.

To the limited extent that First Nations have had any opportunity to date to discuss the proposed new Consultation Policy with [the minister] and other government representatives, Treaty 7 First Nations have been clear that we are opposed to a levy on First Nation consultation and any requirement to disclose agreements between First Nations and natural resource companies. Alberta has failed to explain how such measures will work or benefit First Nations, or the resource sector. Instead, [the minister's] government has introduced the Act in the face of those concerns, before a meaningful consultation process on the proposed new Consultation Policy has completed, and before any consultation about the Act whatsoever. [The minister's] government's decision to introduce this legislation makes it clear to us that you do not understand the scope or breadth of our constitutionally protected Treaty and Aboriginal rights or the Crown's duty to consult and accommodate. Of even equal concern is the complete lack of respect Alberta is demonstrating by proceeding in this manner without our engagement.

Then, of course, they go on to – guess what? – identify this exact section that we're talking about right now because it's discriminatory and it goes too far asking for the disclosure agreement.

So I am quite interested in hearing the minister respond to this, to the challenge by the Deputy Premier, and to the request of the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. I have visited the Beaver Lake Cree Nation, Siksika Nation, Fort McKay, Blood reserve, Piikani, Suncild, O'Chiese, Enoch, Tsuu T'ina. I've been to Sturgeon Lake Cree, where I met with Horse Lake and Duncan's First Nation, I've been to the Assembly of Treaty Chiefs and addressed them, I've been to the Treaty 7 office, and I've also addressed the Piikani education conference.

In all of those opportunities to meet with First Nations, none of them mentioned that the minister was consulting with them on this levy, on this act, and the provisions therein. They talked about education. I'm glad the minister is considering looking at Jordan's principle and funding every student in this province to the same level regardless of whether they live on-reserve or off-reserve. I have suggested that many times before in the times that we have been on conference panels together, and I think that that would be a positive first step.

But the fact of the matter is that just because I went and met and had wonderful conversations and tours of schools and participated in powwows at these different events, that does not replace meaningful consultation on a bill like this. I don't think the minister can pretend that because he went and had dinners and maybe casually notified people this might be coming, that in some way replaces meaningful consultation.

With that in mind, I would love the minister to respond to this. What nations have written to him saying that they are in support of this bill, in particular section 8, the one that we're trying to amend through this legislation?

I'd also like to know: since he has said that he has done such consultation, surely there's a written record. Surely there are letters back and forth with different First Nations identifying the elements of this bill coming, identifying that it was coming altogether, identifying some of the different provisions that are going to be built into the act, describing what section 8 was going to mean and the impact it was going to have on First Nations. If the minister, as he claims, has been travelling around consulting about this, surely there has to be some kind of written record of the discussions that went back and forth because that is what consultation is all about. It's an exchange of ideas where you can come to a conclusion. It's not just casually notifying somebody in passing when you happen to visit their reserve.

I do hope that the minister would be able to provide some clarity on that because when he first spoke to the amendment that I was proposing here, his interpretation of what he is trying to do doesn't seem to be that far apart from what I'm saying that this amendment should do. The problem is that what he is telling First Nations he's intending to do is not what is written in the text of the legislation that he put forward in this Assembly. The text of the legislation that he put forward in this Assembly is discriminatory, probably would not hold up under a Charter challenge, and proposes to put additional restrictions and disclosure requirements on aboriginal citizens that he is not putting on nonaboriginal citizens.

If he is actually in agreement that he wants to abridge the information collection in the way that I've described, he should be speaking in favour of the amendment. It would send a strong message to the First Nations members who are here this evening, to the First Nations members who have written to us, to the 50 First Nations members that I've introduced over the last couple of days. I note that the minister hasn't introduced anyone into this Legislature in the last few days who is in support of his bill. How unlike the approach that was taken when he was doing his consultation on the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013, which is something that the members opposite should keep in mind.

I would like for him to respond and explain why it is he feels he has support to go ahead and put forward legislation with this amendment in here, with this provision in here, and who exactly he has the support of in the First Nations community.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

9:10

The Chair: Hon. leader, you read exclusively from a letter. I would ask that you table that letter tomorrow at the appropriate time. Thank you.

Also, hon. members, might I remind you that there's quite a bit of latitude during Committee of the Whole, but if at all possible would you please try to stay to the amendment? I anticipate we have a number of amendments to go through tonight, so it would be helpful if members got up and spoke to the amendment.

We are dealing with amendment A2, and if there are no more speakers, I will call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A2 lost]

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: Now back to the bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I do have amendments to propose, but I just want to say for the record that I'm hesitant to put forward amendments to this bill because it is so flawed. On Friday, May 10, I joined with many of the chiefs and the treaty chiefs in calling for the minister to withdraw this bill altogether, so after careful consideration I am putting forward this evening two amendments to this bill but really need to emphasize the fact that I think, regardless of how many amendments the opposition may put forward in an attempt to improve this legislation, it's an impossible mission. For that reason, this bill really should be withdrawn.

You know, Mr. Chair, the other reasons that are more pragmatic on why I hesitate to put forward amendments: it's clear to me that this government is not listening to First Nations. As has been identified, there have been numerous letters and press releases from chiefs, from grand chiefs, from representatives from the treaties who are all opposed to this bill. With the fact that there's been such a disregard that this government has shown First Nations by, again, failing to acknowledge their concerns, their disgust – I guess that is the word I'm going to use – for this legislation I really think is salt in the wounds, so to speak. I mean, again, the government loves to talk about the relationship that they want to build or have built with First Nations communities. The reality is that this piece of legislation is working counter to that and is dismantling that relationship.

You know, Mr. Chair, by not withdrawing this legislation, I feel – and I'm sure that there are many that agree – that the minister and this government have lost the confidence of people whose interests they should be promoting and protecting. So the amendments that I bring forward today should not be construed as indicating my support for this legislation nor my endorsement of the process that this minister has taken. I vehemently oppose the manner in which this legislation was drafted without consultation as well as the problematic wording of many sections, as I've spoken to in second reading and as I will continue to bring to the attention of members of this Assembly.

The amendments that I'm proposing here, Mr. Chair, merely attempt to compel this minister to speak directly to just two of many sections in this bill, the two sections that have been vocally rejected by First Nations. You know, adopting and accepting these amendments is the least that the minister can do and far less that what he ought to do.

With that being said, Mr. Chair, I'd like to bring forward my first amendment.

9:20

The Chair: Okay. Hon. member, we will treat that as amendment A3. I hope that you are sending me the original. Thank you.

Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll begin by reading the amendment into the record. I move that Bill 22, the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, be amended in section 4 by striking out subsection (3) and substituting the following:

(3) The Minister may only use the Fund for the following purposes:

- (a) to pay all of the costs incurred by First Nations and identified aboriginal groups with respect to consultation;
  - (b) to make grants in accordance with the regulations to First Nations and identified aboriginal groups to assist them in developing capacity to participate fully in all required Crown consultations in respect of provincial regulated activities; and
  - (c) to pay the costs of administering this Act.
- (4) The Consultation Levy Fund, and grants made from therein, cannot under any circumstance be construed as accommodation or compensation for infringements of Treaty or aboriginal rights.

Mr. Chair, this amendment is very important. First of all, the fund is to be used to pay all of the costs incurred by First Nations and Métis communities during consultation as well as, and extremely importantly, to develop consultation capacity to enable these communities to participate fully in consultations. My hope here is that the levy charged by the government will need to be adequate to actually cover the full costs incurred by First Nations in preparation for and during consultation.

In subsection (4), Mr. Chair, I indicate importantly that none of these funds can be construed as accommodation with respect to consultation or as compensation for infringement upon treaty or aboriginal rights. It's very important that if there is an infringement on either treaty or aboriginal rights, there is a penalty, that that is paid. This original levy fund is not to be confused with any penalties that could be incurred for failure to properly consult or an infringement upon inherent treaty rights and aboriginal rights.

You know, Mr. Chair, I do hope that this amendment makes it into the bill. This is providing further clarification and ensuring that there is no confusion over monies that are put into increasing consultation capacity but not, I guess, removing – on the off chance that there is an infringement on aboriginal rights or treaty rights, the original levy is not used twice and used as a way to pay those fines. That needs to be separate and distinct.

Mr. Chair, the courts have been very, very clear, as I've said earlier tonight. There have been a few cases that have gone all the way to the Supreme Court. Consultation should be coupled with accommodation. The government needs to be clear in this bill that funds provided from the consultation levy will not be considered part of accommodation or compensation under any circumstances. I mean, if consultation is to be meaningful, it needs to also have accommodation where, again, industry and the government are open and willing to not only receive suggestions, concerns, and ideas from First Nations but to accept them, adopt them, and ensure that they are included in policy, in agreements. Again, this is a two-way conversation.

As was stated numerous times over the last week, notification is not consultation. You know, for the benefit of members of this Assembly an example of notification would be when ministers provide briefing notes to a bill to opposition members before it's tabled in the House. That would be an example of notification. It's a one-way conversation, information passing from the minister to the member. That is not consultation. There is not input from the member back to the minister on what should be included in the bill or how it could be improved or offering different points of view.

Consultation is extremely important. This amendment speaks to the spirit of this bill, which, as I've stated, is quite flawed. However, the intention of ensuring that all First Nations have the ability to consult and have the capacity to consult with industry on proposed projects: when it comes to the funds and how they're going to be distributed, it's very important, Mr. Chair, that we outline these specifics and that there are no shortcuts to ensuring that First Nations have the full capacity.

In conclusion, Mr. Chair, this recommendation, this amendment I'd like to share with the Assembly, and I'm pleased to say that I've got full support of the First Nations and legal counsel for two of the treaties that support this amendment, that wholeheartedly endorse this amendment and feel that this needs to be in this bill. I ask members and the minister to seriously consider this amendment. As I've said, this has full endorsement from the First Nations communities that I've been in touch with over the last three days, but importantly the legal counsel for two of the treaties wholeheartedly endorse this.

I do want, in conclusion, Mr. Chair, to express my appreciation to the legal counsel as well as to the First Nations chiefs I've been able to speak with in the last few days, including the grand chiefs, for their input on trying to improve legislation. I mean, their opinion is that it be withdrawn altogether, but I appreciate their counsel and their advice, and I urge all members of this Assembly to support this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair. Hai, hai.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise in support of this amendment. I guess it's a good indication to the minister of just how little he has to go to meet First Nations partway. If you look at the amendment that's being proposed, two of the provisions are pretty well identical to what's existing in the legislation right now. But to provide the certainty that First Nations communities need, there's a new (a) that would "pay all of the costs incurred by First Nations and identified aboriginal groups with respect to consultation."

I think the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has sort of peeled back the veil on what some of the concerns are in First Nations communities when talking about the number of dollars estimated currently for consultation versus the number of dollars likely to be raised through this levy and the difference between the two.

As the member has indicated in this Assembly, $150 million is the estimate currently going to First Nations for the purpose of consultation, and the proposal as he's described it in his conversations with the minister is that this levy would only generate $70 million. What that would seem to indicate is that this is actually a way of carving out $80 million worth of legitimate consultation fees that First Nations have come to rely on to be able to determine their rights on their traditional lands. I think that what this does is that it gives that disclosure and that assurance that this is not a mechanism to be able to shortchange First Nations communities relative to what they're currently getting under the status quo.

The second part, adding a new (4): "The Consultation Levy Fund, and grants made from therein, cannot under any circumstance be construed as accommodation or compensation for infringements of Treaty or aboriginal rights." I think the language that's been put into the preamble has given First Nations concerns that the government is trying to somehow dodge the constitutional protections that they have or dodge their requirement to do proper consultation. I think what this does is that it demonstrates and reaffirms that this is a parallel process and in no way has any bearing or any infringement upon the rights as they exist under the Constitution, as they exist under treaty, and as they may in future be enumerated through various sources of litigation.

I think this is a very important amendment. I think it goes a long way towards addressing the concerns of First Nations communities.

9:30

It's kind of interesting that with all of the busyness of a member from a party with four MLAs – we certainly know how busy that can be when you have a party of four MLAs – the hon. member found time to sit down with the chiefs, to talk with them about how the bill might be able to be improved, to come up with language, to put forward an amendment, and to be able to get an endorsement from them. It wouldn't have been that hard for the minister to do exactly the same thing. He's had the same amount of time over the last few days. He doesn't like any of our amendments. It would have been nice for him to propose a few of his own.

But in the absence of seeing any amending language to address the concerns of our First Nations chiefs and communities, I think that the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has done a pretty good job here, and in so doing, this amendment deserves the support of the Assembly. I encourage the minister to at least pass one of these amendments this evening to demonstrate that he is listening to First Nations chiefs, that he is going to go forward with an attitude of accommodation, genuine consultation. I think this would be a very good place to start.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak in favour of this amendment because I think that it strengthens what's a very, very weak bill. It may still be so weak as to not deserve the support of the Assembly, but I think it is important that we talk about this. Subsection (3) in the amendment will indicate that the fund is to be used to pay all of the costs incurred by First Nations and Métis communities during consultation as well as to develop consultation capacity to enable these communities to participate fully in consultation. Now, the problem with the bill as it's drafted is that there can be an arbitrary decision about how much is fair to pay First Nations costs relative to consultation, not something in their control and not necessarily related to their actual costs or their legitimate costs. This just turns that around and says that the First Nations and other identified aboriginal groups will have their costs of consultation covered. Also, I think that if there were any charges, for example, against the applicant, it would prevent this fund from being used to cover those costs. They would have to pay out of their own pocket.

I think that on balance this strengthens the act and shifts the balance in this one area in favour of First Nations and other recognized aboriginal groups in terms of ensuring that if we're going to have this fund and it is to pay the costs for consultation, it covers all of those costs and not just a small portion arbitrarily determined by someone else. That's the basis of the amendment, and that's why I think all members should support it.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Are there other speakers? The hon. minister, followed by the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll start backwards on the bill, on subsection (4), that the consultation levy and grants made therein cannot under any circumstance be construed as accommodation or compensation. The bill is very clear. This consultation fund is for adequacy, for consultations, so it won't be used for accommodation or compensation or infringement of treaty rights or aboriginal rights. Again, the duty of the Crown to look after accommodation and mitigation will be taken. That will be done between the Crown and First Nations.

Also, Mr. Chairman, the whole concept of this bill was to make sure that there's proper money in the fund for consultation. One of the things that both industry and First Nations have identified very early on in the process is that a number of the First Nations did not have the capacity to do a proper job of consultation. What this bill does is allow them to have the money from the fund so they can build up their capacity and do a proper job so that we as a Crown have met our obligations in consulting with First Nations in an adequate manner in areas which infringe on their treaty rights or their traditional land use.

Mr. Chairman, everything that the member is asking for is in the bill already. I will not be supporting this amendment. Thank you.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks for that clarification from the minister. I'm glad he's still engaged in answering questions tonight. He's setting a good example for his colleagues. I hope they'll learn to follow him. That would be a change in direction.

It seems to me that the issue here is adequacy. Again, as I often caution everybody here, the specificity of the language is very important, and when the minister says "adequacy" – I should have looked it up in a dictionary before I got up; I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman, because I'm going to kind of wing the definition – it strikes me that there's a difference and perhaps quite a monetary difference between adequacy and an adequate amount of money determined by the government in putting together a consultation versus the actual costs. I think that's where the division is happening here. I mean, I've certainly watched a number of times where the government has determined: this is the amount of money that is going to be handed over for a given service. Often it has nothing to do with the cost of the service. It's just that the government has decided that they're going to get X amount, percentage, and that's what they get.

You know, I'm thinking back to some of the requests from health regions for keeping their ability to provide health services, and it would be – oh, bless you. Thank you.

Sorry. I've just had the dictionary sent to me. Once again, the Oxford dictionary, 10th edition, the world's most trusted dictionary, Mr. Chair. Only the best for this Assembly. The definition of adequate is "satisfactory or acceptable."

Mr. Mason: The minimum required.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. My colleague is saying, "The minimum required." It is a little kind of underwhelming that it would say that. Adequate I think is the problem here. It would not indicate that full costs would be covered.

I note that the minister talked about capacity and capacity building, but I talk about capacity building for public institutions all the time, and mostly I'm talking about it because what this government grants is not even adequate; never mind the full freight on any given program. The fact that the government is determining the amount makes me a little uneasy because I just have not experienced this government – as I said, they don't tend to actually research how much it is. They tend to determine an amount. That's what's in their budget. That's how much they've decided it's going to be, and there's no connection to reality there.

If some of the chiefs have agreed to stand behind this, I'm willing to go there and support the amendment as well because I think this puts us on the other end of that spectrum in that it is to pay all the costs incurred by First Nations and identified aboriginal groups with respect to consultation. Clearly, we are talking about the consultation in section 4, which is under the subheading of Establishment of Consultation Levy Fund. Section 3 is the one that says: here's how we're going to pay for this. The two existing sections in subsection (3) are still there. It's just been added to say that this means all the costs identified with respect to consultation will be paid. It certainly clarifies things, doesn't it?

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there other speakers to amendment A3? The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I just wanted to echo a couple of the really important points, and I'll make this brief. As the legislation is currently written, I appreciate, first of all, the hon. minister for getting up and addressing some of the concerns that we've outlined in the amendment. I do truly appreciate that.

I think that this amendment was done in consultation – and, actually, there is the accurate use of the word – with two out of the three legal counsel for the treaties. I can tell you, Mr. Chair, that I can appreciate that in the minister's mind the bill already addresses the points raised in this amendment. However, if that was the case, then legal counsel for two of the three treaties would not have been in consultation and dialogue and communication with us as far as drafting this amendment and speaking very strongly in favour of having this amendment and this clarification.

I think, Mr. Chair, something that's really important is that the amount that the levy is going to be will be determined afterwards. For the members who don't know this, the actual amount of the levy is not indicated in the bill, which is something that I spoke to in second reading as far as one of the issues I had with this. However, if the decision for the levy is whatever the amount – okay; we can use anything as an example – yet the cost of meaningful consultation with industry and giving the First Nations band the capacity to consult fully on a potential or proposed project turns out to be more than the amount that is issued in the levy, what is the recourse? What is the response for the band? Well, it's: you're going to have to put in the rest.

We feel and many of the First Nations feel that that capacity fund should be there regardless – I mean, some projects are quite complex; some are going to take more time – to ensure that First Nations have adequate, have sufficient, have enough funds and capacity to participate meaningfully in this consultation. This amendment speaks to that the fund is going to pay for all of the costs incurred for the First Nations and Métis communities to have that consultation capacity. I think that is a really important part of this amendment, and I strongly urge members to support this.

As I stated earlier, Mr. Chair, the fact that legal counsel for two out of the three treaties have wholeheartedly endorsed this amendment – and as I've said, in fact they've helped us and helped me draft this amendment – speaks to the heart of this bill, which is based on the premise of consultation. Again, we've indicated that clearly the government failed to do that, but in this amendment there was a meaningful conversation and back-and-forth. If we want to respect the wishes, the mind, and the opinion of those who this levy is purporting to help and to represent, then I think that if we want to do the right and respectful thing, it's to include an amendment that they wholeheartedly approve.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: Back to the bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I've got the requisite number of copies of my next amendment. I'll wait for them to be distributed.

The Chair: If you'll circulate those, please, and make sure we've got the original. Thank you.

Hon. member, we'll refer to this as amendment A4. Please proceed.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll just begin by reading this into the record. I move that Bill 22, the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, be amended in section 10 as follows:

Part A strikes out clause (d) and substitutes the following:

- (d) respecting the amount or the method of determining the amount of a consultation levy in consultation with First Nations and other identified aboriginal groups, including, without limitation, regulations
- (i) prescribing factors on the basis of which a consultation levy is determined,
- (ii) respecting any formula, ratio or percentage to be used to calculate a consultation levy, and
- (iii) establishing different consultation levies for different types of provincial regulated activities.

Part B strikes out clause (k).

Mr. Chair, I'll break this into two sections as I speak to this A and B. I'm proposing two changes to section 10, which deals with cabinet regulations regarding the consultation levy. In clause (d) I propose to add a stipulation requiring that these regulations be created only after negotiations with First Nations. First and foremost, as it's currently written, it is a decision that will be made by cabinet without necessarily including or consulting with First Nations, which again seems to be the method that this government is using with First Nations. There isn't consultation. The government makes a decision and then pushes it through and forces First Nations to accept legislation that affects them. This government feels that if they say that they're consulting over and over enough, somehow that will make it true.

The first part of the amendment ensures that First Nations are included as full partners in determining the amount and the method of collecting the consultation levy. That's very important, Mr. Chair, because it is the First Nations groups who know better than anyone what they will require in order to fully participate and have the capacity to consult with industry on projects. They need to be recognized as full partners and to have a seat at that table.

These negotiations are really the first step towards creating that capacity and building the capacity, which, interestingly, the minister claims as one of the objectives of this legislation, so at the onset this amendment fits very well with what the minister is already saying.

The other thing, Mr. Chair, is that if we want to build First Nations capacity for consultation, then we need to include them from the beginning, from the first step. This also speaks not only to this amendment but why in second reading I spoke to the fact that this bill should be withdrawn altogether. There's a due process. There's the right way to do something, and then there's the way this government chooses to do things. The right way is to have conversations and meaningful consultation with First Nations groups right from the onset, from step 1, from day 1.

Unfortunately, that hasn't been the case for this bill despite what the minister says. I know that the minister is a very honest person. However, I've got the minister's word versus a couple of grand chiefs, several chiefs, and members of different First Nations bands all saying that they were not consulted on this levy act. You know, Mr. Chair, because there have been so many of them coming independently speaking to all opposition parties, I believe them when they say: "We have not been consulted. We have not been included in the drafting of this legislation." It's critical that they are included and a partner from the onset. This part of the amendment, Mr. Chair, will ensure that they are part of that discussion on how much the levy will be and, again, will ensure that they are in a position to be able to consult.

The other point, as I've indicated on numerous occasions in the last few days, is that during my briefing with the minister his documents suggested that around $70 million will be collected as part of this levy, which is woefully inadequate. You know, I've been told by the minister that industry currently provides First Nations a figure around $150 million to $200 million per year to support consultation efforts, and there is a small amount that the government kicks in as well.

Mr. Chair, as you can see, if the current amount is somewhere between $150 million and $200 million that is provided for First Nations to have the capacity to consult and this government is looking at a levy of around $70 million, we're looking at less than half of the current amount going toward supporting the capacity for First Nations to consult. Well, that isn't going to be enough. That's half of what is currently given to support First Nations today.

Again, these numbers should not be artificially picked. They shouldn't be picked out of the sky. They shouldn't be decided by just the government or just the cabinet or just industry. This really should be a partnership, and First Nations should be at the table indicating what they need in order to do the job that they want to do.

Secondly, Mr. Chair, this amendment strikes out clause (k). Clause (k) currently allows cabinet to create regulations exempting a proponent or class of proponents from requirements of all or part of this act and regulations. I mean, the way that we see it in consultation with several First Nations, this is seen as nothing more than a loophole. This is a way for this PC government to pick winners and losers, to decide which companies, which members in industry will pay a consultation levy and which will be exempt from that levy. You know, our position is that no proponent of a development project should be exempted from paying the consultation levy. Again, this creates an unequal playing field that means that some will have to pay the levy where others are exempted.

Further to that, it's up to cabinet to make that decision. Well, based on what? Based on personal relationships? Based on the nature or the scope of the project? I mean, it is beyond my grasp to see why the government and the minister would put this clause, this loophole in this piece of legislation.

All industries that are proposing projects that affect First Nation lands – their air, their water – that are on their lands should be paying this consultation capacity levy. There shouldn't be any exemptions or situations where industry does not have to pay. It makes me believe, because we don't have an answer from the minister, that, you know, if a company is large enough, they get a free pass from this government. I mean, maybe the minister will enlighten us as to why this clause is in here.

Mr. Chair, this amendment really speaks to those two different aspects. We're ensuring that First Nations are an equal partner from step 1 at the table in discussions with how much the levy will be and to ensure that it's adequate for that First Nation, for that project to have the capacity to consult and, number two, to close this loophole so that industry or certain members of industry can get away without paying it while other members of industry pay it.

I will strongly urge all members of the Assembly to support this amendment.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I think that this amendment was a nice pairing with the previous amendment, that it aims to get at this issue of ensuring that aboriginal communities are not left worse off under this new centralized approach to managing the consultation process that the Crown is inserting itself into versus what the current status quo is. Although this would have been a better amendment had the first one that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview proposed passed, I think that this goes at least part of the way towards achieving what he is attempting to. If we start putting in some more of this language about how First Nations and other identified aboriginal groups will be consulted before these decisions are made, that would put a lot of individuals who have raised some of the concerns at ease that they will have some control over how these levies are established.

10:00

These are substantial dollars that we're talking about, as the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has pointed out, and there's the potential that half as many dollars will flow through for the purpose of covering the consultation costs under the minister's new proposed plan than under the current plan. I think that the member is quite right to also point out that striking clause (k) is essential to making sure that there isn't quiet, behind-the-scenes lobbying that takes place to be either on the list or off the list.

With the idea that the minister would have sole discretion to exempt a proponent or class of proponents from the requirement of all or part of this act in the regulations, I guess people are wondering: what exactly does that mean? I suppose what it could mean in the case of the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is that the O'Chiese Nation, who have their own company, might be exempted under the regulations. But who knows? Maybe it means that there are certain energy companies that would be exempted under the regulations.

This is the problem when bills come forward that are not fully consulted on, where you can't go to the First Nation and you can't go to industry and say, "What do you think the minister means by that?" because the minister hasn't been clear about what he means by that. The regulation gives way too much latitude without clarity. We're trying to seek some clarity. I think that we get that clarity by ensuring that a consultation levy with all of these different factors would not pass unless First Nations and other aboriginal groups were in favour of it and also by striking out the clause that seems to allow for a very arbitrary and unilateral and singular exempting on the part of the minister without any additional parameters or description around that.

I would urge other hon. members to support this amendment. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I, too, would like to rise and speak in favour of this amendment. You know, the energy companies that I've talked to regarding this bill don't know exactly what the levy is going to be. They said: "Right now we have deals already made with the First Nations and aboriginal groups that we deal with. We know when we talk to them, depending on the scope of the project, how much we're going to pay." If it's a single well, you know, they know what it's going to cost. They know how much time it's going to take to do the proper consultations and make sure everybody is on the same board. If it's a larger project, many wells and lots of accesses and many pipeline routes, they know how long it's going to take. Right now they don't have much certainty in this bill and in how much this levy is going to be. I think there needs to be something more than just leaving it up to the minister to decide.

You know, speaking on Bill 2, when we were doing that last fall, the hon. Energy minister said: just trust me; it's going to be fine. Well, this comes down to the same thing. The hon. minister, I'm sure, will say that they're going to make it fair. But then that leads to clause (k). Again, that takes the fairness out of it because they're going to have that opportunity to determine which oil companies pay and which ones don't. It should be something straight across the board.

If they start on the same page, everybody knows where they're at. If the aboriginal groups and First Nations are included right from the start in determining the levy and the amount of the levy that the oil companies pay, the oil companies know; the aboriginal groups know. Everybody starts on the same page. You can make the process a lot smoother.

The other problem that we see coming is the fees that they already pay to the First Nations and the aboriginal groups when they're doing their consultations now. Will they continue? You know, will they still have to pay those fees, or will those fees be cancelled and this new levy take the place of that? That's a question that I've been asked.

They say, you know: we don't know; we don't know how much it's going to cost us. It's pretty tough to do business when you don't know how much it's going to cost. It needs to be set out specifically in this bill what the charges are going to be. It can't be left up to the whim of the minister or the cabinet to make these changes whenever they want to and include some oil companies and exclude some. It's got to be right across the board, so I think taking that section (k) out will help that.

You know, there are lots of different aboriginal groups, and I know that some of the lands that they have claimed may have more value or mean more to them than others. Those are some of the factors that are going to have to be taken into account. There are going to be more aboriginal groups that have different claims within that geomapping to worry about. But I think that to leave it up to the regulations and to have this much uncertainty for the aboriginal groups and the First Nations and for the oil companies and the gas companies is too much indecision. I think there needs to be more consultation and getting the feedback from the oil companies and the First Nations groups to determine what they each think is fair. Sit down at the table and decide from the start, before we rush through and pass this legislation.

I urge my colleagues on both sides of the floor to support this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, just very briefly, the concern, I think, is twofold, and that is to ensure that adequate funds are available. The documents we received from the minister indicated that about $70 million would be collected as part of this levy. That's not enough. I think that two or three times as much might be required in order to provide for adequate consultation. I think that we need to include First Nations as full partners in determining the amount and method of collecting the consultation levy. That's the first piece.

Secondly, clause (k) is struck out by this amendment. It allows the cabinet to exempt "a proponent or class of proponents from the requirements of all or part of this Act and the regulations." I think it's nothing more than a loophole, Mr. Chairman. I don't believe that large energy corporations, our natural resources corporations, should get a free pass or should have the opportunity of a free pass from this government. Striking out section (k) is important.

On that basis, I urge all members to support this amendment.

The Chair: Are there other speakers to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I've got six amendments here. I'm not sure how quickly we'll move through them. I did put forward what I thought was the most substantive amendment, but there are still, I think, some other ways in which I think this bill can be improved. I wouldn't mind just circulating this copy of the amendment that I'll be putting forward.

The Chair: That will be referred to as amendment A5, hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you.

Now that I've got all of my amendments, I think I'll try to deal with them in the order of the bill as well, just to make it a little more straightforward in how we're dealing with them. This will have us going back to section 1 in the subsections on definitions. I would like to move that Bill 22, Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, be amended as follows.

Part A strikes out clause (f) in section 1(1) and substitutes the following:

(f) "identified aboriginal group" means "aboriginal peoples of Canada," as defined in section 35(2) of the Constitution Act, 1982, in the province of Alberta.

Part B strikes out section 2, which would be the identification of aboriginal groups: "The Minister may by order identify aboriginal groups for the purposes of this Act."

If you go back and look at the concerns that were raised by Treaty 6, Treaty 8, and Treaty 7, one of the concerns that they have is that the minister is apparently granting himself the power to be able to define what an aboriginal group would be. I think we've got some perfectly good definitions in legislation already not only in the Indian Act, which is referenced in one part of the legislation already, but also in the Constitution. It seems to me that part of what the concern is in the minister wanting to give himself the power of doing this identification is that we do have bands in Alberta that don't have reserve land.

Nonetheless, at the federal level, looking at the accommodation of these two provisions not only in the Indian Act but also looking at the Constitution Act would provide a full listing of all of the bands that are normally resident in Alberta, including the Lubicon, which is the one that has been referenced several times in the course of the debate. I understand there may be as many as five bands that have outstanding land claims and are in the process of potentially negotiating territorial reserve arrangements. I don't think that you need to give a new power to the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs in Alberta when you've got pieces of legislation that already cover this off.

What this amendment would also do is solve a problem for the minister of having to come back and amend this legislation later. As he's developing his new relationship with Métis settlements, at some point he's going to have to deal with this issue of consultation with Métis and the rights that they would have in Crown land areas as well. By using this broader definition going back to the Constitution, not only would that, I think, give some certainty to the First Nations that the government truly does understand that there is a special status given to our aboriginal peoples under the Constitution, but it would also broaden it out to include other aboriginal peoples; namely, the Métis and as well those nations that are not included under the restricted definition under (d).

Under (d) it says that "First Nation" means a band as defined in the Indian Act with reserve land in Alberta. That, I think, is why the minister felt he needed to bring forward (f), where he gives himself the power to identify aboriginal groups. Unfortunately, this is just not going over well in our First Nations communities.

I'll just read into the record what we hear not only from Treaty 7 and Treaty 6 but also from Treaty 8, the concern that they have about Alberta overstepping its constitutional authority.

The proposed legislation would empower the Minister to determine who is and who is not Aboriginal for the purpose of consultation about Treaty rights. It is well established in law that Provincial governments do not have the authority under the Constitution to legislate regarding Aboriginal identity. The constitutionality of the Act is questionable given the division of powers under the Constitution. Further, since time immemorial, First Nations have had an inherent right to govern our own identity and membership. This right is protected by Treaty Six and the Constitution, and acknowledged by the United Nations as noted below.

Then they go on to make clear the section in the United Nations where indigenous people have a right to determine their own identity in accordance with their customs and traditions. I think that this amendment would get at what it is the minister is attempting to address, which is the issue of First Nations that don't actually have a land base as yet relative to the land claim negotiations happening at the federal level.

The reason why I bring this one forward in particular is because I did go onto the government of Canada website, Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, where it talks about First Nations of Alberta, Treaty 6, Treaty 7, and Treaty 8. I would note that the Lubicon are actually listed as a nation under the parameters that I just described. Looking at the constitutional mandate as well as the Indian Act legislation, the Lubicon Lake Indian Nation, with no reserve, is identified by the federal government as a nation with standing.

I think the minister would remove one of the challenges to the legislation on constitutional grounds if he was to make the amendment in these two sections, as I've indicated, to ensure that we continue to have the Indian Act and the Constitution apply as the prevailing law in determining First Nations identity rather than taking it upon himself to grant a new authority to the minister here in Alberta, which probably is not in compliance with some of the Supreme Court decisions as well as some of the development of law as well as the development of convention in Canada with regard to First Nations. I would ask others to support this amendment so that we can hopefully make some progress on improving this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise in support of this motion, and I would hope that the minister would give consideration to it. What it does is just put parameters around the definition to make it consistent. It does take a little bit of flexibility away from the ministerial authority, but it gives consistency to the definition. I would hope that the hon. member would think about that and support this motion.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Chair, thank you very much. I think it's important to clear up a few things. First of all, this act does not empower the minister to deal with aboriginal identity. What this does is allow the minister to identify the aboriginal groups with which the government of Alberta has a duty to consult and those that are receiving capacity funding.

As the member stated, I think we have five groups in the province that, while they've been deemed First Nations, don't have land claims right now. What this does is give the minister the ability to consult with those groups, make sure they have capacity funding, especially for the groups, Mr. Chair, that are having their land surveyed right now.

A prime example is Peerless Trout. They've been identified as First Nations. The federal government right now is in the process of surveying their lands. In talking to them, it's going to take two and a half years, Mr. Chair, before the federal government makes a decision on the boundaries of that reserve, so it's important that we have the ability to say to Peerless Trout: you are involved in the consultation. As a matter of fact, I'll even go one step further. I talked to the First Nations and got their approval so that Peerless Trout is now in the First Nations development fund. Under the current fund rules they aren't allowed to be in there because they aren't recognized as a First Nation and have a reserve base, so we're doing that.

This is what this is about, and this is all this is about.

Also, Mr. Chair, it gives us the ability – and it says: all aboriginal people. So we're talking Métis. We're talking Métis settlements. We're talking Inuit. We're talking First Nations.

Mr. Chair, I'm quite happy that the legislation is the way it is, and I won't be supporting the amendment.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there others?

I'll call the question on amendment A5.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Chair: Now back to the main bill. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will move the next amendment.

The Chair: We'll refer to this one as A6, hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Okay. Thank you.

The Chair: If you'll circulate that, please. I look forward to the original.

Ms Smith: I would like to move that Bill 22, the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, be amended in section 1 by striking out subsection (2). Subsection (2) currently reads: "Nothing in this Act is to be construed as creating a trust in favour of a First Nation or other identified aboriginal group."

I'll tell you the concern that has been raised and the concern that I have about keeping this provision in there. This would allow the government to make these levies on industry, put them in a fund, and then if for some reason the fund was dissolved, those dollars could go into general revenues. We believe that they actually should be creating a trust for these dollars. They're being collected for a particular purpose, and there would be one of two things that could be done if they were collected and held in trust. If for some reason the fund was dissolved, then it would make a requirement that the funds actually be used for the purpose for which they were collected, which is to aid in First Nations consultation, or presumably the government could also make the decision to return them to the industry proponents who paid them. If there were additional dollars left in the fund that were not needed for that purpose, that would imply an overtaxation on the part of industry.

I think that industry needs to have some certainty that this levy is not going to be used as some source of an additional revenue-generating tool, especially if we end up seeing an increase in drilling activities after the rates are set that end up increasing the amount of dollars coming into the fund that go far in excess of what is required for the aboriginal consultation provisions that this act is supposed to be enabling. You don't want to create a situation where the government can just siphon off the funds into general revenue.

So by eliminating subsection (2), it would give the opportunity for it to be treated as a trust. I think that explicitly saying that it isn't a trust would make certain First Nations concerned about what the true intention of the fund would be. I know it would make industry concerned about whether or not the number of dollars that are being generated would be put towards the use to which it is supposed to be ascribed under this legislation.

I would ask other members to support the amendment.

The Chair: Are there other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise in support of this amendment. The ability to have a trust is an issue that was brought to us by numerous First Nation groups. That was one of the very issues that they sort of zoomed in on when they had their first look at the bill.

Again, I would ask that the minister at least consider this. I realize that we probably don't stand a chance of getting any votes on that side in support of the motion, but you never know. As we get late into the night, someone might have a change of heart. But I will say that a number of First Nations have recommended it.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are there other speakers?

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Chair: Now back to the main bill. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will circulate another amendment.

The Chair: We'll refer to that one as amendment A7.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This goes back to the amendment prior to the one that we just debated. I think that if, as the minister declared, this indeed does not confer on him any additional rights to define aboriginal identity, what would satisfy some of the concerns of our First Nations chiefs is to make that doubly clear through this amendment.

So I am moving that Bill 22, Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, be amended by renumbering section 2 as section 2(1) and adding the following after subsection (1):

(2) For greater certainty, a Minister's order identifying an aboriginal group under subsection (1) does not constitute recognition for any purpose beyond the scope of this Act nor shall it be interpreted as bestowing any other rights or benefits.

I think this is important because it affirms what the minister has told this Assembly about what the intention is of this particular amendment. But I think with the fact that it seemed to be unclear to First Nations legal counsel, who had a look at that, it requires the greater certainty and the greater clarity of saying that it does only apply to this act and that it does not confer any additional rights or benefits.

The concern, I think, that the First Nations have, especially in the way the preamble is written, is that the provincial minister is foisting upon them an act which has not been consulted upon with apparently new powers, apparently new provisions. I think, the minister's assurances aside, that because there has not been adequate consultation, it is creating a lot of uncertainty. We know that this is only one part of a broader approach to aboriginal consultation.

I think it's important, to set the stage right now, that the minister recognize that he does not have an equivalent role in being able to do this identification that you might see at the federal level under the Indian Act or the Constitution, that you would not see given to First Nations themselves under the recognition of their inherent rights. I think that the language that has been used here lacks clarity, and that is the reason why it has been identified by First Nations as something that seemingly violates the UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples but, more importantly, oversteps constitutional authority.

I think that to be able to ensure that the minister stays within his bounds as provided by that subsection, as he declares that he would like to do, we need to have the additional certainty about what the scope of that ability to identify aboriginal groups actually means. For that reason we're proposing subsection (2), and I'd ask other hon. members to support it.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

10:40

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise in support of this amendment. Based on some of the comments the minister made earlier, it is consistent with exactly what he was saying, with what he proposed to do or his understanding of what has been written in this bill. All this amendment does now is to clarify that. It makes it consistent with the intentions of exactly what the minister said that he wants to do. As far as I'm concerned, when I look at this, this amendment just puts into the legislation exactly what the minister says are the intentions. So I would hope that the other side would just support this, and we could give the bill some clarity.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, I agree. This is a really clean clarification on what we have in the act. Clearly, what is written here has led to a number of people interpreting this legislation differently. Interestingly, as much as my colleagues opposite loathe what they call judge-made law, they create the opportunity for a lot of it because when you create unclear legislation and people argue about the meaning of it, inevitably you end up in court, which is the ultimate decider. If we haven't given clear guidance through the legislation that we have approved, then the courts make the decision, their best decision, on what they think it was intended to mean. So if we write legislation that's difficult to understand or is vague or uses language that can be misunderstood, we're going to create that kind of problem for ourselves and, frankly, eventually for the taxpayers. This does provide greater clarity, and I would urge the minister to seriously consider this one.

It does look at section 2, which gets renumbered. It says, "The Minister may by order identify aboriginal groups for the purposes of this Act." Now, that's a clause that has created a lot of controversy here. The minister claims that, "No, this is just so that we can decide who's in and who's out for the consultations," which leads to a whole other conversation here. But he's had to stand and say: "No, no, no. This is what I mean by this." Well, as helpful as Hansard is as it can be used later to provide some clarification, it's really better if we put it in the bill. That's what's available online and through the Queen's Printer when you actually go to get something. You don't necessarily get the Hansard comments.

So this one is actually going to help the minister in what he's trying to do, if I understand correctly what he's trying to do, because it does clearly say that it doesn't constitute recognition for any purpose beyond what's absolutely in here. It doesn't bestow any other rights or benefits. You know, the one other thing I would have added in there would be punishments and with-holdings. You've got the good here, but you don't have the bad. I'm being incredibly picky. That's the only other thing I would have added to it. But I hope the minister does consider this one because I think it's going to help him.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there other speakers?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A7 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Three more to go, so why don't I just start?

The Chair: This will be amendment A8, if you'd circulate it.

Ms Smith: Perfect. Happy to circulate it.

The Chair: I appreciate that.

Please go ahead, hon. leader.

10:50

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Now, it has been said in this Chamber that I'm not a lawyer, so I will be calling on my colleague from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, maybe even the hon. Member for Calgary-Acadia to lend a hand and offer his observation on this next amendment.

I am going to move that Bill 22, the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, be amended by striking out section 9. Section 9 is also another area that has caused great concern for First Nations. It's that the minister's decision is binding. What it currently says is: "A decision of the Minister under this Act is final and binding and not subject to review."

Now, I had considered proposing different language because it's quite interesting if you compare the decisions that are written under the Metis Settlements Act with this decision. Under the Metis Settlements Act if there's a decision that comes out of the appeals tribunal, it actually is subject to appeal to the Court of Appeal after seeking appropriate leave. I find it fascinating that the minister would have such different provisions in law, recognizing that there is another level of appeal in his dealings with Métis but then completely trying to deny an avenue of appeal with First Nations.

Now, I don't know how the minister thought that he could actually get away with this because my understanding of Bill 36 and the manner in which Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, was written that allowed the government to be able to shield itself from an appeal process was that they described any of the acts that were coming out of the process as being a matter of policy. I think that was the key language and the signal to the court that any of the Land Stewardship Act agreements under the land-use framework could not then be appealed to the court, so they set up a separate type of appeal process under the minister's oversight that would allow them to skirt around the provisions and requirements of going to a court of law.

Now, the question of whether or not this would stand up to scrutiny is, I think, an open question. Again, I'll ask my colleague from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills to comment on that. The point of the matter is that I have a suspicion that this would not be something that would stand up, that if there was a legal appeal, it would be allowed to the Court of Appeal. Just by stating this in the legislation doesn't make it so. But I can tell you what has happened by stating it in legislation. It's like waving a red flag before a bull. Our Member for Strathmore-Brooks will have to correct me if I've used the wrong terminology there.

The point is that what you see is that you have the First Nations wondering why it is that the government, a provincial government, would confer upon itself the right to make decisions and then shield themselves from any type of legal challenge. I don't think that's been the experience of our First Nations because, once again, they do have constitutional rights that go above and beyond what landowners in this province have and what leaseholders in this province have under section 35 of the Constitution.

I know that when rights get in the way of the government and they look at them as being pesky, they try to pass legislation to find some way of skirting around them and undermining them because property rights aren't included in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Unfortunately for the government, First Nations have a higher bar that they have to reach. I think that by trying to pass legislation that might take away from aboriginal rights, that might take away from their ability to appeal, and then just declaring it in legislation – I'm sorry – I have a hard time believing that would actually stand up in court. If it won't stand up in court, why don't we just take it out of there? If it's one of these things that is an aggravation for our First Nations communities, why not just take it out of there? That's what this amendment proposes to do.

With that, I hope that my colleague from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills will be able to shed some light on whether or not this section as it's currently written is something that would be final and binding and not subject to review. If there are any other lawyers in the Assembly who would like to comment on that, I would be delighted to hear from them. In any case, I do hope that they are in support of it.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I stand in support of this motion, and I ask my colleagues to support this motion. The thing that probably set off a lot of the First Nations that I had the chance to speak to was this particular provision where “A decision of the Minister under this Act is final and binding and not subject to review.” That has appeared in a number of acts dealing with landowner issues, and here it appears in this act. It is just as offensive under each and every act that it has appeared in.

The allegation that the cabinet has been consolidating power more and more to itself is based on this very principle. I don’t understand the value. Our whole democratic process is founded upon due process. A minister cannot always be right. There need to be the appealable processes in place, however they’re constructed. That gives what I view as legitimacy to the effect of any act, any piece of legislation.

With that, I support this amendment, and I ask my colleagues to support this amendment, too.

The Chair: Are there other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. What has become evident is that you definitely don’t need to be lawyer, as demonstrated by the Leader of the Official Opposition, to thoroughly understand the details of a privative clause, and that’s what section 9 is. It is a privative clause that states: “A decision of the Minister under this Act is final and binding and not subject to review.”

What is very clear here, though, is that any decision made by the minister that is outside of his jurisdiction or on a question of law would clearly be appealable, so I’m not sure why the minister put this forward. Maybe it’s that he’s unaware of the legislation, of the laws that govern our democracy, and the court decisions from the judiciary on this. If it’s a question of jurisdiction, it would clearly be appealable, so if he acted outside of his jurisdiction in this act, it would be appealable in court. For him to put this privative clause in here I think is a continuation of what this government does. Bill 36 is a perfect example, where they created the broadest worded privative clause that most lawyers have ever seen. That was confirmed by various independent third-party groups that had assessed Bill 36.

Here’s another patent example of it. You know what? A provision like this may not matter if the bill itself was exhaustive and really went through all the decisions a minister could make, if it went through every different permutation of everything. What’s particularly problematic here is that the minister can make decisions under the regulations. If you look at section 10, it’s subsections (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), (i), (j), (k), (l), (m), (n), (o), almost three entire pages on regulations that this minister can make, and now those are not subject to any review. The minister, by making this – I don’t know what to call this act. I won’t demean it that badly, but for him to put forward an act that has eight sections with most of the sections themselves being 10 words long and then putting everything else in regulations, it’s like he had to rush this bill through. He had to rush it through. He’s got this bill that doesn’t delineate any specification on anything and then puts everything in regulations. Then because of this privative clause those regulations are not subject to review.

Mr. Chair, what we see again is a very poorly worded piece of legislation. The minister is obviously rushing this through for some reason. Perhaps it’s because, you know, they’ve put forward a single regulator here, and he needs to have something that matches up with what was Bill 2. This is why we should actually be going back, putting this to committee, and reviewing this legislation in detail so that all the decisions that are put forward for regulations, from (a) through (o), aren’t decided by the minister but are actually properly put forward in the enabling legislation.

Mr. Chair, this privative clause would not be binding. The minister should know that. He should have proper counsel. I’d like to hear from him. Does he actually know that this is not binding? If it isn’t binding, why doesn’t he just accept our amendment to repeal it?

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

11:00

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. You know, that jumped right out at me when I read this bill. I’m not a lawyer, but I’ve looked at a lot of legislation, and it’s unusual not to have an appeal or a review process as part of a decision-making bill. Perhaps this is also part of that pattern of this government that I am noticing, their autocratic ways of determining that this is what they want, and that’s it, and that’s the way it’s going to be, and tough luck to anyone that doesn’t like it. But this I found very unusual, and I think it’s going to cause them trouble. I think that it’s quite likely to be challenged.

Now, I was listening with half an ear, I’ll admit, to the lawyer talk, but it does strike me that taxpayers could be funding the government’s defence of this particular clause if they get taken to court. I really get annoyed when we go into legislation and the government passes it knowing that it’s going to get challenged, and it does, and then the taxpayer has to fund the government’s defending itself. It just really bugs me because it’s pretty clear that this should not be in there. This amendment takes it out, which it should do.

I think it’s fine to have something in there that lays out a review process or lays out an appeal process, so I would certainly support something being in there. But I can’t support the sort of autocratic decision-making that is done, you know, that the decision of the minister under this act – and under anything in the act. It’s not even narrowing it to this choice or that decision or this particular section. It’s everything. “A decision of the Minister under this Act is final and binding and not subject to review.” Uh-uh. No. I don’t think that’s right.

I thank the member for bringing it forward, and I urge all of my colleagues in the House to support it. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. On a very important section of the act, which essentially makes the minister’s decision on regulations binding and not subject to review, it would hopefully be appropriate for the minister to give some type of rationale for why there is this privative clause. It’s quite frankly shocking that he would just sit there on this very important provision and not say anything.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Chair, I think that again they’re taking the bill out of context. When it says that, you know, the minister has the right, I mean, this is about the levy fund. So, yes, you have to pay into the levy fund. Industry can’t appeal that. If they’re doing work on the ground and if consultation is needed, then they have to do that.

Again, this is also for the part of the act, Mr. Chair, where we talk about other aboriginal groups that don't meet the requirement because they haven't got their land yet. The minister makes the determination that they have to be consulted with. Industry can't challenge that.

Mr. Chair, when we look at the part of the act where we're talking about the disclosure, if the minister asks for the documents to be disclosed, again, that's not appealable. It's for transparency and making sure that the money is going into the right aspect of the consultation process. Then they will comply with that, and we'll make sure the department is aware of that and the First Nations are aware of that.

Mr. Chair, again, this is a very small act. As they said, it's five pages. All it does is that it sets up the levy.

Ms Blakeman: It causes big problems.

Mr. Campbell: Well, you know, I appreciate that, but in talking to our legal counsel and in talking to our department and going through our legislative review, we found that this was appropriate, and we'll move forward.

Mr. Saskiw: I won't belabour the point, but the minister's explanation here: the regulations state that he can prescribe "a person or class of persons for the purposes" of the act. That's not appealable. He can prescribe or describe "an activity as a provincial regulated activity." That's not appealable in this act. He can pass a regulation respecting the amount or the method for determining the consultation. That's not appealable. All of these different powers that are set out in section 10 of the regulations are not appealable. That's because this bill is rushed – completely rushed – so you had to put everything in regulations.

Again, when I go and consult with First Nations, the four reserves in my area, I'm going to give them the answer that, you know, this was just rushed through, and that's why the minister is given these massively broad powers.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, you are rising on a point of order?

Point of Order

Maintaining Order in the Assembly

Mr. Mason: Yes. I am looking for the citation, but it's going to take me a moment. I want to raise the question on keeping order in the Chamber. The Sergeant-at-Arms just called order in the Assembly. It is my understanding that it is the chair's and the Speaker's responsibility to keep order within the Chamber, and it is the Sergeant-at-Arm's responsibility to keep order outside, in the galleries. I would like a ruling from you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Hon. member, you are correct. It is my role to keep order in the Chamber. During the vote members are required to stay in their places. The Sergeant-at-Arms did call the one member that attempted to walk out during the vote. I believe that's quite in order. I can't quite find the standing order myself quickly. You couldn't either. But that is my ruling, sir.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition to speak to the bill.

Debate Continued

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. You know, I have another amendment underneath my papers that I haven't addressed.

The Chair: This will be amendment A9, hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Yes. It goes back to the first part of the bill, but it's probably worth while to discuss it now that we have a very broad interpretation of what the minister's powers are.

The Chair: You may speak to the amendment, hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I think it again goes to trying to provide some clarity as well as trying to provide some boundaries or fences around some of the ministerial powers. I think the concern with the ministerial decision being binding, final, not subject to review causes us to have to go back to the interpretation and definitions in the act, in particular under section 1(1)(j)(viii). I move that Bill 22, Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, be amended in section 1(1)(j) by striking out subclause (viii), "any enactment prescribed by the regulations for the purposes of this clause."

I think part of the issue that we face is that, again, we're giving the power to the minister to prescribe a great many parts of how this bill is going to work without bringing it back to the Legislature. It does seem to me that (j) does talk about the specific enactments, and it goes through and enumerates them: Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, the Forests Act, the Historical Resources Act, parts of the Mines and Minerals Act, the Public Lands Act, the Water Act, and a regulation under an enactment referred to in the subclauses. But this is a fairly broad provision: any enactment prescribed by the regulations for the purposes of this clause.

It does seem to me that if the minister is going to prescribe regulations for any enactment and then put it into the regulations, he should actually come back to the Legislature and enumerate it in the course of the legislation. Otherwise, I suppose we have to question why it is that he's bothering to enumerate anything under this section at all. Why can't he just give himself powers to make any regulations respecting any enactment at any time that might ever impact aboriginal issues? I'm taking it to the ridiculous to kind of make a point. If the minister is going to give himself such broad powers, then it does kind of render the rest of this section a bit useless. If the section actually matters and he is trying to actually prescribe in legislation the powers that he is giving to himself in regulation, they do need to be prescribed in some way.

I would hope that other members would support this amendment. If the minister has other acts that he wants to change in regulation, I would say that he should come back and fix his bill. He should come back and fix it through legislation so it's very clear to First Nations communities what it is that is actually going to be amended by this section rather than leaving it to the sole discretion of the minister, which, as has been pointed out by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, then no longer is subject to any level of appeal, is final and binding and not subject to review. I think that is why it requires the minister to have extra clarity in how the regulations and the enactments will apply, especially when it comes to such an important issue as First Nations consultation. I hope others will support this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. leader.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to support this motion. Not to be redundant, it's just the broad scope of the statement "any enactment prescribed by the regulations for the purposes of this clause," when the parameters are already set under section (j), (i) through (vii). Being consistent here, this is just about putting some sort of parameters around the authority that the minister has given this act and limiting the broad scope and keeping it more focused on what the intent of the act is.

With that, I support this amendment, and I ask my colleagues to support it also.

The Chair: Are there other speakers to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A9 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will hand out the next amendment. We're down to our last two. Saving the best for last, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: This will be amendment A10, hon. members.

Please proceed, hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This is a little complicated, but let me read through it. I would like to move that

Bill 22, Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, be amended in section 10

- (a) by renumbering it as section 10(1);
- (b) in subsection (1)(d) by adding "Subject to subsection (2)," before "respecting the amount";
- (c) by adding the following after subsection (1):

And this would be a new subsection.

- (2) Prior to any regulation made pursuant to subsection (1)(d), the Crown must negotiate the amount among First Nations and identified aboriginal groups and industry representatives.

Let me explain what this amendment would do. First of all, if you're looking at the regulations, what would happen is that under subsection (d) it would now read:

- (d) subject to subsection (2), respecting the amount or the method of determining the amount of a consultation levy, including, without limitation, regulations and so forth. Then subsection (2) would mean that anything related to

- (i) prescribing the factors on the basis of which a consultation levy is determined,
- (ii) respecting any formula, ratio or percentage to be used to calculate a consultation levy, and
- (iii) establishing different consultation levies for different types of provincial regulated activities would be subject to the provision that the Crown has to negotiate the amount among First Nations and identified aboriginal groups as defined in the act as well as industry representatives.

This is similar to an amendment that was brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, with the difference being that industry is also a stakeholder in the determination of what these levies would be. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview had put forward a motion looking at how important it was to consult with First Nations. But, as we've heard from the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, he's hearing from industry representatives some grave concerns about how this levy is going to be calculated, how it's going to be applied, and what the overall amount would be. It's important that we recognize that there really are two stakeholders that are going to be covered by this act, neither of which have been sufficiently consulted with, neither of which have had sufficient input.

Giving blanket power to the minister with, "Just trust us. We'll work it out on the golf course, or we'll work it out over dinner" I don't think is going to cut it. It's certainly not cutting it with First Nations members, and it certainly won't cut it with industry groups. Consultation means that you actually sit in a formal environment exchanging ideas, going over them. I read that definition into the record earlier. I think the casual manner in which the minister thinks these kinds of things can be resolved needs some greater clarity around it, which is the reason why we're proposing that we would add this subsection, so that not only would he be obligated to negotiate and actually meaningfully consult with First Nations, which is quite clear that he's not done at this point, but meaningfully consult with industry representatives as well.

I would ask hon. members to support this amendment so that we can improve this bill.

The Chair: Are there other speakers? The Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Yes. I'd like to rise to speak in favour of this amendment. As our hon. leader just mentioned, it's imperative that industry has a say in this levy, seeing as they're the ones who ultimately are going to be paying these fees into this fund. You know, it's only fair to give them some certainty and give them a voice on this levy that they will ultimately be paying themselves. I think that it's something that the hon. Energy minister, being such a strong advocate for industry, would grasp wholeheartedly, including industry.

Ms Blakeman: Now there's a bromance thing happening.

Mr. Hale: I won't bring that comment up.

I think, you know, we definitely have to include industry in this bill, and this is a very good way to allow industry to have a say in the fees that they will ultimately be paying.

I urge all my colleagues to support this amendment.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I want to thank the hon. Leader of the Opposition for this amendment. That being said, I've just done some quick research. Knowledge of aboriginal law was never my specialty, but I do know that there is an inherent obligation to negotiate. Therefore, it is my view that this amendment is redundant, and I will not be supporting it.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Rimbeey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I understand what the hon. minister said, but it isn't about the redundancy. There's a lot of redundancy built in through various laws. It's also about clarity. One of the main complaints that has come from many of the First Nations groups is about the whole issue of clarity. The obligation to consult is clear. It's been spoken about here on the floor of this Assembly. Yet the argument that consultation is not taking place has been put forth not just by members here in opposition but by many of the First Nations that have shown up. When you look at this amendment and just dismiss it, saying that it's redundant because of another act, what's not clear in this act is the mandate that consultation takes place.

I will say, hon. member, that I can cite a number of acts, the Electric Utilities Act being one, that have a number of points where you can say that there's redundancy built in, but the point is that it also gives clarity to the various sections to make sure that the bill stays consistent. That, to me, is all that this does here. It says exactly what this minister says that he's going to do. It keeps consistency within the flow of the bill, that First Nations, the people who are directly and adversely affected by any negative decisions that come out of this bill, have some sort of certainty in the clarity that they will be consulted. Just saying it to be so does not necessarily give the confidence. Pointing to another section does not necessarily give confidence. You can make the argument that it's redundant, but you can also make the argument that this gives clarity. It doesn't hurt or take away from the powers of the minister whatsoever. That's important.

I would argue to support this amendment. I'd ask my colleagues to support this amendment. It will ease the frustration and the anxiety that many of the First Nations have about this piece of legislation.

Thank you.

Ms Blakeman: This one isn't sitting right with me because it's essentially instructing the government to negotiate with the proponents around the fee that's supposed to be paid. I thought that earlier we had been arguing that the amount that was required for the consultation should be the amount that's paid. We, in fact, had a standing vote on that. This, I think, runs counter to that in that it is saying that the industry representatives or, in the language of the bill, the proponents, should be part of this negotiation. I don't think they should. They're being charged a fee for something specific.

This one isn't sitting right with me. I'm happy to hear more arguments. I don't know that it's redundant, as the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General has said, but I don't think it brings clarity. I think it muddies the water.

Thank you.

11:30

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I think we have to remember the context that we're talking about, this whole framework for this new approach. Right now industry is already paying for consultation. They're paying fees that amount to about $150 million a year. What is happening now is that the government is inserting itself in negotiations that have been going on privately between industry and First Nations. If you look at what the First Nations say, they say that that's actually been working pretty well for them.

We've been talking a lot this evening about making sure that First Nations rights are protected. I think that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview argued that very well, about wanting to make sure that First Nations don't end up getting shortchanged by moving to this centralized process of managing consultation, but on the same token we're hearing from industry that they don't want to get gouged. The minister refused to accept the amendment about the money being held in trust, which means that they've created an environment where they actually can overcharge industry, siphon money off into general revenues. We certainly know that they're looking forward to other avenues to be able to get more money for general revenues.

What we're wanting to do is create some balance. We know that First Nations need to be negotiated with and need to be included in establishing the levy to make sure that they're able to maintain the same number of dollars that were coming to them under the private agreements they were negotiating with industry, but on the same token we don't want to give government the latitude to set those rates so high that it goes over and above what the First Nations may be able to negotiate on their own. We don't know what will happen because the minister has granted himself carte blanche power to change the regulations on a whim without being subject to any appeal or any restrictions, so it may well be that it's implemented at one level but then maybe ends up generating more revenues than they actually need to support the consultation process.

I think in the interest of fairness, because we are interfering with this legislation in private negotiations that, by the proponents' and the First Nations' testimony, have been working relatively well or at least certainly better than the Crown relationship has been, we owe it to both parties to make sure that when we establish what the new levies are going to be, we talk to both parties who are party to the existing agreements.

I hope that clarifies for the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. leader.

The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Well, I share the misgivings of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on this one. In my view, such a negotiation would be fraught with problems. It's a three-way negotiation, and it's not determined on the need of the First Nations to do the things that they need to do. It's some kind of a deal struck where you saw off somewhere in the middle. I know how a lot of the negotiations would go with the government involved. The government would not side with First Nations in most cases, and it would be a 2 to 1 situation.

I can't see this working and think that it's not up to the Crown to negotiate with oil companies or resource companies about how much they're going to pay. It's to determine it objectively based on submissions that First Nations may make, and then the proponent, if they wish to proceed with the project, just pays.

So I'm not prepared to support this particular amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I respectfully disagree with both of the other opposition parties. I think that we have to remember who is paying this fee. It's the energy industry that's paying this fee. They should have a say in the fee that they are paying, and to say that it's redundant, I think, is maybe a little bit of a misstatement. I'm sure that the energy companies who are going to be paying these fees and who are right now paying these fees on their own, when this bill comes into effect, will then have to be paying a different type of fee to a fund. Is it going to take the place of the fee that they're already paying? They're concerned, you know, about the dollars going out.

In any business we know that it's all about making a profit. If they're not going to be able to have a say in what's going out, that's not good business. There are many of us sitting here that are and were business owners, and the bottom line is, you know, you've got to watch what you're putting out and, hopefully, you take in more than you put out. I think it's very imperative that these oil companies have a say. You know, for a government to sit there and tell these oil companies, "Okay. You know what? Glad to have you in the province, but here's another fee that you're going to have to pay" without giving them any sort of consultation process – this can't be a dictatorship where you're dictating to these oil companies and gas companies and pipeline companies how much they're going to have to pay. They have to have a say in this whole procedure or it causes uncertainty.

As we see in this bill, the minister can make changes at any time and can decide how much the fee is going to be. That goes back to the uncertainty if they don't know from one year to the next or one month to the next or in a specific time how much they're going to pay. It's pretty tough to do your books and take on bigger projects if you're leaving it up to the whim of the government to decide on your behalf how much is coming off your bottom line.

So I do support this amendment. I hope that that maybe changes some minds. I doubt it, but . . .

The Chair: Are there others?

Mr. Mason: I just want to indicate that the documents we got indicated that the minister thought that about $70 million would be collected as part of the levy, but at present we understand – I think the Leader of the Official Opposition used these numbers, too – that industry is currently paying between $150 million and $200 million on consultation as it goes. I don't see how this is going to be completely onerous for industry if in fact the government has in mind a substantially lower amount of money. I hope that that is adequate. I doubt that it would be. I think it will remain the main point.

It's not that we want to gouge industry or allow the gouging of industry by others, but I also think . . . [interjection]

Ms Blakeman: Sorry. Keep going. You don't want to gouge.

The Chair: Please proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: That's quite a concession on my part. I hope you know that.

Ms Blakeman: And it was delightful.

Mr. Mason: Okay.

I think the process envisaged in this amendment would disadvantage the First Nations significantly and would mean that they would have to negotiate short of what they actually needed for consultation and would thereby undermine the intention of the act. So I'm not going to support it.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I won't support this amendment for some of the reasons that the member talked about but for some other reasons also. First of all, I think it's important to understand that the Supreme Court has set a very high benchmark for consultation in this country, and as a provincial government we have to meet that standard. I can also say to you that in talking to First Nations and industry, the reason I worked through this whole process in the first place is that both First Nations and industry said they were not happy with the consultation process that was presently in place.

Also, Mr. Chair, I think it's also fair to say that this process has been going on for three years now. To suggest that we're rushing anything through – we've been at this process for three years and ministers before me.

Mr. Chair, I've talked to industry, and industry is worried about two things. They're worried about certainty, and they're worried about timeliness. They understand that they are on a world stage. So when you talk about our natural gas and our oil industry, they understand that they have an obligation to look after the landscape and treat the First Nations in a proper manner because the rest of the world is watching. If it's Husky or Esso or Total, people are watching to see how they treat First Nations. That's why this consultation process is important. Industry gets that, and industry wants to do the right thing.

As I said before, we will sit down with industry and First Nations. We will talk about the levy, about what makes sense. Does it make sense, for example, for the levy to go project by project, or does it make sense that First Nations get so much money on a yearly basis? Even if we took $70 million, that's $3.5 million per First Nation in this province. That's a lot of money.

Now, again, some nations are different than other nations in the sense that, for example, with the nations that are involved in the oil sands, of course, you know, the consultation obligation is a lot more intense. The footprint is a lot bigger. So it's different than going and doing a gravel pit down in your riding, Member for Strathmore-Brooks, for example. Okay?

We are very conscious of industry's concerns. I've spent as much time with industry as I have with First Nations. I've met with CAPP. I've met with the Alberta Forest Products Association. I've met with the Coal Association of Canada. I've met with the geophysicists. I've met with the seismic guys. I've met with the pipeline guys. This isn't just oil and gas or just energy; this is all industry in the province.

I've met with the AAMD and C. I've met with the AUMA because they're neighbours in this process, especially out in your areas, out in the counties. You know, the reserves border the counties. In lots of cases we have very good neighbours, and they have a very good relationship working forward.

You know, I understand the depth and the complexities that we have to deal with on the landscape. I can say to you that we have spent as much time with industry as we have with First Nations, and I can say to you that I am very comfortable that industry wants to do the right thing. We'll get this process up and running, and I'm confident that at the end of the day we'll be doing the right things for all Albertans in this province moving forward.

The Chair: The Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. To answer the issue raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, I think that the issue that we're seeing industry raise is that they're worried that the $70 million is not a replacement for the $150 million, but it's in addition to the $150 million. What they have observed in the industry is a number of different additional charges that came through in the course of the budget, and they're just now really beginning to grapple with the kind of impact that it's going to have. If you're not part of the consultation and you've got a government setting up a whole new bureaucracy and bureaucratic structure and you still end up having to pay the $150 million in consultation fees in addition to $70 million to support the government consultation process, that is, I think, what the industry is concerned about and why it is they want to part of it.

I recognize the concerns raised by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, that it might be perceived the other way, that it's actually going to see fewer dollars flow through to First Nations, which is why we think it needs to be entrenched in the legislation that the government is going to consult with both parties so that we have some certainty around it.

I'll just give one example. We haven't had an opportunity, unfortunately, to talk about this in the Legislature. This is an example, again, of how the government can make dramatic changes when they give themselves the power under regulation, where it gets no scrutiny by the Legislature and is just placed on industry and comes as a complete surprise. The licensee liability rating is just one example.

My father works for a company called Midlake oil, and . . . [interjections]

The Chair: Can we keep the noise down, please? The Leader of the Opposition has the floor.

Ms Smith: The government went through and changed the licensee liability rating unilaterally. For the next three years this small oil and gas company is now being charged an extra $2 million, that they're going to have to pay, because of the unilateral changes to the fee structure related to the licensee liability rating. This is the kind of thing that the industry is being hit with from all different sides, and it's the reason why they don't have trust in the government.

The minister says: "Just trust me; we'll figure it out. Trust me; we'll negotiate. Trust me; we're going to consult." The record, unfortunately, has not been very good so far of the industry getting proper consultation. They seem to consult at this sort of high level, sort of like the second reading level of consultation. "Do you support the concept of what we're going to do?" You can get all kinds of folks in agreement on the concept of what you're trying to do. I think even First Nations and energy companies would agree with the concept of this bill. Even we agree with the concept of what the bill is trying to do.

The problem is that if you're sloppy in the way the legislation is written and you give too much unilateral power to a minister to make decisions without oversight and without appeal and without requiring them to do an appropriate level of consultation with the parties who are all going to be impacted by it, you end up with a bad outcome. That's what we're worried about. That's why I again would urge members to support this amendment so that we can put some fences around this. The minister says that he wants to do this; he claims that he will do it. Well, if he's going to do it, then he shouldn't be so concerned about it actually being written into the letter of the legislation that he's actually mandated to do it. I think that's what the Assembly should support.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. leader.

Are there other speakers? The Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Yeah. Back to the industry, I do believe that the hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations has consulted with industry and that industry does get it. You know, they get Bill 2, the single regulator. They want that. I'm sure that they want some certainty dealing with the aboriginal peoples, but I think they want a voice in that certainty to ensure that they're being heard fairly and on a level playing field. The hon. Leader of the Opposition mentioned the LLR program. Well, industry now also is paying to fund the regulator. Where before the government in their budget funded the ERCB, now that funding is going directly to the energy industry.

It's all fine and good to say that, you know, industry will be consulted, and we'll take into account their ideas and their feelings – they all have feelings – and get some input from them. But I think it goes back to the legislation. If it's actually in there, in the legislation, then we know it's certain that it's going to happen. Just to say that we will do it is a lot different than actually having it written in law. Certainty is a big deal in all of our industries in Alberta and especially in the oil industry. Dealing with this bill would go a long way to show certainty and give them some clarity.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there other speakers?

[Motion on amendment A10 lost]

The Chair: Back to the bill. The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This is the last amendment that I'll be putting forward this evening.

The Chair: This will be referred to as A11. Hon. leader, if you would send the copies around and send me the original, please.

Proceed, hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like the minister to consider this like a get-out-of-jail-free amendment because if he passes this amendment, I think this will go a long way towards correcting some of the errors that were made in the hasty drafting of this legislation.

Let me start by actually commending the government on having taken this exact approach in their Metis Settlements Act, of which they're so very proud. The Metis Settlements Act is actually model legislation for other jurisdictions on how the province has managed to carve out a nation-to-nation, respectful, other order of government relationship with Métis while also respecting their rights under the Constitution. One of the linchpins as to why that relationship works goes to the process that the minister used when he was making amendments to the Metis Settlements Act through the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013, and the fact that he had all of the chairmen of the Métis settlements here in support of the bill and the fact that he did not feel comfortable changing one word without proper consultation with the Métis leaders.

I think that he should be mindful of the reason why he has that level of trust and support. It's, I think, in large part due to language in the Metis Settlements Act that is very, very similar to the kind of language that I'm now going to propose that we pass and put into this legislation and, indeed, any legislation that deals with aboriginal consultation.

This is new ground for the province, to be legislating in this area of aboriginal consultation. There have been legal judgments that have given them the latitude to be able to do this. But why do it wrong when you can do it right? Why do it wrong this time when you did it right before? Why not build on some of the things that worked in the Metis Settlements Act and bring those same provisions into this and other subsequent legislation so that we can start on fresh, solid footing with First Nations communities in developing this new relationship?

With that context, I move that Bill 22, the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, be amended by adding the following after section 10:

10.1 Before introducing an amendment in the Assembly or making a regulation under section 10, the Minister must

- (a) provide First Nations and other identified aboriginal groups with notice in writing and a copy of the proposed regulation or amendment as the case may be, and
- (b) give due consideration to written suggestions about the regulation or amendment that are received from the First Nations and identified aboriginal groups within 45 days of the notice.

If the minister goes and has a look at his own Metis Settlements Act, he will see that this type of language is paralleled in that legislation, so that if there are any regulations that are passed that affect Métis under that act, they would give 45 days' notice plus they would give written notification of the regulations plus they would give due consideration to the input asked from First Nations.

I like the 45-day window. It's double the amount of time that the government is currently allowing for First Nations consultation, but it seems to work. Obviously, since they just did a major overhaul and major review of the Metis Settlements Act, if there was a problem with this 45-day provision, they would have already amended it in that legislation. Obviously, it's been tested in the 20-year relationship that the government has had, and it is something that has been demonstrated to actually create the foundation for a collaborative relationship, which is what I think they want to build with our First Nations communities.

It would seem to me very odd, I think, if our First Nations communities actually saw that there was more due consideration written into legislation for Métis than they're able to enjoy under legislation that impacts their rights because the Constitution section 35 acknowledges aboriginal rights for all aboriginal peoples, not just First Nation, not just Métis, but Inuit as well. We can't have legislation that is creating an unlevel playing field in what the expectation and duty of consultation is when regulations change.

As the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills pointed out, the minister has given himself more sections of latitude to be able to make regulations than we have sections under the act. We have sections for regulations going all the way from (a) down to (o), and the minister claims that all of this is going to be duly consulted, all of this is going to have First Nations input. Well, because we have seen that his first step into this area with this bill has not had adequate consultation, I just think that taking the trust-us approach is not going to work for the minister this time.

I think he can avoid a lot of misery over the summer and I think he can avoid having to go around the province putting out fires if he passes this provision, that makes it very clear that he's not just going to make regulations willy-nilly, that there is going to be a proper process. It's time limited, so that gives the certainty to the industry that they're seeking. It's not that regulations are going to be out there being consulted upon forever. There's a provision in here that it would be time limited to 45 days, which is a reasonable amount of time to be able to get the input. It puts it on parity with the treatment that we have and the respect that we have for our Métis communities, and I think it could go a long way towards helping the minister make amends in some of the areas that have obviously been lacking through these last few days, as we have heard from so many chiefs.

This is a bit of a catch-all because it would apply to the vast bulk of the bill, the last half of the bill. The amendments that got voted down by the government I think would have improved the bill greatly, but if nothing else, if there are no other amendments to pass, this is the one, I think, that would give the First Nations communities the certainty they need. It would give industry the certainty that they need as well that things would be progressing along the time frame that the Minister of Energy wants, to be able to have it work in collaboration with his new single regulator. I just think that if you don't pass this amendment, I guess I would just have to wonder about the due diligence involved in passing this massive amount of new regulations.

I think that because we've heard the minister speak in such a casual way about what he thinks consultation looks like and we've heard from the First Nations communities that they don't think that the kind of consultation and casual way in which the minister has consulted are actually cutting it, we need to formalize this process. This is an amendment that would formalize the vast, vast majority of the rule-making that the minister wants to enable himself to do under this act.

I would urge other hon. members to support it so that we all can leave for the summer, go to our First Nations communities, say that we did our best to make sure that this legislation lives up to the spirit of what is intended in the Constitution, and have some confidence that the minister is actually going to undertake to do exactly what he said he was going to do and make sure that our First Nations consultation process gets off to a good start. There's no point in starting off a brand new relationship with a rocky start. I think this would go a long way towards making some of those amends, and I ask members to support it.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. There are a couple of key words in this amendment that make it a valid amendment to support: in part 10.1(a), to provide notice in writing, and in part 10.1(b), "give due consideration to written suggestions . . . within 45 days of the notice," a very short form of reading the amendment. It makes sense. It provides clarity. It provides consistency with everything this government says that it intends to do.

With that, I do encourage my colleagues to support it and members across the aisle to look at this with an open mind and look at or at least consider the clarity. I'm seeing some shaking of some heads. To heck with the open minds. Maybe look at it with a tired mind, and give some consideration to why it makes sense to show First Nations that by putting this in, it gives them a little bit of confidence that you will do what you said you've always wanted to do.

With that, I thank my hon. leader for putting forth this amendment, and I ask my colleagues to support it. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are there others to speak to this amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

The Chair: Back to the bill.

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 22 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Bill 26 Assurance for Students Act

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Given the pace that this bill is going through, I thought I'd better take the opportunity to speak in Committee of the Whole because I may not get another one. I do appreciate the opportunity to do that.

Bill 26. Hmm. You see, I get to the title, and I just don't like this bill. Assurance for Students Act is one of those kind of spin-the-language titles that we get from this government. I would have called it the Whack the Teachers Bill. [interjection] Yeah. I know. It just doesn't strike me as being assurance for anybody in particular. I know that, you know, we're seeing the family divisions close here. We've got the Wildrose and the Conservatives in agreement on how to work with a collective bargaining process. I understand that, and I don't agree with you on that one.

How did we get into this position? We have the government, who wants to get a long-term agreement with teachers around compensation, workload – I'm just flipping through the different sections of it – professional development, lieu days, pilot projects, maintenance of collective agreement, teacher instruction time, et cetera. I believe this document is available. Well, I certainly got hold of it, so I'm assuming it's been tabled.

You know, this government doesn't seem to really like collective bargaining and unions very much. It strikes me that they've almost picked fights with people, and part of the intended or unintended consequences of Bill 26 is to warn everybody else that's in a collective bargaining position from a public union to watch out, or they're going to get whacked, too. As funny as the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and the Justice minister think my subtitle is, I think it's pretty accurate.

This government always wants to drive down wages, which I don't understand. I would have thought that we wanted to be closing the income gap between the really, really rich in this province and everybody else, yet I consistently see choices made by the government to drive down the earnings of regular working folks here. The determination to continually create underclasses or subclasses of workers that do more or less the same work but with a lot less training and for a lot less money: and we've seen that turn up in a number of different sectors, from health care to corrections and policing to social work and other sectors beyond that.

I keep thinking: doesn't the government do better – oh, maybe that's the trick. I was going to say: doesn't the government do better if a lot of people are working and earning a reasonable salary? Then they make more money from income tax. But you know what? That might be the problem. The government doesn't really bring as much in from income tax as it should because it's subsidizing itself with oil and gas revenues. Tsk, tsk, tsk. Shouldn't be doing that.

We have a situation where the government offered an agreement to both the school boards and the bargaining units of the Alberta Teachers' Association. I'm really interested in the ratification of the framework agreement that appears toward the end, part F.

3. This Framework Agreement is conditional on the ratification of this Framework Agreement by May 13, 2013 by all School Jurisdictions listed in Appendix A and their respective Association Bargaining Units.

Okay. That's the set-up.

One would assume that the government is looking for unanimity from everyone, that they're all going to agree to this so that they don't have to deal with exceptions except that they spend an extraordinary amount of time in this agreement talking about an exceptions committee, about how if you really can't afford this, they'll try and help you.

We do have, I think, three different groups – we've got the Calgary board of education, which is one of the ASBA groups, and two bargaining units that I'm aware of – that have voted against the agreement. Now, this is where government language and kind of Trixie Belden stuff starts to happen. Sorry. I'm using somebody else's phrase there. But it is that kind of tricky language. In the preamble, which is not enforceable and actually doesn't appear in the statute after the bill has been ratified, one of the whereas partway in says, "Whereas a significant majority of ATA Bargaining Units voted in favour of ratifying the Framework Agreement." The next one: "Whereas a significant majority of the members of the ASBA voted in favour of ratifying the Framework Agreement," and then it goes on.

I'm thinking: yeah; not really true. By a simple majority? Correct. But if we look at the effect of the Calgary board of education not agreeing to this, that's a very large percentage of people that are not agreeing. It is not taking into consideration and, I think, not being honest – in other words, being devious – about the consideration of the size of the Calgary board of education, the size of the budget for the Calgary board of education, the number of staff that are affected, the population that's served. It's a solid 30 per cent. Twenty per cent of the students in the province are affected by the Calgary board of education, and I believe 30 to 35 per cent of, you know, total budget, total staff, total population, and all the rest of those considerations is right in that area there. So no. I'm just not buying this simple majority stuff. It makes it all sound too – I believe that it's not recognizing the complexity of it but also the reasons behind it.

I have to commend the Calgary board of education, which is not known for being a pink-tie-wearing, radical group of people. They're pretty conservative. Yeah. Well, you know, you are on that side. [interjection] Okay. They're pretty conservative, and they're not – oh, not pink. No. [interjection]

Mr. Anglin: They just cheered the election in B.C.

Ms Blakeman: Those are not Liberals. They're Conservatives in disguise. Sorry.

The Chair: If we could just stay on the bill, hon. member. Thank you. I'd really appreciate it.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. They have goaded me, Mr. Chair, into talking about the results of the B.C. election. A number of people here are quite overjoyed that the Liberals have won. I, too, would be overjoyed, but, honestly, they're not Liberals; they're Conservatives. So we have both the Conservatives and the Wildrose rejoicing because the Conservatives have won in B.C. Having clarified that, I'll move on. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

I want to commend the Calgary board of education, who, I will point out again, are not exactly radical people, for stepping out and saying, "No, we will not sign this" because of, I think, two reasons that I've been able to find backup for. One is that the amount of money is not nailed down about how much reducing the teachers' workload is actually going to cost and what it's specifically meant to be. You know, I think they're right to not sign an agreement in which that is left up to the future. Secondly, once again the government is forcing a group of people into accepting an agreement which includes increases for staff that are built in as a result of a collective bargaining process or grid increases or, you know, whatever the agreement is that's in place, but the government is clearly not providing the money that goes with it.

Now, this government collects education property taxes, which in my time in this Assembly used to be requisitioned by the school board for how much money they needed. The government collected it and handed it over to the various school boards, and off they went. Then the government in their wisdom under Premier Klein said: "No, no. There's too much discrepancy. We've got rich schools and poor schools in Alberta. We will redistribute the money."

So the government started to collect all of the education property tax and supposedly redistributed it. You know what? It wasn't even set aside in a separate fund. It just went straight into general revenue. So it got a little hard to track there about how much redistribution was actually happening. It wasn't kept in a separate account at all. So we have the government now collecting Education's money and then kind of doling it out to them again, you know, like good little children or bad little children, in which case they probably didn't get the amount of money they were hoping for.

Now we have government agreeing to salary increases and what's under the workload. The teachers are requesting a workload reduction with no price tag on it, but the school boards are expected to pick up the tab, whatever it is. I think the Calgary board of education was right in saying no. I'm going to respect the collective bargaining process on the teachers' side, but – okay; they agreed to it. I'll stay out of that one. Stay out of it, Laurie.

In their own agreement they say that everybody has to decide, or it's off. Well, everybody didn't decide, so the effect of that has been for the government to bring in a bill and put it through very quickly. Again, I'm going to point out a pattern that I see with this government. They leave the big, heavy-duty, tough, controversial bills to the last couple of days, bring them in, use all kinds of obscure clauses, and use their majority to move the bills through very quickly.

You know, for people to be able to respond to this bill, for the public to respond, even the other people that are involved in it, boy, you'd have to be right on top of it and put everything else on your desk aside in order to be able to concentrate on responding to this because it's going through quickly. It came into the Assembly yesterday or today, and there was a special motion to allow it that is rarely used. I can't remember that section ever being used before. It's section 77(2), I think, that allows the government to move a bill through more than one stage in a day.

Standing Order 77(1) says, "Every Bill shall receive 3 separate readings on different days before being passed." That's the rule we operate under. Now, here's the exception. Government always gets to win because, one, they've got a majority, but, two, they have the responsibility of making sure stuff actually moves along and gets done, so they always get the bias in their favour from parliamentary process. But they need to respect the fact that that's built in there for them and not abuse it. I would argue this is abuse of it.

Standing Order 77(2) says:

On urgent or extraordinary occasions . . .

Okay. So is what's happening here urgent or extraordinary? I'm going to say no to both of those, but I'll come back to that.

. . . a Bill may receive second and third reading or advance 2 or more stages in one day.

For people following along at home, a stage of a bill is the reading, so it's first, second, and third. Committee of the Whole is not a stage. So on any given day you can have the government move a bill through, say, second and Committee of the Whole or Committee of the Whole and third. That's fine. That can happen with nothing special happening. But to move it from first to second and now to committee in one day is extraordinary. That's what's extraordinary about this, not the fact that the government believes that the events that have led to this bill are extraordinary and need to be addressed in this manner.

Urgent. I fail to see how this is urgent, that it's so urgent that it has to go through in essentially a day and a half. You know, third reading for an opposition the size that we have is just a matter of time. If everybody speaks once, and that's what they're allowed to do, then you're just counting down the time. Each one gets 15 minutes. At a certain point you've run through the 25 of us, and that's it. It's done. It's just a matter of waiting. You don't have to do anything extra, although I'll bet the government does.

What is the all-hellfire-burning hurry here? We're supposed to be in session until June 6. Well, I think that's a fantasy. I bet we're going to be out of here before Thursday. More specifically, what is the all-hellfire-burning hurry in Bill 26? You know, we've got a new school year that's happening in September. Once again, the government gets to set very short timelines for people that they're dealing with, but they get to spend years on stuff. We just had Bill 22, where Treaty 6, I think, pointed out that in one of their agreements the government took eight months to respond to a framework that they had put forward, but the government imposed a 30-day response on that same group. We're seeing that here. The government gets all of the time that it wants, but there's a very short period of time for the group to respond.

I don't think this is urgent. Yes, we're looking for stability for teachers. Yes, we're looking for stability. Yeah, yeah, yeah. Well, you know, this is not civil unrest. We're not at war. We don't have any kind of crisis happening here. What's the big hurry? Why can't the government go back and deal with this? Clearly, there is a problem. You can try and minimize it by using simple majorities. Fine. That's just disguising the fact there's a problem, and I think it should be addressed.

I don't like the fact that the government is disrespecting a group of people who are trying to stick to their budget. I've looked through the budget documents of the Calgary board of education. They're saying: "That's it. We're using up all of our reserves. We're pinching pennies everywhere. We've reduced the administrative budget." They can't go any lower or they won't have any administration, never mind librarians or anything else useful in a school, yet they keep putting requirements on the school that will make use of those same administrative staff that they're not allowed to have now.

Extraordinary. Well, this government has a long record of really bad relationships with public unions, so what's extraordinary about this one? I mean, when was it – 10 days ago, a week ago? – that they were in a big battle with the correctional officers? Before that it was with the teachers. None of this is extraordinary for this government. They just don't like working people. They certainly don't like collective bargaining. They don't like unions. This is not an extraordinary happening with this bill, and I am really unhappy about the government using this process to force this through.

Now, having said that, I have to admit that I am at odds with the Liberal critic who is in charge of this portfolio. But, you know, I'm the one here tonight, and more than half of this is showing up.

An Hon. Member: Free votes.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. Actually, our caucus does a lot of free votes.

But I want to put on the record, so that I don't dis my colleague the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, who is our chosen critic for Education, that he has come out in favour of this bill. He is speaking in favour of stability. He's willing to go forward on that. I'm the one that showed up, so that's how I'm going to be voting.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there any other speakers?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: Question has been called.

[The clauses of Bill 26 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Private Bills Committee of the Whole

Bill Pr. 2
Wild Rose Agricultural Producers
Amendment Act, 2013

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms L. Johnson: My apologies. I have an amendment to the bill.

The Chair: I thought you might, hon. member. If you'll just take a minute, hon. member, we'll circulate the amendment.

Ms L. Johnson: My apologies to the House. The table officers are circulating the amendment now.

The Chair: The amendment is coming around. Hon. member, would you speak to the amendment, please.

12:30

Ms L. Johnson: I move that Bill Pr. 2, Wild Rose Agricultural Producers Amendment Act, 2013, be amended as follows:

The following is added after section 7. Section 8, section 18 is repealed and the following is substituted:

Filings with Registrar of Corporations

18(1) The Business Corporations Act and the Companies Act shall not apply to this corporation except the disclosure and filing obligations set forth in this section.

(2) Within 30 days of the coming into force of this Act, the corporation shall file with the Registrar of Corporations

- (a) a list of the directors and officers of the corporation and their addresses,
- (b) a notice of the address of its registered office, and
- (c) a copy of its bylaws.

(3) Commencing January 1, 2014, the corporation shall, once in each calendar year, file with the Registrar a copy of its annual financial statements.

(4) Within 30 days after a change is made to any of the items outlined in subsection (2), the corporation shall file with the Registrar a notice setting out the change.

The Chair: Hon. members, this is amendment A1.

Any questions or comments on the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Why? Why doesn't this organization under the Wild Rose Agricultural Producers Amendment Act have to adhere to the requirements of the Business Corporations Act and the Companies Act? I'd like to know why it's set aside or exempted if you can tell us that.

I mean, clearly, you're still trying to address what is usually required by the Business Corporations Act and/or the Companies Act if you're looking for part 9, I'm assuming, the filing of who is in charge with the directors and officers and their addresses, where important documents are kept, a copy of its constitution and bylaws, and then the requirement that henceforth they have to file that information once a year or, well, update if it changes 30 days after any change is done. All the regular stuff is in here.

Why don't you want it to come under either one of those? I'm assuming it's also not coming under the Societies Act. Do you want to answer that for me?

The Chair: Are there any other questions or comments?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: Seeing none, the question has been called.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: On the bill.

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: The question has been called.

[The remaining clauses of Bill Pr. 2 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

Bill Pr. 1
Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Canada Act

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This bill was reviewed by the Standing Committee on Private Bills, and the committee recommended that the bill proceed with some amendments. I move that Bill Pr. 1, Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Canada Act, be amended as follows. I understand the chair has copies to distribute.

The Chair: They're coming around in just a moment, hon. members. This will be amendment A1.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Chair, may I proceed?

The Chair: Please proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you. There are three parts to this amendment, all as a result of discussions with Service Alberta, all agreed to by the proponents and by the committee.

The first one is that section 15 is struck. There was no need to have section 15, the liabilities section. It's replaced with a new section, which previously was dealt with in section 19, which is also struck. Section 15 now deals with dissolution and is a little bit more elaborate than the information that was in section 19 previously. However, it lines up quite well with the situation in the Business Corporations Act of Alberta. I've dealt with two, then. Section 15 is struck, the new dissolution wording is there, and section 19 is struck.

The other one. Service Alberta didn't like the words "for greater certainty, upon" at the start of section 18. Therefore, we have changed that and substituted just the word "upon" rather than "for greater certainty, upon."

Mr. Chair, those are the amendments.

The Chair: Speakers to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: Now back to the bill as amended.

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: The question has been called.

[The remaining clauses of Bill Pr. 1 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Chair, I'd move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 22, Bill 26. The committee reports the following bills with some amendments: Bill Pr. 1, Bill Pr. 2. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the House concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? That is carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seeing the time, I'd say that we adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 12:38 a.m. on Wednesday to 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, May 15, 2013

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. As we bow our heads in solemn reverence, let us reflect on what it truly means to put the needs of others ahead of our own. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a record number of guests to be introduced today. I'm going to ask you to please be as brief as you can.

Let us start with the Minister of Human Services, followed by Infrastructure.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a bright and enthusiastic group of 44 grade 6 students from Brander Gardens elementary school, located in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. Accompanying the students is their teacher, Natalie Gago-Esteves, and I might say that Ms Esteves has been in this Legislature with grade 6 students every year over the last at least six years that I can think of. She's also accompanied by Mme Tracey Loehr. The group of students had participated in the School at the Legislature program earlier this year, and they're seated in both the members' gallery and the public gallery. I'd ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm greeting of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly on behalf of the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development a group of 18 bright grade 6 students from Sparling elementary school, located in Camrose. They've enjoyed a tour of the building and later will be taking part in a game called Race for the Ridings!, which will test their knowledge of what they have learned here today. The students are accompanied by teachers and parents. I would now ask that they all rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Kathryn Westlund, a constituent of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and a resident of the Highlands neighbourhood. For over four years Kathryn has been facing numerous obstacles with her WCB claim and the subsequent appeals process involved with that claim. Kathryn became so frustrated with the current process that she took it on herself to initiate a petition, which I'll be tabling later today. I would ask Kathryn to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups? None?

If it's okay with you, hon. members, I'd like to take a moment to do an introduction right now, and that is to introduce to you someone who is very special to this Assembly because she is the Editor of Alberta Hansard, which, as you know, is our official minute book. Now, this particular individual knows all the ins and out and all the in-betweens that go on with the words that shape our speeches after we've said them or at least think we've said them. She has been with us in this capacity for 38 amazing years, which is an exceptional achievement in any individual's career, and throughout her career she has distinguished herself with the excellence, efficiency, and quality of our Hansard.

She has shown dedication and passion for this document, and she has worked to advance her career since commencing as a sessional editor till taking on her current role of managing editor. It is no small feat to publish this document, that we get and that the public gets within 24 hours of every sitting of this Assembly. It's in large part due to her perseverance, her dedication, and her incredible drive. Unfortunately for us, she will be retiring at the end of this session. I would ask all of you to please rise and join me in thanking Liz Sim. Thank you so much, Liz. [Standing ovation]

Thank you, hon. members, and thank you, Liz, for your outstanding service.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Denise Baillie. Some of you may recognize Denise as she's often at the front steps of the Legislature, raising awareness of her battle with multiple sclerosis. I first met Denise on a cold afternoon last fall when I stopped to talk to her on the steps of the Legislature and learned her story. As of April 30 Denise's message of struggle with MS has turned into a success story after receiving Dr. Zamboni's chronic cerebrospinal venous insufficiency treatment, CCSVI. In her words, this one-hour angioplasty treatment performed in California "took [me] from wanting a wheelchair to wanting a bicycle; from depending on government disability payments to wanting to go back to work and pay taxes again."

Denise is a strong candidate for the CCSVI treatment and has recently been appointed president of CCSVI Alberta. She urges our government to allow this procedure to be performed here in Alberta. When I spoke with Denise the week before she went to California to receive her CCSVI treatment, she could barely stand without the support of her walker. I would now ask Denise to rise and perform a jumping jack while she receives the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Did you have a second introduction?

Mr. Khan: I have one additional after that, sir.

The Speaker: Okay.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly St. Albert constituents Murray Barker and his wife of 45 years, Arlene Barker. Murray is a retired police superintendent with Edmonton Police Service, having served 35 dedicated years with the police force. His retirement was forced upon him due to multiple sclerosis. If it were not for this debilitating disease, Murray would still probably be chasing the bad guys right now.

Murray regularly stops into the St. Albert constituency office to keep us up to date on issues regarding St. Albert, the MS community, and various social issues as they arise. Murray volunteers for several organizations in St. Albert. He's a past nominee for St. Albert's volunteer citizen of the year and also received an award from the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General for his work with youth justice. I also had the honour of hosting Murray last year at St. Albert's Art Walk and had the privilege of having Murray's photography and sculptures in my office. I would now ask that Murray and Arlene, who are seated in the members' gallery, rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: And your third and final introduction.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As well, for my final introduction today I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly St. Albert residents Ross and Irene Boyes, who came to speak with me in my constituency office just last fall, seeking assistance in helping them find weekend respite care for their son Bryan Boyes. Bryan is their adult child, who is developmentally delayed and blind. Bryan is cared for by his parents in their home. Bryan attends Winnifred Stewart during the weekdays but is unable to find respite aid on the weekends due to shortages in staffing availability. As any hard-working parents deserve, Mr. and Mrs. Boyes are seeking small breaks and have not had an easy time to find help. I appreciate their advocacy for all Albertan families who face this challenge. I would now ask that Mr. and Mrs. Boyes, who are seated in the members' gallery, rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont and Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The annual Historica Fair provides an opportunity for students from schools in the surrounding area to present projects celebrating Canada's heritage. In 2007 the Legislative Assembly, through your office, initiated an award to recognize Historica Fair participants who demonstrate outstanding achievement in celebrating an aspect of Canadian parliamentary democracy, governance, or political history, with a special focus on Alberta.

It is my pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to introduce this year's award winner, Libby Langenhahn. She's a grade 5 student at Vital Grandin Catholic elementary in St. Albert. Libby's project explored the many contributions of Alberta's Famous Five. Libby's project displayed her in-depth knowledge of the Famous Five, and she was able to use a comic that she produced herself to give context to their accomplishments. Way to go, Libby. Libby is with her mother, Heather Langenhahn; her father, Robert Langenhahn; and her grandfather, William Thompson. They are seated in your gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the congratulations and the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. May 15 is Breathing Matters day here at the Legislature. Today we work to raise awareness for approximately 600,000 Albertans who suffer from respiratory diseases such as asthma and lung cancer. In recognition of this, we have some very special guests that have joined us today from the Lung Association as well as other citizens who have a vested interest in respiratory health. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that each guest rise as I state their name.

First, Leigh Allard, president and CEO of the Lung Association; Kate Hurlburt, volunteer chair of the board of directors for the Lung Association; Dr. Mohit Bhutani, representing the health care professionals dedicated to respiratory wellness; Julie Lavergne, who is accompanied by her daughter Naomi, an asthma sufferer;

Janis Seville, director of health initiatives for the Lung Association in the province of Alberta and the Northwest Territories; Nina Snyder, a dedicated caregiver that assists her mother, who suffers from an antirespiring deficiency; Darlene Gallant, whose husband has idiopathic pulmonary fibrosis, and she is here on his behalf to generate awareness for this condition; and last but certainly not least, Rick Curren. Mr. Curren copes each day with chronic obstructive pulmonary disease and is a tremendous advocate for lung health in our province.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the House I'd like to thank our guests for the work that they do every day on behalf of lung health in our province and ask my colleagues to join in providing our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two wonderful ambassadors of Alberta culture from the Art Gallery of Alberta. Kristy Triner is the newly appointed curator of the AGA, and I'm sure we'll see some bright work from her in the future. With her is Catherine Crowston, who is the gallery's executive director and key curator, whose goal of putting well-appreciated effort into showcasing the AGA's permanent collection is certainly praiseworthy. I'd ask both of them to rise and receive the Assembly's traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all Members of this Legislative Assembly some guests of mine in the gallery. They're here today to raise their concerns regarding the government's plan to close Michener Centre and the continued, devastating cuts to PDD services. They're upset that the government has broken their promise, and they have brought with them thousands of signatures, which I'll be tabling in the House today. Here today are Jenna Baynes, Lee Kvern, Jody Kvern, Russell Clark, Andrea Benoit, Angela Pala, Lorraine Strand, and Christine Yargeau-Becker. I thank each of them for their advocacy and ask that my hon. colleagues provide them with the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the leader of the Liberal opposition.

Mr. Bilous: Merci, M. le Président. J'aimerais vous présenter, à vous et à tous les membres de l'Assemblée, Mylene Coderre-Proulx. Elle est détentrice d'une maîtrise en politiques internationales à l'Université du Québec à Montréal ainsi que d'un baccalauréat en études internationales de l'Université de Montréal. Ses recherches portent sur les thèmes relatifs aux politiques d'immigration, à l'intégration et aux droits des immigrants. Participante au programme d'échange interprovincial Québec-Alberta, elle intégrera le caucus du NPD en tant qu'assistante de recherches et de mobilisation. J'aimerais maintenant inviter Mylene à se lever pour être accueillie chaleureusement par l'Assemblée.

[Translation] Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you Mylene Coderre-Proulx. Mylene has a master's degree in international politics from the Université du Québec in Montreal and an undergraduate diploma of international studies from the University of Montreal. Her fields of research are related to immigration policies, integration, and the rights of immigrants and refugees.

Mylene is here in Edmonton as part of the Quebec-Alberta employment exchange program, and she will intern with the NDP caucus as a research and outreach assistant. I would now like to ask Mylene to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. [As submitted]

The Speaker: The member did kindly provide an English version of what he just read in French.

Let us move on to the leader of the Liberal opposition, followed by the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two young filmmakers, Akash Sherman and Tim Choy. Akash is my son, and it's his first visit to the Legislature. Akash and Tim are friends who produced award-winning short films that were featured at the Edmonton International Film Festival, A Teaching Game and For Them, For You. Their latest adventure, Uprising, is a movie trailer they produced for CineCoup's nation-wide $1 million competition. They made it to the final 10 of 90 entrants and are now the last remaining Alberta team. I encourage all members to help support Uprising by sharing on Facebook or tweeting cinecoup.com/uprisingmovie so Albertans can vote for Uprising and support local Alberta talent. I would ask Akash and Tim to rise and please receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you two gentlemen from my constituency, John Harms and Graham Schofield. John Harms was hired as the CEO and general manager of Westerner Park in Red Deer in 1996, with the responsibility of overseeing the day-to-day operations of the organization. During his tenure at Westerner Park they have seen accomplishments such as the construction of the Harvest Centre, the naming of the Enmax Centrium, the Westerner campground, the expansion of the equine show and stabling areas, and the recent expansion in the Enmax Centrium. Since arriving in Red Deer, he's also become involved in the community by volunteering for organizations such as United Way of Central Alberta, Crime Stoppers, the board of directors of STARS, and the board of governors of Red Deer College.

Mr. Speaker, Graham Schofield is a lifetime Albertan, growing up in Edmonton, spending a decade in Calgary, and the last eight years in Red Deer. Until the last couple of years Graham spent his career in print media, most recently as the publisher of the Red Deer Express. He now works for Stantec Consulting, managing their regional marketing presence in Alberta and the northern territories. Graham's wife, Lori, is an actor and a teacher. They have two young children: Connor, nine, and Zoe, six.

Mr. Speaker, my guests are seated in the members' gallery. I'd like to invite them to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you my guests Erin Waite, Jayne Myatt, and Beverly Hills. Erin, Jayne, and Beverly are part of a group of hundreds of Albertans who have come here today from all over the province to protest this government's cruel cuts to PDD services. These are services which are in place to protect some of the most vulnerable citizens of our province by giving them the support they need to lead happy and successful lives. The fact that the government of one of the wealthiest parts of the world would even consider cutting such services is incomprehensible. I would now like to ask Erin and Jayne and Beverly to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by Red Deer-North.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you seven guests seated in your gallery. Mr. Krishan Chawla, a good friend of mine and a constituent of yours, is a very active member of the Council of India Societies, past president of the Hindu Society of Alberta, and is involved in many other different organizations. He had a distinguished career for 36 years working for Alberta agriculture. In 2000 he was awarded the Premier's award of excellence for his involvement with the special crop product program. He's joined here today by his nephew Saket Batra and his wife, Richa, and son Aanava. Also visiting today are his niece Rinku and her husband, Vikas, with their son Arayan. They just landed here from Mumbai yesterday. They're probably still jet lagged. I ask my guests – they've risen – to please accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red-Deer North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Karen Burnand, who is here today for the constituency engagement program. Karen was born and raised in central Alberta and has lived in Red Deer for the past 20 years. She is currently employed by the county of Red Deer as an accredited property assessor. Karen plays an active role in her community, where she volunteers with various organizations and councils. She is the chair of the Piper Creek seniors' housing foundation, the president of the central Alberta zone of the Senior Citizens' Housing Association, and a member of the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise. I thank Karen for all she does for our community and look forward to working with her for many years to come. Karen is in the members' gallery, and I ask that she please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the clock requires us to move on to the next phase of our Routine. There are 13 more individuals who have introductions to do, and we'll do them after QP.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. First main set of questions.

Review of FOIP and Conflicts-of-interest Legislation

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we ask some tough questions as part of our official duties of holding this government to account. Ministers point us to independent officers and processes to get answers. We ask for all the health expenses. They tell us: do a FOIP request. We ask about infrastructure priorities: do a FOIP request. We ask about staff severance: do a FOIP request. Yet often those requests are met with delays, redactions, omissions, court fights, and hefty charges. They claim that they have the gold standard for openness and accountability, so will the Premier raise the bar and be a little more forthcoming with information?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member obviously doesn't like the rules of the Assembly, but the opposition is a part of making up the rules. The fact is that as government we have to keep a balance of releasing information, making it available, which is very important, but also protecting private or proprietary information, which has to be protected. To do that, those decisions are not political. There are experts in every department that review a request and release the information that is available, that can be released. Those are the rules by which we have lived for a long time, and they seem to be working very well.

Ms Smith: Here's the problem, Mr. Speaker. The government tells us to use the FOIP process, but then they complain that it costs too much money and takes too much time to process our requests, so things have to be fixed, quite obviously. If the Premier wants to live up to her promise of raising the bar on openness and accountability, will she agree to our demand for a full, public, open, transparent, complete, comprehensive, and meaningful review of the FOIP legislation?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, yes, there are costs involved when we receive requests for information. Often entire departments stop what they're doing, and they pull out information to make it available, so there are costs involved; there's no doubt about it. But it's the right thing to do. Sharing information that can be shared is the right thing to do. Yes, there will be a review of FOIP. All political parties will be involved. Stakeholders, Albertans will be involved. We will do a thorough review of FOIP and see how we can make it work for Albertans even better.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The events swirling around the Member for Edmonton-Manning point out some serious failings in the conflicts-of-interest legislation, too. The Ethics Commissioner has no ability to offer complete information about assets or liabilities or other important information. These loopholes need to be closed. Will the Premier agree to a full, public, open, transparent, complete, comprehensive, and meaningful review of the conflicts-of-interest legislation and not just a cosmetic rewrite?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Conflicts of Interest Act provides for reviews. The reviews of the Ethics Commissioner's office are available through the Leg. Offices process if there are issues. If at any time there are identified deficiencies with respect to the process, that's available for Leg. Offices to raise. It's available for the Ethics Commissioner's office to raise. In fact, we discussed a number of years ago the completeness of the reporting process. There's a balance to be made between the privacy of individual members in terms of what the report says and the public's interest in knowing.

The Speaker: The hon. leader for her second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for that answer, hon. House leader.

Supports for Couples Aging in Place

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the government claims to be supporting Alberta's seniors, but they're not. They have failed to keep their promise of two baths a week. There are cases of abuse and neglect that get overlooked. We keep hearing about devastating cuts to front-line workers in seniors' homes and the ridiculous hundred-kilometre rule. Moving people as much as a hundred kilometres from their families was supposed to be a temporary measure in response to the H1N1 crisis four years ago. That crisis has long passed, but the rule that creates divorce by nursing home remains. When will it end?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, we've been over this ground many times before during this session. As the hon. member knows, the hundred-kilometre policy is a response to what we believe is a temporary situation involving scarcity of continuing care beds in the province. Unfortunately, in some cases that involves couples who need different levels of care at the same point in time. The hon. member also knows that in a discussion at Public Accounts this morning, the chief executive officer of Alberta Health Services talked about their work today to review that rule and to end that policy as quickly as possible.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the minister has stepped in personally before when Alberta Health Services policy has threatened to split up couples, but he can't step in personally every single time it happens. They need to change the policy. Now, I acknowledge that AHS CEO Chris Eagle told the Public Accounts Committee this morning that they are having some second thoughts about this horrible policy. Rather than just another feeble defence of the hundred-kilometre rule, why doesn't the minister just end it?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, what is feeble is a question that completely ignores the fact that we are in the fastest growing province in the country. We have growing numbers of seniors who need care, both home care and facility-based care, and we are actually better off than most of the country in terms of our capacity to build those additional spaces, a thousand per year. This is an unfortunate policy that has had to be in place in response to the situation today. Obviously, none of us in this House want that situation for any of our constituents, and we're taking the appropriate steps to end it.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the number of seniors is increasing, yet the number of beds available is decreasing. It doesn't make sense.

The Wildrose opposition has had to fight for more seniors' baths, for better seniors' meals, for more front-line workers, for a sensible drug policy, even for veterans' hospital parking, and now we have to fight for an end to divorce by nursing home. This government has ministers for health, for wellness, for disabilities, for seniors and still can't seem to manage to get this right. The minister's claim that no one cares more about seniors than the Premier: that's just nonsense, isn't it?

Mr. Horne: Oh, I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. That was a question? I'll answer it. I'll answer it by reminding this House and the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition that this government is on track to build a thousand continuing care spaces per year, a rate that far exceeds any other jurisdiction in this country, and all of those beds are capable of housing residents requiring all care needs from supportive living right through to long-term care.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Third main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Well, the minister will get another question about that a little bit later, Mr. Speaker.

Restructuring of PDD Services

Ms Smith: The minister responsible for persons with developmental disabilities spent a long time in the Assembly yesterday attempting to reassure everyone that his planned changes to the delivery of services will work, but it is another government failure, evidenced today by the big protest rally outside. The Alberta Association for Community Living, Alberta Council of Disability Services, and Alberta Disability Workers Association represent almost everyone who's involved in PDD. They are joining together to ask the minister to stop. Why won't he listen to the voices of the people who are most affected?

Mr. Oberle: Actually, Mr. Speaker, I've met with all of those organizations, and I met with individuals out there today. I'm going to continue to do so and to meet with people. I made it clear in my statement yesterday. I made it clear out there in the province. We clearly understand there's an issue with transition and an issue with the overall funding. As I did make clear in my statement yesterday, I'm working on that.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the organizations I mentioned represent PDD clients, families, service providers, and support staff. They point out that this is the largest cut ever imposed on people with developmental disabilities in Alberta's history. They also point out that PDD funding reductions are based on an arbitrary formula that will impact the lives of thousands of vulnerable Albertans. We've made the same arguments for months. When will the minister listen and do something about it?

Mr. Oberle: As I said, Mr. Speaker, I am listening. First of all, as I explained in my statement yesterday, people perceive cuts because they're looking at the disability services envelope. They're not looking at the other side . . . [interjections] Could I finish my answer? Thank you. If they were aware of what supports are available on the Human Services side of the budget and my commitment to ask . . . [interjections] Well, they don't want to listen to the answer, so I won't give it to them.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the drastic changes could lead to a PDD crisis. The families are warning the minister. The clients are warning the minister. The workers are warning the minister. The agencies who deliver the services are warning the minister. The opposition is warning the minister. He ignores us all just to placate the Treasury Board and their misplaced priorities. When will he do his job and stand up for the needs of Alberta's most vulnerable?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what I'm attempting to do, and in order to do that, you have to get down there and listen. Now, I didn't see any of the opposition members doing that today. They were at the microphone, pandering and telling people how they're going to be all things to all people. You've got to get down on the ground and listen to people. That's what I've been doing and I will continue to do.

I'm in 20 communities over the next two weeks. The meetings are on the Internet. I invite people to come out and talk with us. We'll do this as much as we can over the coming weeks and months, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, you rose on a point of order at 2 o'clock and so did Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, so we have two points of order raised between 2:00 and 2:01. They will be addressed later.

Let us move on to the leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Supports for Vulnerable Albertans

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last election the Premier campaigned by promising honest and transparent government, that she would listen to Albertans, and, of course, no service cuts. Promises made, promises broken. To the Premier: how does starving programs that help persons with developmental disabilities and patients requiring palliative care meet your promise of no service cuts?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I think the question is to me. I'm not aware of a specific case. I'm not sure I know what the member is talking about, if he'd care to enlighten me. I would caution him, of course, about talking about any individual's health care situation.

The Speaker: Let's move on, then. Maybe we'll get it in the supplemental.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, it's the minister's $42 million cut to his program.

It's beyond ridiculous for this government to pretend that they have not cut services to persons with developmental disabilities and those requiring palliative care. They're not fooling anybody, Mr. Speaker, except themselves. What they are doing is hurting a lot of vulnerable people. These are not expenses to be cut. These are real people that need real help. To the Premier or whoever wants to answer the question: will you please look up from your spreadsheet and realize that persons with developmental disabilities and patients requiring palliative care are not line items?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I have been clear, and I will continue to say that if you need services in our province, you're going to get services. For that hon. member to lump palliative care and persons with developmental disabilities services together doesn't really make sense to me. If he's got an individual case that he would like to make some progress on, then I invite him to do so in the proper way.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, this government missed math class. They promised no service cuts. They cut funding, cut staff, and then they say that they're not cutting services. So many groups, including doctors, nurses, postsecondary students, staff and faculty, corrections officers, municipal leaders, and now First Nations have all voiced concerns over this Conservative government's heavy-handed approach and lack of consultation. To the Premier and yet again any other minister: how can Albertans view this as anything else but an abuse of your majority to bully into submission anyone who doesn't agree with you?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, this government and this Premier have always been very clear that we will deliver the services that we have been entrusted with, and we are doing that just very well, thank you. But we have also been very clear that we will be very prudent with Albertans' finances, and we are doing that just as well. We will not have the opposition lecture us on what they would do because every day they change the tone and they want to be everything to everyone all the time. As government we actually have to make decisions and be accountable for them.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Member for Edmonton-Manning

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The most sacred responsibility of government is to uphold the law and ensure that the law is enforced. There's clear evidence, which was tabled in the Assembly yesterday, that a member of this Assembly may have signed a false affidavit, which, if true, would constitute a criminal offence. Will this Premier fulfill her responsibilities and request a police investigation of this matter, and if not, why not?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, allegations are just that. We dealt with this question yesterday. The member himself has referred the issue to the Ethics Commissioner for investigation to clear his name. He's recused himself from caucus and government. He's done the honourable thing.

The affidavit that was filed was filed in a civil lawsuit presumably, and the judge will be able to determine whether or not the affidavit has veracity. If there's an issue with that, I assume it'll be dealt with in the appropriate way. Simply making wild allegations and then requesting government do something about them is not the way we do justice in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government is attempting to dodge its responsibilities and leave it up to the judge in a civil matter whether or not there should be an investigation into a potential criminal matter. They are not wild allegations. The evidence was tabled in this House yesterday.

During her leadership campaign the Premier said that regaining trust is critical if Alberta's political system is to stay healthy, but getting there requires more than platitudes and promises. How can Albertans trust a government that doesn't do what it says and instead just leaves people with platitudes and promises?

Mr. Hancock: The way it works, Mr. Speaker, is that we respect the law, we respect the process, and we do not make wild allegations to drag the political process into the mud every time we think it will make political gain.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: I'm good.

Restructuring of PDD Services

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, this out-of-touch government continues to target our most vulnerable people. The Association for Community Living, the Council of Disability Services, and the Disability Workers Association are all calling the minister's $42 million cut to PDD the largest in Alberta history. Worse yet, they are warning that these dramatic cuts will throw the community into chaos and crisis. All the while the minister has the audacity to insist these cuts will not impact services. Minister, how can you possibly guarantee that these vulnerable Albertans won't lose services as a result of these shameful cuts?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I think I need to ask the member to revisit the fact that the disabilities services envelope has not been cut; it's whole. In fact, it increased by 3 and a half million dollars. In addition to that, I identified in my speech yesterday that there are additional resources on the Human Services side of the ledger in employment supports, and I also indicated – pretty clearly, I thought – that if there's additional support needed, I will seek that support. I am not going to cut services to individuals who need them. End of story.

Mrs. Forsyth: Given that the PDD community is disputing the minister's claim that these cuts will lead to more effective services, in fact, Minister, warning that these cuts will set positive changes in the system back, and I'll quote, further than ever, how can this government possibly excuse trying to find savings off the backs of our most vulnerable Albertans? Why are you doing this, Minister?

Mr. Oberle: I also made it abundantly clear, I thought, yesterday that I'm not looking to seek cost savings, Mr. Speaker. I'm looking to improve a system that is in need of improvement. We can do better, and we're going to do better.

Mrs. Forsyth: Given that the Premier gave a mandate to the minister asking that he continue to provide support to Albertans in a compassionate and caring manner, can the minister explain how leaving staff, family, and Albertans with developmental disabilities meets his definition of compassionate care?

Mr. Oberle: I think there was a clause missing in that question, Mr. Speaker. It didn't quite make sense to me.

As I said, I have been out there in communities across this province, 20 more communities in the next two weeks. I'm out talking to people. I'm understanding what their situations are. There is fear and anxiety out there. I freely admit that. I said that yesterday. We're dealing with it. We will have new contracts in place, and we will continue. If you need services, you will get services. End of story.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Market Access for Alberta Products

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is blessed with manufacturers and producers of products and resources for export. In order to be successful, we need to be able to sell those products in a global marketplace. The success of the Alberta economy supports schools, roads, hospitals, and all the government programs that continue to make Alberta the best place to live, work, and play. To the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. We know that protectionist firewall politics don't work. What is the government's actual plan to ensure Alberta products get to market?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dallas: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker, and to the hon. member, thanks for the question. Job one for this government and especially for my ministry is getting products to market, getting a fair price. That's why later in this week I'll be announcing our renewed international strategy. We have a choice. We can assertively seize new and important global opportunities, or we can look back and let other competing countries eat our lunch. We're going to go for it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this is so important, will a strategy document, regardless of how good it is, really be enough, or will the minister commit to taking action now to get the job done?

Mr. Dallas: Well, as I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, this is a renewed strategy, and under the leadership of our Premier our government has been looking outward right from day one. The Premier has travelled to Washington four times to advocate for Keystone, our Finance minister is in Hong Kong right now working on attracting investment and opening up new opportunities for Alberta companies. Next week, of course, the agriculture minister will be opening up new doors for our farmers and ranchers in Kazakhstan. Our renewed international strategy will help co-ordinate our efforts as a government and as a province to ensure we're succeeding globally.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: given the election results last night in B.C. how will this government work with the Clark government to build on successes we've had in the western provinces in eliminating trade barriers and find ways to open up global markets?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, let me start by congratulating Premier Clark and the party as well as all the candidates that put their names forward. [interjections] It was an exciting election to watch, and I guess we'll reserve judgment on the polling.

Alberta and B.C. have a proud history of co-operation through the New West Partnership, and I only see that getting stronger. To succeed globally, we must work together domestically. [interjections] We'll try to reach out to our neighbours like B.C. and have productive conversations about where we can go in new global markets.

The Speaker: Hon. members, let's keep the side conversations down to whispers. If you must converse, then leave the Chamber, please.

Let's move on. Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Long-term Care for Seniors

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we had a stunning admission at Public Accounts Committee. AHS admitted that there are absolutely no plans in place to create any more long-term care nursing beds. Yet in the PC Party 2012 election brochure this government promised to increase long-term care, not continuing care, spaces by a thousand a year. Even more shocking is the FOIP of the AHS capital submission, which shows the government is gutting up to 1,700 long-term care beds over the next five years. How can this minister continue to tell Albertans they have a plan for long-term care when clearly they do not?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Premier of this province has kept her promise to add a thousand spaces a year. What the hon. member continues to ignore is that all of the new spaces that are open in Alberta are built to the B2 building standard, which is capable of accommodating all levels of care, from supportive living right up to long-term care.

Mrs. Towle: No long-term care spaces.

Given that it is clear that this government is not adding any new long-term care beds and they're not meeting the demand in continuing care and given that this government continues to make promises it has no intention of keeping, when will the minister finally admit that you are failing Albertans and you are failing seniors in care?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what this government will proudly admit is that we are exercising the leadership necessary to provide for all needs for seniors across the province, from independent living and home care right through to long-term care.

The obvious difference between us is philosophy, a philosophy opposite that is rooted in the 1960s and '70s model of warehousing seniors in traditional nursing homes as compared to our philosophy today which supports aging in place as needs change, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order noted from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills at 2:14 p.m.

Third and final question, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Given that today in Public Accounts Committee the AHS CEO, Chris Eagle, agreed that the divorce-by-nursing-home hundred-kilometre rule should be reviewed and given that Dr. Eagle himself acknowledged the devastating impact that this rule has after a simple three-minute conversation, why does this government continue to ignore what has been brought before you day after day after day?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member gives herself a little too much credit. [interjections] The debate in Public Accounts should have served as an education to the hon. member about the very good work that is going on in this province to provide for the needs of seniors.

We've dealt with the question of beds. All beds are built to accommodate long-term care. We spent the session talking about many other services that are made available. Alberta Health Services has shown that as soon as it is able to, it will eliminate the hundred-kilometre rule.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Too many conversations going on across the bow here and too many interjections and too many rude interruptions of each other. Show some respect for each other, even for your own colleagues in your own caucus. It would be helpful.

Edmonton-South West, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Skilled Labour Shortage

Mr. Jeneroux: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's unemployment rate is currently 4.4 per cent, and we have skills shortages in a number of areas. Employers in southwest Edmonton have indicated to me and many other members in this House that the lack of skilled labour is the biggest challenge they face. Our own government projections indicate a labour shortage of 114,000 workers by 2021, and this is affecting our future economic potential. With these pressures it's clear to see that the workforce concerns of Alberta's businesspeople are being ignored. Now in the tone of the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark: why, Deputy Premier? Why?

Mr. Lukaszuk: With friends like these, Mr. Speaker, I don't need enemies.

Mr. Speaker, there is truly one dark cloud that's hanging over our Canadian economy. It's the shortage of labour. We all agree throughout Canada that we have to make sure that we maximize on the skills that are available in our province, so jobs for Albertans first, for Canadians second, and then relying on the outside workforce if we have to. That's what we'll be focusing on, making sure that our young students graduate with skills that are compatible with the economy of Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that in my constituency I have a number of new immigrants who are eagerly looking for work and there are a number of young mothers and fathers looking to get back into the workforce, what specifically is our government doing to address labour challenges? What, Deputy Premier? What?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, having anyone in any province who is not maximizing on their skills and not contributing to the maximum of their capacity is definitely a loss. So making sure that they are certified, that their skills are recognized in this province and in this country is a priority, and we're working with immigrant groups on that. Making sure that support services through the Ministry of Human Services exist for families so that mothers and single parents can go to work is also very important. At the end of the day, with such low unemployment, we have to make sure that every person works to the maximum of their capacity.

Mr. Jeneroux: To the same minister. If employers cannot find Albertans or Canadians, they'll hire from abroad. Where can employees go to find the assistance available? Where, Deputy Premier? Where?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, let me tell you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Human Services has 59 Alberta Works offices throughout the province. They're very accessible. Now there are also websites available where employers list positions that are available to employees. Matching employees with compatible skills is something that's very important. Focusing on our aboriginal community, persons with disabilities, single parents, and those who are often underemployed is very important. But go onto the website, look at Alberta Works, and you will find additional information and resources.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Restructuring of PDD Services (continued)

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today hundreds of people from across the province with the greatest of life challenges, with courage and sacrifice came to the Legislature to demonstrate their opposition to what this government is doing to persons with disabilities. The government's agenda to cut $42 million from their services risks health and safety and is poorly planned according to those who happen to know: the individuals themselves and their families and caregivers. This government is compounding its own financial mismanagement with mismanagement of our most vulnerable Albertans. To the minister: how does this not make a mockery of your much-touted social policy framework of putting people first, being proactive, showing dignity, collaborating?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The social policy framework is a very important document, not only a document from government but from the community, developed through the community. It's important that we address all issues with dignity and compassion and respect, and the hon. associate minister is doing exactly that, working with persons with disabilities and their families to ensure that the services that they need will be there and that they will have what they need to participate in an inclusive way in our society. The fact that we're changing some processes with respect to the community access program and moving to a better model is demonstration of exactly that dignity and respect.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, an organization called SKILLS Society Edmonton must eliminate $200,000 per month starting July 1. Will the minister tell us how he would accomplish this without risking the health and safety of his clients?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fact of the matter is that there are a number of service delivery organizations across the province, and some of them are going to have to change the way they deliver services, from the community access services they provide now to the support services that are necessary to ensure true inclusion of their clients in society. If they cannot make those changes, other organizations will pick up the changes. The focus is not on the organizations. The focus is on the Albertans who need the services and ensuring that they get the services they need to be truly included in a truly inclusive society.

Dr. Swann: Well, it's clear to most of us in Alberta that this government hasn't really planned this change well. It's too short. It's too drastic. Will the minister assure this House that he will delay the implementation of these draconian changes?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, there is clearly some fear and anxiety out there. I talked yesterday in my statement about it. Some organizations like the SKILLS organization that he raised are fearful of the money that they see inside the PDD envelope. They're not looking at money that is outside of that envelope in the Human Services budget. As I said yesterday, if I need additional support, I'll get it. I'm out talking to people across this province. I said yesterday that it's crystal clear that people are concerned about the transition. Not what we're doing but how we're doing it and how fast we're doing it really is the problem. They're concerned about funding. I'm working on both of those. We will do a funding transition . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Little Bow.

Support for Vulnerable Albertans (continued)

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP has made a list of the top 10 ways in which this PC government has broken their promise to Albertans with disabilities. Ten, cut basic income supports of up to $280 per month to disabled seniors; nine, cut the disability service program at MRU; eight, double the wait time for AISH; seven, terminate Alberta's only American Sign Language program; six, cut 20 per cent of speech pathologists in Edmonton schools. To the minister in charge of standing up for disabled Albertans: why is this PC government so intent on making Alberta's most vulnerable citizens pay the price of its fiscal incompetence?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, that top 10 list might have a spot on David Letterman, where people appreciate comedy and fiction. The fact of the matter is that this government cares about vulnerable people in our society. I laid out a plan, in fact a few years' plan, about the transformations that are needed in this ministry. We'll make sure that if you need service, you will get service in our province.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, in this province you can either laugh or you can cry.

Given that the fifth way this government is hurting Albertans with disabilities is through a $180 million cut from pharmacy benefits that will see the sickest and most disabled seniors pay the most and given the fourth way is through a 20 per cent cut to addictions and mental health funding and the third way is through the elimination of almost half of Calgary's palliative home-care nurses, why won't this government stop making Alberta's sick and disabled a target of their cuts?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, this province has a very proud record of supporting vulnerable people across society, including seniors, including people with addictions and mental health issues, including many others. To reduce the discussion about such important matters to, for lack of a better term, a top 10 line of questioning does not do justice either to the people involved or to the policy challenges that are in front of us.

Ms Notley: Well, lip service doesn't give justice either.

Given that the number two way this government has let down people with disabilities is by closing the Michener Centre despite promising families that they would not and given that the number one attack on Alberta's citizens with disabilities is a $60 million cut from programs that secure the safety and quality of life for Alberta's citizens with the most severe disabilities, why won't this government admit that in at least 10 different ways their so-called tough choices are always made at the expense of Alberta's most vulnerable citizens?

Mr. Oberle: Well, there's a good example right there, Mr. Speaker. The party in question here has been lobbying for years that we can do better with community living and more inclusive, more engaging ways of addressing the needs of disabled people in our province, and now they're going to protest that we're closing the Michener Centre. In fact, that is an implementation of a body of research and best practices developed in Alberta and across North America, and we're going to continue with it because it's the right thing to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by St. Albert.

Michener Centre Closure

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Secrecy and deception are becoming two recognizable traits in this government's continuing care plan. Last year Albertans watched as AHS executives tried to secretly close the Carmangay centre. That's not all. Through FOIP we have learned that AHS wanted to withhold the actual final closure date of the Carmangay centre. The Health minister said that he learned from the mistakes of that closure in Carmangay, but it doesn't look like it to me. To the Health minister: why is this practice of secrecy and miscommunication being allowed to continue with the closure of the Michener Centre?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member well knows – we've had extensive discussions in this House – that the situation surrounding the Carmangay centre and its closure most certainly could have been handled better in terms of relationships with the community and the residents and the staff. We've said that. Alberta Health Services has acknowledged that. They've taken appropriate steps to work better with communities and residents and staff in the future, and that's as it should be.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Speaker, given that yesterday the junior minister of AT and T stated in this House the government's record of "unprecedented transparency" and something about a gold standard, will this junior minister take the last part of his title seriously and actually take steps to transform the way this government communicates information to all Albertans, especially the ones under their care?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, what I can say is that the opposition needs to spend more time listening to and looking at what this government is delivering. We are delivering unprecedented transparency. We have delivered the gold standard in expense disclosure, we are reviewing FOIP, and we've developed whistleblower legislation. That is delivering transparency.

The only thing that I'm seeing delivered from the other side is unprecedented hypocrisy. That's what I'm seeing delivered from the other side.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Speaker, the name-calling is hurting me.

Given that this government has offered no insight on how they came to the decision to close the Michener Centre and given that they've blindsided all those that are involved, will the junior minister of AT and T stop with his gold star rhetoric and raise the bar on transparency by releasing the list of further closures that are going to affect all of the people and staff so that everyone can be prepared?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, there was no secrecy involved with the Michener Centre. If we could all just brush aside the political rhetoric for a while and just focus on the facts . . . [interjections] Apparently not. If we could just focus on the fact that we're talking about the care of some very vulnerable people in our province. We're taking this step because we know we can do better, and we're going to do better. That's why we're doing it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Respite Care

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Retired constituents in St. Albert have identified concerns about caring for loved ones that not only adversely affect the quality of life for seniors but also PDD adults. A retired couple from St. Albert, Ross and Irene Boyes, have a 41-year-old son named Bryan. Bryan is developmentally delayed and blind and has always lived at home with his loving parents. The Boyes have searched for weekend respite care for Bryan, and although they've found agencies that provide respite services, the agency waiting lists are long, and they are finding that care is not actually readily available. My first question is to the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities. How is respite care administered for seniors with adult PDD children, who may have an increased need for relief in their homes?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Oberle: Well, thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker, and my thanks to the family that came in today. My hat goes off to people that provide care for their loved ones in their home. I know that circumstances are difficult. This is actually one of the reasons why the SIS assessment by itself isn't a good predictor of funding and supports necessary. There are circumstances around an individual.

Our PDD program does provide for respite care. I don't know if the individuals have actually spoken to the CEO of the PDD network. I invite them to do so immediately or to provide their details. I will work with the MLA on resolving the situation.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. We hear that staff retention in agencies offering respite care is very hard to maintain due to low wages and challenging work for respite staff. Minister, are we adequately supporting the agencies to hire an appropriate number of qualified employees?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the disability services network out there is probably one of the keys to providing services going forward. We have some 20,000 people providing care in this province, just unbelievably dedicated and qualified staff. That's why we moved this year to offer a 10 per cent wage increase across the board, last year a one-time bonus. We're going to continue to bring their salaries up to parity. We're also working on a workforce alliance to talk about education levels and recruitment and retention tools so that we have a stable workforce going forward.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the same minister: does your ministry recognize the many families in this predicament who may not have other supports in place, and if so, is there any specific action the government is taking to put plans for proper relief in place for aging parents of adult PDD children?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Oberle: Yes. That's an excellent question, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the MLA for it and, again, the family for coming in today. This is exactly why personal conversations are needed around SIS assessments, so that we can understand what personal circumstances are and allocate resources appropriately. I will take this particular case up with the department and the PDD staff. I certainly invite the family to do so with the CEO and with their MLA. We'll do everything we can in this particular case, but on the broader question it's a very valid one, and I will look at it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

PDD Community Access Funding

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government cannot be trusted to care for persons with developmental disabilities. In Strathmore-Brooks the Newell Community Action Group provides a variety of excellent learning opportunities with the community access grant, which are now at risk due to this government's callous restructuring of PDD programming. Some of the programs that may be discontinued include cooking classes, computer training as well as reading, writing, and math. When will this government acknowledge that they are shortchanging our most vulnerable by slashing programs that provide crucial learning opportunities for persons with developmental disabilities?

Mr. Oberle: We're doing no such thing, Mr. Speaker. We're transforming a PDD system that will allow people to be fully engaged in their community through employment or other opportunities, volunteer work, whatever else. We want to improve the services that we give, not slash them. The hon. member is wrong.

Mr. Hale: Given that this government continues to downplay the significance of these cuts, will the associate minister for PDD explain how this government has somehow determined that reading, writing, and math instruction as well as cooking, volunteering, occupational development, and other community access programs aren't important?

Mr. Oberle: I don't believe I ever said any such thing, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member has some specific examples of programs that are being cut, I would be more than willing to talk to him about it. What I did say yesterday – and it holds true today – is that no service provider out there has a new contract and is aware of any specific cuts. There's a lot of fear and anxiety. We're moving to calm that. We're going to provide services that people need, that improve their quality of life. We're going to continue to do that.

Mr. Hale: I have received many letters from PDD clients upset about these cuts. As one person states, quote: I feel very upset for what you guys did to us; I feel very upset; I feel it's not fair to us; you should try to walk in our shoes and see how it feels. Given that earlier today the minister suggested that if he has to go back and request more money, he will, can he please outline exactly how much more money he will be asking for to fulfill his promise that if you need the service, you will get it?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, as I said in my statement yesterday, no individual has been informed that they're getting any cuts to their services either. There is a lot of fear and anxiety out there. If the hon. member is truly concerned about the welfare of any particular individual, then why doesn't he forward that letter to my office, and together we can work on a resolution to it? It does no good to talk about it on the floor of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Underground Electricity Transmission Lines

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the Minister of Energy. We hear a lot of myths from the opposition about power transmission costs in Alberta, so if we could get some facts. Will the minister provide the actual cost estimate of a 20-kilometre portion of the 500-kV dual circuit heartland transmission line installed underground through Strathcona county versus the cost of an above ground line?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all know that the heartland project is a key piece of infrastructure for the underpinning of the economy in this province. The Alberta Utilities Commission estimates the construction of the line to be about $9.5 million per kilometre for the existing construction. If that were to be an underground solution, it would be $16 million per kilometre, which is like 70 per cent more. We are determined to protect the interests of consumers in Alberta and keep the costs of this kind of infrastructure down because all Albertans pay for that infrastructure.

Mr. Quest: My first supplementary. To the same minister: what would that cost all Albertans? What's the cost difference, and how would that impact Alberta ratepayers?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, we've given the Alberta Utilities Commission more teeth in order to ensure that proponents, the operators who are building these facilities, have to justify every single dollar that they spend on these transmission lines. That's new. That's a new initiative of this government. Under the leadership of Premier Alison Redford we're working hard to ensure that consumers are protected throughout the piece.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: All right. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental. To the same minister: does the technology exist today to construct a 500-kV dual circuit underground line reliable enough to ensure the same level of reliability as an above ground line?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, unlike some, I'm no expert, but it would appear that the work that was done by the Alberta Utilities Commission found that underground cable would actually not be more reliable than an overhead line, especially in winter. There are technical issues related to this. This is something that was clearly looked into at the time of the approval of the heartland line. You know, all Albertans rely upon the system so that when they turn on the switch, the lights go on. All Albertans rely upon that, and they have good reason to.

Notice of Power Line Development Public Meeting

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, before the Premier was the Premier, she promised to restore citizen engagement in public affairs and improve the way all branches of government work. Things sure change quickly. The Alberta Utilities Commission, a branch of government, recently notified people in Cypress-Medicine Hat about an information session being held regarding two power lines. The letter of notification was dated May 1, postmarked May 2. My constituents got the letter on May 7, and the meeting was May 8. Does the government really think that one day's notice for a public meeting is open, transparent, and accountable?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, I'd certainly be happy to take that case under advisement. Clearly, the Alberta Utilities Commission is an independent agency, quasi-judicial in its nature, ensuring that it conducts its responsibilities as it should according to the policy established by the government. I'm happy to look into the individual case.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, the government may not be concerned, but my constituents certainly are.

Given that my constituents only had one day's notice for the meeting and given that one of my constituents who was able to attend the meeting said that the AUC did not provide the attendees with a very good understanding of the opportunities for participation in the review process, people are beginning to wonder: why doesn't the government want Albertans to participate in the review of power line developments? Is this your idea of a gold standard?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm actually concerned that Albertans have an opportunity to participate fully in a process. For that reason, I'd be very pleased to take the specific example and look into it and ensure that the process works according to the way it should. You know, there are rules in place, there are practices in place that are designed to protect the interests of landowners, of those who would be affected by developments, and they should be followed appropriately. In most cases they are, but if there are exceptions, I'm happy to look into that on behalf of Albertans.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Minister. I will follow up.

Given that my constituent was told to get a lawyer if she wanted her transmission line concerns heard, is the government worried that we are going to run out of lawyers if every Albertan upset with this government is told to get one?

Mr. Hughes: You know, Mr. Speaker, it would be very unusual for me to express a concern about running out of lawyers.

In the original intent of the earlier questions and the original intent of my response to that, I look forward to receiving specific information from the hon. member and working on behalf of those constituents as well as all Albertans.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the time for QP has expired.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: We'll carry on with Introduction of Guests, starting with the Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and to members of this Assembly Mr. Qiang Lin and Gord DeJong, who are seated in the members' gallery. Qiang and Gord run a business known as Siwin, which is presently located in Leduc. They are moving to a new value-added processing facility in Edmonton this October. Siwin provides meal solutions made from top-quality Canadian ingredients to Alberta stores right now as they gear up for export markets. This company currently employs 14 Albertan workers, and it was established with support from the Alberta Livestock and Meat Agency, the government of Alberta, and foreign investments. I would like to also acknowledge their contribution to yesterday's Asian Heritage Month celebrations. I would ask the members to join me and give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the Associate Minister of AT and T.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly my guest and constituent, Said Ammar. Said is a chemical engineering graduate from the University of Alberta, and he's also an active volunteer in various community organizations: six years with the Druze Association of Edmonton, including a stint as vice-president of programs, also assisting in organizations such as the World Lebanese Cultural Union Society and other organizations around Edmonton and the province. I would ask him, please, to stand and receive the warm traditional Assembly greetings.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation, followed by Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Scott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly our ministerial intern, George Huang. George joins us for the summer from the University of Calgary, where he is currently studying law. I'm sure he's very excited by the discussions here today about lawyers. George spends his extracurricular time providing legal aid to clients through the university student legal assistance program. He plays rugby, soccer, and fencing and is also fluent in Mandarin. I'm very pleased to have him as part of my team this summer, and I'd ask him to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am humbled today to introduce to you and through you to the Legislature two-thirds of my office staff, individuals who are a significant part of my success as an MLA. First, Carrie McKay has two daughters and a stepson. She is an active community volunteer in Parkland county and was an energetic member of the re-election campaign of our colleague the MLA for Spruce Grove-St. Albert. Carrie is a legislative assistant for the MLA for Calgary-Hawkwood and myself. She runs our calendars, prepares our documents for meetings, and is the calm centre in our Annex offices. To quote my colleague: Carrie is a fabulous, calm, and resourceful assistant, a joy to work with. Please stand, Carrie.

My second introduction is Devon Dinsdale. Devon is graduating from Mount Royal University with a bachelor of arts in policy studies and is a resident of Calgary-Glenmore. Devon brings research experience and analytical skills to my Calgary office. He is also a pilot and a wilderness guide and ski instructor. Each day I ask what he finds fascinating, and he always has a challenging question or observation regarding how this world is different from the textbooks and classroom scenarios in school. Devon, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the members Nancy Dick and John Ressler* from the disability action hall, Ryan Geake from the Calgary Scope Society, and Donna Dunn from disability studies at Mount Royal University, here today to support the protest occurring on the steps of the Legislature and add their voices to calls for this government to reverse its devastating cuts to PDD services. These organizations have had their budgets slashed along with PDDs. The cuts will prevent these organizations from delivering vital front-line services to the developmentally disabled. I'd ask them to rise and receive the welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my absolute pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. David Orlecki from Two Hills. I appreciate him taking the time today to come to the Legislature. After meeting with him last week, he told me he wanted to come and visit for the first time to see what really happens here as well as to take in the tour of this beautiful building. Mr. Orlecki works as a construction co-ordinator and has been active in the Lions Club and the fish and game association of Two Hills. I'd ask Mr. Orlecki to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, it's my honour to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a friend of mine, Ms Darlene Gallant. Darlene is here with the Lung Association for Breathing Matters day, representing idiopathic pulmonary fibrosis, an incurable disease. The only option is a lung transplant. Bill 207 recognizes the importance of organ and tissue donation, and this registry is very important for all Albertans. Darlene's husband, David, was on the lung transplant list for two and a half years, but unfortunately he passed away before receiving a transplant. I would ask that Darlene rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by Calgary-Currie.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly representatives of the Filipino Senior Citizens Association, which celebrates 30 years of accomplishments and ongoing contributions within the Filipino community in our capital city. Today I have nine guests seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to please rise as I mention their names: Mrs. Joyce Dizon, current president; Mrs. Nenita Gallardo, board member; Mrs. Nellie Naval, board member; Mrs. Lucy Manuntag, business manager; Mrs. Lucy Sagun, member, recently celebrating her 95th birthday; Mr. Ted Dizon, member; Mr. Pol Naval, member; Mr. Cesar Manuntag, member; and Mrs. Eloisa Lau, long-time friend and supporter of seniors. Heartfelt thanks and appreciation to all my guests for adding immeasurably to the Filipino community, our city, province, and country. I would now ask that we provide them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Just before we go to Calgary-Currie, do I understand that the leader of the New Democrats' guests have not arrived? Similarly, Calgary-Shaw, your guests have not arrived?

We'll go to Calgary-Currie, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you Dr. Mark Anselmo from Calgary. Dr. Anselmo is the section chief of respiratory medicine at the Calgary Children's hospital. I had the honour and privilege to serve as principal to his wonderful children, Emily, Sean, and Daniel, when I was at St. Michael school. I would like to thank Dr. Anselmo for all of his hard work today in promoting Breathing Matters day at the Legislature. I'd now ask Dr. Anselmo to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Sherwood Park.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions. My first is to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Michele Ford, who is seated in the public gallery. Michele is here to raise awareness about food allergies in Alberta schools. She's a strong advocate for anaphylaxis awareness and is also a mother of a child who suffers from this severe condition. Those of you who follow on Twitter will see that her Twitter handle is @albertaadvocate. I would ask that she rise and that we provide her with the traditional warm greeting of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I would like us to recognize today the constituents from Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville who were here through question period. They are three constituents of my riding that have provided the riding with a great deal of support through their many community activities. Tom and Mae Adamyk are from St. Michael, active in the agricultural society, and Mae is also the vice-chair of the Lamont health centre. With them today is Hazel Anaka from Andrew, Alberta. I'd like to recognize Hazel for her work on a new event, Babas and Borscht, which will be on August 24 to 25 in Andrew. I would like us to recognize their attendance here today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly four constituents of mine who were with us today during question period. First, we have Gordon Swityk, who is a mechanical engineer who retired from Sherritt International. He's the director of infrastructure for the Edmonton Radial Railway Society and operates the streetcars going over the High Level Bridge. Also, we have Doug Sklar, who is a valued member of our community and is a retired professional forester living in Sherwood Park. We have Robert Parks. He's the president of the Sherwood Park PC association and a long-time volunteer in our community and was a key volunteer in my provincial campaign. Tom Lo is also a Sherwood Park resident, who is the owner of T and T mechanical. He's been actively involved in democracy since he moved here from China in 1977, being involved in every single provincial election. He was nominated and won volunteer of the year by PC Alberta last year. If you could please join me in welcoming them today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my young friend Amy Peng. Amy was an applicant for MLA for a Day last week, but due to an exam and other school work, Amy had to regretfully decline the opportunity. However, we just couldn't keep her away. I'm looking forward to the opportunity to meet with Amy after this. As for her application she is more than qualified to be MLA for a Day. I'd ask that Amy and her guests seated in the members' gallery today please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Before I proceed with my introduction, I just wanted to ask the House through you for unanimous consent to waive rule 7(7) and continue the Routine past 3 p.m.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Deputy Government House Leader has requested unanimous consent for us to move on beyond 3 o'clock to conclude the Routine if it becomes necessary. If anyone is opposed to that motion for unanimous consent, please say so now.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Now, on with your introduction.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One thing I've often said is that one thing Alberta needs is more lawyers, and I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you an aspiring one, Matthew Glass. Matthew was born in Toronto, raised in Edmonton, and is currently attending law school at the University of Ottawa. Matthew will be working out of my Edmonton office this summer on stakeholder meetings, policy analysis, and event planning. We're very happy to have him along this summer, and in addition to asking for the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly, please wish him a belated happy birthday from last Friday.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Well, that's good because that set a record. I think well over 30 people were introduced today.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have the Leader of the Official Opposition, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Wildrose Sessional Retrospective

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another session is just about in the books, and for the members opposite it can't end soon enough. When the last bell rings, they'll hit the highway faster than you can say Mayo Clinic, and who can blame them? Day after day of waste, scandal, incompetence, and broken promises. It's been another ugly session from a government that can't seem to do anything right. In fact, I'd say that the only thing more daunting than facing another day in the Legislature is having to go home to their constituents to answer for it all.

Let's review, shall we? After a debt-free decade thanks to the leadership and courage of Premier Ralph Klein, this Premier took us back to the 1980s, back to the days of structural deficits and crushing debt. With the back-in-debt budget Albertans will be on the hook for $17 billion of debt by the time the next election rolls around, with no plan to pay it back.

On we go to the never-ending stream of health care executive expense scandals. During the session we learned AHS brass had dinged taxpayers for everything from personal life coaches to self-help seminars to private health treatment in the United States.

Still going. Delays in the court system led to accused violent criminals walking free and brave victims like Dani Polsom without the justice they deserved.

Not done yet. AHS decided a good way to save money was to axe discounted parking for our war heroes. When confronted, they wondered aloud: what did these veterans ever do to deserve special treatment? Shameful.

Onward. We saw elder abuse cases; political donation loopholes; a pharmacy debacle; bungled consultations with First Nations; near weekly protests, including another one today to protest cuts to programs for persons with development disabilities; and more millions of dollars for PC insiders, this time for failed staffers in the Premier's office.

All of this in the last two months, Mr. Speaker. We don't envy you, hon. members opposite. This is a lot to answer for. Enjoy your summer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

New Democrat Sessional Retrospective

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again the session has been rife with broken promises from this PC government. They broke their promises to provide stable and predictable funding for education, health care, and postsecondary institutions. Alberta's school boards and teachers are left with a bad deal that will leave them with ballooning class sizes, fewer students with the opportunity as well to participate in extracurricular activities because of this government's budget cuts and broken promises. The PCs cut $147 million from postsecondary education. Students across the province will lose opportunities to take programs such as nursing, office administration, disability studies and will end up paying for these PC government broken promises with increased noninstructional fees.

Across the province vital health care services for Albertans are being cut. Half of the palliative care home-care nurses in Calgary, for example, have been laid off, and laboratory services in rural communities have been slashed.

The Alberta New Democrats have been holding the government to account for all of these broken promises as they tried to push through important legislation at breakneck speed. Meanwhile the Official Opposition has given this government a free pass at the end of this session. Mr. Speaker, because there is little difference between this government's policy and the ideology of those of the Official Opposition, there's very little that the Wildrose can really disagree with in this government's policy agenda. Both the government and the Official Opposition, for example, supported undercutting collective bargaining by legislating the teachers' deal. They both have no problem with legislation that violates the privacy rights of vulnerable children.

New Democrats are proud of working hard in this session, standing up for today's Alberta families, for students, for seniors, for Albertans with disabilities, and workers.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Innovation in Alberta

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On a more positive note, reconnecting science to society has a deeper purpose than developing the next marketable technology. It's about creating the kind of society we want to create, a society in which there is optimism, confidence, and purpose. Scientists need to know why they are doing science, and society needs to know why it supports them.

Mr. Speaker, this wisdom from quantum physicist Neil Turok, director of the Perimeter Institute in Waterloo, Ontario, funded by Research in Motion, reinforces the virtuous circle between pure science and industrial innovation, and that learning is well appreciated in my constituency of Calgary-Varsity, home to corporate R and D, the University of Calgary, and a vibrant research park.

Here's a sampling of the innovation lineup in Calgary-Varsity. U of C's research is multidisciplinary and often done in partnership with companies or fellow institutions, and the outcomes are impressive. For example, in the health care field researchers have discovered a plant-based insulin that is a fraction of the cost of today's current price and a new painkiller more effective than morphine.

Innovate Calgary is a partnership between Calgary Technologies, the city of Calgary incubator, and the University of Calgary to support tech start-ups and commercialization of research.

Alberta Innovates: Tech Futures, a government initiative, also partners with the U of C and others to focus and advance innovation; for example, supporting nanoresearch into new storage for wind and solar electricity.

There are smaller players, too. CETAC-West, championed by innovation guru Joe Lukacs, serves as a hub for 70-plus small and medium enterprises annually, including, for example, Brooks-based TCB Welding, that develops and manufactures a cleaner and more efficient alternative to conventional pumpjacks.

Corporations can also lead the research. N-Solv Corporation, a private company, utilized funding from the Climate Change Emission Management Corporation to develop a pilot for an in-situ gravity draining process that utilizes warm solvent vapour as its working fluid in lieu of water.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Edmonton-Decore.

Food Allergy Awareness Month

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May is Food Allergy Awareness Month. More than 50 per cent of Canadians know someone with a known food allergy. It's not just all about peanut butter. There are currently 170 foods that are known to cause allergic reactions. However, nine foods are responsible for about 90 per cent of allergic reactions. These allergic reactions can occur at any given age. Anaphylaxis is the most severe form of allergic reaction and can cause death. I personally have watched a member of my family have to deal with an anaphylactic reaction. You feel totally helpless as you watch someone struggle to speak and to breathe. Seeing a child suffer through this type of reaction would be far worse, and anyone who works with children should know and be aware of this serious condition.

Awareness and support of the community are key to keeping our children safe. Allergy and anaphylaxis information and response resources are part of our School Boards Association policies, but despite the policy advisory of school employees to receive training to recognize signs of an anaphylactic reaction and how to administer an EpiPen, many have not received the appropriate training, training that takes less than an hour.

I encourage you not to ignore early symptoms, especially if you've had a reaction in the past. Always take a possible reaction seriously and act quickly, and remember that not every reaction will always look the same.

Visiting with us here today is a strong advocate for awareness and training for our educators, Michele Ford, a mother I had the opportunity to introduce earlier. She is the mother of a child who lives with anaphylaxis. If your child has a food allergy, you should seek proper medical attention and be very aware.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Filipino Senior Citizens Association Anniversary

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege for me to rise today to commemorate the 30th anniversary milestone and ongoing contributions of the Filipino Senior Citizens Association of Edmonton, also known as FSCA. The establishment of the Filipino Senior Citizens Association was inspired by many individuals, including Mrs. Tekla Beltran, Mrs. Lucy Sagun, Mrs. Annie Dioquino, and Mr. Maxima Corpus, to name a few. Also, through the instrumental assistance of numerous Filipino seniors the FSCA became a registered not-for-profit organization on February 19, 1982.

With admiration and sincere appreciation the raison d'être of FSCA of Edmonton encourages Filipino seniors to help one another, enjoy each other's company, and maintain goodwill and togetherness between and amongst themselves. Mr. Speaker, the association's officers and members are known for their humbleness, personal warmth, and strong leadership in support of the tireless dedication to their operations and the inherent betterment of its members.

Special highlights of formidable accomplishments which galvanize and provide meaning to the FSCA include hosting a special citizenship court at the provincial museum and receiving a citation for outstanding community service; one of their marquee events, organizing annual FSCA Valentine Queen of Hearts and Miss Little Queen events; and celebrating Pabasa during the Lenten season, which is part of Filipino culture and tradition, for all to appreciate.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta spirit, essence, and history of the FSCA with pride is based upon the shared volunteer effort and commitment of the present and past members. My heartfelt thanks and congratulations to all those helping hands who have given so generously to build and strengthen the long-standing success of the FSCA. Congratulations and best wishes for 30 years of continued accomplishments. Mabuhay. Maraming salamat po.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Support for Small Business

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I got a letter this week from a business owner who got a government grant. He told me he thought subsidies were a good use of government money. He used his grant to grow his business, employing a dozen people, accessing local inputs to produce items otherwise unavailable in Alberta. And he invited me to visit his operation.

I thanked him for the invitation and pointed out that government does not have any money of its own. Although it was a grant and, therefore, free money for him, it nonetheless came from the taxes of profitable businesses and regular taxpayers. I told him I was pleased to hear that his business is growing and prospering. I wrote: if it's because your products are meeting a large enough need in a cost-effective way, then you'll continue to succeed, and if you do, I hope you'll choose to repay the grant from your profits.

The economic principle here is that for government to have money to grant, it has to take it from successful businesses and hard-working taxpayers. I've lost contracts to subsidized competitors who used my own taxes to underbid me. My employees and I were not amused.

Governments do not create wealth. Too often they overtax and misallocate it. Government's job is to create a stable environment in which businesses can prosper, free from overregulation and unnecessary red tape. I applaud the government for resisting suggestions from the less economically enlightened left wing in this House about progressive income tax. I encourage you to go further and eliminate corporate welfare all together. Have faith in the free market, reduce red tape, and then stand back and watch the economy grow under a renewed Alberta advantage. But I know you won't. That's why we'll be trading places in 2016.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I rise to table a petition that has been vetted, reviewed, and approved by Parliamentary Counsel as to form. This petition has been signed by 1,600-plus people from Chestermere and area who are seeing their property taxes go up by 53 per cent this year. The petitioners are asking the government to please phase in this increase in the property tax over a period of four years or more to lessen the financial impact on them. The petition was put together by a member of my community. His name is Pete Tindal. He's a great advocate. He didn't even have to go door to door to get 1,600-plus signatures.

If you would indulge me with one more point, Mr. Speaker, the frustration for the people of Chestermere is that although being told in here over and over again that it would be phased in, they are still getting 53 per cent this year, so they have risen up and put together a petition.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You need only look at Alberta's schools, communities, families, and playgrounds to see Alberta's promise, our children and youth. We live in a dynamic province with a young population and strive to give young people every opportunity to be successful. Alberta's Promise and its many business, nonprofit agencies, and community partners across the province seek to support children and youth to realize their potential. Alberta's Promise 2012 annual report incorporates the following information: program mandate and activities; messages from our Premier, from myself, from vice-chairs Bernie Kollman and Sue Riddell Rose, and from Ruth Copot, Alberta's Promise executive director; and the Premier's Council membership and board listing. I'm pleased to table the 2012 annual report for Alberta's Promise and would ask all members of the Assembly to stay tuned for further messages about Alberta's Promise and its impact on our province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I forgot to table this. It's a petition, but it is not in order to be presented, so we're tabling it. I forgot to do it yesterday, and no fewer than four people have reminded me, so here I go.

This is signed by people from Taber, other places in southern Alberta, Calgary, Grassy Lake – oh, my goodness, all over Alberta. They are asking that the Legislative Assembly urge the Government of Alberta to refrain from reallocating the estimated $42 million from the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Community Access Program into other government budgets as it will create substantial financial and personal hardships for both clients and service providers.

I am tabling this on behalf of my colleague the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. I'm sorry; I can't even tell you how many people have signed this, probably close to a thousand.

Thank you.

3:10

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your indulgence I have three tablings today. I'd like to table another letter sent to Premier Redford from a concerned worker who provides community disability services to adults living with developmental disabilities in Lethbridge. This is the first tabling.

As well, Mr. Speaker, I have the appropriate number of copies of a petition which calls on the government to increase post-secondary funding rather than imposing devastating cuts on college and universities. There are 1,377 signatures in this tabling.

My third tabling is the appropriate number of copies of a petition which calls on the PC government to protect the rights of injured workers by amending the Workers' Compensation Act. There are 113 signatures on this.

I apologize, Mr. Speaker. I actually have a fourth tabling. This is a letter sent to the Minister of Human Services from a community disability services provider for adults living with developmental disabilities. They are extremely concerned about the cuts to PDD.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Just a reminder that it's a longstanding tradition to not refer to members by their private names, which I believe you did in your first tabling.

Let's move on to Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Saskiw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings with the requisite copies. The first is a document that's been signed by hundreds and hundreds of people from Elk Point. They're asking Alberta Health Services to stop the closure of the acute care beds in their facility and requesting that "the Health Centre be restored to full capacity with 12 acute care beds in full operation and Emergency Services open 24 hours 7 days per week." This has been a very stressful time for the people in that area, and I'm going to continue to advocate on that.

The second tabling is a petition from the same area, Elk Point, again with hundreds and hundreds of names signed onto it. These people are upset with the pharmacy services.

Two big issues in the Elk Point area: obviously, some of the decisions made by this government aren't going over well there. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I actually have two different tablings today. The first tabling is over 3,700 people, Friends of Michener, who have signed to show that they are not happy with the closure of Michener Centre, and they have also forwarded all of these to Minister Oberle – sorry; the minister of PDD's office. They have also gone as far as to have a total petition of, I believe, over 18,000. So that'll be coming his way.

The second tabling is the two documents I referred to today in my question. The first document is the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta election platform 2012, page 9, where it says, "A new PC government will increase the number of long-term care spaces" not continuing care, "by 1,000 per year." That's very clearly stated in their platform. The second document is the FOIPed copy of Alberta Health Services, which we're required to do because the government doesn't give us any information. We did that, and it is the Alberta Health Services detailed capital submission for seniors' care facilities across Alberta. It gives the zones, and it shows a reduction in long-term care spaces of just under 1,700.

They're all there.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member, and just a cautionary note to you as well that it is not appropriate to refer to ministers by their proper names.

Let us move on to Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today with the requisite number of copies. The first is a letter from Pat Whyte, who is the Newell Community Action Group executive director. She explains in her letter her concerns for the excellent programs that they support through the community access and day programs. I would like to table that.

Also, I would like to table the requisite number of copies of 12 letters I received from clients with the Newell Community Action Group in Brooks. I would strongly urge the minister to read these letters. They're very heartfelt, and they get right to the point.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table 88 postcards of the My Face, My Place campaign asking the minister to reverse the cuts to PDD.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Statement by the Speaker

Page Recognition

The Speaker: Hon. members, if I could have your attention, please, for a special tribute that I wish to do on your behalf. Each year we are served in this Assembly by some very dedicated young people who have qualified to be our pages. The role of a page, as we would all know, is an extremely honourable one and one that these pages take very seriously and deliver to the utmost of their abilities. However, there comes a time when some of them move on, to be replaced by others.

Before I invite the Deputy Speaker to make a presentation, I want to read you a letter, dated today, addressed to me on your behalf from the retiring pages. It reads as follows:

Mr. Speaker,

As Session once again comes to a close, we face the regrettable reality that some of us will not be returning as Pages in the fall. In our capacity as Pages, we have had front-row seats to the legislative process and, we would like to think, have left our own humble footprints in Alberta's history. For this wonderful opportunity, we would like to express our sincerest gratitude.

We would like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, the Table Officers, the Sergeant-at-Arms, the LASS, the lovely ladies in 315 and 412 and all the staff of the Legislative Assembly Office for making our service to the Assembly memorable. We must also thank all of the Members of the Legislative Assembly, without whom, our role in the Chamber would not exist. Additionally, we would like to congratulate both the newly elected Members and you, Mr. Speaker on an admirable first year of service in your new roles.

We entered the Page Programme as ordinary high school students, each with our own preconceived notions about politics.

Hear, hear.

However, we all leave with a broader understanding of the human side of politicians and those who support them. We have come to know real people with real gifts, flaws, and quirks. By observing them, we have had the opportunity to see that it is quite possible for real people to do great things with their lives, and stand as an inspiration for ourselves to aim higher than we might have previously thought possible. Even when nothing else our time here was entertaining; perhaps it is a pity that Question Period is not broadcast during prime time.

For over a century, the laughter and footstep of Pages have crisscrossed through this building, and we truly are honored to have been able to participate in the history of the Alberta Legislature. If every citizen of this province was as informed as we are now, parliamentary democracy in Alberta would certainly be better served. It is now our duty to use our knowledge of the political process to improve society in whatever path we each choose.

Farewell, and don't forget us.

Yours sincerely,

Ellen McClure, Donald Ademaj, James Bonnell, Ann Dang, Claire Edwards, Gabby Peter and Lizzie Winton

Let's give them a round of applause.

And now for our pièce de résistance, a special presentation on our collective behalves by the Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I too want to thank our pages for that wonderful tribute to us.

Hon. members, it is with regret that we say goodbye to seven of our hard-working pages at the end of this session. They are Ellen McClure, the head page, Donald Ademaj, James Bonnell, Ann Dang, Claire Edwards, Gabriella Peter, and Elizabeth Winton. I ask you to join me in recognizing the efforts of our diligent pages, who daily show patience and understanding, and believe me, Mr. Speaker, they do need a lot of patience with our many demands. They carry out their tasks with attention to duty, including some very late nights of work with us, as recent as last night.

On behalf of all members each departing page is given a token of our appreciation. These gifts are from the personal contribution of every member of our Assembly. Along with the gifts are our best wishes. We are honoured to have our pages work with us in the Legislature to serve Albertans.

I now ask our Deputy Chair of Committees to hand a gift to our head page, Ellen McClure, who is representing all the retiring pages. Ellen, in turn, will present each of the rest of the retiring pages with their gifts from us later.

Mr. Speaker, I might want to add that some of them were sobbing as you read that letter. They are genuinely pleased and touched by their service with us, and we are touched by them. Ellen, thank you so much. God bless you.

3:20

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. pages, you will go down in history as the class of 2012-2013, but for us you'll go down as class, period.

What better way to follow, then, with points of order? I can't think of anything better.

On a serious note, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, the leader of the New Democrat opposition, rose on a point of order, so we'll recognize him or someone on his behalf at this time.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising on a point of order in reference to Standing Order 23(h), (i), (j). The comment that was made by the associate minister was clearly intended to create disorder in this House and, quite frankly, was untrue.

First and foremost, I and the members of the Alberta NDP caucus have been having ongoing conversations with organizations, with caregivers, and with people with developmental disabilities for years, Mr. Speaker.

In addition to that, the hon. associate minister made a claim that we were not present at the rally that took place outside, where the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, the Member for Edmonton-Calder, and myself were in attendance at the PDD rally, speaking with many of the participants, many representatives of organizations, many family members, and adults with developmental disabilities themselves. I'll also add that there were members from all the opposition parties at this rally.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask the associate minister to withdraw his incorrect, false, and offensive comments.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there's another point of order on this same point, I believe, from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. Let's hear the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills on this same point. We'll deal with the two points of order together, and then we'll recognize the hon. associate minister.

Mr. Saskiw: Very briefly, for my second point of order, I will withdraw that one. I'd like to just speak to this one here.

Again, I rise today in accordance with Standing Order 23(h), (i), (j). Often in this Legislature we have a different opinion, or we have different interpretations of facts. What the associate minister of PDD did here, though, was make a statement that was completely and utterly untrue. Whether that was deliberate or not, the consequences are the same, and that's what gives rise to this point of order.

His comments were with respect to attendance at rallies with respect to PDD, and I think it's categorically true that members from our caucus – Calgary-Shaw, Medicine Hat, the Leader of the Official Opposition as well as members of other caucuses, I believe, the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview and perhaps others from his caucus – did attend that. What is clear is that we are listening. This is a very serious issue. Cuts to PDD are very, very serious.

One aspect I would like to mention, though, is that there is a precedent in this House that we are not to refer to the absence or presence of a member in this Assembly. Along that same principle, although it's not a hard-and-fast rule, I think this should be applied here, that the member should not be speaking about the absence or presence of an individual at a certain event outside, particularly when it's completely untrue.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I'm somewhat amused that I'm being called on a question of order that something I've said offends sensibilities in the House, creates, in fact, disorder, in part by the hon. member, who interrupted me so much that I had to not deliver an answer today.

Nonetheless, Mr. Speaker, I would point out that I didn't say that the hon. members opposite weren't present at the rally. I said that I did not see them in the crowd talking to individuals, and that is actually the truth. I did not see them. However, I endeavour not to create disorder in this House. I endeavour to uphold its fine traditions. I withdraw any offending remark unreservedly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The associate minister has withdrawn his comments, and it will be noted as such. We'll move on, then.

The last point of order has been withdrawn voluntarily by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills just a few moments ago.

That concludes our Routine for today, including points of order. I think we are now able to move on.

Orders of the Day
Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 26
Assurance for Students Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and move third and final reading of Bill 26, the Assurance for Students Act.

This legislation is necessary to ensure that schoolchildren and their families can count on stability in classrooms across the province. The Assurance for Students Act will allow the education system to put its focus back where it belongs, on the student.

I'm proud that this legislation puts students first, but I am disappointed that it has come to this. Legislation is by no means an ideal way to deal with labour negotiations. However, with 61 of 62 school boards supporting the framework agreement and 60 of 62 ATA locals, representing 95 per cent of Alberta's teachers, we simply cannot let a small minority prevent this agreement from going forward. It's time to do what's right for kids and refocus our efforts on bringing the vision of Inspiring Education to life. Therefore, I hope all members will join me in supporting this extremely important piece of legislation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you, and thank you to the minister for his work on this bill. I spoke to it at length in a previous reading, and I give it our full blessing, from myself and from our caucus. As the Official Opposition Education critic and as a parent we all want to see, you know, what's best in the classroom.

But I do think it's pertinent to touch on an issue from the Alberta School Boards Association. I would like to, if I could, read a letter into the record from the president of the Alberta School Boards Association, which is a public letter now, outlining the frustrations from the 62 elected boards in the province of Alberta and how we got here. This is from Jacquie Hansen.

What I am hearing from most school boards is that they are relieved these torturous labour talks are behind us. As evidenced by the local votes, most school boards decided the promise of four years of labour peace and a clear idea about what teacher salary costs will be for the next four years made this deal acceptable.

I must stress, that even as school boards signed on to this deal, they expressed concerns about the structural changes the deal makes to decision-making processes with regards to teacher assignments, classrooms, schools and jurisdictions. We don't know the details of the role the exceptions committees will play in overseeing principals' and superintendents' local decisions. We know that moving to the 907 hour limit for all teachers will be a costly proposal for some school boards.

As this process winds down, I must say the path these talks took – through all their iterations – is not a journey school boards or our association would willingly follow again. At many junctures – including this proposed legislation – democratic rights were trampled. There was undue intervention in local discussions and school board decisions. Certainly, having the minister of education meet in the final days with school boards to seek reversal of their decisions was most unusual.

We have taken some time to review the legislation and have these observations:

1. First, we are relieved that, with a key exception, Bill 26 reflects the intent and language of the Framework Agreement. This was important because teacher locals and school boards based their decisions about the Framework Agreement on that language. Significant changes in the language of the legislation would have been very problematic.
2. We are deeply concerned the government has excluded school boards, who are the employers, from finalizing a central component of the Framework Agreement: the wording of the Ministerial Order. Through this legislation, the provincial government has given the union – the Alberta Teachers' Association – the ability to "veto" the final wording of this Ministerial Order. School boards – through the ASBA – will not have the same influence on the outcome. We will be "consulted". Therefore, under this legislation, the government will negotiate directly with the union – without the employers – school boards at the table to finalize this important document which outlines teacher working conditions.
3. We have heard a great deal from the minister of education about his dismay that not all teacher locals and not all school boards accepted this deal. And this made Bill 26 necessary for moving forward. The reality is the minister of education himself set the requirement that all 62 school board and all 62 teacher locals ratify this deal. From the outset our association urged the minister not to impose this artificial requirement on such an important decision. Our view is that this put unnecessary pressure on the process and local decision-makers. We had suggested a process whereby boards and teacher locals would "opt-in" to an agreement. To have the minister criticize the process – of his own making – is curious.
4. Finally – and this is something we totally agree with the minister on. We need a new bargaining system in this province. We look forward to working with him on this. In 2003, the Alberta Government's Learning Commission came to the same conclusion – and recommended the government change the bargaining structure.

That was 10 years ago.

No action was taken. In 2005, based on the Learning Commission's recommendation, the Alberta School Boards Association proposed a specific bargaining model to the government... Again no action was taken. In 2008, the ASBA's Fair Bargaining for a Better Future report... also called for a change to the bargaining structure in Alberta. Again no action. I respectfully suggest that the minister of education take a look at these reports using the Learning Commission's 10-year-old document as a starting point.

That letter, again, is from Jacquie Hansen, the president of the Alberta School Boards Association, which represents the 62 elected school boards in this province, the boards that we as members should be consulting with and discussing what's going on in our schools. Many of us do. I would recommend to all of us regardless of what party we sit with that when we leave for our break, we take the time to meet with our school boards, hear what they're learning in our schools and what they're recommending. Clearly, they have some suggestions going forward.

I'd like to end on a positive, Mr. Speaker. With the relationship that I have with the Minister of Education, I can express my views and disagreements with him respectfully. I believe he worked very hard on this deal, and he inherited some of this. I would be willing to work with him in any capacity to work toward a better process in the future. I'm happy for our kids and, as I said, honoured to be the Official Opposition Education critic and see this legislation pass.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief in my comments on this bill. I've not had an opportunity yet to speak to it. Just a few points.

First of all, I along with my colleagues in the NDP caucus will be voting against this bill, and there are several different reasons for that. I want, of course, to make it very clear that that vote is still within the context of our belief that it is important to establish certainty and stability within our K to 12 education sector. The way to establish that certainty and stability is for this government to keep its promise to maintain certainty and stability within the K to 12 education sector.

For instance, there were certain three-year funding commitments made by this government that would have ensured both teachers and school boards were in the position to negotiate a fair agreement that met the needs of both sides. The reason that that became more of a difficulty, of course, was that this government, immediately upon getting elected, broke its promise with respect to K to 12 education funding and immediately threw the whole system into a crisis. This is the product of a fundamental broken promise. That's the first thing, Mr. Speaker.

The second thing about this bill, which is very offensive to me, is that, of course, it is being brought basically as an emergency. We're ramming it through, and we're imposing time limits and closure on this bill. Now, there is no emergency right now, just to be very clear. There's not a work stoppage in place right now. That's normally the context in which the government uses this kind of heavy-handed approach. The emergency that is in place right now is that if we were to simply respect this Assembly and respect the rules of the parliamentary process, the emergency that this government is trying to avoid is that they would be asked to be in the House a bit longer.

We all know how that creates a crisis in their minds because the last thing they appear to want is to be in this Assembly openly and transparently debating in a fulsome way each and every element of their legislative proposals. That apparently is the emergency that has pushed us into this situation, where the government is, I would suggest, misusing the rules of the House to ram through this bill. So just in principle it's really difficult to support such a mechanism and a precedent like this being set.

Now, the third reason why I am concerned about this bill, of course, is that it fundamentally undermines the authority of locally elected bodies and the ability of locally elected bodies to exercise their authority as contemplated under their legislation and under the overall system of legislation that governs K to 12 education.

We have one school board, for instance – granted, it's only one school board, but it's a school board that represents 20 per cent of students in the province – that voted against this. We had the Edmonton public school board, which did in fact vote in favour. By all means, you know, it was a close vote, but it did vote in favour, so the government is certainly entitled to rely on that vote. Nonetheless, they were very reluctant in that choice because they were concerned about how this highlights a structural problem with respect to the delivery of K to 12 education in this province, where the school boards are asked to take the blame for everything that goes wrong but are not given the authority to make decisions about their own funding.

This is sort of a long-standing problem, which really flies in the face of the respect for local democracy and direct democracy and those who get involved in running for school trustee in an effort to reflect the desires of the parents and the children and the families in their electoral districts. This runs against that.

Of course, we know that once you take into account inflation and you take into account the increase in the number of students, effectively our school boards are being asked to wrestle with cuts, so they're trying to wrestle with those at the same time that they're having terms and conditions imposed upon them. It disrespects their authority, and it also puts them into a rather untenable position.

The final reason, Mr. Speaker, that I will be voting against this bill is because it fundamentally assaults the principle of collective bargaining. Now, I appreciate that this government doesn't have a tremendous amount of respect for that and that we have labour legislation in this province that relates to many public-sector workers, which flies in the face of the International Labour Organization's conventions on basic human rights. Indeed, this government and this province have been cited repeatedly by the International Labour Organization, a subsidiary of the United Nations, for their breach of the United Nations convention with respect to the rights of working people by bringing in legislation that negates and rejects the value of collective bargaining. Obviously, when the government legislates an agreement over the objections of a bargaining agent and in this case two bargaining agents, it is disrespecting the fundamental principle around the importance of collective bargaining.

This does actually relate back to the best interests of our children, Mr. Speaker. If our kids are going to thrive, the teachers who work with them day in and day out need to be respected, and they have chosen to be part of a bargaining unit which has the right to collectively bargain on the terms and conditions of employment. Quite frankly, telling teachers that they need to go for the next four years without a pay raise is, in my view, disrespectful to them and to the work that they do.

You know, the minister would like to say that the majority of teachers agreed with this deal. That may well be the case, but here's the thing, Mr. Speaker. The ATA, as is its right, voted on a ratification process. The ratification process that they voted on was one where each local got a say. The ATA itself has put the ratification process into place and has said: this is how we are going to make sure we respect the democratic rights of each of the members that we represent. It requires every local to endorse the agreement. As you know, every local did not endorse this agreement. This flies in the face of the democratic process by which the ATA has established how it will ratify or not ratify. This agreement was not ratified by the ATA by the terms of its own process.

In short, then, this bill represents the tromping over of a number of significant rights and responsibilities of the parties here. This is happening (a) because the government broke its promise on education funding and (b) because this government is in crisis. We're in the Legislature right now, and they don't like to be here. That is an unfortunate abuse of this process, and we cannot support it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, we'll go to the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the leader of the New Democrat opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my first opportunity to speak to Bill 26, Assurance for Students Act. Notwithstanding some of the comments from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona I think there are pressing issues in the education system, and after this length of discussion, debate, and negotiation we do require action. However, there was concern expressed by one of the ATA members with section 2(2), which reads as follows. I hope the minister can give a little clarity before we move to the vote.

- (2) In addition to the modifications referred to in subsection (1), the Minister may, by order, make further modifications to the Framework Agreement with respect to the role of the ASBA under Parts C and E of the Framework Agreement.

This is seen by the association to be quite ambiguous. Can the minister comment on what the intent of this section is, what the implications are, and could he clarify whether or not this could be a means for cutting out the Alberta School Boards Association from further negotiations? This is, I think, a reasonable request since there is some ambiguity in that section.

Otherwise, Mr. Speaker, we will be supporting this bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I want to take the opportunity to answer that question – it's a good question – and maybe throw it back at the member. There are a couple of exceptions to the framework agreement in this legislation, and they relate to the role of the ASBA. There is no intention to change the role of the ASBA or do anything beyond just getting this legislation across the finish line. This is just a logistics piece, just for this agreement, so it won't affect their broader roles. There's no intention to do that. It really has to do with the ability to turn around and get decisions from the ASBA in a timely manner.

The ministerial order was sent to both the ASBA and the ATA some weeks ago, after we helped build it with the three groups. We have approval back from the ATA already. We were not able to get approval back from the ASBA because they need to wait to get approvals from all of their members. Obviously, all of their members didn't approve it. We adjusted the language so that no one would have a veto on this bill going forward. We are going to consult with the ASBA on the MO, but the ATA has the ability to approve it. That's not meant to differentiate between the two in terms of their authority on this. It's just the logistics. The ATA has already approved it, and the ASBA cannot get us approval in time to get this bill through. We don't want to leave them with a veto.

I'm sure that the member would want us to make sure that no one has a veto after this and that there's nothing that's going to hold up the bill any further. That's why there might be an occasion to adjust the role of the ASBA in this if they have difficulty agreeing on who their representatives would be on the exceptions committee. They've proven that they want to listen to their members. Often their members don't entirely agree or come to a unanimous agreement. In the event that that happens again, we will have the ability to just alter their role so that we can make an appointment, someone representing the ASBA on the exceptions committee. But it's very small. It's not intended to injure or affect the role of the ASBA going forward.

The Speaker: Are there others under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, let's go on to the hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition on the main bill, third reading.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to have the opportunity to stand up and speak to Bill 26, the Assurance for Students Act. I want to say a few things just about how this has been done. First of all, the government passed a motion that this was a very urgent matter; therefore, we could shorten the debate and the discussion. Admittedly, it has still been over two days, but the only urgency on the government's part is wanting to get out of here by the weekend and not have to come back next week. I just wanted to say that I thought that that was not a sufficient degree of urgency to invoke that particular standing order.

As well, of course, the government used the same false conception of urgency to impose closure with respect to this bill right off the bat. From that point of view, I think it's distasteful how the government has dealt with this particular piece of legislation, but it's more distasteful to me how they've dealt with our education system and the resulting issues around an agreement with teachers going forward.

The question that I have, Mr. Speaker, is why teachers were put in the position of having to accept a deal that gave them no pay increases for three consecutive years. Why should teachers have to accept no raises when everybody else gets raises, when the cost of living continues to rise? There's no compelling reason in terms of their work why they should have to accept a deal where, given increases in the cost of living over the next three years, they're going to be handed essentially an 8 to 10 per cent reduction in their buying power. That's what this deal really is, a reduction in the salaries of our teachers.

Now, teachers in Alberta are well compensated. Most jobs in Alberta are well compensated compared to the rest of the country. But it gets back to the question of why this deal has now been imposed by the government over the objection of many teachers. My colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona has outlined the fact that the ATA has its own process for ratification, and the deal that was negotiated has, by those terms and conditions, not been ratified. It has failed to be ratified by the ATA, and that's why the government is imposing the deal through legislation, a very bad thing to do in principle and in general, Mr. Speaker.

I want to come back to the question of why teachers have to take an 8 to 10 per cent reduction in their real salaries over the next three years. Why? Well, Mr. Speaker, the reason is that the government has not managed the finances of the province well enough, and they have a resulting shortfall in revenue. They blamed it, of course, on the so-called bitumen bubble, which has been widely, I think, discredited by those who are knowledgeable. But the government's own management now has to be paid for by teachers. That's what this deal really means. They have to take less money because the government can't manage its finances and hasn't planned adequately for the future and hasn't ensured that there are stable revenue sources to pay for the program spending in our province and has depended far too much on volatile royalty revenue from oil and natural gas.

How is that the teachers' fault, Mr. Speaker? How is that the responsibility of teachers, and why should teachers and others in our province have to pay for this government's incompetence? That's the question. That's the question on the minds of many teachers.

Lots of teachers did vote for this deal because they felt they had no choice, but even here in Edmonton, where the deal was ratified, 40 per cent of teachers voted against it. The school board in Calgary voted against it. In other parts of the province the deal has been rejected. Where the deal has been passed even though teachers felt they had no choice, there's always been a sizable number of teachers who are angry about the deal and voted against it, and I think rightly so, Mr. Speaker.

The point that I want to make is that teachers, like others in this province, are expected to take less because this government can't get its financial act together. This government will not reverse the flat tax. This government will not reverse major cuts to corporate income tax. This government will not change its policy of charging some of the lowest royalties in the entire world. So the rest of us have to pay and pay and pay. Mr. Speaker, that's wrong.

I don't think Albertans with developmental disabilities should have to pay. I don't think postsecondary students should have to pay. I don't think people should be laid off in the health care system. I don't think our seniors should have to pay. I think that this government needs to sort out its financial affairs and put the finances of this province on a firm, sustainable footing. Despite many warning and many urgings from us as well as their own people and their own experts, they have refused and failed to do that year after year after year, so teachers have to pay, and that's wrong, Mr. Speaker. Teachers shouldn't have to pay.

That's why we're opposing this bill. It's bad for teachers. We think it's bad for schools. We think it's ultimately bad for students. We think that the bill is absolutely misnamed, called assurance for students.

What we need is the government and the school boards and the teachers to go back to the bargaining table and arrive at a fair and equitable deal for our teachers that ensures that kids get the best-quality education and ensures that teachers don't fall behind increases in the cost of living through no fault of their own. I think it's shameful, Mr. Speaker, that this government expects teachers and others, including people with disabilities and students and health care professionals, to pay the price for its financial incompetence.

I don't think Albertans should accept it. They may feel in many cases that they have no choice, but they are very, very right to be angry about it. They're very right to be angry at this government, which misled them in the election about its intentions, which misled them about its financial situation, and then after the election turned around and attacked the very people who had supported it in its bid to be re-elected. I think it's shameful, Mr. Speaker. I don't think it's acceptable.

For that reason, our caucus is opposed to this legislation because they are asking teachers, students, and others to pay the price of their mistakes, of their errors, and because of the fact that they favour the wealthy and the corporations in this province at the expense of the rest of us. It's a shame, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there other speakers? Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in strong opposition to Bill 26, the Assurance for Students Act, in third reading. Before I launch into the bill, it's important to note that legislation like this passing through the Assembly at breakneck speeds, often in the wee hours of the night, as opposed to giving legislation the proper due process and time that should be allocated for a proper and thorough debate – I mean, that in itself, I think, is the first black eye for this government.

Mr. Speaker, this bill quite simply is awful. It's terrible for a lot of reasons, which I will go through. First and foremost, this bill is a complete and open attack on not just teachers in this province; this is a bill that attacks all working people in Alberta. The fact that you've got a deal that's being imposed via legislation on teachers is an affront to the basic rights of unionized workers in Alberta and their rights to collective bargaining. You know, I can appreciate that the government has been trying to negotiate a deal for two years, but this is not the answer, where if you don't get the result that you're looking for, you turn around and just end up bullying the other side into accepting your terms.

You know, Mr. Speaker, this piece of legislation definitely flies in the face of teachers. On the one hand, the government often talks about how we are the wealthiest jurisdiction in North America, how we are very fortunate with our abundance of natural resources, how our economy is growing, and how things are looking up and looking well for the province, yet because of a mismanagement of funds and a failure to collect revenues through royalties, a progressive tax system to stop the corporate welfare that this government is insistent upon, it's professionals like teachers who have to bear the burden and pay the cost.

Mr. Speaker, I mean, it's important to know that this isn't just about teachers. I find it quite offensive, actually, when the minister stands up and says: this is for students, and students are first. To be honest, I think this bill is more like: students first over the cliff. If the government respected students and parents and families and wanted to ensure that they had the best quality of education and access to that education, then they would put their money where their mouth is.

When we have, you know, class sizes that are going to be growing and that continue to grow, Albertans are tired of this government saying one thing out of one side of their mouth and then another out of the other, with their actions altogether quite opposite. Class sizes are continuing to rise. With the cuts that this government has imposed and is imposing on education and our education system, there is going to be a rise in class sizes.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, it's a compounded effect. Just the other day I was at one of my schools in northeast Edmonton, and their special-needs teachers are losing their positions as of June of this year, and they will not be back in the fall. I can't tell you what a disadvantage that's going to place on not only students with special needs; we're talking about students where English may be their second language or third language. We're talking about students who need additional help and supports, who are now going to be thrown into a classroom with 25 to 35 other students and one teacher trying to juggle everything that teachers have to do in a classroom today.

It's going to have far-reaching effects. That's another issue that I have with this bill and with many government decisions, their lack of long-term vision and planning. For example, jamming too many students into a classroom with not enough supports is going to have an impact on those students for the rest of their lives. Again, to this government, in their mind, it's probably penny wise but pound foolish as far as the long-term well-being of students, parents, and families.

Mr. Speaker, another reason that the Alberta NDP opposes this bill is that it undermines the authority of locally elected school boards. You've got an example here where there were some school boards that voted against this deal, and as opposed to the government respecting their wishes and decisions, they just decide to bring forward legislation and railroad or hammer all teachers everywhere.

Now, the minister will love to get up and wax about how the majority of school boards have accepted this offer. You know, the devil is in the details, and what we don't know and probably won't know is how exactly the minister and this government convinced some of the school boards that this was their best option.

It's clear, Mr. Speaker, that there were boards that initially voted against this deal, so the response from the government is: we'll have another vote just in case you change your mind, in case you didn't quite vote the way that you really wanted to.

Meanwhile meetings were going on behind closed doors in the backroom. We don't know what was said or what wasn't said or what was implied, but we do know that this government has a history of at times bullying. What we don't know is if school boards were put into that position. This PC government doesn't approve or like the way they voted, so they decide to have a second vote, where suddenly some boards did come onboard.

Mr. Speaker, an important point is that not all the boards voted in favour of this deal. It's concerning that the response to the deal is for the government to then bring in legislation and force it upon all teachers and professionals within this province. I fail to see how this is an emergency. The government, again, tries to paint the picture that we had to ram through this piece of legislation. I completely disagree. There are many teachers that I've spoken with who feel that this deal is unfair and awful. I find it quite hypocritical that the government offers some deals for some professionals and offers the teachers 0, 0, 0 and a meagre amount in the end. Really, when we look at the cost of living, inflation, and how it's rising year to year, by the time this deal comes to an end, it really will be a 10 per cent cut to teachers, which is completely unacceptable.

Mr. Speaker, this is a bad deal for teachers. This is a bad deal for Albertans. This sets a very harmful precedent that, again, this government has no concerns, no qualms about riding roughshod over the collective bargaining rights of our professional organizations of Alberta workers. Quite honestly, that's just wrong. The government should have done the right thing, respected the decision by boards. It's irrelevant if it's 90 per cent of school boards and ATA locals or if it's 1 per cent. The point is that it was a deal that was not accepted by all of those that are going to be affected, and they should have gone back to the bargaining table.

Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that our teachers and our students, our children and our families should not have to bear the burden of the fiscal mismanagement of this government, which is clear to all Albertans. Again, when we look at our economy today and we look at the state of the province and the fact that the government has passed this austerity cuts budget, Albertans are shaking their heads in disbelief and, quite honestly, are fearful of the future, of when the province does dip into a recession, of what that budget is going to look like if they're facing cuts today, when Alberta is in a period of growth.

Clearly, that illustrates there's been a party in power for too long that no longer knows how to manage resources or ensure that we are taking care of our students, our seniors, our most vulnerable Albertans. They shouldn't have to pay the price for the mistakes, failed planning, and poor management that this government continues to demonstrate.

Mr. Speaker, for these reasons, I am vehemently opposed to Bill 26. I think it's offensive to all working people, especially to professionals, that put their heart and soul into their careers and their jobs to ensure that our children and students are given the best and most opportunities that they can. The reality is that they need the resources to do their job and to do their job well. It puts them in a very, very awkward and binding position when you pull out the resources from under them, when you knock the supports out from under them, and when you don't value them by, first of all, respecting their rights and, second of all, by valuing them through the salaries and benefits that they earn. You know, money is only one indicator of value in our society. However, you know, this clearly shows that this PC government does not value the work that teachers and support workers do in this province.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I cannot support this bill and will ask all members to vote this bill down. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing no one under 29(2)(a), other speakers?

Bill 22

Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I start on the bill, I'd ask for consent that we go to one-minute bells for the rest of the afternoon.

The Speaker: Hon. members, unanimous consent has been requested to reduce the division time between the ringing of the bells to one minute, which means that the bells will ring for one minute, there will be silence for one minute, and then they will ring again for one minute, so it's essentially a three-minute interval. Does anyone oppose that particular request?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and move third reading of Bill 22, the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act. Last night, as I was sitting on the couch at about 3 in the morning contemplating life in general, realizing all the doors I knocked on to have this wonderful job, I was thinking about the bill. You know, I've spent my whole life in labour relations. While the opposition talks about the unions, I'm a proud union member, have been and always will be, just for the record. I'm a member of the United Mine Workers of America. Our motto was: tough enough to chew nails, stupid enough to want to.

I've been involved in a number of change processes and dealt with people, worked for people, you know, cared about people's interests. Mr. Speaker, lots of times when you do things, it's on intuition, or it's a gut reaction. Your gut says that it's the right thing to do. In the year that I've been in this ministry and the year that I've spent out in the landscape talking to First Nations, talking to industry, talking to other stakeholders, I can honestly say that this is the right thing to do. I've thought about this. We had a robust discussion in second reading. We had a robust discussion in Committee of the Whole.

When I look at what's going on out in the landscape and I look at the challenge that First Nations people face in this province, this bill will bring balance to the consultation process and provide First Nations the adequacy that they so need and so deserve to do a proper consultation when we talk about treaty rights and we talk about traditional land use. Mr. Speaker, our focus is on a consultation policy that respects First Nations treaty rights and provides them an opportunity to be more engaged in the consultation process for their benefit and for the benefit of all Albertans.

Bill 22 supports the consultation process by allowing legislation to create a mandatory levy that would help First Nations participate in meaningful consultation. The idea for the levy came up during discussions with First Nations and industry as part of the development of the consultation policy. Revenues from the levy would only be used to support Alberta's consultation initiative. This is enabling legislation, Mr. Speaker – and that's all it is – which will allow us to develop regulations to enact the levy. First Nations and industry will be involved in the creation of those regulations. The idea of supporting increased First Nation consultation capacity through a levy has been discussed extensively with First Nations and industry over the last little while. Both First Nations and industry have told us that, in their view, the current capacity funding levels from Alberta are inadequate to enable First Nations to carry out their consultation obligations.

Mr. Speaker, the concept of the industry levy was first introduced in October 2012 in a discussion paper on First Nations consultation. I invited all Alberta chiefs to meet on the discussion paper on November 19, 2012, and received written feedback from them on December 15. On February 1, 2013, I met with chiefs, industry, and municipalities to provide a summary of what we heard from the meetings and written feedback and outlined changes that Alberta plans to make based on that feedback. The responses we received from First Nations and the stakeholders on this along with other concepts introduced in the discussion paper guided the development of Bill 22.

Senior ministry staff met with professional staff of First Nations and stakeholders on April 18, 19, and 22, 2013. I hosted leadership meetings with First Nations and stakeholders on April 29 and 30, 2013, where the industry levy was further discussed. At these meetings I indicated that enabling legislation will be needed for the increased capacity funding to become a reality.

At the multiparty leadership meetings I committed the government of Alberta to developing the details of the size of the levy fund, the manner in which the funding is distributed, and the manner in which the levy is assigned through a formal process involving both First Nations and industry. Whatever the final amount of the levy, it will be based on providing First Nations with a reasonable level of capacity to assist them to engage in the consultation process.

Mr. Speaker, I agree that there is still a need for substantial engagement with First Nations and stakeholders on a number of matters related to consultation, including the development of the proposed consultation office, the industry levy, and the consultation process matrix. However, this initiative is the result of years of dialogue and information exchange between the government of Alberta, First Nations, and affected stakeholders, extending all the way back to the development and implementation of a 2005 policy and subsequent guidelines. As a matter of fact, the previous three ministers before me have all been involved in developing a new consultation policy.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is trying to achieve a system that supports First Nations people and sustains communities. This consultation process is one initiative aimed to support those efforts. This is innovative, groundbreaking legislation that puts Alberta at the forefront of First Nations consultation in Canada.

Saying that, Mr. Speaker, I would ask all members to support this legislation, and let's move forward and make sure that we have a proper consultation process in place and the capacity to make sure that First Nations can do a proper job in dealing with industry and stakeholders on this landscape.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak against Bill 22, the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, not because I don't support the intent of what the minister is trying to do. I respect that the minister means well and is trying to move the relationship with industry and First Nations and the provincial government to a different level moving forward.

I have watched with interest over the last number of years as the government has forged new relationships with aboriginal communities on education in particular and found ways to attempt to bring aboriginal communities into greater involvement in the Alberta economy. I think that the government has done some good work in that regard. I know that the previous employment and immigration ministry was one where they looked at ways in which we could continue to engage traditionally underrepresented communities in the broader economy, and aboriginal communities were one community that was identified.

As I've travelled the province, the range of development that we do see on First Nations has been shocking to me. Some are quite well developed. Some have their own businesses. Some have active engagement and employment in aboriginal businesses. On others the conditions, I think, would be described as poverty level. I think we all know that, so I understand what the government and the minister are attempting to do.

That being said, I don't think that you start into a new relationship with our aboriginal peoples or First Nations in particular on a consultation process that doesn't include adequate consultation – and I will talk about that in a minute – because while I appreciate that the minister is meeting with many First Nations, he is not talking with them in the way that they wanted to be engaged on this particular bill. On this particular bill what they were asking for was a direct conversation on the contents of the bill itself. That is the kind of consultation that they were looking for.

The government does this a lot. They think that because they have high-level discussions about matters of principle, about what ought to be done, that replaces genuine consultation on the actual detail and legal clauses in a bill after it's been introduced. I know the minister understands the difference between the two. I know this because he took such a different approach with the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013. He took a very different approach in making sure he had buy-in from the members of those settlements and making sure that there was absolute buy-in on every word that was put into that legislation, to the point that he was unwilling to make even a single wording change when that came through.

I know he knows that there is a difference between talking on a high level about a concept versus doing a clause-by-clause agreement and buy-in with legal representatives from every community to make sure that they're onboard. So I don't accept that the minister actually did that in this case, and I think it's part of the reason why he is facing such a backlash on this bill.

I think the broader problem that we have is that this goes against the commitment that the Premier had made about having a different process to approve legislation. Before the Premier was Premier, she seemed to understand that rushing bills through the different stages so quickly was leading to bad and sloppy legislation, was leading to an absence of proper and thorough stakeholder consultation, and I had anticipated that we would see a different type of legislative session this time around. Instead, I have to say, it seems that it's actually far worse.

Now, I understand that we can't get unanimous stakeholder buy-in on virtually any issue, and I wouldn't have expected the minister necessarily to get unanimous buy-in, but it would have been nice if he had introduced one stakeholder in the Legislature who agreed with the approach that he was taking in this legislation. We introduced nearly 50 people in the Legislature who didn't.

We introduced press releases from Treaty 8. We introduced letters from chiefs of Treaty 6 and Treaty 7 indicating their serious reservations with the bill. If the minister had even just introduced a handful of stakeholders so that we could have some confidence that anyone in any aboriginal band supported the position that he was taking, we might be able to acknowledge that he was making these decisions from a basis of informed consent. Unfortunately, we did not see one – not one – stakeholder come and be introduced in the Legislature who supported the government's bill. I think that's important when you're talking about consultation with aboriginals.

Forcing a bill through, or ramming it through, as others have said, is not relationship-building. If I've learned anything in my time as aboriginal critic, it's the absolute, crucial nature of the relationship in being able to build trust between First Nations and the provincial government. The relationship is key. Once you have the relationship and you've established trust, then you can move forward with some of those difficult negotiations. I think that the minister, unfortunately, has set his relationship back. I think he may have. I take him at his word that he's developed some very good relationships in First Nations communities, but I don't know why he would be willing to sacrifice that rather than take the steps to do it right. It's counterproductive to pass this legislation today.

We are trying to help the minister. We have tried at every stage since the introduction of this act to slow it down and to bring forward amendments that would improve the bill. I think it's worth looking at just how quickly this legislation has moved through the process. Now, I can't say with certainty that this is the fastest movement of a bill through its various readings. I think Bill 26 might get that honour, but it has got to be a close second. We had it read into the record last Wednesday, first reading. Second reading we began on Thursday, so just 24 hours later, and carried over to Monday evening. Committee of the Whole, Tuesday night: we were all here until 1 o'clock in the morning. Here we are on third reading on Wednesday, less than a week after seeing this legislation for the first time.

It is now going to be the law of the land, fundamentally changing the relationship that the province has with our First Nations communities, serving the Crown in all of the relationships that our aboriginal communities have with industry. It's a phenomenally intrusive piece of legislation to have just been sprung on everybody, with essentially six days' worth of review. The government was so committed to passing this without due diligence and proper consultation that they served notice that they would be prepared to invoke closure if the Committee of the Whole process went on too long. I think that that also sends a pretty bad message to our First Nations communities, who we're trying so hard to build a new relationship with.

As I say, we did try to help. We put forward at different stages different ways that we could have slowed this bill down. We suggested a referral motion so that we could have put the bill forward to the Resource Stewardship Committee. They could have gone through and had the consultation over the summer with industry and with First Nations so that we could come back with a better bill in the fall when we return to session.

When that failed, we proposed a hoist, which would have done the same thing. Bringing this bill back after six months of review, in the middle of November, would have been another opportunity for the minister to take the time to take this bill out, consult with First Nations and industry, and get it right.

Then, of course, we went through the committee process last evening. Several of us were here, as the minister was as well, until quite late in the morning getting through those amendments. The amendments that I put forward were aimed at addressing the kinds of issues that the minister is going to hear now that he's going to go out on his after-the-fact consultation once this bill becomes law. The nature of the amendments that I brought forward had come directly from my consultations with First Nations and their legal counsel over the four or five days that we had to be able to try to put together a response to a bill that we had never seen before. The minister certainly didn't consult with the opposition other than the day before the legislation was introduced, so I was just as surprised by the contents of it as were many of our First Nations communities.

That being said, we attempted to do our due diligence so that we could bring those concerns forward. We proposed amendments that would have put more structure on the annual report to include a list of projects that were funded out of the fund. We would have turned the fund into a trust by eliminating one of the sections so that the dollars that were collected had to be held for the purposes for which they were collected and couldn't be used as general revenues at some future point. We attempted, along with supporting a motion by the NDP opposition, to build in a process to establish the levy with First Nations consultation so that the minister doesn't have the latitude to do that unilaterally. We attempted to put forward another amendment to mandate First Nations and industry consultation to be able to establish that levy.

We've heard both sides. We've heard that First Nations are concerned that what the government is actually trying to do is cut in half the amount of compensation they get for aboriginal consultation. We've also heard from industry that they're concerned that not only are they going to have to pay the same amount of consultation they've always paid but that this levy is going to be in addition to that. We believe that it was vitally important for us to put in the letter of the legislation an obligation on the minister to consult with First Nations and with industry.

We would have put forward a change to one of the sections that would have ensured that there was an appeal process. The fact that there's a section in there that says that none of the decisions are subject to appeal, that the decisions are final – we think that wouldn't stand up in court. Removing that section would allow for some certainty that there would be an appeal to the Court of Appeal.

The three provisions that we put forward that we felt the minister really missed out on passing – he really could have improved the legislation and really addressed the concerns that were brought forward by Treaties 6, 7, and 8 if he had accepted our amendments to change one of the powers he has given himself to define what an aboriginal group or organization would be. We tried to argue that he should resort to the definitions that are in the Indian Act and the Canadian Constitution. That one failed.

We also attempted to address the issue under section 8 of the act, which provides for a broad range of information collection, including the agreements that aboriginal communities sign with industry, on the grounds that have been raised again and again, that it is a discriminatory clause. Nonaboriginal landowners don't have to disclose their agreement, yet now we have legislation before us in third reading, that we will be passing into law, that would enshrine discrimination, enshrine a different treatment of First Nations and aboriginal communities in their agreements with energy companies that is not defined for anybody else. That, I think, was the biggest red flag for the First Nations communities we spoke with.

I think that we did attempt in the last amendment I put forward to address the broader issue of the powers that the minister has given himself to pass regulations on a whole range of different issues. It's fine to do that as long as there's an obligation to go back to First Nations to ensure that they were consulted in a meaningful way on any changes or additions to regulation or any changes or amendments to the legislation. I'm still not sure why the minister wouldn't have accepted this amendment because it's language that is already in the Metis Settlements Act.

It's a practice that the government has already taken in dealing with Métis nations. Any change to a regulation requires a 45-day notification period, requires written notice and a written response and due consideration on the part of the minister before passing it into law. It seems to me that the best way to start out with a new relationship with First Nations is to model it after a successful relationship with Métis. I don't know why the government chose not to pass that amendment and failed to do that. I think it would have actually gone a long way towards getting buy-in on the part of the communities.

I guess the worry that I see from our First Nations members is that they look at what the government has done in this legislation – many of them were here in the gallery listening to hours and hours of debate – and they've got to be scratching their head wondering: well, the minister says he's going to consult with us, but why is it that at every single opportunity to affirm that through the opposition amendments that were put forward, he denied every single opportunity to write it into the legislation, to obligate his ministry to do that? That's the question I think our First Nations friends are asking themselves. I think that the minister has set himself up for failure, quite frankly, with such an ambitious project to change our entire consultation process around resource development. Such a major misstep right out of the gate is going to just make it that much more difficult.

I do want to alert the minister to a couple of studies, that I hope he will read over the summer break. They just came out. They're by the Macdonald-Laurier Institute, and they're part of their series on Aboriginal Canada and the Natural Resource Economy. They just came out this week. The first one is called New Beginnings: How Canada's Natural Resource Wealth Could Re-shape Relations with Aboriginal People. It's by Ken Coates and Brian Lee Crowley. There is also Canada and the First Nations: Cooperation or Conflict? That's by Douglas Bland.

Now, I haven't had a chance to read both of these studies. It would've been nice to have been able to read them before we passed this major piece of legislation, but being that there are going to be additional amendments and additional legislation coming forward along these lines, I think it's worth it for the minister and anyone else who will be debating and considering this bill to read the work that has been done by these academics.

Let me give you the Coles Notes of what it is they would observe in the new relationship that is beginning to form across the entire country in a government-to-government relationship with First Nations. One of the things they point out is that there is this perception that aboriginal communities and many individuals are unalterably opposed to resource development in their traditional territories, but a large number, they say, probably a majority, are open to resource development provided that they are involved from the outset in the decision-making processes and the development processes on mutually acceptable terms. So there is a win here for the government. There's a win here for industry and First Nations.

My experience in travelling and meeting with many chiefs has been that the number one issue that they're concerned about is ensuring that their people have access to education and their people have access to training and their people have access to opportunity in the form of jobs, not only jobs at companies but also jobs that they might create for themselves as entrepreneurs.

That being said, if we get the relationship right – this is again being written by Ken Coates and Brian Lee Crowley – natural resource wealth can unlock a brilliant future for aboriginal and nonaboriginal Canadians together. Given their newly recognized legal and political power and authority, however, aboriginal people can and will be a powerful obstacle to any development that does not respect their interests, their histories, and their cultures.

I think the minister needs to take this under advisement. The fact of how this bill came forward, the fact that we have so many First Nations now activated and concerned I think is a setback to what the minister has aspired to do in the province. I think it's a setback for our industry here.

I am going to do my best to continue to travel and consult around the province. In fact, the minister in some ways has made my job a little bit easier. Ever since the bill was introduced and we started speaking on it, my office has been flooded with invitations for me to come and visit First Nations so that I can hear about their concerns on this and other issues. I suppose I should be grateful that he's angered the First Nations so much that they are reaching out to me so that I can be a voice for their concerns in the Legislature. I take that role seriously as Aboriginal Relations critic, and I intend to do that on this and other issues.

That being said, I would have preferred to be able to stand here today and speak in support of this bill. I wish I'd had confidence that the minister had gone through the same process of due diligence that he had on the previous piece of legislation. I wish I'd been receiving calls and e-mails and a flood of faxes from aboriginal communities and chiefs that were in support of the bill, but I'm sorry to report that that has not been the case. In fact, it's been the exact opposite.

I think there is still an opportunity for the minister to do the right thing today. I believe the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is going to give them one last chance through a hoist motion to push this off for another six months to do the proper due diligence, to do the proper consultation. I hope that the minister takes the opposition up on this one last opportunity to get it right.

I know what I'm going to be doing this summer. I do have some concerns about what might happen over the summer if First Nations communities do feel like this bill has in some way abridged or violated the traditional aboriginal rights that are acknowledged under the Constitution. I certainly wouldn't want to see the entire effort that the minister is embarking on derail because a piece of sloppy legislation was passed that overreaches the authority of the provincial government and doesn't have buy-in from the key stakeholder in it. That's why if it does end up going to a vote, I will certainly be voting against it.

But when the hoist motion comes forward, I would encourage hon. members, including the government and the minister, to vote in favour of that so that we can take the time to get this bill right.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, we've had a lot of debate on this issue and some emotional responses, especially from the subjects of this bill, which is intended to benefit First Nations.

On the surface it has some plausible and some positive dimensions to it. Certainly, consultations with First Nations have been fraught with challenges, not only from the point of view of funding appropriate resources so that First Nations can do their due diligence as they would like to and have the expertise and the resources to do so but also in the context of the complexity of many development projects that would benefit from expert advice and an opportunity for First Nations to examine very clearly the risks and benefits of various development projects and how they might affect not only their livelihoods but their environment, any social impacts, any employment opportunities, any resource-sharing agreements that are possible and that may be missed without appropriate resources to do the reviews and really carefully examine what is in the best interests of the First Nations community in a particular case.

Having said that, it was no little surprise to me to see in some aspects of this bill both some discrimination with respect to disclosure and some conflict over the lack of any due process, I guess I would say, based on what the First Nations, almost to a band, have said is the case. It may be that at some level this government feels they have consulted, that they have discussed these issues. But there is a critical dimension of, I guess, consultation that perhaps this government hasn't learned yet, and that is to examine an implementation process before they implement such that those being impacted can raise legitimate points of concerns, raise alarms, and iron those out to the extent possible.

I mean, these are fairly major considerations when First Nations are able to say, "This clearly violates basic, consistent human rights," to require disclosure, for example, when that disclosure isn't required elsewhere. It's a fairly basic decision to get through, that there's no appeal to the minister's decision. It's a fairly basic discussion to have that some elements of this bill will damage the relationship between First Nations and industry, let alone the relationship between First Nations and government.

I was quite shocked, as I think many were, that the strength of the reaction to this was such that it makes it impossible for us to feel that this will be a positive, constructive, long-term, sustainable relationship that we're setting off on here. I hope the minister will consider the possibility that a delay of some kind, further negotiations, anything that we can do to address at least those key concerns, would serve the interests of all of us as Albertans, First Nations, certainly, and this government in its attempts, I think sincere attempts, to build constructive relationships with First Nations.

I see trouble on the horizon, and I think this could be a critical piece for First Nations in Alberta, in particular right after the federal omnibus bills have offended so many across the country. This could be a critical turning point for more unrest in our province, more justification, I guess I would say, for actions, either legal or otherwise, among First Nations communities that this is heavy handed and that this is paternalistic and that this is not respecting their rights, particularly as Nations.

The minister is a reasonable man. I think and I hope that he will take this under advisement and look at any possible opportunity to delay the passage of this bill. By all means, bring it forward again in a different form in the fall after we've had a little more time, a little more consultation with First Nations. This could be a saving grace for both the government and First Nations if we do our due diligence and take a step back. I think there's a lot of evidence that we are going to set back relations with First Nations many years, and I don't think any of us want to do that.

I guess the question for the minister is whether, having put so much effort and so much blood, sweat, and perhaps tears into this, we pause for a bit and ensure that we have the best bill possible, that we have the trust of First Nations, that we have the best opportunity for an ongoing, sustainable relationship that's seen to be not only on paper but as experienced by First Nations to be respectful of due process. I gather from virtually every leadership that we've heard from that it hasn't been experienced in that way.

I cannot support the bill. I do feel that we should reconsider the question again of delaying, referring, consulting further on the bill, and not in any partisan way but in the best interests of our First Nations people primarily.

With that, I'll take my seat, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is now available.

Seeing no one under that section, do we have any other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is my last opportunity to speak to Bill 22 in this House, a bill which exemplifies how out of touch this PC government is, a bill that will and has destroyed almost all trust between First Nations governments and this minister. You know, I don't understand how the minister can lose the confidence of all First Nations and councils within our province yet still retain the confidence of this Premier. The minister's job is to foster strong government-to-government relationships based on mutual trust and the honour of the Crown. This bill does the opposite of that on both accounts.

Before I get into specifics, Mr. Speaker, I just want to acknowledge, first of all, that our Legislative Assembly sits on Treaty 6 ground.

There are, as we speak, more letters that are coming in and submissions from different First Nations on their opposition to Bill 22. I mean, I've been very public as have the Alberta NDP in our calls for this bill to be completely withdrawn. You know, the only solution that is going to satisfy the Alberta NDP and most First Nations from treaties 6, 7, and 8 is if this bill is taken off the Order Paper and completely thrown out.

Mr. Speaker, it's interesting that Bill 22 is only seven pages long yet is completely riddled with problems. Almost every section is unsupportable. Even in the preamble the government presents a diminished view of the treaty and aboriginal rights, rights which need to be clarified, that were not extinguished by the signing of the treaties. Instead, they're protected by the treaties and should be protected by the honour of the Crown.

Section 1(1) defines First Nations, Mr. Speaker, with the reference to the Indian Act, which many First Nations find offensive. It also does not accommodate the First Nations who aren't listed under that and who have reserve lands within the province.

Subsection (2) prohibits the creating of a trust in favour of a First Nation, and this is utterly ridiculous. Under section 26(3) of the Interpretation Act singular meanings also imply plural meanings. Therefore, the government is expressly saying that this fund will not be used for the exclusive benefit of all First Nations and aboriginal groups. If the intention of this act and this aboriginal consultation levy is to secure funds to increase the capacity for First Nations to participate in consultation, then all of those monies should be exclusively for that use, Mr. Speaker.

Section 3 tells us that the consultation levy will be decided behind closed doors, in the secrecy of cabinet confidentiality. It will not be determined through negotiations with the very people that it directly affects.

Section 4 tells us by omission that administrative penalties and outstanding interest charges on unpaid levies will not go back into the levy fund to support First Nations capacity building but could in fact go into government general revenues and be spent frivolously.

Section 8 is extremely offensive. According to legal counsel for Treaty 6 this section should be removed entirely. It's unnecessary in terms of accountability, as I spelled out in second reading and during many of the late-night debates of Committee of the Whole, and it imposes information-sharing requirements upon aboriginal peoples that, again, are not imposed on nonaboriginal peoples. Again, all members of this House should be equally offended by this. You've got one set of rules for one group of people based on race, and you've got another set of rules for other people.

Again, an example that I've said a few times, Mr. Speaker, is that if this type of bill was forced upon landowners, they would balk at it, that they must disclose their private agreements between industry and themselves. So how this is possibly included in a bill that forces aboriginal peoples to disclose is ridiculous. It's also in violation of the UN declaration on indigenous rights, and according to some First Nations they feel this is in violation of the Constitution and of the Canadian Charter. You know, it's kind of ironic because it's the kind of clause or section that human rights lawyers should know and should be aware of and should be opposed to. I'll leave it at that.

Section 9 is a blank cheque to the minister to do whatever he wants because the decisions are final – he has total power and complete authority – and are not subject to review. Last time I checked, we still lived in a democracy, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's antidemocratic, and it's unacceptable.

Section 10 is another example of a blank cheque that this bill will give to cabinet and reserves the powers, including the amount of the levy. Again, we're debating a bill that is supposed to garner resources to help facilitate an increased capacity for First Nations to consult, yet the amounts that will be levied are not included in the very bill that this government would like this Assembly to pass. That makes absolutely no sense to me, Mr. Speaker.

Furthermore, some of those that are in industry already do provide some financial assistance to certain First Nations bands to help with their capacity to consult.

That figure, given to me by the minister himself, was somewhere around $150 million per year. The amount that the government is intending to levy is somewhere around $70 million. Although the levy act has the intention of providing resources for First Nations to increase their capacity to consult on projects, it's actually going to be or likely to be far less than what is currently going to some of the First Nations around the province, which is ridiculous.

Mr. Speaker, one of those blank cheques that cabinet is going to get, not only the amount of the levy but how it's going to be collected, how the grants are going to be made, whether or not there will even be administrative penalties, raises the point that there is no enforcement mechanism in this piece of legislation. If a proponent refuses to pay a levy or decides not to pay a levy, there might not be any consequences. As well, cabinet reserves the right to exempt any proponent or industry or an entire class of proponents from paying the levy. To me, that's a giant loophole, where this PC government gets to choose which proponents or companies pay the levies and which do not, which does not sound like it's a very fair or equitable system at all.

Mr. Speaker, we have no assurances whatsoever in this bill as it is currently written that consultation funding, like I'd said, will not decrease, which poses quite a significant problem, considering that the minister is touting how beneficial this bill will be.

Mr. Speaker, over the past week we've seen a massive public outcry from different First Nations across the province, from all three treaties. As soon as Bill 22 was tabled, Treaty 8 expressed its shock and dismay. They told us that the bill was never mentioned at their ongoing meetings, including a meeting on May 3, 2013, with the minister.

Grand Chief Roland Twinn had written in a letter, that's already been tabled to the Assembly over the last few days, that they oppose the new legislation because there was no meaningful and proper consultation. They view it as a continuation of the paternalistic attitude that this government has toward First Nations and that they've struggled against. Treaty 8 feels that this legislation is more likely to hinder than to help, and the minister's complete power that is granted to him under this bill is an alarming, authoritarian stance that denies the principles of justice, fairness, and equality.

Treaty 6, Mr. Speaker, echoed these concerns, saying that legislation came equally as a shock to them. In a letter signed by Grand Chief Craig Makinaw, which, again, was tabled in this House, he wrote that at a meeting with the chiefs of Treaty 6 on May 3 there was zero indication that any levy would be placed into law, nor was it mentioned that that law would arrive five days later. In this respect, many of the chiefs of Treaty 6 feel that the Alberta government is moving ahead on their own agenda and ignoring the recommendations and the voices of First Nations peoples in Alberta. The grand chief had said in that letter: why trust Alberta now? First Nations will reject and resist this policy.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is deeply flawed, and the problems are quite substantive. Before I go through those, I just want to mention as well that a couple of letters that have gone out recently from the Onion Lake Cree Nation, by Chief Wallace Fox, talk about and mention how there's been no meaningful consultation that has taken place with the Onion Lake Cree Nation on this proposed legislation.

There are a couple of documents that they have made public, Mr. Speaker, and I strongly urge the minister to read these documents if he hasn't yet. The concerns that Onion Lake Cree Nation have are that they've not been considered as equal partners, and they ask, "Where is the meaningful mechanism to reconcile outstanding Treaty obligations and the Honour of the Crown?" They comment on the matrix that this government has developed and how they have their own protocols and processes on consultation and how, with several of the treaties, they have put forward consultation papers, their own consultation policy, if you will, that has been continually ignored and rejected by this government.

I'll read this one line from the letter, that I'll have to wait until our next day to table, Mr. Speaker. "The Onion Lake Cree Nation strongly opposes the perceived jurisdiction that the province of Alberta and the State of Canada has over lands and resources in our Treaty and Traditional Territories."

Mr. Speaker, I'll talk about at least three of the fundamental problems with the process that led to this bill, and part of the major thrust of my opposition to this bill is the process by which this bill was written. First of all, democracy demands that when legislation is being drafted and considered, the people who will be directly affected should have the adequate opportunity to be consulted, to provide feedback, to have input on legislation that will directly affect those people. Responsible government should also be responsive government. In this session the Premier has shown that she is not responsive to First Nations or to students or to seniors or to persons with developmental disabilities, and she's refused to hear the call of these people, of these groups, and of the opposition to rethink her budget.

Secondly, aboriginal relations, Mr. Speaker, involve government-to-government relations. First Nations are not subordinate to the minister nor to any government. They are equal partners and should be treated in that fashion. By failing to consult with First Nation chiefs and councils, the minister has really violated the protocol agreement and imperilled the relationship between the government of Alberta and First Nations.

As the minister sits down to renew the protocol agreement . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would be very pleased to hear what the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview thinks should happen when the minister sits down to deal with the protocol.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. To answer that question, first of all, the minister needs to engage in meaningful consultation with the various First Nations and to treat them as equals and to have more than just meetings or discussions.

Further to that, the different treaties and several First Nations have put forward year after year, going back to, I'm sure, long before 2006 – I know that there are letters from Treaty 6 – what they would like included in consultation, their idea of how consultation should unfold. In conversations with Treaty 6 I know that their proposals have been continuously rejected by this government.

Mr. Speaker, you know, another reason why this bill should be completely withdrawn is that I and other members of this Assembly have made and proposed amendments in Committee of the Whole that were done in consultation with First Nations that this PC government chose to reject and voted down.

I called specifically for ensuring that the consultation levy fund is large enough to cover all costs associated with consultation as well as capacity building. I called for a firm statement that the levy funds will never be considered accommodation or compensation for infringements upon treaty rights. I called for negotiations between First Nations and the government to determine the amount of the levy as opposed to being unilaterally decided by this PC government. I called for the removal of the clause exempting proponents from paying the levy, and I supported other good amendments that were brought forward by other members of this House.

Mr. Speaker, in summary, I strongly urge all members of the Assembly to oppose this bill in its third reading as many Albertans, many First Nations representatives and leaders have very vocally opposed this bill in its entirety. This bill goes against the will of the very people that it was written to help. If we want to respect First Nations, if we want to respect the will of the First Nations leaders, chiefs, and grand chiefs, then this bill should not see the light of day. It should not pass through third reading. It is our responsibility to listen to and respect the voices of those we are elected to represent.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, anyone else under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, then let us move on. Are there any other speakers? Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Much to everyone's disbelief, I will attempt to be brief on this issue. [interjections] I will try. We'll see how it goes. I'll just take a look at my watch here.

I want to begin by thanking the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview for his very detailed consideration and outline of the elements of this piece of legislation with which we have great difficulty, so I won't bother to repeat them on a clause-by-clause basis.

I think that, fundamentally, the reason that many members or all members, I suspect, of the opposition are voting against this bill goes to one critical issue, and that is that the very people with whom the government hopes to consult through the work being done by this bill do not agree with the bill. You know, we're going to embark on a whole process for coming up with a consultation policy, and then presumably at some point we're actually going to start using that consultation policy and start developing a more positive, collaborative relationship with First Nations in Alberta.

To start out that process with a piece of legislation that the First Nations leadership does not agree with is, in my view, a really ill-advised strategy, and it's an ill-advised decision. I think that the minister, you know, had some good intentions with respect to this, and obviously what we need to do is ensure that we do fund adequately the capacity of First Nations to engage in a meaningful form of consultation. I'm not convinced that this legislation actually deals with ensuring a minimum amount of financial support to facilitate meaningful consultation.

The fact of the matter is that the minister began his comments in third reading by outlining all the various and sundry meetings that he's had with representatives of First Nations groups, including the chiefs. The fact of the matter is that just because you have a meeting, just because you're all in the same room together does not mean that you've engaged in consultation. This is a theme that we've seen with this government. They seem to think that by telling people what's going to happen, they've consulted or, conversely, that by saying something like, "We are going to work together to make Albertans move forward," somehow talking about that kind of high-level statement amounts to consultation.

The fact of the matter is that we should have more faith in Alberta citizens, all Alberta citizens, and in this particular case we should have more faith in First Nations in that they want to know the particulars of what the government is considering. They want to know what the bill says. They want to know the details of what the government is planning to do. That is consultation as well, listening to what they think about those details.

If you simply go into a room and make some broad, general comment, a statement of principle, how can you possibly expect the people with whom you are consulting to give you wise and informed feedback on the direction you're heading in? You aren't giving them the details about the map. You're not giving them details about where you're going, so by definition the product is almost doomed to failure. It's almost impossible to imagine something on which there will be consensus.

Given the ironic nature of this, that a bill to facilitate consultation was devised without consultation, and given that this is a first step towards what I hope will be greater, more meaningful consultation and growth and positive relationships between First Nations government and our government, I think that it is wisest for this Assembly to vote against this bill so that the government can go back to the table, actually consult with First Nations grand chiefs and their representatives, and then bring forward a bill in the fall on which there is consensus. I don't think that is such a huge challenge. I do think that will bode well for everything that follows, and I think that would be the wisest course of action.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing no one, are there any other speakers? One final speaker. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think all the points that needed to be made have been made, but I will give a summary of the points that I want to make sure I leave the minister with. Before I do that, I have an amendment that I would like to submit to the chair.

The Speaker: Hon. member, while it's being distributed, why don't you just describe the amendment briefly and then carry on. Is that agreeable to the House?

Mr. Anglin: Mr. Speaker, I move that the motion for third reading of Bill 22, Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, be amended by striking out all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 22, Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. The net effect of this is actually a hoist amendment.

Mr. Anglin: That's right.

The Speaker: It will propel an immediate answer to the motion you've moved and then an immediate call on third reading for the bill itself.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Trying to be as efficient as possible, then, I would like to just speak a little bit on, really, a few main points that we try to impress upon the minister.

First, this is a consultation act that now suffers from the allegation of lack of consultation. It's ironic, but it does. I understand exactly what the minister said, and I really do appreciate the fact that you did mention the number of times that you met with First Nations. I do not doubt that one bit. What I have confusion about is the number of First Nations that came here and said that they were not consulted. That's the issue. I think every speaker now has sort of communicated that.

It's funny because you see that in a number of areas with this government, and we actually saw that even in question period today. It's consistent with this. We had a little discussion on transmission lines, and the member brought up a comparison that I made a few weeks ago. When you look at that on the surface, how that information is conveyed, I made a comparison of apples versus apples. The hon. member compared a double-circuit AC direct buried line versus a single-circuit unidirectional HVDC: two different technologies, much different costs, and different capacities. The hon. minister really didn't know the difference, but that's okay. That would come out in consultation, but we didn't have consultation on that either.

These are the things that consultation is important for. That's where you get down to the nitty-gritty. What should have happened – and I believe this wholeheartedly – is that once the minister saw all of the treaties show up here, all of the nations represented over the last couple of days, it should have been a caution to step back and at least admit that one side in the conversation doesn't agree with the other side. It should have given some caution or pause to step back and say: I have to renegotiate or negotiate. But does it matter whether it's a second negotiation or not?

The fact is that we do not have buy-in. That is so important whenever we bring legislation forward. We do this for industry. We did this for teachers. We talked about it at length for teachers. With the legislation we just brought, we did have buy-in from a great many school boards. Sometimes it's tough to get 100 per cent buy-in. The Minister of Education might validate that. I understand the Minister of Aboriginal Relations may not be able to get 100 per cent buy-in, but you should be able to get some buy-in. We couldn't find it. I mean, we couldn't find it. What we saw were representatives here who said that consultation did not take place. It's absolutely important that we take that under consideration.

There were a couple of other points that many of the First Nations, if not all of them, mentioned when they came here. Under section 8 of the act they referred to that as discriminatory. Now, the ministry used some colourful language today: being tough as nails and stupid enough to chew them. I've never been guilty of using that saying before, but I've been guilty of using colourful language. The fact is that in the language of the bill, when one side uses the word "discriminatory," that should stop and make people pay attention. Whether it's right or wrong is not the issue. The fact that one side in the conversation is making that allegation: that's the point right there. Deal with that issue. That should take place between the ministry and the First Nations, not on this floor between the party in power and the opposition parties. That didn't happen.

Then, of course, section 9 of the bill. Many of the First Nations that showed up here just didn't like the wording, that the minister's decisions are "final and binding," and there's no appeal there in their eyes. Now, I'm not going to argue the legal necessities of how to appeal and how not to appeal. The point is that they had problems with that wording. You did not have buy-in as a government from these First Nations that came here. That's the issue that you need to take a look at.

This motion that I brought, Mr. Speaker, just gives time to the hon. minister to do exactly as he says he intends to do, which is to go back out and to meet and to discuss. As I stated earlier, I don't see the rush. I've not heard an argument why this has to be now at this point in time, so I see no problem in going back and meeting with First Nations. Maybe the bill comes back exactly as it is written – that's a possibility – but with First Nations' buy-in. That, to me, would then – certainly, I think it would; I will not presume to speak for any member of my party – get some support over here. We would like to see that buy-in from First Nations.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude and let others speak to the motion. I hope they support it.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I have Lesser Slave Lake next on the list, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is my first opportunity to speak on this bill, and I want to make a few points, which I think are very important from a number of perspectives.

First of all, I have 11 First Nations in my constituency, with approximately 15 reserves. A lot of industrial activity has occurred in the backyard of these First Nations and reserves with no involvement, no dollars, nothing going to the communities for many years.

I just want to give a little history. When I was first elected, the elders from Loon River and Woodland Cree called me as their MLA to come and talk to them. They said to me, "We need you to address the concerns with all the activity that has been happening in our area with little or no respect for our culture or our lifestyle. The industry is running over our traplines" and, in their words, "raping and pillaging our land." They told me, Mr. Speaker, that they said: "We have to honour the treaties and what they stand for. They were put in place to protect the food, medicines, water, and way of life." We must do what we can to ensure those promises are protected for future generations. They said: "If they can only come and consult with us, that will provide us a way for our people to move into the future for all people's sake."

Mr. Speaker, these elders were not as eloquent as some of the people on the other side nor on this side, but they knew what they wanted. They knew that if they didn't get what needed to be done in terms of respect for their lifestyle and their livelihood, from that day forward they would never see a future for their people. They wanted to be consulted where it affected their lives, their lifestyle, and their treaties. That had not been done, and they prayed we'd do something. These were elders, far different from elected officials but with the same intent in terms of wanting something.

When I became the Minister of Aboriginal Relations in 1999, not only were there court challenges being brought to my attention to address the Supreme Court decisions, mostly the Haida, Taku, but the elders and the First Nation leaders pushed to have a consultation process. That consultation was developed. Did we do it right? Sometimes we did. Sometimes we missed the mark, but in most cases, Mr. Speaker, we wanted to do something that not only the elders were talking about in terms of their lifestyle, but we wanted to do something so that they could also benefit from what was happening in this province. They wanted to be part of the Alberta advantage, and that, to me, was the most important part of making sure that our children can also have a future and a bright future in this province.

We thought it was co-operation with First Nations. However, we also experienced the same issue the minister is facing today. Not all First Nations agree with what consultation means, and there are a lot of different views in terms of what that could be. Some people believe that there are different types of consultation: the good neighbour consultation, the good government consultation, and, of course, the legal consultation. When you do all three and achieve what you want to achieve, which is to make it better for the people of the First Nations communities, sometimes those three don't really mesh together, nor do all First Nations agree that a process needs to be developed for collecting dollars or on how they are to be distributed.

I'll give you an example, Mr. Speaker. When I was asked at the time by the then Premier, Premier Klein, to be the chairperson of negotiating a First Nations gaming policy, that was also a huge concern because they also wanted to be part of what was happening in this province. We negotiated a position, and that has provided the First Nations with many dollars to be able to see their economic position become better.

Like those elders, Mr. Speaker, I believe we need to do something. We cannot sit around and do nothing because the same thing that happened prior to 1999 will continue to be. We need to see some movement in some areas. Yes, we're not perfect, and nothing is perfect. However, I believe – I strongly believe – we have to trust something in order for us to be able to see the lives of people get better.

So respect for the aboriginal people, or, as I call them, the original peoples, of this country. Their lifestyle and their treaties should be recognized and respected. Of course, in my constituency I have some First Nations who are deeply concerned about not being consulted, and I have been on visits to my constituency with the minister. He's visited a lot of First Nations communities. Yes, he spoke of consultation. He spoke of economic possibilities. Yes, he spoke of this issue as well. Yes, most want to have some ongoing dollars coming into their coffers because as the opposition leader indicated, there are many, many First Nations that do not have the ability to survive and to help their people have a good quality of life.

We still have a lot of work to do, and I know it never finishes. However, this bill will provide First Nations with some ability to have dollars to improve First Nations lives and quality of life. I trust this minister, and I trust that he will do the right thing, that he will ensure that First Nations have the dollars to be viable and to also have the same quality of life that all of us enjoy here. I am sure – and I trust this minister – that he will do the right thing to ensure continued dialogue with First Nations because without continued dialogue, Mr. Speaker, nothing will happen. I know that this minister will continue to do that.

I trust and I know that this minister will do the right thing to ensure that my elders' dreams of being part of this community, part of this province, of making sure that their rights are not trampled upon will continue to be carried out by this minister. I know that this bill will give us this opportunity to be able to ensure that they can access the funds so that they, too, can enjoy gasification, so that they can enjoy paving on their roads, so that they can have schools that their children can be educated in, so that they will be able to see all sorts of wonderful things happen that my elders have asked for in the past.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there any other speakers to the amendment? Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to say that I appreciate the Member for Lesser Slave Lake standing up to speak on this bill. No one is disputing the intention of the bill to increase and ensure that all First Nations have the capacity for consultation with industry. Ensuring that different First Nations have the capacity and resources for consultation with industry I think is very important. However, the number one concern with this bill and why I'm supporting the motion to throw this bill out and part of what makes this so ironic is that the First Nations were not consulted on a bill to develop a consultation levy. That is one of the largest problems with this bill.

The other part, as I've outlined before, Mr. Speaker, I'll outline again. I'm going to keep my comments brief. I think it's important to speak about this hoist in this last reading and to talk about the consultation policy because this is not just the last opportunity to speak to this piece of legislation; it's also the only opportunity that members are going to have in this House to talk about the First Nations consultation policy, that the minister is planning on creating without debate from this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, the government is creating a consultation office that will conduct and assess the adequacy of all consultations in the future. It's establishing arbitrary timelines that have not been developed in collaboration with First Nations and has refused to incorporate the recommendations that First Nations have made in written documents going back at least three years. Consultation policies cannot simply be created by one order of government that thinks it's in charge. They must be negotiated collectively, collaboratively until consensus is reached.

You know, a comment for the minister. Some chiefs have been waiting for three years to hear a response from the minister regarding their submissions on consultation. Mr. Speaker, this government decided a long time ago what it wanted to do and is now forcing its intentions upon First Nations.

This government had a choice to make and made it. It could have worked collaboratively. It could have chosen to sit down with First Nations at the onset of the drafting of this bill but chose not to. It chose to proceed in a manner which many First Nations have identified as disrespectful, offensive, and paternalistic. It has broken its promises to First Nations peoples, and it has fundamentally broken its promise to First Nations governments.

Mr. Speaker, in contrast to what this government has done, an NDP government would immediately recognize the UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples and ensure that all government policies comply with the declaration. We would recognize that this province is founded on traditional lands and that a meaningful relationship between Alberta and First Nations requires a true government-to-government relationship with all chiefs and councils. We'd recognize that meaningful consultation requires accommodation, and we would take meaningful steps to ensure that Alberta's wealth benefits the very people whose traditional rights are most affected by resource development.

Mr. Speaker, it is therefore impossible for me and my colleagues in the NDP caucus to support this bill. We do support this motion to throw this bill out.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Hai, hai.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Private Bills Third Reading

Bill Pr. 1

Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Canada Act

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, I move third reading of Bill Pr. 1, Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Canada Act.

The Speaker: Are there any other speakers to this bill?

Mr. Bikman: I'm happy to rise in support of the bill.

The Speaker: I guess that says it all.
Are there any other speakers?
The hon. member to close debate?

Mr. Dorward: Question.

The Speaker: The question has been called.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill Pr. 1 read a third time]

Bill Pr. 2

Wild Rose Agricultural Producers Amendment Act, 2013

Mr. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I move third reading of Bill Pr. 2, Wild Rose Agricultural Producers Amendment Act, 2013.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I just want to put on the record a bit of reservation about this bill. I do feel like our party is in some way responsible for the fact that this organization may be wishing to change its name. I know that when CBC had the Wild Rose

Country noon hour show, one of the reasons they changed to CBC at noon was because they didn't want anybody being confused by the Wildrose name. I see that there's a danger of a potential trend here. I know that there's a Wild Rose Foundation. There are the Wildrose Liquor stores. We actually appreciate the extra advertising. We certainly wouldn't want this to be the slippery slope towards the government changing the licence plates from Wild Rose Country or changing all of the signs coming into Alberta that say Wild Rose Country. So while I do support this act, I do want to just put on the record my reservation and hope that this isn't the beginning of a much broader trend.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there other speakers?

Seeing none, Grande Prairie-Smoky to close debate. You do not wish to?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: The question has been called.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill Pr. 2 read a third time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

5:50

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to advise the House that with the government business for the spring session now being completed, we stand adjourned pursuant to Government Motion 32.

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to Government Motion 32, agreed to on May 8, 2013, and the sessional calendar published in January of this year, the House will now stand adjourned until Monday, October 28, 2013, unless circumstances require otherwise.

Might I just say on behalf of myself and the Deputy Speaker and the Deputy Chair of Committees that it has been a very interesting spring session. To those of you who extended as much cooperation as you possibly could, we are very grateful, and I want to say thank you.

Finally, it's the best time of the year in Alberta. Let's get out there and enjoy it to the fullest. We'll see you in October.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:51 p.m. pursuant to Government Motion 32]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, October 28, 2013

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, welcome back.

Let us pray. Holy Creator, as we begin the fourth sitting of the First Session of the 28th Legislature, we thank You for guiding us safely back to the sanctity of this Chamber. We also pray for Your guidance in fulfilling our duties for the enduring benefit of all Albertans. Let us be reminded that we have all pledged to faithfully serve the citizens we humbly represent and to do it to the best of our abilities and that we have also pledged to do it in a manner respectful to each other and to those whom we serve. Amen.

Hon. members, as is our custom, we pay tribute on our first day to members and former members of this Assembly who have passed away since we last met.

Mr. Edwin Albert Oman
August 31, 1930, to September 19, 2013

The Speaker: Mr. Ed Oman served this Assembly as the Member for Calgary-North Hill for two terms from 1979 to 1986. He served on many boards and committees during his career, including the Calgary Police Commission, the Calgary Exhibition & Stampede Board, and the Federation of Canadian Municipalities. He was also involved in various Calgary Olympic initiatives. Mr. Oman earned a master of divinity degree and subsequently served as minister of the covenant church for 17 years. For 13 of those years he was also director of the church choir. His long public service as a pastor, Calgary city alderman, and MLA demonstrated his commitment to making the world a better place.

Unfortunately we were unable to confirm the attendance today of anyone from Mr. Oman's family. However, our condolences and our thoughts and prayers are with them at this time.

Mr. Richard Arthur Miller
July 23, 1960, to October 26, 2013

The Speaker: It is also with sadness that I inform you that this past Saturday Mr. Rick Miller passed away after a long illness. Mr. Miller served as the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford from 2004 until 2008. He was very passionate about representing his constituency and worked hard to ensure that he was available for all Albertans. He was an active volunteer and worked in a long-established family business. He was a sports enthusiast but really excelled as a master-rated hang glider. His personable character made him a very popular choice amongst his colleagues here in the Legislature as well as outside.

An additional tribute will be offered for Mr. Miller on November 4, 2013, at the request of his family since none of them were available to attend today given that they are at their heaviest time of bereavement with the sudden passing of Mr. Miller on Saturday past.

Mr. Paul Joseph Lorieau
June 29, 1942, to July 2, 2013

The Speaker: In addition, I wish to acknowledge the passing of another important person who graced our Assembly with his presence on a regular basis every Monday or every start-up day, as the case may have required. Mr. Paul Joseph Lorieau, who led this Assembly in the singing of O Canada, passed away on July 2, 2013, at the age of 71. Born in Legal, Alberta, he established a successful optical business on the University of Alberta campus. He was best known for his stirring renditions of the national anthems at Edmonton Oilers hockey games, where he first sang the national anthem to the crowd 30 years ago, and then in this Chamber only 15 years ago, on January 27, 1998. From February 2000 until May of this year Mr. Lorieau began our sitting with a very inspirational rendition of O Canada. He instilled great patriotic pride in our Assembly, and his powerful tenor voice reminded all members of the reason we serve in this Assembly, to make this country and this province the best place we possibly can. As you know, he sang his last O Canada at the all-party MLA hockey game in Leduc just a few short months ago and joined us also for the Speaker's Cup.

I had the great privilege of knowing him then and of remembering him now along with his family members who are in the gallery. They are standing now: Danielle Lorieau-Peruch, daughter; Ilyan Peruch, son-in-law; Matteo Lorieau-Peruch, nine-year-old grandson; Alexa Lorieau-Peruch, seven-year-old granddaughter; Camille Lorieau, daughter; Jocelyne Lorieau, daughter; Mark Georgetti, eight-year-old grandson; Lisa Lorieau, daughter; Daniel Ferguson, son-in-law; Alyssa Anne Knoop, granddaughter; Brianna Marie Knoop, granddaughter.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, in a moment of silent prayer I ask you to remember Mr. Oman, Mr. Miller, and Mr. Lorieau as you may have known them. And as you reflect on this special gift that Mr. Lorieau gave – and it's addressed and personally autographed to all members of this Assembly – please reflect deeply.

Rest eternal grant unto them, O Lord, and let perpetual light shine upon them forever. Amen.

Please remain standing for the singing of O Canada, led by our very own Colleen Vogel, a member of our Legislative Assembly staff.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you very much, hon. members. Thank you, Ms Vogel.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Treaty 8 First Nations of Alberta Grand Chief Richard Kappo, who is seated in your gallery. Grand Chief Kappo was first elected as chief of Sturgeon Lake Cree Nation in 2004 and was named grand chief of Treaty 8 this summer. I can tell you that Grand Chief Kappo has been a very strong advocate of not only Sturgeon Lake Cree Nation but all Treaty 8 First Nations in Alberta. I've spent many days in Treaty 8 territory and last month, Mr. Speaker, visited Tallcree, Little Red River, and Little Buffalo. Today in the House I'm honoured to be wearing moccasins that were given to me by an elder from Beaver Lake First Nation. I look forward to our continued work and dialogue together with Grand Chief Kappo and all Treaty 8 First Nations. I'd ask that Grand Chief Richard Kappo rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a large number of guest groups and individuals to be introduced. Please keep your introductions as brief as possible. Let us begin with school groups.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two groups of students above us and behind me. Seated in the gallery are 30 grade 5/6 students along with their teacher, Don Douglas, and assistants from Waverley school in Kenilworth, who just completed a tour of the Legislature Building. Also above us in the members' gallery are 35 grade 6 students from my alma mater, Avonmore elementary school, accompanied by their teacher, May Louise Moskuwich, and assistants who are here today and all week at the School at the Legislature. If both of these groups could please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly roughly 50 grade 9 students from George McDougall high school in Airdrie, a school that I attended back when it was still a junior high, in the early 1990s. I'd like their teachers and parent assistants to stand as their names are called: my good friend Mr. Scott Sharun, Mr. Erick Fisk, Mrs. Linda Stadnyk, and Mrs. Kathy Ritcher. If all of the students could please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

If not, let us move on, then, to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly an individual whose leadership has been instrumental in our response to the southern Alberta floods. Mr. Colin Lloyd is the managing director of the Alberta Emergency Management Agency. Colin has been at my side from the very first day of the floods and every day since, providing advice and guidance as we visited the flood-affected areas to ensure that we made decisions that would benefit Albertans in the near term and in the long term. He's here on behalf of his team, that is still working very hard at this very moment helping Albertans get back on their feet and rebuild their homes and their lives. He's also here to represent the public service, some very dedicated members that worked around the clock and continue to do so to assist flood victims and help in our recovery efforts. I'd ask Mr. Colin Lloyd to rise on behalf of himself and all of them to receive the warm welcome and thank you of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group from the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta, Mary Lynne Campbell and Patty Ditttrick. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask the guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three laboratory technologists: Joan Card, Shawna Gawreluck, and Annette Tennison. I met with these three front-line health professionals the other day to discuss the risks of privatizing laboratory testing. The experience of previous privatization of Alberta labs in the mid-90s compromised openness and accountability and efficiency of lab testing; thus, at times putting patient safety at risk. I would like to thank them for their service to Albertans each and every day. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you my guests, who are members of the Kids Not Cuts coalition. Kids Not Cuts is a province-wide coalition of support staff working in our K to 12 education system. They represent staffing positions such as library technicians, special-needs teaching assistants, aboriginal liaison workers, facility operators, educational assistants, and custodians. Members of the coalition who are here today include Mike Scott, Don Boucher, Jody Carey, Gloria Lepine, Carol Chapman, Leanne LaRocque, Lee-Ann Kalen, Rick Klimchuk, Wilma Ellenburgh, Patricia Paulsen, Ishani Weera, Olav Rokne, and Ruth Shymka. They're here because they're extremely concerned about what is happening in our educational system as a result of last year's spring budgets. Please join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Welcome back, everyone. It's indeed my honour and pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly a very dear friend who is visiting me from London, England, Andrea Lestar. I would ask her to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, your guests will be here after 2 p.m., I am told. We'll address them then.

Mr. Cao: They are here, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: They are here now? Please proceed, Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two distinguished gentlemen from our Calgary-Fort constituency, Bob Gray and Gary Vegelis. Bob is president of our Calgary-Fort PC Association and senator of the Aboriginal Friendship Centre of Calgary. Formerly, Bob was also an RCMP officer, vice-president of Dominion Command of the Royal Canadian Legion, and a manager with the city of Calgary. Gary is the vice-president of our Calgary-Fort PC Association and a former board member of the Alberta Construction Safety Association. Both of these gentlemen have contributed greatly to the constituency in many ways and brighten our lives with their wonderful humour. It's thanks to the leadership of these two gentlemen and the friendship of these two persons that I have had the privilege of serving the constituency in five elections so far.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature the newly elected leader of the Alberta Party, Greg Clark. Greg is deeply involved in his community and serves on numerous boards and committees both locally and provincially. I would also like to introduce to you Greg's assistant, Evan Galbraith. I ask you both to please rise now and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation.

Mr. Scott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you two very good friends of mine, Sharon and Peter Clarkson, former residents of Fort McMurray. Sharon is a very active community member. She was a school board trustee and a municipal councillor. Peter is a very active volunteer, and he's an amateur sports coach. Peter and Sharon are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd like them to rise and for all members to give them the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly Guy Smith, the president of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. The AUPE represents over 80,000 workers in Alberta, and their members have been on the front lines of this government's broken promises for better health care, for supports for the vulnerable in places like Michener Centre, and for stable, predictable funding for our schools and our universities. I would ask that Mr. Smith rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we still have three more introductions to do, and we'll have to hold that for a moment because the clock dictates that we shall start Oral Question Period momentarily.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given it's the first day back, I wonder if I might ask for unanimous consent of the House to extend the Routine to continue introductions and Ministerial Statements and then to extend past 3 p.m. so that we can complete the Routine.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the request is in order. It requires unanimous consent, in which case we would finish off three more introductions briefly and proceed on with Ministerial Statements.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Hearing no objections, let us continue, then, with the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View with your introduction.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I'm happy to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly – and I would like to ask them to rise as I introduce them – four students at the University of Alberta. They are Michael Stuart, Mark Jacka, Jeremy Gray, and Ross Hamilton. While working toward their various degrees, they're also taking the time to get involved in politics and the issues that matter to Albertans. They are members of the Wildrose campus club at the U of A. I know that regardless of our political stripes in here, we'll be thrilled to see young people taking the initiative to get involved in things that matter to Albertans. I would ask you all to join me in giving them the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Agnieszka Frankiw and Keith Banner. Agnieszka is a laboratory technologist in Edmonton; Keith Banner a concerned citizen. Both want to see the province avoid a repeat of the costly and destructive privatization of health care laboratory services in Edmonton. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, your guests are not here yet? Thank you.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Flood in Southern Alberta

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we begin the fall session today, it's my privilege to rise to update Albertans on the work that their government is doing to help communities recover and rebuild. Only four months ago Alberta endured the worst natural disaster to ever hit our province. Tens of thousands of Albertans in dozens of communities were deeply affected, including four people who lost their lives. Critical pieces of public infrastructure, including hospitals, bridges, schools, highways, and roads, were damaged, and thousands of homes and businesses were damaged or completely destroyed.

But if anything matched the fury of the waters, it was the courage and the compassion of Albertans themselves. The people of this province responded in an incredible fashion by opening their homes, their hearts, and their wallets to each other: friends, neighbours, and strangers, Mr. Speaker. They showed the world what Albertans are made of. In the face of flood waters they were resilient.

Within the first hours of the rainfall we mobilized the government's full capabilities to help, and I'm tremendously proud of how fast we were able to move in getting assistance to those in need. Within four days of the flood we allocated $1 million in relief funding. Nearly $170 million in preliminary assistance has gone to municipalities and to First Nations to allow them to begin rebuilding. Seventy million dollars in immediate aid went to over 40,000 people forced from their homes, and we are providing temporary housing to 1,300 Albertans who can't yet return.

Almost a thousand kilometres of provincial roads were washed out or damaged. Fully 87 per cent have been reopened, Mr. Speaker. All health facilities and services displaced by the flooding have been restored. While more than 80 schools were shut down, all but three opened their doors in time to start the school year. Schools matter to families. Temporary classrooms are in place, and they're in the process of opening for the 950 students at those three schools. Our government has also opened dedicated disaster recovery offices in southern Alberta, helping victims to get their claims processed quickly so that they can make decisions, have information, and rebuild.

We've held dozens of information sessions in flood-stricken neighbourhoods so that Albertans can understand what they're eligible for, and government employees have been going door to door to make sure that people are aware of the supports that are available. Total costs arising from the floods, including those to insurance and the government, will be more than $6 billion. The federal government is working closely with us, and Ottawa will be covering some of those disaster recovery expenses with us.

I know that there are families that are making decisions about their future. I know that not everyone is through the disaster recovery application process, but our government is moving as fast as we possibly can on the biggest disaster recovery program that Alberta has ever seen. We will continue to be there for families and for communities, as I've said from day one, Mr. Speaker, and we will continue to be responsible to taxpayers to make sure that the dollars that we do spend are being spent properly.

We're working hard to prepare for the next disaster by developing layers of readiness that are focused on people, the environment, reconstruction, and the economy, and we will introduce legislation in this sitting to ensure that Albertans and our communities are safer than ever from floods. Additionally, we expect to announce major erosion control programs on vulnerable rivers. We've hired two engineering firms to assess proposals for flood mitigation and to identify the best options. When we get the answers we need, we will be acting.

Protecting Albertans is our highest priority, and the lessons that we learned from the floods will ensure that we're able to help Albertans keep their property and their homes safe. Healing will take years. Much work remains. Our government will be there with communities and with families every step of the way. Physical rebuilding, health rebuilding, a commitment to mental health response: that's what matters to us because it matters to Albertans.

I want to make it clear that our leadership for this recovery effort will not deter us from building and rebuilding Alberta for every Albertan. We will meet the challenges that come from explosive growth head-on, from infrastructure investment to market access to growing our savings for the future. We've created a building Alberta plan that will address these challenges, and we will meet that plan, Mr. Speaker. Quite simply, Albertans' quality of life demands nothing less. [applause]

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Premier, for that statement. There is no doubt that serious questions remain about how the flood response was handled and what we can do better in the future, but now is not the time for that. Now is a time for recognition and a time for mourning, a time to recognize the incredible efforts that we witnessed from first responders, public servants, service groups, and volunteers. In the immediate aftermath of the floods we saw true heroism unfold in how police, fire, and paramedic services got Albertans out of harm's way.

In the days and weeks that followed, Alberta's true character shone brighter than ever before. The Mission Possible teams deployed thousands of volunteers into our neighbourhoods, including 16,000 into High River alone, mucking out basements and helping families clean up. Local officials worked tirelessly to rebuild roads, sewage canals, and stormwater areas; Mormon Helping Hands with 8,500 volunteers; Samaritan's Purse with thousands more; Siksika pet rescuers; little girls selling lemonade on their front lawns to raise money to give to Red Cross.

I'd also like to recognize the Red Cross for their work giving comfort at the evacuation centres, and I'd like to thank Human Services ministry staff for giving compassionate and timely support to flood victims when they needed it most. Alberta stepped up in a way we had never seen, each example affirming to the rest of the country and the rest of the world the excellence of our people and the resiliency of our spirit.

But it's also a time to mourn. Five Albertans lost their lives in the June floods. Let me tell you about three of them. Jacqui Brocklebank was 33. She had cerebral palsy and died after taking a cab to a friend's house to warn her about the flood. That was just down the street from my house. Amber Rancourt was 35. She died after being swept away by rushing flood waters while her husband attempted to get their horse to safety. Rob Nelson was 42. He died from injuries sustained when his ATV rolled over while he was checking his neighbours' homes for flood damage. Two others, an 83-year-old woman and a 52-year-old man, also died. While we celebrate the tales of bravery and heroism and while we embark on a rebuilding process that will take years, let us never forget those who perished and the broken family members and loved ones that they left behind.

While devastating and tragic, I believe that the 2013 floods will ultimately be remembered as a moment in time where Albertans showed the world who we are. We are compassionate, we are courageous, and we are confident that our best days, despite this terrible tragedy, are still ahead.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm going to anticipate that the House leader from the Liberal side wishes to seek unanimous consent for their caucus to provide a brief statement. Am I anticipating correctly?

Ms Blakeman: You indeed are.

The Speaker: I expect the same is being motioned my way by the leader of the New Democratic opposition.

So let me ask one question, unanimous consent being required. Does anyone object to allowing comments to be made on this important subject from the Liberal caucus and from the New Democratic caucus? If so, please say so now.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Hearing no objection, let us proceed, with the Liberal caucus starting. The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to respond to the Premier. We had one of the most devastating disasters in this country's history, and the true character of the people of this province and the people of this country shone through as neighbour helped neighbour in need. It took everyone's effort in this province to get through this very difficult time, and I was amazed at how that parade in Calgary went on. When the going got tough, Albertans got going.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to start by doing something that doesn't happen often enough in the House. I'm going to give the government credit for doing a good job. The government's emergency response in the immediate aftermath of the flood was very good. I'm happy to give the government credit for that. The emergency plan was solid and executed well, and Albertans got back to their lives regularly. Please, everyone, give the government credit for this.

Mr. Speaker, one reason it's so rare for opposition leaders and MLAs to give the government credit for doing a good job is because it doesn't happen nearly enough in this province. Too often the government falls down on the job and fails Albertans, and a prime example of this comes in the area of flood mitigation. The flood in June wasn't the first disaster of its kind in Alberta. We all remember the devastating floods of 2005, and certainly there have been other floods in the province's history. Given this, one might think the government would have taken steps to mitigate future flooding after 2005, but of course we know they did not. This government completely failed in its duty to protect the province from future flooding, even leaving millions and millions of federal dollars on the table.

While the initial response to the flood was excellent, I can't help but think that the damage caused by the flood was worse than it needed to be. Given this government's record when it comes to broken promises, secret dealings, and mismanagement, I have serious concerns about what we will see moving forward when it comes to the vital work of flood recovery and reconstruction. I look forward to working with the government to get this done right.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of myself and the entire NDP caucus I offer my sincere condolences to all of those affected by June's flooding. In the immediate days following the flooding, Albertans came together to help one another alongside our hard-working first responders and service providers. It was inspiring for all Albertans and especially comforting for those in southern Alberta, and we commend all of those hard-working Albertans for their generosity of spirit and outstanding, ongoing efforts. I am so impressed and so proud to be an Albertan. I witnessed the very same spirit after the Slave Lake fire, and I know that Albertans in times of need do come together and help.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the planning to mitigate the flood damage fell short. The government ignored its own report following the 2006 floods, and they did not apply for federal funding for flood mitigation. It isn't fair to ask Albertans to pay for the negligence of this government; nevertheless, Albertans are on the hook for billions of dollars. When I was in High River, I met small-business owners who had lost their life's work and renters with nowhere to go.

We must do better to make sure that our response now and our planning for the future take these people into account. Albertans need a comprehensive strategy to help them plan for their homes, families, and businesses in the event of other disasters. The NDP opposition will give its support for government measures to accomplish this goal.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Statement by the Speaker

Oral Question Period and Members' Statements Speaker Rotation

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed with the Routine and question period, I would like to make a brief statement about the rotation of oral questions and members' statements. This statement is further to my recent memorandum dated and sent to each of you on October 18 of this year, which included the projected sitting days calendar for the fall sitting.

As you are all well aware, there have been changes to caucus membership over the last number of months, and the Member for Edmonton-Manning and the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo are both now sitting as independent members. Although the first change occurred on May 14, when the Assembly was in fact sitting, this was only one day prior to the House concluding the spring sitting, so there was little or no opportunity to make a statement regarding the rotation at that time.

At the outset, however, I would like to point out to all members that the change in caucus membership will not alter the rotation of questions for today or tomorrow, which, as indicated on the calendar, are so-called days 2 and 3 of the rotation sequence.

In reviewing the rotation for question period, I noted that the current House standings are somewhat similar to those that existed in both February 2011 and February 2012, where there was one independent member and one member of the Alberta Party. It is my view that the current rotation should parallel these circumstances, which would result in each independent member having one question every four days. Accordingly, the Member for Edmonton-Manning will be entitled to a question this Wednesday, should he wish to take it, since that will be day 4, and the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo will be entitled to a question this coming Thursday, should he wish to take it, since that will be day 1.

In other words, given that today is day 2 in the rotation, this means that one independent member will have a question on day 4 and the second independent member will have a question on day 1, which follows day 4. As was the case in 2011 and 2012, the independent members will be entitled to the sixth question slot on each of these days, a slot which occurs after all four caucuses have had the opportunity to ask at least one question during slots 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.

With respect to the rotation for members' statements, this has also been modified to provide for one statement for each independent member every two weeks. This was reflected on the projected sitting days calendar that I sent you last week.

Hon. members, we're off to a very good start with some wonderful statements. Let's see if we can continue on that high level and that high plane.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. member, question period has been called. Did you have some urgent matter?

Ms Blakeman: I did, but I guess you didn't see me before question period was called. I'll just send it in written form for you.

The Speaker: Okay. Let us proceed with the hon. Leader of her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Health Care Wait Times

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, today the Fraser Institute issued its latest report on health care wait times across Canada. Despite spending more than $17 billion, the total time a patient waits for health care is now at an all-time high in Alberta. From the time their family doctor recommends treatment to when they actually get a procedure, Albertans have never waited longer. It is a scathing indictment of the government and its failure to put patients first.

To the Premier: when will her government start providing timely access to health care for Albertans?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am so proud of the work that our Health minister has done this summer with respect to managing health care. This is a minister who has secured a seven-year deal for sustainable health care spending with doctors, he's lowered the cost of generic drugs so that Albertans can get access to medication, and he's driven the need for change at Alberta Health Services, bringing our vice-presidents from 75 down to 10. We will continue to ensure that we are providing effective health care for Albertans in a timely fashion, the best health care in the country.

Ms Smith: Maybe the Premier didn't hear the question. Waits have never been longer, and the fact remains that far too many Albertans are waiting far too long for health care. According to the report, over the past three years this government has made no progress on cutting wait times for how long it takes patients to get in to see a specialist. In fact, last year alone this one measure increased 24 per cent. To the Premier: when will her government give Albertans timely access to the health care they need when they need it?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, our government uses the Canadian Institute for Health Information, the nationally recognized measurement body for health care system performance in this country, to analyze our own wait times and to benchmark ourselves against others. I'm not sure where the hon. member is getting her information, but I'm very happy to tell the House that we've achieved a 9 per cent reduction in hip surgery wait times, a 16 per cent reduction in knee replacement wait times, 22 per cent lower wait times in cataract surgery, 10 per cent in bypass, and as of last week we've taken the waiting time for cornea transplants in this province from three years to three months.

Ms Smith: I'll table the report, Mr. Speaker, but they're not even meeting their own wait time targets. Our Wildrose wait time guarantee offers an affordable and practical approach to cut wait times across the board within a publicly funded health care system, and it would do so by increasing the number of patients who can access the out-of-province fund. [interjections] Will the Premier commit today to showing that she cares about the long delays faced by Alberta patients and implement our wait time guarantee?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's very interesting that the Official Opposition would present itself as a government whose answer to reducing wait times in our vastly growing province is to export health care to other jurisdictions. [interjections] That's not what this government stands for. This government recognizes that we are the province with the best funded public health care system in the country. In fact, we exceed many developed countries in terms of our per capita funding. We have measurable success in many areas, and we continue to deliver quality health care and to support front-line workers in their efforts to reduce wait times.

The Speaker: No interjections, please. That's the only warning I'll give.

The hon. Member for Highwood, Leader of the Official Opposition.

Flood Recovery Contracts

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we're going to have a lot of questions about the flood for the Premier over the next several weeks, and I have three to start with that have had the most impact on those dealing with the flood. Hundreds of students are waiting for portables because the government awarded a sole source $19 million contract to a company called Enzo Developments and they haven't met a single one of their deadlines to deliver. How is it that a company that has never built school portables was handed this contract, and is the Premier happy with their performance?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said in my statement earlier, there are some incredible challenges that we face as a province, and I think all leaders in this House stood up and talked about the fact that we had to make and did make exceptional decisions to ensure that we could enhance people's quality of life and give them certainty. I want to congratulate our Minister of Education for the hard work that he and his department did over the summer. As we said, there were over 80 schools that were impacted, and only three didn't open, because we took bold decisions. So I congratulate the minister on that. I'm pleased to know that students will be getting back into schools tomorrow in High River, and that's good news.

Ms Smith: I can see the Premier doesn't want to defend that contract, so how about this one? The government awarded another, larger $45 million sole source contract to a company called Tervita to help the town clean up flooded public areas but also to do some work on High River homes. In the process dozens of other companies that could have also helped speed up the recovery process were shut out of the work. Can the Premier tell us: how is it that Tervita was selected to do this work alone, and is she happy with their performance?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, in the first few weeks of the disaster we knew we had to make a lot of very immediate decisions, and we dealt with the situation as best we could. Some of the decisions were based on limited information, but we tried to make sure that we made quick decisions and that we had companies in place to help with clean up and such like that. Tervita demonstrated in our quick analysis the most capacity, the best background. It was very evident, clearly, at the Calgary Stampede the incredible work that they did to clean that up in such short order, and that's why they were awarded the contract.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I think we're seeing a pattern here. This government has also awarded a sole source contract for the administration of disaster recovery payouts to a company called LandLink. This contract has itself been a disaster. KPMG found all sorts of deficiencies in their handling of the disaster recovery program for the 2010 Medicine Hat floods. Many of those victims still have not had their claims dealt with. Can the Premier tell us why LandLink still has this contract, or is she happy with their performance?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, LandLink has had that contract for 17 years. They've delivered some exceptional services to Albertans, and every time we find ourselves in a disaster where LandLink has provided those services, we do an evaluation so that we and LandLink and every other municipality can work on providing better services to the people that they serve. They continue to improve. But the point to note about every one of those contracts is that this was the most unprecedented disaster we have ever seen and the largest in Canadian history. We're bound to make a couple of mistakes, but the fact that we have responded so quickly and so soundly to so many Albertans in 30 communities means that we've done an exceptional job.

The Speaker: Hon. members, it was refreshing to hear three good questions with three good answers without interjection. Thank you. Keep it up.

Let me move on. Third main set of questions. The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Provincial Debt

Ms Smith: In Medicine Hat earlier this month the Premier said this about debt: it's not debt; it's hope. So let's take some of the Premier's other quotes and sub in hope for debt to see if that sentence makes sense. First: Alberta does not have hope, and we will not incur hope. Then there's this: we cannot come out of the current fiscal situation with hope. And a PC campaign ad: Albertans want to know that we're not going to have hope. To the Premier: if debt is hope, when can we once again expect to be debt free?

Ms Redford: You know what, Mr. Speaker? There are incredibly important issues that we need to talk about in this House, and it's a shame that the opposition won't take them seriously. I stand by what I said. What we build in Alberta by putting in place infrastructure is schools and roads and health care facilities that matter to the quality of life for Albertans. We have a plan to build Alberta, to rebuild Alberta. We are committed to that, and that is what matters to Albertans, not this.

Ms Smith: The Premier saw it was so ridiculous. She has since changed her tune a bit, now saying, and I quote: we don't have debt in this province; we have infrastructure in this province. Well, Alberta was debt free for nearly 10 years, and in that time capital spending hit record levels. If debt is now infrastructure instead of hope, how does the Premier explain all those schools and hospitals and roads that were built when Alberta didn't have a penny of outstanding debt?

Ms Redford: You know, Mr. Speaker, this is an exciting year for Alberta. You will have heard that we are over 4 million people now. The one thing that Albertans told us in the last election was to keep building infrastructure. The opposition can go back to the days where they talk about infrastructure being built and no debt, but you know, we had an infrastructure deficit. We didn't have enough schools. We didn't have enough hospitals. We weren't investing in communities, and that's what we're doing today.

Ms Smith: While the Premier's team struggles to come up with new metaphors for debt, here are the cold, hard facts. We will have at least $17 billion worth of debt by the time of the next election. At the current repayment rate it will take more than 80 years to pay back all of that debt, and in that time Albertans are going to have to pay $25 billion in interest payments just to keep the creditors off our backs. Will the Premier stop the spin, look Albertans square in the eye, and just admit it? Debt is debt.

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's nice to see that nothing has changed in their policy on that basis. There are a number of other policies that have changed, but that one hasn't.

It's interesting, Mr. Speaker, that the sophistication of the financial analysis that's over there doesn't match any of the sophistication of the Albertans that I saw and talked to around this province in 14 open houses this year, where I asked them the question: should we be borrowing for the life of the assets for your school, for your hospital, and your road? The resounding answer: yes; build it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, leader of the Liberal opposition, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Minister of Municipal Affairs

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver: all three have big-city charters which give them the autonomy and powers they need to meet their unique challenges. Meanwhile Edmonton and Calgary do not. Municipal elections have just been held, and I'm reminded of the fact that the Municipal Affairs minister has not met his commitment to get these charters done. To the Premier: are you satisfied with the fact that your minister has failed to keep this important promise?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, it was wonderful on Saturday morning in this building to sit down with Mayor Iveson and Mayor Nenshi to talk about the importance of building our cities. In fact, one of the things we talked about – I'm surprised the hon. member didn't see it in the news – is the fact that both mayors are very excited that we are very close to completing those charters. In fact, one of the things that Mayor Iveson asked for – and I just spoke to him today at the chamber of commerce – was some time to work with his new, young council to make sure that we're ready to proceed with the charters. We're very excited about that, and we're glad to have kept the commitment.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: given that the minister called the mayor of Calgary a puffed-up peacock and dismissed millions of Edmontonians and Calgarians as latte-sipping condo dwellers, aren't you at least a little bit concerned that your Minister of Municipal Affairs doesn't seem to be very fond of the majority of Albertans that he's supposed to be helping?

Ms Redford: Wow, Mr. Speaker. I've got to tell you: I don't know where this member has been for the past six months, but I've seen a Minister of Municipal Affairs and emergency response who has demonstrated very clearly how much he cares about Albertans, and he has demonstrated that in Calgary, in High River, in Medicine Hat, in Fort McMurray, and also in a lot of areas that perhaps were not impacted by flood. We know that every single Albertan matters. We know that we can work with municipal councils and large cities to get this done, and we will.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, "wow" is what we said when he called them latte-sipping condo dwellers in the big cities and when he referred to the mayor of Calgary with those derogatory terms.

To the Premier: given that the mayor of Calgary has expressed a very low opinion of how your minister is handling big-city charters and given that columnists of the Calgary Herald have called for that same minister to be assigned a new portfolio, will you finally admit that he is not fit for the job?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I don't think it's going to be a surprise to anyone in Alberta that the columnists at the Calgary Herald probably are not the people that I listen to for advice for this government. I listen to the people of Alberta, who 18 months ago elected this government to manage the important affairs of the province. I'll tell you that on Saturday morning, even well before I had the opportunity to sit down with both mayors, Mayor Nenshi and I travelled together at 6 o'clock in the morning from Calgary. We had a very good talk with respect to how we will work together, how mayors and the municipal government minister will work together, and it's going to be fine.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, the leader of the New Democrat opposition.

Flood Mitigation

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Tragically, after the floods this June, Albertans now know what it takes to get this PC government to act, a natural disaster that's projected to cost billions of dollars. They not only ignored the advice of their own report following the floods in 2006, but they didn't even bother to apply for millions in federal funding that would have covered some of the costs of flood mitigation. My question is to the Premier. Why not?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, it's a misnomer to suggest that we didn't follow the recommendations of the Groeneveld flood mitigation report. In fact, all of the recommendations were implemented or a majority followed except for two. We're going to be tabling legislation to deal with those. We spent $82 million in the last few years, helping with mitigation. In fact, we have several communities that said that that investment that the province made in partnership with municipalities helped save their communities. The fact is that that program was opened up at the very last minute to other jurisdictions like Alberta, and we weren't prepared to meet the criteria of that program, but I just met with the federal minister in the last couple of months, and we're continuing to advocate for a national disaster mitigation program so that we can serve Alberta's communities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. While there were short timelines involved in that getting that money, Alberta was the only one that didn't get it.

This government's own report on the 2006 flood was only released this year. Just one of its common-sense recommendations was that the province prohibit development on flood plains, but the government failed to take action on this obvious measure and put thousands of Albertan homes and families at risk. To the Premier: why?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that when I became minister, the Premier and I discussed the report and released it as soon as we were aware that it hadn't been released so that all Albertans could see it. We did discuss – and it happened to coincide with this flood event – the two recommendations dealing with preventing development in the floodway. As I said, I don't want to pre-empt the discussion that's going to happen today or the legislation that I'm going to introduce, so the member should just wait a little bit longer, and he'll be happy.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Premier is taking a page from the Prime Minister on how to answer questions.

This government didn't implement recommendations to provide up-to-date flood maps and a registry so that potential homebuyers could avoid risking catastrophic loss. To the Premier: why not?

Mr. Griffiths: In fact, Mr. Speaker, we have implemented that recommendation. I'm sure that the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development may want to supplement, but we've worked with municipalities to update that information. The fact is that most of those maps are incredibly accurate. The floodways and the flood fringes in those zones don't change year to year. They change after substantial events like we saw in High River. We're updating our maps as we proceed.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, that concludes the leaders asking their questions. We're now going to proceed with question 6. I would remind you of the ruling I made earlier, and that was that the issue of supplementary questions is a good one. We all know that there should be no preamble that precedes them. I'll be clamping down on that starting today, and you are hereby reminded to review your questions, those of you who have questions coming up, to try and follow suit. We will allow a little bit of it, but I don't want it to get carried away. I have almost 20 people on the speaking roster who have questions, all of them just as important as your own.

Let's go. Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Ethics Investigations

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans can't trust this PC government after scandal upon scandal. Instead of beefing up legislation to keep MLAs in line, PC MLAs are more interested in protecting the government family. They brush off disturbing rulings by the Ethics Commissioner that absolve PC MLAs of fundamentally unethical conduct. Can the current chair of the Conflicts of Interest Act committee, the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, who's in charge of ethics, let us know if the replacement of the Ethics Commissioner is on the committee's agenda?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think . . .

Mr. Saskiw: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Redford: I think, Mr. Speaker, that it's going to be very important for the committee work of this House to happen. One of the things that I find rather ironic is that we seem to be in this political era that whenever the opposition likes the Ethics Commissioner's decision, they support the Ethics Commissioner. Whenever they don't like the Ethics Commissioner's decision, they don't support him. Some inconsistency, perhaps not a surprise from the opposition. No doubt the work of this House will continue. Important committee work will happen. I'm sure that the minister will be very happy to answer the question in the supplemental.

The Speaker: Hon. member, your point of order has been noted at 2:27.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier is currently under investigation by the Ethics Commissioner, can someone from the government please give Albertans an answer as to why PC MLAs voted to maintain the Alberta-only gag order that restricts us as MLAs from asking questions in question period about the Premier's ongoing ethics investigation. What does she have to hide?

The Speaker: Hon. members, I think I've commented on this before. Hon. Government House Leader, if you wish to, answer the question. You're certainly not obliged to because there is an investigation that was referred to. That investigation is under way. So I'll leave it to your discretion.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, rather than raising a point of order, I was simply going to answer the question by saying that that hon. member should know, particularly as he is a deputy House leader who was looking for more resources to fund him in that position, that it's entirely inappropriate to ask a question in the House about the activity of a committee of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that an MLA has been found to be in direct violation of the Conflicts of Interest Act legislation six times and lobbied on an issue that would benefit him personally, is it not clear that this piece of junk ethics legislation only serves to protect the Premier and her own MLAs?

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, if you wish to comment. I may have a comment after this.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, what this hon. member ought to know and realize is that the Ethics Commissioner is an officer of the Assembly, and when there are issues with respect to the Conflicts of Interest Act, this officer of the Legislative Assembly does an appropriate investigation, comes to conclusions, and makes recommendations with respect to carrying out those conclusions. That's exactly what happened with respect to this case in the report that I assume you will table today. It's not in the mouths of us as legislators to come back at the end of the day and say that the Ethics Commissioner should be overruled in his determination. That's why we have independent officers of the Legislature.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: Hon. members, let me just remind you of a little peace, order, decorum, and respect not only for ourselves but also for the laws that govern this province. I just don't find it appropriate to refer to a piece of legislation that has come before this Assembly, been debated, as a piece of junk.

2:30

Mr. Saskiw: We can't question legislation?

The Speaker: Hon. member, please. I have the floor. I didn't interrupt you, and I don't expect you to interrupt me. Am I clear? Am I clear, sir? Yes? Thank you.

Now, please be reminded that there are legislative pieces that come before you. There are motions, there are bills that each one of you as members brings forward, and none of them are to be considered or referred to as a piece of junk. I will not tolerate that. So clean up your act, hon. member. Clean up your act, hon. member, or we will deal with the consequences of your not doing so. I'm not in a good mood on this point just now, as you can probably tell.

Hon. Member for Airdrie, you rose on a point of order at 2:32, and it has been noted.

Let us move on. Calgary-Glenmore.

Government Policies

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the party across the way was busy this weekend revisiting issues the rest of the world decided 25 years ago, Premier, you had a busy week focusing on the issues that matter to Albertans. Can you update us on what else was accomplished in your meeting with the mayors of Calgary and Edmonton?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, it was a very important meeting because, of course, we see a new mayor in Edmonton, and there's a real buzz in Edmonton right now about Mayor Iveson and some of the very exciting work that we're going to be able to do together with respect to building community. There's no doubt that as we move forward and we take a look at things such as public transit, ring roads, infrastructure, partnerships on social policy issues, the social policy framework, this will be very important.

In addition to that, I am very excited to talk to both mayors about working on trade missions together to make sure that we're telling Alberta's story and continuing to open new markets, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you. Premier, you were also focusing on building for the future and announced the tentative agreement on the Calgary ring road. What does this agreement mean for all of Alberta?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, when I was a community volunteer living in Lakeview, I remember sitting with people talking about the dream of having a highway that would allow traffic to travel from northern Alberta to southern Alberta with no traffic lights and no interruptions. Of course, the ring roads that have been put in place are an important part of that.

When I ran in 2008, Mr. Speaker, I made a commitment to my constituents that we would pursue the ring road and try to get it done. The southwest ring road in Calgary: the agreement with Tsuu T'ina allows us to complete the Calgary ring road. We're completing the Edmonton ring road. That's infrastructure that matters to the future of this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As well, this week Premier Wynne has pledged her support to you and our government on the Canadian energy strategy. Can you outline the impact on Alberta?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity on Friday morning to meet with Premier Wynne, and we talked about a number of issues. But as soon as we sat down, the first thing that she talked about was the importance of the Canadian energy strategy because it allows us all as Canadians to understand and talk about how we benefit from Alberta's incredible economic growth.

The second thing she said, Mr. Speaker, is that by understanding a Canadian energy strategy, it makes it easy for her to talk to people in Ontario about why the Energy East pipeline matters. She's committed to it. That's good for Alberta, Ontario, and Canada.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll try and strike a balance in between the last two presenters.

School Construction

Mr. McAllister: You know, I might be partial, but to me one of the most important things that government can do is build schools for our kids, and that's why it's so troubling to hear today that the province is not going to deliver on a promise to build 19 schools within three years because of a contract agreement. Now, let's remember that the government already reneged on the election promise to build 50 and renovate 70 during this term. We are in desperate need of schools for our kids. To the Minister of Infrastructure: how in the world did this happen, and can government not find a way to prioritize the building of schools?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, our government knows how important it is to build schools for our children and for our families in this province. It's very important, and we will deliver on these promises. The member is saying that we've reneged. We haven't reneged on anything. We will build 50 new schools and modernize 70. This P3 contract is not done. We've saved a lot of money for the province of Alberta by building P3s, and I will not apologize for that.

Mr. McAllister: Forgive me for not being convinced.

Mr. Speaker, our schools are bursting at the seams. Many of them look like modular factories, when you can find the modulars, that is. Given that and given that if these commitments are not met, we're going to have an incredibly large list of communities that will be unable to provide classrooms for our kids, I'll ask the Education minister: can you not work with your Infrastructure minister and government to make sure that government delivers on the promises that it makes to Albertans?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we are delivering on the promises we made to Albertans, and our Infrastructure minister is a big part of that. His department and my ministry are doing incredible work. As of right now there are about a hundred projects that have either just been completed or are under way and announced in this province. That's going to give us an incredible increased capacity in terms of desks and capacity for our students. Obviously, this tendering situation is not ideal, but as the minister said, he's able to move forward, and we're still going to be able to announce 50 new schools and 70 modernizations and even more on that.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, our kids are in hallways, they're on stages, they are in gymnasiums, and they are in community halls. Again to the Minister of Infrastructure: given the obvious problem here, couldn't the government spend less time putting up signs all over the province telling everybody what it intends on doing and then taking pictures in front of them and maybe more time walking the walk and building the schools that the kids in this province so desperately need?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, in answering this question, I'll strongly recommend that this member pick up his leader's speech of this morning and try to correlate his request for additional schools, for additional trailers with her promise of not having any more debt and extinguishing Albertans' debt. You can't have both. This government has made a promise to deliver, to build for the growth in this province, to provide children with classrooms, to provide seniors with housing, to provide patients with hospital space, not based on the notes from the leader of extinguishing hope and not building anymore and not to incur any debt, as she tends to call it. Get your story straight.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, your point of order at 2:38 has been noted.

Let us move on. Keep the preambles to those sups as short as you can. As I indicated earlier, I appreciate your co-operation.

Edmonton-McClung, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recent budget changes at the University of Alberta have some of my constituents worried that the quality of education will be adversely affected and will further impact the quality of postsecondary education in our province. My question is to the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education. How can I assure my constituents that this budget change will not affect the quality of the University of Alberta's excellent student education, that Albertans have come to expect?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would suggest to the member that first he assure his constituents that in Campus Alberta we have very committed chairs, very committed boards, and definitely very committed presidents and administrators to deal with whatever budgetary situation they are faced with in a manner that least affects the students. Actually, all of them deserve our gratitude for doing just so. They have made very difficult decisions in view of the budget, just like this government had to make some very difficult decisions, but being very student focused.

Mr. Xiao: To the same minister: given that as a result of the budget shortfall the University of Alberta suspended 20 arts programs this fall, why was there such an overwhelming amount of arts programs suspended versus other programs?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, all schools have made decisions based on their priorities, based on enrolment, based on participation. No matter what the budget is, every year new programs get put on, and old ones get eliminated. That simply happens.

I have to assure you of one thing, Mr. Speaker. This government knows the importance of arts. We know that if we are to grow, if we are to attract high-calibre Albertans, and if we are to retain Albertans in this province, we not only need a strong economy, but we need the quality of life that we get through culture and in arts.

Mr. Xiao: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that recent reports have top-tier executive salaries at the postsecondary institutions reaching upward of $500,000 plus, are there any plans to review executive pay at universities?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I have been meeting with chairs of all postsecondary schools, not only in groups at the table, but I have actually travelled to most if not all of the schools and met with them individually. My message to them has been always very clear. We are dealing with a very difficult financial situation, and in view of some of the unprecedented drop in revenue and the disaster expenditures, we have taken very difficult but necessary steps, and I expect those chairs to make similar decisions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Municipal Charters

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: is the reason the minister has reneged on or postponed or perhaps misplaced his promise and that of the Premier for city charters for both Edmonton and Calgary because it could affect the province's taxation powers? In the end, is this all about keeping the cities starved for resources and under the government's thumb?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, in fact, I would have to admit that the flood pushed us a little bit behind on the work on the civic charters, but the work on the charter is a three-way partnership. It's not up to just the Minister of Municipal Affairs to impose a charter. We're working on a collective three-way agreement. We got very, very close before the municipal election because we restarted the discussions about a month ago, but the mayor of Edmonton at that time said that he thought it was a prerogative of the new mayor and council to sign on it. So we have most of the work completed and carry on from there.

Ms Blakeman: Oh. Well, a change in tune. Thanks very much, Mr. Minister.

Given that he was talking about not big-city charters but civic charters a month ago and that the cities have been consistent in talking about big-city charters, can he explain why he's insisted on dumping these cities of hundreds of thousands of people in the same pot with towns and villages? I know he likes to talk about going to 343 of them, but do you not recognize the difference, or is this an attempt to minimize their influence on the life of the province?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, in fact, I completely recognize the difference, but I also respect every single one of the 349 municipalities in this province. To say that they're big-city charters leaves out Lethbridge and Medicine Hat and Red Deer and other municipalities which also might want to assume new responsibilities to serve their citizens, which is why – I don't care what they call them; I refer to it as a civic charter – it's going to be a charter about the new, invigorated relationship between our municipalities and this province.

Ms Blakeman: Well, given that both cities elected young, progressive, popular mayors and popularity is really attractive, why doesn't the minister just ride on their coattails and bring in the big-city charter they campaigned for? Go ahead.

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I see it's comedy hour already on the first day.

Mr. Speaker, given the fact that the minister himself and the mayors are all young, we're going to sit down, as I've said already, and start from an agreement that's 95 per cent in place and continue to work there to make sure that we have something in place that other municipalities will be able to adopt and work towards if they want to so that every single level of government in this province is able to best serve their municipalities. Period.

Education Funding

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, students, support staff, and teachers across the province came back to schools and classrooms this fall and immediately felt the effects of this government's broken promises to education. You can't put 11,000 more kids into a system while slashing $14.5 million from the Education budget without negative consequences. Simply put, more students with fewer dollars equals less learning. To the Education minister: why won't the minister admit that this PC government's cuts are hurting kids, support staff, and teachers?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, what I will admit is that this member needs to do better homework. If you look at the budget, I'm not sure where this $14 million cut comes from. As a matter of fact, I've got the budget in front of me, and the estimates for 2013-14 are $6.13 million, up from $6.085 million, and that's just the operations. If you include the incremental enrolment and the promise that we have to fund those incremental students in the system and the capital, there's approximately $300 million more in the budget this year than there was last year. I don't know how the math works over there, but in anybody's books that's an increase, not a cut.

Mr. Bilous: Promise made, promise broken.

Mr. Speaker, given that a typical classroom today is not only larger but is made up of an increasing number of students with special needs, including behavioural issues – there are English language learners and many others – and given that 500 positions were cut out of the education system due to this PC government's broken-promises budget, when will the minister realize that this government's short-sighted budget cuts to education have failed Alberta students?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, this certainly is a challenging budget, and school boards are going to have challenges with any budget. Obviously, one of the things people look at is class size, but I would agree with the member that one of the things we look at very closely – and it is one the more important things going forward – is the quality of the teacher in the classroom and the supports they have and what we're putting toward inclusion. That's another area of the budget that we increased this last year. I know this is his first day in question period as the Education critic, but if he did his homework, he would know that the class size initiative and the special-needs funding both went up last year.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, given that there was already a funding shortfall prior to Budget 2013, it's simply misleading to say that per-student funding is enough to make up for that shortfall. To the Minister of Education: are Alberta's staff, teachers, and kids really such a low priority for this PC government?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, you know, he may not be a math teacher, but he does know the answer to that question. Through Inspiring Ed and other things we've shown and we have proven that we're putting kids first, and we're investing an incredible amount of money into education, more than any other province or jurisdiction virtually in North America.

Now, we can be very proud of our system. Coming back from OECD meetings with 43 other Education ministers from across the globe, we learned that Canada scored extremely well on some of the international tests that were done over the last decade and Alberta scored top of all of the Canadian jurisdictions in all three categories.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Edmonton-Riverview.

Health Care Wait Times (continued)

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Wildrose cares about patients who are suffering with long wait times in our province, but no matter who this government puts in charge, things are just not getting better. The problem isn't new. It has existed for years, and this government has been told over and over and over. We can only be thankful for the heroic work of our health care professionals, who are keeping our health care system together. Can the Minister of Health tell Albertans why he is failing to put a stop to growing wait times, leaving Albertans to suffer?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government takes the issue of wait times very seriously. In answer to the earlier question asked by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, I talked about some of our successes in reducing hip and knee surgery wait times, in reducing cataract surgeries, in reducing the wait for bypass surgeries. There is much work to be done right across the country, including here in Alberta. The answers to this in many cases are found in innovation. If we look to central assessment and central intake of patients as we are doing in the case of hip and knee surgery, we see amazing results, and the hon. member is right to credit front-line workers for its success.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you. Given that this is impacting real people and that they expect real answers and that today's report shows that Albertans are waiting an astonishing 128 weeks for cornea transplants while people in Nova Scotia only have to wait 24 weeks, will the minister explain why he waited until last Friday, to do a press release, to buy more transplant tissues while Albertans have been left suffering?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that the hon. member recognizes the initiative that has been undertaken to reduce waiting times for cornea transplants. As the hon. member probably knows, there is a growing demand for this procedure. It's often conducted in connection with cataract surgery. Last week we showed that Alberta once again leads the country. Our plan to import additional cornea tissue from B.C. and the United States will allow us to do an additional 500 surgeries between now and Christmas and reduce the waiting time from three years in the past to three months.

Mrs. Forsyth: Minister, you should have done it earlier.

You know what is extreme, Mr. Speaker? Albertans waiting three weeks for a pacemaker when the Canadian average is three and a half days. Why, Minister? Why?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what is extreme is the notion put forward earlier this afternoon in question period by the Leader of the Official Opposition that the solution to reducing wait times in our province should be to send patients outside of our jurisdiction and perhaps outside of the country, for all we know, in order to receive services that are here and available in Alberta. We are leading the country in terms of innovation to reduce waiting times in many, many areas. It's a testament to the innovation and hard work of front-line staff in Alberta Health Services, and I thank them for it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by Livingstone-MacLeod.

Firearm Collection by Emergency Responders

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This summer saw an unprecedented flood and an equally unprecedented response: our front-line responders of emergency management, police, fire, EMS, utility companies, and the Red Cross, to name a few, as well as the individual Albertans that helped out in heroic ways. Some of the front-line responders, the men and women of the RCMP, have been unfairly accused of inappropriately seizing firearms from homes. To the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General: were the men and women of the RCMP that were dealing with the emergency response directed in any way to search for firearms?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure this member, being a former staff sergeant with the Edmonton Police Service, knows full well that police do not take orders from politicians in Alberta or anywhere else in the country. To answer his question, there was no such order from my office or anyone in this government. I would refer him to section 117.04(2) of the federal Criminal Code and section 19 of the Emergency Management Act, both of which give the authority for police officers to enter businesses or private homes to save lives and protect property. We owe a debt of gratitude to all of our first responders.

Mr. Young: To the minister: when did you first hear about the seizure of firearms, and what was your response?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was there first-hand, and I saw cars floating everywhere. I saw absolute destruction everywhere. One of the first things I did was go to the RCMP detachment on June 26. On June 27 I sent a letter to Deputy Commissioner Dale McGowan, which I will table later today, confirming that law-abiding firearms owners' rights would be respected just like this government has done for the last 20 years.

Mr. Young: Are the firearms that were seized for safekeeping going to be returned to their owners?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, my department has advised me today that approximately 95 per cent of the firearms that were stored actually have been returned. It's over 500 that have been collected and returned. On top of that, the RCMP executed 600 rooftop rescues and saved 650 pets. This government is proud to stand up for the RCMP, unlike the Leader of the Opposition, who didn't even thank the RCMP today in her statement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-MacLeod, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Emergency Medical Service Response Times

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Southern Alberta is in a crisis due to shortages. Rural ambulance wait times are often up to 45 minutes after years of tinkering with this by government, and it is putting residents at risk. For a farmer who collapses in his field, a gardener experiencing sudden chest pain, or a senior in a facility a half hour truly means the difference between life and death. To the Minister of Health: what are you doing to address this unacceptable government failure within Alberta's ambulance system?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, a few years ago the government made a policy decision, and in my view it is completely in line with what Albertans expect. We recognize the fact that EMS is health care. We have a proud tradition of some EMS services continuing today to be offered by municipalities across the province, but we recognize that for many Albertans the front door to the health system is often that emergency medical services worker that responds to them when they're in need. As the hon. member knows, we've taken initiatives to centralize dispatch across the province. We continue to work with municipalities on other measures to improve the service.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that more than 14 reeves and mayors from across rural Alberta wrote the minister a letter, which I'll be tabling, by the way, here in a few minutes, requesting that he reconsider plans to consolidate ambulance services, can the minister say now whether or not he plans on finally meeting with these community leaders and working with them, not against them, to fix these EMS wait times?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I know the letter very well, and if the hon. member has studied the letter, he will also know that the majority of mayors who signed it have already consolidated their local dispatch service with the Alberta Health Services central dispatch system. We continue to work with municipalities in the case of cities such as Red Deer and Lethbridge. We're working very closely with elected officials there to time the consolidation of dispatch in a way that will be streamlined and seamless from the point of view of people who use the service. This is a vast improvement in Canada in the delivery of EMS, and we continue to see it through.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm not sure if that's exactly true, but given that Albertans' lives depend on immediate response times, can the minister explain how centralizing ambulance services to Alberta's two major cities serves our rural municipalities better, or is this due to become just another failed policy on this minister's record?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the initiative is around the centralization of the dispatch function, not all of the EMS services. As the hon. member will know, there are multiple areas in the province still today – they are dwindling in number – where the dispatch services cannot be looked at and managed on a provincial basis. The result – and it might be the case in the hon. member's own constituency – is that entire areas of the province appear dark when it comes to organization and deployment of emergency medical services resources. This is an issue the hon. member should be concerned about because it will result in his ambulances being available to people when he needs them most.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Airdrie, you rose on a point of order during the minister's first answer, at 2:55, and it was noted.

Calgary-Hawwood, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Trade with China

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's strong trade relationship with China continues to grow. Last month our Premier went on a 12-day trade mission to China, which is the third visit since she became Premier. As globalization continues, countries will inevitably become interconnected and also, in the meantime, compete to access emerging markets like China. My question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. What was the outcome of those trips that we made, and can you comment specifically on how we are attracting Chinese foreign investment?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dallas: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A pillar of the building Alberta plan, a top priority for the government is opening up new markets. It's about realizing fair prices, and it's about getting optimum access for our products and services. The Premier's recent mission to China really introduced potential investors and buyers to opportunities that exist right here in Alberta, and it provided support to those businesses and investors that grows their business.

Mr. Luan: Given the subsequent trip, where I think the Minister of Energy went to China and signed an agreement with the President of China, Mr. Xi Jinping, my question to the same minister is: what's the significance of this agreement?

Mr. Dallas: Well, Mr. Speaker, energy security is a key driver for Chinese energy policy. This historic agreement, signed by my colleague the Minister of Energy, recognizes that there are mutual benefits and opportunities in energy collaboration to work on. In particular, that framework allows for co-operation on policy and regulatory best practices in unconventional resource development, collaboration on integrated resource management, sharing of knowledge on carbon capture and storage, and the implementation of a technical series for our industry leaders.

Mr. Luan: My last supplemental question to the same minister. Given all those opportunities we have for working with China, can you help us to understand: will those opportunities translate into any tangible gains for Alberta?

Mr. Dallas: Yes. Mr. Speaker, these opportunities are very significant. I mean, Asia is expected to account for around 60 per cent of global middle-class consumption by 2030. Our plan is to capitalize on this opportunity. It's part of our renewed international strategy. We'll work closely with partners in the region, we'll identify and advance areas of mutual interest, we'll develop strategic relationships, and we'll address barriers to diversification for world markets.

3:00

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Airdrie, you actually rose on a point of order in response to the second response given by the Minister of Justice, not the one by the Minister of Health, and I've been informed of that, so that has been corrected. Thank you very much.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Official Opposition and Government Policies

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me take you back. We all remember the debacle that was Coke classic. It was supposed to be an improvement on the original Coke, but it was widely rejected by consumers because it was a pale imitation of the real thing. The Official Opposition has now embarked on their own new-Coke debacle, having added heaping doses of artificial sweetener to try to make their extreme policies more politically palatable.

Mr. Speaker, they claim to believe in climate change. They claim to believe in equality. They claim to believe in all sorts of things, but these are not the same claims they have made in the past. These are not even the same claims they made last Thursday. It's just fake sweetness to mask the bitter taste of intolerance and extremism.

While they claim all these things, Mr. Speaker, this government actually believes in climate change. We believe in equality. We believe in dignity and human rights, and we believe in building Alberta. We believe in making this Alberta the best place to live for the 4 million Albertans of today and the million more who will make this province their home in the next decade.

They want to pretend they're progressive conservatives, Mr. Speaker, but they're not. They are new Coke. They're still the same old party. They're still extreme and intolerant. As new Coke was full of empty calories, the party across the way is full of empty promises. Albertans deserve better.

Speaker's Ruling Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, there's a long-standing tradition in this House that we do not interrupt members when they're giving a private member's statement. Now, over 20 years, believe me, I've heard many private members' statements, and some have been humorous, some have been poisonous, some have been off the wall, and some have actually been right on topic. I would ask again, House leaders: please review this matter. I ignored two or three people who were thinking of raising a point of order during this last exchange, and I would ask also that all of you review the courtesy of not interrupting another member when he or she is giving a private member's statement.

In the end, I would ask all of you to please review your private members' statements and be careful of no personal attacks, no personality attacks, and so on. I'm not saying that one was. I'm just saying: please, let's review this. We're off to a reasonably good day given one or two little faltering. Let's please try and stay at the highest level possible here, I ask, please.

Let us move on, then, to the hon. Member for Airdrie.

Official Opposition Policies

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, this past weekend our Wildrose caucus attended our party's AGM in Red Deer to discuss and debate policy. We passed policies on fiscal responsibility, government transparency, funding for students with special needs, protection for seniors and the vulnerable, and lowering our province's emissions, just to name a few. We also rescinded several policies that were confusing and outdated. Our entire membership and caucus also unanimously passed a powerful statement affirming what we've always believed, that all men and women are and must be treated as equal by their government regardless of who they are or where they come from.

I'd also like to thank the minister of sightseeing and five-star hotels for attending our AGM and affirming for all Albertans how utterly terrified this PC government is of losing power in 2016. Well done, sir, and well done, Mr. Baranski, wherever you are. The PCs will continue to use fearmongering and smear tactics to attack the Wildrose because that's all they've got left, but as we've seen in federal politics, the fear card doesn't work more than once. Eventually people just stop believing you, and when they do, they'll look at your record, and your record stinks. It's a record of debt and deficits. It's a record of scandal and ethical failures. It's a record of cuts to the vulnerable and pay raises for MLAs and golden handshakes for your buddies. It's a record of bullying, intimidation, and of total, utter incompetence. It's a record that will come to an end in 2016.

The Wildrose is ready to lead. We are ready to balance the budget, end the days of debt. We are ready to clean out and disinfect these halls of cronyism and backroom dealing. We are ready to empower local communities to govern themselves, to axe corporate subsidies and executive perks for government and health executives, and to instead spend tax dollars on what matters: caring for the vulnerable and the sick, educating our children, and building core infrastructure. The Wildrose is here to give Alberta back to Albertans, Mr. Speaker, and we aren't going anywhere until that happens.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Flood Recovery

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The events of June 20 changed the lives of thousands of Albertans and the ways we think about ourselves, our community, and our government. It was a terrifying example of the powers of nature and has resulted in a renewed appreciation and respect for the watersheds in which we live.

In my constituency of Banff-Cochrane the communities of Canmore, Exshaw, Lac des Arcs, Benchlands, and Bragg Creek all sustained significant damage. As well, much of the infrastructure in Kananaskis Country was destroyed, and businesses like TransAlta, Lafarge, and Sunshine Village sustained millions of dollars of damage, not to mention the hundreds of small businesses that were affected by the flooding.

Mr. Speaker, the common thread among all affected communities was the strength, resilience, and compassion of otherwise ordinary Albertans that stepped to the aid of their neighbours and their communities, many without a thought to their own personal risk. They are truly heroes, each and every one, in their own right. We all have the right to be very proud as Albertans for the way in which we have dealt with this disaster.

The government has demonstrated amazing leadership from the first minutes of this disaster, and the co-operation and responsiveness of all ministries is greatly appreciated by everyone affected. I would like to personally thank, though, Associate Minister Fawcett and his staff, who have worked tirelessly for our communities.

Mr. Speaker, when we elect our leaders, we do so on the basis of those qualities that we associate with leadership – strength, integrity, knowledge, and so on – but seldom do we ever really have an opportunity to see if those qualities translate into a leader. We are indeed fortunate in Alberta that the leadership qualities we saw in Premier Redford two years ago did in fact lead to the emergence of a compassionate, strong, and insightful leader at a time when we needed one the most. To the Premier: thank you.

The Speaker: Remember, hon. members, that we do not use first names or surnames in the Assembly. I know you all know that, but it's just a reminder.

Let us move on, then, to Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Calgary-Fort.

Calgary Southwest Ring Road

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 25, 2013, an important announcement was made by the Premier and the Minister of Transportation, and that was the tentative agreement between the province of Alberta and the Tsuu T'ina Nation regarding the southwest portion of the Calgary ring road. This road has been shown in transportation plans for over 60 years and has been and will continue to be a major concern to my constituents for, you see, the southwest ring road path runs parallel to the entire west boundary of my constituency. A north-south roadway between Anderson Road and Glenmore Trail has long been considered, and the announcement indicates to residents of Cedarbrae, Oakridge, and Lakeview that the section of 37th Street west of their homes will not be part of the road. I want to sincerely thank the residents of Calgary-Glenmore who have kept this issue front and centre for many years. This is a first step, and I will continue to work with them to make this road a reality.

Unfortunately, the plan does mean that several important buildings such as the Sarcee Seven Chiefs Sportsplex, the Chief Joseph Big Plume Building, the Tsuu T'ina Nation Culture Museum, and the Buffalo Run Golf Course along with several houses will have to be moved. These buildings are homes, employment places, and recreational centres for nation residents and Calgarians. To quote Chief Whitney: my heart, my compassion goes to the residents who will have to relocate and accommodate this project.

Completing the Calgary ring road is an investment in building Alberta, and it will bring benefits for the safety, prosperity, and success of Calgarians, the Tsuu T'ina, and all Albertans as it will dramatically improve traffic flows in, through, and around the Calgary region. My heartfelt appreciation to the Premier, the Minister of Transportation, Chief Whitney, and the people of Tsuu T'ina, who have been working together to achieve this agreement. I would also like to acknowledge the city of Calgary for their support of the project. Thank you, colleagues, for this is another example of promises made, promises kept.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Calgary Zoo Flood Recovery

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last spring everyone witnessed damaging, devastating images of flooding in southern Alberta. Communities along the Bow and Elbow rivers in my constituency were hit but through their own strength made a quick recovery.

Today I wish to talk about the Calgary Zoo, one of the areas totally hit by the flood. Many vulnerable and extremely frightened animals were impacted at the zoo as the flood waters rose. Zoo employees risked their lives countless times through chest-deep water to ensure animals were safely evacuated. Unfortunately, several animals perished during the flood, including many tropical fish and a peacock.

I had the opportunity to visit the mud-covered zoo right after the water had receded and the cleanup got started. In addition to the animals' displacement and loss of life, the estimated financial cost to the zoo was $60 million, including $50 million in damages and $10 million in lost revenue.

Now, several months later, the Calgary Zoo is closer to getting back on its feet thanks to the hard work of the zoo employees, volunteers, and many ordinary Calgarians. Within a month's time all employees, volunteers, and sponsors will see their months of hard work come to fruition. The Calgary Zoo is scheduled to reopen on November 28. I'm proud to live in a city where generosity runs high and where citizens demonstrate so much tenacity in getting the city back on its feet. Because of their hard work the Calgary Zoo once again will prosper and be restored to its place as the best in the province and the best zoo in the world.

Our thanks go to the Calgary Zoo leadership, led by Dr. Clément Lanthier, and many dedicated staff and volunteers and donors. Alberta is simply the place for people with the spirit to achieve.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Richard Arthur Miller

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to remember Rick Miller, who died of prostate cancer on Saturday at the age of 53. [applause] Thank you. Rick served as MLA for Edmonton-Rutherford from 2004 to '08 and as finance critic and caucus whip for the Liberals. Later he worked as chief of staff for the official Liberal caucus.

In addition to his public life, Rick was a committed Rotarian, always volunteering time for projects. He was a successful owner of a family business, Alberta Stamp and Marking, and an avid hang-glider. He was proud of his family and brought his kids to the Legislature and to political functions whenever he could. He had a great extended family and somehow managed to spend time with them and carry out all of his caucus, constituency, and party duties.

It was Rick's tireless work – sorry, fellas – not the Wildrose's, which uncovered the donations from the municipalities to the governing party, resulting in the warlords of Alberta series of releases. Rick was an honourable politician, who preserved the integrity of our democratic institutions. He was easy to work with no matter which side of the House you were on. He brought a steady, practical, and warm presence to whatever he did.

I have two favourite Assembly stories about Rick. In the spring of 2005 Reverend Abbott, then the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor, described a federal MP, Belinda Stronach, as whoring herself out for power. The next day Rick used his private member's statement to talk about how important it was for everyone, but especially men, to mentor and encourage young women to participate fully in democratic society. He was clearly thinking about his own daughter, but I was struck by how forward thinking and positive Rick's response to Reverend Abbott's terrible comments was.

Rick loved being a politician and was fond of saying: "We have the best job in the world. We get paid to try and overthrow the government."

But one last quote. Rick was once accused of falling asleep in this Chamber. When questioned, he retorted that he wasn't sleeping; he was merely resting.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member, and may he continue his rest in peace.

May we revert to the introduction of visitors?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly guests that we have here in the gallery today from the Alberta Environmental Monitoring Management Board, that are seated in our members' gallery. I am so proud to introduce them here as part of this monumental day. I would like to recognize the outstanding work these individuals have put forward in the legislation that I'll table later on this afternoon.

We have joining us Dr. Gregory Taylor from the University of Alberta. I also want to congratulate Dr. Taylor on receiving the outstanding contribution to the Alberta science and technology community award this weekend, including a $10,000 prize. Congratulations to Dr. Howard Tennant, our chair of our advisory board; Dr. Arlene Ponting, CEO of the science Alberta foundation; Dr. Ron Wallace, a former board member of Wildlife Habitat Canada and former executive director of the Northwest Territories Water Board; Mr. Doug Tupper, who is the former assistant deputy minister in the department of environment; Mr. Paul Clark, a board member of the National Research Council Canada and the Alberta Science and Research Authority; and Mr. Neil McCrank, who is with us here as well, a former ERCB CEO.

Special thank you to two of our outstanding staff with Alberta Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, our CEO and the CEO of monitoring, Ernie Hui, and someone who is very dear to our hearts, who couldn't join us here today but is in our thoughts and prayers, Mr. Bob Barraclough, the ADM of monitoring transition.

I want to thank all of you for the outstanding work. What we table today is from the efforts of you and so many people, so thank you very much for being with us here today. Please, if you can, rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Families and Communities I'm pleased to table copies of the committee's report on Bill 204, the Irlen Syndrome Testing Act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North and referred to the committee on April 22, 2013.

I'd like to acknowledge the support provided by the staff of the Legislative Assembly Office. A sincere appreciation is also extended to the organizations and individuals who contributed written submissions and made oral presentations as part of our review of the process. I'd also like to thank my fellow committee members, representing all parties in the Assembly, who worked together to ensure that a thorough, co-operative review was done of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, the report includes the committee's recommendations to the ministries of Education and Health to ensure that children throughout Alberta who suffer from visual challenges are accommodated appropriately so they may reach their full academic potential. The report also includes the committee's recommendation that Bill 204 not proceed.

I request the concurrence of the Assembly with respect to the report on Bill 204, the Irlen Syndrome Testing Act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:20

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 78.4(b) I stand to speak to the concurrence motion regarding the referral of Bill 204.

Speaker's Ruling

Debate on Private Members' Public Bills

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but I must because we have a very unique situation that has arisen here on which I need to make a few brief comments.

As members have just heard, the chair of the Standing Committee on Families and Communities has just presented a report from that committee on Bill 204, known as the Irlen Syndrome Testing Act. The chair moved that the Assembly concur in that report. This follows the usual practice when this type of committee reports on a bill that has been referred to it by this Assembly. The unique part here, however, is that motions for concurrence from this type of committee have not been debated in the past once they have been presented and a motion for concurrence has been uttered.

At this time the Assembly is still considering items in the daily Routine, which is not the usual time for debating motions. In fact, Standing Order 2 states in part that "In all contingencies unprovided for, the question shall be decided by the Speaker," and it continues on. In this case the committee's report concerns a private member's public bill. Therefore, it would be inappropriate in the chair's view to ask the Government House Leader and other members to find time to schedule a debate on the motion for concurrence during government business since it is a private member's public bill.

Accordingly, it also seems to me that the more logical time to debate this motion for concurrence or otherwise is during the item known as Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders. This item of business, as you all know, occurs on Monday afternoons, which means that our Assembly will have an opportunity to debate this motion further, in fact, today, this afternoon to be exact, immediately after the items of business called Written Questions and Motions for Returns. My understanding is that there is only one written question for consideration today, which means that we should have ample time for the said debate to carry on.

Furthermore and in keeping with the time limits for private members' public bills found in Standing Order 29(3), members who wish to participate in the debate on the concurrence motion will be limited to 10 minutes each in their speaking time. The mover of the motion will of course have five minutes to close debate thereafter. As I've said, there should be lots of time to do that this afternoon. At least, we hope so.

So thank you for your attention and providing me with this opportunity to provide some direction on this unique situation. As always, I am interested in any comments that you might have regarding what I've just said, in particular from the House leaders but also from members in general, outside of the proceedings of the Assembly in this regard. If you wish to write to me, please let me know.

Thank you.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees (continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship I'm pleased to table copies of a report on Bill 205, Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2012, sponsored by the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake and referred to the committee on April 22, 2013.

I'd be remiss if I didn't acknowledge the Legislative Assembly Office staff for their always excellent work on this report, and I'd also like to thank the presenters from the Ministry of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development for their presentation and subsequent written submission to the committee on the issues raised on this bill. Finally, I'd like to thank my fellow committee members for their ongoing dedication to all matters examined by our committee and for their endorsement of a very practical solution here.

Mr. Speaker, the report recommends that the committee shall request an annual update from Alberta Environment and Sustainable Resource Development for up to three years on the department's commercial fishing consultation practices, including any recommendations for improvement. The report also includes the committee's recommendation that the bill not proceed.

I request the concurrence of the Assembly with respect to the report on Bill 205, Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2012.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Calahasen: I also want to rise today to speak under Standing Order 78.4(b), to talk about this, to debate this.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. As I just indicated to the Member for Red Deer-North and to all members, the most appropriate time for the debate on this matter and other such committee motions for concurrence would be this afternoon once we get to that stage. It'll take place prior to 5 o'clock. That having been said, we'll proceed on that basis.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, you have a notice of motion?

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 30 and after providing your office with the appropriate notice this morning, I wish to inform you that on the completion of the daily Routine I move to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to hold an emergency debate on a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the negative impacts on patient care and safety resulting from Alberta Health Services' decision in June 2013 to significantly reduce the number of home-care providers in Edmonton and in Calgary by cancelling contracts with existing providers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Bill 27

Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 27, the Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act. The intent of this legislation is to improve the safety of Albertans and help municipalities develop stronger and more resilient communities. The act will help address challenges stemming from the recent and unprecedented flooding in several ways. It will protect potential buyers of properties in flood hazard areas by giving the government authority to place notices on land titles that indicate whether a property is eligible for disaster assistance in the event of another flood. It will also help to reduce and prevent the building within floodways. It will make flood mitigation funding available for funding applicants by establishing authority for this funding under the Emergency Management Act as a standard item of disaster recovery programs and give us the option to extend the duration of a provincial state of emergency from 14 to 28 days without having to return to the Legislature, thereby reducing the amount of time government officials spend on administrative and legislative tasks during an emergency so we can focus on the task at hand.

Mr. Speaker, I look forward to speaking more about the benefits of this legislation in the days and weeks to come. I'm confident that this will result in enhanced safety for all Albertans and Alberta communities. I'm proud to table Bill 27, the Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act, and move that this bill be read for the first time.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a first time]

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, you have another bill?

Bill 28

Modernizing Regional Governance Act

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm also pleased to introduce Bill 28, the Modernizing Regional Governance Act, which involves amendments to the Municipal Government Act, commonly referred to as the MGA. The amendments will formally legislate the Capital Region Board and enable the creation of other growth-management boards in Alberta. The Capital Region Board is a 24-member intermunicipal organization responsible for co-ordinating development between municipal jurisdictions, including land-use planning, interregional transit planning, and land, air, and water considerations, for integration into plans. These amendments will result in a more proactive approach to managing development in high-growth areas of our province. I look forward in the weeks and months ahead to debating this bill as we move forward.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Bill 29

Pharmacy and Drug Amendment Act, 2013

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 29, the Pharmacy and Drug Amendment Act, 2013. Bill 29 would ensure that Alberta's drug list is accurate and enforceable and reflects changes at Health Canada as they move to an online prescription drug list that will be easier for Alberta's pharmacists to access and understand. This amendment to the Pharmacy and Drug Act will replace all references to schedule F with references to the prescription drug list which takes effect this December. As such, these amendments are administrative in nature, and I request the support of the House for first reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

3:30

Bill 31 Protecting Alberta's Environment Act

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 31, the Protecting Alberta's Environment Act. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Bill 31 will establish the Alberta environmental monitoring, evaluation, and reporting agency. It will be the first of its kind in Canada and will fundamentally change the way Alberta's environment is monitored. This arm's-length, open, and transparent public agency will lead environmental monitoring in Alberta. Its focus will be on sound science, a comprehensive, co-ordinated monitoring and reporting of land, air, water, and biodiversity, beginning in the oil sands area. The work of this agency will provide the best possible data that will be used to make the best possible decisions when it comes to responsible development of the province's natural resources.

This bill also creates a science advisory panel, that will oversee the scientific work of the agency to ensure integrity is maintained. This is yet another step, Mr. Speaker, that this government has taken to demonstrate to Albertans and to the world that we are committed to environmental stewardship and responsible resource development.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I am so grateful to my guests that are in the House today for all the excellent work and advice they have given to provide for this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, do you have a tabling?

Ms Blakeman: I do indeed, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today, both of them, interestingly, on the same subject. The first is an e-mail that I received from Garrick Burrton over the summer, who wanted to bring to my attention and asked me to work toward a change in legislation regarding the number of properties that are available for rent that would allow people to have small pets. He notes that given the amount of academic literature supporting companion animal benefits, "having animals available for renters will improve the lives and health of a sizeable percentage of Albertans."

The second e-mail is also from a constituent, Diana Sully. She brings the same argument forward but specific to seniors and is trying to get people to support her and others in the ability of seniors to be renting or having affordable units to live in that would allow them to keep a small pet.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings for you today, five copies of each. The first one is a letter that I wrote to Dale McGowan, the deputy commissioner of RCMP K Division, on June 27 asking to confirm that the firearms in High River were stored and not confiscated or seized.

The second item was the response on June 28, indicating, among other things, that these items are temporarily stored by the RCMP in anticipation of their safe return to lawful owners.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Livingstone-Macleod, did you have a tabling?

Mr. Stier: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just going to table today five copies of the letter I made reference to earlier from the city of Lethbridge with regard to the request to reconsider the decision to consolidate ambulance dispatch services.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Highwood I'd like to table today Studies in Health Policy dated October 2013 and entitled Waiting Your Turn: Wait Times for Health Care in Canada, 2013 Report, that she referred to in her questions with regard to wait times.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. On behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter sent to Mr. Johnson by Frank Bruseker, president of ATA local 38. Mr. Bruseker's letter raises alarming concerns about teacher burnout in Calgary public schools due to larger class sizes that they're experiencing this year, a direct result of the cuts to Education. This letter was sent on September 27, 2013, yet a month later, till this date, Mr. Bruseker has yet to receive a response to these concerns.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others?

If not, then I will take the liberty to also make three tablings, with the requisite number of copies being provided in each case. First, a letter, dated August 29, from the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo indicating his resignation from the following three committees: the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, and the Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee.

Secondly, pursuant to the Legislative Assembly Act I would like to table with members copies of Members' Services Committee Order 07/13, entitled Members' Allowances Amendment Order (No. 27), dealing with members' temporary residence allowance, deemed effective September 1, 2013.

Thirdly, two reports, dated October 16, 2013, from the office of the Ethics Commissioner regarding the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning which, as required, were made public and distributed to members on the same day received, which was October 16, 2013.

Let's deal with the points of order. I think we have four.

The first point of order that I have was from the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. Would you like to proceed, sir?

Point of Order Questions to Committee Chairmen

Mr. Saskiw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise according to Standing Order 23(1), a relatively rarely used section in the standing orders. It relates to introducing any matter in debate that offends practices and precedents in this Assembly. Actually, this was with respect to a question that was asked to a chair of a current committee, and that's the Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee. Subsequently the Premier, or the government in a sense, answered it. According to House of Commons Procedure and Practice it states that "questions seeking information about the schedule and agenda of committees may be directed to Chairs of committees." I had asked a question with respect to the agenda of the Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, I would refer you to a ruling dated May 1, 1997, as well as a ruling on April 24, 1997, which highlight the ability of members in this Assembly to ask questions to chairs of respective committees provided that the scope is limited to procedural matters such as agendas and other procedural issues. Specifically, it states that questions may be put to members who chair statutorily created boards, committees, or commissions but must relate directly to their responsibilities as an executive of that body. Once again, [obviously the chairs] cannot speak for the government, so questions of policy must go to a member of Executive Council.

In this circumstance, Mr. Speaker, I had asked a question directly to a chair with respect to an agenda of the committee, and in this instance the Premier interrupted, which is contrary to the practices and precedents of this Assembly, as is outlined both in House of Commons Procedure and Practice as well as the rulings of this Assembly. I'm not 100 per cent certain what the effective remedy is here, but I guess just a reiteration that we are allowed to ask chairs of committees and that subsequently we can ask this question again and that it not be answered by the government but, rather, the respective chair.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the hon. member knows that what he was trying to do with his question was to get up to some mischief. He knows that the chair of that committee has tendered a letter of resignation and that there's a motion on the Order Paper, which will be dealt with tomorrow, with respect to changing membership on committees.

He also knows, if he reads the sections that he referred to, that the footnote on page 506, footnote 90, indicates that the Speaker may recognize whomever rises to answer the question. In fact, the only person who rose to answer the question was the Premier, and it was quite within her purview to do so, recognizing the mischief that the hon. member was up to. Subsequently I rose to answer the follow-up question and indicated that it's not actually the normal practice of this House, notwithstanding House of Commons Procedure and Practice, to actually ask questions of the chairs of committees because there is a forum for those questions to be asked with respect to the agenda, and that is in the committees.

The question that was asked was actually bordering on a question of whether or not – in fact, I think the preamble to the question indicated some discussion about the proceedings in the committee. In fact, the question that the Premier responded to, as I recall, dealt more with what members of the committee had done or not done in the committee, which is clearly outside appropriate question processes.

The Speaker: This is a relatively straightforward matter, and we can clarify it very quickly, I believe. In actual fact, you are both right to an extent. I note on page 506 that questions can be posed to a committee chair, as was explained by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, and it gives examples of what may or may not be appropriate in that regard. I'll just note that for the record.

However, there is also a notation in House of Commons Procedure and Practice on page 506, which I might refer you all to, where under footnote 90 it states the following:

See also Debates, February 8, 2008, p. 2834 where a question was addressed to the Chair of a standing committee who [in that case] was an opposition Member. During one Question Period in 2008, opposition Members twice addressed questions to the Chair of a standing committee and the Government House Leader responded. The following day, the Liberal House Leader rose on a point of order and asked the Speaker if someone other than the Chair of a committee could respond to a question concerning the agenda of a committee. The Speaker advised that his role is to "take a look at those who are standing to answer and choose who is going to answer". He indicated that he had recognized the Government House Leader because he was the only Member rising to respond (Debates, February 7, 2008, p. 2743; February 8, 2008, pp. 2835-7).

As such, there is no point of order there, but it's a good point of clarification. Thank you to both members for participating in that exchange.

Let's go on to the second point of order. I believe it was raised by the Member for Airdrie.

Point of Order Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is referring to section 13(2) of the standing orders. I understand completely, as is your purview and as is appropriate, that you are trying to keep honour and decorum in this House, and good on you for doing so. I'm referring in this instance to the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, who referred to a piece of government legislation that's currently in place as a "piece of junk." I've looked through Beauchesne's, the Standing Orders. I cannot find anywhere where criticizing a piece of government legislation, referring to it as a piece of junk, is out of order. I just would like to understand. Please instruct us on how we as members can criticize legislation of the government appropriately. If we want to refer to it as incorrect or junk, I think that's our purview, and I don't see any precedent in the orders or any book that says that we can't refer to government legislation as a piece of junk.

The Speaker: Thank you. I'm more than happy to instruct in this regard. I'm going to take a few minutes to do this, and I hope I will have everyone's rapt attention. The part that caught my attention was when the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills said – I could stand corrected if the Blues come out differently in Hansard, but here's what I have from the Blues from the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. He says:

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that an MLA has been found to be in direct violation of the Conflicts of Interest Act legislation six times and lobbied on an issue that would benefit him personally, is it not clear that this piece of junk ethics legislation only serves to protect the Premier and her own MLAs?

Now, the words uttered one day in a particular context may or may not be parliamentary. They may or may not be unparliamentary. It depends on things I have reminded you of before and I'm going to be very happy to remind you all of yet again.

I'm going to go to House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 618, line 2, where it says some wonderful things. With respect to the title, Unparliamentary Language, where this is found, line 2 talks about "offensive, provocative or threatening language" and so on. Let me quote to you that passage.

The proceedings of the House are based on a long-standing tradition of respect for the integrity of all Members. Thus, the use of offensive, provocative or threatening language in the House is strictly forbidden.

It goes on to talk about personal attacks, which was not the case here.

However, it then goes on in the second paragraph to say:

If language used in debate appears questionable to the Speaker, he or she will intervene.

And it goes on to say:

However, the Speaker may address a matter of unparliamentary language at once if he or she believes the matter to be sufficiently serious to merit immediate attention, which I certainly did.

Normally, the matter is dealt with at the conclusion of Question Period. Since the Speaker must rule on the basis of the context in which the language was used, points of order raised in regard to questionable language must be raised as soon as possible after the alleged irregularity has occurred.

Let me go on to page 619, where it further states:

In dealing with unparliamentary language, the Speaker takes into account the tone, manner and intention of the Member speaking; the person to whom the words at issue were directed; the degree of provocation; and, most importantly, whether or not the remarks created disorder in the Chamber. Thus, language deemed unparliamentary one day may not necessarily be deemed unparliamentary the following day.

And it goes on to talk a little bit more about that.

Now, I indicated very shortly thereafter that I thought, hon. members, that the use of the term "junk legislation" was offensive to the proprieties of this House, would be offensive if it was used against any one of the members of government or opposition; it matters not one iota to me. It is offensive. I found it to be rude, inappropriate. It did cause some disorder, and now it's causing us to take up additional time.

So I would ask all hon. members, not just this one – I know you spend time crafting your questions; you don't oftentimes stand in here and wing them – to please review what you're saying and, furthermore, the manner and the tone and the timbre with which you intend to deliver it and the intention behind it. You may disagree with legislation. You may disagree with the ethics report. You may disagree with your own colleagues or your own caucus. That's up to you. But how you do it, and when you bring it into this House, for heaven's sake, let us all strive to present it in a manner that does not violate the tradition for which we were all standing here a year and a half ago and pledging we would uphold.

In my view, operating within the confines of what I just read to you from House of Commons procedure, I interjected on that basis. I will not stand here and allow that kind of disorder and disruption to be created in reference to anyone's particular bill or motion. It's simply inappropriate. As such, I hope that clarifies that matter, and I hope we won't see a repeat of that.

Let us move on to item 3. It is a point of order. I think it was the hon. Member for Airdrie.

Point of Order

Factual Accuracy

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I refer to Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), specifically the first of two. The first one is regarding the comments by the Deputy Premier – is he the Deputy Premier still? Yeah, I think he might be. Who knows, eh? The Deputy Premier commented that the Wildrose is proposing that we don't build anything anymore. Again, I guess maybe this is a point of clarification.

It's certainly not a truthful statement. We obviously have tabled a plan in this Legislature. Our 10-year capital plan said that if in government this year we would spend just over $4 billion on infrastructure, which is roughly a billion dollars less than the government over there. Indeed, it would be correct to say that we would spend a billion dollars less on infrastructure this year, but to say that we would spend nothing, of course, is untrue.

Would you like me to move to the second one, too, and get them over with in one shot?

The Speaker: Well, let's deal with this one and see where it goes.

Mr. Anderson: I would ask him to withdraw that. Thank you.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I won't preamble my comments with snide remarks like the Member for Airdrie has.

You can rewrite your policies, but you cannot change your personality or your character. I have merely pointed out to the member the contrast and the juxtaposition between the rather eloquent speech delivered by the leader of the Wildrose in which she tried to equate hope to debt and how she firmly believes that this government should not be borrowing money, should not be leveraging money, should not be entering into alternative financing arrangements on construction of schools. [interjection] As you can see, Mr. Speaker, my interpretation is correct because they are applauding that.

We shouldn't be doing any of that. We shouldn't then by de facto be building all the schools that we're building. We shouldn't by de facto be building all the seniors' homes that we're building. We shouldn't by de facto, Mr. Speaker, be building all the hospitals that we're building. We shouldn't be building laboratories, university buildings – and the list goes on and on – to the extent that we're building. We all know and Albertans are quite astute in knowing that if we were to build only what we can pay for, cash up front, like they would like us to do, we would be building merely a fraction of what it is that Albertans want us to build.

Mr. Speaker, we know that they want us to build schools for kids today, not in 30 years, hospitals for patients today, not in 30 years, and seniors' homes for our seniors while they are still alive, not for the next generation of seniors. So the juxtaposition between the leader's speech and then the whole list of requests for additional infrastructure was so stark that it would be difficult for one not to point that out. I have nothing to apologize for and nothing to withdraw.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I don't see any others who wish to speak, so let me comment on this matter. I believe the hon. Member for Airdrie was correct when he started out by saying this may be a point of clarification.

Having reviewed the Blues, unless I'm missing something, I would certainly agree with you in the surmising that you did.

In fact, the Deputy Premier in response to a question at approximately 2:37 or 2:38 this afternoon, a question posed by I think it was Chestermere-Rocky View, according to the Blues said the following:

Mr. Speaker, in answering this question, I'll strongly recommend that this member pick up his leader's speech of this morning and try to correlate his request for additional schools, for additional trailers with her promise of not having any more debt and extinguishing Albertans' debt. You can't have both. This government has made a promise to deliver, to build for the growth in this province, to provide children with classrooms, to provide seniors with housing, to provide patients with hospital space, not based on the notes from the leader of extinguishing hope and not building anymore and not to incur any debt, as she tends to call it. Get your story straight.

He stopped there, and the point of order was thereafter issued.

I think that we would all understand that there are oftentimes different interpretations of what we all say or what we all mean and what we all do. This would be one of those cases in my opinion. I believe both sides have had a chance to clarify their comments, and undoubtedly there may be further opportunities coming up shortly. So I do not find there to be a point of order this time, but it is a good point of clarification.

Point 4. The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Point of Order

Factual Accuracy

Mr. Anderson: Also 23(h), (i), and (j), Mr. Speaker, referring to the Justice minister's inaccurate comment that the Leader of the Official Opposition in her comments in her response to the Premier's ministerial statement about the floods did not thank the police. That is inaccurate. She did. It's clearly in the statement, third paragraph, fifth or sixth word. So, sorry, you're going to have to withdraw that because you've misled the House in that regard.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, misleading the House is a very serious allegation. I know this member in his vast legal practice knows this. First off, I refer you to Beauchesne's 319, which indicates that promptness is necessary in making a point of order. This point of order was not made until the next group of questions.

More importantly, my comment was that the Leader of the Opposition didn't say RCMP. She did not. She referenced first responders, she referenced police, and that's great. I'm very happy that she is onside with everyone because that's not a partisan issue. But she didn't say the RCMP. My point was that the RCMP deserve our thanks. People may want to run and hide from things that they have said or haven't said, but I bring this up to you, an old legal maxim, Mr. Speaker: truth is an absolute defence. If I misheard – I don't think I did because I've talked to four other members, and they did not hear the word "RCMP." I'd be very happy if she had said RCMP because we do owe them a debt of gratitude.

The Speaker: Is there anybody else on this point?

Well, this is an interesting notation here. I believe that there's an issue here about the facts which aren't all at the Speaker's disposal, so in fact this may wind up being a matter of a dispute between two members or two caucuses or two parties or whatever you want to call it with regard to the facts. But there's an interesting twist here, and the twist is that you may or may not make a comment on what someone did or didn't say. The twist is that it's a little bit unusual in that sometimes you can say something by saying a member didn't say something. You can infer something, and I think that's sort of at the heart of what is being driven at here by the Member for Airdrie.

Let me go into what was said here by the hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General at 2:52, who was responding to a question, I believe, from Livingstone-Macleod who had asked – was it Livingstone-Macleod? I don't have the question, but I do have the answer which prompted the point of order. The Minister of Justice said this.

Well, Mr. Speaker, my department has advised me today that approximately 95 per cent of the firearms that were stored actually have been returned. It's over 500 that have been collected and returned. On top of that, the RCMP executed 600 rooftop rescues and saved 650 pets. This government is proud to stand up for the RCMP, unlike the Leader of the Opposition, who didn't even thank the RCMP today in her statement.

On reflection, one would look at this and perhaps some will read into it that someone doesn't like the RCMP, which I'm sure is not the case.

I could go on and explain more. But I think we need to be very careful about such statements, and I say this in this instance to the Minister of Justice. What a member does not say doesn't necessarily and shouldn't necessarily lead us to the conclusion by innuendo or otherwise that that person doesn't support what was intended. We all have limited speaking times in this House, we all are bound by those rules, and sometimes you can't just cover every single point or thank every single person that you would like to. I would like to feel, think, and believe that that is what the Leader of the Official Opposition might have had in mind. I don't know what she had in mind, but I would like to think that that was probably the case.

Let's leave that as a point of clarification for today, but let us all be reminded to again be very careful, particularly when you're winging a question or winging an answer or winging a point in debate. We can sometimes get caught up with ourselves. All of us have done it, and if you haven't yet, I assure you that before your term is done, you probably will as well.

So let's be very careful, and on that note let's conclude this issue and move on.

Request for Emergency Debate

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a Standing Order 30, and I'm going to ask the Member for Edmonton-Calder to please lead off in that regard. Remember, we're now talking about the urgency.

Home Care Services

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the motion has been circulated. It reads, in essence, as follows:

Be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the negative impacts on patient care and safety resulting from Alberta Health Services' decision in June 2013 to significantly reduce the number of home-care providers in Edmonton and Calgary by cancelling contracts with existing providers and awarding multimillion-dollar, multiyear contracts to for-profit corporations.

So, Mr. Speaker, I will argue the urgency of this situation, the fact that this is the first and only opportunity to debate, the fact of the genuine nature of the emergency, the fact that this is a concern throughout the province, that this SO 30 is in the public interest, that it is a very specific question, that it talks about administrative competence, and that it will hopefully be the general wish of this House to debate further this afternoon.

On the first point of urgency, Mr. Speaker, this is in reference to Standing Orders 30(1) and 30(7) as well as from House of Commons Procedure and Practice from page 689, from Beauchesne's paragraph 390, and from the Hansard of your own words on March 14 of this year talking about the fundamental question of urgency.

Mr. Speaker, we know that the ramifications and the repercussions for patient care and safety continue to be felt to this day from this decision to corporatize our home care here in the Edmonton area especially. This initial decision may have been taken on May 31, but new impacts have unfolded every month since, right up to this present day. The latest development of note was the fact that one of these corporate contract holders, Revera, gave up part of their contract in southwest Edmonton because they could not meet patient needs. I would suggest that Revera at least had the guts to realize and to know that their contract was untenable. Probably many others of these corporate contracts are untenable, too.

A matter of urgent debate today are the negative impacts on patient care and safety as a result of the series of decisions taken by this government and various corporations. Mr. Speaker, this is the first and only opportunity to debate this. Again, I'm referring to House of Commons Procedure and Practice page 693 and Beauchesne's paragraph 387. We all know that this House did adjourn on May 15 and that no item on the agenda now is to deal with this issue. The Order Paper does not contain a government bill, a member's bill, or a motion to address this issue. Question period, I think, is clearly not a place to permit a fulsome and substantive debate on this very important concern. An emergency motion thus is the only mechanism that I see available.

Further to that, the fact is that this is a genuine emergency, as referenced by Standing Order 30(7)(a) and House of Commons Procedure and Practice on pages 689, 693, and 695, which I think clearly open up the idea that this is a genuine emergency for over 6,000 home-care clients in Edmonton and in Calgary who transitioned from one provider to another provider over the past several months. They have experienced – and we all have had examples of this come to our constituency offices and to the minister's office – missed and delayed visits, disruption in care and routine, and disruption in the relationship with the care provider, which is very considerable. The fact is that they've now ended up with staff without experience or knowledge of the specific needs of home-care patients. In fact, Mr. Speaker, companies readily admit that they could not meet the needs of the patients and the requirements of the contract. I find this very disturbing to hear from the corporate side as well.

It's an emergency for staff in regard to underpay and overwork. Hundreds have been forced to leave their employment with nonprofit co-operatives and work to gain employment with non-unionized corporate providers. This is in fact an emergency for families as well. They can't count on the system to deliver the care that their loved ones need, and many have had to step in and provide care themselves or through the family, causing great inconvenience and compromising the health of patients.

Mr. Speaker, this is a concern throughout Alberta, as referenced in House of Commons Procedure and Practice pages 690 and 694. Certainly, this is taking place in Edmonton, it's taking place in Strathcona, in Calgary. And I would venture to say that the fact that there's an intention to expand the same failed model of corporatization of home care in the Lethbridge and Medicine Hat areas also, I think, adds to the urgency of this debate, that in fact we need to put a stop or some modification to this immediately.

Mr. Speaker, this emergency submission of mine is certainly in the public interest, as referenced from Beauchesne's 389 and 390, just talking about the public interest demands that we address patient concern about care and safety, of which this is self-evident. The Health minister himself has called this whole thing a failure, yet we've not done anything to address that failure. Days go by, and people are still in the same compromised situations. New revelations are appearing every month about problems with care. If we don't take the time to debate what is happening in the home-care system, the public interest does in fact suffer.

We also must maintain the legitimacy of this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, and not do a disservice to the authority of this institution that provides public health care to Albertans. We cannot neglect our duty as representatives to debate and reflect on this most important issue of the day.

I have, of course, referenced this into a very specific question, as stated in Beauchesne's paragraph 387 and in the description of a SO 30 as well. I'm stating a specific question, which is in essence the negative impact on patient care and safety right here and right now.

A couple of final things, Mr. Speaker, in regard to administrative competence. This government is responsible for our public health system and must be held accountable. We cannot defer or put layers of excuses between that responsibility, and giving these corporate contracts away does not diminish that responsibility. As well, this debate is necessary to achieve a better understanding of what went wrong, where mistakes were made, so that we might be able to minimize negative impacts and, as I say, to seek better resolution in the future, when we might seek modification of home care in Lethbridge and Medicine Hat and other places in the province.

Finally, number eight, that there is a general wish for debate in this House. I trust that we might find that wish amongst a majority of members here today. Certainly, many of us have had to deal with this. In my experience there's been an unprecedented amount of anecdotal evidence that would suggest that our home care in the Edmonton area is in a state of failure. We have many, many, many people not getting the care that they had before. I think this opens the door to more private home care, which I suspect is part of the reason that this did in fact happen in the first place. When you have somebody you look after and you need to care for and that has to happen tomorrow, not next month or in February, when the Health Quality Council comes through, then you just buy that service.

I think that Albertans expect better, that we need public delivery of our home care, and that we do not need to wait another four months for another inquiry. The last inquiry did not satisfy any of the immediate concerns that I have here today, and I think it's the duty and the responsibility of this House to deal with this this afternoon.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and to speak to the motion under Standing Order 30. After consideration of the arguments I'm going to present, my request will be that you not allow this motion to proceed, and there are a number of reasons for that. Of course, I will attempt to confine my comments specifically to the question of urgency that you pointed out prior to the motion being introduced.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would draw hon. members' attention to the motion itself. I would assume that for a motion of this nature to be considered, it needs to be factually correct in order to meet the test of being considered an urgent issue of public interest.

The motion refers in its last sentence to the negative impacts on patient care and safety resulting from Alberta Health Services' decision in June 2013 to significantly reduce the number of home-care providers in Edmonton and Calgary by cancelling contracts with existing providers and awarding multimillion-dollar, multiyear contracts to for-profit corporations.

Mr. Speaker, in the first instance, the hon. member proposing the motion has stated something that is not an accurate representation of the facts. The contracts that preceded the ones that are in place today were in fact not cancelled by Alberta Health Services. These were contracts that expired. They were term-limited contracts, as are many of the contracts that Alberta Health Services enters into in order to provide us with health care services. In fact, these contracts expired some time ago, and it was as long ago as February 2013 that Alberta Health Services issued a request for proposals to which all of the previous providers were free to apply and new providers who had not provided home-care services up to that point in time were also free to apply.

Mr. Speaker, what's referred to here as a deliberate action to cancel the provision of home-care services by certain providers is not that. In fact, the events that took place follow the normal course of business in Alberta Health Services in the delivery of care. So I would offer that as a first argument as to some of the factual inaccuracies contained in the motion.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I'd respectfully point out that the motion implies, at least as I read it, that contracts were awarded to for-profit corporations solely and for the first time. Of course, many hon. members will be aware that Alberta through its service delivery model has worked collaboratively and entered into contracts with public providers, not-for-profit providers, and for-profit providers for the provision not only of home-care services but many other services that we offer in our health care system.

To attempt to make part of the argument for an urgent debate the basis that, at least, as I said, in my reading of this, we are somehow newly entering into contracts with for-profit providers for the provision of home care is factually inaccurate. Those two points taken together, Mr. Speaker, would provide me with a basis to respectfully ask in the first instance that this motion not be allowed to proceed.

Mr. Speaker, the other evidence that was presented by the hon. member: I take issue with a number of those arguments as well as they pertain to the urgency, the request for this debate on a matter of urgency, and specifically with respect to the argument presented that this House has not had an opportunity and will not have another opportunity to debate this issue.

As I just pointed out, Mr. Speaker, the previous contracts for home-care services that were held by Alberta Health Services with a number of providers expired sometime ago. The expiration of those contracts prompted the issuance of a request for proposal. That is a public process as are all procurement processes that are undertaken by Alberta Health Services or by government itself. The fact was well known as long ago as February of 2013 that those contracts had expired, that there would be an RFP process, and that in all possibility home-care providers could change, could be realigned.

As we all know, and as the hon. member pointed out in his remarks, AHS was clear that there were two goals with respect to the RFP process. There was an objective to reduce the total number of providers in Alberta. Secondly, and I think most importantly, the other goal of the RFP process was to ensure a more consistent level of service across the province to all citizens.

Mr. Speaker, the fact that this was not a cancellation of contracts, that it was in fact a normal business process, that it was a public process and the fact that the hon. member and all other members of this House either were aware that or had the ability to be aware that former home-care contracts had expired gave everyone in this House the opportunity to raise questions about that process. Whether the concern was, as it appears to be on the part of the hon. member, with the provision of these services by for-profit providers or whether the concern was with other aspects of the RFP or the delivery of home care generally, the opportunity to present those arguments existed as long ago as February 2013.

As well, Mr. Speaker, since that time we had the opportunity as members to talk about health care issues, including home care, in the spring session of this House. Members had the opportunity to raise questions if they were concerned with the procurement practices. There were opportunities in Public Accounts, where both Alberta Health Services and my department appear on a regular basis, and, of course, up to the end of the spring session. So to suggest in any way that there was not an opportunity for this matter to be considered earlier is simply not accurate.

Finally, Mr. Speaker – and I'll be very brief on this – again sticking to the question of urgency, the hon. member in his remarks implied that none of the concerns since contracts have been awarded have in fact been addressed and that that contributes to the emergency nature of the debate which he's requesting. As most of us, I think, are aware, Janet Davidson, at the time the official administrator of Alberta Health Services, conducted an extensive review of the RFP process. Alberta Health Services made her report public. The conclusions of the report are perhaps not germane to the question of urgency, Mr. Speaker, but there was a very thorough and a very publicly visible exercise to review the RFP process. I'll note that it did result in some changes to the awarding of contracts, changes that were inspired by the desire to maintain the highest possible level of quality.

Again, to the hon. member's comments most recently about the decision of one of the providers to reduce the number of home-care clients that that provider would serve, Mr. Speaker, that situation was well publicized. The process was not an emergency as the hon. member would suggest. In fact, I don't remember at any time describing the entire exercise as a failure. What we did discuss at length and in the public realm was the work that was done by both AHS and this particular provider to identify areas where it may not be able to deliver the level of quality that is expected.

Mr. Speaker, the last thing I'd point to is again on the question of urgency. The hon. member is citing patient safety and quality and his concerns about those as the basis for an emergency debate. If the hon. member doesn't know – and I'm sure most would agree that he should know it – in fact, Alberta's continuing care health service standards apply to the provision of all home-care services in our province. Whether the contract is with a private provider, a for-profit provider, or a public provider, the standards are the same for all.

As he mentioned, I've asked the Health Quality Council not to conduct a review of the contracts for private providers but to review and to make recommendations to update the quality assurance framework for home care in this province. That report is coming in February. But by no means, Mr. Speaker, does the existence of that review suggest at all that patient safety and quality of home care are in question in this province.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I would respectfully submit that this motion, first of all, factually does not represent accurately the circumstances surrounding the provision of home care in this province and, secondly, that it does not meet the required test of urgency nor does it answer the fact that there have been ample opportunities for members of this House to debate this issue in multiple forums as long ago as February 2013.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Calder for bringing this emergency motion forward. Under Standing Order 30(7) there are six conditions a motion must meet. Clauses (b) through (f) are pretty straightforward. As far as I can tell, there is no debate on whether this motion meets them. It does. It comes down only to meeting the first requirement; namely, that “the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration.” As I will explain, the failure to deliver care that has arisen by the government’s decision has already generated an emergency that this House must address urgently.

When people receive home-care services, it’s not because they simply want them. People receive home care because, quite frankly, they’re not able to provide their own services in their own home by themselves. So when stories emerge of missed appointments, it’s not just a bad-news day; it’s a failure to provide the necessities of life. This government was warned repeatedly that centralizing so many home-care providers in such a short period of time was not just unwise but, frankly, was dangerous. Sadly, the government did not heed this warning, and some of the most vulnerable people in our province are now paying that price.

Mr. Speaker, this is an emergency requiring immediate debate because the government’s actions are seriously endangering people. They may try to say that the problems are limited to one single home-care provider, but the stories that I’m about to tell you show that that’s simply not the case. The Minister of Health would have us believe that this was limited to one company by the name of Revera; however, that’s not realistic because we’ve seen story after story about We Care, CBI, and many others.

On October 10, 2013, the Health minister stated that he regrets the inconvenience caused by service disruptions to 300 home-care patients in Edmonton. In Edmonton the system failed, said the Minister of Health, adding that Alberta Health Services’ apology earlier that day for the disruptions was appropriate and that he holds them responsible. One has to wonder what Alberta Health Services was doing in all of these conversations they were having if they couldn’t see this coming down the track.

If we go even further, we know the story of the Edmonton woman who was left alone on the floor of her seniors’ residence for nine hours after her home-care worker did not show up. She’s 87 and has lung cancer and failing eyesight. Her health care worker was from CBI Home Health. Over the Labour Day weekend she failed to show. That 87-year-old woman was on the floor. She yelled a few times, she couldn’t move, and she didn’t know what she was going to do. Her family, her friends checked on her the next day. Her daughter said: when I saw my mother on the floor all soiled, I started to cry because I thought how undignified it was for this poor lady to have to be in her soiled clothing all that time. One would say that if that doesn’t sound to you like it’s an urgent need or an emergency, then I wonder what is. This woman’s experience illustrates that the province’s process of selecting a new agency to provide home care earlier this year was flawed right from the start.

I know the Health minister would have us believe that everybody had lots of time and everybody participated. However, even their own report, that was posted by AHS, showed that agencies competing for home-care contracts complained about a lack of transparency in the selection process. If the Health minister would have us believe that these companies all had fair access but the companies are telling you that there was a lack of transparency in the process, then clearly this was not an open and transparent process. Now we have a very serious and dangerous problem facing our vulnerable Albertans in this province. Even AHS spokesperson Carol Anderson said that missed visits by home-care providers are an issue.

Mr. Speaker, Cam Tait, who many of us know, from Creekside co-op was told by the Premier that these issues would be addressed many months ago. He blogged about some of the shocking and the extremely sad situations that home-care patients were forced into. One of the things he said was that “more than 30 people scheduled for home care services in Leduc did not have their shifts covered” just in September. And that was from We Care. The situation at the Leduc centre was posted online. Previous staff at We Care said that this never used to be a problem, but because of the shift to the way the government wanted to go, forcing them to take on so many clients in so little time, they did not have enough staff.

One of their regular clients recently went an entire weekend without getting help for a bowel routine. Now, I don’t know if many of you know what a bowel routine is, and I’m sure not going to go into too much detail because it’s not very pretty, but as somebody who was a caregiver, I can tell you that my brother had a bowel routine, and when you go a whole weekend without having somebody assist you with removing necessary bodily fluids from your skin, from your body, that is an emergency, and that is urgent.

Mr. Tait goes on to say:

“Because she went all weekend without [a bowel routine] she became very incontinent in her bed and she was deeply embarrassed. Poor woman.”

The blog goes on about:

the mental anguish of people with disability being uncertain of personal care attendants not coming. Wondering if you will get help or not can grind a person down. It can dampen one’s confidence to live in the community . . . independently. The sad thing here is the provincial government is not paying much respect to personal care attendants.

It goes on to say:

“AHS needs to understand the rights of the ones who are disabled and or elderly. I help people with their daily living. I hope I give them dignity and self-respect . . . People that are going through issues, whether it’s having a hard time growing old and all the complications that go with it. Or, ones suffering from disabilities and all the things they go through in a daily manner” [deserve respect].

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Health minister tells us that there was a review done on this exact issue way back in July. He mentioned Janet Davidson, who did that review. One can only imagine that either the review was done inadequately, or it wasn’t done at all. These care providers have been telling this government, have been telling opposition, have been writing letters, and have been in the media saying that the problems with home care are rampant and that going from 35 providers to 10 providers was going to be dangerous and cause serious issues for people receiving that care.

Mr. Speaker, these people cannot afford to wait for the government to come back with yet another report on home-care services next year. They cannot afford to have another six months of missed appointments. They cannot afford to spend one minute, one hour, one day, or one weekend sitting in their own waste. These are vulnerable Albertans not getting the care they need from the government.

Now, I understand that the Minister of Health doesn't want to talk about this. I understand that the Minister of Health finds this conversation a bit uncomfortable. I also understand that even the Minister of Health knows that in Edmonton especially and in Calgary this process is failing Albertans and putting them in a dangerous situation. I would suggest to all members of this House that it's not an Edmonton or Calgary issue, folks. It's going to happen in Red Deer, Medicine Hat, Lethbridge, Balzac, Innisfail, Trochu, Fort McMurray, and many other places across this province.

It is the agenda of this government to roll out centralized home care. Many of your constituents may just be calling you and explaining to you that their home-care worker did not show up to give them a bath for a month. We thought a bath a week was terrible. Imagine going without a bath for a month.

When you sit there and you actually put it into perspective, there is absolutely no harm in having this debate today. If anything, we would be doing our jobs today as legislators to understand that any time we leave a vulnerable Albertan laying on the floor and we don't address it in this House at the first opportunity – that is our job. That's why our constituents put us here, and it's our job to fight for every single Albertan in this province who can't be heard. I implore each and every one of you to put the party lines aside and have an emergency debate on home care.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise in support of this motion for emergency debate on home care services and how they have been co-opted by an agenda that is driven largely by ideology and by a budget problem that this government has gotten itself into. It's hard to view this in any other way when so much has happened since the deficit budget was tabled in this House. Indeed, there has not been adequate discussion and debate in this House on the progressive privatization of our health care system by stealth.

This government reassured the entire electorate before the last election that they had no interest in privatizing health care. That is exactly what they've been doing for the last year and a half. Not only are there now boutique clinics for those who can afford special treatment, but there's private wait-list insurance. No, you can't jump the queue in Alberta, but you can pay $50 a month and go to Vancouver and jump their queue or go to Toronto and jump their queue. This is privatization and queue-jumping by stealth, and this government has taken no initiative. It has obviously had this agenda since Ralph Klein was here. I've watched it evolve over 12 years.

There is no hiding the fact that it's time to have a public debate about why this government continues to privatize health care without acknowledging it and without public debate. These two values of the Progressive Conservative Party, none of them overtly expressed – one based on support for private, two-tiered health care and the second based on the terror of showing themselves to have a budget deficit and an unwillingness to look at a fair tax system in this province – have left them with no options. They're simply going ahead and privatizing our health care system under our noses, and it's taking this kind of underhanded approach to make it impossible for Albertans or even the Legislature to have an honest debate about where the health care system is going.

Is it urgent, Mr. Speaker, to debate home care? Well, it depends on where you sit. Where the minister sits, there's nothing urgent about home care. He sits in a very comfortable spot as Minister of Health in his own home, in his own community. Is it urgent for many people in this Legislature? No, it's not urgent for any of us unless we have loved ones that are being dismissed, not visited appropriately, not getting the quality of care they deserve, and not identified as appropriate for home care at all because of the shortage of home-care services. It depends on where you stand, whether this is urgent or not.

We are progressively losing the public health care system that we have all supported over decades in this country, and this government is leading the charge in Canada to privatize our health care right under our noses. No, it's not violating the letter of the Canada Health Act; it's violating the very fundamental spirit of the Canada Health Act.

Mr. Speaker, the privatization of home care that has significantly happened over this past year is consistent with now the move to privatize laboratories after a totally failed experiment in the '90s, in which the government had to buy back the laboratories in Calgary, Calgary Lab Services, because they were losing 30 per cent – 30 per cent – more on lab service than they had before. So we spent millions and millions buying back the lab service after a failed experiment in privatization in Calgary. Now they're doing it in Edmonton and saying: "No, no. We're not privatizing anything." This is all about smoke and mirrors, Mr. Speaker.

Private home care will do several things to home care. It will weaken the standards, notwithstanding this minister's last-minute appeal to the Health Quality Council to ensure that we have those standards in home care. Where is the monitoring? Where is the enforcement in our long-term care centres now? Now he's going to add another layer, ostensibly, of monitoring and enforcement of standards in home care. We already hear stories of people, especially new Canadians, being taken off the street and trained in the homes of people to do the home-care services without appropriate standards, without appropriate care, and in many cases with serious consequences such that either the families themselves step in and boot out the home-care service or they somehow endure half the quality in home-care services that they need.

It means a high turnover rate in home-care staff. It means less income for home-care staff. We've already heard many who are not getting travel expenses as a result of this new privatization. Their salaries are decreased. Their security, their pension funds, all kinds of benefits that were there before are now in question. This is going to create another level of instability in a health system that is longing for some stability, longing for some commitment, longing for leadership, and they're not getting it from this minister. It's one after the other of chaos, poor decisions, reversal of decisions, firing and hiring.

It's clear that this government doesn't know where it's going in health care, and the health care professionals tell me on a daily basis that the morale is continuing to slide into the basement. This is unacceptable. If there's ever a time to debate our creeping privatizing, now overt privatization, it's here in this House now. Have the courage, Mr. Minister, to stand up here and defend what you're doing in the health care system today.

The quality, the access, and the affordability of our health care system all have been shown in studies to be worsening under a private-option health care. What do insurance companies do for health care? Tell me, do you see any benefits by adding a middle man between the patient and the doctor? How do we deal with double-dipping, doctors who bill both the public and the private system? How do we deal with cherry-picking, companies that decide, "Oh, we won't take you because you're too complicated; you're going to cost too much"? I don't see any ability to deal with that.

I think we need to stand up and have this debate and ensure that we don't make another botched-up job of change in this province when there's already so much demoralization in the health care system with all the changes that continue to be made. Show some consistency, some leadership, and have the courage to debate these issues.

With a high turnover in home care we're going to get a progressive loss in quality of care in home care. When you have many people that are coming in and out of home care because they're not happy with the work, they're dissatisfied with the quality they can give, they're rushing around from place to place, not getting the appropriate financial support or moral support – in many cases I know the home-care providers of the past. They're largely a voluntary organization. They support one another. They're there because they love their work, they care for people, and they want to be consistently there, week after week, month after month, especially in the last years of life for these people. You're going to disrupt all of that again.

Surely you can see what a cost this is, not a monetary cost. I'm talking about a human cost and a spiritual cost. This is another example of a government that simply does not know where it's going in health care, except that it wants to privatize, and it wants to balance its budget.

It's time to debate, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? Calgary-Fort, your side has already spoken, but if you have something very brief that's different from what we've heard, please proceed quickly.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to join in here on the notion of emergency and the opportunity to debate. In fact, every day we have about a hundred Albertans become seniors, and planning ahead, we know that there are about half a million seniors today, but in 20 years it will be 1 million. So these data have been collected, and we have planned to address that. Of those half a million Albertans today 100,000 receive assistance and care in the comfort of their own homes. Personally, I have visited the care centres. In fact, the Associate Minister of Seniors was with me in my riding, and we visited a few seniors' homes with home care. We found that this thing is working as it is.

The population is increasing, and I note that since 2009 the funding for home care has increased by 33 per cent. We are now spending $507 million, more than half a billion dollars, I should say, to ensure that Albertans receive the best care possible in their own home.

Now, I just want to emphasize that those are the efforts that our government is doing, and it's going well out there. Also, AHS has an organization that provides health care, and to me everything is going – of course, there are problems, cases, individual issues, accidents. It happens, but to me that's part of the operational. We look at the big picture. Things are moving, I feel, and my constituents acknowledge that when I visit newly built home care.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: I think we're going to have to stop there and deal with this matter. Oh, where to begin. Hon. members, this is a very difficult issue as much for the chair as it is for all of you, including everyone who has already spoken. Nonetheless, Standing Order 30 does provide that "the Member may briefly state the arguments in favour of the request for leave and the Speaker may allow such debate as he . . . considers relevant to the question of urgency" and that it is the role of the chair to "rule on whether or not the request for leave is in order."

The most awkward thing about a Standing Order 30, regardless of the subject matter, is to understand the term "urgency." The term "urgency" as we use it in normal day-to-day parlance is completely different than the way it is used here under Standing Order 30. I have wrestled with this for two decades. Let me just remind you of what Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, sixth edition, says on page 113, and this is in the context of motions to adjourn the House under Standing Order 52 to discuss an important matter. In this instance for Standing Order 52 you can substitute our local Assembly's Standing Order 30. I'll quote Beauchesne 390.

'Urgency' within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but means 'urgency of debate', when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the House do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and the public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

That, ladies and gentlemen, is as succinct a definition of urgency with respect to Standing Order 30 as we can find for you right at this moment. I would ask you to reflect on it because it's a difficult one for people who are not in this Assembly and have not experienced this kind of debate to fully grasp and understand. There's no question in anyone's mind in this Assembly – and certainly there's no question in the Speaker's mind either – whether or not home care is important or, for that matter, that any aspect of health care delivery is important. Clearly, it is.

In any event, I have listened carefully and very attentively to comments made by the five members who spoke in request to this request for leave to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly. I am prepared to rule, as a result, on whether the request for leave for this motion to proceed is in order under Standing Order 30. The Member for Edmonton-Calder did meet the requirement of providing at least two hours' notice to the Speaker's office. He provided the required notice at 10:38 a.m. today. His motion reads as follows.

Pursuant to Standing Order 30 be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the negative impacts on patient care and safety resulting from Alberta Health Services' decision in June 2013 to significantly reduce the number of home care providers in Edmonton and Calgary by cancelling contracts with existing providers and awarding multimillion-dollar, multiyear contracts to for-profit corporations.

Now, I'm not going to comment on the wording used in the motion. That is up to the member to explain, and he has done so. However, members will recall that the relevant parliamentary authorities on this subject are also included in House of Commons Procedure and Practice on pages 689 through 696. I've already cited the Beauchesne reference.

Now, in listening to the hon. member who proposed the motion and to others who commented on it, I'm sure you would all agree that I did allow considerable latitude. Members who have been here for several SO 30s know that I and previous Speakers have interjected very quickly on matters that strayed from the points about urgency of debate. Today, however, I allowed a little bit more to go on because I recognize how serious the issue is, I recognize that this is our first day back, but I also recognize that when this issue arose, some immediate action was in fact taken.

Now, I listened very attentively to all the speakers. In fact, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder rose at approximately 4:02 and concluded his remarks just before 4:13. Then the Minister of Health spoke from the government side from 4:13 to approximately 4:23. Coincidentally, the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake rose at 4:23 and spoke until 4:33. Quadruply coincidentally, the Member for Calgary-Mountain View rose at 4:33 and spoke until approximately 4:43. So we've had 10, 20, 30, 40 good minutes, which were then augmented with two or three minutes from Calgary-Fort, and a number of important points were made even though they weren't necessarily germane to the issue of urgency as defined by Beauchesne and HOC, House of Commons Procedure and Practice. But I did let points get said and get made so that we would get the full grasp and gravity from all four parties of the importance of this matter.

Now, before the question as to whether this motion should proceed to be put to the Assembly, I have to determine where the motion meets the requirements of Standing Order 30(7)(a), which requires that "the matter proposed for discussion [is related] to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration." As I've said, there's no question that the matter, the issue, is important and, in the mind of anyone who spoke on either side of it, constitutes some form of genuine emergent response or emergency action.

Hon. members, I want to go on briefly and just acknowledge that I have been there, and I have seen home care delivered to patients in need during my time in a particular portfolio. I know where you are all coming from because I have been there and I have seen it. I know how serious the families take this matter when one of their members winds up in a position of being, to quote the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, soiled all weekend, or words to that effect. Obviously it's serious to sit in your own waste for any seconds or minutes of time. It's awkward, uncomfortable, and ought to be corrected as quickly as possible.

I also noted other comments by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, whom I did let go on a little further than I would normally have let go on on this portion. He was into turnover rates and salaries and pension funds and creeping privatization and so on. Nonetheless, in fairness to that member and his caucus I allowed that to go on so that those comments could be on the record, which, as I had said earlier, was probably more what all of you were after at the very minimum.

I also was keen on the comments made by the hon. Minister of Health, wherein he indicated that the contracts were not cancelled, they were term-limited, they expired some time ago, an RFP was issued, there were, perhaps, some factual inaccuracies, but most importantly, that the Alberta Health Services folks and their new head, which I think he mentioned was Janet Davidson, was doing their utmost to review this and have already taken some very specific action. Clearly, it has caught the attention of the upper echelon in Alberta Health Services, and that's a very good thing.

I want to reiterate that I take this as a very serious matter. I know all of you do, too, because it affects and it impacts literally thousands of Albertans. I don't have the latest number at hand, but I would venture to guess that it's 40,000 or 50,000 or thereabouts, perhaps even more. So the gravity of the situation is certainly not lost on me.

Now, I want to also point out for members here that if I were to allow the debate to proceed for the remainder of the day, it would not culminate in a decision by this Assembly. It might point out a direction for some people who want to take it, but it does not culminate in a decision in and of itself, so please be reminded of that.

Finally, I'll just state that while I would be very prepared to allow the debate to take place for the remaining hour, we've had about 45 minutes of what I would call debate already. All four parties are on record now stating what they wish to state and what they feel about this matter, and as such I will not rule in favour of the leave to have an emergency debate for the remaining hour.

That concludes that matter, and I would ask for your understanding and your rereview of everything that I just said so that you will be able to guide yourselves accordingly. Thank you.

Hon. members, just before we start the formal proceedings for Orders of the Day, the hon. Associate Minister of Recovery and Reconstruction for High River wishes to make a comment.

I'll recognize you, sir.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time I would like to request unanimous consent of the Assembly to transfer the sponsorship of Bill 206, Tobacco Reduction (Flavoured Tobacco Products) Amendment Act, 2012, to my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. minister has requested unanimous consent of the Assembly.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Excellent. We didn't hear any objection to that, so we can proceed with your request.

Thank you, hon. members, for that understanding. That has been granted. The Order Paper will now show the name of the new sponsor for this bill, and the bill will be reprinted.

Orders of the Day

Written Questions

[The Clerk read the following written question, which had been accepted]

Legal Actions against the Ministry of Energy

Q41. Mr. Bikman:

What are the amounts for which the Crown has settled legal actions for each fiscal year commencing April 1, 2008, and ending March 31, 2012, where the Minister or Ministry of Energy is the defendant, and what were the causes of action in those legal actions?

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're now on private members' bills, so let us continue on with the hon. Member for Red Deer-North with respect to the concurrence motion.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I know that according to the clock it's two minutes to 5. I have a 10-minute response to the concurrence motion. As well, a few other speakers will speak to it. I would ask, because I don't see any point in speaking for one minute, that we move directly to our private member's motion today rather than just speaking for a minute and then coming back to it, sir.

The Speaker: I think that would be acceptable. Hon. member, you were asking for unanimous consent? I didn't hear that.

Mrs. Jablonski: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Could you please rephrase your unanimous consent motion in its totality, then, just so we're clear?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, as it is one minute to 5, I am requesting unanimous consent to move directly to our motion for today.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Red Deer-North has requested your unanimous consent, as uttered.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: I don't believe I hear any objections, so that has been granted.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I begin, I do have 10 guests sitting in the members' gallery. If I could ask your permission to introduce them to the House.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the member for Calgary-Hawkwood has requested that we revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Please proceed with your introduction, and as soon as you're finished, go on with your motion.

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks to my House colleagues. It is my honour to rise to introduce you to 10 guests that are sitting in the members' gallery. They're representing members throughout the province who have under two umbrella organizations provided guidance to heritage language education in our province.

The first on the list is the Southern Alberta Heritage Language Association, or SAHLA. The next one is the International and Heritage Languages Association of Alberta, IHLA. Mr. Speaker, I would ask them to stand as I mention their name to be recognized, and we'll hold our applause until the end, when I finish introducing them.

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

I have Mr. Michael Embaie, president of SAHLA; Vinay Dey, a member of SAHLA; Amina Ofleh, principal of one of the schools and also a member of SAHLA; Steven Lim, a member of SAHLA; Michael Gretton, co-ordinator of SAHLA; Josephine Pallard, president of IHLA; Leticia Cables, a member of IHLA; Vida Dreh,* a member of SAHLA; Chandra Weerasinghe, a member of SAHLA; and John Gatliak,* a member of SAHLA. I thank you so much for travelling to this corner of the province on very short notice to come to support the motion we are just about to begin.

Members of the House, if I can ask you to give them the traditional warm welcome. Thank you.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

Heritage Language Schooling

513. Mr. Luan moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to promote and assist heritage language schooling in collaboration with local school board authorities to provide adequate access to school facilities.

Mr. Luan: Madam Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today to open debate on Motion 513. I'm proposing this motion in order to bring attention to the issues that heritage language schools face and how the government can assist in promoting collaboration between heritage language schools and local school boards.

Just to give you a bit of a background, Madam Speaker, heritage language schools provide an extracurricular education environment, typically held on weekends, to individuals who wish to learn another language and increase cultural competency. These schools operate throughout the province at a community level and represent many different ethnicities.

There are two major umbrella organizations, as introduced to you earlier, SAHLA and IHLA. Both of them are nonprofit organizations. SAHLA is based in southern Alberta, and they represent over 38 different languages throughout the southern part of our province. IHLA is their counterpart. They provide guidance to critical elements in language education and represent the northern part of Alberta. Together they represent over 80 language schools across Alberta, with 12,000 students currently enrolled.

Here are some examples of language schools. The Chinese Academy in Calgary is the largest language school in Alberta. It has been in operation since 1997 and has over 1,900 students. The Russian school in Edmonton, Erudite, is an accredited heritage language private school which was founded in September 2003 and is dedicated to preserving and promoting Russian language and culture in our multicultural society. Finally, there is Gabriela Mistral Latin American School in Edmonton, which is committed to preserving the Spanish language and Latin American culture. Those are just some examples. The instruction those schools provide not only helps preserve their culture and their language but also helps open many doors for students as they either continue their education or enter into the workforce.

Madam Speaker, with all those students and the fantastic work they're doing, both SAHLA and IHLA believe there's a need for affordable rent rates for class space at weekend schools, and there need to be some resolutions to accommodate schools so that they can access school facilities. For your information, just to give you background, in Calgary in 2011 the heritage language schools paid $67 per hour to rent a classroom on the weekend. If I sum up the total of all the language schools across the province, they provide thousands to tens of thousands of dollars for classroom rentals in order to provide educational service.

Another challenge that the heritage language schools commonly face is that they feel like they are being treated as, if I can use their terminology, secondary citizens. What this implies is that they have not been given the proper recognition that heritage language is in the domain of education. They're often referred to and mixed together with recreational groups. When they rent facilities, they are subject to all kinds of conditions, and one of the conditions is very ironic when you think of a thousand students renting schools on the weekend. If they move a table or mark something on a keyboard and on Monday the regular school gets agitated about that, if they receive three such complaints, then their lease is voided.

I personally have been involved in one of these incidents. One of the schools in Calgary has been there over 10 years, but just because of the change to a new principal, who was receiving those administrative concerns and headaches, that principal simply decided: we're not going to renew this school. Immediately thousands of students who had been using that school for weekend language education found themselves having no school. That was a time, I remember, when many of them were voicing this concern. Why are the public facilities, that they pay for in taxes, treated so differently? For instance, if for the same school Monday to Friday there is a change or closure, it normally has about six to nine months of procedures where you consult with parents and the community and you do a transition in that regard, not on a whim like this one, where you could decide at any moment.

Because of all of these issues, many heritage language schools are run inconsistently, with an unstable learning environment, which creates unfavourable outcomes for language programs. As a result, this may diminish the quality of education and limit students' opportunities to learn an additional language.

Just for your information, I did a quick comparison through our research staff that compared: is this just an isolated issue, or is this across the jurisdictions? I learned that internationally many countries have created specific heritage language or, as they call it, international language legislation. Australia leads the world. They have developed very distinctive national policy for international language education, targeting emerging economies such as China and India. They simply believe that by educating their kids in those languages that emerging countries need, it will give their children added competitiveness to succeed in the global economy. In Canada, nationally, Ontario, Quebec, B.C., and Manitoba have all established similar legislation. Alberta somehow is falling behind.

With those challenges, Madam Speaker, I believe opportunities exist ahead of us. Alberta is the fastest growing province. As we just learned, it reached over 4 million in population this year. We also have very rapidly changing demographics in our province. I just reviewed the 2011 StatsCan stats. I want to share a few with you very quickly. Today 1 in 5 Canadians is a visible minority, or roughly 19 per cent of the population. One in 5 Albertans is a visible minority. One in 4 Edmontonians, or 25 per cent of Edmontonians, are a visible minority, and – listen to this – 1 in 3 Calgarians are a visible minority.

Mr. Speaker, I remember that about seven years ago I was struck by one of the statements made by the Calgary police chief. She said at the time that 50 years ago 1 in 50 was a visible minority in Calgary, today 1 in 5. This was seven years ago. I followed her speech. I compared to the 2011 stats. We changed. From 1 in 5 seven years ago it's now 1 in 3 in Calgary. Clearly, there is a trend, and the trend continues. The diversification of Alberta is becoming a new reality in today's society.

Here I want to close by saying: what's the impact? What's the significance of me bringing this up and talking about this? Madam Speaker, I believe that we have the opportunity today to create favourable conditions for generations of Albertans to benefit from gaining a competitive edge in today's global economy. This includes that our kids will have multiple benefits for individual growth and cultural competency and have the ability to develop and maintain increased competency in listening to, speaking, reading, and writing another language.

This will also help them strengthen their cognitive development through knowledge of an additional language, help them build a bridge between Canadian and heritage cultures, and the list goes on. There's a long list of research establishing the cognitive and developmental benefits for children to have that.

More than that, I think we as a province have the opportunity to set a standard for language education in a consistent and stable learning environment, to recognize language education as a critical component of Alberta education, not just another recreational or cultural activity, and to develop a unique Alberta model that will have market-driven, cost-sharing, and joint services provided for Albertans.

I invite hon. members to have a vigorous debate and support this motion.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Good to see you back in the big chair.

I am going to rise today and speak to this motion, the motion put forward by the Member for Calgary-Hawwood. To the member: I appreciate you bringing it forward. The member and I both sit on the Intercultural Dialogue Institute, one of the committees in Calgary trying to promote diversity and greater language use. I would be thrilled to do anything I could to support it. I do have some questions, and I'll get to them as I roll through it.

A special welcome to the guests today. I think we'd all like to see more of our kids and adults in Alberta speaking as many languages as we could. We'd all be better off.

The motion, as I read it, from the Member for Calgary-Hawwood:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to promote and assist heritage language schooling in collaboration with local school board authorities to provide adequate access to school facilities.

On the surface of it it certainly sounds like a terrific idea for all concerned. I think everybody in here approved the motion from the Member for Calgary-South East, now the associate minister for flood recovery, on November 19 which urged the government to construct new school facilities in collaboration with municipalities, school boards, and other stakeholders which would function as schools during the day but have the ability to offset [some of those] operational expenses by partnering with compatible public and private enterprises such as but not limited to,

as we discussed at the time, libraries, daycares, and recreational facilities.

I am fully, as I said, supportive of the concept that a school facility should be a community hub. It seems like it's gotten much more complicated over the years, and I think there are reasons for that. If we all think back to when we were younger, you know, things were much different. I know that we span a few different generations in here. I suppose it's changed. [interjection] I'm not assigning an age shot to anybody, Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, at all. I think we all recognize that it seems a little bit more complicated these days to make these things work, and there are some reasons for that, and I'd like to ask the member about them and see what stakeholders have had to say.

In many growing communities like mine, for instance, in Chestermere-Rocky View we badly need these community hubs so that organizations like the one the member speaks of can succeed and offer programs, a place for communities to gather. I think it also would be wise of me to point out that this already happens in many of our constituencies. Whether it's a church group or a community meeting place, many jurisdictions do this well already.

Heritage language schools in Alberta, as the Member for Calgary-Hawwood says, provide an important service to our communities, our education system. They do provide that support to a cultural or linguistic group, which is needed. They ensure that children, youth, adults can learn another language, sometimes more than one. It might not otherwise be available to them at school, and I think that's an important thing to point out. Heritage language schools I believe to be an asset. As a government, as a member of the opposition, whatever we are, I think we should be doing all we can to remove any barriers that might be stopping them from operating and offering their services to Albertans.

From this perspective, as I said, I'm certainly inclined to support this motion. I would like to hear from the member first about a couple of questions that I do have. I think the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood did address a couple of them, and I'll get to those in a second.

We've heard today in the media and elsewhere about some of the problems that can come up by using the P3 approach to building schools, and I'll raise a legitimate point that applies to this member's motion today without going on a tangent which would be political in nature because my view differs from the government's on the issue of P3s. This point is relevant, Madam Speaker. It is more difficult – and you'll hear that from stakeholders and those boards and schools – for community groups to access P3s than it is for those from the traditional model. There are other rules in place.

Because they're maintained by other companies, you're not allowed to change the way things are. They don't want to see those facilities damaged or changed in any way, so it's become more complicated, it seems, to make those schools hubs for the community, and I think that's something we need to address going forward. The first batch, as I said, under the P3 model in this province did have some issues when it came to outside access groups. So I hope that we're able to address those, for both the member and the other groups that would like to use them.

Now, I did contact the member, I should mention, a few weeks ago – I didn't directly, but a research team did – to try to get some more information from him about the motion. Before I assign blame to him for not responding, I'll give him a chance to maybe let me know, but we did send a couple of e-mails, so I could have asked him a couple of these questions, Madam Speaker, beforehand.

I would like to know from a stakeholder perspective: do the school boards or school administrators have any issues with your motion? I'm sure the member has reached out to them. Are there any maintenance or liability questions that the boards might have? The maintenance and liability is another snag that we run into with the P3s. How will the government work with school boards to increase access to these school facilities?

You know, the more kids we have speaking more languages, the better off we're going to be, as the member points out. The more education we can provide, the more barriers we can remove to make that happen. I think it's a super idea. I'd just like the member to be able to address some of those questions, and I look forward to hearing his responses.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my honour to rise today to debate Motion 513, which discusses the future of heritage language schools in Alberta. I'd like to begin by thanking my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood for bringing forward this motion.

Madam Speaker, as it stands today, heritage language schools in Alberta face many barriers to success which may inhibit their sustainability and their future, and through Motion 513 the hon. member has identified this hindrance as an unnecessary complication that he wishes to be addressed by this Legislature.

Madam Speaker, as we continue to build Alberta and open new markets abroad, it's hard to ignore that we are living in an increasingly globalized civilization and economy. Building lasting and favourable relationships with trading partners overseas: this is a key aspect to securing access to important markets. A part of building these relationships is developing a higher level of cultural competence, including linguistic competence. This knowledge is supported by the very existence of heritage language schools.

Madam Speaker, this government has made a commitment to ensuring that our valuable resources get to market. Obtaining full market value prices for our resources ensures that Albertans are getting what's fair for our food and technology as well as for our energy products. This often means working with partners from the European Union to China or even to South Korea. Living in the reality of a globalized economy works to benefit all Albertans as well as our trading partners abroad.

Building these relationships also benefits the labour market right here in Alberta. Having more and more Albertans proficient in multiple languages also enhances the labour market. Albertans who take on multiple languages open their opportunities, whether it is for employment here or throughout the world.

Madam Speaker, given that Alberta is the best place in Canada to do business, our province has attracted much interest from business partners around the world. After all, exposing ourselves to another language not only builds understanding and expanded knowledge but fosters great friendships as well.

Heritage language schooling provides extracurricular educational opportunities to individuals who wish to learn another language and increase cultural competence.

Madam Speaker, Canada as a whole is a home to a plethora of different languages. This language diversity is illustrated by the more than 200 languages that were reported as a home language or mother tongue in 2011 according to reports from Statistics Canada. Nearly 6.6 million persons reported speaking a language other than English or French at home, and 20 per cent of the Canadian population speak another language at home. For 6.4 million Canadians this additional language was an immigrant language, meaning this language's presence is due to their family's relocating to Canada. Between 2006 and 2011 some immigrant languages have seen their numbers grow by more than 30 per cent and Mandarin, specifically, by more than 50 per cent.

Heritage language schooling, like the Southern Alberta Heritage Language Association, plays an important role in the development of many of these languages. For several decades these schools have helped hundreds of thousands of children and adults learn another language. Madam Speaker, language and cultural competency are instrumental to how we develop our strategic relationships and open new markets for Albertans.

Assisting heritage language schooling through the proposed Motion 513 could remove some of the barriers to success that these programs face. In doing so, Albertans could be more readily exposed to new opportunities to obtain cultural competency skills and even learn multiple languages.

I'd like to thank the hon. member for bringing this motion before the House for debate. Given the endless opportunities that multilingualism presents in developing relationships and opening new markets, I will be supporting this motion, and I encourage all of my colleagues to do the same.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today to speak to Motion 513, the goal of which is to promote and assist heritage language schooling in collaboration with local school authorities. I would like to thank and congratulate the hon.

Member for Calgary-Hawkwood for bringing forward his very first motion in this House.

My experience as a mother with respect to second languages has been that it has given my children an opportunity beyond what some others may have had. No longer do our children have to exist and perform and live in Alberta, but they're children of the globe. So the more that we can give them the opportunities to learn second languages and third languages – I think that that should be encouraged in any way, shape, or form.

When my children were going into school, I certainly looked at having German as a language that they could learn. However, there was a huge obstacle to that with respect to transportation, so we chose French, but from that I certainly understand how obstacles can come in the way of ensuring that our children are as prepared as they can be for the future. Madam Speaker, language schools are confronted with a number of obstacles that can impede their success and inhibit their sustainability. The intent of this motion is to recognize the systemic problems that impair the ability of heritage language schools to run efficiently.

Madam Speaker, a heritage language school provides an extracurricular learning activity typically held on weekends for individuals who wish to learn another language and increase cultural awareness. Such schools operate throughout the province at the community level and represent many ethnicities. I think that it goes without saying that proficiency in more than one language and familiarity with a range of cultural practices are definitely assets in the global economy that we find ourselves in today, as I had mentioned earlier for my children.

Aside from the obvious economic benefits there are other practical advantages as well. We should not understate the importance of language schools and the learning they foster in promoting cultural awareness and cultivating an educated society. This is perhaps one of the most fundamental reasons for nurturing language education. At the end of the day, Madam Speaker, an investment in language education is an investment in families and communities. As Albertans we are fortunate to live in a land of rich diversity. We are privileged to be able to keep ties with our heritage and to pass on values, customs, and stories to our children.

Because Alberta is such an attractive place to work, live, and raise a family, we continue to be very appealing to immigrants who are new to Canada. With this steady influx of immigrants comes an increase in linguistic and cultural diversity. Thus, learning languages, while useful for international business and travel, is increasingly handy for everyday life right here at home in Alberta.

Learning French makes sense because, after all, Canada is an officially bilingual country. Learning French helps us to keep in mind the interconnectedness of this country despite its vast size and the sense of regionalism that that can instill. However, other than French we are blessed with opportunities to learn a multitude of languages. Languages such as Mandarin, Cantonese, Japanese, Korean, Hindi, German, and Spanish are also highly relevant.

One of the many advantages of studying other languages and becoming fluent in them is the intellectual and mental benefit. Madam Speaker, there is scientific evidence as well to suggest that bilingual activity makes us smarter. It can have a surprisingly powerful impact on the brain, improving cognitive skills not related to language development and even helping to prevent dementia. It used to be assumed that bilingualism was a hindrance to cognitive development, as it was thought that thinking in two languages would be mutually obstructive. However, it has since been shown that this actually improves cognition by training the brain to essentially multitask and synthesize more diverse information at once. Because of this, bilingualism helps to improve problem-solving skills.

Madam Speaker, this indicates that learning languages enables us to develop our ability to assess our environment in greater detail, which in turn allows us to be more adaptable. The advantages these types of practical skills give us are wide ranging and especially relevant in a dynamic and ever-changing society like our own.

So, Madam Speaker, as far as furthering educational as well as cultural goals, promoting language education is a win-win. Thankfully, the current standing of language education in Alberta is quite robust. As we can see, language is an important component of our society, and language education deserves to be taken seriously. As such, it is good to reassess what is currently in place, to streamline the delivery of that type of education to Albertans. Given the importance of heritage language schools in maintaining culture and promoting an educated society, I will be supporting this motion.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to support this motion. It's an important one that is often lost in the complexity of our society and the focus on economic development. It's an awesome opportunity for us to strengthen the new Canadians, their capacity to connect, to communicate. Purely in health care we need all kinds of people to help translate issues relating to health care and health care needs, instructions, pharmaceutical programs, prescriptions. Obviously, we need these folks in all aspects of our economic development. They're going to be a huge driver for us.

5:30

In fact, I won't say too much more about this because I haven't seen enough of the motion yet to know a lot of the implications of it, but I look forward to this motion becoming a bill so that we ensure that we are funding and supporting, sustainably and in a stable fashion, the kinds of educational opportunities, the institutions that are needed, the sustainability that's needed year to year. It's an opportunity to show these folks that we're serious about the long-term commitment here to their psychological well-being, their intellectual well-being, their connection to other Canadians, the community-building aspects that happen around this whole activity as well as the cultural exchange that can happen when we actually can communicate better and understand and respect each other.

It looks like a wonderful opportunity to raise the level of awareness of this Legislature about this underfunded and relatively neglected area, that is only going to increase, and we need to make a serious commitment long term to this if we're all going to be successful, especially these new Canadians.

Thank you for bringing it forward. I look forward to seeing a bill in the not-too-distant future so that we can really strengthen our commitment to this sector.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and join the debate on Motion 513, proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood. I, too, wish to join my colleague and congratulate the hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood for his first motion and stellar work on this important issue.

As has been mentioned, this motion asks us to promote and assist heritage language schooling in collaboration with local school board authorities. Motion 513 also seeks to draw our attention to the need for adequate access to school facilities for heritage language school programs. Madam Speaker, as evidenced by our government's Building Alberta plan, we are committed to ensuring the best possible quality of education for our children. By building Alberta in this way, by investing in new schools, and by investing in our teachers, we are laying the groundwork for a brighter future. Our Building Alberta plan is working to construct greater opportunities for those who will one day come to inherit our province. It is for this reason that I offer my support for Motion 513.

As we urge our government to consider the benefits of heritage language school programs, it is helpful to examine what other jurisdictions have done and the strategies they employ towards language education. Ontario's international language program is particularly useful as a case study in this regard. This provincially mandated academic program has been offered by the continuing education department of the Ottawa-Carleton district school board since 1990.

The continuing education department offers the international languages program at both the elementary and secondary school levels. The elementary program offers language instruction in 39 different languages and involves 17 elementary schools. The program is eligible to all children who attend elementary school in Ontario. The secondary school program offers instruction for credit in 17 languages and is hosted by three secondary schools. The program is open to all students and adults, and the courses here are offered from grade 9 through grade 12. Currently there are over 5,000 students registered in this program. These numbers, Madam Speaker, lend important affirmation to the potential success that similar heritage language programs could have here in Alberta.

In terms of how Ontario came to legislate these international language programs, there are a couple of developments that are particularly enlightening with respect to our discussion here today. Before I highlight these developments, Madam Speaker, allow me to mention briefly that in 1993 the government of Ontario changed the terminology they used, when they moved from the phrase "heritage languages" to "international languages." I mention this only so we're not confused by the terms "heritage" and "international" in our discussion. For our purposes let's assume that both terms are interchangeable.

The Ontario Ministry of Education first enacted legislation that governed the offering of heritage language programs in elementary schools in 1989. Later, in 1991, this same ministry created the resource guide on heritage languages. The guide's aim was to assist boards in working with heritage language personnel and local communities to introduce language programs that met the specific needs of the schools and their students. The guide provided direction on delivery models, roles and responsibilities, program development, learning environments, and learning resources.

Madam Speaker, Ontario's work on international language programs recognizes the benefits and opportunities that such programs can offer. As has been mentioned already, languages open our society to a greater competitive advantage in the world market. The opportunity to learn another language or languages strengthens cognitive development. It allows us to meet and understand our neighbours, and it can prepare us for the responsibilities of being a productive member of our local, national, and international communities.

I believe Motion 513 has potential to offer another step in the right direction for assuming more of this important responsibility. Ontario's initiative, along with defining the value of language-learning opportunities, also sets parameters on the roles and responsibilities of those involved in the administration and delivery of these language programs. These roles include principal supervision and the appointment of an education officer, who develops, plans, budgets, co-ordinates, and monitors program activities. Other defined roles include site administrators, instructors, teachers, and also community representatives. More recently, in 2011, new policies brought in quota requirements which, once met, mandated that boards must establish the requested program. That program must also be offered for the entire school year as long as the quota stays intact.

Madam Speaker, language education offers us further opportunity to not only build bridges between Canadian and other cultures but to reveal and reinforce existing bridges already in us. It offers our children and their children the chance to learn and develop a robust understanding, a more empathetic understanding of one another. We can learn from Ontario's example. This is why I'm in support of Motion 513. It would continue to help us build a stronger, more resilient Alberta for future generations.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise and speak in support of this motion although with a bit of a cautionary component to my support.

In principle, I want to say that I and, I think, all members of my caucus support the growth of heritage and international language instruction programs, and we certainly support the growth of opportunities for people who are members of minority language communities to be able to gain access to useful and effective heritage language programs. I think the reason we support that is really for many of the reasons that have already been outlined by many of the speakers, not only in terms of increasing sort of the diversity and the levels of understanding and the employability and the competitiveness of our citizens, our citizens here in Alberta, but also, you know, for all the various and sundry learning outcomes which are improved by having someone participate successfully in heritage language or international language learning programs.

For that reason, I fully support the idea that's being brought here to the Legislature. I will say, as one of the previous speakers did point out, that the motion is a little vague right now. There are a couple of cautionary points that I would like to make. Even though I fully, fully support the idea of promoting these programs, I would like to outline some of the conditions which I think need to be in place.

First of all, if these programs are going to be supported through public resources and public support, then they need to be delivered in a nonprofit setting. One of the things I note from the motion is that that is not clear. For me, that's really important. As you know, our caucus is steadfastly opposed to private schooling and particularly steadfastly opposed to public dollars supporting private schooling. We're happy for people to choose to go to private schools, but if they do so, that should be their financial choice and not that of other taxpayers. That same thing applies generally to the notion of allocating public resources to what is otherwise a private, for-profit effort.

Of course, as much as heritage language instruction is something that I think should be done within the public context, I think that we need to be mindful of the fact that when that starts to move into heritage language and also religious instruction, we can run into some challenges. We need to be mindful because it's not an entirely uncomplicated issue, and the issue has arisen in other contexts, so we need to be aware of that.

Again, though, I think that there is tremendous opportunity to open the door for greater commitments and obligations on the part of our public system for promoting and increasing access to heritage language instruction. I was reading one paper online as other people were speaking because I was trying to get myself up to speed on this, and I saw one author talk about linguistic imperialism that occurs when you have only one or two languages that everybody uses, and then the other languages and the communities and cultures associated with those other languages suffer as a result. I think that it's important to do everything that we can to work against that trend and to promote genuine diversity.

The only other thing that I would suggest as something that we would need to be conscious of, of course, is that we are currently in a situation where we are profoundly shortchanging our school boards. We are asking them to do a great number of things for a great number of people with an ever-reducing pot, and a huge array of demands is being put on how they are going to use that pot, particularly as it relates to capital construction and the allocation of their capital resources within communities. Those demands are being put on them already by this government, often as part of other policies which, potentially, the school boards don't support as they respond to the demands and the requests of their communities.

All I would suggest is that we not put ourselves in the position where, for instance, we're saying to school boards that their extra space is going to be counted against them. They're not allowed to actually lease that extra space at market rate, and then they have to give it to someone at a low rate. The government has decided who that someone will be, and then they turn around and use the fact that there's that extra space against the school, and the school doesn't get the benefit of that use being calculated into the value of that school to the community, to the neighbourhood, to the overall process of community development.

What I think needs to be happening is that whatever effort is ultimately directed to this strategy be done truly in consultation with the school boards and with a view to understanding the somewhat untenable position that this government has put many school boards in with respect to their space, the quality of the space, the degree to which it needs maintenance, and then the costs associated with making that space available to the community. I think school boards want to do that, but it's not enough for the government to say: oh, yeah, you've got to make sure you pay all this extra staff, and you've got to do all this extra work on this building to ensure that the community has access, but we're not going to give you an extra dollar for it. That's the kind of thing that we have got to make sure we don't do more of because, of course, we're already making demands which are pretty unreasonable in many cases.

That being said, though, those are particular issues, and those are the cautionary issues, but they are merely cautionary because, as I say, I do support the promotion and support of more access to heritage and international language programs within Alberta and within the public system or at the very least on a nonprofit basis, where no additional funds are being asked from the people who would access those programs and being paired with government funds. That's, of course, an opportunity to increase the proliferation of public funding of private schools, which, I would argue, is a bad thing. But I think we can achieve this educational objective while preserving the integrity of our public school system, and with those points in mind I support the motion made by the hon. member.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I welcome the opportunity to rise and make a few comments about this motion. The first thing I'd like to say is to just commend the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood for the work that he's done on this and to navigate it through. I know it's seen a couple of different iterations, and he took a lot of feedback from many different people and worked with people in this community and his colleagues, and I think he deserves a lot of credit for the passion he's shown here.

There are others, too, that have been very supportive of heritage language schools, and I think of the MLA for Calgary-Northern Hills and the MLA for Calgary-Greenway and several others of our caucus who have helped push this to the fore. If nothing else, I think they've done a great job of raising the profile on how important the heritage language schools are and the great work that the heritage language school organizations are doing right across the province.

You know, as I read this and as I listen and talk with the member, it really is about collaboration and trying to work between the department and these organizations and the school boards to make sure that these organizations have proper access to facilities. There's nothing wrong with that, of course. We should be doing that on a daily basis anyway. I want to say that Education does support the heritage language schools, and these schools offer credits in courses in language and cultural programs. We also provide funding to support community heritage language programs. Most of these are through the funding that goes for the credits. These language schools are encouraged to investigate opportunities not only with the local school boards but also with community organizations and other partners in order to support their programming. It doesn't need to be just schools that they operate out of.

You know, one of the things we heard many times through Inspiring Ed is that Albertans are challenging us to get out of the schooling business and into the education business. Our focus is really on breaking down the barriers, blurring the lines between K to 12 and postsecondary and industry, and also blurring the lines between the school and the community so that we're bringing the community into the school and taking the school out into the community and so that those learning opportunities are relevant for those kids and aren't just tied to the traditional rules of: it has to be delivered between the hours of 9 to 3 or inside those four walls or in some cases by a certificated teacher. We'll be pushing the envelope of who can actually instruct our kids because if it's putting students first and it's about their experience and about learning, then the hours of 9 to 3 and those four walls can't be a barrier to that. Embracing the work that the heritage language schools and others are doing is important.

Part of that is happening already, and I don't want to leave the impression that schools and school boards are not doing this today. It may be that we can always get better. They do it today, and they do it typically on a cost-recovery basis, and sometimes there are issues with access, but we encourage the schools because they're paid for by the taxpayer, and there's one taxpayer. Their objective is learning, so if we can make those facilities open and usable and welcoming for other members of the community, other groups, and other learning experiences, we want to see that happen. But we don't expect school boards to just do that for free all the time. They have costs that they need to recover, whether it's custodial costs or whether it's to have somebody on-site or whether it's some of the insurance. I know that typically they don't recover the costs for the utilities and a lot of those things for the after-hours use.

We do want to see them as hubs of the community. We do want to see them used as much as possible, not just by heritage language schools, as important as they are, but by any other groups that want to use that infrastructure that's been paid for by the taxpayer. You know, the member opposite raised a good point. One thing we don't provide today is lease support for private schools, so if these opportunities are being given to for-profit private schools, we just always have to be careful about setting precedents where we're going to pay for their capital or pay for their leases, which is something we don't do as a policy decision in this province even though private schools do an incredible amount of good work.

I just commend the member, and I don't think there's anything wrong with this motion. It takes us further down a path we're already heading. We need to continue to collaborate, and it's never a bad thing to collaborate.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any more members who wish to speak on the motion? Seeing none, I would go to Standing Order 8(3), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of the motion to close debate. I invite the hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood to close debate on Motion 513.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the hon. members in the House for your input, suggestions, and questions. It is very helpful for me to learn all the aspects of this issue, but I'm also very humbled to get a sense that the support across the floor has been very strong to set a motion to give some direction and support to this very important issue in our province.

I wanted to acknowledge that the motion we're talking about today is really high level. It's just emphasizing that language education is important. We need to work in collaboration with school boards, and we need to take the maximum opportunity to promote and encourage the development of heritage language schools.

I heard many, many specific references to how we go about that and so on and so forth. Unfortunately, this motion won't go into that much detail, but I do take your advice wholeheartedly. I do remember that I have a private member opportunity. I may bring this up again. By then, those specific issues will be dealt with at that level.

I want to thank you again for your support and for participating in this debate. Thank you so much for sharing your thoughts. I want to remind hon. members that what we're discussing today has a very long influence in our province because you are giving a direction as to how we approach this issue. You are giving some support in terms of how we promote this, how we work together on this, and for that I want to thank you so much. I want to remind you that this is not something small. You are touching the lives of 1 in 5 Albertans and beyond. For that reason, I thank you once again. I urge you to support this motion and get it passed.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 513 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Given the lateness of the hour I would move that we call it 6 o'clock.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:52 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, October 29, 2013

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Dear God, help us to remember our purpose and our mission as servants of the people who elected us. Help us in our duties and obligations and in the discharge of our authorities, both inside and beyond the walls of this hallowed Assembly. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a moment we'll begin with school groups, but could I please remind all of you to keep your introductions as short as possible. We have approximately 20 to do today, and some of us are getting a bit long in our intros, so, please, let's keep them short and to the point. I'm sure folks will understand.

We'll begin with school groups and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of students from l'école Notre-Dame. They're here with Mr. Paulin Larochelle. If I could get them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 60 outstanding students from George McDougall high school in Airdrie. They're here with us today learning about democracy and what goes on in this House, and I'm sure they're going to have a real earful today and will enjoy it. I'd like them to stand as well as their teacher, a former classmate and a friend of mine, Mrs. Devon Sawby, who's with them, and their parent assistants: Ms Stacey Carefoot, Ms Leona Esau, Ms Shannon Mauro, Mr. Earl Hubley – hi, Earl – and Mrs. Nicole Angelozzi. I hope I said that right. If we could all give them a warm welcome, that'd be great.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and through you students from Mundare elementary school. They are here with their teacher, Adrienne Mills, and parents Jaime Burghardt, who has just been re-elected to council, Robin DeJong Jarvis, and Jo-Ann Pawliuk. These students attended School at the Legislature from October 18 to 22 and are back with us again today. If I could ask us to give them the warm greetings of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce you to 32 students and teachers, including Ms Sech, from St. Gabriel School, which is about three blocks from my community. They'll be joining us at 2 o'clock.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

If not, let us proceed with other guests. The Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's truly an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a very special guest and a former colleague of ours. There are many words to describe this gentleman. A few that come to mind are passionate, enthusiastic, loyal, fun, never boring, and definitely a friend, but not reserved; that's for sure. Luke Ouellette served this province very well for many years as an MLA and most recently as our Minister of Transportation. I know question period was definitely one of his favourite times. When we heard, "My question is to the Minister of Transportation," we all knew we were in for an exciting exchange, and we knew that his communications director would be glued to the TV as well. Some could argue that the province's theme in the tourism ads, Remember to Breathe, was inspired by Luke. [interjection] He's already standing, I see, and I think he deserves another great round of applause from you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can't beat that introduction.

To you and through you to all members of this Legislature I would like to introduce three individuals from Alberta Innovates: Bio Solutions. Alberta Innovates: Bio Solutions is a research agency funded by the government of Alberta through our ministry, Enterprise and Advanced Education. It is part of the Alberta Innovates group and has a mandate to invest in science and innovation. With us today seated in the public gallery are board chair Art Froehlich, chief executive officer Dr. Stan Blade, and communications director Marie Cusack. I'd ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guests from the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees local 54, representing roughly 7,000 workers in the health care sector. My guests work with lab services as AHS employees and are here today because they're extremely concerned with the PC government's plan to privatize lab services in Edmonton. I would ask my guests to rise as I call their names and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly: Lyn Morrison, Tasha Quaghebeur, Sharlene Mitchell, Karen Dietrich, and Jennifer Sainte.

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour for me today to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly guests who are in the Legislature Building today to celebrate for the first time in this Assembly Diwali, the festival of lights. Seated in your gallery today from the Hindu Society of Alberta is a very dear friend of mine, a very personal friend but also the president of the Hindu Society, Amar Bhasin, and his wife, Monika. I might add that Amar and Monika are constituents of Edmonton-Whitemud. Accompanying them was to be the society priest, Acharaya Shivshankar Dwivedi. Amar and Monika, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

A second introduction, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour again to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly guests from the Maha Ganapathy temple. The temple is actually in Twin Brooks, which was in the beautiful constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud but has now transferred jurisdiction over to Edmonton-South West. I have the honour and privilege of introducing president Dr. Sutha Suthaker and Mr. Yogasundaram from the temple. I've had a long association with this temple. It's a wonderful organization with wonderful people, and I was very sorry that the temple is no longer in my constituency, but I still consider them to be honorary constituents of Edmonton-Whitemud. They are seated in the members' gallery and are standing now, and I would ask that we give them the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta, followed by the Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you members of the Hindu Society of Calgary that have joined us today for this historic Diwali event. I'll start with the president, none other than Mrs. Neena Obhrai, who also happens to be the spouse of Mr. Deepak Obhrai, the Member of Parliament for Calgary East. Accompanying Mrs. Obhrai is Mr. Jitender Sharma, a long-time family friend; Mr. and Mrs. Arora; and Mrs. Brij Bala. I'd ask them all to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie, followed by the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a wonderful advocate for health in our province, Mrs. Nicole Angelozzi, and her sons Jesse and Jacob. Nicole has been a great advocate of passing and proclaiming the Member for Calgary-Lougheed's private member's bill from a while back that prohibited smoking in cars with children. She really feels that this is something that needs to be proclaimed into law and hopes that the government will do so very quickly as it is affecting children today. I would ask them all to stand and please receive the warm applause of this Assembly.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two very dear friends of mine from the constituency of Vermilion-Lloydminster, Greg and Laurie Hnatuk, that are today seated just above me. Greg and Laurie have been friends for a long, long time. They sit behind me every Sunday in church, which is better than in front of me because then they'd have to listen to me sing. Greg is here because of his long-standing support for Bill 207, the tissue and organ transplant act. He himself was a kidney transplant recipient just before Christmas of 2011 and is doing very, very well, and we're very pleased to have him here. I ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Wellness, followed by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Later today it's my honour to table the 2012-2013 annual report for the Alberta College of Occupational Therapists. In the meantime, it's my pleasure to introduce two of their fine, fine representatives. This past Sunday, October 27, was the fourth annual World

Occupational Therapy Day. Since 2010 it's become an important date in the occupational therapy calendar to promote and celebrate the profession internationally. Occupational therapists do invaluable work in helping people whose ability to function in everyday life is disrupted by physical illness or injury, by developmental problems, the aging process, mental illness, or emotional problems. The college has the important task of regulating the profession of occupational therapy in the province of Alberta and ensuring that Albertans receive competent, ethical occupational therapy services from the 1,500 professionals employed in the field.

Joining us today are the incoming president, Mrs. Gina Kroetsch, and the college's registrar, Dr. Maggie Fulford. They are seated in the member's gallery, and I would ask our guests to rise and invite all of our members to provide them with the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my honour and privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you some wonderful individuals who are here today to witness a very historic day in this province, where we're celebrating Diwali in the Alberta Legislature for the first time. Representing the Bhartiya Cultural Society of Alberta is their president, Dharmender Sharma; his wife, Subhash Rani Sharma; and their priest, Pandit Pankaj Dixit. May I ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

Mr. Speaker, for my second introduction I have representing the Garvi Gujarat Association of Canada president Ashok Patel. Representing the Alberta Gujarati Association is Ashvin Bilimoria and his wife, Mrs. Bilimoria. May I ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

Mr. Speaker, for my final introduction I have two young ladies, youth from the community. First is Priyanka Chandan, who explained the significance of Diwali, and of course joining her is Kanika Bhatara, who did the translation from Sanskrit to English all by herself. May I ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Webber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 15 individuals who are here in support of Bill 207, the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013, which will go into Committee of the Whole this afternoon. I would ask that they stand as I read out their names: Barb Esdale, who is the co-chair of the Alberta Donates Life Coalition and also the wife of a double lung recipient; Leigh Allard, who is the executive director of the Lung Association; Dr. Lori West, who is a professor of pediatrics, surgery, and immunology and the research director at the Alberta transplant institute. Hi, Lori. Nancy MacDonald is the executive director of the Alberta Donates Life Coalition and was a huge resource for me in the work on Bill 207. Sharon Marcus is the co-chair of the Alberta Donates Life Coalition and the mother of a son with a kidney transplant. Tammy Fifield is the program director of the Kidney Foundation of Canada and a kidney transplant recipient herself. Dr. Greg Powell and Linda Powell are Calgary advocates, and they have been a huge, huge resource for me as well. Dr. Powell is also the founder of STARS air ambulance here in the province of Alberta, and he is currently waiting for a liver transplant. Karen Korchinski is an advocate and is also waiting for a liver transplant. She is the lovely lady who introduced me to this community of transplantation and donation and enlightened me on what was going on, and I thank her for enlightening me throughout this process. Dr. Patricia Campbell is a professor of medicine and director of the HLA laboratory. Her specialty is in transplant nephrology. I hope I pronounced that right. Chantal Lacroix is a recent kidney recipient, and Ryan Davis donated that kidney to Chantal, a live donor. Jung-Suk Ryu is the communications manager for the CNIB, Marc Workman is the national manager of the CNIB, and Audry Martyn is a volunteer at the CNIB and a cornea transplant recipient.

Sorry for taking so long, Mr. Speaker. I'd ask that all of them stand and that we give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my friends and outspoken advocates, Murray McRae and Melodie Helm. They are both here today to support Bill 207, the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013. I'd like to also honour them for the very important work that they have done and continue to do in the founding, organizing, and operation of the Annual Bionic Golf Tournament at Gull Lake to raise money and, more importantly, awareness about the need for organ donation in Alberta. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly guests that have joined us today in the public gallery to show their support for Bill 207, brought forward in this House by my friend the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills. All of our guests today are great advocates of Bill 207 as they've lived first-hand the difference this bill will make. I introduce Mr. Tony White, who lives in Twin Brooks, which I'll take the opportunity to remind the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud is in my constituency of Edmonton-South West, and has been a strong advocate for this bill and has received a liver transplant; Mike Cunningham, a double lung recipient; Ingrid Rose, whose son is waiting for a kidney transplant; and Jill Comeau, a recipient of a cornea. Thank you for being here today.

I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I beg your indulgence to conclude with three more, starting with Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Edmonton-Decore, and then the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my honour and my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you the wonderful people who have witnessed this very historical day in the history of this province, that we celebrate Diwali for the first time. I'd like to introduce to you the Sri Sri Radha Govindaji Vedic Temple president, Bala Krishna Das, who's also a leading petrochemical engineer in the province of Alberta, joined by Priest Sudama Gopa Das. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly 10 representatives from the Chinese Freemasons Society of Canada, here in celebration of their 150-year history in our great country. My guests are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask them to please rise as I mention their names. Mr. Howie Mah, president, Chinese Freemasons Society Edmonton chapter; Mr. Wing Jock Lee, executive director, Chinese Freemasons Society Edmonton chapter; Mr. Bill Mah, executive director, Chinese Freemasons Society Edmonton chapter; Mr. Sein Mah, executive director, Chinese Freemasons Society Edmonton chapter; Mr. Wing Jong, secretary, Chinese Freemasons Society Edmonton chapter; Mr. Chuck Ming Chow, treasurer, Chinese Freemasons Society Edmonton chapter; Mr. Gary Hui, president, Jin Wah Sing Musical Society; Mr. Henry Fung, president, Hung Mun Athletic Club; Mr. Ken Kwong, chairman, Dart Coon club; Mrs. Barbara Fung, public relations.

With regret, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Lap Check Kwong, former national chairman, Chinese Freemasons Society of Canada, and Mrs. May Kwong, chairman, Chinese Freemasons Society women's recreation club, could not be with us today.

I would now ask the Assembly to join me and honour my guests with the traditional welcome.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview and Minister of Transportation, your guests are not here yet, so let us conclude with the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with high honour and great distinction that I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two extraordinary Albertans, Sheldon Kennedy and Bonnie Johnston. These individuals were instrumental in the establishment and the continued operation of the Sheldon Kennedy Child Advocacy Centre in Calgary. This government is grateful for the work that they and their staff and volunteers do. The centre provides a level of care to support the children of abuse that is unparalleled. I have visited this facility numerous times, and I can say that it is nothing short of world class. It also has raised the profile of child abuse in the Calgary community and across the province. I ask that both of them please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, 30 seconds. I understand your guests just arrived.

Mr. Young: Yes. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the three newest members to join government caucus research and communications. Mr. Speaker, these bright and intelligent young adults have joined our team and are extremely excited for their first session here at the Legislature. Our newest research and communications team members consist of Adrienne South, Krysten Bachmier, and Keith Gacek. If they could just stand and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. We are three minutes over our time period here, so please review Hansard and see where we can tighten up our intros for tomorrow. Nothing at anyone in particular but just, all of you, review it.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition for your first set of questions.

Health Care Wait Times

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, yesterday in defending the government's record on wait times, the Health minister bragged about the supposed progress being made in waits for four procedures: cataract, hip surgeries, knee replacements, and urgent coronary bypasses. Now, I am certain that the minister knows the unpleasant facts about these wait times, and I find it hard to believe that anybody, let alone the Health minister, could confuse them with progress. To the minister. Last chance. Is he really proud of the government's record of wait times on these procedures?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, it matters not to me what the hon. member believes or not. What are the facts? The fact is that we are the fastest growing province in the country. We grow by over a hundred thousand people a year. We're over 4 million today. We have, obviously, the fastest growing health system in the country. As I mentioned yesterday, over the last three years we've seen hip surgery wait times down by 9 per cent, knee surgeries down by 9 per cent, 700 additional cataract surgeries, and wait times for those down by 22 per cent. I could go on. The record is clear. Our health system is working for Albertans, and we are continuing to make improvements.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, here are the real facts on wait times. Cataract surgery: target 25 weeks, current wait 30 weeks. Hip surgery: target 22 weeks, current wait 37 weeks. Knee replacement: target 28 weeks, current wait 43 weeks. Urgent coronary bypass: target 6 weeks, current wait 23 weeks. This is a dismal record. This is this minister's record. What is his explanation for this unprecedented failure to treat patients?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, these sorts of challenges in elective surgeries can be found across the country. Patients are waiting longer, I think, than all health ministers in the country would like to see, but they are very high-demand procedures, and they're influenced by the growth of our population and the aging of our population. The fact that we're seeing steady improvement in Alberta and the fact that this member can go home tonight and tell her constituents that wait times for cornea transplants in this province are going from three years to three months is something I think she should boast about.

Ms Smith: It's a record that's simply not good enough.

Yesterday the minister expressed shock at the Wildrose wait time guarantee, saying that it would be extreme to allow patients on the wait-list to get treatment and then get paid back out of the out-of-province fund. Well, maybe the minister can help me understand this. Why does he think allowing people to get the care they need when they need it is extreme but forcing people to wait six months for an urgent coronary bypass is not extreme?

Ms Redford: I was so pleased yesterday to see the Leader of the Opposition actually stand by a policy that she talked about in the last election. I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, that 18 months ago, when Albertans were asked whether or not they wanted to have a two-tier health system or thought that the solution to fixing health care was to privatize health care, they resoundingly said no.

Wait times are certainly improving. We continue to make drastic improvements, Mr. Speaker. We will continue to do that because that's how you build a publicly funded health care system that Albertans can trust.

Ms Smith: I don't think that's a leader who should be talking about changing policies every day.

Flood Mitigation

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we are now less than eight months away from the next flood season, so I'm going to repeat a question that I asked on March 21, three months before the flood. Maybe now the Minister of Municipal Affairs will have some appreciation of why I asked it. I asked this. Former MLA George Groeneveld's flood mitigation report called for a plan to help 66 communities that are at risk of flooding. When will the government provide a detailed, comprehensive priority list of flood mitigation plans so that I can tell High River where they stand on that list?

Ms Redford: It has been absolutely incredible in the last four months to see communities come together and talk about how to deal with what was not only unprecedented in terms of volume but also in terms of pathways for flooding. You may know, Mr. Speaker, that approximately a month ago there was a symposium in Calgary that was convened with the minister and the chair of our task force and all of the ministers that are responsible for rebuilding flood-affected areas to talk about exactly that. I did say in my comments yesterday that we have a plan, we've contracted engineers, that work is being done now, and we are listening to Albertans because that's how you build a plan that people can trust.

Ms Smith: In fact, Mr. Speaker, this government has let communities down.

There are a variety of possible mitigation projects across 66 communities identified in the Groeneveld flood mitigation report. To the minister: how many of these communities have had their flood mitigation projects approved and completed, and how many of those 66 communities are at a lower flood risk today than they were in 2005, when the report was issued? That's eight full years ago.

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Mr. Speaker, that sounds more like a written question. I don't have those details on hand, but I can tell the member that out of the over $300 million that the Groeneveld report recommended, $82 million of it has been done.

I can tell them something else, too. The member might want to go to her community of High River and explain to them how she's going to do any of that or support their schools or support rebuilding the community when they're going to cut $5 billion out of our infrastructure plan.

Ms Smith: They had to spend $350 million to renovate MLA offices. We certainly would've been able to get it done.

The minister is clearly not on top of his file, but he can reassure Albertans by undertaking a simple task. The minister must instruct his department to immediately create a detailed list of the mitigation projects for the 66 communities at risk in Alberta, which includes the nature of the project, the cost, and the expected completion date. When can we expect him to table that list in this Assembly?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, it's been well recognized that disasters are a shared responsibility. The federal government has even recognized that they contribute a significant amount of the money to rebuilding communities. So we need a co-ordinated plan between municipalities, the province, and the federal government to share the responsibility on mitigating disasters before they happen. I met with the federal minister. We've talked about it several times on the phone. He agrees completely that we need to work on a co-ordinated national strategy. We've got the Groeneveld report. We're going to be announcing things through the fall as we do our engineering analysis on those plans. So stay tuned. It's coming.

The Speaker: Hon. leader, your third and final set of questions.

Premier's Office Staff Compensation and Severance Payments

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, despite clear and direct instruction the Premier continues to fight tooth and nail to hide information related to severance and compensation for key members of her political team. The office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner stated in its report, quote: the confidential nature of remuneration is not a given for individuals who hold key positions in the Premier's office. Unquote. Now, I'm not a lawyer, but these instructions seem pretty clear to me. So why does the Premier continue to hide the details of her staff's severance and compensation from Alberta taxpayers?

Ms Redford: We're doing exactly the opposite. We're committed to transparency, Mr. Speaker. We have made a commitment to put in place not ad hoc release but a full system, which is very similar to what we've done with respect to government MLA expenses. I remind the opposition that they still don't disclose their expenses. We will continue to do better every single day. We've made that commitment to Albertans, and we'll stand by it.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, in a speech in August of 2012 the Premier said, and I quote, if what we're doing doesn't pass the highest level of scrutiny, then we shouldn't be doing it. I can only assume that the Premier must define accountability and transparency differently than every other Albertan. Albertans expect their Premier to follow the law and obey the directions of the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner. So will she release the details of her staff's severance and compensation today?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, under the leadership of this Premier Alberta is delivering unprecedented transparency. Under the leadership of this Premier we brought in an expense disclosure policy that is the gold standard across . . . [interjections] Under the leadership of this Premier we are continuing to lead Alberta and all of Canada. The Premier is not stopping there. She has instructed me to bring forward a new policy on salary and severance disclosure. That's what we're going to do.

The Speaker: As viewers and other participants can see, there's a lot of love in the room today. Let's just try and contain it a bit so we can hear the questions and the answers.

The hon. leader. Final question.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's the gold standard of spin.

We know from media reports and Twitter that her ex-chief of staff claimed he was paid $130,000 in severance after being on the job for a mere six months. Then she rushed him out the door of the Premier's office and into her PC Party campaign war room. Since her office continues to hide the full details of the contract, can the Premier confirm today that the $130,000 payment he received was the only payment he received when he left?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, as I said, we're continuing to lead Alberta in expense disclosure. We're going to be leading all of Canada with the processes we're undertaking in open and transparent government. [interjections]

The Speaker: I'm going to allow the hon. associate minister to start all over, and I will continue giving him the floor until you allow him the proper 30 seconds to respond. Is that clear?

Hon. minister, please take your first 30 seconds.

Mr. Scott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I said, under the leadership of this Premier we are delivering an open and transparent government. We're going to continue to deliver that. The Premier has instructed me to bring forward a new policy to do with severance and salary disclosure. We're going to be doing that by the end of the year. We've already done an expense disclosure policy, which is the gold standard. We're going to continue leading for Albertans.

What I would appreciate – if you're going to have X employees who are part of the Wildrose caucus, if you're hiring employees, then I would like to know: what are those employees making? If people run for the Wildrose caucus and are hired by you, what are you paying them?

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, leader of the Liberal opposition.

Minister of Municipal Affairs

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, Happy Diwali.

The Premier promised big-city charters when she ran for leader. She promised big-city charters when she ran during the election. Her Minister of Municipal Affairs signed an MOU with Edmonton and Calgary committing to introducing legislation on big-city charters in the spring of 2013. Yesterday, however, her minister told this House he couldn't keep his promise because of the flood. To the Premier: do you condone your minister using Alberta's worst ever natural disaster as an excuse for your latest broken promise?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I don't know where the hon. member was yesterday. I think I did update the House on the fantastic meeting that we had with the mayors of Edmonton and Calgary on Saturday morning where we actually talked about the fact that we're making great progress on the charter. The mayor of Edmonton has asked for some time to work on their perspective on this with his council, which we're happy to give him. We'll keep moving forward because it is the right thing to do. We did make the commitment, and we're keeping it.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, given that our urban Premier repeatedly promised big-city charters, it's interesting to note that her rural Minister of Municipal Affairs repeatedly talks about civic charters, which would treat Calgary like Carstairs and Edmonton like Edson. To the Premier: whose vision for municipal relations will prevail, yours or your minister's?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the vision of this government is a vision which is a commitment to communities and to big cities to make sure that we're putting in place relationships that respect their autonomy and ensure that they can be leaders in our province. There is no difference between my perspective and the perspective of our Minister of Municipal Affairs, just as there is no difference with anyone else on this bench. We want communities to thrive, and I'd appreciate it if that leader did not try to split people up in this province.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the question is about the Premier keeping her word and not breaking her promises. Maybe the minister isn't challenging the Premier's leadership but is simply confused given that he keeps talking about the Municipal Government Act when we ask him about big-city charters. To the Premier: is this like Calgary's mayor said, that your minister "really hasn't been a part of the conversation." Well, perhaps that explains your meeting the mayors on your own.

A sup question: does this mean that you're actually taking over the file?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, there's incredible work that we do together as leaders in this province. I am very happy to meet with mayors throughout this province. I've met with Mayor Nenshi, I've met with Mayor Iveson, and I've met with mayors in Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, and Red Deer. What we do every day is work to build those partnerships to ensure that we can provide the support because mayors and councils need to give the direction. I don't know what this hon. member is talking about or what he's trying to suggest, but I'll tell you that we have a clear plan to move forward to build Alberta, to support families and communities, and to respect leadership across this province, and that's what we'll do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Medical Laboratory Services

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This morning I released a letter from 16 pathologists at the University of Alberta hospital raising serious concerns about this PC government's massive privatization of lab services in Edmonton, including their independence and the, quote, widespread use of public dollars for private gain. Most importantly, they're worried about timeliness and quality of patient care should lab services be privatized. They are very serious concerns. The government continues to privatize health care and to risk the health of Alberta families. To the Premier: why?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, this hon. member's characterization is absolutely ridiculous. I am so proud of this Health minister. He's done incredible work in the past four months to ensure that we have patient safety and effective acute and long-term care as well as primary care and preventative care. That's an integrated health system.

It's unfortunate that this hon. member, if he has those concerns, would suggest to anyone that they should be afraid. We want to make sure that patient safety is honoured. We want to make sure that patients are protected, and that's why this Health minister will make the right decisions in consultation with professionals to actually improve the health care system.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I will quote from the letter signed by 16 pathologists, many of them professors at the university medical school. They are concerned that this will "impair timely patient care in an acute setting, and reduce patient safety along with overall quality of care." The Premier has characterized this as scare tactics on my part, but I have a question for her. Why is the government not taking this seriously?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, that's a ridiculous characterization. Those concerns which those professionals may have are exactly the same concerns that this minister will have and that this government will have when a decision is taken about whether or not to do what this member suggests is already happening. It isn't. Of course we will listen to professionals. We're not going to create any uncertainty. We're going to move forward and build this province, respond to people that need help, ensure that that happens. I have every confidence that this minister will do exactly that.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to an earlier question from the Leader of the Official Opposition the Premier said that Albertans in the last election had rejected private health care, yet AHS is now planning to privatize medical lab services in the Edmonton region with a $3 billion contract to one private operator. Can the Premier explain the difference between her words and her actions?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, 18 months ago this government, this Progressive Conservative government, said that we stood by the fact that we believed in a public health care system. We will continue to do that. That is what Albertans rely on. They can have confidence in that commitment. We do not change our minds from Monday to Friday. We are not committed to ideology that would actually allow us to make decisions that didn't make a lot of sense. We will ensure that we have a publicly funded health care system that ensures patient safety and delivers services to Albertans.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the first five spots for the leaders, who are allowed preambles according to my ruling. Please, if you have questions coming up after this, curtail your preambles to any of the supplementaries to give all 15 others who have questions a chance to speak.

Provincial Fiscal Policy

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, a new study released last week reported that annual deficits have cratered Alberta's net financial assets by 65 per cent in just six years. That's a $22 billion loss. If my financial planners lost 65 per cent of my financial assets in six years, well, I'd fire them and ban them from ever being able to touch my money again. Since Albertans won't have the opportunity to fire this Premier or Finance minister until 2016, minister, is the plan to entirely evaporate our financial assets by then, or is this just another part of your government's new debt is hope strategy?

Mr. Horner: Well, I had an opportunity to review some of the literature that the hon. member is referring to. It's a Fraser report that talks about a reduction in our net financial assets. But what the hon. member is not telling Albertans in his preamble is what that reduction was. Let's have a look, Mr. Speaker. Five billion of that reduction was the increase in unfunded liability for pensions. You know what? This government is addressing that. Ten billion dollars of that difference was assets that we put into the ground, things like the Calgary south hospital, which evidently they now don't want us to build with cash because then that changes the net financial assets of the province. The hon. member obviously doesn't understand the financial statements.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, we can build what we need without robbing our kids blind.

Minister, can you please show me in any campaign document or government statement prior to the last election where you or your Premier promised Albertans that by 2016 the Alberta government would be $17 billion in debt, would have spent the entire sustainability fund, would have lost all of our net financial assets, and would not even have balanced the consolidated budget once. I must have missed that campaign commercial. Point it out for us so that I can take a look.

Mr. Horner: You know, Mr. Speaker, what Albertans understand is that a good way to build your future is to invest in your home. They also understand that in most cases you take out a mortgage to make that investment and you create net assets through the equity. They also know that savings are important, and they've told us. The Wildrose Alliance obviously does not know how to read a financial balance sheet, because if you take the cash to build an asset, you reduce your net financial assets. That's exactly what they're talking about doing in their $5 billion-a-year capital plan. I hope that they'll come clean with Albertans and tell us how many teachers, how many nurses, how many hospitals they are going to close to pay for $5 billion.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah, it is hope, Mr. Speaker.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not saying that this government's handling of our finances is akin to a piece of junk. I would never say that. But my question is this. If this kind of financial planning isn't a piece of junk, then what the heck is it?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's look at the record. The Alberta Chambers of Commerce endorses our plan. The Alberta Enterprise Group endorses our financial plan. All three of our rating agencies that give us that triple-A credit rating endorse our financial plan. The Auditor General has talked about the value-for-money calculation. If I'm making 8 per cent in my savings and I'm borrowing at 3 per cent, even the hon. member should be able to understand that kind of math. The strongest economy in North America, the most jobs created, the most people coming to the province: we must be doing something right.

The Speaker: You know, there's an interesting section in some of our practices and procedures, some of the books, that says that you shouldn't do indirectly what's not allowed directly. Let's all be reminded of that – shall we? – given the episode that occurred yesterday.

Let us move on to Calgary-Bow, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat. Please curtail your preambles to your sups.

Flood-related Insurance Claims

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's been more than four months since severe flooding ravaged much of southern Alberta, and many Albertans, including some of my constituents, lost everything. Understandably, these Albertans are anxious to begin rebuilding their lives. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Why are Albertans affected by the flood finding it so difficult to get answers from their insurance companies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The flooding in June was devastating for a lot of families, and we want to help every single one of them rebuild as quickly as possible. We, in fact, have already processed thousands of the DRP applications and provided support. But the member is right. Close to 2,500 of the 9,000 applications are delayed because the homeowners haven't received definitive answers from their insurance companies. We need that information, too, so that we can do the DRP applications. We continue to work with the insurance companies to make sure that they work very quickly to help service their clients, and we'll continue to push them to do that.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. What are you doing to help advance these files and get dollars into the hands of flood-affected Albertans?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Mr. Speaker, we reached out to the insurance industry in the early days of the recovery because we knew we needed to work together to get the job done. We need to work hand in hand in order to make sure that we service clients. In some cases we had insurance companies like TD Meloche that did an exceptional job of aligning their system with ours. We have other insurance companies that haven't quite done that, and we're continuing to encourage them. We've actually streamlined our disaster recovery program application process substantially, and we continue to encourage the insurance companies to do the same thing so that they can serve their clients very well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance. Is there anything government can do to force insurance companies to move faster?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, in conjunction with the Minister of Municipal Affairs, as he mentioned, we have been in touch with the insurance companies. This Premier stood up for Albertans when some of the insurance companies initially refused to honour some of their policies. We will continue to do that. We'll stay in communication with the insurance industry. We know that they are committed to moving forward. But let me be clear. We expect all companies to honour their contractual obligations to Albertans, and we expect them to do it soon.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Lesser Slave Lake.

School Construction Financing

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week Albertans learned that the PC government will be unable to deliver on its promise to build 19 schools. After all the cheerleading for returning into debt and after all the political hay that was made about supposedly building Alberta, this government can't get the job done. To the Minister of Infrastructure: isn't it time to reconsider this government's preoccupation with debt-financed P3s, admit the procurement model is flawed, and go back to the traditional procurement so our children don't have to be in crowded classrooms?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, again, I don't know where this member gets his information from, but nothing that he said is close to the truth. Our Premier and this government are committed to building Alberta by investing in infrastructure, ensuring that Alberta families and communities have the quality of life they deserve now and in the future, and we're going to do that by building schools. We fully intend to build the schools that the Premier said we were going to. I don't know where he's getting that from.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Auditor General has said that the Alberta government has overstated its savings on P3s, will the Minister of Infrastructure admit that the practice of paying out losing bidders and awarding the winner an exclusive contract rather than letting our very reliable small and medium-sized companies bid on single schools just does not work? Please admit it.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, to date we've saved over $2.2 billion by using P3 models, and I'm not going to apologize for saving the Alberta taxpayers' dollars and getting good value for money.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, to the Finance minister: given that the P3 procurement method isn't getting the job done on these 19 schools, will the government admit that P3s are just a way to hide the debt from our kids and our grandkids?

Mr. Horner: Well, it's interesting that this question would come from that hon. member because this fall I was actually in his community, and he attended one of our open houses for the budget consultations. You know what? We asked the question of the people in that room: if we are going to build the infrastructure, do you want us to continue using alternative methods of financing, which include P3s, which include debt financing, which include sometimes cash? Overwhelmingly in the room, in his constituency, Mr. Speaker, they said: yes, build it because we're growing. We are growing far faster than you could ever accommodate on a pay-as-you-go system. They should know that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Northland School Division

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 21, 2013, many citizens had the opportunity to vote for their preferred candidates for municipal governments and school boards. This was not the case in Northland school division. Yet section 10(3) of the Northland School Division Act stipulates that "members of the board [shall] hold office for 3 years and shall remain in office until the organizational meeting of the board following the next ensuing election of local school board committees" arises. My question is to the Minister of Education. As elections were held for local school board committees, why is section 10(3) not being enacted to have a corporate board for constituents of Northland school division? Is it because they're predominantly aboriginal people?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, all Alberta students deserve a quality education that prepares them for their future, and the students in Northland school division are no exception. Now, that being said, I do want to commend the member from Lesser Slave River. [interjection] She's an incredible advocate for the aboriginal students in our province and for her constituents, and I thank her for the question.

Mr. Speaker, we're going to continue to ensure this school division continues to make progress on the 48 recommendations that came forward from the inquiry report. We've got an official trustee who was appointed and will be in place until we can change some legislation to put a proper board in.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If I didn't love that minister so much, I'd throw my moccasin at him.

To the same minister: given that these communities have been patient and understanding in addressing the educational issues of their children, their patience and understanding are running out. When can they have a board of trustees in place?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I do regret the delay, and I appreciate their patience. It isn't about rushing to get the job done. It's about trying to make sure that we're working to get the job done right. In order to meet the requirements that came forward in the inquiry report and from the engagement team – and there are 48 of them – we do need to change legislation. We haven't had the opportunity to do that yet but hope to do that in the year to come. I do want to underscore, though, that there have been many improvements made already in the work that's taken place with the official trustee, including the development of a literacy strategy, full-day kindergarten, and a dramatic reduction in complaints from parents and community.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. Given that the release from the Northland inquiry team had been already done and we had the Northland Community Engagement Team, which was represented by a lot of people within that community who expended a lot of energy and a lot of blood, sweat, and tears, can you tell me when we can expect the release of that Northland Community Engagement Team report?

Mr. J. Johnson: I hope very soon, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, it's on my desk as we speak. You know, one of the reasons this thing has taken a little bit longer than we hoped is because of a lot of great work that's been done through the MOU, that has been led and championed by our Minister of Aboriginal Relations. There have been some great advancements and great developments made with the treaty chiefs right around the province, and this folds into that work. I don't want anyone to think that there haven't been great strides made. It's just that the legislation isn't ready which would have allowed us to put a proper board in place. But for many of the 48 recommendations we've got action. Like the other examples I just gave, there's some good work happening there with your community.

School Construction

Mr. Hehr: The Premier promised stable funding for our public education. She promised to build 50 new schools and modernize 70 more. She also promised that there would be no service cuts. Broken promises is what the Premier has delivered to the children of Alberta. The government has yet to build a single school in its mandate in two years. Today we see 51,000 more kids crammed into the schools, with 2,000 fewer teachers than three years ago. To the Minister of Education: despite the spin cycle, will you admit that Alberta schoolchildren are facing a steep and unprecedented service cut?

Dr. Sherman: Good question.

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it is a good question, but the answer is: absolutely not. We've got one of the best education systems in the entire globe, and international tests prove that. That's not being changed now with the current actions that we've had to take, the difficult actions with the budget. But let's be clear. The education budget is one of the very few budget lines in this government that was protected and actually increased, so let's not let Albertans believe or perpetuate myths that there were actually cuts to the education budget.

Now, does that mean any particular school or any particular school board has the same amount of money to work with this year as they did last? Quite possibly not. But this Premier has been focused on building Alberta and keeping our promises. We look at the $107 million that she put back into the system. We look at the Education Act, the ATA deal. We look at the removal of PATs. Those are promises made and promises kept.

Mr. Hehr: It is unconscionable that the Minister of Infrastructure has not yet started the building of these new schools instead of messing around with P3 schemes. Will the minister get on with the business of building schools in neighbourhoods where kids live and acquire the financing to start building these schools tomorrow?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know where this member has been, but I've been to all kinds of school openings in the last year and half. I don't know how he can say that in only a year and a half, less than halfway through the term, we're not going to get this done. I'll guarantee you we'll get our 50 schools built and our 70 modernizations. I've been to lots of ribbon cuttings and grand openings of schools already this year.

Mr. Hehr: Just to bring the minister up to speed, those were schools promised by Premier Stelmach, not by Premier Redford, so let's get on the same page.

Anyway, given that that answer does not satisfy me, how come it's taken you virtually two years to get an answer on P3 proposals? Why haven't you been out there building these schools instead of sending out proposals?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, for one, Mr. Speaker, we haven't been elected two years yet, and for another, we made our first announcements of 30 schools this spring. You don't announce a school one day and start building it the next. The planning and all of the design and research has to go into that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seven months after this government took a hatchet to our colleges and universities, the casualties are mounting. Every day we hear about opportunities for Alberta students stolen by a government that appears genuinely hostile to higher education. To the minister of advanced education: can you explain to those Albertans who care about their education and that of their children why they should ever again trust a Premier who promised them a 2 per cent increase and then gave them a 7 per cent cut?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, because they know that our Premier will make difficult decisions when difficult decisions need to be made, they know that this Premier and this government have a history of commitment to advanced education and, frankly, K to 12 education as well, they know that this government has invested more than 40 per cent in increases in education over the last 10 years, they know that Alberta advanced education is one of the highest funded advanced education systems in Canada, and they know that they're getting world-class education in this province from kindergarten till whenever they choose to stop educating themselves.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that these government cuts have eliminated at least 2,000 postsecondary spaces for Alberta students since April and given that at least 61 college and university programs have been cut in the same period, why won't the minister admit that his anti-education, pro knuckle-dragging plan is going to drive Alberta learners out of the province and cripple our potential for decades to come?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, it's refreshing to know that at least another party in this House believes in evolution. That is really good. They must have had a convention last week.

Mr. Speaker, they also know that when difficult decisions are made by government, those are not decisions of choice, but they are simply decisions that the government has to make in view of changing financial situations. They know that they have chairs and presidents in those schools who are committed to students' education and also have had to make difficult decisions during that time. But let's be honest with our students. Programs are eliminated every year even when budgets go up. That's how our institutions stay current and deliver world-class education.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that this government's cuts have shut down over 2,000 student spaces across the province while at the same time the U of A is forced to contemplate increasing spaces for international, high-paying applicants to raise dollars, why won't the minister commit to making space available for every willing Alberta student instead of slamming the door on them and converting our colleges and universities into international fundraising machines?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, that clearly shows that this member knows nothing about advanced education. International students are not raising money for our postsecondary institutions. As a matter of fact, their tuition is set in such a way that it simply covers the cost of educating international students in our schools. Why do we do it? Because it gives a richer educational experience to our Alberta students on campuses, having different world view perspectives on campus, and it also opens markets because those individuals go back to their home countries and do business with our province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Calgary-Fort.

Rural Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rural Albertans continue to be upset about their ambulance situation, producing more calls, letters, and visits than any other issue. They're hurt, disappointed, and angry. I've met with several, and the colourful language that they used would be inappropriate in this Chamber. The volunteer system worked. Care was provided in a timely, cost-effective way. Lives were saved. Communities were strengthened as neighbours and friends pitched in to help one another. The system wasn't broken, but the AHS fix is. To the minister: when will you admit the mistake and restore common sense to the rural system?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I certainly respect the hon. member for bringing forward the concerns of his constituents, but I can tell you that what we are interested in is a state-of-the-art EMS system that is part of health care. That involves planning for growth, it involves planning to make sure that we have the best in equipment, and it involves as well, as the hon. member points out, preserving partnerships with municipalities, including fire departments and first responders. We are doing all of those things. The consolidation of dispatch services in the province will help move that forward.

Mr. Bikman: Mr. Speaker, given the current inefficient, ineffective rural ambulance service being provided as a result of AHS's heavy-handed meddling, people outside the cities may face dangerously long wait times for needed assistance. Will the minister tell us how and when he intends to correct this?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, we have more ground ambulance resources today throughout the province than we had when the original policy decision was made to make EMS part of health care. It is vitally important that all dispatch services in the province are consolidated in the three major centres that have been identified. That's what allows dispatchers to see all of the ambulance resources in the province, and when an ambulance is called out of the home community, it allows that ambulance to be repatriated to the home community as quickly as possible.

Mr. Bikman: If only, Mr. Speaker.

Given that many Albertans live and work significant distances from hospitals and that, thanks to the dysfunctional rules of centralized dispatching, often their ambulances are away on non life-threatening transfers, will the minister please listen to their concerns and make the reasonable changes they're calling for?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we will continue to work with all municipalities in the province to optimize EMS services for all Albertans, but the days of the 1950s and '60s and '70s, where we can have literally dozens of dispatch services across the province and expect to operate a first-rate EMS system that functions as part of health care, are over. There are five dispatch services alone between Edmonton and Calgary along highway 2, and in many cases in the past those ambulances have not been known to one another. This is progress in health care. It involves partnership and co-operation, and I look forward to the hon. member's co-operation with that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Assistance for Calgary Flood Victims

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past June we all witnessed the disastrous flooding in southern Alberta. It affected some areas in my constituency, and my thanks go to the first responders: the RCMP, the military personnel, and many caring volunteers. In Calgary tens of thousands of people were displaced from their homes in the downtown core. Even now there are some still displaced. My question to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what efforts are being made to help those people who remain displaced?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is dedicated to making sure that Calgary residents and residents from every single community that were displaced by the floods have a safe, comfortable place to stay while they either repair their home or they rebuild. Residents in Calgary in particular have the option to go to the Great Plains new temporary housing community. It can accommodate up to 700 people right now, and we don't anticipate that we're going to need more than that. Residents simply need to register with the Calgary Housing Company by November 30, and they'll be located in that residence, or they can make their own housing arrangements, and some of those costs will be eligible for DRP assistance.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what sort of relief is being provided for residents whose insurance did not cover the flood damage?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, we received more than 2,200 applications from Calgarians alone out of the 9,000 that we received from across the province. Approximately 1,600 home evaluations have been done. We have 700 payments, give or take a couple, that have been issued, which is $4.3 million worth of advance cheques that have gone to Calgarians alone to help them in the rebuilding or the repairing process.

Mr. Speaker, I can't even list in an hour all of the things that we have done over the last four months to help people. We have had information sessions in Calgary where people can go find out about DRP, about the rebuilding process, about the housing accommodations, about the standards they need to repair their homes so that they know what they can do going forward.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: what forms of assistance are being provided to small businesses that were badly affected by the flood?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, our disaster recovery program initially only applied to businesses of between one and 20 employees. We made a very strategic and immediate decision that we needed to expand that to cover 21 to 50 employees as well because many of those are small businesses that were heavily impacted by the flood. We had 2,200 disaster recovery applications from Calgary, and 374 of those were for small businesses. We know that it doesn't matter what the size of the community is. We needed to create some sort of program to assist small businesses and make sure that they got back on their feet as quickly as possible because they are a foundation of many of our communities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Banff-Cochrane.

School Construction Priorities

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Schools are bursting all over the province, and the schools in my area are no different. Sylvan Lake has grown by 17 per cent in the last two years. Two elementary schools are at 120 per cent capacity, the library moved to the hallway, and there is no longer a music class. [interjections] The public school board has identified an elementary school for Sylvan Lake as their top priority. No one is asking to jump the queue. However, they are asking for a timeline of when they can expect some relief. [interjections] Will the Minister of Infrastructure tell Sylvan Lake where my community is on the priority list?

The Speaker: Hon. members on the government side, I had trouble hearing that question. I'm sure some others did, too. Then, of course, you baited the hon. Member for Airdrie to chime in, and then that baited someone else over here to chime in. Please, we're not doing too badly this afternoon. Let's not run into the ditch here.

Hon. member, I hope someone got your question. Who was it to?

Mrs. Towle: The Minister of Infrastructure.

The Speaker: Minister of Infrastructure, did you get enough to respond? Please.

Mr. Drysdale: I think so.

Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've said before, they asked for a priority list. Our list is our capital plan. It's on our website. Everybody can see. It tells you all the schools that are going to be built in the next three years. The plan is there. If the school is on the list, that's where it is.

Mrs. Towle: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, that isn't even remotely what I asked for, and I assume that my constituents in Innisfail-Sylvan Lake deserve the same respect as everyone else's.

Given that in the Red Deer Catholic school system kids from Innisfail are being bused to Red Deer, with an hour-and-a-half bus ride just to get to the classroom, doesn't the minister agree that families have been patient long enough and deserve to know where their communities are on the priority list?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the member brings up a good point. We've got incredible growth pressures all over the province, so I know there are many families and many communities wondering where they are on the list and when we might announce new schools. What I can tell those constituents of the members and those Albertans is that they elected the right Premier. We're going to continue building this province. We've got a commitment to announce 50 new schools and 70 modernizations, and we're well on our way. You're going to see some more schools announced by the end of this calendar year, in the next month or so, and those will be primarily modernizations. Then you're going to see another round of new schools in the spring. I think many communities will be very happy, and they deserve these schools.

Mrs. Towle: Mr. Speaker, it's my understanding that nobody gets feedback unless they're selected, and since we know that across the province communities from north to south all submit their capital lists, which are public information, why does this PC government continue to hide their list from parents, teachers, school boards, and communities and prevent them from doing proper planning for all Albertans?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the only secret lists in here are the secret lists the opposition have, all the infrastructure projects they've promised to cut, and they won't tell us. In addition, of course, they also announced here recently that 30 per cent of the schools we're building we shouldn't be building. Well, I would sure like that feedback so we can build that into our capital plans and take that under consideration.

Mr. Speaker, we work closely with the school boards. They build their capital priorities. They send them in to us. We work with Infrastructure and try to prioritize those across the province, which is not an easy job and something we take very seriously. Once we make those decisions in co-operation with Infrastructure and those school boards, they become public, and they're part of the capital plan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by Little Bow.

Flood Recovery Contracts

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been thousands of files processed through the DRP by LandLink, the contractor responsible for administering the program. However, there is confusion around the role and relationship of LandLink to the government. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: since LandLink has had a multiyear contract with the province, can the minister confirm that a competitive process to award this contract and to renew this contract was followed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Yes, Mr. Speaker. LandLink has been contracted as a service provider for the disaster recovery program since 1995. Actually, the contract has gone out to tender several times: in 2003, in 2005, and again in 2008. In 2012 it went out, and again they were one of two vendors to apply to the request for information. We've always used it as a competitive process and will continue to do so.

Mr. Casey: To the same minister: can the minister confirm how much LandLink has been paid to date and on what basis compensation is determined?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, LandLink gets paid for actual expenses at an hourly rate for their various levels of staff. The contract has actually given the government very good value over the last 17 years. Because LandLink's costs are eligible under the federal program, we've actually gotten reimbursed from the federal government for half the contract for LandLink, which has saved taxpayers of this province $21.7 million, so we've gotten incredible value for that. On top of that, LandLink's administration amounts to 11 per cent of the total costs. The Insurance Bureau of Canada says that insurance companies look to 25 to 30 per cent of it as administration costs. That's good value. We're getting exceptional value.

Mr. Casey: To the same minister: when dealing with the public, are LandLink employees required to identify themselves as such and to correspond on LandLink letterhead?

Mr. Griffiths: I know, Mr. Speaker. I saw the same column the individual did, that made some wild accusations about what LandLink was doing. Because LandLink is a contracted service and it communicates with applicants, it can't use its own letterhead. It needs to use Municipal Affairs' letterhead so that applicants aren't confused with who they're dealing with. At the bottom of every single letter it identifies LandLink as a contractor to Municipal Affairs, so it serves very well to make sure that there's no confusion with applicants.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, just before we go on with the Routine, I want to specifically commend Calgary-Bow and Calgary-Fort and Banff-Cochrane for no preambles whatsoever to their questions. I also want to commend Cypress-Medicine Hat and Cardston-Taber-Warner for doing their best to keep the "given" part to a minimum. Well done.

Might we just briefly revert to Introduction of Guests? Someone sent me a note here saying that they had a guest who had just arrived, and it was Edmonton-Decore.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Please proceed, then.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions if you don't mind. It is an honour and privilege for me to rise again today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two very special representatives who attended today's Diwali festival of lights celebration here at the Alberta Legislature. They include Mr. Jay Kumar, president, Fiji Sanatan Society of Alberta, and Mr. Anil Raju, vice-president, Fiji Sanatan Society of Alberta. I would ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. You have a second introduction?

Mrs. Sarich: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for your indulgence. It is an honour and privilege to rise again to introduce to you and through you two incredible representatives who also attended today's Diwali festival of lights celebration at the Alberta Legislature, the inaugural celebration. We have Mr. Jim Ishwari Prasad, president of Fiji Multicultural Centre, and Mr. Rajesh Bali, member, Sanatan, Fiji Multicultural Centre. I ask that they also receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, in 20 seconds we will continue with Members' Statements, starting with Edmonton-Decore.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Chinese Freemasons of Canada Sesquicentennial

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour and privilege to rise today as this year marks the Chinese Freemasons of Canada 150th anniversary. Established before Canada was recognized as a nation, the Chinese Freemasons, also known historically as the Hongmen or Vast Family society, are today a successful not-for-profit international organization. Benevolent societies such as the Chinese Freemasons formed an important foundation within early Chinese Canadian communities. The first chapters of the Chinese Freemasons in Canada were formed in the 1870s in British Columbia at Quesnel, adjacent to the goldfields of Barkerville, and in Victoria at their point of entry. Services to its members included mutual aid and support, the celebration of traditional annual Chinese festivals and ceremonies, charity events, and fundraising efforts for their members' funerals.

Notably, the early settlement history of pioneer Chinese immigrant labourers and merchants to Canada also includes the first Chee Kung Tong building of the Hongmen society at Barkerville. This building is unique for it represents the society's architectural wooden structures during the gold rush period and today is recognized as a national historic site in Canada. It truly is a celebration of Chinese Canadian history, culture, and traditions, providing a valuable visual representation of how pioneer Chinese immigrants lived in the 1870s.

I would like to congratulate the Chinese Freemasons of Canada for their organization's century and a half of leadership and commitment to supporting the Chinese communities across Canada. Through their long-standing efforts the Freemasons of Canada have thrived, without question, Mr. Speaker, and have made a significant contribution to society. Their past, present, and future history is immeasurably valuable to our communities, province, and great country. I wish them continued success.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Service Dogs

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I introduced members of the House and the public to my hearing aid service dog, Quill. For those who weren't aware, I have been suffering from hearing loss over the last several years. My hearing loss gave me the opportunity to speak with the wonderful people from the Lions Foundation of Canada. Their mission is to provide service dogs to assist Canadians with medical or physical disabilities. Success story after success story lets us know that they are not just giving people a service but a new lifelong friend.

For myself that has certainly been the case. Quill has been with me every day since May and is currently trained on eight different sounds, like my phone, the doorbell, and tells me when someone is talking to me by lifting his paws and taking me to the sound. Since then we have developed an intense emotional bond. He's always at my side, loyal and, with some long days of debate ahead here at the Legislature, a tireless worker.

With Quill at my side today it's hard not to think about Quanto, the Edmonton Police Service dog who was cruelly stabbed while serving the great people of this city. Our officers did not just lose a dog that day, but they lost a faithful, loyal friend. This is why I am so thankful that the Prime Minister and our federal friends are putting forward Quanto's law to protect service dogs. I think we can all agree that these faithful and loyal dogs deserve better protection and that those that harm or kill them, quite frankly, deserve to be treated severely for their horrendous crimes.

I'd like to thank all members of the House for their support of Quill. I promise he will be on his best behaviour, and if you can, please take a moment to visit or donate to the Lions Foundation of Canada and help promote the amazing work they do, and please support Quanto's law.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, and a special welcome to Quill. He was particularly well behaved yesterday, we noted, and it was a pleasure for me to work with you on this file and to authorize and approve it. It's a historic first not only for us, ladies and gentlemen, but it's also likely a historic first right across the nation and perhaps even in the Commonwealth for this particular type of service hearing dog. Good on you, hon. member.

All right. Let's move on, then, to Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by Calgary-Currie.

Tourism Framework

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As everyone who lives here knows, Alberta is undoubtedly one of the most breathtaking places on earth, as vast as it is varied in landscape and experiences. We have so much to offer travellers: the iconic Rocky Mountains, the alluring badlands, peaceful prairies, placid lakes, a diverse cultural history, and urban and rural areas.

Tourism has a huge potential to diversify our economy and build Alberta. Today we introduced the new Alberta tourism framework. Our goal is to grow the province's tourism industry from generating $7.8 billion in annual expenditures to over $10.3 billion by 2020. The Alberta tourism framework will maximize the potential of tourism and create jobs and investment in communities across our province. Having a common plan to guide all the players in the tourism industry will help to make a stronger impact in a very competitive marketplace and attract even more visitors to showcase Alberta to even more potential residents and visitors.

The Alberta tourism framework sets out clear, specific targets and takes a new approach to building a stronger and more unified tourism industry. It's about better alignment between all sectors of this industry, focusing on what travellers want and expect. Collaboration among all players in the tourism industry is key to expanding a sector that currently generates $1.15 billion in tax revenue and employs over 130,000 people. This is Alberta's first-ever long-term tourism plan that brings all the players together, and I applaud the efforts of all involved in taking this sustainable industry forward to a new level that will benefit all Albertans everywhere.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Calgary Society for Persons with Disabilities

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm truly honoured to rise today and bring attention to an organization that I've developed a strong connection to in Calgary-Currie. The Calgary Society for Persons with Disabilities is a nonprofit organization that helps individuals with disabilities reach their full potential by providing unique residential services in Calgary and the surrounding areas.

Mr. Speaker, clients of the Calgary Society for Persons with Disabilities and, indeed, all persons with developmental disabilities live in a world that often seems not made for them. What is often taken for granted by the average person is a challenge to those who must overcome a disability. There is a simple message that I wish to convey today in the House. I will be tabling CSPD's annual report as a symbol and example of the challenges that exist for the disabled that we cannot begin to immediately conceive of. A simple staple placed through the centre of the report will undoubtedly illustrate to my colleagues that the world we take for granted is a very different place for those with developmental disabilities.

Mr. Speaker, I look forward to the day when we fully embrace the spirit and possibilities that persons with disabilities can teach us. I wholeheartedly know that we are moving in this direction through the delivery of a solid social policy framework that is going to reshape the current governance model for PDD and a new generation of persons with disabilities so they may live in a world that sees them as able contributors within our own unique communities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Diwali

Mr. Bhardwaj: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to extend warm greetings on this historic day as we celebrate Diwali for the first time in the history of this province and to recognize the outstanding organizations that assisted in the successful celebration that was held here today.

Diwali is India's biggest and most important festival of the year. The festival gets its name from the row of clay lamps that are lit outside the homes to symbolize the inner light that protects them from spiritual darkness. Diwali originated as a harvest festival that marked the last harvest of the year before winter.

India was an agricultural society where people would seek the divine blessing of Lakshmi, the goddess of wealth, as they closed their accounting books and prayed for success at the outset of a new fiscal year. Today this practice extends to businesses all over the Indian subcontinent, which mark the day after Diwali as the first day of the new fiscal year.

Diwali is celebrated with families gathering, glittering clay lamps, festive fireworks, strings of electric lights, bonfires, flowers, sharing of sweets, and worship. Over the centuries Diwali has become a national festival that is enjoyed by most Indians, regardless of faith, for different reasons.

Mr. Speaker, Diwali is celebrated over five days. On the first day the homes and businesses are cleaned. Of course, on the main day of the festival families gather together to pray, enjoy a meal together, and watch the spectacular fireworks. This is the first day of the new year as well, when friends and relatives visit with gifts and best wishes for the season. On the last day family members visit one another and welcome each other into their homes to share a very lavish meal.

As we celebrate Diwali, the festival of lights, I'm reminded of how fortunate we are to live in a province where all citizens are able and encouraged to celebrate their heritage. I'm so proud to live in a province that has welcomed people from all over the world and provided the kind of opportunities that many can only dream about.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Government House Leader has caught my attention. Please.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, today was a magnificent day celebrating Diwali and the visitors that came with it, but that will require that we ask for unanimous consent to extend Routine past 3 p.m.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Government House Leader has requested your unanimous consent to proceed with the Routine so we can conclude it. That means going beyond 3 o'clock.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Let us continue, then, and hear a statement from the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

XL Foods Inc.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over a year ago an unfortunate event shook the community of Brooks and all of Alberta when contamination was linked to a beef processing plant. As we all know, the plant shut down temporarily, and questions were raised about the safety of the beef industry. Now, over a year later, we can look back and take stock of what happened.

The community of Brooks did so last month at the Alberta beef celebration. It was a great day full of community spirit, celebration, and – you guessed it – Alberta beef. The challenging events of last year's temporary plant closure brought out the best in the community as people came together to provide assistance where needed and worked hard to get the plant back online with a renewed commitment to food safety.

Since the plant reopened, Brooks has fully restored its reputation as a producer of the world's greatest beef products, thanks in large part to the work of the new ownership and its hard-working employees. These past months have seen renewed energy in ensuring that the strongest food safety measures in Canada are enforced. Alberta beef is more than just a world-class product. It is more than a staple of the Alberta economy. It is part of our culture and heritage, as it will be for generations to come. We must never forget the events that unfolded in Brooks, and we must ensure vigilance in protecting such an important part of our economy and culture.

I would like to take this opportunity to recognize all the hard work that went into this beef celebration. The city of Brooks, the County of Newell, Eastern irrigation district, JBS Food Canada, Bow Slope Shipping Association, ABP, local 4-H clubs, and many, many other industries and stakeholders all pitched in to help this event become a success. I would also like to say thank you to all of Alberta's agricultural producers for your commitment and perseverance through good times and bad, for playing your role in providing not only Alberta but all the world with quality food products.

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before I recognize the Member for Airdrie for his notice, might we revert briefly, with your consent, to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly Ms Karen Lloyd and Ms Jillian Miller Drysdale. Ms Lloyd and Ms Miller Drysdale have been working tirelessly to promote traffic safety in their community. Through their work with the Calgary Association of Parents and School Councils they have organized and promoted school traffic safety week in September, reminding both children and parents to be aware and stay safe on their back-to-school commutes. Mr. Speaker, we share a common goal of keeping our roads and our children safe. That's why later today I will introduce a bill in the House that will give municipalities the authority to set local rules for playground zones, allowing municipalities to align school zones and playground zones. Ms Lloyd and Ms Miller Drysdale are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Did you have a second one, hon. Minister of Transportation?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I do. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members the traffic safety services staff who have dedicated countless hours to the bill I will introduce today. I will ask each of them to rise as I introduce them: Mr. Alan Thomas, Ms Colleen Delany, Mr. Michael Selig, Ms Marlaina Klaver, Ms Mychele Joyes. I'm very proud of the work that they have done, and I'd ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: Notices of Motions has been called, and I'm going to recognize the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Airdrie I rise today in accordance with Standing Order 15(2) giving notice of my intention to raise a question of privilege today, and I do have the requisite copies of the notice to provide to members of the Assembly.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Bill 32

Enhancing Safety on Alberta Roads Act

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 32, the Enhancing Safety on Alberta Roads Act, which amends the Traffic Safety Act and the Highways Development and Protection Act.

This bill will increase safety on Alberta roads by granting municipalities the authority to set times that playground zones are in effect; by granting the minister the authority to designate lane usage on all provincial highways; by making administrative and housekeeping amendments to ensure consistency, to align with the federal Criminal Code legislation, and to strengthen and clarify Alberta's legislation.

[Motion carried; Bill 32 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of this year's annual report from the Calgary Society for Persons with Disabilities. A copy of this has been made available to all members today, and I encourage them to look at this document as an example from my member's statement today.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, your first of two, I understand.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have two documents to table. I'm pleased, first, to table five copies of the written responses to several questions during consideration of the International and Intergovernmental Relations main estimates on April 17, 2013.

I'd also like to table five copies of the Asia Advisory Council annual report 2012-2013, submitted on June 27, 2013.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services for your first of two, followed by Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance I'd like to table in the House today the requisite number of copies of a letter to the leader of the Liberal opposition in response to Written Question 22. I understand the original was provided to him earlier.

I'd also take the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to table on behalf of the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance again the requisite number of copies of the Alberta Securities Commission 2013 annual report. The annual report, called We're Here Because, reflects ASC's mandate, which is to protect investors, foster the integrity of the Alberta capital market, and contribute to the success of Canada's securities regulatory system. In 2013 the ASC continued to improve the effectiveness of its enforcement activities, including 772 investigations, issuing 111 cease trade orders, and leveling stronger sanctions against offenders. Court appearances tripled in 2013. The ASC can impose administrative penalties up to a million dollars and can also pursue offenders in Provincial Court, seeking jail terms up to five years and fines up to $5 million. The ASC continues to issue investor alerts and provide investor education materials through its website and weekly radio shows. In tabling the report, I'd like to take the opportunity to express appreciation for the commission and the important work it does on behalf of Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by the leader of the New Democratic opposition.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of 67 of hundreds of e-mails. I ran out of photocopy ink, so I can only post 67 to table. They're all in support of Bill 207, urging the government to pass the bill and to establish a well-funded, accountable provincial agency immediately here in the province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, leader of the New Democratic opposition.

Mr. Mason: Can you come back to me, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Why don't I come back to you, hon. member, after we listen to the tablings from the Associate Minister of Wellness.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of our hon. Minister of Health it's my pleasure to table the requisite number of copies of the 2012-2013 Alberta College of Occupational Therapists annual report. The college has over 1,500 members within the province of Alberta, and their primary role is to enable clients to fulfill their needs and purposes, interact with their environment, look after themselves, enjoy life, and contribute to the social and economic fabric of their community. The college also exists so that Albertans will continue to receive competent, ethical occupational therapy services. This report outlines their activities in the past year and illustrates the outstanding work that they do to promote the health of Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, are you ready with yours now? Please proceed.

3:10

Mr. Mason: Sure. Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. First, a letter that I referred to in question period today, dated October 9, 2013, from 16 faculty members in the department of laboratory medicine and pathology at the University of Alberta hospital. They have very serious concerns about the planned privatization of lab services in Edmonton. So that's the first one.

The second is a letter being sent to the Minister of Health and to Dr. Cowell, expressing important concerns about the planned privatization of hospital-based medical laboratory services in the region. The letter says in part: "I am concerned that centralizing all medical lab services in a private, for-profit facility will be less efficient, more expensive, and provide inferior service than the current hospital-based labs." This is part of a letter campaign that has been arriving at my office during the past week and has been copied in hundreds of letters that we've received.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I have the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by Calgary-Mountain View, and wrapping up with Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of an Edmonton Journal article dated August 26, 2013, entitled Province to OK Fort McMurray, Drumheller Floodway Development. During an interview at that time the Minister of Municipal Affairs said: "We need to put measures in place to protect the community, but it would be fiscally unreasonable to move entire urban areas or not allow future development." I thank the minister for providing Fort McMurray residents much-needed property protection while acknowledging that the community of Fort McMurray needs to redevelop its lower townsite in order to facilitate growth.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona, and also Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today, the first on behalf of the leader of the Liberal opposition. It's a memorandum of understanding between the government of Alberta, the city of Calgary, and the city of Edmonton, dated June 2012, with a commitment to deliverables in a year, signed by the two mayors and the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

The second, related, is an article from Metro News entitled Big Cities or All Cities: Nenshi and Griffiths Square Off Again over City Charters.

The third is entitled Municipal Government Act Review, submitted recommendations from the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, where they recommend the following three principles: first, local governments are open, responsive, and accountable to their citizens; two, the respective roles and responsibilities of provincial and municipal orders of government must be clear and appropriate; and three, local governments have predictable, diverse, and sustainable revenue sources to deliver programs, services, and infrastructure.

The fourth tabling, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of our Member for Calgary-McCall is a report from the Law Society with respect to the government of Alberta's review of the Alberta land titles system in its results-based budgeting process in which they're very clear about rejecting the privatization of land titles, stating that land titles should remain "a government owned and operated model" to avoid the dangers that have been experienced elsewhere across the world with privatization.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't have the Blues in front of me, but this afternoon in question period the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education stated something to the effect that international students were not revenue generating for universities and colleges, and I think he actually went on from there to suggest that I did not know anything about advanced education for having suggested that. The minister is mistaken on both counts, and I am tabling the requisite number of copies of the University of Alberta Action Plan: Budget Presentation to General Faculties Council dated October 28, 2013. Slide 16 states that the U of A's plan for generating new net revenue includes – and it's at the top of the list, in fact – increased enrolment of international students. That slide show was prepared by the acting provost and vice-president academic and the vice-president of finance and administration. I presume they know something about advanced education. I certainly hope that the minister might consider responding to that error in question period tomorrow.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings. The first is a copy of a news release from the Sherwood Park News dated Tuesday, October 29, at 11:45, with a picture of the Minister of Transportation as well as the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, outlining a media announcement of Bill 32 as well as the speech that the minister had given. I have the requisite copies of that.

The second tabling is a copy of a sign that was affixed publicly that states, "Enhancing Safety on Alberta Roads (Bill 32)," which was displayed apparently this morning prior to the introduction of that bill.

The third tabling is another press release, dated October 29, 2013, which outlines the Minister of Transportation's views on Bill 32, again, prior to the bill being introduced here in the Legislature.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, tomorrow I'll make a brief statement with respect to tablings, and it also will apply to petitions and how we need to keep brevity in mind for both. No reflection on anyone in particular today, but it's just another part of the process that sometimes gets a little bit lengthy, and we ought to revisit what the rules surrounding the purpose of those tablings and petitions are really all about. Thank you.

We have, I think, an historic moment, no points of order.

An Hon. Member: The day is not over yet.

The Speaker: The day is not over yet; I may have spoken too soon. Hopefully not.

However, we will proceed with the arguments in favour of or not regarding a point of privilege. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Privilege

Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand here on behalf of the Member for Airdrie under Standing Order 15(2). Of course, Mr. Speaker, you have said on many occasions as well as the Government House Leader that points of privilege are very serious matters. Any time you raise a question of privilege or contempt, it is a serious matter and must be addressed seriously.

The notice that has been provided states that the Member for Airdrie believes that as a result of the government's public advertising of a bill not yet presented to this Legislature, the government deliberately prevented the Members of the Legislative Assembly from fulfilling their duty and, as such, breached the rights of the Members of the Legislative Assembly and thereby committed a contempt.

I'll briefly outline the facts as I see them or as we have them here and then provide argument based on precedent both in Canada and here in Alberta.

I tabled documents earlier today. We had seen a sign, obviously in the orange and blue colours, displayed publicly outlining Bill 32. We've seen press releases and public statements outlining the details of Bill 32. We know, of course, that Bill 32 was on the Order Paper yesterday, Mr. Speaker, and it was not yet introduced until earlier today.

My first precedent goes to Erskine May, 22nd edition, on page 108. It describes that any act or omission which obstructs or impedes either House of Parliament in the performance of its functions, or which obstructs or impedes any Member or officer of such House in the discharge of his duty, or which has a tendency, directly or indirectly, to produce such results may be treated as a contempt even though there is no precedent of the offence.

We have a very detailed precedent here that is pretty much bang in line with the facts in this case. It was actually an argument made by Dr. Pannu here in this Legislature – he was a member of the New Democratic opposition – on March 4, 2003. In it he made many arguments to the Speaker at the time, Speaker Kowalski, and referred to different submissions and referred to a situation in the federal Legislature where the then Member of Parliament Vic Toews had made an argument on the fact that the government at that time had released details of a bill that was not yet introduced in that Legislature but was on the Order Paper.

In the submission – just indulge me, if you will – is the ruling that the federal Speaker provided in that case.

The House recognizes that when complex or technical documents are to be presented in this Chamber, media briefings are highly useful. They [must] ensure that the public receives information that is both timely and accurate concerning business before the House.

... However, with respect to material to be placed before parliament, the House must take precedence. Once a bill has been placed on notice, whether it has been presented in a different form to a different session of parliament has no bearing and the bill is considered a new matter.

The Speaker then went on to state, in finding a contempt:

Thus, the issue of denying to members information that they need to do their work has been the key consideration for the Chair in reviewing this particular question of privilege. To deny to members information concerning business that is about to come before the House, while at the same time providing such information to media that will likely be questioning members about that very business, is a situation this chair cannot condone.

The House of Commons Speaker continued.

Even if no documents were given out at that briefing, as the hon. government House leader has assured the House, it is undisputed that confidential information about the bill was provided. While it may have been the intention to embargo that information as an essential safeguard of the rights of this House, the evidence would indicate that no effective embargo occurred.

I will state that in this situation the complete opposite happened. There was not only no embargo; the minister held the press conference giving detail on this bill which was not provided to you, Mr. Speaker, in this Assembly, was not introduced to you.

Of course, we need to find a prima facie case of privilege, and there's a threshold. I'll refer the Speaker to Joseph Maingot, who stated at page 221 in his work Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, second edition:

While the Speaker may find that a prima facie case of privilege exists and give the matter precedence in debate, it is the House alone that decides whether a breach of privilege or a contempt has occurred, for only the House has the power to commit or punish [such] contempt.

Then Speaker Kowalski stated, in summarizing and looking at all the different precedents, that in essence Speaker Milliken found that once a bill is on notice, media briefings are not allowed. I'll state that again. Once a bill is on notice – in this case Bill 32 was on notice yesterday – media briefings are not allowed. Speaker Kowalski quoted from Speaker Milliken's ruling:

The convention of the confidentiality of bills on notice is necessary, not only so that members themselves may be well informed, but also because of the pre-eminent role which the House plays and must play in the legislative affairs of the nation.

He then goes on to state that, of course, that was a federal precedent and that it need not necessarily apply to an Alberta Legislature. In that case, in the federal situation, the minister apologized while still noting that, of course, he had not provided written materials to the media.

Speaker Kowalski then stated that "the role of the chair cannot be to lessen the dignity and respect of this [Legislative] Assembly or its members." He stated that he agreed entirely with Speaker Milliken's ruling when he states:

To deny to members information concerning business that is about to come before the House . . .

in this case Bill 32,

. . . while at the same time providing information to media that will likely be questioning members about that business, is a situation that the Chair cannot condone.

Speaker Kowalski then referred to the final paragraph of the House of Commons standing committee report, which states:

The rights of the House and its Members in this role are central to our constitutional and democratic government. This case should serve as a warning that our House will insist on the full recognition of its constitutional function and historical privileges across the full spectrum of government.

Speaker Kowalski then stated:

Accordingly, the department briefing provided to the media concerning [then] Bill 19 when the bill was on notice but before it was introduced constitutes a prima facie case of privilege as it offends the dignity and authority of this Assembly . . . Strictly speaking, this constitutes a prima facie contempt of the Assembly, although it is treated in the same way as a breach of privilege.

Mr. Speaker, once this notice was provided, we saw some communications that the minister had offered to provide a technical briefing to, you know, one member of the Official Opposition and perhaps members of the other opposition parties. Some were able to get a technical briefing in such a short time frame. Others, I understand, weren't able to get the technical briefing.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very clear case. We have a minister here who is providing technical details of a bill that has not yet been introduced to this Assembly. It's an absolute disrespect to every single Member of this Legislative Assembly. He went to the media, provided these details. Of course, the media is calling opposition members. Constituents are calling opposition members and other members of the Assembly. Well, we don't know what's in the bill because it hasn't yet been introduced. That is a complete disrespect for this House. Speaker Kowalski was unequivocal in this regard. He noted that materials – documents themselves, the bill itself – may not have been provided to the media, but technical details and details surrounding the bill in that case were in fact provided.

Again, I will just close with what I would call the leading precedent on this exact situation. The facts mirror themselves identically.

To deny to members information concerning business that is about to come before the House, while at the same time providing such information to media that will likely be questioning members about that business, is a situation the Chair cannot condone.

In Speaker Kowalski's situation he had provided the member of the New Democratic Party the opportunity to put forward a motion, but at that time the minister, rather than going through the formal process of a motion to a committee, just apologized for his actions, and that was deemed sufficient in that case. I would suggest that that is the remedy in this case that should be followed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I have two members who rose at the same time. Hon. Government House Leader, would you like to hear from Edmonton-Strathcona first? I think she was motioning in her direction to rise.

Edmonton-Strathcona, will you proceed, please.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in favour of this motion, that we find that there is a prima facie breach of privilege today that was raised by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. The member went through some of the key points in terms some of the authorities that we adhere to in this House, but I'd like to just highlight a couple of them because I'm not sure if they were exactly the same ones that I would have used.

House of Commons Procedure and Practice at page 82 talks about contempt and what amounts to contempt of the House.

Any action which, though not a breach of a specific privilege, tends to obstruct or impede the House in the performance of its functions; obstructs or impedes any Member or officer of the House in the discharge of their duties;

And then here's the key piece, Mr. Speaker:

or is an offence against the authority or dignity of the House.

I would go on to page 85.

By far, most of the cases of privilege raised in the House relate to matters of contempt.

Maingot's Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, second edition, talks about the meaning of privilege. It talks about at page 14 and page 225 that contempt of Parliament may be more aptly described as an offence against the authority of the House.

Those are sort of two things that I think are really quite critical to this issue, Mr. Speaker. It comes down to the authority of this House and the respect with which we treat it. Now, it's interesting. The Member for Edmonton-Calder and I were discussing this issue earlier today. He pointed out that there was a great deal of discussion yesterday from the Speaker's chair around the need to respect the authority of this House as it relates to the back and forth between members, and the chair himself was talking about respecting the authority of this House.

But, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to you that the actions of the minister with respect to the process around which this bill has been introduced and members have been briefed and the media has been briefed and signs have gone up on highways actually offend the authority of this House in a way that all members of this House should be very, very concerned with.

Now, there are two things that have happened that raise the concerns of certainly members in our caucus. One is the fact that there are apparently billboards out there that have been put up with nonpartisan, we presume, public funds advertising Bill 32 and talking about the impact of Bill 32 and how this highway is the result of Bill 32. That's the first thing, and then the second thing is that we have a minister meeting with the media this morning at, I believe, around 9 to talk to them about what was in the bill.

Mr. Speaker, that is a problem for two reasons. First of all, the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills talked about the precedent that was set by the former Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, my predecessor, Dr. Pannu, and of course in that one we talk about what happens when the media is briefed before members of the Assembly. Now, it may well be that the Government House Leader is going to argue that that wasn't a briefing; that was a press conference. But you know what? Here's the thing. What's happened recently is that the government has decided to very actively ensure that members of the opposition are kept in the dark about when press conferences are.

So not only did we not get briefed on this bill, but we also are now in a position where we are having to deal with active efforts on the part of ministers to keep us from going to media events that other members of the public or at least the media are aware of. We didn't even get the opportunity to learn about the details of the bill at the same time as the media, which is something that's kind of happened in the past, but that practice is now done, too, because the government has decided that it's going to send out press releases and media notices without letting all members of the Assembly know that that is happening. That's another issue that I believe you'll be hearing about in the future. So that's the first thing.

The second thing, Mr. Speaker, is that putting nonpartisan public dollars into telling Albertans that Bill 32 has passed before we have even seen it let alone debated it doesn't quite follow the precedent that was set by Dr. Pannu, but that in and of itself is a profound affront to the authority of this Assembly. Either bills get debated and amended in this Assembly on the basis of democratic representation and reasonable debate, or they don't. And either you insist that this government respect this Assembly, understanding that that's the way the situation and the processes are supposed to work in this Assembly, or you don't.

For this government to use government funds to go out there and talk about a bill as though it has been passed before members of this Assembly have even seen it let alone exercised their democratic right and, indeed, the democratic right of all Albertans through their members to have input on the bill and to put forward amendments to the bill and ultimately to vote on the bill is a fundamental breach of the privilege of each and every member of this Assembly, even members of the government caucus, because as much as they may have had an opportunity in caucus to talk about the details of this bill, they have an obligation to their constituents as well to come into this House and to participate and to debate and to cast their votes accordingly.

The fact that there is an assumption that it's a done deal and that Ministry of Transportation dollars can go to throw up signs on the highways saying, "Yay, look at us; Bill 32 is a done deal" before this House has even seen it is an affront to the authority of this House and, as such, amounts to contempt under the precedents and therefore amounts to breach of privilege. I hope you will find that that has occurred in this case.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I think that both of the hon. members who have spoken have taken it just a tad too far. There's no question that the House has to own its own work and that bills are the property of the House and members are entitled to see bills before anyone else sees those bills once they're put on notice. I think that is a time-honoured tradition of the House and one that this government has followed rigorously.

What we also have done, though, Mr. Speaker, is talked with the public about what they can anticipate: where government is going, what government is doing, what government is proposing. Governments actually get elected to govern, and then they come into the House to get approval for legislation and approval for the spending. But governments are elected to govern, and they are expected to go out and talk to the public about what they're doing.

Now, obviously, with respect to legislation coming before the House, there are essentially two stages. One is the conceptual stage. We often talk in public about legislation that will be coming before the House in a conceptual way, what's going to be in the legislation. It was not unusual – well, maybe this year it would be unusual – in previous years for the Government House Leader to put out a session news release ahead of session and list all the bills that were coming before the House with a brief description of what's in those bills. That is a perfectly time-honoured tradition of this House, and I think that in every House that kind of communication happens.

In fact, that did not happen for this fall session, and I got nothing but grief for that from some people. In fact, the Premier was speaking at a chamber of commerce luncheon on Monday, and who should show up but the leader of the New Democratic Party to decry the fact that the Premier was not telling them what bills were going to be on the agenda.

The fact of the matter is that the government caucus does see bills before they come to the House, not in their final printed form but in terms of the concept, in terms of what we call a three-column document or a document which talks about the concept of the bill.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, also a time-honoured tradition in this Assembly, at least in the period of time that I've been Government House Leader, is encouragement to ministers or to bill sponsors to brief their opposition critics with respect to the concepts and content of a bill, not to share the bill, not to share any drafting of a bill but to share the concepts and content of a bill in terms of that process so that they can be properly prepared because quite often the sessions are such that you put a bill on and you expect to be able to debate it, yet it can be fairly complex. It is not done in every circumstance, but it's certainly something that I encourage and something that I understand the Minister of Transportation took some pains to do, to brief the opposition critics with respect to the content of the bill, not the details, not by providing documents, not by even referring to those documents but by discussing the content.

In fact, there is nothing inherently wrong with advising the public as to what's coming before the House. Now, if you look at the specifics of this case, the news release that was put out, the copy that I have in front of me starts after the headline with the words: "If passed, the Enhancing Safety on Alberta Roads Act will let municipalities set local rules." If passed. It doesn't give the specifics or the details. It doesn't have the content of the bill. It doesn't share that either formally or informally. It basically says that we're going to bring a bill in this afternoon, it's going to be the Enhancing Safety on Alberta Roads Act, and it's going to do these sorts of things. It's a conceptual piece, as you might expect in a news release. There are not any details that would be too exciting for anybody that was familiar at all with the concept and certainly wouldn't be exciting to any opposition member who availed themselves of the opportunity for the prebrief.

Mr. Speaker, there's a distinction here that's very important, the distinction that the House owns the bill and that no draft of a bill is shared with anybody but the House first. There's also a very important side to it, which is that public discussion of matters that are going to come before the House is very important, letting the public know what impact a bill might have because in every member doing their job in this House, there's another aspect to it. It's not just reading the bill and coming here and debating it. Every member's ability to do their job is enhanced by the fact that the public knows what we're going to be talking about.

We try to maintain a very tight time frame, where by the time you've finalized what you're going to be bringing to the House and after you've heard all the input that goes into developing a bill and all the processes that go into developing a piece of legislation, you then let the public know generically what's going to be before the House so that if they're interested, they can contact their member, raise their issues, and be ready to discuss with any member of the House what's in the bill. They can't do that unless they know what's going on.

So I would think the Minister of Transportation should be applauded, actually, for getting out there and raising in public that this bill is being introduced. It's likely going to be debated maybe as early as tomorrow in second reading, and the public should know about it.

Now, in terms of the details of the bill, in terms of printed copies of the bill, whether the actual document has been shared or not: of course he didn't share any of that. What he did was that he went out to the public and said that they should be aware of the fact that the Legislature is going to have a bill. It's going to be about enhancing traffic safety, and this is what it's about. It's about time zones in playgrounds. It's about reversible lanes. It's about aligning with the federal impaired driving legislation. That's what it's about, and if you're interested in that, you should contact a member of the government or a member of the opposition or somebody to let them know what you think so that they can properly engage in debate, having been informed.

This is a very big distinction, sharing the concepts of what it is we're going to do and sharing the details, which are owned by the House. The Minister of Transportation shared the concepts quite appropriately to make the public aware of what was going on, and I think the members of the opposition should applaud him for that because it makes their job easier. People now who don't think they're going to like it will know that they should call right away so that the opposition can be informed of their view and raise it in debate.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, since the hon. Government House Leader has mentioned me in his comments, I feel compelled to rise and just make a couple of comments. First of all, with respect to my attendance at the Premier's speech yesterday at the chamber of commerce I think that is entirely consistent with the position that we're taking here in supporting the hon. Wildrose House leader's motion of privilege. Specifically, the fact that a member of this Assembly has to buy a ticket to attend a chamber of commerce luncheon to hear a speech from the Premier about her plans for the session and her plans for the province for the coming period of time is, I think, a travesty. It shows real contempt for this Assembly. It says, quite frankly, that she is accountable to a business audience to a degree much higher than her accountability to the public of Alberta as represented by this House. I think it's entirely consistent with the point of privilege we are faced with today.

There's a point I want to correct the hon. Government House Leader on. His defence was that the minister had offered a briefing in a general sense to the opposition. We had two scheduled meetings for that briefing yesterday, and on both occasions no one from the minister's office showed up. We rescheduled it an hour later, and again they didn't show up. We finally had a briefing less than an hour ago, Mr. Speaker, on this particular bill. So I just want to correct the Government House Leader. Since he based his defence on the fact that opposition parties are provided with a briefing, I think it's important to note that we were unable to obtain a briefing prior to the introduction of this bill. I think that that's very significant.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise on the point of privilege that the hon. member has brought forward to the Legislature. I've listened very intently to this point of privilege, and I find it very interesting, especially from the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, who I had the honour and privilege to actually sit with when I was with the government. It's funny how things change within the government in regard to that what was then is not so much now for a government that talks about their openness, accountability, and transparency.

I have been trying to think from my 20 years when I was with the PC government when and if or where we ever did any of the things about putting bills forward. I'm going to challenge the House leader on the other side to show me when this change came, that all of a sudden we're talking about bills and debating bills before they're even introduced in the Legislature, and we have this big, splashy press conference. I know that when he was the Justice minister and I was the Solicitor General, we were very conscientious about allowing all members in the Legislature the privilege of sharing the bills at the same time. I don't recall – and I will challenge the House leader and, for that matter, the government to show when this new procedure changed. From what I recall, it seemed to have changed about the time that the Member for Calgary-Elbow became the Premier. I would assume – and I will stand up publicly in this House and apologize if I'm wrong on my assumption – that it changed probably when she became the Premier of the province.

I am going to be brief, and I'm going to ask you – and I know that you have all sorts of resources, Mr. Speaker, and very good resources as your table officers sitting around this Legislature – to check and find out when this changed. The House leader talked about the fact that they've always done this and it's always been a practice. I honestly, honestly cannot remember in the 20 years when I was with the government that this was occurring. I could be wrong. I hope that when you're making your decision in the Legislature, you will track back when this practice started. Hopefully, you have the ability to say: "Look. We talk about openness, we talk about transparency, and we talk about democracy, and the Premier campaigned on how she was going to change things and do things differently in the Legislature, that she was going to have all of these all-party committees.”

I look forward to your ruling. I honestly think that, truly, if we really want to make a difference in this province, then things have to change, and how we table our bills in this Legislature is part and parcel of that. I can tell you that I spent, as I indicated earlier, a long time in the government. I can share with you what has happened since I left this government because of some of the things that were happening in 2010. The amount of work that opposition members have to do to get ready for a bill – and when you have a minister of the Crown go out in the morning and make all of these announcements, it’s truly, quite frankly, disturbing.

So I will look forward to your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak this afternoon. I think that there are a few remarks that need to be corrected here and clarified, certainly. I think that the hon. Government House Leader was quite succinct and quite accurate when he talked about the fact that the media release that went out started with the words “if passed,” no assumption that this House didn’t have the power to make the decision, none whatsoever.

On the remarks that I gave this morning, early on in the remarks there was a phrase to the effect: only if the Legislative Assembly agrees with us and lets this happen.

Mr. Speaker, I hear protests from the leader of the NDP that there wasn’t an opportunity to be briefed, but we briefed the critic from the Official Opposition in a meeting room. With him we went through clause by clause by clause, and the critic had staff with him who made notes and was able to ask questions. We answered all of the questions that they asked. It’s a little disingenuous for the Official Opposition to suggest at this point that they were kept in the dark. Quite the opposite is the truth. In fact, they made a point of saying that the bill itself has to be first introduced in the House. It’s interesting that the critic from the Official Opposition actually asked for a copy of it and was refused. Just an interesting point, Mr. Speaker.

Right after I met with the critic from the Official Opposition, we met with the critic from the Liberal party and again, same thing, clause by clause. They got to ask questions; they had people there to take notes. Again, asked for a copy of the legislation, and none was provided.

Right after that was scheduled the meeting with the NDP. They weren’t there. We tried to reschedule. I hear from the leader of the NDP that they tried to reschedule an hour later. Mr. Speaker, honestly, my understanding is that they couldn’t make the meeting.

Ms Notley: Point of order.

Mr. McIver: I hear a different version of that. Mr. Speaker, I could even acknowledge that as a potential misunderstanding.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, did somebody rise on a point of order here? Was that Edmonton-Strathcona?

Ms Notley: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I rose on a point of order.

The Speaker: Citation?

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Ms Notley: Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). The minister is relaying a set of facts which are not accurate, and it is bringing our statements into disrepute. That’s unfortunate. As the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood said, our staff showed up at 5:30 and again at 6:30 yesterday. After contacting this minister’s office in the middle of last week trying to get a briefing, the time that was first offered to us was 5:30 yesterday afternoon. When they didn’t show up where they were supposed to be, then we tried again at 6:30. Once again, it was still not offered. The briefing that we received finally, when his staff showed up, was well after the bill was introduced and well after the press conference. That needs to be clarified, Mr. Speaker. I don’t know why that happened, but there were two good-faith attempts that did not occur. The minister knows that, and he knew that when he went ahead with the press conference.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, this frequently happens. We get a difference of opinion on what happened here and what happened there. The NDs have just clarified their position. I think the minister has indicated his. Could I just ask the two of you to work this out amongst your two caucuses and not take up our time here? It’s on the record now who did what from their various perspectives. I’m not going to get into the middle of this. It’s a good point of clarification. Let’s let the minister conclude his comments, and if this needs revisiting, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I surely will revisit it.

In the meantime, hon. Minister of Transportation, you might wish to respond to that during your comments.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I’m going to really try to be kind to the member opposite that raised the point of order. As you rightly said, we have a difference of opinion here. The fact is that the Official Opposition met with me and were fully briefed. The Liberal critic met with me and my staff and was fully briefed. We offered the same process to the NDP, and somehow we failed to connect. I can assure you that we made efforts to do that. I will take the member at her word that they attempted to meet with us. I can assure you that we sincerely meant to meet with them, too, and I think that there’s pretty good evidence of that by the fact that we were successful in meeting with the other two parties immediately before the time that that was to occur.

The Speaker: Thank you. I think that sufficiently clarifies that matter.

Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, you had something to add?

Mr. Saskiw: I’d like to briefly close on my argument.

The Speaker: I haven’t recognized you yet, but I will shortly.

Debate Continued

The Speaker: Are there any others who wish to chime in briefly on the point of privilege under SO 15? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre I’ll be brief and just basically use your words from earlier on another issue. Basically, what our hon. ministers have said is to circumvent what I think is the issue here, which is this breach. We ought not do indirectly what we are not supposed to do directly. The idea of putting a disclaimer on these announcements or the idea of putting a disclaimer before the press still violates the rules. In other words, they circumvented the rules of this House, and that was actually disrespectful, in my view, of what has gone on here. I just want to say that I don't buy the idea that the Official Opposition was briefed somehow and that settles that and it's done.

I'm going to tell you that it's sort of a game. I got briefed on the environmental bill that is before this House, but I was unable to make it because there wasn't enough of a time frame given. I understand why some of these ministries do that. I understand that you push it as close to the timetable as you possibly can, but unfortunately our schedules don't always allow for that. We try to do it in good faith. That's the best we can do. We can try to do it in good faith, but this government is in control of that timetable, and they have the ability to actually allow enough time. In this case they could have tabled this bill in time, or they could have briefed. They had that choice. They are in full control of that, and in this case they didn't live up to their responsibility.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: I believe that concludes our speakers list with the exception of the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. Briefly.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to add my two cents, and that's basically that when it was mentioned by the Minister of Transportation that I asked for a copy of the bill, first of all, I don't remember that, and secondly, I don't see how it's relevant. When his office staff asked me for the appointment, which, I believe, was on Saturday afternoon, I accepted the time that was suggested, between 4:30 and 6:30 on Monday. I appreciated that the minister and his staff were there and gave, you know, an idea of what was coming up on the bill. In that discussion I may have asked for some paperwork, but again I don't feel that my part in that is relevant to this bigger issue.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, a lot of different comments have been made here, and names of other members of the House have been raised, and that prompted them to get up to speak. Now we have Innisfail-Sylvan Lake wishing to chime in, and I'm going to allow that briefly, but before I do, Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, it is not normal for us to revert to the mover of the motion in this particular case. I thought you were rising on the point of order.

Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, do you wish to briefly chime in as well?

Mrs. Towle: Mine is very brief, Mr. Speaker.
