- (5) The primary purpose of the Question Period is the seeking of information and calling the Government to account.

Also, section 10:

- (10) The subject matter of questions must be within the collective responsibility of the Government or the individual responsibilities of Ministers.

What we had here were questions and answers that were not about the conduct of the government, Mr. Speaker, but were about the conduct of the opposition. I would suggest, based on this precedent, that they in fact breach the precedent and the practice of this House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you are probably aware that there has been a long-standing debate in this House about the fact that the government uses its authority and its majority to insist upon the relatively uncommon practice of taking up question period by asking itself questions, by giving their backbenchers the opportunity to ask their ministers questions. Whenever opposition House leaders raise that and say, "Gee, is that really the right use of question period?" we are told with the greatest of sincerity by the Government House Leader that backbench members also need to be able to hold the ministers to account in the question period setting on behalf of their constituents. That's the argument we always get.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I suspect that you know and certainly anyone who watches this Assembly knows that that practice has essentially devolved into a process whereby the backbencher will read the first paragraph of the press release, the minister will then read back the second paragraph of the press release, the backbencher will then read the third paragraph of the press release, and so on, and so on in order to promote a particular policy of the government. So it's already straying from the purpose of question period as outlined by precedent and by Beauchesne's. That's already a bit of a problem. Nonetheless, that seems to be something that has happened in this Assembly for a very, very long time.

That being said, when that, then, devolves yet again into a process where the backbencher asks the minister about why the opposition is so bad and then the minister responds with a question about why the opposition is so bad, that just takes it to a whole new level of abusing the time that all members of this House are supposed to enjoy in question period to fulfill that one primary responsibility, which is to hold not the opposition to account, Mr. Speaker, but to hold the government to account.

When you go beyond that, Mr. Speaker, and simply look at rules of basic fairness, when one person decides to accuse another or critique another – and we can use whatever language because certainly sometimes the opposition becomes more than simply inquiring, and the opposition itself will move on to sort of a little bit more of an accusatory mode when we're asking questions – the fundamental characteristic of that exchange is that both parties get a voice. If the opposition decides to be somewhat accusatory in their question of the cabinet minister in their efforts to hold the government or that minister to account, the fact of the matter is that that minister gets to then defend himself. He has every right to get up and answer.

When the government abuses this tradition in this House of their ability to ask themselves questions and one of them gets up and accuses the opposition of something and then the other one gets up and accuses the opposition of something but we have a set of rules here which prohibit the victim of those accusations from actually engaging in the debate and defending themselves, well, then – you know what, Mr. Speaker? – we get right down to 23(h), (i), and (j). No person in their right mind wouldn't forgive the opposition for becoming disruptive in the House if they have to sit by and listen to an exchange between government members about why the opposition is so bad.

That is what happened in that series of questions. It abuses the process, and it abuses the precedents that have been set in parliamentary settings across the country. That is why Beauchesne's sets out very clearly what the role of question period is. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that you rule that this is, in fact, a breach of our rules and that you direct the government members and the ministers and indeed all members of this House to keep their questions focused on those which are meant to be the subject of question period, which are those matters which are in the control of the minister and the government, not the opposition members.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Minister of Transportation and Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member left, I think, one thing out which is pertinent to the discussion that she started. What she left out is that private members on the government side also have the right to hold the government to account. They also have the right to question ministers about their motives. They also have the right to find out what the minister's actions might be, what affect it might have on Albertans. What we saw earlier in the question period was exactly that in action.

What we saw in the questions – and I’m paraphrasing a little bit here – referred not to allegations but to actual proposed amendments to the estimates put on the record by the opposition. The one question talked about the opposition suggesting a cut of $1.7 million to strategic services. The question that he asked me was: if we were to go ahead with that change, would that change our commitment to keep the infrastructure safe for Albertans? That’s a legitimate question, to ask a Minister of Transportation about what that would be and to get an evaluation on what the government action might be and how it might affect Albertans.

Another question was not about an allegation but an actual amendment put on the record by the opposition of a $1.4 million cut to traffic safety services. The question was how that will affect the safety of motorists on our highways, a legitimate question, holding the government to account and finding out how it would affect Albertans if the opposition amendment to reduce the funding to the traffic safety services by that much would happen. That’s a legitimate example, Mr. Speaker, of the private member holding the government and the Ministry of Transportation to account based not on an allegation but based on a proposed amendment to the estimates that’s on the record.

Another question was proposed on the record about a reduction to the Alberta Transportation Safety Board. He would hold the government to account, and he actually challenged the ministry and said: you are committed to that .05 legislation in the process. He said: are you still committed to that? That’s a legitimate challenging of the government, a legitimate challenging of the minister, a legitimate use of question period, to challenge the government, challenge the minister by saying: what’s your opinion on this, and how will that change actions?

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I don’t think there’s any legitimate call for a challenge here because this was question period working, frankly, as it was designed to work and as it properly ought to work.

3:30

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I’ll recognize the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Edmonton-Centre, and then we will deal with the point of order.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it’s maybe an appropriate time to – I know the member is new to arguing points of order and looking at these standing orders, but he clearly simply doesn’t know what’s in there. This is a very straightforward one. I will support the point of order under 23(1), which states that it’s a point of order to introduce “any matter in debate that offends the practices and [procedures] of the Assembly.”

Mr. Speaker, I’d refer you to numerous supportive passages in Beauchesne’s. First, I’d refer you to page 123, paragraph 418, which states, “The Speaker has stated, ‘Hon. Members may not realize it but questions are actually put to the Government.’” Of course, what we saw with the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo was that he was referencing the opposition.

The other section is on page 121, paragraph 410, subparagraph (5). “The primary purpose of the Question Period is the seeking of information and calling the Government to account.” So it’s not calling the opposition to account; it’s calling the government to account. Unfortunately, the question from Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo was talking about opposition comments and so forth. Clearly, that isn’t allowed under Beauchesne’s.

The other section I would refer you to, Mr. Speaker, is page 122, subparagraph (10), which states, “The subject matter of questions must be within the collective responsibility of the Government or the individual responsibilities of Ministers.” Of course, something that the opposition is talking about is clearly not within the collective responsibility of the government. To rule otherwise I think would just create a mockery of the Assembly, where a government member could just ask questions about what an opposition member had said at some other point. That is not the purpose of question period. We saw that the member from the New Democratic Party caucus had indicated that the reason for question period is to hold the government to account. Here we have a government MLA, the MLA for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, commenting on what the opposition has said, and it’s simply not allowed under our rules of practice. I think it sets a dangerous precedent if you do not rule in favour of this, Mr. Speaker.

In terms of remedy what is called for under the standing orders is that you call the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo to account and to order for violating the standing orders and our parliamentary procedures and precedents under Beauchesne.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, to start from the beginning, what we have here is a violation of most of the basic principles of the way we operate or we understand question period to operate. For starters, it is to hold the government accountable, which a number of people have said. It’s not there to critique the actions of members of the opposition. It’s to hold the government accountable. It’s not to be hypothetical. Now, the hypothetical turns up in a number of different places. I think it’s in Standing Order 23. It’s definitely in Beauchesne’s 409, where it says:

A brief question seeking information about an important matter of some urgency which falls within the administrative responsibility of the government . . .

(1) It must be a question, not an expression of an opinion, representation, argumentation, nor debate.

It goes on to talk about how it should be brief.

Then in 409(4) it says, “It ought to be on an important matter, and not be frivolous.” I think that question violated that. It ought to be urgent. There must be some present value in seeking the information through question period. We’re discussing an amendment that someone brought before a committee in an estimates debate that won’t even be voted on for another month. What’s the urgency in that?

What was asked of the minister was not calling them to account. It was an opinion on this amendment that was introduced in a committee the previous night. It wasn’t asked for how the government was actually rolling out a program. It was their opinion of an amendment. I mean, for heaven’s sake, Mr. Speaker.

On page 426 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice again it talks about: “The subject matter . . . [has to] fall within the collective responsibility of the Government,” which it did, “or the individual responsibility” of its minister, which it did. It should “seek information,” not ask an opinion or talk about a hypothetical what-if: “What if the sky fell? Would somebody get hurt?” Gee, that’s a perfect example of a hypothetical question. I’ve been called on that before by the Speaker, but what we saw here this afternoon fits right into that. It should not “be a statement, representation, argument or an expression of opinion.” We had all of those things in that exchange that happened here.

Whether you want to look at page 426 in the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, you want to look at 409 in Beauchesne, you want to look at the various references that my colleague previously brought up, or you want to go back and look at Standing Order 23, you are going to get the same series of limitations about how we conduct question period.

What happened here this afternoon should not have happened, and I hope it never happens again. I ask the Speaker to rule thusly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

I have listened intently. I do appreciate that a number of members have participated, and I acknowledge that others have indicated the desire to do so. As I've mentioned, a point of order really should not be an opportunity to continue debate. As I recall the discussion, certainly, I take very seriously the reference to Standing Order 23(b) and the question of whether something should be related.

I have to caution you, though, hon. members on both sides, on the nature of question period, the questions and the answers. For the short time that I've sat in the chair, and certainly I've sat in this Assembly for some number of years, I would say to you that if everything was ruled out of order that strayed from the intent of where a question ought to be going in terms of seeking answers on related topics – also, it suggests that questions ought to be seeking answers based on policy – I think a lot of questions could be ruled out of order on a regular basis. Frankly, I would doubt if we would get very much accomplished in this House.

It seems to me that what we're talking about here is some clarification in terms of the language that was used and whether it focused on a particular caucus or individual. I do have the Blues, and based on some of the answers I recall – and it is here in the Blues – the minister was responding to policy in terms of what certain cuts might do if they occurred. I'm of the opinion that this isn't a point of order. This, again, is clarification. [interjections]

Hon. members, we're going back to the constituency for a two-week break. I would ask all members on both sides of the House to take some time – maybe it wouldn't hurt – to just get a refresher on our standing orders. Certainly, some of the members that spoke eloquently quoted from Beauchesne and other places. It certainly might help us all if we became a little more familiar with those conventions that are commonly used in this House so that, hopefully, the next time we gather, we won't have this type of, I would say, disagreement.

I believe there is no point of order, and we will proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, Standing Order 13(2).

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Point of Order

Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Under Standing Order 13(2) I can ask the Speaker to explain his ruling. I'm puzzled as to why the Speaker has not addressed the question of being hypothetical. There is no mention made of that. He just talks about it as being a point of clarification. Could he share with me why he made that particular . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I'm just going to be brief, hon. member. You are entitled under the standing orders to ask for clarification. Hypothetical: I think you used the word that describes this. There's a lot of hypothetical back and forth from both sides, and quite often hypothetical, hon. member, leads to interpretations.

Interpretations and sometimes the language used in the interpretation from either side can lead to language that – well, I don't know if "offends" would be the right word, but it certainly gets somebody going in terms of how a response refers to that individual or that caucus. Hence, we have the back and forth in terms of what is clarified, what is the position of a caucus, whether it be specific to something that transpired recently or refers to the party's position as a globally known fact or asserted facts.

So, hon. member, I think this matter has been dealt with enough, and we will move on. Thank you very much. [interjection] Hon. member, we're going to move on, please.

Ms Blakeman: I'm sorry. There's nothing in our standing orders that says that you can only ask a 13(2) once, so I'm going to ask again for clarification.

He was very general and talked a lot about back and forth at different times. This was a very specific question I'm asking about a very specific point of order on an exchange between the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo and the Minister of Transportation, not a bunch of other general stuff. So I still didn't get the answer to the hypothetical that was involved in that series of questions. Just that one. That's all.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I attempted to answer your request. The matter is closed.

Orders of the Day

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Finance.

Mr. Saskiw: Standing Order 13(2).

The Deputy Speaker: We just recognized the hon. Associate Minister of Finance, hon. member. [interjections] Hon. members, please. This matter: we've debated it for some amount of time. The hon. member asked for a clarification twice on the same matter. I have to the best of my ability provided a clarification. If you are seeking a clarification on the same matter, hon. member, we have dealt with that, and we're moving on.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2013

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today and move third reading of Bill 13, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2013.

As you very well know, Mr. Speaker, this bill is necessary to keep the wheels of government moving while we debate the budget that was delivered for the 2013-14 fiscal year for the government of Alberta. We do appreciate the comments from all members so far in debate.

With that, I move to adjourn debate. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Motions

Sitting Times during Main Estimates Debate

29. Mr. Campbell moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:

- A. On Monday afternoons during the period that the 2013-14 main estimates stand referred to the legislative policy committees, the Assembly stands adjourned at 6 p.m.;
- B. Notwithstanding Standing Order 59.03(4)(b), following completion of consideration of the main estimates by the legislative policy committees
  - (i) on April 22, 2013, or
  - (ii) on such other date of which the Government House Leader has provided written notice to House leaders and tabled in the Assembly, the Assembly shall reconvene in Committee of Supply at 9:30 p.m., at which time the committees shall report, and voting on the main estimates shall proceed.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, this motion is debatable. I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, this motion is basically the set-up motion to allow for the votes at the end of our estimates debates. According to what the government has done and much against what the House leaders on the opposition side thought we'd agreed to, we have had estimates debates in various departments run concurrently, two of them on Monday night. We've had four a day on Wednesday – two in the morning, afternoon, evening – and then the rest of the days we've just had two. Those are the good days. We just have one in the afternoon and one at night. This is to bring together at the end of it all the vote.

So what's been allowed to happen is that amendments could be put on the floor during the estimates debates, which, by the way, all take place in a legislative policy committee. They don't take place in the Assembly anymore, where you can get people coming to watch us and to sit up in the gallery. Now they take place over in the Annex in a lovely renovated room with a very good speaker system and a nice place for Hansard. It's not a great place to be sitting. There are maybe a dozen seats, and if there are any reporters that are interested or, frankly, any staff that want to come along, they're often in the back. I sometimes get up and talk about having the sports fans that are really interested in stuff that have come along. God bless them. You know, I really appreciate the fact that somebody is that keen on something that they would come.

But, you know, does it have that same kind of ease of access? Do you feel as comfortable? Not quite. You're kind of squeezing by – "Excuse me, pardon me; excuse me, pardon me" – to get into the room and get to your seat, so we don't get as many members of the public coming to watch what we're doing in the debates there. I think that's a real shame because the whole point of why we're doing a debate is so that the public can see what we're doing and understand and get through to us and be able to ask some of the questions that they want to ask.

Mr. Campbell: It's standing room only.

Ms Blakeman: The Minister of Aboriginal Relations is quite exercised that there are only a few people in the gallery at the moment, but frankly we're not debating the estimates at the moment, and that's what I'm speaking of.

Mr. Campbell: We're actually not debating anything.

Ms Blakeman: No, we're debating a change and a clarification in the standing orders at the end of the estimates, which is what I'm talking about, which take place in the legislative policy committees.

The Deputy Speaker: Through the chair, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Sorry, but you know how they provoke me, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I appreciate you talking through me. If others might allow this member to have the floor, it would be much appreciated.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. It would be a lot faster, too, but, you know, we're here all afternoon.

What it's allowing for is the completion and the calling of the votes for that because we don't have any votes in the actual committee. They all come at the end of the final debates, which I think will be the Ministry of Culture and another one on that last Monday night. Again, they're concurrent on the Monday night. Unfortunately, I can't get to the second one because I'm the critic in the first one. I can't be in two places at the same time, but I'm working on it. Then we will all gather together in Committee of Supply and vote on everything, and that's what this motion is setting up.

I'm curious. I think what this is is just a little wee bit of a correction. In the standing orders as they previously existed, under 59.03 it was assumed that it would start on Thursday afternoon, so it said to start at 5 o'clock. We had a change in the standing orders that the Government House Leader brought in right when we started session here that changed that section and allowed that it would happen one hour before the normal adjournment hour as set out in our standing orders, so that would have meant 5 o'clock on the nights we adjourn at 6 and that kind of thing. It says, "9 p.m. if the vote is scheduled for an evening sitting." I think there was a wee bit of a mistake, and this is just a correction on the mistake calling for us to meet in Committee of Supply in the Assembly, so we're back in here at 9:30.

I am a little curious, though. It specifies the date, April 22, which was in the calendar that was duly publicized by the Clerk, as he is required to do, and tabled by the Government House Leader. But then it says, "or on such other date of which the Government House Leader has provided written notice to the House leaders and tabled in the Assembly," then we would all get together and do this. I'm really curious about why we would need to have another date. What kind of a stopgap is this? I'm just curious about why they'd need to put that in because – you know what? – I've never seen this government not have a reason for doing that kind of thing, so I'm sure there's a reason. I would love to hear from the deputy government House leaders what that reason is to have to give themselves the out of a second date when we'd already agreed on the first one.

Frankly, this is going to have to be changed again. I mean, next year we're not going to be guaranteed to finish on April 22. Maybe that's why they want that second one. We're going to limp along with that April 22 in there forever while we use the second bit, maybe. I don't know. I look forward to it.

Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise to speak to this motion. As the Member for Edmonton-Centre aptly pointed out, the reason why we're having to deal with this motion at this point is because it follows from a series of changes that the Government House Leader brought in two and a half weeks ago, and there was a bit of a drafting error when that was sort of rammed through this Assembly, so it has to be changed. Then, of course, what it does is that it sets out the process for voting on estimates.

There are two reasons why our caucus is opposed to this motion and will be voting against it. The first reason is, frankly, that this is attached to the previous changes to the standing orders that the House leader brought through. Our caucus was very much opposed to those standing orders at the very outset because those standing orders allowed for the government to change the process by which we debate the budget in this Legislature and to do so in a way that limited public participation, to do so in a way that limited opposition participation, and to do so in a way that just sort of rammed the budget through as fast as they possibly could under cover of night as quickly as they possibly could. It did so in a way that undermined the ability of the opposition to truly and properly prepare and research for it because of the schedule that was put together.

I specifically remember that when the House leader brought forward this standing order, he said: "Oh, yes. Well, this new set of rules gives us the ability to call committee in the morning and to have up to six committees a day. It gives us that ability, but we'll never use it because, you know, it would only be in emergency situations that we would use it." Literally two or three days later out comes the schedule that has Wednesday morning every week being used to debate budget.

For instance, the next time that we're back, I start at 8 in the morning debating Human Services budgets, a place where there's been something like $250 million worth of cuts. I start at 8 in the morning, go through the morning, then we go into question period. Then we come out of question period, go back into debating that budget, and then in the evening we go directly into advanced education, for which I am also the critic, where this government has taken about $180 million out of the budget. Do you think that might be a bit of a busy day?

Now, that's not the way it was done before, but under this new Premier that's the way things are done now. We use our majority as aggressively and as brutally as we can in order to get our way as quickly as we can in order to scurry away from the Legislature as quietly as we can.

This is attached to that, Mr. Speaker. Not only did we disagree with it when it came forward, but also we really are not of the view that the House leader has followed through on the assurances or discussions that had previously occurred with the opposition House leaders, and we believe that the government has adopted a number of other strategies to actually quite significantly reduce the amount of time that the opposition has in these debates to deal with these very significant changes and budget problems.

Mr. Oberle: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we'll pause your speech right there. The Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities rose on a point of order. Citation, hon. minister?

Main Estimates Consideration Allegations against a Member

Mr. Oberle: Yes. Under 23(h), (i), and (j), Mr. Speaker. The member doth protest too much, but let me say this. First of all, for the member to suggest that the government is somehow passing a budget under cover of darkness – notice the words – implying that somehow we're being secretive about a budget that is being debated fully both here and in committee in Hansard, is just absolutely unacceptable.

She also just finished saying, Mr. Speaker, that we're now somehow debating for fewer hours after in the previous sentence just having explained how she has to sit here all day and do Human Services, which is now six hours, where previously it would have been three.

I'm astounded that this member, who just rose a few minutes ago in full outrage at what the government had to say about their party and their stance, now comes up with these gems about the government somehow being secretive. The proceedings of this Legislature and our committees are recorded in Hansard and televised when we're in this Legislature. The member has absolutely nothing to complain about.

Furthermore, the current opportunity is not an opportunity to debate the budget. It's an opportunity to debate the motion.

Mr. Speaker, in her last sentence she implied that somehow the Government House Leader has reneged on a commitment that he made in some previous cloudy process.

Some Hon. Members: He did.

Mr. Oberle: Well, then they'd better table some information that accuses the Government House Leader and some evidence that, in fact, that's true; otherwise, you cannot stand in this House and make allegations about a member, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, thank you, hon. minister.

I'm going to give the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona an opportunity to maybe clarify your comments.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I will respond to the point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, to respond and in your response to clarify your comments, possibly.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, assuming for the moment that you have not already made a decision before you've even heard my representations on the issue – we'll just assume that – let me just outline my response to the three points made by the member. [interjections]

Well, the Speaker started out by suggesting . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, through the chair. You have the floor.

Ms Notley: The Speaker started out by suggesting that I should offer up some remedy as a result of the point of order being raised, and one would assume that the remedy ought not be suggested until both sides of the story have been considered.

First of all, yes, I did indeed use the phrase that it was under cover of darkness because, in fact, as a result of all of these committees now being conducted in the Annex through the legislative policy committees, none of those committees are broadcast through audiovisual.

An Hon. Member: Live streamed audio.

Ms Blakeman: Audio only.

Ms Notley: Audio only.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, please.

Ms Notley: People are not allowed to watch the budget debate anymore, and that is a change, so I believe it is a reasonable conclusion to suggest that the government has limited the degree to which people can see the debate. As a result of moving it away from a place where there is audiovisual coverage of the debate, it is reasonable to assume that they anticipated that fewer people would see it; hence, the phrase “under cover of darkness” is completely appropriate.

In terms of the second point, Mr. Speaker, made by the member, the fact of the matter is that we have not overall had more hours of time dedicated to budget debate in this Legislature. Far from it. Certain ministries have been given more time, but in return for every one of those ministries getting more time, we have had to accept less time for other ministries.

Moreover, just arbitrarily, completely outside of the terms of agreement that were discussed between the House leaders, the government chairs of committees have adopted a process whereby they’ve come up with a new way to distribute questions in these committees between government members and opposition members. The practical effect of that is to reduce the amount of time that opposition members have in the longer committees by about one hour. So, indeed, there is a complete factual foundation to the statement that I made there.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the House leaders had a conversation about this issue, and it is our view that that was not the intention at the time that we had that discussion. Now that is what is happening, so it is completely reasonable for the opposition House leaders to conclude that an understanding that we thought we had with the Government House Leader has not been fulfilled.

That is the foundation for each of the statements that I made that were objected to by the member opposite, so as a result of my providing a solid foundation for each of those statements, there is no ground for this particular point of order.

Are people getting a little heated? Yes. Are the rules being changed? Yes. Is the government using its majority to change those rules? Yes. Is the quality and the opportunity for opposition participation in debate being changed as a result? Yes. But are we allowed to talk about that in this Legislature when we’re discussing a motion about the standing orders that guide that very issue? I would expect, Mr. Speaker, that the answer to that in any reasonable setting would also be yes.

Thank you.

4:00

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

I’m going to recognize two more speakers, the members for Edmonton-Centre and Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, one of the points that the member opposite raised was disagreeing with the phrase “under cover of darkness.” With respect to the member more than 50 per cent of the debates that are taking place for estimates are in fact taking place at night, in the dark. She is absolutely accurate that most of them are taking place under the cover of darkness. I know this seems small and amusing, but you know that the specificity of language in this place is really important. We have three debates in the afternoon, and we have four at night, so more of the debates are actually happening under cover of darkness. She is absolutely accurate.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m honoured to stand to speak to the point of order from the member opposite. I think the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona’s phrase was “cover of darkness.” Well, I think all the facts would state that that simply is the case. We’ve had situations where, you know, the government has decided to run concurrent sessions for budget estimates, where the public or other third parties cannot watch or listen to budget estimates if they were so inclined. We felt that was a very important aspect of accountability but also openness and transparency.

We’ve had a situation, of course, where in the throne speech the Premier campaigned on openness and transparency, but we’ve seen absolutely nothing in that regard, and this has followed through to budget estimates. We’ve seen instances where, you know, the government is talking about there being a balanced operating budget, which is clearly not true.

We’ve seen situations with time allocation in the last session under Bill 7, where instead of being open and transparent, we saw . . .

Mr. Campbell: On the point. We’re not discussing the budget right now.

Mr. Saskiw: Am I supposed to talk to him, or do I talk to you?

The Deputy Speaker: No, you talk to me. Please carry on on the point, hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Okay. Sorry. I wasn’t sure because he was speaking. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, please, and others, can the member finish the point?

Mr. Saskiw: I don’t know. He’s saying something.

The Deputy Speaker: Through the chair, please.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to be on point, now that I’m aware that I have to speak through you and that members shouldn’t be talking . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Please.

Mr. Saskiw: Mr. Speaker, you know, we want to get on to the important business of the day here, and I just want to get my point across. I know there are some important government bills that they want to speak on, and of course we still have to speak to Government Motion 29. It’s just important that we get these points of order out.

The whole thrust of the argument from the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is on just a lack of transparency. Cover of darkness is simply another term for that. I think that if you look at all of the actions of this Premier, of the Government House Leader – limiting debate, time allocation, concurrent sessions for budget estimates – the fact is that she was referencing why Government Motion 29B(ii) would put in: “on such other date of which the Government House Leader has provided written notice.” Why not specify the date on which the government is going to take the action? That is simply another instance of a lack of transparency, a lack of accountability.

Mr. Speaker, you know, if you hear the statements that the members opposite make about the opposition, is “cover of darkness” seriously what is going to – what is his argument is here? Let’s see here. It’s going to create disorder saying that something has come under the cover of darkness. I didn’t hear everyone yelling and screaming. It was just this one member opposite. He apparently has some problem with the statement. Not everyone here does. Everyone was just listening to her argument on Government Motion 29. There was no disorder created, just one member who for some reason got upset.

It’s unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, I think, that the member opposite is wasting government time here. I suggest that there is absolutely no point of order and that there isn’t even a need for clarification in this circumstance.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, the nature of this place, this House, is such that we have what is, unfortunately, by its nature an adversarial relationship. We have comments made by one side. They’re refuted by the other. And opinions. Obviously, people interpret what others say. Of course, things don’t always come out as they’re intended, or maybe what is intended has different meanings to different people.

I did suspect that the Member for Edmonton-Centre might have an opportunity to help us along that path, and I think she eloquently did that. I don’t find that there’s a point of order. I see a difference of opinion here. Clarification has been given, and I would ask that we continue.

You were speaking, hon. member. If you would continue, please. Thank you.

Debate Continued

Ms Notley: Thank you very much. Yes, I was speaking about the connection of this motion to the overall standing orders and what their impact has been on the discussion of the budget through the estimates process and that passing this motion effectively facilitates a continuation of that process, a process which – and we’ve had some discussion now, not enough but some – you know, demonstrates the shortcomings that all Albertans have had to tolerate with respect to the full and transparent discussion of this most recent budget.

Now, another element of this motion, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that it does talk about this idea of us all having to come back on April 22, 2013, in the evening, interestingly, at 9:30 – it’s typically dark at that point; I’m just throwing that out there – to vote on the estimates. The concern I have with that April 22 being in there as opposed to simply, for instance, just having “on such date as the Government House Leader proposes,” is that implicit in that is the notion that the government is going to continue on with this very, very intense schedule of debating the estimates.

You know, Mr. Speaker, when you have concurrent estimates debates going on in almost every setting, what happens is that not only do we, as I mentioned before, miss the opportunity just to watch it, the way people would be watching us right now, but also when it happens two at the same time, people can’t watch both. The fact of the matter is that certain ministries impact other ministries. When this whole notion of concurrent debates developed, even that was introduced to the opposition House leaders as an exception to the rule, that we wouldn’t really want to make a habit of having one ministry be debated at exactly the same time as another ministry because, really, how do you keep up with all of that at the same time? Of course, these are very, very important debates.

Mr. Speaker, I have been contacted by numerous people within my constituency who have very significant concerns about elements of this budget. Of course, they come to me and say: well, can you raise this in the Legislature? And I say: “Well, you know, unfortunately, as things seem to be evolving, we have less and less of a voice in this Legislature notwithstanding that we doubled the number of seats in the last election. I’m unlikely going to be able to ask a question about that particular element of the budget in question period because, as I’ve already mentioned, we’re spending so much time listening to the government ask itself questions and yada, yada, yada. But here’s a place where I can have a good conversation with the minister about the budget and ask some specific questions in a slightly less adversarial setting so that sometimes we can have a really genuine exchange. You should come and watch that and listen to that, and you can hear a little bit more about what is planned for your particular program and your particular community or that thing that really worries you.”

But, Mr. Speaker, when we have a schedule where the debates are going on back to back, concurrently – they happen in the morning, they happen in the afternoon, and they happen in the evening – and the whole process is sort of wound down to, really, three weeks and one day I think is what we’re up to, then those Albertans who have significant concerns about the issues that we’ve talked about in this Legislature and many others will not get the opportunity to hear that debate and to be there with their MLA and e-mail their MLA and ask their MLA to ask a question of the minister about that particular element of the budget. They just will not get that opportunity.

The more condensed this budget debate is, the less opportunity Albertans have to participate in a meaningful discussion with their elected representatives about what this budget means to them and to their lives and to the lives of their kids and their families and their parents and their grandparents.

For instance, just now I have been e-mailing back and forth with an Albertan who is asking me about the specific cost implications of some of the cuts in Seniors and who really wants me to get the answer to: what are the actual cost implications of that? The difficulty is that the night the Health estimates is on, when I could potentially as the Seniors critic go and participate in that debate, is also the same night that I think Environment is on, Mr. Speaker, and I’m the lead critic for Environment. I’m not going to be able to be in two places at once even though I’m actually the critic for a subarea of Health.

You know, that’s what’s happening to opposition members and probably even some government members across this House, Mr. Speaker, because we are condensing this budget debate so intensely. That hurts all Albertans, and that hurts, as I’m often saying, the integrity of this Assembly, too. What we do here is actually important, and I think some of us here still believe that. It’s really important that we do it in a way that invites Albertans to be part of it, to listen to it, care about it, and believe that they have a voice.

So any motion like this one, that is designed to facilitate this really, really draconian, aggressive, and very directed strategy adopted by this government under this Premier, to shorten and make less accessible to Albertans the debate on this budget – this budget actually includes through its distribution of funds throughout the government, essentially, at least, well, I think we’re up to about 15 or 16 broken promises from the last election, you know, promises that Albertans obviously cared about because they voted for these guys. At the same time, now, those promises are not coming to fruition, and we see that very clearly in this budget. Those very same Albertans are very interested in what's going on in this budget and how many of these promises will be broken again.

Mr. Speaker, by adopting this schedule, we do a disservice to Albertans and we do a disservice to the people who elected us. Supporting this motion effectively contributes to that disservice, and for that reason, certainly, our caucus has no intention of supporting this motion.

Thank you so much for giving me the time to put forward our position on this.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise here today to speak to Government Motion 29. It's pretty interesting stuff. I'm kind of living the dream.

Mr. Speaker, I have a bunch of concerns with this particular government motion. Of course, the first paragraph in it states:

- A. On Monday afternoons during the period that the 2013-14 main estimates stand referred to the legislative policy committees, the Assembly stands adjourned at 6 p.m.;

The second part is:

- B. Notwithstanding Standing Order 59.03(4)(b), following completion of consideration of the main estimates by the legislative policy committees
  - (i) on April 22, 2013, or
  - (ii) on such other date of which the Government House Leader has provided written notice to House leaders . . .

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

[Adjourned debate March 21: Mr. Fawcett]

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt you, hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, but in accordance with Standing Order 64(5) the chair is required to put the question to the House on the appropriation bill on the Order Paper for third reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a third time]

Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just going back to Government Motion 29, of course we've seen with this new Premier that she's limited debate on budget estimates, limited the hours of debate, has had concurrent sessions, which makes it quite difficult for opposition parties to adequately scrutinize each and every dollar that the government spends. We in the Wildrose feel that spending taxpayer dollars wisely is of utmost importance and a priority, and it should be a priority. What we're seeing with the limiting of debate on budget estimates is, of course, that by doing that, the scrutiny simply isn't there. Instead of going line item by line item and identifying potential either misallocation of funds, wasteful spending – those types of things are something that the opposition should be doing.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, what we're seeing with budget estimates – we saw, of course, during the election that the Premier promised balanced budgets. She said that no jurisdiction should ever go into debt, that it was such a bad thing. But subsequently she obviously broke all those promises. Albertans can't trust their government.

Mrs. Forsyth: Things have changed.

Mr. Saskiw: Yeah, things have changed. I mean, her trust polling numbers are going down the drain. I agree with the hon. member.

What happens here, Mr. Speaker, is that when you've broken so many promises, whether it's balanced budgets, whether it's indicating, of course, that you were going to be tough on crime but instead cutting and gutting all sorts of programs and initiatives that would ensure that the public is kept safe and secure, then one has to even more closely scrutinize the budget estimates in that particular process. That's why it's imperative that we as parliamentarians do everything within our power and prerogative to ensure that we have the processes in place to closely scrutinize each and every dollar throughout the budget estimates.

If the Premier wants to walk her talk on being open and transparent, perhaps she should ensure that the public is able to watch the debates on budget estimates. Part of being open and transparent, of course, is allowing the public to listen to open debates. How is a public member supposed to do that during concurrent sessions?

Mr. Speaker, what the government is doing with Government Motion 29 and what they've done, in fact, with all of the standing orders that they've put in place is to limit debate, limit openness, limit transparency. You can say in a throne speech that you want to do things differently, you want to have an open and transparent government. But if every single subsequent action does the complete opposite, hampers discussion, keeps things secret, has these cover-of-darkness type of things, those are the types of things that we do not want in our democracy.

What Government Motion 29 does is just a continuation of those types of procedures where government members and opposition members do not have the ability to fully debate and discuss budget estimates. Of course, in these so-called, as the Premier likes to say, tough economic times, we should be carefully scrutinizing every single dollar and penny.

Mr. Speaker, you look at Government Motion 29 and the fact that (ii) gives the discretion fully to the Government House Leader without any consultation. Of course, it states that the Government House Leader has to provide written notice to the other House leaders and that that written notice must be tabled in the Assembly in due course, but the government motion itself doesn't actually have consultation with other House leaders with respect to budget estimates. I think that's an ongoing process that we've seen, a complete lack of consultation.

We've seen this with the pharmacy industry. Now, after the fact, after they've made the changes, what's happening is that they've set up a committee where they're now going to consult pharmacists. Government Motion 29 is doing the same thing. It's not allowing for . . . [interjections] I'm just referring to B, which states that the Government House Leader just has to provide notice to the House leaders. That's the same as pharmacy. They just provided them notice that they're cutting and slashing their programs, and they didn't look at the effects of those particular programs, Mr. Speaker.

I think that this is an indication of where the government isn't listening to Albertans. By having concurrent sessions, they're not allowing Albertans through this budget estimate to fully engage and participate and listen to the debates that are going on. Mr. Speaker, what is critically important at any time and one of the fundamental roles and responsibilities for parliamentarians is to ensure that every single dollar of taxpayer money – and it's not our money; it's taxpayer money – is spent wisely. Part of that is to ensure that there is careful scrutiny.

Of course, we have the Auditor General, who provides his determination in terms of whether the financial statements reflect generally accepted accounting principles. But in addition to the Auditor, who oftentimes, depending on the audit that he or she would perform, does a macro, ensures that the internal controls and the accounting systems are done – despite that, you actually also have to have a careful scrutiny of the budget estimates.

You know, this is very important because we've seen with this government that they've blown all sorts of spending. They're building a brand new MLA office next year with a garden rooftop, and I'm sure there'll be all sorts of fancy things there, an 80-person movie theatre or something like that. What I think is very important is that the public also gets to hear the priorities of the government. The priorities. Instead of properly funding pharmacy, instead of properly funding the front-line nurses, doctors, teachers, police officers, instead of spending it there, they've decided to spend it on a brand new MLA office.

I think if the public – and I think the public are going to become aware. I know they've delayed that project. I don't think the ribbon cutting will happen for some time. When the public becomes aware that they're spending all that money on these fancy, brand new MLA offices instead of spending it on the front lines, what I think are the priorities of Albertans, I think most Albertans would say: look, we need to fund our front-line teachers, doctors, nurses to ensure that all Albertans are getting the appropriate level of public services.

What's important with respect to Government Motion 29 is that we ensure that not only is the due diligence done on budget and estimates but that the whole process be open and transparent. Part of that process is allowing the public to fully engage and to fully listen to the debates so they can see for themselves what the priorities are. They can go through line item by line item and say: look, well, you know, the government has spent $300 million for MLA offices where they could have spent, for example, more money on front-line enforcement or very important programs like the Be Brave Ranch."

Mr. Speaker, what we've seen is a continuation. We've seen words of openness and transparency, but we've seen actions of the government not being open, doing things under the cover of darkness. You know, it's important that we be open, transparent, shine a light on the government's actions, on the taxpayer monies that they're expending.

What I can say with respect to Government Motion 29 is just that I simply cannot support it in its current form. It provides too much discretion to one person, the Government House Leader. What should happen is that there be appropriate due consideration and consultation with all interested stakeholders and not simply allow the Government House Leader within his discretion to change the date. It states: "on such other date of which the Government House Leader has provided written notice." It should provide the ability for other House leaders and other individuals to have due consideration to consider the results of the completion of the consideration of the main estimates.

So, Mr. Speaker, I will be voting against Government Motion 29. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will make this quick. I know that some of my colleagues have spoken to a number of issues. I'm just going to go on record and make a bold prediction on the result of this Government Motion 29B.

(ii) on such other date of which the Government House Leader has provided written notice to House leaders and tabled in the Assembly, the Assembly shall reconvene in Committee of Supply at 9:30 p.m., at which time the committees shall report, and voting on the main estimates shall proceed.

My bold prediction here – and I hope I'm proven wrong, Mr. Speaker. I truly do because if I'm right, it'll be a true shame, and it'll be, really, just another dagger in the heart of democracy in this province. My prediction is that the Government House Leader is going to provide written notice that we're going to be voting on the main estimates in this House previous to April 22. I'm just going to put that on record. Because, well, why else would he put it in there? Maybe there's something more pressing that the Government House Leader has to do.

You know, there have been other times when motions have been put on the Order Paper and the Assembly has been advised that there's no actual purpose for us to have it here unless we absolutely needed to in a crisis. As the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona mentioned earlier . . .

Ms Blakeman: Oh, like time allocation.

Mr. Wilson: Oh, yeah. Exactly. Time allocation.

We had the discussion about why we would ever need to meet and do estimates on a Wednesday or any morning, for that matter. And this is just part of the standing orders now in the event that we need to in an emergency situation meet and debate estimates in the morning. Well, lo and behold, as we've seen, our estimates schedule includes Wednesday mornings every single week, week in, week out.

It begs the question: why should we actually trust what the Government House Leader says when, you know, over and over again, we see that the intention isn't entirely transparent?

We look at the concurrent sessions as well. The hon. Government House Leader suggested that when he came up with a schedule, he would do everything in his power – his power – to ensure that we didn't have concurrent sessions and that that way the estimates would have the proper debate that they deserve.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. We're supposed to be grateful it only happens one night.

Mr. Wilson: Yeah.

Well, you know, it's happened. At the end of the day I must be left to feel that there was no emergency. There was no absolute reason that that had to happen, and really every time he goes back on his word like that, like time allocation on Bill 7 – we challenged him in the House that at some point in the fall he was going to invoke time allocation. He said: absolutely not; that's ridiculous. It wouldn't be on record because he said it while I was speaking, but I clearly remember him suggesting that that was not going to be his intention. A week later what do we have? A motion for time allocation on Bill 7.

It's pretty clear that, you know, the best indicator of future behaviour, Mr. Speaker, is past behaviour, and what we've seen from this Government House Leader is that there's always a reason why things are put on this Order Paper. So my prediction in this matter is that we're going to have a pretty heated debate one night before April 22.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Nice and short. Well, what is this motion about? I believe this motion is basically about transparency. What is transparency? It is a basic tenet of a healthy democracy. It is what . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I hesitate to interrupt, but it is 4:30. Under the standing orders the House stands adjourned.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:30 p.m. to Monday, April 8, at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, April 8, 2013

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. Dear Lord, help us to understand the needs of our citizens and to prioritize our duties in order to address those needs. Help us to fulfill the requests of our constituents and of all Albertans, who are counting on us to deliver. Amen.

Please be seated.

Hon. members, as many of you know, it is our custom to pay tribute on our first day back to those members and former members of this Assembly who have passed away since we last met. Our gratitude also extends to their families, to the families who, like our families, know what sacrifice is, who sacrifice precious time away from their loved ones so that the duties of office are fulfilled to the highest degrees possible, yet so often our families go unrecognized in this regard.

Mr. Ralph P. Klein, OC, AOE
November 1, 1942, to March 29, 2013

The Speaker: Today we want to pause to honour former Premier the hon. Ralph Klein, who served the people of Alberta through this Assembly for over 17 years, from March 20, 1989, to January 15, 2007. He represented the constituency of Calgary-Elbow for his entire service as a member of this Assembly.

His public service actually began in 1980, when he was first elected to Calgary city council as mayor. His positive attitude and determination ensured the Calgary Olympics were lauded as a great athletic, social, cultural, and economic success. He was the first former mayor to serve as Premier of Alberta.

Prior to becoming Premier, Mr. Klein served as minister of the environment for just under three years. On December 14, 1992, he was sworn in as Alberta's 12th Premier. It was during his premiership that we celebrated the centennial of this great province and, in fact, the centennial of this Legislative Assembly of Alberta. He resigned as Premier on December 14, 2006.

Throughout his tenure, the third-longest of all Alberta Premiers, Mr. Klein retained his connection with everyday Albertans, people whom he lovingly referred to as Marthas and Henrys, and we all know exactly what he meant. Mr. Klein received many, many accolades, awards, recognitions, honours, and other tributes for his accomplishments over the years, including being named an officer of the Order of Canada last year, but it was his remarkable ability to plainly talk to everyone from those Marthas and Henrys right up to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, and it is for that that he will likely be most often remembered.

Please note, hon. members, that I have invited members of Premier Klein's family to join us today, our traditional first day of remembrance for members who have passed. Unfortunately, they responded that they just simply were not able to join us today, so I would ask that we respect their privacy at this particular time of their bereavement, noting that it is very likely that one or more of them may be able to join us next week. I think they all deserve a rest given the enormous amount of public attention and media attention that they have had over the past several days.

I would now ask you all to rise and in a moment of silent prayer and reflection please remember our former Premier in whatever way you may have known him.

Grant unto him eternal rest, dear Lord. Grant perpetual light, and may it shine upon him forever.

Hon. members, thank you for your silent tribute.

Now, M. Lorieau, s'il vous plaît, our national anthem. May I ask all of you to join in in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you, M. Lorieau and hon. members.
Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly 25 bright young future leaders from John Barnett school in my constituency, Edmonton-Manning. With the students are three parents, Miss Amanda Donald – she's a good friend of mine – Miss Tara Brooks, and Mr. Will Davies. Also with the students is their teacher, Mr. Glenn Newby. They are seated in the public gallery. I would ask all the guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the 28 members of St. Angela elementary school along with teachers Meghan Weis and parent helper Christine Siegel. I'm very happy to have them here. I think they're here all week, in fact, at the School at the Legislature, so they're going to compare theory to practice today when they watch us in question period. If they could please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier and Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So many wonderful things to say about this young man. Unfortunately, I won't be able to get through all of it. With us today we have a remarkable young Albertan by the name of David Wilson. David's story is a testament to the resiliency of a child overcoming obstacles that most kids never have to deal with. Through all that he has gained the knowledge and employability award, the work experience award, the employee of the year award from a local grocery store, and recently the 2013 Great Kids award, and he will be competing with a black belt in tae kwon do right away. With him is his father, Scott Wilson, who is the best advocate that any child could possibly have. I would ask them both to rise and receive the welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly my family. In five years in this House I've never had the opportunity to have my wife and three kids come in, and today is a very special day for me. I would ask them to stand and remain standing while I introduce you. There's my 13-year-old son, Jamieson – he's the middle one in the red – my 11-year-old son, Jakub; my seven-year-old daughter, Georgia, who will be eight this week; and my lovely wife of 17 years, Kim.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour and a privilege for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly nine guests here in celebration of CapitalCare's 50-year anniversary and legacy of caring and compassion for Alberta's frail, elderly, and disabled people. My guests are seated in the members' gallery, and they represent the dedicated leadership, management, and staff as well as residents from two of the 11 CapitalCare centres.

I would ask each guest seated to please rise or otherwise signify as I mention their name: Ms Iris Neumann, chief executive officer, CapitalCare; Mrs. Betty Kolewaski, administrator, CapitalCare Dickinsfield; Mr. and Mrs. Clinton and Susan Cook, a young married couple celebrating almost nine years of marriage and who also reside at CapitalCare Dickinsfield; Mrs. Adrien Mortensen, nursing attendant, CapitalCare Dickinsfield, celebrating 35 years of employment with CapitalCare; Mr. Thorsten Duebel, administrator, CapitalCare Kipnes Centre for Veterans; Mr. John Elock, a centenarian and proud veteran of the Second World War and current resident of Kipnes Centre – thank you, John, for your sacrifice and service – Mrs. Penny Eliuk, therapy assistant at CapitalCare Dickinsfield and driver of the CapitalCare resident bus today; and, finally, Mrs. Penny Reynolds, administrator of CapitalCare Norwood.

I would kindly ask that the Assembly honour my guests with our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today I had the pleasure of attending the seventh Alberta consumer champion awards ceremony. These awards recognize outstanding people, groups, and businesses that go the extra mile to educate consumers about their rights and to ensure Alberta's marketplace is fair for everybody. Now I would like to introduce this year's consumer champions.

I'll ask you to stand as I announce your names. The recipients in the nonprofit category are Janice Harrington, a good friend of mine, representing the Certified General Accountants Association of Alberta, for their financial literacy program for high school students; John Pinsent, representing the Chartered Accountants Education Foundation of Alberta, for their online money management resources for young consumers – my wife is a chartered accountant; I will ask her to take this course herself – my friend and former constituent Gerry Baxter of the Calgary Residential Rental Association, for their landlord and tenant education course; Sandra Crozier-McKee of the Better Business Bureau, serving southern Alberta and east Kootenays, for their consumer education efforts; and Diane Rhyason of the Centre for Public Legal Education of Alberta, for educating young consumers on their legal rights in the marketplace. This year's media recipients are Julie Matthews from Global News Edmonton for a report on marriage scams and Laura Lowe from CTV Edmonton for a report on a scam with wills. In the youth category we had Carin Li and Eunbit Cho, who won second place for their combined essay and poster on Internet shopping. I would ask all of these fine individuals to rise and ask all of my colleagues in the Alberta Legislature to give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, your first of two introductions.

Mr. Jeneroux: Great. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a team of four outstanding individuals who participated in the 5 Days for the Homeless campaign at MacEwan University from March 10 to 15 here in Edmonton, which were some very cold days. In addition to raising awareness for poverty and homelessness in our city through this campaign, these individuals also raised $15,000 for Youth Empowerment & Support Services, otherwise known as YESS. The good news keeps coming. In addition, one of the participants, Cameron McCoy, was just elected president of the students' association at MacEwan University. Seated in the members' gallery today are Cameron McCoy, Cina Gross, Ellisha Sharma, and Pierce Brindza. I ask that these individuals rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also pleased to introduce to you and through you two amazing young Edmonton-South West constituents, Eunbit Cho and Carin Li, and her father, Tim Li. Eunbit and Carin were recipients of a consumer champion award today, as mentioned by the Minister of Service Alberta, and I had the luxury of spending a lunch hour with them. They're very smart girls. I ask all members to please extend a warm welcome to these two wonderful constituents.

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a couple of constituents of Calgary-Acadia, Jen Sputeck and her son Nathan as well as Barb Pickering. Jen and Barb are both on the Inside Out Action Research Team, which assists women dealing with homelessness, poverty, and incarceration. Jen has been with the Inside Out Action Research Team since the beginning. She started as a group member, became a peer researcher and ultimately a project co-ordinator. Since then, she's presented over 80 presentations. She's been invited to Ottawa twice, once to London, Ontario, and will be presenting at the Canadian Criminal Justice Association conference in Vancouver in October of this year. Barb joined the group in 2011 as a then master's student at the U of C and is currently a doctoral student in counselling psychology, again at the U of C. Both of these women have been instrumental in this project, and I ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services and Government House Leader.

Mr. Ralph P. Klein, OC, AOE
November 1, 1942, to March 29, 2013

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our Premier is representing us in Washington today and has asked me to rise and speak on her behalf, on behalf of the government of Alberta, our caucus, and personally as someone who has had the great privilege to serve under former Premier Ralph Klein. As our current Premier said last week, Premier Klein was an Alberta icon, a visionary leader, someone who devoted his life to Alberta. Premier Klein was Alberta's great communicator. His wit, charm, and charisma made him one of the brightest lights on Canada's political scene. He understood politics, but more than that, he understood Albertans, and he had a connection with Albertans.

As a newly elected MLA in 1997 I had the great privilege of being asked by Premier Klein to join his cabinet as minister of federal and intergovernmental affairs, as it was then called. It was then when I began to truly understand the gifts that he brought, the leadership he provided, the loyalty he engendered, the respect and love that he earned.

Much of the public commentary in the days after Premier Klein's passing has focused on the strong fiscal agenda and record, and while that is no doubt a big part of what he will be remembered for and while I certainly agree that the strength and courage he provided showed real leadership for our whole country, Albertans like his close friend Rod Love have more accurately displayed the breadth of Premier Klein's legacy as a journalist, mayor of Calgary, environment minister, and Premier of our beloved province. The Klein Revolution was much more than just a fiscal one, as important as that is.

As a rookie minister of federal and intergovernmental affairs in 1997 I quickly learned how intelligent he was, how smart he was, how quick to understand the breadth of the situation but also to understand the strategy needed to achieve results. I would read all of my briefings, background materials, and supporting materials – you know what I mean, Mr. Speaker, when I talk about the agenda book, the backup book, and then the documents that back up the backup – and then I would get maybe 15 minutes to brief the Premier going into a federal-provincial-territorial meeting. He didn't need more time than that. His approach at these meetings displayed his effectiveness and his understanding of the agenda.

Premier Klein was never impolite at the table, but he was also not a fan of long discussions without purpose or result. The Premier would step away from the table, perhaps go for a smoke, and leave me wondering whether I should be stepping in or saying something or participating in the agenda, but it wasn't necessary. He was always there when it mattered. When we were on a topic on which Alberta could make a difference or which made a difference to Alberta, he would engage, and then he would knock it out of the park.

Premier Klein had an unerring ability to know where he could add value, make a difference, achieve a result, and he took full advantage of those opportunities. Pick your best spot, play your cards to win, don't invest in losing hands, wait for the window or create the window where you can actually achieve a result, and then do it. That was Premier Klein at the federal and provincial tables, quickly understanding the keys to the issues and translating it into what it meant for Alberta and into language which promoted understanding.

Those same strengths were always at play at the cabinet table, Mr. Speaker. He did not like long meetings. "Bring your issue with a solution. Have the discussions with others before you come. Let's make the decision and get it done." Premier Klein was always more concerned with the effect on Albertans than whether a decision would get us re-elected. The Ralph Klein I knew and loved strived to do the right things for the right reasons. His first question was always: is that what Albertans want us to do?

I recall the Calgary courthouse being one of those decisions. Finances had always been a barrier to bringing together the various court facilities and creating a truly appropriate justice centre in Calgary. Various committees had in fact been working on the project for over 20 years. There is very little politically attractive in building a new courthouse. They are expensive, and it isn't something that's high on anyone's priority list aside from those who use it.

We were well along in the process when I engaged in a discussion with a member of Premier Klein's staff who met with me to inform me that the project was too grand, too expensive, and was being shelved yet again. On one of the few occasions on which I did this, I asked for a direct meeting with the Premier on the topic. When we met, I stated my case, telling him that it wasn't sexy, that there was no political win in it but that we should do it. He looked at me, and he asked one question: "Is it needed, David? Is it the right thing to do?" I replied, "Yes." He said: "Okay, David. Let's do it." The meeting was over. He wanted ministers to do their job, convince their colleagues, and at the end of the day the question was not "Will this get us elected?" but, rather, "Is this needed?" He always trusted you to give him the straight goods, and you could trust him to return the favour.

Premier Klein changed the way government was done. He coined the phrase "dome disease" because he knew that to govern appropriately, you had to respect the role of the Legislature, but it was most important to get out and listen to the people. He started early and set the stage when he brought forward a new environment act as environment minister. It was a very extensively consulted act. He produced a what-we-heard document after significant consultations involving Albertans. It was open, it was public, and it was the precursor to how everything needed to be done in government. No legislation or policy change was to be brought forward until there was a clear identification as to who wanted it and why, who was going to be affected and how, why we needed more legislation, and, most importantly, whether the people had been consulted, particularly the people who are going to be affected.

Government members played a larger role through changes Premier Klein brought to the legislative processes. Instituting standing policy committees and mandating that almost everything had to pass through them meant government members had a significant role in providing input to, shaping, and ultimately approving policy and legislation before it came to the Legislature. Everything, including significant fiscal and budget discussions and business plans, went through standing policy committees. In no other parliamentary democracy that I'm aware of does government caucus have that kind of input into government direction. In most parliamentary democracies government gives caucus the legislation, the direction, the budget, and caucus supports it.

Premier Klein built on Premier Lougheed's concept of caucus and extended caucus to really embed significant value in the role of a government MLA. Government MLAs were to listen to their constituents and all Albertans and represent those voices clearly in caucus, yes, but also in government committees, in committees that helped to shape the policy in the future. The 20-year strategic plan, Learning Alberta, Water for Life, the land-use strategy, and many others have a direct line back to Ralph Klein and his vision of Alberta seen through the eyes of Albertans themselves, not telling Albertans what they need or want but working with Albertans to define our preferred future.

He Listens, He Cares is not just an election slogan. It was Premier Klein. Premier Klein was often incorrectly portrayed as an individual who cared only about the finances. He cared about people. He wanted children to have a good start, and he exhibited that in so many ways. For me, this was epitomized on the opening day of the Legislature. I believe it was in 1998, and I believe that the bill was the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act, Bill 1, introduced by Premier Klein. He began his comments by saying:

Bill 1 demonstrates our commitment to protecting the well-being of our children and youth. It recognizes the seriousness of the issue of children involved in prostitution and takes steps to address it. . . . All government departments must work together along with other levels of government, nongovernment organizations, law enforcement agencies, and communities to make the matter of children involved in prostitution a priority and stop the abuse of our children.

As we were leaving the House through the main doors and heading down the stairs towards the traditional receiving line, Colleen Klein greeted me and gave me a big hug, smiled, and whispered: David, we're finally on the agenda. Colleen played a huge part in Premier Klein's premiership. She kept a focus on children and how they were harmed by prostitution, sexual violence, drugs, and abuse. I believe that from private comments such as the one I just related Colleen and Premier Klein were truly centred on what was important for Alberta's future, that children needed the best start possible, protection from harm, and the opportunity to succeed.

That was further reflected in Bill 1 in 2003, the Premier's Council on Alberta's Promise Act, which enshrined in law the government's commitment to children and youth. In his introduction Premier Klein said:

The bill enshrines a promise made on behalf of all Albertans to the province's children. It's a promise to be partners with our neighbours, heroes to our children, and champions of their future.

Ralph was not a balance-the-budget-at-all-costs, fiscal-agenda-driven Premier. He was a Premier who knew that the fiscal agenda was important so that government could do what was really important: working with the community to create the opportunity for Albertans, the Alberta advantage, to have the quality of life they wanted for their children and grandchildren to succeed.

I've had the privilege to work with each of our Progressive Conservative leaders and Premiers during successive governments. I've served in a political volunteer capacity with Premiers Lougheed and Getty; as a member of the PC Party executive, youth president, and party president; and with Premiers Klein, Stelmach, and now our current Premier in elected capacities. Each leader brings strength for their times. Each leader faces challenges for their era and reinvents the party and the government to meet those challenges and revisit the vision and direction for the future of our province. Each has talents, gifts, strengths, and weaknesses that they bring to the challenge. Each is a role model and a mentor, an inspiration to their team. Each earned and deserves, in their own right, respect.

Ralph Klein is a leader whom I grew to respect, value, and, yes, love as he faced very difficult choices with a very real concept of his own personal values and the values of Albertans. He taught me about knowing what you need to do but listening for better ideas. He taught us about humility and knowing when to say that you're sorry, to change direction, that we can't always be right all the time. He lived his life his way and expected that others should live their lives their way but that everyone had the right to live in freedom and with dignity and respect. He taught me about leadership, and he left Alberta in better shape than he found it. Really, that's what this is all about, that we can continue to aspire, to dream, and to fulfill those dreams in the best place in the world to live and to work and to raise our families.

I agree with Shirley McClellan. I never called him Ralph; he was Premier to me. He earned the name and the respect. On behalf of the Premier of Alberta, the government of Alberta, all of my colleagues in our caucus, and on my own behalf I want to say: goodbye, Mr. Premier.

Thank you. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister, for your heartfelt and genuine words about your former colleague. What more can be said about Premier Ralph Klein that hasn't already been spoken? In the 10 days since his death we have heard from his colleagues, both provincial and federal. We've heard from MLAs, from Premiers, from Prime Ministers, both past and present. The outpouring of love and support for Ralph has been at once heartwarming and heartbreaking, heartwarming to know the tremendous impact he had on life in Alberta and heartbreaking knowing that we have lost a once-in-a-lifetime leader.

Ralph led Alberta through one of the most tumultuous political eras, as many of his former caucus colleagues in this Legislature today will attest to. After inheriting record debt and deficits, Ralph repeatedly faced down his critics with courage and conviction on his way to erasing Alberta's debt load and forging our reputation as world leaders in fiscal responsibility. But that will form only part of his legacy. The other part, the human part, is unlikely to ever be equalled.

Ralph Klein transcended politics. He transcended this place filled with spinners and counterspinners, opponents, and journalists and found his way into our hearts. He had that increasingly rare ability to cut through the noise and to speak to us with sincerity and with blunt honesty, and we believed him. We recognized in him not only a purpose to achieve but a person to trust. That's what made him such a remarkable leader.

I want to finish with two rules that all of us in this House would do well to remember in the wake of Ralph's passing. Rule 1: if you say it, do it. If you commit to it, see it through. Lead it. Rule 2: if you mess up, fess up. You might just be forgiven. After all, we're all only human. Simple as these rules are, it's getting harder and harder to find a leader who lives them out. Ralph did. That's how he achieved so much and earned the respect of so many. As Alberta's current elected representatives, to honour Ralph's legacy, we must understand this.

The convictions Premier Ralph Klein stood on as Premier are as relevant today as they were then. He understood that real conservative leadership is doing what is right even when it's hard, standing up to critics and special interests and not backing down even when they get in your face. Mostly, he understood that principles don't have an expiry date. He fought for what is right because it is right. Nothing more, nothing less. So let us honour Ralph by remembering that and, in doing so, bring back to the people of this province some semblance of that Ralph Klein leadership that we will all sorely miss.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I see signals from the two other opposition parties wishing to add their comments. I will ask one question only. Does anyone object to other speakers, one from each of the two other opposition parties, joining in on this tribute?

Hearing none, the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to the minister's moving tribute to the late Premier Klein, I'm pleased to reply on behalf of the Alberta Liberal opposition. First of all, we extend our best wishes and deepest, heartfelt condolences to the Klein family.

A lot has been said about Premier Klein's legacy. He was forceful, passionate, and witty. He had the ability to connect with Albertans from all walks of life. When you talked to Ralph, you felt as though you knew him for years even if you'd only met him minutes ago. Although he was affectionately known as King Ralph, he was a fellow you could have a beer with and a good sit-down chit-chat. My better half, Sharon, knew Premier Klein. That's how she felt about him.

Premier Klein was the big-city mayor of Calgary, where he helped build city hall, the LRT, and the Saddledome and helped bring the Olympics to this province to put us on the international map. He understood the importance of building communities and infrastructure for cities. Many people think that it was Premier Klein's fiscal conservatism that allowed for one of the most memorable photo ops in our Legislature's history when he stamped a paid-in-full sticker on our province's debt. However, I'll remind the House that in the '90s this was not just achieved by drastic spending cuts. Premier Klein actually understood the value of progressive income tax, and he put an 8 per cent surtax on the wealthy to get them to pay their fair share.

Even if you didn't agree with his politics, you respected the man for his toughness, enthusiasm, and determination to build Alberta. He loved this province and could connect with the Marthas and Henrys, the average, everyday Albertans, like nobody else. He wasn't perfect – none of us are – but he had this quality which is rare for a government leader, the courage to admit mistakes and learn from them and change course. This is something we can all admire.

Finally, I'd like to extend my condolences to his father, Phil, who is a friend of mine. We were lucky to have had Premier Klein amongst us. We thank him and his family for sharing him with us.

May God bless him and God bless his family and God bless Alberta. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The leader of the New Democratic opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Premier Klein spent his life working for the province of Alberta. The far-reaching political changes brought by Premier Klein transformed the political climate and the state of this province. The impact of the Klein era can still be felt to this day.

Premier Klein dedicated his life to public service and spent decades working in both municipal and provincial politics. His passion made him a tough competitor to have across the floor, and I personally enjoyed question period with Ralph very, very much. If you could get him going, you had no idea what was going to come out of his mouth. It could be right, it could be wrong, but it was always entertaining. He was really hard to stay mad at, I found, and he was a strong communicator. His folksy charm allowed him to connect with Albertans on a very personal level. Mayor Klein undoubtedly made major contributions to the city of Calgary and as Premier to the province of Alberta throughout his lifetime. Today we recognize his dedication and hard work.

On behalf of Alberta's New Democrats I extend my sympathies to his wife, Colleen, to his family, and to his many friends, all of whom, I know, will continue to feel their loss deeply. Across the aisle, my colleagues in the Progressive Conservatives, to those of you that worked with him and knew him well, my sincere condolences. Our thoughts are very much with you today.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition for her first main set of questions.

Carbon Tax

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the government is already raising taxes through a variety of adjustments that they either bury or deny or they call something else, this despite the Premier's promise not to raise taxes. When her minister of environment muses about a huge increase in the current carbon tax, it's no wonder the energy industry is getting nervous. The minister insists it's a collaborative process as she reviews climate change policy, but we know from past experience that collaboration isn't always collaboration. Let's cut to the chase. Is the minister going to raise the $15-a-tonne tax to $40?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the minister and the Premier have been very clear. In the province of Alberta we have established a protocol that is the envy not only of the country but, in many cases, the world. The Premier and the minister are working collaboratively with industry and with the Prime Minister, who actually, incidentally, at the funeral of our late Premier Ralph Klein indicated that Alberta is driving Canada's economy. We will not make any decisions that will not be collaborative with both the federal government and the industry and that will not be conducive to building this economy and Canada's economy.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, a big increase in the job-killing carbon tax will have a direct effect on Alberta's economy. Now, we agree that curbs on emissions are necessary, but tossing out numbers like the minister did recently has a direct effect on investment, hiring, and business viability. Now, giving the Premier some ammunition for her Washington sales trip is one thing, but why do so much damage by floating trial balloons?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, the Premier and our colleagues are doing their utmost best on behalf of all Albertans to ensure that we have access to markets for our products. Part of that conversation is ensuring that we have the social licence to operate, working closely with industry and the government of Canada, and to ensure that we actually have some place to send our production when we produce it in this province.

Ms Smith: It's beginning to sound like the answer is yes, Mr. Speaker.

The recent back-in-debt budget relies on a fictional future in Alberta to achieve projected revenue levels, yet with such industry uncertainty and with the job losses we've already seen, can we expect that the Minister of Finance is going to rely on other sneaky tax increases to meet his future revenue projections?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the revenue projections that we have in the plan have been arrived at by using industry's numbers. They've been arrived at by using the market analysts that the hon. member across the way is actually talking about that we're not talking to. Well, in fact, those are the numbers that we're using. I would hazard a guess – I've been waiting for the question of when I lowballed the numbers because currently we would be a little bit under those numbers.

The Speaker: Hon. leader, second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I see they're having trouble answering this question, so I'm going to try it again. Now, we are supportive of the Keystone XL pipeline, and we're glad that the Premier is encouraging the Americans to approve the project, but we are not supportive of a shocking, disruptive, and unilateral approach to changing the structure of the current carbon tax regime in Alberta. The government has been musing about raising the $15-a-tonne charge for carbon to a job-killing $40. It's a transparent attempt to try to convince oil sands opponents that Alberta is green, but its actual effect is to create uncertainty. Why doesn't the government see that?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the only person that's talking about shocking disruption to the industry is the member across the aisle. If the member across the aisle would not engage in public discourse questioning the science of today, our Premier wouldn't have to be in Washington, DC, right now trying to convince them that the product needs to be delivered there. I would strongly suggest that the member focus on facts and look at the statements made by the Premier and the minister and not muse about increasing taxes because on this side we're not doing that.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the most recent job numbers show a decline in the number of jobs in Alberta, more than 11,000 lost jobs in March alone. The contraction suggests that the economy is not creating these jobs because of uncertainty about the future. Will the Deputy Premier create some certainty and commit that he will not be increasing the $15 tax to $40?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the member should know – and if she doesn't, she now will – that the majority of the job losses occurred in the hospitality industry, and that is a natural reaction to what happens when you have a slowdown in economic development. That is why our Premier is in Washington right now. That is why we're working with the Premier of New Brunswick. That is why we're working with the Premier of Quebec. That is why we're working with the Premier and government of British Columbia to get this product to the coast and not to perpetuate the fearmongering both on science and now some new taxes that I know not of.

Ms Smith: I'm sure the Deputy Premier knows the Voyageur project isn't in the hospitality field.

Business craves stability, certainty, consistency, but with this government they get the opposite. A few years ago it was the oil royalty mess, a few weeks ago the return to debt and deficit financing, and now the spectre of another broken promise with a threatened tax increase on the energy sector. Why are they trying to destroy the Alberta advantage?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, I think this government is very much of the view that it actually would be impossible to destroy the Alberta advantage, that we have in this province. We have exceptional strengths. The greatest certainty that we could create for industry in this province is to ensure that we have access to tidewater so that we can sell our products, and that is what this government is absolutely dedicated to.

Compensation for Pharmacy Services

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, on to another group that's not enjoying the Alberta advantage today. The Minister of Health claims to be making drugs cheaper for Albertans, but the reality of his generic drug plan is this: drug shortages, price increases, and pharmacy closures. You'll hear more about that in a few minutes. As a result of the government's decision to pay less for generics, prices are actually going up for patients. Dozens of medications will not be covered by Alberta Health, which means patients will pay out of pocket, and other options either aren't in existence or are more expensive. Why didn't the Minister of Health trust pharmacists, who warned him about this disastrous policy change?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure where the hon. member is getting her information, but in fact the price of generic drugs in Alberta is going down. On May 1 Alberta will pay the lowest price for generic drugs in the country at 18 per cent. That price not only benefits government-sponsored drug programs; it benefits private employers who provide drug benefit plans, that help support jobs in this province, something we're interested in. Also, it helps support those who pay out of pocket.

Mr. Speaker, these discussions are not new. They've been going on for a number of years. We have supported and will continue to support . . .

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: For the Health minister's benefit: getting it from the summary of changes to the drug benefit list.

Let me give you a few details, Mr. Speaker. The government spent $400,000 on an ad campaign that claims lower drug prices are good for Alberta. Now, we agree, but that's not what's happening. For example, take keterolac, a commonly prescribed painkiller, one of the generics that will no longer be covered by Alberta Health: the other version is discontinued, and the brand name is 50 per cent more expensive. The bottom line is that patients will pay more out of pocket. How is that good medicine for patients?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I can assure this House that Albertans need have no concern about the supply of drugs in this province today or after the price changes on May 1. The fact is that we receive drug price quotations monthly from manufacturers both here in Canada and around the world. We have the opportunity because of the policy environment in this province to set a price and to choose from multiple providers of the same drug, in some cases brand name providers as well, to supply that drug for our province. This is sound policy. It's rooted in practice that we see across the country in provinces such as B.C., Ontario. It delivers on our commitment to lower . . .

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, here is another one out of a long list of affected medicines, and you'll be hearing about them all week. Triamcinolone, used to treat a variety of conditions, including arthritis, lupus, and asthma, is one of the generics that will no longer be covered by Alberta Health. The version from the other generic drug maker is unavailable. The brand name is more than double the cost. The bottom line is that policy will cost Albertans more money. How is that good medicine for patients?

Mr. Horne: The hon. member is obviously not familiar with the policy and the practices around drug procurement in this province or, in fact, across the country. This price-setting exercise is the most comprehensive of its kind in the country. As I said earlier, it affects government-sponsored programs. It provides a price benefit for private and employer-sponsored programs as well as for people who pay out of pocket. Mr. Speaker, we have multiple sources in Alberta and across the country and internationally for all of these drugs. Many of them are based on equivalent molecules. We will continue to provide the drugs that Albertans need at the best price that we can get on behalf of our citizens.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Oil Price Forecasting

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year's fudge-it budget wildly overestimated oil revenues so that the Premier could promise the world in the election. This year's bankrupt budget took advantage of a freak event in the oil market to underestimate oil revenues and manufacture a crisis as an excuse to break all of those promises. Well, the Premier's bitumen bubble is BS. And by BS I mean bitumen sham because today the gap between the prices of Alberta and Texas oil is 23 per cent, smaller than the seven-year average. Some bubble. To the Premier: why did you misinform Albertans by trying to pass off a highly unusual market event . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, while members on this side of the House spent two weeks with constituents, obviously this member spent a lot of time coming up with slogans. Unfortunately, they're meaningless. It is not the Premier or the Minister of Finance himself that comes up with the estimates of what the revenues will be, but frankly the brightest minds in the world and in the financial houses throughout the world estimate what the cost of commodities will be in the future. We average it, as a matter of fact, on the small "c" conservative side, and that's how prices are set. Maybe next time there's a constituency break this gentleman can take some time and learn that.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, that's a slogan Premier Klein would have used had he seen this.

Given that the price of western Canadian select is currently higher than the monthly average for 2012, a year when the term "bitumen bubble" was just a glint in the Premier's eye, to the Premier: why are you attacking vital services such as post-secondary education, K to 12, health care, and seniors' care? Does it have something to do with a leadership review, or do you just want to punish regular Albertans: students, teachers, doctors, nurses, and seniors? Why, Premier?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I just rose in a previous set of questions and said that I was surprised I hadn't got the question about us lowballing the numbers. Well, now I've got it. It just goes to prove that there is a wide variety of pundits who believe they know where the oil price is going to go. We actually use the experts in the industry. We use private industry forecasts. While this hon. member may think that the glut in the North American market, which everyone in the industry sees, is a freak accident, as I think he called it, this is something that the North American industry understands. Unfortunately, the hon. member does not.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, this same Finance minister told CBC listeners that Alberta, quote, wouldn't get back to the differential of January 2012 at any point in the next three years. Unquote. But, lo and behold, the spread today is actually significantly lower. Significantly lower. To the Premier: was this intellectually and morally bankrupt budget based on profoundly faulty assumptions, or was it based on truth-challenging assertions instead?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should actually take the whole interview so that he can be truthful to this House, which he is not being right now. The context of the question that I answered was: in our budget projections do we get back to the differential of January 2012? The answer is that in our projection we do not. That was the question that was asked. That's the answer, and it's truthful, not like the question that was just asked.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the Deputy Premier. Our Premier is off on another one of her panhandling expeditions to Washington, hoping to convince Americans that Alberta's government has been environmentally responsible with the oil sands. And there's more misleading greenwash advertising, too, $77,000 worth. Will the Deputy Premier tell the Assembly what he won't say to the Americans, which is that after years of denial this government was forced to admit that its water monitoring system was useless and that the promised new world-class system is still not in place two and a half years after it was announced?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, if the leaders of the ND Party both nationally and provincially wouldn't spew information like this out, if the leader of the Liberal Party wouldn't be talking about the magic of the bubble and not believing in the oil bubble, if the Leader of the Official Opposition wasn't going on S.S. Minnow cruises with a whole bunch of other climate change deniers, our Premier wouldn't have to be in Washington right now trying to convince the American public of the fact that export of our petroleum is important not only to Canada but to the United States as well.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, you rose on a point of order during that last answer, and it's been noted.

The leader of the New Democrats.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I hope the Deputy Premier enjoyed his corn flakes this morning.

Will the Deputy Premier tell the Assembly what he won't tell the Americans, that Alberta's so-called price on carbon is actually based on the percentage of carbon in emissions, and will he tell them that Alberta has failed to reach its carbon emissions targets by a mile?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, we will be telling Americans whatever is true. We will be telling Americans whatever is supported by science. As a matter of fact, we are inviting Americans over here. Very recently we had the governor of Colorado find out for himself. But we won't be telling Americans to kill the Canadian economy. We won't be telling Americans to kill the Alberta economy because of some ideology that they may have that is not supported by Canadians both federally or here, provincially, at home.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, we know that the Deputy Premier has some creative uses for breakfast cereal, but he shouldn't be so creative with the truth. Why won't he admit that the environment minister's recent proposal is just a further attempt to trick the U.S. administration and that this government is already distancing itself from its recent proposal and trying to pin responsibility for it on the federal government?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, if this member won't show respect for Albertans and Canadians and for the engine of our economy, he should at least show some respect to our neighbours to the south and acknowledge the fact that they have the capability of looking at the facts, of deciphering the facts and making righteous conclusions on what is good for the United States. When they make that decision, I'm sure it will be a good decision for both the United States and Canada, for Alberta, that is driving the Canadian economy partially through our petroleum industry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Support for Postsecondary Education

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's great to have you back in the big chair.

Mr. Speaker, Edmonton's mayor, Stephen Mandel, quite rightly standing up for all Edmontonians and the advanced education industry in general, pointed out that the minister of advanced education should choose his words more carefully. Last week the minister of advanced education said, and I quote – I'm sorry, but it is a quote – that somebody had pissed in the mayor of Edmonton's corn flakes. Now, I'm wondering if today the advanced education minister would like to publicly apologize to the mayor and the rest of Albertans as he made these comments publicly.

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: Hon. members, just because you heard something or read something that contained an ill-chosen word, perhaps, or maybe a well-chosen word in terms of the deliverer does not mean that it bears repeating in this Assembly when we have so many wonderful young students here with us and so many others at home listening. Let's be very, very careful about this, please.

Hon. Deputy Premier, I'll allow you to comment if you wish.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I have to say that Mayor Mandel is not only a colleague as a politician on the Edmonton political stage, but he actually is a very dear friend of mine and of my family. So I don't think he needs them to be inbetweeners. There are other members that need inbetweeners between them and their mayors.

However, Mr. Speaker, let me be clear. I am happy that Mayor Mandel is so passionate about advanced education. As a matter of fact, I called him the same day. I asked him to call me or meet with me to discuss matters in more detail. I continue to wait for his phone call, but I'm sure we will have a good discussion shortly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I assure you I was uncomfortable with that also. I wonder, Deputy Premier, if the mayor is as good a friend as the federal immigration minister is.

Given that many postsecondary institutions and leaders are rightly telling the advanced education minister that they are not interested in this government's vision of centralization, that takes autonomy away from postsecondary institutions, why does the minister of advanced education think that he knows how to run a postsecondary institution better than those currently doing it?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't. That is why I listened to what they have been asking the provincial government to do. For the last 10 years all of the leaders of advanced institutions have been asking this province to put in place Campus Alberta. They have been asking this government to assign roles and responsibilities for each institution within Campus Alberta, and they have been asking this province to provide them with mandate letters. We have done all of that, and now we will be working in collaboration in implementing those letters.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Given that we had professors hold a press conference today saying that they're prepared and getting ready to leave Alberta because of the hand they've been dealt from this province, I just want to ask the minister: plain and simple, what is so wrong with postsecondary institutions in Alberta and the people in charge of operating them that you need to redefine what they do and, in the process, take a giant hatchet to their sector?

Mr. Lukaszuk: This is coming, Mr. Speaker, from the Wildrose, that wants us to cut even deeper and calls this budget not a balanced budget. How incredible is that? But you know what? They will not be leaving the province of Alberta. Even after this budget, this moderate change compared to what they would have done, Alberta's postsecondary education is still the highest funded postsecondary education system in Canada, and we will continue to grow it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Market Access for Energy Resources

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've heard several times and again last week that a CIBC report was released that said that the oil pipeline constraints are costing our Canadian economy over $50 billion over the next three years. My question is to the Minister of Energy. I'd like to know, Mr. Minister: what is the Alberta government going to do to address this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, this is clearly not just an Alberta challenge. It's a problem, a challenge for all Canadians. What we're doing together with the Premier and other colleagues is that we're working right across this country. Of course, the Premier is in Washington this very week to meet with leaders to help ensure that there is an open market for all of the production that we can create in this province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Fenske: Thank you. To the same minister. The government once again is spending advertising money in the United States. Do you really think that that's going to help access?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, it's really important to get through to all of the leaders in the United States who might have input into this important decision by the President. We're all optimistic that the President will make the right decision that will serve both American interests and Canadian interests at the same time. So we're very much looking forward to that outcome. We're prepared to invest however it takes, wherever it takes to get the right outcome for the citizens of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. The Premier is taking another trip to Washington. What does she think she will accomplish this time that she didn't on her previous trips?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, we're not here to entertain what people might think. We're here to discuss policy and fact. If you can craft an answer that deals with the policy side of it, please proceed.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's clear this government has a policy of taking direct action to engage citizens, to engage leadership elsewhere. Meanwhile on the other side here we see the NDP is denying industry, the Liberals are denying bubbles, and the Wildrose denies science. Or maybe they deny science deniers. I'm not sure what it is today. [interjections] Well, you've got all of the options.

The Speaker: A point of order has been noted at 2:33.

Mr. Anglin: Mr. Speaker, in 2007 this government passed legislation in an attempt to address greenhouse gas emissions. We could have passed legislation that actually achieved measurable reductions in greenhouse gas emissions and air pollution, but that's not what we got. This government chose instead the cap and tax route, and now we learn that the cap and tax fund has been quietly collecting more than $50 million over and above what is necessary to fund our greenhouse gas emissions programs. Why does this government think that a cap and hoard strategy will improve our air quality?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's quite clear that this member – it's not clear, actually, where this member is coming from, to tell you the truth. I would say that what we have done is that we have allocated very directly the resources that have been raised. They haven't gone into general revenues. They've been directed towards long-term technology solutions that will get to the outcome of reducing greenhouse gases and the greenhouse gas footprint in a very responsible way in this province.

Mr. Anglin: Given that the $15-a-tonne carbon tax brings in about $70 million a year and given that the fund only spends $20 million a year, how does the minister think that hoarding money in a fund will actually improve Alberta's air quality?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, more than 32 million tonnes of greenhouse gases have been reduced from business as usual. There are very specific measures that have been undertaken. More than $181 million has been invested and committed to more than 49 projects that are clean energy projects. That's exactly how we'll get to the outcome we need to get to.

Mr. Anglin: Given that we now know that the minister of environment is musing about raising the carbon tax to $40 a tonne from its current level of $15 a tonne, my question is this: is this new extra $25-a-tonne carbon tax just going to increase the balance of this slush fund, or will this money be a straight up-and-down tax grab for general revenues to subsidize this government's addiction to its overspending?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, you can speculate all you want about what might happen in the future. What I can tell you are the facts. The facts are that there are several alternatives that are being reviewed. The facts are that industry, the federal government, and the government of Alberta are working very closely. We want to ensure that we work very closely to get the right outcome for Albertans, to ensure that we have access to markets, that we get our products to tidewater, that we get world-price revenues for the products from this province.

Campground Improvements

Ms Pastoor: Mr. Speaker, summer is coming, and Albertans will be anxious to take part in outdoor activities such as fishing, camping, and hiking across this province. These activities are traditions which have been enjoyed by generations and must be preserved for the future generations of this province. My question is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation, and it is his first question in this House. Some provincial campgrounds across our province have become inaccessible due to the current size of fifth wheels, trailers, and tent trailers. This being the case, what is being done to address this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. We're very proud in Alberta that we have some 41,000 campsites across the province to choose from, and I can assure you that those campsites range from the rustic to the sophisticated. Those campsites are being constantly improved upon, including a $17 billion capital and operational improvement fund this year that is going to improve the diversity and also enhance the quality of those sites. So we're looking forward to that and to being able to enjoy those sites this summer.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. To the same minister, although I think he's pretty much answered my question: how many new campgrounds will we be getting for that money, or will it really just be for enlarging the existing campgrounds?

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, I've just been informed by the Treasury Board minister that I've augmented the budget by some thousand times. While I can assure you that I'm a passionate advocate for my portfolio, not even my persuasive abilities would do that much. With $17 million, however, we intend to continue to make the kinds of improvements like we've made at Pigeon Lake provincial park and Hilliard's Bay provincial park and Lesser Slave Lake. We're very proud of those, and we encourage Albertans, regardless of the size of RV or tent or trailer they have, to get out and camp in Alberta this summer.

Ms Pastoor: Mr. Speaker, my next question is to the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General. Given recent cutbacks to wardens and conservation officers how does the government plan to address the problems of random camping and unruly behaviour within our recreation areas?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, summer absolutely is coming. Last summer we went throughout Livingstone-Macleod, to Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, Crowsnest Pass, Pincher Creek, and Brocket, and in all of these cases we talked to many different conservation officers. I'm very pleased to advise that this year we're recruiting 90 seasonal park rangers and an additional seven full-time rangers, bringing the total conservation officers on a full-time basis to 74 throughout this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to talk about some connected issues: the government's duty to act in the best interests of current and future Albertans to protect the environment and the economy as well as government's backward movement on Alberta's targets on greenhouse gas emission and our part of the federal commitment to reduce the level to below 2005 emission levels by the year 2020. I guess the question goes to the money man. To the Minister of Finance and Treasury Board: what is behind the government's insistence on PR-begging trips over any action that would be transformational for the operation of oil sands . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the question is probably better to the Energy minister because what this is all about is market access. As we have seen over the last 10, 12 months especially, market access is crippling our economy and the federal economy, Canada's economy, because we cannot get to tidewater to get what is the appropriate price for our products. Everything this government does right now is focused on making sure that we're doing the right things for Albertans. Part of that is making sure we have market access for our products, and we will do what it takes.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. Back to the same minister: given that the coal-burning power plants are the single largest emitters of greenhouse gas, why has the government done absolutely nothing to encourage transformation of this sector to a less carbon-intensive fuel? As a matter of fact, what it has done is extend the worst polluters for up to an additional 10 years. How is that helping our economy?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me take that. You know, there have been a couple of questions today which seem to be based on a completely false assumption. The carbon levy in this province has never been about raising money for general revenues. The carbon levy has historically always been about using it to reduce the greenhouse gas footprint. In fact, the question with respect to coal: there were adjustments made last year, again, in close consultation with the industry and with the government of Canada to ensure that we got to the right outcome for the long-term health of Albertans and Canadians.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Then to the Energy minister: given that Siemens has just announced that they're opening a head office in Calgary – so we're hardly chasing them away – why is the government so obstinate about increasing the carbon levy to something that would be transformational? You could start anywhere. I would take 50 bucks and then phase it in at $10 a year. But it's got to be transformational, or we are not going to get anything happening, and we'll be sitting here 10 years from now with the same questions.

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, the transformation that we're creating in this province is the transformation of good, long-term economic fundamentals with a balance for environmental responsibility. Because of that, we will be successful in achieving market access for our products because we will continue to be the responsible provider of energy for America and for the rest of the world.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Medicine Hat.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week Edmonton's mayor joined the chorus of opposition to this government's short-sighted attack on the province's flagship university and, through that, on the capital city. Now we have undergraduate students, graduate students, alumni, staff, faculty, administrators, presidents of universities, the board of governors at the U of A, and now a mayor all opposing the PC cuts to postsecondary education. To the minister. Not a single stakeholder supports you. You clearly listened to no one. Why won't you reverse your regressive cuts to our postsecondary education system?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the member will have plenty of opportunity in a few days to talk to the estimates that we will be presenting for this particular ministry. You should know that we have actually increased funding for students. We have frozen tuition increases, and some additional announcements will be coming forward. However, we have made some difficult choices like every other minister on this front bench had to make in response to a suddenly changed fiscal situation for the province of Alberta. The fact is that we are working with the presidents and chairs of all institutions, as a matter of fact, in a very collaborative spirit. They will have to make some difficult decisions, but we will minimize . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister's mandate letters, conveniently released at the very beginning of our break, have been met with a unified chorus of condemnation and given that these new mandates will erode academic independence, our international reputation, and overall educational quality, will the minister admit he doesn't understand postsecondary education, he's not equipped to lead this sector, and that it's time to tear up his mandate letters and start over?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the member is wrong again. As a matter of fact, there are chairs and presidents of postsecondary institutions that have already responded in writing very positively towards the letters.

She should also know that the content of those letters is not drafted by me but actually is a collaboration of suggestions from Campus Alberta dialogues that took place over the last number of years. Lastly, Mr. Speaker, they're not very prescriptive. Right now each postsecondary institution has the opportunity to modify their letter, to find their perfect spot within Campus Alberta, and we will be negotiating that back and forth until we find a situation where every single school is satisfied with their letter.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that in her leadership run the Premier said that, quote, when times are tough, that is when you should invest in postsecondary education, end quote, and given that real leadership does indeed mean investing in education and, coincidentally, keeping your promises, will the Deputy Premier admit that his cuts to advanced education mean that his government understands neither leadership nor the concept of keeping your promises?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, what this government will do is make sure that we find as much collaboration as possible without in any way affecting the academic independence of all of our 26 schools. We will make sure that we have a strong Campus Alberta, we will make sure that we provide the best services possible to our students, we will make sure that we will increase the voice of students in the decision-making process, we will make sure that we will not increase students' tuition until we can look them straight in the eyes and say that we are running an efficient process, and we will make sure that postsecondary education will be the driver of our economic growth in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: A point of order has been raised by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood at 2:47. Noted.

Compensation for Pharmacy Services

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again this PC government has failed Albertans with their incredibly misguided and mismanaged approach to health care. As a direct result of cuts a vital community pharmacy in Medicine Hat is closing its doors. This is just one more black mark on the record of this Health minister, who's proven time and time again that he is incapable of competently doing his job. To the Minister of Health: how can you honestly tell Albertans that pharmacies closing their doors improves their quality of care?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the reduction in generic prices hasn't even occurred yet, I'm at a loss to explain the hon. member's contention that the policies of this government are forcing the closure of that business.

The fact is – and the hon. member should know this – that this government has poured over $95 million over the last few years into financial support for pharmacists across the province, particularly in rural and remote areas, as generic prices have been gradually reduced. He should also know and appreciate that pharmacists across this province are supporting the evolution of a pharmacy services framework that pays them for their services.

Mr. Pedersen: Given that pharmacists across Alberta are actually saying that they cannot operate under this government's new framework and are going so far as to protest on the steps of this Legislature, will the minister end his campaign of misinformation and be honest with Albertans about the damage these changes will cause?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, what would be honest is an acknowledgement of the fact that this government has done more than any other in the country to support pharmacists to become full partners in a health care team that's delivering quality services to Albertans. It's amazing to us how at one moment the opposition can claim to be holding the domain on the interests of taxpayers in the province at a time when we're lowering generic drug prices to the best in the country and at the same time oppose the same move based on information that isn't even accurate.

Mr. Pedersen: Given that pharmacies are closing their doors and Albertans are suffering because of this minister's mismanagement, will he agree right now to cancel his drastic funding cuts and actually consult with Alberta's pharmacists before making any more heavy-handed moves?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as we used to say to another party, I guess we'll have to wait to figure out if it's a saving day or a spending day, but I will tell you this: this government has consulted more with pharmacists than any other government in the country that I'm aware of in the development of a model that they have asked for to allow them to provide the services that they're trained to provide, to pay them to provide those services, and in the transition to support them in their businesses. We've done that, and we'll continue to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by Livingstone-Macleod.

Community Safety

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Community safety is very important for the quality of life of Albertans. Our constituents were very happy when they heard the Minister of Justice in his news release from last year say: "It's important that we provide them with the support they need to help put an end to gang activity." But now they are very worried about the fact that the safer communities and neighbourhoods, or SCAN, program has been terminated in the provincial budget. My question is to the hon. minister. Can the minister explain to my constituent your talk about community safety and your walk in the budget?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, as a long-time parliamentarian in this House I'm sure that this member recalls that these grants were limited on a three-year basis. They were designed to break down silos in the various ministries, and they have succeeded. We will continue to honour the grants that are in their existing place, but as a result of budgetary reductions we have had to eliminate the grants on a go-forward basis.

I would also point this member to the civil forfeiture fund, which seizes assets from the proceeds of crime and gives them to organizations such as those people. Perhaps your constituent may want to apply for a civil forfeiture grant for his or her organization.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the same hon. minister. Given that some community safety projects or pilot projects are going to be terminated, can the effective SCAN program be continued? If not, how can you help the safety of vulnerable neighbourhoods where my constituents live?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, even though the budget of Justice and Solicitor General has received an 8 per cent reduction – and we will be talking about that over the next couple of days – I'm very proud that we have not cut one police officer, we've increased the number of judges by two, and we have not cut one Crown prosecutor. In addition, the new police officer grant, or NPOG, is going to be continued for at least one more year. That adds 300 new police officers on the street. That was started by the Premier when she was Justice minister, and that includes 123 police officers in your hometown of Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister: given that community safety is related to some of the public consultation that you have launched on grow ops, why don't you just control or register the purchases of equipment and fertilizer that are also used in grow ops, similar to the controls on pawn shops and spray paint canisters?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's actually the first time I've heard an idea like that, and I would welcome the member to become part of our consultation. You can go to Grow Op Free Alberta on the Justice department's website at alberta.ca and provide your information until the end of May. This is why we have a consultation. We want to listen to the views of Albertans and not just simply put in legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by Calgary-Hawkwood.

South Saskatchewan Regional Plan

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Residents in southern Alberta are concerned over the government's centralized regional planning under the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. Municipalities, land-owners, and business owners continue to be in limbo as they prepare to see the final draft of the South Saskatchewan regional plan, and now almost 9,000 Albertans have signed a petition against the plan. With this massive concern resonating among Albertans across southern Alberta, will the minister commit to revisit with the advisory council before they make their first draft on this imposed plan to ensure these voices are heard?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to take that question on behalf of my colleague the Minister of ESRD. In fact, this comes after a couple of years of consultations. The regional advisory committee consultations and consultations throughout the south have taken place. I would encourage the hon. member and all Albertans to approach this matter in good faith and see how we can create the best possible land-use structure that we can imagine in southern Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you. We didn't hear whether he's going to meet with the regional advisory council again.

Anyway, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: given that the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties is warning against the dangers of forced regionalization on local communities, why does the province insist on forcing municipalities to accept the province's plan instead of working for the best interest of their communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the question. I am fully aware that the AAMD and C has indicated that they don't believe forced co-operation means success, but neither does allowing municipalities to not talk to each other encourage any sort of agreement or managing proper planning. I'm simply encouraging that all municipalities come together within the region and come up with a sound plan that ensures strong growth, that ensures agriculture is still viable, that we protect the environment, that we build buildings where they're supposed to be, that we put industry where it's supposed to be, not just for the sake of us but for the sake of the next generation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we'll try it again, then. To the Finance minister: given that the province spent $21 million or more in compensation under the lower Athabasca regional plan, what budget does the minister have in mind for compensating the businesses and landowners whose lands will be impacted by the South Saskatchewan regional plan?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, you know, this kind of highly speculative, provocative allegation is not really helpful to helping people understand what's really going on here. I would encourage the hon. member to participate in the process, engage in the process in a constructive way and in a way that is well informed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Grandparent Access to Grandchildren

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Currently there is an unfortunate situation that exists in our province, where many children have difficulty accessing or being visited by their grandparents because of parental conflict. However, research has shown that having grandparent support is crucial to healthy child development. To the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General. The province of Manitoba has recently established the grand relations strategy, which successfully addresses problems and has gained some international recognition. Will you consider adopting such a program in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I welcome this question from this hon. member. I think any one of us has had a strong relationship with our grandparents in our younger years, as I did with my grandfather, and I think it's very important. He references the grand relations strategy in Manitoba. Alberta grandparents may access assistance through family justice services, which offers to assist family law litigants in a resolution prior to court involvement. Of course, court is available, but that is only the last strategy because it can become very expensive, especially with all of the legal fees involved.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: will you consider establishing a unified family court system which gives proper consideration for grandparent access?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I'm aware that there was a unified family court task force in about 2004, two or three Legislatures ago. This isn't something that we are looking at right now. I am aware that other jurisdictions have these types of court systems. We have looked at other jurisdictions to weigh the pros and cons and determined this wasn't the best way to proceed after we looked at that task force. This decision was made with input from the courts and all Albertans. I believe it was the former Member for Calgary-Lougheed who handled that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The last question is to the same minister. Will you amend the Alberta Family Law Act, section 35(3), which makes it difficult if not impossible for grandparents to access grandchildren?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Most grandparents will never need to go to court to have contact with their grandchildren, and we want to maintain that status quo. But for those who unfortunately do, Alberta's Family Law Act balances the best interests of the children and the best interests of parents and grandparents in a reasonable manner.

Grandparents are important to me. I think they're important to everyone else here. I look forward to discussing these issues with this member. I look forward to talking to you after the session is done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Federal Building Renovations

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Infrastructure recently made comments to the Calgary Herald that require some explanation. Regarding $360 million for palatial MLA offices he said: "A lot of people are criticizing it now, but wait until the grand opening. Everybody will be proud of what we have there and it will be a jewel." To the Minister of Infrastructure: given that this government recently gave itself an 8 per cent pay raise and we are facing a 5 and a half billion dollar deficit, doesn't this government think it has done enough to siphon from taxpayers and future generations?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, aside from all of the points he made that weren't true, I will comment on the federal building. To stop building that project right now, we'll have spent $330 million and have nothing for it. There's $20 million left, and the project will be finished. It would be irresponsible with the taxpayers' dollars to stop building that project.

Mr. Barnes: You guys sure like expensive jewellery.

Given that perhaps congratulations are in order for not incurring another massive billion dollar cost overrun like the south campus Calgary hospital, will this minister tell Albertans whether this government has entered into a cost-plus contract with no ceiling to protect taxpayers from those costs rising again beyond this incredible $75 million it's already over?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, the project was originally budgeted at $356 million. When it was put out for tender, at a time when construction companies weren't busy, the bids came in lower, so the estimate was reduced. Once you start a project of that size, rebuilding, and get in there, the engineers found concerns that they had to address, and it dragged the project out longer and cost more. Dragging it out increased the budget.

Mr. Barnes: Sounds like some interesting planning.

Given that this government has said that it has a prioritized infrastructure spending list but has refused to provide it, can the minister explain, please, how lush MLA and bureaucratic offices are more important on your priority list than schools, hospitals, and roads?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, here we go again misleading the public. There will be 50 MLAs in there, including the opposition. [interjections] There will be spaces for 600 people in that building, so 50 MLAs out of 600. I find it also surprising . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Just about made it, didn't we? Could we please have some restoration of decorum and let the minister answer the question, which you yourselves asked?

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also find it quite surprising that the members opposite last year were complaining about their offices in the Annex, wanting us to spend more money, that they weren't good enough, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members . . . [interjections]. Hon. members, honourable and even some of you who may not feel so honourable today, please. A point of order has been raised by the Member for Airdrie at 3:02 in response to the final answer here, prompted, I'm sure, by some wonderful comments from this side. We'll hear that point of order shortly.

In the meantime it's just past 3 o'clock, and I'll have to recognize the Government House Leader first.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the comments this afternoon relative to the passing of Premier Ralph Klein and the undeniable fact that I do tend to go on too long, I would ask the indulgence of colleagues in the House to waive Standing Order 7(7) and allow us to continue past 3 p.m. to complete the Routine.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 7(7), of course, requires us to give unanimous consent to carry on with the Routine, including Members' Statements. I will ask one question. Does anybody object to us continuing on in order to conclude our Routine for the day?

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

50th Anniversary of CapitalCare

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rose earlier to introduce and warmly welcome to the Alberta Legislature nine guests from CapitalCare. It is my honour and pleasure to rise again to recognize this remarkable organization for on April 1 they celebrated with pride 50 years of innovative continuing care and service to Alberta's most valued resource, which is people. On April 1, 1963, CapitalCare began operations at Norwood annex, located at the Royal Alexandra hospital, with 72 beds. This section of the hospital was built in 1947 and was known as the south pavilion. It was Alberta's first publicly owned long-term care centre. South pavilion today is known as the CapitalCare CHOICE Norwood, Canada's first stand-alone day centre for the frail elderly living in the community.

Mr. Speaker, since 1963 CapitalCare has evolved to become the largest publicly funded continuing care organization in Canada. This organization administers western Canada's first continuing care research unit, which specializes in assessment, customer care, and innovative service delivery options to continuing care communities across Canada. A few additional milestone achievements over the years included the establishment of the CapitalCare Foundation in 1989 to fund raise for enhancements beyond government funding and the Kipnes Centre for Veterans in 2005. Also, it should be noted that CapitalCare is a wholly owned subsidiary of Alberta Health Services.

The organization has over 2,700 dedicated allied professionals who provide care and services to more than 1,400 elderly and disabled adults through 11 care centres and day programs around Edmonton and Sherwood Park. An example of a care centre located in my constituency of Edmonton-Decore is CapitalCare Dickinsfield, which has 275 continuing care beds and provides support services to McConnell Place North, adjacent to Dickinsfield, and operates the young adult day support program. Mr. Speaker, CapitalCare's new motto, Putting People First, truly exemplifies an organization which over the past 50 years has concentrated on cultivating a person-centred social model of care which is responsive to meet the needs of our diverse population.

I would like to offer my heartfelt congratulations and sincere appreciation to all those past and present who have contributed to CapitalCare's 50 years of compassionate care and outstanding service to Alberta's frail, elderly, and disabled people, including their families.

*Thank you, Mr. Speaker.**

Mr. Ralph P. Klein, OC, AOE

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, when I lose someone I love and admire, I find comfort and peace in pondering how that person has touched and affected my life for good. Many Albertans have fond personal stories about our friend Ralph Klein, and I'm now different.

After Ralph left politics, he took a position at the law firm BLG in Calgary. I was just a first-year associate at the time, a nobody by the world's standards. Ralph, of course, didn't care about that. He took the time to talk with me and even counselled me on my nomination campaign. He even wrote a very, very kind reference. For me, it was like getting hockey tips from Wayne Gretzky. But that was Ralph. He didn't care who you were or what your position was. He just treated you like a long-time friend regardless.

Over the last week I realized that my emotions at Ralph's passing were not just because of how he treated me personally. It was much more than that. I realized that more than any other person it was Ralph who made me proud to be Albertan. It was under Ralph's leadership that our province went from economic slouch to economic powerhouse. We went from crushing debt to being debt free. We went from a place where our children would leave for opportunities elsewhere to becoming a beacon of prosperity, attracting the best and brightest from all over the world. The Alberta advantage was built under Ralph.

But it wasn't just the substance; it was also the style. He wasn't afraid to be different. He wasn't afraid of saying what needed to be said or to do what needed to be done just because it may not have been politically correct. He gave us courage, he gave us swagger, but he also showed us humility and compassion. He made us feel like our province could do anything, and thanks to him I believe we still can.

Many of us believe that after we leave this life for the next, we will be judged by how we treated others, by what we gave, by how we served our fellow man. If this is true, then Ralph Klein today has become a king. Thank you, Ralph, and please keep watching out for us down here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Holocaust Memorial Day

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Several years ago I visited the Dachau concentration camp. It left a profound impression on me, so it is with great empathy, compassion, and humility that I rise today in commemoration of Yom ha-Shoah, also known as Holocaust Memorial Day. Many of us, including you, Mr. Speaker, attended the memorial ceremony today at the Leg.

Each year, in accordance with the Jewish lunar calendar, the global community recognizes and pays tribute to the brave individuals who needlessly lost their lives in one of the worst atrocities of all time, the Holocaust. Over the course of World War II more than 6 million Jewish men, women, and children unjustifiably lost their lives at the hands of an oppressive Nazi regime.

Mr. Speaker, it is truly impossible for anyone to imagine the unfathomable suffering and pain of those who endured this catastrophe, and unfortunately while the emotional scars of those who lived through this genocide may never heal, we as part of the global community must do our part to learn from the tragedies of the past, never allowing them to occur again. Ensuring this, of course, is easier said than done but is essential for the progression of humanity and a peaceful future. We all have a part to play in making our world a better place to live, assisting those who are indefensibly oppressed and discriminated against.

In saying this, I would like to quote the words of Elie Wiesel, Holocaust survivor:

I swore never to be silent whenever and wherever human beings endure suffering and humiliation. We must always take sides. Neutrality helps the oppressor, never the victim. Silence encourages the tormentor, never the tormented.

Keeping in mind the wise words of Mr. Wiesel, let us strive to be stewards of justice and righteousness within our own communities and globally. Lest we forget, may we always keep in our thoughts and prayers those affected by the Holocaust and other mass genocides.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Baroness Margaret Thatcher

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sadly, we mark the passing of a truly remarkable woman, one who, in her rise to lead one of the world's great nations, helped to champion responsible government. Of course, I'm referring to the former British Prime Minister, Margaret Thatcher.

Because of her indomitable spirit and strong-willed convictions, she earned the moniker of Iron Lady. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, Baroness Thatcher served as an exemplar of effective leadership and political vision because of her ability to remain steadfast in the face of adversity. She applied that leadership in her incomparable work and in lending her voice to democratic values and economic freedom. Her vision for the United Kingdom propelled its people to a fresh success and prosperity.

Baroness Thatcher was no stranger to controversy. Such is the nature of uncommonly talented and determined public individuals. It cannot be denied that those who are privileged to have served her, whether directly in the United Kingdom or indirectly throughout the Commonwealth and across the globe, have much to be thankful for.

*The text in italics exceeded the time limit and was not read in the House.

Baroness Thatcher served the people of the United Kingdom from 1979 to 1990, a remarkable 11 years. That decade saw the United Kingdom's GDP increase by over 23 per cent and also saw a period of international upheaval. Because of Baroness Thatcher's strong-willed leadership and sense of purpose the United Kingdom and the Commonwealth, indeed the world were able to weather the storm of the transformational period of international relations. Baroness Thatcher's legacy continues to live in today's age. I have every confidence that the Commonwealth will feel the reverberations of one of the U.K.'s most iconic prime ministers well into the future.

I'll read one of her quotes. "Look at a day when you are supremely satisfied at the end. It's not a day when you lounge around doing nothing; it's [a day] when you had everything to do and you've done it." Mr. Speaker, Margaret Thatcher had a lot to do in her life, and she got it done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

FireSmart Program

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the fall of 2012 the regional tri-council of Slave Lake examined the details of a FireSmart plan from the FireSmart Regional Action Team. The goal of the FireSmart plan is to minimize unwanted and harmful effects of wildfire while also recognizing the important ecological role wildfires play in a healthy landscape.

At present FireSmart's plans and accomplishments include vegetation management, also known as fuel modification, equipment purchases as well as some public education. Municipal councillors have received input from constituents expressing concern that certain recovery programs included in the plan have been underfunded and that the $20 million allocated to FireSmart could be distributed more effectively with more educational promotion of what is occurring with the clear-cutting of all the trees and where the funds are spent and why. It has been suggested that a fruitful alternative method of fire prevention and control could be to implement education and incentive programs for private landowners.

A recent survey of high-risk properties found that only 1 per cent had taken steps to reduce vulnerability to wildfire. A program of education and incentive could help to inform and encourage landowners to undertake fuel reduction on their property in order to prevent the accidental spread of wildfires. The active engagement of private landowners has potential to maximize the efficiency of allocated funds and to ensure the success of FireSmart in protecting communities from property damage.

I am encouraged, however, Mr. Speaker, to know that the discussion on the role FireSmart will play in protecting communities against wildfires is ongoing, and I am confident that a transparent and effective program can be implemented with full education data to help all constituents deal with any devastation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Child Poverty

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My Name is Today: this famous poem powerfully expresses the urgency and importance of providing critical opportunities now for the province's poor children. Ninety-one thousand children, including First Nations, today and each day lose ground in their physical and mental health, learning and behaviour problems, and failure to reach their potential as a result of this government's failure to invest in our most valuable resource, our children.

One year ago the Premier promised to end child poverty in five years. It's appropriate, then, to ask: what has happened over this past year? What is the plan? How are we progressing on the now four-year plan? The social policy framework, filled with high-sounding principles, shows no sign that it will be backed up with substantial resources. Yes, people in poverty by definition need more resources: resources for basic needs, for school programs, for nonprofit organizations that provide critical support to our most vulnerable. Many plans have been touted over the years without significant resources or substantial results. Rather, we see every indication of increased burdens of mental illness, learning deficits, and social problems as a result of this mean-spirited short-term financial planning.

Let's talk about the facts proposed in the budget: no increase in supports for independence, in fact a 16 per cent cut in relation to employment supports, a further 18 per cent cut in career development skills, over $80 million in cuts proposed this year. Public education reductions also mean more disadvantaged children will have less chance of success in achieving essential education, social, and life skills. Child care supports: reduced by 7 per cent. Funding to nongovernment organizations reduced, the very organizations that support and enable families and vulnerable children to find stability and a measure of well-being. No increase in FCSS, which provides preventative supports. Far from moving ahead on issues like lunch programs, children and families are not on a livable income.

It's time for the Premier and the Human Services minister to honour their promises and reverse the cuts and provide support for our most vulnerable.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, before we proceed on, I wonder if we could just take a moment and extend our collective congratulations to one of our members, who was first elected on this day back in 2002 and went on to be re-elected in '04, '08, and, I believe, in '12. Of course, I would be referring to the Member for Battle River-Wainwright, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. Congratulations.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview or someone on behalf of.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of 50 submissions from Albertans to the Premier which were received by the office of the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. They call on the Premier to honour her government's promise to Albertans not to evict some of Alberta's most vulnerable citizens from their home in Red Deer's Michener Centre.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. My first is from my friend Mr. Ron Theaker on digital solar heat. His company is avidly working on not only bringing in solar and other mechanisms to reduce our greenhouse gas impacts but also on having viable solutions for the Marthas and Henrys out there in Alberta who want to reduce their emissions as well as provide heating to their houses. He's written a very interesting article. He does need some changes from the government to see that this is incentivized correctly, but in my view it is worth a read, and I have sent a copy to the minister.

My second tabling is from a pharmacist who owns and operates Beacon Pharmacy in my community, Mr. Richard Rego. He's highly concerned about the changes and the nature and scope and the effect they will have on his practice and his ability to provide service to local constituents of Calgary-Buffalo.

My final tabling is from my good friend Ms Dariel Bateman, who has sent me an e-mail in regard to the recent changes to postsecondary institutions in terms of funding as well as, seemingly, the direction of a move to Campus Alberta. In Ms Bateman's view, one that I support, she says that she believes "very strongly that universities do not exist, as their primary function, to be trade schools, and prepare students to be employable and marketable." It is to get them educated.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

3:20

The Speaker: Thank you.

I have Calgary-Mountain View next, but would you mind if we went to the Leader of the Official Opposition quickly? Then we'll come back to you and then Medicine Hat.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I made reference to two documents in my questions today. One is a copy of the ad for the $400,000 ad campaign that the government is doing on pharmacy.

The second is Summary of Changes to the Alberta Drug Benefit List, effective April 1, 2013. I invite all members to take a look at the drugs that are no longer going to be covered as a result of the Health minister's changes to generic drug plans.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Medicine Hat.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have several tablings: eight citizens expressing deep concern about the closure of the Michener Centre, with the appropriate number of copies; a number of individuals and pharmacists writing with great consternation about the dramatic and poorly planned changes to pharmacy operations in the province; and the appropriate number of copies of a press release from the Alberta Federation of Labour entitled Redford Reneges on Farm Worker Safety, failing to enact any legislation in relation to the Occupational Health and Safety Act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It's a letter which I used to present my questions today to the Minister of Health. It was dated April 4, 2013. A copy was sent to the Minister of Health, so I know he has it. Basically, it's commenting on the fact that pharmacies are struggling with the current framework that has been imposed by government and that the changes that they are imposing on pharmacists against what their traditional work used to be are not augmenting or supplementing their income. I have the requisite copies.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? In that case, it's my pleasure to table pursuant to section 5(1) of the Property Rights Advocate Act five copies of the Property Rights Advocate office annual report.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Campbell, Minister of Aboriginal Relations, pursuant to the Metis Settlements Act the Metis Settlements Appeal Tribunal annual report 2012.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I believe we have some points of order to deal with, starting with the hon. Member for Airdrie. Please proceed with your citation and your point of order.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we called four on our side. We can split them into two groups if you want for efficiency's sake.

In the first I would refer to Standing Order 23, in particular (h) and (i), which says that members shall be called to order when they make "allegations against another Member," impute "false or unavowed motives to another Member," or (j) use "abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." This is the third time we've stood on this, and we'll stand continually on your initial ruling on this, which was, after a clarification last time, that the matter had been settled.

It's referring to several references on that side to the Leader of the Official Opposition and perhaps others as being climate change deniers. We have been very clear in this Assembly. We've talked about it many times, and you, of course, did find that the matter had been clarified and settled, but I'm always happy to have the opportunity to clarify once again for the other side so that they know that they have an ally on this and that they know that they don't have to continue to cast false and unavowed motives across the way. This is a good exercise in that regard.

I'll repeat for them and make it very clear that our position is and always has been that our province must take responsible action to reduce our CO<sub>2</sub> emissions. Not only does this make good business sense as our largest customers from around the world are demanding that we do so if we want to continue selling our energy to them, but it is important that we cautiously conserve our resources and planet for ourselves and for future generations.

Although there are billions being spent each year researching, of course, how fast the climate is changing, how much of that change is attributable to mankind, and what we can best do to adapt to that climate change – and that's what the member was referring to in the last election, by the way – there is a general agreement that we should do what we can to reduce our human footprint, whether that be less CO<sub>2</sub> emissions, better water conservation, or better land stewardship. It is also quite settled that CO<sub>2</sub> is a greenhouse gas and that pouring millions of tonnes of it into the atmosphere is likely to have an effect on the climate. Granted, we do not yet fully understand what that affect is or how fast it is affecting us – and, frustratingly, there is a lot of conflicting information in this regard – but that doesn't stop the impetus or end the impetus to act.

Again, Mr. Speaker, this is now the third time you've said that this is settled, that this is clarified. We all know that calling somebody a climate change denier is a very disparaging term. It's been made a disparaging term. Of course, it alludes to other things, other things that have been denied in the past despite their being in front of us and makes it sound like we're denying that CO<sub>2</sub> is a greenhouse gas or denying that we should decrease our CO<sub>2</sub> footprint. That has never been said on this side, and I'm glad we've been able to clarify that for the members opposite. I would ask that they refrain from, in the future, standing up and calling us climate change deniers or anything of the like, and we can start debating policy instead of where our positions are on these things.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is always refreshing to hear the hon. member get up and talk about their new position because during the election, of course, it was clear that the quote from the hon. leader was: “We have always said the science isn’t settled and we need to continue to monitor the debate,” from April 16, 2012. From April 19, 2012: “There is still a debate [in the scientific community]. I will continue to watch the debate in the scientific community.”

The reality, Mr. Speaker, is that the public of Alberta will want to know that, in fact, the hon. members opposite are onside with this government in trying to assure the world that there is no jurisdiction in the world that is more conscious of its environment than this jurisdiction. We’d like to have them onside with that. We’re pleased that they’re saying that. We’re concerned that they continue to say, taking the advice of a nationally known conservative, that they should not let their true feelings be known because it might embarrass them.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this reminded me of some previous – there are no other speakers to this point of order, are there? Very good.

We’ve dealt with this before. In fact, it was most recently dealt with by my Deputy Speaker on March 20, I believe, where the same allegation was being made and the same factual accuracy points were described, and it’s all to do with use of the term “climate change deniers.” Let me say this. Let’s put an end to that term in this House. It’s had its mileage, and it’s been used on this side to some effect. It’s been used on this side to their effect, and it’s just time to move on and get on with some choice of new words. So let that stand as a ruling on that point for now, and I won’t take up more of the House’s time.

I believe, hon. Member for Airdrie, that actually addresses both the points of order you had with respect to this matter.

Mr. Anderson: With respect to that matter. I have one more.

The Speaker: Okay. Let me see now. We’re moving on to another point of order now. On my list that would be the hon. Member for Airdrie again, please.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is again the same citation, 23(h), (i), and (j). There was a very . . .

The Speaker: I’m sorry, hon. member. Just in terms of my own protocol here, I have you down as another point of order with the Minister of Energy, but I believe that’s been addressed just now.

Mr. Anderson: That’s right. That has been addressed.

3:30

The Speaker: In that case, I must go to the next point of order, which factually is the leader of the New Democratic opposition. On his behalf the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to seek some clarification on an issue that the Deputy Premier brought up during an exchange between the leader of the New Democrats and himself. I’m citing the standing orders, section 23(h) and (i) and (j). The Deputy Premier was making comments, and I realize that perhaps he was using a rhetorical flourish in using sort of groups of three to try to aim at all of the opposition here, but in his rhetorical flourish in regard to ourselves, the New Democrats, he I think said something in regard to denying industry. [interjection] Yes. Perhaps he was slipping up on this other card that he was using about carbon or other denials, that he was using before.

The point is that you cannot do so and make these inferences about our policy in regard to the energy industry without, in fact, using some degree of accuracy. We have always been great defenders of our oil and gas industry. Of course, it is the backbone of our economy, where it employs thousands and thousands of people across this province. But we also have made sure that we are stewards of our industry as well and stewards of nonrenewable resources, Mr. Speaker.

The issue that seems to be capturing the attention of the day in regard to our oil and gas industry now, of course, is the export of bitumen across our borders to other jurisdictions, other countries around the world. We have taken a very firm position that we need to ensure that we are upgrading those resources whenever possible to ensure the maximum value of that raw material, to then export that for sale across our country and, indeed, around the world.

This idea of denying industry: I think it’s almost as though when you are trying to pull the wool over one’s eyes, Mr. Speaker, and, in fact, have a policy where you are denying industry, where you are trying to ship the rawest material possible at the cheapest price to another place for them to make that advantage of industry in the United States or in China or wherever that bitumen happens to be upgraded, if you’re trying to perhaps do that, you complain the most loudly about that very thing towards other people.

You can rest assured, Mr. Speaker, that we are very interested in the health of our oil and gas industry, in developing the maximum return for our oil and gas and, in fact, for processing bitumen here in the province of Alberta so that we can take that value-added material and sell it elsewhere across the country and around the world. So this idea of denying industry is completely fabricated. As I say, sometimes you try to yell the loudest when, in fact, you are the one who is guilty of that very same issue.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think perhaps those last comments actually speak the loudest. It’s rather interesting in this House that if you’re on the opposition side asking a question, it’s all right to rephrase government policy in whatever light you might want to make it so that you can raise your question and try and show the government in a bad light, but if government replies and points out some of the inconsistencies in your own policies, in your own direction, in your own speaking, that somehow is a subject that we should debate under standing orders. Actually, clarification of policy can be done outside the House. If people feel that their policies have been mishandled inside the House in a question, I don’t think that’s really a point of order. It could be called a clarification, but it’s really most appropriately called a waste of the House’s time.

What we really should do is recognize the fact – and on all sides of the House perhaps it would be wonderful from a parliamentary perspective – that if the opposition quits twisting government’s policies to make them sound devilish, then government members in responding might quit having to try and respond to that and trying to rephrase what the opposition’s position is.

The Speaker: I don’t see any other speakers.

Let me just go back quickly on this point. At approximately 2:33 p.m. the hon. Minister of Energy said this: "Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's clear this government has a policy of taking direct action to engage citizens, to engage leadership elsewhere. Meanwhile on the other side here we see the NDP is denying industry." And he goes on. I don't know what it is that the minister might have thought the NDP was denying industry, but nonetheless that is what he said.

Now, I should also just remind all members that as Speaker we don't have the power to control what gets said or how it gets said. We are more often in the reactive mode of having to bring members to order if they've said something inappropriate that has violated a rule. In fact, if you go to page 510 of I believe it's House of Commons Procedure and Practice it says:

The Speaker, however, is not responsible for the quality or content of replies to questions. In most instances, when a point of order or a question of privilege has been raised in regard to a response to an oral question, the Speaker has ruled that the matter is a disagreement among Members over the facts surrounding the issue. As such, these matters are more a question of debate and do not constitute a breach of the rules or of privilege.

So we have it again as we've had on many, many occasions. Sometimes we have heard comments about two versions of the same situation having to be accepted by the House because one member saw it one way, another member saw it another, and I think that is probably the case here again.

But I am going to pay even closer attention to how some of the answers are being answered and how some of the questions are being phrased given what both members have just said, one from the ND and one from the government side, because we've got to get a higher level than trying to twist each other's words to suit our particular fancy for that particular day on that particular issue. Surely to heavens we've realized that by now. We're coming up to our first-year anniversary, so I don't consider anyone to be a rookie anymore. This particular matter is not between rookies – I realize that – but a number of other matters have been on this same point.

Let us move on and get on with some of the other important business of the House, and please be reminded to choose words much more carefully going forward.

The hon. Member for Airdrie on your point of order.

Point of Order

Allocation of Office Space for Members

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate those words.

Under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j) I'm referring to a comment that was made by the Infrastructure minister. He said something bizarre. Again, lots of things that are said on the other side I do find bizarre, but I don't rise on a point of order on all of the ones, just the random insults like climate change denier.

In this case there was something that was a little bit troubling, actually. The member accused that the members on this side of the House, the Official Opposition leader were complaining for more space in the office building that we now have. Now, this is troubling for a couple of reasons, Mr. Speaker, and I think you have reason to be concerned about it because I think it's very inappropriate. First of all, of course, we went from four to 17 seats, so I would assume that there would be more space made available. After every election there is a negotiation that is made between House leaders but also headed up by the Clerk and yourself – and I thought you did a very fair job of it – hearing the needs of the different caucuses respective of their new sizes after the election. You make a decision, working back and forth with the caucuses, on what space they should have in the space that's available. If there are concerns, they're raised with you and so forth, and it goes back and forth.

Now, those discussions, Mr. Speaker, as far as I was under the impression, are confidential, and very few people – obviously, the House leaders are aware of them and, obviously, some people in the LAO and yourself, and of course you would keep that confidence. Very few people know about those discussions, and they should be confidential discussions.

So not only was what the member said categorically untrue – well, let's put it this way. Of course we were asking for more office space going from four to 17 members. I guess that goes without saying. But he gave the impression as if we were asking for more than our fair share or something like that. Not only that; he's breaching, in my view, the confidentiality of a discussion that took place between our side, yourself, House leaders, and staff members and in a very inappropriate way. I think that should be held out of order. I think it is clearly a violation of the rules.

To answer that member's question, Mr. Speaker, if he would like us to stay in our current offices in the Annex, we would be more than happy to oblige. More than happy to oblige. Take that back to your leader.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I could make a few comments, and then the minister may add if he wishes to. First of all, let it be perfectly clear that the House leader on this side does not engage in discussions with respect to members' services issues. That's not the House leader's purview on this side, and I have not been involved in negotiations with respect to space or anything else with respect to members' services or the allocation of space to members. I just want to be clear on that.

We do have House leaders' discussions on issues with respect to the operation of the House, and some of those we do in confidence because it's necessary for the operation of the House. I have always expressly said, when someone has tried to draw me into the discussions, that issues around members' salaries, issues around members' space allocations or offices are not the purview of the Government House Leader. I want no part of that. I feel badly for you that you have to engage in that.

The thing that's most important in this is that the point of order comes up in terms of, again, attempts by people to misapprehend what actually happens. We have a federal building that's being redeveloped. That project has been ongoing for years. It's not a plush building for MLA offices. In fact, as the hon. minister has said, it's redeveloping an asset of the province of Alberta for appropriate utilization, an asset which uses up a lot of our financial resources every year to maintain, for no good reason as it's sitting empty, while we have other buildings that are being used and are deteriorating and need refurbishing and cost money.

So a government at one point in time makes a decision to refurbish a federal building, which is an asset of the province, and as part of its allocation to use it as part of the legislative precincts and to use it for offices, a portion of which will be used for offices for MLAs, and the opposition mischaracterizes that consistently as spending $350 million for plush MLA offices. Then they have the temerity to raise a point of order on that very subject when somebody suggests that they were looking for more space and that space would be in that office.

Now, I understand that the point of order is on the question about whether or not they were looking for more space or weren't looking for more space. I think the hon. member has indicated that, yes, they were looking for more space, but it was for a good reason because they had more members. Fine. I understand that. But to get into this discussion on the federal building, to try and suggest that something has been done to their rights as a member under a point of order relative to this debate when they have constantly used that building inappropriately – they've spent the savings from cancelling that project many, many times when, in fact, there wouldn't be any savings from cancelling that project but, rather, costs. I mean, the temerity is bedazzling.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Well, I, too, would like to clarify a few things. [interjections] Hon. members, if I could have your attention, please. I want to clarify a couple of points, too. The issue that the Member for Airdrie raised about confidentiality I want to talk about very briefly. I'm surprised, hon. member, actually, that you would even bring that into the House, to be honest. I can assure you that everything that I have done and, to my knowledge, that the previous Speaker has done with respect to the Annex and with respect to anything else has always been of the highest degree of confidentiality possible, and the same with the Clerk and the same with any of our LAO officials. So let's just put that to rest in case anybody has any concerns only because of it being raised.

I realize you weren't raising an attack, hon. Member for Airdrie. However, just the fact that we were brought into the discussion, the Clerk and I, through your comments, I wanted to clarify that point on confidentiality. It will always remain that way. That's the pledge that I took, and that's the pledge that I will live and die by if necessary.

Secondly, I want to comment on the issue of the apportioning of the space or assigning of the space in the Annex. That is totally the purview of the Speaker. It has nothing to do with the government unless we need renovations done, in which case I then have to go and speak with the Minister of Infrastructure or someone in power in government to say that we need certain renovations done; we need certain alterations made; we need certain improvements made.

That is why I personally made not less than 32 trips to go and visit the space there before the renovation started, during the renovations, and even after to make sure that they were completed to the satisfaction of the various caucuses. I thank you, hon. Member for Airdrie, for pointing out your satisfaction with how that process worked. I did the same with the NDP and the Liberals for a total, as I say, with the Wildrose of about 32 separate visits. I have all the notes from those meetings. We tried our best to deliver on a process that was inherited both by this Speaker and by others who are in decision-making roles.

So let's be clear that assigning the space is the purview of the Speaker. The building itself, however, is owned by the government and by the citizens of this province.

To the point of order raised in that context, I have here a copy of what I think may have led to the point of order. The Minister of Infrastructure stood up in response to the second part of the question, and he said: "Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also find it quite surprising that the members opposite last year were complaining about their offices in the Annex, wanting us to spend more money, that they weren't good enough, Mr. Speaker." In fact, that's true. There were a number of members who complained. It wasn't just opposition members. It was also government members who were complaining. That, I suspect, is one major reason why the major initiative to re-engage the federal building started several years ago.

So we have a massive project that is under way, which is for your benefit, hon. members, so that you will be able to better serve the constituents who sent you here, and similarly for LAO officials and others who will be moving into that space. I only wish it could be accelerated because it would put a stop to the calls that I still continue to receive about inadequacies of the Annex. I can tell you that we have done a great deal in the Speaker's office and in the Clerk's office and with his staff to try and address these issues.

While some clarification is always good, I also don't want to take up too much time making that clarification. Suffice it to say that we've had a chance for the Wildrose member to express his opinions on this and for the Government House Leader to express his, and we are going to move on to other issues.

Were there other points of order?

Okay. So let that clarification stand, and we'll move on.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I believe that there was one more point of order.

The Speaker: I was just asking: was there another point of order?

Mr. Eggen: Yes, sir.

The Speaker: Okay. Then proceed with that, please, quickly.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you.

The Speaker: I don't know what it is, but go ahead.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. Maybe it didn't register.

The last point of order, then. I'll be very brief. In the exchange between the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and the Deputy Premier in regard to advanced education the member from the New Democrat caucus said that the various stakeholders, including the university governors and the president and the professors and the students and others, were not agreeing or were speaking out against both the mandate letter and the cuts that were being imposed upon advanced education in general, to which the advanced education minister, the Deputy Premier, replied that, in fact, he had received letters from some institutions in Alberta that were supporting these cuts.

You know, I just would like to ask, then, that the advanced education minister table those letters. Since he was making a public reference to documents, he should be in all fairness giving us access to those documents as well.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I don't know if you had a citation, but that certainly wouldn't be a point of order. I think what you're asking for is that someone table a document referred to during a speech or debate or discussion or questions or answers. Fair enough. This would not be the place to do that, however. Whoever was listening to that on the government side presumably can respond on behalf of whoever uttered it.

Mr. Hancock: I'd be happy to respond right now, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Please do.

Mr. Hancock: If I was quoting from a document, I would be required to table it, but referring to the fact that one exists does not bring any obligation to table.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: All right. Before we move on to Orders of the Day, I want to draw to your attention something that occurred earlier during question period. I believe it was the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View who quoted from something that had been said outside this House and brought it into this House. I have sent the hon. member a note, and he graciously accepted it.

I would ask you to please visit Erskine May, 24th edition, at page 445. In a nutshell it simply says this: "Expressions are still unparliamentary even when based on a quotation from elsewhere." I did the hon. member a favour. I sent him a copy of that for his own review and edification.

What I want to draw to your attention is this. Hon. members, where does the line stop? Where does the line stop in terms of parliamentary language? If we allow such quotations as what was brought up today to repeat themselves, surely we are bringing disrepute to this House and, in turn, to ourselves and to other members.

Now, again, I'm well aware of how question period works on both sides of the House. Been there; done that. I understand that sometimes members are asked to ask questions that sometimes they may feel uncomfortable with. In fact, I sensed a little bit of that in your question, hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View. I sensed it amongst other members as well. Let me tell you this, hon. members. As individuals who have the right to ask questions during question period, put your own conscience to the test before you accept to ask the question. Ask yourself: would this be a question that you would pose to your child in grade 6? Ask yourself that question, and if you can look in the mirror and honestly say, "Yes, child in grade 6, I'm prepared to use the P-word or the F-word or the S-word or some other word to you," and then you have the courage to bring it into this House, you're a far different human being than am I.

I don't want to ever have to give this speech again, hon. members, because I will cut you off at the knees. Let that admonishment stand. I'm being very sincere about it.

I'm going to give the hon. member, since I gave him the courtesy of the quotation from Erskine May, an opportunity to comment on this important issue.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. It is good to have you back even when you are admonishing me, sir, but it's justifiable. I think what we often do in here is that we don't admit when we've erred, and we find a way to steer around it. Clearly, I shouldn't have said that. I think my reasoning, while not justifying it, was to draw light to the fact that it shouldn't be said anywhere by anybody at any time. I still know it was not right to say it in here, but I was hopefully, although I was very uncomfortable with it, educating, in my view, some people to make them aware of how certain people conduct themselves.

Again, thank you for sending me the sheet. I will certainly be more aware in the future. Thank you for giving me the opportunity to respond. You are correct, sir.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I take that to be your apology for what you said. Is that correct?

Mr. McAllister: Yes. Mr. Speaker, again, you were absolutely correct to point it out. As I said, I said it, and I shouldn't have said it. I withdraw it if that's possible. I would have liked to have seen it done publicly as well by the person that initially said it. I think that would have satisfied us all.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, we'll let that matter stand there. Let that be a lesson to all.

Thank you for your humility in responding the way you have, hon. member.

I believe that concludes our Routine for the day.

Motions for Returns

Public Funding for Private Schools

M6. Mr. Hehr moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all government studies on the impact of reducing public funding to private schools.

[Debate adjourned March 18: Mr. Hancock speaking]

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Human Services, anything that you wish to add?

Mr. Hancock: No, sir.

The Speaker: Then the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo to conclude debate.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As you are aware, during my time in the House I've asked the government from time to time about the appropriateness of funding private schools in this province. I come from, I guess, a background or a philosophy that sees private schools, although having a right to exist, as not having the corresponding right of having public funding automatically follow that private school choice. In my view, private schools tend to separate and divide children on the basis of a couple of things: wealth, religion, and in some other cases on the basis of ability and/or disability. In my view, government should be funding things that tend to bring people together.

Under the Alberta constitution act of 1905 our government has an obligation to fund our separate school system, our public system, and our francophone system. After that it is a political choice this government has made to prop up private schools in the manner that they do. As an interesting note, Mr. Speaker, we are one of only a handful of provinces that fund private schools. Many provinces do not even allow for any flow-through dollars to private schools if they choose to exist. In my view, we'd be better off going down that path.

On that note, oftentimes government members and others in the community suggest that a reason for private school funding is that it is, quote, unquote, a cost savings. They state that because we only fund private schools at 70 per cent of the per-pupil rate that we fund our public school system and there are also not some capital costs that are allowed in this process, it's a savings. Now, frankly, I don't think savings are the reason to do something, especially in this instance. In fact, you know, I believe it's not an argument in and of itself. In my view, if it was an increased expense to have all these private-school children come back to the public system, I believe our society would be better off in the fact that we'd have all children learning together regardless of things like wealth and religion. Or if they made their own choice to go to a private school, their parents would pay the full freight of that. But there's no need for us to encourage that.

It's one of those things where I always question the logic of many members of this House who say immediately: well, the reason why we allow this is because of cost savings. I don't necessarily know if that's true. You know, for instance, who says that if we cut off funding to private schools, 100 per cent of those students will simply return to the public system? In my view, that's not what's going to happen. In fact, I don't see that happening at all.

Let's return to the concept of dividing children on wealth. It will augment my argument on this. You have many schools out there in Alberta, many in Calgary – Strathcona-Tweedsmuir, West Island College, Webber Academy; go down the list – that charge a tuition fee of $15,000 to $20,000 for the privilege of attending these schools. Not to say anything about the fact that the average Martha and Henry cannot send their kids to those schools, why would we, in fact, fund them if they're not open to all Albertans to attend, again separating people on wealth? I'd also point out that the average income of parents of the students going to West Island College is over $280,000 per year. You know, if you take a look at it, those children are not going to return to the public system merely by cutting off the funding that we give to them. So the point is . . . [Mr. Hehr's speaking time expired] I was getting to the point. I'd like that information.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Unfortunately, the time has elapsed, and I'm compelled to call the question.

[Motion for a Return 6 lost]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

The Speaker: Hon. members, I rise just to provide a very brief reminder on the order for private members' bills today. Earlier this session and as the chair advised the Assembly on November 26, 2012, from Hansard at pages 1003, 1004, the chair received a request from the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park requesting early consideration of his private member's bill, Bill 201, for third reading immediately following Committee of the Whole . . . There are still 74 minutes remaining for consideration of [Bill 201] in Committee of the Whole [but] before Committee of the Whole is called, the House must first conclude second reading debate on Bill 202, of which 23 minutes still remain.

Now, if there is any available time remaining for private members' bills this afternoon, then further to the request by the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park the House will proceed to third reading of Bill 201. If there is no time remaining following the bill being reported from Committee of the Whole, then Standing Order 8 requires that third reading of Bill 201 be called first next Monday.

Bill 202 Public Lands (Grasslands Preservation) Amendment Act, 2012

The Speaker: Who is up? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take an opportunity to speak to this. We had a chance one other time. I was approaching the end of the period, so I declined. It's an honour to speak to this bill and primarily because some portions of the bill specifically are addressed to the special areas, which are a great part of my constituency, and are causing great consternation amongst the constituents of that constituency and of the special areas.

We've seen this government make many ill-informed and rash decisions regarding land-use regulation, and this is causing my constituents a lot of lost sleep and further red tape and regulation. Legislation like Bill 36, the Land Stewardship Act, centralized decision-making on land-use planning, and this continues to be another example of more of this regulation that's being brought forward. I've spoken to the member bringing the legislation forward, and I believe that he brings it forward with good intention, but it's brought forward in a fashion that seems to be heavy handed to the residents of the area and would reduce our competitive advantage.

Under Bill 202 individuals and firms must now wait for the government to clear more red tape, and it is unclear how the bill will create any increased oversight over the management of our grasslands or improve the environment. In fact, the member bringing the bill forward did meet with people of the special areas, and their consternation was expressed directly to the member. There is already proper grassland/rangeland management in the area, and this is already being self-motivated by the ranchers, who have been stewards of this property for many years, both leased land and private deeded land in the area.

My family, Mr. Speaker, is also one of those families who has managed this grassland and this private property for generations. I'm one of the third generation of that area. There is sustainable range management of these Crown grazing leases in place. I and the members of the area believe the people of the area, the lessees and the owners of the titled land, are handling it properly.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The bill in its current format is an amendment to the Public Lands Act that adds a section concerning dispositions and grants of Crown lands south of highway 16, including areas specified in the Special Areas Act. Personally, I am unclear exactly how the governance of this bill could possibly work, especially in the areas already identified under the Special Areas Act. This would create a more convoluted system of governance.

Within Bill 202 we see that the definitions of the terms "grass" and "significant wildlife habitat" are rather vague and open to a great number of interpretations, therefore leading to definitions that may be brought forward not by policy but by regulation, Mr. Speaker. How can we be sure that ranchers are not going to be unnecessarily affected by overzealous bureaucrats who don't understand the lighter footprint of grazing? That is creating some of the consternation that's been brought forward to the member.

If the intended goal of this bill was to make a long-term plan to ensure we don't sell too much grassland to be turned into cropland, that would be fine, but this is a whole new set of hoops that ranchers and energy companies will have to jump through for their businesses, and the government has provided no evidence that the grasslands are even being degraded under the current system. That's a concern that we have, and the constituents of the area have a concern on that.

It's important, in my opinion and in those of my constituents, Mr. Speaker, that we don't need new laws for the sake of simply having new laws. I believe my constituents believe that is the case. Landowners adjacent to Crown land who perhaps rely on grazing leases as part of the value of the ranches will see their operations devalued as a result of this step. Now, we understand that there is good intention – and I brought that forward before – but that is not the case. Some of these residents have even taken the drastic step of selling and disposing of their lease land prior to the potential invocation of bills like this.

Like the aforementioned Bill 36, Bill 202 gives cabinet sweeping new powers on how to define criteria for wildlife habitat. Giving cabinet this type of power is wrong, and it eliminates the need for cabinet to consult with the businesses, landowners, and ranchers who could be impacted by any decision. It's not clear who will be footing the bill for all this added monitoring and study that will go into the assessments of our grasslands, grasslands that Alberta ranchers have done for a number of years, more than a hundred.

Ultimately, this bill, my constituents and many in the area believe, is an unnecessary new law that will only add new burdens on Alberta businesses and will do little to improve the Alberta environment and will create a convoluted system of governance. Mr. Speaker, I stand therefore with my opinion and do not support this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise, in fact, to support this private member's bill, and I thank very much the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill for bringing it forward. I think it's an idea whose time has come, and in fact I think it has a unique opportunity to not only protect a valuable part of our Alberta natural heritage but also to protect the use of this land through agriculture and other means as well. It strikes a nice balance. You know, it's looking at something that's perhaps the least protected of our natural land here in the province of Alberta.

This is an amendment, Mr. Speaker, to the Public Lands Act, and it does require a wildlife habitat assessment to be completed prior to the disposition of a grant of public grasslands. Then if this assessment determines that the public grassland contains significant wildlife habitat, no disposition of the grants shall be made. As a condition of the grant the purchaser transfers privately owned grassland to the Crown.

You know, we do do several assessments by the provincial government before any sale, but at this time, Mr. Speaker, there are not any requirements for making the assessment public or for receiving public input. This bill seeks to require these assessments to be put through a 90-day public consultation period. It seems like a good idea, and in fact we have determined that we do support the concept, and we wish that we will see everyone, or at least the majority, agreeing with that as much as possible.

The bill gives cabinet the authority to make regulations establishing this criteria for determining whether a wildlife habitat is deemed to be a significant wildlife habitat and also gives cabinet the authority to determine the manner in which an assessment is done. Therefore, we don't perhaps know what meaning or force will be given to the term "significant wildlife habitat," but, you know, this bill is politically, I think, very interesting and gives us a chance to determine what that definition might in fact be.

Two things I would like to highlight. First of all, I find it a bit funny why there's not unanimity amongst the government on this particular private bill. You know, I don't see why they don't see the need for wildlife assessment reports to determine if a section of public grasslands contains significant wildlife habitat. It's not as though we are asking for the world here; it's just simply a sober second look at potentially a significant habitat for grasslands. I just wonder if denying public consultation and public access to government information is, in fact, sound and transparent public policy. I find that to be a bit disturbing as well. It's not as though we're getting in the way of the established process by which this land is used, but it's just a question of being able to look at it and have that transparency available to the public.

I thank the member for bringing this forward. It's a modest proposal, I would dare say. In fact, it gives us an opportunity to protect rare and vanishing natural lands without necessarily putting a big fence around it and saying that we're not going to use this land, just to have appropriate stewardship and transparency to ensure that the land is being used in a reasonable sort of way.

Some of these grassland areas are some of the most beautiful and wild places we have in this province. I would venture to say, Mr. Speaker, that these lands do help to define not just the ecosystem of the grasslands but part of the character of our province as a whole. The vast open spaces and the potential that those spaces do create in the imaginations of people who live there and visit these places I think is partially why we should have greater degrees of preservation available to our natural prairie. Many other places across the Great Plains, which extend through Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba right down through the central and western United States, have been altered forever. This opportunity for us to preserve part of that heritage that we have jurisdiction over is not only prudent but responsible and the right thing to do.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, I noticed that you rose, but you have already spoken, so I have to recognize another member that hasn't spoken. You can't speak again. This is still second reading. You've already spoken once, so you'll have to wait for the next process on the bill.

Are there others that would like to speak? Seeing none, I'll recognize the mover, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, to close debate.

Dr. Brown: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank those members who contributed to the debate today and also so many months ago. I would like to respond to some specific comments of the Leader of the Official Opposition and the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, both of whom inferred that Bill 202 would in some way affect the way that public lands are managed. This inference is false. The bill would only come into play when public grasslands are proposed to be sold. It would have no impact on the ongoing management of grazing leases or permits. The amendments which I tabled made that abundantly clear.

Bill 202 would recognize the important role of grazing leaseholders in maintaining the integrity of native grasslands. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition also apparently misheard me in reference to poorly managed grasslands. I never inferred that grazing leaseholders badly manage the land. In fact, what I referred to was some grasslands which have been made into parks and which don't have the benefit of any intervention of grazing and therefore have suffered habitat deterioration as a result. I am in fact a strong supporter of the management program which has been put in place for the new Glenbow Ranch provincial park, which incorporates cattle grazing as a key tool in preserving the native grasslands. I would argue that the long-term grazing lease makes it imperative that the grazing leaseholders take good care of the range as it's in their interest to do so.

Mr. Speaker, a number of members suggested that Bill 202 is redundant to the existing practices and it wasn't required to protect sensitive public grasslands. However, I would ask: if it was redundant, then why weren't the three assessments done for the government on the so-called Potatogate lands near Bow Island made public? All three of those assessments found that 16,000 acres of Crown grassland proposed for sale were environmentally sensitive and contained important wildlife habitat. Their recommendations were that the land not be sold and it be retained as a grazing reserve, yet the best objective assessments and scientific advice were all ignored, advice which was only made public after the fact under freedom of information and a request thereunder.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition says that her party would be in support of closing the loopholes to prevent another Potatogate situation arising again, and I would suggest that Bill 202 will go a long way to doing just that.

On the issue of redundancy I'd also note that the regional advisory committee for the South Saskatchewan regional plan has recommended that the province retain in public ownership those Crown native grasslands which are environmentally significant or which contain significant wildlife habitat, and that is exactly what Bill 202 would encourage.

Mr. Speaker, members of the Legislature who are not members of Executive Council are properly known as private members, of which I am one. As elected private members we have certain parliamentary privileges which are not available to those on Executive Council, who technically form the government of Alberta. Those privileges include the right to criticize the government, to hold the government to account, to ask questions of the cabinet during question period, and to sit on all-party committees of the Legislature. One of the most important privileges that we have is the privilege of bringing before the House for public debate motions or bills. Only a few win the lottery. I'm thankful for the opportunity to finally be able to debate my first bill after eight years in the House.

Mr. Speaker, the process for the sale of public land and particularly of our disappearing native grasslands is presently inadequate. It needs to be improved. I believe that there needs to be better transparency and better accountability to the citizens of Alberta when our public grasslands are proposed for sale. Bill 202 would do that. So I ask those members who support transparency and accountability in government to support Bill 202.

I'm under no illusions as to the prospects of success. However, regardless of the outcome of the vote on second reading, it's my sincere hope that Bill 202 will have made members of the Assembly and the public at large more aware of the need to preserve our publicly owned native grasslands as a precious yet vanishing part of Alberta's landscape and of the need to modernize and improve the process for the sale of public lands.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading lost]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

Bill 201 Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Identification Act

The Chair: Hon. members, there are a total of 74 minutes of debate remaining in committee. Amendment A2 is on the floor.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A2 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:34 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, we have a division on the vote on amendment A2. Just for the record and maybe for your recollection, amendment A2 was moved November 19, 2012, and it has two parts. In part A section 3 is amended by striking out subsections (5) and (6), and in part B section 8 is amended by striking out clause (e). That is the substance of amendment A2, on which we do have a division.

For the motion:

Anderson	Eggen	Saskiw
Anglin	Fox	Stier
Barnes	McAllister	Strankman

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: Now we're back to the main bill. Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. On behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Centre I'd like to present an amendment to Bill 201, and I can circulate it.

The Chair: The pages will circulate that. We'll just pause for a couple of minutes to get that in the hands of the members, hon. member.

This will be amendment A3.

Hon. member, you might as well start speaking to it. I'm sure the members will catch up with the reading.

Dr. Swann: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre was very passionate about the need for a term limit for this information to be made public on these individuals who are involved with the scrap metal industry and providing the materials for sale, that there should be a term limit on this rather important personal information that will now be made public. I'll read it as it's worded.

Ms Blakeman to move that Bill 201, Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Identification Act, be amended in section 3 by striking out subsection (4) and substituting the following:

(4) A scrap metal dealer or recycler shall maintain the prescribed information obtained pursuant to the section for a period not to exceed one year after the transaction.

This is intended to protect the confidentiality of individuals who have given their personal information and, therefore, not make it available for an undue period of time in which their privacy might be breached and other nefarious uses made of private information. The Member for Edmonton-Centre is particularly concerned about privacy and feels this is an unnecessary intrusion and a potential risk to people's individual privacy and personal protection. So that's the basis for this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Is there anyone that would like to speak to the amendment? I'll recognize the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I thank the Member for Edmonton-Centre for bringing this forward. I've had some discussions with law enforcement about this and about what they really need and what they don't need. I think that in the interest of protecting the private information of individuals, this bill will still do what it's intended to do with this one-year restriction. So I'll be supporting this amendment, and I would encourage all members to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others that want to speak to the amendment? The Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just want to clarify. In your remarks there you said that the information was public. It isn't public. It's restricted to certain people. I certainly support your amendment, but it is not public information. I just want to clarify that. It's for restricted users of that data, which includes the metal recyclers and law enforcement themselves.

The Chair: Are there others? I'll recognize the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Just very briefly, I will be supporting this amendment. I just wanted to get it on the record that this amendment only deals with the scrap metal dealers and recyclers, which would restrict them to one year for keeping that information. In the event that there is a prosecution, it would be handed over to the police and the Crown prosecutors. That would not apply to them.

The Chair: Thank you. Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A3.

[Motion on amendment A3 carried]

The Chair: Back to the bill as amended. Are there other speakers on the bill?

Seeing none, would you like to close debate, hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, or would you just like to call the question?

Mr. Quest: I think we should just call the question, Mr. Chair.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 201 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? So ordered.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, I'd move that the committee rise and report Bill 201.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 201. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 201 Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Identification Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to all members for your support for this bill to this point. It has been a very long journey for Bill 201, and I think that in the interests of keeping that journey as short as possible, I would like you to call the question for third reading of Bill 201.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the time it wouldn't be prudent to move on to another bill at this time, so I would ask for unanimous consent to call it 5 o'clock and move on to motions.

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Alberta Land Stewardship Act

507. Mr. Stier moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation to repeal the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, formerly known as Bill 36, and replace it with a land-use framework that better protects the rights of landowners and respects the role of locally elected and accountable municipal councils.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and good afternoon, everyone. In 2009 the government of Alberta passed the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, formerly known as Bill 36, and then the floodgates opened. North, south, east, and west, Albertans were furious with this government's implementation of an eastern European style of central planning model, the assault on property rights, and the throwing overboard of the rule of law. Property rights, the rule of law, and respect for local land-use decision-making are the bedrock upon which Alberta's economy and communities are based. Bill 36 attacked them all.

Property rights and limits on the power of government, which constitute the rule of law, predate the founding of this province, going back some 800 years in the foundational document the Magna Carta. Albertans were rightly alarmed at the sudden shift to be taken by this government and its willingness to disregard our common heritage, the foundations of our market-driven economy and, at the same time, the government's failure to provide an effective model for land-use planning.

The government knew it had to do something to calm the waters, so in 2011 it drafted and passed Bill 10, which amended some of the more egregious sections of the Alberta Land Stewardship Act but left the worst sections and the central planning model intact. Bill 10 did not provide comfort to landowners across the province, who know, as historians and economists do, that central planning does not work, nor do government laws that assault property rights and the rule of law. With the lower Athabasca regional plan having already been approved, the south Saskatchewan regional plan is in progress and is poised to affect even more Albertans as there is far more private land in the south.

Today I'm proposing Motion 507, therefore, to repeal the Alberta Land Stewardship Act and develop a new and more effective – and I stress that – and respectful land-use planning approach for the province. I respectfully ask the Assembly to hear the reasoning for this motion and to please vote in favour.

The government has wasted significant tax dollars on the Land Stewardship Act, and it is understandable that the government will feel it needs to resist changing course. But when you make a mistake, the right thing to do is to fix it. As I will demonstrate today, repealing the Alberta Land Stewardship Act and replacing it with a more effective and respectful land-use plan is critical to avoid the economic harm that will result from this central planning model and for regaining the trust of rural Albertans, resource industries, municipalities, environmentally concerned citizens, and the province as a whole.

When it passed, Bill 36 ended landowners' and resource companies' rights to have access to the courts to challenge government decisions that affected their legal rights and economic interests. The act explicitly denied compensation when cabinet decides to rescind water licences, gravel permits, feedlot approvals, environmental approvals, and other statutory consents that are essential for farmers and businesses to operate in our economy. Because they classify the decisions made in their regional plans as policy, there is no right to appeal the decisions that they can make to the courts.

Bill 10 removed the legal wording that said that cabinet could extinguish land titles, but it did nothing to change the top-down central planning philosophy nor the provisions which assault property rights and the rule of law. In short, Albertans are still left, therefore, with legislation which essentially robs them of access to appeal to the courts and of their traditional rights as landowners and resource users.

The Land Stewardship Act even as amended by Bill 10 not only pushes municipal authorities aside; it utterly undermines their authority and local democracy. Not only does it direct municipal councils to rewrite their bylaws to suit the minister's whims; it makes provisions for the minister to withhold monetary transfers to municipalities or to rewrite their municipal bylaws directly if the cabinet is not satisfied that the municipal council has complied with cabinet's edicts.

This sure sounds like bullying to me, not responsible government or responsible land-use planning. It shows the kind of disdain this government has for local decision-making and raises the question of why this government has so suddenly turned its back on the traditional values of this province and the foundational principles of our market economy.

Motion 507, though, will treat councils as partners and enable them to act in the best interests of their constituents. In 2011 the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties released a report on the impacts of forced regionalization which defines forced regionalization as "any form of regionalization that is not voluntary and where the explicit or implicit threat of imposed regionalization exists." This government's central planning model and the regional plans through which cabinet will be imposing its will on all Albertans and their local governments are certainly not voluntary and are being imposed on municipalities and their residents from above.

Motion 507 would reinstate local decision-making, protect municipalities from the whims and edicts of cabinet's forced regionalization, and take away the threat of withholding funding if a local decision does not conform to a provincial dictate. Certainly, every MLA in this Assembly knows their local councils would be happy to have their land-use planning powers and local democracy restored.

As written, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act causes economic uncertainty. The government of Alberta rescinded 19 oil sands leases in the lower Athabasca regional plan. Investors and industries need to trust that the government won't suddenly reverse course and confiscate their land or rescind leases after these companies have spent their time and money developing projects in Alberta. Bill 36 gave cabinet new powers to rescind without cause the licences and permits that make our economic wheels turn; for instance, pipeline permits, oil refinery approvals, coal mine permits, oil sands leases, timber licences, forest management agreements, grazing leases, gravel extraction permits, mineral leases. The list goes on.

Previously, forestry companies, investors, and bankers could reduce their investment risk with the knowledge that the Forests Act limited the circumstances in which government could cancel or rescind a timber permit, licence, or forest management agreement. As the report from the Alberta Landowners Council into the economic impacts of Bill 36 indicates, the Forests Act “allowed investment . . . to take place with a reasonable degree of certainty that there was security of tenure in the timber harvest rights and that the timber harvest rights were enforceable and had value.” Now cabinet doesn’t have to abide by the Forests Act in the sense that there are prescribed situations in which permits can be rescinded. This power to rescind extends to every sector of the economy, whether it is permits, grazing lands, or oil production. It’s easy to see how this could cause some of our economic movers in Alberta to be very concerned, therefore.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, before Bill 36 Albertans enjoyed traditional property rights that prevented government from overpowering and bullying landowners without recourse to the courts and full and fair compensation. The Alberta farmers and ranchers and business owners became world leaders in their different industries based on those age-old understandings that their property rights would be protected. Bill 36 has not only threatened their rights; it has put the Alberta economy at risk by undermining the historic understanding our producers have had with government. This type of centralized decision-making has made it extremely difficult for landowners to invest in their property with any confidence.

Motion 507 would repeal Bill 36 and propose the development of an alternative land-use planning model that respects local autonomy, protects property rights, safeguards the environment, and rewards regional co-operation. Land-use planning by locally elected municipal officials and voluntary co-operation between communities is a very healthy practice and will be encouraged by Motion 507.

In the report mentioned earlier, the Association of Municipal Districts and Counties recommends co-operative regionalization, defined as voluntary participation of municipalities. Co-operative regionalization recognizes the political autonomy of municipalities and their right to remain independent. Motion 507 supports that concept. It’s time to end the economic uncertainty caused by the Land Stewardship Act and to move forward with a real plan for responsible land-use planning that will safeguard our environment without harming the economy. Motion 507 is a step in the right direction, and I urge all members of this Assembly to support this motion. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I’ll recognize the hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to say thank you to the Member for Livingstone-Macleod for bringing this motion. I want to just make a few comments specifically to some histories that have been said across the floor here. It appears that there have been a lot of cases where people get really upset with politicians that say one thing and do another, especially during election time.

I remember that back a few years ago, on May 14, 2009, the Member for Airdrie spoke at length in this House and in the media in support of the Land Stewardship Act. He’s saying now that he’s changed his mind. I can accept the fact that he’s changed his mind. That’s fine. I viewed something on YouTube, though, that’s got over 1,500 hits, so it is a bit of a hit.

Even more questionable, though, is that the Member for Livingstone-Macleod’s first motion as a private member is to repeal the Land Stewardship Act when in his constituency he did make a few comments on April 14, not even a year ago. In fact, he said that there are wonderful things in the new Land Stewardship Act and that it, quote, reflects the thoughts of all people who worked hard on this document since 2006 and that the Land Stewardship Act does, quote, wonderful things that protect clean air, clean water, clean land, and all great and wonderful things. I’m not sure if he has changed his mind from that, but those were his comments on April 14, 2012.

Now, of course, today, Mr. Speaker, he wants to repeal the Land Stewardship Act in its entirety. What we see from this opposition is: saying something to one crowd, and then saying something else to another audience. This has been very prevalent on the whole issue of property rights, which they seem to care about so much, and I take them at their word on that. I have to wonder why the Wildrose continues to flip-flop, to say one thing, then say another in terms of property rights. Is it a hidden agenda? Is the fact that we just can’t trust this opposition?

Just last week the Leader of the Opposition was quoted in the Bow Island Commentator – and I do have family in Bow Island – saying that the government needs to restore compensation and the right of appeal of landowners. Well, Mr. Speaker, we’ve never taken it away, and we never will.

The fact of the matter is that the Wildrose scare campaign has been very profitable for them. I’m not quoting myself here. I’m quoting from the Edmonton Journal, August 14, 2011, page A3, in which the Leader of the Opposition indicates that “her party contributed $15,000 to the group that supports [Keith] Wilson, Landowners Against Bills,” to help them with costs. Isn’t that interesting, Mr. Speaker? Of course, I’ll table those documents tomorrow.

Now, according to the documents submitted to the Chief Electoral Officer, the Wildrose received thousands of dollars in return from individuals involved in these groups. While this government was listening to real concerns of landowners, Mr. Speaker, which include access to water, preservation of agricultural lands, ensuring fair and timely compensation for any expropriation, the opposition was out on a wild tour raking in money from hard-working landowners.

The good news is that despite the opposition’s fearmongering on things that are not true, Alberta and Canada are internationally recognized for their strong property rights protection. It was made evident in an independent report by the Frontier Centre for Public Policy, a group not associated with this government, fully independent. The Frontier Centre for Public Policy along with the international Property Rights Alliance released in 2012 the international property rights index, which ranked all countries based on three areas: the legal and political environment as it relates to judicial independence, rule of law, political stability, and degree of corruption; physical property rights; and intellectual property rights. This study concluded that Canada is the highest-ranking country in the western hemisphere and is seen as a model of stability in terms of property rights.

The Frontier Centre also measures property rights protection at the provincial and territorial levels. It released on March 14 of this year, Mr. Speaker, a Canadian property rights index. Its conclusion was very positive for Alberta and Alberta property rights owners. It ranked Alberta as having the second-strongest property rights among the provinces, second only to Nova Scotia.

Even more interesting is how we ranked in terms of expropriation of property. As the Wildrose is scaring landowners into believing that their land will be confiscated like in a communist country, independent reports determine quite the opposite, Mr. Speaker. Alberta ranked number one in terms of rights of landowners during expropriation. This is something we can be proud of. That is because this government recognizes and guarantees through legislative means that when there is any expropriation of land for public processes, landowners are fairly compensated for their loss. This is of particular interest to me, of course, because I have represented in my past life a property rights organization, which I won't name because it's inappropriate to name past clients.

In fact, the Expropriation Act, which governs expropriation of land in Alberta, guarantees compensation for expropriated land. It would be beneficial for the so-called lawyers across the way to learn how to read legislation and understand that they can't pull one line out from one piece of legislation and use it simply as a fundraising ploy, Mr. Speaker.

In terms of the Alberta Land Stewardship Act I would suggest that the Member for Livingstone-Macleod has a lot of explaining to do to his constituents. I would suggest that the least he could do is apologize for telling his constituents one thing when running for MLA and then standing in the House today and saying something else. Perhaps he's changed his mind like the Member for Airdrie. Everybody changes their mind now and then, but the least they can do is to just indicate that they've changed their mind.

It's time the opposition gets real and starts being honest with Albertans, starts advocating for real property rights, and helps us ensure that we continue to enjoy the best property rights not only in Canada, Mr. Speaker, but in the western world.

Thank you.

5:10

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sometimes, you know, you just can't get it right. You end up getting it from both sides. While we have the Official Opposition here with some concerns in regard to the Land Stewardship Act in regard to property rights, I would say as well that there are serious, grievous problems with the Land Stewardship Act in regard to environmental protection and being able to make a defence of different pieces of land in different areas in regard to environmental breaches.

This government goes out of their way to make it so easy for industry and for individuals to use land. Without proper environmental consultation this Land Stewardship Act just exacerbates this problem and causes more problems in regard to our ability to defend the environment and to have a proper environmental assessment, which not only affects the land but also affects how we are perceived sometimes internationally when we're trying to make energy deals and so forth. I certainly do support motion 507, and I thank the member for bringing it forward.

You know, sometimes you're going to get it both ways, Mr. Speaker. You're going to get it from the right, and you're going to get it from left, and in between you're going to get squeezed just like a pimple. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency, and Transformation.

Mr. Scott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today to speak to Motion 507, the goal of which is to urge the government to introduce legislation that would repeal the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, formerly known as Bill 36. This motion proposes that the government replace the act with a land-use framework, that the hon. member believes would better protect the rights of landowners as well as the rights of municipal bodies.

I feel the need to say at the outset, Mr. Speaker, that the proposed motion would not accomplish this goal. This is because we live in a province that leads the country as well as North America in protecting property rights. The access to courts and the right to compensation available to Alberta property owners is unmatched. No other jurisdiction in Canada enshrines and protects property rights to the extent that Alberta does, and this protection is connected to the great economic success we have enjoyed and continue to enjoy. It has helped us to open new markets and build meaningful, mutually beneficial relationships with many individuals, businesses, provinces, countries, and organizations.

Because this government puts building Alberta at the forefront of its priorities, it is engaged in rigorous consultations with Albertans in order to tailor property rights protection to the needs of landowners. The Alberta Land Stewardship Act, that the hon. member would have the government repeal, was shaped by these consultations. The act as it currently stands is a product of Albertans, their input and their needs.

It is important that this House understand the process behind the consultations which have made Alberta such a bastion of property rights. Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act is the authority for regional plans for each of the seven regions identified in the land-use framework. The Alberta Land Stewardship Act creates conservation and stewardship tools to protect natural heritage sites and landscapes. It also includes related amendments to more than 25 legislative acts to support regional planning in the province. Section 5 of the Alberta Land Stewardship Act states that before a regional plan is made or amended, the minister must ensure that appropriate public consultation is carried out and that the findings of such consultations must be provided in a report to the Executive Council.

The Alberta Land Stewardship Act's effectiveness at protecting and upholding the property rights of Albertans is attributable to this government's three-part commitment to consultations, an explicit compensation model, and access to the courts for all property owners. This government has taken action in all three of these areas.

A Property Rights Task Force was established on November 24, 2011. The objective of this task force was to consult with Albertans on the approach that they would like to see taken regarding property rights in our province. Stakeholder meetings took place throughout December 2011, with open houses taking place in various communities throughout January 2012. Ten province-wide community sessions were held. All of these sessions were open to the public so as to encourage stakeholders to attend and make their needs and concerns known. Over a thousand people attended these meetings, yielding invaluable input.

Two other key stakeholder meetings were also held, one of which was in Leduc, the other in Airdrie. At these two meetings 26 key stakeholders were able to provide crucial insight into the issues surrounding property rights. These consultations reflect this government's intention to continue to be consistent, predictable, and timely in this process, as we always have been. More importantly, Mr. Speaker, the process of engaging in these consultations meant that the voices of Albertans were heard loud and clear by this government. The long-term results will be invaluable as well.

Because Alberta is the most steadfast protector of property rights in Canada, we have been able to leverage this reputation to encourage investment and expand our markets as businesses and new residents flock to the province. This tradition of reliable consultations has been integral to building Alberta, and it is something we are committed to continuing well into the future. From this, Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the Alberta Land Stewardship Act is based upon meaningful consultations and the will of Albertans. It is even more clear that property rights in Alberta are protected to an unrivaled degree.

For these reasons, I cannot support this motion, and I urge all hon. members to follow suit. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Member for Calgary-Mountain View, did you wish to speak?

Dr. Swann: Yes. I'll make a few brief comments, Mr. Speaker. I rise in opposition to this motion. I think we've made some progress in this province in relation to some land-use planning. It's not a perfect document, Bill 36. I was involved in debating it. There are some areas that could be strengthened in terms of an appeal process and a clear public compensation review. But, to me, it is going to ensure that we have some kind of larger plan for this province and that we are not going to have continued conflicts over activities, the abuse of agricultural land when it's bought up for other industries and paved over without a long-term plan that actually protects agricultural land, protects conservation areas, and ensures that we manage our water and our transportation corridors in a responsible way.

It's at least progress. I see this not as a perfect bill, but it's progress. There are checks and balances on how government can impose these plans, plans which, by the way, in the different river systems are thoughtfully debated and discussed by residents and constituents. I would very much hate to see all the good work and the planning that has gone in across this province thrown out. It is an essential part of a provincial government's responsibility to help us set some limits, set some parameters around how we're going to develop this province, how we're going to protect those particular areas that need protecting, allow industry in certain areas, ensure that we have species protection in some of the areas with ecosystem protection.

Already there is a scramble for development on some of these lands because there is no designated plan. We are going to see even more potential destruction of limited habitat and failure to protect conservation areas, failure to protect animal habitat because of the stalemate. This has been stalled for three years. It's time to move forward, provide some support for this land-use framework, and, yes, challenge some of the checks and balances that need to be strengthened.

Do not throw out this whole bill, which has gone through a lot of important processes, debates, and support out in some of the regions of the province where people have already developed land-use plans that are at least going to move us a step forward from the free-for-all. A free-for-all is what we've had in this province for decades. It cannot continue. As soon as possible we have to implement the land-use framework, and this is not going to bode well if we make any attempts to repeal it.

I will not be supporting this motion.

5:20

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in support of Motion 507 for a number of reasons. First of all, back to the beginning: the importance of property rights. I read somewhere where it stated that property rights is where individuals' rights and responsibilities begin and society's and government's rights end, the opportunity to know clearly where government can be involved, should be involved, and is not welcome to be involved and also on the value of property rights, past just real property, from the economic advantage.

I spoke in this House in the past about some of the fifth- and sixth-generation ranchers in my constituency that have been tremendous stewards of the land, on lease land and on deeded land, for many, many generations. I spoke about how the value can be accrued and increased from situations where different types of leases, different types of property rights accrue and can be sold. I spoke of how Walmart bought some leases from Target and Zellers for over a billion dollars, that as a society we were able to tax and applaud these individuals building their wealth.

I also want to talk about how it touches on the Alberta advantage. The importance of property rights, the importance of being a clear jurisdiction with the best property rights, can go a long, long way. We're very, very blessed in Alberta with our royalties, our oil and gas and our other natural resources. With the recent passing of a great leader, Premier Klein, we're reminded that he had to make some serious changes to protect from some of the mistakes that had been made. At a time when we're revisiting deficit and debt, we're still as a province being reminded by independent agencies like CFIB that we haven't done the best job of eliminating red tape, that we're possibly looking at tax increases to amend the situation. A certain situation where Alberta is a leader in property rights is only – only – going to help us stay competitive, create jobs and wealth for all of our citizens.

I'm not the only one that shares in that belief. I wish to quote our Minister of Municipal Affairs from August 20, 2011, in a debate for the PC leadership, after Bill 10 had been passed. Of course, Bill 10 was the bill that was struck to fix some of the errors that bills 36, 24, 19, and 50 had made and the huge, huge uproar of many Alberta citizens: what we need in this province is a blue ribbon panel of land experts and landowners to come up with some recommendation on how those four pieces of legislation need to be fixed and also come up with recommendations on how we can resolve this property rights issue once and for all. The most interesting part of the quote to me: because you cannot have a good democracy and you do not have a strong economy without security of property rights.

Now, here are some interesting things that I've noticed about how many, many Albertans feel about how secure our property rights are. Four hundred and forty thousand Albertans voted for the Wildrose in the election, many of them because of our stance on property rights. As our critic for sustainable resource development said a short time ago, over 9,000 Albertans affected by the South Saskatchewan River basin have signed a petition asking for that to be reviewed.

I've been to four or five meetings in Cypress-Medicine Hat over the last two years where between 200 and 250 constituents and Albertans have stood up and expressed concern, sometimes very, very serious in its nature, as to the way these bills were written, the way these bills are written. I believe I heard an hon. member from the other side say something about single words, single sentences in these bills. Well, when the single sentences say something like not getting access to the Expropriation Act or due process, of course it's very, very alarming.

I was at a meeting before the election at the Cypress Centre with politicians and candidates and MLAs of all stripes, where the government moderator from Stantec ended the meeting by standing up and saying, again to this meeting of 250 people: "We have heard you loud and clear. We promise to listen. We have heard you loud and clear. You have said to repeal bills 36, 19, 24, and 50." Funny that we still have it.

I don't believe it's a difference of opinion, but let's say that it is. Here is something that the Premier said the same night, August 20, 2011. I quote: got to protect property rights; have to understand none of this legislation works if Albertans aren't behind it; if this legislation isn't reflecting what Albertans want, then government needs to amend legislation. So Bill 19: owners have to be able to trigger expropriation. Bill 36: suspend it until we amend it to deal with compensation, consultation, and access to the courts. I guess it's impossible to know what somebody really meant when they said these words, but it appears that Albertans aren't behind it. Nine thousand on a petition, 440,000 that voted for Wildrose, hundreds in rooms asking for these bills to be repealed: that sounds like not behind it to me.

One more quote from that debate that's interesting. Back to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. People don't trust the PC government because the government hasn't admitted for quite some time when it has made a mistake. I was around when the Premier used to say, "I screwed up," and people used to smile and laugh and say, "Go fix it," and they did. But we have not for the last few years been willing to admit that we have made a mistake, and there are mistakes in those pieces of legislation. I would ask the government and, again, in my support of Motion 507: smile and laugh, and go fix it.

The Deputy Speaker: I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to participate in the discussion on Motion 507. The motion urges the government to repeal and replace the Alberta Land Stewardship Act in order to protect the role of locally elected and accountable municipal councils. This proposed motion would be a redundant piece of legislation as we already have well-designed laws in place to effectively guide and address the issues of land-use planning. This motion suggests that there needs to be a change in the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act. However, the legislation that is currently in place already respects the authority and role of municipalities in the land-use process. Through the act the government co-ordinates rather than prescribes land-use decisions made among others by municipal governments. Why would the opposition want to repeal an act that carries out exactly what they are proposing? This is counterproductive to the needs of Alberta landowners.

The opposition's unfounded allegations couldn't be further from the truth. The reality is that our government engages in active consultation with Albertans on property rights issues. This government respects the authority of municipalities and local decision-making. This can hardly be said of the opposition, which clearly disrespects the local decision-making by insisting that the city centre summarily be taken from the city of Edmonton. I wish the hon. member would demonstrate how he reconciles these two positions. The only explanation I can come up with is that hypocrisy can be politically expedient and convenient. But the government will respect the rights of decisions made by municipalities.

Under the jurisdiction of the Alberta Land Stewardship Act local authorities continue to make decisions on what happens to their land. Regional plans help balance development with growing needs of our local communities. Mr. Speaker, the role and responsibilities of municipalities in land-use planning is outlined in the Municipal Government Act. Under part 17 municipalities have responsibilities in planning, regulating, subdividing, and developing land in Alberta.

Further, they also have the authority to create planning and regulatory documents that prescribe how land will be developed.

These regulatory documents include statutory plans. Statutory plans describe the planning policies and types of land use permitted in the municipality and land-use bylaws, specifying development standards and regulations. Before these planning documents are approved, they go through an extensive public review and consultation process. This process ensures that the concerns of local communities are voiced and are respected. Consultation reveals the real concerns that Albertans face instead of employing self-interested, fearmongering tactics by the opposition.

Current legislation enables local authorities to make local decisions regarding what happens to their land. Regional planning simply provides an umbrella under which specific decisions are made. Our government has already undertaken extensive consultation to engage municipalities and local decision-makers about the concerns over property rights and land-use planning. This consultation continues. Partnerships between Alberta and local authorities are crucial to the development of effective legislative initiatives.

Respecting the role of municipalities is already included under the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. Repealing current law only to replace it with legislation that would also respect the role of municipal councils and protect the rights of landowners seems like a misuse of time in this Legislature, Mr. Speaker. Motion 507 is redundant. For that reason I will not be supporting this motion, and I encourage my fellow hon. members to do the same.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I'm reading Motion 507 here, and I have to say that I side with the Member for Livingstone-Macleod. We need this. We need this motion to go through. Why? I mean, land-use planning by locally elected municipal officials and voluntary co-operation between communities is a very healthy practice, one that should be encouraged. However, this government has made itself the ultimate central land-planning authority here in the province. This cabinet has the complete power and authority to override the property rights of individuals and corporations as well as the autonomy of municipal governments when implementing their regional plans.

What did we hear earlier today? We heard the Minister of Municipal Affairs tell us that, you know, this was forced collaboration. In another time do you know what they called this when it was states dealing with other states? Gunboat diplomacy. In those times governments would intimidate other states into granting concessions or unequal treaties.

Well, how does the land stewardship bill do this? It does it through the Minister of ESRD. The minister can take steps to make sure that all municipalities come into compliance. If municipalities don't want to, the minister may take all necessary measures, including suspending the municipality's ability to make bylaws and withholding money and other grants payable to the municipality. This just can't stand. You are saying that cabinet has ultimate authority over another elected body, an elected body that is there, elected by the local constituents, to stand up for their locale. What's happening? We are watching this government run roughshod over another elected body. Gunboat diplomacy.

This just cannot stand. We need to go back. We need to have a look at this again. We need to propose something, an alternative regional planning model, one that respects local autonomy, protects property rights, one that would reward regional co-operation, not mandate regional co-operation.

This is a motion that is not redundant. This is something that we need to look at. It's the reason why there are 17 Wildrose MLAs standing over here.

An Hon. Member: And Bill 10.

Mr. Fox: And Bill 10 as well.

We're here because of this property rights issue. Rather than ignore it, let's stand up, let's look at it, and let's fix it. There was a mistake made. It was compounded. Bill 10 tried to fix it. It didn't work. Let's go back. Let's get this right before we do something that irreparably damages this province.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today as a farmer and as someone whose property rights are just fine, thank you very much. During the election campaign I did my own research into this issue to make sure that my property rights and my family's property rights were protected, and I feel compelled to speak to it today.

Mr. Speaker, this motion is unnecessary for a whole host of reasons, but I only have a couple of minutes. Certain members across the aisle are concerned that the Alberta Land Stewardship Act gives the government sweeping powers to take away the property rights of Albertans. That is entirely unfounded and untrue. In order to address landowners' concerns, our government amended the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, further clarifying landowner rights.

There have been a lot of half-truths and misrepresentations put forth over the last couple of years, something that our government has been quick to address. In an effort to dispel the misinformation and half-truths, our government established the Property Rights Task Force and proactively sought feedback from Albertans with regard to their property rights. During the months of December 2011 and January 2012 communities across the province ardently presented to members of the task force their concerns and suggestions. The task force held 10 province-wide community sessions which were open to the public. I attended the one in Westlock. That was part of my research.

Two key stakeholder meetings were also held, one in Leduc and one in Airdrie. These stakeholder sessions included 26 key representatives from landowner associations and advisory groups, leaseholder organizations, freehold mineral rights owners, which I happen to be one of, the energy industry, agriculture producers, and municipal representatives. The community sessions attracted an estimated 1,035 people. In addition to being able to express their views openly and freely, attendees were encouraged to identify issues and provide suggestions. This allowed our government to debunk the opposition's misguided take on our province's landowner rights.

Throughout the consultation process the task force narrowed down its findings to three overarching themes: active consultation, appropriate compensation, and access to the courts and representation. Through active consultation Albertans want to maintain an open and meaningful dialogue with government, regulators, and industry officials in regard to legislation that affects them. Moreover, participants believed that past consultations focused too heavily on a wide variety of broader topics, which many felt did not specifically tackle particular issues. Participants also said that legislation was unclear and ambiguous, leading many to feel that they would be somewhat left out of any consultation process regarding their property.

In response to these concerns our Premier recognized the need for our government to encourage a more transparent consultation mandate by reviewing engagement policies and procedures to ensure that they are responsive to the needs of all affected parties. As such, our government is making a more concerted effort to be consistent, predictable, and timely when drafting landowner policies so that it can give Albertans ample time to provide informed input.

The second key finding of the task force was appropriate compensation. Albertans want fair access to updated compensation formulas, to do away with restrictive provisions along with a more in-depth consideration of impacts on neighbours. For instance, a large number of participants stated that compensation levels attached to oil and gas leases were outdated and did not accurately represent current resource prices, which have increased a fair bit. Furthermore, people argued that oil and gas wells made a large portion of their land unusable and wanted to be compensated fairly for lost opportunities and income. In response to these concerns our government is reviewing the Expropriation Act as well as the Surface Rights Act in order to consider appropriate compensation measures and strengthen those acts relative to property rights.

Access to the courts and representation was the third main finding of the task force. Concerned landowners want reassurance that laws would not remove the right to appeal any decision made independently and would not deny them access to court. Many asked for this stipulation to be made explicit in all relevant legislation.

Taking these important concerns into consideration, our government responded by appointing a Property Rights Advocate, whose task is to disseminate impartial information about property rights. The Property Rights Advocate is committed to helping Alberta landowners receive timely and accurate information as well as providing Albertans an effective mechanism through which they can raise concerns.

I believe that our government has taken the findings of the Property Rights Task Force and proactively sought the appropriate measures needed to protect the rights of all landowners. As such, Mr. Speaker, I will not be voting in favour of this motion, and I urge all hon. members to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

5:40

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't going to speak on this, but after listening to the hon. member, I feel I have to say something to it. Today, for instance, we talk about the Property Rights Advocate, and I had lunch with him today. He's not a bad man. He's not a bad person. The reason he's got a job up to this point – because we never needed a Property Rights Advocate in this province – is due to these property bills, Bill 36 being the key one. In southern Alberta if you guys did a quick map of how most of the ridings went, it wasn't the traditional way because of bills like Bill 36.

The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod has brought this motion forward, and I think it's back to the process of making sure of the protection of property rights in Alberta. I think everybody wants that, whether you're the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and you own a house in town or you're a rancher or a farmer such as yourself, as you had raised that. But the key part is being able to talk about it.

Now, you know, some of the key things that I hear from my constituents in Little Bow is that they aren't happy with it. They weren't happy with Bill 36 at any time because they didn't feel that the consultation was good. This is, I think, merely bringing up that we need to go back to the landowners' rights and respect the roles – and it's part of the motion in here – of the locally elected and accountable municipal councils. Being on council before, the problem with some of the property rights bills that came in was that they superseded the local planning authority ones, which had been put in by local people, the local planning decisions. They've done all of these things before. So it was somewhat that you snuffed what they had locally for powers, and then you sat and put in your own framework for how that was going to be done.

Now, in centralizing these things, which is basically, essentially, what some of these bills do, the centralizing planning with Bill 36, we've shown that in some of the other departments – I think we could probably name off quite a few between Health right now and Education that are having some struggles. I mean, both ministers are trying to do their best to deal with it, but AHS is a pretty prime spot where central planning hasn't worked. On paper it might have looked like a great idea to be able to sit and do these things. I mean, it ties back to this. You get landowners in our area that are very concerned about things.

I mean, you had a member of your own party bring a private member's bill, Bill 202. Now, the reason that was brought forth by the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill was because of Potatogate. It was a very large issue in the Cypress-Medicine Hat riding, and it affected up close to mine. Now, if you noticed, I got up and voted for it, much to the dismay of probably quite a few people in the world. But the point is that he brought up that bill because the bills that are in place right now don't protect against something like that happening again. So instead of everybody sitting down and reading that out, they could have gone through Bill 202 and figured out that the reason a member from your own party brought that forward was because he'd identified that it needed to be fixed. An avid outdoorsman, a lawyer, a very well-educated person could sit there and go: "Yeah. Some of these things need to be changed."

I'm not saying that you throw the baby out with the bathwater, but you have to stop at some point and figure out that some of these things are wrong. And if they're wrong, what's wrong with changing them? It's not a hard thing to do. I've been wrong on lots of things. You have to admit it, and then you've got to sit down and figure out how to change it. So this is just one of those things. I think Bill 36 needs to be eliminated to protect many of the fundamentals.

Now, the argument is always that, you know, we're fear-mongering and we're doing all these things. Well, no. We're protecting the rights of Albertans. It's not that we have to throw everything out. Yes, we need some planning. I've never argued that. I've been on county council for 16 years. You need some set plans. My argument is that most of the regional plans that were done were working because they were developed regionally. When they got superseded by Bill 36, for instance, the Land Stewardship Act, that caused some huge dissention amongst the people that had spent lots of days and hours and years essentially doing some planning so they could forward think on it, but it was local decision-making.

Where the problem falls back to, where this happened in our area anyway, is that a lot of people feel that they're not getting a vote or they're not getting a right in it anymore. So you go back to local decision-making, and then we can tie it back to – for instance, yesterday AHS put out a news release at 5 p.m. that there's going to be a public meeting today at 8 a.m. It's not really good notice. I mean, I'm not picking on AHS. But I think some of those things, when you go back to central stuff, if you have local decision-making, I'm a firm advocate of that because the local people generally know what they want in their area. I think you need a plan of a ballpark of what you need in the province, but to sit down and mandate that into your areas – I think the key to probably at least 15 of our ridings, anyway, was property rights.

Now, everybody over there can argue whether there's a certain lawyer that was in a devil's suit and all kinds of things like that. [interjection] No. It wouldn't have been a lawyer out of Saskatchewan because we know they're great lawyers, and I would never want that member from that side of the floor to ever think that I was, you know, attacking him or any of the other lawyers that are in this building. But the process is that they're laying out the facts. Throw out the information, and let people make their own decision on it.

Now, you could see that pretty well from Red Deer south other than in some of the urban areas the decision was that they weren't happy with the concept of central planning and overriding and superseding the local decision-making that was done by regional planning. [interjection] No. I'm saying that there are quite a few. You know, Calgary-Glenmore, for instance, a great place. They probably had lots of issues, and they picked a fine MLA. I'd never take a shot at her at all on it. It's outside of there, people that sit there. I mean, they voted for what they thought was right. The reason they voted for her is because they had informed information, and they went through it.

People say that we just need to sit back and say: you know, it's not a good piece of legislation. It was put together – I mean, we're going back quite a few years when it was first started. But it tends to screw things up quite a bit when we don't listen to the local decision-makers. The problem is that they basically got told: well, you're going to get superseded by this either way, so you've got to go with it. In my riding alone it was a key issue. We had seven forums in my riding. I had a great candidate I ran against, a PC candidate, and he, too, had issues with the central planning of stuff.

So when you're sitting in a debate and the candidate is from the area – because that's what you're there to do. You're representing your constituents. I think that's all the Member for Livingstone-Macleod is trying to do with his Motion 507. He's trying to represent his constituents on what he hears when he goes around to things. This is a key thing. Yeah, it does fall within our party's parameters. What we were running on was property rights. I believe that we got at least 15 seats that were all rural on this side, a couple of urban seats, too.

I'd say that there are always different issues with everybody. I mean, I've gone through film footage of different things on property rights. There are members from all sides that are now on the government side. Lethbridge-East, for instance, had spoken very adamantly against this bill some time ago. Now, everybody has their right to change on things. I think she was representing her constituents at the time on that because it was a large issue that was done on – I'll pull it up sometime. I forget which date it was. But it was argued that this wasn't a good bill, the property rights in general, the bills that the government was trying to push through.

Instead of just sitting here and saying that it's just a bad motion and we've got to toss it, I really think we need to sit back and say: what's wrong with opening up the book again and figuring it out? Probably what split this province up the most, or one of the biggest things, is property rights. Instead of just sitting there and throwing your hands up and saying, "No; this is bad; we're right" – well, I guess you can do that – you could sit down and have a rational look at it and open up the debate and the decision again and have the conversation with people.

I think that's what people expect in Alberta. We pride ourselves on being able to be open and transparent people. There are 87 MLAs in here that are to be here to listen to what their constituents want. So, you know, even if you've got 20 or 25 per cent of a province saying that it's definitely an issue, then what's wrong with opening up the debate again on it and figuring out what's wrong with the bill? What's wrong with that?

Well, there were quite a few things wrong with it. I mean, it worked great for us because we were out campaigning, and that's what our constituents wanted. That why, as I say, we on this side of the floor got elected. It was on property rights. I mean, it's your own demise if you want to keep at it, and that's fine. Or you could sit there, and I think we could all be civil and have a decent conversation around what's right and what's wrong with it and open up, you know, to motions like 507.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I believe 55 minutes have expired for debate on this item, so under Standing Order 8(3), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would now invite the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod to close debate on Motion 507.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite what various speakers have said on the other side of the House and some from the opposite point of view have said, I firmly believe that Bill 36 needs some real review, and that was the purpose of this motion.

Throughout my time as a candidate and even prior to that this was something that I heard all the time during the campaign, and it was something that many, many hundreds of people across Alberta spent many hours, miles, and dollars in trying to convince the government that this was poor legislation. I can recall going up to the massive meeting at Eckville one evening and seeing probably, I think, close to 450 to 500 people being jammed into that arena. Several ministers who were there, who spent the time, received a fairly big boo on what was going on. I was shocked. I was appalled. I'd never seen anything like that. I think that's just one illustration of how inflamed people were about this new change.

Today I mentioned in my questions during question period that it might be a good idea to at least go back to the regional advisory council in the process of doing the South Saskatchewan regional plan first draft and maybe have another visit now that we've had so many people speak out against this. I'd like to just repeat that over 9,000 people have signed a petition about the South Saskatchewan regional plan. That's 9,000 people. That's an awfully significant amount of people who are really, really concerned about what is going on here, and I think we have to pay attention to that.

I think it was also interesting today when I asked the Municipal Affairs minister about something to do with the municipal councils and how they are viewing this thing. I brought to his attention once again – and he and I have spoken about this – the AAMD and C document called forced regionalization. It's a huge issue.

I'd like to also remind the speakers that spoke up against me here today and talked about flip-flops. I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Acadia may have taken something out of context during one of my campaigns when someone asked me about the stewardship act and I said that, yes, there are some good things in it, but certainly I have some other concerns, which he didn't happen to include.

I think it's also interesting, when we talk about flip-flops, when we see, as the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat alluded to, that during the debates for leadership two members of this House now spoke that they had really huge concerns during that leadership debate about these bills and particularly about Bill 36, and one of them is sitting here today. Just imagine that they had such concern then, and now they're seemingly on the other side of the fence. Is that a flip-flop, perhaps? Interesting.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's evident throughout Alberta and throughout these debates we've had about property rights over the past few months since I've been here in this House that this is a big, big concern for people. It's a big concern for many members, a big concern for many of their constituents, and I would really implore you to take a chance here and look at this motion.

I mean, it's not that hard. It is a motion that just basically says repeal this act and then replace it with something that better protects the rights than what you have now and perhaps respects and puts in place something that is going to help municipal councils like I came from in looking at how they're going to go about things with the pressure from overtop coming down on them to amend their bylaws, their municipal development plans, even though they may not want to, to conform to some of these things that they don't agree with.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[The voice vote indicated that Motion Other than Government Motion 507 lost]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, April 9, 2013

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Let us pray. As we pray, let us commemorate the 96th anniversary of the Battle of Vimy Ridge on April 9, 1917. We give thanks for the lives of the faithful men and women in our military who have defended and continue to defend the freedoms and values we cherish. Life is precious. When it is lost, we are all impacted. On this day I would ask that all Members of Alberta's Legislative Assembly, all others present here, and those observing these proceedings in their homes join together as we reflect upon the lives of Canadian military personnel lost in service to their countrymen. May their souls rest in eternal peace, and may a nation be eternally grateful. God bless. Amen.

Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you and to all members of the Assembly Mr. Brent Rathgeber, Member of Parliament for Edmonton-St. Albert. Although Mr. Rathgeber now serves the public from the federal stage, he is no stranger to provincial politics, serving as the MLA for Edmonton-Calder from 2001 till 2004. Mr. Rathgeber was a dedicated advocate for his constituents and worked with many of the MLAs who are sitting in this House today. It was during this time that Mr. Rathgeber met his very first political boss, Premier Ralph Klein, who Brent has very, very fond memories of working for and with.

After being elected as an MP for the first time in 2008, Mr. Rathgeber was appointed to the House of Commons' standing committees on Justice and Human Rights and Public Safety and National Security. After nearly 20 years of practising law, Mr. Rathgeber's knowledge and experience that he brought to these committees was invaluable. He now sits on the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Outside of his parliamentary duties Mr. Rathgeber can be found golfing, reading, and cheering on the Edmonton Eskimos. However, because of the Saskatchewan blood that runs through him – Melville, I believe, sir – Mr. Rathgeber's loyalties shift when the Roughriders are in town. But we won't hold that against him. Well, some may.

Mr. Speaker, I'd ask that Mr. Rathgeber, seated in the Speaker's gallery today, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 24 intelligent individuals from McKernan elementary school. Accompanying them today are their teacher, Ms Jasmine Kinjo, and Stephen Dobson. They're seated in the public gallery. I'd ask that all guests rise and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature a group of students from the Rosemary school in my constituency. They haven't arrived yet. They will be arriving at 2, but they're only staying till 2:30, so I would like to continue with their introduction now. With them are their parent chaperones, Mr. Alan Dyck, Mr. Cornelius Krahn, Mr. Travis Simo, Mrs. Jennifer Wiebe, Ms Cretia Morishita, and Mr. Dwight Zacharias. Also with them is the principal of Rosemary school, Mr. David Blumell. I would ask now that you give them the warm traditional greeting of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. You might like to know that I had the privilege of meeting them in the hallway, so they're not that far away.

The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to rise to introduce a group of most-talented students from Talmud Torah school in my riding. Before we started the session, I had the opportunity to talk to them, and they asked me how important homework is. We had a very meaningful conversation on that one. Also, before that, I attended the Telus World communication with Canadian astronaut Chris Hadfield, so I tried to explain that it's very important to study well and someday you can be anybody. They are accompanied by their teacher, Sherry Helland. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for St. Albert, did you have a second introduction?

Mr. Khan: I do, sir. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of students and their teachers from Vital Grandin elementary school located in St. Albert, this constituency I am so honoured to serve. Accompanying these ambitious and inquisitive students are their teachers, Miss Courtney Hooper, Mrs. Adriana Bryenton, and Ms Karen Cabot. These individuals are seated in the members' gallery today. I would ask that the students and guests from Vital Grandin school – and there are a whole bunch of parent volunteers with them today – rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, today it is my great honour to introduce on your behalf to all members of the Assembly a very special and important person, your mother, Hazel Rogers. Hazel and her late husband, Hal, came to Canada from Jamaica in 1966 to teach in Worsley, a community north of Fairview. In 1969 Hazel and Hal moved to Leduc, where they saw their dream come true when all five of their children successfully completed postsecondary education. Hazel was a reading specialist who taught grade 1 her entire career. She retired in 1990 and now spends her time keeping fit and quilting. Her most precious moments are spent with her children and her six grandchildren. She is seated in your gallery. I'd ask her to rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Alberta Legislature a number of guests that will be in attendance during question period. These guests are from the Millennium Pavilion Seniors' Lodge, which is part of the St. Michael's Health Group. It's always nice to have seniors active and interested in current affairs in our democracy here at the Alberta Legislature. It is my pleasure to have them visit the Alberta Legislature and have a very special tour of our historic sites. I would ask that we give them the traditional warm welcome at this time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you my guests Doug Short and Anna Beukes. Anna teaches finance and economics at the business school at NAIT. Currently she chairs the finance program at the school and serves as vice-president external for the Alberta Colleges and Institutes Faculties Association. Doug Short is president of NASA, the faculty association at NAIT, as well as president of the Alberta Colleges and Institutes Faculties Association, which represents the faculty of the colleges, baccalaureate universities, and polytechnics of Alberta. I would now like to ask Doug and Anna to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Muriel and Ronald Whyte, who are here on behalf of their son, Shayne Ronald Whyte. But first about the Whytes. Ronald is from Saskatchewan. Muriel is from the Kootenays. They met on a blind date in 1965 in Jasper. They settled in Hinton. Ronald has worked in the forestry industry, and Muriel has been a specialized educator, assisting kids with severe needs.

They've been blessed with three kids. One is in heaven, a son. Their daughter, Shauna, is in Norway. She's a four-time Paralympic athlete. Their son, Shayne, was born with a skull fracture and brain injury and a complex seizure disorder and autism, and they cared for him. He unfortunately suffered some trauma and abuse when he was in the care system. But for 10 years, since he's been in the Michener Centre, he's been studying math at Red Deer College. He loves to play piano by ear, he's working on getting a girlfriend, he works on the computer, and he's an Oilers fan. They're here to support Shayne, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Edmonton-McClung Constituency

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm extremely pleased to rise and speak about the amazing constituency of Edmonton-McClung. Edmonton-McClung's namesake is the iconic Nellie McClung, a distinguished author, feminist, and member of the Famous Five, a group of courageous and determined women who fought for equality. As an elected representative I try to remember the historic, trail-blazing beginnings of my constituency's namesake and try to work as hard as I can to represent the voice and the interest of my constituents in order to make a meaningful and tangible difference in their everyday lives.

Edmonton-McClung is home to over 45,000 residents. It is blessed with a diverse population that includes Jewish, Muslim, Russian, Filipino, Ukrainian, Chinese, and German communities, to just name a few. This diversity has allowed me to attend some of the most wonderful festivities, and I have had opportunities to taste the most unique and delicious food in the world.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, Edmonton-McClung is home to one of the most modern libraries in the province, the Lois Hole public library, named after the former Lieutenant Governor. The families in my constituency have the opportunity to enjoy various recreational facilities such as the skateboard park and water spray park, Callingwood sports arena, and the Jamie Platz YMCA. These facilities are the magnet of my community. Regardless of your age or interest, everybody can find something to do or enjoy.

Mr. Speaker, I will continue to work hard with all my colleagues in the Alberta government and in this Legislature to serve all Albertans to the best of our capacity so that all Albertans can have a very vibrant and family-oriented life.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Alberta Health Services Performance Targets

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's out-of-touch priorities are no more evident than in our public health care system. For two and a half years straight Alberta Health Services has failed to meet their own performance measure targets. On wait times for procedures the lack of progress would be laughable if it was not so serious. Knee replacements: average wait, 41 weeks. In northern Alberta: average wait time, 56 weeks. Yet the AHS target is half of that at 21 weeks. For hips it's no better. The target is 22 weeks, but on average we wait 37, longer if you are outside of Calgary and Edmonton.

Let's look at access. Most provinces have a benchmark goal of moving 90 per cent of patients through ER and into hospital within eight hours. In Alberta our goal is only 75 per cent, yet we can't manage to reach that goal. In that goal of admitting patients into ER within eight hours, we only reached it 46 per cent of the time. We don't reward our children for failure. Why are we rewarding Alberta Health Services executives?

Knowing all of this, it should be easy for members to understand why Albertans get upset when they hear of Alberta Health Services bonuses, pay raises, and massive increases in spending on administration. Long-term care takes a $52 million cut, but the bureaucratic monster of Alberta Health Services gets a 21 per cent increase.

But that's not bad enough. Alberta Health Services then goes even further to tell veterans of the Canadian Forces that their discounted hospital parking passes have been discontinued, all of this to make room for an extra $84 million in bloated administrative spending. And this government has the gall to say that they are reining in bureaucracy.

AHS centralization was supposed to cut down administration costs and save us money, yet the bloated bureaucracy continues to grow at the expense of actual health services. Albertans want to know when their priorities will become this government's priorities.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Hon. Lois E. Hole, CM, AOE

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's turning into St. Albert day here. As we all know, Lois Hole was the 15th Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, serving from 2000 till her passing in 2005. To many in the province she was known as the Queen of Hugs. To a St. Albert kid like myself she was so much more.

My first recollection of Mrs. Hole was as an elementary-aged student like those sitting in the gallery, accompanying my parents to the Holes' farm to buy vegetables. I remember with great fondness an incredibly friendly woman who was incredibly gracious and warm and who always made sure that I got an extra carrot to eat on my way home. I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I'm not certain I've ever tasted more delicious carrots than were grown by the Holes on their farm, that was then on the outskirts of St. Albert, out in the country.

Fast-forward 30 years or so and that farm, which grew to be Hole's greenhouses, was recognized as one of the largest and best greenhouse facilities in western Canada. Under the visionary stewardship of Lois and Ted's sons, Bill and Jim Hole, the original greenhouses were closed, and just in the past few weeks the original site was demolished. A new location in the southwest corridor of St. Albert was established a couple of years ago to be the home of the Enjoy Centre, which has been developed as a truly world-class greenhouse facility that all Albertans can be proud of.

The Enjoy Centre sits adjacent to another of Lois Hole's remarkable legacies, the Lois Hole centennial provincial park. Encompassing Big Lake, at eight kilometres long and three kilometres wide, the park is a haven for birdwatching and is listed as one of the 20 most important bird habitats in all of Alberta.

I will leave you with a short excerpt from a poem.

As they soar on wind above Big Lake
So too do our spirits soar.

I invite all members and all Albertans to visit these treasures of the capital region, and I assure them that their spirits, too, shall soar.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Carbon Tax

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Conservative government's cozy relationship with the oil and gas industry and their reliance on political donations from their friends in big corporate boardrooms is putting Alberta's environment at risk and has seriously damaged our international reputation, making it difficult to sell our oil to overseas markets. Rather than spending hard-earned public dollars to mislead and greenwash, our government should take a hard look at its environmental record and fix it.

Mr. Speaker, the job of protecting Alberta's environment has been this government's poor distant cousin for decades. Just since 2009 the PCs have cut funding for the ministry of environment by $21 million, and this past budget saw a $17 million cut to climate change policies. Alberta's contribution to greenhouse gas emissions has increased more rapidly than Canada's overall emissions. Our so-called intensity-based carbon levy has a negligible impact, and even that program has been criticized by our Auditor General for its lack of accountability and standards. As a result, our government will not even meet its own unambitious greenhouse gas reduction targets.

Now, on the eve of a trip to the U.S., the minister has set up a trial balloon on a new regime that the most optimistic of environmentalists characterize as merely a baby step towards possible change. Even that, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, is only a discussion, and I'm personally convinced that it will disappear into a wisp of toxic smoke once the Keystone deal is finalized. Then our Conservative government will go back to its tried-and-true method of firmly implanting its environmental head in the sand.

At the same time dangerous growth of tailings ponds is also an international black eye for this province. While three years ago the government brought in regulations to very modestly and very apologetically start the process of managing tailings ponds growth, today all but one of the affected industries is ignoring that law with complete impunity, and there is no enforcement on the horizon from our government. At least half of our greenhouse gas emissions . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Oral Question Period

The Deputy Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Alberta Health Services Administration Costs

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, in addition to all of the other messes this Minister of Health has created, he now has to explain the Alberta Health Services budget. Let's start with administration costs. We were told the superboard would save money through streamlined administration, but over the past three budgets administration costs are up nearly 60 per cent. In the current budget the increase is $84 million, or 21 per cent, while front-line services are being cut. Why?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is true that Alberta Health Services has made great strides in reducing administration costs and, as acknowledged by recent statistics, has the lowest cost in the country, at 3.3 per cent of total budget. What the hon. member seems not to be aware of is that in their proposed budget, which, of course, is pending approval of Budget 2013, AHS has proposed to include additional items on the administrative line in the budget so as to allow us all to compare their administrative costs on the basis of the Canadian Institute for Health Information data. That's responsible, it's transparent, and this member should applaud Alberta Health Services for it.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms Smith: I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that Albertans aren't applauding.

The administration cost increases over the last three years are disgraceful: $304 million in 2011, $397 million in 2012, and an outrageous $481 million this year. Albertans were told administrative cuts were coming. Instead, we see an $84 million increase. What is going on here?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member well knows, Alberta Health Services led agencies, boards, and commissions in this province when they announced immediately after the provincial announcement that they would reduce management positions by 10 per cent over the next three years. They were the first to eliminate bonuses and pay at risk, something that this member has constantly complained about. They have frozen management salaries. This is the kind of leadership that Albertans are looking for. Alberta Health Services is the fifth-largest employer in the country. We have the privilege of being MLAs in a province that saw 100,000 people come to this province last year and for good reason.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we have been saying for months that there are billions of dollars to be saved by the government through trimming middle management, yet no one in the government seems to get it. At AHS between 2011 and 2012 they added 350 more middle managers, bringing the total to more than 3,800. How does adding 350 middle managers improve health care for Albertans and taxpayers?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's ignorance of how the health system actually works is astounding. [interjections] I realize I've just used a word that I should not have used. So her lack of knowledge on the subject is astounding, and I withdraw the term.

That notwithstanding, Mr. Speaker, middle managers in the health system do not perform the same functions as senior executives. They manage direct patient care programs. They supervise staff. They oversee the deployment of resources across the system in hospitals and community-based care and other areas. These people contribute to the high quality of patient care that we all enjoy.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. leader, your second set of questions.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. More managers managing managers managing managers.

Alberta Health Services Executive Bonuses

Ms Smith: This government's commitment to Soviet-style central planning is costing taxpayers more money and is delivering worse service. Alberta Health Services is a stark example. Now, the Minister of Health talks about tough choices and says that improvements are being made. Out here in the real world, where the rest of us live, it's a mess. Wait times don't meet targets. Long-term care is being cut. Doctors still have no contract. With this record of poor performance why is AHS still giving executives hefty salaries and bonuses?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the commitment that we're seeing, despite all facts that are presented to the contrary in this House, is that the hon. member is committed to undermining public confidence in the health care system, the confidence of the 100,000 people that work for Alberta Health Services, and any attempts that we make consistently in partnership with them to improve care. AHS has not cut funding for long-term care. They are increasing funding next year in home care, in facility-based care, in community-based care. I thought that party stood for better value for taxpayers' dollars. Apparently, they don't. Apparently, they stand for undermining confidence in this system.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms Smith: A $52 million cut, Minister. You should read your own books.

AHS says that bonuses are being cancelled because they are not understood by the public. Mr. Speaker, it is not the bonuses the public doesn't understand. It's bonuses for not meeting targets. It's bonuses for not delivering services. It's bonuses for not holding the line on spending. It's bonuses for failure. Why doesn't the minister explain that to the AHS Board?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, what this hon. member should be doing is recognizing the fact that AHS is moving from a 4.5 per cent planned increase for next year to a 3 per cent increase. While they are doing that – and I would defy the hon. members to suggest that we should not be investing more dollars in health care unless, of course, they want to present us with privatization options, which they've done in the past. This is an organization that takes taxpayer value seriously. They demonstrate it by continuing to serve an increasing population in this province by meeting needs in hospitals, in the community, and in areas like mental health.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms Smith: We're talking about undeserved bonuses, Health minister.

Mr. Speaker, the chair of AHS has even suggested that because he's cancelling bonuses, he might just make an upward adjustment to executive salaries to make up the difference. Now, I thought that there was a three-year government salary freeze in place. Will the minister agree today that he will spike any AHS proposal to increase executive salaries?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is obviously behind the times. I thought she read the media at least, but apparently she doesn't. The Alberta Health Services Board chair announced when presenting preliminary details of the budget, which is pending approval of Budget 2013, a freeze in management salaries, a reduction of management positions by 10 per cent over the next three years, and the elimination of pay at risk on a permanent basis. That's the leadership Albertans are looking for. The hon. member should congratulate the board for taking that leadership.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. leader, your third set of questions.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Health minister should read his news clippings, Metro news today.

Prescription Drug Coverage

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, yesterday in question period I asked some specific questions about the availability and pricing of two drugs delisted by Alberta Health as a result of the minister's generic drug plan, ketolorac, a commonly prescribed painkiller; and triamcinolone, used to treat arthritis, asthma, and lupus. Now, the minister declared there'd be no problem getting these drugs, that there were multiple suppliers. Will the minister take the opportunity to correct his answers from yesterday and provide Albertans with updated factual information regarding these medicines?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what I will take the opportunity to do, as apparently it wasn't sufficient yesterday, is to inform or attempt to inform the hon. member about the process for drug listing in this province. Like most jurisdictions across the country, drug companies present pricing on a monthly basis to government. On that basis government determines whether it will buy the previously listed drug or whether it will delist that drug and buy the same drug with the same active ingredient, most often from another generic manufacturer or often from a brand name source. We make a broad range of drugs available to Albertans on a consistent basis. The adding and subtracting . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, after question period yesterday Alberta Health was scrambling to fill some of the gaps in their new list of approved drugs. They tweeted they'd made a mistake on penicillin and had to relist a drug called Apo-Pen. Now, on April 1 the price of Apo-Pen, penicillin, jumped from about $7 to just under $19. That is two and a half times more expensive. Why does the minister claim that his plan will reduce the price of generic drugs when this is quite clearly a massive increase?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are over 4,000 drugs that are listed in Alberta under our drug benefit plan. The drug ketolorac, for example, which was in fact delisted in the last listing, has been replaced by a drug with the same active ingredient called Toradol. The listing and delisting of drugs each month is in response to prices that are set responsibly by this government in our attempt to get the best value for taxpayer dollars possible. The hon. member should support that process. The hon. member has an obligation to understand it if she intends to criticize it in this House. This is just another example of fearmongering about health care that . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Toradol is the more expensive brand name drug, isn't it, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Speaker, the same drug company that I mentioned, its price list shows new prices for about 15 generic drugs, all with significant price increases: double, triple, and in one case 340 per cent higher than last year. When will the minister admit that his poorly conceived plan for lower drug prices is actually resulting in Albertans paying higher drug prices out of their own pockets?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this isn't actually a complex issue, but if the hon. member wants to make it complex, she's certainly free to do so. The fact of the matter is that there are over 4,000 drugs listed in Alberta. Prices change monthly. They change in Alberta. They change in other provinces. Manufacturers and distributors respond to activity in the marketplace. We ensure through a system that we have in place that we get the best value for taxpayer dollars, and we make sure that we have all drugs in the same cluster, with the same active ingredients, available to Albertans. The hon. member should know that the way these savings are achieved is by balancing the delisting and listing over time.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

Support for Postsecondary Education

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's policies have led to the lowest postsecondary participation rates in the country and not enough room for the students who do go to postsecondary. Now, while making the biggest cut in decades, after two years of frozen funding, at a time the province is growing, the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education is demanding that space for more domestic students be created. Minister, could you please tell us what alternate universe you live in where postsecondary spaces can be created while funding is being decimated for these postsecondary institutions?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, the member is correct. Postsecondary education has been receiving consistent increases in funding, as a matter of fact, to the tune of nearly 50 per cent over the last 10 years. This year, as shown in all ministries, has been the exception to that trend of supporting postsecondary education. Now we have, as I was corrected yesterday, the second-highest funded postsecondary education system in Canada, with the exception of Quebec, but we're also funding that one, as everybody knows. However, we are committed to growing postsecondary education in this province, and we will continue our commitment to postsecondary education.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When education was funded appropriately, the University of Alberta was ranked 38th in the world. With the freezes in the last couple of years, they have dropped to 108th in the world, and now there's this draconian cut. Professor Donna Wilson at the U of A is letting it be known that this government's brutal cuts to postsecondary funding are hurting that institution as the best and brightest from Alberta and around the world are reconsidering their decision to study, teach, or do research at the U of A. To the minister: how can you even pretend to claim you're building a knowledge-based economy when you're driving away the best and brightest students?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, this member would now have us believe that even though the budget hasn't been passed yet, the University of Alberta dropped 70 spots in the world ranking already. Humbug.

Mr. Speaker, the fact is that we are working in collaboration with all chairs and all presidents of all postsecondary institutions. We are making a commitment to make sure that the impact on students is minimal. I have been very clear that we will not be increasing tuition for students, and at the end of the day we will continue investing in postsecondary education. Yes, difficult decisions will have to be made, and much like in other sectors of the Alberta government we will be focusing on administration, not on students.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, we already have amongst the highest tuition and fees in the country for postsecondary education. It's no wonder that over 6,000 high school students in this province drop out of school every year, giving Alberta the highest high school dropout rate. This is actually hurting our economy. To the same minister: why would you cut postsecondary education when all that will do is further reduce opportunities at postsecondary levels, actually encouraging more students to drop out of high school, unless that's what you really want, Minister?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, as you know, as a matter of fact, relevant to participation in postsecondary institutions, the Minister of Education should be congratulated. We've just passed a piece of legislation that allows for dual credit earning, which will further increase participation in postsecondary education. We have increased funding in this budget for students from low-income families who need financial assistance so they can participate in postsecondary education. We have frozen tuition so they can participate in postsecondary education, and we will be working with chairs and presidents of all 26 schools to try to increase the number of seats that they will generate within our postsecondary institutions.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition.

Funding for Long-term Care

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This PC government can't be trusted to look after Alberta's seniors. Several years ago an Auditor General's report concluded that Alberta's long-term care facilities were so short-staffed that in some cases seniors had to be awakened as early 3 a.m. in order for the staff to feed them. In the last election this Premier promised that there would be no service cuts. This budget cuts long-term care by $52 million. My question is to the Health minister. Why has this government broken its promise to our vulnerable seniors yet again?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I don't know where the hon. member is getting this information. I can tell you that a media report in the Calgary Herald was incorrect. In fact, my understanding from Alberta Health Services today is that they will be increasing funding in home care, in long-term care, and in community-based care.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government has a long record of cutting publicly funded long-term care spaces for seniors and replacing them with so-called continuing care that charges seniors extra for nursing care. Many seniors need the medical care provided in a long-term care facility and not available in assisted living. Thousands of seniors are suffering at home without the care they need or occupying acute-care beds needed by other patients. Will the minister commit today to reversing the mean-spirited cut to long-term care?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, obviously, the hon. member wants to talk about the difference between long-term care and designated supportive living. Of all Albertans waiting for placement in continuing care today, 15 per cent – only 15 per cent – are estimated as requiring long-term care, based on assessment. What's more, we have the ability to meet those needs over time. All of the continuing care spaces we have opened are built to a B2 standard. It's what allows us to provide an enhanced level of care to citizens as they age in their own community, very often with their spouse. That's what progressive continuing care is about.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, 15 per cent of seniors is a huge number, and this government is cutting long-term care. They promised in the election to increase the number of long-term care spaces by 1,000 per year over the next five years to meet the needs of Alberta's aging population and changing demographic profile. Breaking this promise is a betrayal of the seniors who need those spaces. Will the minister admit that the Alberta Health Services budget is just another broken promise from this government?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, 15 per cent is a considerable number, and a hundred per cent of people waiting for continuing care is also a considerable number. That's why we are meeting our commitment to open 5,000 additional continuing care spaces over five years. We are building those spaces to the B2 building standard, which is the standard required for a nursing home environment. That, of course, is what allows us to meet the promise that we made, which was to allow Albertans to age in place in their own communities wherever possible, close to family and friends.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Carbon Tax

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, we all remember the job losses this government contributed to in 2008 when they dramatically increased taxes on our oil and gas sector. The PCs thought it was a great idea to raise taxes on energy producers just as the price of energy tanked. Now this same brain trust has decided to increase carbon taxes by 167 per cent on our large oil sands employers in the middle of a market access crisis, with projects like the Voyageur upgrader already being cancelled. To the Deputy Premier: why is your government making the same mistake it made in 2008 and risking the jobs of thousands of Alberta families?

Mr. Lukaszuk: I'm going to have to tell you that it's really unfortunate that while our Prime Minister is working really hard to open up access to tidewaters for our product throughout the world, while our Premier right now in Washington is trying to find access for our product abroad, they are making this kind of noise, that is totally unsubstantiated, trying to indicate that what we are doing is not only environmentally unfriendly but also indicating that we are about to increase taxes. The fact is that we're working very closely with the Prime Minister and the federal government. We're working very closely with industry. There will never be any surprises, and there is no anticipation of any increases.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Anderson: Your carbon tax is going to kill jobs and do little to reduce CO<sub>2</sub>.

Given that your government made a promise during the last election that you would not raise taxes and given that most Albertans would say that a 167 per cent increase to carbon taxes would probably break that promise, why would your government pursue a job-killing carbon tax instead of adopting, say, the Wildrose natural gas strategy, which would transition us from coal-generated power to natural gas generated power, thereby reducing CO<sub>2</sub> emissions by 30 per cent and creating . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, through leadership that actually is the envy of other jurisdictions, we have developed a technology fund that is committed to reducing our carbon footprint and buying us the social licence that we need to be able to sell our product abroad. This is what you do as a leader. This is how you get your product to the markets, not through being a climate change denier and now fearmongering about new taxes.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-
Two Hills, you rose on a point of order at 2:02 p.m. It's noted.

Mr. Anderson: Albertans sure embraced Stéphane Dion's carbon tax, Deputy Premier. You have a real winner there. Keep it up.

Given that the Wildrose plan to decrease emissions, including CO<sub>2</sub>, would include a job-creating natural gas strategy rather than a job-killing PC carbon tax increase and given that our oil sands industry is facing a market access crisis and cannot afford yet more uncertainty and higher costs, will the Deputy Premier commit his government to scrapping their carbon tax dreams in favour of the Wildrose natural gas strategy, which will actually help Alberta businesses create jobs for Alberta families?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, a lot of gas. A lot of gas over there.

Actually, what this province needs is access to markets for oil because that is the largest challenge that we face in this province, getting our products to market. To help ensure that we get our products to market, we have to earn the social licence and the respect of other Canadians and other people around the world. This government, working closely with industry and with the government of Canada, is working hard to ensure that we build that social licence.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Research Development and Commercialization

Mr. Webber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Deputy Premier signed a memorandum of understanding with Siemens, which is a huge German-based, multinational engineering conglomerate company founded by Wilhelm von Siemens back in 1844 in Berlin. My question is to the Deputy Premier. Is the signing of this MOU just an empty gesture with a giant foreign company?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have been clear, and I believe our colleagues in Ottawa – and I know we have a member sitting with us – would agree that Canada could do much better in the area of research development and commercialization of research. In this province we are on the cusp of greatness. We have the possibility of research because we have the academia and we have the resources to do that, but often that requires private-sector participation. Siemens is a company that is a world leader in research and development, filing some 25 patents a day. It's a win for Alberta to have it . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Webber: Back to the Deputy Premier, then: what exactly are we going to get from Siemens? Are we signing over our innovations system to them?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, no. We are going to leverage our expertise against theirs and vice versa. They have the expertise in commercializing research. They have the expertise in environmental studies. That's one of their areas of expertise. They have the expertise in attracting venture capital for us to engage in further research. But what is most important – and many jurisdictions can only dream of this – is that we now have them here, located in Alberta, so they can become part of any and all research that will be taking place in the future.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Webber: Okay. Located in Calgary, I understand. That's wonderful.

How will Albertans, though, the Marthas and the Henrys out there, benefit from this, Deputy Premier?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, not only those who actually participate in research will benefit – Siemens is a massive employer throughout the world – but Martha and Henry will benefit from the research that they actually commercialize that they will find on either store shelves or will enjoy through breathing even cleaner air, through enjoying the social licence that we have to export our products, and through other research in health care, in agriculture, or whatever type of research Siemens may choose to get involved in.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again Albertans have a reason not to trust this PC government. Alberta Health Services delivers another budget that doesn't meet with the priorities of Albertans. In the 2013-2014 budget document submitted to the Health minister for his approval, Alberta Health Services cuts long-term care funding to vulnerable seniors by $52 million, yet somehow superboard executives were able to find $84 million more for administration and possible pay hikes. Albertans are not applauding AHS; they're disgusted. To the Health minister: how can you possibly explain how cutting funding by $52 million will improve the quality of care seniors receive?

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I explained in answer to a previous question, Alberta Health Services is increasing funding in all areas of continuing care. That's long-term care, that's home care, and that's other care in the community.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to administration costs, as I explained earlier, AHS has changed how they categorize those costs. Additional programs which previously had not been included in that line like strategic clinical networks have now been added, and that will make our administrative expenses directly comparable to those in other provinces and territories.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Towle: Maybe there's a second set of books that we're not aware of.

Given that this Health minister has already devastated communities and families with the closures of the Little Bow continuing care centre and Michener Centre in Red Deer, can the Health minister assure Albertans in this House that the $52 million cut to long-term care in this year's Alberta Health Services budget won't mean additional facility closures this year, next year, or ever?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member and her colleagues always seem to be very interested in attributing motive. When it comes to motive, this government has one aim in mind when it comes to seniors, and that is allowing our seniors to live independently and with dignity and for as long as possible in their home community. A commitment to add 5,000 beds over five years and to be on track to deliver that is not a small commitment. We've done that. We're continuing to open new spaces. As I said earlier, about 15 per cent of Albertans who require continuing care are awaiting a long-term care bed, and they will be provided for.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Towle: There's definitely motive here. Absolutely.

Given that the families of vulnerable residents in Little Bow and Michener Centre were completely blindsided by the government's closure of these two very important care facilities, will the minister be honest with Albertans and tell them which other facilities are on the chopping block so that families can at least prepare?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, when you're standing up in this House claiming to demand better value for taxpayers' dollars and you see initiatives placed in front of you which deliver exactly that in an area as important as health care, what would be honest is to admit that. Resource allocation decisions in health care are often complicated, and they do often affect communities in the name of delivering a higher quality of service to a broader number of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, they can't have their cake and eat it, too. They can't claim to be on the side of taxpayers and on the basis of no evidence whatsoever continue to undermine public confidence in this system.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Electricity Pricing

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the Minister of Energy. Strathcona-Sherwood Park constituents have produced their electricity bills, and they have questions. There are many questions on the ancillary charges, especially now that the cost freeze has been lifted on the administrative charge for energy consumed, distribution billing demand and distribution charge, transmission billing demand and transmission, local access fees, all charges that most don't understand and that can now increase. My question is: can my constituents expect their electricity bills to go through the roof?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, I'm very empathetic to the fact that Albertans keep a close eye on their electricity bill, and they want to ensure that it is a fair invoice for the services they receive. At one point there was a great concern about the rise in these costs. The province put a freeze on those costs, and to minimize the impact of the lifting of that freeze, this government gave the Alberta Utilities Commission more teeth to scrutinize those costs. The providers will have to justify every single penny.

2:20

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: All right. Well, thank you. My first supplemental is to the same minister. The energy-generating and transmission and distribution companies, all of them: whom do they have to justify these charges to? Is it a government department?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, no. The energy providers and the ancillary cost providers will have to justify their costs to the Alberta Utilities Commission. Of course, any Albertan could participate in that. We wanted to manage volatility in prices for electricity and for ancillary costs, and we've taken strong steps on behalf of the people of Alberta to accomplish exactly that.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, your final supplemental.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. The Retail Market Review Committee report recommended that the government eliminate the regulated rate option to ensure price volatility is no longer built into the system. Why did the government reject these recommendations?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, you know, some 65 per cent of Albertans actually rely upon the regulated rate option.

Mr. Anglin: How about you?

Mr. Hughes: And that would include the Minister of Energy, Mr. Speaker.

I would say that what we have done, Mr. Speaker, is that we've ensured that we've reduced the volatility in the system by the way in which providers of electricity can purchase electricity on behalf of consumers. I'm particularly concerned about this for seniors, for people on fixed income. We care about the concerns of Albertans, and we're looking after their interests.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Alberta Distance Learning Centre

Mr. Hehr: This government made bushels of promises to bundles of people during the last election. Many of these promises were made to students in our K through 12 education system. Instead of following through with these promises, gone is the AISI program, gone is the promise of full-day kindergarten, and gone are 600 teachers from the system. To the Minister of Education. The Alberta Distance Learning Centre supports 60,000 students. Your 56 per cent cut to their school partners means that only 30,000 of these students will get the assistance they need. How is this going to improve our high school graduation rates?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is right. We did make lots of promises, and we are keeping them. The ADLC has done a great job, but I want to say that our goal with Budget 2013 was to make sure that every child, every student that walks through the door is getting the instructional funding that they need. We're continuing that instructional funding even though we're going to have 11,000 more students next year.

Unlike the members opposite, who would just like to jack up taxes to cover these costs, what we're doing and what Albertans expect government to do is to live within our means and to look everywhere we can in making difficult choices to make sure that we're taking those taxpayer dollars and spending them wisely. That's why we had to make some changes to the way . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hehr: Well, given that the Alberta Distance Learning Centre supports a variety of students who are having challenges in taking part in the education system either because they are working or have challenges in the classroom or even do not have a public education opportunity in their community, how are these Albertans going to get the education they need with these cuts?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, those distance learning opportunities are still there in Alberta, and they're there through fantastic organizations like the ADLC, like Athabasca University. But up until now we haven't been paying the same for a distance learning credit as we do for a traditional credit. We've been paying 156 per cent for the distance learning credit as compared to the traditional learning credit. That doesn't make sense because it actually costs less money to deliver distance learning education than it does in the traditional classroom. Why would this member want Alberta taxpayers to pay more dollars for a service that costs us less to deliver?

Mr. Hehr: What the minister said just doesn't ring true, Mr. Speaker. I got off the phone with the ADLC this morning. They said that they're going to go from being able to support 60,000 to 30,000 students. How is this going to help those 30,000 students who will not be able to access this programming with these cuts?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, to clarify, the ADLC funding was not cut. What happens when we have a distance learning course is that it's delivered from the ADLC, but it's delivered through a resident school division. The resident school division for that student gets 100 per cent of the funding for that credit, and the ADLC gets 56 per cent of the funding for that credit. We fund that credit to 156 per cent of what we do for the traditional learning, but it costs us less to deliver. So what we did was that we said: "We'll keep the 56 per cent at the ADLC. We're not going to touch their funding." It's an important delivery method, but we're not going to fund a local resident school at 100 per cent because they don't have to deliver a teacher in the classroom; they only need to deliver those services. We're going to give them 44 per cent . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Funding for Emergency Cancer Care

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, yet another cut to the front-line health care services that Albertans depend on. The Cross Cancer Institute, Alberta's premier cancer treatment facility, has told their staff they won't have a triage nurse in the evenings. This is an absolutely outrageous broken promise to sick Albertans, who will now have reduced access to the specialized care they need to recover from cancer. My question is to the Health minister. Why is your government allowing cuts like this to happen?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is obviously referring to an operational decision. I don't know exactly where he's getting his information. I'd be happy to look into his particular question if he'd care to share it with me. I have no doubt that any decisions that are being made regarding cancer care in this province are being made in the best interests of the patients that we serve.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not good enough.

Given that this government broke their promise to deliver stable, long-term funding to public health care and given that one Cross Cancer nurse said that the idea of having potential immunocompromised patients sitting in packed ERs is awful, to the Health minister: how many more cancer patients and their families have to suffer because of this PC government's broken promises?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, if the hon. member wants to send me the details of what he heard or what he thinks he knows, I'd be happy to look into it.

Mr. Speaker, the people of this province enjoy a cancer care system that is the envy of this country. The Premier of this province as recently as a few weeks ago announced an entirely new cancer centre, a $1.1 billion to $1.3 billion project to serve Calgary and southern Alberta. We continue to invest in the best of equipment, we continue to attract the best researchers in cancer from across the world, and to suggest anything less is simply not true.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You should know, hon. minister, what's going on in your ministry.

Given that this government promised to improve primary health care by introducing more centres with user-friendly hours and given that our emergency rooms were already bursting at the seams even before this PC government effectively cut the health care budget, will the minister tell Albertans why this government is breaking yet another promise, this time to Albertans who need cancer treatment?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to stand by and watch cancer patients used as political pawns in this House during question period. If this member wants to question operational decisions made by Alberta Health Services, as I said – and I would do the same for any member of this House – send me the information, and I'll be happy to look into it.

Mr. Speaker, the generalizations that the hon. member makes, the statements with respect to primary health care, are not true. We continue to expand primary health care in this province through family care clinics, through primary care networks. Why? Because Albertans told us that they want us to open . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Deportation of Allyson McConnell

Mr. Saskiw: Late last night Allyson McConnell, a mother convicted of drowning her two children, flew back to Australia. Federal Minister Toews, a real tough-on-crime Conservative, said that this Justice minister took too long to ask Ottawa to intervene or restrict McConnell's movements. This is deeply disturbing, and the Justice minister needs to explain why he didn't even try to see that the victims, these children and their father, received real justice. What excuse is the minister going to give for, in effect, the complete and utter incompetence on this file?

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I'd hope that the Justice minister might be able to offer something on this, but I'd just caution you. This matter is before the courts by way of an appeal.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, we're dealing with two dead children here and their grieving family. I have no idea why this member continues to try to politicize this issue. I stand behind the actions of our prosecutors, and we've outlined exactly what we will do. There is nothing new to report today other than that we will not stop until justice is served in this province.

Mr. Saskiw: You're right: two kids died. That's why we're asking these questions.

Given that the minister has refused to say if or when he has ever talked to the federal government on this case, why is this minister, a fan of liberal justice policy, continuing to put the blame on his federal counterpart, an actual tough-on-crime Conservative, instead of taking responsibility for his own failings, knowing that it was his fault that innocent victims just watched a criminal fly right out of this province?

Mr. Denis: Again, Mr. Speaker, our department filed the appeal immediately and has left no stone unturned whatsoever, despite the conjecture and hearsay we see over there. Again, the focus is on getting justice for the two dead children, not politicizing this issue like this member continues to do.

Mr. Saskiw: Given that there was a five-month delay in filing the appeal under your watch and given that this minister has already dropped the ball on the sexual assault case in Airdrie and now the McConnell case, is he simply unaware that his incompetent policies are reflecting on this Premier and his liberal soft-on-crime justice policies are failing victims?

Mr. Denis: What this member says is patently untrue. The judgment came down in April; we filed the appeal immediately. I know he practised law for a year or two, so he might want to pull the curtain on that as well.

Mr. Saskiw: It was a five-month delay.

Mr. Denis: There was no delay in filing the appeal, Mr. Speaker. This government continues to support victims. In fact, in 2010-2011 we helped more than 66,700 victims. One of the cornerstones of our justice system is to help these victims, not politicize and further punish people like the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills continues to do.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Long-term and Continuing Care for Seniors

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my constituency of Calgary-Varsity we have a lot of seniors, and they're paying a lot of attention to how our government supports long-term care choices. They're also watching to make sure that the right amount of funding reaches seniors who need it. My question is to the Minister of Health. You've received many questions today, and I will ask one that drills a little deeper. How are recent changes to the patient care funding model in Alberta impacting residents of long-term care facilities?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for an insightful question. As hon. members may know, patient care based funding has been around in Alberta since 2009. It is based on the principle of matching funding for a particular patient to that patient's needs. This principle has seen a funding increase to a number of long-term care facilities across the province over the last year. Adjustments are also made in the case where funding exceeds patient needs. This is one of the ways that we attempt to deliver a patient-focused continuing care system.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: To the same minister: given that long-term care partners like Bethany Care Society have indicated that funding allotted through the recently revised AHS funding model is not adequate to provide care for seniors with dementia, will you look again at the funding model with our partners and iron out those difficulties?

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another very insightful question, unlike a number of others that have been asked earlier today. The answer, of course, is yes. We are working with individual providers. As I said earlier, according to this model as patient needs increase, funding increases, and as patient needs decrease, funding is adjusted accordingly. That can have an impact on staffing levels at various times during the year. We'll continue to work with our partners to make sure that we mitigate the effects.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Health: given that providing compassionate end-of-life care is becoming more prominent in the mission of long-term care providers, has AHS considered allocating more funding towards these services?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. Unlike other questions that we heard earlier today that focused on particular types of beds or types of institutions, the question of how we support Albertans in end-of-life care is very important. That's why Alberta Health Services is making investments in that area. It is why we will have a very important policy discussion in this province next year about the continuing care system and how we care for those needs as well as those of Albertans living independently.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Xplornet Communications Inc.

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, this government is once again choosing winners and losers in the private sector. The latest example of this is the government choosing to directly subsidize a single Internet provider called Xplornet to provide high-speed Internet to Albertans in remote areas. Now, the Wildrose agrees with helping our constituents in remote areas gain high-speed Internet access. This will boost rural economies and productivity. But the way the government is doing this is all wrong. Can the minister please explain how financially backing one Internet provider over another is fair?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the member for the question. He's only – what? – six, seven, eight, nine months late. Regardless, the fact is that in low-density, remote areas of the province there's only one type of technology that can provide accessible high-speed Internet to the homes of rural Albertans, and that is satellite technology. There was an open procurement process. One company was the only one to have access to the new, high-speed, 4G satellite technology, and they have the contract. We're connecting rural Albertans . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fox: Unlike this minister, I actually live in rural Alberta, and we want market choice.

Given that this minister easily could have applied this program to all rural Internet companies and given his decision to throw the entire wad of cash at one Internet company to the detriment of others, how can this minister justify giving one company such a massive advantage over its competitors in this way? Friend of the family, perhaps?

Mr. Bhullar: I'll tell you what, Mr. Speaker. These people are not friends to Albertans living in low-density, remote areas. That's what they are not. Albertans living in low-density, remote areas deserve high-speed Internet access just like everybody else living in areas like Ponoka, Red Deer, Calgary, and Edmonton. That's what we've done. It's always funny that these folks on the other side can suck and blow at the same time. My question is: do they want more spending, or do they want cuts? Do they want services for rural Albertans, or do they not?

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fox: Stop playing favourites with members of the government family, Minister.

Given that on the Service Alberta website it states, "Service Alberta works to ensure a fair marketplace" – fair marketplace – "for both buyers and sellers," will the minister apply this program to rural residents who choose other rural Internet providers, or will he continue to prolong this government-imposed monopoly on rural Alberta?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, it's so evident that they really have absolutely no idea what they're talking about. It has taken this member nearly a year to ask a question in the House about this program, and the question he's asking doesn't make any sense.

The fact is that our program is targeted only to those living in low-density, remote areas, areas where it doesn't make sense to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars putting up towers. Instead, it makes sense to help people access high-speed Internet via satellite. Get your act together, hon. member.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Bare-land Condominiums

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bare-land condominiums are condos where a person owns their building and the land that's underneath it, and it's managed by a condominium corporation. A recent court decision by the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench caused serious concern in the community when it determined that bare-land condominium corporations can no longer use the condo fees they collect, especially in their reserve funds, to maintain and repair buildings. My questions today are for the Minister of Service Alberta. What is the significance of this court ruling for bare-land condominium owners?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's an example of a well-thought-out, well-researched question. I bet she has high-speed Internet access and she did her research online.

There was a court ruling, Mr. Speaker, that called into question, essentially, the way bare-land condominiums have been operating since 1985. Our position has been clear since the ruling. We've tried to see if we can make regulatory changes to adapt to the court ruling. Unfortunately, we can't. It has to be through legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. member.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just for your information, I did write this question, and I did do the online research. I think the opposition should be doing the same.

Given that this court decision has caused a very severe problem, it really should be acted on, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how will your ministry respond on behalf of bare-land condominium owners to this court ruling?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned, our preference would have been to deal with this matter through a regulatory change because it could be dealt with in a shorter period of time. Unfortunately, that is not possible because of various legal opinions. I'm sure the legal opinions are not from the members opposite because, quite frankly, I don't think they quite know how to research. We'll be bringing forth legislative changes in due course, and we hope that all members on all sides of the House will allow us to move this amendment forward in a very short period of time.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. member. Final supplemental.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: in light of all this uncertainty is there anything that concerned condominium owners should be doing right now to deal with this serious situation?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I heard some rumblings from members opposite. You know, we are committed to making change in a very quick process for condominium owners. Unfortunately, some members opposite would rather sit in this Assembly. They love to hear the sound of their own voices, so they want to delay changes. The fact of the matter is that we'll be bringing forward changes very soon, and we hope members from all three of those other parties will actually do the right thing for Albertans for once and support real-life, practical changes.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, in 30 seconds I'll call for the next two members' statements.

Ms Blakeman: Yo. Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: At 2:41. Noted, hon. member.

Family Violence Prevention

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, everyone has a responsibility to help prevent family violence, which brings devastating and long-lasting effects. Family violence touches families from every background in every community in Alberta. One of the Premier's priorities and a vital mandate of our government is to invest in our province's families and communities, and that includes a strong commitment to preventing family violence and supporting those who are affected by it.

On April 12 the call for nominations for the 2013 inspiration awards will be announced. The inspiration awards program was created last year to celebrate leadership in family violence prevention and recognize the many truly exceptional individuals and organizations across the province who work with us on this critical issue. Many of those people work tirelessly for these kinds of efforts and get little or no acknowledgement for work that changes so many people's lives. Mr. Speaker, the inspiration awards are one way that we can celebrate the exceptional work that is being done by these people right across the province.

Nomination packages are available online at humanservices.alberta.ca/inspirationawards or by calling 780.422.5916, and you can call toll-free right across Alberta by first dialing 310.0000. Recipients are going to be honoured in November during Family Violence Prevention Month, a time when we highlight the ongoing work to raise awareness about the importance of preventing family violence and helping those people who need support. I know that there are dedicated individuals and groups doing this work in our communities, and I hope to see them nominated for this recognition.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Landowner Property Rights

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday some members of this Assembly failed to understand the really serious problems when statutory consent would be rescinded with the implementation of regional plans.

For this moment let us just imagine if any MLA here in the House lived in an area like mine or owned land where a regional plan would impact them directly. As an example, the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock claimed yesterday that it wouldn't impact anyone's rights. What if the member owned land and cabinet decided in a regional plan that a dairy operation on the land would no longer be allowed? As written, the act allows cabinet to rescind permits, licences, and leases without cause. Does she think her land value might drop? Would she want compensation for that government taking?

As another example, what if the Member for Calgary-Acadia bought land as an investment in the south and was suddenly faced with a cabinet-imposed land freeze on his property due to the land falling under a long-term urban sprawl concept for 50 years in the future and the land suddenly depreciated by over 25 per cent? It would be devastating, and his investment would be harshly impacted.

Now consider a member's third-generation grazing lease operation where the cabinet decides to pull the right to graze because they've imposed a conservation area. His business model would be severely impacted, and his livelihood would be destroyed.

In all of these cases where changes are imposed, the results are devastating, and they can affect anyone.

So then these affected parties go to the Property Rights Advocate, someone to whom the landowners are supposed to take their complaints, but the advocate has been denied any meaningful role by legislation. He won't be able to reverse a cabinet decision, nor can he change a regional plan.

This situation has to change. Land values, net worth, and livelihoods must be saved.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a tremendous pleasure for me to rise and introduce through you to all members of this Assembly a very distinguished Albertan and a friend of many in this Assembly. After placing first in the Alberta Senate election as a Progressive Conservative last year, the Hon. Douglas Black was appointed to the upper Chamber by the Prime Minister on January 25 of this year. Continuing Alberta's proud tradition of electing representatives to the Canadian Senate, we're very proud to have Mr. Black with us here today. He's the founding president of the Energy Policy Institute of Canada, former chair of the board of the Michaëlle Jean Foundation, and former governor of the Banff Centre. He is a recipient of the Alberta centennial medal and was appointed a Queen's Counsel. I would ask all members of this Assembly to give the Hon. Doug Black a warm welcome to our Assembly.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five tablings today. The first is from Joe and Teresa Boone of Picture Butte. They're concerned about the elimination of operation and maintenance grants to independent schools.

The second, third, and fourth are from doctors. Dr. Michael Galbraith is concerned and disappointed that physicians have largely been shut out of the decision-making process for these key providers of health care. Dr. Duncan Nickerson is expressing concerns about the obvious ethical problem of not negotiating in good faith and that the legacy of this Health minister may be a destroyed health care system. From Dr. Lloyd Clarke: "What the government is doing to physicians is intolerable and were this another profession there would be wide scale walk outs."

Finally, from George Lee, a concerned constituent of mine near Coutts, Alberta, currently on the oxygen-at-home program and very concerned about the changes that are going to be made and what impact that's going to have on his health.

I have the requisite copies here, which I submit now.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings of my own and one on behalf of one of my colleagues. My first tabling is an e-mail that was sent to me by Nadine Riopel. She is one of the very few midwives that practise in the province, and she is bringing the point to the government's attention that there are only 18 midwives currently practising in the city of Edmonton and that the Lucina Birth Centre is only available to parents that are under the care of a midwife, so she is looking for additional support in the form of funding and education for midwifery care. That's the first e-mail.

The second one is from another constituent, Olivia Martins, who sent an e-mail outlining her concern that she would like to see a three-month warning put in place before a lease is up to ensure that people are not caught off guard by the ending of the lease.

I'm sorry. I did have one more, a second concern being brought up around rents. One individual, Kory Orban, a constituent, is facing a 9.13 per cent increase in his rent, well above the price of inflation.

Finally, on behalf of my colleague the Member for Calgary-Buffalo I'd like to table an e-mail from Faron Smordin, who is carefully explaining the cuts that happened to ADLC and the anticipated effects that will have on students trying to complete high school and postsecondary distance learning.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two tablings today. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of an open letter sent to the Minister of Human Services by David Dodge, who is the president of the Edmonton Federation of Community Leagues. In his letter Mr. Dodge expresses the disappointment felt by his organization regarding the cancellation of the STEP program. He writes, "We want to be on record as saying that this program was working very well and we would like to see it or a substitute reinstated."

For my second tabling, Mr. Speaker, I'll table the appropriate number of copies of e-mail submissions that Albertans made to our prebudget tour, which visited seven cities in February. Wayne Madden and Martin Bryson Brown are some of the Albertans who have provided valuable input. For example, Wayne, from Edmonton, would like to see a renewed investment in public education rather than increased funding for private schools. Submissions like this clearly show the priorities of Albertans and how out of touch this PC government is with its broken-promises budget.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to share credit where credit is due with Campus Alberta. First of all, I'd like to table a document produced by the University of Alberta requesting of the government to set up an institute that will focus solely on research, innovation, and commercialization of research.

I would also like to table a document dated April 2002, when some of the initial work started. It's entitled Campus Alberta: A Policy Framework, a collaborative work of all the colleges, universities, and other schools within Alberta advanced education.

Further, Mr. Speaker, a November 2007 document on Campus Alberta. It's entitled the Roles and Mandates – imagine that – Policy Framework for Alberta's Publicly Funded Advanced Education System, asking the department to identify what their roles and mandates should be within Campus Alberta.

And one as recent as January 15, 2013. I should note that it's prebudget, Mr. Speaker, so budget had nothing to do with it yet. This document talks about the Campus Alberta Strategic Directions Committee asking for mandate letters, asking for the roles and responsibilities of schools within Campus Alberta.

The prerequisite number of documents is here.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the recommended number of copies of the XL Foods Community Response Committee final report. We all know the XL Foods situation, the E coli crisis last fall. I'd like to give a special mention to Lynn Pye-Matheson. She's the executive director for the Grasslands Regional FCSS. Her organization provided community response planning, facilitation, and co-ordination services between a number of community associations, the Alberta government, myself as the MLA for Strathmore-Brooks. They did amazing work. The communities all pulled together: the surrounding communities, all the groups within the communities, the workers that were temporarily laid off. You know, we have to give them special mention for staying around and helping work with us to get through this very serious situation. We know that the plant is recently back up and running, and I would like to table this final report so all the members can have a look at it. I do have two personal copies for the Minister of Human Services and the minister of agriculture also.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and the Leader for the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings from physicians who are deeply concerned by the lack of integrity in the process relating to negotiations. The most recent is from Dr. Paul Parks from Medicine Hat, expressing concern about the future of health care and how it must be tied to respectful involvement with physicians in decision-making.

From Dr. Garry Borsato of Calgary: a clearly unfair process that is going to alienate physicians.

From Dr. Jeff Pivnick of Calgary: concerned about the current negotiations, which has been a huge disappointment, characterized by erroneous rhetoric and a willingness to vilify physicians.

From Dr. Neil Cooper of Calgary: concerned, again, about the breakdown of respectful negotiations and serious engagement of physicians in planning.

From Dr. Desiree Teoh of Calgary: "The lack of negotiations, the unapproachability of the government, the loss of my trust in fair treatment is affecting how I care for my patients and how well I am able to teach."

Finally, from Dr. Joel Fox, calling on the government to take the high road and enter into respectful negotiations with AMA and stand behind their promises.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table two documents today. The first one is the Alberta Health Services 2012-2013 budgeted expenses by service. Luckily for everybody, they put a nice pretty little graph here and did it in a narrative as well where they clearly state that facility-based continuing care services in the 2012-2013 budget were $971 million. That's the first tabling.

I would also like to table the 2013-2014 Alberta Health Services budget document, where once again they put it in a narrative and with a nice little graph here that clearly states that facility-based continuing care services for 2013-2014 are $919 million, for a net loss of $52 million to continuing care.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do also have two tablings, both related to pharmaceutical drug price increases, one from Pfizer, indicating that their price increases fall within the regulated rates from the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board.

The other is from Apotex, which is one of the major generic drug companies. These are the 15 different generic drugs that are seeing dramatic increases, from two to three times what they were last year.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just rising to table a document that I referred to yesterday. The document is a letter from the Edmonton Journal, Sunday, August 14, 2011, wherein the Leader of the Opposition indicates that her party contributed $15,000 to support Keith Wilson and Landowners Against Bills. I have five copies that I'll table to the Clerk.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

I have a tabling. Pursuant to section 39(3) of the Legislative Assembly Act I would like to table with the Assembly five copies of the following orders passed at the March 15, 2013, meeting of the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services: one, Members' Services Committee Order 04/13, members' allowances amendment order (No. 26); two, Members' Services Committee Order 05/13, members' committee allowances amendment order (No. 11); finally, Members' Services Committee Order 06/13, administrative services amendment order (No. 02). These orders come into force on September 1, 2013, and I have the requisite number of copies.

Points of order. I believe we had two points of order raised. At 2:12 the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills rose on a point of order, then we had a second point of order at 2:46, the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

The Member for Airdrie.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills I'll rise on this point of order. It's referring to the phrase "climate change denier." This should be fresh in our minds. According to section 23(h), (i), and (j), which I cited on a very similar point of order yesterday, this member cast aspersions against the Leader of the Opposition as well as myself and all members on this side. The Speaker yesterday made a very clear ruling. He was completely unambiguous, very black and white. He said very clearly that in this House we are no longer to use the words "climate change denier" and call another member of this House that. He could not have been any more clear or unambiguous.

Now, I'm assuming that this member or the House leader will withdraw that statement because if he doesn't withdraw the statement, then what that does is that it opens up a whole can of worms. The Speaker has made a clear decision on this matter and has made clear decisions on a whole bunch of matters. For example, we're not allowed to call the Premier or other ministers, et cetera, liars. We're not allowed to use that term to refer to another individual. That's been made very clear in this House. It's been very clearly ruled on, so we abide by that rule. If we don't abide by that rule, then really what we're doing is that we're being contemptuous, I would say, of the Legislature, of the rules of the Legislature and of the Speaker.

The ruling was made just yesterday for the third time, but yesterday it was made very categorical. Specifically, the Speaker said that use of that term in reference to another member is not permitted in this Legislature, Mr. Speaker. That's what he said. So I would ask that that comment be withdrawn.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. Government House Leader, would you care to respond?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just actually trying to look at Hansard to see if that's exactly what was said yesterday. I will undertake to review Hansard and determine whether or not that was definitive, or you might be able to tell us today whether that was definitive, and if it is, I'll certainly talk to my colleague and certainly be prepared to withdraw the comment.

But what I thought I heard yesterday was what I thought I heard before, and that is that we have differences of viewpoint in this House. We are expected to respect the word of individuals in this House as they give it. We have heard on a number of occasions now the House leader for the Official Opposition indicate that the Official Opposition has apparently changed their position on climate change, on whether man-made climate change exists and whether the science is settled. I, for one, am prepared to accept the fact that the hon. member has said that and that the hon. member is expressing perhaps a new position on behalf of their party. I think it's good when people are thoughtful and progressive and update their ideas from time to time. I think that's a wonderful thing.

I only asked yesterday and perhaps would ask again today: is that opinion, that expression of the current policy of the Wildrose Party – Wildrose Alliance Party, I guess, is its official name – the official expression of the party, or is that the representation following along the advice of an esteemed political philosopher and commentator that people should contain their true views and put more political views forward lest they embarrass their colleagues?

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

Hon. members, this point of order was raised in response to the Deputy Premier's use of the term "climate change denier." As noted yesterday – and it's been noted in earlier speeches – the Speaker ruled on the matter that this had been dealt with numerous times. I have to say – and I'm glad we didn't have any others indicating to speak on this – that I'm reluctant to take up the House's time with a lengthy discussion on this point of order. This matter has been clarified on the record time and time again. Yesterday the Speaker did indicate that we should "move on and get on with some choice of new words." This is in Hansard at page 1719. I would submit that the repeated use of this term does cause some consternation, and it should be avoided.

Hon. Government House Leader, you have indicated that you're willing to withdraw that term on behalf of your colleague, and I would think that that would be good enough to allow us to move on.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I respectfully withdraw the term "climate change denier." Apparently, my listening wasn't as clear as your comments. I will talk to my colleague and indicate that your ruling has been such and that we need to find better ways to clarify for the public where we actually stand on these important issues.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, you rose on a point of order at 2:46. If you would speak to that point of order.

Point of Order Rights of Members

Ms Blakeman: I did. Thank you very much for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker, and sorry for calling your attention by saying yo. [interjection] Yes. Happily, I didn't go that far, but I do apologize to you. That was a little off the cuff.

The Deputy Speaker: Apology accepted, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: I had wanted to bring the attention of the Speaker but most particularly the Minister of Service Alberta to the sections of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, particularly on page 108, and there is also some information that appears on page 111. The minister is incredibly charming and also very passionate. I am trying to figure out whether he was being very passionately charming in trying to tell members of the opposition that they should give swift passage to something he was particularly interested in or whether perhaps that was crossing the line over to something that was a bit more aggressive in tone and direction. I note that we have to be careful about that in this House.

This is under a section called Freedom from Obstruction, Interference, Intimidation and Molestation. It does note that members are entitled to go about their parliamentary business undisturbed. The assaulting, menacing, or insulting of any Member . . . coming or going.

I'm paraphrasing quickly here. Any form of intimidation should not happen. Later there's an additional quote.

An Hon. Member [who] is impeded or obstructed in the performance of [their] duties through threats, intimidation, bribery attempts or . . . improper behaviour.

Again, that would be considered a breach of parliamentary privilege. I do not believe that we are dealing with something in that realm, but the parliamentary practice is not giving me shades of grey on this one.

I also notice that on page 111 under Other Examples of Obstruction, Interference and Intimidation it includes damaging of a Member's reputation, the usurpation of the title of [the] Member . . . the intimidation of Members and their staff and of witnesses before committees, and the provision of misleading information.

As I say, it was difficult for me to tell, and I hesitated in actually calling a point of order. I know there's been some discussion from this minister with members of opposition staff and members of opposition in his desire, a wish and some more passionate words, to get us to agree with him for swift passage of a particular item based on the bare-land condo ruling from the courts.

I think we need to be careful and be very, very clear here that we all come here to do our work, and we all respect each other's ability to do that work once we're in the House. Nobody should be telling anyone or giving forth in any way that any part of our privilege or our work in this House should be hastened for any reason.

I will leave that with you, Mr. Speaker. I hope you might be able to recommend the reading of the pages that I've noted to the Minister of Service Alberta.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, obviously there's no point of order. There's actually even no point. Well, there was a point. The minister is charming.

The fact of the matter is that we exhort each other in this House every day to do things, to achieve things, to do the right thing for Albertans. We sometimes have different views of what that might be, but strenuous debate and vigorously admonishing people to do the right thing have never been out of order in this House and shouldn't be called out of order in this House now.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, I certainly appreciate the reference that you gave. I, too, struggle to find, I guess, an issue, a point of order that you raised. I think your suggestion that the minister and others may want to avail themselves of pages 108 and 111 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice may very well help to maybe temper some of this type of exuberance in the future. I would suggest that based on that, there is no point of order. Thank you.

Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 7(7) the daily Routine is now concluded. Pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) the legislative policy committees will convene this afternoon and this evening for consideration of the main estimates. This afternoon Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for Energy in committee room A, and this evening Families and Communities will consider the estimates for Justice and Solicitor General in committee room A.

[The Assembly adjourned at 3:12 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, April 10, 2013

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us pray. Guide us all, Dear Lord, in our speech, in our thought, and in our action and also in the positions we take and the decisions we make, all of which affect the people we represent and serve. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm thrilled today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Mr. Ilias Kremmydas, consul general of the Hellenic Republic in Vancouver. I would like to welcome Mr. Kremmydas to Alberta on his official visit. The consul general joins us today to learn about what our great province has to offer and to explore new opportunities for collaboration between Greece and Alberta. I was pleased to have the opportunity to host a luncheon in honour of his visit, and I hope this marks the first of many visits to our province. Mr. Kremmydas is seated in your gallery to watch our proceedings. I would ask everyone to give him our warm traditional welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's not very often I get nervous when I'm about to do an introduction in this House. I'm especially a bit nervous doing this introduction because I'm introducing my parents first. I'm nervous because we don't take enough opportunity to thank our parents, so I want to take this opportunity to thank them for helping me be the man I am: my father, Baljinder Singh Bhullar; and my mother, the dear Sukhviri Kaur Bhullar, who is a tremendous human being of great grace, simplicity, and strength. I'd ask them both to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. I guess now all members can talk to them if you don't like my conduct in this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, we had Vaisakhi celebrations today in the Alberta Legislature, and it's my esteemed pleasure to introduce – and I'm going to list everybody and then will ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly – first of all, this year's speaker on behalf of the Sikh community, Major Harpal Singh Mandahar, who is with the PPCLI here in Edmonton. Accompanying him are Captain Dave Peabody and Warrant Officer Chris Durette.

I would also like to introduce Mr. Baljinder Singh Sandhu, the general secretary of the Dashmesh Culture Centre in Calgary. Many members of his congregation are here with us as well. Mr. Sukhdev Singh Khaira is president of the Dashmesh Culture Centre seniors' organization, and again many members of his organization are joining us here as well. Mr. Chanchal Singh Bajwa, president of Inca Senior Citizens Society: welcome to you and your members. Mr. Rachhpal Singh Boparai, president of the South Asian Canadian Association: welcome, sir, to you and your members. Mr. Sewa Singh Premi of the Indian ex-servicemen association: welcome to you and all of your members. Two dear friends are here representing the Canadian Sikh Network, people I grew up with, a man that encouraged me to play football and turn into this vast, broad character than I am today, Mr. Amritpal Singh Kundan, and Karmjit Khamba. I'd ask them all to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is a great day, and you were part of the celebration. I've got about three introductions to do, so you've got to bear with me. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you several members from the Sikh community who are celebrating Vaisakhi outside in the rotunda. I will ask them to stand as I call their names: Mr. Surinder Singh Hoonjan, president, from Gurdwara Mill Woods; Mr. Zora Singh Grewal, president, Gurdwara Nanaksar; Mr. Jagdev Singh Dhillon; and I think Mr. Lothy is sitting up there.

From the Sikh Federation: Kulmit Singh, president – I think he's gone – and Jasbir Singh, spokesman. We've got Siri Guru Nanak, Sikh Gurdwara; Mr. Pal Singh Purewal; Inderjit Singh Kundan; Joginder Singh Pannu, ex-president, northeastern recreation society, which is in my constituency; Bir Singh Chouhan; Kamwarjit Singh Grewal; Gurdwara Siri Guru Singh Sabha; Mehar Singh Gill, president; Mrs. Sra and Mr. Jagjit Gill, ex-president, from Singh Sabha, sitting right up in the front there. They are seated in the members' gallery, public gallery, and your gallery, Mr. Speaker, so please give a round of applause to all of them.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and to the House, my wife, Kamal Sandhu. She's put up with me for the last 29 years. She's here somewhere. She's worked so hard to raise our three children. All have become accountants. My younger brother always said that I'm younger. I'm not a young guy anymore. My daughter has become a nurse. My youngest is still in university.

Along with them, I've got a friend, Naib Sidhu, sitting in the members' gallery – please rise – and Kalwinder Toor, Inderjit Mullanpur, Sunny Briach, Mr. Power, Mr. Hothi, Bobby Gill, and Amerjit Dhaliwal. I will say, you know, that they're all my constituents and all my friends. They helped me out for the last two elections. Please give a round of applause to all my guests.

Mr. Speaker, I've got another introduction. I'm pleased to introduce to you several other members of the Sikh Edmonton Khalsa school, their teachers. I think the students are all gone. Dr. Kamaljit Gill, Kamaljit Kalar, and principals Surinder Hothi and Mrs. Deol. They've done a wonderful job to do O Canada, the national anthem, for the Sikhs, so please give them a round of applause.

I'm going to sit down. I may have one more.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you some additional members from the Sikh community Gurdwara Siri Guru Singh Sabha, which is, of course, located in my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie. I'd ask them to rise as I call their names: Mr. Mehar Singh Gill, the current president; Perminder Singh Khubar, the immediate past president; and Sukhjit Kaur Sra, the general secretary. I'd ask these guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

For my second introduction I would like to introduce to you and through you Mr. Jaswinder Singh Dhillon, my PC association president. Please rise. Joining him today is one of my board members, Mr. Sukhdarshan Singh Pannu; also, editor-in-chief of Des Pardes Times, Mr. Gurbhalinder Singh Sandhu; and, of course, a very good friend, Jasvinder Singh Binder. At this time I ask all of my guests, as they've risen, to please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am also pleased to introduce to you and through you many more guests from our Sikh community who are here from Calgary and from Edmonton for our Vaisakhi celebration. I would also like to thank them all for the love and support that they have given me during my elections and even after the elections. They are seated in both the members' and the public galleries, and I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Lakh, lakh wadania to all of our guests who were here for Vaisakhi. Thank you.

Now I'll recognize the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 56 incredibly smart students from the St. Augustine school in Ponoka, part of the town of Ponoka and the Lacombe-Ponoka constituency. With them are their fantastic teachers, Mr. Ken Hackett and Mrs. Sharon Hackett, and parent helpers Mr. Bernie Green, Mrs. Susan Bussiere, Mrs. Jennifer Parker, Ms Candace Coubrough, Mr. Romeo Mandanas, and Mrs. Rhonda Meredith. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you my guest, Melissa Whitney, my constituency assistant for Highwood in my Okotoks office. Now, I'm very fortunate to have Melissa on my team. She brings compassion and a wealth of knowledge to my office. If you notice that she looks a little bit like me, you won't be the first one who's observed that. She gets that a lot.

I would also like to introduce Melissa's mother, Rosemary Stevenson, as well as her two younger sisters, Jill and Hannah Stevenson. Now, both girls have been home-schooled throughout their entire school journey. A decision to move to Alberta several years ago was made in part because of the support Alberta gives to parents as they choose the educational model that best fits the needs of their children. Jill and Hannah are both excited to be able to see Alberta politics in action. I would like to now ask Melissa, Rosemary, Jill, and Hannah to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Wellness.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to introduce an inspirational leader in the work being done to reduce the burden of hypertension, or high blood pressure, in Alberta. This past Sunday, April 7, was World Health Day, and this year's focus was on high blood pressure, which is the leading risk factor for stroke, heart attacks, heart failure, aneurysms, peripheral arterial disease and is a cause of chronic kidney disease as well. Even a moderate elevation of blood pressure is associated with a shortened life expectancy, and early identification and management of high blood pressure is critical.

That's where Dr. Richard Lewanczuk comes in. He's not only one of Alberta's leading hypertension researchers; he's also a very well-respected clinician in the area of chronic disease management. Dr. Lewanczuk has authored over 100 published articles on hypertension and is currently looking for genetic factors that lead to hypertension. In this portfolio with Alberta Health Services he oversees delivery of both primary care and community care in the province. He is seated in the public gallery. I would ask our guest to rise, and I invite all members to give him a very warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two individual introductions today. The first one I'd like to do is to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Susan Wright. Susan is a lawyer from Calgary. We won't hold that against her. She, in fact, is VP of legal for a Calgary pipeline company. She has her own blog commentary, susanonthesox.com, which is very interesting reading. She is here as a citizen who is very interested in how we do business here. Please join me in welcoming Susan Wright.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker, is Dr. PearlAnn Reichwein. Now, Dr. Reichwein – there she is, standing – is a historian and professor at the University of Alberta, and she attends the Legislature today also as a concerned citizen. She wanted to come down and see how we're all doing this. She is particularly concerned that the government uphold strong public postsecondary institutions and that that not be compromised, that we do uphold that tradition of funding and independence and institutional autonomy. Please join me in welcoming Dr. PearlAnn Reichwein.

The Speaker: Are there any others? Edmonton-Manning, do you have another one?

Mr. Sandhu: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Quickly, please.

Mr. Sandhu: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you these members of the play Jija Ji NRI last weekend, a very educational drama. They're from India. I don't know where they're seated now, but I can say that Gurchet Singh Chitarkar and the dance groups are downstairs, the two groups, the Punjabi Folk Dance Academy and the Punjabi Heritage Foundation. I see the youth sitting in the gallery up there. Wherever you are, please rise and receive the warm welcome.

Hospital Parking for Veterans

Mr. Anderson: Yesterday we honoured and remembered the ultimate sacrifice of those 3,600 Canadian veterans who died and 7,000 who were injured doing what no other Allied army could do, conquering the critical enemy stronghold of Vimy Ridge during World War I. Many historians say that this victory was the actual moment when Canada turned from colony into country.

Imagine the utter disgust and betrayal veterans must feel today with their government and its most incompetently managed agency, Alberta Health Services. Not only did we learn yesterday that AHS has made the outrageous decision to end the practice of allowing veterans and their families free parking at hospitals so they can visit or be visited by loved ones; we also learned that a senior vice-president at AHS, making hundreds of thousands of dollars in salary and undeserved bonuses, when asked about the idea to end free parking for veterans, said, and I quote: why is this one group more worthy than others? Unquote. One has to wonder what kind of fantasy world one lives in who has the audacity to ask such a mind-numbing and ignorant statement.

Well, let me help this vice-president of God only knows what to understand what makes veterans different and more worthy of such small tokens of our appreciation such as free parking. It's because they sat in mud and blood and rain through thousands of cold nights for us. It's because they watched their friends have their limbs blown off, literally, right in front of their eyes. It's because they were willing to leave their beloved families behind and die for us so we wouldn't have to salute a swastika one day, Mr. Speaker.

I hope that clears it up for this AHS vice-president and some of the other thoughtless individuals who had a hand in this stupidity. Hopefully, it helps our own Health minister to stop his bumbling and get this ungrateful and morally reprehensible policy reversed today lest he forget what we owe our heroes.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Hospital Parking for Veterans

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the list of mistakes made by this Health minister keeps on growing. His latest blunder involves veterans, the men and women who fought for our freedoms. The Calgary poppy fund buys annual passes from Alberta Health Services so that veterans don't have to pay exorbitant parking fees when they go in for treatment. AHS is cancelling those passes, and when asked why, the response from an AHS VP is: why is this one group more worthy than others? Let me ask the minister. Veterans want to know: what's his answer to that question?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government needs no reminding from the Official Opposition about the important role and status of veterans in our society. The former Calgary health region had a practice of selling annual parking passes to the Royal Canadian Legion's poppy fund. That policy has been revisited not with respect to veterans but with respect to all special parking passes. Compassionate parking passes continue to be available to veterans and to others who require them. This is an issue of concern. This is the explanation for the change, and I believe it's the right decision.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this is stinginess at its worst. AHS officials seem to believe that veterans might be lending these passes to regular civilians. They're worried about potential abuses of the passes, that veterans are in effect cheating. Wow. It's not a giveaway. The Calgary poppy fund has spent close to a quarter-million dollars on these passes since 2006. Can the minister defend this mistreatment of those who defended our country?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will certainly be looking into the quotation that was referenced by the hon. member opposite earlier today. What I will tell you is that Alberta Health Services takes seriously the need to provide free parking on a compassionate basis to many people across the province, veterans among them. This change in policy, while perhaps misinterpreted or misrepresented by members opposite, is an attempt to extend that same consideration to veterans and others who need compassionate parking. We'll continue to support that.

Ms Smith: If we've misinterpreted, I welcome the opportunity for the Health minister to correct it today.

It is another tax, Mr. Speaker, on the men and women who have served and fought for Canada. Now, the Premier promised no new taxes, but we see different adjustments, increases, fees, charges, and program changes that really mean that citizens are paying more money to government. Will the minister clarify, immediately order AHS to reverse this decision, and continue to sell parking passes to Calgary veterans?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is where the hon. member crosses the line from raising a very legitimate question about an item that was in the news earlier this week to partisanship over taxation policy. There's no connection between the two. It's cheap, and it's unbecoming, and it's quite frankly reprehensible to do so. I've explained the policy change that Alberta Health Services has made. Compassionate parking passes continue to be available not just in Calgary but across the province to veterans and others.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, for your second main set of questions.

Prescription Drug Coverage

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Health minister has botched parking, Carmangay, Michener, expense claims, political donations, doctor negotiations, and executive bonuses, and now it's generic drugs. We asked about a number of delisted drugs earlier this week, and he said that everything was okay. But – oops – penicillin was left off the list of approved drugs. Alberta Health scrambled and put it back but at a price nearly three times higher than before. Now they're scrambling again because a dozen more medications were delisted without replacements. How many more mistakes are there?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition continues to be on the wrong side of this issue. We spent yesterday, in response to various questions, explaining the process for drug price listing and procurement in Alberta. As we said yesterday and as will continue to be the case, we set prices on a monthly basis. Companies have an opportunity to respond to those prices, and where they are not able to meet the prices, we have the opportunity to substitute alternate drugs. The only side to be on in this case is the side of Albertans. This province is leading the way in being a price-maker, not a price-taker, when it comes to drug prices, as the hon. member would lead us to believe.

Ms Smith: If only that were the case, Mr. Speaker.

Yesterday the minister said that we were undermining confidence in the health care system. No, we're not. We're pointing out a lack of confidence in this minister. The undermining is being done by the minister himself with blunder after blunder, excuse after excuse. When will the minister admit that he made a mistake, consult with pharmacists, and finally get this program right?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. leader doesn't want to talk about the interests of taxpayers, that's certainly up to her. I'm quite prepared to talk about the interests of pharmacists because we have considered and provided that. Today we announced an additional $40 million in support for pharmacists in connection with the transition of the price from 35 to 18 per cent. That's in addition to the $95 million we've already provided. What does the hon. member think that pharmacists won't find supportive about that initiative?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the rushed announcement today proves the minister got it wrong, as we've been saying all along. Pharmacists already rejected the proposal when he put it forward to them last week, and the minister didn't even have the decency to let them know that he was announcing this today. When is the minister going to start listening to the pharmacists and stop acting as if he knows best?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, to further enlighten the hon. member, first of all, the government of Alberta does not negotiate pharmacy prices directly with pharmacists, and that's the situation across the country. Pharmacist associations across Alberta work with government. They act as a body that we consult with when we're looking at changes in the system. We have in fact been consulting with RxA throughout, and I met with the president as recently as Monday. They are aware of these changes. It may not be everything that pharmacists are hoping for in terms of transition support, but it is the best that we are able to do, and we are proud to offer that assistance.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. Third main set of questions.

Ms Smith: I guess we'll find out with their day of action tomorrow, won't we, Minister?

Carbon Tax

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, it's been hard to get a clear answer on the carbon tax, so I'll try again. Now, the Premier promised there would be no tax increases, the Environment minister proposed jacking up the carbon tax from $15 a tonne to $40, the Energy minister says, "Well, something has to be done," but he's unwilling to go as far as $40, and all the while the Deputy Premier says that he doesn't know anything about any carbon tax increase. Simple question: will the government raise the current carbon tax from $15 a tonne to $40 a tonne? Yes or no?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, another Chicken Little. We've been dealing with them for about the last year or so, and none of their predictions ever pan out in reality. I can tell you this. We are committed to a policy that is in place right now where we will be diverting dollars into a fund for studying and improving our environmental performance. I know, Mr. Speaker, you made a ruling yesterday that I can no longer refer to them as climate change deniers, but we will continue our environmentally friendly practice, earning our social licence to sell our product throughout the world and promoting our industry throughout the world, unlike them, Chicken Little style.

Ms Smith: Well there's another word that ends in "ier" that I can't use in this Legislature either.

But, Mr. Speaker, let me tell you why Albertans don't trust this Premier or her government. Asked yesterday about this widely reported 40/40 carbon tax plan, she said this: 40/40 isn't a number that we've in any way landed on or proposed. Well, call in the RCMP because someone obviously snuck an extra slide into the Environment minister's presentation to industry. Someone's not telling the truth. Who is it?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how I can be any more clear. We are, we have been, and we will continue to be working hand in hand with industry, with Prime Minister Harper and the federal government. We will continue our commitment to striking the right balance between environmental responsibility, something they don't know much about, and making sure that our products get to the market and that we have the social licence, the social licence not only domestically but internationally, to sell our product. Unfortunately, this kind of rhetoric is not helping any.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the investment marketplace is sensitive to signals from government. If the messages are consistent, confidence rises and businesses invest higher. If the messages are all over the map and change daily depending on the minister answering the questions, then confidence is eroded. That's why we see job losses like we did in March. When will this government get its story straight and come clean on how much they are increasing the carbon tax?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, this government is deeply committed to ensuring that we get our products to market. The most fundamental security and stability that we could provide to producers in this province is secure access to global markets to get world price. I can tell you as somebody who in my previous life has been active in the capital markets that I understand the importance of stability. I understand, this government understands the importance of ensuring that we have access to markets for the products from this very province.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Climate Change Initiatives

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On Monday I asked about carbon levies high enough to transform behaviour, and the response was not about reducing greenhouse gases, not about incentives to change; it was about money. To the Minister of Energy: if it's all about the access to markets – and I assume that means someone buying Alberta's oil – why is the government failing to deal with the most common concern holding people back, and that is that this government has failed to take action to reduce greenhouse gases and failed to monitor and enforce a polluter-pays policy?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta, actually, is a leader on this continent in terms of what we have done to be responsible environmental stewards and finding that right balance between development, economic health, and environmental responsibilities, and that is where we continue to work.

Ms Blakeman: I think that's where you're failing.

I'll go to the Treasurer this time. Can the government justify why they collect a pitifully low carbon levy, bringing in $70 million a year, and then hand out $1.4 billion to most of the same companies to encourage carbon capture and storage, which is trying to stuff that same carbon underground? Why isn't it used, as the Liberals have suggested, for municipal public transit and green energy projects?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the hon. member is quite aware, given the fact that we're in the middle of estimates, that there have been a number of estimates done on the infrastructure file. I believe Energy's have already been done. She would know that GreenTRIP funding is already going to our municipalities for some very significant transportation initiatives, including in her home city of Edmonton.

In terms of the technology we have taken a very innovative approach, different than other jurisdictions, taking industry money to help solve industry problems in greenhouse gas emissions. The $1.4 billion number is not a one-year number; it's a number over a number of years.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I will give the government credit if it implements a 40/40, a 40 per cent reduction or pay $40 a tonne, but I have every confidence they will cave in to industry. Will the Minister of Energy be backing his colleague on the 40/40 or CAPP on their 20/20 or some other number altogether? Which will it be?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, this minister will back the Minister of ESRD and the people of Alberta in the interest of Albertans and looking after their interests.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I guess that if he's backing the minister of environment, that means he's not backing the Premier.

Funding for Long-term Care

Mr. Mason: This PC government cannot be trusted to look after Alberta seniors, and the Minister of Health doesn't know his facts. Yesterday the minister denied that AHS will be slashing $52 million from next year's budget for nursing homes that accommodate frail seniors, but AHS documents say otherwise. Will the minister set the record straight, admit that he misspoke, and restore funding for our most vulnerable citizens?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as we discussed yesterday, Alberta Health Services is not cutting funding for long-term care. In fact, in a letter submitted to the Calgary Herald, which I'll table later today, Alberta Health Services reports that it will be increasing spending as follows: long-term care by 4.4 per cent, or $39 million; community-based care by 9.9 per cent; and home care by 4.4 per cent. We are not seeing a reduction in these very, very important resources to support our seniors. To suggest the contrary is simply not true.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table a couple of documents as well: Alberta Health Services' health and business plan 2012-2015, indicating that $971 million is budgeted for continuing care and supports, and the AHS backgrounder from just a couple of days ago, where the number is $919 million.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Mason: I am allowed a preamble, so just shut up.

Mr. Speaker, why is the minister misleading Albertans about the cuts to long-term care, including the cuts that are taking place right now in Strathmore?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's certainly strong language. I think that if the hon. member checks, he will be prepared to admit that the difference between the actual amount spent by Alberta Health Services last year on long-term care and the amount that they have budgeted to spend next year on long-term care represents an increase of 4.4 per cent.

Mr. Mason: Well, I suppose we could argue about numbers all day, but here are the facts. Here's what's actually happening on the ground. The government promised during the election that seniors living in care facilities would have access to 24-hour nursing care, but today we hear that medically fragile seniors in Calgary are being moved into facilities without any nursing care of any kind, and in Strathmore they're closing 23 long-term care beds. Will the Minister of Health admit that the AHS budget is yet another broken promise to seniors and is a 100 per cent cut to the credibility of this PC government?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that with respect to an argument about numbers the hon. member began this accounting exercise yesterday, and he's welcome to do so, and I'll continue to respond with the facts. But to suggest that we're doing anything less in terms of putting a focus and an emphasis on providing appropriate continuing care for all seniors, including long-term care, is very far from the truth. In the case of Strathmore, for example, residents are being moved out of the hospital, where they're currently receiving long-term care, to a new facility in the community which includes 82 additional beds. That sounds like a pretty good fact.

Allyson McConnell Sentencing

Mr. Saskiw: I'm now going to quote verbatim from the McConnell family's statement so that you, Minister, can answer their questions. To quote the family, we fear that if Allyson . . . McConnell is deported to Australia, we will never see her face justice for the horror and terror she inflicted on two innocent babies before killing them . . . If the Alberta Government was having problems why did they not appeal to the Federal Government for assistance sooner? Why wait until just days before it is too late? . . . Nothing will bring the boys back, but we would like to see justice and common sense prevail.

Answer their questions, Minister.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I'm going to recognize you, and I want you to begin by clarifying whether this matter is now sub judice and therefore not allowed to be pursued in a certain way, or is it otherwise?

Mr. Denis: Further to your comments, Mr. Speaker, the actual judgment was pronounced in April 2012, and our department immediately launched an appeal subsequent to the judgment.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that under your watch, Minister, there was a five-month delay as the Crown asked the court for extensions of time when every single day mattered, will you finally own up to your incredible failure, apologize, and make sure the innocent victims and their family get to see justice?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, as we've said time and time again, there was no such delay. The appeal was filed immediately. We're dealing in a matter of two dead children here and their grieving family. Surely, this member would join me in recognizing that this is not time to politicize this issue.

Mr. Saskiw: It's their questions, Minister.

Given that you, instead of doing your job by ensuring that Allyson McConnell never left the province in the first place, are now potentially interfering in the judicial process by telling the courts what to do and giving defence lawyers another legal defence, what next debacle should Albertans expect from this out-of-touch, liberal, soft-on-crime Justice minister?

Mr. Denis: Again, Mr. Speaker, this appears to be some sort of a pattern here because last week this member was arguing that we didn't interfere. Now he's suggesting that we do interfere. I have nothing new to say here. The appeal will continue, and I will not stop until justice is served.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm going to review this matter when the House adjourns today, and I'll let you know whether or not it's in order to proceed with any further questions tomorrow, depending on how they're crafted.

Meanwhile the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the budget was introduced, we have heard absolutely nothing but fearmongering from the opposition about the impact of reducing generic drug prices, this from the same critics who only last fall were accusing this government of pandering to pharmacists by paying them to deliver new services. My question is to the Minister of Health. Since we know that pharmacies are a critical health service, what is being done to continue to ensure that pharmacists are compensated appropriately for the valuable work they provide?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's a great deal being done to support pharmacists in the transition to lower generic drug prices in Alberta. Earlier today we were pleased to issue a news release detailing additional support for pharmacists. It includes extension of a one-dollar addition to the dispensing fee for the next year that will apply to both public and private plans across the province. It includes expansion of the criteria for eligibility for the rural remote pharmacy grant. That will provide additional funds to rural and remote pharmacies to allow them to hire additional staff.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that members on the other side of the House are trying to cause confusion and fear among Albertans about the availability of needed medication, can the Minister of Health explain how he can ensure Albertans will have access to the drugs they require and will benefit from the lowered prices?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is true that for too long Alberta has paid a higher price than the rest of the world for generic drugs, and that, of course, is unacceptable. For example, the current price in Alberta for the antidepressant drug citalopram is 27 cents per pill. In the United States it's 3 cents, and in New Zealand it's 2 cents. That is a 1,250 per cent difference that the opposition thinks Alberta taxpayers should fund.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the opposition has repeatedly tried to undermine public confidence in health care, how will you protect this important public service from their extreme ideology that would see our public system dismantled?

The Speaker: Are you rising on a point of order, Airdrie?

Mr. Anderson: A point of order. Sure.

The Speaker: Okay. A point of order has been noted at 2:11.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I will say that the government will do is that we will continue to seek the lowest prices that we possibly can for generic drugs and, in fact, for all drugs that are listed in our drug benefit list. For far too long Alberta and Canada have been price-takers instead of price-makers when it comes to drug prices. We successfully introduced an 18 per cent price mark last month on a pan-Canadian basis, working with our colleagues in other provinces. We'll continue to do the same in the interests of patients and taxpayers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Michener Centre Closure

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The impending closure of the Michener Centre has been, simply put, poorly communicated, and the minister has left many questions unanswered. The minister's solution to these unanswered questions has often been the $10 million in capital he has to create new facilities to house the patients that are being removed from their homes. Can the minister clarify just how much of this $10 million will actually directly support the residents from Michener?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do have a $10 million fund set aside if we need to create additional capacity. I can't say right now whether we do need to create additional capacity. I'm informed that we have capacity out there. Whether we do or not depends on individual care plans, individual destinations developed with the individual, with the families, with the guardians, and with PDD staff. When those plans are done, I'll be able to speak more fully on that matter. If we need capacity, we'll be able to develop it.

Can the minister clarify how much of the $10 million will be required to cover the severance packages for the upwards of 400 staff that may lose their jobs?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I also don't know how many staff are going to be affected by this move. We're going to absorb some into the department, some into AHS. Some will transition to the service sector. Some will retire. So I can't speak to that right now. I have a fund that will cover the expected cost.

Mr. Wilson: Given that the closure of the Michener Centre will free up hundreds of acres of prime real estate in Red Deer, can the Minister of Infrastructure tell us what the estimated value of this land is today and what the plans are for this site once the facility closes?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, the policy is that when another government agency is no longer requiring property or buildings in the government, they turn it over to Infrastructure for disposal. That hasn't been done yet, so until Infrastructure has it turned over to them from the other department, we won't be dealing with it until it's ours.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Shaftesbury Ferry

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last fall the Shaftesbury ferry, also called the Tangent ferry, which acts as a vital link across the Peace River for people in my riding, was again pulled out of service due to transmission problems. When this ferry is out of commission, this is a massive inconvenience for people, causing over 160 kilometres of detour. The ferry is old, and repair parts are not always available. Every year there seems to be a reason for it not being in the water. My question is to the Minister of Transportation. Will you commit the funds required to have this ferry provide stable and predictable service?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a priority of our government to make sure the transportation system is available for Albertans. The hon. member has raised a legitimate concern. About a month before the ferry was scheduled to shut down last year, there was a mechanical failure that couldn't be fixed in that amount of time, but I am happy to report to the hon. member that over the winter people have done a lot of work. The ferry is ready and waiting to go, and when the river is able to accept traffic, then the ferry is ready to provide for that.

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. member.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the province is currently studying options for crossings of the Peace River, including two ferries and ice bridges, what consultation will this government have with local residents, businesses, and officials before any long-term changes are put in place?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a good question because we are looking at making some changes, as the hon. member said. I want to ensure the hon. member that we will be talking to the local municipalities and other interested parties that we can identify or certainly to ones that come forward to us because we recognize that when we make changes to the transportation network, it can affect different people in different ways. As this Premier has committed to, we will listen to Albertans and, after so doing, take action which we believe is in their best interests.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given the vital nature and the location of this ferry, will the minister inform the House of what plans are in place to ensure that if the ferry requires maintenance or is out of commission, something is and will be done to reduce the massive detour this causes?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member I will say that we have a maintenance contractor in place with a responsibility to keep the ferry working. We also understand that it's not new, so we are monitoring it closely. I appreciate hearing from the hon. member, and I want him to know that we don't take this lightly. We will be working hard to keep it in service because, as he's pointed out, it's an important piece of infrastructure for Albertans, and the mobility of Albertans is a high priority of our ministry.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, yesterday in this Legislature we marked the Battle of Vimy Ridge, where almost a century ago our troops faced trial by fire and triumphed but not before 3,598 Canadians died. Many Albertans died that day, and more have served in our military over the history of our great nation, putting themselves in harm's way to protect our freedoms. And how does Alberta Health Services thank them? By cutting parking passes discounted to veterans getting medical treatment. To the Minister of Health: why are you insulting our veterans just to save a couple of shekels?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this question has been asked and answered already today. I'll say again to this hon. member, as I did to the previous questioner, that this is not taking away from veterans. This is a policy change at AHS which is intended to provide a broader range of compassionate parking passes to all people, including veterans, who require that assistance.

Mr. Hehr: Can the minister not see why the public is outraged at the cancellation of these discounted parking passes for our veterans when the cost of this program is less than the bonus given to the AHS CEO this year?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can certainly agree that the interests of veterans are uppermost on the minds of every member of this House and all Albertans, but to attempt to take this issue and somehow politicize it, to suggest that veterans have been excluded in some way from the opportunity to receive parking passes on a compassionate basis is not true. The policy is clear. Veterans are included. Anything to the contrary is simply cheap political tactics.

Mr. Hehr: Well, given that Alberta Health Services has their head buried somewhere where the sun does not shine if they deem it acceptable to cut passes for veterans getting medical treatment, my hope is that the minister doesn't. Will you direct Alberta Health Services to reinstate those passes to veterans and their families, who deserve our respect and gratitude for their service to our community?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as a result of this policy change, veterans are no worse off than they were prior, in the previous policy under the Calgary health region. In fact, the passes to which the hon. member refers were only available in the former Calgary health region. They were not available across Alberta. It is true they were available to veterans. Now they are available to veterans and others who require the support and assistance of this type, that they so richly deserve.

Secondary Ticket Sales

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Alberta getting a ticket to your favourite concert is about as likely as getting struck by lightning. Tickets to events sell out in minutes. Prices on resale sites are double, triple, or quadruple the price, and secondary sellers are making a fortune. With zero legislation to stop scalpers and protect consumers, ticket buyers are handcuffed, frustrated, and broke. To the Minister of Service Alberta: will this minister admit that the lack of legislation abandons consumer protection and safeguards scalpers?

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is an issue that we take very, very seriously. The fact is that a few jurisdictions have brought forth some regulatory changes in this area, and they've found that they're actually not working. One of the biggest reasons for the unavailability of tickets is bots, the use of computer technology that purchases all the available tickets online. Now, this is something that requires crossjurisdictional co-operation to work, and we're working on it.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, given that other provinces like Manitoba have actually done something to protect their constituents and given that Service Alberta has already spent four years reviewing, considering, contemplating, monitoring, consulting, and studying this issue, to the same minister: why won't he stand up, start doing his job, and protect Albertans for a change?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would invite the member to consult with his fellow NDP colleagues in Manitoba, and he'll find that what they did is actually not leading to any changes. It's not protecting consumers any more. On this side of the House we like bringing forth changes that actually affect the lives of everyday Albertans. We don't like to stay up in la-la land. We don't like to have just ideological principles, far on the right on one side, far on the left on the other side. Pragmatic, real-world solutions right here.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Far out to lunch on that side.

Given that not every Albertan is a Tory MLA who receives complimentary tickets to premier events and given that Albertans are forced to pay an arm and a leg to attend concerts in this province, to the same minister: why do Albertans have to leave the province to be able to afford tickets to see Mumford & Sons?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, here's the deal. This legislative Chamber is a fine avenue of theatre. What we have coming from that side of the House is nothing more than the cheapest imitation of Broadway one can find in Alberta. This is a ticket that every Albertan can get. All they have to do is tune in to channel 13 in Calgary, and they can see some of the wildest acting imaginable coming from that part of the House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, if the minister has tickets to Seger, I'll take them, by the way.

Funding for Postsecondary Education

Mr. McAllister: When news of Campus Alberta's mandate letters broke, the minister of advanced education bragged about being the, quote, maestro who would finally be able to get all 26 postsecondary institutions singing from the same song sheet. Well, now that his plan is being universally shredded by schools, students, professors, mayors, pretty much anybody with a pulse, he is backing off, saying that it's been in the works for 11 years. To the maestro – pardon me – the minister of advanced ed: which is it? Are you going to own up to the centralization plan, or are you going to slough it off because you know it's a recipe for disaster?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I tabled documents in the House yesterday showing that Campus Alberta was developed by 26 participating schools some 11 years ago and that they have been participating in meetings to build Campus Alberta up until this year, January of 2013. There is nothing new in this, and they all know about it. As a matter of fact, all postsecondary institutions have been encouraging this government to set up a framework where they can better collaborate, find administrative efficiencies, and improve the experience for students.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Minister. And to that point, to the same minister: if this centralization plan was indeed the government's plan all along, since 2002, as you say, why on earth did it take 11 years to get to this point, why are postsecondary institutions caught off guard, and why didn't you just campaign on it?

Mr. Lukaszuk: The only person caught off guard, I imagine, is this member, Mr. Speaker. I find it rather unusual that a party that is running campaigns and continues to profess slashing and burning would not encourage our postsecondary institutions to look inside of their administration, find efficiencies, make sure that our students' tuition doesn't rise anywhere, make sure that the cost to taxpayers doesn't rise anywhere but focus instead on raising the quality of education that we provide to our kids.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, given that hundreds of students were apparently caught off guard today as they crashed the Premier's office in Calgary to voice their anger over the centralization plan, given the disastrous results of your centralization plans in primary care, ambulance services, and land planning, will you please reconsider your decision to appoint yourself maestro and let our 26 postsecondary institutions conduct their own music?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the Wildrose has covered every ministry. They want to balance the budget, and they don't want to pass any debt on to the next generation, but they will refuse any program adjustment in any ministry on this side of the House. [interjections] Well, there is no magic. The fact is that we will continue to focus on students. As minister of advanced education, as professors and administrators education is not for us. It's for young students, and we will be focusing on our students. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, and a few others over here, please, that's enough, okay? I'm going to institute a new rule tomorrow, and here's how it's going to sound. If I see you heckling over the line, interrupting your own leaders, perhaps, or other members – and the same goes for this side – I'm not going to bother putting you onto a vocal list. I'm just going to not recognize you at all. I'm going to start that tomorrow. So, please, let's have some respect for process, let's have some respect for this Assembly, and for heaven's sake let's have some decency and respect for each other.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by Little Bow.

Transition of Michener Centre Residents

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the government has decided to close Michener Centre in Red Deer-North, as we've heard earlier today. There are still 230 residents with developmental disabilities that call Michener their home; 105 will remain, and 125 will be moved to other homes in the community. Some of the 125 residents are medically fragile and have lived there all their lives, some for over 50 years. They are happy, and they are thriving. To the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities: where will we be able to find safe and suitable homes with specially trained caregivers for 125 persons with developmental disabilities . . .

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. I answered a similar question just before. I'm informed that there are suitable homes. Obviously, we have to work with AHS, with service providers. We may have to develop capacity. I've got $10 million earmarked to do that if necessary. Not all of the homes will be in the Red Deer area. Not all of the families are actually from Red Deer. We are now going to work with every individual, with their caregivers, their families, their guardians to develop individualized care plans that determine the care that they need, the supports that they need, and the destination that they're going to.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you for the response. I do appreciate that you're answering these questions more than once because they are very important questions.

So with the long waiting list for long-term care, how long will our PDD seniors have to wait to get into the right care facility with staff who are specially trained for those with complex needs like developmental disabilities and Alzheimer's.

Mr. Oberle: Again, Mr. Speaker, working in partnership with AHS, we expect that there will be facilities available right away. Some of our staff will transition into Alberta Health Services; some will transition into other places in our department. I expect that will happen right away. Obviously, I need to stress that nobody – absolutely nobody – will be moved from that facility until there's a care plan in place, appropriate supports that are supported by the family are in place, and an appropriate destination is identified for them.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Minister. I'll hold you to that.

Will the specially designed dental clinic at Michener Centre, on the south side, called Marwayne dental clinic, that provides adequate space for wheelchairs and other disability equipment and has specially designed dental chairs and equipment for people with developmental disabilities and that serves all PDD clients who choose to go there, be allowed to remain open?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, my immediate concern is the development of care plans and the transition of the residents of the Michener Centre. We will look at the future of Michener's dental services and other services there – physical therapy, nursing – alongside the needs of the individuals that remain at the Michener Centre in the group home setting and the individuals in the community, and we'll determine the future of those facilities. That planning is under way right now.

Funding for Private Schools

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Speaker, five years ago this government agreed to fund a portion of maintenance and operation of independent schools. I support both independent and public schools as important educational choices in Alberta. Budget 2013 cancelled this support and put independent schools in Little Bow and across Alberta in jeopardy. One school in my riding has a $600,000 shortfall now. To the Minister of Education: why does this government think it's okay to treat independent schools as secondary to institutes by yanking important support which will inevitably hurt our students?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, this is a great example of the balance that we try to strike in here every day. We have one side of the House that wants us to increase funding, and we have the other side of the House over here that wants us to cut funding to private schools. On this pragmatic side of the House what we're doing is that we're supporting choice. We are funding those private schools. We are supporting those private schools. But one thing we don't support with the private schools is the capital. We fund the instruction. We had to make some tough choices this year to make sure that for every new student coming into those schools, their instructional dollars were there and we could fund those kids. That's where we're focusing our dollars.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The problem with that is that you cut it with zero consultation. Why has this government deliberately undermined independent school operations with no consultation?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we talk to the independent schools all the time. There were some very difficult choices to be made in this budget, and we made those choices along with school boards, along with the independent schools association, and along with the ATA, the ASBA, CASS, and ASBOA. All those groups came together in a room with me and my staff to help us with some of those choices, but they were not easy choices, and everyone has some impact.

The one thing we should note is that the overall funding to private schools went up, not down. If we want to look at one envelope – there are about 20 different envelopes of funding for school boards – you'll always be able to pick one that went down.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Speaker, they're not running three different sets of books like our government is right now.

To the same minister: can I explain to my constituents why this government has decided to pick winners and losers between public and independent schools?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, that's not true at all. I think this is a great example, again, of the conditional policies of the Wildrose, which some of their members found out about in the last policy conference here. They want us to cut and balance the budget on the condition that it doesn't affect their constituencies. They don't want us to take on any debt, but apparently if that debt is for schools or projects in their constituencies, then they're the first to line up for the photo ops. On this side of the House we're investing in families and communities. We've got one policy, one direction for this province, and the Premier is leading that.

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, Calgary parents are fortunate to have a great deal of choice when it comes to education. Public, separate, francophone, charter, and private schools are all available to address the unique learning needs of Calgary kids. However, some parents in my constituency are concerned that budget cuts to private schools might limit some of those choices. My first question is to the Minister of Education. Why have private schools like Janus Academy, which is designed for special needs, been singled out and their plant and operation funds eliminated in the provincial budget?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, no school boards or schools got singled out in this budget. One of the things that we tried to go to great efforts to do was to make sure that all school boards and all schools were treated fairly. But at the end of the day it's about the students. We need to put the students first. We need to make sure that for every student that walks in the door and for those new students walking in the door, those instructional dollars are there. Like I've said, we've had to make some tough choices to live within our means and accommodate the 11,000 more students we're going to have next year and make sure the instructional dollars are there for them.

Ms Jansen: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Education: are these private schools that support special-needs kids seeing the same kind of increases as public schools for inclusive education?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the private schools do a fantastic job, and the Janus Academy is one of those great examples. It's a great school in Calgary that supports kids with autism. But they are funded differently than the other schools. They don't receive inclusion funding like the public school boards do. They're funded specifically for the needs of that particular child. In Budget 2013 those dollars are still there and those incremental dollars for those new students coming in the building are there.

Ms Jansen: Finally, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: just for clarity's sake if the plant and operation funding had to be cut, how is it the private schools overall are seeing an increase in funding? Was a new program added?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the member is right, and she's been a great advocate for the schools in her constituency. There were envelopes of funding that were adjusted, there were envelopes of funding that were eliminated, but overall funding to private schools went up. That's because we're going to fund every new student that comes in the system, and because there are more students projected to be in those private schools next year, those private schools will have more money next year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Alberta Health Services Budget

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The latest quarterly performance report from AHS paints a disturbing picture of a bloated health care system that is failing patients from one corner of the province to the other. In central Alberta in 2005 61 per cent of patients were admitted from the ER within the wait time standard of eight hours. Today it's a pitiful 43 per cent. But, even worse, in that same time health care spending has exploded by $7 billion, a 65 per cent increase. Minister, why are my constituents paying more and waiting longer for health care while you just keep producing ever-more pitiful results?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the hon. member knows we'll have an opportunity to go through the detailed Health budget in the estimates process. What I will say that is most interesting is the propensity of the member opposite and his colleagues to commensurately complain about changes in health care funding, growth this year of 3 per cent compared to an average of 9 per cent over the last year, and at the same time complain about performance in his own constituency. The fact is that we have an increase of over 5 per cent in emergency department visits in this province over the last year. Our staff are doing an excellent job in meeting those needs, and we have plans in place to serve people in the community.

Mr. Fox: Minister, your performance is unacceptable.

Again to the Health minister: given that patients in B.C. wait five months for cornea transplants and in Alberta wait two years, five times longer, what is the government going to do about the 700 people on the cornea transplant waiting list who are slowly going blind, waiting years for the proper care that they deserve?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a complex issue that is felt across the country. The hon. member is correct that wait times for cornea transplants are far too long. We are looking at opportunities both to source corneas outside the province and also, more importantly, to encourage Albertans through the work of one of my colleagues to donate organs and tissue to make them available for this very important purpose.

Mr. Fox: To the minister again: given the health care spending is way up and results are way down, what are the consequences for your executives that are sucking up hundreds of millions of dollars in expenses and bonuses, leaving patients to suffer on such long waiting lists?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member should know anything about the Alberta Health Services proposed budget for 2013-14, he should know that AHS has already announced they have eliminated pay at risk, they have already announced they intend to reduce management positions by 10 per cent over the next three years, and they have already announced that they are freezing the budget line for management salaries. That's the kind of leadership Albertans are looking for, it's the kind of leadership I as minister am looking for, and they should be recognized for providing that leadership.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, before we proceed with Members' Statements, could we have your permission to revert to two brief introductions?

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Staff Sergeant Rein Tonowski, who oversees 911 and police dispatch, and Kim Pudde, 911 supervisor for the Edmonton Police Service. As heads of Edmonton's 911 call centre they and their staff are the first point of contact for any Edmontonian who dials 911 in an emergency. I know this service is something that we cannot take for granted, and I'm grateful Staff Sergeant Tonowski and Ms Pudde are here today to thank them and their colleagues across Alberta for their tireless contributions to public safety and to have them here as we introduce this legislation that will bolster 911 service in our province. I would ask them to rise again and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, are your guests here now?

Mr. Young: My guests have departed, but I would like to acknowledge them.

The Speaker: For the record.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of seniors from the West End Christian Reform Church, affectionately known as West of 60. They were seated in the members' gallery, and I would like the guests to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: I'll now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore for her member's statement.

International Day against Bullying, Discrimination, Homophobia and Transphobia

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today marks the Day of Pink, the annual International Day against Bullying, Discrimination, Homophobia and Transphobia in schools and communities. On this day communities across the world unite in celebrating diversity and raising awareness to prevent bullying. Last year over 8 million people participated. This year I suspect it will be even more.

The Day of Pink was inspired by an incident that took place in a Nova Scotia high school in 2007, when a student had to endure name-calling and threats of violence simply because he chose to wear a pink shirt on the first day of grade 9. Unfortunately, it was probably not the only bullying that happened in schools that day except in this case, Mr. Speaker, two students who witnessed the bullying decided to take action, purchased pink shirts, and distributed them to other students. The following morning the school foyer was a sea of students wearing pink. The message was clear. Bullying can be stopped when bystanders take action. We can say loudly and clearly that bullying in any form, anywhere is unacceptable.

I am proud that in Alberta we have a new Education Act that contains some of the most effective and proactive antibullying legislation in the country, an act that clearly states that everyone has a role to play in promoting healthy relationships and preventing bullying. The government has also developed the website bullyfreealberta.ca to help children, youth, and adults learn about bullying and how to stop it. There is also a 24-hour helpline connecting to community-based supports and resources to help young people dealing with bullying when it happens because no one should have to endure being bullied.

I am proud to wear pink today along with my fellow MLAs and to stand up against bullying. Together we can build a world without bullying.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition.

Private Health Care Services

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The release of the Alberta Health Services 2013 budget and the March 2013 performance standards are graphic depictions of what broken promises from this PC government mean to the front lines of our health care system. This PC government has shown time and time again that they can't be trusted to stand up for Albertans. In fact, they've repeatedly supported for-profit privatization or moves towards two-tier, American-style health care.

This PC government's encouragement of private health clinics such as Helios and Copeman means that regular Albertans don't receive the care that they deserve in a timely way. This was the revelation that came out of the queue-jumping inquiry, but it wasn't a revelation to Alberta's New Democrats, Mr. Speaker. We've always said that this government's experimentation with privatization would lead to serious problems in our health care system.

This ongoing experimentation is all too evident in seniors' care. Instead of encouraging affordable and accessible care, the government routinely closes public long-term care facilities only to replace them with for-profit continuing care. We see it again this week, Mr. Speaker, in the AHS budget, which cuts $52 million from long-term care. Over 1,200 seniors are already waiting for long-term care and acute-care beds in the community. If a government can't manage to protect and strengthen our health care system, if they break their promises and cry poor instead of providing stable funding, that just means the government has failed Albertans.

Alberta's New Democrats know that we can strengthen our health care system. We should be reducing emergency room wait times and freeing up expensive acute-care hospital beds by expanding home care and long-term care and increasing the number of mental health care beds. Instead of cutting seniors' drug benefits, we would be giving seniors a break on prescription drugs by capping their copayments at $25 a month. We need to make sure that every Albertan has access to a family doctor.

Health care is the most important priority for Albertans, Mr. Speaker. It's just too bad that it's not a priority that's shared by this government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by Sherwood Park.

Vaisakhi Day

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Waheguru ji ka Khalsa, Waheguru ji ki fateh. It's my great pleasure to rise today and speak about our Vaisakhi Day celebration that took place today in the Legislature. On behalf of our Sikh community we want to thank you and all MLAs past and present, including the hon. Ken Kowalski, Speaker, and former Premier Ed Stelmach. They were here at our first Vaisakhi celebration.

Today marks the 314th anniversary of the celebration of Khalsa by Shri Guru Gobind Singh Ji, which formalizes the Sikh community and protects the important principles of truth, justice, and equality. Vaisakhi also reminds us of our responsibility to our families, to our society, and to each other. This second aspect is that the farmers cut their crops and celebrate harvest season, which I know, Mr. Speaker, you witnessed in 2003 on your first visit to Punjab, India. The harvest season begins with the Vaisakhi celebration, and our farmers are happy to greet crops.

Today members of the Sikh communities in Edmonton and Calgary came together to celebrate with us. They are all very proud Canadians. The Nagar Kirtan celebration is coming on May 19, 2013. You know that the communities gather and walk from one Sikh temple to another in the Mill Woods area. Our Sikh community is hoping that the participation will be around 20,000 people so they can raise money for the food bank and other good causes.

More good news: our Premier is going to be part of the celebration as well as you, Mr. Speaker. You are always there with the community. I hope more Canadians will join us and understand the community. The Sikh communities are proud to say that they are Canadian. Thanks, Canada. You give us a lot. God bless our country, Canada.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Development of Pipeline Infrastructure

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to express my solidarity with our Premier's mission to support development of pipeline infrastructure in the United States. My constituency is a hub of pipelines and petrochemical processing. We have lived side by side with petroleum infrastructure for over 60 years, and we are proud of the companies that bring our natural resources to market.

Pipelines have criss-crossed our province, this country, and all of North America for a long time now and have proven safe and effective compared to just about any other mode of transport. Today the technology is better than it has ever been and will continue to improve going forward.

I applaud those who are concerned about our environment and celebrate the advances in technology that are reducing emissions in the processing and use of petroleum. I'm also pleased to note the long list of alternative electrical generating facilities that are gradually displacing coal generation in this province.

Mr. Speaker, our environmental commitments past, present, and future clearly show that we are the world's most environmentally responsible energy supplier. Alberta is the first place in North America to require by law all large industry across all sectors to take action to curb greenhouse gases. We have a $15 per tonne price on carbon for those who do not meet legislated limits, and we direct it to a clean technology fund that is sitting now at $312 million.

Alberta is a province of advancement, and I will continue to support responsible energy development in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

2:50 Compensation for Pharmacy Services

Mr. Anglin: Mr. Speaker, this government keeps telling Albertans that the changes made to the pharmaceutical services and the price changes of generic drugs will not affect rural pharmacies. The facts tell that story differently. Tomorrow the owners of pharmacies in the towns of Rimbey, Rocky Mountain House, and Sundre will close their doors for two hours to protest this government's mismanagement of generic drugs and the government's refusal to consult with pharmacists. Dictating is not consulting, and today's rejection of this government's announcement makes that clear.

Pharmacists and staff at these pharmacies will stand outside their locked doors and greet customers to explain how this government's policies are seriously jeopardizing access to pharmacy services in these communities. Perhaps this government doesn't get it. If rural pharmacies close, it will leave rural Albertans without access to this critical component of patient care. Rural pharmacists are only asking this government to consult with them, in effect to listen. As one of the pharmacists put it in this week's Rimbey Review: "We need to get the government's attention. They certainly have shown little interest in our profession and the services we provide."

Mr. Speaker, these protests are against this government's refusal to give pharmacists the time of day regarding these changes. This heavy-handed approach to this problem is destabilizing pharmacies across the province, and it has already caused at least one pharmacy in rural Alberta to close its doors. I support the pharmacists and the goals of this protest. This is serious stuff, and this government needs to stop marginalizing rural pharmacies and pretending there's no problem. The owners of the pharmacies don't take this temporary closure of their doors lightly, and neither should this government.

Introduction of Bills

Bill 15 Emergency 911 Act

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 15, Emergency 911 Act. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

The intent of this legislation is to improve 911 services by supporting local 911 call centres so they can continue providing Albertans with effective service today and in the future. The act will help address challenges facing Alberta's 911 call centres in several ways. It will allow for the creation of province-wide standards, processes, and procedures in collaboration with stakeholders. It will establish consistent liability protections for people involved with 911 services. It will support 911 centres' efforts to integrate next generation 911 technology like GPS and texting, and it will introduce penalties for frivolous or vexatious 911 calls. Very importantly, it will ensure equity amongst phone users in contributing to the cost of 911 services.

Mr. Speaker, I look forward to speaking more about the benefits of this legislation. I'm confident it will result in improved 911 services for Albertans. I am proud to table Bill 15, the Emergency 911 Act, and move that this bill be read for a first time.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Bill 16 Victims Statutes Amendment Act, 2013

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Justice continues to put victims first and maintain public security. Accordingly, I am pleased to rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 16, the Victims Statutes Amendment Act, 2013. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to this Assembly.

The bill would simplify the financial benefits application process for victims of crime; honour victims of crime by giving them more options for how to present their case to the Criminal Injuries Review Board, otherwise known as CIRB; and strengthen the protection of their confidential information. Bill 16 also touches on victims' restitution as it relates to the civil forfeiture office.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will ensure a process to respond to the forfeiture action on items gained through illegal activity. At the same time it will help prevent baseless and frivolous legal actions that would delay the forfeiture process and continue turning bad money into good by using the proceeds of crime to support victims. This legislation will ensure victims of crime in Alberta continue to be treated with dignity and respect and criminals are held financially accountable for their actions.

I therefore move first reading of Bill 16. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter from Denis Melrose, who is the owner-operator of a pharmacy, and he outlines the recent changes and the devastation that will happen both to his pharmacy and to others.

The second letter is, frankly, the best letter I've received from a constituent in my five years in the office. It's from Amanda J. Laurans. She is a single mother who adopted two special-needs children from foster care in Calgary. She has a great deal of difficulty with finding daycare. She notes, and I quote: "The burden of childcare is commonly primarily arranged and executed by the working mothers. The $100/month taxable child payments from the federal government do not cover one tenth of regular daycare expenses in Calgary." She looks at it closely, and she comes to the conclusion that . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. It's important to just get on with the tabling, please. We're going to tighten this up a little bit as well.

Mr. Hehr: It wasn't that long.

The Speaker: That's okay.

Anyone else? I have the hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the Minister of Health.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the requisite copies of a letter sent to me and also to the Premier about the education system and the independent schools. Janny and Joop Harthoorn from Coaldale sent it. They're also grandparents down there. They're very concerned about the fact that the money was pulled for plant operations and maintenance as a trade-off a number of years ago, and they feel that maybe the Education minister should revisit this.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter to the editor written by Chris Mazurkewich, chief operating officer of Alberta Health Services, confirming the increases to long-term care and continuing care budgets in the 2013-14 proposed AHS budget. This letter corrects information incorrectly reported by media on Monday.

Mr. Speaker, I have a second tabling. It is the appropriate number of copies of price comparisons of the top 20 generic ingredients paid for by the government of Alberta versus ingredient costs in the United States and New Zealand. This is prepared by the University of British Columbia's Centre for Health Services and Policy Research.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present six tablings. I have the requisite copies. Now, the first is from Darryl Hutchings, a neighbour of mine in Stirling, concerned with Human Services reducing the number and scope of agencies such as the Support, Hope, Opportunity & Progress in Stirling programs for persons with developmental disabilities.

I also have a letter from a man who is concerned about his son's future. He's in pharmacy right now here at the U of A. He's concerned about what he's seeing, and he's written me a letter about that.

Thirdly, three letters from the Fisher family, who run a pharmacy in Magrath, concerned about . . .

The Speaker: I'm sorry to interrupt, hon. member, but I'm obliged to because it's 3 o'clock. I'll let you proceed if we get unanimous consent to go beyond 3 o'clock for the Routine. The Government House Leader has indicated a necessity to rise at this time. I'll ask you to take your seat, and I'll come back and recognize you if the opportunity provides itself.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask for the unanimous consent of the House to waive Standing Order 7(7) and allow us to complete the Routine.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I'll ask one question. Does anybody object to what the hon. Government House Leader is proposing?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Accordingly, we will continue with the Routine.

Hon. member, please continue with your presentation.

Mr. Bikman: I'll be brief. Three letters from the Fisher family. Pharmacists are concerned about what's been happening. Contrary to what we've been told, they are concerned.

Finally, an epistle from Deanna Walker, concerned with the South Saskatchewan regional plan.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Human Services, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to table the requisite number of copies of a letter written from myself to the Member for Calgary-Mountain View responding to written questions 24 and 25, and even though Written Question 16 was rejected, we have made the effort to try and provide the information which was essentially requested in the question even though the question wasn't worded in a way in which we could accept it.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by the hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to put forward the requisite copies of an article by the CBC news dated April 7, 2013, in which the McConnell family questions the Justice minister's actions in the case.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Two tablings today. First, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition which calls on the government to take immediate action to reverse the many cuts in the 2013 budget which will negatively affect seniors. Some examples on the petition include the property tax assistance grant and the seniors' drug benefit. Today I'm tabling 63 signatures. Thank you.

Secondly, I'd like to table 50 more copies of e-mail submissions that Albertans have sent to the Premier and copied me on. These are just some of the many hundreds of these e-mails that my office has received. They call on the Premier to honour her government's promise to Albertans not to evict some of Alberta's most vulnerable citizens from their home in Red Deer's Michener Centre.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others?

If not, I would like to take an opportunity to table five copies of a report by the Child and Youth Advocate, who is an officer of this Legislature, copies that were provided to my office yesterday, entitled Youth Aging out of Care: Special Report. Copies of this particular tabling will also be provided to each of you as members of the House.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Johnson, Minister of Education, school jurisdictions' audited financial statements for the year ended August 31, 2011, sections 1, 2, and 3.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I think we can proceed to points of order. I believe, hon. Member for Airdrie, you had a point of order, and I would ask you to give the citation and proceed with it now.

Point of Order

Questions by Government Members

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, thank you. The citation is 23(1), in particular, "introduces any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly." I don't think we need to spend much time on it. You did rule on this when the House leader for the Liberals, the Member for Edmonton-Centre, rose on an identical point of order, and that is that, again, referring to the Member for Banff-Cochrane, he used his question in order to attack the policies and ask clarification from the government minister on the policies of the opposition, in this case the Official Opposition.

Of course, that's not a proper use of questioning in question period. You've ruled on this very clearly in the past. You know, question period is a valuable time. I know the government side is very preoccupied with the Official Opposition right now given certain things going on, polling and so forth. I would use that time that they have over there to question their ministers on issues that matter to Albertans, not to misuse question period in that way.

Obviously, they get the last word in question period on all questions. We don't get that. If they'd like the Official Opposition leader to rise and answer their questions, we can arrange that if we can get unanimous consent. That would be great, but we can't do that. It's unparliamentary, and you've ruled on this before.

The Speaker: I'll recognize the deputy House leader in just a moment.

Hon. Member for Airdrie, send me a note as to when that ruling was made. I don't recall it vividly off the top of my head, but if you have it handy, I'd appreciate that.

In the meantime let's hear from the Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't able to hear what the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane was saying because of all the noise in the House, but I can suggest to you that as a private member the Member for Banff-Cochrane has the right to ask any minister any questions in this House. He asked the minister a question of grave concern to his constituents, and I don't see any point of order.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Airdrie, did you wish to clarify?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, I would like to clarify. It was actually not yourself that was in the chair at the time that that was made. My bad.

The Speaker: Thank you. It didn't ring a bell to me, but I will look up what the Deputy Speaker may have said or ruled at that time.

In the meantime I'm going to receive this in the following manner. We frequently have to be reminded what the purpose of question period is. To put it in the shortest, simplest terms, it is basically an opportunity for all private members, whether they are sitting on the government side or in the opposition benches, to hold the government to account. That is the fundamental purpose of question period.

However, we also understand that question period carries with it a lot of what we call cut and thrust. There will be times when government members feel compelled to return the favour and hold the opposition, perhaps, to account. We allow some of that because it is within their purview to answer in whatever way they want. There is nothing that outlaws them from doing that.

However, even though I haven't yet read what the Deputy Speaker said on this topic, let us be reminded that it is not often the case that government holds the opposition to account, but it is quite entertaining when it happens. So let us be mindful of that and receive today's point of order as a matter of clarification on that point, and if necessary, I will come back with more on it at a later time.

Was there a second point of order? There was no second point of order? Very well, then.

Statement by the Speaker

House Procedure

The Speaker: I would like to take a couple of minutes here to clarify a few things. First of all, I'm going to ask House leaders, if they would, please, to get together and discuss something that has been on my mind and on the minds of many members over the last several years but in this last year in particular, and that is with respect to the introduction of guests and what is an appropriate length of time for an introduction.

Now, there are days, as you well know, when we have many, many guests who need to be introduced. Today, obviously, was one of those days, and we've had others. So in the interest of trying to get to all the people who have guests that they want to introduce, we should all be mindful and respectful of the time in this House and keep our introductions to a reasonable length of time. We don't have a set time for it. It leaves the Speaker sometimes in an awkward position when there is somebody being introduced on a particularly sensitive matter. We've had introductions of people who are here suffering from cancer or suffering from some other disability or some other serious problem, and it's very awkward to stand up and try and cut someone off, as it were. It's very awkward. Put yourself into the Speaker's role in that regard. I use that as one example. Then there are other occasions that require other forms of respect.

I would ask House leaders to please get together and talk about what they feel they would like to pass on to the Speaker and, in turn, to the House by way of an appropriate length of time for the introduction of guests.

The second thing I'd like to comment on is the rule of anticipation for questions in the House. Today, for example, we had a question that was asked with respect to Michener Centre. The question that was asked about Michener Centre dealt with some financial matters, and quite frankly the Speaker was distracted mildly during the time and missed it. I think it was Calgary-Shaw who was asking a question about something to do with $10 million or something to that effect, and the question was answered by the appropriate minister. Then there was another question with respect, I think, to land values and so on.

Now, ordinarily those questions are very good questions, and they would be allowed. However, when you have estimates for that department or that issue on the same day, which is the case today, then those questions are what we call in anticipation. Because they deal with money matters and therefore they are a budget question, they are more appropriately phrased in the estimates debate, which will take place either at 3:30 or 7 today. Just be reminded of that. It's not going to cause the end of the world, but I will rule them out of order going forward when they happen on the day that that particular ministry is up for its review.

You will note, however, that shortly after that we had a question from Red Deer-North about Michener Centre as well. It dealt with planning and transition, but it didn't get into the financial side, which is what the budget estimates review is all about. A question like that about policy and planning would be allowed. It's not anticipation.

We also had another question asked with respect to centralized planning, and I forget which member asked it. That, too, is okay. As long as there's no money attached to it, it doesn't constitute a part of the budget estimates infraction with respect to anticipation.

A third point I'd like to talk about is what I introduced as a new ruling that I'm going to impose starting tomorrow. I want to tell you why I have imposed this. The chair is frequently at a dilemma in trying to help members be as effective as they can within the confines of the rules and, on the other hand, allowing the maximum latitude so that you can enjoy question period a little bit more than might otherwise be the case. I refer to certain stringent rules that we abide by and others where we give some flexibility.

There has always been some flexibility given for a little bit of joviality and a little bit of heckling and so on, and there are some members who are particularly good at this. Then there are other members who are particularly persistent and insistent and go on and on. Today I cited a couple of members because I had just had a little bit too much of it. When you interject constantly and I count interjections 15 times, I think that's a little over the top, hon. members. Please. It applies to all sides because it happens from opposition and it happens from government members as well, government members on the front bench.

Please know that I'm not going to tolerate any of that tomorrow. I will allow a little bit of it as I see it going because there's no way that I want to sterilize the process. But by the same token, I can't risk it going past the breaking point where it results in disorder and disruption because that would be violating the rules. So that's that clarification.

The fourth point I want to mention is with regard to petitions, none of which were presented today. However, over the past few days we've had some problems with some of the petitions that have been presented in this House, so I want to instruct you this way. Starting tomorrow, if you have a petition to present, then I would appreciate it if you stood up and said the following words at the beginning of your petition presentation: Mr. Speaker, I rise to table a petition that has been reviewed and approved by Parliamentary Counsel. If I do not hear those words at the outset, I will rule you out of order starting tomorrow.

Now, the reason for this is because sometimes items get tabled which we then have to reject. In this case we had some items rejected because they contained some profanities, which we could not accept or allow. Please, hon. members, check with Parliamentary Counsel. It doesn't take much. They are available, and you have their contact information. Make sure you get their stamp of approval so that we don't have that awkwardness take place.

The fifth point of interest that I'd like to comment on very briefly is the so-called McConnell case. I'm only commenting on this from the standpoint of what is or what isn't sub judice. I indicated I would be reviewing that matter, and I'm going to review it. There will be occasion when a question on a matter such as this, given the stage it's at, might be allowed, but you're treading on very fine lines there. Yes, I am aware of the rule that says: when in doubt, rule in favour of the debate proceeding. I'm well aware of that. I looked it up on Monday. I looked it up again today so that I would be fresh on it. Today I thought it was a little bit on the borderline, but I'm going to familiarize myself a little bit further. But be warned today that I have that on my radar.

The sixth and final thing I want to comment on today is tablings. The length of tablings, the subject of what gets tabled, and the particular vehicle that was used is of interest to the Speaker and should be of interest to you as well. Let me start with the latter, the nature of the material, or the vehicle. It can be so far e-mails or letters or books or magazines or reports. Sometimes we've had props and all kinds of different things tabled. Now, is that what Tabling Returns and Reports should be all about, or should it really be about tabling returns and reports, which you can look up and I can give you definitions of if you like?

Secondly, is the subject matter, and that leads into the length. There are times when some members have taken a great deal of time to introduce a tabling. In fact, there have been cases where people have tried to read the whole letter. You have heard it. You know what I'm talking about. Again, it's an awkward moment for the Speaker, any Speaker, when you're listening to someone table something that has like we heard today a very sensitive tone to it: a single mom who's trying to raise a family, and she's doing so with pennies and so on and so on. It's gut wrenching, and it's heartwarming, and you hate to stand up and try to cut someone off when they're talking about something as serious as that to that particular person and to their representative, presumably whom they contacted for some help.

So please can we just take this under advisement for right now that the length of your tablings, the nature of the tablings, and the subject vehicle that you use for that tabling ought be primary in your concerns?

That having been said, I think we are now ready to adjourn the House for the day. Pursuant to Standing Order 7(7) the daily Routine has been concluded, and pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) the House shall stand adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 1:30 so that the legislative policy committees can convene this afternoon and this evening for consideration of some particular main estimates. The afternoon will be comprised of estimates in Families and Communities as they are listed under Human Services, and that will occur in committee room A. Tonight the Alberta's Economic Future agenda will consider the estimates for Enterprise and Advanced Education in committee room A.

Thank you for your kind attention.

[The Assembly adjourned at 3:16 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, April 11, 2013

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Dear Lord, help us to fulfill our duties and our obligations as respectfully as we are able, help us to be mindful of the pressing needs of others who may not be able to advocate for themselves, and help us to be leaders and role models that others will truly want to emulate. Amen.

Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Longest Serving Opposition Member

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we begin our Routine for the day and get on with introductions, I have a very significant milestone to which I would like to draw your attention. We have among us a very special individual indeed, who is the longest serving member to serve exclusively in opposition in Alberta's history. The hon. member was first elected to this Legislature on March 11, 1997, and has served continuously since that time for a total of 5,876 days, including today. [Standing ovation] Hon. members, there are many things that the Speaker can interrupt, but thunder is not one of them.

As I was saying, she has continuously served us for 5,876 days, and recently she surpassed Mr. David Duggan, Member for Edmonton, who served in opposition from June 28, 1926, to May 4, 1942, for a total of 5,790 days. I would like to thank this hon. member for her dedication, her loyalty, her service to what she always refers to as her fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, and also for her persevering work on behalf of all Albertans.

Now will you please join me in thanking and congratulating the very honourable Member for Edmonton-Centre. Congratulations. [Standing ovation]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you a group of students from NorQuest College seated in the members' gallery who are in the LINC program, which is the language instruction for newcomers to Canada program. NorQuest College has a campus in my constituency, and I'm so thrilled they could come here to the House today. Of course, they're learning great skills at NorQuest College. I would ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise to introduce to you and through you five hard-working pharmacists who are here today to let the government know their concerns about the changes to pricing of generic drugs. I encourage the members opposite to note their constituencies. Welcome Aileen Jang of Redwater, Terry Fernandes of Redwater, Suhas Thaleshvai of Sherwood Park, and Darrin and Gaylene Erickson of Tofield. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions. First, it is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 60 grade 6 students from Glen Avon school in St. Paul. These students are joined by Mrs. O'Neill, Mrs. Kendel, Mr. Boyko, Mrs. Piquette, and Ms Rak. A parent from this class is also with us here today. Ms Brandi Whelen is the Lieutenant Governor's great-granddaughter. I would ask that my guests rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

My second introduction. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly four very concerned pharmacists dedicated to advocating for the best care for their patients. I'd like to introduce Maria Richard, Cameron Needham, Graham Anderson, and Monica Statchuk. They came to Edmonton today to protest the government's ill-advised changes to drug costs in Alberta. I'd ask these dedicated pharmacists to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members a group of grade 6 students visiting from my diverse constituency. The nine students from Morrin school are sitting in the gallery along with their teacher, Mr. Harvey Saltys, and parent supervisors Danielle Burrows, Laura Cawiezel, Cam Chapin, Jacqueline Watts, and Megan Fortna. I hope they enjoy their time at the Legislature, and I'll ask them to please stand as my hon. colleagues provide them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to rise today to welcome a wonderful group of students from Calmar elementary school from my spectacular constituency of Drayton Valley-Devon. These 34 bright grade 6 students along with parent helpers and their teacher, Mrs. Janet Wilson, have toured our Legislature – and I'm looking forward to the picture with them later – and have learned a great deal about the building and our provincial government. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you Dr. Rod and Marilyn Oishi and family. They are shared constituents between Minister Campbell's riding of West Yellowhead and St. Albert. Marilyn is a nurse, mother to three children, and a tireless advocate for universal newborn hearing and testing in Alberta. The Oishi family started their personal experience with hearing loss with daughter Alexis, who was born with profound hearing loss six years ago. Through early intervention, therapy, and cochlear implants as well as a lot of love Alexis is a vibrant, beautiful, young girl enrolled in French immersion kindergarten who is succeeding and achieving in all areas of her life today. Marilyn and Dr. Oishi's third child, Annalise, was also born with hearing loss and is also thriving in the same fashion as her big sister.

Marilyn came to my constituency last fall explaining the persistent need for early intervention and screening for hearing loss that Alexis required as an infant. Simply because there was no family history of hearing loss, baby Alexis was not identified as a high risk. Universal testing would have immediately screened Alexis, saving precious time. Marilyn advocates for future families, which could save delays that impede undetected newborns. We're grateful for her work. With Marilyn today – she's seated in the members' gallery – are many people who have supported her along her journey. Please rise as I call your name: Dr. Rod Oishi; Marilyn Oishi; their children, daughters Alexis and Annalise Oishi and son Braden Oishi; Geraldine Wolff; John Wolff; Lisa Oishi; and Marilyn-Malen Eustaquio. Please join me in welcoming them.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Wellness.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise today to introduce an inspirational group of health care providers who are here today in support of the Oishi family and who are advocates of universal newborn screening detection. Each of these hard-working professionals either works with individuals who are affected by hearing loss or are actively involved in its prevention. Seated in the members' gallery today are Kathryn Ritter, educator of the deaf and a listening and spoken language specialist who works at the Glenrose hospital; Kathy Holinski, an early intervention program manager at Connect Society; Cheryl Redhead, program manager with early childhood services at Connect Society; Joe McLaughlin, interim executive director at Connect Society; and Tracy Hetman, who is Mr. McLaughlin's interpreter. I would ask each of these fine Albertans to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you my guests Harpreet Singh Sandhu, Harpreet Singh Gill, and Kashmir Singh. Harpreet Singh Sandhu is the managing editor of the Asian Vision newspaper and a renowned journalist in the Punjabi community. He has written many books and also hosts a weekly radio show on Radio Sur Sangam. Harpreet Singh Gill came to Canada as a young student and finished his degree in business management. He is fluent in five languages and works as the political editor at Asian Vision. Kashmir Singh is accompanying both of them as an elder and respected member of the community. I would now ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two groups of people. One is the action group of Congolese, and the friends of the Democratic Republic of the Congo are here today with us. I will be making a member's statement about the Congo. I will ask that as I say your name, please rise and wait until the end to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly: Pierre Mwamba, Oscar Ngoie-Kadila, Constantin Kibambe, Kipenge Kishala, Dr. Itachi Falanga, Arsene Mwamba, Nshole Modeste, Patrick Mukule, Luc Lukano, Charles Balenga, Justine Kachungunu, Dicky Dikamba, Georges Bahaya. I know my accent may be a little difficult, but those are the names I have. Sorry. They're here today, and as I mentioned, I'll be making a statement about the Congo and what these groups are doing in Alberta. I would request all members to please give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my friend Katie Clark, a U of L grad with a bachelor of fine arts now living here in Edmonton. Two of her roommates happen to be pharmacists, and she's here today to see how secure their jobs are. Katie, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two members of my constituency that truly make a difference in their community. Ian Wilson is the CAO of the Bow Valley Regional Housing authority. The Bow Valley Regional Housing authority assesses and addresses seniors' and social housing in the Bow Valley region. This authority is a regional management body serving the citizens of five member municipalities, including the town of Banff. Accompanying Ian today is Councillor Grant Canning, who was elected to his first term on Banff town council in 2010 and sits as the town's representative on the Bow Valley Regional Housing authority. He is also a small-business owner in the town of Banff. I would ask the Assembly to give them their traditional welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three pharmacists who are among those today rallying against government changes that lead to drug shortages and higher out-of-pocket costs for patients. We have here today Jason Pon, Ian Lakhram, and Basel Alsaadi. All three are from right here in Edmonton, and although they're not constituents of any member of the Wildrose Official Opposition, we felt as a caucus that their voices needed to be heard. Please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you my dear friend Mr. Charles Balenga. He's a dedicated and hard-working constituent in Edmonton-South West. He's involved in the community, and he has always provided me with an ear for advice and support. I ask that Mr. Balenga please rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to also introduce to you and through you another friend, Mr. Kit Poon. Mr. Poon is a tireless advocate and dedicated pharmacist who gives back time and time again to his profession. I'd ask that Mr. Poon please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I see we're joined in the gallery today by a councillor; in fact, the deputy mayor, of the town of Peace River, Mr. North Darling. He's in Edmonton to observe the legislative process. Hopefully, he'll be able to sleep after watching this today. Mr. Darling also serves on the executive of the AUMA. Now, I forget his title. I think it's vice-president of small spectacular towns on the banks of beautiful rivers, something like that. I'd ask Mr. Darling to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to expand on my introduction this afternoon by recognizing the groups which my guests belong to, the members of the action group of Congolese and friends of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, made up of Canadians of Congolese birth and friends of the Congo, who are dedicated to raising awareness and improving relations among our two countries. These guests are active within our province, bringing awareness and betterment to the people of their original homeland, Democratic Republic of the Congo.

Not to be confused with its smaller central African neighbour Republic of the Congo, the Democratic Republic of the Congo is the second-largest country in Africa and by area the 11th largest in the world. This country also boasts an estimated population of over 75 million and contains one of Africa's most biodiverse areas, with rainforests home to many rare, endemic animal species. Five of the country's national parks are even listed as world heritage sites. The Democratic Republic of the Congo possesses nearly 50 per cent of Africa's forests and a river system, according to a report by the United Nations, which could provide hydroelectric power to the entire continent. It is similar to Alberta in that it is incredibly rich in natural resources and minerals and has the potential to one day become an economic power in central Africa.

While there are many difficulties and struggles still to be overcome for the Democratic Republic of the Congo, it is through the efforts of those organizations such as the action group of Congolese and friends of the Democratic Republic of the Congo that inroads can be made. Those groups are very passionate about their homeland, and their work is undeniable. Their efforts to bring awareness to the plight of the people will only bring about a positive response and reaction from those who hear their words.

Once again, thank you very much as Canadians for doing the work and for your concern about the international global village.

Thank you very much for providing this opportunity to me.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Prescription Drug Coverage

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, across Alberta today and here on the steps of the Legislature pharmacists demonstrated against the Minister of Health and his ill-conceived changes to drug pricing. His last-minute Hail Mary attempt yesterday to get out in front of the protest by tweaking the plan didn't work, and his repeated insistence that all of this will benefit Albertans just isn't believable. We've asked dozens of questions in the Legislature.

There have been two large protests, including today's province-wide demonstrations. Why won't this minister just start over and get it right?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's no doubt that change involves some adjustment, but we are committed in this government to ensuring that Alberta patients, the Alberta health care system, and Alberta taxpayers are able to pay some of the lowest prices in the country for drugs. That's one of the reasons these policies were introduced.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity about three weeks ago to meet with a number of pharmacy students at the University of Alberta, and one of the things that they were excited about was the fact that this government has expanded the services that pharmacists are able to provide so that we can see a much more vibrant partnership in health care. This minister has built a plan that allows for transition, which is what pharmacists asked for, and we're doing well.

Ms Smith: Those pharmacy students were sure excited this afternoon when they were demonstrating as well.

The minister defends this mess by pointing to other jurisdictions doing the same thing, but those other jurisdictions restricted pricing on just six specific agreed-upon generic drugs. Alberta didn't do that. Alberta dictated prices for everything, a staggering, unprecedented intervention. One commentator aptly called it a, quote, clueless bureaucratic overreach. Why doesn't the minister see this?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member again demonstrates that she doesn't know what side of this issue she's on. In fact, I just had the opportunity to meet for about 40 minutes with a representative group of eight people who were part of the demonstration earlier today, and we talked about the issues that the hon. Premier already raised. We talked about the fact that Alberta is leading the country in designing a pharmacy services framework that pays pharmacists for the services they are trained to provide, services they are not paid to provide in other jurisdictions. We also talked about the importance of getting the best price that we can for generic drugs and about transitional support. We have done all of those.

Ms Smith: The 300 protestors sure would have liked to have seen the minister on the steps of the Legislature addressing them directly.

We in the Official Opposition have been pointing out for weeks that the minister's plan will increase prices, create drug shortages, and force pharmacy closures, yet he insists everything will be fine if we just trust him. Fat chance. We don't trust him. Albertans don't trust him. Pharmacists don't trust him. Why does this Premier trust him?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, quite clearly, what Albertans should not trust is the misinformation, inaccurate information the opposition continues to spread. The fact of the matter is, as I said the other day, that the hon. Leader of the Opposition can't have it both ways. She can't be standing in front of Albertans day after day claiming to own the purview of taxpayers of this province and then when the government makes a move to save $91 million by moving to a benchmark of 18 per cent, that the rest of the country will surely follow, pretend to defend the interests of pharmacists and pharmacy businesses. We have done both. We will continue to support both.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: It's about the transition, and the Health minister should know that.

Hospital Parking for Veterans

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this week Alberta Health Services in a callous and disrespectful way eliminated parking passes that the Calgary poppy fund has been purchasing for use by veterans. The minister's response was equally callous. He dismissed our concerns and said that compassionate parking passes are available. It's not the same thing at all. Veterans used to be able to get a pass at their local Legion. Now they have to plead poverty to a hospital bureaucrat each time they want to go to the hospital. It's a demeaning, belittling affront to veterans. Did the minister ask any veterans what they think of this new arrangement?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I have said and I will say again that the way in which this issue was dealt with by Alberta Health Services was not to par. I have asked Alberta Health Services to sit down . . .

Some Hon. Members: That's not what you said yesterday.

Mr. Horne: What I said yesterday, Mr. Speaker, was that we must continue to offer compassionate parking passes to health facilities for all Albertans who are in need, most importantly, including veterans. I've asked Alberta Health Services to sit down with the poppy fund to talk about this program, which was only available in Calgary, and see what can be done.

Ms Smith: Well, we await that review.

Yesterday this minister also told us he'd be looking into the shocking statement made by the AHS vice-president who questioned the worthiness of veterans to receive this tiny demonstration of respect and gratitude. What did he find out, and what is he going to do about that?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as I said, this government needs no help in standing up for the interests of veterans and people who serve this country. We also don't need any help in the form of trying to politicize a local issue in Calgary that, as I have said, was poorly handled by Alberta Health Services. [interjections] My direction to AHS was to sit down with the poppy fund in Calgary and work this out, and that's what they're doing.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I doubt very much he would be doing that if he wasn't getting pressure from this side.

We asked yesterday that the minister use his vast power and influence in setting health policy and reinstate the discounted veterans' hospital parking plan. Will he issue a ministerial order to reinstate the plan and show veterans the respect they deserve?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as I have said, this matter was not handled well by Alberta Health Services. I believe Alberta Health Services would be willing to admit that. [interjections] This is a local issue with respect to Calgary. It is not a national or provincial issue with respect to veterans. It is about a particular benefit that was made available by the former Calgary health region. [interjections] AHS needs to make this right with veterans in Calgary, they need to make it right with the poppy fund, and they are in the process of doing that now.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, I advised you yesterday that I would not be prepared to recognize someone who consistently and persistently heckles, and that applies to this side of the House as well as that side. I'm not going to give you any warning on it. I'm just not going to recognize you. And if you're not on the list today to not be recognized, then I won't recognize you on Monday or Tuesday or when you are. So, please, let's keep this down to a good level of decorum and a high level of debate.

The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The way to make it right is to reinstate the plan.

Ministerial Oversight of Health Services

Ms Smith: Speaking of vast influence and health policy, Mr. Speaker, let's discuss the interview published in the Edmonton Journal today with the chair of Alberta Health Services and his complaints about interference in the day-to-day operations by the minister. Now, this interview is troubling on so many levels, but let's start with the minister's role. Does he just set broad policy, then dodge questions about it question period, or does he maintain ministerial responsibility for the delivery of health care in this province?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this is a fabulous illustration of a complete 50-50 and a hypocritical approach to what they expect the Minister of Health to do. My recollection is that we just had a question where the Leader of the Official Opposition asked the minister to fix a parking problem in Calgary and now stands up and accuses the minister of political interference with respect to health policy. I think the opposition had better figure out what they think their role is.

Ms Smith: That's not what I asked. I encourage the Premier to check out Hansard to see what I actually asked.

Over at AHS they seem to feel that the relationship between government and themselves has been too politicized. The chair complains that the minister damages their operations and undermines their work and that if the minister wants to direct the board on any matter, he should put it in writing in a ministerial order. What does the minister have to say about this?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the opposition wants to understand the source of political interference in health care in this province, they should take a good look in the mirror because they beg for it on a daily basis in question period in this House, they beg for it in their so-called advocacy in the media, and on top of that, they continue to undermine the work of Alberta Health Services on a daily basis and, in doing so, undermine confidence in the system. This is the behaviour that should be criticized in the media.

Ms Smith: I think they're misunderstanding. We want more ministerial oversight because, on the one hand, we have a minister who has lost trust with doctors, pharmacists, nurses, teachers, and now the organization actually charged with delivering health care; on the other hand, we have a superboard whose chair agrees it has a "terrible reputation" because of lavish expenses, excessive salaries, hefty bonuses, and ballooning wait times that now seems to want to function without direct ministerial oversight. How did this government put us into such a mess?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the great irony of this is that the opposition loves to ask us to fix health care over and over each day until, of course, we try to change something. The board of Alberta Health Services does, in my opinion, have a very good understanding of their accountability under the Regional Health Authorities Act. The authority to operate the delivery system is a delegated authority – and the hon. leader might want to read up on this – under the RHA Act. The responsibility and the oversight for health care, of course, remains with government. Albertans expect their elected representatives in government to be accountable for health care. They are. And when it's necessary to provide direction, we do.

Taxation Policy

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The latest employment numbers from StatsCan are good news for Saskatchewan Premier Brad Wall, that darling of Canadian conservatism and Canada's most popular Premier with an enviable approval rating of 64 per cent. Interestingly, these numbers show that Saskatchewan now has the lowest jobless numbers despite having a corporate tax of 12 per cent and progressive personal income tax. To the Premier. Tax fairness, sustainable, predictable funding for vital public services, balanced budgets, and low jobless rates go hand in hand in Saskatchewan. Why not here in Alberta, Premier? Why not, Premier?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're very proud of the fact that on an annual basis there are over a hundred thousand people moving to this province because of the competitive economic environment that we have, the social programs that we're able to support, and the fact that we are planning for the future, that we are investing in hospitals, in schools, and in roads. We are the economic engine of this country, as we have heard the Prime Minister and many Premiers say over the past 10 months. We know that the budget that we have tabled allows us to balance exactly what we need to provide the services that are needed for Albertans, that can continue to draw people to this province, and we're proud of that.

Mr. Speaker, the U.S. Congressional Research Service, the equivalent of Canada's Parliamentary Budget Office, did a comprehensive 65-year study which clearly demonstrates that tax cuts don't lead to economic growth. To the Premier: why, other than ideological pigheadedness, do you refuse to make just some small tweaks to our tax system so Alberta can have sustainable funding for seniors' care, K to 12, postsecondary, health care, and maybe even some free hospital parking for our veterans? Why, Premier?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we've seen in Alberta is that the commitment that this Progressive Conservative government has taken to tax policy has allowed for a competitive and a successful economy. I'm going to put that up against the Parliamentary Budget Officer any day. What I will say is that without increasing taxes and actually keeping spending to zero, which is more than any party in the opposition suggested, we've been able to provide sustainable funding to build infrastructure and to build an economy that continues to attract people to this province every year.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, it's time this government had its own parliamentary budget officer to keep them honest.

Mr. Speaker, let's have a quick review of the Premier's promises. Stable funding for municipalities: broken. Stable funding for health care: broken. Stable funding for seniors: broken. Stable funding for K to 12: broken. Stable funding for postsecondary: broken. Every promise broken because this Premier absolutely refuses to address the province's revenue problem. Premier, I have to ask you why. Why do you care more about pleasing your big corporate donors and clinging to power for your leadership review than doing what's right for Albertans?

Ms Redford: You know, Mr. Speaker, simply because the opposition stands up and says something, as I say over and over again, doesn't make it true. We are committed to sustainable funding for those programs. We have ensured that we are not only committed to sustainable funding but continuing to build the infrastructure that's going to allow those programs to be delivered in the facilities that they need to be. That's what long-term growth looks like in a Progressive Conservative government. It works, and that's why we're on this side of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Alberta Health Services

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I was going to ask a question about political interference in the AHS to the Energy minister, but I think he'd just duck it.

Yesterday the Alberta Health Services Board chair said that he's tired of too much political interference in the health system. The minister interferes when it suits him and hides behind the AHS when that suits him. With the Ministry of Health and Alberta Health Services we get double the bureaucracy and no accountability. My question is to the Health minister: will he reduce waste, confusion, duplication, and mismanagement and abolish Alberta Health Services?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we will not abolish Alberta Health Services. We will not abandon what is a model that is in fact leading the country, where we have assembled all of the health resources in the province under a single authority and are receiving savings and improvements in quality of care that are unparalleled across this country.

Mr. Speaker, the role of a delegated regional health authority is very clear. It is to operate the delivery system under the supervision of government. The Alberta Health Services Board chair understands the accountability of the board to government. We have an excellent working relationship, and I commend him for being willing to take risks and exercise leadership to improve health care.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This PC government told Albertans that Alberta Health Services would reduce administrative costs, but administrative costs continue to skyrocket, another 21 per cent in the AHS budget for this fiscal year. The AHS Board has said: I believe that, quote, administratively we have a terrible reputation. With outrageous executive salaries, expense scandals, and bureaucratic duplication it's no wonder. Will the minister please stop creating confusion and wasting money and abolish AHS?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, this question around administrative expenses was asked and answered earlier in the week. As Alberta

Health Services has said and I will reiterate, they have changed the categorization of administrative services in their budget. They have added additional line items to administration that were not formerly there for the purpose of allowing Alberta to be compared directly with other provinces according to the Canadian Institute for Health Information. That's transparency, and that should be commended.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, this Tory government has time and again organized and reorganized and reorganized our health system. Administrative chaos, escalating operational costs, and systematic inefficiencies have plagued AHS from the beginning, and it's far from being transparent because we don't have adequate oversight in this Legislature over $14 billion that is spent by AHS. Even the AHS Board chair admits that a major managerial overhaul is needed. What will it take for the minister to finally admit that the creation of AHS was a failure and get rid of it?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, one of the opportunities that we have as elected officials is to travel the province and talk to people that work in our health care system whether they're doctors, nurses, or perhaps even partnering with pharmacists. One of the things that I certainly have heard and learned in the last three years as I talked to health care professionals across this province is: whatever you do, please, don't dismantle Alberta Health Services because Alberta Health Services is a model that is cutting edge in this country. It was innovative. It brought change. It is now delivering the health services that not only Albertans need but that health care providers want to provide in the context that they do. That's why we won't abolish Alberta Health Services.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Strathmore Hospital Long-term Care

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Allow me to quote a memo from the Health minister regarding how AHS botched the closure of the Little Bow continuing care centre. Quote: there needed to be clear, concise communication planned with care residents, their families, and the community at large. It goes on: AHS has learned considerably from this experience, and it is utilizing these lessons to inform future decision-making. Unquote. Why, then, Minister, were the residents of the long-term care wing of Strathmore hospital, their families, members, and staff completely blindsided by yesterday's announcement to close the beds? Didn't you learn anything from Carmangay?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, first of all, let's be clear. The long-term care services that are currently provided in the hospital in Strathmore are being moved to a brand new facility in the community that will provide a much better, more respectable and amenable environment for those residents. In addition, 82 additional spaces are being added in that new facility. I think the residents of Strathmore feel very well served by the new facility, by the services that they're going to be able to offer. And I know they were consulted.

Mr. Hale: Obviously, you haven't talked to the staff or the seniors.

Given that the 23 seniors who live in the Strathmore facility, many of them with high needs, will be transitioned to beds with lower care levels and given the Health minister's own memo stating that they had learned from the mistakes at Carmangay, what is the minister's explanation for botching yet another long-term care centre closure and throwing the lives of vulnerable seniors, families, and staff into total chaos?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, if this hon. member wants to stand in front of this House and make an argument that residents receiving long-term care in his constituency should remain in the hospital instead of moving into a brand new facility, then I think he's got some explaining to do.

Mr. Hale: The costs are up, and they're not going to get the same care.

Given that the residents, their families, and staff found out about the closure by mistake, given that they were supposed to be kept in the dark until May 1 and given that the minister's memo states that AHS and his ministry are, quote, making progress in the community engagement process, can you explain to this Legislature and to the community of Strathmore how blindsiding vulnerable seniors with yet another long-term care centre closure is making progress and learning from your mistakes?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Health Services has done a great deal to improve community consultation since the incident that the hon. member referred to. The thing is that the constituents, I'm sure, in Strathmore-Brooks expect advocacy and expect representation from their MLA, and their MLA is standing in front of this House today, for all I can see, making an argument as to why his constituents don't deserve to move to a brand new facility. Their needs will be met. More people in the community will be served. I can't see what's not to like about that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Market Access for Energy Resources

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have had a great deal at stake in what was called the other day the most famous pipeline in the history of the world, even without being built yet. This has been a polarized debate in the U.S., where some have said that you either stand against the oil sands or you write off the environment. My questions are to the Premier. Can you explain the importance of being again in Washington to tell Alberta's story and to advocate for market access? [interjections]

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, contrary to the opposition, we actually think this is an important issue. The reason it's important is because we know there's going to be an imminent decision made with respect to Keystone. I have to say that whether it's been our ministers on this side of the House, whether it's been federal ministers, whether it's been the Premier of Saskatchewan, although perhaps not the leader of the federal NDP, we have been there to advocate for what Canada and Alberta's environmental record has been, what pipeline safety has meant, and why the importance of building those trade relationships to create and sustain a North American energy economy will matter. People are making decisions, and they're listening to what we have to say.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the broad range of influential congressmen and congresswomen and senators from both parties along with important state department officials that the Premier met, can you tell us more about these meetings and the messages they may have had for you? What are you hearing?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that people in the United States are asking us right now is to make sure that we're clear with respect to what our environmental record has been. You know, just this week there were confirmation hearings in Washington for a new Secretary of Energy, and some of the questions that were being asked were: "Are you going to put a price on carbon? Are you going to invest in carbon capture and storage? Are you going to be able to invest in energy innovation?" Those are all programs that we have in Alberta that we are very proudly talking about to ensure that decision-makers understand what our record has been so that Keystone can be approved.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. My last question is also to the Premier. Given that our federal Conservative colleagues have said that they, too, are working closely with the energy industry and with the provinces on greenhouse gas reduction and given that the federal Minister of the Environment said that he is on the same wavelength, going in the same direction as our government, can you explain why this collaboration is so important and critical to market access for our province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What a great question that is. It really is about the sector-by-sector work that the federal government and the provincial government are doing because market access is important for Alberta, it's important for Canadians, and it's important for all of us to be able to reach those markets and to be able to do our part as Canadians and Albertans to reduce our environmental GHG emissions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by St. Albert.

Lacombe Hospital Phone Service

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another indication today that the bureaucracy of Alberta Health Services is failing Albertans. We've been told that the phone line between the emergency department and ambulance dispatch at the Lacombe hospital was disconnected. That meant ambulances could not talk to the emergency department, nor could emergency talk to ambulances. The reason? We're told it's because Alberta Health Services couldn't pay the phone bill. Shocking. How can it be that Alberta Health Services gets $480 million in administration money, but it can't pay the phone bills?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not saying that the hon. member may or may not be correct, but I have no way to validate the payment of a phone bill in Lacombe.

Mrs. Towle: I would suggest you make a call to the Lacombe hospital.

Given that we keep hearing that Alberta Health Services takes months and months to pay their bills, and this isn't the first time this has come to our attention – unless, of course, it's executive bonuses; they seem to be able to get that out in time – and given that this has a direct effect on the delivery of health services, like ambulances being able to talk to emergency, maybe the minister could pick up the phone, call Lacombe hospital, talk to the health services staff there, and see if it actually happened.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants to spend her House time asking questions about accounts payable issues at the Lacombe hospital, that's entirely up to her. I have no knowledge of the situation she's talking about. Alberta Health Services is monitored by my department, and they're audited by the Auditor General of Alberta. I'm sure that they have their accounts payable in hand.

Mrs. Towle: I absolutely do feel the need to stand up for Albertans not receiving emergency care.

Given that I heard about this scary situation directly from a health care professional who works at the Lacombe hospital and who was there the day that it happened but is afraid to come forward because of repercussions and fear of firing – yet we have whistle-blower legislation that's supposed to protect them – I'm just wondering if you can help me understand why health professionals today continue to fear your ministry, your Alberta Health Services, and are terrified to come forward. Help me understand.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member needs to understand is that you don't take an unsubstantiated allegation around an unpaid phone bill and turn it into a generalization about fear and trepidation on behalf of the employees. Alberta Health Services and this department, overseeing Alberta Health Services, are very proud of the employee concerns process that is available to all employees, whether they are health professionals or support staff in the organization. The answer is for the hon. member to learn about the process, understand it, and explain it to her constituents.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Hearing Tests for Newborns

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hearing impairment or loss is one of the most common anomalies found in newborns. It can lead to developmental delays in speech, language, cognition, and learning. Early identification and intervention can minimize these effects. Making hearing tests for newborns universal can make a profound difference in the lives of so many Alberta families. My question is to a very busy gentleman today, the Minister of Health. Will Alberta Health Services be providing universal newborn hearing screening tests?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. A big part of the reason we can do that is because of the efforts of people such as the Oishi family, who were introduced by my colleague earlier today. This is a relatively small program in terms of dollar costs, but it is going to have a huge impact on the quality of life for newborn Albertans for generations to come. We're very proud of this. It's an important program. It goes to health care, but it goes to early childhood development and education. It's the right thing.

Mr. Khan: To the same minister – and thank you, Minister – given the size of our health care system and the necessity of thoughtfully rolling out the new technology and programs, when can Alberta families expect their babies to undergo newborn hearing tests across this entire province?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, we will be implementing the program in a phased approach. The first focus will be on newborns in neonatal intensive care units across the province. Over time it will be expanded to include all newborn babies. Today two hospitals, one in Grande Prairie and one in Medicine Hat, offer newborn screening services. We're going to build on that success and, as I said, extend it province-wide.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that programs like universal newborn hearing screening have a cost, can you tell us what outcomes we can expect to improve by implementing this new service, whether for newborns and their families or for taxpayers? That question again is for the Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the scheme of the budget for health care in this province, over $17 billion, the $8 million that it's going to cost to provide this program is a relatively small amount. The impact, we think, will be huge. I think that for many parents who have children with hearing impairment, the opportunity to have that identified early is going to mean a great deal. I think the impact on quality of life, personal success is something that we are going to have to wait decades to see the benefits of, but it is one of those things that will make a huge difference. It's an investment today in future generations of Albertans, and we're very proud to respond to the advocacy of people such as the Oishi family.

Municipal Assessment and Taxation

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, Alberta cities and towns get 2 per cent of the CLEA or industrial revenues, but the counties and MDs get over 98 per cent. The MD of Bonnyville and the county of St. Paul: 50 per cent of the people, 98 per cent of industrial revenues. Ditto in the southern Alberta county of Newell: under 30 per cent of the people but almost 98 per cent of the industrial revenues. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why is this minister colluding to starve our cities and towns with crumbs while allowing MDs and counties to get not the whole pie but the whole bakery?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, we work very hard to support every single one of the 349 municipalities and all of the 422 official and unofficial municipalities, communities in this province. It's evidenced by the MGA review, by the MSI support, by all of the other programs that we have. We're undertaking some extensive reviews, and we've committed that after the next municipal election we will be reviewing the roles and responsibilities and the revenue sources that we share because they're all coming from the same taxpayer.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Thanks very much.

Back to the same minister, then. I've given north examples and south examples. Can the minister explain why in central Alberta the MD of Wainwright rakes in $24.5 million, but the town of Wainwright and the villages of Edgerton, Chauvin, and Irma have to share a meagre $320,000?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's my constituency, and the community is actually pronounced 'shawvin,' not 'showvin.'

Mr. Speaker, every single municipality has different sources of tax bases. Some have a very strong industrial base. Some use linear assessment. Some have an agricultural base. Some will rake in more money, and some will have less money. We've always encouraged municipalities to find regional solutions. But we are, as I already said, having a review about revenue sources and how we can make sure that all communities have the revenue they need to deliver services to Albertans.

Ms Blakeman: I am really interested to know why this government is willingly looking the other way while a large-scale rip-off is happening to municipal assessments, which affect 80 per cent of Albertans. Eighty per cent of us. Why are you looking the other way?

Mr. Griffiths: One more time, Mr. Speaker. I announced that after the next election we will be doing a review. Right now we're going over roles and responsibilities, and we'll be talking about the revenue sources and what we can do to ensure that every community has the tools and resources available to make sure they serve Albertans. We're not looking the other way. We're engaging municipalities to find solutions and are not planning, as the opposition probably would, to dictate a solution that doesn't work for everybody.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Airdrie.

Michener Centre Closure

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today marks one month since this PC government decided to evict 125 Albertans from Michener Centre. Yesterday the associate minister said that he would save $110,000 on the backs of these individuals. The Premier of this province is forcing the most vulnerable Albertans to pay for her broken promises. This is totally unacceptable. To the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities: is providing the highest quality of care to Albertans with disabilities too much to ask of this PC government?

Mr. Oberle: Why, thank you, for that question. No, it's not too much to ask at all. If the hon. member would prefer that I don't implement the body of best practices in evidence and experience that have been developed in Alberta, across Canada, across North America for the care of those individuals, then he should say so in this House.

Furthermore, if he'd prefer that I didn't seize upon potential savings so that I can offer excellent care to more individuals, he should probably say that in this House as well, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Eggen: Well, that's funny, Mr. Speaker, because given that the closure of Michener forces these vulnerable Albertans to compete for family-based care and given that this PC government budget slashes funding by 45 per cent for everything from attending doctors' appointments to skills training right now, how can this minister possibly defend his illogical decision to evict vulnerable Albertans from their homes at the exact same time that he slashes the very funding that would transition people out of Michener?

Mr. Oberle: Well, it's not funny, Mr. Speaker. I find nothing funny about that member's approach at all. As a matter of fact, he can contest, if he would like, the body of evidence that we're working upon. Then to suggest that we're going to throw people on the street and have them compete for spaces is ridiculous. It doesn't deserve comment.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, given that local ATA Catholic teachers, the Red Deer public school division, the Red Deer city council, not to mention most Albertans state their opposition to the closure of this Michener facility, will the minister admit that these cruel budget cuts on the backs of residents are going to leave vulnerable Albertans paying for this government's never-ending list of broken promises?

Mr. Oberle: What I will admit is that I'm very proud of the mandate of this department, the mandate the Premier has given me to ensure that persons with disabilities in our province can contribute, lead inclusive lives, and have their contributions valued and that we will provide the care, the housing, and the supports for them to do that. We're going to continue to do that, Mr. Speaker. We're on the leading edge. That's my mission, and that's what I'm going to carry on with.

Servants Anonymous Society of Calgary

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, Servants Anonymous is a nonprofit organization in Calgary that helps women escape the dangerous world of prostitution. Over the last four years this group has operated SAFE house, which has helped 176 women flee from these terrible situations without their former pimps being able to locate them. It is the only safe house of its kind in the province for women over 16 and their children. It saves lives and has the secondary benefit of saving taxpayers millions in health and policing costs. To the Minister of Justice or whoever can answer this. This group has had their funding for SAFE house eliminated. How can we justify this either financially or morally?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, this member will not find any argument that any and all of those programs that deliver this kind of valuable service anywhere in Alberta, anywhere in Canada for that matter, are not invaluable. There are a number of these programs where I know the minister had to make some very difficult decisions, but all decisions that have been made were always with one goal in mind, to make sure that services exist but are delivered otherwise. So I can assure this member that as important as it is – and we'll share in that – these women and victims of these crimes will not be left without any support. They will be receiving services just as well but perhaps through different means.

Mr. Anderson: That's not what Servants Anonymous says. They say that these women will have nowhere else to go. Please look into it.

Minister, given that this safe house regularly saves the lives of women and children and only costs government $200,000 each year to run, can you not cut, say, the multimillion-dollar rooftop garden you are about to put on top of the Taj Mahal, that $350 million monstrosity that's going up over there, or cut a fraction of the $750 million you plan on giving Shell Canada for CCS? In other words, will you start putting the needs of abused and exploited women and children in front of new MLA offices and corporate welfare?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, this is where that member and I have to part ways and not because we disagree that those services are important. But politicizing issues and cherry-picking an issue of the day against some building – well, they have already funded all of health care, all of my ministry and everybody else's ministry on the back of that one particular building. You can't do that. The only difference between government and opposition is that we have to make very difficult decisions that often keep us awake at night. We have to make those decisions. They can cherry-pick programs and tug at emotional strings and never be responsible for what they say.

Mr. Anderson: The decisions that are made affect lives, and bad decisions affect lives in bad ways. You should know that.

Given the ministry that cut this $200,000 safe house for endangered women and children is the same ministry that just finished throwing away over $69 million on a new communications system that has just been entirely turfed and also burned up tens of millions in a police college that will never be built, Minister, can you understand why so many Albertans are upset with this PC government's cut to front-line services when so much waste, bureaucracy, and corporate welfare continues to slurp up Albertans' hard-earned tax dollars?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, very disappointing rhetoric. These members have the option of going through every budget every day, and they have been complaining about my budget in advanced education, yet yesterday all they found that I should cut in my budget was one communications staffer from of my office. So this rhetoric for public display doesn't quite add up with their numbers, with the budget, and with what they actually find within budgets that should be eliminated.

Mental Health Capacity Building Initiative

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was pleased to stand with my colleagues on both sides of the House against bullying and discrimination of any kind anywhere on International Day of Pink. There was a mental health capacity building initiative pilot started in 2006-2007 across 53 communities and 153 schools. The purpose of the initiative is to establish projects that will provide the staffing and support required to implement an integrated school-based community mental health promotion, prevention, and early intervention program. To the Health minister: what outcomes has your ministry seen from this pilot project?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. The mental health capacity building initiative is alive and well in Alberta. We have completed an external evaluation, and we're seeing some very positive results. Most importantly, we are connecting mental health and wellness capacity in our schools with the capacity that exists in the community. The review found that as a result of the initiative we're seeing improved resiliency and coping skills in children and youth and that, most importantly, people are talking about mental health issues.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, will the government be working on the sustainability of this initiative going forward?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, we certainly will, and we're continuing to provide the necessary funding. The review, as a matter of fact, found that 93 per cent of school administrators reported that they have observed healthier behaviour in students, including better family relations and an increase in prosocial behaviour among students. More than 90 per cent of the youth reported that the program staff assisted them in their ability to cope with problems, so it's a very successful program. We will continue to support it and do our best to expand it.

Mr. Dorward: Can you discuss how you measure the success of the program in more detail?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are performance indicators, and in my last answer I mentioned a couple of the results that we have seen. Obviously, continuing to provide the $60 million for the program is going to be important. We've continued to do that since 2005. Also, the ability to tailor the programs to the specific communities and schools they serve to provide services like mentoring, counselling, parent supports, and addiction counselling is critical. Most importantly, we will continue to support the work of the initiative in normalizing the discourse around mental health and addictions issues in our society. If 13-year-olds can talk about it, the rest of us can as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Accountability of Government MLAs

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Wednesday hundreds of family members, residents, and caregivers rallied in Red Deer, telling this government to save the homes at the Michener Centre. Residents are rightly confused about why this government would want to scrap this facility while opposition MLAs, Red Deer city council, and public schools are all urging the government to keep Michener open. Many folks from Red Deer are wondering where their representation is and why their two MLAs aren't publicly protesting this decision. Has the government imposed a gag order on its own MLAs, preventing them from speaking out and representing the views of their constituents?

The Speaker: To whom were you addressing the question? Oh, the associate minister. Thank you.

Mr. Oberle: I'm not sure that question is to anybody, Mr. Speaker. It's a ridiculous question. I don't know if he was listening to the question from the member of the fourth party over there, but, you know, if that member would have it so that I don't move to implement best practices and research and some fine work that's been done in Alberta and across Canada and North America, he should also say that on the record. If he doesn't think that we should move to implement savings so that we can give more care to more individuals in our province, he should also say that on the record. If he had been at the meetings, he would have noticed at least that the hon. Member for Red Deer-North was at the meeting while the hon. Member for Red Deer-South I believe was in Washington.

Mr. Wilson: This is not the first time PC MLAs have been quiet on decisions that harm their constituents. Given that this government raised education taxes for communities across Alberta, including a 47 per cent increase in Wood Buffalo and double-digit hikes in Banff-Cochrane yet local PC MLAs were silent on another broken promise made by this government not to raise taxes, to the Associate Minister of AT and T: is muzzling government MLAs a part of your vision of transformational change?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, I find it very amusing that the party that had the thousand-dollar good-conduct bonds or the thousand-dollar bozo eruption prevention fund is talking about muzzling MLAs. On this side of the House we have MLAs that are strong representatives of their constituencies. They have one standard for all people of Alberta.

The Speaker: A point of order has been noted from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills – I'm sure all of us can imagine what it's about – at 2:37 p.m.

Let us carry on. Calgary-Shaw, you have a final question.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many PC MLAs seem unable or unwilling to speak out when their constituents are directly impacted by this government's decision-making, will the minister at the very least commit to adopting the Wildrose policy of voter recall so that MLAs who break their promises after elections stay accountable to their real bosses, Alberta voters?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the good members from Red Deer have been advocating on behalf of their constituents at the community level, at the municipal level, and through many years of good service in the Legislature while that MLA was still in Pull-Ups, and they're going to continue to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

School Transportation Funding

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a rural MLA one of the main issues for my constituents is the cost and hassle of transporting their kids to school on the bus. It can be expensive, and often kids have to stay on the bus for over an hour each way as school jurisdictions are not working together to develop joint transportation strategies to maximize efficiencies. My question is to the Minister of Education. Has there been a reduction in funding allocated to school jurisdictions to provide transportation for their students?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it's true that we are holding the line on transportation funding. There was one small envelope of transportation funding, the fuel price contingency program, that wasn't scheduled to continue past April 1, and because of the fiscal climate we're in, we can't continue that one. But we still have $272 million of transportation funding. It's a slight decrease. It's a 5.8 per cent decrease. The funding is just one aspect. The member is right. If we want to decrease ride times and make transportation more efficient, one of the ways is to make sure the school boards are co-operating and looking at all of the strategies they can to make those ride times shorter.

Mrs. Leskiw: My next question: why aren't school jurisdictions required to work together to ensure that kids are being transported in the most efficient way?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we flow the transportation dollars through to school boards and allow them to be – well, they are in the best position to make decisions that make sense for their local communities. We do expect and we do encourage them to co-operate, and we have many boards that are co-operating. As a matter of fact, 32 of our 62 boards are co-operating. We put an element in the new Education Act allowing the minister to direct boards to co-operate on transportation.

Mrs. Leskiw: My final question: what will you be doing to encourage school boards to work together so that the funds that they save can be redirected to students and classrooms, where they belong?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we do think there's the opportunity to save about 2 and a half million dollars in rural Alberta by transportation co-operation and another $2 million in urban centres, and we're very encouraged by some of the most recent announcements from Edmonton public and Edmonton Catholic about doing a study on transportation co-operation. So we're encouraging them. We're looking at incentives. We've got some incentives in place, and like I said, we've got the new element in the Education Act that will give us the ultimate ability to step in and give them more direction. But the regulatory review is coming up as well, and that'll be a great place for Albertans to have that discussion.

Statements by the Speaker

Decorum

Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day Program

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a moment the Clerk will call for Members' Statements, but before that and while I have your attention and a few things are fresh, I want to take a couple of minutes to just address a number of notes that I've received, and they've come from both sides of the House. It's with regard to interruptions, interjections, disturbances, distractions. You name it; we've had a little bit of it from all standpoints today.

On the one hand, I have some government members who are asking that the opposition members stop interrupting answers when they are being given. On the other hand, I have members in the opposition asking government members to stop interrupting them when they're asking their questions and so on.

There were a number of examples of this going both ways. When the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks asked his question, we had members of the government try to answer the question, and we had disruptions over here from the opposition members. They didn't like the answer, perhaps.

We have the same thing going on over there. We had questions from Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley. We had questions from St. Albert being asked. The Premier started to answer the question, and in the middle of it all the government side started pounding away because they liked the answer.

It's a form of disruption either way. The Speaker is often called to adjudicate in moments like that, but you can't have it both ways, hon. members. Either you're going to sit there and interrupt each other all the time or you're not. Whether it's pounding and applauding somebody for a great answer or heckling them for an answer that you don't like, it's still a disruption, and it still leads to some form of disorder. What it really does, which really irks me, is that it prevents one or two other members from asking their questions because we've taken up the time with the disruptions. So could we please remember that and particularly remember it on Thursdays, when we're all so anxious to get home to our constituents?

You know, we sit here and we listen to allegations being levelled against each other, against government members, against opposition members, the government's policy, the opposition's policy, and so on instead of getting on with the real debate, and that's to hold the government accountable by all members, private members on both sides of the House.

You can't stand there and accuse members and accuse ministers and accuse government or, for that matter, accuse opposition members of certain allegations and not expect some kind of a response from them. If it's your purpose to come in here and evoke those kind of responses, then there's no point in me trying to enforce any rules around it regarding decorum, which we've talked about at length, regarding civility of debate or respect or whatever else you want to call it.

So please take that home over the weekend and study it because we have an opportunity here to help future MLAs, and I'm going to ask for your help in this regard.

The Legislative Assembly is again hosting Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day, which many of you should now be familiar with. That is going to occur on Monday and Tuesday, May 6 and 7. It's a great opportunity for 87 high school students, one from each of your constituencies, from all across the province to come into this Assembly and into the Annex and learn more about what we do. We want them to gain this better understanding of our parliamentary democracy and how it works. We want them to meet you as their MLA, to meet other MLAs, and we want them to become really good citizens in the process. Your student, if you're able to help identify one, will come here and even participate in a debate right in this Chamber. Please let your high school students know about this because we have to get on with the program as quickly as possible. It is sponsored by the Royal Canadian Legion, and there is no cost to the students whatsoever – none – and visitor services does all of the arranging.

Now, the deadline for MLA for a Day was supposed to be this coming Monday, but we have very few students identified by you so far. In fact, it's such a low number, I won't even quote it. So I would ask you to please over this weekend try and connect with some high school teachers in your area, some high school students that you know in your communities and to encourage them to take up this opportunity. I will be extending the deadline officially to Friday, April 19, so that we can get more students into this very important program. I would hate for us to lose it. Your constituency assistants have all of the information. Just remind them. When you finish here, send them a quick e-mail and see if we can get on with it. MLA for a Day really needs your help, and we'd appreciate any that you can give us.

In 30 seconds we'll call for the Clerk to announce Members' Statements.

Taxation Policy

Mr. Hehr: I'm dedicating this to the province of Saskatchewan, home of Brad Wall, the darling of conservative politics and Canada's most popular Premier, home of budget surpluses, and the province that now has the lowest unemployment rate in Canada. This must be befuddling to members of the PCs and their estranged cousins, the Wildrose, who despite all evidence to the contrary seem to hold steadfastly to the belief that our fiscal structure or, if that is too cryptic, our tax code is what drives our economy. In coming to this conclusion, both of these parties seem to forget that our province is located on 25 per cent of the world's proven oil resources.

Let's look closer at our neighbour. Saskatchewan is the second lowest taxed jurisdiction in Canada. Saskatchewan: home to a PST. Saskatchewan: home to progressive income taxes. Saskatchewan: home to higher corporate tax rates. In fact, if Alberta adopted Saskatchewan's tax code, this province would bring in an additional $11 billion a year. With that revenue, we could have full-day kindergarten. There would be no cuts to universities and colleges. The government could build the 50 new schools and 140 family care clinics they promised. Alberta could also avoid going into debt some $17 billion, and we could grow our heritage savings trust fund.

Saskatchewan proves that a reasonable tax structure does not lead to business leaving the province or unemployment skyrocketing. Instead, the Saskatchewan tax code has not only allowed for a budget surplus, but it's allowed them to grow their economy and have the ability to do what is necessary to ensure a civil society.

Mr. Speaker, it's time for both the PCs and their estranged cousins, the Wildrose, to get real regarding this issue. As Saskatchewan shows, there's no need to be the lowest tax jurisdiction by a country mile to have economic and social success.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by Calgary-Currie.

Market Access for Energy Resources

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier's mission to Washington along with the hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development and the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations earlier this week exemplified our government's unwavering commitment to broadening access to international markets for Alberta's energy resources. The citizens of our province entrusted us to be leaders and responsible stewards of our most valuable natural resources, and the Premier's mission further solidifies this position by delivering our message to officials on both sides of the Keystone debate.

The approval of the Keystone pipeline would not only strengthen our strong, long-standing bond with our southern ally, further bolstering Alberta's role as a responsible supplier of energy to America, but it would also lead to economic benefits for both Canada and the U.S., something the opposition is quick to conveniently ignore. It's easy for members across the aisle to blindly critique and politicize every single policy decision that this government makes, but baseless musings bereft of any substance do not benefit Albertans or help to establish a responsible Canada-U.S. energy partnership, one guided by our government's strong environmental track record on both sides of the border.

While the opposition promises to cut Alberta jobs and establish backward-looking socioeconomic provincial firewalls, our Premier, Alberta's Premier, is busy debunking myths and highlighting our position to Washington's decision-makers and concerned citizens alike. The last time I checked, revenue generated from irresponsible opposition smear campaigns and get-out-of-jail cards currently total zero, did not add to Alberta's environmental track record or future, and did not open international markets, especially since the opposition is so adamantly against our forward-thinking environmental policies.

Good economic leadership is derived through the fostering of strong international bonds, and I am proud of our Premier for bringing Alberta's message to our American friends. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'll comment on this again at a later time, but we don't traditionally allow points of order during private members' statements, and we'll review that matter.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

2:50 Calgary Meals on Wheels

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to recognize an important nonprofit organization in Calgary, Meals on Wheels. For 48 years Calgary Meals on Wheels has given Calgarians in need healthy meals regardless of age or circumstance. Some clients include schoolchildren, the working homeless, single parents, seniors, and veterans.

When Calgary Meals on Wheels first opened its doors, it had eight clients and operated from a church basement. Today the picture is very different. In 2012 alone they delivered over 371,000 meals. Demand for their services grows every day. Meals on Wheels will be moving into a brand new production facility in June equipped with 16,000 square feet of kitchen. Meals on Wheels will be able to produce over 5,000 meals daily in this new facility.

As you can imagine, any nonprofit organization that serves as many clients as Meals on Wheels does requires a great deal of volunteers. Each day 60 volunteers are needed to make home meal deliveries. I have the honour to be one of those who delivers meals within my constituency of Calgary-Currie. Meals on Wheels gives me the opportunity to listen and to be present for those in need.

I once delivered a meal to a soft-spoken woman in my constituency who seemed particularly quiet one afternoon. When I asked her how she was, she had just learned that morning that her son had passed on suddenly. I could tell she was alone and in shock over the news. We simply listened to her, let her cry, and promised to follow up and see how she was doing. In that moment she needed someone to be present, and the Meals on Wheels driver and I were there to care.

Mr. Speaker, this is why I ran to be an MLA. I served families as an educator for almost 20 years by caring and listening. The truth is that sometimes we don't know the strength of the simple things we do as politicians. I thank Meals on Wheels for being the conduit, the hand that has helped me do what matters for Albertans and for my families that I feel so privileged to serve in Calgary-Currie.

Prescription Drug Coverage

Mr. Barnes: This government's negligence in health care has caused ongoing grief for doctors, patients, and pharmacists. To complicate matters, the government now is attempting to create a smokescreen, hoping to distract Albertans from the real impact that recent government changes will have on Alberta pharmacies.

Yesterday in another attempt to change the channel, the government issued a press release promoting numerous myths about the situation facing pharmacists. The Alberta Pharmacists' Association was quick to issue a response to this out-of-touch government. For instance, the government's release reannounced $10.6 million in funding through the remote access grant, Mr. Speaker, but the money was already committed to in past announcements. Surely this government can do better than rehashing old announcements to try to distract Albertans from the facts.

The government says that a $1 per prescription transaction fee will help, but the facts state otherwise. Pharmacists have repeatedly said that $1 is insufficient, but this government has refused to listen. This government also makes the claim that the reduction of generic drug prices won't hurt pharmacies. However, the set prices will result in a $600,000 hit to every pharmacy's revenue line. That's a tough hit for anybody to take, Mr. Speaker.

What it comes down to is this: these types of Soviet-style price controls will actually drive up the out-of-pocket cost of medicine and result in shortages across the province. That means fewer Albertans getting access to the medicines they need to stay healthy. This type of government-knows-best approach is ridiculous bureaucratic overreach of the highest order.

Mr. Speaker, this has gone on long enough. It's time for this government to admit it was wrong, backtrack on these backwards and regressive policies, and preserve pharmacy services for all Albertans.

Get Outdoors Weekend

Ms Pastoor: Mr. Speaker, Alberta has some of the most beautiful outdoor places in the world. Following a winter hibernation in our homes we Albertans are ready to get out and enjoy the outdoors, and that's exactly what the Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend is all about. The second annual Alberta Get Outdoors, or GO, Weekend takes place this year from April 12 to 14.

GO Weekend encourages Albertans of all ages and abilities to get out and enjoy their favourite activities or, in fact, try some new ones. We know the benefits of being active and that even small amounts of activity help us to be healthier and happier. GO Weekend is for individuals to get fresh air and be active. It's an opportunity for entire communities to have fun together.

For this year's GO Weekend our partners at the Be Fit for Life network are hosting free public events in nine communities across this province. The website getoutdoorsalberta.ca has more information about these events as well as ideas on getting out and how to be active.

The Associate Minister of Wellness will be involved in many events over this weekend, and I'm looking forward to being a part of the Get Outdoors events that are happening in Lethbridge on April 13. We have a day of games, yoga, road bicycle races, and other healthy outdoor activities.

I encourage all Albertans to be a part of the excitement during Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend. Where is the event in your area? Visit healthyalberta.com, and you'll find out. For now, you GO: get outside, Alberta.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(3) to advise the House that on Monday, April 15, 2013, written questions 28, 29, 31, and 33 will be accepted, and written questions 30 and 32 will be dealt with.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2013

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce Bill 17, which amends the Municipal Government Act, the MGA, to implement the municipal sustainability strategy.

The MSS, the municipal sustainability strategy, was developed by a working group composed of representatives from the key municipal stakeholder groups such as AUMA, AAMDC, et cetera, and has received strong stakeholder support. These changes will result in a more proactive approach to identifying challenges, more community engagement and involvement in the long-term future of Alberta's municipalities, and more sustainable communities for our residents.

I look forward to discussing this bill as it moves forward. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a first time]

The Speaker: I just want to congratulate and thank the member for that first reading, which was less than one minute. That's very much in keeping with the tradition of this House. The reason I know that is because I once violated that rule significantly. So I thank you very much for setting a good example for the rest of us, who at some point may make first readings.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 17, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2013, be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark or someone on behalf of.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the leader of the third party and the MLA for Edmonton-Meadowlark I have two tablings that he referred to in his questions today. The first is copies of the report from the Congressional Research Service on Taxes and the Economy: An Economic Analysis of the Top Tax Rates Since 1945. This was released in September of 2012.

The second is the labour force survey from March 2013. It shows that our employment is above the level of 12 months earlier.

Thank you. May I continue with my own?

The Speaker: Just before you do, hon. member, I notice that it is 3 o'clock and that the Deputy Government House Leader wishes to pose a question.

Mr. Campbell: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'd ask that we ask for unanimous consent to delay Standing Order 7(7).

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Routine is not quite concluded, and the Deputy Government House Leader has asked that we be allowed time to complete that. It requires unanimous consent. Does anyone object to giving that unanimous consent? Please say so now.

The Speaker: Hearing no objection, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, please proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to continue with the tablings that are from people that have communicated with me, generally constituents from the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. The first one is from Anneta Alexandrovich around the funding of fertility treatments for Albertans. She strongly supports the inclusion of financial assistance and raises the issue of Albertans who are financially unable to pursue this and how difficult it is. She believes it should be covered by the public purse.

The second tabling is from Peter Koziarz. He is a diagnostic radiologist working in Edmonton. He's very disappointed with the government's position and what he feels are heavy-handed negotiation tactics with the physicians. He raises a number of other points, a very strong letter.

Next is an e-mail from Alim Nagji, who is working as a medical resident for Alberta Health Services, also not keen on the government's approach to negotiating with the doctors. He thinks it's going to have an effect down the line on being able to recruit prospective new physicians.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you. No other tablings, Edmonton-Centre, on behalf of any other colleagues? All done?

Hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, you had a tabling.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the recommended number of copies of the memorandum I quoted from during my question to the hon. Health minister regarding the communication protocol for Alberta Health Services and the closure of the seniors' care centre.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Little Bow, you had a tabling, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Donovan: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two things to table today with the requisite copies. One is to Minister Horne, the Health minister, from a doctor in Alberta about the cuts. I'll be tabling that.

The other tabling is from a constituent of mine, Dorothy Seiller from Nobleford, who is not very happy with the health care system, especially when she went in in Lethbridge.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Please be reminded that we don't mention names of our hon. members.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, did you have a tabling as well?

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks for coming back to me. I have two tablings here. One, 50 or more copies of some of the e-mail submissions that we've been getting, is talking about the Michener Centre and people who would wish to keep the Michener Centre open.

The second tabling is the appropriate number of copies of some samples from the people that we met and received submissions from on our budget tour, that we did back in February, people saying things such as that they would like to see the government reduce their wasting of scarce resources on propaganda-style advertising and another one about health care as well. I would like to submit those, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any others or anyone on behalf of anyone else? Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five letters here out of the litany of letters that I've received on the pharmacare issue here in the province that I would like to table.

The Speaker: Thank you. Thank you for demonstrating a tidy way of doing a tabling. Congratulations. Well done.

Are there others?

If not, then I have a tabling today. Hon. members, I'm going to table something that I hope will catch your attention because I'm going to present here five copies of biographies with respect to our pages, who serve us so faithfully. Please take a moment to have a look at it.

We have no tablings to the Clerk. Can we, then, proceed with the points of order? I think I have only one, and I think it's from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. Please give us the citation and proceed.

Point of Order Referring to Party Matters

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), and it's with respect to a comment made by the Minister of Service Alberta. During the debate today it was very clear that he deliberately and purposely went out of his way to answer the question. The question wasn't directed at him, but instead he decided to take the question and recite an answer that definitely did cause disruption in this Chamber.

Mr. Speaker, it is very clear – and you have been very clear – that party matters that do not relate to policy or legislation cannot be discussed in this Legislature. In fact, I recall even getting interrupted midway through a question I was asking on a specific party matter, and I wasn't even able to finish the answer because you made it very clear that if it's a purely internal party matter that doesn't relate to a policy or doesn't relate to specific legislation or what the government is doing, it cannot be discussed in this Chamber.

In this instance the Minister of Service Alberta referred to an internal party matter of the Wildrose Party. It has no bearing whatsoever on government policy, on legislation, on, for example, ongoing investigations by our Chief Electoral Officer or any other officers of this Legislature. In this case, just to be clear, he was talking about bonds that our candidates have to put forward when they're running for the Wildrose Party. These bonds are simply paid back, Mr. Speaker, and it's just to ensure that the rules in the nomination are followed. The question that the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw was putting forward was simply whether or not backbench government MLAs have an opportunity to speak up and stand up for their constituents, and he was referring to the education property tax, he was referring to the medevac situation, and he was referring to the Michener case.

I'll be very brief here. The Minister of Service Alberta knows the rules. He very deliberately and purposely answered the question. It specifically related to a purely internal party matter, that you, Mr. Speaker, have been unequivocal on in the past. I would ask that you absolutely and unequivocally admonish the Minister of Service Alberta for this comment. The subsequent result if people continue to ignore your rulings: it will just continue again and again and again from our side and their side. As this was an internal party matter deliberately and purposely put forward by the Minister of Service Alberta, I'd ask that you admonish this member.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't want to waste a lot of the House's time but just a couple of points. First of all, any minister of the Crown can get up and answer any questions asked in this House, whether it's directed at him or not, and the fact that the Minister of Service Alberta got up to answer the question is neither here nor there.

Also, Mr. Speaker, you've made it quite clear in this House – and you talked about it again today – that we seem to get a little rambunctious in here and that the jabs go back and forth. Sometimes – I don't know; maybe it's Thursday afternoon – the opposition seems to be getting a little thin skinned when members of the government react to them on issues that have been raised.

I mean, if you follow the arguments of the deputy House leader for the opposition, they wouldn't be able to ask any questions in question period because they're coming at the government on a number of different issues at all times. You know, Mr. Speaker, I feel that the answer from the Minister of Service Alberta was a public fact. It was well documented in the media.

Mr. Wilson: So was the $430,000 donation.

Mr. Campbell: We're not talking about that. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, please. The chair is up here. Thank you.

Mr. Campbell: I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker. There's a prime example of what I'm getting at.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to follow the rules that you've set. I want to see some decorum in this House, but the rules have to be both ways. The opposition has to be more careful in the questions they ask, and I would suggest that the government be more responsible in the answers they give.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Centre, did you wish to chime in on this as well? I saw you rise.

Ms Blakeman: You know, I can't much beat that. I think we all need to be careful of how we're addressing other caucuses' party business.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members on both sides of the House.

You know, this is a very interesting situation and an opportune time to make a couple of brief comments. The issue at hand here is with respect to an answer given by the Minister of Service Alberta in which he said, "Mr. Speaker, I find it very amusing that the party that had one-thousand-dollar good-conduct bonds or the thousand-dollar bozo eruption prevention fund is talking about muzzling MLAs," and he went on.

Now, I listened very intently, in particular, to what the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills said in his comments. He's absolutely right, hon. members. We can't come into this Assembly and raise party matters. I have mentioned this on numerous occasions, on several occasions in this House, wherein I've asked you to please remember certain rules that exist in Beauchesne's and House of Commons Procedure and Practice and elsewhere. I won't go through them all. But it is explicitly against the rules to raise matters that pertain to party policies or party fundraising or party donations or party finances of whatever kind. In fact, in this case the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills went on to say that this is a Wildrose internal party matter, or words to that effect, and it may well be the case.

By the same token, it is very much in order to ask questions of the government's policy, of the government's budgeting, or the government's procedures and practices. However, you can't have it both ways again here, hon. members. On the one hand, I have a member of the opposition saying that we can't raise questions to do with party matters pertaining to the Wildrose, and on the other hand we can't have the Wildrose asking questions about the government's party, which is the Progressive Conservatives, and their policies because that has no business in here either. So neither one of them has any applicability here because it's a party matter.

I have been, as was stated, very unequivocal about this matter, and I will continue to be unequivocal about it. I have tried to be as consistent as possible in applying that rule, and I'm going to have to tighten it up a little bit more, I can see. I think the Deputy Government House Leader has commented that it is not unusual for us to get rambunctious particularly on Thursdays or when issues of a sensitive nature get raised. Nothing is more sensitive than party matters, nothing is more political than party matters, and you ought not be bringing them in here. Such matters do not belong here for debate. Those are the rules.

I'll tell you something else that's very interesting, and that is that there are rules about questions with respect to internal party matters or internal party fundraising. It's on that point that I have mentioned several times that those kinds of questions will be ruled out of order. What is very strange, however, is that I cannot find anywhere at my fingertips any rules about answers not referring to party matters. It would appear that questions to do with internal fundraising by parties and party matters are out of order, but answers may not be out of order. We're going to look into this a little bit further.

In the meantime I'm going to ask that the government members who are answering questions please refrain from delving into party matters that pertain to any of the opposition parties or to their own party, for that matter, provided that we can get the same co-operation from opposition members. That would be, to me, a fair and balanced approach and one I would hope that you would take under advisement rather immediately because it is those kinds of issues that inflame this House more quickly than a match near a hot stove. I would ask you to please keep that in mind, and I will admonish anyone who strays from that particular vein of thinking.

My final comment is simply that these kinds of matters often require clarification. I think it's been adequately clarified. We're going to move on on the understanding that I have just given.

Thank you.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Sitting Times during Main Estimates Debate

29. Mr. Hancock moved:

- A. On Monday afternoons during the period that the 2013-14 main estimates stand referred to the legislative policy committees, the Assembly stands adjourned at 6 p.m.;
- B. Notwithstanding Standing Order 59.03(4)(b), following completion of consideration of the main estimates by the legislative policy committees
  - (i) on April 22, 2013, or
  - (ii) on such other date of which the Government House Leader has provided written notice to House leaders and tabled in the Assembly, the Assembly shall reconvene in Committee of Supply at 9:30 p.m., at which time the committees shall report, and voting on the main estimates shall proceed.

[Debate adjourned March 21: Mr. Fox speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Government Motion 29 is essentially the set-up motion around the timing of the estimates debate, estimates being budgets. This is the one that sets it up so that on Monday night there would be two budget debates running concurrently, which, of course, is very difficult for the opposition members because when there are fewer in the opposition than the number of ministries, obviously, people end up being critic for more than one portfolio. With the third and the fourth parties currently with five and four members, obviously, each member is handling three or four different ministries, so the chances that you're double-booked are pretty high. My sympathy goes out to the legislative support individual, House leaders' services, who has to try and organize the schedule and make sure that we're not double-booked.

What it does end up doing – I, for example, have spoken many times about the number of seniors that I have in my constituency. I'd like to be able to go into the Human Services debates, where that's being debated, both to ask some questions but also to hear what the current issues are and how the government is dealing with them, and I just can't do that when I'm in one of the other five portfolios that I'm doing. Then I end up having to raise the issues during second reading and Committee of the Whole and third reading of the appropriation bill for the budget. It's okay to do it there, but I don't get any feedback from the government, so it's me making statements on the record of where I have concerns about things. I'd like to be able to participate in those budget debates. So it's not an optimum set-up for us.

You know, Mr. Speaker, the one area where there is a parliamentary tradition of optimizing the opposition is around finances. Of all of the legislative committees that are all-party select special standing committees of the Assembly, in which every party has a certain number of seats, the one that is always chaired by an opposition member is Public Accounts, and that's the one that reviews the government's finances, their books; in other words, after the fact. Once the books have come out, the opposition chairs that committee and has a significant number of the members on it to be able to scrutinize and hold the government accountable. So there is a parliamentary recognition of that, yet over my years here I have seen a steady erosion not in the ability of opposition members to robustly hold the government to account – they still do that – but the government does everything in its power to make it harder, to make it more difficult.

I mean, we're now down to a half-hour dinner break. I know lots of people think: "Oh, suck it up, Princess. Really, you're going to be complaining about a half-hour supper break?" Well, yeah. It used to be two and a half hours, and now it's a half-hour. So you've got people rushing from the House. And the break for the afternoon debates: same thing. We're adjourning here a little after 3 o'clock, and the afternoon debates start at 3:30. So you're bombing out of here, me with my arms full of stuff because I'm always carrying everything around, to get back, file your stuff, grab the stuff for the debate in the afternoon, and get up the stairs to the committee rooms in the Annex to actually start that debate. It's just not very dignified and not very efficient.

Another part of what happened with this particular motion is that there were a number of changes that were – I'm not going to say negotiated, Mr. Speaker, because that would be a word that would not adequately describe the process that the House leaders went through. It was much more: this is what we're going to do, and the rest of you are going to deal with it. Certainly, there are a couple of situations where the opposition House leaders feel very strongly that there was an agreement to carry on some of the debates in a certain way, and that has not happened. That is leading to a great deal less desire to be totally co-operative in the House. Could I put it that way? Would you all understand the code that I was using if I said it that way?

Hon. members opposite, you have to understand that everything you do affects what we do over here. If one of you raises a private party business as part of an answer, that sticks with people, and they are less likely to be willing to do a favour for the government like give unanimous consent to revert to the introduction of people or something. Why would they? They're not in a very good mood anymore, and they're not feeling very friendly towards government members. That all starts to add up. You know, there are little things that are said. There's the timing of things. A lot of that stuff all works together.

We have a lot of new people elected in both the government and in the Official Opposition, and I hope government members are beginning to understand what that does to the willingness of people to co-operate in a friendly manner and how that starts to erode as we go on. I think we would all agree that by the last day of the three weeks we had before the constituency break, we were ready to inflict bodily harm on each other, and that's just not a good state to work in.

One of the other things I want to talk about, that is a direct result of this government motion, is that budgets are now being exclusively debated in these legislative policy committees. I still often wonder if these aren't make-work projects for the government members. All of the ministries are divided into one of those three legislative policy committees, and now we have the appropriate department's budget also going in front of these committees. The committees were humongous. They were 25 people. They've now been cut down to . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, we're on Motion 29.

Ms Blakeman: Yes.

The Speaker: I believe you may have already spoken, but it was a delight listening to you again.

Ms Blakeman: I was so entertaining. I got away with it, didn't I?

The Speaker: Well, it's only because it's your special day, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: I kind of knew I had. I almost wrote and asked if I'd already spoken to it, but I'm glad I got the time I did. Thank you for being so kind.

The Speaker: Yes. Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others who wish to speak to Government Motion 29? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Caldor.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I can pick up where the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre left off. I guess we still have a couple more weeks of this system that we're using for the estimates, and I have a couple of things that I wanted to bring forward in regard to perhaps a more efficient use of the time and interaction and the depth to which we can debate the estimates.

The first thing that I was struck by – of course, I'm coming back after an absence – is that previously we debated the budget estimates here in the Legislature. When we were doing that in the Legislature, I noticed that there was distinctly more time and capacity by which we could interact with the ministers on the specific budget line items, and we had an opportunity as well, I think, to ask questions that could be pursued further at a later date through written questions and so forth. You know, with these budget estimates taking place in committee rooms, it just really feels as though we're somehow squirreling away this important democratic process into smaller and smaller places, where the public is less able to view what's actually going on.

Of course, number one, Mr. Speaker, there are no cameras in the budget committee rooms, so people are not able to watch the streams of the estimates like they can when things take place here in this Chamber. Quite frankly, we have at our disposal this wonderful room. I think that there's a certain level of gravity that lends itself to our budget estimates when we are in fact doing them here in the Chamber. If there are estimates that have a distinct or a special significance to the public, then, of course, we have the seating capacity here for several hundred people. In a budget room we maybe can only put 20 or 30 people, if that, and quickly the air gets sucked right out of the room when they're packed in there like that, and it becomes a less conducive atmosphere to have the kinds of debates that we need.

We know that there are lots of postsecondary students that wanted to see the advanced education debate, for example, last night, and there just simply wasn't the space or the capacity to deal with it. We have the whole system set up here with lots of seating and with the security set up here – it's all wonderful – with mikes and cameras and so forth. The symbolism of our moving from the Chamber here, to which we all have been elected, to these individual committee rooms: I just find that to be a little bit unacceptable.

Second of all, I noticed a distinct lack of continuity between the rules of the different chairs running the different ministries in the different committees when we were debating the budget estimates that I've participated in so far. There wasn't the continuity. I didn't know, when I went in, how the question cycle was going to unfold. Sometimes it was just a first-come, first-served kind of deal with a list, like we usually use in committees, and sometimes there was this rotation with PC, Wildrose, you know, NDP, Liberal. There was no rhyme or reason to it necessarily. When we challenged that, sometimes some of the chairs got quite snippy about it, quite frankly. Again, I found that to be a little bit less than conducive to proper debate. I think some continuity and some regularity around that, which can be negotiated in a civilized sort of way between the House leaders, would really help to make our estimates go a lot smoother.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, again, just jamming together all of these estimates in such a concentrated way really makes it difficult for us to be in our top form to make sure that we cover each of the debates or each of the ministries in the best way possible. For example, the week before the break I had quite a lot of estimates. I had 15 hours of budget estimates scheduled to my time. You know, I'm a pretty hale and hearty guy – right? – as most people here know, probably able to deal with those things. It just seemed to be such an incredibly compressed and rushed sort of thing. It was not necessarily the best way to go forward.

As I would like to say again, Mr. Speaker, what goes around comes around. The government members here, what's left of them after they lose an election and end up as a small minority, will have to deal with that same thing. I promise it will be with much more equanimity and graciousness, allowing a longer space of time so that the debates for budget estimates will not tax you in the same way that they did tax me over these last weeks. [interjections] Okay. Well, you know, there are other voices, though, that I cannot necessarily control that might try to exact revenge and deliver the same sort of inhuman working conditions for the estimates, so I can't guarantee being able to do that in the future.

Anyway, my point, Mr. Speaker, in three easy pieces, is that I think we should be debating the budget estimates here in the House, where we've been elected to do so, that we should be spacing those debates in a much more equitable sort of way, and that we need to have the continuity and the uniformity of the rules that are allowing the chairs to run those debates so that we all know what to expect when we get there.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, the hon. Deputy Government House Leader to close debate.

Mr. Campbell: I'd just call the question, Mr. Speaker.

[Government Motion 29 carried]

Public Interest Commissioner Appointment

30. Mr. Campbell moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the report of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices tabled in the Assembly on March 5, 2013, and appoint Mr. Peter Hourihan as Public Interest Commissioner for a term commencing on the coming into force of section 38 of the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act and expiring October 16, 2016.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this motion is debatable. Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. There are just a couple of things that have occurred to me as I studied this government motion. Aside from the fact that I think we're asking any individual that now will hold the post of Public Interest Commissioner through the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act section – we have given them an impossible task. I really feel that the government shepherded through an act that doesn't protect whistle-blowers, and I'm being very careful to tell people to not be depending on it to protect them if they do decide to step forward. In putting someone in place as the Public Interest Commissioner for this, we are asking him to take on an impossible task, and for that I thank him.

Two other things occurred to me as I looked at this. One, there is a backdating of the appointment. I don't know if the current Ombudsman – yeah, that's the position he has right now – who is this individual that will also take on the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, was doing the work starting last October, but it's interesting to me that it's backdated. It makes it that it expires on October 16, 2016, a four-year term. I think that most of the terms that government appoints people for are three years or five years, and then, generally speaking, there's an automatic renewal of it, so you're serving for a total of six or 10. With the four years I thought: what the heck is going on?

Well, if I look a little more closely, Mr. Speaker, gosh darn it, if that won't expire six months after the next election, so nicely in place and well into the mandate of the next government. I'm hoping that we will at that point be able to appoint a dedicated person for this. I think it's deserving of it, and I would like to see that happen, but clearly it's not going to happen for a while seeing as the current person's term will not expire until the fall of 2016.

Thank you for letting me raise those few comments, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to support the motion. I just really have a problem with the way the whole act was done.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to speak to Government Motion 30. You know, with respect to the appointment of this particular individual I would just have to echo the comments of the previous member. When this legislation came into place, there were so many loopholes throughout the entire act. Our caucus, in particular the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, had put forward dozens and dozens of amendments that would strengthen the legislation, but unfortunately the government voted down each and every one of them.

While this individual may be qualified, may be recommended by the Legislative Offices Committee, unfortunately due to the excessive loopholes that are currently existing in what they like to call whistle-blower legislation – the name of the act itself doesn't make much sense – there are very limited protections for real whistle-blowers.

One of the problems that we saw in the legislation was that it didn't go retroactively. If somebody has information going back years and years before and wants to come forward, wants to shed light on those facts, whether it was wasteful spending, whether it was bullying and intimidation, under the legislation as it stands, they can no longer do so. Even if the Public Interest Commissioner is appointed and capable, he would not be able to entertain any of those complaints that are filed if they go beyond a certain time period.

One of the other problems with the act is that what it does is that it forces an individual to go through internal measures within a government department rather than giving that individual the direct protection of the Public Interest Commissioner, which should have been done. We saw throughout that debate that independent third parties that had expertise and specialized in whistle-blower protection gave this government an F on this legislation. In fact, in many cases an individual who wants to blow the whistle on this government would have to seek particular advice because there are so many holes in the legislation that it may not be in his or her best interest to go under this legislation if they have legitimate concerns. They'd have to seek other avenues.

The other aspect of it is that if the media wanted to blow the whistle on something, they're of course not protected. You know, this Premier in the throne speech – it seems so long ago – had promised that this government would enter a new era of openness and transparency. She even set up a new ministry, AT and T, the Accountability, Transparency and Transformation ministry, a whole ministry just to try to achieve the outcomes in her throne speech, which were openness and transparency. But under this legislation – I hate to even call it whistle-blower protection because there is very limited protection – when you actually dig into the details, it does nothing to protect whistle-blowers and hence does nothing to increase openness and transparency in this province.

We had an opportunity here in Alberta to put forward whistle-blower legislation, the strongest whistle-blower legislation across the country, so that individuals could come forward, shine the light on infractions of the government or wasteful spending, and really have openness and transparency. Unfortunately, it's been universally panned by stakeholders, third parties, independent bodies that have expertise in this, and the media. Everybody has basically stated that this legislation was a failure. They've given it a complete failure. The Minister of AT and T should have been bold, should have come forward with the strongest possible legislation in this province so that we could actually see results on this file.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to Government Motion 30, as was stated earlier, even if the Public Interest Commissioner is well qualified, even if he's exceptionally diligent in his job, unfortunately he has to abide by the weakest whistle-blower legislation in Canada. He has to abide by that legislation. His mandate would be limited to what's set out in the legislation, and this legislation was a failure. It does not protect whistle-blowers. We see again and again individuals in health care, particularly in health care, in education, and so forth who want to come forward and express their legitimate concerns to try and better the system, but they are scared. They are scared that under this government, where we've seen intimidation and bullying, they can't do that or there will be repercussions.

What whistle-blower legislation is supposed to do is protect those very same individuals. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, this legislation does nothing to protect those individuals, so it defeats the whole purpose of actually implementing that type of legislative framework. This Public Interest Commissioner is in a very precarious situation because an individual could come to him, expose certain evidence, but under the legislation as it currently stands, without this government accepting the substantive amendments that were put forward by the Official Opposition, the legislation would afford those same individuals no protection.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, despite what was a good concept by the Premier in her throne speech, the whistle-blower legislation does not increase openness and transparency.

Those would be my comments on Government Motion 30. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, it's an honour to rise today and talk once more about the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act and the motion here to appoint a commissioner. Now, I find it interesting that we're appointing a commissioner to look after this legislation when, as we discussed back in the debate, the commissioner really has the ability for whatever reason to not investigate. It's right here in the legislation as well. It could be within the regulations as well. Under section 36 in the act it says:

The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations . . .

- (j) prescribing circumstances in which the Commissioner is not required to investigate a disclosure.

We're talking about installing somebody into this position, and we haven't even seen the regulations yet. We don't know what this person is going to be allowed to investigate. I find it unfathomable that we're actually appointing somebody to this position before we've seen the entire set of regulations that will govern the implementation of this act.

[Mrs. Leskiw in the chair]

I guess it's with great trepidation that I'll be voting on this motion here today. [interjections] I said voting "on" this motion.

I had a lot of frustration with this legislation when we were debating it back in the fall, and my frustration continues today. I mean, really, this is not public interest disclosure. This is muddying the waters. This is adding smoke and mirrors back into Alberta politics and finding a way of burying the concerns of the employees of this government within another bureaucratic nightmare. Again, as I said, it's frustrating, and with trepidation I will be voting on this motion today.

The Acting Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You look really well. That entire ensemble with the Speaker's chair suits you very well, I must say. That's great. If somebody looks back in history, they'll note that I did do that job once briefly, too. I don't know if it's such a good one or not.

Anyway, I'm just up here, Madam Speaker, to speak briefly on Government Motion 30 in regard to the Ombudsman taking on this role of the Public Interest Commissioner for a term. I know that the Ombudsman's staff is a very competent team, and they are willing to expand and to take this onto the side of their desks as part of the whistle-blower protection act. I just have a couple of comments in regard to how that might unfold. As I say, the staff of the Ombudsman's office is very competent and has lots of experience, and I think that they could offer us probably quite a few insights as to the shortcomings of the whistle-blower protection act as it unfolds as they try to execute that act off the sides of their desks and through the Ombudsman's office. I'm hoping that we give the Ombudsman and their office plenty of latitude to give us some insights as to what shortcomings do exist in this whistle-blower protection act that we handed down to them.

We know that there were lots of problems with this act, and we know that the compromises that were built into this act, I think, eventually really emasculated the original intention of the whistleblower protection act. I'm hoping that the Ombudsman's office can in fact help to rectify that problem and that we have open ears and allow those officials to give us the information so that we can in turn give back, then, the tools that would make this an effective piece of legislation to move forward on.

Albertans want clear whistle-blower legislation. We know that people in the public service, in emergency services, in just all different walks of life have been hamstrung by threats to their jobs and to the security of their jobs in the past, withholding the knowledge that they know might increase the safety of Albertans. It's been going on for years. It's not something that's exclusive to Alberta, but it's a situation that other jurisdictions around North America have been rectifying. You know, if we would have looked at some of the legislation that has taken place around this issue in different places in North America, in Canada in particular, we could have given the Ombudsman's office much stronger tools than we have.

With that, moving forward, I do feel that by perhaps heeding my words and allowing the Ombudsman to give us a frank critique of this legislation and asking where we can change and amend it – certainly, the basic concept of whistle-blower protection I have no problem with and would like to see it move forward as quickly as possible here in the province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. Standing Order 29(2)(a) is now available.

Seeing none, are there any other speakers to this particular motion?

If not, the hon. Deputy Government House Leader to close debate.

Mr. Campbell: I'll call the question, please, Mr. Speaker.

[Government Motion 30 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 12 Fiscal Management Act

[Adjourned debate March 13: Mr. Campbell]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour to get up and speak on Bill 12. I guess I try not to be negative with stuff, but this one might be hard to have a positive sales pitch on for me. You know, it's tossed out an established format that we've used for over 20 years in this fine Assembly of how to format budgets and quarterly updates as we stick to the rules around what debt is. It seems to be a bit of a challenge now for this current sitting government on how to work around debt. Well, it could have been a challenge, but at least when they had enough money rolling in, it wasn't a big problem all the time. Now that that's cut off a little bit, we have a large issue with it, and I'm, you know, pretty sure we've identified it now. I guess what scares me is that when you sit and you look at how it's kind of all rolled out, we're going to change things around a little bit.

I caught the ire of the crowd a little bit yesterday with my question when I brought up about three different sets of books. That was probably out of line because it's just three different ways of accounting for everything, which is very creative, to say the least. With the new format that has been proposed here with Bill 12, the biggest thing is that it doesn't retroactively go back, so it's hard to compare historical numbers. I mean, there's the odd accountant in the room. I think the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is one.

An Hon. Member: He's a very odd accountant.

Mr. Donovan: Yes. He's just one of those guys.

But, you know, we have accountants in the room. They are professionals, and they say: well, this is how you go through things. I know I've drawn excitement out of the crowd before when I've compared the changing of the bookkeeping to kind of how Enron went about doing some things a number of years ago and WorldCom, all of those. They kind of went around doing their accounting process so that it was very hard to tell what you were actually budgeting on.

You know, as we sit here, you kind of wonder why everybody on the government side sometimes think they are the smartest people in the room. Yes, they've got these 61 seats... [interjections] Cheer that on, Lesser Slave Lake. You might not enjoy it in 2016, I'm hoping.

I mean, we can always go back. I'm sorry for causing any kind of debate and anything that could be going on and the anger over there. Honestly, we're coming up to a year of being in here. A year ago right now we were all knocking on doors and shaking hands and going to public forums and talking about what each party and each place and each person had better than the other party and policies. That's how democracy works. It was great.

Now, the challenge is there. The candidate I ran against in Little Bow was a good friend of mine. Not at any of the forums did I hear him say: "We're going to go back in debt. That's our mandate. That's our policy. That's how we're going to run." You know, when you get into that, I think that's why a lot of Albertans probably don't have a lot of trust in all their politicians. You go out and you campaign on something. I mean, we had some colleagues in the third and fourth parties saying: let's just raise taxes. Hey, they were upfront about what they were going to do. Some said that they were going to raise corporate taxes. That was their way of balancing the books. Our party said: we're going to have to stretch out some things over some capital spending, maybe get rid of some bureaucracy in there, work out some management issues here and there.

Then we have the party that won. Hey, that's what the electorate said. You won, and I give you that. You won more seats. But I don't remember anybody over there saying: hey, we're going to go into debt when we do this. I wasn't lucky enough to go to Edmonton-Gold Bar and listen to the hon. member in their campaign, but I'm pretty sure he probably didn't say: if you elect me, we're going to take this government into debt. I'm just throwing it out there, but I'm pretty sure it probably didn't happen.

I think, you know, you've got to go back to what you said when you were campaigning, not that anybody in here on the government side planned on having to go into debt. But the whole fact is that you could probably look at it and say: something had to give. We can't keep spending a hundred million dollars at AHS for 17 months on executive squandering of money in there, the bonuses that go out. You've got to tighten your belt on things, but you've got to stick with what you campaigned on.

I wasn't there for the RRSP, I wasn't here for a government gold-plated handout and all the rest, so I gave mine back. That was what I campaigned on. I don't expect anybody else in this room to give theirs back because I don't know what you campaigned on. I gave mine back. It wasn't an issue for me. I gave it to the food banks, gave it to a couple of charities, and that was fine. That was the process of it. You've got to stick with what you say.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but could I call for total silence for a second?

An Hon. Member: Somebody's phone is vibrating.

The Speaker: Somebody's cellphone is vibrating? Okay. The noise has stopped.

Sorry, hon. member, to interrupt. I didn't know if I was hearing some sort of an alarm signal or not. Carry on.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, you've got to stick with what you say when you're campaigning. It goes back to a trust level. Now, I'm very lucky in my riding. I'm only the third MLA in the last 50 years, but I had some great people ahead of me.

The hon. Ray Speaker: now, there was a guy that was in four different parties. He was Social Credit back when Peter Lougheed came in. He was a minister previous to that. He rode with that for a while. He actually ended up in four different parties in his time. That goes back to: it's not always the party, and it's not everything else. He was a respectful person who, when he said something, stuck with it, and he always did. He always stuck with what he said. He stuck with what his constituents wanted. To me, that's what your job is here. You're here to represent what your constituents want. You hear all kinds of things, but, you know, his skills were so good that when he retired from being an MLA and stepped down, he ran when the Reform Party was an upbeat new party coming along to maybe unseat some of the old problems that we had in a lot of old parties.

If you kind of spin it, I guess it's all in how you look at things, but I think that maybe that's kind of where I see our party at right now, an upbeat party that's going along and changing how you're doing things. We can sit and figure it all out from the other side. You know what? I'm more than happy to sit. I like sitting around and having the socials with some of the members from the other side. I think we always have to remember that when we're inside here, you have your party policies and what you stand for with your party. When you go outside, when we're all friends, you've got to get along. The 87 people in here all got elected by their constituents because they thought they were the right people for the job, that they would represent their constituency and would actually do what they said when they were campaigning.

Mr. Speaker had a great track record, from 1963 to '92: Social Credit, independent. He started his own political party when he wasn't happy with any of the ones that were on the floor currently, and then he crossed over to the mother ship at the time to finish out, and that's how he finished it out.

When he retired, a friend of mine, Mr. McFarland, became the MLA in '92 for 20 years. Again, anybody on that side of the floor that probably sat with him in caucus meetings – Barry is a very straight-up individual. You generally never leave the room wondering where he came from on something. He told you. That's what the man had, and that's what sold him so well in the constituency all the time. He didn't agree with everybody all the time, but he always let you know what he was thinking, and he always represented his constituents. I go through the Hansard from when Mr. McFarland got in and made his maiden speech, and his was on fighting for Little Bow. I think he was very good at it. He always stood up for what the constituents wanted.

He was a very frugal person when it came to money. From my understanding, over a number of years the constituency office always gave money back to the government because he didn't spend it all. He didn't feel the need to have all the lavish things. I took over his old office. Trust me, it is far from lavish, but it works well for what the constituents in my area want. They don't need all the frills. They don't need all the gimmicks. They want responsible government and, actually, people that sit and do things that they say they're going to do.

So it goes back to when you're campaigning, whether you're an accountant in Edmonton-Gold Bar or a farmer in Mossleigh, to sticking to what you said you were going to do when you campaigned. I don't think anybody campaigned on, "This is what we're going to do and then change to go to Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act," to change a law that was sitting there for over 20 years that was working. I always get worried and wonder: why are we changing it? Obviously, there must be bogeymen in the room and stuff like that, as I've heard before, that have caused all these problems.

The oppositions before have done great jobs, and I think our job as loyal opposition is to hold the government accountable. To me, one of the things that I think needs to be held accountable is how we're going about doing things here. It's being fiscally responsible. It's always the starting of little things here and there. Everybody is, like, "Oh, that's not a lot of money" or "It's not this much money," but it all adds up. I believe I brought up I think it was Motion 507 or one of the motions that I've talked on before. I'm very lucky that I have a good rapport with the past MLAs. The government always had the money for capital, but they never put money in for operation when they built stuff so that you could do the 50 schools, the hospitals, everything else. I tie it, you know, to building a barn and not having the quota or the cattle or the feed in there or anybody to run it. It goes back to that you've got to do some truly good planning, I think, when you're doing things and not spend money just to spend money. It's a challenge.

I can see how it can happen. Everybody gets in, and they want to lavish everybody with what they want, and they want to get your ear because they're trying to get you to see their side. But where's the line of: what do we really need?

Now, I'm sitting here playing with my pen as I make my speech, and it's a Barry McFarland pen, MLA for Little Bow. Why? Because I'm cheap. There was a box of them left in the office when Barry headed out. I still use them. They've still got good ink in them. I mean, it's a PC pen from back in the day, and it hasn't exploded in my hand in any way, shape, or form. You know, you've got to be frugal with these things, and that's the challenge. You've got to sit there and figure it out. If we're going to lead by example in this format in here and show the people of Alberta that we're truly trying to cut back and we're truly trying to do things differently, I think we've got to sit back and figure out how to do it.

As I say, I touched on it a little before about the changing of bookkeeping and stuff, and that always worries me because usually when you start to change things like that, the format of it – so you can't actually go back and compare it to previous years – it's a definite challenge for, you know, the Henrys and Marthas of the world to figure out where the government started spending money, where they've added it, where they've cut it and put in an operational budget, a capital budget, and a savings budget. None of it really correlates with what had happened over the years.

I'd just like everybody this weekend when you go home – and I know everybody on a Thursday afternoon isn't always a huge fan of hanging out in here, but when you go back home . . .

Ms Blakeman: It's a fabulous constituency.

Mr. Donovan: It's a lovely constituency, and I always say that. I think I rent an apartment in it now, so I love it that much that I like to hang out here during the week.

But when you go home, just really sit back and think: last year, when you were door-knocking, did you actually say that we're going to go into debt? I'm not hearing a huge crowd, not anybody on that side jumping up and down and saying: yeah, that's how we campaigned. No. I distinctly remember that the campaigns were: "We can toe the line. We can keep having the schools, the hospitals, all of the infrastructure we need, the overpasses. You name it, we can have it."

Nobody from that side, that I remember, when we campaigned said: we're going to go into debt to do this. It's been very cleverly spun that it's like a household mortgage. Yeah, there could be some voters remorse, but that's part of the game, and that's how democracy works. We'll find out in 2016, in three short years. I mean, the year slid by fairly fast.

We've got to sit back and figure out: did anybody campaign on going into debt? I'm not saying that it's the end of the world. I mean, you've just got to go back and say: did you actually do that a year ago? I don't recall anybody doing that. Not one. There wasn't a person on the other side with that format, that policy, that said: we're going to go into debt.

Whereas now we've gotten into a situation, a problem of finances, and now you want Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act, passed to change how we account. I'd just like everybody to go back and just really think. Is this how you want to run Alberta into the ground in four years? In all honesty, there's no plan in Bill 12 for how to pay it back. There's no strategy for what we're going to pay back or for how you're going to do it. I honestly think your strategy is that somebody else is going to have to deal with it. I'm hoping that with a little bit of rational thinking we can go back and keep doing some long-term planning on what we're doing for capital projects.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. It is the longest name for a riding in this Legislature by far, and I'm very proud to be its MLA.

The question is for the previous speaker, Mr. Speaker. He made a reference to Enron and its accounting issues. I was wondering if he would elaborate on how the Enron accounting problems relate to this budget and to how this government has been reporting.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow to respond, noting that there are others who wish to participate in 29(2)(a).

Mr. Donovan: Well, unlike other colleagues in here, I don't have a background in accounting, so I can't say that I know exactly how Enron – I can tell you about how Enron probably affected everybody financially in the province, tied in one way or the other. I've heard different stories of how they had blocked gas when they bought it and everything else and used some fairly fictitious numbers to make their numbers work. They cooked around the books, to say the least. I mean, it was done. What scared me with that . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, before we start to get notes of relevance, please keep this relevant to the particular subject under debate right now.

Mr. Donovan: You betcha. I was just trying to answer the question.

I mean, the thing was that there was so much money across there. I guess the relevance, Mr. Speaker, is that when they changed their accounting practices, they were doing that in the midst of trying to cover up some huge financial challenges that they had as a company because they got a little loose with the chequebook. They got a little crazy in how they were going to run things, and they kind of thought: we'll just spend our way out of it. I think what happened there – I mean, one of the largest accounting firms in the United States was their auditor, and they didn't catch it – was that they ended up going broke over it because they weren't doing a good job.

Mr. Dorward: Arthur Andersen.

Mr. Donovan: Arthur Andersen. See? I knew an accountant would know that. That's great.

What scares me is that I don't think anybody honestly goes in planning to do it wrong, but then all of sudden you get caught behind the eight ball, and the ball is rolling all the time. I worry when this government is changing the process with a bill on financing – it's been working for 20 years – and goes to the Fiscal Management Act to change the whole way it's laid out. I'm concerned about how that rolls out.

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I've got a very specific question for the hon. member with respect to debt and how he and his party feel about debt in their criticism of us looking at debt for capital. They give the impression that debt is a new thing, that this government is trying to talk about debt as a brand new thing. I'm sure he realizes that P3 schools, P3 projects are debt. There's a liability there. All the ring roads around Edmonton and Calgary: debt there. With every one of the P3 schools that we built, which is about 35 now I think, there is debt there. That's not something that this administration started. That's actually something Ralph Klein started. You know, to mislead people and to try to say that debt and deficit are the same thing – they're not. There's no debt on operations in this budget.

An Hon. Member: Yeah, there is. It's a deficit.

Mr. J. Johnson: No, it's not. There's cash to cover off the operating deficit, which is not debt.

There's a strong net asset position for this province which is much different than any other province in the country. There seems to be a double standard here, though, that debt is a bad word, in their minds, unless it applies to a project in their constituency.

When we announced the twinning of highway 63, it was very clear that that twinning, which was a demand from the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, was going to be financed with no opposition, no criticism from the opposition. When we announced the P3 schools, when we went to turn sod for the school in Airdrie – I've got the article right here. The hon. Member for Airdrie is on the front page with the shovel, turning sod on a P3-financed school in Airdrie last summer. Those are debts. Now, it seems there's a double standard: we don't want debt for the rest of the province, but if it's for our constituency, it's okay.

To the hon. member, who has a school division that we built a school in that just opened in 2012, Picture Butte, and there are more on the list from his school divisions: I'm wrestling with the capital list, but if his constituency gets a new school on the new capital list and it's a P3 school, which is debt, does he support that?

Mr. Donovan: It was a great question, and I appreciate that. I actually have six school divisions in my riding, with all of them crossing over back and forth. [Mr. Donovan's speaking time expired] I was so close.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. We'll look forward to your answer at another time.

In the meantime let's go to Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I haven't spoken to this one already, have I? Because I have a lot of notes, and that always make me think.

On this day when my long service has been recognized, it's very interesting to be debating this particular bill because there have been two previous bills in my time here which I have always referred to as the Government Has To Pass a Law To Keep Itself under Control Financially Bill. One of them was brought in by the Treasurer at the time, Mr. Stockwell Day, and that was the one that I think, honestly, was legislation that said that the government couldn't go into debt. And I thought to myself: how bad a manager are you that you've got to pass legislation to tell yourself that you can't go into debt? I mean, don't you just know not to go into debt? But, no. They actually had legislation that said that.

Actually, all credit goes to Ken Nicol, who was then the Leader of the Official Opposition, who kept saying to the government that you have to create – oh, there were two different ways of referring to it. So the government ended up creating a sustainability fund. He used another word for it. But he was saying that when you've got a surplus, you need to put some of that money aside so that given the cyclical nature of Alberta's economy and its dependence on oil and gas revenues, you know, when it starts to dip, you're able to ride it out with that.

You know, Mr. Nicol just pounded away at that. We were jeered at. We were laughed at. People said: what a stupid idea. Then before we knew it, the government adopted it. That was the second piece of legislation where the sustainability fund was set up. Again I kind of laughed to myself and said, "Well, that's funny because that's the one where the government has to tell itself to save money," which, again, would seem like kind of an obvious thing for the government to be doing.

Now we have an act – and they always have really great names like Fiscal Responsibility Act. Well, yeah. What was the other one? Oh, there we go. The Government Accountability Act. Yeah. I'd hope that a government was fiscally responsible. And the granddaddy was the Financial Administration Act. You know, I think that in a lot of ways some of the previous acts, the predecessors to Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act, were a certain amount of PR and pomp and circumstance to be able to advertise to people. They were kind of election gimmicks: we've got legislation that we will not go into debt. Okay. Good. The government actually used that, and it was quite effective when they were on the doors, but I always secretly kind of giggled because I thought it was so silly that they would have to actually make legislation to have them do things that any Albertan would expect them to do anyway.

So here we are. They are now repealing two of the ones I just talked about. One of them has already been repealed. Just let me check the back, and I'll see what they're taking out. Here we go. They're repealing the Fiscal Responsibility Act and the Government Accountability Act. Those two are now gone, and with that, we're getting the Fiscal Management Act. Are you all following along with this? I was going to say that the only thing it has in common is the fiscal, but it doesn't, so there we go.

Is this an improvement? No, it's not. This bill actually gives us less accountability from the government, less requirement to be keeping the books and being able to access them in a way that is not easy but at least not so darn difficult. You know, I'm a big proponent of open data because, really, aside from security things and super-duper confidentiality and budgets and stuff, where you might be able to manipulate markets and that, I think there's an awful lot of information that the government holds that it could just put online. Then we wouldn't have to worry about FOIP. We wouldn't have to worry about everybody being upset with this government consistently being voted the worst government to be working with freedom of information documents. I'm sorry; it's not always the worst. Sometimes it's second to the feds, I think.

But, you know, that information could just go online. It shouldn't be so hard to get fiscal information out of this government, yet each time the budget books come out, they're harder to read. There's less information in them. Health services: the entire budget for everything that goes into hospitals is one line in the budget document. Right. How do you tell what services are under that? You can spend your whole debate time going: "Okay. Well, what programs are under this particular vote or under this line?" Yeah, they make it really hard.

There's less accountability now. With the passage of this bill there's less transparency. There's less reporting of how the government is going to fiscally manage all they have. They've got a lot of money. I mean, this is the land of opportunity, make no mistake. My colleagues were talking about how wonderful Saskatchewan was today, but honest to goodness, this is the best place on Earth. We are so, so fortunate to have been born here or to have had the intellectual wherewithal to move here because this is where the dinosaurs decided to roll over and die, and as a result we have oil and gas reserves that are unbelievable.

That leads me to another thing that's missing from this bill. It does talk about a savings plan, but it doesn't talk about any endowments. Some time ago, when I was working with the Liberal leader, Dr. Taft, he had what I still think is the best idea, and I will happily have the government steal it. That was having a series of endowment funds that were coming from nonrenewable resource revenue. The money went into a postsecondary endowment fund, and there were certain percentages that were broken out. There was a postsecondary endowment fund, there was an arts and social sciences fund, there was an infrastructure fund, and then the heritage fund.

You know, we have so much opportunity in this province. Just imagine all the stuff that we could be doing. I admit that I still am baffled at how the government managed to go into a position of debt when we have so much in this province. Yes, I hear about the bitumen bubble, but . . .

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, I know. Well, that's the thing. The bitumen bubble always reminded me – it's a terrible image, actually – of somebody blowing up bubble gum. You know, it gets too big, and then it pops, and it just splats on your face, which is kind of what happened to the government. The bitumen bubble itself lasted for – what? – 10 weeks. Then it was over, and the prices started to settle out.

What's really annoying about all of that is that we know that this province relies far too much on using a cyclical commodity, oil and gas, to balance its budget. Never, never, never should you be using nonrenewable resource revenue to supplement an operating budget. We've been doing that in Alberta four decades, and it's just flat-out wrong. I mean, people say to us: "Oh, I pay your salary. You should be doing X, Y, and Z for me." [interjections] Oh, yeah. See? Laughter. Everybody gets that one. I think to myself: actually, you're not. When we look at the taxes and personal and corporate income taxes contribution to the operating budget – and the operating budget is the money the government spends every day to supply programs or buy stuff or make stuff happen in the province, right? That's the operating budget.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I shouldn't go off on a tangent. I get too far out there, and I forget where I was. Does anybody remember? No? Okay. Nobody else was listening. [interjection] Debt. Thank you. Yeah, you're right: debt. You know, the amount of money that taxes put into the operating budget is about two-thirds of what we spend at any given time in operating money, so we're subsidizing our operating, a provision of provincial government programs and services, by 30 per cent every day, every year, and that's why we get into trouble.

When the price of that oil and gas, that nonrenewable resource revenue, goes down, we're short on 30 per cent of our budget, and all of a sudden we have all these cutbacks, and the cutbacks just make it really hard to manage things for the government. We end up with all kinds of political ideologies that play out: the government never really liked something. Well, stunningly, that's what gets cut the most – what a surprise – even, you know, if it didn't deserve to be cut the most. I would argue that nothing deserves to be cut the most, but there you go.

The flip side of that is the surpluses. When I started, the budget that we debated that year was $17 billion – $17 billion – and every year after that the budget got bigger and bigger and bigger. What we started to see was a lowballing of revenue, high on the expenses, and then: oh, my God, aren't they brilliant fiscal managers. The government would come out with a honking big surplus. Weren't they brilliant? No. Not giving them credit for that because they had deliberately lowballed stuff. I'd like to believe that this was sort of careful management, but it wasn't. It was just so out of whack. We got into years where we had, you know, $2 billion, $3 billion, $4 billion, $5 billion, $6 billion surpluses.

Six billion extra dollars. Where is it? That's a lot of money. Where is it? Did we get paved roads? Is every road paved with gold? I mean, the amount of money that we have already spent that came out of nonrenewable resources is something over 200 and some-odd billion dollars since we started to collect it and use it that way. You think: "Holy mackerel. All right. Where is that money?" When I look around, where is that money? Do we have, you know, the highest completion rate for university students, the most amazing postsecondary research fellowships? Do we have a 100 per cent or a 99 per cent completion rate for high school students? Do we have no children growing up in poverty? No. So where did the money go?

This is why it's important that as part of this fiscal management bill, Bill 12, there is a really concrete plan about, one, not spending nonrenewable resource revenue on an operating budget. Two, I believe there should be a series of endowment funds. I support the postsecondary endowment fund as part of that cluster that I've been talking about as a sort of way to save this money because postsecondary education is the key to our future.

Any country that's gotten itself into trouble got itself out of trouble by doing two things. One is looking for innovation and really inciting a lot of creativity from its artists, which made it a better place to live, and a lot more stuff started to happen. It was more interesting. People would move there. Head offices would move there, et cetera, et cetera. The second thing was investing in education. Those two things would always pull those countries out.

I think postsecondary education should be invested in. I think it should be one of those endowment funds, and that kind of thing is not in here. Yeah, there's another kind of run at the stability fund. Yeah. Great. I think there's a commitment to put money into the heritage trust savings fund. Well, terrific, but if we're going to do that, why don't we learn some of the lessons from – what's that favourite phrase you guys have? – best practices? [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired] You're kidding, Mr. Speaker. That's time? Wow.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hon. member, thank you very much for the speech. I would like just a little bit of clarity on your position on government debt. I was hoping you could give me some information on that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. My position on government debt is the same as my position on personal debt. Taking out a loan or going into debt to build an asset is worth doing. I mean, frankly, very few of us have the wherewithal to be able to build a home cash up front, so we save some money for a down payment – good; that's what we should be doing – and then we work it out with a bank or a credit union to borrow the money to allow us to build the house now and start to invest in an asset. You actually have an asset. It's worth something on the books, right?

I feel it's the same way for debt with government. You know, we need schools. I believe that government should build public institutions. I do not believe in P3s, and I certainly do not think that P3s are appropriate in Alberta. When we have such an amazing credit rating, we can borrow money for less money than they do. There are enormous problems with the maintenance of the contracts. We never get to see the contracts themselves, so there's a lack of transparency. The contracts are always written in a crappy way, and they end up with huge problems somewhere down the line. We get our resource or our asset back at some point at the end of the contract. So far we haven't taken any of them back, but – this will be another one of my I-told-you-so moments – we will get them back in a condition that was not what we were expecting and in worse shape.

Is it appropriate for government to borrow money in order to build infrastructure? Yes, it is, in the same way that all of us do. Now, is it appropriate for us to borrow money to pay off a credit card? No. That's not a wise way to be running your personal life either. You know, if you cannot pay off your credit card at the end of every month, you're spending too much money, and you need to cut back on it. No, you don't go into debt to pay operating money. Yes, certainly you do if you are providing infrastructure for the people of Alberta: schools, highways, bridges, courthouses. That's the kind of thing that you do want the government to be building for you, hopefully.

I mean, we've had such a bad run on that recently, where during the Klein years – sorry, Premier – one of the ways that they cut costs was to reduce both the small maintenance but also the long, large, over-many-years investment kind of maintenance into infrastructure. As a result, we ended up at the end of that with, you know, crumbling bridges, bad highways. They were actually budgeting for and their goal, their target recognized worse conditions of our highways. It was in their budget documents that we would have worse conditions of our highways. They were planning for that. We're catching up with that. It's costing us money now. It cost us more money than if we'd done it to begin with.

There are all kinds of examples you can use about doing the maintenance on your car. You do regular maintenance on your car; you're going to have the car continue to run quite well. You do no maintenance: well, I'm sorry; I don't have a lot of sympathy for you when, you know, the muffler falls off.

I think you have to be reasonable about this. You end up with an asset that has a value that you could sell if you needed to; not that I'd want the government selling a bridge or a highway, but you could. It is an asset. Certainly, there are examples of, you know, some structures that we have sold in the past. I can think of a couple of schools, and they were sold to nonprofits, that kind of thing.

I hope that answered your question.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that's a convenient ending because it's 4:30. I would now declare that the House be adjourned until 1:30 p.m. on Monday under Standing Order 4(2).

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:30 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 28th Legislature - 1st Session (2012-2013)

Activity to April 11, 2013

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 199 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 200 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter numbers until the conclusion of the Fall Sitings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, April 15, 2013

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon, hon. members and guests.

Let us pray. Dear Lord, let us be thankful for the opportunity we have been given to help improve the lives of others, and let us count among our blessings the freedoms and the responsibilities that accompany that opportunity. Amen.

Please remain standing, hon. members, for the singing of our national anthem led by Mr. Paul Lorieau, and I invite you to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you, members. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of 12 students who geographically represent Alberta from Calgary right up to Grimshaw. While that would seem a little bit unusual, what is not unusual is that they have enrolled themselves in the School of Hope home-schooling program, which my two sons graduated from. I'm very pleased to have them here today along with seven parent leaders and their teacher, Mrs. Johnston MacMillan. I had the opportunity to meet with these students. They're anywhere from grade 4 to grade 7. They informed me that they've enjoyed their visit to the Legislature very much and that it beats a day at home. They're seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 23 members of l'école St. Angela elementary school. They are a grade 6 class that will be here for the whole week as part of the School at the Legislature, and they are here with their teacher, Luke Wasik. If I could have them all stand, please, and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of students with three teachers from Webber Academy. Webber Academy houses students from kindergarten through to grade 12 and is located in the scenic and historic constituency of Calgary-West. They are seated in both the members' and the public galleries. I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly one of the most courageous individuals I've ever met along with her loyal family and friends. I'd ask them to rise and remain standing as I introduce them. First, Dani Polsom. She has been in the news a lot lately. She tragically was abused for eight years and then had her case dropped because of Crown and system delays. It is her courage that has resulted in the government's recommendations, just released on Friday, which should help ensure that what our system did to her doesn't happen again.

Also with Dani is her mother and biggest cheerleader, Alison Jones. Then we have several family members: Kevin Hughes, Alison's boyfriend; Lance Edwards-Hampton, Dani's boyfriend; Andy Jones, Alison's brother; Beverley Jones, Alison's sister; Kristopher Polsom, Dani's twin brother; David Jones, Alison's nephew; and friends Lois Jones; Karen MacDonald, another wonderful victims' advocate; and Angie Milley-Lowe.

They are here today with a document that I will table after question period urging the government to make some important changes to justice legislation. I'd ask them to rise if they haven't already and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Jon and his wife, Evelyn, who have travelled to Edmonton from Shellbrook, Saskatchewan, to advocate for Jon's brother Paul Siebert, who is a 55-year resident of Michener Centre. Accompanying them is Jon's brother James Siebert and his wife, Ann, as well as their daughters Melody and Joy.

Paul, who is now 60 years old, was 17 months old when he was diagnosed with encephalitis. He suffered brain damage and began having up to 24 seizures a day, and it affected his sensory abilities. Paul's parents, Abe and Cornelia Siebert, lived 30 miles away from town with their family, and without the care of nurses they cared for Paul around the clock and even took turns sleeping with him in his bed. Paul was five when Michener Centre opened their doors to him, and he has lived there happily and safely for the last 55 years. Mr. Speaker, Paul's mother, Cornelia, was so touched by her son's life that she felt compelled to write the story of Paul. She wrote a book titled Over the Wall with Paul, that I will table later today. Please join me in giving Jon and Evelyn Siebert and James, Ann, Melody, and Joy the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly as they ask us to keep the Michener Centre open for Paul.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very honoured to rise today and introduce to you and through you a very special guest who personifies the very meaning of community service and dedication to others. Bettylyn Baker, a teacher and certified Irlen screener, has travelled to be here today to show her support for my private member's bill, Bill 204, the Irlen Syndrome Testing Act. Bettylyn is a teacher who very frequently encounters and thoroughly understands the many hurdles that come with Irlen syndrome. She was the first teacher to bring Irlen's to my attention, and for that I'm grateful. She's had the opportunity to change the lives of many people, and I'm grateful for the work she has done with all of the children in whose lives she has made a difference. Bettylyn, you have risen, and I'd ask the Assembly to give you the warm traditional welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of this august Assembly doctors Ross and Eleanor Wein. These two are long-time Albertans who have been involved as postsecondary educators in Alberta. They have a new passion now, and it's trying to establish the international wellness and nature lodge out at Coyote Lake. This lodge is similar to a lodge that we see down in Kananaskis Country called William Watson Lodge, which was established by Premier Lougheed, and many people with disabilities have enjoyed that for the past 25 years. What they see is a need for one in the Edmonton area. I'm very impressed by these two individuals in their passion for this, and I know they're working with the Minister of Infrastructure to try and get some things handled in this regard. I have every confidence that they will be successful, and I look forward myself to going there at some point in time in the future. If they could rise, and let's give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ultimate Ascent Robotics Competition

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Saturday, April 6, I took off my MLA hat for the day and was a proud mom and spectator at the Ultimate Ascent robotics competition. This competition included 30 teams from North, Central, and South America. For the first time the high school regional competition was held in Calgary.

Both of my sons have been part of Team 1482, representing Bishop Grandin high school, one of the pioneer teams from western Canada. Joining them on the field was the rookie team from Henry Wise Wood high school, also in Calgary-Glenmore. What was really exciting was that the robots we were watching were built by the high school students themselves. In early January robotics teams all around the world received the same kit consisting of basic drive mechanisms and programming boards. Then for the next six weeks team members designed and built their robot.

During the competition robots begin by operating independently to shoot Frisbees into goal boxes that are eight and 10 feet off the ground. Then the students step up and operate the robots. For the next two minutes robots are loading and shooting Frisbees across a field that is 27 by 54 feet in size. By the way, Mr. Speaker, did I also mention that there are six robots on the field at a time? The robots are placed into teams of three, where they work together to get as many Frisbees into the goals as possible. Interference, blocking, and checking of robots by robots is also allowed. This is a full-contact sport. As the clock is counting down, robots begin climbing a tripod to earn more points. The tripod is eight feet tall, and more points are awarded depending on how high the robot reaches.

FIRST Robotics would not have been a success without the participation of industry, mentors, parents, volunteers, school staff, and the use of school facilities. Their support and a grant from the Department of Culture had teenagers and adults working together, creating risk takers and students with initiative. It was a great day, Mr. Speaker.

Dani Polsom

Mr. Anderson: To look at Dani Polsom for the first time, one would likely just see a smart young woman with a magnetic personality and a contagious smile, but there is so much more to her than that. You see, Dani was sexually abused hundreds of times over eight years by someone in a position of trust. When Dani was able to report what had occurred, she was revictimized, this time by Alberta's justice system, which allowed her case to be dropped because of three years of Crown and court delays.

Now, Dani could have done what most would have justifiably done in her case. She could have kept her identity secret and hoped that time would slowly make the pain fade away. But she didn't. Although she understood that her abuser would never be punished for what he had done, she decided that no other person who had suffered at the hands of a child molester should have to be revictimized in the justice system. Not only would she speak out about this; she would fight and win a court application to have her identity become public. She wanted victims to have a face, not some shadowy figure with a distorted voice on a television news story because, as she rightly states, she and every victim like her have absolutely nothing to be ashamed of.

On Friday Alberta Justice released a report on Dani's case, including recommendations to ensure that what the justice system did to Dani will never happen to another. These are good first steps. Like so many heroes, Dani will never meet the victims she has saved. It's impossible to know who would have had their abuser go unpunished had Dani's reforms not been implemented, but that's just another reason why Dani is a true hero. She has given up her privacy, anonymity, and freedom to not talk about her abuse for the welfare of those she will never meet.

Dani, thank you not only for being the driving force behind these needed reforms but for showing us all what courage, sacrifice, and love truly are.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Irlen Syndrome

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Irlen syndrome is a real disorder that requires our attention in this Legislature if we are to help children and adults who suffer from this disability. Irlen syndrome is a neurological impairment which adversely affects one's ability to read by causing word distortions to appear on paper.

Because of Irlen's reading becomes a struggle and causes children to have difficulties in school. They complain of tiredness or headaches after reading. They complain that the print is blurry and the words dance or jiggle on the paper. They rub their eyes after reading for a while. They often lose their patience when reading aloud, and they often misread short words. Some are suspected of having ADHD, and parents are told that Ritalin might help.

If a teacher or a parent suspects that a child may have scotopic sensitivity syndrome, or Irlen's, then they should take the steps to help a child. The impact of this condition is devastating.

Today's theme is literacy, and no one needs to say how important literacy is to the success and happiness of every Albertan. Teachers work very hard to ensure that students are reading to their very best levels at grade 3. Mr. Speaker, I believe that we have a duty to all children in Alberta. If we can address the problem of Irlen syndrome and help children with this disability to become all that they can be, then we had better not miss the opportunity today, right now, right here in this Legislature.

I will be asking all members of the Legislature to review Bill 204, the Irlen Syndrome Testing Act, and to support the passing of this bill. Addressing Irlen syndrome in our schools will go a long way in helping all Albertans to achieve their dreams.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Northland School Division Literacy Initiative

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. "Literacy is not a luxury, it is a right and a responsibility. If our world is to meet the challenges of the twenty-first century, we must harness the energy and creativity of all our citizens." That's quoting President Clinton, and that is what Northland school division is doing as a result of their division-wide literacy initiative, which was implemented at the beginning of the 2012-2013 school year.

According to Literacy Alberta 40 per cent of adult Albertans and 35 per cent of working-age Albertans do not have basic literacy skills. That's why I'm so proud of Northland school division for tackling literacy in their schools so that we minimize the high percentage of illiteracy in our present-day world.

They will do this by implementing a sustained emphasis on reading, writing, language development, and comprehension. All of the schools in the division schedule two hours of daily literacy programming during which educators help students become stronger readers. Because the Northland school division has up to a 98 per cent aboriginal population, there is a strong emphasis on using First Nation, Métis, and Inuit material in these activities, including works of both fiction and nonfiction, as well as a major focus on oral language and reading in various forms across the curriculum. It also places a focus on community and family engagement with a number of advanced activities such as the celebration of Family Literacy Day. Although it is in its first year, early results indicate student progress and community engagement.

I have high hopes for Northland school division and its students and its community that all schools will continue to celebrate student growth and highlight the importance of literacy so that Northland school division students can also be successful. Exactly like Dr. Seuss says: "The more that you read, the more things you will know. The more that you learn, the more places you'll go."

Congratulations to the trustees, to the superintendent, to the principals, and to all the teachers and the communities that have been involved.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Scotiabank Calgary Marathon

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak about the 49th annual Scotiabank Calgary Marathon happening on May 26 from the Calgary Stampede grounds. Celebrating its 50th anniversary in June 2014, the Scotiabank Calgary Marathon has the distinction of being Canada's longest running marathon.

When the race first took place on August 10, 1963, there were 19 runners. This year approximately 30,000 competitors, volunteers, and onlookers are expected to take part. Events like this attract people to experience Alberta, boosting our global profile and our economy.

The Calgary marathon offers a full marathon, a half marathon, a five- or 10-kilometre family walk or run as well as a children's marathon and offers an opportunity for participants of all ages to achieve goals, enjoy the outdoors, and be active.

The event also gives competitors the opportunity to raise money for local and national charities by racing on behalf of a worthy cause of their choice. Known as the Charity Challenge, participants represent over 70 charities, and last year the Charity Challenge raised $738,000. This year the goal is $750,000.

I'm delighted to share with you that I'll be partaking in the 10-kilometre run in order to raise funds for the Sonshine community service, a nonprofit residential shelter in my constituency that is committed to helping young women and their families escape situations of domestic violence and rebuild their lives. In addition, I would like to thank the hon. members for Calgary-Lougheed, Calgary-South East, and Calgary-North West for agreeing to also participate.

Also, I'm extremely proud and honoured to have been chosen as the first honorary chair for the event as I fundamentally believe that events like the Scotiabank Calgary Marathon help bring communities together in the spirit of service and charity.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition for the first main set of questions.

Alberta Health Services Executive Expenses

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we have evidence which points to a scandal that combines two of the most troubling aspects of the mess in health care, exorbitant expenses and queue-jumping. Documents we will table today show that a former Capital health region executive spent more than $7,000 for a visit to the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minnesota, submitted the bill, and was reimbursed by Capital health. To the associate minister for Health: is this another example of the lax approach to managing expenses, or was this actually a workaround to avoid lengthy wait times here at home?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, another drive-by smear campaign. The member of the opposition is making innuendos that are suggesting that something unbecoming has happened. Frankly, she had withdrawn those innuendos just a few minutes after she made them initially, so she isn't even sure whether what she's saying is factual or not. But let me tell you one thing. This government is committed to working hard to making sure that we have one of the best health care systems possible, and if you don't believe me, tune into your best news network today at 2:30, and you will see how.

Ms Smith: I haven't withdrawn anything, Mr. Speaker. I'm asking questions for clarification. That's what the Official Opposition does.

I'd like to get some answers because we need proof, not just lame talking points. Will the associate minister for Health assure Albertans that this practice has been stopped and that the government will take every effort to ensure that this money is paid back?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Health Services officials and Alberta Health officials travel extensively to other, allied clinics to make sure that we acquire the best practices possible, so travel for executives of both Alberta Health and Alberta Health Services is not unusual. What is unusual is to see somebody's travel expenses, which very well probably are legitimate, and to make innuendos without any factual basis for it.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Premier could clear things up by answering the questions here today. He's chosen not to.

We have made freedom of information requests for the expenses of 93 health executives, and we're still waiting for 42 of them to be released. Several of these executives are fighting our requests. If the minister was sincere about wanting to clean things up, then he would simply agree to the request, that we've made multiple times. Will he release all of the expenses for all of the executives for all of the health regions going back to 2005?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, in this province we have very clear legislation relative to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, and any and all parties can request information. If that information can be released relative to the legislation, they will receive it. As she indicated, they have already received a large portion of what they requested, and if the rest can be released, it will be released. There's nothing to hide, but to draw conclusions on documents that you haven't yet received is simply irresponsible and wrong.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Opposition for the second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: If there's nothing to hide, we have no reason to know why it is they're not releasing them because, Mr. Speaker, expense account abuse does exist in the health regions. That much is clear.

Health Services Preferential Access

Ms Smith: The changes to the rules don't erase years of lavish overspending, but this case points out a situation that's even more serious than just wasting money. It appears that this Capital health executive jumped the queue by going outside of the country for treatment and having taxpayers pay for it. This apparent queue-jumping must be investigated. Will the Premier extend and expand the Vertes inquiry to look at this case and any others that may come to light?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, once the documents are released on this FOIP request and if indeed there is any behaviour that's unbecoming, it will be dealt with. We just had a queue-jumping inquiry, a very extensive queue-jumping inquiry, and what did they come up with by way of evidence? Nothing. So why would we now draw conclusions on documents that have not yet been released, that they haven't had a chance to see? They've already prejudged the outcome having not even received the documents.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Premier isn't listening. The documents have been released. We released them to the media today, and we will be tabling them today, and we'd sure like some answers on this.

Albertans must be forgiven for wondering about the state of our health care system because when executives who run the public system go to private clinics to get treatment that they can't get from the public system that they run, doesn't the minister see that that is an accountability problem?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, if that was the case, it would be a problem, and if there was a problem, we would deal with that problem.

The problem with the opposition is that they don't know whether there is a problem. They imagine a problem, they allege there to be a problem, and they want us to deal with it. We have the managing of health care at stake, and we have making sure that Albertans get the best health care possible at stake, not dealing with their imaginary problems.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, it appears the Deputy Premier wasn't properly briefed today. Maybe he'll answer the questions tomorrow because this is an issue of fairness.

Many other Albertans sometimes need out-of-province treatment, too, but they have trouble getting reimbursed by AHS – and we'll hear about one of those cases a little bit later in question period – yet health executives jump to the front of the line, they buy expensive private care, and then they submit the bills to the taxpayer for immediate payment. Now, that's not fair, Minister, is it?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, any Albertan that needs to travel outside of the province or outside of the country for treatment that isn't otherwise available in this province or within Canada can, and there is a medical committee that makes the decision of whether it is a bona fide treatment that would be justified. These will not be political decisions like the opposition would do right now. These are medical decisions made by medical professionals, so if an individual needs to travel outside of the province, that decision is made on a medical basis.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Access to Justice

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, by now we all know about the case of Dani Polsom, who was sexually abused repeatedly for over eight years only to have Alberta's justice system drop her case because of three years of Crown and court delays. The Ministry of Justice has now announced several reforms that it says will guarantee that victims of sexual violence in our province will never have their cases dropped again due to Crown and system delays. Some of these changes will take time and money. To the Justice minister: have you set a hard deadline by which these recommendations must all be implemented?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First and foremost, I think we all should go and thank the victim in this particular case for her courage and determination in bringing this matter forward. I also want to thank Greg Lepp, our associate deputy minister, for authoring this report. I've committed that within 90 days we'll be making a further statement as to what progress we can make as well as what part of the recommendations we want to act upon immediately. I recognize that some also deal with other levels of government like the federal government, and we will handle that as well.

Mr. Anderson: These recommendations if implemented – and we will follow up to make sure they are implemented – are a good start, but, Justice Minister, they do not go far enough. Given that your own government's safe communities task force recommended back in 2007 that the government should annually publish the number of cases that were stayed or dropped due to system delays and given that such a reform would improve accountability and give the Justice minister a gauge to measure progress by, will the Justice minister implement this long-overdue reform immediately?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated, we will go forward, and within 90 days we will make a further correspondence to everyone in this House, including this particular member, about where we want to go on the report itself. Just so everybody knows, the report talks about enhancing the use of precharge consultation with the police, enhanced education of Crowns in prosecuting sexual assaults, expanding the court case management program, and, as well, continuing to advocate for the elimination of preliminary inquiries, which on average delay each trial by 26 weeks.

Mr. Anderson: You didn't answer the question. That wasn't part of one of the recommendations made in that report. You need to implement that.

Mr. Speaker, given that the Crown initially did not support Dani's request that she be allowed to speak publicly about her victimization and identify herself, not the accused but herself, and given that victims of sexual abuse should never be forced to refrain from talking about their abuse or system failures such as this, will the Justice minister undertake to alter the policies or laws necessary to grant victims over 18 the right to waive media bans pertaining to their ability to identify themselves and to speak publicly about their victimization?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, in this particular instance our prosecutions branch did not oppose the victim's request to lift the publication ban. At that point in time we also have to consult with the police as well as the prosecution to see if this is possible. One of my concerns is that by following this member's request, we may inadvertently identify other people if we actually go that far.

Again, within 90 days we're going to be back with this particular item to discuss this further, and I thank this member for his comments.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Alberta Health Services Executive Expenses (continued)

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In order for regular Albertans to get out-of-country health care coverage for medically necessary care not available in Alberta, the standard procedure is to apply to Alberta Health, where a special medical panel approves coverage of the care, travel, accommodation, et cetera. However, in this one instance the region approved these expenses and covered the costs without following standard procedure. To the Premier: was this standard practice in the health region, or was this just an isolated incident?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you to the leader of the Liberal Party for clarifying for the members of the Wildrose Party how the system actually works because he said exactly what I said. There's a medical decision made if an Albertan needs to travel outside of the province or outside of the country for medical treatment. However, if there was an irregularity, which I am not insinuating there was – the opposition is insinuating that there was – that matter will be reviewed and dealt with. But at this point in time we have no information on which to base such a conclusion that there was an impropriety of any kind.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker. I don't think he heard the question.

The Helios quickie-colonoscopy issue is one thing in the public inquiry, but this one takes the cake: top-notch care at the world-renowned Mayo Clinic and an all-expenses-paid stay at the Marriott, including an in-house movie and even two bottles of Aquafina. It's like a special medical system they have set up for themselves and their senior executives. To the Premier: is this an isolated case, or is this one of the perks that goes with being one of the senior execs in AHS or one of these highly connected Albertans?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, if what the member is insinuating in any way resembles what happened, that person and others will be dealt with. What I'm saying is that at this point in time there is no evidence to suggest that. It is very possible that this individual went to that clinic for a meeting and actually was at a seminar for two or three days, hence the hotel and other charges. We don't know that. But if there is inconsistency with policy, it will be dealt with.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, this transitions perfectly into my next question. Dr. Chris Eagle originally ordered a forensic audit of all Capital health region executives, but the Premier had the board chair shut him down and just focus on Mr. Merali. But there are hundreds of executives. To the Premier: will you finally order the forensic audit of all senior execs, which Dr. Eagle called for in the first place, or do we just have to keep waiting for all these FOIPs?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I explained already very clearly how information is released. It is released in accordance with the law, and that's how it will continue to be released and made available to those who request it. At this point we will be focusing on delivering the best possible care to Albertans. We will be moving forward, and we will be making sure that Albertans receive the care that they deserve. If they want to do smear campaigns, they're more than welcome to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Calgary-Shaw. Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview? The hon. Leader of the New Democrat opposition instead. Okay.

Mr. Mason: I didn't think I was heckling so much that I would be missed, Mr. Speaker.

Provincial Budget

Mr. Mason: This government has been on the retreat in the past week, proving that Albertans can stand up to this government and make them keep their promises. They've retreated on pharmacist compensation, they've retreated on the veterans' parking pass, and they've retreated on their high-handed attempt to destroy academic independence in this province. But this government also made an absolutely disastrous $147 million cut to our postsecondary institutions, Mr. Speaker. Will the Deputy Premier reverse it and keep his promise to Alberta students?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, before this member pounds his chest too much, Mr. Speaker, no retreat in this particular file has happened. As a matter of fact, I am pleased to report to you and to the Legislature that I had a meeting with all 26 presidents. The presidents agreed that there has to be a mandate letter. The presidents agreed that they have the capacity and the wherewithal to deal with the budget. Although it will be difficult, they will deal with the budget. They have simply asked of me what I used to ask of them when I was a university student, an extension. They need an extension to deal with the mandate letter a little longer. They have received it. They will respond by September 1.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Premier has ordered a charge to the rear.

Today Albertans affected by cuts to persons with disabilities gathered to express concern about a $42 million cut to programs that allow persons with disabilities to live full lives. The past few weeks are proof that Albertans who stand up can force this callous PC government to back down and keep its promises. My question is to the associate minister. Will he do his job, stop breaking promises, and restore the funding that allows vulnerable Albertans to live with dignity?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member obviously didn't read the whole budget. We got, actually, an increase in the disability services budget. We're quite confident that we have the budget in place to do the job that we need to do. There have been within that budget some reallocations. We're working with service providers on that now.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, it's the same old practice of just moving money around within the department, but those cuts exist.

This PC government's broken-promises budget contains $180 million of cuts to the seniors' drug benefit plan, meaning that thousands of seniors will be cut off their drug coverage. The province's seniors didn't know that they'd be paying out of pocket for this government's broken promises. Will the Deputy Premier back down, as he does on so many other things, and keep the PC promise to Alberta's vulnerable seniors?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Speaking of charges to the rear, the leader of the fourth party, Mr. Speaker, is wrong again. As a matter of fact, you can't win with these guys either way because if you don't listen, you're arrogant, and if you listen, you retreat. You can't get it right.

Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you one thing. We will continue listening to Albertans. We listened to Albertans during the last campaign, and that is why you have in this House what you have. Look at the numbers. We will continue listening to Albertans because that's how we arrive at the right decisions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Servants Anonymous Society of Calgary

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, the safe house operated by Servants Anonymous in Calgary, which supports women and their children escaping prostitution, human trafficking, and sexual exploitation, is closing because of this government's misplaced priorities. It is a terrible decision to eliminate support for a service that has directly assisted 176 women to exit the sex trade over the last four years. There's nothing else like it in Alberta, yet the Deputy Premier, apparently an expert on everything, says that there are other services available that perform this exact same function. Really? Where are they, and what are their names?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member would like to know what actually is happening. What actually is happening is that under the safe communities task force there were pilot projects that were funded with one-time grants and short-term grants. That's the grant that's running out. Under Human Services we're working with all sorts of groups across the province to help vulnerable women with respect to shelters, to help women who have been victimized by sexual crimes and in a number of other areas. We will continue to do that, and we will continue to embed those good programs that work.

Mr. Wilson: Given that this is another case of the government telling us that they've had to make tough decisions when, really, all they've done is made cuts to the front lines and given that a year's worth of funding to operate the Servants Anonymous safe house is about the same as the annual salary of just one of the communications people in the Premier's office, when can Albertans expect this Premier to get her priorities straight?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, I'm glad that this member brought this up, Mr. Speaker. I don't expect you to listen or to read the Hansard from the estimates. This opposition went through my entire budget. Even though, on one hand, they're asking us to balance and cut deeper and most severely, on the other hand they don't want anything cut. The only thing they found wrong in my budget, the budget for our ministry, was to lay off one person in my office from communications. This is how constructive this opposition is.

Mr. Wilson: It's good to see they continue to answer the questions, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the Justice minister just last year presented Servants Anonymous with an award recognizing the important work the organization does and given that the Justice department's analysis showed that for every dollar invested in SAFE House, $8 are saved in policing, justice, health, and social supports, to my hon. friend the Associate Minister of Finance: how is it possible that a 700 per cent return on investment was deemed a waste of taxpayer dollars?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Servants Anonymous over the last four years received $866,000. This was designed to be a temporary grant with some bridge funding. I know they've done a lot of good work. In fact, I was just talking to one of them on my Facebook today. That being said, this was just temporary funding, and if you look forward, we do expect these individuals and these groups to look towards private funding as well. I'm sure that's something that this member could support.

Collective Bargaining with Teachers

Mr. Jeneroux: Mr. Speaker, it's been an entire month since the Premier, the ATA president, and our Minister of Education announced that a tentative deal had been reached with 40,000 of Alberta's teachers. This agreement is great. Many of my constituents were relieved, knowing that all we have to worry about now are just new schools coming to our constituency and not a teachers' strike, but we haven't heard much since. To the minister: can you please give these parents an update since the fanfare announcement last month on when this great education deal might be finalized?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, since the fanfare announcement last month there has been a great deal of progress made, but there is still work to be done. Since the announcement of the tentative deal I can tell you that we've been going around the province meeting with several communities and with all the school boards as well as the ATA locals, making sure that they're well informed on it and that they make good decisions as they try to ratify this. As a matter of fact, yesterday Edmonton public ATA local voted yes. I can tell you that we've got close to 40 of our 62 boards now onboard, and we'll be working with the rest in the coming weeks.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we've only had a fraction of the boards support this deal and a number are still debating whether it works for them and some have even taken the step of voting against this deal, when will we know that this great education deal is final and the school boards' voices are heard?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the school boards' voices are being heard on an ongoing basis, but there are still several weeks of work to be done in terms of working with the boards, meeting with the boards, making sure their concerns are heard and that all the trustees understand the deal here. As a matter of fact, this week alone there are dozens of meetings scheduled with the ATA locals and the school boards across this province. Within the coming weeks, by the middle of May, we'll know how every one of them feels, but I'm very optimistic.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question: given that you just said that this agreement ensures the stability and sustainability of our system, can you please speak to my constituents, clear the air on how the specifics of this deal will truly impact our kids, my kids, in the classroom and not just comfort in the boardrooms?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, as the Premier said when we announced this deal – it was over two years in the making – it does recognize the vital role of teachers and gives them some of the supports they need to continue doing the great job that they do. It's great news for school boards because it gives them cost certainty over the three years. We've frozen salary and pay for three years in terms of the raises for teachers. More importantly, it gives stability to the entire system and to the students so that we can continue to focus on making the system better for students as opposed to worrying about labour agreements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Calgary-Glenmore.

Out-of-country Health Services

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While health executives are busy expensing private health care at the Mayo Clinic to the taxpayer, five-year-old Brooke Aubuchon from Innisfail is dying of a rare disease of the nervous system, the same disease which took the life of her brother Alex in 2011. But there's hope. Brooke qualified for a revolutionary clinical trial in New York that may save her life. Her surgery was on February 26 of this year. Unfortunately, Brooke is not a senior health executive, and the Minister of Health told Brooke's family that the PC government won't cover her expenses. How can the associate minister for Health possibly defend this absolutely disgusting hypocrisy?

Mr. Lukaszuk: You know, as a parent I have to tell you that nothing can be more difficult to anyone than having a sick child and not being able to help. But at the same time, I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that to hear this, the word "despicable" would be an understatement. We have been very clear that the decisions on out-of-province and out-of-country services are made by medical doctors in the best interests of the patient, not by a PC government, not by a Wildrose opposition but by medical doctors, who know what is best and what is really possible.

Mrs. Towle: So disappointing.

Given that this PC government clearly has set up the worst kind of two-tier health care possible and given that one tier has Albertans waiting the longest in the country for many medical procedures if they're even available and given that the second tier allows Alberta Health Services executives and members of the government family immediate access to private health care on the public dime, when will this government afford this same opportunity to everyday Albertans?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, if we had the choice and the ability, every member on this side of the government would give any child and any parent any ability to send their child anywhere possible, but we all know that that is not realistic, especially when you have an opposition screaming to cut deeper and deeper and deeper. We will always make sure that decisions are made on the best medical information available to the benefit of the child or the patient and that they will not be politicized by government members, by bureaucrats, or by the opposition, who have a tendency to do so.

Mrs. Towle: Given that five-year-old Brooke Aubuchon's family has taken on severe financial hardship to pay for what this government gives away to senior health executives, will someone in this government finally do what's right, realize how wrong they are, and pay for Brooke Aubuchon's expenses?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, let me restate the obvious. Decisions on sending children or any Albertans to clinics outside of Alberta or outside of Canada are made based on medical information from medical doctors and other allied professionals. These are not political decisions. These are not decisions made by government officials, nor should they ever be.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Employment Supports

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are for the Minister of Human Services. Mr. Minister, Budget 2013 includes adjustments to program supports for underemployed and unemployed Albertans. Can the minister advise the Legislature: what are the expected effects to literacy programs as a result of these decisions?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What we anticipate with the strength of the economy and the job market in Alberta is that a number of people will not require the services of Alberta Works or will require the services of Alberta Works for a shorter period of time. What it will allow us to do is to focus on target populations who actually need more supports to get into the workforce. Literacy is one of those target populations. Obviously, literacy is a very important part of being in the workplace today, and we're working closely with Enterprise and Advanced Education to ensure that those programs are available.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister comment on the impact of the skills improvement plan, where I hear from community members there is some concern?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I would just add on to my previous answer to say that by reducing the number of people who require the services of Alberta Works and the associated programs, we'll actually be able to focus more strongly on those people who really need our assistance. That skills program is one of those areas where we'll continue to connect actively to Albertans with job opportunities and continue to assist in programs which will help them get the skills they need not just to get a job but to get a job with a livable wage.

Ms L. Johnson: Finally, Mr. Speaker, I continue to hear from nonprofit agencies about the cancellation of the STEP program. Can the minister indicate his progress with nonprofit organizations for the upcoming summer employment programs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The STEP program was cancelled as it was started up to be a summer temporary employment program. As I referenced in the previous two answers, the job market is actually quite good, and there are jobs out there. What we do want to do is to work with not-for-profit organizations and service providers who want to get students to come into their area to learn about a career in that area. We're working with Enterprise and Advanced Education, with Volunteer Alberta, and with other organizations to find ways to assist those organizations to achieve success in drawing students in to learn about careers in that area, and we'll continue to work in that area.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Support for Vulnerable Albertans

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, this government continues with damage control communications couched in the new guise of results-based budgeting. Most Albertans see it for what it is, a desperate attempt of government to make their financial mismanagement look responsible. Cuts to the Servants Anonymous emergency shelter we've heard about; $48 million in cuts to persons with disabilities community supports; inadequate funding to the charitable group Inn from the Cold, housing families from the street, mostly First Nations; cuts to child care; and no poverty strategy. To the Minister of Human Services. Albertans contacting my office don't believe that these changes, most without consultation, reflect anything but this government's PR problem. How is that any . . .

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the problem they've got is that they went to his office. In fact, there's a lot of good work happening. We've had strong consultations across the province with respect to a social policy framework that's leading into some excellent work with partner agencies and communities on a poverty reduction strategy. These people talk about cutting grants with respect to organizations. The organization that he referenced was on a short-term, three-year grant program. So they've got to get their facts right. They've got to know that we are working closely with Albertans to ensure that every Albertan has the opportunity to achieve their potential.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Minister, tell vulnerable Albertans how these cuts to services are going to improve their quality of life.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What we're doing is making sure that every taxpayer dollar is effectively used to achieve results. Focusing on outcomes, focusing on targeting where people need assistance to overcome a barrier to success, whether it's periodic or chronic, working with individual Albertans to understand what the barriers to success are and how they need to move past those barriers to success: it's very focused, it's very broad in terms of looking at all of the things that get in the way of success, and it's going to be achieved with the success of communities and Albertans.

Dr. Swann: Well, this government has a lot to account for, with bonuses to executives when they're cutting the services to the most vulnerable. When are you going to allow the vulnerable to define their results?

Mr. Hancock: Every day, Mr. Speaker. Every day, every time we embark on this type of a process, we talk with the most vulnerable to find out what their issues, what their barriers have been and what will help lead to success.

This hon. member would have people believe that it all stops and starts with the money. It doesn't stop and start with the money. It starts and stops with understanding what success looks like, understanding how you can help people overcome the barriers that they have to success, and understanding where they want to get to. Applying and prioritizing our resources is part of that, but it's not the be all and the end all.

Environmental Protection Policy

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, in Washington the Premier told the story, and I quote: the truth is that Alberta is home to some of the most environmentally friendly, progressive legislation in the world. Clearly, the Premier is confused about how to use the word "truth" in a sentence. As renowned scientist David Schindler said last week: just because you shut your eyes and say the oil sands are clean four times doesn't mean they are. So to the Premier: why don't you understand that intentionally and knowingly making public statements that are not correct jeopardizes our industry in the long run?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier was quite accurate in her statements. I'd like to actually mention a few statements that Dr. Schindler has made in the past as well about when we look at the work that we're doing with regard to land-use planning, with regard to the monitoring in the oil sands, and doubling that monitoring. Dr. Schindler has actually made very positive comments about from where we were to where we moved to. The Premier was very accurate in her statements in Washington.

Ms Notley: Well, interestingly, given that Dr. Schindler said that even the village idiot couldn't deny the significant impact the oil sands have on the environment and given Alberta's inaction and denial on almost every facet of environmental protection means that this government has not yet risen to village idiot status, why is this minister standing by while the Premier intentionally and knowingly makes public statements . . . [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Inflammatory Language

The Speaker: Hon. member, we had an episode last week when someone was quoting something, and it was somewhat derogatory for some. Some could construe what you just said as a quote also in that same light of casting an aspersion that may not rightfully be so. So please review your questions before you bring them in here. It just raises disorder and disruption, and I'm trying my best to not allow that to happen.

Meanwhile let's have an answer from the minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Mr. Speaker, let's talk about the facts about Alberta, the first jurisdiction in North America to put a price on carbon, to have a technology fund to reduce emissions. As we grow the oils sands region to supply access to markets, world-wide markets, we continue to make sure that on integrated resource management, land-use planning, monitoring, and the climate change policy – show me anywhere else that has the kind of environmental policies that this Premier and this government have taken.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that this PC government just handed over most environmental protection in this province to the founding member of the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers and given that Alberta will miss its reduction targets by miles and has absolutely no plans to fix that, why won't the minister admit that the failed PC environmental record seriously damages Alberta's international credibility and simultaneously hurts industry and the environment?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You can do solid environmental policies while being efficient and effective in the regulatory process, and that is exactly what this minister is doing along with the Energy minister. As well, we're making sure that our environmental policies are being reviewed as they pertain to climate change policy to make sure that our emissions will be reduced. That is the commitment we have made.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Capital Region Municipal Planning

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today Albertans living in and around our major cities awoke to some rather troubling comments made by the Minister of Municipal Affairs. The minister stated that he is seriously considering forcing the amalgamation of capital region municipalities. It appears this government wants to throw the little guy under the bus on the way to the creation of megamunicipalities and end local autonomy just like Ontario did with the regions surrounding Toronto. Will the minister commit to preserving local autonomy rather than forcing Toronto-style megacities?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, the member's comments actually are inaccurate. I never suggested that we were going to amalgamate in any way, shape, or form municipalities. We haven't talked about that at all.

The Capital Region Board is critical to the success of the entire region. They have to adhere to the same principles that the Ministry of Municipal Affairs does. There is no us versus them. One of them will not be successful while the rest fail, and politicizing this process drives business away and does not appropriately serve the people that live within the Capital Region Board.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you. Given that this government thinks that Toronto is a good example from which to copy regionalization plans and given that Albertans in and around our major cities want their local autonomy preserved, why won't the minister commit to working with municipalities to keep local decision-making in their hands instead of threatening to forcibly amalgamate the entire region?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, again the premise is inaccurate. I've never even mentioned the city of Toronto once in any comment I've ever made. It's completely inaccurate.

The Capital Region Board is a group of municipalities that comes together to try and find creative solutions to ensure the success of every single municipality. We in Municipal Affairs and this government respect municipalities, and the Capital Region Board also has to respect municipalities and each other because we're all dependent on each other for success.

Mr. Rowe: I understand the minister's comments, but this process has been going on for eight to 10 years now, and it's clearly not working. Given the numerous failures of forced centralization here in Alberta, chief among them Alberta Health Services, and given that forced regionalization will rob municipalities of their autonomy and their democratic authority, why is the minister even considering imposing a Toronto-style program of regionalization on our municipalities and threatening their independence?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, this is about smart planning for the next generation as well. This has been eight years of success. They have reached a small impasse, but ultimately I don't think I'm going to take any recommendations from an opposition that needs a mediator to meet with the town of Sylvan Lake, that demands the city of Calgary have a red-light district, that tells the city of Edmonton what they're going to do with their municipal airport, and writes chastising letters in local newspapers when a municipality decides to build a library. I won't be taking their advice.

Mr. Saskiw: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: A point of order from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills has been noted at 2:29 p.m. in response to the last answer that was just given.

Let's go on to Calgary-Varsity, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Results-based Budgeting

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Results-based budgeting was implemented last November to review individual government programs for their relevance, their effectiveness, and their efficiency. Supported by five external experts and two other MLAs, I'm chairing the results-based budgeting panel challenging 60 of 180 economic development programs across eight ministries. We're reaching the end of our cycle, and panel members want to ensure that this work does not lead to another report that's simply filed away. My first question is to the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education. How will your ministry ensure that the learnings from this RBB process are incorporated into decision-making not just this one time but on an on-going basis?

The Speaker: The hon. minister and Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, results-based budgeting is an exercise where we practically have a chance to step back, look at what we do, and make a determination on whether we deliver the best services possible to Albertans at the best price possible. So it's in a sense deconstructing the delivery and then reconstructing it again. One of the benefits that will occur from this is that we're hoping that the culture of delivering benefits will change so that we will continue to deliver great programs at good cost.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: My next question is to the Associate Minister of Finance. Given your role in overseeing the results-based budgeting process, what have you learned from this process thus far, and what improvements will you be recommending to ensure that this process achieves even better results going forward?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister. [interjections]

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad the opposition is so interested to learn more about this.

What we have learned is that there's a high level of professionalism and commitment in the public service, and they've embraced this initiative in changing the culture of how we deliver and how we look at making decisions in allocating finite resources. They've really embraced the fact that we need to balance the fact that we have finite resources with the ability to achieve an outcome of excellence for Albertans, and that's the responsible thing to do.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by St. Albert.

ERCB Production Outage

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Friday we learned of some troubling developments at the ERCB. First of all, we found out that several of its core technological systems had been down for days, jeopardizing applications, notifications, licences, and fee recovery, but it appears the system outage is only the surface of the problem. A former ERCB executive has blown the whistle, saying that the outage is part of a much deeper backroom issue where egos are trumping sound decision-making. He called it a panicked environment. To the Energy minister: just what exactly is happening at the ERCB?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to answer that question because it's quite clear that what's going on is that the most important function of the ERCB is carrying on, and that is ERCB's incident reporting and emergency response capability. Field staff are continuing regular inspections, monitoring, and responding to landowner concerns. They are also dealing with a temporary outage of some of their IT systems. They're managing through that, and as we have seen, the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers has indicated that this is not causing a concern at this stage.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Energy minister: given that it took five days for the ERCB to even report the systems outage and given that the former ERCB executive has alerted us to the internal problems that are apparently paralyzing the board and its functions, how can Albertans have confidence that the ERCB is doing its job to ensure the safe and secure development of our natural resources?

Mr. Hughes: Well, I think, Mr. Speaker, that Albertans can be quite confident that the ERCB is continuing to carry on its functions on behalf of all Albertans to protect the environmental concerns of Albertans under the new regulator when the Alberta energy regulator steps up in the next few months and to ensure the right balance between effective and efficient responsible development, that Alberta is well known for.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Energy minister: given that your department is already scrambling to have the new single regulator under Bill 2 up and running by June and given the apparent dysfunction at the ERCB right now, how can we believe that the new regulator won't be paralyzed by the same internal carnage that has seized the ERCB?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, Alberta remains one of the strongest regimes in North America in terms of managing the regulatory regimes in this province and ensuring that the energy sector is appropriately regulated and ensuring that Albertans' interests are protected throughout the piece.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder Support

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A number of concerned parents in St. Albert have approached me with a common concern and have identified what I believe are discrepancies that exist in our education and social support systems. Students who suffer and struggle with severe attention deficit hyperactivity disorder, ADHD, and other severe learning disabilities do not always receive standardized support services throughout all of their schooling years. My constituents have shared with me that from kindergarten to grade 6 youth with these severe learning difficulties get very good assistance, that helps them be successful. However, once these youth reach junior high, the extra support seems to wane. My first question is to the Minister of Education. Where is the support in our schools for youth aged 12 to 17 . . .

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Education, you'll have to jump in here, please.

Mr. J. Johnson: I think I'll just guess what the rest of the question was about, Mr. Speaker.

Students with unique learning needs are something we heard a lot about with Inspiring Education over the last few years, so that's why we've taken action. Parents have told us that every child is unique, including those with ADHD, and we need to ensure that there's adequate funding and flexibility in funding for local educators to make decisions on how to support those kids. That's why we increased the inclusive education funding this last year by $68 million to a total of $375 million. We are increasing it even yet again in this tough budget.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. Mr. Minister, my constituents have a simple question. Why is it that an ADHD student who qualifies for additional supports in elementary school no longer meets the requirements for these same supports in middle and high school?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, there actually is no change in funding between elementary to junior high to high school. School boards have the funding coming from us in the form of $375 million in inclusive education funding, and they can apply that funding to whatever they deem is appropriate at the local level because all kids learn in different ways, and they need that flexibility. So that funding should not drop off just because the student moves up in grades throughout their educational life.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Mr. Minister. My next question is to the Minister of Human Services. What supports currently exist outside of the school system so that youth aged 12 to 17 with severe ADHD who do not have access to school supports can still receive the community and family assistance they need to be successful?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, in certain circumstances that would fall within the purview of the family supports for children with disabilities, a program that we have to help families if their children have unique needs and barriers to promoting their development. Each individual circumstance would be determined on its own merits. FSCD would assess the impact of ADHD on the child and family and may provide services and supports to meet the child's and family's unique needs. Families whose children are severely affected by any diagnosed disability may receive specialized services and, of course, other information with respect to where they might find other supports.

Northern Lights Regional Health Centre

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, the Northern Lights regional health centre is in dire need of a new building exterior, and this government doesn't seem to get that. The health centre is the only primary health facility in the Fort McMurray service area, and the ongoing delay in getting this done is a huge concern for local and area residents. To the associate minister for Health: doesn't the minister think it's time to publish a public infrastructure priority list so northern Albertans can have some assurance that their hospital will be able to continue servicing their area?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, because of the fact that this government did not take the advice of the Wildrose opposition and did not cut our infrastructure spending by $1.6 billion, the residents in this riding have hope. They have hope that the facilities will be renovated and built as we're building right now. Not only are we building health facilities, but we're building schools and seniors' homes and highways and overpasses, and we're fixing bridges. Those are projects that would not have been built if we'd adopted their capital plan with a $1.6 billion cut.

Mr. Barnes: Yeah. Not the MLA office building.

Given that the Northern Lights regional health centre received a D in the CBC's Rate My Hospital investigation and most patients would not recommend the hospital and given that the government claims health and safety are the most important criteria to base infrastructure spending on, when will this government get serious about respecting northern Albertans and publish a public infrastructure priority list so residents of northern Alberta know their community priorities are important to this government?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, how rich coming from an opposition that is chastising this government every day for what they call not balancing the budget and not cutting deeper and harsher, from an opposition that wanted to cut capital spending by $1.6 billion, from an opposition that doesn't allow us to amortize the cost of building infrastructure to the future, from an opposition that says that if we borrow to build those hospitals for which they're asking right now, we're passing on debt to the next generation. You can't have it both ways.

Mr. Barnes: Our debt-free capital plan accomplishes a lot of this.

Given that last month a report indicated that patients at the Northern Lights regional health centre are picking up infections at a rate twice the national average despite the best efforts of front-line health workers, isn't the associate minister for Health worried that this leaky building is causing patients to get sicker?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is why we will not listen to this opposition and will continue building Alberta. We will continue making sure that kids have schools today, not in 30 years; that patients have hospitals today, not in 10 years; and that our seniors have adequate facilities for homes now, not in 10 years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by Little Bow.

Alberta Distance Learning Centre

Ms. Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the constituency week I met with the Pembina Hills regional school division to discuss recent funding cuts to the Alberta Distance Learning Centre. The ADLC serves in excess of 60,000 students, including those in FNMI communities, rural and remote schools, and outreach centres, in collaboration with over 130 school authorities in Alberta. My first question is to the Minister of Education. The number of students enrolled in distance education has been steadily increasing, so why was it so hard hit with the cuts?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the member for the question. She's been a great advocate for her constituency and for the ADLC. To answer her question, when we were looking at this budget, we had to examine every line to make sure we were getting the best bang for the buck. When we looked at the way we were funding distance education, distance learning, we realized that we were funding kids taking distance education courses more than we were the traditional courses when they actually cost less to deliver. So what we did was that we adjusted that funding, but it's important to point out that we did not, as part of that, change or decrease the funding that the ADLC gets for each student that it delivers those services to.

Ms Kubinec: To the same minister. Pembina Hills felt that they were left out of the conversation that led to this new funding model. Why weren't they included?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, the Alberta Distance Learning Centre, which is operated by the Pembina Hills school division: their funding for delivering the distance learning to the kids didn't change. They used to receive 56 per cent of the value for the credits that any child taking the distance learning courses got, and they still do. What we did change is the funding of the resident board, the board that registers the student. They used to get the same level of funding that they would get for a student that they were delivering traditional learning to. Of course, it doesn't cost as much. It doesn't take as many resources. That didn't make sense, and we addressed it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Education: how can we ensure that these cuts don't affect students' distance learning capabilities when the subscribing boards indicate that they will not be able to afford the services of ADLC to the same extent?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, students take distance learning for a variety of reasons, and we expect that demand to keep increasing for a number of reasons. Really, it's about access, and it's about programs. We know that the school divisions will do a great job. ADLC continues to do a great job. As those programs are available, we'll have more and more students signing up because that's the way it's got to be delivered in the future for many students for a number of different reasons.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes question period. Before we carry on with the rest of the Routine, could we have unanimous consent to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some very important ears and advocates for my bill, Bill 203, being read for a second time today: Ms Angeline Webb, Ms Anna Mann, and Ms Chelsey Anseuw. All three of these ladies and others have provided countless hours of advice and support during the consultation process of my bill. This bill wouldn't have the legs it does today without their unwavering support. I'm proud to ask that these guests here today please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Dr. Sharon Vaselenak. I am very privileged to have Dr. Vaselenak here today. She's joining us in the Assembly to show her support for my private member's bill, Bill 204, the Irlen Syndrome Testing Act. She is one of many professionals who view this as a condition which must be addressed. I will be meeting with Dr. Vaselenak later this afternoon to discuss Irlen syndrome and the negative effects it has on literacy for all those affected. Dr. Vaselenak is from Edmonton, and she wears many hats. She's a family physician, a parent, and a person who suffers from Irlen's. She is seated in the public gallery, and I would ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Seeing no others, in 20 seconds we will continue with Members' Statements, beginning with Calgary-Mountain View.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Support for Vulnerable Citizens

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After 42 years in power this government is clearly the best in Canada at one area, public relations spin. Given another serious budget deficit this government announced it has suddenly realized new ways to improve care for our most vulnerable and save money at the same time. The Public Affairs Bureau is clearly in damage control for a government that has failed a thoughtful, evidence-based, inclusive plan for people, especially our most vulnerable. Having mismanaged our finances and still dependent on oil prices for 25 per cent of Alberta's budget, it's no surprise that the cuts to some of our most vulnerable citizens are being explained as improving care for people, and all this without consultations with key stakeholders and clients in these programs.

Under the excuse of results-based budgeting Human Services has cut Servants Anonymous emergency shelter in Calgary; $48 million from persons with developmental disabilities community supports; allowed cuts to Inn from the Cold, housing families which are mostly First Nations, including children, from the street; announced it will wait to address its commitment to end child poverty until it has a definition of poverty. Yet another example is the lack of indexing of AISH, assured income for the severely handicapped, which would protect them from cost-of-living increases year to year. This, of course, contrasts sharply with the MLA salaries, which benefit from a policy of indexing and annual cost-of-living increases.

It's a small wonder that Albertans are saying that enough is enough. When the most vulnerable and their exhausted families must fight each year for their essential supports and depend on the charity of churches and donors for their security, there is no security. With the fear of the Wildrose dominating all decisions of this old government, they will not bring in a fair tax system to provide stability and dignity to our most vulnerable, just more spin. Well, Albertans are doing their own results-based analysis on this government, and the trust is gone. Many long-standing Tories that I know will no longer be supporting this sham of responsible government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am very pleased to present a petition that has been reviewed and approved in format by Parliamentary Counsel. The pheasant release program petition to be presented has 486 signatures, and it's petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to take the necessary measures, including the introduction of proposed amendments to existing legislation, to ensure the preservation and enhancement of the Pheasant Release Program, which has been an important part of Alberta's hunting tradition, heritage and culture for over 65 years.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 19, the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013.

The proposed legislation will amend Alberta's Metis Settlements Act. The amendments in Bill 19 flow from my ministry's close work with the Métis settlements leadership over the last year. Bill 19 is vital to the success of the Métis settlements' long-term arrangements, one of my ministry's key initiatives. The Premier and I officially signed an agreement with the Métis settlements on March 12, 2013, and this represents an investment of $85 million over 10 years.

The long-term arrangements have four objectives: strengthening settlement governance, accountability, and sustainability; enabling the Métis settlements to provide essential services, including infrastructure, on par with neighbouring communities; developing long-term economic and financial stability and settlement capacity; and enhancing the productivity relationship between this government and the settlements. The Metis Settlements Amendment Act focuses on accountability and governance, which will contribute to the sustainability and future economic prosperity of the settlements for the benefit of all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies today of a report entitled Injecting a Sense of Urgency: A New Approach to Delivering Justice in Serious and Violent Criminal Cases. This report was presented to me on April 11, 2013, and it was authored at my request by Greg Lepp, who's the assistant deputy minister in my department. I'll pass five copies to the Clerk.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you'll indulge me, I have two tablings today. I have the appropriate number of copies of an open letter sent to Premier Redford by Joyce Tona of Rimbey. In this letter Joyce speaks very passionately about why it's so important for this PC government to reconsider the closure of the Michener Centre. Joyce's daughter has now lived in the Michener Centre for 45 years and is one of a very vulnerable group of people who would be severely affected by this closure.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the appropriate number of copies of one of many e-mails we received about the PC government's cancellation of the STEP program. Marianne Wilkat, president of Ogden House senior citizens' club, writes about how STEP helped them set up a program to assist seniors who were incapable of clearing snow and doing yardwork. Marianne describes the cancellation of the STEP program as a "real kick in the teeth" for seniors in Alberta. Here's another example of the effects of the cancellation of this program.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre or someone on behalf of, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier the parents of Paul Siebert, who has been a resident of the Michener Centre for 50 years, were here, and his mother penned the booklet Over the Wall with Paul, which I'm tabling five copies of.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie, please.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of a document that has been signed by over 1,000 folks, constituents mostly, asking the government of Alberta to immediately pass legislation that will:

- Expedite all cases of crimes against children;
- Automatically trigger an outside investigation, independent of Alberta Justice, where cases are stayed due to institutional or Crown delays, in order to determine the causes of such delays as well as solutions to ensure such delays do not happen again;
- Grant victims over 18 the right to waive media bans on their name if they choose to speak publicly about their victimization;
- Publish the number of Crown Stay of Proceedings and Withdrawals annually with an updated action plan from the Attorney General detailing how this problem is being addressed; and
- Ensure the government allocates adequate resources to ensure the Crown Prosecutor's office is able to effectively manage all prosecutions against violent offenders, especially those charged with sexual and other violent crimes against children.

I have five copies of that with well over a thousand signatures.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, please.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of copies of two e-mails that I received. One is from Ryan Holt of King Drug Accounting regarding pharmacy as well as one from pharmacist Wayne Smith in Raymond. I've handed them to the page.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we're now going to deal with points of order. I have one on the schedule today, and that was Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. Please proceed with your citation and the point.

Point of Order

Allegations against Members

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today according to Standing Order 23(h), (i), (j), and it's with respect to a comment that was made by the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Our hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills was asking a question about municipalities, and for some reason the minister decided to respond with an allegation that was not true, that our party in some way supported red-light districts. That is in no case the circumstance. Our party does not advocate or support that in any way whatsoever. Perhaps the member found that idea in his book that he wrote, 13 Ways To Kill Your Community, because it certainly would be.

One thing that we see is, you know, this government's policy in respect of cutting the safer communities funds, which had actually provided a safe house for individuals in prostitution to provide them with a sort of safe haven. With respect to those cuts our party actually vigorously advocated against front-line cuts to those services that provide support to the most vulnerable in our society.

Mr. Speaker, we've discussed this matter multiple, multiple times. Our party has clarified this issue multiple, multiple times. I think that in these circumstances, where you have a situation where an allegation is continually made, our side continually clarifies our position, and after that robust and exhaustive clarification there is a continuation of making an incorrect and false allegation, that is obviously going to cause disorder in this Assembly.

Again, this was a circumstance where the question that was asked was on a topic within the minister's jurisdiction and prerogative, but instead he went out of his way. He went out of his way to make a false allegation, an incorrect allegation, that has been clarified multiple times. In these circumstances, where it's an intentional, flagrant use of an allegation towards our side and where this matter has been clarified again and again, I ask that under the standing orders you request that that comment be withdrawn from the record.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's actually kind of humorous to be standing up here and to listen to some of the comments that have been made that it's completely inaccurate and that it's a false accusation. Every single statement that comes out of the opposition's mouths in a preamble to every question is a false accusation against the government.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, who is the Municipal Affairs critic, I have some respect for, but he's obviously buying into some of the mantra that comes from his opposition colleagues because in his preamble in the second question he said: given the fact that I think Toronto's system of a large municipality is great. I've never ever, ever made any such comment, and in every question the opposition does that. They come out with false information.

I simply was pointing out, in the question about how this department and how this minister approaches municipalities, that we treat them with respect, that we honour their integrity, but we know that they need to work together because conflict does not help build a better Alberta. It does not build stronger communities. Especially in something like the Capital Region Board, Mr. Speaker, it's essential that they work together for the common good so that the people that they represent live in a competitive environment where the industry, the business, and their communities continue to grow and be prosperous. I was simply pointing out on the last question some facts that the opposition has said that indicate that they are not a good group to take advice from when it comes to working with municipalities.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, Mr. Speaker, wrote a couple of very public letters in the local newspaper chastising the local municipality for making a decision to build a library. Something that you're supposed to have is respect for municipalities, and they were insinuating I didn't. I was simply pointing out that they're the ones that seem to have challenges with municipalities.

The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, Mr. Speaker: the town had to get a mediator to come in to have a meeting with their local MLA. Obviously, there's a challenge there for respect, and again this helps me to indicate that the opposition is not a great group of people to take advice from on how to approach a deal with municipalities.

The constant berating of the city of Edmonton and its council on its decision to close the city airport, Mr. Speaker: their assertions that they would overturn that decision and impose their decision on the city council and the citizens of Edmonton, who made a decision to close that airport, show, again, that they are not the best group of people to take information from.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I was simply pointing out that the Leader of the Official Opposition very, very publicly – and never has a member recanted their comments about that – recommended that the city of Calgary have a red-light district. It's fact. When you write a column in a local newspaper in the city of Calgary telling the city council what they need to do even though many aldermen said that they didn't think that was a very good idea, it simply indicates the way the opposition approaches their discussions with municipal councils.

Those are four good examples, in my mind, of why I would not take advice from the opposition on how to deal with municipalities. Every single thing I talked about, every single one of the four examples I used, Mr. Speaker, is a fact. It is a fact. There is no point of order. Simply because the opposition doesn't like the truth does not make it a point of order.

Mr. Hancock: Although my friend has been very eloquent, perhaps just a brief supplement to suggest that it's very dangerous, Mr. Speaker, to have points of order with respect to questions of policy. Those can be clarified by people getting up and making clarifications. But if one was to call a point of order every time there was a deviation from the facts, there would not be any questions coming from the opposition side of the House. There are clearly differences of viewpoint. This is clearly a difference of viewpoint. But to call a point of order every time they believe that they've been misquoted or misapprehended is ridiculous. I mean, if we were to do that, there wouldn't be any other business carried on.

The Speaker: I see the hon. Minister of Justice wanting to rise briefly, but we've had several speakers, and I'm prepared to rule on this. In fact, I've been sent a bunch of notes here, and I was distracted momentarily by them. But they're all valid. Hon.

Minister of Justice, I apologize for interrupting you prematurely there.

In any event, let me make a couple of very brief comments here before I give you the decision. The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills rose and asked a question at 2:27 p.m. The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs answered the question and said this:

They have reached a small impasse, but ultimately I don't think I'm going to take any recommendations from an opposition that needs a mediator to meet with the town of Sylvan Lake, that demands the city of Calgary have a red-light district, that tells the city of Edmonton what they're going to do with their municipal airport, and writes chastising letters in local newspapers when a municipality decides to build a library. I won't be taking their advice.

Now, there's nothing unparliamentary about anything that went on in the question or, frankly, in the answer, so there's really no point of order.

Let me just remind you of this. You know, it's fair and fine for opposition or private members to stand up and ask all kinds of questions they want, and the chair typically allows a maximum amount of latitude in that regard. Also, there's a thorough appreciation for what we call freedom of speech in this Assembly, which is what it was set up many, many hundreds of years ago to in fact reflect.

On the one hand, we get questions, in the two examples I'm going to give you, from the opposition. One opposition member today stood up and said something about the idiot status of the government or something along that line. Well, the context within which it was said and because it was a quote and so on doesn't make it very parliamentary. Then we had somebody last week and perhaps the week before as well accusing government of muzzling people and words to that effect. Typically these things go without any point of order being raised.

However, on the other side, when a government member says something in return, you have to remember that you get as good as you give, and that is what this Assembly has been noted for. Now, that does not mean that you should become unparliamentary in the giving and the sharing and the getting and the receiving. That doesn't mean that that justifies it. I'm simply telling you that there's a wide amount of latitude that goes on here.

I think the Government House Leader is very correct in the statement he made when he said that we would probably stall the entire proceeding of this Assembly, or words to that effect, if someone stood up every single time that there was a disagreement on a policy matter, on a procedural matter, or on something along that line. We wouldn't be making any progress here at all.

So how do we cure this going forward? Well, fix up your language. Most of these points of order happen during question period, and question period is also a time when you have ample time to prepare your question. In fact, you can time it to the second. You know word for word what you're going to be asking. Look in the mirror and, again, ask yourself: "Is this the kind of question that I'm going to get away with, so to speak? Is this question in order? Am I going to raise a point of order, or am I going to be accused of creating disorder, disruption, and all the rest of it?" At the end of the day let's be a lot more careful if we can, both on the questions and in the answers, to avoid any accusations, to avoid the allegations, to avoid the assertions, and to avoid attributions that may be unfounded. There you have the four As of the Assembly coined today: accusations, allegations, assertions, and attributions.

That being said, you might want to also – and I'll close on this point – review Beauchesne's 494 just as a reminder, where it is noted very clearly that the acceptance of one member's word on an issue ought to be enough and that statements within their particular level of expertise are to be taken and treated as true regardless of how you may feel or if you feel differently.

Secondly, on page 510 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice it says that there is frequently disagreement over the facts and what I just alluded to. If there's a disagreement as to the facts or as to the question of debate or a particular policy position, that is not a point of order. It is simply a disagreement. Please keep that in mind, and we'll save the House a lot of time, save you a lot of time, and we'll move on with a much more effective mannerism in this House.

Orders of the Day

Written Questions

[The Clerk read the following written questions, which had been accepted]

Federal Building and Centennial Plaza Costs

Q28. Mr. Barnes:

As of November 1, 2012, what costs have been incurred on the Edmonton federal building and Centennial Plaza project?

Health Capital Plan Infrastructure Costs

Q29. Mr. Barnes:

As of November 1, 2012, what is the status of all infrastructure projects in phase 1 and phase 2 of the health capital plan, 2010-2013?

Traffic Safety Act Vehicle Impoundments

Q31. Mr. Barnes:

How many drivers have had their vehicles impounded since September 1, 2012, pursuant to the 2011 amendments to the Traffic Safety Act, and what was the average length of time of the impoundment?

New School Construction and Maintenance Costs

Q33. Mr. Barnes:

What was the cost to build each school under the Alberta schools alternative procurement 1 and Alberta schools alternative procurement 2 initiatives and the ABC Schools Partnership, and what is the ongoing annual cost of the maintenance agreements for each school?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Transportation Construction Costs

Q30. Mr. Barnes asked that the following question be accepted.

As of November 1, 2012, what is the projected spending for each project listed in Alberta Transportation's three-year construction program, 2012-2015?

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to ask that my Written Question 30 be accepted as written. It makes me wonder why the Transportation ministry and the government want to change the question. I want to start with what we have now. We have a three-year tentative major construction project list by highway number without any cost, and obviously being listed by highway number means without any real priority. Throw the word "tentative" in there, and that, of course, strongly suggests without any commitment either.

One of our researchers did a great job and took the 2012-13 list and compared it to the 2014 list, and it's amazing how many different projects I have that have been dropped from the list that appear not to have been done. It makes me wonder whatever got them on the list in the first place or maybe, better yet, what got them taken off the list.

The Wildrose and myself especially believe that Albertans and Alberta taxpayers are open to a full-blown conversation about where their taxpayer money is spent, what our highest priority needs are, and where our money is best put forward to help our economy. Too many times – too many times – I've seen where Albertans thought they were on a priority list, thought they were getting a much-needed infrastructure project, and it doesn't happen and the hardship this causes. It pits one area of Alberta against another, and that's not what we want. We want all Albertans working together to build a strong Alberta and a strong economy.

I think that fact, coupled with the fact that this government ran on the idea of being more open, more transparent, more fair, suggests that we should have the numbers as to what these projected costs are going to be there. In part (a) the government has suggested they change my question by adding "the contract associated with" before where I had put in "each project listed." For some reason we want to add "the contract associated with." Well, then my thoughts are: what the heck are they doing on the list if they're not that far?

I think there are some other important reasons, though, for us to have the estimated or the cost that the government is projecting for these Transportation projects transparent. Number one, it will help us prioritize. I'm very much in agreement with the government that there are only limited dollars, and they have to be spent where they're most effective. When Alberta citizens and taxpayers can get a full look at what everything is going to cost, this will help tremendously. People realize that they may have to wait a year or two or that they may not be the highest priority in terms of safety, in terms of health, and there may be other things.

I would hope that for all of our government spending, especially in Infrastructure and Transportation, there is a huge degree of cost-benefit analysis put into the bigger, more expensive projects before they're committed to. I would hope they're not just political. I would hope there's proper planning and the proper use of taxpayers' money for all reasons. If we're going to the extent of trained professionals, whether it's in our Transportation department or some consultants we may have, doing a full-blown cost-benefit analysis on the importance of having these projects, it's only a smaller step, then, to having the estimated cost of these projects on the list as well.

I've been talking to a lot of stakeholders since I've been Transportation critic, and a lot of stakeholders have told me that the government's inability to plan properly, the government's inability to spend on a sustainable, consistent level, the government's inability to let projects know what order they're going to be done in on a certain priority costs Alberta taxpayers extra money, costs us more services, costs us all quality of life.

Why do they tell me this is so? They tell me this is so because what happens when they see the government not prioritize these things, when they see the government break promises, is that they go to other jurisdictions. They do some private work. Or, worse yet, when they do get some government work, they put in many, many costs of capital equipment and costs of being in business that they would probably prefer to amortize over a longer period of time if they could, but because they don't know what the government's priorities are, because they don't know what the total costs are of these projects, because they don't know the full estimates, they end up increasing their bids. If they become a successful bidder, it ends up costing us all more.

Again, stakeholders are telling me that with a fully public prioritized infrastructure list with costs and a government that had the commitment to stick to the list or release the good reasons when things change, that openness and transparency would lead to better value for all Albertans and future generations. I also believe that it might help avoid some cases of what might be missing costs and what might be missing estimates.

We all may remember that in the supplementary estimates we had a hundred-million-dollar extra request from the government for some of the ring road around Anthony Henday. Whether it was missed or whether it was just part of the overall process and was a later part of what was being done is not clear to me, but I do believe that if this was on the priority list and our number was there, this would help taxpayers hold the government and Transportation accountable for how the money is spent, and this would help our Transportation employees work towards the number we need to work towards.

Also, I think that this can be done. If we know the number and if we release the number, I think this could become an important way, Mr. Speaker, to hold contractors accountable. If we're not releasing the number and if one of the reasons that we're not releasing the number is that we're not sure what we want, then we haven't done our planning. If we're only putting it out to two or three bidders and we don't know what the costs are going to come in at, then, my goodness, we're in a tough spot if the safety or the economic importance of that project rises and our costs are only the higher costs.

Again, I think that releasing a project cost that shows more clearly what the experts in the Transportation department are expecting this to cost can help hold some companies in check and can help us negotiate some better deals for taxpayers and some better quality infrastructure for all Albertans.

I also think that if we're more open and transparent with all of our stakeholders, all of our transportation and road-building companies, this will lead to some efficiencies. They will see what certain projects are, what certain costs are estimated for certain areas, and again they can plan their capital, their men, and their equipment better. This will allow them, you know, to give the taxpayer and the citizen a better deal, better quality, and possibly more roads.

I also think that if we put this projected cost of the projects out, it would ensure some more fairness for taxpayers and certainly for contractors. Taxpayers can see what's on the list. We're very fortunate. We have a great, educated population. They know that Rome or Alberta cannot be built in a day, but they do know that working together on what is most important and has the highest safety needs will lead to better infrastructure for all of us.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I would speak against changing my question, where the phrase "the contract associated with" before "each project listed" is put in there. Once a contract is signed, we have certainly missed out on huge parts of the planning. We have certainly missed out on what may be the most important part of all, and that is the cost-benefit analysis. A good cost-benefit analysis, of course, will have to have some number with some degree of hardness.

When we add to the end of the question "with the exception of pretended estimates," that basically suggests, again, that many, many parts of the priority list are just thrown on there with the desire to come off in a short time without being seriously thought of. I think it's a disservice to Albertans not to provide as much information to them as we can.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, thank you for your comments. Actually, it sounded like you were anticipating some changes to your motion. The House has not seen any amendments yet, but that's okay. It will save us time later when we get to the amendment if there is one.

That being said, the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat has now moved Written Question 30, and it's on the floor for discussion.

The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is like Kreskin because as it turns out, there is an amendment. It's like he read my mind. That's actually because we furnished the hon. member with the amendment ahead of time. The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat asked this question: "As of November 1, 2012, what is the projected spending for each project listed in Alberta Transportation's three-year construction program, 2012-2015?" After reviewing the question, I would propose an amendment so that it would read as follows:

As of November 1, 2012, what is the projected spending for the contract associated with each project listed in Alberta Transportation's three-year construction program, 2012-2015, with the exception of pretended estimates?

Mr. Speaker, I'm asking for this amendment really just to protect the integrity of our tendering process. Alberta Transportation does not publicize the pretender estimates of construction projects. If we did, it would influence the prices bid on these projects. As an analogy that would be like getting an estimate to build a house and telling your contractors in advance how big your bank account is and then saying: now bid on it. This is essentially what the hon. member is advocating, and the reason that we don't want to do that is that we don't want to put Alberta taxpayers in that position.

Of course, we set a budget for projects, but again by contract if you tell the contractor what your bank account is for that project, they're obviously going to bid the full amount or more. Without doing that, there is a chance, of course, that they could bid under that, which is in the better interest of Albertans, which is essentially the reason we're asking for that amendment.

We need to be accountable within our budget. Project bids should reflect what the work will cost, not what contractors think we can afford on behalf of the taxpayers. In addition, costs are not presented at a project level because it could put a contractor at a competitive disadvantage on a future project. Of course, that also might dissuade them from giving the people of Alberta through this government the best price that they can. Each project on the three-year program could be a subcomponent of a larger construction tender. For example, they could be different types of work or work on different highways, so when the time comes to tender, they may be bundled together to achieve efficiencies in their delivery.

Making this type of detailed "project" information publicly available to their competitors could put them at a disadvantage. Of course, Mr. Speaker, if we put our contractors at a disadvantage, they may not want to do work for the government anymore, and with fewer people bidding on our contracts, the taxpayers could actually get a worse deal, and we don't want that to happen to them. So we don't want anything that may impact the integrity of our construction project tenders or the competitive process. If there are questions offline later on that I could explain to the member, I would be happy to do so.

Mr. Speaker, another couple of points were raised in the opening speech. One that the member raised was about a hundred million dollars in estimates for Anthony Henday. The biggest part of that, as was explained to the member, was that the work got done actually ahead of schedule. Of course, it shouldn't really surprise anybody that when work gets done, you have to pay for it. Sometimes when work gets done sooner, you have to pay for it a little sooner.

Further, the speaker also talked about pitting one area against another, Mr. Speaker, and that's why we put all of our approved projects on the website. We think that that actually prevents pitting one area against another because there are only two rankings that matter, funded and unfunded. Well, pitting one area against another because one project was theoretically under the speaker's idea approved at number 1 and another at number 17 would cause a fight that has no point simply because they're either funded or they're not. That's what the municipalities tell me. They want their projects funded. Funded or not funded: that's what they need to know. That's what we tell them.

Mr. Speaker, that's why I'm proposing the amendment, and I hope all members of the Assembly, having heard the explanation that I have just given, will support the amendment that has just been proposed.

The Speaker: Having heard the amendment as moved by the Minister of Transportation and having heard some comments already about the anticipated amendment by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, are there other speakers to the amendment?

The hon. member.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sorry for my misunderstanding at first, and thank you to the hon. minister for providing me the amendment earlier. I appreciate it. I think it is a step forward that we're going to get some information on what the costs are going to be. Again, openness and transparency is something that's important to many Albertans.

An Hon. Member: All Albertans.

Mr. Barnes: All Albertans. I appreciate that.

What is the projected spending for the contract associated? That phrase to me suggests that the numbers that are provided are going to be limited, and I don't see any reason to limit them. "With the exception of pretended estimates" is also going to limit it. I'm going to suggest to you that possibly a range of prices where your cost-benefit analysis has looked at things would go a long way to help Albertans know when things are going to be done.

In closing, thank you for considering my question this far, and thank you for providing it to me earlier.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to support the original, unamended question, and that question reads: "As of November 1, 2012, what is the projected spending for each project listed in Alberta Transportation's three-year construction program," and that's from 2012 to 2015 inclusive.

Mr. Speaker, the reason I support this written question is that we often see that when the government comes out with various announcements, promises on different projects, there's often an overspending or escalation of costs once they get into the process. We saw this with the MLA offices, where the Minister of Infrastructure had come up with a budget for that project, and again and again it just ballooned and ballooned and ballooned. That may have been because of extra parts of it in terms of, you know, a rooftop garden or an 80-person movie theatre or something like that, but it also could have been because the contractors, due to the type of project, simply had to escalate their costs and increase the price, and that may not have been incorporated in the original estimate that was put forward by the minister.

We see this with other types of projects: roads, hospitals, and things like that. I think the average Albertan would want to see that. You know, I talk to my constituents. Okay. You have a list of projects over the next three years. What do you expect those to cost? I think that is a very reasonable question to ask here in this Legislature. What is the projected cost of those projects?

When you have a government that's talked about being open and transparent – this was actually part of the original throne speech; this was supposed to be a pillar of this government – part of that includes putting forward publicly information that is important. I think what would be important when you come up with a three-year construction program is how much that construction is going to cost. What is the projected cost going forward? It's a little odd that that simple information, that would be used in any type of budgeting, cannot be put forward in its purest form as is asked in this question by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

We see again and again various examples of how this government puts forward ideas, openness and transparency, coming forward and being, you know, the most the most open and transparent government across Canada, but when it comes to actually doing something to further that objective, in this case making public the projected costs of different projects, they fall short. I think that in this Legislature if you have a viable, important question, the information for which should be readily attainable by the minister or obviously his department, that information should be made public, that there should not be any type of amendments.

It looks like part of the amendment here is to put in “the contract associated with” before the part that's quoted as “each project listed.” Of course, once a contract has been finalized, you would have crystallized the cost within that particular contract. But even there, I mean, there are obviously provisions in the contract that would allow for either the increase or decrease of the eventual payout. We saw this – again, this is a perfect example – with the brand new, fancy MLA offices.

Mr. Speaker, I respect the hon. Minister of Transportation for his comments about, you know, perhaps not knowing with clear certainty the projected costs, but this an estimate of it. What are you projecting going forward? We do not know numbers definitively right now, so we need to know what the projected amounts are. How do you come up with budgetary decisions when you don't even have projected numbers?

I think that this a very important question to ask because we see again and again this government rolling out different projects, picking numbers out – they seem to be able to project numbers at certain times, and then those numbers inevitably are proved to be wrong. But it's important that you at least come up with those projections right off that bat so that taxpayers can say: “Okay. This is what they projected based on these circumstances. There was a change for some reason in circumstances.” The MLA offices are one example. Maybe there wasn't a projection of a rooftop garden. You know, there was a change in circumstances. That's why the costs escalated. I think taxpayers could forgive the government if they actually were open and transparent and showed their decision-making right from the beginning all the way through to the end. “This is what we projected. This is what happened. This is why the projection either fell short or was too high.”

So I think, Mr. Speaker, in these circumstances where you have a very clear question, you go to Albertans, you go to your constituents and say, you know: “We asked a question of the government. What is the projected spending for each project listed in their three-year construction program? They couldn't even answer that.” I think that most Albertans, small-business owners particularly, who have to project their costs on a go-forward basis, would understandably indicate that that type of rejection of a question like that doesn't make any sense.

That's why I rise today to support the question in its original form without the amended statement that was put forward by the hon. Transportation minister. We need to know going forward what the projected costs are for each and every project within that department. What are they, and how are we going to proceed on a go-forward basis if we don't even have the projected costs, if the government can't even answer that simple question? It shouldn't take us, the opposition, going through the process of FOIP to dig this information up, to go through that long, tedious process when, if the information is readily available, the government should be able to provide that information so that not only the opposition can see it but, of course, all Albertans and taxpayers can see what those projected costs are within a particular department.

Mr. Speaker, you know, it just seems to me to be pretty common sense. The government is indicating: we're going to go ahead with a certain project. We're simply asking: what is the projected cost of that project? That doesn't seem unreasonable. In these circumstances I believe it's incumbent upon the government to answer clearly, to be forthright in their answers, to be comprehensive. Making this amendment really limits the usefulness of the information that was requested by the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. That's why I rise today to vote in favour of the unamended question and to vote against this proposed amendment that's been put forward by the Transportation minister.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I have the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise opposed to the amendment but in favour of the original question brought forward. The minister is welcome to address my concerns, but the idea that we should not have an expected cost of an unfunded project so that we can budget properly is just not consistent with the way we budget in municipalities.

That's a good analogy. The fact is that we have funded and unfunded. For those projects that remain unfunded, we have to go back occasionally and re-evaluate what the projected costs are, but then once they become that funded portion of our budget, we generally put them out for bid. Now, if we don't have an expected cost, how on earth are we supposed to have any idea whether or not the bids are even going to come in correctly if they're way over or way under? Having just a general sense of what a project is going to cost is, to me, fundamental in planning your budget going forward. So the original request is asking for just that, and the amended version is saying: if it hasn't been bid yet, we're not going to disclose that information.

I'll bring up a point that was kind of made a little bit earlier. In my little community of Rimbey the library has come forward for an expansion. Much of the town has risen up in opposition to that, but they're not opposed to the library expansion. What they're opposed to is that there's no idea what the project is, there's no idea how much it's going to cost, and they want to know before anything is approved. That, to me, is logical.

We sit here now trying to figure it out, dealing with the issues of the various ministries' budgets. What we really do want to know in the Wildrose is: what is the priority list of these infrastructure projects? I know we get all the rhetoric back saying, "You want to cut, and we want to build," but the fact is that all we want to know is: what are the priorities so we can argue about the priorities of what should or should not be funded?

What, in particular, a lot of the communities want to know with infrastructure – in my community it's highway 53. Highway 11 and intersection 761 is also very important. Highway 11 upgrades are important. What they want to know is: where does that project sit? What is the estimated cost of the project? Is it going to be this year, next year, or in the third year? This is the information people can live with.

We're not asking to build the world. We're not asking to overspend. What we're saying is that we do want to spend within our means, but we need to have an idea of the priorities of what is more important in one project versus others, and how much the expected costs are.

This is nothing new even in the private sector. When private corporate entities, particularly very large ones, plan for the future, they have an expectation of what they're budgeting for, and that is generally well known in the internal workings of a company. When it does get funded and it goes out for bids, it's evaluated based on bids. If those bids come in way over, maybe you have to rethink the project. Maybe something was wrong in the planning stages. That's a good cautionary tale.

That is a big part of holding a government accountable. If we knew what projects were unfunded in the sense of this budget year but with an expected cost or an expected price tag on that project, when that comes into the funded portion of our budget, we are better equipped to deal with it, whether it's reasonable or unreasonable. It's also very helpful to us to plan future budgets.

So I don't understand the Minister of Transportation's argument on this that because it hasn't gone out to bid yet, you don't need to know what the expected cost is. We're not asking for the bid price here. What we're asking for is the budgeted price. How much is this government going to put forward on these projects when they come into the funded pool of projects to be built? That's really important because it gives us a great sense of our books, of what's funded, what's unfunded, what to expect. What are the needs of Albertans?

Also, when you have this type of information, if something like the Rocky Mountain House hospital remains unfunded and on the books for 10 years or on the list for about 10 years, you know that has to be upgraded. You know things have changed. But it also gives you a tool to look across not just your budget but the community's. "How can I maximize spending my dollars when we go forward to build this infrastructure?" These are all important issues of why that information is important.

Again, just to close, I'm opposed to the amendment, and I will be supporting the original question. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and support the original question and not the amended version put forward by the Minister of Transportation. The original question reads: "As of November 1, 2012, what is the projected spending for each project listed in Alberta Transportation's three-year construction program, 2012-2015?"

I can appreciate the Minister of Transportation's concerns regarding competitive advantage and not wanting to put out the maximum budget amount that they would want or possibly receive from vendors who go to tenders, but there is importance in making sure that that competitive advantage is anchored on both sides. One of the things that we often see with this current government is that when the tenders go out, the costs that actually are incurred by Alberta taxpayers are significantly higher than what the original projected amount was and even what the tendered amount was. Some of that is unforeseeable, and some of it is foreseeable.

As many of my colleagues have already discussed, we saw that with clear, clear indication on the federal building renovations. The original budget was $275 million, and the new projected budget is $350 million. We're going to see an 80-seat gallery in there, and while that's very nice, I'm sure we can put that money to better use. We're also going to see a complete rooftop garden that can only be accessed by the Premier and selective members of her cabinet. So it's not an opportunity for all Albertans to enjoy, yet we're expecting Albertans to expend an extra $75 million over the projected budget to cover the costs of that. If there actually is a budget, then we should stay within the budget. It would seem to me that that is only one example.

It also seems to me that clearly one of the ways to avoid this is if you just had a clear list of the projects that the Alberta government sees as priorities, a clear list of the order of priority, and a clear list of what the projected dollar amounts associated with those projects might be. I don't think anybody is asking for their exact budget. We all know there are unforeseeable circumstances, but we also know that if unaccounted for, spending can get a bit out of control.

I would also have to question the Minister of Transportation's assertion that if we tell companies what the budget for certain projects might be, those companies would be so greedy as to gouge the government at every opportunity and take as much from the government as they possibly can. It would seem to me that if the government actually went out with an idea of what the plan should cost, many Alberta companies are very competent and very much want to deal fairly, so if given the opportunity, these companies would come back to the table with a reasonable offer to the government.

If they don't know the projections of the budget and they don't really know the exact parameters of what the client wants, you're not allowing for any planning by the company that might actually allow the company to build in some cost savings or efficiencies that would allow for them to save the government money either. If they never know sort of what the guidelines are – we're asking companies to meet guidelines and come in under budget, but they never really know what the budget is.

I think we're assuming that all companies and especially Alberta companies – you know, from my experience Albertans and Alberta companies are very entrepreneurial and very honest and hard-working – will automatically go to the dark side and try and take as much as they can from the government. We also are assuming that companies are incapable of putting in an effective tender if they're given the actual budget which we want them to work within, and we are assuming that they're unable to plan for those costs and find ways to save the government and eventually the Alberta taxpayers money.

If we don't have a complete list of the prioritized projects, what we see is the politicization of these decisions. A clear example of this is one from my own riding. I can tell you that clearly the residents of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake riding and in the community of Sylvan Lake did not see it as a priority of this government at all to close down the intersection of highway 11 and highway 781. That closure of the intersection not only has devastated our downtown economy in Sylvan Lake and created a different safety issue not even a mile away and then put other residents at risk, but it actually has come in at a cost of close to $10 million. Ten million dollars for an intersection that was never in the budget.

This was a knee-jerk reaction, and it was an unfortunate situation that caused the knee-jerk reaction. If they'd actually had a discussion with the residents of Sylvan Lake and surrounding area about what their priorities would be for how to spend taxpayer money, they would have seen that the residents of Sylvan Lake and surrounding area actually wanted it to be a clear priority that they have an open and safe intersection and that they wanted lights to be considered, a cloverleaf, a four-way, whichever. They wanted a safe intersection open, and we know that lights at similar intersections much busier than that highway 11, highway 781 intersection came in at a cost between $500,000 and $1 million, which would have allowed for significant tax savings to the Alberta taxpayer.

Given that there's a set of lights not 1,500 metres away on the crest of a hill which has resulted in two fatalities since those lights were installed, it's not a matter of money and safety. It clearly is just a matter of Alberta Transportation and the Minister of Transportation just picking and choosing what the ministry decides is a priority for him at the time. That was not, unfortunately, this current Minister of Transportation's but the previous Minister of Transportation's decision. Unfortunately, this government has decided not to listen to the community.

In that community 4,500 people signed that petition expressing their concern about the money being spent to close this intersection and the devastating effects it's had on that community. That's just one example.

Then we go even further. When you don't have a clear list of priorities and a clear budget attached to it: we saw this clearly with the Strathcona community hospital. Promises have been made several times. For the last 10 years this community has been promised a hospital. It started in 2005, when the hospital was built. This hospital was promised during the election, that phase 2 of the hospital would be built. It was clearly a political election promise, a campaign promise to get votes. What ended up happening, because there was no clear priority list and no budget associated with it: phase 1, which cost $130 million, has now essentially turned the Strathcona community hospital into one of the most expensive urgent care facilities in Alberta. Their own physician, Dr. Jim Adams, has called this a glorified walk-in clinic and an expensive one at that.

Clearly, the Sherwood Park residents are reeling. After the election nothing was said until the budget came out, and that was no longer on the three-year capital plan. If we had a clear list of priorities, you would see that residents would be able to actually go online – and I don't care if it's online or if it's in writing and hard copy – and see what the priorities of this government are. They would be able to see the dollar amounts, what each of these projects costs.

Additionally, the other part of it is that we maybe need to educate Albertans on exactly what a project does cost. I know that in my own riding, for example, with the idea of lights there were many people who thought a set of lights was $50,000 when in reality it's $500,000 to a million dollars. That was an education process. I also know that many in my community didn't understand that the closure of an intersection and fixing a few roads would cost $10 million either. If we actually started prioritizing and putting budget amounts together for each priority project, you might have the added benefit of educating Albertans on what the true costs of these projects are.

That goes a long, long way to working with Albertans and being accountable, being transparent, and getting Albertans onboard with what should be asked of our government. There is sometimes an expectation from Albertans that think that we need to pay for every single thing. But we have to do our part as legislators as well. We have to do our part to set expectations, we have to show what the priorities are, and we have to start showing what the true cost of each and every single one of these priorities would be. That can easily be solved with a simple priority list and budgeted amounts.

That's why I stand in support of the original question. "As of November 1, 2012, what is the projected spending for each project listed in Alberta Transportation's three-year construction program, 2012-2015?" I'm not in support of the amended version that the Minister of Transportation has provided.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. We're on the amendment, by the way.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the question as originally put forward by the hon. member, and therefore I'm speaking against the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, there are several points. One, you know, the job of the opposition is to hold the government to account and ensure that they are not breaking their promises. I guess, then, unfortunately, the opposition needs to do a bit better of a job considering how many have been broken.

However, the one thing that we'd like to do is to ensure that Albertans know exactly where their dollars are going. In order to keep the government accountable, to keep them honest, and to force them to do a better job planning and looking at how many dollars are going to be going into different projects, we and Albertans need to have access to this information. I think that asking for projected spending for each project listed under Alberta Transportation's three-year construction program is a very reasonable request. I think that by having this figure, the opposition and Albertans are better informed as to where their hard-earned money is going.

I, too, agree with the idea that a priority list of projected projects needs to be made available to the public. Part of this is because if there is a change in priorities, if the government decides that one project is going to move up or down the list, at least Albertans are informed as to what those priorities are. More importantly, then the opposition and citizens of this province can ask the government what the reasons are behind one project being delayed and another one being accelerated. I think part of the reason that it's frustrating to Albertans is that they don't know where they are on a list, and it makes it very difficult to plan and to know what direction the government is going. I find it very interesting that, again, for a government that campaigned very hard on being accountable and open and transparent, you know, we have to resort to the opposition asking and fighting for the government to be accountable and transparent and open.

I think the written question that was submitted by the hon. member was very well written and goes to the heart of the matter, where we're looking for projected costs, not exempting the pretended estimates. I think Albertans need to know what the government is projecting for spending. I think, you know, that if the hon. minister is concerned about prices for tendering going up, well, then the government can be very conservative in their budget estimates or what they would like to spend, which may actually bring down the tendering contracts.

Again, I'm speaking in favour of the question as it was originally written, and I ask all members of the Assembly to agree. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak in favour of the amendment. I listened to all of the comments very carefully, and I can certainly appreciate where every member that has stood up is coming from. I think there isn't a single person in this House that does not want to see us improve and always be more accountable and transparent and responsible for the dollars that we spend on behalf of the taxpayers.

Quite frankly, I'm not sure if it's naïveté or what it is, but the members that have been speaking against the amendment are in fact speaking against what is currently common purchasing practice. It's a procurement standard. It's supported by the PMAC and the PSAB and everyone else. I think that for us to not stay with those standards would in fact be not only inappropriate, but it would be irresponsible, and I think there are certain cases where it can actually lead towards artificially impacting market forces, which would have a negative impact.

I've got a couple of examples here. You know, I've never said that the government needs to operate like a business, but I have always believed it needs to operate with sound business practice. The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat and I share, I think, a common passion in our private lives, and that is for sales and marketing. I believe the member – I'm just going to throw this out there – would probably agree with me that the interpretation of this type of disclosure in any case, whether it be the public or private sector, is going to have a different impact on whether you are the buyer or the seller. The person who is selling is going to have an advantage by not disclosing how much he actually wants for it. He's going to invite several different bids. The person who is buying it wants to know: exactly how low will you go? In this particular case we're talking about spending public dollars on projects.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are cases where we do announce prices before they're tendered, and I'll use highway 63 as an example. Last October we announced that we were going to fund and complete the balance of the twinning of highway 63 at a cost of $778 million. That cost was based on a completed design of the road, but that tender is going to be broken up into multiple tenders. It could be 30, it could be 50 tenders. So there's no one company that is going to know that he can bid on the entire job for $778 million or push it to $777.5 million. It's not allowing them to know what is in our bank account, as he said.

The other thing is that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is quite correct when he says that the private sector does disclose a budget to their shareholders. However, they're talking about total project prices as well. When Suncor came out and announced their Voyageur project, it was a $10 billion project. Literally thousands of different tenders would have been issued on that.

Municipalities also follow this, and I'll use my own municipality as an example, the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, when I served on council there. Every piece of land they're going to buy doesn't appear as a single line item in their budget. They came out and said: we need $30 million for land acquisition. If you do it line by line – and you'll know this in real estate as well – that leads to real estate speculation, and that can have some impacts on the market forces.

When we look at different bids, particularly in Transportation, these are very complex projects, projects that are going to require multiple tenders. We can come out with an estimate. We can publish that in advance. But until it's actually tendered and tenders are awarded, I believe it would be irresponsible to put a price out on every bridge and every mile of highway. We can estimate those, and road builders and other people can estimate based on what the average is on a per-kilometre basis for asphalt, et cetera, but everybody that's in the business of bidding knows what it's going to take to do the job, and they will bid accordingly.

Mr. Speaker, I believe we're following the appropriate transparent process right now, and that is to come out with a budget that is a lump sum for our highway transportation projects and to list them all out until such a time as we know exactly what the actual costs for the citizens of Alberta are going to be.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Medicine Hat unless I see others on this side.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also stand up in favour of the written question from the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. It happens every day in the real world. When a company plans a project, they always have the projected costs. You know, this is just for accountability and so that we can scrutinize a project. We have to have the number in order for the project to go ahead. I don't see any reason why the Ministry of Transportation can't release the list of the number of projects and projected costs. When somebody is building a house, there's a price put on the whole project, and then tenders go out. It all depends how we negotiate with the contractors when the tenders come in.

If the minister is worried about the tender costs going up, I don't know how that would be because it's done every day. Companies always have projected costs on the projects, and they always tender. They always go out and, you know, finish the project on budget and on time. I don't see any reason why the Ministry of Transportation can't do the same.

For those reasons, I'm also supporting the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat on his written question. Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Medicine Hat on the amendment.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm voting against this amendment, and I'm going to tell you why. We think that prioritized lists are very useful. They increase the transparency. They also increase the certainty of projects being followed through on. If a municipality or an area of the province knows that they're on this list and where they are on that list, they may not like where they are on the list, but they'll see the projects that are higher up on the list being completed and checked off. They know that they're moving up that list, so they can have some confidence that it's really going to happen.

We know, unfortunately, that this government has a track record of breaking some of those promises. The projects are being promised, and the people are waiting for them, but somehow they just keep getting shuffled back to the bottom of the deck in some sort of political sleight of hand, and that undermines the credibility of the government. It also undermines the people's confidence in the likelihood of their projects coming on. It makes it harder for those individual jurisdictions to plan.

I think a prioritized list would go a long way towards reassuring them but also remove from the government or make it harder, at least, for the government to politicize and change projects on prioritized lists. We know that happens. Unfortunately, it's sort of the way the game is played, and it's not the right way to play the game. It's sort of bending the rules for your own political benefit. We'd like to of course see that eliminated, not just because we're in opposition but because we all live in these communities.

Some of us have served on local community councils. You know, I've been a mayor and a village councillor, and some others have had other positions like that, too. We count on it. We've received the promise. It doesn't happen. We look at where we are on this list, and apparently we're never coming up to the surface. That's pretty discouraging.

Of course, the tendering process itself can be manipulated by designing a bid in such a way that only certain bidders qualify. We don't like to talk about that. It's sort of the elephant in the room, though, because we all know it happens. You'd think that in theory it's good on the surface to have some prequalifications that you have to meet in order to be allowed to bid, and as far as that goes, if that's all it was, that would be good. But if it's used to eliminate certain companies that would be equally capable because their equipment isn't painted the right colour or whatever – sometimes it seems like it's almost that frivolous. It would make it harder for that to happen if the prioritized list was there.

I will be voting against this amendment and voting in favour of the well-thought-out, well-constructed proposal, the question that's being asked, that will help bring more accountability and transparency to this government and give Albertans a chance to really see where they stand with their projects and know when they can anticipate their actual completion.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, we're on the amendment. I'll recognize Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also will be voting against the amendment. The original question, I think, is interesting. It's asking for projected spending. It's not saying that that is what the project will spend or what the cost will be. It's projected spending. There's always a range of dollar values that you can work with, up or down, and I think that is fairly consistent in how projects are budgeted, whether government is doing it or whether it's private business, but you have to have some kind of idea of what number you're going to play with.

If you have a good vendor or construction company or somebody who is doing services, they can come to the table and offer some very innovative new technology or ways of delivering services that can drastically slash the cost of your project. Projected is what we're dealing with today. What the budgeted or the let contract actually comes out at will be much different.

I think the way the original question is worded is proper, and I think it also helps to take the politics out of the whole equation because now you're seeing that there is a number associated to it. We're talking about the number, not only the cost but where it is on the list of projects to be done, and again, as has been mentioned by other members here, people just want to know where their project is. They just want to know: are they on the list? Has the government heard them? When the project drops off the list, I think it's incumbent that the people know that so that they can get representation back in there and say: "Where is our project? Why is it no longer on the list? Can we get it added? What was the reasoning for removing it from the list?" I think that's very important.

It's also a great opportunity for the government to work towards, you know, being more open, more transparent. The accountability factor: I mean, we all strive to have that in our personal lives and our lives as MLAs, being accountable. Transformational: I've heard that term as well. Gee, I just thought of something here. Government could even propose maybe doing an associate ministry of such words. But now that I'm thinking about it, it's probably not a good idea, and it would probably just be a waste of time and money.

These projects, unfortunately, are used as carrots. Where I find that they're most used is during elections, or they can be used to buy favours in certain ridings or from certain people, or they can be used as a punishing or intimidating factor. Take those out of that, and take the politics out of it. Just be open, be transparent, and make that list public so that people can actually hold government accountable. That is the purpose of this.

It also helps to keep an eye on the cost and the progress of all these projects. Sometimes I think we all get lost in the idea that we're the only ones interested in it or that certain special-interest groups are interested in that project, but it's not the case. It's constituents who are going to benefit from these projects. They need to know, they want to know, they're asking to know, so I think it's very important that we actually address these needs and concerns.

By having this list and having these costs there, it could help reduce the cost of inflating the price on the project. Look at the south Calgary health centre, for example. That was originally talked about as being around, I believe, $600 million, plus or minus. The last number I heard is well over $1 billion, maybe $1.3 billion. Who actually misses the mark that badly on an estimated project? Who misses it that badly? I mean, in the private sector you would be looking for a new job. Why is this behaviour accepted? Why is government actually allowing projects like this to overrun that badly? There's no accountability. Where is it? There are stories of all kinds of waste on that project. You know, if we had really good whistle-blower protection, we might even have some of those people come forward, but again we don't.

The federal building is another example of costs going down and then up and then down. Oh, guess what? It's up again. If you had that list on the Internet or if it was accessible to the public, we could see that. I don't think we'd see as much movement on projects up and down, up and down because you'd have to be transparent. You'd have to be open. You'd have to be accountable. But if you don't have it out there, I guess it gives you the freedom of not having to be any one of those three.

Building infrastructure, to me, is a really clear comparison to what happens in the private sector because we're actually spending money that you could term as being part of shareholder money. Shareholders want good value. They want a return on their investment. They want it to be handled properly, and they just want to have the faith in whomever is using their money to make sure that the procurement of the service or the infrastructure is done properly.

I think one of the issues is that it appears that the government hasn't been really clear sometimes on the specifications or the requirements or maybe the expectations of the project because we continue to hear about projects that go over budget. Again, if we had that listed in front for everybody to see in black and white, I think there would be a lot more accountability to hold the original project price in line with what the delivery price is from the contractor.

There also should be an opportunity for the government to push back on contractors when costs are escalating, and there might even be an opportunity to offer incentives for bringing costs in under budget as long as there's no cut to specifications or towards safety or building codes.

It's amazing to me, actually, that during the election we had to listen to the now Premier promise 140 family care clinics. That was thrown out there as being a proposed projected cost of over a billion dollars. Why was this, you know, deemed acceptable at that point in time, yet when the real needs are required, when the rubber needs to hit the road, many old and outstanding projects go unaddressed? I just don't understand why that's acceptable at one time and not another.

The promise to build 50 new schools and renovate 70 was another campaign promise. That was over, I believe, a billion dollars, and that number was thrown out, so why was this deemed acceptable at the time? You know, during the election it was okay to do it, but now why wouldn't you roll that over into budgeting models? If you can do it during electioneering times, why don't you put it into practice?

In closing here, I think the fear the government has in disclosing project estimates is because they have typically done such a poor job in managing these and in holding the contractors to account and holding themselves to account. I just don't think they want to wear the responsibility of this.

Thanks.

The Speaker: Are there other speakers to the amendment?

Not hearing or seeing any others who wish to speak, let me then pose the question.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: Now on to the motion as amended.

Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: The question has been called.

[Written Question 30 as amended carried]

Staffing for Checkstops

Q32. Mr. Barnes asked that the following question be accepted.

As of November 28, 2012, how many peace officers have been added to operate checkstops in Alberta since April 23, 2012?

Mr. Barnes: We all may remember that in the Wildrose's balanced budget alternative from 2012 we clearly announced that we would hire 300 new police officers, corrections officers, and sheriffs, including five dedicated checkstop teams. We feel this would go a long, long way to increasing the visibility and, obviously, to catching impaired drivers, but the visibility would go a long, long way to potentially keeping impaired drivers off the road.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

On kind of a personal interest basis, I have a few friends in Cypress-Medicine Hat that are policemen, very, very hard-working professionals. It's interesting to me, when I talk to them, how big parts of their day are lost in paperwork, book work, transporting prisoners, working with courts. There's lots of this. It's potentially a situation where, you know, the idea of five dedicated checkstop teams could go a long, long way to really making our province safer for all.

With that, I would ask that the government please support my question and consider it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker. With respect, I'm going to reject the hon. member's question for a number of reasons. First off, the term "peace officers" can include both police officers and provincial traffic sheriffs, and frankly we don't cover that. The word "peace officers" is open to interpretation. Tracking down accurate specifics to this written question would be difficult if not impossible. If the term "peace officers" is limited to provincial traffic sheriffs, an answer may infer that sheriffs have criminal impaired driving authorities, which, of course, they do not have. That would be tantamount to creating a provincial police force, which, as we know, our government has decided not to do. The provincial police service agreement, of course, is being funded 30 per cent by the federal government, which we would lose in the event that we were to go in that direction.

The province does not directly establish or allocate police officers at checkstops. This is the responsibility of the highly qualified and hard-working chiefs of police as well as the commissioner of the RCMP in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, we're not a third-world country. We don't tell the police chiefs what to do. The wording of this question implies that we tell law enforcement when to conduct checkstops, how many they can execute, and how many officers are involved. Again, the policing in this province is fully and completely independent of any political interference from anybody in this Chamber.

We do allocate sheriffs to provide a support function to the police at checkstops. This would include the laying of provincial charges, providing mobile breath testing, traffic control, or towing vehicles.

Mr. Speaker, I know this member didn't support our particular crackdown on drunk driving a number of years ago. This government takes drinking and driving very seriously, and to support our provincial strategy to reduce impaired driving, we've provided additional funds through the enhanced Alberta checkstop program, that has funded approximately 2,500 additional law enforcement hours between April 23, 2012, and November 28, 2012.

I would also be remiss if I did not point out, Mr. Speaker, that there are many ways other than checkpoints, however useful that they are, for police and peace officers to detect and pull over drunk drivers. There is the 911 call, that we encourage people to make if they actually see a drunk driver. Of course, we don't live in a police state. We don't want to live in a police state, where you have a cop around every corner. We expect people to obey the law. We also expect law-abiding citizens to call and report a drunk driver so that the police can act accordingly. On top of that, there are police that are periodically on patrol here in Edmonton, in Calgary as well as in rural Alberta. These are all ways that the police do enforce drunk-driving laws.

Mr. Speaker, while I'm rejecting this member's question for the reasons outlined, I ask him to help us in supporting our continued efforts to crack down on impaired driving and save Albertans' lives. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in support of this question: how many officers were added to operate checkpoints in Alberta since April 23, 2012? As the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat indicated, our party had supported more front-line enforcement, boots on the ground, to actually find drunk drivers. In addition to that, we had put forward a proposal for five dedicated provincial checkpoint teams. This is because we often see that, you know, in rural Alberta sometimes there's enforcement during certain time periods, but then there's not enforcement in other time periods and in particular locations. In particular, we see this in rural Alberta. We felt that having five dedicated provincial checkpoint teams would show a real force and momentum to actually get drunk drivers off the road.

Now, the hon. Justice minister mentioned this .05 legislation as cracking down on impaired driving, I think he mentioned. We saw earlier today where there are clogs in our judicial system. There was a report, actually, that was filed on Friday, that indicated that because of a whole bunch of traffic ticket cases serious sexual assault cases were actually being dropped. This minister is promoting, advocating more of these types of administrative penalties in our judicial system. It just seems completely counterintuitive. We should be going after serious offenders and making sure that those people are brought to justice. Part of that is actually finding these serious offenders, finding those people who are driving over the legal limit, and making sure that once those individuals are found, we put them through the judicial system and that there are serious, swift, and certain consequences for their actions.

Part of that is actually increasing boots on the ground. There are various instances where, of course, people are out there driving impaired, over the legal limit, but they are just not found because of the lack of resources in terms of front-line officers. In our case we're suggesting five provincial checkpoint teams.

The question, in particular, here is simply asking for a statistic. "How many peace officers have been added to operate checkpoints in Alberta since April 23, 2012," since the election? I don't think this should be a very complicated answer for the Justice minister to provide. His refusal to provide what I would suggest is a very vital statistic I think demonstrates his lack of control over his portfolio.

This information should be very readily available. If he's actually taking drunk driving seriously, if he was actually serious about cracking down on crime, serious crime, he should actually know how many officers have been added to checkpoints in Alberta. Instead, what we see is a continuation with this Justice minister where he scraps electronic monitoring for individuals who've committed very serious offences, where he eliminates funding for safer communities, where individuals who are very vulnerable had safe havens to get out of particular lifestyles. We see that this minister is promoting offenders getting two free passes when it's dealing with vandalism or with petty crimes. This is a continuation of a soft-on-crime agenda that's been put forward by this government.

I know the hon. minister must be jumping for joy with Justin Trudeau being elected as the federal Liberal leader and maybe hoping that he would take after his father in terms of these types of progressive justice policies, but I have to say, Mr. Speaker, that our party does not support that type of soft-on-crime attitude. We know that when we're going after drunk drivers, we need to ensure that the resources – the boots on the ground, the front-line officers – are available. For this minister to not be able to answer a very simple question – how many more officers have been added to checkpoints? – it's just, quite frankly, shocking that this information is not readily available at his fingertips.

We see, Mr. Speaker, some type of a progression that I think hasn't been seen in Alberta politics for some time. When there are very serious questions being asked – you know, we saw with the McConnell case that what the minister actually did was bring out his ADM to answer questions to the media. The ADM is supposed to be, of course, truly nonpartisan. He actually brought that individual out to speak to the media, which I think is unprecedented. I think it demonstrates a lack of, again, control over his portfolio. If he can't actually answer questions in front of the media and has to bring out his bureaucrat to answer for him, I think that demonstrates that he doesn't have control over his portfolio.

The rejection of this question furthers that argument. The fact that he cannot answer how many officers have been added to operate checkpoints in Alberta since the election, a very simple number, whether it's part-time or full-time, the fact that he can't even answer that, that it's not readily available at his fingertips, to me speaks to the fact that instead of actually being tough on crime, instead of actually being hard on drunk drivers, instead of actually putting in the front-line resources to find drunk drivers, to ensure that prosecutions occur, and that there are swift, certain, and severe consequences for those people who break the law, this minister has no grasp on his portfolio and doesn't even know how many officers have been added to checkpoints in Alberta since the last election. To me, Mr. Speaker, that is completely confusing.

Of course, our party has put forward many tough-on-crime policies, but we also backed it up in our alternative balanced budget, back in 2012, with resources to those front-line officers who could actually find those people that are driving over the criminal limit and ensure that they get off the road and that we prosecute them to the fullest extent of the law and that there are consequences for it. The fact that this Justice minister can't answer this question, again, is just shocking. It seems to be a very simple statistic that should be readily available within his department.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise as well to support the original question, which is, "As of November 28, 2012, how many peace officers have been added to operate checkpoints in Alberta since April 23, 2012?" It would seem pretty easy for the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General to actually provide this information. Yes, it does include many layers of officers who provide this service, but if this minister is truly dedicated to ensuring that drunk drivers are off the road and with creating safer roads for all Albertans, then it would seem he would actually want to come out and gloat about exactly how many officers are providing this much-needed service.

As my colleague the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills has said, the Wildrose has always supported additional workforce to ensure that drunk drivers are not on the road. To actually suggest otherwise and to actually suggest that just because we may not agree on everything, just because we might be on the opposite sides of certain funding models and certain policies, we are in favour of having drunk drivers on the road and that we would be in favour of endangering Albertans and killing Albertans at risk of drunk drivers is actually truly offensive not only to me and my colleagues who stand here but is truly offensive to all Albertans.

I think every single Albertan out there assumes and wants to believe that every single person in this Legislature wants the safety of their roads to be a primary concern. To insinuate that any single one of us in this House wants everyday Albertans to be killed on Alberta roads by drunk drivers is absolutely offensive.

To go on even further, to decide to not provide this information based solely on a technicality and to use it as sort of a scapegoat way to not come forward with exactly what the plan is by this provincial government is really irresponsible. Actually, it goes even further. One has to question first of all his dedication to ensuring that drunk drivers are off the road, but even further to that is his competence. The reality of it is that we've seen time and time again that during the election they promise one thing, and then they do another right after the election. We saw it with the .05 administrative penalties. We saw them come forward and promote .05, which in reality can have the effect of forcing everyday Albertans to plead guilty because the ramifications to their personal life, to their job can cause them to lose their job without even ever having the benefit of going before a court.

[Mrs. Leskiw in the chair]

As one example of this, my husband works for a company that has a zero-tolerance policy. He does not drink ever when he's out on a workday, but a .05 policy could force him to plead guilty in the event that he was ever stopped and possibly faced this procedure. It clearly has come forward. We know that lawyers are challenging this law right now. Really, this is an administrative penalty, and it's a dollar grab. It really is a way of trying to get money away from Albertans and put it into their pockets without actually having the benefit of the courts and without actually letting the person appeal to the court and plead not guilty. It assumes on the side of the road that they're guilty of something that is an administrative penalty. We've seen the government take it this far. There's no reason to have the government not gloat about how many officers they have providing this service.

The other part of it is that if you go to the Alberta Transportation website, it states, "The highest number of casualty collisions involving alcohol occur from May to October." It goes on to state that "most casualty collisions involving alcohol occur on the weekends" and that "the most likely time for these collisions is between 11 p.m. and 3 a.m." It also goes on to state that "drinking and driving collisions are often associated with long weekends."

It would seem to me that in the budget that the Department of Justice puts forward, they would know how many officers they need to allocate at any given time and what the funding model is for checkpoints to ensure that Alberta's roads are safe from drinking and driving. They already know what the stats are. Alberta Transportation has done it. Alberta Health Services did a policy paper in 2005 that talked about the need to increase the patrols for drinking and driving. Clearly, this government continues to state that this is a number one priority but really can't come to the table with any numbers at all. That seems a little odd.

It also goes on to state on the Alberta Transportation website under Suspensions and Convictions that "over the last five years . . . administrative suspensions for drinking and driving have been initiated." They received 42,762 immediate 24-hour suspensions, 6,123 Alberta zero alcohol tolerance suspensions, and 34,852 administrative licence suspensions. They also had 41,466 convictions. Clearly, they must know what the dollars allocated are as to how many officers are currently being dedicated to getting drunk drivers off the road and what they plan to put forward because they promised Albertans that this is a priority for this government. If they know that, it would seem very clear that they could come to the House and provide all that information to Albertans.

It would also seem that under the guise of accountability and transparency they would also want to make sure that Albertans truly understand what these costs are, what the impacts are that drinking and driving is having on Albertans.

I would also go even further to say that there's an Edmonton Journal article from January of 2013 that talks about:

Alberta's rate of impaired driving rose slightly faster than the national average to 450 incidents per 100,000 population. Only Saskatchewan and Prince Edward Island were higher.

Of those charged across the country, 84 per cent were found guilty. Alberta shared the distinction of having the lowest conviction rate in the country with Ontario, at 81 per cent.

. . . Alberta's assistant deputy minister of criminal justice . . . said the lower rate is a reflection of the fact the province has a large number of defence lawyers who specialize in impaired driving cases and lots of well-heeled accused who can afford to hire their services.

It seems disturbing that the Minister of Justice is clearly wanting to blame everyone else for his inaction on drunk driving. If he wants to actually do the right thing, he can make it very clear and provide Albertans with all of the activities that he's doing.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Journal article goes on even further to say, "Only 6.6 per cent of drivers in Alberta who were convicted were sent to jail." Now, this is the assistant deputy minister of criminal justice. I'm not making this up. These are his words. "Only 6.6 per cent of drivers in Alberta who were convicted were sent to jail. The median sentence in the province of 30 days was also slightly less than the national average."

He goes on to say, "First-time offenders rarely get jail time in Alberta unless they have caused injury or death." He said that the prosecutors in this province seek the same mandatory sentence of 14 days as their counterparts elsewhere in Canada in cases where there's a second conviction in five years. So this soft-on-crime policy that clearly this minister has shows that even he is not assisting to increase the sentencing. Fourteen days for your second drunk-driving conviction, but we're making drunk driving a priority in this province.

He also goes on to say, "They'll spare no expense to try to hire some lawyer to take advantage of the fact that it's a technical and difficult area of the law and try and get off." Here the associate deputy minister is saying – and he's criticizing – that those who are facing drunk-driving convictions will "spare no expense to try to hire some lawyer to take advantage of the fact that it's a technical and difficult area." I believe the Minister of Justice just used those same words in the House. He said that it was difficult or impossible to get those numbers – so is it difficult, or is it impossible? – yet his own associate minister is criticizing lawyers for using that it's difficult or of getting out of having to do what's right based on a technicality.

Yet this minister is using that exact same argument in this House today. He's saying to the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat: "Sorry. I'd like to answer it, but because of a technicality of just calling it peace officers, there might be too many people in there. It's a little difficult, and you might be asking me too many questions at once, and I might have to deal with the RCMP, peace officers, police officers— I'm not really sure – so based on that technicality, I'm just going to choose not to answer your question." Yet his ministry has no problem branding those who are before the courts, saying that they're sparing no expense to get off on a technicality.

It seems a bit of hypocrisy for this minister to on one hand tout the greatness of how his provincial government is protecting Albertans and putting all these initiatives forward for drunk driving when clearly he can't even say how many resources are being allocated to this initiative, and we're failing even with those that we do convict. We can't even get them to spend any serious time so that there's actually a repercussion to an action that they're performing.

Clearly, everyone is against drunk driving. We're against drunk driving. They're against drunk driving. I have no doubt about that. I think most Albertans are against drunk driving.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak in regard to . . . [interjection]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, you have the floor. Please proceed.

Mrs. Forsyth: You know, it's always a pleasure to rise and speak on a written question when you have the Justice minister yelling across the floor at you. It always makes me wonder why.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to speak as a former Solicitor General of this province. I was listening very intently, and quite frankly I wasn't going to speak to this particular question, but it bothered me when the Justice minister spoke about the question and the intent of the question and how he said: we can't answer. He talked about what we have, whether we have peace officers or whether they're police officers, and then he had to throw in the provincial police force. I find it quite fascinating. Fascinating isn't even the word, possibly appalling. He was reading from a piece of paper, so he obviously got that little briefing note from someone within his department. It shows to me the relationship that this minister has with the fine men and women that do the job in this province on behalf of us.

I can tell you that it doesn't interfere in any way for him to pick up the phone and call the chief of police in Calgary or to pick up the phone and call the chief of police in Medicine Hat or, for that matter, to pick up the phone and call the chief of police in Edmonton and say: "Chief Hanson, how are you doing? Just wanted to check. You know we're serious about what's happening in this province in regard to drunk driving. I wanted to know how you're doing on the checkpoints." No one is suggesting that this minister is telling Chief Hanson what to do, nor would anyone on this side of the House even think about telling a chief of police how to tell their men and women in this province how they operate.

I know that when I had the opportunity of working with a former Minister of Justice, the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, the relationship that we had with the policemen and -women that serve this fine province was open and accountable. We would sit down and talk about some of our initiatives. I go back to the time when the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud was the Minister of Justice and was adamant, at every FPT that we appeared at, about talking about moving the age of consent up. He talked, when we went to the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police, about what, you know, his priorities were.

You know, for me it is perplexing that this minister can't pick up the phone and ask:

As of November 28, 2012, how many peace officers . . .

Now, he's using the word "peace officers" in the way he wants. "Well, is it federal, or is it provincial, or is it sheriffs?" It's astounding.

. . . have been added to operate checkpoints in Alberta since

April 23, 2012?

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I had the privilege when I was the Solicitor General of being on many checkpoints – and they were interesting, to say the least – spending hours at a checkpoint and watching the officers do what they had to do to keep drunk drivers off the road. For me and for a government that touts that they're adamant about stopping drinking and driving, you would think that the Justice minister would want to know how many checkpoints are operating in this province and what they're doing, not only how many but where they are, to make sure that they're, you know, getting at where checkpoints should be.

I mean, I can tell you as the former minister that the police officers that I was working with at the time knew exactly the areas in this province where people tended to drive. We all know that if you're on the Deerfoot, that's not such a good way to be driving home because possibly – possibly – there might be a checkpoint when you're coming off Heritage Drive or maybe off Glenmore. Those are some of the areas that are central to where some of the locations are downtown.

It bothers me that this minister cannot pick up the phone and find out exactly how many charges were laid or how many checkpoints there are out there at any given time. Has it increased? Has it decreased? Is it working? Is it not working? The minister was all over the map on this particular question. I guess that, to me, if he doesn't like the question, why doesn't he propose an amendment so that the question can be answered?

Quite frankly, I think Albertans deserve to know if what is happening in this province is really tackling the issue of drinking and driving. We've seen the .05 legislation, that we debated for long hours at night, and I had asked continuously the then Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul to provide us some numbers on how many times there have been stops, how many times people have been pulled over, how many suspensions there are. Well, lo and behold, it's April 15, 2013, and we're still waiting for those numbers. No one in this province knows whether that's working or whether it's not working.

If we are serious in this province, if this government is serious about the issue of drinking and driving, as they say they are, and they're serious about dealing with the issue of getting the drunks off the road, then the minister, you would think, would be able to stand up and be able to say how many checkpoints have been operated, how many people have been stopped. He doesn't have to give away the idea of where the checkpoints are, but it's important information. If he wants to eliminate the Official Opposition on that information, that's okay, but for his own information and his own self-satisfaction and for his own caucus colleagues he could provide that information to them and say: "You know what? We need to talk" – not dictate but talk – "to the police about whether we have enough police officers on the ground. Do we have enough police officers dealing with checkpoints?" My colleague from Lac La Biche talked about the fact that, you know, we talked about increasing the number of officers that are doing checkpoints.

It's a simple question. The problem is that he's complicated the answer by throwing in his lawyer terms of peace officers. Quite frankly, it's an embarrassment to the minister, and it's sad that he doesn't want to give Albertans the opportunity to know the answers.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others?

Seeing none, we'll call the question on the question as proposed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

[The voice vote indicated that Written Question 32 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:42 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

[Written Question 32 lost]

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, in light of the hour and the fact that the mover would not have time to properly introduce his bill, I would move that the clock be called 5 o'clock and that we move to motions.

[Motion carried]

Motions Other than Government Motions

Hospital Emergency Department Data Reporting

508. Mrs. Forsyth moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to mandate that Alberta Health Services report length-of-stay data for all emergency departments across the province on a weekly basis.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise and speak to my Motion 508. As it stands, two performance results are recorded with respect to length-of-stay data on a week-by-week basis, the percentage of patients discharged from the emergency room within four hours and the percentage of patients admitted to the hospital from the emergency room within eight hours. Only those results from Edmonton and Calgary hospitals are published, however, on a week-by-week basis.

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

An AHS online release titled Action on Emergency Department Lengths of Stay reads:

Updated length-of-stay statistics from Edmonton and Calgary emergency departments will be posted here every Monday, reflecting the previous week's data. We're working on getting accurate wait time information from elsewhere in the province, which will be posted here as soon as it's available.

Well, they already have the data. They release wait time information in the ERs of all hospitals on a quarterly basis. Still the weekly wait time data for Edmonton and Calgary is easily accessible online, but the exact same information for all other Alberta hospital stays is buried in the AHS quarterly reports.

This data can be acquired on a monthly basis through the freedom of information process, but as we all know, that takes time, and it takes money. I think all members would agree that whether a citizen or an MLA, for that matter, is living in Edmonton or Calgary, Red Deer, Okotoks, High Level, Fort Macleod, Crownsnest, or anywhere else in this wonderful province, they deserve to know how the health care system they rely on and pay for is operating locally. Unfortunately, this is sadly just another example of how AHS continues to ignore the needs and concerns of our communities across this province.

Now, what Motion 508 calls for isn't changing the wheel. It is a simple, modest step, making sure that Albertans across this province feel like their health system responds to their needs. It means that we can slowly take steps so we can change the reputation of our health system from being managed by executives who are plagued with scandal and mismanagement to one that Albertans can slowly once again put their trust in. The fact is that across Alberta the wait time average for Albertans to be admitted within eight hours is a paltry 45 per cent. Madam Speaker, I have one of those FOIP documents that I referred to earlier. For the Red Deer regional hospital, which you will know: 43 per cent. That's not good for your hospital.

It's important that we look at this as an issue of quality care. AHS continues to spend more money on administration – I think the last time I checked, we had 81 vice-presidents – and fails to improve many, many wait time outcomes, which was clearly put out on the last quarterly report, which is actually quite dismal. This kind of data that we're asking for in this motion provides citizens with the kind of insight into their health care system that will put us in the right direction to finally improve government transparency and public trust.

Let's remember that Motion 508 simply mandates AHS to meet the guidelines it already has in place and to improve transparency.

The same release that I mentioned earlier says, "Transparency is important." I wholly believe that transparency of performance will lead to accountability and in the future ultimately an improved health care system. I think it's important that we start to examine the information surrounding our health care system.

From the reports that I've seen on successes, we can see how Big Country, Cardston, Fort Macleod, Pincher Creek, Medicine Hat, and many of these other small to mid-sized practices are in fact operating exceedingly well compared to many other hospitals in our system, and we need to congratulate them on their work.

For Albertans not to have access to this information is, quite frankly, illogical and completely unreasonable. For Albertans who pay so much into the health care system – in fact we've heard over and over again in this House that we spend more per capita than any other province in Canada. For them not to be able to get this information simply isn't right. The fact is and the fact remains that there is no good reason why this information isn't available to all Albertans. Albertans are entitled to the same information about their hospital that is provided to people living in Edmonton and where I live, in Calgary.

Whether it's queue-jumping, executive bonuses, or lavish expense claims, AHS and this government have earned a terrible reputation when it comes to accountability and transparency. This motion would be a step on the road towards a more efficient, effective, and accountable health care system in Alberta. This is Albertans' health care system, and we need to remember that. After all, we shouldn't lose sight of whose health care system it is.

I think that Alberta Health Services could easily cast their net a little wider, and they can increase their reporting. AHS already has the data. They release wait times in the ERs of all hospitals on a quarterly basis. They are already collecting the data. They are already publishing it.

I'm urging all members of this Assembly to support this motion so we can begin to make these small steps towards accountability and transparency a reality.

The Acting Speaker: The Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation.

Mr. Scott: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to rise today to speak to Motion 508, brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. As we all know, our health care system is foundational to healthy families and communities throughout Alberta. It is essential to ensuring a high quality of life filled with longevity and prosperity. As Alberta's population continues to grow, demands on health care service providers, infrastructure, and front-line workers will continue to rise. It is essential that we continue to invest in our communities and health care system, and our government is doing just that with a commitment to build Alberta and care for our most vulnerable.

The objective of Motion 508 is to make sure that data regarding the length of stay in emergency wards is reported and made publicly available on a weekly basis. Now, it is no secret that the efficiency of our emergency departments is paramount to providing the urgent care that Albertans need and deserve. Make no mistake, Madam Speaker, I am all for improving efficiency, but on the surface I have to question the necessity of this motion. I think it fails to propose a real solution to this issue.

In fact, I would go so far as to suggest that this motion to an extent duplicates a service that's already provided by Alberta Health Services, and that was acknowledged by the person proposing the motion. Currently AHS publishes weekly length-of-stay statistics for admitted and discharged patients at the nine busiest emergency departments in Edmonton and Calgary, and as the proposer of the motion has acknowledged, there is quarterly reporting as well. Madam Speaker, these reports are completely transparent and available for all Albertans to see online. Given that such reporting is already provided, why must it be duplicated in any form, as suggested by the hon. member's motion?

Collectively AHS is taking action to provide more timely access for patients. A target has been set so that 90 per cent of patients needing emergency care are assessed, treated, and discharged within four hours by 2015. Such action demonstrates that this issue has been identified and what steps are being taken to address it. This is being achieved in part by optimizing the scope of practice of key health professionals so they can make full use of their education and skills and also by redesigning protocols for care and treatment, known as clinical pathways.

Early indicators suggest that these province-wide overcapacity protocols aimed at reducing peak pressures in emergency departments are having the desired impact of reducing lengths of stay. Madam Speaker, this is certainly an encouraging sign and important for the overall quality of health care in our province. Again, while I understand the underlying premise of the hon. member's proposal, I need to ask why we should be spending the extra resources in this way. Taxpayer dollars could be better spent elsewhere delivering health services.

When you look at emergency room lengths of stay, I think that it's important that you understand the demographic of citizens who are receiving care. Many but not all are seniors. For these patients their needs are such that sometimes they cannot be adequately cared for in an independent home setting and require an alternate care option. This being the case, we may be better served allocating resources to services like home care or perhaps assisted living and long-term care facilities instead of an expansion of IT capacities in smaller hospitals. Essentially, Madam Speaker, it comes down to an opportunity cost.

All things considered, however, I certainly understand the importance of reducing emergency department lengths of stay for the sake of improving efficiency. This government clearly recognizes the importance of this as well as continuing to invest in health and social services, culminating in stronger, more vibrant communities for all Albertans. By making the right investments, I am hopeful that Albertans will be healthier, hence reducing the strain on emergency department services across the province.

I would like to thank the hon. member for proposing this motion today, but as it stands, I will not be supporting it.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to support Motion 508, which reads: "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to mandate that Alberta Health Services report length-of-stay data for all emergency departments across the province on a weekly basis." As the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek clearly and understandably talks about, there are currently only two wait times that are tracked, the percentage of patients that are discharged from ER within four hours and the percentage of patients that are admitted to hospital within eight hours. Right now the only ones that are clearly disclosed weekly are the Calgary and Edmonton locations.

While that seems fine on the surface of it, the reality of what that means is that everyday Albertans from all over Alberta are not able to see what the wait times are in their local areas and make decisions that affect the crucial health care that they may or may not need. Albertans in all areas of this province have a right and an expectation that they should get to know what the wait times are at their local hospital. They may choose to go to a different care facility or a different hospital to provide care or they may choose to wait. They may choose to go to a walk-in clinic. They may go to an urgent care facility rather than going to that facility. But if they never know, then they become involved in the situation of not knowing exactly what the wait times are.

What we've also seen – and let's take a look at some of those numbers in a moment here – is that Alberta Health Services' budget continues to be out of control. We've seen Alberta Health Services ask for over $480 million this year to cover administrative costs. One has to wonder, when they're already gathering the data to prepare it quarterly, that it's a very simple task with very little work to be done to provide it weekly. The hospitals already provide this information. It's just that Alberta Health Services can't get their act together and provide it to Albertans in a timely manner.

Alberta Health Services has the data, but they bury it in a link on the quarterly report. Ask the average Albertan to go in and take a look at that quarterly report and try and find the wait times for their local hospital. It's very difficult to find. We know, unfortunately – I apologize, Madam Speaker – that with the Red Deer hospital the Wildrose had to FOIP that information. It wasn't even included in the link, minister of accountability and transparency. We actually had to FOIP that.

We had to literally spend money and wait months to find out what the actual wait times are for Red Deer. Red Deer right now is only meeting those really important targets that Alberta Health Services has set out 43 per cent of the time. Is the minister honestly suggesting that Albertans in Red Deer and surrounding areas don't have the right to know what the efficiencies are at their hospital so that they may choose to go to a surrounding hospital or go get their health care somewhere else? I find that incredibly shocking.

Let's take a look at the data for Calgary for emergency department lengths of stay. For Alberta Children's hospital from March 24 to March 30, so one week, they were only able to meet the target 82 per cent of the time. Actually, that's pretty good. It's pretty close to the target, and I actually honour that they're working really hard. Let's look at the Foothills medical centre. They were only able to meet the target 51 per cent of the time. The Peter Lougheed Centre was only able to meet the target of discharged patients 60 per cent of the time, and Rockyview general 63 per cent of the time. The people in that area know exactly what their hospitals are doing and exactly what's going on at their hospital.

Let's go over to Calgary admitted hospitals, March 24 through March 30. That means patients that are admitted to the hospital within eight hours. That means you are sitting in the emergency department – this is not from the time you arrive. This is actually from the time your triage determines that you need to be admitted. Please understand that you could sit in the hospital for many, many, many more hours either in an ambulance or wherever while you're waiting to be seen. So within eight hours – oh; too bad – the Alberta Children's hospital was only able to meet the 90 per cent target 53 per cent of the time; Foothills medical centre, same thing, 53 per cent of the time; Peter Lougheed Centre, sadly, 31 per cent of the time they were able to meet that target; and Rockyview general hospital, 35 per cent of the time. Yet Alberta Health Services executives were given bonuses for meeting their targets on a pro-rated basis, and that truly is disgusting.

Let's go even further. That was just Calgary. Let's go on and take a look at Edmonton patients who were able to be discharged from emergency within four hours. Let's take a look at how many times they were able to meet the targets: the Grey Nuns, 67 per cent of the time; Misericordia, only 59 per cent of the time; the Royal Alex hospital was only able to meet the target of being discharged from ER within four hours 38 per cent of the time; the Stollery, still trying to achieve a very good rate, 86 per cent of the time; but the University of Alberta could only meet that target 43 per cent of the time. That clearly identifies that discharging patients from ER within four hours is a huge challenge for Alberta Health Services and goes on to identify – this is just one week – that, clearly, Alberta Health Services is not putting the resources where they need to go.

Let's take a look at admitted patients for Edmonton, the number of patients that are admitted to hospital within eight hours. Once again, they could sit in the admitting room or in an ambulance bay for a long, long time. The Grey Nuns was only able to achieve the target of admitting into the hospital within eight hours – that means your loved one was identified and needs to go into hospital – 28 per cent of the time; Misericordia, 35 per cent; Royal Alex, 47 per cent; Stollery, 66 per cent; and U of A, 47 per cent.

Can the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation honestly stand here and suggest, by not identifying these rates for all of the other hospitals, that this shouldn't be a priority for Alberta Health Services if not for all Albertans, which should be our first priority? Clearly, it identifies that Alberta Health Services is failing to meet their own targets of 90 per cent, and clearly it identifies that Alberta Health Services continues to give themselves bonuses for not meeting targets. This is their own data.

Let's go on even further. Let's just take a look even further. Why wouldn't the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation not want to give credit where credit is due? Why would the associate minister actually want to be so deceptive as to not acknowledge what facilities are doing it right? Let's take a look at what facilities are actually meeting these targets: Bassano health centre, 92 per cent; Big Country hospital, 94 per cent; Bow Island health centre, 98 per cent; Brooks health centre, 93 per cent; Cardston, 92 per cent; Chinook regional hospital, 78 per cent.

The Coaldale health centre, Crowsnest Pass, Fort Macleod, Medicine Hat, Milk River, Pincher Creek, Raymond health centre, Taber health are all above 95 per cent of meeting the targets. Why would the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation not want to acknowledge that some of our facilities are actually doing it right. You know what the beauty of it is, Madam Speaker? The Piyami community health centre met its targets 100 per cent of the time. Should that not be acknowledged by the transparency minister?

Let's go on to talk about which facilities are getting it right. Admitting from emergency departments within eight hours: Bassano, 92 per cent; Big Country hospital, 69 per cent; Bow Island, Brooks, Taber are all achieving past 90 per cent. The rest of them – Raymond, Pincher Creek, Medicine Hat, Crowsnest Pass, Chinook regional, Cardston, and Brooks – are all achieving between 60 and 80 per cent of their target times.

If this minister is truly dedicated to accountability and transparency, he needs to understand that Albertans need to know that there are facilities across this province who've got it right, are getting it right, and they should start to be the model for other facilities who can't raise the bar and get to the 90 per cent discharge rates that this government keeps touting. That's a fact. Unfortunately, what this says very clearly is that Alberta Health Services is not able to identify the challenges within their own bureaucracy. That's what it says clearly.

The minister talked about how he would not support this motion because it didn't offer a solution. Is the minister of accountability and transparency honestly suggesting that the only time transparency is relevant or the only time that transparency should happen from this government is when it's convenient for them and when the Wildrose has to come up with a solution for this government to get it right? Is that honestly what he's saying? Or should he actually take his ministry and show initiative and actually tell Albertans exactly why transparency is so important.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake for making this motion totally irrelevant by telling us that all of the hospitals that don't now need to report are so good.

It's an honour for me to rise today to speak to Motion 508, the goal of which we can assume is to improve the quality of patient care by enhancing accountability and transparency. I have to say that the goal is perhaps good, and the goal is one that this government shares with the member opposite. Length-of-stay data is an important indicator that can help pinpoint a variety of ailments in the health care system such as a lack of long-term health care beds or inadequate staffing in emergency departments. Monitoring and reporting are important components to improvement. As the old adage suggests, you can't improve what you don't measure. Because of this, length-of-stay times are in fact being measured.

Alberta is one of the many Canadian provinces that submits statistics on lengths of stay in emergency departments to a program called the national ambulatory care reporting system operated by the Canadian Institute for Health Information. Unfortunately, there is a delay from when data is reported to when data is made publicly available, Madam Speaker. This is not an issue of having something to hide at all. This is about having adequate resources to commit to timely publication. There is a cost to resources.

That being said, Alberta Health Services is committed to publishing weekly updates of length-of-stay statistics for the nine busiest emergency departments in Edmonton and Calgary. The data is posted for the prior week and includes trends for the past two years. This is feasible because the larger emergency departments already have appropriate information technology systems in place to do it. Alberta Health Services is also considering expanding weekly reporting of length-of-stay data to include five regional hospitals as follows: Grande Prairie, Fort McMurray, Red Deer, Lethbridge, and Medicine Hat. This expansion would now address the 14 busiest emergency departments in Alberta. Apparently, all the other ones are doing just fine.

However, this would still exclude the Sturgeon community hospital and the Northeast community health centre, which are included in the high-volume hospital statistics in the AHS quarterly reports. That's because the proper information technology, which would cost more money, something being asked for by individuals over on the other side again – Madam Speaker, it's an ask day, apparently – is not in place.

It becomes a question of: what is the most effective use of taxpayers' dollars? Would the member opposite like another RN in a rural hospital or another IT person in AHS? As Ralph Klein would say: let's hunt where the ducks are. More so, AHS has been directed to decrease its administrative expenditures by 10 per cent over the next three years, something that I think would be supported by the other side. So who exactly is going to do this work? Any decision whether to expand weekly reporting of ED length-of-stay data to include regional and rural hospitals will need to be considered against competing budgets and human resource demands. Once again it becomes a question of: where will we get the most bang for the taxpayers' buck? Because, Madam Speaker, nothing is free unless, perhaps, you're on the other side.

I want the member opposite to seriously consider whether she thinks it's the best use of resources in this tough fiscal climate, especially when previous analysis of emergency department data indicates that long wait times and lengths of stay are not significant problems in rural and suburban hospitals, as we were just told. Rather, long wait times and lengths of stay are concentrated in Edmonton and Calgary hospitals and to a lesser extent in the regional hospitals of Grande Prairie, Fort McMurray, Red Deer, Lethbridge, and Medicine Hat, as mentioned, which will be reporting. As such, we're already providing consistent weekly reports on the requested data where the problem is concentrated in Edmonton's and Calgary's nine busiest hospitals.

I'm curious as to why the member opposite believes that expanding this reporting capacity to every emergency department across the province is a prudent use of resources. If the purpose of this motion is to ultimately improve patient care, I urge the member opposite to reconsider whether this is the best way that she can think of to improve patient care. I don't think it is. Although I do support the goal, I don't support this way of achieving the goal.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my honour to rise and speak in favour of Motion 508, the motion that was put forward by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. I speak in favour of this motion for several reasons. First and foremost, we're talking about ensuring that all Albertans are treated fairly and that they have access to information that not just residents of Edmonton and Calgary have access to.

I find it quite interesting that the previous speaker, a member from the other side, talks about having to choose between accountability and programming whereas I think all the opposition would agree that in order to evaluate our programs, we need to be accountable. We need to have targets, we need to see them, they need to be available to the public, and then the public can evaluate to a better extent how well something is working or not working.

It's my belief that all Albertans, whether they live in rural Alberta or in other urban centres other than Edmonton and Calgary, deserve to know the length-of-stay data for the emergency departments. I think it's not fair to Albertans, to about 49 per cent of Albertans in this province, in fact, to get B-level information while almost half of Albertans are given information on a weekly basis.

I think, first and foremost, this motion speaks to ensuring that Albertans, that opposition can keep this government accountable and to showing Albertans how well our system is performing or to show if it is underperforming. I think the fact that this information is not readily available makes it very difficult, again, to have a proper assessment. I think as well that it's not good enough for the government to say: well, this is available; a citizen can FOIP the information. Well, accessing information is a very timely process. It does cost money. Many Albertans do not have the expertise to navigate through that process.

What the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek is calling for is ensuring that this information is accessible and that the government is being transparent. Again, I don't know how many times in under a year I have stood up and called out this government for providing lip service to the words "accountability" and "transparency," yet when it comes time for action, they seem to fail miserably. Here is an example of where the government can very easily do what's right. Let's get this reporting available to all Albertans in a timely fashion and do the right thing.

The other point that I just want to address is the fact that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar tried to make an issue as far as: well, if we do this and we bring this through, it's going to cost a lot of money, and then we won't be able to have as many front-line workers available. I'd like to remind the hon. member that, as it stands, billions of dollars go to corporate welfare to some of the largest corporations in the province that do not need those dollars. As well, as has been pointed out numerous times in this House, there are high-level executives in AHS who are receiving an exorbitant amount of money, not to mention huge expense accounts, privileges which the average Albertan does not have.

So it's a matter of priorities and where the government is choosing to spend their dollars. I think it's quite important and any business would argue that you need to have targets, you need to be accountable, you need to have measures in order to evaluate if you're meeting those targets. This motion is calling for that.

Again, I'm speaking strongly in favour of this in order to ensure there is a level playing field for all Albertans regardless of where they live. So I will urge members on the other side of the House to support this motion.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-South East, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

To the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek: we missed you a few days last week. I noticed that you were absent in the House. [interjections] Oh, sorry. Pardon me. But our thoughts are with you. It's always a pleasure to hear your advocacy for health care, and that was the point I was trying to make.

Madam Speaker, you know, I've got quite a bit of experience with hospital wait times, unfortunately, all too much, I regret to say. Let me tell you that I think sometimes we're glossing over the complexity of the issues that we're facing in this province and some of the things that are actually already in place.

While we've heard that Calgary and Edmonton do indeed post their wait times and put them on a website and try to give people accurate information about the patients coming in – and, certainly, patients going out would be part of that – the one thing to remember, I guess, is that when we're thinking about hospitals and emergency rooms throughout the entire province, we can never control who actually walks in through the front door. As people come in through the front door, their issues are sometimes serious and sometimes not very serious at all. Part of that message in health care and Alberta Health Services is informing patients to make sure that they're making the best decisions on their health care.

I think we've seen from this government, whether it's publishing wait times on emergency access to encourage people to use their family clinic or primary care networks or, certainly, the new development around family care networks in this province to, again, ease those wait times – as a government I think we're well aware of these issues, and each one of those initiatives has an impact on the overall wait time.

The one thing that we'd also recognize is that in the rural emergency departments how we would gauge that wait time would be significantly different than how we would gauge it, certainly, in the cities. I know that one of the things mentioned by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake was the 31 percentile at the Peter Lougheed Centre. Now, I certainly did a lot of my career there in the Peter Lougheed Centre, and if you're gauging it on a percentage of how they meet their wait times, being a kid from northeast Calgary and living there, I can tell you that it's a very diverse area with a lot of new Canadians, so the challenge sometimes, particularly around wait times, is being able to communicate with the patient about what the real issues are.

That leads us back again to the overall idea of patient outcomes. It's one thing to move patients in and move them out right away to try to meet a wait time – and I think that is part of the danger when we start making the terminology mandatory. Again, when we think about those rural hospitals that might have a different socioeconomic demographic, they also don't have the capacity in terms of the specialty needs that some of these larger hospitals in the cities would have; i.e., Edmonton and Calgary.

As we look at that, I mean, there are some things in place, and one of them is referral, access, advice, placement, information, and destination, which we use on the ambulance to make sure that we're actually taking patients to where there is an open bed, and that is in a real-time atmosphere. We get it right over the computer-aided dispatch in the ambulance to make sure. Sometimes that changes on the fly. Again, that's another initiative that would impact overall wait times in terms of people coming in and out.

The other part of that is our aging population. I can tell you a story, Madam Speaker, about a time when I went to a home and had to deal with a patient who was about 95 years old. Her kids were somewhere in the range of 60 to 65, and her son-in-law was closer to 70. Well, the challenge there was that all three of them needed placement all at once. That's what we're facing in this province, that transition, and those people, maybe not necessarily needing an emergency room, have to go there to see a physician. These are some of the tasks and the complexities that we have to take on. The options are family care clinics or very efficient primary care networks, being able to access physicians to get people to go to the right place. It's the right care at the right time.

The real-time emergency patient access and co-ordination is what I mentioned before. Again, referral, access, advice, placement information, and destination: that refers to the small rural hospitals. The rural hospitals use that on a very regular basis to get their patients to specialized care in these larger centres. Quite often we're moving there. We know that, based on what we've heard about emergency services and interfacility transfer. That's why you see those ambulances going all the time from those rural centres to get that specialized care, that one-time treatment that they need, again, where the higher populations are, where it makes more sense to put those things, particularly where research and advancements can be made. To the hon. associate minister of transparency, it's really about driving down to: how can we make efficiencies in the system?

Again, I appreciate the advocacy from the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and her passion for health care, but I can't support this motion simply because it's mandatory. Certainly, when we think about it, when we start picking apart the efficiencies in those rural hospitals – I think we’ve seen a report recently about how some of our rural hospitals are very transparent and they’re doing a lot of great things. You know, I can’t support this motion.

Those are my comments around that. I think that there are better ways to measure our performance outcomes. I think it’s also important for us to remember the very complex job that Alberta Health Services has to make sure that the right type of care is happening at the right time for that particular patient and then make sure they get back to their communities. That’s why we have the reporting the way it is.

Again, I thank the member for her motion, but I simply won’t support it today.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you very much, hon. member.

The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It’s a pleasure to rise in support of my colleague in favour of Motion 508. I’m not going to cast aspersions or question motives.

An Hon. Member: Thank you.

Mr. Bikman: You’re welcome.

I want to talk about principles and good management. As was alluded to by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, if you don’t measure it, you can’t manage it, or words to that effect. I’d also add that if you aren’t measuring it, you aren’t doing your job. When we deal in generalities, we rarely succeed. You know where I’m going with this. When we deal in specifics, we rarely have a failure. When performance is measured, performance improves; when it’s measured and reported, the rate of improvement accelerates. Thomas S. Monson said that, and I believe him. It’s a principle of good management. Stephen Covey said that for things that you’re measuring to be of use to you, they need to be focused, specific – in other words, as Monson mentioned – but also reported in a timely manner.

Taxpayers, the folks that pay the bills, that give the government the money that they’re spending, are entitled to know this information. Their health and maybe even their lives depend on their ability to make informed decisions, choosing to go, perhaps, to a more efficient, more effectively run emergency department. I would hope that AHS is measuring this, and I don’t think it’s too great of a stretch to say: “If you’re already measuring it, good for you. Let’s report it. Let’s get it out there.”

What are you doing with the information yourself? It isn’t just the taxpayers, the people who are patients that need to be admitted to emergency rooms that need this information to help them make better decisions. AHS, the management, also needs this information because there are departments that are getting it right, and we ought to see how they can do it and why. Is there some aspect of what they’re doing that could be shared with the rest of the system, could be cascaded throughout the system to raise the bar, so to speak, or to raise the performance and the ability of these other departments to provide this service that I know they’d like to provide?

I’m sure that the goals that have been set and the commitments that have been made to reach those goals have been set with all sincerity. You want to reach them. You’re not happy with the result, and we’re not bringing it up to embarrass you. You’re doing enough things on your own to do that; we don’t have to do it for you. I think that recognizing that this information is there and is easily capturable – and it probably is, in fact, and not just in the places that have been mentioned, but it could be reported in a timely manner.

We know that wait times are a problem in and of themselves, but they’re also symptomatic of problems within the Alberta health care system. Emergency departments used to be used for real emergencies; thus, the name. I think we all know that over the past few years they’ve evolved into walk-in clinics in many cases. Why? I’m sure Alberta Health Services knows why, but I’m also sure it’s largely due to breakdowns and inadequacies in the system itself. Perhaps there aren’t enough clinics or doctors to go around.

So the system suffers, and we download again onto these front-line workers in these critical, stressful situations in emergency departments the responsibility to do things that the system should be taking care of in other parts of the system rather than in emergency rooms.

I support this motion. I think it’s a timely motion, and I think we need to consider the source of this motion. It’s from a former Health minister, somebody that’s among the most knowledgeable people in this House about the importance of timely information to make good decisions. I hope AHS already has this information. I hope they are using it to tweak and correct and improve the system, but if they aren’t, shame on them.

Thanks.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I’d just like to say a few words here. It’s been interesting listening to the ongoing debate, and I, too, would like to compliment my counterpart from Calgary-Fish Creek on her heartfelt passion for trying to bring forward proper health care within the system.

Madam Speaker, just while I was away from the Assembly this weekend in the constituency of Drumheller-Stettler, people were asking me about the past process whereby people could look up their own health care costs and what they were charged within the system. They felt that that was a way that they could achieve accountability for their own costs within the system. They felt that that was something that would have been a method of bringing forward their own accountability, their own transparency, and their own method of making sure that the system, to the level of their involvement, was being adjudicated correctly.

Because we have nuances to the wording in the Chamber, Madam Speaker, I’d like to reread this motion: “Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly” in the public interest “urge the government to mandate that Alberta Health Services report length-of-stay data for all emergency departments across the province on a weekly basis.” I found it kind of interesting, in compiling my thoughts to make this presentation, whether or not the party opposite would have a different point of view if we were to interject the words “in the public interest” because I believe that’s why this member is bringing this motion forward: in the public interest. Even though the words aren’t in her motion, that’s what we’re trying to do: do something better for the public and, therefore, bring forward some accountability and transparency to the regulation, to the legislation.

I just wanted to make that point, if possible, and bring forward another point. This issue is important to Albertans. In Alberta Health Services’ own words, “Transparency is important.” That’s what my constituents have been asking me to bring forward, and that’s why I wish to speak to this motion to some small extent.

How they rely on this health system is important to them, too. When they need it in an emergency situation, like the young

Member for Calgary-South East talked about with his personal experiences, how people relate to this system is important. When they need it, they need it to be there in a professional and timely manner. If we have some small semblance of presenting performance levels, as the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner talked about reporting, it allows vindication of service rendered. I'd just like to bring that forward.

With that, I think I'll relinquish the floor to other speakers.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any others who wish to speak on Motion 508? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak in favour of this motion brought forward by my hon. friend from Calgary-Fish Creek. I do appreciate the dialogue back and forth. The Member for Calgary-South East is obviously very passionate about health care as well, and I thank him for that and being able to bring that experience into this House.

I disagree often with the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and will do so again right now when he stands up and suggests that this motion is irrelevant. I don't believe this motion is irrelevant at all. As has been discussed, this is something that AHS is already committed to doing, so all we're suggesting and all the member is suggesting is that the government urge AHS to do this now and do it more consistently. At the end of the day, we have the information. It exists. It's being tracked.

So the fact is that, you know, there are going to be charges from the other side suggesting: while we have these cost-cutting measures and this cost-cutting, conservative opposition party, how could they ever ask us to do anything that would potentially add more cost? Well, health care is still the number one issue facing Albertans today. I'm sure that you're aware of this, Madam Speaker. This is something that has been the number one concern of Albertans for upwards of 20 years, probably even more, and will be for the foreseeable future. The definition of insanity, as I'm sure you all know, is doing the same thing over and over again and expecting a different result. Well, if you have the statistics and you have the data and you have a way of measuring whether or not you're actually making improvements, why would you not want to then publish that data and actually find out if you are improving?

Imagine the public accolades that the governing party could pat themselves on the back with if they were to actually make measurable improvements to some of these statistics that they so often fail at, that give us so much food to stand up in here, the low-hanging fruit of your failing to meet these targets. Imagine if we didn't have that, and imagine if you had a mechanism to ensure that we didn't. I'm sure you'd like to take it. Well, it just so happens that Motion 508 will help you get there, but apparently it's irrelevant.

I would challenge the members opposite to consider or reconsider their position on this because, as the body of AHS is already tracking the information, they've already suggested that transparency is an important aspect to improving the service that they deliver for Albertans, and given the fact that Albertans have all said and continue to say today, Madam Speaker, that this is the most important issue facing them – and it will be again moving forward – I think that this motion deserves their support.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to stand and speak in favour of Motion 508 from my colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek. I think it's very important to show the results. You know, we talk about transparency. This is just another way of being more transparent. We have the quarterly reports, so let's go to weekly reports.

The comment has been made about the additional cost. Well, maybe the Alberta Health Services executive that's been charging a hundred million dollars in 17 months – they could trim a little something there to put towards somebody else that could actually report these findings.

There's been talk about the nine busiest hospitals between Calgary and Edmonton doing this reporting. Well, one of the hospitals in my area, the Strathmore hospital, has one of the busiest emergency rooms in rural Alberta. I've met with many of the doctors, and they work very hard. You know, because they are so close to Calgary, they have many challenges with people coming out from Calgary to this emergency room. I can't say enough good things about them.

The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake mentioned the Bassano and Brooks health centres, how well they do. That's a feather in your cap that you can promote and say: look, you know, we do have these rural hospitals.

We know that rural sustainability is tough, and part of that is having a good health care system. We work very hard. I'm good friends with a doctor in Bassano, and it's a challenge to get doctors to come out to these rural hospitals. It's something that's a challenge all over Alberta and that we have to keep working on together to try to get good doctors so that we can keep providing that good service, the most bang for the taxpayers' bucks.

We have a lot of rural taxpayers that would like to know this information, and many of them are seniors that can't go onto the websites and sort for hours through material trying to find this data. I think if it was made more accessible, it would go a long way to showing some of the good, and maybe it would go to show some of the bad and put a little bit of spur on these guys to get things right if those results were made known. You know, I think it's something that should be very easy to fulfill. The data is there. Put it out there so that everybody can see it, so you don't have to be a computer whiz to go and sort through and try to find it. It just goes to the accountability and transparency.

The AT and T minister was making comments back there: well, let's work to fix it. Well, yeah. We all want to fix health services in Alberta so that everybody gets the best service that they can, and this would go a long way to helping that service.

In closing, I'm in support of my colleague and her motion. I think it's something that would serve Albertans well. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I also rise today to speak in support of Motion 508. It's very interesting. You can tell that the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek does have a long-standing passion for health care. I also appreciate the Member for Calgary-South East. The insight that you to bring to the Chamber from that side is so valuable for us that do not get to deal with that on a daily basis, so thank you for that insight.

I think that ties in. I think that the Member for Calgary-South East brought forward some very, very good information. He was talking about dealing with instances and issues in real time, and to have that, you have to have technology that's creating that real-time information. If that technology is creating that, it can be tracked. If it can be tracked, it can be reported. So it's already in place, and it works to the benefit of EMTs. That is critical. When you find out that you have somebody in need of medical treatment, you need to know where they can get access to that as fast as possible based upon that condition. He has identified the fact that there is great, great technology out there already in use, and it's benefiting not only EMTs but hospitals and emergency wards and treatment centres. In that regard it is there and it's working, so it needs to be pushed out to all of the centres so that they're all able to take advantage of those great, great technological advances that some are lucky to have.

The interesting thing with health being the number one expenditure in the budget – we're looking at about $16 billion – is that it almost seems like we're afraid to challenge this group of people running this ministry. As the number one expenditure I think it's incumbent upon us to ask even more from these people. It has to be our number one ask to this ministry. It's where the most money is spent. As mentioned before, it's the biggest concern on most voters' minds. It's got to give better results. It's failing on too many levels. I'm not going to say all but too many. They're doing great work in some areas on some things, but to get better, it has to be reported, it has to be visible, and we have to be able to do good things from areas that are doing good things and move that to areas where they're suffering. I think it's very important that we concentrate on that more than we would on any other ministry.

Thank you.

5:50

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I would now ask the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek to close debate on Motion 508.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise. I've been listening quietly and carefully to the debate in the Legislature. It's always amazing to me when we talk about private members' bills or private members' motions. I guess for me I personally want to thank the health care professionals who actually urged me to bring this motion forward, and I particularly want to thank a doctor that I've spoken to in regard to this motion for his incredible insight into the health care system. His name is Dr. Paul Parks. We've heard that name on this Legislature floor on many, many occasions. I don't know Dr. Parks' political affiliations, and I've never ever asked him. He would give the same advice to anyone else in this Assembly who would pick up the phone to talk to him and ask him about health care and what he thinks. After all, it was he that brought up the issue of the crisis in emergency that we were in for two and a half years. This motion was on behalf of Dr. Parks, who insisted that it's important for the government to be accountable and transparent to all Albertans, not just Albertans that are in Calgary and Edmonton.

You know, it's interesting to hear from the minister of accountability. I just think that's such a farce of a name for someone that can stand up here and speak about accountability and transparency. It's just, quite frankly, an embarrassment. [interjections] What I would like to say, Madam Speaker, if I can . . . [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has the floor.

Mrs. Forsyth: The Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation is yelling across the floor in regard to what he's not accountable for and what he's not transparent about.

Madam Speaker, if I may, I want to on behalf of Albertans and on behalf of all of the health care professionals in this province and particularly Dr. Parks thank them for their advice and thank them for their kind words. They are the people in this province who are accountable and who are transparent and who are trying on behalf of Albertans to do the right thing.

With that, I will ask all members of the Assembly to support this motion.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[The voice vote indicated that Motion Other than Government Motion 508 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:53 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, April 16, 2013

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members and guests, let us pray. May we know what is true and pure, may our hearts be filled with joy and kindness, and may our minds guide our actions in favour of those whom we humbly serve. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly nine individuals who are the 2013 nominees for the Ernest C. Manning innovation awards, Canada's most prestigious innovation awards. The Ernest C. Manning innovation awards recognize Canadians of all ages with the imagination to innovate and the stamina to succeed. Albertans are well represented as recipients of Manning awards since they were established some years ago as a national award program named after Alberta Premier Ernest C. Manning.

Mr. Speaker, they are seated in your gallery, and they are: Carl Denis, innovator of the Freedom patient immobilization system medical device; Kevin Grumetza, innovator of the Easy Sheet curling rink liner; Camiel Huisma, innovator of GrowSafe technology, a data system for the agricultural industry; Gregory Hunt, innovator of PackJack, a lightweight, easy-to-use motorcycle jack; Dr. Deepak Kaura and Rohit Joshi, innovators of the Brightsquid dental link; J. Scott Moore of UTFx Precise Transcript Management; John Putters, innovator of WANDA, washroom management software; and Randy Schmitz, innovator of Schmitz Mittz, an indestructible safety glove. Another Alberta innovator, Dr. Naser El-Sheimy, who developed Trusted Positioning platforms, is out of the country speaking about his innovation at this time and could not join us. I'd ask the nominees to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my honour and privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 53 of the best and brightest students from l'école Greenview elementary school who are joined by their teachers, Cheri Krywko and Angela Sharun, and also parent helpers Carolyn, Terri, Stéphanie, and Chris. They are here today to observe some of our proceedings, and I would request that they please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of this House a group of fantastic grade 6 students visiting from my constituency. The 31 students from Bowden Grandview school, who are all clearly taller than I am, are sitting in the gallery along with their teachers, Tracy Dreher and Brenda Sherwood, and dedicated parent helpers. I hope they enjoy their time at the Legislature. I'll ask them to please stand as my hon. colleagues provide the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 41 grade 6 students from the Elk Point elementary school. They are accompanied by their teachers, Mrs. Hlushak, Mrs. Youngmans, and Mrs. Pindroch, as well as parent volunteers. I would ask that all of these guests rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly five special guests who I will ask to rise as I mention their names. The first is Lowell Thronson and his wife, Laurel, who have been residents of St. Albert for over 30 years. Lowell was an educator in the province for 40 years, serving as the principal of several St. Albert elementary schools, the deputy superintendent of St. Albert public school division, and he later served with distinction as superintendent of the Black Gold school division. But Mr. Thronson will be always remembered by me very fondly as my first principal in elementary school at Sir Alexander Mackenzie. Also attending is their son Dale Thronson, his wife, Lynn, and Lynn's mother, Gladys Toth.

This group also has another interest in attending question period, and that's to see their son and grandson Ben Thronson serve as our hard-working page. Thank you again, Ben. Ben is the student council president at Sainte Marguerite d'Youville in St. Albert. Mr. Speaker, as you may recall, this past November, for November, Ben grew a better moustache than a number of our colleagues in the House. Would you please stand to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly an outstanding Albertan, a mentor, a friend, and an Alberta sports icon. Larry Mather is one of the reasons Olympic weightlifting exists in the province of Alberta. Larry began coaching Olympic weightlifting in the fall of 1965 in a club in Red Deer, and by 1973 he had opened Alberta's first stand-alone weightlifting club in Alberta, the Grierson weightlifting club. Grierson would go on to serve as a national team training camp in 1977 and played an important role in the success of the Canadian weightlifting team at the 1978 Commonwealth Games in the province.

Larry honed his skills and ultimately became one of the most highly regarded coaches in the country, serving from 1973 to 1983 as one of the Canadian national team coaches. Athletes from a number of different sports have taken advantage of Larry's skills. For nearly 50 years Larry has been a major presence in the Alberta sport. He's joined here today by his lovely wife, Clarece, and his son Steven. At this time I'd ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, your second introduction.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Once again, it is an honour for me to rise and introduce to you and through you Mr. Russ Pickford, Charles Klaver, and our very own powerhouse, Ms Wendy Rodgers. All three are outstanding public servants and are veterans of the Grierson weightlifting club. Grierson will be celebrating their 40th anniversary this Saturday. It played a very, very significant role in Wendy's weightlifting career, along with Larry, for 15 years. She competed locally, nationally, internationally, and at masters weightlifting competitions, including pan-American competitions. I'd ask all of my guests at this time to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I would respectfully request your guidance as to the timing of this point of order, which deals with the handling of estimates by the government in the various committees of the House. I would be pleased to raise it at the time that you recommend.

The Speaker: At the appropriate time. Let us move on at this time with Members' Statements. We've already recognized this, and I'll come back to your point in a moment.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

1:40 Upgrades for Seniors' Accommodations

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to recognize the announcement made by my colleague the Hon. Doug Griffiths, Minister of Municipal Affairs. As a passionate advocate for seniors' issues for many years, this is good news. Albertans living in seniors' lodges can expect modernization and greater comfort through a nearly $31 million investment in the seniors' lodge renewal grants. There are more than 10,000 lodges, cottages, and unique home units in Alberta. The housing management body for these units will be allocated $3,000 in funding for every unit it owns or manages.

Mr. Speaker, the Green Acres Foundation, which manages lodges in my constituency of Lethbridge-East among others in our area and our city, will be receiving nearly $2.3 million. It will be most welcome as some of these units are almost as old as their residents. Other southern Alberta communities, Blairmore and Taber, will be receiving $174,000 and $231,000 respectively for their lodge upgrades. This money will be provided for building repairs, mechanical and plumbing upgrades, fire and safety upgrades, and dining room and resident expansion.

This government is committed to ensuring that residents in seniors' lodges have a safe, comfortable, and affordable place to live with the very important aspect of daily socialization. Looking forward, this government will continue to develop a proactive long-term capital plan for seniors' lodges. I wish to again commend my colleague and his ministry for their commitment to seniors' housing in this province that helps meet their current and future needs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Government Health Policies

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One has to wonder about the state of our health care system. For months doctors have been asking for the minister to call and engage with them on their contract. After a long-drawn-out, painful process the minister finally picked up the phone and – surprise, surprise – results. What an ordeal to get here. The Health minister brought the system to the brink before doing his job and recognizing that doctors play an important role in the health care system. Unfortunately, pharmacists are still out in the cold.

This arrogant I-know-best attitude permeates the health care system. Without consultation long-term care beds in Carmangay and Strathmore were closed, kicking out vulnerable seniors to facilities that provide lower levels of care. Vulnerable residents of Michener Centre, the same fate: no consultation with family, caregivers, or staff. Michener families are told that 50 seniors won't be forced to leave – I think we heard that in Carmangay – and that they'll be placed into continuing care facilities. Where? There are 486 long-term care clients in acute-care beds awaiting placement, and continuing care lists are as long as your arm. Will these seniors jump the queue, or is this minister confused on Alberta Health Services' placement policy?

Let's get to those infamous targets that the government insists will improve health care. Hip replacement surgery: target is 22 weeks. Get on the list today, and you'll wait 37. Knee replacement: target is 28 weeks. We wait almost three months longer, 39 weeks. Scheduled bypass surgery: target is 6 weeks. We wait 25 weeks. Yet health executives received their bonuses last year, the year before, and the year before that.

Then we get to those pesky, darned old expense accounts. The minister would like everyone to forgive and forget those, expense accounts that led to luxury cars, fancy parties, lavish dinners, and even specialized visits to the Mayo Clinic in the U.S. The minister says that he's disappointed and disgusted and that the past is the past. I guess it just doesn't matter if they make the wrong decisions today because it will all be in the past tomorrow.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, the leader of the New Democratic opposition rose on a point of order, which we will entertain at the regular time, at the end of question period, toward the end of the Routine.

In the meantime let's carry on with Members' Statements and hear from Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Edmonton-McClung.

Lakeland Centre for FASD

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Lakeland FASD Society operates the Lakeland Centre for FASD in Cold Lake and is an excellent example of community collaboration to develop needed FASD prevention, education, and services. The Lakeland area has been working since 1994 on better understanding the disability of FASD and women who drink during pregnancy.

This working committee has evolved into a society and leading agency in developing rural-based approaches to addressing diagnosis/assessment, intense prevention programs for women, and supports to those who are affected.

Since opening in July 2012, the program has accepted women into the program with amazing results. Ninety per cent of the women have been pregnant. The youngest patient has been 15 years of age. Ninety-five per cent of the women themselves have had a diagnosis of FASD or suspected. The average number of children they've had prior to coming to treatment is three. A hundred per cent of the women who've completed the program have maintained sobriety for at least three months following this program. Seventy-five per cent of the women came into this program homeless, and 97 per cent of them have left with a stable housing plan on discharge along with relevant services. Many of the women have had their children returned to them after completion of this program. One woman had a child protection alert removed from her file at the birth of her child, thus allowing her to finally take her baby home.

The program also shows a strong social return on investment in the early days. The 2nd Floor Women's Recovery centre program shows that for every dollar the government spends on this program, two dollars are saved.

The 2nd Floor Women's Recovery Centre program is available to eligible women across the province and fills a desperate need to provide services to this very challenging-to-serve group of women. The belief of this program is that if they can support the women and connect them with meaningful services on baby number one or two, we can prevent many children from being born alcohol or drug exposed.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Could I just remind particularly members on the government side to please keep your conversations down to a minimum volume level? It's sometimes difficult to hear when people are speaking their members' statements.

Thank you very much.

Let's move on to Edmonton-McClung.

Edmonton Callingwood Farmers' Market

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Spring is always an exciting time for me not only because I know that summer is on its way but because a very special annual event begins, one that combines community spirit with entrepreneurial flair. The Edmonton Callingwood Farmers' Market in my constituency, Edmonton's original and only Sunday market, starts its new season on Sunday, May 5, 2013. It also opens on Wednesdays.

Mr. Speaker, as you enjoy the scents of the many beautiful flowers, you will be serenaded by the lovely sounds of musicians while you browse and make your purchases. You can find almost anything and everything, including organic vegetables, sumptuous wild mushrooms, artisanal handicrafts, homemade foods such as pies, fresh pastas, game meats, and organic honey to name a few. Last year I had the opportunity to purchase a bottle of very delicious honey wine and an amazing home-baked strawberry-rhubarb pie. I can't wait to get my hands on more homemade goods this summer.

In fact, 80 per cent of the vendors at the Callingwood market sell products that have been locally produced, baked, or grown by the vendors, and purchasing these products means helping to build and support our farmers and our economy.

From time to time, Mr. Speaker, I set up a booth at the market so I can have meaningful one-on-one conversations with my constituents on the issues that concern them the most. This allows me to better listen to their concerns and bring them forward to the government table and eventually to this House.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to invite you and everyone in this House and all Albertans to Callingwood Farmers' Market to taste some of the best kettle corn you might ever have.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition for her first set of main questions.

Carbon Tax

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, before we get to the troubling issue surrounding the latest health care scandal, let me begin with a simple question. Now that the Premier is back from Washington, trying to clear up some confusion, will her government be raising the current carbon tax from $15 per tonne to $40 per tonne, and will they be raising the emission reduction target from its current level of 12 per cent to 40 per cent?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I clearly answered this question last week, but I'm very happy to provide the hon. member with information again. We are in the process with the federal government of a review of each sector with regard to GHG emissions reduction. We have completed the coal sector. We've completed the transportation sector. We are now in the oil and gas sector. It is too early in the process, because we're just beginning it, to comment on any of the options that are before our partners.

1:50

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Premier said this during an interview in Maclean's magazine: "So 40/40 isn't a number that we've in any way landed on or proposed." Yet the 40/40 scenario appears as a proposal in the Environment minister's presentation to industry. It's reported by various industry sources as a proposed target. Let's see if we can get some clarity. Is the Premier denying that the 40/40 plan has been part of the government's discussions with industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've said and as the Premier has said, we are working with industry, we are working with our stakeholders, and we're working with the federal government on a sector-by-sector approach. We're on the oil and gas sector right now. We are looking at many different scenarios so that federally they can meet their emission reduction targets and we can as well. It is way too early in the process, but once we're at that point, we'll be happy to share with the hon. member and all Albertans and Canadians.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, since we've seen with this Premier and this government that a promise isn't a promise and a tax isn't a tax and a raise isn't a raise and a decision isn't a decision, I guess we can certainly understand why a proposal isn't really a proposal. But since the government claims that all of this is designed to make us look greener and to convince our critics that Alberta has a good record on emissions, will the government reject this punitive approach and propose something that will actually work to reduce emissions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since 2008 this government has had the first plan in North America that is reducing emissions. We have a technology fund as well. Our plan is to make sure that we can access important markets for Canadians and for Albertans. That is our plan, and while doing that, we do a sector-by-sector approach. We've committed and the federal government has committed to meeting our 2050 targets, and that's what we're working to do.

The Speaker: Hon. leader, your second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: We'll try again another day, Mr. Speaker.

Health System Executive Expenses

Ms Smith: There are more revelations today on the issue we raised yesterday about a former Capital health executive who expensed a $7,000 visit to the Mayo Clinic. That executive has since explained that she was treated for a form of cancer here in Alberta and was told that she was cured. Then her boss, former CEO Sheila Weatherill, told her to go get checked out at the Mayo Clinic just to be sure. This raises so many questions, Mr. Speaker, starting with: just how widespread is this practice of having Alberta diagnoses confirmed by the Mayo Clinic?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the allegation that was made yesterday, as the hon. member says, was confirmed today by the individual involved. This is with respect to a situation in 2007. There's no other reaction to this than to describe it for what it is, which is wrong. It is offensive. It is offensive to Albertans. It is a situation that occurred six years ago that should never have occurred.

What is important, of course, is that today we have a single health authority with a single set of rules in place that would never allow this situation to occur again.

Many Albertans have received the bad news of a cancer diagnosis, and because of the outstanding work of the dedicated health professionals at the Cross cancer clinic and the Tom Baker cancer centre, they've received clean bills of health. Can the Minister of Health tell us how many of those people who are not current or former health executives get a confirmation examination at the Mayo Clinic that's paid for by taxpayers?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants to focus on situations that occurred in 2007 or 2005 or 2003, she's very welcome to do that. It certainly does not take away from the fact that this situation is wrong and should never have happened.

I'm sure that the hon. member would agree with me that we have among the finest cancer care in North America right here in Alberta. We have a single health authority with a single set of rules, open and transparent rules that allow Albertans to verify that this situation could not happen and is not happening in Alberta today.

Ms Smith: The problem is, Mr. Speaker, that a lot of those folks were around in 2007, so it is still relevant today.

We asked about this yesterday, wondering if this was just another example of a sloppy expense policy, or perhaps it was a workaround to avoid lengthy wait times here at home. Now it's revealed that it's a special perk available to high-ranking health executives. This happened in 2007. Was the minister aware of this practice, and did he do anything specific to end it?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have no idea what the hon. member was doing in 2007. I can tell you that I was not the Minister of Health in 2007. While the single incident is indeed offensive to all Albertans, to suggest that this practice is continuing today is to simply ignore the fact . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Leader of the Liberal opposition, leader of the Wildrose, you're welcome to converse outside if you wish but not in here during someone else's time.

Hon. minister, please conclude your comments.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To finish, of course, as the hon. member well knows, we have one set of rules today. We have one health region to deliver health care services in the province. We have the single most stringent and transparent set of rules around executive compensation and expenses that we will find anywhere in this country, and that's what Albertans can rely on.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Opposition. Third main set of questions.

Ms Smith: I apologize, Mr. Speaker, but I think that the hon. member was actually working for the then Health minister at the time, in 2007, so he was very much involved.

We don't want to dig into the personal details of someone's medical history, but the individual who was at the centre of the Mayo Clinic issue has confirmed the details about her case, her diagnosis, and the trip. This is an issue of confidence in the system. Now, the minister likes to say that we undermine the system with our questions, but I ask him: what could be more undermining than when executives who run the health system don't trust what our doctors have to say and spend our precious health care dollars to hire Americans to check on their work?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, from what I'm told from yesterday, the hon. member had no compunction whatsoever insofar as talking about individual details with respect to health care received here or elsewhere, so let's put an end to that fallacy.

Secondly, the opposition does routinely, Mr. Speaker, attempt to undermine the confidence of Albertans in 2013, not in 2007, in the very fine health care system that we offer Albertans today, and she continues to ignore, despite having made requests repeatedly over her time in this House, the fact that we have the most stringent rules around expenses and disclosure that will be found anywhere in this country.

Ms Smith: The problem is, Mr. Speaker, that yesterday the Deputy Premier didn't have a clue about what was going on. The Premier said: oh, it was all in the past. You'll forgive me for not believing this.

Will the minister provide concrete assurances that this practice has been stopped and that he will make every effort to ensure that this money is paid back and returned to Alberta taxpayers?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has no basis whatsoever to claim that this is a common practice in Alberta today.

On the question of recovering the expenses, I can tell you that yesterday, when the allegation was made, the opposition offered no proof. Today, when the individual involved confirmed the information, I immediately consulted with our legal counsel. This is an important principle. Unfortunately, there is not a legal way, I'm advised, to recover the funds. As offensive as it is, what Albertans again can take comfort in is that this Premier and this government have taken steps to make sure that this situation cannot occur today.

Ms Smith: It's the same government, Mr. Speaker.

The minister often speaks about how great Alberta's health care system is, and on that point he is right. We have great doctors, nurses, facilities, and support systems. But the administration is abysmal. The cavalier attitude toward expenses displayed by current and former Health executives is shocking, and that's why we continue to ask this question. Will the minister release all of the expenses of all of the executives of all of the health regions going back to 2005? Let's get to the bottom of this.

Mr. Horne: Apparently, Mr. Speaker, the era in question now goes back to 2005. These hon. members and other hon. members on all sides of the House have made very good use of the provisions of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act to access information that they wish to bring to light. Albertans who are concerned about these issues have made use of the same process.

It is not for elected people, for political people to decide what information should and should not be made available under that act. That is an independent process. People under that process have legal rights, and I would challenge the hon. Leader of the Opposition to suggest that we should otherwise interfere.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition, followed by the New Democrat opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most members of this House are aware that I was once in government. Now, one thing I can tell you is that government sees every single FOIP before it gets out, so it's very difficult to believe that nobody in government knew that the issue of the Mayo Clinic invoice, which was expensed by the former executive vice-president and COO of Capital health and approved by the CEO, was a clear case of queue-jumping. To the Deputy Premier: were you just very poorly briefed, or did you mislead the House yesterday?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, let me be perfectly clear. Yesterday I did not have available to me the evidence that is available to us today, so I was making statements based on the fact that it is inappropriate to make slanderous remarks about any Albertan unless you have solid evidence to support it. Today, now that the additional evidence has become available to me, I have to tell you that in view of this new evidence my comments yesterday were wrong. I fully support the minister in his comments, and I know that he has put a system in place to make sure that events like these don't occur into the future.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Deputy Premier saying that he was poorly briefed or clueless.

To the Premier, the Health minister, or whomever is properly briefed today: what is the government going to do about the fact that the individual who signed off on this queue-jumping expense claim and who was on the board of AHS until very recently, the former Capital health CEO, did not see fit to mention this while testifying under oath before the queue-jumping inquiry, which is very conveniently no longer hearing testimony? Is this why you wanted to end the inquiry so quickly, Minister? Is this why you wanted to end that inquiry?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, let me take the opportunity to correct the hon. member on a couple of counts. First of all, the government does not review all the FOIP requests that are made in this province. That is legislation that governs an independent process, and that process is available to all members of this House and to all Albertans. To suggest otherwise is wrong.

Secondly, on the question of the review and approval of the expense in question six years ago I cannot answer why the decision was made or whether it was in accordance with rules that were in place at the time. What I can answer for is the rules that are in place today, rules that would not permit a situation like this to ever occur again.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, it's amazing how this minister slips and slides and how this government jumps when there's a FOIP and some light shines in dark places. Suddenly the government gets religion and orders that unsavoury practices be discontinued.

Premier, since you only root out corruption and waste when we point it out, could you please expedite the process and tell us what we should FOIP next? Better yet, will you finally do the right thing and authorize the forensic audit of the Capital health region, which Dr. Chris Eagle, the current CEO of AHS, called for, which you blocked?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, that is entirely inaccurate. The hon. member knows that the Alberta Health Services Board of its own volition asked the Auditor General to audit the expenses of senior executives at AHS, including those individuals who are serving in executive positions now that also served in executive positions in the previous health regions. That report has been made public. There were no concerns expressed with the expenses.

This hon. member needs to make a decision as to whether or not he is going to stand up for the health system that we have in 2013 or whether he wants to stand up or not for a health system in 2007 or earlier.

Speaker's Ruling FOIP Requests

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm going to review Hansard a little bit later, but there was some comment which I think the Alberta Liberal leader made with respect to FOIP. The Information and Privacy Commissioner will be very interested, I'm sure, to read those comments because to my knowledge freedom of information requests are not routinely shared with the government. We'll have a look at that and get a comment and clear that point up, so let's not get into any points of order today on that. We'll sort this out and report back to you. Thank you.

Let us move on. The leader of the New Democrat opposition.

Recovery of Health Executive Expenses

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today the former VP of Capital health released a statement confirming that Capital health did indeed pay more than $7,000 so she could get a second opinion after being declared cancer free by Alberta doctors. This was never considered by the medical committee that approves out-of-province treatment. The former CEO of Capital health, who approved this, received a $5.7 million severance when Alberta Health Services was created. What will this government do to get the $7,000 back from the former CEO?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is obviously as outraged as I am and I believe the rest of the members are with respect to this situation that occurred in 2007. I am not familiar with the terms of the severance for that employee, so I can't speak to the accuracy of his comments in that regard. What I can tell you is that as soon as I learned today, when the new information came to light today, that the individual in question had admitted that the expense was claimed and approved, I asked our legal counsel if there was an opportunity for us to try to recover that money on behalf of Albertans. Unfortunately, there is not that opportunity.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm going to ask the Health minister to go back to his legal counsel because the use of public funds by the former CEO of Capital health to send the former vice-president of Capital health to the Mayo Clinic was a violation not only of Alberta Health policy but a violation of section 12(1)(a) of the Canada Health Act. It may also contravene section 122 of the Criminal Code of Canada. What is the minister going to do about it?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I will continue to rely on the advice of legal counsel with respect to this matter. If the hon. member wants to stand in front of the House and interpret the law for us, I guess that's entirely up to him. What I can tell you is that I immediately sought the opinion this morning of our legal counsel after the individual in question confirmed that the expense was claimed and reimbursed. It doesn't change the fact that it is wrong. It doesn't change the fact that Albertans are outraged. But it does unfortunately present us with a situation where legally we are not able to pursue recovery of those funds.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, when you talk to your lawyer, Mr. Minister, you've got to ask the right questions.

This government attempts to brush aside evidence of serious violations of the law, breaches of ethics, and misuse of public funds. It refused to extend the Vertes inquiry when Justice Vertes requested more time to uncover evidence. He called the government's refusal interference with the inquiry. To the Health minister: why is your government covering up wrongdoing by the Capital health authority?

Mr. Horne: With respect to the independent inquiry that is under way into improper preferential access – and it is an independent inquiry, I'd remind the hon. member – those decisions as to what evidence should be considered belong with the commissioner for the inquiry, Justice Vertes. The justice did request an extension, and he was granted an extension to complete the report. That report is due on August 31, 2013, Mr. Speaker, and it will be delivered to you, as you know, for distribution to all members.

Out-of-country Health Services

Mrs. Towle: The past is the past. That's what we hear every time we raise the issue of abuse of taxpayer dollars by health care executives. Yet for Fort McMurray's Shane Wambolt the past is not over. Shane had a brain tumour the size of a golf ball that was causing him to go blind. If he had waited another three months to have it removed, he would have been, and I quote, deemed a vegetable. The out-of-province committee refused to pay for this surgery because they said that it was elective. To the Health minister: what possible explanation is there for covering private treatments at the Mayo Clinic for health executives while people like Shane Wambolt are desperately in need of similar-type care and similar-type coverage?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I think we've all pointed out, there is absolutely no excuse for the situation that was reported on that occurred in 2007, and no one is attempting to suggest anything otherwise. To compare that situation to the individual – and as we know, we must be cautious in the House to observe the provisions of the Health Information Act when talking about individuals' medical care or treatment or personal medical information. There is an appropriate process for seeking approval for out-of-country medical services. This particular constituent is well represented by his MLA, who is a member of the government caucus. We're familiar with the situation.

Mrs. Towle: Well, that's great. I'll send his MLA this file, and perhaps he can advocate on his behalf.

Given that Shane has been denied six times on technicalities and is now refiled for the seventh time and given that this two-tier health care system allows for Alberta Health Services executives to receive immediate access to private health care while everyday Albertans wait, will this minister sincerely take on Shane's case no matter who's advocating for him and pay for his procedure and afford him the same special treatment that you afforded to Michele Lahey?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, with respect to this individual – and, again, I would remind everyone of the provisions of the Health Information Act – I have met the individual in question. I have talked with the individual. I have taken steps within my ministry to ensure that he's been provided with all of the information with respect to the process for seeking the reimbursement that is being sought. We have taken every possible step to ensure that the fair and transparent process that overrides the Out-of-country Health Services Committee and its appeal panel is being observed in this case.

Mrs. Towle: Sadly, that's not the case because clearly this AHS executive didn't have to go through the same committee.

Given that on November 28, 2011, the Premier agreed to look into Shane's case and given that his family has now recently filed for bankruptcy – they've been forced to sell their home because of the out-of-pocket expenses for this operation – and given that Alberta Health executives can simply expense what others are literally dying for, will this hon. Premier keep her promise and do the right thing by ensuring that this family has the same standards that clearly are afforded to Alberta health care executives?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, had I thought that the House would have the patience, I would have raised a point of order based on the hon. member's last statement. There is no evidence whatsoever to suggest that the situation that occurred in 2007 can occur today. In fact, the evidence is just the opposite. The hon. members love to make loose connections between a past offence, the present, and the future. The fact of the matter is that the rules are in place. The expenses are approved in accordance with those rules. They are transparent. The receipts are there for all to see. This is a system that stands up for those sorts of issues.

Memorandum of Understanding with Physicians

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Alberta government and the Alberta Medical Association signed an MOU that provides long-term stability for the health system. My questions are to the Minister of Health. After years of negotiations and two previous attempts that did not result in a final agreement, can the minister explain to the House what the difference is with this agreement and why Albertans should be confident that the issue is resolved once and for all?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We are indeed very pleased to have been able to reach a memorandum of understanding with the Alberta Medical Association. There's no question that this has been a long negotiation. It spans multiple ministers over a two-and-a-half-year period. This is a seven-year deal. In addition to providing some support for reducing costs in our health system over time, the agreement provides a series of pay increases for doctors, it provides stability over a seven-year period, and most importantly it recognizes the Alberta Medical Association as the representative body for physicians in our province.

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, there is some skepticism that this deal is as good as it looks. I'll quote a doctor in my constituency who said to me last night: the proof of the pudding is in the eating. Is this pudding still going to taste good after April 22?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe the president of the Alberta Medical Association has made it clear in his statements to the media that he is indeed very excited about this deal and what it can mean for Alberta's doctors. He has indicated, obviously, his recommendation for it. He has signed the deal. He has talked, I think very eloquently, about the opportunities for partnership between government, the Alberta Medical Association, and Alberta Health Services to do what we all want to do, and that's to make the health care system works better for patients.

Ms Jansen: My final question, Mr. Speaker. Is there anything in this agreement that assures Albertans that the government and the doctors are on the same page when it comes to primary care?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the memorandum of understanding does speak extensively to primary care. It talks about a partnership between government and the AMA to further develop primary care across the province. That work had been ongoing but had yet to be recognized in a formal agreement. I'm very pleased to see it there. All Albertans want to have the opportunity for access to a family doctor and to other professionals that work with doctors to provide everyone with a home in our health care system.

Compensation for Pharmacy Services

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, yesterday this Health minister announced that he had given up on his failed strategy of fighting with our hard-working docs and picked up the phone, called the head of AMA, and he struck a deal. Now, I could congratulate the Health minister if this was the only part of his portfolio that he was messing up. My question is to the minister. Now that he has seen that taking an arrogant I-know-better-than-anyone-else attitude doesn't work, will he pick up the phone and call the head of the Pharmacists Association and fix his ill-conceived plan for generic drugs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is hard to know how to reply sometimes to questions as they're put in this House. What I can say is that the credit for the hard-won memorandum of understanding that was announced yesterday belongs to the government, it belongs to the Alberta Medical Association, and, most importantly, it belongs to doctors and patients across the province who worked hard to help us find a way to make this deal possible. This is arguably one of the most important agreements with a medical association in the country in recent years. It provides the need for no further negotiation on issues such as the relationship between government and the AMA. It is what we have sought to provide.

Mrs. Forsyth: Let's be clear, Mr. Speaker. The credit goes to the hard-working doctors in this province.

Given that this Health minister says that he wants to lower generic drug prices and given that not just one but two major generic drug companies have now raised their prices on dozens of medications, will he admit that his plan is failing and it is leading to higher, not lower, drug prices for Albertans?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is a choice that the hon. member needs to make, and I guess the choice is: does she want to be on the side of large drug manufacturers who sell to 60 to 70 countries around the world, or does she want to be on the side of taxpayers and patients and pharmacists in this province who not only want lower drug prices but want their pharmacists to be recognized as full professionals and as partners in the health care team? The policy that we have outlined with respect to reducing generic drug prices delivers on the value side. It also delivers for pharmacists and patients in terms of better health care.

Mrs. Forsyth: Let's be clear, Minister. We're on the side of patients, and your ill-conceived plan is going to screw them.

Given that these two major drug companies, Teva and Apotex, have generally refused to meet the government's across-the-board 18 per cent price and given that Alberta Health has had to relist unavailable drugs like penicillin at a higher price, will the minister admit that his Fred-icare plan is a failure and scrap it?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member would benefit from some better research. In fact, on April 1 in response to a pan-Canadian decision by all provinces to set the price for our six top-volume generic drugs at 18 per cent, I'm pleased to report to this House that the manufacturers have met the 18 per cent price quotation on those six drugs. With the top 20 generic drugs in this province available in New Zealand and Australia at $30 million to $40 million less than the 18 per cent that we're prepared to pay, I have to wonder whose side this hon. member is really on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Recycling of Small Appliances

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta was the first jurisdiction in North America to institute a recycling program for electronic items. However, there is still a considerable list of items that are not yet recyclable such as small appliances like toasters. In fact, approximately 13 tonnes a day of ineligible electronic items end up in garbage trucks bound for landfills. My question is to the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. Given that certain appliances are recyclable under the existing electronics recycling program, why do we not expand that program to encompass a broader range of electronic items?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Alberta we're pretty excited and proud of the work that's happened to date on recycling, and we're proud of the work that the Alberta Recycling Management Authority has done. Quite frankly, Albertans and municipalities are asking us exactly what this hon. member is asking, a very good question. When are we going to add more items with regard to recycling? Albertans want to do the right thing. We've asked ARMA, the Alberta Recycling Management Authority, to go back and consult with Albertans so that we can do what they would like us to do.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: when can my constituents and all Albertans expect an answer from ARMA on this important initiative?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's important for Albertans to have the opportunity to give us input through ARMA about the kind of additional items they would like us to include. We've had some input with regard to things like toasters, irons, and other household items. We've asked them to go out and ask Albertans what they want to do – that's their job as an arm's-length agency – and to come back to us sometime within this year, when they've done that work, so that we can then review what Albertans have told us and make sure that not only do we have an outstanding program now and lead across the nation but that we continue to do that as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: do you have any idea what the costs might be for this expanded program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the recycling programs only cover the costs that are needed. Quite frankly, ARMA has done a very good job over the years of actually reducing costs. Those costs are kept to a minimum because what we want to do is incent Albertans to recycle and to reuse. So the costs are only to cover operations.

The Speaker: Any further questions about costs can be addressed in estimates today because I think that department is up later.

Let us move on to Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

PDD Funding

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities still doesn't get it. A budget-imposed revolution in PDD programming is being imposed without adequate time and without respecting the people most affected. This government refuses to listen to those living the experience, relying on his staff to make arbitrary and potentially harmful decisions. Shockingly, this minister gives them three months to adjust to dramatic changes in their care and quality of life. When will this minister work with the volunteer sector and develop a plan and a budget process that respects and harnesses the expertise of those receiving the services and doing the work?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that the changes that we're planning to make this year have been talked about for years. They were made in consultation with stakeholders, user groups out there, and my staff. I hope the hon. member would support that. We believe that the time is right. We believe that we're implementing best practices. We're going to move forward, and we will continue to work with stakeholders and interest groups in doing so.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's in stark contrast to what the people on the floor are saying, even at your public meeting yesterday. Will you reverse the cuts until the PDD community is working with a plan they helped to create?

Mr. Oberle: I'll say again that the plans that we have for transformational change in the persons with developmental disabilities program have been made in consultation with stakeholders and interest groups. Mr. Speaker, we're going to keep moving ahead.

Dr. Swann: Transformational change. Will you at least take a step back and delay the July 1 implementation date?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, we will take a step forward and provide the care that is right for persons with developmental disabilities. I'll say again that we will continue to work with stakeholders and interest groups in doing so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Collective Bargaining with Teachers

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's deal for Alberta's doctors saw them receive $68 million in cash. This $68 million payout – fair enough – to the Alberta Medical Association represents more than a 2 per cent increase for doctors. In 2014-15 doctors will receive a 2.5 per cent increase while the teachers get zero per cent. My question is to the Education minister. Why is this government giving raises to doctors but not to teachers?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, this deal is great for doctors and great for patients, and the teachers' deal is great for teachers and great for students. It's consistent with the doctors' deal. It's consistent with what our Finance minister came out with in the third quarter with respect to freezing the public sector and reducing the size of our opted out in our management by 10 per cent. There is in all those deals three years of zeros. Within every deal there are some nuances, and the $68 million is one with the doctors, but certainly there are similar nuances with the teachers' deal and certain top-ups, including a bonus of 1 per cent in the fourth year.

Mr. Eggen: Well, sometimes those zeros exist in different places and sometimes in the distant past.

Given that the doctors receive a 2.5 per cent increase at the start of next year and assurances as well that they will have a greater role in the development of Alberta's primary care – fair enough – and given that the parade of broken PC education promises, however, sees teachers being asked to accept a freeze of their wages, school improvement programs being cut, school boards predicting layoffs, this from a government that promised stable, predictable funding for our schools, my question again to the Education minister: why is this government willing to give a fair deal to doctors but not so much to teachers?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure how the math adds up over there, but three zeros on my left hand and three zeros on my right hand seems to be pretty balanced to me. If you want to argue about which year it is or what year it starts and what year it ends, we can get into those semantics, but both of these deals are three zeros. Certainly, the doctors are good partners in the health system, and the minister has recognized that. Some of the things that we put in the teachers' deal with respect to the teacher development committee, funding a province-wide study on workload: all those things are nuances that are important for teachers, good for teachers, and at the end of the day good for our students.

The Speaker: Hon. members from the Wildrose and the Liberals, please keep the conversations out in the hallways. Don't bring them in here right now. It's just disruptive, and it's not necessary. Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that these broken promises to Alberta's teachers and students will result in fewer teachers and larger class sizes and given that the minister is trying to off-load the cost of this government's broken promises straight onto teachers, school boards, and parents, my question is again to the minister. Are Alberta's schools and teachers really such a low priority that he can make significant cuts, break promises, and then try to force a bad deal onto teachers?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I have to give a lot of credit to the ATA and the school boards that worked very hard on this deal for close to three years. At the end of that, this deal is in line with what we're doing in health care, it's in line with what we're doing with the entire public sector, and it is good for kids. At the end of the day that's what's important.

This government is moving forward under this Premier to fulfilling a lot of the promises we made, including the $107 million that went back into education, including the Education Act that was passed, including getting a deal done with teachers, including getting 120 capital projects out the door, which we're working on. The PATs and the full-day K is coming. Stay tuned.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Calgary-Hawkwood.

Carbon Offset Verification Process

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta created one of the first carbon offset markets. This market makes up more than half of Alberta's greenhouse gas reduction claims. Our Premier boasts about this market internationally. The world is watching. Now we find out that companies selling carbon offsets are not delivering on these contracts. Failure to deliver on contracts in any market is a criminal offence. When will this government clamp down and hold these fraudulent companies accountable?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad the hon. member raised this issue because that just proves that our process is working in Alberta. We have an audit process for the offset credits, and we catch those that fall through the cracks. The process and the system are working. We have 34 offset protocols, and he is speaking of one of the 34 protocols, to which we continue to make improvements, with the Auditor General's advice.

Mr. Anglin: Sixty per cent failure.

Given that the Auditor General twice reported, once in 2009 and once again in 2011, that there are significant credibility issues with the market verification process and given that one company released all its clients from its contractual obligations because the verification process is in shambles, when will this government make the process transparent, protect the market, and hold these fraudulent companies accountable?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Quite frankly, we are working with the Auditor General and taking the advice of the Auditor General. We have made significant changes to the tillage offset program. That's the one offset the member is talking about. We have done a detailed rewrite of the tillage protocol. We have changes to the verification guidelines and processes, extensive outreach and communication with the offset community and project developers and regulated industry. We are working with the Auditor General to improve this system. It's a new system in Alberta, and we're making the changes that need to be made.

Mr. Anglin: Given that Alberta agriculture's website is posting a warning not to do business with a certain company selling carbon offsets because they're defaulting on their contracts and they actually suggest farmers should seek legal counsel, given that the same company is still registered on the ESRD's registry website selling bogus carbon contracts and defaulting on those contracts, can the Minister of ESRD – I don't know – Agriculture, Justice, someone get their head out of the sand and do something about this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This hon. member likes to talk about one offset out of the 34 that isn't working, but if I could, I'd like to talk about the other 33 offsets. Qualification protocol for energy efficiency: eight projects, 920,000 tonnes reduced. Direct reductions of changes for forest harvesting: one project, 600,000 tonnes reduced. Acid gas injection: nine projects, over a million tonnes reduced. Enhanced oil recovery: seven projects, 1.7 million tonnes reduced. Landfill gas capture: two projects, 657 tonnes reduced.

Mr. Speaker, I'm only halfway through. I could go on and on. This is what Alberta does in this system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, followed by Little Bow.

Cultural Sensitivity in the Delivery of Services

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In one of my recent community consultation workshops held in Calgary, a passionate young immigrant mother shared a touching story that almost brought our audience to tears. It was a story of her struggle in meeting the needs of her disabled children on top of the additional language and cultural barriers of her family. It compounded the complexity of the issues that she's struggling with. She was in a state of despair and literally crying for help. Apparently, in her struggle she was not alone. Our current support system in this area lacks capacity to provide culturally sensitive services to families with disabilities. To the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities: what is your department prepared to do to address this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and through you I'd like to thank that hon. member for the question and for his advocacy for constituents. We have in the department indeed heard of occasions from parents or caregivers where services provided to children with disabilities were not in accordance with their cultural needs, including the language of origin. We're working on that through partnerships with cultural agencies and with providing training. For example, we now provide cultural awareness training to our family supports for children with disabilities programs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given the high volume of new immigrants coming to our province year after year, how do you plan on collaborating, with your services working with immigrant-serving agencies to provide comprehensive, sensitive services in this area?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We work with hundreds of community partners and agencies in the province, including agencies that provide services for immigrants and support to new families in our province, to address specific needs. For example, we're currently collaborating with the Chinese community in Calgary to build cultural understanding for our own staff, not just to train our own staff but to increase the number of Chinese nationals that are involved in services and service provision in our province.

Mr. Luan: Thank you. That's very encouraging.

A last but very specific question. In this year's budget a 4 per cent funding increase has been given to the family support for children with disabilities program. My question to the same associate minister: will you designate a portion of that increased funding to address the cultural competency issue?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, what we find in this is that every community and every situation is different, and I'm not prepared to provide hard targets. We do, however, provide flexibility to our agencies in how they use that funding. We already know that they make every effort to tailor their services in a culturally appropriate manner and provide language training and cultural awareness training directly to their staff, and we'll continue to encourage that to happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Support for Cattle Producers

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. Over the last year the cattle industry has taken quite a hit, and now there are rumblings that the loan guarantee program is being eliminated in this year's back-in-debt budget. Can the minister please guarantee Alberta cattle feeders that this program will not be pulled now or in future budgets under his time as agriculture minister?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. member for the question. Of course, I look forward to my estimates coming up on Monday. I know the hon. member will be there, and we can have a fulsome conversation about that and other issues then. But for now I'll just say that there are currently no plans to make changes to this 70-year-old program, which has done great things for beef producers in the province, and we expect it will continue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I've received many phone calls on the recent changes to the AgriStability program, can the minister please explain to this House how these changes are going to affect the ranchers and commit to engaging the industry on this information?

Mr. Olson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I spent a good part of my summer last year out consulting with producers, including cattle producers, and one thing that I heard and one thing that I think ministers are hearing across the country is that there's an important need to change our focus a little bit towards research, innovation, and market development. That's what the Growing Forward 2 agreement, which was just recently signed, has done. However, there's also a strong recommitment to support what exists and develop new insurance programs, including livestock price insurance programs, in Alberta and elsewhere.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is your department doing to promote the future of the cattle industry in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjections]
Hon. members, the minister has the floor.

Mr. Olson: I'd like to thank the member for the question. I mean that sincerely because agriculture is a very important industry to Alberta, and any chance we get to talk about it – I know that he's passionate about it, and so am I. Every day my department is working on all kinds of things to help cattle producers. I have a meeting right after this ends to talk to cattle producers. My department is very actively engaged in hearing what their concerns are, and we're trying to address them as we go.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Child Care Accreditation Funding

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The quality funding grant was put in place in 2003 to encourage child care programs to become involved in accreditation. This accreditation funding grant helped operators meet accreditation standards by offsetting the cost of toys, equipment, and programming resources. However, it was just announced that the quality funding grant would be eliminated as of April 1, 2013. This will put a great deal of pressure on the child care centres in my constituency of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, where people pay up to $400 per month more than Edmonton or Calgary. To the Minister of Human Services: can the minister explain the rationale behind the change to the way child care centres are funded in my constituency?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, as the hon. member indicated, the grant was put in place in 2003 to encourage daycares and day home operators to move to a level of accreditation that would seem to be appropriate for the children in our province that are in child care. In fact, we've been very successful in that. We have over 97 per cent of the daycares and 87 per cent of the out of school care programs seeking or having already obtained that accreditation. So the program has been successful. It was never intended to be a permanent grant. Daycares are expected to continue to maintain the level of accreditation. We wanted to move them there, and we have.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that these child care centres need to maintain that accreditation, how can they continue to maintain it if they don't have this funding incentive?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. With every business, of course, they have to invest in themselves and their programs and their equipment, but we continue to invest in Alberta's children as we do wage top-ups up to $6.62 an hour for accredited staff. We provide professional development for staff, a thousand dollars per year. We do a staff attraction incentive allowance up to $5,000 over two years to help daycares attain accredited staff and keep accredited staff and keep them current. We're focusing on the staff for the children, and we expect the daycares to invest in maintaining the quality of their equipment.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is to the same minister. Is there any other assistance available for these programs to offset the staffing challenges that we constantly face in Wood Buffalo?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, in the north and particularly in the Wood Buffalo area there are higher costs, and to compensate for higher costs of living in that region, on top of the funding that I mentioned, we provide a northern allowance of $1,040 per month for child care staff working in daycares, out of school cares, and family day home agencies in the Fort McMurray region, and approved family day home providers receive $208 per month. Staff also get an additional $500 per year to support professional development for a total of $1,500 per year. We recognize the additional costs in that area. We're supporting those costs and those individuals. It's critical that we maintain the accreditation of those daycare spaces, not just in Fort McMurray and Wood Buffalo but all across the province, and we will continue to do that.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 30 seconds from now we will resume with private members' statements, beginning with Calgary-Hawkwood and following up with whoever is next.

Members' Statements (continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Postgraduate Internships

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real honour to address you again. As Albertans we can be so proud of having world-class postsecondary institutions in our province that provide our youth with the necessary skills and the knowledge to prepare them to succeed in the real world. We're also truly blessed to have great teachers and professors who dedicate their lives to the education of our children. For that, I am extremely thankful.

Mr. Speaker, as important as our primary school system is, I believe there is another important aspect to our education that is not given the credit or exposure that it deserves. That is the internship programs that give our students opportunities to apply their learning in real-life experiences. Through these opportunities recent university graduates and current students are given the chance to showcase their talents in the work setting and gain first-hand practical experiences which are second to none.

Here in Alberta I'm very proud to say that our government has established numerous programs in this area. One such is called the Washington Center-Alberta internship partnership. Funded in part by our government, this program gives students and recent graduates the opportunity to work in Washington, DC, at prestigious institutions such as the United States Senate, the Washington Post, and the United States Department of the Treasury.

It is my hope that we can continue to promote and maintain such internships to assist in the professional development of our young adults. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Servants Anonymous Society of Calgary

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a result of the imaginary bitumen bubble, the unicorn of Alberta politics, this government has backed away from virtually all of its election promises. An unfortunate casualty of this unicorn bubble was the funding for safe communities, promised on page 5 of the PC election platform. The Servants Anonymous facilitated exit, or SAFE, house in Calgary is facing imminent closure on June 30 as a result of this government's misguided priorities. This program provides comprehensive long-term services for women and their children looking to exit prostitution, human trafficking, and sexual exploitation. To date it has helped 176 women, each one somebody's daughter, somebody's sister, somebody's loved one, escape the sex trade and recover from the inherent violence and trauma inflicted upon them.

The cost to taxpayers of supporting these women was $211,000 a year, roughly the same as just one member of the Premier's ever-growing communications staff. The return on investment is phenomenal. For every $1 invested in SAFE house, it saved taxpayers $8 in justice, health, and other social costs. The minister said that funding was always temporary and part of a pilot program, Mr. Speaker, so correct me if I'm wrong here. If pilot programs are working, we should keep them. That's the point of pilot programs. You scrap the ones that don't work, and you keep the ones that do. This one was working. It received referrals from every city in the province. It is working closely with various police forces to facilitate these exits.

Mr. Speaker, when courageous women make the decision to flee, their government should be there to support them. Instead, this government has turned their backs on them, perpetrating the same betrayal they live through daily and are trying to escape. This decision is ignorant, cold, and just plain wrong, but it's not too late to change. I implore the government and the members opposite to reconsider.

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am very pleased to present part 2 of the pheasant release sustainability program petition. With this group of 516 signatures we now have over a thousand signatures from Albertans who are petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to take the necessary measures, including the introduction of proposed amendments to existing legislation, to ensure the preservation and enhancement of the Pheasant Release Program, which has been an important part of Alberta's hunting tradition, heritage and culture for over 65 years.

The Speaker: Hon. member, can I assume that was vetted past Parliamentary Counsel as to form?

Mrs. Jablonski: Correct. It has been reviewed and approved in format by Parliamentary Counsel.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of tablings here this afternoon. I have, first of all, 50 or more copies of some e-mail submissions that have been sent to the Premier and CCed to me as well in regard to the Michener Centre. Submissions like these clearly show that to keep open the Michener Centre is a very large priority for Albertans, and the government is out of touch with their suggestions that they would do otherwise.

The second tabling I have is the appropriate amount of copies of e-mail submissions that were made to our budget tour, the NDP budget tour, which visited seven cities in February. We have people making very pointed comments in regard to restoring funding to health care facilities and especially long-term care facilities, again showing how this budget is a broken-promises budget, and Albertans don't accept it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, followed by Calgary-Buffalo, Cardston-Taber-Warner, and Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the requisite number of copies of the expenses related to the health executive who has been discussed in question period today, including the receipts paid to the Mayo Clinic in addition to numerous lunches, dinners, snacks, and coffees, accommodation at the Rochester Marriott as well as the airport transfers, for a total in excess of $7,000.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first is from Jim and Barbara Steel, and they are very concerned about changes to the aids to daily living program for Albertans needing oxygen and respiratory services. They're worried about rising costs and less service due to these changes.

My second tabling is from Ms Aileen Jang, a pharmacist concerned about the changes to the generic drug prices and the pharmacy changes that are coming down the pike.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, I understand you have six separate tablings.

Mr. Bikman: I do.

The Speaker: Can you do them all at once, please?

Mr. Bikman: I'll be quick.

The Speaker: Okay.

2:50

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have an excellent epistle here from Taria Gouw, a pharmacist in her hometown of Bow Island, chronicling the problems being created by the Minister of Health's changes to generic drug pricing. It's recommended reading. I gave it five stars.

Secondly, from Wayne Smith, a pharmacist in Raymond, on what he perceives as evidence of misinformation and incompetence with regard to the generic drug pricing.

From Dennis Strong from Wood's Dispensary in Lethbridge, posing 12 questions on pharmacy in Alberta.

I have the Alberta Pharmacists Association March 27 fact sheet about the impact of Alberta generic price reductions. It's sort of a myth-and-facts comparison, quite fascinating.

From grandparents Janny and Joop Harthoorn from Coaldale about the abrupt termination of funding of plant operation and maintenance at two independent schools.

From Raymond irrigation district general manager Gordon ZoBell, providing more information on Crown lands that will be protected by the requested main canal spillway that we all feel is so important in my area of southern Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of tablings with regard to little Brooke Aubuchon, whom we talked about yesterday. The five-year-old child is dying from Batten disease. There is no cure or treatment for Batten disease. "Ultimately, Batten disease children become blind, bedridden, and demented . . . [and] the disease often claims the very young." The article goes on to talk about her struggle, about the financial challenges her family faces, and goes on to state that the provincial government will not help the family with the costs to go to New York, as stated by Bart Johnson, the press secretary for the Minister of Health. I would encourage everybody to read it because clearly she's not a health executive.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Lukaszuk, Deputy Premier and Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education, pursuant to the Alberta Economic Development Authority Act the Alberta Economic Development Authority activity report 2012.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we now have a point of order, which the hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition raised around 1:40 p.m. I'm going to ask him to elaborate now, probably starting with his citation and carrying on from there.

Point of Order

Speaking Rotation in Estimates Consideration

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, my initial citation comes from Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms on page 4. It is Content and Sources of Parliamentary Procedure. Under section 3, the Constitution Act, it says:

The whole concept of the parliamentary Question Period depends on the tradition that the Cabinet is willing to submit its conduct of public affairs to the scrutiny of the Opposition on a regular basis.

Then it goes on to say:

More tentative are such traditional features as respect for the rights of the minority, which precludes a Government from using to excess the extensive powers that it has to limit debate or to proceed in what the public and the Opposition might interpret as unorthodox ways.

That's my initial citation for this, Mr. Speaker.

Let me explain the problem. The problem is that in the consideration of estimates by the three standing committees the chairs of the committees are interpreting the rules, particularly the allocation of time for the opposition, in different ways. That is why I am raising it here instead of in the committees. It's a question, first of all, of consistency, but most important to us are the ways that sometimes limit the ability of the opposition to do their job, which is to have scrutiny over the government's estimates and to ask questions as they stand.

Now, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity chairs Resource Stewardship, and the rules that she's following in terms of the sequence basically go through the opposition parties, followed by the government member, but then have a government member, then an Official Opposition member, then a government member, then I think Official Opposition again, then a government member, then the third party, then a government member, then the fourth party. So there's a very high participation of government members in the questioning of the estimates, and in that particular format the opposition gets less time to ask its questions than traditionally.

Now, the Member for Calgary-East chairs Economic Future, and his rotation is different. It goes: a government member, Official Opposition, then third party, then fourth party, then government member, and then allows all members equal opportunity. He allows in the second half an additional 20-minute period for the Official Opposition but not for the other opposition parties. I have the Blues from the meeting last night indicating that process.

As far as I'm aware, the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, who chairs Families and Communities, has the rotation that is more standard: the first hour to the Official Opposition, 20 minutes to the third party, 20 minutes to the fourth party, a government member 20 minutes, and then each party in turn has a chance.

Ms Notley: No.

Mr. Mason: No. I'm corrected on that.

Ms Notley: Then it's back and forth, government and opposition.

Mr. Mason: Then it's back and forth, government and opposition.

We have different procedures in each committee, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to the role of the opposition in terms of estimates, I would argue that this is not something that should be left to the discretion of individual chairs to decide in their own way how the questioning ought to proceed. In my view, it ought to be agreed upon, preferably by the House leaders, to have a systematic rotation that's used uniformly that respects the role of the opposition in providing scrutiny and respects the roles of all opposition parties in particular.

I have some other citations. Under House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, at page 819, it says:

The direct control of national finance has been referred to as the "great task of modern parliamentary government." That control is exercised at two levels. First, Parliament must assent to all legislative measures which implement public policy and the House of Commons authorizes both the amounts and objects or destination of all public expenditures.

At page 820:

The basic components of parliamentary financial procedure may be succinctly described as follows:

Consolidated Revenue Fund . . .

Royal Recommendation . . .

Supply: the process by which the government submits its projected annual expenditures (the estimates) for parliamentary approval.

Borrowing authority . . .

Ways and means . . .

Public Accounts . . .

At page 831 House of Commons recognizes two contradictory principles: that the government is entitled to get its financial legislation through Parliament; and that the opposition is entitled to identify, draw attention to, delay, and debate, items that it feels need attention and discussion.

It's that area that I think the opposition has been prevented in some cases from doing.

Mr. Speaker, I've been advised by my House leader that all opposition House leaders felt that they had agreed to something different than is currently happening. Overall, the outcome is that the opposition now has less time to scrutinize government expenditures and to ask questions than they have in previous years.

I get back to the basic point that I made at the beginning, from page 4 of Beauchesne's, which is respect for the rights of the minority, which precludes a Government from using to excess the extensive powers that it has to limit debate or to proceed in what the public and the Opposition might interpret as unorthodox ways.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that you rule on two things. First of all, the chairs of the committees must have a uniform system of rotation for the questions, and that rotation must include adequate time for all opposition parties to ask questions with respect to this. In some cases, for those departments where the shortest amount of time has been allocated, an opposition member might have seven minutes to ask their questions and in terms of time may not get another opportunity to ask questions. That's far from satisfactory, and I believe that it interferes with the ability of the opposition, particularly the smaller opposition parties, to do their job.

Thank you.

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. House leader for the Alberta Liberals.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We are trying a slightly different version of the estimates this year. The government has been quite insistent that we move away from a Committee of Supply situation, where the estimates are debated here in the House and using a common system there. We have moved into debating the estimates in committees, in this particular case into debating all of the estimates in the legislative policy committees.

We, the three House leaders, believed that we had an understanding of what the rotation would be. That has not come to fruition. I will note that there are a number of cases where we, the Assembly, or indeed possibly in committee decide the way we want to conduct our business. That trumps what we find in the supposedly higher orders of parliamentary procedure, for example Beauchesne and parliamentary procedure in the House of Commons. There are a number of places where that happens. We disagree with what they're saying, but it's our rules, and we get to play by them when we all agree. That happens in a couple of different cases I'll just raise.

Minority reports are an example. We allow them. The House of Commons wouldn't or not in the same way. In the House of Commons they allow consideration of estimates. In the committees we don't. There are two examples of where we've written our own rules, and we agree to abide by them. Where our standing rules are silent, we default to these higher authorities in trying to figure out how to conduct our business.

Now, what's happened is that in our standing orders under – oh, my God, I've moved my page. Sorry. I had it marked, and now I'm going to be fishing.

An Hon. Member: Page 35?

Ms Blakeman: No. I'm looking under the delegation to the policy committees and how the rotation will work, so I think that's going to turn up on . . .

Mr. Hancock: Page 37, 59.01(6).

Ms Blakeman: At 59.01(6). Thank you. That's it. That's really good. Thank you very much, Government House Leader.

We have very specifically set out how we will do it in the first three hours of debate or slightly less than the first three hours, a very specific rotation. At the end of that it says, "Any Member may speak thereafter," which would be 59.01(6)(f). What that doesn't give us is the rotation of any member. What's happened is that we could have the designated critic sitting in the committee. They have been substituted in in order to have voice and vote and the ability to move motions, and they're recognized, but then in the next go-round any member can and has been recognized as being another member of that particular party but not the critic themselves.

What we're missing here is the specificity on how the rotation goes. I would argue that the rotation should repeat the rotation that's already agreed to. We would go back to a specified amount of time for the Official Opposition party, a shorter amount for the third and fourth parties. That's not what's happening. As my colleague has pointed out, what we have is an inconsistency between the three committees, and everybody is doing it differently.

Now, there is often argument in this House about the privilege and respect due to opposition members and the role they hold, that is specific to opposition as compared to government back-benchers. I have been reviewing that, Mr. Speaker, and I note that in the House of Commons it quite specifically recognizes the importance of the opposition in holding the government to account and specifically states certain committees of which they will be the chair. I think that shows us – well, it definitely demonstrates the holding to account of the government by the Official Opposition, specifically around money.

Of the four committees, the Standing Committee on Public Accounts is example number one. We follow that in this particular Assembly because the chairperson of Public Accounts is a member of the Official Opposition. The Parliament adds in the Standing Committee on the Status of Women, the Standing Committee on Access to Information, and, Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Government Operations and Estimates, so the committee to which the estimates are referred in our House of Commons, and that is also chaired by a member of the Official Opposition, which underlines again the importance and special duty that opposition members have to hold the government to account when it comes to estimates and public accounts.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, on pages 1036 and 1037 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice the standing orders specify that the chair is a member of the Official Opposition, the vice-chair is a member of government, and the second vice-chair is a member of another opposition party. That's how important it is for opposition members to hold the government to account with its past financial obligations in public accounts and future by way of estimates.

The other thing I find very interesting, Mr. Speaker, appears on page 1030, which is about the duties and powers of chairs, vice-chairs, and acting chairs. Now, it says that chairs are very important. In fact, when there is not a chairperson available for a committee, no business is done until there's a chairperson that is in place. I note that they must follow what the committee has decided or what has been referred to them from the House. Specifically, on page 1030 under procedural responsibilities it says that they, meaning the chairs, "ensure that any rules established by the committee" – I'll underline that and put my emphasis on it – "including those on the apportioning of speaking time, are respected."

Now, we did not vote in the committees on what the apportioning would be. That partial instruction – and I say that it's partial – came from the House when they approved the changes to the standing orders. It is partial because it does not give us the second rotation or part 2 or the second at-bat or however you want to describe it. We have a new system of doing things this year, where we expanded the amount of time that was assigned to certain ministries, and that was agreed upon. Those ministries are, for the most part, getting six hours, a three-hour piece and a three-hour piece.

We have a designation available in our standing orders that sets out the rotation for part 1, for the first section, and that is what appears on pages 36 and 37 in Standing Order 59.01(6) and everything that follows. You've got the minister for 10 minutes, the Official Opposition for an hour, 20 minutes for the third party, 20 minutes for the fourth party, 20 minutes for the government members, and then this very unhelpful part (f), "any Member may speak thereafter." Now, what we don't have here is a specific rotation, and that is our complaint in this particular case. We've been given not enough information to make decisions on it, and unfortunately the chairs of the committees have also not been provided with adequate information and instruction to be able to carry out their duties.

As a result, we've got three different chairs with three different decisions, we're asking people to operate in an inconsistent manner between the committees, and we have, I believe, abdicated our responsibility to recognize and uphold the particular duties that opposition members have to hold the government to account, which I believe I have explained through the quotations that I've already given you.

We are asking – and I will echo my colleague the leader of the fourth party and the NDP caucus – that this should be resolved, that all parties should be consistent, and I believe that the rotation should go back and repeat the rotation that we've already agreed on: more time for the Official Opposition and a pro-rated amount of time for the third-party and fourth-party oppositions, ditto for the government members. Then we can start that rotation over again.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to run through that. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to bring those points to you.

Mr. Anderson: Well, what more can be said after a very, very thorough analysis? I concur and agree with the analyses both by the New Democratic leader as well as the Member for Edmonton-Centre, the House leader for the Liberals. I won't go over those same points, but I do want to raise a couple of brief points in that it has become definitely, in my view, below the standards of what we should practise in this House to have three different sets of rules for these committees that are discussing the budget estimates. I think that's just common sense. It's very clear that we should have the same set of rules when we're discussing the budget and the budget estimates. I think that makes sense. Everyone is on the same page. Everyone knows what's coming. Everyone can prepare.

I remember that in the first round, before we even knew what the chairs were going to do, we prepared as if we were going to do as the House leader for the Liberals said, that we would go Official Opposition, third party, fourth party, government member, Official Opposition, third party, fourth party, government member, and we'd go like that. So we prepared accordingly, only to have that not be the case when we got there.

This has become a bone of contention. Again, I think our House can do better. We can set a higher standard for fairness and consistency because it looks very arbitrary right now, and it certainly is not serving the interests of the public. I mean, I think we can see that questions from the opposition side are, shall we put it, mildly more probing than ones from the government side. [interjections] I know some might take exception to that, but the point is that our job as the Official Opposition and the third and fourth parties is to hold the government to account, specifically on issues of money, and we should have that.

Now, the second point is with regard to the agreement that we thought was made. I'm not going to undermine the character of the Government House Leader in any way, shape, or form. I'm going to say that there was a misunderstanding there. But it was very clearly my understanding as well as that of the other two members, as we discussed, that indeed we had agreed to an hour for the Official Opposition after 10 minutes for the government, followed by 20 minutes for the third and then the fourth parties and the government, and then it would switch to 10 minutes in the same order – Wildrose, Liberal, ND, government, and so forth – and around, around, around we go. That's what all three of us thought we had agreed to.

The reason that we remember the conversation is because the Official Opposition actually requested that in the second three-hour block for some of these larger ministries, Mr. Speaker, we would get either another hour or another half an hour at the very least, and then it would be pro-rated for the third and fourth parties so that we could do our jobs as Official Opposition for the next three hours. That was said no to, and then my recollection is that we agreed it would just be 10 minutes in the same order.

However, I'm absolutely going to give the benefit of the doubt to the Government House Leader that there was a miscommunication there. So we'll need to do a better job in making sure that as we go forward, we have a clear written understanding of what was agreed to because it was very, very frustrating on that first night to hear something different.

There were several allusions to Public Accounts and how we conduct things in Public Accounts. Let's be clear. The government members control the Public Accounts Committee. As the Official Opposition House Leader and the Finance critic I'm the chair of that committee, but there are more government members on that committee. When we were negotiating the time slots for Public Accounts, I was really, frankly, limited on what I could do. I had to do something that the government members would agree to. There were negotiations in that regard. I certainly put on the table, first, that the Official Opposition should have more time. However, we came through negotiation to an agreement that everybody could live with and, more importantly, that the government majority could live with.

In the Public Accounts Committee the government actually goes first. That, I think, could be improved upon somewhat, but that, again, was part of the negotiation. The government goes first, followed by the Wildrose, and actually the government gets the most time. They get exactly half of the time. The Wildrose gets a quarter of the time, and the last quarter is split between the ND and Liberal caucuses. Could there be improvements there? Yeah, but that will be up to the government majority because the government majority rules on that committee.

I do not think we should take Public Accounts as some sort of precedent on how these other committees should be run. That's a separate negotiation, and it's a separate committee, and it's for a separate purpose. Public Accounts is an important committee, but of course going over the budget estimates is critical. It's a critical part of the process, and it should be treated as a separate vehicle from any other committee of the House, I would say. I think it's very important that we not think that that should be the precedent.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would also ask that a process be outlined for making sure that we have one set of rules that we can all prepare for for the remainder of the estimates period. Then perhaps we House leaders can get together and make sure that that's clear for the next round next year so that we have uniform rules and that within those rules for the remaining time here adequate time is given in the rotation to the opposition parties so that they have the majority of time necessary and needed to do their job, which is to hold the government accountable.

A final point, Mr. Speaker. There's some discussion that I hear at some of these committees that the opposition should feel very fortunate and very warm and fuzzy inside and grateful to the government for the extra three hours given to some of the larger ministries. I personally think that that's a little overboard. To examine the Health estimates, for example, in three hours, with the opposition getting roughly half the time during that three hours to examine a $17 billion Health budget and so forth, and some of the larger ministries is frankly a little bit insane. I'm glad that we've extended it to a more reasonable time, but the problem is that with the new rotation it works out that actually the opposition gets very little more time if at all in some cases. It's certainly less as a proportion of the total time because of the way that they've done the rotation in the second three hours.

Again, I would say that that argument is a red herring, and it doesn't make a whole lot of sense. Our job is to hold the government accountable. We should have the time to do so.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I believe that it is necessary for me to speak up at this point as a member of one of these committees and as a member of the government. I believe that it is my right as an MLA to speak on behalf of my constituents and to ask questions at these very important meetings. Now, unfortunately, there are 12 members of the government caucus that are a part of this committee. We are a part of that committee, okay? If in those second three hours we do a rotation, nine of us get to speak. Only nine out of the 12 get to speak. As a private member I think that I do have the right. If we do change this, that does impact me and my ability to represent my constituents.

Thank you very much.

3:20

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, and I believe we have Calgary-Varsity and Calgary-Fish Creek, and at some point we're going to have to hear from the Government House Leader. This is getting a little bit long. Let's go very briefly here. We have a 3:30 main estimates meeting to get to, and I'd like to deal with this matter before then.

Briefly, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: I will be very brief because many of the points have already been made. I just want to as a House leader concur with my other House leader colleagues about our understanding with respect to how the second piece of the extended estimates was to unfold. Mr. Speaker, I ask you to consider this. Would we have asked for more time only to hand it over to the government? Clearly, the answer is no.

The long and the short of this is that if this is not resolved, the outcome is that under this new government with this new Premier in this new Assembly the opposition members will get significantly less time to address the budget debate. That is a problem for democracy, and that is a step backward from the process that we have engaged in over the previous four years. That is why it requires the attention of this whole Assembly for us to make a determination on whether or not that is the direction we want to go in.

As for the member who just spoke, I would just like to note that at no time does our caucus get anywhere close to nine opportunities to speak to the budget. Under no circumstances. We don't get to sit in caucus with the government and talk about the budget. That is why our parliamentary system sets up a different process for the opposition.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, do you have something new to add? Can you be very brief, please?

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I am the deputy chair of one of the committees, and I'm fortunate to be able to work with the chair of our committee, that is willing to work with the deputy chair of the committee. That's the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park. We established the rotating process of how we were going to conduct our business during the questions, and I think he needs to be commended for what we were able to work forward on at the beginning of the process, as we started.

What has been interesting to me is the fact that – I was quite taken aback – when I sat in some of the other committees, the process was different. I'm thinking: "Well, did we make up something? Were we out of sync, or maybe they were out of sync?" So I went to my House leader, and I said: maybe you can let me know how this is working. He reiterated that what the chair and I were doing for Families and Communities was the process that was originally agreed on with the House leader. It has worked out well. We've had no complaints from any of the members on our committee that I'm aware of.

You know, as a former member of the government who used to be able to go through the budget process – it gives the government members the opportunity to ask questions during the budget process as they're getting their budgets ready. Quite frankly, they also have the opportunity – and I used to have the opportunity – to go down and sit down with a particular minister and say: "You know, I'm uneasy about what we're establishing on this process. Maybe you can explain it, and we can talk." I think that's one of the nice things about being in government.

It's fascinating. When I listened to the Premier as she was running for the leadership, she talked about democracy, she talked about leadership, and she talked about how she was going to establish these committees and how she was going to do things differently in the committee process. We started to see some of that as we started this committee process. With the former member for Lethbridge-East we started strategizing on the priorities of the committee and the government in regard to what we were going to talk about. She's not there, and we miss her because we had started on how we were going to deal with mental health and things like that.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I think it's incumbent for all of the committees to run the same way. I think it's important for the government to carry through with what they've said that they were going to do, and that's in regard to democracy and giving people the ability to have the appropriate time. We're discussing tonight a $17 billion budget, and I have to agree with the House leader of the Wildrose that that's a ton of money to be only able to talk about it for a limited time. Amongst my colleagues on the committee we've decided how we are going to strategize that. I know the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park will have the same agreement as we started with.

This has to be fixed. It has to be the same for all of the committees. We're going into estimates at 3:30, as you've alluded to. We're going into estimates tonight. We have probably about 12 doctors that are going to be at the meeting tonight, that are wanting to hear what the Official Opposition has to say in regard to the budget process, so a ruling needs to be made.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Can we conclude, then, with the hon. Government House Leader on this matter? Then I'll have listened to everyone's concerns from all four parties, and I'll be prepared to make a ruling.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, you know, there's been a lot of discussion on this but very little on the actual point of order. I would submit first of all that there is no point of order. Standing Order 65(2)(b) is very clear. "The Chair [in the committee] shall maintain order in standing and special committees and shall decide all questions of order subject to an appeal to the committee." There's nothing in the standing orders about the speaking process. Standing Order 59.01(6)(f) says, "Any Member may speak thereafter." The order of speaking is then up to the chair, and if the committee doesn't like the way the chair is handling it, the committee can set that order. That's pretty clear in our standing orders. Nobody has overruled that. Nobody has changed that.

With all due respect to my House leader colleagues, there was no agreement. There obviously was a misunderstanding because each of the three people has come back and said: we thought we'd agreed. But I was very clear, I thought, in saying: no; we aren't going to start the rotation over again in the second three hours. We did not come to any conclusion with respect to the rotation. I went back and clearly checked my notes and other notes that were made at that meeting to be sure of that point. I don't think I've lost my faculties. I appreciate where the Opposition House Leader left it. There was clearly a misunderstanding, but on my part there was no agreement to change the normal rotation that we use with respect to this, and that is back and forth between opposition and government.

Now, I also went back, as I said I would, to the opposition House leaders when they pressed the point. I know you won't believe this, but I actually went back and looked at past committees over past years and confirmed that, in fact, the rotation of back and forth between an opposition questioning the government and then a private member on the government side questioning the government is exactly the way it's happened in committee before. I went back and read about five different committees to find that. I didn't read them all. I did a sampling.

Now, there have been a number of myths that have been put forward. One of those myths is that the custom is that we go through the rotation. That is a myth. We have not actually gone through that rotation.

Another myth is that we're taking away from the process, that we're changing the process away from a Committee of Supply process. This House over my 15 years has used about 15 different processes. We've always tried to find a better way to do it. Some of those processes have involved utilization of some departments coming into Committee of Supply. I think I can only remember about one year where we did most of them in Committee of Supply. Almost all of them have been in either A, B, C, D committees or two committees sitting in the evening or, you know, some form of committee process, including a Friday morning four-hour committee to recognize the designated departments. There have been many different processes, but all of them with the exception of maybe one year have involved committees of the House, not committees of the whole House but subcommittees of the House, hearing estimates. So it's a myth that we're moving it away from Committee of Supply.

One of the most important pieces to address here is the role of a member in the House. Previous Speakers, Mr. Speaker, your predecessors, have always upheld the importance of the individual member in the House being able to participate, and I would hope and trust that you will uphold that as well. Every member is elected to serve their constituents. Some of us have the privilege of being asked to also serve in government and to be members of Executive Council. All members of the House who are not in government and Executive Council have the duty and the obligation, the responsibility to serve their constituents by holding government to account in the Legislature. That is the fundamental and very elementary distinction between government and the Legislature.

3:30

We happen to be a parliamentary form of government, so the Executive Council actually sits in the House. To that extent, those of us who are privileged to serve as members of Executive Council and, therefore, of government do give up one of our roles, that of a private member holding government to account. Because we're members of government, we can't question ourselves, but no other member in the House is obliged to give up their responsibility to their constituents or their obligation to serve their constituents by questioning government and holding government to account.

Yes, private members have other opportunities to help set policy, help set direction. That's one of the privileges they get for being on the winning team, to put it bluntly. They get to participate in setting policy at a higher level, but they do not, by virtue of getting that additional responsibility and that additional opportunity, give up their responsibility to serve their constituents by holding government to account. There should be no suggestion that the opposition are the sole purveyors of truth and light in terms of holding government to account. In fact, it is an obligation of every private member.

Now, there is a recognition of the enhanced role of the opposition, as the hon. House leader of the third party indicated, chairing a committee. In our particular case chairing the Public Accounts Committee is done by members of the opposition. The fact of the matter is that we give the Official Opposition the leadoff role – when I say “we,” I mean the House, not the government – and the larger role at the front end of estimates in order to pursue their role as the Official Opposition and, obviously, the front-end role in question period. They have more questions than private members do to hold government to account in question period.

So there is a recognition of their role, but it's not an abdication of the total role to opposition, nor should it be, nor can it be in a parliamentary democracy. I would certainly want to refute any allegation or suggestion by the Opposition House Leader that their questions are mildly more probing. They're neither mild nor probing. [interjection] Because I've heard your questions, and they're neither mild nor probing.

In fact, if you go through the estimates on Human Services, you'll find that many of the interchanges with government members were equally if not more probing than those of the opposition. No private member in the House has a lock on probing questions, and I would certainly hold up private members on the government side as being equal to or better than any other questions that come forward.

This new process has not afforded less time to ask questions than traditionally, as the leader of the fourth party indicated. In fact, traditionally this House – and this is the first time for a long time that we've deviated from it – has afforded three hours per department. With 18 departments, including Executive Council, that's 54 hours. I believe, if my math is correct, that we actually have 78 hours this year. So we're not giving less time; rather, we're giving more time. That was a wrong statement.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure that I need to go on any longer. The point of the fact is that the chairs of committees under Standing Order 65(2)(b) set the standard in their committees. The Member for Calgary-Varsity, who is chair of one of the committees, had intended to speak, but she has to chair a committee that probably has been called to order already. She's indicated to me in discussion – I think she wouldn't mind my representing that here – that she has established with her committee a pattern over the process, which they've adhered to and are continuing to adhere to now. That's their committee. That's the pattern that they have, and they're adhering to it. Nobody, actually, has challenged her on it, that I'm aware of, by raising a point of order. If there was . . . [interjections] Well, if the point of order was raised there and dealt with, then this is absolutely functus unless somebody has appealed it to here, and there's been no appeal to here that I'm aware of.

So there's no point of order. But even if there was a point of order, the fact of the matter is that we are operating in the way we've always operated with respect to the process of committees, back and forth, with private members on both sides of the House having an important role in holding government to account. If you want to change that, we can always discuss it. We have discussed every year changes in the process.

But this House leader will never give up on the concept that every member of this House has an important role, to represent their constituents. Some of us, who are privileged to be in Executive Council, give up a little bit of that role because we cannot challenge our colleagues with respect to their departments, but we get to do that in cabinet and in cabinet committees.

In this House every member is important. Every member has an equal role to play, and no member gives up their privileges just because they're not in opposition. In the process of those committees as in the process of the House there has to be some respect of the fact that if you only have four members, you're going to have less time and less opportunity. That's just a fact of the numbers. If you only have five members, you're going to have less time, less opportunity. If you're fortunate enough to have achieved 17 members, you're going to have more time, and you get more time. On this side of the House there are actually, I think, 61 members, and they get time, too.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. I want to begin by just saying that I find it somewhat unusual that this particular point of order would be brought into the House. It may well be a first in this context; I'm not sure. It'll be something for our historians and librarians to look through. Nonetheless, I allowed it to come forward because I found it quite interesting as we got into the debate and the discussion on it. We've now heard from six or seven different speakers from all four parties, so clearly there is a heightened level of interest in this regard.

I want to make a few points as I lead up to a declaration at the end here. First of all, the issue of the rotation of question period, as raised first and foremost by the hon. member who is the leader of the New Democrat opposition, is clearly pointed out in our standing orders. I think every person who spoke acknowledged that in one way or another. The issue isn't so much about what's specified in our standing orders. The issue is more about how it's applied. How are the rules that are specified adhered to and/or interpreted?

I was fascinated by what Calgary-Fish Creek had to say as a co-chair of one of these committees, where she works very well with the member from the government side who chairs the committee. They determine that particular rotation order based, presumably, on who is present and wishes to participate and on what the other confines or rules or regulations might be. As unusual as it might be for that point to come in here, I did find it interesting, as we got into the debate, how different people interpreted how that rotation works or, to their point, doesn't work.

When I listened to what Edmonton-Centre had to say, noting that she had spoken at some length during the debate on that issue in this Chamber weeks ago, I found it equally interesting about the understanding of what the rotation should be. I would agree with her, as I would agree with all seven speakers, that the rotation ought to be very clearly determined, but that is an issue that must be determined in the committee. Now that we have standing orders of our own and we have citations that were referenced from the House of Commons and perhaps elsewhere, it's really very clear. I would hope that the chairs of these committees would make it very clear at the beginning as to what that understanding of the rotation is just so that there isn't any confusion going forward.

The role of the chair of the committee is clearly specified as well. The chair is, in fact, in charge of order and decorum, and that includes the issue of rotation. Those of you who attend the meetings that I chair would know that I make it very clear what the speaking order is and who's up next and whether or not they have something fresh to say or whatever. It's not perfect, and I'm not claiming to be perfect either, but at least there's a clear understanding of how the process works and, going forward, who's up next.

Then I listened carefully to what the House leader for the Wildrose had to say on the opportunities for holding the government to account. There is no greater opportunity, as will be acknowledged by all, than the main estimates, where you actually can get into a to-and-fro with the minister or the Premier or whomever happens to be responding. That is the most fascinating time of all other than question period, perhaps, for some.

With respect to his comment about an agreement having to be made as to how procedures work in committee during estimates debates, I agree, but I understood that you had that particular agreement. If you don't, then it belongs in the committee stage now to determine at the outset. I'm hoping that that's what will happen going forward.

I heard other speakers comment as well, and I'll spare you the time, hon. members, before getting into any details on that.

Let me just begin my wrap-up here by saying the following. If there is a breach of the orders or the order of rotation during your committee estimates, that's the time to raise it. You raise it right then, right there. Let me add that we have had this process in place now since March 18, when the first estimates actually occurred. About 12 or so departments or ministries have already gone through the estimates process. We're well past the halfway mark. I would think that if there were any serious breaches in those committees, they would have been raised at an earlier opportunity, in the more proper venue, and that would be the committees themselves.

Secondly, if after you have raised an issue and the chair has ruled on it in the committee you don't like the ruling, there is an appeal process, which you're welcome to use as well. So I invite you to review how that works and where it exists. It is not the Speaker's role to entertain questions on matters that can and should be more properly raised in the committees, as I have just said, unless or until a report comes into the Assembly from that committee, perhaps as referred to the committee in the first place by this Assembly.

Furthermore, you know, the issue of the committees considering the estimates pursuant to the standing orders was amended by Government Motion 24 – I believe that's what it was – which was approved by this Assembly back on March 5. The amendments clearly gave the authority for the legislative policy committees to consider the estimates, and accordingly a schedule was tabled in this Assembly as to how that would work and which departments would come up and when and so on. The final day for all of these considerations of estimates, as you know, is this coming Monday.

Another point is that the chairs of these committees, who are responsible for the rotations, are able to communicate with their members privately if necessary to ensure that fairness and consistency are occurring. If they're not, then, individual members, it's your right as well to go to that chair or send a note to that chair, to bring it to someone's attention and see if it can be dealt with at the committee level first. The appropriate forum and time for a matter such as this is during those committee proceedings, as I've indicated.

Now, a couple of final points here, and we'll get on with the day. First of all, the Practical Guide is a wonderful document. This guide is seldom referred to, but I'll tell you that I've been through it, and it is an excellent document. I hold it to show it to you so that you will perhaps request a copy of it again. They were all sent out, but if you don't have one, please get one because here on page 30 is a wonderful section that talks all about procedure in committee. There's a lot to be gleaned from this, and there's a lot to be learned from this, and for some of us there are some wonderful reminders. Basically, it recaps exactly everything that I've just said up till now. I won't go through it all, but it talks to you about how standing orders are applied. It talks to you about the roles of the chair. It talks to you about the processes, appealing a chair's committee decision, about order and decorum, and so on. It is our guide. It is our guide for the Alberta Legislative Assembly, and I encourage you to please visit it.

Now, I'm going to end with this. The statements that have been made here have not fallen on deaf ears. We had a number of the committee chairs present when this was in fact discussed and debated over the last 45 minutes, and I'm sure that every committee chair, perhaps at the prompting of the Government House Leader and other House leaders, will be paying much more careful attention to this. But I'm going to also suggest that we allow the standing orders to be properly enforced, as we know them to be, and that the procedure we have in place today be continued and be followed.

We have two main estimates debates coming up right now. Let's pay attention to how those two committees operate today, and let's know that all the committee chairs have a responsibility to communicate much more clearly and to communicate as consistently and as fairly as possible the interpretation of those standing orders.

I find no point of order on this matter today, and I'm hoping that going forward tonight and tomorrow and through to the conclusion, there will be a greater attention paid to the consistency and fairness of rotations and sequencing and that the abilities of all members to get up and represent their constituents and their own feelings with regard to estimates can in fact be heard and appreciated.

That concludes things for today.

[The Assembly adjourned at 3:46 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, April 17, 2013

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members and guests, let us pray. As Canadians and as Albertans we give thanks for the precious gifts of freedom and peace which we so enjoy. We give further thanks for the gifts of culture and heritage which we share. As Members of this Legislative Assembly let us rededicate ourselves to the valued traditions of parliamentary democracy as a means of serving our province and our country and particularly so because today is the anniversary of Canada's Constitution Act, 1982, an act that was signed by Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II 31 years ago on this day. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly esteemed delegates from the Council of Arab League Ambassadors: His Excellency Smail Benamara, ambassador of the People's Democratic Republic of Algeria and dean of the Arab ambassadors, and his spouse, Mrs. Hasna Benamara; Her Excellency Nouzha Chekrouni, ambassador of the Kingdom of Morocco, and her spouse, El Menouar Bentefrit; His Excellency Abdulrahman Hamid Al-Hussaini, ambassador of the Republic of Iraq, and his spouse, Mrs. Adwiya Abdulwadood Rashid; His Excellency Wael Ahmed Kamal Aboul Magd, ambassador of the Arab Republic of Egypt, and his spouse, Mrs. Hanan Mohamed Abdel Kader; His Excellency Mohammed Saif Helal M. Alshehhi, ambassador of the United Arab Emirates; His Excellency Riadh Essid, ambassador of the Republic of Tunisia; Mr. Sami Haddad, chargé d'affaires, embassy of Lebanon; Mr. Said Mousa Hamad, head of the Palestinian General Delegation to Canada, and his spouse, Mrs. Claudette Hamad.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta and the Middle East and North Africa region share a long history of friendship built on dynamic collaboration in key sectors such as energy, resource development, food safety, and water. This important visit, the first of its kind in Canada and certainly the first to Alberta, is a great opportunity for us to tell Alberta's story as well as to explore new areas of co-operation in a variety of sectors. Through ambassadorial visits such as this we lay the groundwork for an even stronger friendship with our partners in the Middle East and North Africa. Our esteemed guests are now standing in the Speaker's gallery, and I ask that they receive the warm welcome of this House.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 39 students from the grade 6 class of Stony Plain Central school. Some of them were here for the week of December 17 to spend a week in the Legislature and learn about the Legislature, and they're back to observe us today. I want to tell you that I spent the last week in their classroom and these are the best and brightest that Alberta has to offer. If this is representative of our youth today, we're in good hands. Would you please rise. There are 39 students, teachers Mr. Paul McCann and Mrs. Kara Holst, and they're accompanied by parents Mrs. Shonia Tarr, Mrs. Chantal Brown, and Mr. Michael Mullen. If you'll please give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three constituents from Lethbridge-West who are visiting the Legislature today. Seated in the members' gallery today are Ruth and Auke Elzinga, who are here to present the hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations with a bronze sculpture called Buffalo Spirit by Cornelius Martens. This art piece is currently on loan and in the process of being donated to the government of Alberta, and I would like to take this time to thank Auke and Ruth for their generosity. The sculpture will be prominently displayed in the office of Aboriginal Relations, and I encourage my colleagues to take a moment to stop by and view this remarkable piece.

Also in the gallery today is Kerry Milder, outreach co-ordinator for Volunteer Lethbridge and a member of the University of Lethbridge senate. Kerry not only dedicates her time to the city of Lethbridge but also serves on numerous boards and councils throughout southern Alberta.

I'd like to thank Ruth, Auke, and Kerry for making the trip to Edmonton today. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You have just met the best and the brightest from Stony Plain. Let me introduce to you the best and the brightest from Edmonton. With us today from St. Lucy school is a group of grade 6 students who are studying parliamentary democracy and everything that happens in this House and in our city hall and in our government in Ottawa. They're accompanied by teachers Mrs. Karen Robinson and Miss Kailee Smith and Mr. Arnold Brockmann. I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly. Here they are.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly somebody that I admire and somebody that I respect not only because he helped bring a Stanley Cup to Calgary in 1989 but also for the same dedication and persistence in his advocacy for victims of sexual abuse. Accompanying him today are Dr. Don Castaldi and Kim Barthel. It's Theoron Fleury that I was mentioning and getting at. I guess I was a bit awestruck as he watches me give this introduction. Dr. Don Castaldi is a clinical psychologist with a specialty in forensics and sexual deviance. He is also the adviser for the Alberta complex needs initiative. Kim Barthel is an occupational therapist with a specialty in the neurobiology of attachment and trauma. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Sallie Parmiter and her granddaughter Meagan Parmiter. Sallie is the mother of Michael Parmiter, who is a resident of Michener Centre. Sallie is a mother to seven children. She worked at Sears for 23 years. Her husband is a veteran of the armed forces. Meagan is a respite worker who is studying at Grant MacEwan to be a physiotherapist.

They are here today on behalf of Michael, who is a 44-year resident of Michener Centre who requires 24-hour care and supervision. He was born with hydrocephalitis and seizures. Sallie wants us to know that Michael has a wonderful quality of life at Michener and does not belong in a nursing home or an Alzheimer's hospital. Michael's caregivers cater to whatever makes him happy and whatever he needs, including camping trips, bike rides at the gym, dances, and bus rides. When previously moved from Michener, Michael immediately suffered from depression and was hospitalized and returned to Michener, where he recovered because that was where his home was. Please join me in giving Sallie and Meagan Parmiter the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guest, Sandra Azocar. Sandra has been a community and labour activist in Alberta for over 30 years and is currently the executive director of Friends of Medicare. Prior to coming to Friends of Medicare Sandra worked as a vice-president of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees and was employed in the Ministry of Human Services. She was also a member of the board of directors of Friends of Medicare for six years before becoming its executive director. I would now ask Sandra to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member, for that very nice introduction. Perhaps we could salute you on your special milestone birthday today. That was a nice present to yourself.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a couple of extraordinary individuals with us today from Respect Group, Mr. Sheldon Kennedy and Mr. Wayne McNeil. Both of these men are well known for their exhaustive work serving their communities. Wayne served as trustee and vice-chair of the Rocky View school division as well as many volunteer efforts supporting children in athletics over the years. Sheldon Kennedy, of course, is known around the world not just for his skill on the ice but his efforts to give a voice to children who have been abused. In fact, just recently the Calgary Child Advocacy Centre was renamed the Sheldon Kennedy Child Advocacy Centre in his honour to recognize the important work he continues to do on behalf of our kids.

In 2004 these two men joined forces to create the Respect Group and have made it their mission to eliminate online abuse, bullying, harassment, whether it appears in sports or at schools or in the workplace. As Minister of Education I'm particularly proud of the work these gentlemen are doing in partnership with some of our schools around the province, creating safe, caring, and welcoming places for our students. I'd ask both Wayne and Mr. Kennedy to stand, and I'd ask you, Mr. Speaker, and the rest of the Assembly to join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly seven representatives from the John Humphrey Centre for Peace and Human Rights, an Edmonton-based organization celebrating their 15th anniversary. Guided by the principles of the universal declaration of human rights, the John Humphrey Centre advances a culture of peace and human rights through educational programs, activities, community collaboration, and relationship building.

My guests are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to please rise as I mention their names: Mrs. Karen Gall, wife of founder and past president Professor Gerald Gall, who with heartfelt regret passed away in 2012; Ms Christine Rapp, QC, vice-president; Judge Gurcharan Bhatia, founder and past president; Mrs. Salma Lakhani, member of the board of directors; Ms Renée Vaugeois, executive director; Mr. Cory Cardinal, staff member, new to the organization; Ms Nehal Mahmoud, staff member, quite new to the organization as well. I would now ask that the Assembly honour my guests with the traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's a real pleasure for me to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a good friend of this Assembly and a good friend of Alberta. Brady Whittaker is with the Alberta Forest Products Association and is a real outstanding star that continues to promote this very important industry not only in our province but throughout Canada, United States, and Asia. Brady, if you could please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly six constituents and dear friends from St. Albert. I'll ask them to rise as I introduce them. Jacques Basterash has been living primarily in St. Albert since 1986. We lost him to Calgary for a couple of years, but he's back. Jacques has been an insurance broker for the past 30 years. Beth Bell has lived in St. Albert since 1976, and she came to Alberta and Canada from Britain in 1961. Beth worked as a nurse manager and retired in 2004. Ross Pronishen moved from Manitoba to St. Albert in 2006 to spend time with his sons and his grandchildren. Ross had a distinguished career with Manitoba Telephones for 40 years.

Dr. Kim Bugera has lived in St. Albert for the past 15 years, and in between raising a very active young family she finds time to serve as an optometrist in our community. Glenna Bell moved to St. Albert in October 1979 and has been a valued member of our community every since. Glenna is an active volunteer in our community and is a trusted friend and confidante. Last but certainly not least, Sandra Fenton moved to St. Albert in 1996 with her husband, Roy, and her young family from Chilliwack, B.C. Sandra works as a very busy accountant.

All of these people are remarkable representatives of the community that we love so much. They're so active in our community and offer so much to all of us. Mr. Speaker, I am humbled to serve as their representative in the House, and I ask all members of the Assembly to welcome them with a very warm traditional sentiment.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would very much like today to introduce to you and through you a very good friend of mine, Mr. Mike Gladstone. Mr. Mike Gladstone was my campaign manager when I ran in 2008 in the riding of Calgary-Elbow for the very first time. I'm not sure that we knew exactly what we were doing, but we had a lot of fun doing it, and it turned out to be quite successful. I know he is a friend to many people on this side of the House and, I think, on the other side of the House. I'd really ask him to rise, with my heartfelt thanks, for a warm welcome from this Assembly.

Administration of Health Care

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, in a few minutes question period will be under way, and once again the Official Opposition will be asking questions about health care and the current minister's many failures. We've asked dozens of questions already, questions about the combative doctors' negotiations, the ill-conceived increase in drug prices, the exorbitant expense accounts, botched facility closures, unacceptable wait-lists, undeserved executive bonuses, missed performance targets, and other areas of his responsibility. Overall, it's a pretty bleak picture.

Just yesterday the minister had to admit that allowing a former health executive to expense out-of-province treatments at the Mayo Clinic was wrong, that it was unacceptable and offensive. He boasted about how the rules had changed, how AHS was different, how the rules are the strongest in the country. Even if that's true – and we doubt it – it doesn't erase decades of waste, entitlement, and special treatment, and it doesn't get a nickel of those millions paid back.

But there's more, Mr. Speaker. In a few minutes I'll be asking the minister about a case that happened under his watch while he was minister after AHS was put in charge. In December 2011 Alison Tonge, a former VP in AHS, received services from a private diagnostic imaging clinic in Edmonton. She was invoiced $1,160 and paid the bills. She then submitted the bills for reimbursement via expense account claim forms in January 2012. The charges were approved later that month by Dr. Chris Eagle, our current president and CEO of Alberta Health Services. This latest case goes directly to issues of universality, access, and fairness, that are the cornerstones of our public health system.

As I said yesterday in the Assembly, Alberta has a great system in many ways, with great doctors, nurses, facilities, and great support staff, but the administration and management of health care is abysmal, and the person most responsible for that is the Minister of Health.

Speaker's Ruling Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, another point that I wish House leaders will take under advisement is what the purpose of Members' Statements is all about. [interjections] Hang on a moment. I want to just remind you that I gave you fair warning a year ago almost when I said: please, let us elevate the level of debate and decorum in this House, and let's not take opportunities to do what I would call political assassination attempts on other members.

Now, I'm not labelling what I just heard as one of those, but it's getting pretty close to that when you attack a member in person that way. I'm just asking you to please review that. I'm not going to make any other ruling or statement on that matter today other than to just remind you of how dangerously close we sometimes come to violating some of the great sanctities of this House if we're not careful.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition for her first main set of questions.

Alberta Health Services Executive Expenses

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we have been assured time and again that the minister has fixed the problem of lavish executive expense accounts. That's all in the past, he assures us, before his time. However, in December 2011 Alison Tonge, a former VP in AHS, received services from a private diagnostic imaging clinic in Edmonton. She paid the bills, then submitted them for reimbursement in January 2012. The charges were approved later that month by Dr. Chris Eagle, our current president and CEO of Alberta Health Services. Can the Health minister explain how something like this could occur under his watch?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member's attempts to continue to undermine public confidence in our health system seem to know no bounds. I checked with Dr. Chris Eagle, the chief executive officer of Alberta Health Services, prior to question period today, and I'm informed that the expenses in question relate to the recruiting of out-of-country staff, which Ms Tonge was, and her family. The expenses incurred were for the purpose of supporting their application for landed immigrant status in Canada. Dr. Eagle has offered to provide me with a detailed explanation, which I'll be happy to table in this House.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, it's another example of the utter disregard AHS has for taxpayers. The culture of entitlement that we saw with other executives under the former health regions and under previous Health ministers is still alive despite this Premier's claims to have eradicated it. This executive was approved for $1,160 in private medical expenses and then was let go with a $426,000 severance package. Who's responsible for this?

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, you rose on a point of order at 1:51. It's been noted.

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, this characterization is getting a little bit ridiculous. There's no doubt that we as government fund an agency, Alberta Health Services, which, as we know, takes up a significant portion of the budget in providing public health care to Albertans. It means that we have to engage executives that are able to provide those services, and they do a good job. There is no doubt that one of the reasons many people on this side of the House decided to run in 2008 was to change health care. That is what this minister has done with that deal with doctors on Monday, and we're very proud of him.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Premier, the minister, and the CEO all boasted about how the system is fixed, how expense account rules are now so strong, but here's the proof that all of those claims are just worthless bluster. This is two-tier, queue-jumping, expense account abuse all wrapped up in one offensive package. Someone needs to lose their job. Who's it going to be?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we are very proud of the fact that we've introduced an expense claim policy that will ensure that all information is available to the public with respect to expenses not only for Alberta Health Services but for government ministers, for MLAs, for public service, and for other agencies, boards, and commissions. There is no doubt that it's important for Albertans to understand how taxpayers' dollars are spent to ensure that we are held accountable for them, but the purpose of question period is not to come up with false allegations, mischaracterizations, and undermine public health care.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Second main set of questions.

Health Care Accessibility

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Canada Health Act demands universality of care. Here in Alberta we don't have that. Regular folks don't get access to the Mayo Clinic to have their Alberta diagnoses confirmed. Regular folks don't get to go to a private diagnostic imaging clinic to get looked after right away. Regular folks can't submit an expense claim and get reimbursed for private treatments, but health executives can. While the Health minister insists it's been stopped, the evidence contradicts him. Doesn't the minister understand the risks of being in breach of the Canada Health Act?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, that is rich coming from an opposition party that less than a year ago told Albertans that they believe there should be a two-tier health care system in this province. I will tell you that this side of the House fully understands the importance of the Canada Health Act and ensures that we are funding accessible, quality public health care for all Albertans. These continual mischaracterizations are absurd. It is wrong to make assumptions with respect to facts that are simply not true. It's not . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Airdrie, you rose on a point of order during the Premier's answer. That's been noted.

Ms Smith: Speaking of mischaracterizations, our wait time guaranteed regular Albertans would get access to care, not these health executives.

Under heavy questioning about the $7,000 Mayo Clinic executive expense the Minister of Health repeated again and again that it happened in 2007. He wasn't the minister, so it wasn't his fault. This latest case happened in 2012. He was the minister, so this is his fault. How can this minister continue to claim that he has fixed things when he clearly hasn't?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the report of the decision in 2007 – in 2007 – I think is completely wrong. I'm actually offended by it. I think it's disgusting. It's one of the reasons that I ran in 2008, to change the culture of government and to change the culture of health care. We introduced expense guidelines that did that in September of last year, and to try to connect these two payments as being the same thing is ridiculous.

Ms Smith: If the Premier is as offended as we are, she would get the money back.

The government members like to fling accusations at us, but it's the government that has actually established a two-tier health care system, tier 1 for health executives, tier 2 for everyone else. Doesn't the minister understand that this undermines confidence in the fairness and accessibility of our public health care system?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, it doesn't take much in the way of sophistication to fill out an application under the freedom of information act, receive the documents, and table them with the media. What does take sophistication to do is to interpret those documents, to make appropriate inquiries as to the reasons for the expenses, and to report those accurately to the House. That is what we have done in this case.

Mr. Speaker, in terms of private health care the views of the hon. Leader of the Opposition are well known. As recently as 2005, if that isn't too far in the past to quote, she said: allowing doctors to straddle the public and private system may be one way to bridge the gap. That is one example.

Ms Smith: As I said, our wait time guarantee promised accessible care for every Albertan.

Health System Executive Expenses

Ms Smith: When a health executive gets immediate coverage for out-of-province private medical services or when another health executive gets immediate expense coverage of private medical imaging services, it's queue-jumping. This kind of coverage isn't available to others. The Vertes inquiry into preferential access heard testimony from the former Capital health CEO, but she didn't acknowledge that she signed off on the Mayo expense. Will the Premier expand and extend the Vertes inquiry to include this instance?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the inquiry with respect to the issues that Mr. Justice Vertes is dealing with fully explored all of the issues that he as an independent chair has determined to explore. There is no doubt that that will be good information for us to have going forward. We're not going to presume the outcome of that. As usual, it is still an independent inquiry. We're looking forward to the report. But this continuing characterization and parrying, suggesting innuendo and personal failures, is inappropriate. It is not acceptable, and it's not acceptable to us to see decisions that were made that were not appropriate, and that is why we changed the system.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, there is a huge trust problem here. When a health executive can claim medical expenses that no one else can, whether it's lavish meals, luxury cars, fancy dinners, an examination at the Mayo Clinic, or private imaging services, the public loses confidence. We need the truth. Will the Premier finally agree that Albertans deserve a full forensic audit of current and past health expenses so that we can know just how bad things really are?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the Premier has been very clear. The fact is that the rules have changed, and the rules changed under her leadership, not at the suggestion of the opposition. The hon. leader is very good at interchangeably comparing the situation in 2007 with the situation in 2012. As I've said, I've asked Dr. Eagle for an explanation as to why he authorized this expense claim. He has advised me that it relates to employment-related expenses connected with the landed immigrant status that was sought by the person claiming the amounts. He believes these amounts are in order. He will provide an explanation, and I will table it in this House.

Ms Smith: The services were billed in December 2011. She was let go in January 2012. I think you need to double-check that story, Minister.

The minister's claim that he's cleaned things up is not credible. His assurances that health expenses are no longer subject to abuse are feeble, yet they still say no to a full forensic audit. Once again, in the spirit of openness and transparency and accountability, that this government and this Premier love to trumpet all the time, I will ask: will the Health minister release all of the expenses of all of the executives of all of the health regions going back to 2005?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, this question has been asked and answered and asked and answered. The hon. member opposite has made very good use of the provisions of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. The hon. member knows that there is a process that governs the disclosure of documents. Many of those documents have been disclosed, they have been investigated by this government, and most importantly we have taken the necessary steps to implement new rules that I stand by and that I say can and do prevent similar situations to the 2007 claim from happening again. An additional explanation will be provided by the CEO of Alberta Health Services, but the situation is not . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Premier, glad you could join us. We learned that the former Capital health CEO approved a former COO's expense claim for medical care at the Mayo Clinic, a practice the Health minister calls despicable and which most Albertans call queue-jumping, which, interestingly, didn't come up during the inquiry. The Deputy Premier said that if what the opposition brought to light was correct, "that person and others will be dealt with." However, the Health minister essentially said: that was then; this is now; move along. To the Premier: who do you side with here, your Deputy Premier or your Health minister? Are you going to deal with it, or are you going to move along?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, we side with Alberta taxpayers, and that's why we introduced new expense guidelines that ensure that this government can hold agencies, boards, and commissions accountable for all expenses. That is appropriate, that is important, and that is why a year ago, when we promised to change health care and we promised to change government, we were able to gain the confidence of Albertans and to ensure that we provided public health care to everyone in this province in a way that allowed them to continue to build family and live in their communities.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, it's clear this Premier sides with those few Alberta taxpayers who waste the rest of our taxpayers' money.

The Auditor General's February 2013 report clearly states that under the direction of this minister AHS hired Ernst & Young to audit only expenses claimed by the former Capital health CFO. Any Health minister worth his salt would know that the dollar value of executive claims authorized by Sheila Weatherill was absolutely outrageous. To the minister: why weren't all the health claims authorized by Mrs. Weatherill audited? What else were you afraid would come to light? Why didn't you audit everything, Minister?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are certainly not afraid of the fearmongering that persists on the part of members opposite in the discussion of this issue. The fact of the matter is that the Alberta Health Services Board took the appropriate step in requesting the Auditor General to audit the expense claims of senior Alberta Health Services executives who had served in former capacities with the former health regions. This was an important step. The Auditor General has delivered his report. We've all had the opportunity to see it. It's very interesting that the hon. members don't take the opportunity to discuss the results of that report, which were, in fact, quite positive. Moreover, the Auditor General has reviewed the expense claim procedures of Alberta Health Services today and supports those procedures.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, clearly, they're not afraid of wasting taxpayers' money.

Let's just back up here. Fact: the AHS audit arose because of the outrageous expense claims made by Allaudin Merali, which only came to light because of a FOIP by Charles Rusnell. Fact: Allaudin Merali's expense claims were authorized by Sheila Weatherill. Fact: Mrs. Weatherill approved her COO's claim for medical care at the Mayo Clinic, uncovered due to a FOIP because of the opposition. This question is for the Premier, not the Health minister. Will you finally do the right thing and authorize a forensic audit of the former Capital health region, which the current AHS CEO, Dr. Chris Eagle, originally called for?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Health has said, this work has been done. We're ensuring that wherever we can pursue avenues with respect to the expense claim that the hon. member has raised, we are doing that. We are proud of the fact that we now have a system that's going to ensure that we no longer have those sorts of circumstances happen. I'm not standing here to apologize for decisions that I find personally offensive, that took place well before I and many of my colleagues were actually even elected. We got elected to change things, and we did.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Health minister needs to come clean with Albertans. Alberta Health Services provided preferred access to a health care service to an individual at a private, for-profit clinic, apparently as a recruitment strategy and to expedite her immigration status. Is that what the minister is saying? How is that not queue-jumping? How is that not two-tier, private health care?

Ms Redford: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, let's start with the facts, which are that this is not what this minister said. What this minister simply said was that there was an employment contract in place that did permit a person, whom we recruited in order to work and manage a very large health care system, to see whether or not they could settle in Alberta. That is all that the minister said, and any other characterization is false.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, these bills are for health care services from a doctor.

Yesterday the Health minister told the House that queue-jumping at the taxpayers' expense by Alberta Health Services executives was a thing of the past. He said, "This situation could not happen and is not happening in Alberta today." Today we've learned that it's not a thing of the past. It's still happening on this Health minister's watch. To the Premier: how can Albertans have confidence in a Health minister that denies that queue-jumping at taxpayers' expense is happening when it is?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I don't actually understand how Albertans would have confidence if they actually listened to the false structures of these questions, that draw unequal parallels, that characterize completely different fact situations as being the same thing. It is not appropriate. The information with respect to the question asked today will be provided. This minister has never misled the House.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Premier's lawyer double-talk is not going to work this time.

This PC government can't be trusted to protect our health care system. In public the government assures us that they support universal public health care, but behind the scenes senior health executives get preferential treatment from private, for-profit health care corporations. It looks a lot like private two-tier, American-style health care to me, Mr. Speaker. How can Albertans have confidence in a government that permits preferential access to health services paid for by taxpayers for its senior officials?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the reason that Albertans can have confidence in how this government provides public health care is because we're committed to it. I don't know where I was on Monday compared to everyone else. I was standing in Calgary with the president of the AMA signing a seven-year employment contract with doctors in this province to provide certainty in the health care system, and this Minister of Health negotiated that deal. [interjections]

The Speaker: Why don't we all take a moment and thump on our desks and all feel better about that. Go ahead. [applause] I feel better after that, too. Thank you.

Let's move on.

2:10 Out-of-province Health Services

Mrs. Towle: Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a lot of confusion, so I'm just going to make it a little simpler here. A senior in my riding was recently told that she needed immediate shoulder surgery. If not done, it would cause irreparable damage to her shoulder, active. Booking for surgery was a ridiculous three-year wait. Instead, she took her health care into her own hands, and she booked her surgery in B.C. The cost of that surgery: $17,000 out of her own pocket. The AHS cost – she went to the committee – a $980 reimbursement. Minister, please help me understand, so I can explain to my constituents, how you can justify paying for Alberta Health executives who clearly jump the queue, yet Albertans have to do so many . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, no one has proven that any Alberta Health Services executive since this government took office has jumped the queue, and to suggest so on the basis of a receipt tabled in the House is simply not accurate. What the hon. member should know is that the Out-of-country Health Services Committee program is administered by a separate committee independent of government. If the hon. member wants to make a direct connection between her question and her constituent's problem, I'd be pleased to look into it. If she wants to falsely connect it to other allegations that have been made in the House earlier today, I can't help her.

Mrs. Towle: Well, luckily for us, Albertans have the ability to read.

Given that we have already heard of two families in serious need of life-saving health care that was not offered in Alberta – and they were denied – and given that this Alberta Health Services executive billed taxpayers for this private diagnostic service in December of 2011, left AHS in January of 2012, and received over $400,000 in severance, doesn't the minister understand that Albertans will not see this as fair?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, this is the typical non sequitur that we hear in the questions that have been offered by this member earlier this week. We've dealt with the issue that was raised at the beginning of question period with respect to the expense claim in question. If the hon. member wants to help her constituent, one thing she could do is to inform her constituent of the process that is available to recoup health expenses that are provided out of province or out of country. This program is administered independently of government, and the insured services that are provided in B.C. would not be provided in Alberta because this government stands up for public health care.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, you rose on a point of order at 2:11 p.m., during the minister's first answer. We'll note that later.

The hon. member. Final question.

Mrs. Towle: We helped her with that process, and you kindly gave her back $980.

Given that this minister continues to insist that there is a fair process for approving these out-of-province claims and given that Alberta Health Services executives don't have to go before the same committees that Albertans do, will this government not agree that the process is not working and create a policy that allows all Albertans to obtain health coverage even when treatment is not offered in Alberta or exceeds the excessive wait times that are currently the case?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as was indicated in answers in the estimates last evening for the Department of Health, we know that over 12,000 Albertans received financial support for out-of-province and out-of-country health services last year. We regularly provide this level of support. It is based on physician adjudication of patient need and circumstance, not the adjudication of ministers or elected members of the House. There is an appeal process that's available for people that are unhappy with the decision they receive from the committee, and we'll continue to provide funding to support this program to get Albertans access to the services they need.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Collective Bargaining Agreements

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has been very clear about the need for making tough, thoughtful decisions necessary to ensure that this government lives within its means. As we know, compensation to our hard-working teachers and doctors and other public sectors make up a significant portion of the provincial budget. With the number of people moving to Alberta and even with the zero per cent increases, my question to the Premier: how are we able to control the costs for the sustainability of these services?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the last three months we've had tremendous success, and I want to give credit to our Minister of Health and the Minister of Education for signing landmark deals with doctors and teachers that ensure that we're able to continue to provide public services to students in classrooms and public health care through doctors to patients. We have agreements that are in place now that provide long-term labour peace, that are going to allow us to continue to adapt and to deliver services and to ensure that we do that in a way that allows us to not increase taxes and to not increase our spending.

Mr. Young: Again to the Premier. Parents are counting on teachers to be able to focus on the classroom. Albertans are counting on physicians to be able to focus on their patients' needs. How will these tentative agreements, that have taken so long to negotiate, provide stability with the current budget challenges?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course, we know, working with both the Alberta Teachers' Association and the Alberta Medical Association, that since they have memberships, these agreements do need to be ratified by their membership. We're seeing tremendous progress with respect to the agreement around education with the ATA, with over half of the boards and locals ratifying this. Speaking to the president of the AMA on Monday, he was very confident that we will see ratification of the deal, which is the longest deal for doctors in Canada, something that we really need to be proud of, and we have to commend the Minister of Health for negotiating it.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, how will these agreements allow us to focus and address system challenges and operational budget pressures going forward?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, what's really important in both of these agreements is that we have ministers that are able to work with employee associations and unions to put in place not only financial terms but also terms with respect to governance. There's no way that we could run an education system or a health care system without consulting with the professionals that are delivering services within that system. So the governance that we've been able to see, which involves participation from both teachers and doctors, is going to allow us to not only continue to provide the excellent care that we have but to improve it even further.

Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, AMVIC, the Motor Vehicle Industry Council, is the province's regulator for the auto industry. AMVIC enforces legislation, investigates complaints, and protects Albertans against unfair business practices. A recent investigation, however, suggested that AMVIC is dropping the ball and that Albertans are getting gouged by some dealerships for hundreds of dollars in bogus fees. To the minister: how widespread is the practice of Albertans getting gouged, and how have you allowed this to happen under your watch?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I'm referring to the same thing that the hon. member did, and if I am, the cases where people were being charged for services not received were actually as a result of an investigation done through AMVIC and this government. So while this is being characterized as the system not working, it's actually an example of the system working very well. I think they're some people that have worked very hard and continue to investigate and make sure that Albertans get fair value when they do business in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Automobile Protection Association, an industry watchdog, has shockingly stated that it believes AMVIC is actually colluding with dealerships to have these fees forced on hard-working Albertans, has the minister investigated these extremely disturbing allegations?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the member is talking about somebody who has made a statement, and he's talking about, I think, illegal activity. I think the correct place to take a question about illegal activity would be to the police. If that's the case, I'm sure they'll investigate, and I'm sure they'll get to the bottom of it.

I can tell you that AMVIC and this government work very hard to make sure that when Albertans do business, they're treated fairly in an environment where they can trust the rules that make sure that they get fair value when they do business in Alberta.

The Speaker: Second and final supplementary.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the news today that AMVIC has just fired several of its senior investigators after these revelations surfaced and given that three weeks ago the minister stated, and I quote, that this is a very serious issue that demands the attention of government, will the minister finally do his job, uphold the integrity of the regulator, and protect Albertans from predatory practices?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member ought to know, the AMVIC is an arm's-length organization. The hon. member also ought to know that it's somewhat inappropriate to comment on internal, personal matters. I'll tell you what. The Minister of Service Alberta is involved in some internal restructuring. I don't know whether it's really related to what the member is asking because he hasn't been extra clear. But I can tell you that if he has somebody concerned about an activity that he doesn't think is legal, the police is the right place to ask the question, and I'm sure that they will investigate that fully.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Bicycle Safety on Roadways and Trails

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgary-Currie is a constituency with many urban professionals who place a value on environmental stewardship. I recently met with a bike shop owner in my constituency. He's a strong advocate for cycling strategies that ensure cyclist safety and encourage Albertans to choose cycling as an alternate method of transportation. Of course, this is a choice that, if encouraged in Alberta through proper infrastructure and trail systems, will impact our environment and health care systems in a very positive way. All of my questions are to the Minister of Transportation. Can you explain how the development of policies, guidelines, and standards for trails in Alberta's highway rights-of-way will provide direction to our avid cyclists, who are seeking safe ways . . .

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for the question. Now, we have started looking at guidelines and standards for pathways and areas where cyclists can travel around Alberta, and I can tell you that it's just one tool that we're going use to make sure that not only on pathways but off we can get vulnerable users around, and that, of course, includes cyclists. One example that we're doing is working in partnership with the county of Rocky View on the highway 8 corridor to provide a place for a laneway that cyclists will be able to use to safely travel that route.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How will your ministry ensure that we promote safe, easy travel through the use of way-finding signs, particularly in rural areas, where every extra day a tourist stays means extra dollars put into dining, accommodations, and entertainment, some of the main ingredients of economic impact in the tourism industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The question is a good one because it's something we're actually working on, and frankly the member is right in pointing out that we're looking to actually improve what we currently do. Since 2004 we've been working in co-operation with Alberta Tourism and other departments in replacing some of the old brown tourist signs with the blue-and-white ones and actually even trying to work with the industry to find other ways to direct people off the roads and byways and into the towns, villages, and other tourist places of Alberta. If we're getting criticism that we need to do better, we are trying to do better.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Lastly, a very big question that has been asked and comes up quite often is: will this minister consider introducing a three-foot passing law as was introduced in the Ontario Legislature?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, first, I'll give the short answer, which is no, and then I'll give the longer answer, which isn't no. Rather, the fact is that the three-foot law, or the one-metre law, as was suggested here, was introduced, as I understand it, in the Legislature in Ontario, but it wasn't passed. I understand there are a number of states in the U.S., but not that many, that have a law like this. In Alberta we have laws that protect cyclists on the road, but at this time we're not actually considering adding this particular regulation.

Funding for Private Schools

Mr. Hehr: The consequence of eliminating references to the Charter and the Human Rights Act in our Education Act is that many schools now believe these acts don't matter. It is the Edmonton Islamic Academy's policy that children with disabilities will not be accepted. A video shows a man lecturing students, apparently during class time. "Someone who is homosexual is like someone who has diabetes or someone who has cancer or AIDS." To the Minister of Ed.: as taxpayers send $4.5 million to this private school, shouldn't children with disabilities be allowed to attend and teachings be free from discrimination?

Mr. J. Johnson: Yes. The answer is yes. Mr. Speaker, our goal and our expectation is that all of our schools would be promoting diversity and teaching respect. Albertans told us that they wanted an education system for all Albertans that values that diversity and respect and that has welcome, caring, respectful, and safe schools. We're not going to tolerate any attempt to promote hatred or intolerance or discrimination of any kind in our schools.

Mr. Hehr: Can the minister tell me if he is investigating what is happening in our private schools and whether ongoing violations of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms and our Alberta Human Rights Act are continuing?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, that's a pretty broad allegation. You know, in Alberta parents and students have the choice to go to faith-based schools, to go to private schools, but even if they do go to those, those schools need to follow the programs and studies outlined in Alberta Education and within the Education Act and within the Human Rights Act and teach the Alberta programs of study. I have asked my department to check into this school and visit this school and make sure that this situation that arose that is concerning to some of us is not going to continue and that we won't have this in any of our schools in the province.

Mr. Hehr: Given that these violations of our Human Rights Act in our school system appear to be a regular theme here in Alberta, can the minister not see why this is a textbook example of why we should not be funding private schools and separating children on the basis of wealth and religion?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, let's not smear all private schools because of one incident. These schools are providing kids and parents with some very important choices and some very important diversity in our system. What this party is saying is that they respect diversity; just let's not fund it.

I want to encourage the member, like I did before, to actually visit some of the private schools. What he's talking about, if he's talking about removing funding from these schools, is eliminating schools like Inner City high in Alberta, that serves at-risk students, or the Elves Special Needs Society, that provides schooling for kids with severe disabilities, or the Janus Academy in Calgary, that serves autistic students. This is the face of private schools in our province.

Municipal Charters

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, using a cookie-cutter, one-size-fits-all approach simply doesn't work when it comes to Alberta municipalities. Our communities range from summer villages of 50 people to urban centres of over a million. It's time that we recognized the diversity and uniqueness of our communities in policy and in legislation. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: do you think that a summer village has the same needs and provides the same services as our large cities?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, that's kind of an absurd question. Villages, summer villages, hamlets, counties, the cities, medium-sized cities, small towns all provide different services for the different needs of the people in those communities. It's a fact.

The Speaker: Hon. member, be careful not to be asking questions that call for opinion. Proceed with your second question.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, given that on June 12, 2012, this minister signed a memorandum of understanding that recognizes the unique character of Alberta's two largest cities and given that a solution for the big-city charter was to be completed by this February and given that legislation was supposed to be tabled for a big-city charter this spring, will the minister admit to the mayors, Calgarians, and Edmontonians that his idea for our big cities is just another big broken promise?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, we are working very hard to review the MGA and rewrite it so that municipalities are empowered with all sorts of abilities to meet their local constituents' needs. If the member would read the press release again, factually it actually says that if legislation is needed, it could be tabled this spring. We have worked and will continue to work to come to a solution for this fall. There's no broken promise, and if the member would actually check what spring means, we're in the middle of it. It's not even over yet.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tick-tock, tick-tock.

Given that this minister is already an expert on the 13 ways to kill your community and given this minister's apparent efforts to stifle any progress made on the much-needed big-city charter, I have a suggestion for the minister if he ever wants to turn his latest failed project into another book: One Big Way To Kill Your Cities.

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, my colleagues have just pointed out that technically spring hasn't even begun yet.

We worked with our municipalities on the rewrite of the MGA, on the municipal sustainability initiative, on the municipal sustainability strategy. The civic charter: we're going to continue to work on that, Mr. Speaker. The insinuation at all that this is a failed attempt when we still have months to go and lots of work to do is ludicrous.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Research Development and Commercialization

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education has had a rough time lately. His proposed changes to Alberta's postsecondary system under his Campus Alberta brand have been widely panned. More than just poor policy planning, forced mandate letters since adjusted to be more collaborative, and sudden budget cuts, the minister has shown a reluctance to even talk with faculty and students. Recently the minister announced a new partnership with a company to improve research and commercialization. It sounds good, but we haven't heard much about it since. To the minister. I'm giving you a chance to be transparent now. What are the terms of the MOU?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I have to tell you that I'm shocked. I don't have it here, but I have an e-mail and a note from the member telling me just about two days ago how well I'm doing and what a good idea it is to introduce Campus Alberta and how this is the right thing to do for advanced education. So if something happened over the last 24 hours, Member, send me another note, but you told me something the very opposite in private.

Nonetheless, Mr. Speaker, I have to tell you that all presidents of Campus Alberta have met with me. They embraced the concept. As we speak, they are all meeting in Banff for the U of A and mapping out their role in Campus Alberta. I'm not sure what his concerns are as of the last 24 hours.

Mr. Bikman: Mr. Speaker, a simple question. You made a deal with Siemens, an MOU signed. What are the terms of the agreement?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, maybe I should meet with the member again because the Siemens deal has nothing to do with Campus Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, Siemens is one of the world's largest knowledge-based companies from Germany, that has made a marvellous decision to invest in Alberta. They're relocating their energy research centre from down east to Calgary. This is a company that files 25 patents per day, and their focus is very much aligned with Alberta's; that is, energy, environment, health care, research development, and commercialization of research, which is exactly what we need to do in our province.

Mr. Bikman: Mr. Speaker, to this minister again: given that Siemens could become a key player in Alberta's economy, when can Albertans, the people who pay the bills, expect to know the cost as well as the benefits of this relationship?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans are not paying anything. Zero. Zilch. This is an MOU that attracts the company to Alberta and allows them to be in touch with our private-sector industry, allows them to be in touch with all institutions within Campus Alberta, our learning institutions, to see if there can be any collaborative research done between Alberta companies and Alberta schools to better our economy, to better our quality of life, to develop products that could be commercialized not only locally but internationally. The benefit to Albertans is magnificent. The cost, zero.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Renewable Energy Strategy

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the doors in Calgary-Varsity, especially when I'm on campus at the University of Calgary, constituents ask why the province of Alberta doesn't yet have a renewable energy strategy. It's a good question. To the Minister of Energy: what is your plan for a made-in-Alberta renewable energy strategy, and when do you plan to put this in place?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, this government clearly recognizes the importance of our greenhouse gas footprint. We're recognizing the importance of that for access for our products to be shipped around the world. One important aspect of that obviously is renewable energy. If you look at this great success, actually, in this province to date, 7.5 per cent of the capacity in the electricity system today comes from wind. There are some 20 different new projects that are either under consideration or in various processes as well.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: To the same minister: how do you stimulate the use of renewables here in Alberta in ways that don't distort the marketplace?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the great advantages we have here in Alberta is that we have a very competitive and open and welcoming investment climate for parties to come and play. We've got one of the highest penetrations of wind supply in the country. That's come about in an environment where there hasn't been any distortion of the market using other economic factors other than a great place to invest, lots of wind, good interconnection capacity to a very robust network and backbone.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Finally, Minister, given that we have a lot of natural gas in this province, how can you support a renewable energy strategy here in Alberta while at the same time endorsing enhanced natural gas utilization here in Alberta?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, clearly, we recognize the importance of renewable energy in this province as being an important aspect of the future of the province, but let's be realistic. We as Alberta, as Canada, as North America, and as the world are not going to be off fossil fuels any time soon. There's going to continue to be huge demand for fossil fuels. To the extent possible natural gas is a fabulous fossil fuel that can be used with a lower greenhouse gas footprint. We're encouraging and looking at all options to ensure that we are able to continue to make the best use of it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Compensation for Pharmacy Services

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government continues to cause harm to the delivery of health care with its negligent, Fredicare approach to pharmacies and drug pricing. A pharmacist from my constituency estimates that Toradol, a pain medication, will cost consumers 300 per cent more than what is currently paid. Furthermore, the very basic drug penicillin has been delisted and will no longer be covered by insurance. Would this Health minister like me to arrange a meeting with him and health care professionals on the importance of penicillin, pain medication, and pharmacists?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, we are in touch with pharmacists across the province, and we were very pleased about a week ago to announce $40 million in additional support for pharmacists during the transition to the lower price on generic drugs. The hon. member is incorrect. Penicillin is available in Alberta, and as with all of our drugs we have multiple manufacturers that are able to provide a drug with the same active ingredient. Therefore, we have the ability to deliver on our commitment to get the lowest possible price for drugs for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many pharmacists that have talked to me have stockpiles of drugs affected by the imposed 30-day washout period and given that this is not enough time to move the products, when will this government listen to pharmacists, stop meddling in the drug market, and extend the washout period in order for pharmacists to recover those costs?

The Speaker: Hon. members, just be reminded that you've got another three hours on Health estimates today.

Hon. minister, if it's a policy-related type of answer that you wish to give, proceed.

Mr. Horne: Well, the policy of this government is to deliver the lowest possible drug prices for Albertans, and that includes generic drugs. The hon. member is correct that we have provided a 30-day washout period, as it's termed, to allow pharmacies that have purchased drugs at the higher price to sell those drugs at the higher price. We consulted with the Alberta Pharmacists Association on this decision, and all of us in the government caucus consulted with pharmacists in our own constituencies. That with the other measures we've introduced, Mr. Speaker, is providing extra support to pharmacists during the price reduction.

Mr. Hale: Not according to my pharmacists.

Given that pharmacists in my constituency are saying that this Fredicare will force them to close their doors, leaving patients without access to an essential part of health care, when will the minister explain to Albertans and pharmacists why this government is trying to drive them out of business?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. The hon. member, if he hasn't already done so, should discuss with his pharmacists the opportunities under our professional pharmacy services framework for pharmacists to be treated as full members of the health care team. That, of course, includes the opportunity to bill for professional services like renewing a prescription, like preparing a care plan for a complex patient, and like working with other health professions as part of a team delivering care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Bridge Safety

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Throughout the years Alberta Transportation has provided our counties and municipal districts with grants to assist with the construction and maintenance of roadways and bridges. Recently, however, funding for the local road/bridge program has been reduced. This program assisted municipalities in addressing their bridge construction, rehabilitation, and maintenance needs. My question to the Minister of Transportation: given the cuts to this program how does your department plan on keeping Alberta bridges safe and up to code?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a good question, and I want the hon. member to know that although we're responsible for a sizable network of roads and bridges, we take safety very seriously. I can assure the member that regardless of the changes and the adjustments to the budget on this program, every inspection that was done last year will be done this year. Safety is a big priority, and bridges are a big part of that. It's a big responsibility, and there's no finish line, so I can assure the hon. member that we will stay on the file.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A supplemental to the same minister: given that even before these reductions the Auditor General found deficiencies in terms of the quality, timeliness, and completeness of bridge inspections, how are you planning on addressing this issue with even less money available?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a very good opportunity, as it turns out, to talk about the audit we got last year, where the Auditor made some recommendations to us, and the fact that we've accepted every one of those recommendations. They're all essentially fulfilled. We've met our responsibilities. We thank the Auditor for the advice. Let me point out to the House and to any Albertans watching that the audit also said very clearly: we saw no evidence of unsafe bridges. Albertans can have great confidence.

Mr. Quest: Well, it's good to hear, Mr. Speaker.

My second supplemental to the same minister: given that our bridges continue to age around the province and in my constituency, Minister, can you provide a summary of updated bridge inspections and the quality in the riding of Strathcona-Sherwood Park so we can be assured that our travels are safe?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, we all continue to age, as does our infrastructure.

If the hon. member has an issue with a particular bridge or a particular structure, I would be more than happy, you know, to give him that specific information online. As has been said in the House before, there are somewhere north of 4,000 bridges. Again, for this member or anyone in the House: if they have a question about a specific one, I'd be happy to try to answer that.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're going to proceed with Members' Statements in 30 seconds from now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Edmonton-Decore.

Financial Oversight of Alberta Health Services

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today more evidence has emerged that this PC government can't be trusted to protect Alberta's public health care system, yet another executive submitting expense claims through Alberta Health Services after accessing private health care, this time under the current Minister of Health's watch, in 2012. For our public health officials to show this kind of contempt for the health care we have in Alberta is more than disappointing. It is outrageous.

Under this Health minister's very eyes Alberta Health Services violated the Canada Health Act, section 12(1)(a), which reads that a province "must provide for insured health services on uniform terms and conditions." But instead of observing the law that protects public health care in Canada, the very people who are supposed to be improving the care of ordinary people are undermining it. Perhaps these executives aren't even fully motivated to improve the system because they'll simply expense claim their way to the front of the line.

Alberta's NDP has always been committed to improving, strengthening, and extending public health care, but this PC government continually attempts to starve, undermine, and weaken public health care in Alberta. It's time for this PC government to take responsibility for their legacy in our health care system. It's time that they step up to ensure proper financial oversight of AHS and ensure that the people in charge of our public health care system actually believe in public health care. This government, this Premier, this Health minister, and indeed the executives that run Alberta Health Services must, as Alberta's NDP always has, stand up for public health care and stand up against two-tier health care and queue-jumping.

This government and this Health minister have lost control of Alberta's health care system. They appoint boards full of high-flying, wealthy businesspeople to control it and then try to avoid responsibility when their rich friends make decisions that hurt health care for everyday Albertans.

Alberta's NDP is committed to strengthening our public health system and to ensuring that all Albertans have access to high-quality health care. We will continue to stand up to this PC government's attempts to damage public health care so all Albertans receive access to the care they need regardless of income.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by Calgary-Currie.

John Humphrey Centre for Peace and Human Rights

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured and privileged to rise in recognition of the 15th anniversary of the John Humphrey Centre for Peace and Human Rights, a charitable, nonprofit Edmonton organization which was established on November 26, 1998.

November 1998 was a pivotal time for this signature organization as their raison d'être drew inspiration and action from the International Conference on Universal Rights and Human Values: A Blueprint for Peace, Justice and Freedom, held in Edmonton that month, and also for individuals with a shared interest in contributing to a new view of the world, which has a common high standard and value for peace, human rights, and freedoms. The conference was the largest international commemoration of the 50th anniversary of the United Nations universal declaration of human rights.

Conference delegates, Mr. Speaker, included the Most Reverend Desmond Tutu, Archbishop Emeritus and Nobel laureate; and Her Excellency Mary Robinson, United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, to name a few.

Mr. Speaker, the centre is named after the late John P. Humphrey, a Canadian lawyer and the principal drafter of the United Nations universal declaration of human rights, which celebrates 65 years on December 10 of this year. Central to the goals of the John Humphrey Centre is to observe and realize the universal implementation of human rights through the teaching and education of all people, with a focus on children and youth.

Also, through the lens of the United Nations universal declaration of human rights they seek universal recognition, understanding, promotion, and protection of human rights, which are essential to maintain and advance the everlasting culture of peace and human rights.

Since 1998 with pride and conviction the John Humphrey Centre has made undeniable progress. Congratulations to the enormous leadership of all those involved, who have contributed to the long-standing success of the John Humphrey Centre.

Heartfelt thanks for adding immeasurably to our city, province, and country, and best wishes for continued success in the years to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by Calgary-South East.

Excellence in Teaching Awards

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today to celebrate outstanding educators in Alberta. This week 129 excellence in teaching award semifinalists from across the province are being recognized in Calgary and Edmonton. On May 25 twenty of these outstanding teachers will be added to the distinguished list of over 500 former excellence in teaching award recipients since 1989.

Last year I brought greetings on behalf of our Minister of Education at the award recipients' ceremony. I can tell you that these are the educators who recognize that teaching is not a job; teaching is a vocation.

Shaping Alberta's next generation is a huge responsibility. These semifinalists embody the vision and the direction of Alberta's Inspiring Education initiative, which is to lead students towards being engaged thinkers and ethical citizens with an entrepreneurial spirit.

These are the teachers and administrators who understand the minds of the children that we serve today and the whole new world that they will live in tomorrow, a creative, innovative, and interactive world that we as a government strive every day to imagine and to build.

I want to publicly congratulate each and every one of these incredible teachers for making a difference in the lives of our kids. I think I can speak on behalf of all Albertans to say that just as every challenge is embraced by all of us, every student's success and victory is felt by all of us as well.

Thank you to these individuals, who have not just measured up to the expectations but have gone beyond in the most important place that we can have success, our schools.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-South East, followed by Airdrie.

Alberta Advantages

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Disgust, ridiculous, unethical, corrupt, immoral, wrong: these are words we've heard in the past. These are words that come from a place of anger. They breed hate and misinformation. They pit people against each other. They don't lift people up, and they certainly don't describe hope.

Mr. Speaker, these are the words that oppressors and haters used to describe Dr. Martin Luther King and his plight to emancipate African-Americans and the poor. Dr. King had a dream that in America and, in fact, the world the best was yet to come, which he articulated in his mountaintop speech on April 3, 1968.

Sadly, Mr. Speaker, on April 4, 1968, Dr. Martin Luther King was assassinated at the Lorraine Motel in Memphis, Tennessee. I've been to the Lorraine Motel, which is now the National Civil Rights Museum. It's an experience I'll never forget. It's an experience that affirmed in me that whatever I do in life, I will do my best to lift people up.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to be part of a government that has made the same commitment to Albertans, to work hand in hand with them and represent them to the world. Like Dr. King, I believe the best is yet to come in this province and that we must build on our strengths rather than rip everything down that the people of this province created with their hard work and their great ideas for Alberta.

Let me reiterate a sampling of Alberta's many accomplishments. Mr. Speaker, Alberta has by far the strongest protection for land and property rights in Canada. Alberta leads the nation in growth. Alberta has a first-rate education system that consistently ranks near the top in the world. Our institutions of higher learning are world class. In fact, with only 11 per cent of the national population Alberta holds 17 per cent of the Canada excellence research chairs. Alberta has one of the lowest unemployment rates in the country, the lowest taxes. At the end of the day Alberta is the best place in the world to live. It is the best place to grow up, to study, to work, to raise a family, and to retire.

To say that Alberta has much to be proud of would be an understatement, Mr. Speaker. I see no reason to be anything but positive in my outlook for this province. I'm proud to call myself an Albertan. I'm even more proud to say that I have the privilege of serving this great province under this leader.

Provincial Fiscal Policy

Mr. Anderson: Well, on that happy note, Mr. Speaker, Albertans are getting more and more upset with this government's irresponsible handling of our province's budget crisis. Although most understand the need to cut wasteful spending in order to balance the budget, Albertans don't understand why the government is cutting directly on the front lines rather than axing corporate grants or trimming our largest in the nation bureaucracy.

They don't understand how we can on the one hand spend $350 million on new MLA offices, $2 billion on direct industry grants to pump CO<sub>2</sub> underground, and hundreds of millions on waste and mismanagement in our health care system, and then, on the other hand, cut front-line services for the vulnerable.

For example, the Bethany care centres in Airdrie, Cochrane, and Calgary provide long-term care for 800 seniors, many of them with very severe dementia. The government has recently cut funding for these seniors, resulting in the firing of 53 full-time front-line workers, resulting in pain and discomfort for these wonderful seniors. Bethany has detailed how these changes have increased the time spent by seniors waiting for help to go to the bathroom, reduced the amount of offered activities, rushed meal times, and increased agitation where staff are often unavailable to assist dementia patients who've become confused or disoriented.

I hope that each of you on that side of the House, while you're patting yourselves on the backs, thinks about this when you are looking out the window of your $350 million new MLA Taj Mahal next year or perhaps when your RSP allowance comes in several thousands of dollars higher than it was when you were first elected.

When governments make wasteful, selfish, and irresponsible spending decisions, there are real-life consequences for real people. Your poor decisions and unwillingness to cut the real fat in your bloated government is causing our seniors, who built what we enjoy today, to suffer needlessly. These cuts to seniors' care at Bethany and other front-line service cuts should be reversed immediately.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Private Bills I beg leave to present under Standing Order 98(2) the following petitions that have been received for private bills:

- (1) the petition of Stephen D. Miller, trustee of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Canada, for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Canada Act.
- (2) the petition of Charles Frederick Barth, chair of the members of Misericordia hospital for the Misericordia Hospital Amendment Act, 2013, and
- (3) the petition of Lynn Jacobson, president of the Wild Rose Agricultural Producers, for the Wild Rose Agricultural Producers Amendment Act, 2013.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am pleased to present the third installment of the pheasant release sustainability program petition, that was reviewed and improved in format by Parliamentary Counsel. These petitions are coming in from around the province. With the third installment of this petition we have 1,449 signatures from Albertans who are petitioning the Leg. Assembly to urge the government to take the necessary measures, including the introduction of proposed amendments to existing legislation, to ensure the preservation and enhancement of the Pheasant Release Program, which has been an important part of Alberta's hunting tradition, heritage and culture for over 65 years.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of five copies of the document I mentioned today, the travel, hospitality, and hosting expense claim form, signed by Dr. Chris Eagle, for expenses at the private diagnostic centre, on behalf of the VP from AHS, Alison Tonge.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. First of all, I have the appropriate number of copies of documents referred to by the leader of the NDP caucus in question period today. In particular, these are promotional materials for the privately funded diagnostic clinic which an AHS official attended on the dime of Alberta taxpayers, apparently as part of a recruitment package consisting of taxpayer-funded private health care for someone recruited to manage our public system.

The second set of documents is again the appropriate number of copies of e-mail submissions that Albertans have sent to the Premier and copied to me. These are just some of the many hundreds of e-mails that my office has received calling on the Premier to honour her government's promise to Albertans not to evict some of Alberta's most vulnerable citizens from their home in Red Deer's Michener Centre. Submissions like this clearly show that keeping the Michener Centre open is a priority of Albertans and that this PC government is out of touch with its broken-promises budget.

The final group, Mr. Speaker, is the appropriate number of copies of e-mail submissions that Albertans made to our prebudget tour, which visited seven cities in February. Gerald, M. Januario, and Kyla are some of the Albertans who have provided valuable input. For example, high school teacher Kyla's primary concern is a lack of proper funding for education in Alberta. Submissions like this clearly show what the priorities of Albertans are and how out of touch the government's broken-promises budget is with those priorities.

Thank you.

Mr. Hehr: I have two tablings today, Mr. Speaker. The first is an article by Ezra Levant, which goes through the goings-on at the Edmonton Islamic Academy and shows where clerics visit to give lectures in sharia law.

The other one that I referenced in my question was the criteria for admission at the Edmonton Islamic Academy, which states clearly that no student with special needs or IPPs need apply.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of the MOU, or memorandum of understanding, between the government of Alberta and the cities of Calgary and Edmonton for the establishment of a big-city charter. The agreement states that the charter will be in place by spring of 2013. Considering the progress that's been made to date, cities are growing impatient and increasingly worried that this agreement will amount to little more than another broken promise.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, followed by Airdrie.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to table five copies of a handout on my ministry's performance measures. Last winter we developed new performance measures to more transparently reflect the department's effectiveness at delivering on its mandate. This chart, which was presented to the standing committee in budget estimates this morning, April 17, shows the relationship between my ministry's activities, the performance measures, and the results Albertans can expect to see.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It's a letter from David Ross, who contacted me as a concerned father of a young man who is under the care of PDD in Alberta and found out at an informational meeting in Calgary that budget cuts to PDD were going to significantly harm a day program for his son. Fifty per cent of that budget will be taken out. The son has a worker who takes him four days a week into the community and supervises him as he does volunteer work for the food bank and the Bethany care centre, unbelievably, as well. Because of this funding being cut, his son will no longer be able to do that. Those types of programs will essentially have to be at home. He's very concerned about that, and I would ask the Minister of Human Services to take a look as well.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Griffiths, Minister of Municipal Affairs, responses to questions raised by Ms Smith, hon. Member for Highwood; Mr. Bilous, hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview; Ms Blakeman, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre; and Mr. Rowe, hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills on March 6, 2013, the Ministry of Municipal Affairs 2012-13 supplementary supply estimates debate.

The Speaker: I believe that concludes the Routine, and we can move on to points of order. The first point of order, I believe, was Airdrie.

Hon. Member for Airdrie, please proceed with your citation and your point.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, if you would like, I called three points of order, but two of them could be merged into one if that would speed things up.

3:00

The Speaker: Okay. Is it 1 and 2 or 1 and 3 or 2 and 3?

Mr. Anderson: It's 1 and 2.

The Speaker: Okay. Proceed. Thank you.

Point of Order

Allegations against Members

Mr. Anderson: This is referring to Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), specifically making allegations against another member, imputing false or unavowed motives, and also – well, we'll stick with those ones. They refer to two comments: the Health minister, who said specifically that this side of the House did not support public health care; and then, of course, the Premier's comment that we campaigned on a two-tier health care plan.

Mr. Speaker, it's one thing to have different opinions about certain things, and that certainly happens in this Legislature a lot. However, it's quite another to completely misrepresent the facts. On our website, our caucus website, our party website, in the campaign our members and our caucus have been very clear that we completely support the tenets of the Canada Health Act and do not support a two-tier health care system. Now, we do support, of course, a health wait time guarantee, where if the wait is too long in the public system – over six months, I believe it is, for some serious treatments – we would pay to have that service done out of province if necessary. That would be available to all Albertans. It wouldn't be two-tier. It would be if they were waiting on a wait list longer than six months.

That is something that needs to be cleared up. When we start throwing things around like that that say that we want to break the Canada Health Act, that we're actively doing that, that's just fundamentally not true. I hope that that would clarify those untruthful comments.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I thank the member for keeping his comments brief. I will endeavour to do the same.

I do not have the benefit of the Blues that you may have, Mr. Speaker, but I believe the exact comment from the hon. Minister of Health was the undermining of health care, and this is a matter of his particular opinion.

The second thing that I would indicate is that this member has somewhat of a revisionist view of history. I go back to the election, and this is a document that I'll table tomorrow. A quote from the Globe and Mail from April 5, 2012: "Wildrose promises private health care on public dime to shorten waiting times." Now, again . . . [interjections] Mr. Speaker, I can hardly hear myself think over this member's heckling. It is not our fault on the government side that this member doesn't like what his party has said in the past.

There is no point of order here because what the Minister of Health was simply stating is true. This member is also trained in the law, Mr. Speaker, and he knows that truth is an absolute defence. With respect, there is no point of order.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Airdrie has already said that it's more a point of clarification. I would agree with him. But it is a reminder again of previous discussions we've had here, particularly over the last few days. We just need to be a little bit careful and perhaps at times even sensitive as to what we say, how we say it, the tone and manner in which we deliver our statements, and so on. That would save the House enormous amounts of time.

I'm going to save the House some time right now by accepting that this is a point of clarification and it not be debated any further.

Let us move on to the third point. The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Point of Order

Factual Accuracy

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This refers also to 23(h), (i), and (j), but also (l): "introduces any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly." The Minister of Health specifically stated that nothing has been proven with regard to queue-jumping by health executives and so forth. That's what he was alluding to, nothing has been proven in this House since the government took office.

Now, of course, I would ask for a clarification from that side because clearly that's not true. The PC government has been in power for 42 years. It's very clear that the evidence tabled yesterday in this House very clearly showed that a health executive did jump the queue and went to the Mayo Clinic, and that's all been hashed out in this Assembly. In fact, the Premier and the Health minister both said and agreed, conceded, that that did happen and said that it was unacceptable. As well, of course, we have the documents that were alluded to today and will be tabled going forward, those FOIP requests, et cetera.

So for the Health minister to stand and say that nothing has been proven, saying that we are just falsely throwing out allegations, is just not true. You can't say something that is just patently not true in this House. We've shown the evidence. It's been accepted by the other side, specifically on the Mayo Clinic issue from yesterday. I'm sure they'll change their position tomorrow, but who knows? I'm not going to speculate on what we brought forward today. There's no doubt that it has been proven that queue-jumping has indeed been occurring.

Again, you know, I don't see the point of bringing any kind of accusation of intentionally misleading the House. Obviously, things are said in debate. But to say that something is not proven, that they just yesterday said did happen and conceded, is nonsense, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, and I'll again endeavour to be brief, Mr. Speaker. The member has suggested that. Nothing has been proven. Well, he's made all sorts of allegations and innuendo here, but allegations and innuendo are just that. I realize that there's no point of order on a point of order, but even 23(h) talks about making allegations against another member. We hear all these allegations. We've recently had an independent inquiry as to queue-jumping. There was nothing found of substance. Again, the member, with respect, keeps moving forward and talking about things that are not true.

I would suggest again, with respect and deference to you, that there is no point of order here.

The Speaker: You know, hon. members, we don't move ahead in the Assembly too much when we stand up to defend a point of order by then giving rise to something that might cause another point to be raised. I think we understand the intent of what you're trying to say here, and the clarification as given is accepted.

I want to say two things here very quickly and clearly. Number one, in reviewing the Blues, which I've just received, it's clear here what the Minister of Health had said and that his reference was to the current government, and I think everyone understands what is meant by that. What is meant by that is that every time we have an election, effectively a new government comes in because the new government is typically a new front bench or several faces who are new, so it's frequently referred to as the government, those 18 to 26 people or so that are privileged to serve in that position.

However, we often hear comments, too, where people say: well, this government has been in power for so many years. It's not only in Alberta that this happens. It happens elsewhere. But a distinction ought to be made and understood that when we're referring to the government in this House, we're talking about this government because that's all that this government and its front benches can comment on: their own actions, their own policies. In the same way that members in opposition wouldn't be expected to be responsible for comments or policies developed by their predecessors, it's the same on the government side.

Number two, we should never use the points of order section of our proceedings here to continue debate. I do accept and understand that it's oftentimes necessary to clarify party positions or government positions or whatever, and I think that's what has happened here.

That having been said, the caution has been given. We're not going to accept this as a point of order but as a matter of clarification, and we're going to move on.

On that happy note, we are going to move on to an adjournment which will see the House reconvene tomorrow at 1:30 p.m. Thank you.

[The Assembly adjourned at 3:09 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, April 18, 2013

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As we conclude our work in this Assembly for this week and return to continue our work in our constituencies, let us be thankful for what we have accomplished on behalf of our constituents. Let us also be replenished with renewed energy and enthusiasm that results from being reunited with our families and our loved ones. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 24 students from Northern Lakes College in High Prairie and area along with their chaperone, Jennifer Zallum. I ask that they stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. I'm not exactly sure if they're seated in the public gallery.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly some amazing people. In fact, we're very lucky here because we have 80 of the smartest and most promising students in all of Airdrie – in all of Airdrie, obviously, but in all of Alberta, too – here with us today, three classes of grade 6 students from Ralph McCall in Airdrie, and they're here with 10 teachers and parents. I know this class is very excited to be here. We skyped in preparation for this meeting. We had a great Skype question-and-answer session. They asked incredible questions. As everyone in this Assembly knows, we get some of our hardest questions from the students that visit, far more probing than even the opposition, the House leader would say, and I would agree.

They're here today with their teachers and group leaders. I'm just going to ask those group leaders to rise as I call their names and remain standing: Mr. Brian Jackson, a teacher; Mrs. Pam Burke; Ms Kendall Brown; and Rob Saipe are all here. Their parent helpers are Ms Dawn Weaver, Mr. Michael Froslev, Ms Gray – I'm sorry, I didn't get that first name – Mrs. Stella Randell, Mrs. Tammy Dixon, and Jason. Again I didn't get the last name, but I saw you earlier, Jason. There you are. If the students could now all rise – they're in both galleries – and please receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two very special constituents from St. Albert, Eileen Hofmann and her husband Lorne Hofmann, whom I'll ask to rise in the members' gallery as I introduce them. Eileen is the manager of my constituency office in St. Albert, a position she has served with passion and grace for the past five years. Eileen is a remarkable asset to our community. She is a determined and compassionate advocate for all who come to our office for assistance, and I can't imagine serving in this position without her guidance and support. In her spare time Eileen is a loving mother of two teenage children, Kyeler and Corissa, and she's also taking night courses to complete her social work degree. She's developing and honing a skill that she uses every week in our office in St. Albert.

As for Lorne, you could say that he has dual citizenship between St. Albert, where he resides, and Athabasca, where he works at the Alberta-Pacific pulp mill. It's also worth mentioning that Lorne is a hockey buddy of Minister Johnson, and I've been told he's got exceptional hands. Lorne is also the resident handyman in our office.

I'd like to take this opportunity to thank both Eileen and Lorne for their tireless dedication and commitment to our office in St. Albert, and I'd ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two of my constituents, Louise Brisson and her daughter Aliya Bartkiewicz. Aliya is a U of A student currently in her last year of nursing. She graduated from the University of Calgary with a degree in geography. She's truly a product of Campus Alberta. She's following in the footsteps of her mother, who is also a nurse. Aliya and Louise are in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is truly a privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you members and staff from our Youth Secretariat. We are joined by Amber Moos, Nancy Groat, and Shandy Wogan, who are currently serving on the 2013 Human Services Youth Advisory Panel. They are joined by David French and Brittany Wiebe, Human Services staff that support the work of the Youth Secretariat. The newly appointed Youth Advisory Panel has made great strides this past month. I'm glad to have these engaged youth here today to have a better understanding of how this Legislature works. Please join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, followed by the New Democratic leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Merv Lien, his daughter Sherri-Ann Godby, and Jean Zukowsky. Merv is a retired construction superintendent, and he and Jean have been dating for 35 years. Between them they have 12 children, 27 grandchildren, and 19 great-grandchildren. All of their children give back to the community as nurses, doctors, teachers, caregivers, dispatchers, and tinsmiths. Sherri-Ann is a full-time foster mom. Merv is concerned about the future of Alberta and has been a fervent advocate for better democracy. Yesterday was the 31st anniversary of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and he is here to show his support. He's been advocating to get rid of gag orders in the health system, section 11 of Bill 44, and he's also an advocate for property rights. Merv is also an author of some books, The Devil's Tongue and Life Is a Joke. He's written to Her Majesty the Queen and to you, Mr. Speaker. He's here to thank Her Majesty and you for writing back. I would ask Merv and his family to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guest, Steve Kaz. Steve is originally from Sherwood Park but now splits his time between Edmonton and Slave Lake. He owns and runs his own company, Summit Finishing & Woodwork. In the 2012 election Steve was also a candidate for the NDP, running in the constituency of Lesser Slave Lake. I would now ask Steve to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure today to rise to introduce to you and through you my guest Lisa Kaye-Stanisky. Lisa is the sister and guardian of Floyd Kaye, a medically fragile resident of Michener Centre for 56 years. He doesn't speak, he's blind, and he's mostly deaf. He has to be fed very carefully, or he will choke. Lisa worries that in Floyd's new home the staff will not have time to feed him properly, will assess him as too high risk to feed, and will put a feeding tube in him. He will resist this treatment, and he will have to be restrained. At Michener Floyd receives regular baths, is taken on outings, goes to camp and to church. Lisa is incredibly worried about the future quality of life for Floyd unless the Premier reverses her ill-conceived decision to close the Michener Centre. I would now like to ask Lisa to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, your guests have not yet arrived, so we'll move on to the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly one of the councillors from the beautiful community of Devon in our new part of our constituency. It's great to have elected officials join us here. If I could introduce to you Councillor Gordon Groat and his lovely bride. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

National Volunteer Week

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Across Alberta the same incredible spirit of community that helped to build our great province continues to burn brightly. It is a light fuelled by the compassion, the concern, and the generosity of a special group of amazing Albertans. They are our friends and neighbours, our students, our parents, our grandparents, and even our children. They are farmers, bankers, shopkeepers, rig workers, and home builders. They are Alberta-born and -raised and those who have come from far and wide to make this province their home. While their backgrounds may differ, they share a common bond of community service. They are volunteers.

Mr. Speaker, April 21 to 27 is National Volunteer Week, a time to recognize and honour our volunteers, Albertans who have identified a need and stepped forward to create solutions in their communities. Our volunteers are delivering recreational, social, and cultural programs and services valued at more than $9 billion annually that enhance the quality of life for our families and communities. Our volunteers help to develop the artists, the athletes, entrepreneurs, and leaders of tomorrow.

These remarkable individuals are not driven by their desire for compensation, recognition, or praise. They are motivated by a sense of duty, a sense of compassion, and a sense of community. Mr. Speaker, their reward is in the new skills they've learned, the experience they've gained, the friendships they've made, and the memories that will last a lifetime.

The government of Alberta is proud to support our volunteers and voluntary sector agencies. The Stars of Alberta volunteer awards are presented each December to recognize exceptional Albertans who are making it happen and who demonstrate the true spirit of this province for the benefit of all our citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all members and all Albertans join together to recognize and celebrate our amazing volunteers during National Volunteer Week, starting this Sunday, and every day of the year.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Health System Executive Expenses

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This has been a bad week for Albertans' ever-eroding confidence in their public health care system. Our public system is built on key principles of universality and equal access. All Albertans are entitled to the same level of health care regardless of who they are or who they know. These principles took a very public beating this week with revelations that not one but two senior health executives bought private health care out of pocket and then recouped the money from Alberta taxpayers.

Last year former AHS VP Alison Tonge charged for medical tests at a private facility. She submitted the bill to taxpayers, and AHS CEO Chris Eagle approved it. If you are not an AHS VP, good luck getting the government to pay that for you, Mr. Speaker. In 2007 former Capital health VP Michele Lahey went all the way to the world-renowned Mayo Clinic in Minnesota for $7,000 worth of treatment and then turned around and charged taxpayers for it.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, Albertans who would have to wait in line for health care got stuck with the bill for a connected government insider to get preferential access unavailable to them. Now, I understand that Sheila Weatherill has since admitted that this was wrong and has agreed to pay it back on Ms Lahey's behalf, and if that's true, that's a good thing.

Regardless of that, this is queue-jumping, Mr. Speaker, no ifs, ands, or buts. It's queue-jumping, and it's wrong. The government is pretending to be mad about it. It's the same act they pull whenever they are confronted with a smoking gun that verifies their entitlement and mismanagement. But they're not mad. They can manufacture rhetorical anger for political convenience all they want. They will be judged by their actions. The ball is now in their court, and they can do two things. They can sweep it under the rug and pretend it never happened, or they can undertake to get to the bottom of it.

North Saskatchewan River Valley

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, in 1957 I caught my first goldeye in the North Saskatchewan River. In 1967 my family founded the Waskahagan hiking trail, a 300-kilometre trail that transverses at the North Saskatchewan River at Ross Creek, near Fort Saskatchewan. The beautiful constituency that I've lived in for over 50 years, Gold Bar, has as its western and northern border this beautiful river.

Mr. Speaker, I've canoed the river from Devon to Whitemud park, but not recently.

In 1978, Mr. Speaker, I worked for the company that planted thousands of trees and shrubs in the valley. At that time the province and the city of Edmonton invested in the river valley trails. The city continues to be great stewards of the valley. Today the River Valley Alliance, with the goal to preserve, protect, and enhance, is working on linking the trails from Devon to Fort Saskatchewan. The North Saskatchewan Riverkeeper is urging responsible use of the river, and a relatively new group, the North Saskatchewan River Valley Conservation Society, is promoting the Big Island/Woodbend natural area. This 400-hectare area will be Canada's largest urban wilderness area, completely within the city of Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, the North Saskatchewan River valley is a year-round blessing to Edmontonians and Albertans. Let's protect it, and let's use it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Youth Advisory Panel

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to stand before the Assembly today as chair of Alberta's Youth Secretariat. As such, I'm excited to take this opportunity to recognize its success and make mention of its current activities.

The Youth Secretariat, which falls under the Ministry of Human Services, was formed by Premier Klein in 1999 for the purpose of helping the government to address issues that impact youth at risk. By the year 2000 a Youth Advisory Panel was established to provide an ongoing youth perspective on all work done by the secretariat. Ever since, Mr. Speaker, Alberta has been able to provide its youth with the unique opportunity to become involved in government through their voice on the panel.

This Progressive Conservative government takes seriously the civic education and engagement of Alberta's youth. Alberta's long-term success depends upon inquiring minds and proactive attitudes in all of its citizens but particularly in our youth. It is today's youth that will lead the Alberta of tomorrow. This is why we are looking at upcoming legislation with engaged youth in order to familiarize them with the legislative process to gain valuable insight from our up-and-coming leaders.

We held our inaugural meeting with this year's Youth Advisory Panel in early March, and I can honestly say that it was an inspiring meeting. We engaged the hon. Minister of Human Services on the panel's goals and priorities for the year. We also discussed the water conversation with the hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. Along with their fellow panel members Amber, Nancy, and Shandy, who are here today, have embraced this opportunity to help shape programs that impact everyone in this province.

Now I issue a challenge to my MLA colleagues. If you see an opportunity to engage youth on government initiatives, involve the Youth Advisory Panel. The best way to educate the citizens and leaders of tomorrow is to get them involved early in their lives.

Mr. Speaker, we have some incredibly bright, ambitious, and hard-working Albertans on this year's Youth Advisory Panel, and I can't wait to sit down with them again. This government is building Alberta. What better way to build than to foster ambition, compassion, and responsibility within young Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Calgary-Bow.

Advocacy for Seniors

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The median age of people living in the constituency of Calgary-Varsity is over 60. Many of our constituents have lived in this community for 30 to 40 years, and they want to stay in these communities, close to their family and their friends.

As a new MLA how do I support this vision? In our constituency office we've decided that we're going to be unrelenting advocates for seniors. Negotiating transitions from home care to acute care in hospital to supportive living or long-term care in the community is daunting. Sometimes this involves going to the seniors' bedsides to support planning with Alberta Health Services or talking to family members about choices.

We're always talking with local community associations about active aging programs. Together we look at all possibilities. For example, will permitting more secondary suites in Calgary support the goal of keeping seniors in the community longer? We meet with the mayor of Calgary, his staff, and our local alderman to figure out ways to streamline zoning approvals for construction of new supportive living and affordable housing. At our urging and with the support of colleagues the city has even designated someone responsible for managing seniors' issues at city hall.

Our constituency office presses the Calgary board of education, our government, and the private sector to identify land in Calgary-Varsity where we can locate more facilities. When we see plans for new construction happening – for example, the west campus development at the U of C or the redesign of Stadium Shopping Centre in University Heights – we're at the table with the developers and the local communities promoting age-friendly buildings even at the design stage.

Mr. Speaker, seniors are the heart and soul of our communities. As MLA my goal is to work with the government and our other strategic partners to create the conditions for seniors to live in their communities in dignity for as long as they choose.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. We have one final member's statement, which we'll hear after question period.

Let me just congratulate all of you for listening so attentively to each other's member's statements today. That was well done. You deserve a thank you from the Speaker, and you've got it.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, your first main set of questions.

Health Services Preferential Access Inquiry

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Health continues to undermine public confidence in the Alberta health system. He refuses to acknowledge any shortcomings or failures, yet his performance on doctors' negotiations, drug prices, excessive expenses, facility closures, wait lists, and executive bonuses is terrible. Then there is the reluctance to get to the bottom of queue-jumping. The Lahey Mayo Clinic example is the smoking gun.

Will the Premier agree to ask the Vertes inquiry to reopen and re-examine this matter?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have some news to share with the House today, and I will table the relevant document at the appropriate time. Just prior to question period today I received a letter from Mrs. Sheila Weatherill, former CEO of Capital health, in which she acknowledges that the payment in question, referred to by the hon. Leader of the Opposition, was made in error, was a mistake. She has apologized for the mistake, she has provided an explanation, and she has repaid the money to the government of Alberta and the people of Alberta.

Ms Smith: I'm glad she saw fit to use a portion of her $1.5 million severance payment to do the right thing and pay that back.

Mr. Speaker, the former CEO of Capital health sent one of her VPs out of the country for special treatment, signed off on the expense so that it would be covered by Alberta taxpayers, bypassed the process that other Albertans have to follow. That is queue-jumping. Even though she has paid it back, that same CEO testified before the Vertes inquiry and never even mentioned it. Why doesn't the Premier reopen the inquiry to see if there are any other cases we should be worried about?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the inquiry into improper preferential access is still ongoing. As we've discussed in the past, it is not the business of the Minister of Health or, I would say, any elected member of this Assembly to tell the commissioner for that inquiry where he should and should not look. The inquiry is open. An extension has been provided until the end of August. We have every confidence that Justice Vertes will thoroughly investigate any matter he deems relevant.

Ms Smith: The justice invited us to give him suggestions, and we intend to do that.

The Premier told the Assembly yesterday that she ran for office so she could make changes in the way government operates. Well, Mr. Speaker, so far we haven't seen any evidence of any changes to the culture of entitlement that pervades that 42-year-old operation. I ask again: if she won't agree to get to the truth through the Vertes inquiry, how about a forensic audit into all of the expenses of the health regions going back to the Merali era?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I think we've established in this House on many occasions that there is a process available under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act to access that information. While I don't have details of any of the information, I would be very surprised if it was not the case that all of the expense claims that the hon. member refers to – I don't know how many years she's talking about today – have in fact been requested through that process.

Mr. Speaker, what I did do earlier today is that I had a conversation with and subsequently wrote to the former Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, Chief Justice Allan Wachowich, and I've asked for his assistance in looking at avenues to recoup . . .

The Speaker: Hon. leader, your second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: I'll be looking forward to seeing how the Minister of Health finishes that statement.

Health System Executive Expenses

Ms Smith: The Minister of Health finally did acknowledge yesterday that it was wrong and offensive to spend public health dollars to send a health executive to the Mayo Clinic, but he does say that it was in the past. Well, the minister in 2007 is sitting right there as Human Services. He himself was the minister's top adviser then, yet he still denies any continuity. Unbelievable. Will this minister at least take full responsibility for AHS executive contracts and expenses that were signed since he became Health minister, or is that too much to ask?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the ability to weave conspiracy theories apparently knows no bounds on the other side of the House.

We have taken the appropriate steps to put in place not only rules with respect to health executives but with respect to all of government, agencies, boards, and commissions that report to government in order that we do not have to entertain a situation such as the one that was reported on in 2007. If the hon. member truly regards herself as a Premier of a government-in-waiting in this province, she needs to take a lesson from a real Premier of Alberta as to how . . .

Ms Smith: We are not talking about conspiracy when we are demanding accountability.

When executives get monster contracts with country club memberships, tax advisers, and career coaches and then get released with huge severance packages, including expenses, just a couple of years after they're recruited from abroad, Albertans are right to wonder about the competence of AHS management. The minister claims to have fixed all the trouble with lavish expenses in the old health regions. When is he going to look into the lavish contracts and sloppy management at the Health superboard?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this hon. member is in absolutely no position to cast judgment on the competency of management or the delivery of health care in this province. Every time she does so, she denigrates the reputation of not only the board of Alberta Health Services but of the people who actually deliver care to each of us each day, and that is reprehensible.

As I was about to say in the answer to the earlier question, I have also taken an additional step. Given the importance that Albertans place on recouping repayment of improper expenses, I have asked the former Chief Justice of Alberta to conduct a review of any and all legal avenues that are available to recover such expenses.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, to recover them, we've got to find them all first, and when we ask for information, the minister points us to the freedom of information process. Now, we're using it, but we've still only received about half of the requests, and some very senior former health executives are fighting very hard to keep their expenses secret. Once again I ask the minister: to restore public trust, will he agree to release all of the expenses for all of the executives for all of the health regions going back to 2005?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was waiting to see how far back in time the hon. member would want me to go with her in her time machine today. We have rules and processes in place that appropriately govern the approval and the disclosure of expenses at Alberta Health Services and across government. These have been in place for some time. They've been well documented with members of the Assembly. The information is there not just for the opposition to see but for all Albertans to see on the Internet. That's responsible government, that's what responsible Premiers do, and that's the leadership that we've provided.

The Speaker: Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, your third main set of questions.

Prescription Drug Coverage

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Health minister said this week: "On April 1 in response to a pan-Canadian decision by all provinces to set the price for our six top-volume generic drugs at 18 per cent . . . the manufacturers have met the . . . price . . . on those six drugs." That's great, but his answer makes me wonder if the minister even understands his own generic drug plan. He cut prices across the board for everything, not just those six drugs, and that is what now threatens the viability of Alberta pharmacies. Why did the minister break the original agreement?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, once again I have no idea what the hon. member thinks she is talking about, but I can tell you what we have done. It's a very interesting dynamic to be on the side of taxpayers in one set of questions and then to not be on the side of taxpayers in the second set of questions.

The leadership that Alberta has provided in reducing generic drug prices is important. It's important for Albertans. It's important for our economy and small business. It's also important for the rest of Canada. On a pan-Canadian basis we have as a country now reduced the price of the six top generic drugs to 18 per cent. We will proceed with our plans to do the rest with a balance of . . .

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, there is an agreement across provincial jurisdictions to set lower prices for the six most prescribed generic drugs, but that is not what this minister did in Alberta. He announced he was setting prices for all of the generics, so naturally many of these drugs have been delisted, and the prices have actually gone up. Doesn't the minister understand that this Fred-icare plan will mean higher prices for patients and eventually drug shortages and pharmacy closures?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's statement is about as far from the truth as I could possibly imagine. Drug prices in Alberta are only going in one direction, and that is down.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Horne: As the hon. member well knows, with leadership comes the responsibility of taking on difficult challenges and implementing policy in the interests of citizens. Mr. Speaker, this province has led the country in providing transition support to pharmacists as drug prices have been reduced. There are no drugs in Alberta that are delisted without an equivalent drug being brought to the market. I'm very pleased to report to the House that prices are coming . . .

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Every time he talks about this, he confirms he doesn't know the details of his own plan.

The minister made dramatic changes to the way drugs are priced without the agreement of drug companies or pharmacies. He broke the original deal. Will the minister now admit that it was a mistake to try to control the prices of all generic drugs and go back to the original pan-Canadian agreement on the six top-volume drugs?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, my colleagues across Canada who are ministers of health are welcoming Alberta's initiative in reducing generic drug prices for all generic drugs to 18 per cent. They support it because they know it means that they're able to provide more drugs to their growing populations. They support it because they know it means support for jobs for small- and medium-sized businesses that have to pay for employer-sponsored benefit plans. They support it because it reduces prices for people who are unfortunate enough to have to pay out of pocket for their drugs.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Airdrie, you rose on a point of order at 2 o'clock during the first supplemental answer by the Minister of Health. It's been noted.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Mr. Hehr: In her press release this morning the Premier stated that the budget would not be balanced "on the backs of students." That's quite a statement given the draconian cuts this government has delivered to our postsecondary institutions. I'm not the only one who thinks this. The mayors of Edmonton and Calgary believe that these cuts are unjustifiable and a terrible error. To the Premier: in all sincerity given that Alberta already has the lowest participation rate in postsecondary and even fewer opportunities will be given to Alberta's students to take part because of these cuts, how can you make this type of statement?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's get some facts straight. First of all, it should be known – and I'm sure it's appreciated by the majority of students in Alberta – that even following this budget adjustment Alberta advanced education is the second-highest funded advanced education system in Canada. Also, we have the second-highest level of bursaries and grants to students in Canada. Nobody jumps up and down with happiness to have a budget reduction, but we will be focusing on adjusting the budget through administrative changes and not at the expense of students.

Mr. Hehr: Well, let's look at Mount Royal University. They announced program cuts to disability studies, music performance, theatre arts, aging studies, forensics, journalism, prenatal, engineering and reduced the intake for nursing. Does the Premier not recognize that these cuts to our postsecondary system are devastating to students and will have long-lasting effects?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the only artistic performance that should be cut is that of this member sitting across asking those questions because no programs have been cut at this point in time. Maybe it would serve the member well to know that in order for a program to be eliminated, first, the board of directors has to make that decision and vote upon it. The board of directors is made up of community members. Then that has to be submitted to the minister's office for approval or not. I have to date not received any requests for cutting programs.

Mr. Hehr: Well, despite this rhetoric I cannot get over not only what the hon. member said but the press release today stating that we are not balancing the budget on the backs of students. Isn't that akin to when I was trying to pull one over on my grandma, and she would say, "My boy, don't take a leak on my shoes and tell me it's raining"?"

The Speaker: Let us move on.

The hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a hard image to get out of my mind.

Health System Executive Expenses

Mr. Mason: Well, the CEO of Capital health, Sheila Weatherill, approved Michele Lahey's $7,800 visit to the Mayo Clinic while she was the CEO. Today Mrs. Weatherill repaid the $7,800 expense. As she received a $2 million severance from Capital health, no doubt she can afford it. However, we still haven't seen Mrs. Weatherill's own expenses. Why not?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, that information is available under the provisions of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. I am not the party that makes a determination about the release of information under that act. The hon. member is aware of the process, and he has the ability to access that information.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, that act is to get information that the government wants to give. It doesn't prevent the government from giving it.

Mrs. Weatherill also approved the extravagant and outrageous expenses of another senior Capital health official, Mr. Allaudin Merali. Will the minister ask Sheila Weatherill to repay those expenses as well, and if not, why not?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I want to be clear, and I think you would probably caution us to be careful about talking about individuals that are not in the House. What I will tell you and will confirm when I table the document later today is that Mrs. Weatherill offered this repayment of her own volition. She acknowledges in the letter that she sent to me that the payment to Ms Lahey was an error, has apologized for that error, and has renewed her commitment and restated her concern for the interest and integrity of our health care system. For that, I do thank her.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it seems to me that the expenses of Allaudin Merali were similar, almost identical, yet the minister is not prepared to demand that Sheila Weatherill return those, nor apparently is he prepared to tell this House what Sheila Weatherill's expenses were and who approved those. Why not, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as I attempted to say in the answer to an earlier question from another member, I have asked the former Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, Mr. Allan Wachowich, to look at the question of the ability of government to seek repayment. We want to seek repayment for inappropriate expenses, and I've asked him to look at the law and to provide me with his considered opinion as to how that can be done.

Out-of-province Health Services

Mr. Hale: Mr. Speaker, this week we learned a little bit more about the health expense scandal. In addition to personal butlers and fancy dinners, senior AHS executives are allowed to expense private medicare, leaving Albertans stuck holding the bill. Grant Ellefson and Russell Coyne are two victims of this minister's two-tiered health system. Both men underwent spinal surgery after suffering injuries and had their surgical claims rejected. Both men contacted the Health ministry and were turned away. To the Health minister. It's time to start telling the truth. Why are AHS executives getting paid access to private care when Albertans like Grant and Russell are left holding the bill?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I've got to take issue with the premise of the hon. member's question. Access to private health care is not a right or a benefit that is provided to Alberta Health Services or any other employees. If we want to talk about 2005 and we want to talk about the attitude of the Leader of the Opposition to privatization of health care, we can look at her words in the Calgary Herald. "The sooner Canadians realize that privatization is a must, the sooner we can move on to the more crucial debate over how to refinance the system." What did she mean by that?

Mr. Hale: Given that Russell Coyne, a hard-working Albertan with a young family, is suffering the financial burden of his surgery and he's been waiting over 10 months to hear back from the minister's office, will the minister commit to personally looking into Russell's file and compensating him for his surgical costs even though he's not an AHS executive?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd be pleased to look at any information that the hon. member wants to send to me on behalf of his constituent.

What the hon. member hasn't mentioned is whether his constituent is seeking compensation through the Out-of-country Health Services Committee process or the appeal process associated with that. These decisions are not made by government. They are made by a quasi-judicial panel, and there's an appeal process, but I'd be pleased to look at the information if you'd like to send it.

Mr. Hale: I have a document here from back in June. You were fully aware of this for over a year now, Minister.

To the same minister: given that Grant and Russell are both on the hook for tens of thousands of dollars after they were only compensated for anaesthesia and given that both men were facing paralysis, a lifelong debilitation, will you admit that something is wrong with this two-tiered system and that it's examples like these that truly undermine Alberta's confidence in the health care system?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as much as I would certainly feel for the hon. member's constituents, this situation has nothing to do with two-tier health care. Decisions that are made on repayment for health services received out of country are made by a body independent of government. This minister does not have the authority – the hon. member knows this – to override the decisions of the committee or the appeal panel.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by Little Bow.

Postsecondary Education Funding (continued)

Mr. Webber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. After Budget 2013 was released, I received some concerns from my constituents in Calgary-Foothills. The concerns centred around the decreases to postsecondary education funding and the effects that this will have on institutions like Mount Royal University. MRU is now having to make budget adjustments resulting in the cancellation of the engineering transfer program and the cancellation of the theatre and music programs to name a few. My question is to the Deputy Premier: given that decreased funding has raised many uncertainties among postsecondary institutions, what options will be provided to ensure that students will continue to have access to affordable and accessible postsecondary education?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's only natural that in view of a budgetary adjustment there would be uncertainty. Often we talk about numbers and percentages, but at the end of the day we're talking about faculty staff and administrative staff whose job that is, who count on a paycheque, and who have families and probably mortgages. But having said that, this government had to make some very difficult decisions. As you know, we haven't adjusted the budget to the tune that the opposition would want us to adjust it to because then I would have to deal with a much more severe situation in the education system. However, what must be said is that we will work with administration and presidents to minimize the impact on students.

Mr. Webber: Again to the Deputy Premier: given the importance of investing in our province's skilled workforce of the future and that Alberta's prosperity is riding on the academic and professional success of our students and given the fiscal reality that we are currently facing, what can your ministry do to protect postsecondary students like those at Mount Royal University?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, first off all, Mr. Speaker, I would encourage everyone not to jump to conclusions. No decisions have been made on eliminations of programs. I know that the faculty associations are putting forward some worst-case scenarios. What we will do is that we will look at the operations of all schools and also of Campus Alberta to see where we can minimize expenses and make sure that the most dollars enter into the classroom. At the end of the day the second-highest funded education system in Canada should have at least the second-highest participation rate of students. At this point we don't. We will be working on that.

Mr. Webber: Again to the Deputy Premier: given that Alberta's postsecondary institutions are Alberta's engines of innovation and that we need them to continue to provide leading-edge education and given that the deadline for responses to the letter of expectations has been extended, what collaborative efforts are in place to ensure that the quality of education is not compromised?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Good question. Mr. Speaker, what we have established are three tables: one of presidents, one of chairs, and for the first time one of students. We will be meeting quarterly and engaging in those collaborative dialogues on how to better operate our system of Campus Alberta, how to be more functional, and how to deliver a better service to our students, who have more and more options as education is becoming a global commodity. I agree with the member. The only way to diversify our economy and set this economy on fire is through innovation and commercialization, and that is also what we will be focusing on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods.

PDD Funding

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's cold-hearted cuts to vulnerable front-line services continue. The PDD day program in southern Alberta provides high-needs clients with jobs within their limitations and helps to give them a sense of purpose. The Premier even did a photo op at this facility during the election last year in Coaldale. But now programs like it are being cut, and millions are being wasted on plush new MLA offices and special services for health care insiders. To the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities: why do you swing an axe at the front-line programs for the most vulnerable citizens of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for the question. It's a good question. He's representing his constituents and concerns that he's heard out there. I can tell him that they are concerns that I share. We haven't cut any programs yet. We're shifting away from community access programs towards programs that produce better outcomes, community inclusion, community engagement, and employment programs. How that impacts any particular client out there we haven't yet determined, but we're going to do that very carefully.

Mr. Donovan: There was a web seminar on Monday saying that you're going to close all these programs. That's why people are concerned.

Mr. Speaker, again to the same minister: given that southern Alberta has especially high rates of PDD clients and given that you clearly haven't done all the homework for these various employment challenges that exist, when are you going to suspend these cuts and do a proper assessment of the programs that are needed in my region?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, my budget saw an overall increase, though modest, this year. This isn't about cutting; this is about shifting to fund programs that produce better outcomes and better care for the clients that we have in the system.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Speaker, again to the same minister: given that the parents of these PDD clients have contacted me and are worried they're going to have to quit their jobs to look after their adult children, what can we say to assure them? Are you going to reassess your cuts and the needs in my region, or are you going to just keep putting vulnerable Albertans at risk?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, let me be clear. We're not putting vulnerable Albertans at risk, nor are we going to evict, as some members over there have suggested, persons in need and throw them back to their families or put them on the street. That's wrong.

But here's something for the member to ponder over the weekend. We're talking about implementing a difficult budget, doing some difficult balances with a modest increase in the budget. Think about what happens when you cut a couple of billion dollars out of the system, the difficult decisions that you guys would have forecast in moving forward.

Mr. Speaker, we are moving to increase and provide better care for the individuals, for vulnerable Albertans out there. We'll continue to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Immigrant Nominee Program

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta immigrant nominee program is one of the important tools that we have to continue to build Alberta. Through the AINP program Alberta can nominate individuals and their families for permanent residence. Many of my constituents are interested in this program. My question to the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education: how many workers have been nominated each year?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I should begin answering that question by saying that it is our firm policy to make sure that any and all job opportunities are first extended to Albertans and then to the rest of our brothers and sisters throughout Canada, and then if those jobs can't be filled, they are made available to foreigners.

Right now, Mr. Speaker, we nominate approximately 5,000 temporary foreign workers, but when you add their families to this, we're looking at about 18,000 individuals.

Mr. Quadri: To the same minister again: does the ministry have a limit on the number of people that can qualify under AINP in different streams?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the program is a federal program, the program of temporary foreign workers. The obtaining of a labour market opinion by employers is also a federal program. There are federal caps that are put on provinces. Right now the province of Alberta is limited to some 5,000 semiskilled workers per year.

Mr. Quadri: To the same minister again: what kind of assistance does the province provide for the people who qualify under this program to help them out in the transition period until they become permanent residents?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, while they are temporary foreign workers, there are offices that assist temporary foreign workers not only with some administrative work and the paperwork that they have to go through but also with settlement services. Once they become bona fide permanent residents of Canada, they can access any and all services throughout the province, throughout the country such as Catholic Social Services, the Mennonite centre, and the list goes on and on. We're very fortunate in this province to have agencies and third parties that deliver some very valuable services to our immigrant community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Supports for Vulnerable Albertans

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last month the Premier said: we will make tough decisions, but they will be responsible; they will ensure that we are protecting vulnerable people. Jody is a mentally disabled, mobile adult whose supervised community activities get her out of her basement for volunteering, group activities, and exercise. They've eliminated her need for antidepressants. Because of this government's poorly planned cut of $45 million for community access to PDD Jody's meagre opportunities will be severely reduced. To the Premier: will the Premier stop insulting Albertans who are disabled and their families by portraying these cuts as improvements when all Albertans recognize . . .

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out in a previous question, the overall budget for disabilities services did in fact increase although modestly. Nonetheless, there are always difficult decisions to make when you are talking about the care of vulnerable Albertans. We did not cut that budget completely. What I did commit is that those people that rely upon community access supports, that need them, that are identified in their assessments will still get those supports.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me go to the Minister of Human Services, then, who has dodged these questions repeatedly. How can the minister be seen as anything but irresponsible in forcing these drastic cuts in three months? He's clearly out of touch with our most vulnerable and their families.

Mr. Hancock: I would answer that by saying: how can that hon. member be so irresponsible as to scare vulnerable Albertans when the answer is very clear? There will be a plan for each one of those Albertans, and if they need those services, they'll continue to get those services. But we're working to better services for vulnerable Albertans for better outcomes for vulnerable Albertans. That takes time. The associate minister is working with those families, and our department is working with those families. It's absolutely irresponsible to scare those vulnerable Albertans with any other comments.

Dr. Swann: Working with the families doesn't mean listening to the families, Mr. Minister.

Given that you want to increase employment and postsecondary for the severely disabled, which is impossible for people like Jody, and given that Alberta Works has cut a hundred million from employment programs and postsecondary has taken more drastic cuts, how is this not irresponsible? Are these ministries even talking to each other?

Mr. Hancock: What's irresponsible, Mr. Speaker, is to lump every single disabled Albertan into the same can and say that these cuts are going to affect all of them in the same way. What we're doing is responsibly looking at each particular program, at each particular individual, and each particular individual's need and saying: how can we get better outcomes for those people? Yes, we are working with Enterprise and Advanced Education with respect to how we get skill levels up, and yes, we are targeting our resources so that instead of devoting them to the advantaged Albertans, who have the opportunity to get good jobs in a good economy, we're targeting them at those who have barriers to success so that they, too, can participate in our economy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The ink is not even dry on a budget which has been debated but not passed, and the advanced education minister is going back to the drawing board to find $16 million. The minister is so focused on his bait-and-switch plan to distract Albertans from the harm created by his much larger cut that he forgot to include the cost of this plan in his budget and refused to discuss it in estimates debate in the House. To the minister: does he have absolutely no respect for this House, or is he really just making this up as he goes along?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, last Thursday this member had an opportunity to sift through the estimates of this ministry and go line by line through this ministry's budget, so she should have known that there are no added dollars to supplement the inflationary costs that now we are saving students from paying and that the department will pay on students' behalf. There is a line item in the budget. She has seen it; she has approved it. [interjections] I imagine that if she wants to sit down with me and show me what the line item is, I'll gladly show it to her. The budget has not changed, and the allocation to universities has not changed.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that several rural institutions have already predicted staff cuts, downsizing of academic programs, and closure of student support services and given that these reductions when combined with the government's broken promise to fund scholarships for aboriginal and rural students will limit access by these underrepresented groups to advanced ed, why won't the minister admit the facts? Your cuts fundamentally assault the quality and the accessibility of Albertans' advanced education system.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, in a province that has the second-highest funding for advanced education in Canada and also has the second-highest financial support for students and also in a province, as the member will point out every time, that has one of the lower postsecondary enrolments amongst students, if she points out that there is access lacking, something is wrong. [interjections] We will make sure that the dollars that we spend on advanced education get to the classrooms, we will make sure that students get the services that they deserve, and we will run a system that is efficient and student focused.

Ms Notley: Well, only this government would think that the way to fix a problem is to cut 8 per cent away from it. That's ridiculous.

Given that the minister claims he can only ask postsecondary institutions to refrain from raising noninstructional fees and given that Mount Royal University has clearly demonstrated the weight of this so-called ministerial request by announcing plans to raise noninstructional fees, why won't the minister admit that he has all the legislative authority he needs to ban these fees and then step up and do his job and ban them?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, only a member of the NDP caucus would say that the only way to solve a problem is to spend your way out of that problem, to throw more money at the problem and grow it.

Mr. Speaker, we will be focusing on students. [interjections] We know that we can deliver high-quality, competitive education for our students, and we know that we can find administrative efficiencies not only in one school but in the entire Campus Alberta. That's what we will do because at the end of the day 25 per cent of that cost is paid by students through tuition. Certainly, she doesn't want that to go up, does she?

The Speaker: Can we go to the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Edmonton-South West, without any more outbursts if you please?

Respiratory Care Services

Mrs. Towle: On July 1 Alberta Health will be handing clinical oversight of respiratory services to the AHS superboard, who will put the contracts to tender. This is the same board that in 2009 tendered contracts for cataract surgeries, resulting in ballooning wait times and worse outcomes for Albertans. Even the Respiratory Home Care Association of Alberta has stated that this move will lead to significant cost increases and reduced patient access. Does the minister understand that by not listening to those who are actually providing the oxygen service to Albertans that this will cause patient harm?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, this change will not cause patient harm. What it will do is enable Alberta Health Services to delivery respiratory services to a greater number, a growing number of Albertans across the province who need these services. My understanding from my department is that there was consultation with all of the stakeholders involved. The changes were publicized well in advance, and when they come into effect, they will improve access for Albertans who need respiratory care.

Mrs. Towle: I have here a document actually from the Respiratory Home Care Association of Alberta wherein they specifically lay out exactly what the implications are to patients. They also go on to say that this move will increase ER visits, increase death rates, increase hospital admissions, increase ICU admissions. Given that the sole sourcing of contracts leads to supply shortages, doesn't the minister understand that AHS bureaucracy does not need another opportunity to screw up something that is already working?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member probably knows, there are multiple vendors across the province, some large ones but many, many small vendors, who have been involved in the delivery of respiratory services over the years. One of the opportunities in having one health authority to serve the entire province is to achieve a better efficiency and savings in matters related to procurement. This is one such example. I said that people were consulted. I didn't say that everyone would agree. Vendors are affected by this change, but our concern, of course, is with access for patients.

Mrs. Towle: Given that in rural Alberta some oxygen users, including my own father, are already being told that they might not get access and given that this government's very own report from Keefe Taylor Associates says that this type of tender process should be avoided and that the government should keep the current program in place, will the Health minister please stop ignoring your own reports and please reconsider this decision and go back to the table and talk to the home care association of Alberta?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, in making decisions of this nature, it's very important to separate business interests from the interests of patients. The hon. member may disagree with the decision, and she may know people who disagree with the decision, but Albertans expect us as a province and within our health system to achieve the best possible cost-efficiency and value that we can. There are growing numbers of Albertans who require respiratory therapy as a result of the growing incidence of chronic disease and other factors. We must make provisions to meet their needs, and this initiative will do just that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Family Care Clinics

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently we've been hearing about how important family care clinics are for the long-term vision of this government. Specifically, these types of clinics are clearly integral to this government's commitment to investing in the families and communities that make up this province. I know within my constituency of Edmonton-South West we are eagerly awaiting news of when we can expect a clinic. My question is to the hon. Minister of Health. Can you clearly explain about the physical makeup of these clinics and how they're equipped so as to be suited to the needs of all Albertans?

2:30

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, we are very excited about the potential for family care clinics to further improve access to primary health care for all Albertans. That is our core commitment. Family care clinics will provide this access – they are a clinic model, not a network – by putting in place the right mix of health professionals in a given community to serve the people that live in that community. We're doing this by working with local health professionals to conduct community needs assessments. This is a community-driven process. There's an opportunity to tailor the services that are offered for the specific needs of the community.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a lot of what you just said seems already to be in place with the primary care networks and given that this may be more efficient to build as a model across the province, has the Ministry of Health considered standardizing these family care clinics so we can get more of them built and faster?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we are doing is that we are developing primary health care standards that will apply to both primary care networks and family care clinics, that will deliver a more consistent level of service across the province. This includes considerations such as core services that need to be offered in primary health care, the hours of operation, whether PCNs or FCCs are delivering the care to ensure the services are available when people need them, and also, as I said earlier, looking at the unique needs of each community.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in my constituency we have a lot of young families who could benefit from this type of clinic and given that this would significantly reduce the burdens on hospital emergency rooms, when can we expect more clinics to be operational, and where exactly will they be located in the province?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we currently have three pilot clinics, as the hon. member may know: one in Edmonton, one in Calgary, and one in Slave Lake. In the very near future we will be announcing a longer list of communities that we will be working with directly to develop a plan for their family care clinic. Part of this work obviously involves working with the primary care networks, that may serve the same area, to ensure appropriate linkages between the two. So some very exciting and good news coming in the very short future.

Wainwright Health Centre

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, the Wainwright health centre is in dire need of infrastructure upgrades as the sewer system is on the brink of failure. According to Alberta Health Services the sewage system has been a significant concern. This desperately needed project is currently unfunded despite being resubmitted again and again. The need for a new facility is immediate. To the Minister of Infrastructure: a solution is clearly a priority for Wainwright; why is it not a priority for your government?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, this government was elected to build Alberta and live within our means, and we are doing that. My department consults with the Health department and builds the priorities that meet Health's recommendations. A facility condition index scoring is done on all facilities throughout the province every year, and the condition is reported.

Mr. Barnes: Minister, it's been asked for again and again.

Given that this new facility in Wainwright is in immediate need and given that the government recently gave itself an 8 per cent pay raise and given that AHS has been paying executives for out-of-country personal health care expenses, when will this government reprioritize its spending so the people in Wainwright don't have to live in fear that their health facility will shut down?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, what the member says is all well and good, but I'm not sure if they want us to spend more money on building capital or less. We have a capital plan that's funded, and it's the priority list. That's the money we have. If they want us to spend more, they should say so.

Mr. Barnes: We want you to prioritize your spending properly.

The dire situation residents of Wainwright and the surrounding area would find themselves in should the health centre facility's sewage system fail and the facility be forced to close underscores again the need for a public prioritized infrastructure list so Albertans know when their critical infrastructure needs will be addressed. Why does this government refuse to do so?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, our priority list is our capital plan. It's on our website. The member has gone there and looked at it. There are good projects on there. Which projects on there would you like us to remove to do these other ones? It didn't make the priority list. They would have to cancel projects we have on there to build new ones. I guess they want to spend more in capital.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont, followed by Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Impaired Driving

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the Minister of Justice. Hon. minister, you and I are scheduled to meet with my constituents Robert and Sheri Arseneault, whose son along with two others was killed by an alleged drunk driver in a horrific accident between Leduc and Beaumont. This family is frustrated that it took a year to get this case to court. Mr. Minister, what are you doing to speed up this process?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, you can clarify if this is sub judice. The chair has no knowledge, but you go ahead.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll just comment in general here. First off, my sincere sympathies to this member's constituents. No one should have to suffer at the hands of a drunk driver because drunk driving is one hundred per cent preventable.

To deal with this member's question directly, we're opening up case management offices. We're looking at moving traffic court outside of the courts so we can deal with more serious matters such as this. Of course, we'll continue to advocate with the federal government for the elimination of preliminary inquiries, which take 26 weeks off of trial time on average, every trial.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Mr. Minister, this past summer you brought in Bill 26 to increase penalties for impaired driving. What impact, if any, has this had on making our roads safer?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much again, Mr. Speaker. Last year I had the privilege of taking a drinking test with the Calgary police. I'm going to tell you again that at .05 I felt pretty tipsy. At .08 it felt like a Friday back in my university days. I had no business driving in either instance. If you don't believe me, let's go and look at what some of the media have had to say. Quote: none of us could imagine driving at .05. Dawn Walton, Globe and Mail. "Let me tell you, at .05 you are drunk . . . Hand over the keys and find a different way home." Bryce Forbes, Calgary Herald. Nobody has any business driving at .05.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. I want to thank the minister for those efforts, but I wonder what else he might be doing to deal with the issue of impaired drivers.

Mr. Denis: Well, first, I want to highlight again, Mr. Speaker, that the matters between .05 and .08 do not actually clog the courts because these are administrative penalties, unlike what the opposition keeps on telling us here. Regardless of what the opposition has to say, we will not stop our crackdown on drunk drivers.

Mr. Donovan: You're soft on crime. You're soft on impaired driving.

Mr. Denis: This opposition is soft on crime. This Premier is strong on crime as is this government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by Lesser Slave Lake.

Tank Site Remediation Program

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Municipal Affairs stated that the tank site remediation program is winding down and that sites can no longer enter the program. In fact, this program has not accepted new sites for the past four years. This program has helped to mitigate contamination of the environment by leaky underground fuel tanks, and this government's abandonment of the program is a concern to Albertans. To the minister of environment: what is your plan to deal with the current and former gas station sites contaminated by leaking underground tanks that are not a part of the tank site remediation program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the hon. member for the question. It's an important question. We continue to work with municipalities and with communities when there are contaminated sites. It's an ongoing concern for all of us, and it's one that we want to work on with them. As you know, that particular program that you talk about is no longer in place. Again, it's one of those where we have to make choices. It's not been in place for some time, but we continue to work with communities because we know it's a tough issue for them.

Mr. Rowe: The fact is that there are still many of these brownfield sites throughout the province. Given that the tank site remediation program has not accepted any new sites since 2009 and given that there are still contaminated sites and there are sure to be more in the future, Albertans are wondering: does the government even have a plan to remediate these sites, or will these tanks just stay in the ground?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member, I'm sure, is aware, we've been working very closely with the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and the rural counties as well on a strategy for how we address these issues. We know that it's a complex issue involving many players: municipal governments, provincial governments, departments, developers, and others. It's something that we're coming together on, working with municipal leaders as well, to come forward with a brownfield policy on this issue.

Mr. Rowe: Given that municipal leaders have been asking for over a decade where the plan is to ensure that all contaminated brownfield sites in the province are cleaned up and given that this government clearly does not have a plan in place to deal with the current and future contaminated gas station sites, how are Albertans or anyone else scrutinizing our environmental records supposed to believe that this government takes the protection of our environment seriously?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As this hon. member would know after spending a great deal of time, which we actually spent together, on the Alberta urban municipalities board, we are taking action with municipalities. Both rural and urban associations have asked us and the Department of Municipal Affairs to work with them so that we can actually develop this together. We are taking action, but we're doing it with our municipal partners because they have asked us to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Continuing Care Services for Wabasca-Desmarais

Ms Calahasen: Thank you. The community of Wabasca-Desmarais has a population of 5,500 people. It does not have an extended care facility. Elders are being moved to surrounding communities like Slave Lake, High Prairie, Athabasca, Mayerthorpe, far away from home. Of course, people are concerned. My question is to the Minister of Health. What does the community of Wabasca-Desmarais have to do to get an extended care facility built?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, as the hon. member knows, our government is committed to providing quality continuing care spaces that allow our seniors to age in place in their communities, with their family and friends close by. Over the past two years alone we've opened more than 2,400 new spaces, making it possible for more people to get the care and supports they need closer to their home. The process for opening new continuing care spaces starts with the identification of need. The hon. member is starting that process in asking her question today. I would encourage the community to keep working with Alberta Health Services to provide their input on service planning in that area.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the fact that one of our priorities is to invest in families and communities – and, of course, this is not a pet project – what can be done to ensure that Alberta Health and Alberta Health Services take into account the need that I've just described within our communities so that we can begin to see and address the circumstances of Wabasca-Desmarais?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is on the right course. The process for identifying locations where we add continuing care spaces in the province is through a formal needs assessment. Identifying community needs is the place to start. The community of Wabasca-Desmarais can continue, I would advise, to discuss with government and AHS the needs in their community and contribute to the needs assessment work.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you. That's wonderful news, Mr. Speaker.

My final question. I know we are such strong supporters of P3s. Given the fact that the municipal district of Opportunity No. 17 is willing to partner with us to build an extended care facility, can you, Mr. Minister, tell me what we need to do in order for your staff to work with the people within the MD of Opportunity?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we certainly applaud municipalities and others who partner with government in order to make additional continuing care spaces possible. Their role is absolutely critical. From what the hon. member has said, the community is certainly on the right track. The needs assessment, of course, is the first step that needs to be completed. Exploring the partnership opportunities around the actual construction of a facility is also very much supportive of her efforts.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we take a 30-second break and finish off Members' Statements, might we have your unanimous consent to revert to introductions briefly?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Please proceed, Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some of the hard-working staff we have at the Alberta Emergency Management Agency. These folks have been integral in helping to put together Bill 15, the Emergency 911 Act. They're here today to watch second reading. I would ask them to rise and receive our support as I call their names: Dave Galea, Andrew Renfree, Shelley Davies, and Amanda Dalton. Thanks for all your hard work.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds we will continue with Members' Statements and hear the final one.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Memorandum of Understanding with Physicians

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise in honour of the significant milestone reached by this government and the Alberta Medical Association. In this memorandum of understanding Albertans are seeing the responsible change that they voted for. This has been a long and challenging process, and we're all very proud of the hard work done by this government, the Alberta Medical Association, and, most importantly, the doctors and patients across this province who've helped us to find a way to make this deal possible.

This is arguably one of the most important agreements with a medical association in the country in recent years. There's no question that this has been a long negotiation, spanning multiple ministers over a two-and-a-half-year period. While the opposition has wasted this time engaging in their usual fearmongering, this side of the House has focused on workable solutions and collaboration with Alberta's hard-working doctors. This agreement provides support for cost reductions in our health care system over time, a series of pay increases for doctors, and stability over a seven-year period.

It also recognizes the Alberta Medical Association as the representative body for physicians in our province. We're excited for opportunities for partnership between government, the Alberta Medical Association, and Alberta Health Services to do what we all want to do and that is to make the health care system work better for patients. We've been successful in arriving at an agreement that improves access and quality of care for patients and at the same time recognizes the very real fiscal realities facing both parties and addresses challenges for physicians' practices such as climbing overhead costs.

We were elected to live within our means, and that is just what we're doing. Thank you very much.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(3) to advise the House that on Monday, April 22, 2013, written questions 34 and 35 will be accepted.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Finance.

Bill 18 Pooled Registered Pension Plans Act

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 18, the Pooled Registered Pension Plans Act.

Mr. Speaker, this act will allow pooled registered pension plans to be established here in Alberta. Currently only 1 of 6 Albertans working in the private sector participate in an employee pension plan. This legislation will allow all working Albertans, including those who work for small enterprises or are self-employed, to have more choices when it comes to retirement savings, including a low-cost pension plan option. I look forward to discussing this bill as it moves forward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. members, I rise quickly just to remind you to be as succinct as possible. I recognize that there are a number of tablings today, and several members are offering more than one, so let's please be patient with each other.

Let us start with Edmonton-Centre to set the example.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, the pressure is on. All right. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. These tablings are from me in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. Fiona Lauridsen writes with her concerns, vehemently opposing the appointment of Gerry Protti as the energy regulator on the grounds it is contrary to the public interest.

An e-mail from Jodi Kashmere, who is a physician, is looking for me to "promote fair government negotiations with physicians." I hope she's pleased with the outcome.

The third one is from constituent Dianne Molstad, who wants the concern expressed to the Minister of Education and to the Premier about the violation of the Human Rights Act in the province by fundamentalist, extremist Islamic schools. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Also directed to me is an e-mail from Grant Kemp, who is concerned about the destruction of the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, a world-class location. He loves Canada and many of the things it stands for, particularly freedom, but as a scientist he doesn't feel welcome. Thank you.

This next one was sent to my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. She is very angry about the attack on postsecondary education and research and feels that there's an unfair flat tax and would like to see the progressive tax reinstated.

Then, sent to the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, someone was compelled to express their significant disappointment and concern with the funding cuts to education in the province of Alberta.

I'm going to table the rest of them as a big chunk, but I'll give you the names. These are all people that are writing with terrific concern about the cut to the theatre and music programs at Mount Royal University. Coming from that community, I can tell you the effect this is going to have on the city of Calgary, especially since it was named the 2012 cultural capital of Canada. These are from Al Tinholt; Siobhan Cooney; Sheldon Zandboer; Daniella Rubeling; Sharon Owens-Rubeling; Ben Miles; Nicole Yukiko Sekiya, who is a grad; Loraine Fowlow, who is a parent; Trevor Rueger, who is a playwright that I know; Joe-Norman Shaw; and Nicole McIntyre. All of them are very concerned with what this is going to do to Calgary, to artists and wish to express their concerns.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre and the Minister of Health.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings that I will very succinctly bring forward here. The first is 50 more copies of e-mails that I have received in regard to the Michener Centre closure. They call on the Premier to honour her government's promise to Albertans not to evict Alberta's most vulnerable citizens from their home in Michener Centre. This is an ongoing theme of the broken-promises budget that we've seen.

The second tabling I have today is the appropriate number of copies of a letter calling on Premier Redford to fulfill Alberta's responsibility as a fossil fuel producer and one of the world's wealthiest economies to meet the challenge of climate change. This letter has been signed by 22 organizations, including the Athabasca Chipewyan First Nation. It calls to make real progress towards averting the more than two degrees of global warming.

The third tabling that I have here is the appropriate number of copies of postcard submissions that Albertans made to our New Democrat budget tour that visited seven cities, some examples of people talking about putting less money towards punitive measures in our society and more towards social programs. Submissions like these clearly show the priorities of Albertans and how out of touch this PC government actually is.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by the Minister of Health.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies of a tabling here. It is a letter from the O'Chiese First Nation. The letter was also CCed to the hon. Minister of Finance and the hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations. The O'Chiese band is seeking to take control of their financial future. This will be the subject of a debate, hopefully, sometime in the near future.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. The first is the appropriate number of copies of a letter I received earlier today from Mrs. Sheila Weatherill, former CEO of Capital health, regarding a topic that was raised in question period this afternoon. In the letter Mrs. Weatherill takes responsibility for approving a medical expense for a former Capital health executive. The letter includes a $7,800 cheque to the Alberta treasury as repayment for that expense.

My second tabling is a copy of a letter I sent today to the hon. Allan Wachowich, former Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta, requesting his opinion on the options available to the Government of Alberta and/or Alberta Health Services . . . to recover any funds that may have been improperly paid to current or former employees of Alberta Health Services or the former health authorities.

Mr. Speaker, my third tabling is the appropriate number of copies of a letter I received on April 17, 2013, from the president and chief executive officer of Alberta Health Services regarding reimbursement of medical expenses incurred by Ms Alison Tonge.

The last tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter I received dated April 11, 2013, from Mr. Chris Mazurkewich, executive vice-president and chief operating officer of Alberta Health Services, detailing increases in the area of continuing care in the AHS proposed budget for the year 2013-14.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: I'm just going to table his for him.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you. I'm tabling the requisite five copies of a letter from the Minister of Health to the Member for Strathmore-Brooks referencing a letter dated June 27 and regarding his question earlier in question period.

I have five copies of a news article from last April during the campaign, where the Premier was in Coaldale telling the people at the PDD centre down there the great job they're doing on their day program. There's even a colour photo of her shaking hands in the facility.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by the Minister of Human Services.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the letter from the Respiratory Home Care Association of Alberta in which they give statistical information. They also go on to talk about the changes coming into effect July 1 and the impacts they are going to have on those who receive oxygen. They go on to talk about why those impacts are going to hurt those who receive oxygen and that the government's own 2007-2008 report from Keefe Taylor Associates clearly stated that the government should not move to this type of process and should keep the highly regarded current program.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services, followed by the Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the requisite number of copies of a letter I've written to the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, and I've provided him with the original letter. It's in response to some comments he made and a news release he issued after the estimates of Human Services in which he, in my view, misapprehended my response relative to the definition of poverty and how we understand poverty. I thought his comments were unworthy and needed response.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is the requisite copies of over 20 e-mails that came to our office with concerns around the changes to the pharmacy agreement and the viability of pharmacies going forward.

My second tabling is the requisite copies of almost 70 letters from constituents again concerned about the changes to the pharmacy agreement and the ongoing viability of pharmacies going forward.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? If not, hon. members, permit me to table with you the Legislative Assembly of Alberta 2011 annual report Advancing through Engagement.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Horne, Minister of Health, responses to questions raised by Mrs. Forsyth, hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek; and Mr. Mason, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, on March 7, 2012, the ministry of health and wellness 2012 main estimates debate.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Johnson, Minister of Education, return to order of the Assembly, Motion for a Return 5, asked for by Mr. Hehr on March 18, 2013, a list of fees charged to parents by each of Alberta's 62 school boards for the 2011-12 school year as collected by the department.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I believe that concludes the Routine and that we can move on to the points of order. We had a point of order raised by the Member for Airdrie.

The hon. Official Opposition deputy House leader on his behalf, I assume.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today under standing orders 23(h), (i), (j) as well as (l) in response to a statement made by the Minister of Health that drug prices are only going down. Of course, we've heard in this House on many occasions that there can be differences of opinion. Different individuals can look at certain facts and conclude different outcomes based on those definitive facts.

Unfortunately, in this case, Mr. Speaker, what the Minister of Health said was absolutely, flat-out false. It was patently untrue. I will just go over some of what I would say are obvious increases in the price of drugs, and I will refer to an Apotex Advancing Generics document – I believe this has been tabled before – dated April 4, 2013. At the bottom it says, "Price change." I'm going through the list of drugs. It states that the old price for the first line item was $8.69, and now it's $18. That's a price increase. We see another line item here, where $25 became a $47 price. Again and again, if you look through this document, it's very clear that the prices have gone up.

Why is this important? Perhaps this is better raised as a point of privilege. If this minister, knowing these facts here, is stating the complete opposite, it's, in essence, misleading the House. The question would be whether he's intentionally misleading the House. Why that's important is that if you're misleading the House, you're also misleading Albertans on the price of drugs. The evidence is clear.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the minister either withdraw that incorrect, false statement or clarify his position. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Government House Leader, briefly, in response.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is what happens when you have people who want to be lawyers and then go get elected and then try to be lawyers again. He's being absolutely too technical on this whole process. If he reads the context of the remarks, the minister was obviously talking about generic drugs. That's what the question was about. That's what the answer was about. The minister has indicated to me that I can assure the House that that was what he meant, that for the price of generic drugs in Alberta the policy is that those prices will go down and that those prices are going down. That's what he said in the context of the question and answer.

The hon. member, if he'd been listening clearly, would understand that rather than trying to intervene all the time, not this member but the member who raised the point of order, loudly in the middle of a question to disrupt the question, I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, which is not the way we normally raise points of order in this House, to leap to your feet and yell loudly to interrupt the flow of the question and the flow of the answer. This is something that we've seen happen over the last couple of days in this House with respect to the way points of order have been raised. There's clearly a process happening here. It clearly has nothing to do with the hon. minister's answer because the hon. minister's answer was clearly in context.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. We've been around this particular maypole before, and I'd like us not to go around it again. We all know and you know exactly what I'm going to tell you. There's frequently a disagreement between members or among members in this House as to what they perceive to be the case or the truth or whatever the question might be. I've referred to this probably half a dozen or more times, as early as April 8, for example, wherein I said: let's take a look at page 510 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice. It says:

The Speaker, however, is not responsible for the quality or content of replies to questions. In most instances, when a point of order or a question of privilege has been raised in regard to a response to an oral question, the Speaker has ruled that the matter is a disagreement among Members over the facts surrounding the issue. As such, these matters are more a question of debate and do not constitute a breach of the rules or of privilege.

Now, hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, if you wish to raise a question of privilege, which you've alluded to, that is an entirely different process, and you might want to review that.

In looking at the question, the question from the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition at 1:59 was clearly about generic drugs. The answer, however, at 2 o'clock this afternoon was a little more generic. It talked about drug prices in general. So it's a question of how you interpret one question in relation to the answer that was just given and vice versa.

As such, there is no point of order, but a point of clarification has been made on both sides of the House, and with that, we're going to move on.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 14 RCMP Health Coverage Statutes Amendment Act, 2013

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Seniors.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 14, the RCMP Health Coverage Statutes Amendment Act, 2013.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation is necessary to provide Alberta health care coverage to RCMP members appointed to rank within the RCMP who live in Alberta. The legislation is also necessary to ensure that Alberta is in compliance with the Canada Health Act. Until recently these RCMP members maintained a separate nation-wide health program. That's because RCMP members, like the military, were excluded from the Canada Health Act definition of insured persons, changed in June 2012, when the federal omnibus Bill C-38 received royal assent. The bill amended the definition of insured persons under the Canada Health Act so that members of the RCMP appointed to rank are no longer excluded as insured persons. That means that roughly 3,000 RCMP members in Alberta who are appointed to rank will now need to be insured under the Alberta Health Act.

The RCMP Health Coverage Statutes Amendment Act that is before us makes necessary amendments to two Alberta statutes, the Health Insurance Premiums Act and the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act. The amendments are necessary to require RCMP members appointed to rank within the RCMP to register for health care coverage in Alberta and to extend Alberta health coverage to these RCMP members.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for your support of the RCMP Health Coverage Statutes Amendment Act so that Alberta can be in compliance with the Canada Health Act and so that we can provide Alberta health care coverage to the dedicated men and women who bring law and order to our communities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now move to adjourn debate on Bill 14.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 15 Emergency 911 Act

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and move second reading of the Emergency 911 Act.

I'm sure all of us can agree that effective and reliable 911 service is a cornerstone of strong communities. We have heard from stakeholders like 911 call centres, emergency response agencies, and municipalities that 911 call centres are faced with funding challenges, increasing call volumes, and the need to adopt new technologies. This legislation helps 911 call centres address these challenges and provides an opportunity to make 911 services in Alberta even better. This will help Alberta's 911 centres continue to provide Albertans with effective service today and tomorrow.

I'm excited about this legislation, Mr. Speaker, and look forward to partnering with our stakeholders, which include our 911 call centres, our emergency responders, and the wireless industry, to enhance 911 services across Alberta. The Emergency 911 Act includes a monthly 911 levy on wireless devices that will ensure that cellphone users contribute to the cost of 911, the same as land-line users do now; the ability for the government in collaboration with stakeholders to create standards, processes, and procedures for 911 call-taking; the establishment of liability protection for people involved with 911 services and penalties for frivolous and vexatious use of the 911 system.

Mr. Speaker, some of the challenges facing 911 centres stem from the increased numbers of cellphones in Alberta. Unlike landline users, cellphone subscribers have not been directly contributing to 911 call centres. This has led to a decline in funding for 911 call centres as more and more Albertans opt for cellphones instead of land lines. The proposed 911 levy would be the same amount as the one on land lines, just 44 cents per month. That's $5.28 per year, about the cost of a new app on your smart phone. This will ensure all land-line and cellphone users contribute to Alberta's 911 call centres. It'll be a monthly fee, not a per-call fee, and no one will have to pay for making a 911 call when they need help.

This legislation will require wireless telecommunications providers to collect the 911 levy from Alberta wireless subscribers. The funds from the levy will then be remitted to the province for distribution to 911 centres. The funding will be done through a statutory appropriation, which means that the collected funds can only be used for 911 call centres and administration of this act. I think we can all agree that this is a nominal amount of money to support our 911 centres and that it is important for all cellphone and land-line users to contribute.

The legislation will also allow for the creation of standards for 911 call centres. The standards will be developed over time in collaboration with 911 call centres and all other stakeholders. We'll be certain that everyone's perspective will be heard and that standards will work for our stakeholders. These standards will help ensure consistent processes and procedures for 911 call-taking across the province. We will work with our partners to find ways to make 911 service delivery across Alberta even more effective and consistent than it is today.

The legislation will also introduce new legal protection. Extending legal protection for 911 call centres will help 911 operators focus on serving Albertans in their time of need. This provision will establish liability protection for all 911 centres so that staff have the legal protection they need while providing 911 services in good faith. This will also limit the liability of wireless telecommunications providers and the province while acting under the authority of this act and regulations.

The legislation also involves new penalties for frivolous 911 calls. Frivolous 911 calls can waste the time and resources needed to address real 911 calls from Albertans in need. This legislation establishes offences and fines for the intentional abuse of 911 services. The intent of establishing offences and penalties is to deter those individuals who may be inappropriately using the system. We've all heard stories of people making frivolous 911 calls asking for help to do their taxes or complaining about a coffee they bought somewhere, Mr. Speaker. These fines, with amounts set to make people think twice about making frivolous 911 calls, will help prevent this wasteful and potentially harmful activity. The maximum fine for first-time offenders is $5,000, for repeat offenders up to $10,000.

Another key element of the legislation is that it will enable 911 call centres to keep up with emergency technologies. Earlier this year the Canadian Radio-television Telecommunications Commission, or the CRTC, began consulting with Canadians to find out their thoughts on the future of 911 services at a national level. This consultation is expected to take a number of years. The CRTC is also requiring all Canadian telecommunications companies to upgrade their systems, Mr. Speaker, with text-to-911 capabilities by 2014 for Canadians with hearing or speech impairments.

Here in Alberta we're proposing to help our call centres move in that direction with this proposed legislation, which will provide an additional source of funding that can be used by call centres to move towards next generation 911 technologies. At the same time, we are participating in the CRTC's effort to ensure Alberta's jurisdiction and interests are considered throughout the consultation and any resulting federal regulatory frameworks.

More details regarding the implementation of this legislation will be contained in the regulations. These will be drafted later in 2013. The key aspects of the regulations will enable the billing, collection, and remittance of the 911 levy and outline how the collected funds will be distributed. This is a flexible and responsive approach that can respond to Albertans' and 911 centres' needs over time.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize how important this legislation is to the men and women who provide 911 services each and every day throughout this province. For any kind of emergency in this province they are our first point of contact with Alberta's emergency response system. We depend on them to be there for us, and they are there 24/7, 365 days a year. Their services make our communities stronger and more resilient. I am confident that this bill, by providing new supports for 911 operators, will help improve these services.

This proposed bill is the culmination of the work of many, and in many respects it is just the beginning. However, I do want to recognize at this stage the extraordinary efforts of Mr. Craig Mahovsky, who first while working for the city of Calgary and more recently for the government of Alberta has distinguished himself by his selfless focus on public safety.

Mr. Speaker, I look forward to further discussing this important legislation that will enhance and ensure the safety and security of all Albertans.

With that, I would move that we adjourn debate. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 19

Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 19, the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013.

Bill 19 is vital to the success of the recently announced Métis settlements long-term arrangements. The long-term arrangements have four objectives: strengthening settlement governance, accountability, and sustainability; enabling the Métis settlements to provide essential services, including infrastructure, on par with neighbouring communities; developing long-term economic and financial stability and settlement capacity; and enhancing the productive relationship between this government and the settlements. Bill 19 is doing what the Métis settlements' leadership has asked us to do.

Before we start debate on the bill, I'd like to highlight some of the provisions that will help us achieve our goals when it comes to a successful future for the Métis settlements. There will be a requirement for annual three-year business plans. An official code of conduct for settlement councils will be required, and the Metis Settlements General Council will be given policy-making authority to develop the code. Their legislated policy-making authority is their law-making authority. It is similar to provincial regulation and binds all eight settlements.

There will also be an amendment to the current requirement for an election every three years to one every four years. This is consistent with the recent move to a four-year cycle for other local governments.

A provision will require the councils to operate under a standardized financial reporting structure, which will allow for better planning and greater transparency.

The general council will have policy-making authority to establish an independent committee to review and make recommendations about council salaries to the central governing body, the Metis Settlements General Council. The provisions will also give the general council the power to set the remuneration rates following receipt of the committee's recommendations. The provisions will allow the general council to set a ceiling on council remuneration based on the committee's recommendations.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 19 focuses on accountability and governance, which will contribute to the sustainability and future economic prosperity of the settlements for the benefit of all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now move to adjourn debate on Bill 19.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 12 Fiscal Management Act

[Debate adjourned April 11]

The Speaker: Speakers on Bill 12? Shall we begin with the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre?

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka would like to go in front of me if that's okay with you.

The Speaker: It's fine by me.
The hon. member.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak to Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act, which is now in second reading. Now, as I read this bill, one thing really jumped out at me, and that was the complete repeal of the Government Accountability Act. When this act was passed in 1995, the province of Alberta was a leader. We were the first province in the country to adopt a publicly reported, results-based, performance-measured framework into our budgeting process. That act was designed to improve accountability between civil servants, elected officials, the government, and the citizens of Alberta. It was so well regarded by Canadians that all other provinces introduced similar legislation, with the federal government finally following suit in 2006, giving royal assent to the Federal Accountability Act.

Mr. Speaker, it's important, I think, to look back at 1995 and really examine what the Government Accountability Act was all about. The Premier of the day, Mr. Klein, made quite an impact on how finances were done. He epitomized the era. Knowing that Mr. Klein not only led the charge on eliminating the deficit by 1995 but also the province's net debt by 1999, it comes as no surprise that he coined the phrase "Alberta advantage." Something else that comes as no surprise is that this government has done away with not only his vision of a debt-free Alberta but also, in the same breath, destroyed the Alberta advantage, too.

Mr. Speaker, what's happened with Bill 12 is that this government seems to have us in a race to the bottom. Future government budgets need no longer list any of the following requirements from the Government Accountability Act except in terms of operations: total revenues from all sources, total expenses with breakdown, accumulated debt, planned payments, reconciliation of expenses, and revenues for deficit or surplus; in other words, a dramatic shift away from the reporting of performance measures in past budgets. Wow. What a policy shift.

When the Government Accountability Act was passed, it was glowingly proclaimed that with the positive impact of reporting publicly on the government performance, it enhanced transparency, strengthened accountability, provided motivation for civil servants to improve services and programs for Alberta's citizens, and was reported as an immense improvement to our democracy.

It would be prudent, I think, to remind the Assembly, Mr. Speaker, that the use of performance measures in government accounting has not always happened. An article written by a political scientist, Kimberly Speers from the University of Alberta and the University of Manitoba, shows insight into the original purpose of initially implementing performance measures into government financial reporting.

Designed to measure a variety of activities in government, the development and implementation of performance measures was also to monitor a government's performance, and in weak areas of performance, to draw attention to where the government should improve. It has also become a way to communicate to the general citizenry about the government's performance at the department and government-wide level. In a public effort to become more accountable and transparent, the reporting of performance measures is considered to be an educated way for citizens to judge a government's annual performance.

Mr. Speaker, I find it quite disturbing – and I'm sure most Albertans will as well – that Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act, is a step back because it removes many of the performance measures that were required to be reported under the Government Accountability Act. Through its total repeal, it is worth noting over the last few years, well, the last few deficit budgets that performance reporting has become something of a risky endeavour for this government. It's no wonder the PC government wants to repeal the Government Accountability Act. We have watched the challenges of these performance measures for this government lead to a dilemma of legitimacy and authenticity in its reporting.

Here we are looking at the 2012-2013 budget, a work of propaganda written for a then upcoming election, and the 2013-2014 budget, where the truth is attempted to be masked and hidden in cloudy and opaque documents. It is something to note that the performance measures are not of themselves beacons of accountability. Simply put, "the authenticity of performance measurement is questioned because of the subjectivity of performance itself."

The Speers report goes on to outline reasons which I believe are indicative of this government's desire to do away with the accountability act under Bill 12.

Indeed, the process of measuring performance is a highly subjective task depending on the stated expectations, the established targets and goals, external variables, the quality of leadership, and a variety of other reasons depending on the assessor's values and biases. The subjectivity of performance is inherent to a political environment, which makes performance reporting a risky endeavour for any government. Indeed, reporting to the public in a political environment is risky given the traditional role of the Opposition to critique the party in power and the media to report on issues that will attract customers which tend to be those that expose the government's wrongdoings.

Essentially, Mr. Speaker, this boils down to one simple fact. A government that wants people to drink the punch that their performance measures are inherently indicative of accountability is not only wrong but reasonably can be seen to be manipulative of the public, the media, and the opposition parties as well.

Performance measures have to be real and substantive. They have to be strong enough to show real results so that every Albertan can either rest assured knowing that the government dollars are being spent wisely and with good results or, alternatively, Albertans can be properly and fully informed of the waste or potential for waste. It is not up to the government to dictate to Albertans how they should view the government by using ploys such as playing with performance measures in the annual reports and business plans.

The Government Accountability Act was designed to be a public effort to become more accountable and transparent in its reporting and an educated or intelligent way for its citizens to judge their government's annual performance, something this budget released now just doesn't do.

I want to quote a March 7, 2013, news article from Beacon news, and it quotes the Minister of Finance. It says that the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance admitted the new budget format made it difficult to compare last year's numbers with this year's, made all the more difficult by only showing a $451 million operating budget deficit that was in fact closer to $2 billion after factoring in different costs and cash adjustments.

The Government Accountability Act was a communication and management tool. Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act, is a tool that does nothing more than bring smoke and mirrors back into Alberta politics, Mr. Speaker.

At a basic level the Government Accountability Act put into the provincial budget a quantitative and qualitative measure designed to assess performance against goals. Well, the Health Quality Council report on EMS hit this one on the head. I'm quoting from page 44 of that report. There is a "lack of AHS long-term vision and goals." In future reporting these kinds of abysmal results won't be required in the province's financial documents. One must wonder if this is only to hide such results from Alberta taxpayers.

An example of this loss of transparency is found under section 7(3) of the Government Accountability Act.

- (3) The government business plan must include the following:
  - (a) the mission, core businesses and goals of the Government;
  - (b) the measures to be used in assessing the performance of the Government in achieving its goals;
  - (c) the performance targets set by the Government for each of its goals;
  - (d) links to the ministry business plans.

That's very clear language about the performance measures required of the government.

In section 10(3) in the replacement, in Bill 12, it reads: "The business plans must be in the form determined by the Treasury Board and must be made public at the same time as the responsible Minister makes the fiscal plan public."

This language, Mr. Speaker: well, it's about as clear as mud. What if the minister for one purpose or another determines that the form for business plans ought to be vague and designed to put a fog over the true affairs of each ministry? Without clear, articulated, measurable, and understood performance expectations there will never be sustained improvement in government programs and services.

Let me leave you with this. Effective decision-making in our democracy requires that Albertans have access to all the information in a reasonable, recognizable, and responsive format. Mr. Speaker, it is never good for democracy when citizens question the authenticity and the accuracy of any government document, which inevitably leads to the perception that their government as a whole has failed them.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, then let us go back to the regular order. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on this bill. What's troubling about this bill is how it was proposed and why it was proposed. The Canadian Taxpayers Federation complained I think about three quarters ago about some of the reporting that this government did. They put forward an allegation that this government wasn't being transparent according to the law. Now, it's just an allegation, and anyone can argue either side of it, but the fact is that as we move forward into the election, this government, this party did not campaign on what we have here today.

As a matter of fact, in this House after the election statements were still made that our operational budget would be balanced. It wasn't too difficult, in my view, to ask of this government: will you, can you balance the operational budget? When they were asked that question multiple times, they stood up and said: yes, it will be balanced. There are multiple quotes to support that, yet when the budget was tabled, it was not balanced, totally contrary to the statements made by government members, who should have known better at that time.

I will give the people credit, both the elected members and the bureaucrats responsible, for being a bit more competent than what this budget showed or what it came to be because it should not have been a surprise that the operational budget was not going to be balanced. It should not have been a surprise at all.

What else is troubling about this bill is that it's absolutely necessary. This budget would be basically an illegal budget under our current laws. We need to change that, so we are repealing the Government Accountability Act and the Fiscal Responsibility Act to put forth this new law. What's troubling about that is that not a single member in here knocked on any door and said: if you elect us, we will repeal the Government Accountability Act, and we will repeal the Fiscal Responsibility Act.

These were the legacy of the Klein era. This was the thing, that if history does anything in the memory of our former Premier, they will always show that one picture of the debt removed. He is known for that. He is hated for that; he is loved for that. He did it, and it is his legacy. What we're doing here is removing that. That is what I say is problematic. In some ways it's still very difficult for Albertans to understand how we got to this point.

3:30

The other thing that I find troubling. It is the right of government to decide how it wants to present its books, and I will defend its right to do that. When any entity, generally a government or corporate entity, does this, it is well established what they're going to do going forward, and they prepare the marketplace: we're going to change the way we're going to report. So there's always that indication. Accounting rules and accounting laws basically say that when you do that, when you change your accounting method, then you restate at least one prior year so there can be some sort of comparative analysis of what you're proposing to do in this current budget, and you can compare that to previous years to start that track record. That is a common practice. That is the law under our accounting standards.

What this government did is that it tabled a budget with a new reporting methodology, which is its right, but it did not restate anything behind this so we could have some sort of comparative analysis. That, to me, is fundamentally wrong. We should be able to have that not just as an opposition. We should have that as Albertans so we can keep track. In other words, this government is making commitments; we can see a little historical value to this, how it would have compared to last year's. We don't have that.

Unfortunately, that seems to be a systemic problem right now. I pointed that out in my own estimates a few days ago. There was a small footnote in Alberta Environment that basically just bluntly stated: the methodology has changed, so you can no longer compare what our targets are this year to previous years. That to me is an accounting issue. There's absolutely no reason that we should be tolerating that. There's absolutely no reason we should be doing that.

Now, one good thing that did come out of some of the debates, not just on this bill and the budget, is that the Government House Leader has admitted that we actually are not going to borrow money and then lend it out on the market at a lower interest rate. I noticed that a lot of the members have stopped saying that, and I'm glad for that. I know that that's not what's going to happen. He made that very clear. It makes no economic sense to think that we could go out and compete with the markets in that sense. Companies or institutions that can qualify for much lower loans can get them at the same rate we can get them. That's not the biggest issue.

What is a problem is the idea that we're going to borrow money to save. Could we do that? It's an interesting question. Lots of people have tried. It's never worked, but it will be interesting to see if this government can make it work. I'm not sure it can. I'm not sure it can at all, and since no one else has ever been able to make it work, the future doesn't look that promising here.

We have a budget that came down that is in deficit. We are going to borrow money going forward for our infrastructure. That's what this law provides for. It allows us now to do that on a consistent basis. I guess I probably should point out that there are some positive aspects. I mean, it's not totally negative. The majority of it is negative, but there are some positive aspects to it. It talks about savings. Unfortunately, the idea of borrowing to save doesn't make sense to me. I would love it if we could put some amendments forward – and the members could all clap as you accept all of the amendments from the Wildrose – so we can be a little bit more responsible.

I do want to address some of the issues that the members have brought forward beyond the rhetoric, beyond the chastising, the hostility, the humour that goes on in this Chamber. The fact is that we take in roughly $40 billion in income, just a little bit less than $40 billion. Nobody is talking about not spending money and taking care of the province's needs. What is fundamentally missing from this bill – I would hope that the members would see a motion coming forward dealing with the issue of priority because we've talked about that, and that has not happened yet.

When you're spending billions and billions of dollars, as this bill will allow us to do, the idea to put in a priority list of what your major priorities are, particularly with infrastructure – all municipalities do. We did that. We just list them top to bottom. We argue about which is more important than the other, and we have a funded line and an unfunded line so we know going forward what we're going to do this year, what we're going to plan on doing next year and the year after and the year after. That's what this budget does but without the priority list, and in this act it's not there.

It would make this act stronger and more responsible if we were to impose that upon this government, which is to say simply this. Your capital expenditures should be prioritized in the sense that we know what the priorities are for this government to spend on infrastructure. That is a good working tool. That allows these communities – and I will use a particular example. The community of Rocky Mountain House has been waiting for a hospital, and when I meet with the community leaders, when I meet with the council, they're not necessarily saying that they would like it this year. They understand that there would be higher priorities. They just want to know where they would be on the list, when they could expect the funding for the new hospital and then plan accordingly, knowing full well that this is not an easy decision, but it is something that will have to come down.

Now, I want to talk about the benefits of actually having a priority list because that's what can make this bill stronger. If we were to put something like that in this bill and allow communities to see where their major projects were, if there was a project that was presented high on a priority list, then many in the public, particularly in the civic community, the various boards, councils could say: "Whoa. Wait a minute. That is not a high priority above, say, a hospital in this community, a school in that community, or a seniors' lodge in that community." That would assist this government in many cases if these communities were able to look at a list that showed them the priorities, and the government could get better feedback from a broader range of politicians, not just: what is funded, and we have no idea where these other projects stand and what priority they might be in.

That is something that we have consistently talked about in this Legislative Assembly. It's something that has never been answered. Unfortunately, what we do get from the various ministries is: there's a list, and the members can go to the website. That seems to be the standard response today when there are no answers. Go to the website. The fact is that the website doesn't have a priority list. It is so important in managing a budget that we know what is the highest priority, what is a low priority, and that we argue about the priorities that surround that funded and unfunded line. Good on those that make the best arguments to get their projects funded. But it does help us manage our expenditures better. It does help us in the sense of making sure that the billions and hundreds of millions of dollars that we are going to spend we spend more wisely. It also helps in the sense of managing the budget and hitting our targets, and that is really important to me.

Another thing I want to talk about in what we've been doing here – and this has been brought up in a number of different parts of our debate – is this bitumen bubble. One minister – and I won't mention the minister because it was an error, and I think it was an honest error – mentioned that we lost $6 billion on the bitumen bubble when the spread was wide. Well, that's really not true, and there's no such thing as a bitumen bubble. What we had was a spread that actually got quite wide, and this government had every right to be concerned about that spread widening. Absolutely. But it's not normal for any type of differential to be static. It's dynamic. It always moves every day. That's mark-to-market accounting. As soon as that was made quite widely known by this government, and rightfully so, that there was a wide spread, what happened? The market addressed the issue, and that spread narrowed significantly to the point that I think it went the other way on the pendulum swing and went way too narrow, and I think we should see it widen again. But at the end of the year this should be an average spread.

I think that when this government looked at that differential – it should be around that $22 mark plus or minus. That spread should average out right over the year. I don't think we're off target for that. So that's not an excuse for how we budgeted, and that's not an excuse to bring this bill forward to change the way we do budgets and the way we spend. That's where I have an issue with how this was brought forward.

The Government Accountability Act was a good act, and it was a good move by this former government to do that. The Fiscal Responsibility Act was a positive step to proper financial management, in my view. Here it is being removed to make way for a new system of spending, which I think is borderline irresponsible. I won't go as far as some of my counterparts and say that it's totally irresponsible, and I'll tell you why. We haven't done it yet. But I will call it irresponsible if we go deeper into debt and spend more than we should have. Then it would be irresponsible. I'll withhold my judgment until the results come in. But I still don't believe that the future is as optimistic as we're proposing it is, and I say that this law that we are passing here, this legislation that we're about to pass, is set up to give us more problems in the future than to provide responsibility, accountability, and transparency. That's why I definitely will be opposing the legislation.

However, if the government were to decide to accept some of the amendments we will be bringing forward – who knows? – I might be able to actually support it and vote for it. I would love to be able to do that. We'll see as that time comes if that is a possibility.

With that, I think I'll finish here, and maybe somebody might like to ask me some questions.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I was just curious to ask the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre two things, actually. First of all, you had mentioned that you would conceivably support this bill if you saw amendments. I'm having trouble. I'm struggling with what we could possibly do with this bill. If you had any suggestions as to what we could do to perhaps patch the holes that seem so apparent to you and perhaps to me, too.

Mr. Anglin: Mr. Speaker, anything's conceivable. It is a possibility. How they would construct it on amending it would be the critical aspect, of course.

I will say something because everyone knows we differ in our fiscal views except for one thing. If you look at the parties in opposition, we talk about a balanced budget here in the Official Opposition, but we don't think we need to raise revenue. We think the revenue is there. It's about priorities so that we can actually balance our budget. The third and fourth parties would raise revenue to balance the budget. I think that's a legitimate debate for the public. I think that's a legitimate debate in an election. I like that debate because I think I can win that debate. I think I can win every debate. What we didn't have a debate on was that we will go into operational deficit, that we will go into deficit, and that we will borrow money to save. That we never debated, and we should have going into the election.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. We have a number of speakers, so thank you for keeping your questions and answers brief.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre whether or not his party has any specific plan with respect to the use of the funds in the heritage fund. We've heard some rhetoric over there about the fact that all the revenue from the fund has been squandered over the years. In reality, it's been used to build Alberta. It's been used to keep the taxes down, personal and corporate taxes, very low, to attract new business and enterprise to the province. What does he envision as the ultimate purpose of the heritage fund and its income?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really do enjoy the question. I can tell the hon. member this. The money would not be going to AHS executives' expenses, that's for sure. The money would not be going to carbon capture. The money would not be going to private corporations. I agree – I know where he's going with this, and I'm not going to dispute it – that we put money away for that rainy day, and we make good use of it. Actually, that's how a former Premier, Mr. Klein, actually balanced and paid off the debt. He had the money sitting there to make sure he could say that we're debt free. I won't get into the specifics of that, but that was why it was there.

The fact is that it's nonrenewable resource revenue. In other words, there's no other way to get that, and that will eventually run out, so to put that money aside is, I think, a great idea, but we've not done a very good job of it. That fund has been quite small and has been reduced, reduced, reduced. Now, the reason we've been reducing that fund is because we've not been spending wisely. That's my issue. We have a historical problem with overspending and not getting spending under control and thereby withdrawing these funds. We're on track to make a mess out of that and go into a negative balance or just empty the fund altogether.

The Speaker: Are there others under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, let us move on to the next main speaker, Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Good afternoon, everyone. Folks, while I may not be an accountant, I would like to take this opportunity to rise here today to speak briefly to Bill 12 on behalf of the constituents of my riding, Livingstone-Macleod. Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act, apparently repeals the Government Accountability Act and the Fiscal Responsibility Act and amends the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act as well as a handful of others, I'm told. However, it seems to ignore a 20-year-old established format for budgets and quarterly updates as well as strict rules around debt, I've observed.

This seems to be a true reflection of how this government plays the game. When the rules don't suit their needs, they change them. Not only does the government change acts on a whim to suit their needs; they attempt to blindside stakeholders, members of this Assembly, and, more importantly, Albertans.

I'm told that when the previous Government Accountability Act was passed, it was glowingly proclaimed that with the positive impact of reporting publicly on government performance, it had enhanced transparency, strengthened accountability, provided motivation for civil servants to improve services and programs for Alberta's citizens, and was reported as an immense improvement to our democracy. Although the system wasn't perfect, the process was honest and was done with the intent of improving the reporting structure.

The Government Accountability Act was designed to be a public effort, become more accountable and transparent in its reporting, and be an educated, intelligent way for citizens to judge the government's annual performance. At a basic level the Government Accountability Act put into the provincial budget a qualitative and quantitative measure designed to assess performance against goals. It was a communication and management tool. That act was designed to improve accountability between civil servants, elected officials, academics, and the citizens of Alberta. It was so well regarded by Canadians, Mr. Speaker, that other provinces introduced several legislation filings, with the federal government following suit in 2006, giving royal assent to the Federal Accountability Act.

While the Government Accountability Act was a communication and management tool, the new proposed Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act, appears to be a tool that does nothing more than bring mystery back into Alberta politics. From my standpoint, what's happened with Bill 12 is that except in terms of operations future government budgets need no longer list any of the following requirements that were present in the Government Accountability Act: total revenues from all sources, total expenses with breakdowns, accumulated debt, planned payments, reconciliation of expenses, and revenues for deficit or surplus. It is quite disturbing to me and most Albertans, I think, that Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act, seems to be a step back because it removes many of those performance measures that were required to be reported under the Government Accountability Act.

Mr. Speaker, as members of the Legislature and as members of the government there should always be a push to maintain the integrity of this House and live up to the standards Albertans expect of us and this office. This government should not be attempting to confuse Albertans. They should be seeking to proactively disclose and inform in a manner which can be understood and easily accessible by all. Unfortunately, this time, however, Albertans are left going here and there and around the square trying to simply figure out how much Alberta is in debt.

After this deficit budget was released, stakeholders, news agencies, financial firms were left scrambling to figure out what the total debt was. I think the following day there were about 10-plus different totals, and not one matched the government's. I ask members to consider this as they vote on this Fiscal Management Act. When financial firms and agencies cannot state with certainty what your budget means or what it will reflect, is this truly accountable?

Mr. Speaker, in contrast, an example of this loss of transparency is found under section 7 of the Government Accountability Act, where it states:

- (3) The government business plan must include the following:
  - (a) the mission, core businesses and goals of the Government;
  - (b) the measures to be used in assessing the performance of the Government in achieving its goals;
  - (c) the performance targets set by the Government for each of its goals;

And finally,

- (d) links to the ministry business plans.

That was very clear language then about the performance measures required of the government.

However, section 10(3) is the replacement in Bill 12, which now reads:

- (3) The business plans must be in the form determined by the Treasury Board and must be made public at the same time as the responsible Minister makes the fiscal plan public.

This new language is very unclear. Mr. Speaker, it's my opinion that without clearly articulated measurable and understood performance expectations, there will never be sustained improvement in government programs and services. There is virtually no shared understanding of what the budget means in terms of a bottom line.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, the proposal to take capital out of the bottom line seems to entirely remove accountability. The proposal to fund capital spending almost entirely out of debt seems like folly. It drops the reporting requirement for important nonoperating numbers, in other words total revenue, and borrowing details.

On this note I'd like to leave you with an interesting comparison made by Derek Fildebrandt of the Canadian Taxpayers Federation: this new reporting structure makes about as much sense as taking out an RRSP with money you borrowed from your credit card.

To conclude, it seems very deceiving to be touting a savings account that appears to contain no debt repayment plan. This entire plan is only one of spending and savings while running up a far larger debt account. I will not be supporting Bill 12 without substantive change to include real accountability.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there any other speakers? Let's go on to Calgary-Shaw, please.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a couple of weeks of anticipation waiting to rise to speak to Bill 12, and I'm happy to do that here today. The speech I've prepared for you is titled The Good, The Bad, and The Ugly. Let's start with the good. It was very encouraging to see a savings plan... [interjection] I thank the Member for Edmonton-Centre for her commentary. Yes, theme music would always be nice to have in the background. It would keep us all motivated, especially on a Thursday afternoon, before we get to go home to our families and constituencies.

The good part of Bill 12: it has in it a savings plan. You know, truthfully, when I heard that, I was reflecting on what I was doing just before we came back into session, which was potty training my toddler. You get used to saying things like "hurray" and "fantastic" and "good job" as you encourage them along. Quite truthfully, when I first heard about a savings plan, those were the first things that popped into my head, a good "hurray" and a bit of "fantastic."

You know, it's funny how past generations truly believed in what we were doing in Alberta. The pride around the heritage savings trust fund was something that was tangible when I was growing up. My parents spoke about it, their friends spoke about it, and that translated into a great sense of pride. They made those sacrifices to save future generations. I think that that's something that we should be doing as well.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill earlier asked one of our members what we would be doing with the heritage savings trust fund. Well, I would remind the hon. member that had this government chosen not to skim the interest since the late '80s, that fund would now sit at roughly $136 billion. The simple answer to that question is that we would use it to create another source of revenue, and that is exactly what our plan would be, Mr. Speaker, to use that heritage savings trust fund, to invest in it, as opposed to only leaving in...

Mr. Dorward: That's a big number.

Mr. Wilson: I'm not sure if the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has something wrong with him, Mr. Speaker, but there are some rather unpleasant noises coming from that part of the Chamber today. We may want to bring medical in to have him checked out. It's kind of nonstop.

Anyway, the creation of a stable revenue source. Being able to save money and do it the way that our party has planned to do it would allow us to keep interest in the fund and not take it out until it equalled the value of the resource revenue that the province took in that year. What we can all accept here is that there will be a point in time, Mr. Speaker, when resource revenue either dries up in this province or the world has moved on. If and when that time comes – and we know it will come – our province had best be ready for it. That was the vision that Peter Lougheed had when we started the heritage savings trust fund, to build that equity and that wealth for the future generations so that they would be sure to enjoy it.

It's interesting that part of the savings plan that this government has is simply suggesting that they're only going to take 75 per cent of the interest from the fund in the coming years, and that's now apparently savings. Then we have the Premier stand up and suggest that this is the first time in 25 years that this province has had a savings plan. Well, that's just simply not true. Anyone who's been around from the time of Ralph Klein will recognize that the sustainability fund that he started in 2003 was a savings plan.

Ms Blakeman: And a Liberal idea.

Mr. Wilson: Well, sure, a Liberal idea and a good one at that.

It was very unfortunate to see, you know, that this budget has dwindled what at one point was $17 billion in savings down to just under I think $700 million. It's very sad that that's happened since 2007, Mr. Speaker. The other side of this budget is that we now look at going further into debt roughly at about the same rate as we depleted the sustainability fund.

I reflect on the problems that we hear sometimes of lottery winners, where they get this windfall of cash and they think it's going to change their lives and that everything is going to be fantastic and great, and then a few years down the road they're bankrupt, they're depressed, and they're trying to figure out some way to recover. Well, that's exactly what we see this government having done, a $17 billion windfall that they fell into after the fiscal policies of Ralph Klein. They have now found a way to absolutely blow through it, and here we are.

When I was knocking on doors during the campaign, quite often people would ask me why I wanted to get into politics, Mr. Speaker. You know, I grew up knowing about the Alberta advantage, and I really did and do today truly understand that Alberta is the best place to live. It is the best place to raise a family, to work, and to play, and it's absolutely true. It is absolutely true.

Earlier in this session one of the ministers on the other side referred to the time period that we're in right now as AB, after bubble. I would suggest that the time period we're in now is truly AR, after Ralph, because had we just continued on the path that he had us on, we wouldn't be having the conversations we're having today.

The reason why I wanted to get into politics and the reason why I'm here today, Mr. Speaker, is because I truly did believe that what we saw after Ralph was a process of mortgaging our children's future with the way in which this government was spending its money. I decided that if you're passionate about something and you want to do something about it, you better put your name in the hat, step into the ring, and do some fighting, so that is why I'm here.

That pretty much takes us out of the good. Now let's talk about the bad. When you reflect on what was probably known as the low point of the 42-year dynasty, I think most members opposite would agree that that was probably the Getty era. Dick Johnston, when he was the Minister of Finance, had a way of reporting the books that gave him the moniker of Tricky Dick because he, quite simply, was cooking the books, so to speak. He was reporting in a way that was not transparent and was not open. Where did we find ourselves? At $23 billion in debt.

Quite honestly, I'm sure that most members opposite would look back on that and recognize that that legacy is the one legacy of this party that they want nothing to do with. Well, I have some bad news for you, friends. That is now going to be your legacy when you go to the next election. By 2016 we're going to have $17 billion in debt according to this budget, Mr. Speaker. I would not want to be one of my hon. colleagues across the floor knocking on doors and presenting that case to Albertans because that's certainly not what they campaigned on just last year.

Ms Blakeman: You're assuming they knocked on doors.

Mr. Wilson: Well, you are correct.

On budget day, Mr. Speaker, honestly, it felt like someone had punched me in the stomach. It was a very uncomfortable feeling. I required some self-medicating that night just to get through the reality of what we were going to be putting our kids through and where we were going over the next few years.

It's funny to hear members opposite as well comment on our capital plan, which they do so often. The Premier likes to suggest that we would build absolutely nothing under our plan, which is just plain wrong. I would point out to the members opposite that not only is your government now employing some of the ideas that we campaigned on with regard to capital plans, which is extending some projects so as to allow that capital to go further and for it not to be so front heavy – but that's okay. We don't need to take any credit for that. You guys just continue doing what you're doing.

I would remind you, though, that the 10-year debt-free capital plan that we've put forward is a responsible plan. About three years from now our plan and your plan are going to meet at right about the same number, that same dollar figure. So go right ahead and pretend, you know, that you guys are going to be spending through the roof and building Alberta and using interest to build Alberta or borrowing to build Alberta. At the end of the day, if the Wildrose 10-year debt-free capital plan were employed, we would be building more. Maybe not this year and maybe not next, but we would be continuing to increase spending on capital.

Another thing that we hear of over here quite often is how during maiden speeches in the first couple of weeks that party had the gall to ask for $1.5 billion in spending. Well, I have a couple of thoughts on that. First off, it really shouldn't surprise you that during a maiden speech a member of this House would stand and advocate for their constituency. I mean, that really is the crux of why we're all here.

Another thing that I'm going to share with you all is that there was a time when we over here received an e-mail from the Associate Minister of Finance directly asking: "What are your priorities? We're coming up with our capital plan, and we really want to know. Golly gee, what do you guys want to build?" Well, of course, it's all just in jest because now we hear that, well, we shouldn't have actually responded to those e-mails, that we shouldn't have actually told the minister what it was that we were hoping to have in our constituencies, about whether or not we thought that was something that we would want next year, the year after or what the priorities are for the next four or five years.

But, again, on the $1.5 billion we just get told that we're irresponsible, yet we have a party opposite who believes that going further and further into debt is really what Albertans are asking them to do. Clearly, why 61 of you are here is because that's what you told your constituents as you knocked on doors during the last campaign.

Again, this whole concept of calling debt revenue: it's no different, Mr. Speaker, than taking out a line of credit and pretending that it's income. You know, if a guy who's making $80,000 a year wants to say that he's pulling in six figures and he goes and gets himself a line of credit for 20 grand, is that a six-figure salary? It certainly isn't. But if you look at the way that the books are presented in this budget, that's how this government thinks Albertans would interpret that. I think that the government seems to be in that same lost headspace as this individual that I used in the example.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I'll get to the ugly. What we've got in Bill 12 is long-term intergenerational harm without a repayment plan, and that, again, is in the form of debt. The members in our party might – might – be able to take the idea of some debt if there was actually a plan to pay it off and there was actually a plan that would work to pay it off. But that certainly was not presented, nor does it seem to be presented.

Yeah, you're right. We're not going to agree with what you guys have planned, and we're probably not going to support this bill. I know I'm certainly not going to support this bill as it's written. You know, it can be summed up when you look at exactly what this bill is doing. It's repealing two pieces of legislation. One is called the Government Accountability Act, and the second is the Fiscal Responsibility Act, two very aptly named pieces of legislation which are being thrown out. Government accountability and fiscal responsibility: it says it right in the names alone.

But that's just, I suppose, the way it is. It demonstrates that this government can pass legislation, can repeal it at any time. That goes for a number of the finer details inside Bill 12; for example, the idea of a debt ceiling. "Well, if you don't like the debt ceiling that we set in 2013, we'll have to just go back and change it." Based on the fact that you're repealing the Government Accountability Act and the Fiscal Responsibility Act, why should anyone believe that you wouldn't just go back and change it? We've seen this happen with our friends down south.

This bill and this budget were anything but open and transparent reporting, Mr. Speaker. It comes down to something that you've heard us say quite often in this House, and that is: promises made, promises broken. That is what has been delivered in this. If there is only one thing to take away from this budget and this bill, it is that this government cannot be trusted. That's the only thing that Albertans know for sure.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I asked the Member for Rimbe- Rocky Mountain House-Sundre a question, and he artfully dodged it. I believe he said that he was practising to be a cabinet minister, learning how to avoid questions.

But back to the question about what his party would do with the income from the heritage fund. As he's aware, after inflation-proofing, we've used the income from that fund for quite a few years now to fund government operations and programs and build infrastructure. Would he not concede that had the PC government not used the income from that fund to build infrastructure and to provide for operational funding, we would not have the lowest taxes that we have right now, nor would we have the tremendous infrastructure that we have in the province of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for his question. You know, there's no question that having a source of revenue has allowed this government and this province to reap the rewards and the benefits of that. I think, you know, that if you're asking me what we would have done with it, we would have probably managed it a little bit more wisely than what we've seen.

Again, for me, it goes back to: what was the original intent of this fund? I'm sure that if you go and look through what Peter Lougheed thought he was starting when he started this fund, it was to create a sustainable, long-term source of revenue. In fairness, you chose to use that revenue. That was the choice that the government made. The electorate has put you back in office to continue down that path. That's the choice that they made, and that's what you chose to do with it.

Our party would choose to save it. We would choose to make sure that if and when we run surpluses, we mandate that 50 per cent of those surplus dollars go into the heritage savings trust fund year in, year out. Using the magic of compound interest, for the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, the number that I quoted earlier was $136 billion had you just left the fund alone and let the interest grow. It is somewhat sad and upsetting.

To answer the hon. member's question, we would leave the money in the fund. We would allow the fund to grow. We would mandate and legislate around not touching the interest on that fund until it equalled in an annual year what the province brought in in resource revenue.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Drumheller-Stettler, do you want to go next?

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Speaker, during the budget estimates the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance made the comment that he would not be leaving his children a debt-free house. In your dissertations earlier, Mr. Member for Calgary-Shaw, you talked about your family history and your pride in the belief in a savings fund, so I wondered how you would relate to hearing the Minister of Finance of the province of Alberta make a comment that he would not leave his children a debt-free house. I'm anxious to hear your opinion.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you for the question. It's an interesting question, and I guess it comes down to different parenting styles, for one. I know that with my son the last thing that I want to do when it's time for me to pass is to have him be responsible for mistakes that I made and have him carry debt as a result of decisions that I made. I would do and will do everything in my power to ensure that that doesn't happen. I can't speak, necessarily, to what the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board spoke to specifically around why he thought that he would not leave his children in a debt-free situation. I don't know if that's some sort of life lesson that he's looking to teach them.

I know that in this province it is simply irresponsible – irresponsible – for us to have had six years ago $17 billion in the bank in a sustainability fund, that's now going to be renamed the contingency fund because you don't want to actually mesh those two. You want to make sure that people forget that the sustainability fund even existed. You know, we've spent that $17 billion, we're going to have $17 billion more in debt, so in a matter of – what will that be? – a whole 10 years you're going to have spent $34 billion more than what you brought in. You can shake your head over there all you want, and you can . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Sorry to interrupt, but we must move on.

We're going to go to Medicine Hat. Hon. Member for Medicine Hat, you have the floor.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak today to Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act. I must say: what a difference a year makes, especially when it comes to budgets in Alberta. I'd like to just make a quote here from the Budget 2013: Responsible Change speech, and it's something that was presented by the Minister of Finance. What he says is:

It's no secret. We have our challenges: immediate, serious challenges that Budget 2013 speaks to.

For example, for the past 10 years, on average, we have increased spending by 7.3 per cent and this year zero because it was the responsible thing to do in light of our fiscal situation.

When you look at that, it's interesting because in 2013 the fiscal challenge is no secret, as stated by the minister, but in 2011 and 2012 it was probably the worst-kept secret by the PCs. I would say that it was used only to hang onto power. I think that they're being judged for that decision today.

Mr. Speaker, there is no comparison between the election budget and the current budget, that we are dealing with today. The election budget had promises to spend, and the current budget breaks all these promises and cuts front-line services. The old budget was talking about increasing spending in all areas. They wanted to add 140 family care clinics. That was announced by the Premier after the budget. They also promised to build 50 new schools, refurbish 70, again added after the budget, and many people thought that those promises would add another $4 billion to $6 billion to the budget. So you already have a high spending promise budget, you have more promises into the election, and then once you get through the election, you find out: oh; there was a secret. You just have to wonder, you know, about the integrity of what is presented in the budgeting process from government past and today.

This is the back-in-debt budget, and the Premier talks of it being a once-in-a-generation budget. We're seeing that. It's going to possibly put this generation back two generations. It took a generation to pay off the debt that the Getty government put us into, and we're headed in the same direction, Mr. Speaker. We are witnessing some of the biggest squandering of wealth in our province's history, and again this budget, that's presented this year, is full of broken promises based upon previous commitments. It is interesting that it's touted from the other side, the government side, that the capital plan is where they shine. They talk about spending billions of dollars. The trouble is that they've moved that off what was normally the regular reporting side, and now all that money is being borrowed.

I think that for any one of us, had we been elected: give us a platinum card. We'll go spend. We'll make people happy. But then you come home. You deliver the bill. That's when decisions need to be dealt with. That's when we have to decide: was that in the best interest of Alberta at that time? Mr. Speaker, I think that that question is going to linger over the next three years.

When you compare what the government wants to spend on capital, on debt, by the way, it's interesting when you look at it. They are very proud to say that over the next three years they're going to spend on average $5 billion, but it's front-end-loaded spending. They're talking about spending $5.2 billion in this year and just under $5.2 billion in the following year, but by 2015-2016 their spend is down to $4.6 billion. When you compare that to what our plan was, we start off smaller, but our rates actually grow. As the Member for Calgary-Shaw mentioned, there is an intersection in about year 3 or 4, and as the PC spending drops, ours accelerates. The interesting thing is that ours is not debt. We're not adding debt to the future generations.

An Hon. Member: No services either.

Mr. Pedersen: I'm just telling you, Member. We're spending, we're building, and in year 3 or 4 we'll surpass the PCs. It's a sad fact that the government takes and promises big up front . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: We're just about there, guys.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

It's interesting that the PCs will front-end-load their spending promises using debt, which is going to last and last and last, while we promote spending in a responsible fashion. We bypass them, and we deliver it with no debt. I think that they should review their budget on that.

Again, when you look at the budget on the capital plan, just reading from there, amounts required for capital debt servicing costs are being drawn from current-year revenue. The amount of direct borrowing for the Capital Plan is subject to a legislated limit in the Fiscal Management Act. The Act stipulates that Capital Plan debt servicing costs cannot exceed 3% of the average of Operational Revenue of the current year and two prior years.

We're glad to see that there is a limitation and a bit of a ceiling there.

The problem is that when you look at the numbers, from what I can read – and maybe I could be corrected, or I might not be right – coming up to the year 2015-2016, Mr. Speaker, the debt-servicing costs as listed are shown at $593 million. That's based on 3 per cent of the three-year average of operational revenue of $1.2 billion. If I'm to interpret that correctly, we're already going to be at almost 50 per cent of our borrowing limit in only three years. I think that's very troubling. It's very worrisome, when you see a spending cap or a spending limit set out, that we have hit half of that in three years. You know, it's going to take a lot longer to pay it off. It's easy to spend, easy to rack it up, but we all know it's painful and takes a long time to pay it back.

Mr. Speaker, as was mentioned before, too, what used to be called the sustainability fund was built up to quite a considerable amount – I think it was $14 billion, $15 billion at the high – and has gradually been taken down in substantial quantities almost every year. As of 2011-2012 there was over $11 billion sitting in that fund. By the time we get to 2014-2015, the anticipated balance is going to be under $700 million, so we're basically 16 and a half billion dollars used up over the next couple of years from '11-12. That's a substantial amount of money. They're anticipating that that fund will begin to rise by then, and of course it's going to be called the contingency fund, which is an interesting change. We'll see if their numbers hold true or if we have any problems.

Some of the real numbers for the budget from 2013-2014, Mr. Speaker. There's going to be about $3.5 billion in new debt this year. That's going to be doubling to about $8 billion by next year by what is said in the budget. Again, we're looking at a total budget deficit in spending of about $17 billion on the capital side. That's going to be there by the time we face the next election, and I do think that's going to be one of the Achilles heels of this government because it is certainly not one of the things they did campaign on nor went to the voters and asked approval for.

There's a 5-and-a-half-billion-dollar cash deficit in the 2013-14 budget, and that's after we've taken $2 billion out of the sustainability fund, now called the contingency fund. The operational deficit, from what we can figure out by working the many, many different figures and books and columns, is about $1.4 billion for this year. It's pretty dramatic, and it's going to be concerning for us this year as well as next year, when we're looking at $451 million for an operational deficit.

The problem with the budget, too, we feel, is that it still leaves the door open for taxes. Now, we've asked, and they've said that there will not be new taxes, but again when you're treading water, when you're fine-lining things so closely, the way this government is, there are very few options. If there is a hiccup in the revenue stream and they wanted to stay committed to their spending stream, it does limit their options. Taxes are obviously one of those options that is open to them. We think that that is still something that's on the table for them, and we're concerned about that because they say that they won't do it, but we'll have to see.

Their plan, again, as mentioned before, to borrow to put into savings I'm a bit skeptical of. I'm not sure that's the best idea, but that's the decision the government is making, and we're concerned about that, Mr. Speaker. You know, there are many broken promises. We're talking about education funding, you know, being promised before and cut. That's on the regular education system. The advanced education system, or postsecondary, is experiencing a 7 per cent cut when they were expecting an increase, as promised by the government in the previous budget. Again, the 50 new schools and 70 modernizations: now it looks like they're going to be built over five years instead of four. We'll see if that actually comes through or not.

I think, you know, in closing, Mr. Speaker, that Bill 12 is designed for one purpose, and that's really to hide the true nature of what the PC government has planned for us not only this year but over the next three years. It's certainly not making any great strides to get their spending in order. We've seen that the actual spending reductions are actually affecting front-line services, front-line workers. They haven't really gone after bureaucracy. They haven't gone after any of the spending on themselves, and I think that's the issue that we take most seriously. As it is presented, I personally cannot support this bill without significant amendments.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: The question has been called, then. No other speakers? Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a second time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seeing that, let's call it 4:30 and adjourn until 1:30 on Monday, April 22.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:26 p.m. to Monday, April 22, at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, April 22, 2013

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon, everyone.

Let us begin with our daily prayer. Let us pray for the protection of this Assembly and also the province we have been elected to serve. Let us also pray for the protection of citizens who live in other parts of our country and for those innocent victims who become victimized by vicious acts of violence. Amen.

Please remain standing for the singing of our nation's national anthem led by none other than M. Paul Lorieau. Please join in in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Merci beaucoup, M. Lorieau.

Thank you, gentlemen and ladies. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly His Excellency Vytautas Žalys, who is the ambassador of the Republic of Lithuania. Also joining him are Ms Nejolla Korris, the honorary consul of Lithuania in Edmonton and the chair of the Edmonton consular corps, and Mr. Arūnas Staškevičius, who is the honorary consul of the Republic of Lithuania in Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, our relationship with Lithuania dates back to 1904, when Lithuanian immigrants began to arrive in Alberta. Today more than 3,000 Albertans are of Lithuanian descent, and Alberta's Lithuanian community continues to actively promote its heritage in our province. Lithuania was, for example, this year's host country of the 33rd annual Consular Corps Ball, which took place in Edmonton this last Saturday. This event was a great success and another opportunity to showcase wonderful Lithuanian artists in Alberta.

It is a great pleasure to welcome His Excellency on his official visit to our province. We look forward to continuing the positive relationship that exists between Alberta and Lithuania over the years to come. His Excellency, Ms Korris, and Mr. Staškevičius are seated in the Speaker's gallery. In fact, they are now standing in the Speaker's gallery. I ask that our honoured guests be welcomed with the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, while our guests are still standing, you may be interested to know that the large canopy that now envelops and frames the Speaker's chair was installed in this Chamber in 1980. It was a gift from the city of Edmonton to commemorate the province's 75th birthday. What you may not know, however, is that the canopy was designed by Paul Van Imschoot of Stony Plain, and it was built by Titas Uogintas of Edmonton, who originally came from Lithuania.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a great group of students from the Bears paw Christian School, located in my constituency of Chestermere-Rocky View. Together with students from six other Christian schools across the province these engaged junior high school students have come to watch their elected officials in action today. They also told me – I had the pleasure of meeting them beforehand – that they regularly say prayers for all of us in here, so I think we can all be grateful for that. I would ask the nine grade 5 students from Bears paw Christian School to please rise with teacher Rebecca Bock, principal Judy Huffman, and parent Lisa Dalglish and receive the traditional welcome from all of us here in the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to welcome and also to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a wonderful group of students from the Drayton Christian school in the neighbouring constituency to the west of my own, and that's Drayton Valley-Devon. On behalf of their MLA, the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, I am pleased to welcome here these 17 bright grade 6 students along with their leaders, Mr. Jordan Pauls and Mrs. Jeanine Johnson. They've toured the Legislature. They've learned a great deal about the building and provincial government and how it works. We're really happy to have them here today to watch these proceedings. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly 20 friendly and enthusiastic students from my constituency from the Fort Saskatchewan Christian school. They're here with their teacher, Mrs. Elaine Baillie, and parent helper Mrs. Susanne Wiens. Before this session started, they presented me with a plaque, and I would like to just mention what that plaque said. It was presented to me along with all those who call themselves Albertans and seek to live up to our name: Alberta, bright through nobility. I would ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a rare occasion that I receive visitors from the constituency of Lesser Slave Lake, so today I am so pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly five bright minds from grades 7 to 9 from Koinonia Christian School in Slave Lake. They are accompanied by their teacher, Miss Jasmine Light.

I also have the great honour of introducing two home-schoolers today who have done extremely well, Mr. Speaker. They're with their parents, Carey and Heather Barnstable. They are seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask that they stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 25 students from l'école St. Angela elementary school. They're here all week as part of the School at the Legislature, and they are here with their teacher, Mrs. Carmel Perry, and parent Angie Zills. If they could all stand up, please, and get a warm reception from the Legislature.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly several students from the Saddle Lake Christian school, part of a larger group of Christian schools visiting the Legislature today. They are attending with my good friend Mavis Giant. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

My second introduction. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly several students from the Wisdom Home Schooling Society, which is headquartered in my constituency of Derwent. They're accompanied by Mr. Carey Barnstable and Mrs. Heather Barnstable. Mr. Speaker, I'm encouraged by these students attending the Legislature today so that they know that the Wildrose supports strong and diverse schooling options for Albertans, especially home-schooled children. I'd ask that these students rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there any other school groups to be introduced? If not, let us move on to guests.

Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, do you have some other guests to introduce?

Ms Fenske: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions. The first is to introduce to you four people from my constituency who are sporting the Strathcona volunteer centre ribbon that recognizes the volunteers in the community. Mel and Wendy Marler are farmers from near Josephsburg. In a normal year they wouldn't be here today; they'd be out in the field. So we're thankful that they could take advantage of this. Mel serves on the Community Advisory Panel for Dow, and Wendy is very active in the Josephsburg Presents series, which is the longest running cultural series in Alberta.

With them today are Grant and Evelyn Osbaldeston, who also live near Josephsburg. Grant has retired from one of our local industries, and his volunteer portfolio is too lengthy to even mention, but he does volunteer for the Fort Historical Society. Next month they are going to host the Peoples of the North Saskatchewan. Evelyn, his wife, works in the small retail business sector in Sherwood Park, and she will benefit from our government's pooled registered pension plans legislation. She volunteers with her church, Partridge Hill United church. I'd ask them to please rise and accept the warm greeting of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Norma Hayward Ketchum and her brother Roy Loyek, two of 12 children. Norma is a resident of Red Deer county. She is a retired registered nurse and a full-time caregiver for her brother Roy, a PDD recipient and former resident of Michener Centre. Norma is concerned with the 45 per cent cutback to PDD and the effects on Roy. Roy's transition from Michener some 25 years ago was not easy on him, his family, or his community. He was misunderstood, mistakes were made with his care, and the stress placed on one family member may have contributed to their untimely death. But after decades of struggles Roy has finally found a balance, and he has been rescued. Each week he spends 144 hours in Norma's care and the remaining 24 hours within the community under the care of PDD, enjoying activities like bowling, watching a movie, activities most of us take for granted. Norma is here with Roy to request investment into PDD caregiver support and to keep Michener open. Please join me in giving Norma and Roy a warm welcome to the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and leader of the New Democrat opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First of all, I have the pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a new member of my staff, Amy Lambe. Amy is a graduate of the University of Alberta and comes to us from the John Humphrey Centre for Peace and Human Rights, where she has a long history of volunteering and worked as a project co-ordinator for two years, providing human rights education opportunities around Edmonton and throughout the province. Amy has also worked for Global Youth Connect in Rwanda, where she supported youth from North America and Rwanda through intensive human rights education programs. She is my new executive assistant and as such faces the challenging task of keeping me in the right place at least at approximately the right time. I would now ask Amy to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

For my second introduction, Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you a constituent of mine, Kathryn Westlund. Kathryn has been facing numerous obstacles with her workers' compensation claim and the subsequent appeals process. It's now been over four years since Kathryn started the process of resolving her WCB claim. As a result, her ability to make decisions regarding her financial situation has been at a standstill. I would now ask Kathryn to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly some members of my constituency of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. Carmen Andrew and her daughters Emma and Leah Pilkington are joining us today. They're on spring break, and they chose to come and spend their day at the Legislature, which is, I think, a great privilege for us. Emma is a grade 9 student at Delburne school, and her sister Leah is in grade 6. Unfortunately, Delburne school is not able to visit the Legislature this year due to timing, so we're glad that you guys took some free time out of your day to come and see us today. Thank you. I'd ask them to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West for your first of two introductions.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly my friend Connor Haakenson, who recently completed the Japanese Fushimi exchange program this spring. Connor had nothing but amazing things to say about Japan. We had the opportunity to meet before he went, and he assured me that he and his classmates were incredibly excited to experience the culture, the food, and all that Japan had to offer. One of the major differences he's mentioned since returning home is the superior level of technology within the country. Specifically, he talked about seeing a vending machine in a back alley that talked and had a digital screen which played music and offered a variety of drinks. Now, I can assure you that my days of listening to music and drinking in back alleys are behind me, but the degree of passion with which Connor speaks about this amazing country inspires me to visit it one day. I'd ask that Connor and his father, Gerald Haakenson, and his mother, Carol Haakenson, seated in the members' gallery today, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a long-term resident of Medicine Hat, a small-business owner there but also a very keen and passionate Albertan for our political process. Jordan Lien is the regional director of the Medicine Hat Progressive Conservative association. I would ask that he please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take this opportunity to introduce two gentlemen who are here with the Christian schools today. They are seated in the members' gallery. To you and through you I would like to introduce Tim Schindel, who provides ministerial support to the B.C. Legislature, and with him is Larry Lindoff. I would ask them both to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Organ and Tissue Donations

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand here today to once again speak about human organ and tissue donation during this week of national awareness. I may sound like a broken record to many of you; however, I am not apologetic. In fact, I will continue to talk about this issue until the dire state of organ donation procurement here in Alberta has improved considerably. We have one of the worst donation rates in the country.

Most of us are not even aware of organ and tissue donation unless we have been personally affected. For most Albertans awareness never goes further than signing the back of their Alberta health care card. Few of us realize that in most cases even if we were to die and wanted to donate our organs, many things preclude the chance to be a donor. In fact, a recent study found that 8 per cent of donor candidates that come through the emergency room doors actually made it to the donor process after death. An abysmal 8 per cent.

Donation of organs requires a well-thought-out plan. Medical personnel must co-ordinate between emergency departments and organ donation programs. It involves having trained hospital staff in every hospital, staff able to ask sensitive questions of families. Yes, family consent is still required even though a person has signed his or her Alberta health care card. In fact, family consent has decreased from 85 per cent just over a decade ago to a staggering 45 per cent today because of lack of awareness and the neglect of families to have talked about the issue.

Hon. members, 62 Albertans have died needlessly waiting for the gift of life since my last organ donation member's statement over a year ago today. A co-ordinated approach to address the problems of our current system could have saved the lives of many of these individuals. The time to act is now.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Your first main set of questions.

Health System Executive Expenses

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Health continues to undermine confidence in the public health system, especially on the issue of health executive expenses. For months the Premier and the minister have said that the past is the past, but on Thursday the minister bragged that the former CEO of Capital health had paid back an expense she approved to send one of her VPs to the Mayo Clinic in 2007. It turns out that past expense account abuse is a big deal after all. Does the minister now agree that there are other offensive expenses that should also be paid back?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The circumstances that we discussed last week were very troubling to the Minister of Health and to our government, and that is one of the reasons that on Thursday the Minister of Health asked former Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench Allan Wachowich to provide advice to him directly on whether or not there were opportunities to deal with these circumstances. We're looking forward to that advice because, as we said last week, we don't think that they were appropriate, and if there is any possible way to deal with that, then we will.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you. I accept that the minister made the announcement Thursday that he was asking a retired judge to examine potential ways to recover expense money paid to health executives. Now it seems that the minister actually is interested in what happened before the creation of the Alberta Health superboard after telling Albertans many, many times that it was time to look forward and forget the past. So what changed?

Ms Redford: One thing that we are most concerned with as a government is ensuring that we are protecting taxpayers, Mr. Speaker. If there are situations where we think that there are steps that we need to take, we want to make sure that we are getting the best possible advice with respect to that. That doesn't change the fact that in the past 18 months this government, elected a year ago tomorrow, put in place changes to the expense policy guidelines to ensure that this can never happen again.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we're pleased to see the Premier and the minister seem to have had a conversion on the road to Damascus and now agree with the opposition's view that health executive expenses need to be reviewed in detail and paid back. He's got a judge looking at potential legal remedies. The only thing missing is a full forensic audit of all of the health executives' expenses going back to the Merali era. When can we expect that?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Health has already said that Alberta Health Services has made a decision with respect to how to deal with those expenses. We think that's appropriate. We're going to ensure wherever possible that if circumstances do arise, we have the best possible advice as to what steps to take in order to recover taxpayer dollars, and we'll move forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, last week we revealed that Michele Lahey, a former health executive, billed taxpayers for a visit to the Mayo Clinic. Now, the Premier said that she was disgusted, the minister said that he was outraged, and that prompted the former CEO of Capital health who had approved these expenses to pay back the $7,200 cost of treatment plus interest. Now, there are tens of thousands of dollars in other questionable expenses that we have raised in the past. I'm wondering: will the Premier express disgust again so that maybe we can get some of those expenses paid back, too?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will not stand in this House and concede that all of the suggestions made by the opposition are somehow accurate simply because they said them, but there is no doubt that there are circumstances that do arise from time to time. It's why we're going to pursue advice that will allow us wherever possible to deal with these issues where it's appropriate. We believe fundamentally that everything we do has to be about ensuring that we're being custodians of taxpayers' dollars, that we're ensuring the integrity of a public health care system to ensure that people can continue to have confidence and not see fearmongering from the other side of the House.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, here's another expense that Ms Lahey incurred and that the Capital health CEO approved. In April of 2005 Ms Lahey and her husband attended the Hope Foundation gala fundraiser, where her husband bought a luxury dinner for four at the live auction for $1,200. Ms Lahey then expensed her husband's $1,200 donation, and the CEO of Capital health approved it. Is the Premier or anyone disgusted by that?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, as we see continually, these circumstances are possibly arising, and what we've asked the opposition to do is to ensure that all appropriate steps are taken to provide the information to independent agencies that can take a look at these matters. There is no doubt as we move forward and we take a look at some of these circumstances that if there are opportunities to deal with them, we will. But let's also keep in mind that the regulations that are in place, the expense guidelines that we have put in place and we've asked Alberta Health Services to follow, will ensure that this does not happen again.

Ms Smith: Here's some more taxpayer-funded philanthropy by Ms Lahey's husband: November 2005, $4,300 for a Heavenly Evening of Dining auction item; May 2006, $1,700 at another function; $3,000 more in 2007, all paid for by Ms Lahey's husband on his credit card, which she then expensed to taxpayers. Is the Premier or anyone else disgusted by that?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, it's entirely appropriate to raise these issues. There's no reason for us not to look into them, and we will.

But I will say something else, and I'd like to remind the opposition of this. While these circumstances that we're talking about are certainly disappointing, we want to make sure that we've dealt with them. [interjections] We've taken steps to ensure they can't happen again. We've taken steps to ensure there's the opportunity to recover, but let's keep in mind that what we did as a government, elected a year ago tomorrow, was ensured we instituted changes to make . . . [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, I hear a few members in the rows of the Wildrose opposition starting to interject more and more as the questions build. I don't hear anybody interjecting when the questions are being asked. Let's not interject when the answers are being given. You may like the answers; you may not. But it doesn't give cause for you to create any disorder. So please let us be respectful. Let's change the tone as we all said we would try to do last year. It would just be a wonderful world, wouldn't it?

Let's proceed on with your third main set of questions.

Prescription Drug Coverage

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Health is systematically undermining the public's confidence in the health care system. Changing pharmacy pricing is just the most recent example, yet the minister defends his Fred-icare plan, insisting that drug prices are dropping. Not true. There are examples galore, and they affect patients. We'll hear more about that in a subsequent question. Life-saving medicines that were one price last month are double, triple, or more this month. It affects their health, and it affects their lives. When is the minister going to scrap this horrible plan and put patients first?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the introduction of changes that the Minister of Health has proposed with respect to generic drugs is doing exactly that. We've made responsible and tough choices to ensure that our public health care system continues to remain sustainable, that Alberta taxpayers get good value for their money, and that Albertans can afford medication. As we move forward, we have every confidence that through this transition phase we're able to see tremendous success and opportunity, and we look forward to that continuing.

Ms Smith: The minister has been telling Albertans a number of things about his pharmacy plan that are simply not true. He claimed that there are multiple manufacturers for all of our drugs. This is false. The sole supplier of penicillin is Apotex. The old price was $71 per thousand pills. The new Fred-icare price is $178 per thousand pills. Will the Premier take her minister to task and give him the opportunity to admit his mistake and tell the Assembly the truth about his Fred-icare?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I expect within the next little while we'll see these sorts of specific examples that are misleading to Albertans. The reason for that is that what we've done as the government is that we have absolutely changed the way that the government of Alberta purchases medication. That doesn't mean that in some cases you may not see increases in some and decreases in others, but what we have confidence in is that this plan reduces the cost of medication to Albertans, to the Alberta health care system and ensures that we can continue to have a sustainable system that supports vulnerable people.

Ms Smith: I'll help the Premier with the math. Penicillin is now two and half times higher in price.

Mr. Speaker, the minister is also trying to convince Albertans that as a result of consultations with pharmacists the pharmacists agree with the changes. They don't. Can the minister answer a question from a pharmacist in the Banff-Cochrane constituency? I'm sure that the MLA wishes he could ask this question on his behalf. Who in their right mind would agree that it is best to sell products at a loss and put their business at risk?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, here is the difference between the government and the opposition. As I've said very clearly and as our Minister of Health has said, our primary responsibility is to ensure that our health care system is sustainable and that all Albertans have access to medication. We have ensured that we've consulted with pharmacists. We understand that there are some pharmacists who have business models where this transition is challenging. We are supporting them, but I'll tell you that our first obligation is not the same as the Leader of the Opposition's. The Leader of the Opposition says that she's opposed to corporate subsidies, which doesn't seem to be the case. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Funding for Education

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tomorrow is the one-year anniversary of the 2012 election. In his column Don Braid talks about the Premier. He states, "She rarely admits a mistake; indeed, she won't even concede that promises made in the election campaign have been broken." One such promise was to bring in full-day kindergarten. Promise made, promise broken. To the Premier: why did you promise full-day kindergarten when you had no intention of honouring that promise? Was it just a ploy to win votes? Why, Premier?

Ms Redford: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, whether it's our Minister of Education or our Minister of Human Services talking about this issue, we will talk about the fact that all-day kindergarten matters to Albertans, because we're fundamentally committed to ensuring that early childhood development is a foundation for the future. We already see in over half of the jurisdictions in this province the opportunity for all-day kindergarten, and as we move forward, we are transitioning more and more programs to that. Local school boards are involved in making these decisions that are appropriate for their families. We'll continue to support it, and to suggest that we're not going to get there is completely misleading.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, Albertans don't need this Premier to talk; they need her to walk.

In the election the Premier promised to end child poverty in five years, to revisit minimum wage, and to end all poverty in 10 years, yet after 42 years this government doesn't even have a working definition of poverty nor any money budgeted to end it. One year has gone by, and more than 70,000 Alberta kids are waiting to be appropriately fed, clothed, housed, and brought out of poverty. Promise made, promise broken. [interjections] To the Premier: why are you playing politics with the most vulnerable members of our society instead of helping them?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the presumptions of the hon. member are absolutely absurd. First of all, there are no magic wands. Nobody promised that everything would be done on day 1. We have a four-year mandate, and we will fulfill that four-year mandate. [interjections] The hon. member says that there's no definition of poverty. If he went back to the estimates, at which the Member for Calgary-Mountain View raised the same issue, he'd understand that social issues belong to the community and have to be worked on with the community. There are many definitions of poverty. [interjections] We are working on making sure that there's common cause in this province so that we actually do succeed in achieving these very, very laudable goals.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: All right. We now have hecklings and interjections by the Liberals and by the New Democrat opposition and even a few from the government side. Again I ask: could you please all come back to some sense of civility and decorum before this gets escalated to the point where I have to interject even more?

Hon. member, your final question.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, this minister talks about magic wands. Our kids are getting lumps of coal.

During the election my daughter and her friends at the University of Alberta read election slogans where the Premier told students she'd walked in their shoes and promised to prepare Alberta for the future by investing in their education. Instead, we've seen the most draconian cuts to postsecondary education in decades and even the cancellation of STEP funding. Promise made, promise broken. To the Premier: how exactly did you decide that chaos, fear, and uncertainty were what our postsecondary institutions needed to prepare our young people and our province for the future?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we see a lot of examples of spreading chaos, fear, and uncertainty, but they're coming from that side of the House. Nonetheless, we're very aware of the fact that postsecondary funding in this budget makes up more than 5 per cent of our budget. This is an area where we have a responsibility to ensure that taxpayer dollars are being used effectively for research and innovation, to train our students, not wasted on administrative costs. Everything that our minister is doing is working with presidents and boards of governors to ensure that taxpayer dollars are being spent effectively. You know, we've seen incredible investments in the past 10 years, and we think we can ensure that this continues.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition.

Seniors' Drug Coverage

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is breaking another promise, this time to Alberta seniors. As a PC leadership candidate in a letter dated September 6, 2011, this Premier assured seniors she would "cancel the proposed Alberta Senior's Drug Strategy and retain the current program." Now as Premier she's looking to replace the current plan with an income-adjusted plan that could see seniors paying hundreds or even thousands more for their prescriptions. To the Premier: why have you broken another promise, this time to our most vulnerable citizens?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, the comments made with respect to ASDS were important because we wanted to make sure that we were putting in place a system that did take care of the most vulnerable Albertans. The work that our Minister of Health is doing on pharmacare is ensuring that that is exactly what will happen. This program will ensure access for 20 per cent of Albertans that currently do not have drug coverage. The work that he's doing with respect to generic drugs is going to ensure that the price of medication goes down. Everything we're doing is about ensuring that medication is more accessible for everyone in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Second question.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In this Premier's letter she clearly stated that income-based supports for prescriptions are "a poor repayment" for seniors' contributions to building Alberta. Just before the election the Health minister underlined the commitment to seniors, saying that government has no intention to make changes to the plan. That was before the election, and this is after. To the Premier: why didn't you tell Alberta seniors the truth?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, what we told Alberta seniors and all Albertans was that we wanted to ensure that we had a pharmacare system and a drug system that ensured that the most vulnerable people were protected. As we move forward, that's exactly what we have. We saw the opportunity in the past 12 months to do something better than what we'd actually thought was in place before. We're committed to doing that not only to serve Albertans and Alberta taxpayers but also to ensure that we're allowing our health care system to continue to be sustainable. We're committed to that.

Mr. Mason: Before the last election this Premier made so many promises to so many people that they could fill the Saddledome. Clearly, this Premier will say anything to anyone in order to get elected. Now she's tricked vulnerable seniors into voting for her by making promises she had no intention of keeping. Premier, have you no shame?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this is a government that wants to ensure and has ensured with this budget that we are protecting vulnerable Albertans across the board, whether they are seniors or otherwise. I'll talk about some promises we made that we kept. We promised to protect vulnerable Albertans, to hold the line on spending, to not increase taxes, to improve pharmacare, to fund insulin pumps, to build family care clinics, to build new schools, to fast-track emergency rooms, and to renew our fiscal policy framework. We made those commitments and we kept those commitments and we're proud of those commitments.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Safe Communities Innovation Fund

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a result of this year's back-in-debt budget that cut all funding to the safe communities innovation fund, Servants Anonymous has been desperately trying to find sustainable funding for their SAFE house. For the past three years the SAFE house has provided women and children the support necessary to exit the violence of prostitution, human trafficking, and sexual exploitation. Last week the Minister of Human Services indicated to me that his ministry will be finding a way to sustain the funding for the SAFE house due to the success of the program. Can the minister tell this House when Servants Anonymous can expect your call?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What the hon. member was doing last week was raising questions and talking about budget cuts, which was entirely inaccurate. What actually happened with respect to that particular program and a number of others that were funded under safe com was that they knew that their grants were one-, two-, or three-year grants, and they were expiring. They were working on a transition plan to sustainability. Our department is working on those transition plans with respect to those projects, which need to be continued to sustain those ones that were successful, and we'll continue to do that.

2:10

Mr. Wilson: A cut is a cut is a cut, Minister.

Given that other pilot programs under the safe communities innovation fund are beginning to feel the heat as a result of this government's misguided priorities and given that just last week the government insisted that funding had dried up for all SCIF programs, can the minister outline what other front-line services that were going to be cut last week are now deemed funded this week?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member continues to intentionally change the facts. The facts are that SCIF projects were funded with specific grants for one, two, or three years. Those grants expired. They weren't renewable. They weren't ongoing. They were term certain. During that period of time the projects were to determine, first of all, whether they achieved results, and then, secondly, how they were going to be sustainable. That discussion about how they were going to be sustainable is a discussion which they needed to engage in with the appropriate departments so that appropriate programs can go forward. It's not a budget cut. It's a grant that expired.

Mr. Wilson: Given that the government has indicated it will backtrack on the decision to cancel funding for Servants Anonymous and apparently some other very deserving programs, will the government now overturn its stubborn decision to close to the Michener Centre, or will it continue to bulldoze ahead with its pattern of miscommunication around cuts to the front-line services that matter most to vulnerable Albertans?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, let's set the record straight here. The hon. member stands and complains about cuts despite the fact that they propose that we cut $2 billion from the budget. Nonetheless, our PDD budget wasn't cut. It's increased in this year's budget. The only person who has proposed a cut in the PDD budget by way of amendment, which we'll vote on tonight, is that hon. member. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Okay. Whoever is hooting and hollering over here, enough. You know, this may surprise some of you, but there are people who watch question period. There are people who come to the galleries expecting to listen to question period. Do you know what? They expect those of us who were elected here to be role models for them and for others. Did you know that? Now, just take a look at your own decorum over this last little while. Is that the kind of role modelling you would like to see? Even while I'm speaking, some of you are talking to each other. Is that how you are in your own homes in your own communities? I don't think so. Why, then, would you try to be like that here? Come on.

I know question period isn't as exciting for some as it is for others, but it's a serious time to hold the government accountable. That's what it's all about. So let's let members who ask questions have that right, and let's have government members offer up their explanations. Wouldn't that be a wonderful world? It's the second time I'm asking you.

Let us move onward. Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, followed by Airdrie.

Joint Oil Sands Environmental Monitoring

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the Minister of Energy. Albertans know that developing our energy resources comes with an environmental cost in the generation of greenhouse gases that do cause climate change and in impacts on air, land, and watersheds. But Albertans want to know the facts. Given the widespread criticism of our old monitoring systems, what is the minister doing to provide up-to-date information on environmental impacts from oil sands developments?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, the joint oil sands monitoring portal was launched today, very appropriately on Earth Day, and it will provide clear, open, and transparent access for anybody who wishes to take a look at it, information about the air, the water, soil, and biodiversity in northeastern Alberta. This is a significant on-the-ground development in terms of having access for all Canadians and Albertans. We're very deeply committed to this, working with the government of Canada.

Dr. Brown: To the same minister: given that the joint environmental plan was announced in February 2012, what on-the-ground enhancements have been put in place to provide the data, and how can the minister assure Albertans that the new portal will have some scientific credibility?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, clearly, that's what it's all about, ensuring that there is scientific credibility to the work that's going on, that it's out there for all to review.

Our Minister of ESRD and her federal counterpart have undertaken tremendous hard work since February of 2012, when they announced this. We're broadening monitoring of contaminants specific to the oil sands and implementing an expanded groundwater monitoring network as well. Those are just a couple of examples of the additional monitoring that's available publicly.

Dr. Brown: Given the importance of our oil sands to Alberta, Canada, and, in fact, to North America can the minister advise how this new data is going to help to clear up some of PR campaigns of misinformation about our oil sands developments?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, clearly, what we have to do as Albertans is ensure that science is our friend. Science is helpful to all of us to help ensure that the facts are out there, that we're able to put our case forward, that people can contest it and take a look at the facts and understand it and analyze it. Canada and Alberta are working closely to ensure that this is out there, that we're working together on our environmental policies. Meanwhile the opposition, of course, are still scratching their heads about what science is and which science they actually believe.

Crossmunicipal Taxi Fares

Mr. Anderson: The taxi shortage in the city of Calgary is well documented, and although the majority of the problem must be dealt with by the city, it is starting to affect those from communities outside of Calgary, including my own. Airdrie taxi drivers are forbidden to pick up Airdrie residents from Calgary and bring them back to Airdrie and are fined $1,500 for doing so even though the shortage of Calgary taxis means hours of waiting. To the Minister of Transportation: why don't we do what most other jurisdictions have done and allow for a crossmunicipal taxi licence so that Airdrie drivers aren't penalized for serving members in their own communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member probably knows – and I guess there was a time in my life when I spent nine years dealing with this amongst other issues – the municipalities have the authority over the taxi business. I guess the hon. member wants to wrestle that authority from them. That's an issue that he may want to bring forward in a proposal. But right now municipalities are duly elected, really not unlike us, and at this point I don't know of any plans to take away their duly elected authority.

Mr. Anderson: It's intermunicipal trade. We don't make buses and charters do that. Why should we do that for taxis?

Given this minister is always touting how he is cracking down on drunk driving and given that having timely access to a cab would do far more to prevent drunk driving and be a lot more cost efficient than, say – oh, I don't know – going after those at .05, will the minister agree to develop a permit that allows taxi drivers to pick up those living in their communities, whether that's a Calgary taxi picking up a Calgarian from an Airdrie bar or vice versa?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, we've got a volunteer organization called the Calgary Regional Partnership, where municipalities have come together and continue to come together to address the challenges with long-term regional planning, land-use planning. At the meeting we had on Thursday evening, we discussed water use, we discussed business licences, and we discussed a lot of other things, an example of which this member has listed, which can help make the Calgary Regional Partnership stronger and make it more competitive down the road to better serve every single one of its clients instead of defending themselves against borders, which are really arbitrary. It's about working together.

Mr. Anderson: Given that the reason Airdrie taxis cannot afford to run a wheelchair accessible van is because they are not permitted to return with customers from hospitals or other facilities in Calgary even if they brought them there in the first place and given that this is a major restriction on the mobility of seniors and the disabled living in communities outside of Calgary, Minister, will you show just a little compassion and perhaps a little common sense and allow taxis from Airdrie, Chestermere, and others to at the very least pick up seniors and the disabled from Calgary locations so they can be brought home to our communities in a timely and safe fashion?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, this is a municipal issue, and we continually respect municipalities and their ability not only to solve their own problems but to work together to come up with long-term solutions.

I find it very ironic that half the members on that side are working to undermine the Calgary Regional Partnership and cause more division while we on this side respect municipalities and encourage them to constantly work together to address these solutions because we all, from every single municipal jurisdiction in the province, serve the same clients.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

2:20 Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Program

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As part of Budget 2013 it was announced that the seniors' property tax deferral program will be implemented so seniors can keep more money in their pockets by deferring property taxes till they sell their homes. To the Associate Minister of Seniors. We know that seniors are facing rising expenses, including my parents. We know that even seniors who own their own home are not immune to the added burden of rising property values, including my parents. How will the seniors' property tax deferral program actually deal with this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you. Mr. Speaker, the voluntary program, the seniors' property tax deferral program, was announced today. Everybody is going to have the opportunity in their offices to have information packages. The Treasury Branches have information packages. The Seniors websites have information packages. This opportunity for seniors to defer the equity in their home will give the opportunity for seniors to decide how best they spend their money. Whether they just spend it on extra groceries, whether they spend it on a trip, that's up to them. It gives them a low-cost interest to be able to achieve this.

Mr. Fraser: To the same minister: how will this program work, and when can the seniors start applying?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, quite simply they can start applying today, and the qualifications for this program are pretty simple. You have to be 65 years old with 25 per cent equity in your home. Fill out the application, and the process will roll.

Mr. Fraser: Given that Calgary seniors who can't live at home are waiting for placement into higher level care facilities, not long-term placement but a home with 24-hour care, what is this government doing to provide these spaces for Albertans who have built this province?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, it's very clear in the budget document that we have an opportunity for enhanced housing and continuing care for communities across the province. Sir, if you and others in this Assembly pass this budget tonight, we'll be able to roll out this program and make some announcements very, very soon. If you vote against the budget, we won't have the opportunity to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Municipal Charters

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. During her leadership race, the election, and on other occasions the Premier promised a big-city charter for Edmonton and Calgary. Now, whether this was one big-city charter referring to both cities or two separate charters, the Edmonton charter and the Calgary charter, the details are not worked out. But there is no question. I heard the promise, Edmonton heard the promise, and Calgary heard the promise. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why is the minister now saying that this will not happen in any way, shape, or form?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've never said that. In fact, I've stood every single time in this House and said that we continue to work on the charter. We're making incredible progress, but keep in mind that I'm not the only signatory to this. We're respecting the discussions with the city of Calgary and the city of Edmonton as we try and craft a charter, and we still anticipate that we will have one come forward.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. Well, the minister is quoted in Hansard as saying that he is very much opposed to creating classes of municipalities. My question to the minister is: why not? What we have are different classes of municipalities.

Mr. Griffiths: We have currently still one of the most progressive municipal government acts in all of Canada, and we're working to rewrite the Municipal Government Act to make sure that it is the most progressive in all of North America for another generation to come, Mr. Speaker. That means that we're working with all of our municipalities to make sure that they have the appropriate roles, the appropriate responsibilities, and the opportunities to govern themselves as best they can for the citizens they represent. That's the ultimate solution for every single municipality in this province.

Ms Blakeman: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that Edmonton and Calgary have already proved their maturity, their population base, and therefore their need for a separate charter and they have the support of their village, town, and small-city colleagues, what has the minister got against these two cities – or maybe it's the two mayors – that he keeps blocking a big-city charter for these two cities?

Mr. Griffiths: As I've said before, our administrations continue to work together. We continue to work together as politicians, Mr. Speaker, on a charter for the municipalities. I have absolutely nothing against them. They have a tremendous amount of capacity, and we have to make sure that the charter, which is about the relationship between those municipalities in the province, is set up so that we can all function most effectively. I will not and cannot simply sign off and mandate what the charter will look like. I work with my municipal colleagues to create one, and they're not ready to sign it either because we're still discussing the details of that charter.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Corporate Taxes

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, we hear that the province just lost $120 million because two major corporations, using Alberta's tax loopholes, avoided paying what is the lowest corporate tax rate in Canada. This PC government fails to even collect the lowly sum it asks corporations to pay. Billions have been left on the table, and everything from health care to road maintenance is left to suffer. To the Minister of Finance: let's just make this clear. Your government is willing to carry on with cuts to public services rather than compelling corporations to pay their fair share.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is more or less misleading this House when he suggests that this is an Alberta tax loophole. It was nothing of the kind, and he should perhaps do his homework. The fact is that we actually took this all the way to the Supreme Court. We did everything in our power to try to recoup as much as we possibly could and did actually recoup close to $80 million.

The actual loophole that this was under is actually in the Ontario jurisdiction. The Ontario government has worked with us. We've changed it, we've closed it, and frankly, Mr. Speaker, we are aggressively pursuing any others that we may find.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. Well, given that this government relies on corporate tax to account for only about 12 per cent of its total budget – and apparently our government can't even collect that properly – and given that this PC government has turned its poor revenue management practices into an excuse to cut public services, how can this minister possibly defend a budget that hurts Alberta families while his government allows massive corporations to get away without paying their taxes as they should?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the question was entirely inappropriate and unfactual, I'm going to give my answer, which is factual, and that is that we will aggressively pursue anyone who is not abiding by our tax laws in our jurisdiction and beyond if they're paying taxes in this province. We will continue to take matters to the highest court in this land if we believe that we have even the slightest chance of winning. We will also honour the courts in this land because that's what we do in this province.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta still does not use the much more efficient Canada Revenue Agency for collecting corporate tax and given that this PC government has been dishing out poorly thought-out and unsustainable corporate tax cuts for more than 10 years, will this minister cut our collective losses now, set a reasonable corporate tax rate, and stop this bargain basement race to the bottom that only seems to benefit large corporations with large offshore accounts and small armies of clever tax lawyers like Deloitte Touche?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I might suggest to him that he's probably extremely lucky that he said that in this House and not outside those doors.

Mr. Speaker, this government with the tax policy that we have has done some interesting things. It has created the strongest economy in our country. It has created an economy that has some of the lowest unemployment rates in our country. We have the strongest financial position of any jurisdiction, I would say, in North America. Albertans told us to live within our means, and that's exactly what this budget is doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has gone to great lengths and spent a lot of taxpayers' dollars telling Albertans that generic drug prices would be coming down. However, a pharmacist in my constituency recently had to inform one of her patients that he now has to pay more than double what he used to for his morphine. Previously he paid about $68. Now he's paying $155. In her e-mail to me she said, quote: he was so upset, and I felt like crying. To the Health minister: how many more stories like this do you need to hear before you realize that your centralized Fred-icare program is a total failure?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the minister the minister has made it very, very clear that the health system in this province is and is going to be and will remain publicly funded. We need to make sure, you know, for now and for the future that our publicly funded system is operated properly in the most efficient way. I think the pharmacare program is one of those programs very, very clearly laid out by the minister. We are going to have an opportunity for all Albertans to have a great program going forward, where those that are in most need will get the best benefit.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hale: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Not quite sure where that was going.

Given that morphine patients don't have the luxury of choosing to go off their medication and given that this patient in particular just can't afford such a drastic increase to his medication, how can this minister look at Albertans square in the eye and say that his centralized Fred-icare program is good medicine?

2:30

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, I stand by the comments that I made. If there are any individual concerns that the member wants to bring forward, not in this Assembly but to the minister's office, I'm sure that the minister will handle that in a timely fashion.

Mr. Hale: He doesn't seem to ever return my calls.

Given that when this pharmacist told her patient of the increased price, the first words out of his mouth were, "I thought drug prices were going down," will the Health minister immediately apologize to this patient and all Albertans for this misleading advertising campaign and admit that his centralized Fred-icare program for generic drugs has completely backfired?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, I find it ironic about these situations that occur right now. The program starts to kick in later on this year. The new generic pricing will kick in May 1. We haven't even got to where the member is talking about. Again, if the member has specific concerns that he wants to bring for a constituent, he can bring them to me or to the Health minister's office. I make a commitment to you that we'll help you out.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Supports for Vulnerable Albertans

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This year's budget focuses on supporting programs and services to the most vulnerable Albertans. I'm concerned about the gap that our province's income support program leaves for Albertans who exceed the maximum income yet still do not earn enough to meet their basic needs. My first question is to the Minister of Human Services. When was the income support program last reviewed and evaluated to adapt to the changing needs of vulnerable Albertans?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, any Albertan can access our Alberta Works centres. There are 53 of them in communities throughout the province. In those centres they'll find services and programs to support them, including information on training and employment programs to help with funding or linking the individual to appropriate short-term assistance. If the Albertan is dealing with an immediate emergency, they can qualify for a one-time issue of benefits. As well, they or family members might qualify for health benefits. Our staff will assess the whole person and their individual needs. In short, Alberta Works centres are there to help all Albertans in their time of need.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is the maximum income that a family can earn and still be eligible for income support?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When providing appropriate income support, each situation and individual is reviewed on a case-by-case basis. There's no specific income maximum amount as benefits and services provided are based on an assessment of the person's situation such as the number of dependents, living arrangements, income exemptions, and so forth. There are eligibility thresholds. For example, for a single parent with one child under 10 years of age where the parent is not working and renting an apartment, the threshold would be $933 per month. But you can tell by that example that there could be many different circumstances, and each individual is assessed on their own circumstances.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: does your ministry plan to offer income support for Albertans who fall outside of that limit while perhaps mandating a proactive repayment plan or financial counselling?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I would indicate that the application process includes a comprehensive review of an individual's budgetary needs and issues. If they're not eligible for income supports, they may be eligible for one-time support to get through an emergency situation. They may be assisted to find a better job or a stronger job position. We work with community agencies and not-for-profit agencies, so there may be an opportunity to find someone who can help them through their particular situation. It's a comprehensive approach, not a routine approach. Every individual is assessed on their particular need and aligned with the services that they need to get through that particular spot in their lives.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Edmonton-Decore.

Public-private Partnerships

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, during budget estimates the Minister of Infrastructure made a stunning admission. The minister finally admitted that the cost of public-private partnerships is much higher than traditional builds. He said, "Usually the up-front cost is higher in a P3 than a traditional build." To the minister: why is your government so eager to build Alberta using this costly and ineffective means of financing projects?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: I'm going to go first, Mr. Speaker, and I'm going to ask the hon. minister to supplement. I wanted to suggest to the hon. member that when you look at the financing package – and the up-front cost is what the minister had talked about – there is an up-front component of cash, and there is an ability for us to transfer the risk of the construction to the proponent, which is also built into the net present value of how we calculate it. The idea is to get the greatest value for the taxpayer both today and in the future life of the project.

Mr. Barnes: Given that this back-in-debt budget will take Albertans down a path of paying billions of dollars in interest and service fees to banks, why doesn't this government show some respect for taxpayers and future generations and reconsider its dangerous approach of relying so heavily on trading debt for infrastructure?

Mr. Horner: You know, it's rather interesting. Last week I happened to be at a luncheon with our federal Finance minister, Mr. Flaherty. He asked me what we were going to do with infrastructure and how we were going to fund it in the future. He was on his way to the IMF to talk about interest rates and where things are going. Both he and I talked about the value to taxpayers of using capital markets and P3s because it's the best way to get the best value for taxpayers. He was absolutely shocked when I said that the right wing, the people across the way, the Wildrose Alliance Party are opposed to P3s. He couldn't quite figure that out because they're supposed to be all about taxpayer value. Mr. Speaker, we are.

Mr. Barnes: We're very concerned how they're billing Alberta, not building Alberta.

Given that this government won't produce an infrastructure priority list and instead is mortgaging our children's futures with these costly borrowing schemes and cannot convince Albertans that the additional billions of dollars in interest being taken from their pockets isn't being done for political reasons, will the minister commit to giving Albertans the P3 they are really asking for, a public prioritized project list?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, once again that hardly made sense and was hard to follow and misquoted my budget. P3s save money. When you do a public-sector/private-sector comparator over the life of the project, P3s have saved this province lots of money. In fact, we've saved over $2.2 billion since we started building with P3s. That's money that's gone into building infrastructure for all kinds of projects in this province. It would mean a lot fewer schools in your areas and ours if you didn't build with P3s. Make sure, when you quote, that you quote the whole thing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by Medicine Hat.

New School Construction

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm so happy we're talking about P3s. Since 2008 the government has built 40 schools Alberta-wide using a P3 model, which includes Florence Hallock in Edmonton-Decore. The P3 total dollar investment for schools since '08 is $1.175 billion, for a cost savings of $245 million over conventional construction. Many of my constituents are demanding more cost savings. To the Minister of Education: after the government formally announces to build and pay for new schools using a P3 model or approves an alternative funding option for new school construction, would the minister consider implementing a government-led procurement strategy . . .

The Speaker: I'll have to ask the hon. member to respond at this point.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to respond on behalf of my colleague the Minister of Education. Our government is committed to living within our means and getting maximum value for taxpayers' dollars. That's why we look at creative instruments like P3s to make sure that we have the ability to get the services, to build the capital, the infrastructure that Albertans need today for the young children that need to go to school today and the seniors that need access to seniors' housing today. We'll continue to find innovative ways to continue to save money.

Mrs. Sarich: To the Minister of Service Alberta: given that you're responsible for government procurement, will there be any consideration currently or in the future of implementing a government-led procurement strategy with school boards for school desks, labs, chairs, tables, office desks, white boards, and technology?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you. We're already doing a lot of that work. As of today over 60 school boards, including, I believe, some charter schools, are taking advantage of what's known as standing offers. That's where the provincial government, Mr. Speaker, working with other sectors like the postsecondary sector, the education sector, and our municipalities come together to really capitalize on our buying power to ensure that we can get the best prices using the maximum dollar force that we in the province have in our capacity.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of Edmonton-Decore constituents I really appreciate that response.

Again to the same minister: are there any steps in place to monitor the current practices of procurement by school boards, government boards, commissions, and agencies to ensure accountability and transparency?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, as we said earlier, it's very important that we continue to ensure that our education sector as well as all of the other sectors that are funded by taxpayers' dollars continue to maximize taxpayers' dollars. They're expected to live up to a lot of the trade agreements that we as a province have signed off on. For example, for purchases over $75,000 they are required to post on the Alberta Purchasing Connection to make sure we extend every single dollar that is being spent that comes from our Alberta taxpayers.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now we will continue with private members' statements, starting with Chestermere-Rocky View.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Calgary-North West.

Highway 8 Twinning

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. On the west side of the riding of Chestermere-Rocky View there's a highway in desperate need of attention. That's highway 8. It begins to head west from the corner of Glenmore and Sarcee trails, and it travels through a growing residential area of western Calgary and Rocky View county. The highway has outgrown the role that it historically fulfilled, and it has become very dangerous. Last summer two teenage boys were killed just days apart, Dustin Peers and Chase Hudye. In each case the boy's vehicle crossed the center line and hit an oncoming tractor-trailer.

Now, highway 8 was never intended to be a trucking route. Truckers use it to avoid a steep climb on Sarcee Trail, but in doing so, they're clogging up a single-lane highway and contributing to the dangerous congestion. Traffic on highway 8 already exceeds the threshold for twinning with the average traffic count of 24,500 vehicles at Elbow Springs golf course. Single unit and tractor-trailer units at times make up close to 20 per cent of the vehicles on the highway.

Now, there is a very committed group of local residents that want to see truck traffic banned. At the very least the government should look at restricting it, particularly during peak hours. Eventually the Calgary ring road will solve these problems, but we can't sit idly by and wait, with the condition of this road getting worse.

One portion of that ring road could be built while we wait for a deal with Tsuu T'ina. I would encourage the minister to consider fast-tracking the west portion. It's going to be built either way, and it would alleviate many of the concerns for the people in west Calgary, Springbank, and Elbow Valley.

The government could also look at reducing the speed limit on the 100-kilometre-an-hour stretch so the highway isn't a convenient thoroughfare. After all, this highway is travelled by many school buses full of children.

The summer driving season is almost upon us. The time to act is now. We owe it to the people of west Calgary, Springbank, and Elbow Valley. Most of all we owe it to Chase Hudye, Dustin Peers, and their families.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West, followed by Calgary-Hawkwood.

Juno Award Alberta Nominee

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in the Assembly today to pay tribute to some great Albertans. Last night the Juno award ceremony was held in Regina. There were 11 nominees from Alberta: from Edmonton Corb Lund, Kreesha Turner, Vivian Fung, the groups Purity Ring and Ten Second Epic, and the Edmonton Symphony Orchestra. From Calgary there was Jan Lisiecki, R. Murray Schafer, Hugh Sicotte, and also the group Makeshift Innocence. From Grande Prairie there was Emerson Drive. From Hanna there was Nickelback.

The nominees really represent an impressive range of musical styles and expressions. They were nominated in individual and group categories, and in a very special part of the ceremony k.d. lang, the pride of Consort, Alberta, was inducted into the Canadian Music Hall of Fame.

Mr. Speaker, we as Albertans strive to tell our story to the world. We want the world to know we are an open and diverse society, a place where hard work and dedication make dreams come true, a place of established traditions whose heart is always big enough to welcome a new perspective on the human journey, a place that prizes excellence in all things and whose musical artists help tell that story in the most eloquent way. Through the pursuit of artistic passion they bring us joy and distinction.

I would like to congratulate Vivian Fung of Edmonton, who won a Juno award last night for classical composition of the year. We're so proud of Vivian and all the sons and daughters of Alberta who represented our province at the Juno awards. We are so proud of them.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I know you'll want to listen equally attentively to the next member because it was on this day many years ago that he uttered his first words. Now let's hear how he has improved on them. The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Support for Senior Citizens

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a society we owe our senior citizens a great amount of respect and compassion. Day in and day out these individuals worked incredibly hard to build the Alberta that we've all come to know and love today. Personally, I grew up in a Chinese family and inherited a very strong culture that respects the elderly being held in high virtue.

In fact, the red envelope exchange tradition, that many of you might be familiar with, is just such an example. At the time of the Chinese New Year the elderly give red envelopes with money in them, wishing the younger generation prosperity. The receiving generation pays tribute to the elderly to thank them for the care and support. In my family it's followed by bowing three times to your parents to thank them. I must admit, Mr. Speaker, that when I was in my turbulent junior years, I was trying to get rid of the second part. I wasn't successful.

On a more serious note, Mr. Speaker, my point is that respecting the elderly is a value that I believe we, all Albertans, embrace regardless of our cultural background. It is our utmost responsibility to make sure that our senior citizens have the necessary programs and support at their disposal so that they can enjoy their last stage of life with love, care, and dignity.

Mr. Speaker, as we proceed with today's budget vote, I'd like to urge the hon. members of this House to give proper support for seniors' programs. I believe Alberta is great only if it is great to all, including our vulnerable senior citizens.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member, and happy birthday.

The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Support for Agriculture

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize one of Alberta's most vibrant and innovative economic sectors. Not only is it our largest renewable resource industry; this sector also holds immense potential as we look to continue to diversify our already strong economy. I am talking about Alberta's agricultural industry, which continues to grow both domestically and internationally as we look to gain market access and a fair price for an array of Alberta's resources.

Our strong agricultural sector is one of our most forward-thinking industries. It is a leader in technological research and innovation through its employment of sustainable practices. The agricultural initiatives program funds many of these projects. This industry is the sector that our province's strong economic foundation was originally built on, and its value to our economy today should not be overlooked. After all, this sector employs 73,000 Albertans, Mr. Speaker. Canada is one of only five countries in the world that produces more than we consume.

Mr. Speaker, much of my constituency of Stony Plain is rural and has a significant number of farmers. It is crucial that we continue to support and nurture this important sector. As this government continues to build Alberta, I see the agricultural industry playing a crucial role in the diversification of our economy as it holds great potential for all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and leader of the Liberal opposition.

Liberal Election Promises

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tomorrow marks one year since the last provincial election, and the top issues a year ago are the top issues today. Last year the Alberta Liberals presented a plan to act on these issues, and that plan is still vitally relevant and bursting with common-sense solutions.

Increased funding for home care and nonprofit long-term care so that seniors are no longer warehoused in hospitals, ER wait times are reduced, and ambulances get back to the road quickly: we were right then, and we are right now. Eliminating school fees for K to 12, making schools community hubs, starting a provincial school lunch program, expanding registered apprenticeship programs, and an end to overcrowded classrooms: we were right then, and we're right now. Increasing our investment in postsecondary education so that it is more affordable and accessible, so class sizes are reduced, so postsecondary institutions have stable and predictable funding: we were right then, and we're right now. Apply the carbon levy to actual emissions and create an important source of revenue to fund environmental innovation and transit options for cities and towns, thereby repairing this province's poor environmental reputation, which is hurting our economy: we were right then, and we're right now.

Last year the Alberta Liberals said that it was time to stop spending all of our nonrenewable resource revenue. We said that it was time to stop tying the funding of vital public services to the price of a barrel of oil and that the way to do this was to bring back progressive income tax and modestly increase the tax on large corporations to 12 per cent. Stable, predictable funding for vital services and money going into the savings account every year: we were right then, and we're right now. Mr. Speaker, I can only hope that someday soon this government will also be right instead of taking a hard turn to the right.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Alberta Liberals it was an honour for me to celebrate the one-year anniversary of a truly forward-thinking, common-sense, honest plan for Albertans.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, do you have a tabling today?

Mr. Bikman: I do. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two letters from concerned pharmacists. Dennis Strong, owner of Woods Dispensary, and Craig Jensen and David Wright, owners of Johnson's Taber Drugs, are concerned that the schedule of prices that's been put out recently is nonbinding as per clause 17.1. Two tablings there.

Also, from the village of Stirling I want to table a letter that I received, as did all other citizens of the community, about the lowering of the municipal sustainability initiative program by $81,720 and the increase in education requisition of about $130 to each homeowner. I'll table that.

Also, a letter from Rita Lyster of Rita's Apothecary & Home Healthcare Ltd., who just recently made an investment in her business and now feels like this state-of-the-art clinic is in jeopardy because of the changes.

I have the requisite number of copies and will give them to the page.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. The first is the appropriate number of copies of a letter referred to by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood in his questions today and written by the Premier to seniors' advocate and former Calgary alderman John Schmal dated September 6, 2011, in which she promises to retain the current system of pharmacare for Alberta seniors. In the letter she goes further to state, "Elderly Albertans devoted their lives to building this province and income-based supports . . . are a poor repayment for their efforts." Seniors are outraged that the Premier is now ready to break this promise.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the appropriate number of copies of a letter written by the current Minister of Health to seniors' advocate and former Calgary alderman John Schmal dated March 19, 2012. In that letter the Health minister assures Mr. Schmal that he has been asked by the Premier to assure him that the government has no intent to make changes to seniors' drug coverage in Alberta. It took the Premier less than a year to break this promise to seniors, and they are outraged.

My third tabling, Mr. Speaker, is 50 more copies of some e-mail submissions that Albertans have sent to the Premier and copied me on. These are just some of the many hundreds of these e-mails my office has received. They call on the Premier to honour her government's promise to Albertans not to evict some of Alberta's most vulnerable citizens from their home in Red Deer's Michener Centre. Submissions like this clearly show that keeping the Michener Centre open is a priority of Albertans and that this PC government is out of touch with its broken-promises budget.

The final tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the appropriate number of copies of postcard submissions that Albertans made to our pre-budget tour, which visited seven cities in February. Anne,* Gloria, Clive, and Judith are some of the Albertans who provided input. For example, Anne from Sherwood Park would like to see the STEP summer employment program reinstated.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first is from a constituent, Tyler Peterson. He has been involved with the U of A for the last 10 years as a student and now as an employee. He's very disturbed by the postsecondary education cuts and is experiencing them first-hand, but the point he wants to make is that this will have a significant impact on the professoriate and their research and that the research will be hampered one way or another. It will cost them more money to hire contract labour, or they won't be able to get the assistance. A good letter. Thank you very much.

The second tabling is on behalf of my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, leader of the Liberal opposition. I am tabling the document in which the quote that he used during question period is found in writing. I'm sorry I can't actually find it there, but he did quote a columnist from the Calgary Herald, and the quote is in here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first is from the Alberta Distance Learning Centre, Enabling 21st Century Learning. It's their executive summary on what they do. You are aware that they have suffered approximately a 50 per cent cut in funding to those students who were using their programs, and 30,000 students around Alberta will be affected.

My second tabling is a letter from Dr. Chris Carter, who is concerned about the admissions process in regard to getting a residency here in Alberta. He is struggling to do so despite being eminently well qualified.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there other tablings? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies in response to a letter from the Minister of Human Services regarding his comments about "willful misconceptions" in relation to child poverty and some of the concerns I have about his interpretation and delays in dealing with child poverty over this fractious debate about a definition of poverty.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Hughes, Minister of Energy, return to order of the Assembly for Motion for a Return MR 1, asked for by Mr. Hehr on March 18, 2013, copies of all correspondence between Bruce Power and the government regarding proposals for nuclear power in Alberta for the period January 1, 2006, and February 20, 2011.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. That concludes our Routine today, with no points of order.

Bill 203

Employment Standards (Compassionate Care Leave) Amendment Act, 2012

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Jeneroux: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to present Bill 203, the Employment Standards (Compassionate Care Leave) Amendment Act, 2012.

This bill deals with an issue that is of great concern to families and employees alike in the province of Alberta and seeks to begin to change the attitudes and mindsets that surround this issue. Bill 203 proposes to amend the Employment Standards Code to include a provision that entitles employees up to an eight-week unpaid leave from work in order to provide compassionate care for family members in a palliative state.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is the only jurisdiction in Canada that does not include provisions for compassionate care leave in our employment law. As Albertans and as a government that has expressed our commitment to fostering strong families and communities and as a province that is seeing both a labour shortage and a dramatic demographic change, this fact should give us pause.

It is common practice in all other provinces to allow employees up to eight weeks of compassionate care leave. Quebec and Saskatchewan go further, at 12 weeks and 16 weeks respectively. The federal government's labour standards code allows compassionate caregivers to collect employment insurance benefits for up to six weeks. Elsewhere this insurance is collected in order to ease the financial strain that taking this leave entails; thus, employees in other provinces may collect supplemental income while carrying out their familial duties and transition back into the workplace afterwards. Mr. Speaker, employees in Alberta, while entitled to federal EI benefits, do not have the same assurance that their jobs will be waiting for them once the difficult responsibilities of compassionate caregiving are complete.

What Bill 203 proposes in detail, Mr. Speaker, is for an employee to be able to take leave from work for a combined total period of eight weeks in order to care for a terminally ill family member. In order to do so, the employee would have to obtain a medical certificate from his or her family member's medical provider certifying that the family member under question is at serious risk of death within 26 weeks and that that said family member requires the care and support of the individual who is to take the leave. Under Bill 203 the individual requesting leave would have to be a primary caregiver of the sick family member.

Mr. Speaker, the individual could take the eight weeks of leave consecutively or break up the leave into two periods of leave totalling no more than eight weeks as long as the second period ends no later than 26 weeks after the first period began. No period of leave could be less than one week in duration. Importantly, upon returning to work, the employee could do so without any reduction in pay, salary, seniority, or benefits.

While this bill is meant to assist all working Albertans, it is addressed particularly to what may be termed our sandwich generation. This generation is composed of young parents tasked with raising children and often providing support for aging parents as well. It is becoming increasingly prominent within the province's demographic shift. Families in my constituency of Edmonton-South West have made it clear to me that there is widespread concern regarding the pressures of fulfilling these familial responsibilities while simultaneously earning a living to support these family dependants.

Now, it is true and ought to be recognized that there are employers here in Alberta that do provide some form of compassionate care leave in their benefit plans. While this practice is both admirable and commendable, it is not universal. An individual who happens to work for an employer that does not provide compassionate care leave is left with two options if a family member falls seriously ill. These two choices are to quit or to risk being severed from employment in order to care for a family member.

The individuals that comprise this sandwich generation are typically just establishing themselves in both their family and work lives. The loss of employment can be devastating for their own livelihoods and their capacity to provide effective care and support for their dependants. The unfortunate situation of having a family member in a palliative state does not affect only this individual and his or her caregiver, of course; the costs to an employer of losing an employee are substantial. In light of recent labour shortages and a myriad of unfilled job postings the impact of losing an employee from a business owner's perspective is considerable. For those employers that may not have considered offering compassionate care leave benefits, there is a risk of the unavoidable costs associated with losing existing employees. Subsequently, searching for training replacements will be incurred.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 seeks to recognize more clearly the scope of the impact of compassionate caregivers. This is why I'm committed to ensuring Bill 203 is as effective and comprehensive as it can be. Consultations have yielded responses from a diverse range of stakeholders from the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, the Alberta Caregivers Association, the Alberta Disabilities Forum, the Canadian Cancer Society, and policy researchers with expertise in the economics of compassionate caregiving. The discussions that I've had about compassionate care leave have only confirmed what my constituents in Edmonton-South West have asked me to do, specifically that access to job-protected compassionate care leave is advantageous to caregivers, to care recipients, to employers, and, most importantly, to our families.

Mr. Speaker, we have an opportunity to make a significant change in our province right here today. We as a group of elected officials have a chance to positively impact future generations that want to and need to take time to care for their loved ones. I, like many others in this room today, want to give Albertans that choice, that option, to spend the final days with their loved ones. Through Bill 203 we can help these Albertans. We can make this a reality for those Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today to speak to this bill and speak in support of this bill. As someone who watched his wife die and chose to acquiesce to her wishes to die at home, it was very important to me to be able to be there with her. Fortunately, I was self-employed, but an awful lot of my co-workers needed to step forward and fulfill my responsibilities and take care of things while I was there with her.

Being able to do this was a tremendous comfort to her and to our children, seven of whom were still living at home. We were able to give service to her. We were able to be there when she was in particular times of pain and need. We were able to do little favours for her, and it was particularly beneficial and a blessing for the children to be able to give back to their mother as they watched her die.

At one point prior to her passing she was unconscious because the doctors had put her into a twilight sleep so that the pain could be under control and she wouldn't have to be aware of it. They would come in after school and hold her hand and talk to her, and they'd take little foam swabs and touch them to her lips because she wasn't being fed. She didn't want to be on any machines to prolong her life because her condition was terminal, with no hope of having any quality of life if we intervened in any other way. So it was wonderful to have this opportunity.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I have great compassion for people who are in positions where they have loved ones that are near and dear to them. It's high time to have this government do this finally, I would say, since I think we are the last jurisdiction to do this in Canada, so that people who are in positions like I was in will be able to be there for their loved ones to provide compassionate care and to continue to demonstrate that love, which they I'm sure received in return during that person's lifetime, as I certainly did.

I'm certainly going to vote in favour of this, and I appreciate the member bringing it forward. I trust that everyone here will feel just as compassionately towards those that find themselves in this kind of circumstance.

I thank you for this opportunity. Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Culture.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 203, the Employment Standards (Compassionate Care Leave) Amendment Act, 2012, brought forward by my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West. This bill is very important to me as it addresses a significant issue that unfortunately too many people have had to endure. This is long overdue.

Bill 203 is being brought forward in an effort to alleviate the financial and emotional strain on compassionate caregivers. By providing an employee with eight weeks of unpaid leave and the assurance of the same position and pay grade when they return, the government can provide a small amount of solace to help in a grave situation. This bill is aligned with the government's commitment to investing in Alberta's families and communities. It is indeed the right thing to do.

However, it would also serve to provide economic benefits to Alberta by reducing the number of jobs lost or turned down as a result of the obligations of being a caregiver. The obligation to provide care and support to ailing family members is often a heavy burden on families. Usually the first thing that comes to mind about the detriments of being a compassionate caregiver is the emotional impacts on the individual and their family. It is often difficult to look beyond these emotional struggles and consider the extensive economic consequences the situation can create.

A Statistics Canada study found that in 2002 there were approximately 1,784,000 informal caregivers aged 45 to 64. That is almost 2 million Canadians providing care to loved ones with long-term health problems over the age of 65.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let's translate that stat into an economic measure. That is 229,000 hours of work lost, which is approximately a 13.1 per cent reduction in the hours these people might have worked. Also, 293,000, or 16.8 per cent of these individuals, report changing their work patterns as a result of caregiving responsibilities, and 142,000 reported lost income, accounting for 8.1 per cent of the total number of caregivers. Now, these stats show the negative impacts on not only the individual but also the employer. When employees lose hours and change their work habits, employers lose productivity.

Many workplaces experience the upheavals of an employee's disruptive work schedule as they attempt to balance their duties at work and at home. If employees were assured they could take the time off as outlined in Bill 203 to fully commit to their home lives, then a smoother transition would take place at home and in the workplace.

Referring to the same study, Mr. Speaker, Stats Canada discovered that 47,000 job offers were turned down, and 27,000 resignations were handed in. I would just like to focus on the 27,000 positions that were left vacant and their effects on business. According to another report by StatsCan there are now more jobs than ever before the 2008 recession, which is leading to the number of vacancies increasing. As Albertans we know all too well our need to satisfy the labour needs of our growing economy.

Both small and large businesses are having difficulty recruiting and hiring qualified staff. As a result, companies are spending an increasing amount of time and money trying to fill vacancies and often settle for candidates who may not be suitable. For a company, no matter its size, to constantly hire new staff is not only disruptive for business but also drains resources, affecting the bottom line. It has also been said that it takes anywhere from three to six months for a new employee to become fully proficient at their job through mentoring, supports, and the follow-up.

It is the hope of Bill 203, Mr. Speaker, that by providing employees with the eight-week leave option, we can mitigate the issue of them vacating their current positions, therefore reducing the need for companies to find new permanent staff.

So far I've been speaking on the national level, so a few stats closer to home: of the 1,784,000 informal caregivers in 2002 308,000 were in the prairie provinces. It's also important to consider that the study I'm referencing only takes into account those caregivers between 45 and 64 and only those individuals over 65 receiving care. The actual number of informal caregivers is significantly higher if we include younger caregivers and family members. We are all too familiar with stories we all hear in our constituencies, including mine.

This bill will have a positive economic impact by simply supporting Albertans in their time of need. While I'm on the topic of economic impact I must also consider the detriments to the employers, specifically small business. A large company may be able to make do by spreading out the work of one employee over eight weeks instead of investing in the costs of hiring a temporary replacement; therefore, the work cycle is not impacted in a substantial way.

However, Mr. Speaker, when there are small teams, the loss of one employee for eight weeks may prove to be a monumental burden. I would question if the cost savings of not having to replace the absent employee would outweigh the costs the employer would have to cover in his absence. When a team member is missing, the remainder of the team may find themselves working extra hours, meaning the employer may also have to pay overtime.

Mr. Speaker, monetary costs are not the only costs associated with this situation. When an added workload places strain on a team, morale can worsen, which affects productivity. We have to ask ourselves: is retaining an employee worth the added cost to business, especially those that may not be able to sustain the change?

As I stated before, this government is committed to investing in our families and communities, and we're always looking for new and innovative ways to do just that. I would once again like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West for bringing this bill forward – I'm proud to be your colleague – and also congratulate him for his first private member's bill. It's an initiative I feel is important to discuss in this House as it has the potential to make an impact on Albertans' lives. Bill 203 is absolutely necessary because it is about respect for families and employers, and it strikes the right balance.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure to speak to Bill 203, the Employment Standards (Compassionate Care Leave) Amendment Act, 2012, something that is definitely long overdue. I'd like to thank the Member for Edmonton-South West for bringing this forward, and I appreciate the initiative in this matter.

Alberta is the last province to adopt compassionate care leave legislation. Our friends and neighbours, including Manitoba, Ontario, and B.C., have all recognized the value and compassion that personal care providers bring to the table.

The Service Canada employment insurance compassionate care benefits publication recognizes that compassionate care leave is a necessity for Canada as a whole. It states:

One of the most difficult times for anyone is when a loved one is dying or at risk of death. The demands of caring for a gravely ill family member can jeopardize both your job and the financial security of your family. The Government of Canada believes that, during such times, you should not have to choose between keeping your job and caring for your family.

I'm encouraged that the Member for Edmonton-South West has brought this bill forward as I believe that we should be in step with the government of Canada and ensure that all Albertans have the same abilities.

The Health Council of Canada states, "when Canadians are struggling to cope with the illness of a loved one, they want the comfort of knowing they can be there to provide care without paying a heavy personal financial penalty."

Currently in the Alberta Employment Standards Code there's limited allowance for authorized leave. It only applies to maternal, parental, and those in the military reserve. All of these forms of leave are necessary, but there is no allowance for compassionate leave in the case of someone wanting to look after a family member that will most likely die in the near future.

This is similar to what the Wildrose campaigned on in the last election under our kinship palliative care policy. In that policy the Wildrose proposed that the government adopt legislation where family members who might otherwise be employed in the workforce are compensated for providing end-of-life care for their loved ones. In addition to that, the Wildrose called for the government to reduce the complexity and regulatory barriers to families, nonprofit organizations, charities, and businesses who wish to establish safe and affordable facilities providing assisted living, long-term care, and palliative care. I understand that Bill 203 doesn't go nearly as far as our proposal did, but I also understand that the limitations are there for what private members can actually do.

There have been many reports and discussions regarding the effects of end-of-life care. A study of end-of-life care and the effects of bereavement on family caregivers of persons with dementia found that although family caregiving has been intensively studied in the past decade, little attention has been paid to the impact of end-of-life care on caregivers, who are often family members of persons with dementia, or to the caregivers' responses to the death of the patient. I would suggest that it is no different for any end-of-life care.

In this study it goes on to say that half of the caregivers reported spending at least 46 hours per week assisting patients with activities of daily living and instrumental activities of daily living. More than half the caregivers reported that they felt they were on duty 24 hours a day, that the patient had frequent pain, and that they had to end or reduce employment owing to the demands of caregiving. Caregivers exhibited high levels of depressive symptoms while providing care to the relative with dementia, but they showed remarkable resilience after the death. Within three months of the death caregivers had clinically significant declines in the level of depressive symptoms, and within one year the levels of symptoms were substantially lower than levels reported when they were acting as the caregiver. Seventy-two per cent of caregivers reported that the death was a relief to them, and more than 90 per cent reported belief that it was a relief to the patient.

The conclusion of that study also found that end-of-life care for patients with dementia was extremely demanding on family caregivers, intervention and support services were needed most before the patient's death when death was preceded by a protracted and stressful period of caregiving, and caregivers reported considerable relief at the death itself.

Clearly, there are many factors that affect those that look after their loved ones in the end of life. Sadly, Mr. Speaker, my own family has experienced this first-hand, as many Albertans do each day. As most are aware, my brother Ron was diagnosed with Huntington's in July 2008. As I've said before many times in this House, this came as a complete shock to our family. Huntington's is a deadly disease where there's no treatment, no cure.

Our neurologist gave my brother Ron two years to live, and my mom and dad and our family were devastated. Once the initial shock wore off, we certainly did our part to ensure he was able to be cared for appropriately. Sadly, his disease was so far progressed that we were not able to keep him at home, and he was cared for in a long-term care facility. I can assure you, though, that the demands on caregivers even in a long-term care facility are still great.

Mr. Speaker, my mom is a saint. I cannot do what she did for us and for my brother. I can tell you that from my own personal standpoint I just don't have the fortitude to be my mom. Her average day consisted of going to the long-term care facility every morning before she went to her full-time job. She would arrive there. She would wake my brother up. First of all, she'd give him a big hug. She would make sure that he had his drinks for the day. She would make sure he had his nutrition. She would feed him, she would wipe him, and she would do whatever she needed to do before she started her long day.

Mom would then come back to the facility every day and night, including weekends. She spent every waking moment with my 32-year-old brother until his death at 35. She would feed Ron. She would feed him his meals, she would feed him his snacks, she would help him with his Pepsi, and she would even light his cigarettes for him. She would wheel him around so that he could get some fresh air. She would laugh with him, and she would talk with him for hours. She cried with him, she shared with him, and she loved him.

She went on. She dressed him, she bathed him, she combed his hair, and she brushed his teeth. These were all things that front-line staff couldn't or weren't able to find the time to do just because of natural reasons. Yes, I know that many parents do this; however, not many parents are doing it believing that tomorrow their son, their daughter, or their loved one will die.

I shared in some of those responsibilities for my brother, and while I couldn't do them nearly as well as she, I can tell you that the demands even on my own family were great. I can also tell you that at the time my six-year-old daughter and my 18-year-old daughter would visit Ron every single day as well, and they would share some of those responsibilities to give my mom a break. Even though they were there, my mom still felt a need to be there every single day to love her son like every parent does.

Like many Albertans who provide end-of-life care, my mom would have liked to have been able to be with her son full-time in that last six months. Bill 203, compassionate care leave, would have allowed her to do that.

Mr. Speaker, much like the Wildrose kinship care program, Bill 203 would have an additional benefit. You see, there is a process for those who care for loved ones who are dying. As with any death there are many stages of grief, and allowing that person to be with them if they're able allows them to go through each stage with their loved one rather than feeling alone or out of control or pressured that their employment would not be there when they returned.

That being said, I believe that many Alberta employers are very good about ensuring that they show compassion in these circumstances, and I can tell you that my mom's employer was one of such employers. Alberta employers value the people working for them and do their best to accommodate employees in difficult situations.

I support Bill 203, the compassionate care act, Mr. Speaker. This will provide some respite to those required to take leave and those who wish to take care of dying family members like a child, a spouse, or a parent. As many members in this House know, today our own caucus is dealing with one such situation. This is a leave, not a paid leave, so it will not pass on additional cost to independent businesses or government. If Bill 203 passes, people won't have to choose between losing a job and neglecting a loved one in need. Bill 203, like the Wildrose kinship care program, helps the growing number of people who must care for their own children and their aging parents while at the same time working, the sandwich generation, as we affectionately call them.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, reducing stress for people who are already vulnerable is good not only for the family but also for society in reduced medical costs and lost working time down the road. The worker already has emotional stress. This legislation reduces some of the financial stress they also might have.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, this is a long overdue bill, and I'm happy to support it. I encourage all members of the House to pass Bill 203, the compassionate care act.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour for me to rise today to speak to Bill 203, the Employment Standards (Compassionate Care Leave) Amendment Act, 2012. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West for bringing this bill forward. Bill 203 intends to alleviate the financial and emotional strain on individuals acting as informal caregivers for seriously ill family members by amending the Employment Standards Code to ensure up to eight weeks of unpaid leave from work with no risk of loss of employment and no reduction in pay or seniority upon returning to work.

To provide care and support to ill and aging family members is an unwritten obligation in our society. In some cases this can be extremely taxing for families. Family members who fill the role of an informal caregiver often must turn down or lose jobs as a result of the responsibility associated with caregiving. Ensuring that children are fed, clothed, sheltered, and happy as a part of caring for a family can be a handful in itself. Concerns about job security are the last things that young families should be worried about, especially if family members find themselves as an informal caregiver for a relative or even a child. Mr. Speaker, this act may help young and new families in Alberta.

As we have stated in this Chamber many times, a priority under the leadership of the hon. Premier is to invest in all Alberta families. Albertans know that strong families are the heart of our prosperous province. Our government will continue to implement initiatives that support the strengthening of families, and amending the code would allow for adults and young families to have assurance in their employment position if ever they are required to take time away from the work environment to care for a sick loved one, child, family member, or even a spouse's family members.

Giving employees the time they need to act as caregivers in their families when there's a terminal illness may encourage economic stability in the family. For example, if a young child were to become terminally ill, this act may give the parents the freedom to take compassionate caregiver leave, which may help to maintain domestic stability in the household. This act may support young families who have elderly and aging parents so they, too, can have the opportunity to act as caregivers. Sometimes elderly parents are moved into the care of costly nursing homes. Compassionate care leave offers an alternative for young families beginning to establish themselves and gain stable economic footings.

Although this bill would provide the option to employees to take a leave to care for their ailing loved ones, not all employees may choose to take advantage of this. This could incur guilt and judgment among workers who choose to put their loved ones in professional care instead of taking compassionate care leave. The code currently provides unpaid self-protected maternity, parental, and military reservist job leave. However, Mr. Speaker, Alberta is one of the only provinces that does not have a standard for compassionate care leave enshrined in its code. Given our government's commitment to investing in all Alberta families, implementing this act could protect employment for families and may bring us up to par with other provinces like British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Ontario. Furthermore, fostering domestic stability is crucial in informal caregiving roles, which can be maintained through a reliable caregiver presence.

In 2004 a Health Canada survey revealed that 84 per cent of caregivers were providing care to a family member, friend, or neighbour diagnosed with mental illness. At times when mental illness is involved, it may be important to maintain a consistent, familiar caregiver presence. This stable presence helps their family member to be better equipped to deal with their illnesses.

Another facet of informal caregiving is the identity of a young caregiver. This includes family members under the age of 25 who are forced to care for their sick parent, sibling, or grandparent. Young caregivers who are thrust into otherwise unexpected positions face trading normal adolescent experience and development for the ceaseless and exhausting demands of caregiving. Caregiving can be demanding, emotionally draining, and time consuming. In addition, a young caregiver may be expected to balance these expectations while facing the risk of not finishing school or acquiring skills, knowledge, and experience that will afford them future success in life. On the other hand, there are numerous supports in place to counsel young teens through the stress of adolescence, including their roles as caregivers.

A recent survey of high school students in Vancouver classrooms found that 12 per cent of surveyed youth are in caregiving roles. This survey also painted a picture of the family dynamics of participants, where fewer young caregivers than noncaregivers reported living with both parents, 57 per cent versus 71 per cent. More young caregivers reported living with their mothers most of the time, 19 per cent versus 14 per cent. In 40 per cent of the cases parents were the recipients of primary care. Another 36 per cent of young caregivers were caring for their grandparents. Finally, 7 per cent were caring for an aunt or an uncle, 16 per cent for another member.

Because working parents and young families may not be supported by employers to take compassionate care leave, young family members assume the position of caregiving. Mr. Speaker, youth may not be equipped or trained with the life or practical skills to assume the role of caregiver for family members with extensive chronic conditions. Young caregivers prematurely assume adult responsibilities.

3:30

On the other hand, this bill could assume that family members who choose to take compassionate care leave are experienced in giving care. Those loved ones who need care often suffer from complex and life-threatening conditions that require expertise. Encouraging compassionate care leave instead of professional care by trained individuals could be dangerous for ailing family members. As a result, there are numerous effects on both families and individuals, with shifts in caring responsibilities and expectations.

I would like to thank again the Member for Edmonton-South West for bringing this bill forward as it allows this Assembly to consider the effects that employment legislation has on Albertans, especially the young and new families.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to get up to speak to this bill. I, too, would like to join with the other members and thank the Member for Edmonton-South West for bringing forward this bill. It is an important bill. It's long, long overdue. Really, there is no question that we will support the bill. I don't think, frankly, that either in this province or federally we have anywhere near the support in place that's actually required to deal with the growing challenges that Canadian and Albertan families face when it comes to dealing with the illness of their loved ones and the slowly decreasing opportunities for care through the public sector. Of course, we've had a great deal of discussion about that here in this Legislature as it relates to long-term care.

There is no question that a starting point, of course, is for us to bring ourselves up to the level that the rest of the country is operating at, and I guess that's one point that I would like to make, Mr. Speaker. The ability of Albertans to gain access to those benefits through the Employment Insurance Act actually occurred or was introduced in 2005. For eight years Albertans have basically been significantly limited in their ability to access these benefits because this government has been unprepared to ever ask Alberta employers to do anything. When it came down to saying, "You know what? You need to guarantee people the right to return to their job," this government simply did not have the best interests of the greatest number of Albertans in their mind. As a result, we spent eight years not having legislation that was required to ensure that our citizens could get access to a program into which they contribute as active working people.

It really is quite shameful, Mr. Speaker, that this matter has to come forward as a private member's bill, but I give nothing but the greatest of accolades to the member for bringing it forward. I really think it's important for members on the government side to support this bill and then, when you go into your caucus meeting, to push the minister to actually move forward with it. I'm a little concerned that this bill is not coming forward as a government bill. Now, in media reports around why it's coming forward as a private member's bill rather than a government member's bill, there was one article. By all means, it may have not entirely quoted the member correctly. Nonetheless, it suggested that, well, there wasn't quite room for this bill on the government's legislative agenda, so as a result this member chose to approach bringing this bill through a private member's strategy.

You know, Mr. Speaker, if I could just sort of go through, since I was elected in 2008, the government passed 53 bills in 2008, passed 62 bills in 2009. In 2011, a little bit of a bumpy year for those folks, a bit of a leadership thing going on at that time, they were down to 27, and in 2012 I believe that collectively between pre- and postelection we were able to pass 16. Now we're at about 12 so far introduced this year. I'm not quite sure why it is that there isn't room on the government's legislative agenda for this bill to be a government bill so that we would know that if it was passed, it would actually be implemented. Of course, as all members in this House understand, a private member's bill, even if passed, does not compel the government to act on it.

Of course, we have seen that with respect to the bill banning provincial achievement tests for grade 3. [interjection] Okay. There it was a motion. We've seen this government essentially ignore a motion. As you know, as the House leader reminds me, it was just a motion. They chose to ignore a motion passed by the majority of members in this House, but of course we also know that they have the authority or the ability to ignore a private member's bill passed by the majority of members in this House.

It should actually be a government bill because, to review, our employment insurance contributions have been going towards paying for the ability of families who are struck with the tragedy of having to care for a loved one to access those benefits we've been paying for since 2004. This government has not guaranteed the rights of Albertans to access the benefits for which they've been paying since 2004, and there is no excuse for it, Mr. Speaker, none at all.

Now, in terms of the bill itself, as I said, we will support it. I think that when we get to committee – hopefully, we will get to committee at some point – we may actually be putting forward a few amendments. One that I hope all members, including the sponsor of the bill, will consider, which is quite technical, is just defining when it is that the right to ensure that your job is protected for you commences. That right should not commence when you started the leave. Rather, that right should commence when you give notice that you're going to need the leave so that there's not a window there where there's an ability for your employer to terminate your employment. That's kind of an important thing.

Generally speaking, one of the things as well is that because Canadians across the country have actually had access to this benefit for eight years, the one upside of this government being so slow and unwilling to stand up for families who are suffering from the terminal illness of a loved one is, I suppose, if you can find one at all, that we have the benefit of looking back at what's worked with that program since it was introduced in 2004.

We know that there are issues around whether or not people should be able to share that compassionate care leave and also issues around whether or not you can maintain partial employment, so go down to part-time rather than completely leave the employment. Of course, as we all know, all that happens when you take that compassionate care leave is that you get employment insurance, which I believe is about $1,300, $1,400 a month right now. For most people that in and of itself is quite a tremendous loss to their income. They're still taking quite a major financial hit even when they're accessing those benefits. Sometimes people want to be able to try and do part-time. People who've observed the effectiveness of the compassionate care program have recommended that that ought to be something which should be considered.

Going forward, Mr. Speaker, I think that the member's bill highlights a larger issue that we need to deal with not only in this Legislature but in Legislatures across the country. What I refer to when I say that is this whole issue of the fact that we have an aging population, that we have in most jurisdictions and certainly in this jurisdiction reductions in home-care services, that we have a planned increase in cost to pharmaceutical services. Most studies show, actually, that when those kinds of programs are implemented, we see an increase in illness and an increase in acute illness. Then, of course, we have a government which has embarked upon a process of not building new long-term care, and then we've got sort of this continuing care, where the standards are quite varied.

So what happens is that, in short, a huge and growing burden shifts to families to care for their chronically ill family members. That happens whether that person is terminally ill or whether they have a chronic illness that requires daily care and may well require daily care for 20 more years. Through a variety of decisions that this government has made, a very significant burden is being shifted to Alberta families and to Alberta caregivers. I'm sure many members of this House on all sides have met with advocates from caregiver associations who talk about the reality of having to deal with a chronically ill loved one while also juggling the need to pay their rent and keep a roof over their head and feed their family.

We know that there are significant challenges and that those challenges grow every day, and at this point the government is actually hastening the growth of those challenges and indeed exaggerating them through some of the policies that they've been pursuing quite aggressively and intentionally over the last four or five years. These issues are not going to go away.

Now, that being said, this particular act is one which is limited in a very narrow way to people who are terminally ill, and this simply ensures that people who attempt to care for their terminally ill family members are able to maintain their job. As I say, it is truly unfortunate that this is having to come as a private member's bill, that the government hasn't done it as a government bill, but I urge all to vote in favour of it.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to thank the Member for Edmonton-South West for putting forward this very good bill, Bill 203, Employment Standards (Compassionate Care Leave) Amendment Act, 2012. If you look at the broader social construct in which we live, I think this bill goes some way to address a problem that exists here in Alberta, but as the member before stated, these problems are oncoming and forthcoming and will be ever present in our daily lives here in Alberta over the course of the next 20, 30, 40 years.

Simply put, we have an aging population that will tend to need a large amount of care both through our medical system, our long-term care system, and otherwise, and both legislation as well as government policy are going to have to reflect that reality. We can go through a whole look at the way we have done things over the last 50, 60 years that has based our society on many of the baby boomers working and being active in their community, moving into older age, and hopefully living in older age a reasonable existence in a compassionate, caring community.

This bill actually does a little bit in not only helping a certain situation, particularly when a person has a terminal illness and someone wishes to get compassionate leave from their employer to take care of the family member who is terminally ill, but the bill also highlights this growing concern that is going to happen throughout the rest of our society.

The member's bill is very good legislation. It really only makes sense that a person who wishes to care for a loved one who is terminally ill should be able to take a leave from his or her employment to do the decent thing and assist their family member. It only makes common sense.

I was somewhat surprised when the hon. member before me spoke and indicated that this was well in place in other provinces and that we are well behind the curve here in Alberta on issues like this. I guess I should have intuitively known that, but I'm glad that the hon. member put more of a fine point on that and did an excellent job of showing that other provinces have seemingly reacted to this undeniable situation of what is happening in our societies and how we can best do it in a compassionate and caring manner that reflects not only what people's needs are but what is basic human decency.

On that note, I too am surprised that it's not a government motion. It would have been timely to that effect and simply would delay the ongoing wranglings behind the scenes of getting a private member's bill put into law. As we all know, sometimes these things pass, and then they never see the light of day again until someone drags these bills up about 10 years later and says: "Oh, my goodness. We didn't pass this." My hope is that that won't happen in this case and that we'll go forward on that basis.

If we return to my initial point, this is good legislation. I applaud the member for making this bill here, and my hope is that everyone in this Assembly will support it. If we could remember that our society is going to have to deal with these situations in a continual and ongoing manner – the cost of an aging society both medically and with the loss of them in the workplace and for human decency's sake, in my view, indicates that government expenditures in social spending and health care will inevitably rise over the coming years. It's an inescapable truth that unless we want to see people on the streets or not getting the medical care they need or the like, governments are going to be actively involved in an aging society.

I think that's something that governments all across Canada and our federal government as well as this government are failing to recognize. It's going to take our recognition as a society that contributions to the public purse to see that people age in a decent fashion are made and that it's reasonable for the government to have a role in supporting people as they age. But that debate will continue to happen, and we'll go from there.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

A correction. I'll recognize the Member for Drumheller-Stettler, followed by Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Strankman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I was kind of wondering what had happened there.

This may seem frivolous, Mr. Speaker, but it is with great respect that I rise to speak to Bill 203, the Employment Standards (Compassionate Care Leave) Amendment Act, 2012, something that's long overdue. Alberta is the last province to adopt this compassionate care leave legislation. Currently in the Employment Standards Code there is limited allowance only for authorized leave. It only applies to maternal, parental, and those who are in the military reserve. All these forms of leave are necessary, but there is no allowance for compassionate leave in the case of someone wanting to look after a family member that most likely will die in the near term. Bill 203 doesn't go as far as the Wildrose policy did, but I do understand that there are limits to what a private member's bill can or would do.

To relate from my respect, Mr. Speaker, in the spring of 1985, as my father's time on this Earth approached its end as a result of colorectal cancer, our family farm aircraft was making a daily commute of some one hour and 10 minutes each way to the city of Saskatoon so our family could effect his proper care at the end of his time. It was only through our financial attributes and the family commitment at that time that we were able to provide him with his care. It was quite a traumatic time for our family, and I still remember those days.

I will be supporting this bill, Mr. Speaker, and I believe this legislation will do a good thing in providing leave for those who wish to take care of dying family members like a child, a spouse, or a parent. This is a leave, not a paid leave, so it will not pass on additional costs to independent businesses or the government. If this bill passes, people won't have to choose between losing a job and neglecting a loved one in need. This bill helps the growing number of people who must care for their own children and their aging parents at the same time. Reducing stress for people who are already vulnerable is good not only for the family but also for society in reducing medical costs and lost working time down the road. The worker already has emotional stress, and this legislation reduces some of the financial stress they may have.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, this is a long overdue bill, and I am glad the member brought it forward.

3:50

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd first like to thank the Member for Edmonton-South West for bringing this bill, the Employment Standards (Compassionate Care Leave) Amendment Act, 2012, forward. The objective of this bill, I think, is something that we can all agree with. Wanting to care for a seriously ill family member in their time of need is something, I believe, that we all share in this House.

We all know the difficulties that families face when confronted with the challenges of caring for relatives who are not well. People who provide care to their family members are not just caring for their loved ones; they're also providing a valuable service to society through their love and compassion. These caregivers deserve society's care and understanding in a trying time, Mr. Speaker. That's why I'm glad the hon. member has put forward Bill 203 so that we may discuss this topic in the House.

Bill 203 would provide for eight weeks of unpaid leave for caregivers of a family member who has a serious medical condition and is at risk of death within the subsequent 26 weeks. It's important to have a clear understanding of what this unpaid leave would mean to a caregiver. It would mean being able to take up to eight weeks of unpaid leave from work with no risk of loss of employment. It would mean no reduction in pay or seniority upon returning to work. It would offer more flexibility to workers who as of today may not be seeking employment due to commitments to caring for loved ones. On the other hand, the bill would attempt to apply a one-size-fits-all solution to a complex situation, which may not work across all sectors of the economy. This bill would increase the flexibility for employees but have the opposite effect for employers. Therefore, we also need to weigh all potential viewpoints on the issue.

Societies are often judged by their empathy for the common man or woman, and this bill would enable society to better accommodate the decisions of caregivers both now and in the future. Enabling all who work in our society to choose whether or not to take a leave from work in order to care for a seriously ill loved one could improve the efficiency of our economy. The end result would be economic benefit and a society which better cares for its people. These benefits, in my mind, form a virtuous circle.

Other changes proposed include setting a minimum standard for this type of leave, ensuring a common process for requesting and granting leave across workplaces. Setting that standard would make it easier for caregivers to navigate a course of action when seeking compassionate care leave, making life just a bit easier for them during a time of great strain in their family life. A universal process would ensure that the granting of leave is not arbitrary according to an individual employer's policy. Mr. Speaker, two individuals working for different employers would be assured under this bill of a standard response to similar applications for compassionate care leave.

Mindful of this amendment's possible benefits to the Employment Standards Code, as proposed by the hon. member, it's important to ensure that minimum standards do not cause more overall harm than good to society by discouraging employers from hiring additional workers. Eight weeks of leave to care for a seriously ill family member might set the right balance between employees' commitments made to employers and the realistic challenges facing employers.

As a small-business owner and employer myself – I'm also the past president of the Fort McMurray Chamber of Commerce – I anticipate there will be some concerns that will arise from this at the onset, but most will likely overcome that. I don't believe that the standard would be overly onerous for most employers today. Many already provide these opportunities. Many, including myself, have provided paid leave in situations like that to assist their employees, but that's not possible for all employers.

We have the lowest unemployment in Canada, and employee retention is certainly an issue. It is a benefit to employers to maintain that expertise which comes back to their businesses. It provides that certainty. It provides a certainty for both the employer and the employee that that job will still be there and that the employer will benefit from having that expertise back in their business.

Bill 203 would grant people who may have to care for a seriously ill family member future security. It would enable people to know that there will be a standard set in the event they need to care for a seriously ill family member, removing a perceived barrier for some to seek employment, no matter where one sought to work. It would enable the seriously ill individual to know without a doubt that the family member taking compassionate leave to care for them is not endangering their future economic situation through loss of employment. Mr. Speaker, that's what this bill is all about, making the lives of the seriously ill and their caregivers just a little bit easier in their time of need.

Creating a compassionate leave standard as described in Bill 203 is exactly the type of policy we were elected by our constituents to make. I believe it's important to make these types of decisions with our eyes open both to the consequences of our actions and the benefits. We must consider the points of view from other members and the perspectives of all of our constituents, including business owners, before making changes to the standard employment relationship.

That being said, I'm mindful that individuals and even companies acting alone cannot create a system like the one proposed. Sometimes only government can ensure that society's values are put into action across our entire economy and are not subject to the whims of individual employers over time. This certainty is why I believe the bill would be a significant addition to our system of supports for seriously and terminally ill individuals and their family caregivers. Only government can put into action minimum standards that we all wish to enjoy. Only government can act to protect the most vulnerable when individual values of the employers conflict with society's values. We've seen this over time with the development of labour standards, including legislating minimum wage, overtime laws, and other interventions into what's seen as the private domain of business.

Mr. Speaker, it is my belief that we are all stronger together, that while individual actions and spirits form the core of our society, it is the collective decisions our society makes through our representatives here in the Assembly where we express our values and ensure no one is subject to the whims of other individuals that violate our collective values. This expression of our values is what we owe to our caregivers and the seriously ill people that they care for. Empathy alone, when it is within our power to take real action with little negative consequence, is a betrayal of our values. It is our job while living out collective values to ensure that our methods of achieving an objective impairs others' rights and values as little as possible.

Although some may view this approach of evaluation as overly cautious, I believe the benefits of this approach are readily apparent. Mr. Speaker, the benefits of this bill to terminally ill individuals and their caregivers is plain to see. This bill would enable those who wish to provide personal care to their relatives in their last days with the freedom to do so. The impact of a family face and a loved one's compassion cannot be underestimated. The increase in quality of life is immeasurable.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank everyone who participated in this bill today, and I would like to again thank the hon. member for bringing this bill forward, his first private member's bill in the Assembly. I have enjoyed hearing other members' points of view on this matter, and I urge all hon. members to consider both the benefits and consequences of what is proposed in this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would echo many of the comments of our colleagues here today in congratulating the Member for Edmonton-South West for bringing this bill forward. It is refreshing, I believe we could all agree, when you have bipartisan, seemingly all-party support for a piece of legislation, private member's bill or not. So well done.

It would be nice to see, though, as the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona noted earlier, a bill of this nature being brought forward as a government bill so it wouldn't be, I guess, held up by the process or lack thereof sometimes of private members' business. I think that Bill 207 could probably be looked at through a similar lens, but that's a discussion for another day.

You know, it's quite encouraging to see when we put forward pieces of legislation in this House that do really have the opportunity to make a positive impact in people's lives, and I do believe that that's what the intent of Bill 203 is and what it will actually do.

Previously the choice that was afforded to many people who had a loved one at home – a parent, a spouse, a sibling, whatever the case may be – that required long-term support in their palliative care time was a difficult choice that employers were sometimes asking their employees to make. Were they going to keep their job, or were they going to care for the person or the loved one that they, you know, obviously so desperately wanted to and needed to? I've never had the need to be in that situation, Mr. Speaker, but I couldn't imagine the guilt that some must have felt to have known that they needed to choose to stay at work as opposed to being at home and caring for that loved one who so desperately needed them at that time. It's not a decision that I think anyone would take lightly.

I'm very pleased to see that this bill has been put forward. I guess, as the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill can attest to, that just because you have private members' business and you're a government member, it doesn't mean it's going anywhere, but I truly do hope and believe that this bill will.

You know, this bill does help, as we've said before, that sandwich generation, those who are having children who are being brought up in school. They're having to raise those kids and at the same time care for aging parents. It's very much the right thing to do, and it's encouraging.

As has been said as well, many employers would probably allow for this sort of compassionate leave with or without the legislation, Mr. Speaker. You know, I would like to think that most employers would do that. It was encouraging to hear the speech from the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo suggesting that even as a small-business owner himself he compensated those who required it. That takes that compassion up to another level. As he suggested, there are employers who would refuse to do that or may not have the option or opportunity to do it. It is nice to see that the employment code will be amended to allow for this type of leave and this type of situation.

Obviously, there are some consequences to legislation of this nature, and it would be, I guess, unwise of me not to at least just reflect on perhaps one unintended consequence. If you were a small-business owner and you had two or three employees and you had to lose one for compassionate care – and I'm sure that these individuals who are running these businesses would wilfully do this in the first place – it may put them in a tough position when they have no choice but to let this person go. It's a tough timeline, eight weeks. It's difficult to find someone and have to hire someone to fill that need.

I'm not for a moment suggesting that this House should not pass this legislation. I look forward to seeing the amendments that the members in the other parties will be bringing forward, and I hope that we are able to strengthen this bill so that, you know, employees are definitely protected as they go through this process, which can be described only as probably a very stressful and not very fun time.

Alberta is the last province to adopt this protection. It is a good move, and I look forward, as do my colleagues, I'm sure, to helping the Member for Edmonton-South West pass this legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 203, the Employment Standards (Compassionate Care Leave) Amendment Act, 2012, introduced by the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West. I would like to thank the hon. member for his efforts on this bill, and I would like to extend my congratulations to this hon. member for his first bill tabled in this House.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 aims to amend the Employment Standards Code. It seeks to alleviate the financial and emotional stress on individuals who are acting as informal caregivers for seriously ill family members by guaranteeing eight weeks of unpaid leave from work with no risk of loss of employment and no reduction in pay or seniority. This bill aims to serve Alberta's workers in extreme family situations.

Within the framework of what this bill proposes, an employee would have to present his or her employer with a signed medical certificate indicating that a family member is at serious risk of death within the subsequent 26 weeks. Following the leave period the employee would return to work at the same rate of pay and seniority as he or she previously held before the leave was taken.

Other provinces in Canada currently have legislation regarding compassionate care leave, Mr. Speaker. If this bill were to be passed, Alberta would join other provinces that have introduced similar legislation.

Mr. Speaker, this bill pertains to a question that is of concern to the province of Alberta, the question of how best to serve the families that call Alberta home. As I am sure we will all agree, families comprise a cornerstone of health and vibrancy of our culture and our communities. It is the family that is the core of any community. Within the family children undergo the formative growth that will prepare them for their education and ultimately their careers, within which they will hopefully establish their own families. Families provide love and support to their members. The morale that the family unit instills in individuals allows them to be active and contributing members of society. As a result, the family unit is a key driver in Alberta's economic prosperity as well as our social cohesion.

The intent of Bill 203 is to aid families that have been affected by the tragedy of a terminally ill member. Alberta businesses recognize the importance of the family as an institution vital to their own success as well. Mr. Speaker, it is because of strong and stable families that we are in the prosperous position in which we currently find ourselves. In turn, businesses have the same families to thank for their own profitability. This is why a number of businesses and employers across the province have built provisions for compassionate care leave into their own employee benefits programs. Business owners know that an unstable family life makes for a troubled and unproductive employee.

Mr. Speaker, thanks to the economic success of this province we have been and will continue to be able to attract, invest in, and strengthen business viability. It is our unique prosperity, matched nowhere else, I might add, that has therefore allowed Albertan companies to be among the best to work in in the whole world. This is why employers in our province have helped us to ensure that our families receive the financial stability that they require in order to provide love and security to the member.

Bill 203 recognizes that employers are not legally required to grant leave to employees undertaking the responsibility of the compassionate caregiver. Bill 203 seeks to change that, Mr. Speaker. It aims to provide a clear guideline for employees and employers who are in this situation. Fortunately, we can rest assured that despite there not being any legislation to this effect, the incentives to promote a high quality of life for employees has prompted businesses to protect their workers to this effect. This government works hard to foster excellent economic and social opportunities for its families, and it will always continue to do so as we would like every Albertan to be able to enjoy the prosperity and the good fortune our province offers. The spirit of Bill 203 recognizes this.

At the same time, our government recognizes that there will always be the opportunity to improve standards of living for workers and that there will be a variety of means by which such improvements may be enacted. We focus on areas such as access to services, protection of personal property, and, most importantly, families, health, and well-being. This government is working very hard to improve primary health care.

Mr. Speaker, we also have our Employment Standards Code legislation, which allows workers to take leave for reasons pertaining to maternal and paternal responsibilities. Our province also offers great health care services for individuals suffering from terminal illness. But when loved ones get sick, family members may choose to become their caregiver. A number of individuals and families feel that this is the best way to take care of somebody who is terminally ill. When people are charged with the task of having to care for an ill family member, the health of the family member should take precedence over financial burdens.

The need for dedicated family caregivers is recognized by all Albertans, by workers and employers alike. It is this like-mindedness that has contributed to the decision of so many business owners to care for their employees by undertaking the importance of familial obligations. We all recognize that it is extremely stressful for everyone involved when a family member becomes seriously ill. Families will endure more stress if the person acting as an informal caregiver is at risk of losing their job.

Mr. Speaker, currently there are thousands of informal caregivers in Alberta, and that they are able to function as caregivers is a testament to the dedication of this province and our business owners to support the family unit. Nonetheless, it could well be the case that some informal caregivers have to give up employment in order to fulfill their obligations. Bill 203 could potentially curb job loss by guaranteeing the worker leave to take care of an ill family member by universalizing the obligation to grant leave.

Of course, job retention is vital to Alberta's economic concerns, just as it is to concerns of families for stable and secure home lives. We can be thankful, Mr. Speaker, that employee loyalty remains high in this province and that our families can reliably expect the security of their household incomes.

I appreciate the hon. member's recognition of families as the building blocks of this province, and the sponsor of Bill 203 has allowed us to highlight the importance of families and all advantages that this province holds out to them. Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for tabling this bill and for the discussion it has generated in this House. I look forward to hearing what my other colleagues have to contribute to the remaining debate on this particular bill.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by Stony Plain.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm grateful for the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 203, proposed by the Member for Edmonton-South West. I applaud my colleague opposite for raising the issue of compassionate care and bringing this legislation forward for debate.

Our province is the only one in Canada that has not legislated the right for citizens to access compassionate care leave from their employer, and it is time we looked at doing so, in fact probably long past time. The unfortunate reality is that there are and will continue to be Albertans who have a family member, whether it be a spouse, a child, or a parent, who is gravely ill and who needs care in their last moments. I certainly would not wish this circumstance upon anyone. When instances like these arise, a person shouldn't have to choose between their career and their family member. They should not have to choose between caring for their loved one and keeping a job.

I will be supporting this legislation because it will expand the ability of an Albertan to take leave from their employment. If this legislation passes, Albertans will not only be authorized to take parental leave or a leave for military service but will also be authorized to take compassionate care leave. This legislation would protect the jobs of those on leave so that people won't have to choose between losing a job and neglecting a loved one in need.

The measures around compassionate care as proposed in this legislation seem to me to strike a good balance. For example, the leave must be certified by a physician. This makes sense and will help ensure the system is not abused. Another balance measure is the requirement for an employee to have worked at least 52 consecutive weeks for the same employer in order to be eligible to take a compassionate care leave. Since the legislation will protect an employee's job and make it available upon their return from leave, it is an appropriate requirement for that employee to have spent a significant amount of time in that position. Because the proposed compassionate care leave is exactly that, a leave, it is not a paid absence, so there will be no additional cost to businesses or the taxpayer when an employee goes on leave.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleagues, especially those sitting on the government benches, to consider the Wildrose proposal of developing a palliative care program that would provide employment insurance type supplemental coverage for Albertans who are ineligible for federal EI while caring for a loved one needing home care. I sincerely hope that the government will consider this. Even if Bill 203 passes and Albertans have in theory access to compassionate care leave, there are still many Albertans who in practice will be in the position of choosing between a paycheck and the last days of a loved one's life.

While we are considering the legislation that is before us, we should also be thinking about the Albertans who may not be eligible for federal EI and who can't survive on that unpaid leave and ask ourselves what measures we in this Assembly could take to assist them in actually being able to use a compassionate care leave should they need to.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Stony Plain, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour today to rise to speak to Bill 203, the Employment Standards (Compassionate Care Leave) Amendment Act, 2012. The goal of Bill 203 is to lessen the financial and emotional strain placed on Albertans acting as informal caregivers for seriously ill family members. This would be accomplished by amending the provincial Employment Standards Code. If passed, this bill would ensure up to eight weeks of unpaid leave over the course of a 26-week period. An employee would need to present his or her employer with a signed medical practitioner's certificate confirming that the family member on behalf of whom the employee is taking leave has a serious medical condition and has a risk of death within 26 weeks. While away from work, there would be no risk of loss of employment and no reduction in pay or seniority upon returning.

Mr. Speaker, part of belonging to a family means being there for one another. It means being there in times of happiness and joy and also in times of need and hardship. It is in times of terminal illness that loved ones experience some of the greatest hardships a family can bear. Perhaps more than any other time it is important that the love and support of one's family members be made readily available. The opportunity to take a leave of absence from work provides recourse for individuals put in the position of acting as informal caregivers for terminally ill family members.

Currently Alberta is the only jurisdiction in the country that does not provide employees with compassionate care leave. Whether they are caring for elderly parents, children with a disease or long-term illness, or any family member who requires immediate aid, informal caregivers in Alberta should not have to choose between their families and their careers. Mr. Speaker, balancing the obligations within a family and at the workplace is often challenging and stressful under normal circumstances. However, if a family member becomes seriously ill, the significant challenges and stresses of being an informal caregiver while holding down the responsibilities of a job can often be too much to handle.

Because Alberta's employment code does not provide employees with compassionate care leave, there are a number of Albertans every year who turn down offers, lose their seniority, and lose their jobs due to the responsibilities of an informal caregiver. Mr. Speaker, this is why a number of companies take this into account when designing their employee benefit plans.

In a 2002 Statistics Canada study it was found that out of the 1,784,000 informal caregivers in the country over 300,000 were located in the prairie provinces. As our provincial economy and population continue to grow, I feel this proposed legislation will provide a greater sense of security for those Albertans who are working and acting as informal caregivers. Mr. Speaker, Alberta was built by hard-working families that did what was necessary to make ends meet. Nevertheless, they always found the time and made the effort to care for their loved ones.

Mr. Speaker, I can only imagine how difficult it must be for individuals who have families to be informal caregivers, but I think it is important to mention that families can often help each other out with commitments relating to informal care. In some cases a spouse, sibling, cousin, aunt, uncle, or other relative may be able to help relieve some of the stress and workload from a primary informal caregiver. I know this because I've seen families share the responsibility of informal care albeit one family member usually takes the majority of the responsibility. This is the reason for Bill 203 explicitly proposing that the primary caregiver and only the primary caregiver is to be entitled to a leave of absence.

As we debate this bill, I think that we also need to consider the individuals who do not have anyone to help them in fulfilling their caregiving commitments. Not only can it be more stressful for an individual who does not have anyone to turn to, but it can also be more difficult financially if this person does not have a spouse, partner, or someone else to help out with their finances in cases where a job was lost or pay was reduced.

However, Mr. Speaker, just because Alberta is currently the only jurisdiction in Canada in which informal caregivers are not entitled to compassionate leave by law does not mean that it isn't provided for by other means. There are a number of businesses, companies, and other organizations in the province that have compassionate care leave written into their own benefit policies. While this practice is both admirable and commendable, it is not universal. An individual who is working for an employer that does not provide compassionate care leave is left with few options if a family member falls gravely ill. The options are to quit their job or risk being let go in order to care for that family member. In reality, the choice is between a rock and a hard place, and nobody should have to be put into that situation.

Bill 203 would eliminate this scenario and facilitate greater consistency and predictability for employers and employees alike. In addition, this bill provides us with the opportunity to not only bring Alberta in line with the rest of the country; it represents an opportunity to increase investment in families and communities and foster greater domestic stability for everyone living in Alberta. As a government we need to do what we can to help promote stronger families and communities because they are what makes this province vibrant and diverse both economically and culturally. Mr. Speaker, I believe that Alberta has always sought to provide families and individuals across Alberta with a sense of employment security at the time they need it the most. I also believe that this government has done a competent job at doing this.

I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West for bringing this bill before the House for debate. It allows us to take a closer look at how employment legislation can impact Albertans and provide them with supports. Any time that we are given the opportunity to examine how to protect Albertans and their employment standards is an opportunity that we ought to take advantage of in the form of a lively and constructive debate.

With that being said, I look forward to hearing the comments of my hon. colleagues on this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by the Government House Leader.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise with great pleasure to support a bipartisan bill. As some of the members have pointed out, it's long overdue. As a person who has actually had the unfortunate or in some cases fortunate opportunity to have gone through this multiple times in my life I don't know which is worse, when you go through it or if you watch people you care about going through it. It's problematic, and it's amazingly painful. So this is aptly named, you know, compassionate care leave.

For me, I think that it is sufficient, but I would hope that the government would actually take a cue from the hon. member who submitted the bill. There's a lot of work that can actually be built upon this. We talked about the financial burden that affects a family when this happens. Here we have a bill that actually protects employment, but there is no income coming in, so there is still a financial burden. People have experienced this. But there's more to it, and that's why I suggested that maybe the government take a hint from this bill and build upon this later in a government bill in that there is an opportunity also that we can actually save money in health care by providing home care where loved ones or people who can provide that compassionate care can actually do that full-time. It's a complex issue that will require tremendous effort, I think, but it's something that still can be done.

I want to share a couple of examples, one in particular of an experience I had recently, Mr. Speaker. It's about a man by the name of Mike Troitsky. Mike was a farmer in my area, a gentleman, and a man of integrity. I befriended him very late in his life, and he impressed me significantly. When he was in the last days of his life, I will tell the hon. member that introduced this bill that for Mr. Troitsky this was a long period of time. To watch his family go through their compassionate care, particularly his wife, Mary, both of them in their 90s – this is something, as I just shared, which is really painful, to watch another family go through this. They struggled. They had the ability to do the things that they needed to do, but they still struggled as a family because it is so emotional and so painful.

To have mechanisms in place so that family members can care for loved ones and not suffer any kind of outside or superfluous penalties unnecessarily is significant to me. It does show the compassion of the government when we are able to put forth legislation. In this case, this is a private member's bill, but it is something that I think all members can relate to. It's with great honour that I – I enjoy that we can actually find a bill that we can agree on. Even though it is the job of the opposition to actually scrutinize and criticize and go through line by line to see if we can improve it – because it's always to improve – the fact that we're making a step in the right direction is something that for me is an honour to acknowledge the member, that we've done something. We've taken that one step in the right direction, and I'm really proud of that fact.

I just would like to take the next step, too. That's the cue that I've asked this government to pay attention to, to look at what this member has done. Look at it, build upon it, and bring forth a government bill that expands this and makes the system not only work on compassionate care but improves our health care, too. There's a lot to be done as we take a look at what goes on here.

There's a lot to be said. There's a lot to talk about. Most everything has already been said, so with that Mr. Speaker, I again thank the member, and I encourage all members to pass this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and speak as well to Bill 203, the Employment Standards (Compassionate Care Leave) Amendment Act, 2012, brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West. I want to start by commending the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West. The process of running for office, consulting with constituents, finding people within your constituency who will be supportive, and getting yourself elected is a difficult process. The hon. member, first elected in the election of 2012, not only went through that process in Edmonton-South West but as he went through that process was alive to what he was hearing from his constituents about what their concerns were.

After all, Mr. Speaker, that is probably the most important role that each of us as MLAs can bring to this House, to have that active ear, to have that opportunity to listen to our constituents, to understand what are the most fundamental issues for them in their lives, not so that government can take over their lives for them or run their lives for them or in any way reduce the challenges that people have in their lives because all of us grow from the challenges we face. There are some things that are really important, and having that opportunity with loved ones as they go through times that you cannot control as a family, sickness and even death, are things that are not something that we can control as individuals.

There are times when there is an appropriate role for legislation, for policy, for intervention, if you will, to help people. As a society we've done that on an informal basis over the years: obviously, by stepping up for our neighbours, by being there for our family. But we live in a much more complex world, so sometimes those simple things that we used to do together as members of a small community, whether that was a small community in terms of a village or whether that's a small community within a large population area like Edmonton, it's how we come together as community and care for each other. That's really the fundamental.

I really do believe that the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, by bringing forward this bill, is showing actually the very nature of the compassion of our society in terms of understanding how we can come together to assist each other in a time of need and then how that translates, in terms of listening to your constituents, into developing public policy and bringing it forward for approval.

I wanted to start, Mr. Speaker, by putting that forward because I think it's a lesson for all of us in this House in terms of understanding that in the day-to-day back and forth and the things that get thrown out and the challenges that we make to each other there are some fundamentals. The fundamentals are about how we care for each other in our community and how we create policies and, indeed, legislation as a society not to take over people's lives but to fundamentally be there for people when they need it so that we can all live with respect and dignity in our community. That, really, to me is what this bill is about and the effort that the hon. member has made.

Now, it does fall within the purview of Human Services. The Employment Standards Code is an act which comes under the purview of my department. I've heard a number of hon. members today say: "Well, this should be a government bill." "The government should bring forward this bill." "It should be on the government to do this." I think that sometimes when people make those sorts of statements, they don't actually really have a deep appreciation for the process for developing government policy and legislation. I could say to the hon. members that this is actually going to be a faster route to bringing this in than if it was done as a government bill. Why? Well, because as a government bill there's always a commitment to – democracy is a wonderful thing, but it's not fast. It requires consultation. It requires discussion.

We have an Employment Standards Code, Mr. Speaker, and that code deals with many, many items. Indeed, it does need to be reviewed from time to time, so sometime in the next little while a process for review of the Employment Standards Code will actually be formulated. That's in the works right now. If we get through the approval process to say that, yes, this is something that should be on the agenda for this year – obviously, Mr. Speaker, you can't do everything every year – if we get to the stage where we're bringing it forward and say that we can do this this year, then we will have to start the process of consultation. We take that very seriously. I'm not making light of it. It's a very important part of the process. Even an act like this, which every speaker in the House so far has supported and indeed I support, will have people out there, particularly small-business people, who will say: "How can I afford to do that? How can I afford to keep a position open for a year and willingly take back an employee? That's a burden on my business. How can I do that?"

When we're making changes to something like the Employment Standards Code, we have to have an opportunity for everybody to be heard and listened to in that process and understand what the balances are in our community and in our society. What are the things that we do to make sure that, yes, it's still possible for people to carry on business and be encouraged to do so yet build into that the things that are necessary with respect to leave for sickness, a reserve leave so that people can be encouraged to give back to their community in that way, and yes, indeed most importantly, compassionate care leave?

We will have a review of the Employment Standards Code, I hope. I'm hoping that it will come forward in the near future to a community near you. But it's not a short process. It's a long process, and it is a very complex process, and it is a detailed process. Typically something like the employment code can't easily be dealt with in isolation. You have to look at it in terms of what the overall regulatory burden is, if I can put it in that context. Most people wouldn't think of this as a burden, but in fact it's a regulatory burden that you're putting on business, and it has to be looked at in that context.

In fact, I would say that, no, it shouldn't be a government bill. This should be a bill that the House embraces as a private member's bill, as a one-off piece to the Employment Standards Code, which we can move on now if we want to. We can make this change because we think it's something overriding, overarching, very important to be done. We can do it now. We may need to take a little bit of time to figure out how that affects any necessary regulations. So it would come into effect on proclamation. Rather than waiting for the full, robust review of the Employment Standards Code and have this as a piece of it – and I've signed I don't know how many letters in the last little while, Mr. Speaker, saying exactly that to people who've written in asking for this amendment: yes, we will be looking at that in due course when we review the Employment Standards Code.

You know, I don't like signing those letters. I don't like saying: "Well, you know, that's a good idea, but wait for it. We'll get to it. We'll do the process. We'll consult the public. We'll consult the businesses that are affected. We'll have this ongoing discussion." I don't like to do that, but in fact it's part of the democracy that we're in. Part of any democracy is that you just don't mandate things; you actually consult. You actually take them out and see what the consequences and perhaps even the unintended consequences might be before you bring something forward.

That's the process that we tend to do with most government bills, Mr. Speaker. We don't sort of dream them up overnight. There's a process. I can tell you that as Government House Leader I will have started this year already sending out a notice to my colleagues saying, "What's your legislative agenda for next year and for the next three years? What's on the horizon? What are we planning to do?" We'll be asking them for templates on next year within a month. We'll be looking at saying: "Okay. Well, what have you done? Have you done the consultations that are necessary to get that on the agenda? If you haven't finished the consultations by September and if you haven't got policy approval by October, what makes you think you're going to get on a spring agenda?"

Of course, there are exceptions to the rule. There's emergency legislation that comes forward from time to time on something that needs to be dealt with in a hurry, but typically the legislation that's done in a hurry is not the best legislation. I can tell you that from experience. Almost every piece of legislation the government has ever got into trouble on was something that didn't actually go through that reflective and democratic process of consultation, discussion with the people who are affected. All of those steps need to be taken.

Now, private members' business allows you the opportunity to do something that speaks out, that says that this should be done notwithstanding that whole process. It does have its risks because it doesn't go through that consultative process. There are ways in which those risks can be ameliorated by going to committee, for example, and having the standing committee or legislative policy committee of this Assembly look at it and do the consultation there, but even that type of consultation tends not to be as broad and thorough as you might want for public legislation, which is going to have to stand the test of time. So even the one-offs that we all embrace shouldn't necessarily be done too enthusiastically.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, I think this is one of those pieces of legislation that one should move on because it does speak to something in each of us. It speaks to all of the things that we hold dear in terms of what it means to be family, so I would ask the House to pass this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

If there are no other speakers – member, you have spoken already.

Ms Notley: Under 29(2)(a).

The Deputy Speaker: There is no 29(2)(a) on this portion. Sorry.

Ms Notley: There isn't?

The Deputy Speaker: I am positive. Thank you.

If there are no other speakers, I would invite the Member for Edmonton-South West to close debate.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and a heartfelt thank you to all hon. members who rose to speak on this bill and shared their personal stories. As discussed, the goal of Bill 203 above anything is to introduce compassionate care leave into the Employment Standards Code. Research, consultations, and analysis all indicate that this bill would be of economic and social benefit to all Albertans by helping to contribute to strengthening our families and communities while reducing job loss.

Bill 203 contains the reasonable requirement that employers allow workers eight weeks of unpaid job-protected leave in which to care for terminally ill family members. Again, some Alberta businesses already have this leave built into their benefits packages. Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 would introduce consistency across the board so that both employers and employees would be clear on what their rights and duties are with respect to caring for sick loved ones. Bill 203 would contribute to reducing health care costs and free up palliative care beds. By reducing the number of palliative care beds that are occupied, it would lower costs for our health care system and free up health care workers to provide services to those not fortunate enough to have family members there for them.

This piece of legislation is the most appropriate means at our disposal of strengthening our employment standards as well as making Alberta an attractive place to live and work in this time of labour shortage.

Mr. Speaker, I value and respect my colleagues' comments regarding this bill. I would like to thank everyone who has participated in this debate and urge all hon. members to vote in support, a vote that takes a step towards positive change within our province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Point of order?

Point of Order

Question-and-comment Period

Ms Notley: Yes. Under Standing Order 13 I'm asking you to provide further information on your decision to prevent me from asking questions under 29(2)(a). Having just looked at 29(1) and (2), I see no limitation on the application of 29(2)(a) to debate which occurs during private members' business. I'm wondering if the Speaker could cite for me the limitation which he suggested I was subject to.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I believe that the only reference that I have to speaking times in this particular portion of debate in the House refers to 29(3)(a), (b), and (c) and does not refer to 29(2)(a), hence the reason I did not recognize you. So no point of order, hon. member.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a second time]

4:40

Bill 204

Irlen Syndrome Testing Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I wish to make a motion regarding Bill 204. Pursuant to Standing Order 74.1(1) I stand to refer my private member's bill, Bill 204, the Irlen Syndrome Testing Act, to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities.

This motion is not debatable. However, I would like to make a few short comments. I'm referring Bill 204 to our Standing Committee on Families and Communities to bring awareness to an issue within our communities which is very important to many Albertans. Mr. Speaker, I have invited doctors, therapists, screeners, diagnosticians, and Helen Irlen, founder and executive director of the Irlen Institute in California, to come before the committee to help us determine the need to recognize Irlen syndrome and our responsibility in helping children with reading and other learning challenges.

If a child or an adult has problems with reading comprehension, misreading words, problems tracking from line to line, reads slowly or hesitantly, loses their place frequently, or avoids reading, experiences headaches or nausea, is fidgety or restless, among many other symptoms, this child or adult should be tested for scotopic sensitivity syndrome, or Irlen's.

Irlen syndrome negatively impacts the lives of many children and adults throughout the province. Mr. Speaker, we can change that. We can make their lives better.

Standing Order 74.2, proceedings on bills referred to a committee after first reading, states:

- (1) When a Bill is referred to a Legislative Policy Committee after first reading, the committee may conduct public hearings on the subject matter of the Bill and report its observations, opinions and recommendations with respect to the Bill to the Assembly.
- (2) Upon the concurrence of a committee report that a Bill be proceeded with, the Bill shall be placed on the Order Paper for second reading.

It is my hope that after the public hearings have been conducted, the committee shall report that Bill 204 proceed and be placed on the Order Paper for second reading.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion carried]

Bill 205

Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2012

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to make a motion to refer Bill 205, Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2012, to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship.

I'm referring this bill because I believe that the aim of this bill is to ensure that there is a mechanism by which concerned stakeholders can contribute to the setting of fishing quotas each year. This amendment proposed by Bill 205 would expand and formalize the consultation process by writing it into the existing Fisheries (Alberta) Act.

The intent of this bill is to make sure that the consultation process is direct, fair, consistent, transparent, accountable, and inclusive of all stakeholders. It would consist of any fisheries department, including commercial fishermen in decisions which impact commercial fishing quotas for the upcoming fishing season. As well, under the provisions of this bill commercial fishermen who wish to initiate the consultation process would be able to do so themselves. In order to do this, commercial fishermen would be required to submit a request for consultation following the notice of changes to industry quotas. By receiving such a request, department officials would be required to consult with the affected stakeholders.

The report that would be done would have to be published so that people could then see the consultations. The criteria by which these quotas were determined as well as the statement and final quota would be made public. In addition, the report would be made available online and would include information on scientific indicators of the health of fish populations in the different lakes. The point of publishing this report would be to demonstrate that meaningful consultation has occurred and that stakeholder concerns have been seriously addressed.

Mr. Speaker, although the province has regulations in place that necessitate consultations with commercial fishermen when making decisions that affect their livelihoods, there is no consistent application of these regulations, and that's exactly what I'm trying to do in Bill 205. Because the result has been inconsistent with the requirements of legislation, regardless of how well intentioned those regulations have been, I want to make sure that whatever conflicts arise, we can resolve them.

As there is no set of legislation to standardize regulations and there are instances in which stakeholders such as commercial fishermen are not consulted in a direct and timely manner, I want to make sure that this bill will go forward. I'm referring it to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, and I ask all members to support that.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the hour and the fact that there's another bill coming and we've made significant progress today, I would move that we call it 5 o'clock and move on to private members' motions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Resource Development in Urban Areas

509. Ms Jansen moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to establish a working group to review whether adequate policies are in place for urban communities with regard to oil and gas development.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and open debate on Motion 509. I'm proposing this motion because I believe that oil and gas development is the lifeblood of this province and that we have to work to reconcile conflicts between nearby residents and oil and gas companies. Providing clear standards will help both affected residents and oil and gas developers.

I proposed Motion 509 to help ensure that similar situations to the oil and gas development in my constituency near the communities of Royal Oak and Rocky Ridge do not occur in the future. That situation is still ongoing, and I'm working with the Minister of Energy to find a solution that satisfies all parties. In Rocky Ridge and Royal Oak an oil well that could be productive for half a century was proposed 270 metres from the nearest home and 130 metres from the local shopping centre.

The problem is not solely the short distance between the proposed development and the residences. It's also the lack of community engagement and consultation over safety requirements. It's traffic, it's noise, it's odour, and it's lighting for a development that might be in their neighbourhood for 50 years. If the proper protocols were in place, perhaps the uncertainty that exists in my riding for both residents and the energy industry could have been avoided.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's population is growing, and as our population grows, so does the footprint of our communities. Naturally, this results in new residential, new commercial, and new industrial land development on previously undeveloped land. In addition, new technology has increased interest in mature oil and gas formations throughout the province. Many of these mature formations, which were developed far away from farmhouses on agricultural lands decades ago, are now in close proximity to dense housing developments. Previously developed wells may need extensive servicing to rejuvenate production, and formations that were long believed to be tapped out may flourish once again with new technology. Moreover, formerly unprofitable formations not seen as economic under past prices and technology are now being exploited. New technology and continued population growth means a potential for increased conflict.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans understand that there'll be local impacts from resource development, but I believe it's our responsibility to do everything in our power to ensure that resource development is undertaken in a way that is sensitive to local concerns. For instance, our government has a strong track record when it comes to environmental leadership, being the first jurisdiction in North America to implement legislation to curb greenhouse gases. Keeping this in mind, I believe that studying the adequacy of current policies is a necessary step to ensuring that oil and gas development policies work for all Albertans. Indeed, with the development of regulations for Alberta's new energy regulator this seems the optimal time to make adjustments to the current practices that are needed.

In the Speech from the Throne the Lieutenant Governor spoke of Alberta's continued goal of responsible energy development and resource stewardship. Ensuring that residents who live in close proximity to resource development are not left worse off due to economic activity is the key to ensuring we fulfill that goal.

Resource extraction industries, while they generate substantial economic activity, can also greatly increase road wear and traffic. Additionally, the effects of oil and gas development, being a 24-hours-a-day business, can change when the traffic comes. I believe our government would increase the local buy-in for resource development while ensuring that the province continues to foster its reputation for being a welcome environment for business by improving policies surrounding oil and gas developments near residential areas.

Mr. Speaker, I'm sure other hon. members would be able to point to situations in their constituencies just like the ongoing problems we face in Rocky Ridge and Royal Oak. Motion 509 calls for the examination of policies "for urban communities with regard to oil and gas development," and I hope that in conjunction with the development of regulations surrounding the new energy regulator, we are able to put in place updated standards for oil and gas development throughout the province. Updated standards will mean a streamlined process for oil and gas development while increasing community acceptance by clearly laying out the standards for the responsibilities of oil and gas development proponents.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, Motion 509 urges the government to explore options to the problems that I have been talking about. In my opinion, Motion 509 would keep us on the path to ensuring that all local roads impacted by resource and industry truck traffic are adequately maintained. I hope that this debate will help inform current efforts and implement new regulations.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that our government and our Energy minister are working hard to ensure responsible energy development in Alberta, but I also believe the government has to look for better ways to do things, not solely resting on our laurels but ensuring continued responsible resource development.

I look forward to hearing the perspectives of all our hon. members from all sides of the House, and I urge you to vote in favour of Motion 509. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and talk to the Member for Calgary-North West's Motion 509 as I was involved in the energy industry for many years before I dove into politics. I do believe that this is a good way to alleviate some of the urban concerns that we're dealing with around oil and gas development. You know, we saw in the campaign period last year that there was quite a bit of concern coming from outside of Calgary, and I do know it's not just specific to outside of Calgary. It's in many areas. I'm in mainly a rural riding, but we have one city and some bigger towns that are affected also and many rural people that live on farms that have this issue also.

There are regulations in place. They've been in place for over 30 years, I believe, and they take into account the different wells, if they're sour or sweet gas, and pipelines and facilities. You know, I would ask the hon. Energy minister if there have been many issues where those setbacks were, I guess, too close, if there are any instances where there have been issues because the setbacks weren't followed.

We must ensure that the regulations are in place so everybody can be safe. Safety is the number one concern. We have to come up with the right balance between industry and the population in our communities. We're going to continue to see as the province grows, you know, that for many wells that are drilled now, in ten years the encroachment of the communities will be coming up to them. It's something that's going to have to continuously be watched and monitored to ensure that our communities are safe.

The oil companies are doing a tremendous job. The technological advancements that we've seen in the past 10 years – I was consulting on a rig, and we were over by Drumheller up on a riverbank. We drilled a horizontal well right underneath the little community of Rosedale. We were half a mile away. I think it was a 2,500-metre horizontal well, so we were well far back of any setback needed. So there are advances in technology so that these pools of gas and oil can be accessed from different distances, which is good. The member mentioned going into existing wells and recompleting them, doing different processes to get the resources out of the ground. That's something that's going to have to be looked at also.

Many municipalities do have in place regulations for when you go to drill in their areas. You know, there are school bus routes. We couldn't do rig moves during certain hours, on certain days. We had to watch in communities on Sundays. We couldn't do any rig moves on Sundays because a lot of the families were out travelling and we didn't want to have any interference. Also, there were many times in areas when we weren't allowed to move our rigs at night for the safety of the people travelling the roads, the safety of the rig crews and the truck crews that had to work in the dark.

I think we're going to continue to see issues come up. We have the new regulator now that's going to be looking at many issues, I believe, when they come up with the new regulations. I hope the member is confident in the new regulator, in their ability. I'm not sure why she would want to establish a working group. I'm not sure if she meant that the working group is going to be the regulator or if she wanted to have a separate working group to advise the regulator. Regardless, I think that within the regulator and their structure this would be an issue that they'll be looking at because I'm sure that she will be keeping up with the Energy minister to ensure that it's looked at.

I will remind you that I put forward some amendments to Bill 2 that would ensure that landowners, environment, and industry – all their concerns were going to be addressed under the regulator. I guess we will see as the new regulations come out.

I will be supporting this motion under the pretense that this issue will be addressed under the new regulator and the new policy management office so that the regulations are made not just taking in industry concerns but taking in community concerns and the safety of our public so that regulations can be made in the best public interest.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was with great interest that I listened to the Member for Calgary-North West's interesting motion to strike a committee to consult on oil and gas developments in and around urban centres. It's interesting timing considering that we've just passed a new energy regulator with regulations that are going to be passed throughout that process. It seems to me that that would be an interesting way to go about getting those concerns met, through those regulations and whether something can be worked out there because that is essentially going to be the law of the land.

5:00

Whether a committee is necessary to discuss this or not, I am not so sure, but I will applaud the member for taking this issue to the fore. It has been an issue in her constituency that has been bubbling for about the last two years. It's very important for that member to be engaged with her constituents, to be seen to be highlighting their concerns in the Legislature, and this is an excellent forum to do that in.

It reminds me. I read a book – don't giggle; I did read a book; I saw that look – called All Politics Is Local by Tip O'Neill. It really has some neat tips on sort of the practical, nuts-and-bolts politics that you need to do in this business to keep onside with your constituents. What we have seen through this motion is a political document meant to show the constituents in her community that she's taking their side, and I applaud her. Whether it's the correct forum or not, who exactly knows? Sometimes these things will intertwine and supersede and the like. I would doubt very much that a committee will be formed in this matter, nor do I actually see how it would interact with the developing of the regulations, but again the politics of this is bang on. We're highlighting a concern.

If I could go a little further in this, if we look more at some of the underlying effects of the hon. member bringing up this private member's motion at the time and some of the issues that may actually influence future government policy, that is the more interesting part of this debate.

Hey, another thing you guys should all know from the Tip O'Neill book is that it says to never stiff a server in your area. Even if the service is horrible, you tip them and tip them well because they talk to people, okay? That is just one of those things I learned, so carry that with you and remember that. When in your constituency, even when given poor service, you give a tip, and you smile. So there you go. You learned something from me.

Anyway, one of the larger societal issues at play here is maybe, in fact, urban sprawl, which, in my view, is one of the symptoms of the way Alberta has grown over the course of the last 50 years, especially our two large urban centres, Edmonton and surrounding communities as well as Calgary. We have large footprints that have superseded anything that could have been imagined 50 years ago. In fact, when I moved to Calgary in 1977, I think the edge of town was Varsity. Well, we've come a long way from there, and the hon. member's constituency is part of that new development that has occurred over that time. We are reaching those limitations. In my view, urban sprawl, if we don't start developing policies around it, may be to this province's peril in the long run.

I've read some reports on this issue from the Van Horne Institute which say simply that with the cost of public transportation, the cost of infrastructure and roads and the like cities may actually crumble underneath the weight of providing these services as they extend further and further out into the hinterland. There may be some policy objectives along that line that might dovetail nicely with this committee or possible committee or look at the more broad thing of what actually urban sprawl looks like and what policies should be implemented to do this.

I note that Toronto has now gone through two variations of greenbelt legislation. The first one didn't work. The second one was imposed and is apparently doing a much better job of seeing a densification of that city. These may be some things that we want to look at in this Legislature.

Returning to the motion, I applaud the member for bringing this up. I applaud the member for taking her constituents' issues to heart. I encourage her to work closely in the development of the regulations when they're consulted on and the like. I'm not certain if her committee will see the light of day, but I know the hon. Minister of Energy told me that if it is the wisdom, he looks forward to working with them very, very closely and going to the member's constituency and hearing the concerns.

In any event, I thank the hon. member for bringing this forward. It was a privilege to talk. And remember: tip your servers well.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the hon. Minister of Energy, followed by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, when you get talking about a motion in this Legislature, one never knows where the discussion will lead. Here we have a prime example of that this afternoon, and I thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo for his very constructive advice to all of us on how to work with our constituents.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 509 is a very important initiative by the hon. Member for Calgary-North West. I'd like to start by acknowledging and paying tribute to the good work that this hon. member has undertaken. I was not the Minister of Energy for more than a few days, it seems to me, before the hon. Member for Calgary-North West was speaking to me in a very persuasive manner that brought to my attention these concerns of her constituents, that of course were fresh in her mind, having just come through an election. We all had just come through the election. You know, I was really pleased to have a chance to work with the hon. member, to meet with some of her constituents who had concerns about a particular circumstance in her constituency.

It seemed to me, Mr. Speaker, that at that time this was a concern that we would see more of over time in this province. As communities grow, as the energy industry continues to expand, as technology expands, the potential is there for difficulties in the relationship between developed areas – that could be rural or urban – and the energy industry. I actually thought this was a really important opportunity for me as a new Energy minister to sit down with the Member for Calgary-North West and her constituents and listen to them and understand what their concerns were. Through the piece we've been working over recent months, month in, month out, and I'm optimistic that together with this motion and other work that is under way, we will find a way to ensure that interests are addressed appropriately over time.

My department has undertaken a lot of work as well to try and understand what the alternatives are. I know folks in industry are watching this topic with interest as well because this has an impact upon them. What we're seeking to do through the introduction of Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act, which this House passed last fall, is ensure that we find that right balance, the balance between environmental responsibility, the immense economic opportunity that we face in this province, and the landowners and the neighbours around the landowner.

You know, we're seeking balance here. I look forward to moving forward with the new Alberta energy regulator in the very near future. We've announced the chair of the governance board, and that will be moving forward soon. In that context, I've spoken often of one of the early opportunities we have to use the new Alberta energy regulator and the policy management office, which is located within the Energy department and works closely with ESRD as well. This is a topic that we can give to the policy management office. They can engage and work with interested parties. This will be a very good, constructive, great example of the kinds of balances that we have to find throughout Alberta in some urban, maybe even in some rural communities.

I support this motion by the hon. member, and I would support it in the context of using the policy management office as that group that could be used to develop the policy, to listen to Albertans to ensure that we find the right regulatory construct to address issues like this.

The policy review, I'm sure, will likely result in the modification of existing regulations. I'm quite confident of that. It will be exceedingly well informed by the good work done by the hon. Member for Calgary-North West, who has, as the Member for Calgary-Buffalo has pointed out, been working hard to represent her constituents and ensuring that their issues are brought to the forefront, that they're addressed in a thoughtful manner, and that we find an outcome that is good not just for the people of Calgary-North West but for all Albertans.

In that context, Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to support my colleague.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Lethbridge-East.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you. I'm pleased to be able to rise to speak to this issue. I also thank the member for putting forward this motion so that we have an opportunity to speak, at least generally, about the kinds of challenges that her motion brings to the attention of this House and the kinds of challenges that I think we need to wrestle with throughout the province. You know, she did a good job of outlining some of the specific ways in which it impacts members of her constituency. In fact, I guess my one observation with respect to that is that, of course, it's not just limited to the good examples that she discussed with respect to her constituency, but indeed the issue exists throughout the province in a number of different contexts.

With that in mind, I guess, because I think the issue that she's identified is an important one – and I thank her for that – what I'm going to say is that I'm not as keen on the strategy that is being proposed for resolving this issue. That is certainly not as a result of having any questions with respect to the good-faith attempt of this member to put something down in writing that might bring about some kind of outcome. The difficulty, Mr. Speaker, that occurs to me very quickly as someone who's been here since 2008 and someone who's been meeting with community groups and environmental groups and land-use groups and surface rights groups from across the province is that, you see, we've been having a lot of discussion, and we've had a lot of committees, and we've had a lot of talk about this challenge that we have in Alberta with respect to balancing development needs on one hand and community needs on the other. The concern that I have is that if we have another committee, we might be still having this discussion 10 years from now without any concrete outcome.

I note an article that was brought to my attention by our staff today. It was published in something called Business Edge News Magazine in 2004. The issue around sort of the natural gas recovery process around Calgary was discussed in 2004. At that point there was discussion of the fact that a senior-level provincial task force, including deputy ministers from five different ministries, was established to look at the conflict around land use in relation to the growth, the ever-growing footprint of the city of Calgary on one hand and the nonrenewable resources which many companies were hoping to extract from those affected lands on the other hand. We had this high-level group of deputy ministers in 2004, but we still don't seem to have any solutions identified, and we still seem to have difficulties.

I was looking through some notes around issues that have occurred in Peace River. Well, there are a number of issues in Peace River. There are a number of concerns and complaints by citizens around the interaction between oil and gas development on one hand and the impact on quality of life for community members on the other. I was just looking at one particular article that identified the fact that the company in question had increased its production by 400 per cent since 2009 around bitumen extraction, and in the course of increasing its production by 400 per cent, the impact on the adjacent community members as far as odour and that kind of thing had been rather significant. It had been discussed repeatedly in the community.

There's an article that came out just in the last two or three days or maybe in the last couple of weeks where, of course, the MLA for the area is saying: "Well, there is a serious odour problem here, and the question is really: what are we going to do about it?" Then he's saying: you know, I've certainly talked to the Energy minister, and he thinks that there's something we need to do about it. But then, of course, this problem has been growing since 2009, and I've been hearing from people in that community since before I was elected, actually. Again, the question becomes: how much consultation are we going to have before we start doing something about this?

The same thing exists, you know, if you look in Fort McMurray. We all know that there are tremendous challenges there around urban development. Well, there are ownership issues and compensation issues as well as the whole issue of proximity of development to the actual community, the same thing. I was able to find some commentary by the mayor at that time, back around 2006, 2007, around: "We've really got to get a handle on this. You know, we really need to figure out what to do about this conflict."

Then, of course, Mr. Speaker, the other thing that we already have in the province is the land-use framework, which is theoretically supposed to be the forum within which for several years now people who represent these competing interests are able to come together on a geographic basis and a community basis and a regional basis in order to come up with recommendations for how we would introduce and amend our regulations around these things. As we all know, this process, again, has been a lot, a lot, a lot of talk, with almost no regulatory structure having been introduced notwithstanding that we've been talking a lot for several years.

I actually remember being in estimates debate with the former minister of environment, who is no longer a member of this House, and him acknowledging: well, we haven't probably been able to resource the land-use framework process very well, so we're not able to really move as fast as we need to, and we're not able to provide the resources necessary to ensure that we've got an adequate level of expertise at these consultations in this policy development process. Well, okay. Here we are a few years later, and in fact that ministry has seen their resources reduced even further.

My concern is that, absolutely, there is a challenge in this province, whether we're talking about urban conflict with industrial development, whether we're talking about downstream impacts of industrial development on, effectively, rural communities, whether we're talking about farmers and the conflict that they experience occasionally with development. This is not a problem that is new. It is not a problem that's going away. It is a problem that everybody has identified repeatedly, and it's a problem that we've not managed to get a handle on.

I think it's because at the end of the day this government is never really ever going to compel the energy industry to come to the table and bargain with somebody who's there primarily with the overarching public interest on their side. I think that instead we have a relationship where the oil and gas industry comes and tells the government what they want, and then the government, acting as an agent for the oil and gas industry, proceeds to try and sell it to the people of Alberta. As long as that's the model of how our government develops our industry in Alberta, we're going to continue to have lots of consultations without any kind of meaningful regulatory change.

I do very much applaud the member for raising the issue, but I'm afraid that more talk, more policy, more consultations, more conversations – I think some people in the House have heard me wax a little bit less than poetical about the overuse of the words “conversation” and “collaboration” in the most recent edition of the government's message box and speaking points. Nonetheless, as long as that's what we do and we don't realize that we actually have to put rules in place, we're not going to get anywhere.

It's the same, you know, with the monitoring. We can monitor forever, but if that monitoring is not associated with a set of rules about how practices need to change and standards need to be met, who cares if we monitor? One of the folks in my office pointed out: “You know, you can watch a train crash in slow motion. You can put 16 different cameras on it, and you can watch that train crash occur. You can make sure you get it filmed from absolutely every angle, but if you don't ultimately find a way to make the train go onto a different track, then the train crash is going to happen. It doesn't matter how many different ways you look at it.” That is my concern.

I think we need to come up with a slightly more defined strategy in this, but I do thank the member for giving us an opportunity to have a conversation about an issue which continues to present itself to Albertans and that requires a substantive form of addressing it.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Mr. Speaker, Motion 509 is being brought forward by my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-North West. It calls on the government “to establish a working group to review whether adequate policies are in place for urban communities with regard to oil and gas development.” This is a very important matter for consideration and will have consequences well into this province's future for all of our citizens. There is always a risk when oil and gas facilities are in close proximity to residential and other public districts and, in fact, rural areas as well. As such, making sure that these facilities are safe and do not negatively impact nearby residents is a matter for a wide-reaching research report.

The policy management office can be the vehicle for this research for several reasons. The policy management office is the government's link to the Alberta energy regulator. The office deals with both the Department of Energy and the Department of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development and is the interface of the enhanced system for oil and gas. This interface manages policy development as well as policy assurance.

A chief responsibility of this office is to ensure that government policy is communicated effectively to the regulator. Alberta Energy is currently undertaking a thorough evaluation of policy options regarding energy development in this province. It's important to examine the policy management office in this regard. Mr. Speaker, the policy management office facilitates policy integration, policy guidelines, and communication between policy development and policy assurance stages. A key role of the office is to ensure that there's a common risk management approach that is used throughout the system to promote consistency and reliability.

Mr. Speaker, the office both supports and facilitates a co-ordinated approach to public management, which is precisely what we're talking about here today. Going forward, the policy management office will engage stakeholders in the development of the new rules of practice. Enhanced public engagement will allow for the continuation of informed and prudent policy development. Consequently, landowners will have the opportunity to influence regulatory procedures to a much greater extent than has been previously known.

Further, policy assurance is facilitated by the implementation of a single regulator, that is responsible and accountable for all assurance functions. The policy management office provides a single window of contact through which to select policy compliance tools. The delineation of respective responsibilities for policy development and policy assurance will help warrant stronger accountability and the reliability of outcomes.

Mr. Speaker, policy assurance functions are consolidated in a single regulator in order to provide a single point of contact and consistent procedures throughout project life cycles. Through the use of a systematic and common risk management framework and a formal sustainable resource and environmental policy management office, the entire system will ensure policies are developed and applied in a co-ordinated and integrated fashion.

The use of a performance measurement framework and public reporting mechanisms will enable Albertans to know with great accuracy how the system is performing. Equally as important, Mr. Speaker, these reporting mechanisms will help to inform Albertans on how they can provide input regarding the improvement of any systematic gaps that will be identified. The system must continue to support Alberta's investment competitiveness as well as meet the desired social, economic, and environmental outcomes. Ultimately, it is for the residents that safety precautions are being taken. The policies put in place to protect high-density communities must reflect the input of these communities' residents.

This motion for awareness should go to the government, and the policy management office can directly review the intent that this motion proposes. I would like to see the intent of this motion also discussed within the land-use framework because, Mr. Speaker, with another million people coming to this province for the opportunities for industrial, cultural, and environmental activities, we must know how to use our land, protect agricultural and recreational land and the wilderness, and certainly protect it for industrial use as well. A harmony of interests is what is important to move this province forward in the progressive way that this government envisions.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by the hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to support this motion, but this motion, or the subject, should have been brought forward in an earlier debate. The reason it has to come forward now – it's missing some clarity here. To save the hon. minister, whom I have the greatest respect for, time and energy, I would prefer that it be a working group, and two members from this caucus would be happy to join that working group and actually save on the labour of some of my fellow members across the aisle.

I want to point out that there are a couple of things I find ironic, maybe even comical. My colleague here, the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, used the word "pretense" accidentally versus to "premise" an assumption upon, and I just found that sort of ironic because the word "pretense" is something that did come up in the debate dealing with the single regulator.

You have to remember that this is a serious issue. I will make light of a few of our past debates, but the fact is that it doesn't diminish how serious this issue is. I remember when the citizens of Calgary first spoke up. I've been involved with a lot of landowner rights since long before I got elected, so for us in the rural area, particularly the rural communities, as oil and gas has approached, these issues have always been first and foremost in their concerns dealing with their rights, the issues of water, all the complicated issues dealing with oil and gas development, and there are a lot. There's a lot here.

What I want to say is that we missed a lot of this when we passed through this bill dealing with the single regulator. We talked about this extensively. The single regulator can be a good process. It can be one of those streamlining processes that we would all agree upon, but you have to remember that there was a piece of legislation that did say at one point in time that the good citizens of northwest Calgary, southwest Edmonton, and all of Alberta had a right, a reasonable opportunity to learn the facts, and that's no longer in legislation. That was removed. They had a reasonable opportunity to challenge the facts. That's no longer in legislation. That's been removed.

5:30

Here we are with a bill for a single regulator that's supposed to be taking care of this motion, that's supposed to be taking care of these concerns. What we have here is an issue of how we're going to find a way to now address this. That, to me, is the fundamental flaw of the legislation that was passed. The legislation should have by definition made sure that there was a protocol that when the regulator was going to make its rules, when they were going to make the regulations, it was going to have to adhere to the legislative mandate to make sure this subject was covered, and that legislation didn't do that.

Will the regulations actually cover it? Will the rules address this motion? The answer is that we don't know. That's why this motion has come forward. It's also why I'm going to support this motion. We need answers to this. That legislation should have been clearer, and it was not. Here we are now again dealing with this issue. If I understand it correctly – and correct me if I'm wrong – it appears that it's going to go to the policy management office, and that will now be who's going to address this.

But there are a couple of things that I think even the policy management office doesn't have guidance on. It does not have guidance on the public interest. Those words were removed totally from legislation. Can they do it? Sure they can, but they're not required to by legislation. That was the point of going all night discussing why public interest needed to be accounted for in the legislation. It was a mandate that anybody who would actually be part of this working group or part of the policy management office would have to by legislation make sure they address the issues of the public interest, which is what this motion is all about. That, to me, is very important.

I would ask the hon. member who has brought this motion forward if she can find the time – I believe it's directive 051. There's a draft document that has come out. If you don't have a copy, I'm happy to send you a copy. It should concern everybody and anybody in here that deals with oil and gas on a landowner's issues of: what are adequate policies? It's not yet been approved, but it is dealing with emergency procedures around the development. I have real serious concerns with this draft. Hopefully – hopefully – they change it. What they've done is that they've really made it, in my view, a little bit more precarious in dealing with emergency preparedness, particularly around things like sour gas and other issues dealing with oil and gas development.

The point I'm trying to make is that we're dealing here with a motion that talks about whether or not adequate policies are in place. As I read the motion, I know about the possibility of this draft directive coming forward, and I know about the legislation on the other side. I don't see where either one of those at the moment is supporting the intent of what this motion is here, which is actually making sure we cover all the bases and do it right.

I see no excuse for why we can't do it right. There's no excuse at all. We have the ability. We have the qualified people in the industry, of course, but we also have the ability to make sure that as legislators we get it right so that nothing goes off the rail, so nothing gets missed. It's inexcusable to have to drop the ball on any particular application, on any particular issue dealing with these types of concerns. That is, I think, the entire argument here. This motion should not have been necessary had we done our job the first time in creating the legislation for the single regulator. This absolutely could have been included in that.

I would disagree with the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East when she brought up a statement – and I apologize if it woke me up and caught my attention – about landowners being able to influence the regulator. I have appeared in front of the regulator in more hearings than I can probably count, and I have to tell you that if landowners were not able to influence the regulator in the past, I do not see where the legislation now can give them the extra ability or that extra authority to actually influence.

I will tell you that sometimes they turn into a gong show. We had a board member on one of these boards. I will leave the gentleman's name out. I consider him a friend of mine. He was appointed to one of the hearing boards because he had agricultural experience. We wanted somebody on the board that had agricultural experience, but the only agricultural experience he had was that he had a grow op in 1969 that he got arrested for. That didn't work out. Now, my farmer friends here, whom I have great respect for, always tell me, "At least he had a cash crop." I say: "That's true. That's true." That does not diminish the seriousness of what we're dealing with.

The point is that sometimes in these hearings our landowners feel powerless in front of it. Now, some of you over there would argue that they're not powerless, but I can tell you from the position I've been in time and time again with landowner concerns, they feel absolutely powerless. When you stand in front of these commissioners and they change the rules on you on the spot – I'll give you a prime example. I just brought this up recently with the minister of environment. At an Environmental Appeals Board hearing some of those people who had a concern – and this is the same type of process – were not allowed to bring their concern forward. They put them together on one panel. They were all affected by the same issue. Three or four got to speak, but they gave them a time frame. Those who had what I would call distinct concerns affecting their property, their homes did not get to participate because the clock ran out. I've never seen that in any process.

In a court of law it takes as long as it takes. You get to make your case. Judges don't like repetitiveness. They will stop you. But if you have information you're bringing forward, they will listen to you. They will give you that time. These boards are supposed to do the same thing, and in my experience I've seen time and time again where people did not have the opportunity to actually bring their concerns forward. They have no recourse. They have absolutely no recourse. They don't understand the system in many cases, but the board is all powerful in many ways. They are the master of their own destiny as a quasi-judicial panel, and they get to make up their rules. They're not bound by the rules of evidence that a courtroom is bound by. That is clearly labelled and stated in the legislation.

Clearly, there are significant issues dealing with these concerns that are brought forward in this motion. I am definitely going to support the motion. I would like to go beyond that and make sure that these people have a right to be heard.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could you advise me of how much time I have left?

The Deputy Speaker: You have 10 minutes, hon. minister.

Mr. Oberle: Ten minutes. Okay. Very good. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very honoured to rise this evening and speak to Motion 509. I will in fact be supporting it. I'll speak in favour of it.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister, my apologies. We're coming to the end of the time allotted, so six minutes. Please proceed.

Mr. Oberle: Okay. I will be speaking in favour of it although I'll say that it might not seem like that at times, Mr. Speaker.

First of all, I'll congratulate the Member for Calgary-North West for her advocacy on behalf of her constituents although I need to point out to my constituency that I, too, have advocated to the Energy minister, as have the members for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, Lesser Slave Lake, and, I'm sure, others, Mr. Speaker. It's an issue of concern, to be sure.

I'm not sure that a working group is the right path forward, but I certainly think there's a discussion necessary. The minister talked about the policy management office. That's fine. I do think there's a discussion necessary.

I'm also not sure about the urban viewpoint of this although I'm always willing to look at something from a new angle and certainly this issue as well. Indeed, there are some very serious urban issues, Mr. Speaker, and we do need a discussion. Development within a populated area is indeed an issue, and, you know, we have to make sure that it reflects the modern realities of energy development and of urban development. Just from a safety point of view, we have to talk about emergency management, and notifications and evacuations in an urban environment are certainly concerns although I'll readily point out that the Member for Calgary-North West did not confine her conversation just to safety. There are certainly others of nuisance and noise and those sorts of things. That's fine. Very clearly, we need to have a conversation.

Let's examine this issue briefly from another point of view, that being the rural point of view, Mr. Speaker. Now, it's convenient for us to think of energy development as being out there or up there in the north. That's not peculiar to urban Alberta. Even in rural Alberta we think of the energy industry as being out there. Most of the energy development, particularly in the northeast of our province, is out there in the green zone, and it's not integrated with the residential land base out there in very many places in our province.

I would like to point out that my constituency is a little different from that, Mr. Speaker. I have four towns in my constituency that are the largest population centres – no cities, four towns – one village, and the rest are rural municipalities, a couple of First Nations reserves, and one Métis settlement. Two-thirds of the population in my constituency do not live in those four towns. They live out there, and they are completely integrated with the development of the energy industry.

That's not peculiar to my constituency. In fact, the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley has 36 wells within one and a half kilometres of his house. You're not going to get that in an urban environment. They're all out there making noise and dust and everything else, so the same issues apply out there in rural Alberta.

If it was just about safety, Mr. Speaker, even then I would argue: what about rural residents? What about somebody that lives three miles down a road that's a dead end and they have to pass six oil wells on the way into their property? What happens if there's an accident when they don't have access to high-speed Internet and often don't have cellphone coverage? The issues of notification and evacuation are every bit as pressing. But, again, the member did not confine her remarks simply to safety. There are other issues.

While I'm in agreement with the motion, I think we need to have this discussion in light of how the energy industry interacts with and impacts all Albertans, Mr. Speaker. Let's be clear. The issues that define the interface between human residents and industrial development are not at all confined to safety, and the member did not try to suggest that they were. Any discussion of this going forward should respect that fact.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you to ask Donna Dahm – she's a constituent of mine who bought a lovely house, probably hoping it would be a retirement house, on a little-used road allowance near a provincial highway but well set back, in a serene, really isolated setting. A few years later she finds herself sitting at the intersection of that same provincial highway, on a four-lane industrial road that's just blazing with tanker traffic and oil field traffic. Because it's right at the stop sign, there have been quite a few accidents there. Truckers have fallen asleep, and parts have fallen off trucks. She's probably a couple of weeks away from being able to open a used truck part shop on her property there. She's going to find out I said that, and she's going to be pretty mad at me. She's already pretty mad at me, mad at the fate of her property there.

Go further than that. Ask Donna Dahm and the surrounding residents there what they think about the oil and gas industry, although most of them in some way are employed in the industry. Not one single person I've met is actually against development. That area is called Three Creeks, and it's been an area of major concern to me and through me to the minister of environment and the Minister of Energy. The odours in that area . . . [Mr. Oberle's speaking time expired] I thought I had six minutes, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: You did when you started, hon. minister, but I do appreciate your points.

At this time I would give the mover of the motion the opportunity for five minutes to close debate. The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank everyone who spoke to this motion and contributed to this debate. Certainly, I absolutely acknowledge the concerns of our members and members across the aisle who have the impact of this in their own areas.

Oil and gas development does present, right across this province, regardless of where you live, really unique challenges. Those challenges exist whether you live on a farm, whether you are close to a busy intersection with a lot of tanker traffic, whether you're on an acreage, in a town or a village or a city, as we are quite painfully finding out right now in Royal Oak. I hope that any review of the policies that we are talking about will make an attempt to speak to these challenges and these opportunities.

Resource development in Alberta, most of us would agree, is the key to our prosperity. So, too, is the health of our communities and the well-being of all of our constituents. As such, we really do need a policy that sets out clear expectations for development both for the nearby residents and for the project proponents.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 509 simply urges the government to review whether adequate policies are in place for oil and gas development. I value and respect my colleagues' comments regarding the motion, and I urge all hon. members to vote in support of Motion 509.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 509 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the rules that suggest one motion gets considered a day and even though it's not 6 o'clock, I would move that we adjourn until 9:30 this evening, at which time we reconvene in Committee of Supply.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:46 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

9:30 p.m.

Monday, April 22, 2013

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I would now call the Committee of Supply to order. Members, please take your seats.

Hon. members, prior to beginning, the chair will outline the process for this evening's proceedings. The Committee of Supply will first call on the chairs of the legislative policy committees to report on their meetings with the various ministries under their mandate. No vote is required when these reports are presented according to Standing Order 59.01(10).

Members are reminded that there were amendments introduced during the legislative policy committee meetings, so the committee will vote on all proposed amendments.

The committee will then proceed to the vote on the estimates of the Legislative Assembly as approved by the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services. The vote for the main estimates will then take place.

Finally, the chair would like to remind all hon. members of Standing Order 32(3.1), which provides that after the first division is called in Committee of Supply during the vote on the main estimates, the interval between division bells shall be reduced to one minute for any subsequent division.

Committee Reports

The Chair: I would now invite the chair of the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future to present the committee's report. The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Chair. As chair of the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future and pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(10) I am pleased to report that the committee has reviewed the 2013-2014 proposed estimates and business plans for the following ministries: Ministry of Agriculture and Rural Development, two hours; Ministry of Enterprise and Advanced Education, three hours; Executive Council, two hours; Ministry of Infrastructure, two hours; Ministry of International and Intergovernmental Relations, two hours; Ministry of Tourism, Parks and Recreation, two hours.

Mr. Chair, I would like to table amendments to the following ministries that were introduced during our meetings for the Committee of Supply's consideration: Ministry of Agriculture and Rural Development, one amendment; Ministry of Enterprise and Advanced Education, one amendment; Executive Council, one amendment; Ministry of Infrastructure, one amendment; Ministry of Tourism, Parks and Recreation, one amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I'd also like to table copies of documents tabled during consideration of the main estimates for the official record of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I would now call on the acting chair of the Standing Committee on Families and Communities to present the committee's report. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you. On behalf of the chair of Standing Committee on Families and Communities and pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(10) I am pleased to report that the committee has reviewed the 2013-14 proposed estimates and business plans for the following ministries: Ministry of Culture, two hours; Ministry of Education, six hours; Ministry of Health, six hours; Ministry of Human Services, six hours; Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General, six hours; Ministry of Service Alberta, three hours.

I'd like to table amendments to the following ministries that were introduced during our meetings for the Committee of Supply's consideration: Ministry of Culture, one amendment; Ministry of Education, one amendment; Ministry of Health, one amendment; Ministry of Human Services, one amendment; Ministry of Service Alberta, one amendment.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I would now call the chair of the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship. Again the Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you. As chair for the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship and pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(10) I am pleased to report that the committee has reviewed the 2013-14 proposed estimates and business plans for the following departments: Ministry of Aboriginal Relations, two hours; Ministry of Energy, six hours; Ministry of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, six hours; Ministry of Municipal Affairs, five hours; Ministry of Transportation, three hours; Ministry of Treasury Board and Finance, six hours.

I'd also like to table amendments to the following departments that were introduced during our meetings for the Committee of Supply's consideration: Ministry of Energy, one amendment; Ministry of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, one amendment; Ministry of Municipal Affairs, one amendment; Ministry of Treasury Board and Finance, one amendment; Ministry of Transportation, one amendment.

I would also like to table copies of a document tabled during consideration of the main estimates for the official record of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Vote on Main Estimates 2013-14

The Chair: Hon. members, the next order of business is the vote on the amendments introduced during the legislative policy committee meetings. There are a total of 15 amendments, and they will be identified as amendments A1 through A15. Members have received copies of all the amendments on your desks. We will begin with A1 and carry on in sequence.

A1. Mr. Donovan moved that the 2013-14 main estimates of the Ministry of Agriculture and Rural Development be reduced as follows:

Introduction of Bills

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Bill 20 Appropriation Act, 2013

Mr. Horner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 20, the Appropriation Act, 2013. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a first time]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 14 RCMP Health Coverage Statutes Amendment Act, 2013

[Adjourned debate April 18: Mr. VanderBurg]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and speak to Bill 14, the RCMP Health Coverage Statutes Amendment Act, 2013, in second reading. As the Assembly is well aware, this bill will fill the gap that is coming from the federal government in the provision of health care coverage for RCMP officers in Alberta. This is a very important bill, and I am pleased to stand in support of it. This bill is going to afford a vital provision for health care coverage for RCMP officers in Alberta. This provision was granted through federal legislation until recently.

We as Albertans must step up and ensure RCMP in our province don't lose their coverage. It is important that this Assembly does what it can to support these men and women. I do thank the minister for putting this bill forward in such a manner that it can be supported by all members of the Assembly. I don't think there's a single member in this Assembly who disagrees with the assertion that the RCMP deserve this sort of coverage. These brave men and women proudly serve Albertans with a special focus on small towns and rural communities. The protection they provide and the feeling of security it produces profoundly affect Alberta province-wide.

The examples abound. When the RCMP shuts down a gang that is trying to establish itself in a small town, parents can rest assured knowing their children won't be targeted as new members. When the RCMP shuts down a grow op or a meth lab, the innocent neighbours are no longer victims to the threat of violence or danger to their wealth. When the RCMP engages with students in their school and teaches them about important issues, from the rules of the road to explaining the basic structure of the criminal court system, they make connections that inspire these students and help keep our communities safer and more productive.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that this is a necessary bill which will ensure that we as Albertans do our due diligence to ensure that those who protect us are properly covered when it comes to health care issues. These RCMP officers deserve no less. I ask all members to take the opportunity this bill presents to engage with their local RCMP detachment, thank those officers for their services, and assure them that we as parliamentarians have their back.

Again, I'd like to thank the minister for putting this bill forward, and I encourage all members to vote in favour of this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak in favour of this bill. I'm a little flabbergasted that the federal government would punt the RCMP off their health care insurance plan, but they did. It's one of those cases where the province has got to step in and pick them up and offer them the opportunity to sign on to the provincial program. You know, how could we not? And I'm glad that the provincial government did do that. That's a bit of a staggering concept, that you'd punt the RCMP, isn't it? But there you go.

In fact, they have a very short bill, and that's exactly what they do. They used to have the RCMP specifically excluded, and they've basically taken that exclusion out, so now they are included. Thank you for stepping up and doing that, but I will remind the government that the municipalities do this on your behalf many times. Keep that in mind, will you?

Thanks so much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
I'll recognize the hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to echo the comments from the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills as well as the Member for Edmonton-Centre. At the end of the day every one of us likely knows that when we get up in the morning and we go to work, we're going to be coming back to our friends and family later, at night. Our RCMP don't have that luxury. They put themselves often in harm's way. Many times they don't know, necessarily, that they're going to be coming home to their friends and family that particular night.

Mr. Speaker, in the year and a half or so that I've been Solicitor General for this province I can tell you that I've actually visited some RCMP in hospital that have suffered gunshot wounds while in the line of duty. This is a very serious matter.

I'm very happy to see multiparty support for this particular initiative, and I thank all the members opposite for supporting it. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to rise today to speak on Bill 14, the RCMP Health Coverage Statutes Amendment Act, 2013. I would like to thank the Associate Minister of Seniors for bringing this forward as I believe it's a bill that all parties can support.

We know that the RCMP officers who serve and live in Alberta are some of the finest citizens in many of our rural and urban communities. They're the officers who keep our streets safe and are among the special few who are brave enough to put their lives on the line to ensure that our communities are protected. There was an all-too-real example of this earlier this year when we heard about a sheriff in the town of Whitecourt who sustained a serious hand injury from a prisoner fleeing the scene.

With the type of sacrifices these officers make here in the province, having the province recognize our RCMP officers and provide coverage for them now through the province is an important first step. These are men and women who are serving and protecting, and it seems appropriate for us to recognize that in adjustments to our own health care legislation. These are also men and women who serve in our communities and volunteer their time with our children. Further, with RCMP officers being provincial taxpayers for our great province, it only makes sense that the taxes they pay into are part of the provincial insurance coverage that Albertans across our province universally enjoy.

Now, there are some minor concerns about this bill on how the changes will be financed. My understanding of the history of health coverage for the RCMP officers is that they were exempted from provincial insurance coverage because the Canada Health Act did not list them as an insured person. As a result, the federal government covered their insurance needs in the past.

I know that the federal government has done some important work in securing long-term sustainable funding in transfers to the provinces, announcing that beginning in 2014-2015 the Canada health transfer payment will now be made on an equal per capita cash basis only. These transfer payments finally recognize that Canadians, no matter where they live, are deserving of extra payment and will allow Alberta to receive further funding from the federal government, and we thank them for that. All the same, it would be good to know if this government planned for the extra funding required to now list our RCMP officers to be included for provincial insurance coverage here in Alberta, what the total cost of it was, and how it was to be paid.

Outside of these concerns it's obvious that these changes are part of the maintenance required by the provincial government due to the appropriate changes from the federal government providing more autonomy for the provinces to provide provincial care for the brave RCMP officers who serve our community. With some further clarity from the province on some of the more technical aspects of this bill, this legislation will have my support and will be an important first step in making our RCMP officers more tightly bound with the communities they so bravely serve each and every day.

On a side note, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the RCMP officers who donate their time, who volunteer in our communities, who offer programs such as the DARE program, which my 11-year-old daughter recently completed, and who help to educate our children and also bring stability and safety to many of our communities, whether they're in the rural communities or in the urban communities all across this province.

Thank you again to the Associate Minister of Seniors.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be quick. I'd like to thank the Associate Minister of Seniors for putting forward this bill. It seems like an appropriate thing to do, to cover RCMP officers working in Alberta with coverage under our health care system.

It seems odd, like the Member for Edmonton-Centre indicated, that the federal government, who primarily runs the RCMP program, would be getting out of the business of providing them health care, but I guess that is the day and age that we live in. We often see governments downloading responsibility to other levels of government and expecting them to foot the bill.

Inevitably it's the senior levels of government, both federal and provincial, that have the taxation power. When we do that in this House particularly, I guess, to our municipalities and further on down the line, they don't have the power of taxation that we have here. We should recognize that if we don't have the ability to pay or the guts to raise revenue, one of the two, then it's even doubly more difficult for those jurisdictions that don't have the ability to do such a thing. We should keep that in mind when we download our services.

Just a quick comment, a big shout-out to the RCMP on what they do for all citizens of not only this great province but of our nation. I recognize that they do a difficult job and often have to deal with people when they're at their worst, whether they're in a crime situation, a domestic dispute, or are simply pulling someone over on the highway for speeding. It's not always the easiest to deal with human beings who are not always happy to see them, yet they do it with honour and respect and an ability to serve our communities and keep us safe.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak on this bill. It's good that we're doing such a thing when the federal government doesn't seem able or fit to do the coverage for the RCMP.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise. There are a lot of issues relating to this transfer of authority, transfer of costs, transfer of responsibility to the provincial government. No question that the RCMP are a credible, important player in our security in the provinces and in Alberta. I guess my one registered concern – and I hope the government is listening – is that this is yet another example of downloading onto the province without a serious debate, without a serious discussion of why we would take on a significant extra funding requirement at a time, particularly, when the federal government appears to be withdrawing from health care funding in this country. At one time, when medicare was brought in, they paid 50 per cent to the provinces for health care. It's now a fraction of that, and in 2014 the federal government is going to cut even more from their contributions to health care, as I understand it, probably to below 10 per cent of what our health care budgets are.

In addition, having watched this Prime Minister and his omnibus bills and his defiance of due process in the Parliament of Canada and the downloading of environmental impact assessments to the province, navigable waters, now relegated to the province to manage, this federal government is clearly trying to deal with fiscal problems as well as other issues by simply downloading. I guess I'm a bit surprised at this government that it doesn't have any push-back, it doesn't have any debate, and it doesn't have any comments about how this government is slowly but surely downloading more and more responsibilities onto the province without any debate or discussion.

Having said that, I will be supporting the bill. It's clear we have to support our RCMP. It was a bureaucratic process that they had to run through to get their bills paid that's unnecessary, really. But it does reflect a very dangerous trend, in my view, that this federal government is looking to balance its own books on the backs of the provinces.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Are there other speakers?

Seeing none, hon. associate minister, would you like to close debate?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, I would like to thank all members of the Assembly for their kind remarks. I think all of us know the situation that went on in Mayerthorpe in my constituency, and none of us would ever deny the RCMP and their families this right just like any other Albertan.

I ask for your support, and I call the question.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 14 read a second time]

Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Select Special Chief Electoral Officer Search Committee

31. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that:

- (1) A Select Special Chief Electoral Officer Search Committee of the Legislative Assembly be appointed consisting of the following members, namely Mr. Rogers, chair; Mr. Quadri, deputy chair; Ms Blakeman; Mr. Eggen; Mr. Goudreau; Mr. Lemke; Mrs. Leskiw; Mr. McDonald; and Mr. Saskiw, for the purpose of inviting applications for the position of Chief Electoral Officer and to recommend to the Assembly the applicant it considers most suitable to this position.
- (2) Reasonable disbursements by the committee for advertising, staff assistance, equipment and supplies, rent, travel, and other expenditures necessary for the effective conduct of its responsibilities shall be paid, subject to the approval of the chair.

- (3) In carrying out its responsibilities, the committee may with the concurrence of the head of the department utilize the services of members of the public service employed in that department and of the staff employed by the Assembly.
- (4) The committee may without leave of the Assembly sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued.
- (5) When its work has been completed, the committee shall report to the Assembly if it is sitting. During a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued, the committee may release its report by depositing a copy with the Clerk and forwarding a copy to each member of the Assembly.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move Government Motion 31. As we know, as was tabled by the Speaker some weeks ago, Brian Fjeldheim, the current Chief Electoral Officer, has determined that he does not want to seek a renewal of his term, which expires, I think, today. As such, it's necessary to go through the process with a committee. A special select committee is usually the process undertaken to seek candidates for this very, very important job in our province, and I would ask for the support of the House in passing this so that the committee can now begin to meet and start its work to find a new Chief Electoral Officer for the province of Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

Are there speakers to the motion? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's always interesting to me how the government chooses to decide on the allocation of seats for committees such as this. This is considered a subcommittee of the Legislative Offices Committee, which leads us into the wider conversation about how those seats are assigned. I find fault with this government for continually narrowing the number of seats that are available to members of the opposition.

I have offered up an alternative, as I am wont to do. I think that to better represent the people of Alberta, these committees should be peopled on the basis of the popular vote, which I think would give us a nice redistribution of the seats on all of the select special, standing, and legislative policy committees as a counterbalance to the steadfast and block-like voting that we get from the government members. Just a little thing for you all to consider. I can tell that it's receiving an overwhelmingly thudding response.

Nonetheless, it is always top of mind for us because it is used in a quite heavy-handed way, and it's very frustrating to sit on these committees, to do good work, to work hard, to do your research, and to be constantly voted down by a government majority who just comes in and votes as a block. It's very frustrating. Nonetheless, I'm sure that myself and the other members of the opposition will continue to do the good work that we do, but I just thought I'd put that little thorn, that little pointy bit that might be a petard, underneath the, ahem, lower extremities of the members of the government.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others that wish to speak to this?

Seeing none, the hon. Government House Leader to close debate or call the question.

Mr. Hancock: Call the question.

The Deputy Speaker: The question has been called.

[Government Motion 31 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, much to my surprise we are finished the business that we wanted to accomplish tonight but for one bill, which, I understand, given a little bit more time members will be prepared to pass with alacrity. Rather than waste time talking about it tonight, I would move that we adjourn till 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:20 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, April 23, 2013

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us pray. O Great Creator, grant us daily awareness of the precious gift of life we have been given and also of the emptiness we feel when the life of someone has been taken. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and our country, as did members who came before us. Amen.

Please be seated.

Hon. members, as is our long-standing custom, we pay tribute to members who have passed away since we last met.

Mr. Gerard J. Amerongen, QC
July 18, 1914, to April 21, 2013

The Speaker: Today we mourn the passing of hon. Gerard Joseph Amerongen. He was first elected to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta on August 30, 1971, as the Progressive Conservative candidate for Edmonton-Meadowlark. He served as the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark for four consecutive terms, being re-elected on March 26, 1975; March 14, 1979; and November 2, 1982, through until May 8, 1986. He served as Speaker for the entire time of his tenure.

As the eighth Speaker of this Assembly Mr. Amerongen oversaw many aspects of the modernization of this Assembly. The establishment of Alberta Hansard and the commencement of the broadcasting of proceedings in 1972, for example, resulted in Mr. Amerongen becoming the first Speaker to administer the Legislative Assembly Office on a full-time basis.

Mr. Amerongen was responsible for having the daily Speaker's procession enter through the main doors of the Chamber rather than through one of the side doors. He was also responsible for how we refer to the building. The physical building "doesn't legislate," he stated. That is why today we are in the Alberta Legislature Building, not the Alberta Legislative Building.

Today, as we mourn this significant loss, we are reminded of the families who support members like hon. Mr. Amerongen. With our admiration and deepest respect there is gratitude to members of the families who share and/or have shared the burdens of public office and of public service.

Today I would like to welcome members of the Amerongen family who are present in the Speaker's gallery. After I've introduced all of them and each of them has risen, we will thank them with our applause: Michael Amerongen, son; Henry Amerongen, brother; Greg Amerongen, nephew; Peter Amerongen, son; Cathy Roy, daughter-in-law; Max Amerongen, grandson; Sara McKeon, granddaughter; Bob McKeon, son-in-law; Hedwig Lankau, granddaughter; Rhoda Rodriguez and her daughters Nicole Rodriguez and Therese Rodriguez, devoted caregivers. Hon. members, let us thank them with our applause for the outstanding, dedicated support they gave to a former Speaker of this Assembly, Mr. Gerard Amerongen. [Standing ovation]

Hon. members, stay standing, please, because in a moment of silent prayer I'm going to ask you to please remember hon. Mr. Amerongen in the way that you may have known him, respecting all of the great accomplishments that he brought forward during his time serving exclusively and only as the Speaker of this Assembly.

In a moment of silent prayer let us reflect on his great accomplishments and what he did for us and for all Albertans. Rest eternal grant unto him, O Lord, and let light perpetual ever shine upon him and his service. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In your gallery is a distinguished officer of the Royal Canadian Infantry Corps. I'd like to introduce him to you and through you to all members of this Assembly. Lieutenant-General Peter Devlin is the commander of the Canadian Army. He is to retire in a few months after 36 years of service to our nation and sovereign at home and abroad. His exceptional leadership and dedication have been recognized by Canada and by the United States. He is a commander of the Order of Military Merit and has been awarded the Meritorious Service Cross and the U.S. Legion of Merit. An officer who has seen the face of conflict through his service in Cyprus, the former Yugoslavia, Bosnia, Afghanistan, and Iraq, he has had a full, varied, and challenging career. Lieutenant-General Devlin is no stranger to Alberta, having been stationed here with 1 Canadian Mechanized Brigade Group, then located in Calgary.

He's accompanied today by the other member of his command team, the Army Regimental Sergeant Major, Chief Warrant Officer Mike Hornbrook. Mr. Speaker, I'd invite them now to stand and be warmly acknowledged by this Assembly for all that they have done in defence of Canada at home and in harm's way abroad.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, we will start with school groups, and I'll recognize the Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, the Minister of Health, to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of 74 students and their teachers and accompanying parents from Greenfield school in the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. They're seated in both the members' gallery and the public gallery. Accompanying the students are their teachers and group leaders Miss Ellen Reid, Mrs. Lori Tytler, Mrs. Alicia Dowdell, Mrs. Lilia Yu, Mrs. Reena Dhaliwal and parent helpers Mrs. Tiffany Bailey, Mr. Jeff Warner, Mr. Andrew Happer, Mrs. Monica Robson, and Mr. Jamie Zuniga. I'd ask the students, the teachers, and the parent helpers from Greenfield school to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of junior high students from the Kneehill Christian School, located in my constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. These engaged junior high students made the trek to Edmonton today from their school in Linden to spend the afternoon learning first-hand about what goes on here at the Legislature. I'd ask that the eight students from Kneehill Christian School along with their teacher, Terri Miller, and parents Bruce and Jodi Reimer and Sid and Glenda Toews please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

Seeing none, let's move on, then, to the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a very dear friend, confidante, and community activist from the community of Calgary-West. This is Brenda Meneghetti, who is a community leader who effectively led her community to create the Westside Recreation Centre, one of the most outstanding recreation centres in all of North America. On this one-year anniversary of our election victory I'm delighted to ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this opportunity to introduce to you and through you several individuals from the Canadian Cancer Society that are here today to acknowledge cancer awareness month. Cancer awareness month provides an opportunity for Albertans to unite in the fight against cancer. We are all wearing our daffodil pins here today to let everyone know that people living with cancer do not have to face cancer alone.

Here with us is Ms Barbara Bird. I assume she's up in the members' gallery or one of the galleries here. If I can ask her to stand, please. She works with people living with cancer. She's a two-time breast cancer survivor. She is originally from Nova Scotia, has been an Albertan for two years, and loves it here. I also met this morning with Angeline Webb of the Canadian Cancer Society. She is from Edmonton. Also, Chelsey Anseeuw is with the Canadian Cancer Society as well. She is two years in Edmonton from Winnipeg, loves it in Edmonton but is not quite yet an Oilers fan. I'd ask that all three of them rise, please, and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Julene Polis and Roger Polis. Julene's brother Andrew has Down syndrome, and he has been living in the Michener Centre for the last 47 years. Over the last number of years his situation has become more complex, having developed Alzheimer's. Michener staff ensure his safety, health, and happiness. Andrew is totally dependent on the Michener Centre to thrive and survive his disability. Hon. members, please join me in welcoming Julene and Roger on behalf of Andy with the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, it's an honour for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to the members of this House two people who are very connected to their community, who work very hard there and are actually the epitome of what Alberta is in terms of increasing civic responsibility at all levels of government. Those two people are Kelly Bitz and Richard MacQuarrie. I'd ask them to rise today and receive the warm welcome of this House. I might add that they love how I speak with my hands, and they're fans of mine. Again, please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, followed by the leader of the Liberal opposition.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the Board of Trustees for Red Deer public schools. I'll ask that they rise as I call their names. We have with us today Bev Manning, vice-chair, as well as trustees Bill Christie; Dick Lemke, who is the brother of the hon. Member for Stony Plain; Dianne Macaulay; Cathy Peacock; and Bill Stuebing. Also with us is the associate superintendent of business services, Cody McClintock.

Founded in 1887, Red Deer public schools is celebrating 125 years of excellence in teaching and learning. Public schools were one of the first institutions established by the community. Citizens came together, elected trustees, built schools, hired teachers, and, yes, even collected local taxes to provide the support needed for this important institution. Today Red Deer public schools under the leadership of the board of trustees, through outstanding teachers, administrators, and support staff, and in partnership with parents in the community provides outstanding education to more than 10,000 students within the city of Red Deer. It plays a vital role within our community and is achieving excellent results.

As Red Deer public schools celebrates its 125th anniversary, please offer your warm reception to our guests today.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, followed by Edmonton-Decore.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have two introductions, but firstly, on behalf of the constituents of Edmonton-Meadowlark I'd like to honour Speaker Amerongen and thank his family for sharing him not only with Edmonton-Meadowlark but also with the province in the Chamber. May God bless you and your family. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a surprise introduction. Let's see if the guests can figure out who they are. They're sitting in the members' gallery. They have lived in the constituency of Edmonton-Meadowlark for 12 years. They moved to Canada at the age of 23 with their newborn son from Albania, a country threatened by civil war. They came here for a dream, a dream for their son to have a better quality of life, a safe life, and a better education. Interestingly, their dream has come true. It's the first time that they'll be sitting here watching their son work as a page on the floor of this Assembly. Their son Donald Ademaj was nice enough to set up this little surprise for his parents. He's been a page for two years, and it's the first time that his mom and dad are coming here to watch him work. Hon. members, please join me in welcoming Dash and Alma Ademaj, the proud parents of our page Donald, with the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Your second introduction, hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Vivian Charest. Vivian is a volunteer co-ordinator who works with the Michener Centre. Her daughter Laurie is a 46-year-old resident of Michener. Laurie has lived at Michener for 40 years. Vivian is here to ask all of us to keep our hearts open and to keep Michener open. Hon. members, please join me in welcoming Vivian on behalf of her daughter Laurie with the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly nine representatives from the Polish Veterans' Society, an Edmonton-based organization celebrating their 75-year anniversary. My guests are seated in the members' gallery wearing their military dress, and I would ask them to please rise as I mention their names: Mr. Jan K. Kucy, president; Mr. Stan Podraza, first vice-president; Mr. Jan Hliwa, second vice-president; Mr. Kaz Zajac, correspondence secretary; Mr. Bogumil Czuprynski, recording secretary; Mr. Leon Bozmowski, member of the Polish Veterans' Society; Mr. Mike Markow, member of the same society; Mr. Kaz Chodorski, member of the Polish Veterans' Society; and Mr. Tad Szczepanski, audit committee member. I would now ask that we provide them the traditional warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

Thank you.

1:50

The Clerk: Oral Question Period.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a few more introductions to go here, which I was just alerted to. We have Calgary-Mountain View, who has a quick intro. If you can be brief, then, Clerk, let's allow them to do that quickly. I think the hon. leader of the New Democrats had a brief one as well. I'll allow it, these two. Please proceed quickly.

Dr. Swann: It's my pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to introduce to you and through you to the House three women who are here from the Michener Centre: Eileen Broberg, Mabel Stanway, and Carolyn Cordell. Eileen is attending on behalf of her daughter Donalda, who is a resident of the Michener Centre, and says that if her daughter is removed from Michener, it will be a death sentence. I would ask each of them to rise, and we'll give them the traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: One more, hon. member?

Dr. Swann: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Beth Gignac is project lead for cultural transformation with the city of Calgary, a bright, articulate progressive who ran for Alberta Liberals in 2008 and is passionate about public service. She is committed to open, transparent, accountable government and concerned with social justice. Let's have her rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the great pleasure of introducing to you and through you to this Assembly four members of the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional, or FMLN, which is the governing party of El Salvador. Zoila Beatriz Quijada Solis is one of the founding members of the FMLN and a legislative representative in that country. Liduvina Magarin is also a legislative representative and a member of the Secretariat of International Relations for the FMLN. Edwin Leonel Viscarra and Leonel Viscarra are both representatives of the FMLN residing here in Edmonton. I would now ask all four to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, could I have unanimous consent for one more brief introduction? Does anyone object?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont, very quickly. Thank you.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a very dedicated volunteer from the city of Leduc, Mr.

Mark O'Flanagan. I had the privilege of presenting to Mark today a Queen's Diamond Jubilee medal. He's been a paramedic, a firefighter, a volunteer, a nurse, and a STARS volunteer flight crew member as well as a manager, and he was a first responder at the Evergreen trailer park after the 1987 tornado. Mark is here with his wife, sister-in-law, and two nephews as well as Rick Sereda from the fire department in Leduc. Mark O'Flanagan, receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition for your first main set of questions.

Prescription Drug Coverage

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Health continues to undermine public confidence in health care with his ham-fisted approach to setting drug prices. The minister's ad campaign just doesn't tell the truth about what's happening: higher prices, pharmacy closures, and eventually drug shortages. Yesterday the Premier even acknowledged that there will be price increases under the plan. She said: you may see increases in some and decreases in others. We have many, many examples of increases. Will the Premier pull the government's deceptive advertising that tells Albertans their drug prices are going down?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this is the difference between why Albertans voted for us a year ago today and not the opposition. You can't make decisions in the short term. You have to make decisions that fundamentally change health care to ensure that it's sustainable so that we can continue to have a public system. That is what our plan is doing, and that is the information that we'll share with Albertans.

Ms Smith: Albertans certainly did not vote to have their drug prices go up.

Mr. Speaker, the turmoil in the pharmacy industry is causing stress for patients as well as for pharmacists. Alberta's across-the-board centrally mandated drug prices, what we've been calling Fred-icare, will mean pharmacy closures, mostly in rural Alberta. Now, the Premier's own caucus members must be telling her the same thing by now. Can she tell us, all of us, how closing rural pharmacies is good medicine for Albertans?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, as usual what we see from the opposition are false suppositions. We have an incredibly representative caucus that's worked very hard with business and community leaders in communities across this province both in urban and rural Alberta. What we see is a sensible plan to transition to lower drug costs for Albertans, better accountability for taxpayers' dollars, and a more sustainable health care system. That's what we're delivering.

Ms Smith: No. Pharmacists in those ridings would sure hope their MLAs would speak up for them because there is additional uncertainty now because of the pharmacare plan that was part of the budget. Now, it appears to be another broken promise. The Premier keeps saying that this new seniors' drug plan will be better than the current system, but we keep hearing that seniors are going to end up paying more out of pocket for their drugs. What assurances can the Premier give us that her new pharmacare plan won't be as badly botched as the Health minister's generic drug plan?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, it's clear that the new plan going forward is going to be a plan for all Albertans, not just senior driven; this is for all Albertans. We're going to have an advantage for so many Albertans that don't have a plan right now. We know that there are seniors right now that are in the most need that are looking forward to this program with no deductions and that there will be many seniors that will have a great benefit from this new plan.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Well, hopefully we'll see the details soon, so we can see whether there's truth in that.

Health System Executive Expenses

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, yesterday we also asked the Premier about health executives' expenses, and she said, "We've asked the opposition . . . to ensure that all appropriate steps are taken to provide the information to independent agencies that can take a look at these matters." It kind of sounds like she's saying that it's the job of the Official Opposition to hold health executives to account for their lavish expenses. While we accept that we have been a very effective opposition, why is it that the Premier is not asking the Health minister to do his job?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to say that I was pretty excited a year ago to see the Wildrose become the Official Opposition in this province. I'll tell you that when we take a look at the issues that have been part of a previous government's decisions with respect to Alberta Health Services and agencies that were in existence seven or eight years ago, we want to make sure that wherever there were decisions taken that were not appropriate, we're able to deal with those. That's why we're looking for and seeking independent advice. The Minister of Health has made that announcement. Of course, if there's any information, we'd be very welcome to receive it. Alberta Health Services is doing that work, too.

Ms Smith: Okay. Here is the kind of expense we'd like to recover. In 2005 Joanne Stalinski, VP of wellness, expensed $4,000 for the eight-day Hoffman process program that examines your childhood to "allow you to have the choice to let go of many limiting belief systems so that you can enjoy the banquet of life instead of just settling for the crumbs." Now, I'm not sure that any Albertans would get reimbursed for that, but 18 months later, in 2007, the expense was approved by Jack Davis. What does the Premier think about that one?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, as President of Treasury Board I am talking to the minister on a day-to-day basis. As the Premier has said, the minister has said that he will seek legal advice as to the possible collection of expenses that were approved by a health region that no longer exists for some expenses that are almost eight years old. Different than the opposition, we've actually brought into this Legislature the expense policy that is the gold standard of Canada. Alberta Health Services was one of the first agencies to adopt that standard. We're looking to the future, not the past like some other parties.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Questions ought not call for opinion. Please proceed with your third.

Ms Smith: Except they've asked Justice Wachowich to look at all of the expenses going back to the other health regions.

It is clear to me now that the Premier really does expect the opposition to do all of the work of finding all of the examples of all of the expenses that Judge Wachowich can study for possible repayment. Okay. If she wants us to do this for her, that's fine, but we could use a little help. Will the Premier give us a hand by ordering the release of all of the expenses of all of the executives of all of the health regions going back to 2005? Help us out.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, once again, as the hon. member is talking about expenses that happened five, six, seven, eight years ago, we have to ensure that we are protecting the privacy of some of those individuals. We need legal advice as to whether or not you can actually recoup expense from an organization that no longer exists.

Coming to the present, again, this government, this Premier have instituted the toughest expense policies and disclosures of any jurisdiction in Canada, and we are very proud of that. We're the leader in Canada under expense policy.

2:00 Health Services Performance Measures

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, in 2008, when this government announced the creation of the AHS health superboard, they promised major cost savings and efficiencies at all levels. Well, the very well-respected Canadian Institute for Health Information just released a report showing that since AHS has taken over, hospital costs have soared by 49 per cent, placing us a full 40 per cent higher than the national average. To the Minister of Finance or the Premier: how on earth can you and your government claim that centralizing health care has saved taxpayers and improved patient care when all indicators show that, in fact, the opposite is true?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, all indicators do not show that. As a matter of fact, when you have nine health regions – and I'll use some common sense, which the hon. members opposite don't have – that have nine different human resources platforms, that have nine different accounting platforms, that have a total of nine different CEOs, obviously, when you bring them together, you have some transition costs, which you would incur in any business that is amalgamating, but after that you're actually achieving the savings you desired in the first place. They are calculable, they are there, and we're very proud of what we've done.

Mr. Anderson: A 49 per cent increase. Unbelievable.

Given that this Canadian Institute for Health Information study shows that since AHS has taken over, the amount spent on long-term care for seniors has actually not even kept up with inflation, let alone seniors' population growth, and given that it is common knowledge that it costs far more to care for seniors in a hospital setting than in a proper long-term care facility, Premier, why does this government continue to chronically underfund long-term care for seniors while wasting billions unnecessarily by housing seniors in crowded and expensive hospital beds?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, we know and all members of the Assembly know that the commitment going back to 2010 was to build over 5,300 spaces for seniors, modern spaces, not 10 by 10 rooms and a bathroom down the hallway, modern spaces for couples to live in. The investment is in the budget. We've made that commitment, and we will continue to make that commitment.

Mr. Anderson: Nice to hear the Premier actually answer a question once in a while.

Given that this government is always asking us for ways to be more efficient with taxpayer dollars, will they try this? Instead of spending billions on new hospital beds, how about reallocating some of those infrastructure dollars into new long-term care accommodations for seniors? Not only would this result in better care for seniors, but it would also open up hundreds of existing acute-care hospital beds without having to build a whole bunch of expensive new ones. It will help seniors and improve health care while saving money. Premier, will you try this common-sense Wildrose solution?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I hope the member is not talking about the new Whitecourt care facility that we're going to build, because that wouldn't go over very well in my community.

We are making a very concerted effort to open up new spaces across the province. The next round of approvals will be in communities like Slave Lake, communities like Valleyview, communities like Rocky Mountain House, communities like Calgary, communities like Red Deer, and the list goes on. We'll have over a thousand new spaces that we'll be able to cut the ribbon on together, colleagues. Together. We'll all be very, very proud of that.

The Speaker: The leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Funding for Education

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I asked some questions about this government's broken promises. Instead of admitting that they didn't keep their word, the Premier and the Minister of Human Services resorted to the usual boilerplate and rhetoric, exactly the sort of the thing that led 71 per cent of Albertans to be dissatisfied with this government on trust and accountability. I think it will be therapeutic for Albertans and for the Premier herself if she were just to admit to one broken promise. To the Premier: you promised all-day kindergarten in every school within one year of becoming Premier. You didn't deliver. Will you please admit here today that you broke your promise?

Ms Redford: You know, Mr. Speaker, the commitment that we made to Albertans was to build families and communities, to continue investing in sustainable education, and to make sure that early childhood development was one of our six priorities. We believe that all-day kindergarten is a very important part of that. We have all-day kindergarten currently in more than half the school boards across this province, and we've given the option to parents in most of those jurisdictions to ensure that they have the choice. Now, we're going to continue to implement that. There's no doubt that we had some tough choices to make, but we're committed to making that program work.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was great to see the Premier actually get up and answer a question and sort of admit to not fulfilling her promise – more boilerplate, more rhetoric – so I guess the Premier won't take ownership of that broken promise.

Let's try again, and remember: confession, Premier, is good for the soul. Deep cuts are the order of the day for postsecondary institutions. Courses are being eliminated. Students, faculty staff, and administrators are in an uproar. To the Premier. You promised stable, predictable funding for postsecondary institutions and again you have failed to do so in the most spectacular fashion. Will you please admit . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the commitment that we made to Albertans, including postsecondary institutions, was to ensure that we were focusing taxpayers' dollars building research and innovation and ensuring that we had the best postsecondary system in the country. We still fund our postsecondary system at a higher level per capita than any other jurisdiction in Canada. We are working with presidents to make sure that we are excellent across this province. That was what we were going to achieve, that was our commitment, and we're delivering.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, these are simple questions. They are defunding postsecondary by more than $130 million today than yesterday. Nothing but boilerplate and rhetoric, Premier, to defend the indefensible.

You have broken nearly every significant promise that you have made in your quest to get elected, Premier. You are either completely incapable or completely unwilling to be straight with Albertans, and as the polls show, you have lost the trust and support of the majority of Albertans. To the Premier. Nobody voted for any of the things you are doing today. How can you claim any sort of mandate moving forward?

Ms Redford: This is what Albertans voted for. They voted for building infrastructure, increased health and education spending, family care clinics, insulin pump therapy, pharmacare, lower prescription drugs, a new Education Act, a tuition freeze, transparent government, whistle-blower legislation, a seniors' property tax deferral, stable municipal funding. Mr. Speaker, the list goes on, and we've delivered.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, they voted to stop the lake of fire, and that's where it ends.

Seniors' Drug Coverage

Mr. Mason: Yesterday, answering questions about her broken promise to retain seniors' drug benefits, the Premier said, "We saw the opportunity in the past 12 months to do something better than what . . . was in place before." But, Mr. Speaker, the new plan is similar to the old plan, which she promised seniors she would reject. My question is to the Premier. How is forcing thousands of seniors to pay an arm and a leg for prescription medication better for them?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this is wild speculation. The pharmacare program that will be introduced and developed with community stakeholders is providing better access to Albertans right across this province whether they are seniors or not. We know it's important to ensure that people have access to medication. We also know that it's important for that medication to be affordable, which is why we're doing the work with respect to the costing of generic drugs. What we would like to see from the opposition is some thoughtful consideration of an integrated plan that will actually serve Albertans better, which is exactly what we're delivering.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, they're cutting $180 million out of the program and spreading it over more groups, so clearly thousands and thousands of seniors are going to lose their drug coverage, directly contradicting what this Premier said in the last election. Will the Premier do the right thing and reverse this cut and retain the existing seniors' drug program?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we don't think that the existing plan serves Albertans well. We're going to ensure that we move forward with pharmacare because this allows us to put in place a sustainable plan for public health care that allows for people to get support for medication with reduced deductibles. That's what matters to Albertans, and that's what we'll continue with.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a budget cut, not a better program. Seniors shouldn't have to pay for this government's broken promises. Instead of continuing to break your promises, Premier, why don't you do the right thing and reinstate the universal drug coverage program for Alberta seniors and then extend it to others?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this is exactly why we need to introduce these changes. We can't keep going back. Whether it's the Leader of the Opposition or the leader of the NDP opposition, what we can't do is to continue to maintain the status quo or, worse still, revert to programs that worked 20 years ago, when there were 2 million people in the province. We're a growing province. We know that we have a thriving economy. We know we have vulnerable people in our communities, and this pharmacare plan is going to support seniors and youth and provide access to 20 per cent of Albertans that can't get medication now.

Outcomes-based Student Learning Assessments

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, there is a battle brewing in the Battle River school division, and it all has to do with student assessment. You see, the division is moving toward a style of grading that uses achievement levels instead of the traditional percentages. Neither parents and teachers or students are very happy about this. To the Minister of Education: are you and Alberta Education in favour of this new form of assessment?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, this government works with the school boards, and we respect the important job that they do on the ground. It's unfortunate that this member doesn't have the same confidence in those boards and those local teachers and those principals and those parents to be able to make those decisions. Those decisions are local decisions. It seems that they respect local decision-making only if they don't disagree with the local decision.

Mr. McAllister: I love it when a plan comes together, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the superintendent says they are moving to this assessment at the direction of Alberta Education: "The change to outcome-based assessment is not specific to [Battle River school division]. We are following the philosophy and direction of Inspiring Education." Minister, why are you implementing this new way of grading our kids when clearly it is a direction that parents, students, and teachers do not want?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'd encourage the hon. member to actually read the Inspiring Education report. Yes, there are lots of fantastic ideas in there that Albertans have brought forward and that are setting the expectation that we will deliver on. That's why it's very important that an Education critic should actually know what's in it. The philosophies that are in Inspiring Education are not a regulation or a direction from Alberta Education. If a local school board makes an interpretation and wants to report in certain ways or assess in certain ways their kids to their parents, those are local decisions and need to be taken to the local table.

Mr. McAllister: Minister, I don't mean to make this personal. I asked a question on behalf of the people of Battle River.

Maybe we need some clarity. That could be what we need. Will you set the record straight and tell boards that they are not being directed to pursue this new type of assessment or implement this no-zero policy like the Battle River superintendent says Alberta Education is telling them to do?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we did have questions similar to this with the Dorval case, and the answers are similar. It's that the province sets standardized assessment four times during that student's life in their K to 12 education, at grades 3, 6, and 9 PATs and the diploma exams. Outside of that, the local assessment, the day-to-day assessment, the day-to-day reporting and engagement with the parents is critical, and it's critical that the local school boards be empowered to do that with their local administration. Now, this party may have flip-flopped on that, but it seemed to me that about a year ago they were strong advocates of local decision-making. Now if they disagree with the local decision, they want me to step in. On this side we're principled. We believe in the work local school boards are doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Review of Government Achievements

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This time last year Albertans made a choice to build on our strengths and build for the future. They rejected the build-nothing approach and the one-way ticket on the Social Credit DeLorean back to the future, an approach that would have closed the door on the South Health Campus, family medicine, and extra ER capacity. This Social Credit rerun would have cut $400 million from local communities, eroding our roads, public transit, sewers that keep our cities clean, and our parks that we trust to be safe and well maintained. To the Minister of Infrastructure: tell me how building modern health facilities, quality schools, safe highways, and other important infrastructure is better than the build-nothing approach?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, our province is growing rapidly. That's why we're building new health care facilities across this province, opening schools for more than 13,000 students, and building 3,000 kilometres of new and improved roads. It's simple: either we want world-class education or we don't; either we want state-of-the-art health facilities or we don't; either we want newer and safer roads or we don't. That's why Albertans rejected the opposition's build-nothing approach and gave us the mandate to build a better, stronger Alberta.

Mr. Fraser: Given that we must build Alberta and that one year of opposition policy would have meant that 35 new schools wouldn't have been started, potentially leaving thousands of students out in the cold, and given that the Leader of the Opposition said that our very best and most skilled teachers are no longer in the classroom delivering those front-line services, can the Minister of Education explain to me how working with our teachers and building our world-class education system is a better approach?

Mr. J. Johnson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are building Alberta. The most important thing for me and what we've heard from Alberta parents and families is that we put students first. The over 35 capital announcements since last spring are going to add 8,000 new spaces, and that doesn't include the 14 new schools that we opened this year. In addition to that, this year we've passed the Education Act. We've put the $107 million, now $110 million, back into Education, as the Premier promised. We're planning and we're going to deliver the 50 new schools and 70 modernizations. The other way we're putting students first is that we're a long ways down the path to inking and finalizing a deal between the ATA and the ASBA. We've been working hard with them, and now over two-thirds of the school boards in the province have signed on to this great deal.

Mr. Fraser: Given that we have to build Alberta, my final question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Given that the opposition questions climate change science, suggesting that the Obama administration is misguided and that we should have a deep discussion that the science is real, and given that the opposition would cut funding for clean energy projects, tell me, Minister: is this helpful at all in getting our products to market?

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjections] I've recognized the hon. minister for the answer. [interjections] Hon. members, they are the government; you are the opposition. The questions that are asked are asked to government members, and anyone from the front bench may answer that.

So would someone from the front bench of government please rise to answer this question?

Mr. Dallas: That would be me, Mr. Speaker. Undoubtedly, the opposition's reckless denials, their disregard for diplomacy, their denouncement of clean technology . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, let's try and re-elevate this level of debate and move on here.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, in 2016 they will get to ask all of the questions.

Opposition Alternatives to Government Policies

Ms Smith: We began voting on the back-in-debt budget last night. The Premier and her Finance minister have returned the province to more borrowing and more debt: $17 billion in savings to be replaced by $17 billion in debt, a sad legacy for our children and grandchildren. Of course, they spin it as building Alberta or going to the capital markets, but it's borrowing, and borrowing is debt. It's been quite a while since I asked this, but I never really did get an answer to my question. What is the plan to pay all of that debt back?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that a party who claims to represent business interests, who claims to represent the fiscal conservatives would try to take away the value of building today for taxpayers and wait until – oh, I don't know – five, six years from now to build the hospital in Whitecourt, to build the hospital in High Prairie, to build the hospital in Strathcona.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, you rose on a point of order at 2:18 p.m., during the hon. Minister of Finance's question.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Let me just explain to everybody in case they don't know where we're at. We're at the one-year anniversary of a lot of new people being elected for the first time. So there's a little bit of anxiety in the air, and we recognize that, but it's no excuse to break any rules or to lower the level of decorum, which we're all striving so hard to maintain, I know.

Hon. minister, would you like to conclude your comments, please?

Mr. Horner: I would love to, Mr. Speaker.

2:20 Opposition Alternatives to Government Policies (continued)

Mr. Horner: You know, rising on a point of order when I point out what they would have done had they been the government is an interesting piece of theatre, but it doesn't do anything about policy for government. [interjections] It's going to be a long day.

The Chambers of Commerce understand it, the Bank of Canada understands it, the federal Minister of Finance understands it. It's unfortunate they don't.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Smith: The Premier and her government are congratulating themselves for their first year in office, and in some areas we congratulate them, too, for adopting so many of Wildrose's good ideas like improving meals and bathing in long-term care, reinstating veterans' hospital parking passes, ending executive bonuses, imposing tough new rules on expenses, and speeding up the twinning of highway 63. When are they going to adopt another of our suggestions and scrap this horrible Fred-icare plan, that will force pharmacies out of business?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, on this side of the House we're looking to conserve the publicly funded health care system. That will make sure that we have some choices, some tough choices for now and tough choices in the future, but we maintain that the publicly paid for system is a system that this side of the House will maintain.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, it's clear that the Official Opposition is making a difference as we put Albertans first. We have another idea we'd like the government to accept. How about they take politics out of their infrastructure spending plan and create a full, public, prioritized project list using objective, published criteria? When can we expect that good idea?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, as I've explained before – and members opposite have gone to the website and looked at our approved capital plans – there's a list of all the projects listed. That's a lot better list than the opposition's capital plan, that has no projects listed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Tobacco Reduction Strategy

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, science has well documented the harmful consequences of tobacco use. Campaigns to dissuade tobacco use are persuasive, yet tobacco use remains strong with 17 per cent of Canadians reporting that they are currently smoking. My questions are to the Associate Minister of Wellness. What tobacco reduction initiatives are currently under way in Alberta, and how do you decide what tactics to use?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member, sadly, is correct. In Canada tobacco is the leading cause of preventable disease and death. In Alberta we've created a multifaceted approach to fight exactly that. The strategy features three priority legislative initiatives: restricting the sale of flavoured tobacco, prohibiting tobacco sales to minors, and protecting children from second-hand smoke in vehicles. We will ensure that the legislation will be well thought out and will be enforceable. There are other initiatives focused on discouraging Albertans from starting to smoke in the first place as well as helping them to quit.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, my second question to the same minister: in these tough economic times, how much is this strategy costing the taxpayers of Alberta?

Mr. Rodney: A fair question, Mr. Speaker. I consider that we should think about the price of not implementing tobacco reduction initiatives because not only will it cost taxpayers more in the long run, but it also puts a huge strain on the health care system and the quality of life for all Albertans. Tobacco contributes not only to heart disease but also to several forms of cancer, resulting in approximately 3,000 deaths each year in Alberta alone. Those numbers are staggering. They're unacceptable. To facilitate the implementation of the strategy, the department will spend $500,000 this year, and there are additional funds available as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much. My final question to the same minister: are we seeing real returns on our investment, and what, really, is the end goal strategy, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Rodney: Thank you again to the hon. member. We need to measure progress; it's crucial. We do have ambitious performance targets, I want everyone to know. For Albertans 15 and older we're looking to decrease from 19 to 12 per cent; for those 12 to 19, from 13 to 6 per cent; for Albertans 20 to 24, from 30 to 20 per cent; for pregnant women, from 17 down to 11 per cent. Let's face it. Until it gets a little closer to zero, none of us will be truly satisfied. There are many other key performance targets, one of them being the estimated per capita tobacco sales. We want that to be decreased, chopped in half, as a matter of fact. We're confident that we will reduce tobacco use and give knowledge and the tools and the incentives to Albertans so that they can enjoy a much greater degree of wellness.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Sign Language Interpreter Program

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a result of cuts to postsecondary Lakeland College will not continue its sign language interpreter program for the deaf community. Without these interpreters simple, basic access to communication, a right guaranteed by the United Nations, would be in jeopardy. The Premier stated in her budget that it would not affect vulnerable people. That's simply not true. It's affected people with developmental disabilities, seniors, and, now it appears, the deaf and hard-of-hearing community. To the Premier: why don't you just admit that your government is not interested in protecting vulnerable Albertans? In fact, your budget just makes life more difficult for them.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fact of the matter is that this Premier is very interested in protecting vulnerable people. This government is very interested in protecting vulnerable people. But our project is not to just add money and stir. Our project is to take a look at everything we're doing through results-based budgeting, through our social policy framework process, through discussions with Albertans about what poverty means to them and what poverty looks like in their communities, talking with real people about the real issues they face and finding real solutions for them. Yes, in a tough budget there are tough decisions to be made. But this government cannot be accused of not protecting vulnerable people. We put vulnerable Albertans first.

Mr. Hehr: Well, given that one of the stated goals of Campus Alberta was to preserve the uniqueness of Alberta's schools and given that it is the only program of this type in Alberta, will you ensure that this program is properly funded and protect the basic rights of our deaf community?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that the minister has said that any program before its suspended has to come to him. I can tell you that the minister has committed that he will look at the need for this type of program in Alberta, and he will be exploring all available options during the review to suspending the Lakeland program.

Mr. Hehr: Well, given that the need for this program is that people who are deaf and hard of hearing need sign language interpretation and the fact that this is the only program available in Alberta and the fact that these sign language interpreters are demanded almost two weeks in advance, that seems a compelling enough case. I hope you can assure us that the minister, because of these reasons, will not be cutting this program at Lakeland College. Is that what I'm hearing today?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I'm saying is that the minister said that he will review this very closely. I think it's important to understand that board-governed institutions like Lakeland College make their own decisions. They have to look at their own budgets and make the decisions based on what they see for their day-to-day operations. But I know that the minister has committed to reviewing this very seriously.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, who almost lost her spot. You're up next.

Funding for Postsecondary Education

Ms. Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, today the University of Lethbridge did what this PC government refuses to do, tell us how the Premier's cuts to postsecondary education will hurt southern Alberta students and their families. For instance, the university plans to increase their student fees by $200 per student per year, a shocking 250 per cent increase, which more than offsets this Premier's bait-and-switch tuition freeze. To the Premier: why won't she admit that the tuition freeze means nothing and that Alberta students will pay the price for this Premier's broken promises one way or the other?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister has made it quite clear that tuitions will be frozen. The minister has also made it clear that the universities or the colleges will not be able to just increase their fees on the backs of students.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, they just did today.

Given that the University of Lethbridge also announced today that they will have 34 fewer professors next year, increasing class size while cutting quality and choice, and given that this comes right after both the Premier and her Minister of Incredible Claims stated that the loss of $147 million could not possibly hurt our education system, will the minister admit that Albertans can be forgiven for concluding that neither the Premier nor the minister can be counted on as reliable sources of information when it comes to the real impact of her broken promises?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Both our Premier and our minister have been very clear on the importance of post-secondary education to this province and to all our students. Both our Premier and our minister have said that postsecondary decreases in the budget will not be on the backs of our students, and we will continue to offer first-class education in this province.

2:30

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that today the U of L announced that they face a $20 million deficit by 2015 – that's 20 per cent of their budget – and given that they've said that computer labs will close, libraries will stop buying new books, faculty research funds will disappear, and access will suffer, why won't the minister finally come clean and admit what everybody else already knows, that the Premier's broken promises mean only a more expensive, less accessible, and lower quality postsecondary education for all Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our minister has met with all 26 presidents from the different institutions. I know that they're working very closely to look at some of the issues that are facing them and at implementing the strategies and implications of Campus Alberta. Again, those will not be done on the backs of the students in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Edmonton-McClung.

Elder Abuse Strategy

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Elder abuse is one of the darkest issues facing senior Albertans. This type of abuse isn't always physical in nature. Often it takes the form of financial fraud, and in some cases seniors are victimized by those they know. The people who are most often taken advantage of are the ones that are least able to speak up for themselves. Can the Associate Minister of Seniors please explain why seniors across Alberta are still waiting for the implementation of the elder abuse strategy despite its inclusion in the Premier's mandate letters to both Seniors and Health?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, the member raises a very serious concern. I will say that the majority of elder abuse comes in the form of financial abuse. It's been an issue that we've faced for many, many years, and I would encourage all members to phone our hotline, phone the RCMP when these issues arise. It is an issue that I'm working towards. We've had consultations around the province, and we're working closely with police forces in the province.

Mrs. Towle: Given that the implementation of the elder abuse strategy was a so-called priority initiative for the Seniors ministry last year and it is a so-called priority initiative for the Health ministry this year, will any minister finally do something about elder abuse? Or like another waffling Liberal politician, Stéphane Dion, do you find it difficult to actually make priorities?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, elder abuse is a very serious issue. Like I said earlier, if there's anybody aware of a senior being abused, contact the police services immediately, contact my offices. We'll do something about this.

On the overarching piece of the governance and the issue of elder abuse policy: we're moving forward on that file. It may not be as quick as many would like it, but I want to get the issue right.

Mrs. Towle: So elders should call the phone line while they're still being abused while they wait for implementation of the elder abuse strategy.

Given that an organization in Medicine Hat has already said that they have taken it upon themselves to investigate 70 complaints of seniors' financial abuse last year alone, when will the government recognize that this is an actual problem and start protecting vulnerable Albertans?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, we know it's an issue. We know it's an ongoing issue, and that's why I've committed to working with the police agencies across this province. That's why I've committed with our staff that we're going to take this issue very, very seriously, and we have been. We've been in consultation with groups in Medicine Hat, groups in Grande Prairie, groups all across this province. We'll take this issue on as a piece of work that needs to be concluded.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by Medicine Hat.

Oil Sands Royalties

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's oil sands developments demand complex planning and substantial investments, often billions, to undertake. In order to offset these massive project costs, a prepayment and a postpayment period is given to recover allowable costs for a given project plus a return allowance. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. How many oil sands projects have reached the postpayment period since the royalty regime of 2009 was implemented?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, a well-designed royalty system actually strikes the right balance between returning a share of the profits to the resource owner while also encouraging development and creating jobs and economic growth. Once payout is achieved, the producer pays a higher royalty rate. Today there are 115 approved oil sands royalty projects, 55 of which are in the prepayout stage and 60 of which are in the postpayout stage. I would say that the context within which all of these companies are working contributes directly to 1 in 6 Albertans having jobs directly tied to the energy sector.

Mr. Xiao: To the same minister: based on today's prices, how many oil sands projects are expected to reach the postpayout period in the next two years?

Mr. Hughes: Well, it's an interesting question, Mr. Speaker, given that, unlike conventional oil and gas development, oil sands developments require massive investment, as the hon. member has identified, often billions of dollars, and may require many years before full production can be realized. Currently we expect that there will be one more project that will reach payout during 2013, and then the next one after that we expect to reach payout in 2015.

Mr. Xiao: Again to the same minister: how significant of an impact can those postpayout projects have on our natural resource revenues, and by how much?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, these projects and this source of revenue are a very important source of revenue for the province of Alberta. Postpayout projects generally pay more royalties than prepayout projects and can reach 35 to 40 per cent in royalties at the maximum. Of course, this is directly affected by many factors, including particularly the price. I'm happy to report, though, that over the next three fiscal years the total royalty revenue from all oil sands projects will amount to approximately $15 billion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by Edmonton-Riverview.

Medicine Hat Schools

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This PC government likes to break promises to the people of Medicine Hat. Whether it's a new hospital, a new overpass, or a detox centre, this government announces, delays, reannounces, then delays again. In the government's evaluation of Alberta's schools six schools in Medicine Hat are now rated in poor physical condition, yet this PC back-in-debt budget cuts maintenance funding by 20 per cent. With this government's promise to refurbish 70 schools put on the back burner, what will the Minister of Infrastructure do to stop these schools from falling apart?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me be very clear. First of all, there are no schools in Alberta that pose a health or safety risk to any of our children. Health and safety is our number one concern. We have a facility condition index that's done by every school, and there are only 15 out of 1,500 that are rated as poor. I'm sure those are the ones that'll be upgraded in the 70 mods.

Mr. Pedersen: Minister, you answered earlier – and it is simple – that you can repair schools now, or you can rebuild them later at a higher cost.

Mr. Speaker, given that this government doesn't have a public, prioritized project list and fails to give full details on which 70 schools will be receiving renovations and why, can the minister tell the families in Medicine Hat that their six schools are near or at the top of this secret list?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, I work closely with my colleague from Education, he works with the school boards in the province, and they have a priority list. As soon as we have the budget passed in the House, then we can announce the projects we're carrying forward. I'm sure the people of Medicine Hat will find that out.

Mr. Pedersen: Minister, you're picking winners and losers behind closed doors.

Mr. Speaker, how on earth can the minister break his promises to hard-working families who rely on these schools for the education of their children when he has been busy watching the cost of new MLA offices in the federal building skyrocket to pay for rooftop gardens and fancy auditoriums?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, I don't want this party across the way scaring the good people of this province that their children are not in safe conditions in our schools. All schools pose no health or safety risk, and I hope they don't start fearmongering like they have done on many other projects.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Interoperable Information Technology Services

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General's justice innovation and modernization of services program, known as JIMS, was established to address old and antiquated IT systems used in the Alberta courts. To the minister: with the cancellation of the JIMS program how will the ministry reform issues in our courts that are backlogged by paper-laden systems and inefficient IT systems?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to see that this member as a new MLA is paying attention to some of these important issues. The cancellation of the JIMS program saves $39 million. [interjections] Many people talk about saving money, but again we have done it in my ministry. Earlier this month I released the report Injecting a Sense of Urgency, that talks about some of the major recommendations for the justice system. [interjections] No one group or IT project can ease the burden, but JIMS to date has implemented 15 projects, including case management. We're going to have to stop it there in the interests of fiscal responsibility.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I appreciate your enthusiasm today, but there are just too many conversations going across the bow from the government over to the opposition, from the opposition to the government. Please, let's just curtail those for a few more minutes.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, you have the floor.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. And I do indeed pay attention.

Mr. Speaker, given that it is now a year into the Justice and Solicitor General merger and IT operations are still operating as separate entities and with well-documented successes of shared service initiatives, to the Minister of Service Alberta: if we can't share services in a single ministry, what is the status of the shared services across all of government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to first of all congratulate this hon. member today on celebrating his first anniversary as a Member of the Legislative Assembly. On behalf of all Edmontonians I'd like to say that members of the public are very pleased that he's in the Assembly and not out patrolling the streets anymore.

Mr. Speaker, he asks a very good question. The fact is that we want to get maximum value for taxpayers' dollars, and 80 per cent of government IT users are on one system, one domain. We're working to ensure that we get maximum value for our systems.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to applaud the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General on his leadership in ending the Alberta integrated information initiative. While well intended, it has however pursued an ill-conceived direction. Has the minister committed to interoperability and open-data standards?

Mr. Denis: Well, first off, it's a very rare occasion that a lawyer gets a compliment from a police officer, so I want to thank the member for that.

This is a rather tough and bold budget, and as the minister I need to sort through what are the nice-to-haves and what are the must-haves. I think that this member would agree that our number one priority is keeping police on the streets, keeping prosecutors in the courtrooms, and actually even adding more judges. Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what we've done.

Now, as a sworn officer this member knows that communication is paramount to law enforcement. His suggestion dangerously suggests that what works in the United States would work in Canada. Realistically, Mr. Speaker, that isn't the case. We have to have a made-in-Alberta solution.

Public-private Partnerships

Mr. Barnes: It's no wonder Albertans don't trust this government. The Minister of Transportation has a different story every time he is asked to explain the extra costs for Edmonton's Anthony Henday ring road. First, the minister said that an extra hundred million dollars was needed because "it was only after the final approval was received that the total cost of it was clear." When asked the same question in estimates, the minister said that the additional money was needed because of the vagaries of the weather. To the Premier. Which is it: poor planning, bad weather, or something else entirely?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, what I can tell you about transportation in this province is that we've invested about $3 billion annually in road projects like the Calgary and the Edmonton ring roads. As a matter of fact, those are great examples of P3 projects, which I know the opposition supports and, one could argue, is taking on debt. That P3 philosophy was started by one of our Premiers, Ralph Klein, who I know they also support.

Mr. Barnes: This government just can't keep its story straight when it comes to public-private partnerships. Given that yesterday the Finance minister said, "The idea is to get the greatest value for the taxpayer both today and in the future," and given that the Minister of Infrastructure admitted the upfront costs of a P3 are higher than a traditional build, how are Albertans getting the best deal when they're paying more today and more in the future with interest payments?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's actually a good question. It kind of caught me a little bit off guard. I would commend the hon. member to take a look at how we deal with net present values, how we figure out what the value is today of something that is stretched out over a 30-year period of time, what the value is of transferring the risk of construction from the taxpayer to the proponents of the actual facility and the agreements that we have in there to maintain that facility for the next 30 years. We are putting the risk on the proponents, not the taxpayers. We are getting great value for taxpayers.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that the Infrastructure minister said that every P3 project has been on time and on budget and given that the Transportation minister recently asked for an extra $100 million for the Henday because, quote, there was a hundred million dollars less approved than was required to complete this P3 project, how does this government expect Albertans to have confidence in P3s when it can't keep its planning in order or its story straight?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, for many of the P3 programs that we do under the contract, there are codicils for whether the weather is working for or against and whether or not there are engineering issues that they may hit. I'm not familiar with the exact circumstances under the hundred million that the hon. member is talking about. I'm sure the Minister of Transportation will be able to provide him with that. He probably did in estimates. We had, as I'll talk about a little bit later, some 70 hours' worth of estimates, where the hon. member had his opportunity.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe I heard the bells ring, so that concludes question period for today. [interjections] You would like to continue question period? [interjections] You know, don't start your celebration too early, okay?

One of the members has requested we revert to introductions briefly. Is anyone opposed to that?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, please proceed.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Legislature the hard-working students from Pembina Valley Christian school. They are visiting the Legislature today along with their teacher, Meghan Penner, and parents Dwight Reimer, Mary Reimer, Larry Reimer, Anne Reimer, Roy Friesen, and Shauna Friesen. Would you please give them the warm welcome that they deserve.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Statement by the Speaker

Election Anniversaries

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we go on to Members' Statements and while we still have everyone's attention, I want to draw the public's attention and the colleagues' attention to the special anniversary that is being celebrated today. It is the first election anniversary for a number of members.

I'm going to call their names, ask them to rise, and we can congratulate them all at once. I'll go quickly. The hon. members from Banff-Cochrane, Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, Calgary-Currie, Calgary-Glenmore, Calgary-Hawthwood, Calgary-Hays, Calgary-North West, Calgary-Shaw, Calgary-South East, Calgary-Varsity, Calgary-West, Cardston-Taber-Warner, Chestermere-Rocky View, Cypress-Medicine Hat, Drumheller-Stettler, Edmonton-Calder, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, Edmonton-Gold Bar, Edmonton-Mill Woods, Edmonton-Riverview, Edmonton-South West, Fort McMurray-Conklin, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, Grande Prairie-Smoky, Highwood, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, Lacombe-Ponoka, Little Bow, Livingstone-Macleod, Medicine Hat, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, Sherwood Park, St. Albert, Stony Plain, Strathmore-Brooks, and Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Are there any that I've missed? I hope not.

Hon. members, let's congratulate these first-time members. Congratulations. [applause]

In 30 seconds from now the Clerk will call for Members' Statements.

2:50

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Polish Veterans' Society

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, it's truly my honour and privilege to rise today in recognition of the Polish Veterans' Society, which was established on April 11, 1938, and is celebrating their 75th anniversary. I would like to commend the important leadership of the Polish Veterans' Society and all other affiliated Polish organizations in the community for their steadfast support to strengthen, advance, and preserve the cultural, political, and economic contributions so that they remain recognized and cherished across generations. The Polish Veterans' Society truly exemplifies the essence of the Alberta spirit.

Mr. Speaker, Polish settlement began in the Edmonton region in 1895, and in the decades following, like other cultural groups, many of their family histories were brought to Alberta through immigration. I have often said that the future of our province is unwritten, and I am proud to say that through the dedicated leadership of the Polish Veterans' Society a strong foundation was established to lead the way.

The collective accomplishments of this organization and others include the purchase of the first Polish Hall in 1940 and the grand opening in 1960, the construction of the Polish church in 1954, the opening of the Villa Maria sections at the Polish Veterans Hall and senior citizens home in the 1970s in Edmonton-Decore, and the opening of the Wawel Country Lodge in 1995.

Mr. Speaker, I had the pleasure to be included in their wonderful commemorative celebration on April 6, 2013, to help recognize their achievements and those who served in the military. I commend all individuals from the past, present, and those in the future for their contributions to the Polish Veterans' Society. Thank you to all for adding immeasurably to our city, province, and country. My heartfelt admiration for being great Albertans, great Canadians, and just simply a great community of people that I've had the pleasure to work with along my life's journey.

Congratulations and best wishes for continued success in the many years to come. God bless. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Official Opposition Achievements

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A year ago today Albertans elected the province's largest Official Opposition in a generation. Never before has Alberta seen an Official Opposition so united in purpose and focus on the task we were elected to do. After receiving 34 per cent of the vote in the election a year ago today, we came here to Edmonton with a strong mandate to hold this government to account, and that is precisely what we are doing. Over the last 12 months MLAs on this side of the House have forced the government's hand into making the right decision for Albertans on several occasions. Through dogged determination we've seen backtracks, reversals, retreats, and withdrawals on everything from seniors' care to property rights to justice for victims of crime. Here are just a few of the highlights for the members opposite.

The Education Act. After resisting Wildrose efforts before the election to enshrine parental rights into law, the government finally relented to our much larger Wildrose caucus after the election, recognizing parents as the ultimate decision-makers in their children's education.

Highway 63. The day after our members for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills and Cypress-Medicine Hat issued a report calling for a timeline for the twinning, the Transportation minister did exactly that.

Illegal donations. After constant revelations of shady donations and relentless questioning from our side, the members opposite finally gave in, crafting legislation to report all illegal donations publicly.

I could go on, Mr. Speaker: Bill 50 transmission policy, home-cooked meals for seniors, discounted hospital parking for veterans, stronger rules for government expenses, repayment of egregious health expenses, and justice reforms for violent-crime victims. Getting things done for Albertans: that is what an effective Official Opposition looks like. It's what we were sent here to do. It's what we will keep on doing, and we will prove to Albertans that by 2016 we can be trusted with much more.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Anniversary of Election

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am so pleased to rise today to celebrate the first anniversary of this government's election. I remember this day one year ago as being nerve-racking, exciting, and a bit scary. I was so humbled that the people of Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock gave me the honour of representing them in this amazing place. I remember thinking that I had such a responsibility to bring our shared values and ambitions to this table. After six months I felt a bit like the information intake was like drinking from a fire hose. Today I still feel so honoured to be here.

Albertans gave us an aggressive mandate. Albertans have told us not to back down in the face of adversity or neglect our most vulnerable just because the times get tough. Albertans have told us to balance fiscal responsibility with the need to build Alberta in good times and bad. That's what we've done, Mr. Speaker. We have had to make some tough decisions in light of our fiscal reality, but we've stuck to our values, and we haven't turned our back on our promises.

We promised Albertans no new taxes, and we've kept that promise. Budget 2013 has committed $503 million over the next three years for 50 new schools and 70 modernizations. We promised family care clinics, and we've kept that promise with $235 million in Budget 2013. We promised to protect vulnerable Albertans, and that's what we're doing by providing over a hundred million dollars for outreach support services, housing, and emergency and/or transitional shelters. We promised Alberta whistle-blower legislation, and we've delivered on that promise. We promised the twinning of highway 63, and Budget 2013 has provided funding to accelerate that twinning. I'm proud to stand in this House and say that we've made promises, and we will continue to deliver on them.

Mr. Speaker, this is the first of a four-year mandate. In order to be thoughtful and thorough and with Albertans' priorities in mind, we will continue the efforts in the years to come. We didn't promise to do it all within the first year. With three years left to do that, we are confident that we will.

Thank you.

St. George's Day

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, today millions of people around the world will pay tribute to the Christian martyr St. George. St. George was a Roman soldier who was imprisoned, tortured, and put to death on the orders of Emperor Diocletian for protesting the persecution of Christians. He is believed to have been put to death in Lydda, Palestine, on April 23, 303 AD.

Seventeen centuries later the memory and the spirit of St. George live on. In Canada St. George is perhaps best known as the patron saint of England, but countries such as Belgium, Italy, Malta, Georgia, and Spain also revere St. George as a beacon of courage, strength, and truth. In the 11th century St. George was adopted as the patron saint of soldiers, which is appropriate today when we recognize the bravery and dedication of the men and women who serve in our armed forces and willingly put themselves in danger in service of their country. The flag of the international Red Cross has adopted the cross of St. George as its widely known symbol. Accounts of St. George's life are steeped in myth and legend. We've all heard about the slaying of the dragon. This is possibly an allegory of his struggle against the Roman authorities.

In Alberta we're proud that our provincial flag and our coat of arms prominently display the cross of St. George, which is a perpendicular red martyr's cross on a white background. Three other provincial flags, Mr. Speaker, hanging in this Chamber also prominently feature St. George's cross.

Mr. Speaker, St. George exemplified the values that all hon. members of this House should aspire to: courage, conviction, and dedication to one's belief and causes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

2013 Special Olympics Alberta Spring Games

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, the 2013 Special Olympics Alberta Spring Games held this past weekend in Red Deer delivered an exciting and unforgettable weekend for over 1,200 athletes, coaches, and volunteers. The opening ceremonies were just as unforgettable. Imagine the excitement of over 800 athletes as the Olympic torchbearers ran into the Lindsay Thurber high school gym holding the torch high above their heads for all to see. All eyes were focused on the runners as they ran through the stunning honour guard made up of eight law enforcement officers from around the province.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank Jerry Tennant, the chairman of the Red Deer Special Olympics committee for over 32 years and the chairman of the 2013 Games Organizing Committee, and his great team of volunteers for organizing and delivering a highly successful 2013 Special Olympics Spring Games. I would also like to thank Karen Saunders, chair of the Special Olympics Alberta Board of Directors, and the provincial board for helping to make this a very successful games.

Mr. Speaker, did you know that there are 1,500 coaches and volunteers in Alberta who work year-round to give people with an intellectual disability the chance to realize their full potential in sports? Of the 18 official Special Olympics sports the Spring Games include five-pin and 10-pin bowling, basketball, and swimming. The winning athletes in these events now have the opportunity to join Team Alberta at the 2014 Special Olympics Canada Summer Games in Vancouver.

Thank you to the generous sponsors, provincial and local, including the city of Red Deer and the Catholic school board. Thanks to the many volunteers, families, and friends who support the athletes. Congratulations to all the athletes whose team spirit was so great that they cheered for every medal winner regardless of what team they belonged to. You have truly demonstrated the spirit of Alberta, and you have taught us that there is no challenge that can't be overcome. May you always strive to be the very best that you can be.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, did you wish to address the Assembly briefly?

Mr. Hancock: If you insist, Mr. Speaker, I'd ask for unanimous consent to allow us to move past 3 o'clock and complete the Routine.

The Speaker: Hon. members, may we have unanimous consent, as requested by the Government House Leader, to proceed onward and conclude the Routine?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Hearing no objections, let us conclude, then, by proceeding with the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake to hear her statement.

Cancer Awareness and Prevention

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you'll notice, like many other members in the Assembly today and across the aisle and like many guests in the gallery I'm wearing a daffodil pin today. The daffodil is the first flower of spring, and for cancer patients it's a symbol of hope. April is cancer awareness month.

Despite great strides in cancer research and prevention this disease remains one of the gravest diagnoses a patient can receive. This year over 16,000 Albertans will be diagnosed with cancer, and sadly over 6,000 of them will succumb to the disease. These patients will travel a long and life-altering road to recovery. Many of them will survive to see the daffodils bloom again. Too many of them will not.

Cancer awareness month gives us the opportunity to unite under one common goal, eliminating cancer for good. It also gives us the opportunity to remind cancer patients that they're not alone in their journey, that we're right here, that we support them, and that we have them in our minds.

Prevention is the key. Living a tobacco-free lifestyle remains the single most important thing Albertans can do to prevent cancer. Unfortunately, while overall rates of smoking are going down, Alberta's youth continue to use tobacco at an alarming rate. This year over 2,000 Albertans will be diagnosed with lung cancer and over 1,500 of them will succumb to the disease. Their deaths will be completely preventable. They are our mothers, our fathers, our brothers, our sisters, and our friends. The Canadian Cancer Society would like to highlight the issue of tobacco use this year. As legislators we must continue to work to discourage young people from using tobacco and encourage all current smokers to kick the habit.

My father has throat cancer from smoking, and he breathes through a hole in his throat. Cancer affected us. It affects everyone. I implore all members to take the opportunity to tell their stories and never miss a chance to speak up about cancer and do our part in the fight against cancer.

Albertans, colleagues, and friends, please join me in wearing a daffodil and add your support to cancer research.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with Standing Order 99 the Standing Committee on Private Bills has reviewed the petitions that were presented on Wednesday, April 17, 2013, and as the chair of the committee I can advise the House that the petitions comply with standing orders 90 to 94. However, the petition of Charles Frederick Barth, chair of the members of the Misericordia hospital for the Misericordia Hospital Amendment Act, 2013, has been withdrawn by the petitioner and will not be proceeding.

Mr. Speaker, this is my report.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Calgary-Buffalo and Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a handwritten note – how rare is that in this day and age? – from one of my senior constituents. His name is John Nevakshonoff, and he is one of those people that is currently being provided with medical oxygen by Parkland Respiratory Care. This is an issue that is causing a large number of seniors a great deal of stress because there's quite a bit of scuttlebutt out there about how AHS is going to change around who's delivering this medical oxygen. He's asking me to do what I can to stop this change as I have more power than he does as a senior. I hope that isn't true. I hope he ultimately holds the power in convincing this government to not frighten seniors, as they are doing currently.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is from Nicola Ramsey from Slave Lake. She has been a teacher at the Alberta Distance Learning Centre. She goes through in dramatic fashion both her role and the effects that the 56 per cent cut to this very important program will have on students in this province.

My second tabling is an online petition to stop the cuts to advanced distance learning. I will do a shout-out to Stacy Harper, who has been very passionate about this issue. I hope she's successful in getting the government's attention on this matter.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you'll indulge me, I have two tablings today. I'd like to table 50 more copies of some e-mail submissions that Albertans have sent to the Premier and copied me on. These are just some of the many hundreds of e-mails my office has received. They call on the Premier to honour her government's promise to Albertans not to evict some of Alberta's most vulnerable citizens from their home in Red Deer's Michener Centre. Submissions like this clearly show that keeping the Michener Centre open is a priority for Albertans and that this PC government is clearly out of touch with its broken-promises budget.

My second tabling is the appropriate number of copies of 46 e-mails we received from Albertans who are extremely worried and upset about this PC government's broken promise to seniors. For example, Richard and Brenda from Sherwood Park write: what Premier Redford is doing to seniors is a disgrace. These e-mails show that the government can't be trusted to protect seniors and other vulnerable citizens of Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with the requisite number of copies to present three tablings. The first is from Diana Stinn of the Phoenix Foundation, asking for help in understanding the cuts made to private schools in this budget, which she feels is an unfair action.

The second is from Mrs. Shirley Redford, asking for maintenance of the road to a provincial park, the Police Outpost park in my riding.

Finally, then, Ron Bos, Susan Hamel, and two others from the Rehoboth Christian Ministries are concerned about cutting funds to key programs for persons with developmental disabilities. She feels this is going to have a deleterious impact on their lifestyle.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I believe that concludes the Routine, but we're going to hear at least one point of order.

If the hon. Member for Airdrie wishes to proceed with a citation and his point of order, I believe you're the only one I have today.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The citation is 23(h), (i), and (j), specifically, imputing "false or unavowed motives to another Member" and using "abusive or insulting language . . . likely to create disorder" and introducing a "matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of this Assembly." This issue in question is that the Finance minister specifically listed several projects that he said that the leader of this opposition and this caucus would cut if we were elected, if we were in the government. He specifically noted the Whitecourt hospital, but there were several that he listed. I think that it's clear, Mr. Speaker, that we can't just say things that are flat-out fictitious. It's important that we don't do that. So what I will do in order to help this member is explain for probably the 30th time in here what our capital plan does with regard to that so that he won't, I'm sure, accidentally mislead the public on what that is.

Clearly, we've said many times that we would take all requested health care projects, education projects, road infrastructure projects and put them into an infrastructure priority list based on objective criteria. They'd be listed. They'd be in four different envelopes: health, education, road infrastructure, and a fourth, other category. They'd be listed in the order of need based on objective criteria. Those would be published, and then the $4 billion that we would allocate this year – and it would go up with inflation and population growth – would be allocated to those lists in that order.

Now, unfortunately, we do not have those lists at our disposal because we do not have what the government has access to with all the information that they get that would allow us to prioritize the list properly. We do not have access to that information, nor have we been given it by the government when asked.

Mr. Speaker, clearly it is incorrect for them to say that we would cut any project, because we don't know what's on the list. Now, if they wanted to be able to tell us what we would cut, they could. There's a way out of this. They could themselves publish the infrastructure priority list, and they would say: we would put this much to the infrastructure priority list, and the Wildrose would only put this much to it, and these are the projects that would have to wait an extra year or two years or so forth. They've got that power in their hands to do that, yet they don't do it.

But to say that we're going to cut any specific project is just not true. They've got to publish the list, and then they would be able to tell us what the difference is between what we would spend on infrastructure and what they would spend on infrastructure and how much less or more the capital projects that would be built would be.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's important that that be clarified because it's very unfair for this member to sit in here and say what we would and would not cut when they will not produce the list that would allow them to truthfully make that claim. One thing that certainly would not be on our list is that $350 million new MLA Taj Mahal. That would not be on our priority list.

The Speaker: The hon. minister briefly in response.

Mr. Horner: I will try to be brief, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is correct, and I should apologize for saying which projects they would cut, because with $2 billion in cuts I'm not exactly sure which projects they would cut. It could be the Whitecourt hospital. It could be any schools in Airdrie. It could be schools in my riding. I don't know. They're promising to pay cash for everything, but they're not telling Albertans where they would cut $3 billion out of the operating budget that we currently have before us in the House.

I fail to see where this would be a point of order. It's certainly a point of clarification of what we know they won't do. We don't know, Mr. Speaker, because their plan only has numbers in it and then a list of things that actually don't apply. So it's difficult for me to say what they would cut. All I know is that they would cut about two and a half billion dollars' worth of projects that are on our list.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Yes. Very briefly, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, please, very briefly.

Mr. Hancock: I just wanted to point out that even in the hon. member's submission he contradicted himself. At one stage he said that one shouldn't speak untruths – I think that's a paraphrase of what he said – and then went on to characterize a project as being MLA offices when he knows full well, or he should know if he had any ability to read at all, that the federal building refurbishing is actually going to house a significant number of civil servants now currently housed in the Terrace Building and LAO staff currently housed in the Annex. Time after time after time they have talked about the federal building as being expensive MLA offices, which is patently untrue.

The hon. member is once again raising a point of order to try and clarify – and I understand why he'd want to clarify because their positions have been very murky. South Calgary health campus, for example, very clearly was heard to be cancelled during the last campaign by them. Then they changed their position.

This is another circumstance, Mr. Speaker, where they're trying to change their spots. They're trying to hide the things that they don't think the public will accept, and that's not a point of order. That's just an ongoing battle for them because it's so necessary if they want to ever declare any . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've recognized two members from the government side. I'm going to recognize one final one from the Official Opposition side and then make a ruling on this, assuming no one else is baited into this discussion about points of order.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be very brief. Of course, I rise today to support the point of order under 23(h), (i), and (j) from the Member for Airdrie. I think it's important to clarify. The hon. Finance minister's question: $2 billion separation between the Wildrose and the PC. It's actually $1 billion. He asked to clarify where that would come from. We've talked again and again about corporate subsidies, $2 billion in corporate subsidies to pump CO<sub>2</sub> into the ground; MLA offices, putting a rooftop garden on a building. These are the types of cuts: not specific priorities for Albertans. I think it's very important that we distinguish the differences in priorities. This party wants to put corporate subsidies above schools. This party wants to put MLA offices above hospitals. We just don't support that, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Let me ask and hope there are no others who wish to participate in this. I see none, and I'm grateful for that. I'm sure the rest of the members are as well. Thank you.

Hon. members, we've seen so many occasions where, really, points of order start out as a point of order, perhaps, but factually they become points of clarification, which is, I think, what the case is here. You would be very familiar with previous rulings that I and previous Speakers will have made in this regard when we have said there are ample examples of rules and proceedings in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, in Beauchesne's, and elsewhere that say that frequently you might be asked to accept two versions of the same story or the same incident or the same occasion or the same truth, for that matter, because people do have differing points of view. Nonetheless, it is always refreshing to have those points clarified, and I think they have been amply clarified.

As a result of that, there is no point of order, and we are going to move on.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 20 Appropriation Act, 2013

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to resist the temptation to utilize some of this time to talk about the budget and some of the things that are in there. I think there have been some 70 hours of debate in estimates, a number of hours last night in going over a number of amendments. You know, under last year's rules there would have only been around 54 hours of debate in estimates, so we've already had some 16 hours more of debate on this budget and the estimates for each of the departments than we would have had if we had used the previous rules.

I know we're going to be getting into the Fiscal Management Act and a number of other things later on, so there will be probably ample opportunity to talk about some of the items that are there.

I think, given the numerous hours of debate, that I'm simply going to suggest that what we have before us is an appropriate Appropriation Act, that it has been debated and questioned over a lengthy period of time. [interjection] And I understand we may have some more.

It's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 20, the Appropriation Act, 2013.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to be standing up and speaking in regard to Bill 20, the Appropriation Act, 2013, which, for those following at home, is the budget. We have debated this for some time in estimates and so forth, and we've had a chance for me and the Leader of the Official Opposition as well as the two other opposition party leaders and opposition finance critics to debate this. We certainly haven't had very much time to debate the entirety of the budget, and unfortunately the rules, the standing orders, that we have right now are somewhat limiting with regard to the ability to do that as it can essentially be adjourned until the end of the day and voted on. But here we are.

I think that there are several key issues in this budget, and I'll highlight the major ones. In my view, the first and most important piece that we need to talk about is the fact that this is the back-in-debt budget. Right now, currently, the Alberta government has on its books roughly $4 billion in debt for infrastructure projects primarily. A lot of that is P3 debt. Some of it is direct borrowing, specifically Alberta bonds and so forth, but it's roughly $4 billion.

That does not include any of the liabilities, and there are billions and billions in liabilities, pension liabilities and such, on the books. Not counting all of those things, just your basic debt as most people think of debt, not including lines of credit used for insurance policies and so forth, it's roughly $4 billion. That's accumulated primarily over the last few years, over the last five or six years. That's $4 billion too much, in my view, but it's not crushing debt by any stretch. It's something that needs to be paid back. A Wildrose government would certainly do that as quickly as possible, but it's not something that is going to crush our balance sheet, that $4 billion.

Unfortunately, this government is repeating the exact same mistakes that it did during the Getty years in the late '80s and early '90s. Instead of saying, "Look, we've done this $4 billion of debt; it was a world financial crisis that occurred, and we needed to do that in order to deal with it and so forth," whatever excuse they wanted to use, "and we're now going to get out of it because we're close to record revenues over the last five years; we're going to get our act together and stop the borrowing and get back to business as usual, which is paying as we go, living within our means," that's not what this government has chosen to do. This government has chosen to go on a borrowing binge, and that means an additional just under $4 billion this year in borrowing. It means close to $17 billion in total borrowing, including the $4 billion that's already there, that I mentioned earlier, by 2016, by the next time that we in Alberta go to the polls.

I cannot fathom any kind of storybook fantasy that the PCs might come up with wherein the people of Alberta in the last election would have voted for this government, certainly in the numbers that they did, if they had known that the government would be taking out $17 billion in debt by 2016. They simply would not have supported that. That is why this government did not run on that in their campaign.

Albertans have made it very clear, as the late Premier Klein so perfectly encapsulated in the way he dealt with the debt situation, that they want Alberta's politicians to live within their means. They do not want to go into debt. They do not buy the excuses, the justifications, for going into debt. Mr. Speaker, we have heard from literally thousands of Albertans that are upset with this debt project, this government's plan to debt finance this government for the next three years. They're not happy. Every poll, survey, one-on-one conversation clearly says that an overwhelming number of Albertans from all party lines, whether it be Liberal, New Democrat, PCs, and, of course, Wildrose supporters from the last election, do not in any way, shape, or form support going back into debt. There's a small group that does. There's a small group, 20 to 25 per cent, maybe 30 per cent, that agree that we should debt finance, but the vast majority of Albertans do not agree with that. I have not seen a single shred of empirical evidence to support that.

That's why it's very disconcerting and disheartening to the people of this province after so many – I believe it was 44 per cent – in the last election voted for this PC party partly based on a very important promise that they would live within their means and not go into debt. The Premier said it multiple times. Every minister on that front bench involved in the Finance portfolio said the same thing. They were not going to go into debt. Not only are they breaking that promise; they're blowing it away. Just absolutely. From $4 billion to $17 billion in three years. Imagine that.

In 2004 when Ralph held up the paid-in-full sign at the McDougall Centre, who would've thought that just a few years later we'd be sitting here going $17 billion into debt by 2016? I know for a fact that there are many members of the party opposite, the governing party, that are not happy with this. There are certainly many members on this side that are not happy with this.

We do not all agree on the best way to get out of this mess. The Liberals, obviously, have a fair tax plan. The NDs have a plan to generate more royalty revenue or collect more royalty revenue. We have a plan that spreads out capital over an extra year and cuts bureaucracy, waste, and so forth. The government does not have a plan to get out of this mess. Their plan is to just borrow and borrow and borrow.

So I would urge the members opposite there who do believe in balanced budgets, who do not believe in going into debt, who believe that this is a betrayal of Albertans and the legacy that was forged by Premier Ralph Klein while he was in power and while he was leading this province that they should vote against this bill. They should vote against it out of principle. They should vote against it because it would send the right signal to this government. There's no reason for them to vote for it.

I don't expect the Finance minister to vote against his own budget. I don't think that's going to happen. I don't even expect anyone from the Executive Council to do so. But there are members over there, who have spoken with other opposition members, who we've heard specifically are absolutely upset with this. Those folks should vote against this, not just toe the party line. Please stand up and be counted. This is not the right path to go down. This is a betrayal of that no-debt legacy that so many Albertans identify with. I would urge us to think about that.

There is a comment that you hear from the Finance minister and Premier and others. They talk about why going into government debt for capital is the same, is similar to the debt that businesses take on when they take a business loan out to buy some equipment or when a family takes a mortgage out to finance a home. This is not a good comparison. It is a huge stretch for many reasons, Mr. Speaker. First of all, when you take out a business loan as a businessperson or when you mortgage a home, take out a mortgage, first of all, you're generally purchasing an asset that will appreciate in value or will create income, and with that income generated and so forth you can pay back the loan.

Government debts are not like that, Mr. Speaker. An asset that is purchased by government is not an appreciating asset; it's a depreciating asset. It's an important asset. It's something that we need to do because these are the public works that we want our people in Alberta to have, our fellow citizens, but a road is not going to increase in value. A school is not going to increase in value, meaning monetary value. It has other value, but the monetary value is not going to increase. So it's very different in that way.

The other difference is that you can sell a house. [interjection] Yeah. I love how the House leader, who was part of that Klein revolution who spoke against debt, who supported the no-debt policy, is now the biggest apologist for the debt policy. It's ridiculous. It's absolutely ridiculous. You can't be inconsistent like that. There was a policy in this government for a decade that said that they were not going to go into debt to finance the operations or anything in government. Now they do. That is inconsistent. It's completely inconsistent. We're the ones over here being consistent with regard to not wanting to take on debt. [interjections]

You know, I don't remember the junior Finance minister saying anything about wanting to go into debt in the last election. I really don't remember him promising that. I certainly don't remember the Finance minister or the House leader or anybody, the Justice minister, any one of them, saying: we are going to go into debt to the tune of $17 billion or, frankly, to the tune of $1 to finance our spending. I didn't hear it. If they had campaigned on that, Mr. Speaker, they would not have been elected. It would not have happened. [interjection] You may have. There might have been three or four of you over there. You're a popular guy, Finance minister, in your riding. You might have made it. But I'm telling you that the folks over there that won by a couple of hundred votes – and there are a lot of you – wouldn't have won. I'm telling you right now. It wouldn't have happened.

3:30

I think it's very important that the public understand that, and they have. I think the polling and everything else that you see out there right now is indicative of that betrayal that they feel on that issue and other issues. But the debt issue seems to be certainly a rising issue that people are upset about.

The other difference between mortgage debt and business debt as opposed to government debt is that you cannot take a government asset – you cannot take many government assets, anyway – and sell them on the open market. You can do it with some, but with the majority you cannot. Again, it's very different that way.

Another difference is that people don't take out a mortgage every single year. They don't take out a mortgage and then take out another mortgage and then the next year take out a mortgage and the next year take out a mortgage. They don't do that. They usually do it once in their lifetime, sometimes twice, but they generally don't take out a mortgage on their home every single year forever. They don't do that. People who have tried that and governments who have tried that – there are governments out there that have tried it. Their names are Greece, Spain, Portugal, Italy. What do these have in common? They've all tried it. What happens, Mr. Speaker, is that they go bankrupt. They can't do it after a while. They can't support the cost of the crushing debt. The United States of America: another example of that.

The province of Ontario is in huge trouble right now because that attitude is the attitude they've been going with for the last 20 years, and it's catching up with them now. Many pennies on the dollar, 30, 40 per cent of every dollar they take in in tax collection, are going towards debt finance. That's no way to live. That's no legacy to leave our families and our children in the future.

Again, it's one thing if this was a one-time mortgage or a one-time debt financing, but it's not. They're planning on doing it every single year, certainly till 2016 – we don't know the plans after that – $4 billion a year. It's not the right thing to do.

One of the other differences, of course, is that governments, when they debt finance, are risking taxpayer money. When we take out a mortgage or an individual business loan, we're risking as individuals our own money. That's the difference. They're risking taxpayer money; we're risking our own when we're talking about the difference between a business loan and a government loan.

So there are many differences between government debt financing and mortgages and so forth that people do on an individual level. I would ask this government to please make sure that as they go forward, they will end this debt financing plan. At the end of this year we'll be $8 billion in debt. At that point I hope this will be the last year of that. I hope that the government will reassess this policy. After this year, hopefully, you know, the differential is shrunk down to, actually, an historically small amount. Roughly $15 is the differential.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Anderson: Right now? Is it higher today?

An Hon. Member: It's worse.

Mr. Anderson: Really? A bad day for oil, apparently.

But if it's $15 to $20, that's still a reasonable level. It's certainly not as bad as it was earlier in the year. If they can get that money coming back into the coffers, if they can cut and restrain their spending, then perhaps we will not have to borrow as much or at all. I would ask the government, going forward, to make it a priority that when the next budget comes out that it not include debt financing or that it significantly lowers it from the $4 billion they're planning on next year. We probably can't do anything about it this year, but certainly we can make sure that next year we start digging ourselves out of the hole. I think that's very important.

That is what Albertans voted for. You can say: "Oh, well, they didn't vote for you. They voted for blah, blah, blah." Let's just talk about what Albertans voted for from a policy perspective, not a party perspective, for a second. What they voted for from a policy perspective, clearly, overwhelmingly – I would say a hundred per cent of them because I didn't see any of the parties run on debt financing. I'm not aware of the Liberals or the NDP running on it either. The Wildrose certainly did not do it, and neither did the PCs. So if a hundred per cent of Albertans voted for parties that did not include debt financing in their election platforms, shouldn't that be what we give Albertans in this House? I would think so. I would think that that's exactly what we should give Albertans in this House.

Again, we can debate how we get there. We can discuss whether that's tax increases, different services decreasing, stretching out the capital plan. Whatever it is, we can have that discussion in here, but nobody can honestly say that they were elected on a platform of $17 billion in debt by 2016. No one can do that. So a vote for that is a betrayal of the people that checked that box for you in the ballot booth, and it's not right.

We need to be proud of who we are as Albertans when it comes to the legacy of no debt. We are different. We conducted ourselves very differently in the '90s and the early 2000s. Because of that, we have a glorious opportunity, frankly, to be something better, to be the exception in this world, where we see governments crashing and going bankrupt and having all kinds of problems and having to cut programs forever because they can't afford to even pay the interest on their loans. We can be the exception to that. We are now, but if we conduct ourselves as we're doing now, by going into debt to the tune of $16 billion, a debt ceiling of $40 billion – and you know how easy it is to raise a debt ceiling. Look at the States. They just keep raising it and raising it and raising it.

If we can get back on track, we have the opportunity to do something spectacular in this province instead of in 20 years from now saying to our kids: "Man, did we ever blow an amazing opportunity because now we're just like everybody else. We can barely pay our bills, and 30 to 40 cents of every dollar we collect in taxes is going to debt financing and debt servicing instead of programs, instead of lower taxes, instead of more infrastructure." Let's not build that. That's not building Alberta's future. That's building regret. That is what that is.

I hope that the members opposite, certainly those not in Executive Council, will vote against this budget and join with the Wildrose and perhaps the other opposition parties, I'm assuming – but I won't speak for them – on voting against a budget that was ill conceived and, with regard to debt financing, is something that simply was not run on in the last election.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 29(2)(a) will be available after the next speaker. I have Edmonton-Centre, followed by the Associate Minister of Finance, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The Treasurer referenced the 70 hours of debate that we've had on this budget, and I suppose that in some jurisdictions that might be a big deal – it might be a lot of time – but not in this jurisdiction because we spend so much of our time just trying to find out what's in the darn budget. For some reason this government feels very strongly that it needs to keep its plan under wraps, so we get budget documents in which you look at a page, there are maybe four or five total votes, two or three subvotes under each one of those, and that's it.

There could be tens of millions of dollars spent in the department. We can't tell what the programs are by looking at those budget documents. We can't tell by looking at the business plan what the projects are, how much they're spending on different programs, how many FTEs are involved in the different programs, what the outcomes-based budgeting is supposed to be producing for those different programs. We can't tell any of that, and that's pretty basic information, Mr. Speaker. That's what I would expect to find in any budget document but, God bless their cotton socks, not this government's.

This was an increase in the amount of budget time that we had but, in fact, not much of an increase for opposition members. We did manage to negotiate for some budgets that had become very large, like the Ministry of Health, where you've got $17 billion that gets spent, that you have to spend more than three hours, especially with four different parties, trying to debate that. We did. We were able to allocate more hours to a select few of those ministries and then less time to some other ministries.

That didn't mean that there was more time for the opposition, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, there turned out to be less time for the opposition. The Government House Leader and the opposition House leaders are going to continue to disagree with each other, but frankly I felt tricked. I felt there was an agreement that had been made, and that was not carried through. Did my members get more time to speak? No, they didn't. They got less time to speak than they did last time. Certainly, when we got into the some of the prorated, less-time ministries, we had 14 minutes to try and debate, you know, a budget of $130 million. I mean, really? That's like a million dollars a minute. We don't even know what the programs are because they can't be bothered putting any information in their budget documents.

So, no, 70 hours is not enough to debate this particular government's budget. I've had members of the government admit that, you know, it shouldn't be a big deal, that they should be able to give us lots of information. They can't understand why they're not doing that. The next budget rolls out: less information than the one before.

We're in second reading of the Appropriation Act, for which we've now had a Committee of Supply process except that it wasn't Committee of Supply. It took place in legislative policy committees, in which in some cases a fairly large number of people got to sit in an enclosed, airless room for an extended period of time, with little air circulation and seemingly no temperature control either, to try and hold government ministers accountable through this process.

Now, what was interesting, Mr. Speaker, was that there was absolutely no consistency. Each committee decided on its own, God bless them, that they were going to deal with budget debates in a different way. Actually, what most of them did was decide – I didn't actually hear the decision-making – that they were going to treat budget debates the same way that they were treating their other inquiries, so every committee had a different system of how and in what order the rotation of speakers would go. The end result? Opposition members got less time than they did previously to debate the budget and in some cases significantly less time as we went government member, one of the opposition parties, government member, the Official Opposition, government member.

The government members, who sit beside ministers, had, one presumes – at least, I thought they did, Mr. Speaker, but evidently not – caucus meetings and spoke to one another and communicated this stuff. I expressed my horror and confusion that a smart government must not have been listening to their backbenchers if they cut both the community spirit program and the STEP program, which was going to have such an effect on all of the not-for-profit, public, volunteer sector in Alberta. They cannot have been listening to their own backbenchers, that are out in the community. It turns out, I guess, that they never asked them, so I'm beginning to understand why the government backbenchers keep saying that they need equal time to opposition members to be able to hold the government to account. Still, they do get to sit in meetings with ministers, they do bump into them in the hallway, and they do socialize with them quite a bit.

I would think they could find a few opportunities in there to be able to discuss the budget aside from using up time which in a parliamentary process and tradition has been significantly allocated to opposition members.

As we look at second reading of this appropriation bill, second reading traditionally is about whether or not you're willing to go with the principle of the bill that is being put before you. Are you going to go with the principle? Yes or no? You can kind of fix it up, tidy it up, address the worst of the problems, you know, in Committee of the Whole, which actually is not particularly available to us with an appropriation act, but that's the way it goes. Can I accept the principle of this? The answer is a big, whopping, uh, no.

Why can't I accept the principle of the budget process that this government has gone through and presents before us? Well, a couple of reasons right off the bat. Do you remember there was a commercial that said in ominous words, "No plan, no plan"? It really upset the government of the day. I always thought it was kind of funny because it was in this deep male voice like a promo for a horror flick or something. Anyway, the truth is that here we are, a new government. Sorry; new term, same government. Same government. Same people sitting on that front bench as were sitting there last time, or maybe they were sitting on the backbench last time. But no plan. I can't believe that. How could that hokey commercial be right? But it is.

Now, it seems strange in this day of the bitumen bubble for me to be saying: what is your surplus plan? As we keep being told by all the highly paid and highly educated economists in this province, this is a cyclical economy. This government has got to come to terms with that fact, and it has to deal with it in the way we budget for the provision of our services. Our provision of health care, child welfare, assistance for work, culture grants cannot depend on the price of a barrel of oil. We've been told that over and over and over again. So do we have a plan for a surplus? Uh, no. No plan for what we would do with a surplus, and it's coming.

The very first question I heard today came from one of the backbenchers to the Minister of Energy, inquiring ever so slightly about when we would start to get the royalties from when the oil sands projects start kicking at their 25 per cent rate. So far they've been at, I think, 1 per cent during the build of their oil sands projects. That's a lot of money, Mr. Speaker. The money is coming. A lot of money is coming. Do we have a plan? Nope, not that we see in this budget. [interjection] I'm sorry, Minister of Energy?

Mr. Hughes: It's best if you listen to the answer.

Ms Blakeman: I did listen to the answer, actually.

The Speaker: Hon. members, through the chair, please. Minister of Energy, you'll have your chance later.

The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I did listen to the answer, actually. It doesn't negate the fact that you've got a hunk of money coming, and you're trying to pretend you don't.

So no surplus plan. As far as I can tell, no debt plan. There wasn't a particular cutting plan. To me that would involve priorities. What are your priorities? Well, I keep hearing from this government: our priorities are education and people. What have we got cut in this budget? Education and people. What? Well, then that must not have been their cutting plan because they didn't follow it, or maybe I read it upside down or reversed or through a mirror or something, and saying that you valued people and education was actually the reverse. You know when you read things in a mirror and it comes out kind of upside down and backwards? Maybe it was that. I don't know.

But there was certainly no plan in cutting. I mean, we have heard the priorities of this government. Frankly, I think that in many cases they're the priorities of all of us. But what we got was the wackiest cutting plan I've ever seen, where things maybe should have been up, been protected, where postsecondary is just stomped, where the not-for-profit volunteer sector, which is where, by the way, the safe communities framework or strategy or whatever it was being called – you know, a perfect example.

Three or four years ago, a big tah-dah. This safe communities program was announced, all this money poured into the not-for-profit volunteer sector: "Go out, my children. Develop programs to make safer communities." Well, I'd really like to see the contract. I would like to see where it was written: by the way, at the end of three years you have to be self-sufficient. My understanding was that those groups were sent out to develop those programs, not to develop a fundraising program to keep themselves going. They are two different activities, and they take up pretty much the same amount of time.

So we had all these groups go out and develop all these great pilot projects, and then there's no money. The Minister of Human Services stands up with a sad look on his face and says: "Oh, my goodness. Did you not understand? These were all pilot programs, and they were all coming to an end. We expect you to be self-sustaining." How? How does this government expect those agencies to be self-sustaining in this day and age, particularly when you consider that the government took $15 million out of that sector when they axed the community spirit matching donation program?

Groups had to raise not only the same old money but new money above and beyond any kind of money that they had raised through other schemes that they had going, memberships or ticket sales or a brunch fundraiser, whatever. Those didn't count. It has to be above and beyond that. They would get matching funds from the community spirit program. For some little organizations, you know, that $3,000 and the matching $3,000: that was it, and it was a big deal.

At the same time as we're telling the human services sector to implement the social policy framework and the safer communities, they're supposed to go out and be self-sustaining now. We cut $15 million out of that budget and the STEP program. Honestly, are you people crazy? How do you expect people to function that way?

I'm running out of time here, Mr. Speaker, and I'm going to look for other opportunities. I have a file folder here of letters and notes and phone call receipts that people have sent me asking me to raise issues from my constituency during this debate. Now, because of the way the debate was structured, I didn't get the opportunity to go to the Seniors debate or other debates and be able to raise their points, so this is where I'm going to get to raise them. It's not optimum because I'm not going to get an answer back from any of the ministers, but it's how I'm going to be able to put on the record for the government members and ministers to hear what is of concern to constituents in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. I look forward to the time when I'm able to do that.

In closing, on the principle of this appropriation bill, am I willing to support the principle of it? No. It shows no planning, no foresight. It's cutting stupidly. There's no way to address the fact that every day every dollar spent by this government in programs and services is being subsidized by the next generation's non-renewable resource revenue. That is, as my colleague calls it, intergenerational theft. I can't support that, and I'm not supporting second reading of this bill.

Thanks.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is now available.

Seeing none, let us move on to the Associate Minister of Finance.

Excuse me. Apologies. Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, did I miss your hand signal?

Mr. Hehr: Yeah, to be added to the list.

The Speaker: Okay. You've been added.

Hon. minister, you've been recognized. Speak ahead.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to stand up to talk about a few points that have been brought up during debate. I know the Member for Airdrie would like to spend his time talking about how his party likes to say that this is the back-in-debt budget, somehow referencing that had we gone out and campaigned on having debt on our books, the people of Alberta would not have voted us in a year ago today as the government. However, I do note that I did go out and campaign for building things like the ring roads.

Mr. Saskiw: With debt?

Mr. Fawcett: Yeah. P3 is a debt. It's a liability on the government's balance sheet. It's quite outstanding, Mr. Speaker, that they don't even have the most basic financial literacy to understand that a debt or a P3 agreement is a liability on the government's balance sheet and treated the exact same way when it comes to raters and those types of things that will rate our financial position out there in the general public. Yes, I did go out and campaign on that. I did go out and campaign on the schools that this government has built through P3 initiatives. I did go out and campaign on the ring roads.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the question that I have is: did that party actually go out and campaign that the government should have never built these things either? I don't think so. As I've alluded to before, the hon. Member for Airdrie is standing opening up a school that's P3 financed. It's an instrument of debt. A P3 agreement is a debt instrument. There are different debt instruments out there, and that's a debt instrument. What we've done as a government is open it up and allowed ourselves to look at different financial instruments to finance capital projects, which includes P3 projects.

We do know that the way that the debt works with some P3 projects is that the debt is taken out by a private consortium. Because we have a triple-A credit rating, Mr. Speaker, in some circumstances it makes sense for us as the government to take out the debt because it lowers the overall costs of the projects. I mean, this is basic financial management. This is how businesses operate their finances. This is how my wife and I decide what we do with our money, how we spend it, and how we invest in some of the things that we like to buy.

The gall of the member to stand up and say that this is somehow an affront to the Ralph Klein legacy. Again, realizing that the very basic premise of what we're talking about is liabilities on the government balance sheet, Mr. Speaker, there are different instruments that create those liabilities on the government balance sheet, but at the end of the day they really mean the same thing. In 2002 former Premier Klein said: I want to look at the whole accounting system and the way that we finance capital projects using P3s, public-private partnerships, and find imaginative ways to finance these projects rather than the pay-as-you-go. That is a direct quote from former Premier Klein, who you guys put up there on a pedestal as someone that suggests that the government should never have any liabilities on the balance sheet.

Ms Blakeman: Don't look at me on that one.

Mr. Fawcett: Oh, I'm getting to your comments, hon. member.

You know, the whole premise of why this party is not supporting the budget is frankly built on a house of cards. It is flimsy and doesn't even understand the basic tenets of financial principles, Mr. Speaker.

I want to get to some additional comments on this year's budget. Yes, there were some hard choices made – agreed – not easy choices. Members on this side of the House engaged in those discussions. Like I said, they weren't easy. We knew that there would be some people out there in the public, constituents of ours that would be frustrated by some of these decisions. That's what we campaigned for when we ran, to be the party that was put in the position to have to make some of the tough decisions that you have to make as government. [interjections]

There is a huge distinction between being in government and being in opposition, Mr. Speaker. That huge distinction is that in the opposition you can stand up . . .

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt you, hon. member, but please could we stop the across-the-bow conversations so that all of us can hear whoever happens to be speaking? Again, let's be reminded. We may not like what one member is saying about a particular issue. We may not agree with what a member may be saying, but they have every right to say it here. As long as they stick within the rules, they will and shall be heard.

The hon. Associate Minister of Finance, please continue.

The rest of you, please be reminded not to interject.

Debate Continued

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, as I was alluding to, there were a number of tough decisions. When you're on the government side, you have to make those decisions and you have to deal with the consequences of those decisions. When you're in the opposition, you can say whatever you want, but you never have to make a decision. You know, it would be nice to be able to do that on the government side, but we don't have that luxury. But that's what we campaigned for, and we're not making excuses.

I will say, Mr. Speaker, that when we make these decisions, we make them based on the premise that just because we've done something in the past, it doesn't mean that it should go on forever and ever and ever.

Part of what you do in governing is that you reallocate resources. You look at what you're doing. You try to maximize the value that you get from the money that you do have with the outcomes that you get for Albertans.

4:00

When you come into this Legislature, Mr. Speaker, on a daily basis – I think that if the average Alberta came in here, they'd be appalled at the disconnect between what happens here and what's going on outside in our communities. We are leading the country in economic growth. We are the envy of the country when it comes to economic growth. Do we have some challenges? Certainly we do.

We've seen a study that indicates that when it comes to ranking the top 200 cities in this country, six of the top 11 are right here in Alberta. This is considering facts like employment, affordability, access to amenities, transportation, all of these things. Six of the top 11, right across the country, are right here in Alberta. We had a study that came out that ranked hospitals. Four of the top 10 are right here in Alberta, Mr. Speaker.

At the end of the day a budget is not an end in itself. It's a means to an end. It's a means to create prosperity and quality of life for the citizens that put us here. That's what this government has done a very good job of for the last 41 years. It's a vision that our Premier has clearly articulated, and it's why a year ago Albertans put this Progressive Conservative government on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker. This budget is the means to that end. It's not an end in itself.

The results speak for themselves. We have a great place to live. That's the disconnect that Albertans would not understand if they came and visited. If they came and visited this Chamber, they would think the sky was falling. But guess what? We have a bright future here in this province, Mr. Speaker. People are investing in this province like they're not investing anywhere else in this country. Therefore, shouldn't the government also want to invest in its own citizens, in its own province? That's what this budget does.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. I have the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre first, followed by the Minister of Finance.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I have a question under 29(2)(a) for the Associate Minister of Finance. He talked about disconnect and the Alberta public coming in here and looking at the disconnect. He sees a different disconnect than I do because what I'm hearing from people is the disconnect between the government and the choices they make and how it affects the people in Alberta.

Here's a disconnect that I don't understand. How could this province have so much money, so many resources, so much opportunity, so many possibilities, a great employment rate, a great credit rating, well-educated people, a prepared workforce, and a government that has run a debt year after year after year? This place, this province, is literally paved in gold. How does this government manage to get into debt?

Don't give me the bitumen bubble stuff because that lasted for – what? – exactly two weeks, and we were out of that one. I'm sorry. I wish I could give you permission to use it, but all of the economists have just dismissed it and have moved on now.

That's the disconnect they see, and that's the question I get asked. How could we have so much here, so many natural resources, and have a government that is so much in debt that they are cutting services to vulnerable people? That's the question I'd like you to answer.

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think those are some very good questions. What I would suggest is that one of the reasons why we do have a bit of a disconnect there is that, you know, we have for so long in this province really relied on what I would consider may be excess revenues from the oil and gas sector, that we realize we're just not going to have in the long term. What that has meant is that we've had to make some tough decisions.

I don't make any apologies for having the best paid doctors and the best paid teachers in this province. They earn their money, and we should support them. How much better paid than the rest of the country? That is the question, and this goes on and on and on. We should always ask ourselves some questions. That's our job as governors, to ask ourselves some questions as to what we're currently doing and how we're currently allocating resources, whether it's an efficient and effective use of money and whether it aligns with what else is going on out there. We have had to make the decisions, and this government stands up for the decisions that we've made in this budget as the right ones moving forward.

We also recognize that for many groups – many groups – out there this is change for them. This does signal a new direction that we want to take, keeping in mind that at the end it's about achieving outcomes. It's not about how much money we spend.

Mr. Speaker, I will say this. One of the reasons I got into public life, whether it be as a school board trustee before I was elected as an MLA or whether it's my time in running as an MLA and seeking my candidacy there, is that I've always been frustrated that public policy always centres around how much money you spend on a particular thing. Granted, that has a huge impact on the outcomes that you get, but typically sometimes what happens is that we invest money in things that are outdated, whether it's technology or a service program or program delivery models. It doesn't really matter how much money you invest. You can keep on investing and investing and investing, but you're not going to improve outcomes. That's what this government is focusing on, not on how much money we're spending but on the outcomes we're getting for our money.

The Speaker: Thirty seconds, hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, very quickly, I was wondering if the hon. member could comment on all of the municipalities that we actually borrow for and on-lend to, if he believes that that is giving good value for taxpayers' dollars as well.

Mr. Fawcett: Well, I do think that it is getting good value for taxpayers' money. The reason, Mr. Speaker, is that in Alberta we are a land of hope and opportunity, and people want to come here. They bring their skills, their creativity, their passions. They don't bring their infrastructure, and that's what we need to build for them.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I'm going to do my best to go opposition member, government member, and so on in the exchanges that follow.

I have the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the Minister of Justice, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I feel compelled to rise to speak to this bill and to speak in opposition for some very, very clear reasons, but first I just want to clarify that I know the hon. minister had claimed that there were 70 hours in estimates for debate. However, we need to clarify the word "debate" because in estimates it is not a debate. It's an opportunity to ask a few questions. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out, in this year's structure the smaller opposition parties were stifled even further than they have been in the past. It's quite absurd that in a five-hour block of debate 30 minutes is allocated to an opposition party to question millions if not billions of dollars in spending.

First and foremost, the Premier and this PC government made many promises to Albertans in the last election, and this budget breaks most of those promises to students, to families, to seniors, to communities, and to the most vulnerable Albertans. It's interesting to point out and shameful that this budget contains the most significant cuts of the last 20 years.

I want to start with the fact that many Albertans have been asking me: why is this PC government presenting a recession-style budget? When they look around – and the seven different cities that I and my caucus toured all said this – the economy is looking very healthy, it's in a growth phase, and there's a significant amount of work. Yet Albertans are forced to swallow this austerity budget, which seems a little ridiculous considering that, as the associate minister just stood up and said, Alberta is in a period of growth and we have a healthy economy. It begs the question: why are services that Albertans depend on – again, I'll go through the specifics shortly – having to face cuts and having to stop delivering a lot of programs?

My frustration and what Albertans are saying to me is: why isn't this government addressing the revenue side? First of all, let's start with cleaning up the mismanagement of dollars. Let's address the issue of high salaries for senior executives, which seem to have spiralled out of control, in addition to the absurd expense accounts that most Albertans could only ever dream of.

Then moving to the issue of royalties, again, you know, I can appreciate that our oil sands are more unique than many of the other oil-producing regions from the fact that we have very little sweet light crude left, and it's a different process, and it's more expensive to extract and refine bitumen. However, it needs to be noted that we have the lowest royalty rate in North America. The fact of the matter is that our province, this government, could easily raise our rates to a level competitive with other jurisdictions. Companies aren't going anywhere. I mean, the reserves are here in Alberta, so charging a fair share for the resource, that belongs to all Albertans, is just common sense and practical.

Second of all, you know, during the election, Mr. Speaker, many Albertans spoke out and said: why aren't we refining and upgrading more of our product in Alberta? Why is this government content and intent on shipping jobs down to the United States, to other jurisdictions when we should be adding value to our product, which would increase what we bring in on the market and keep those quality, long-term jobs in Alberta and ensure that Alberta is prosperous for the long term?

As well, the fact of the matter is that this government talks about lowering the corporate tax rate even lower than it already is. Sadly, it went from 16 per cent down to 10 per cent, and we are failing to collect billions of dollars' worth of taxes between our flat-tax system and our extremely low rate of corporate tax. Again, raising our corporate taxes even by a small amount, by 1 or 2 per cent, would keep us competitive yet bring in billions of dollars in much-needed revenue.

In addition to that, the government could be doing things like closing the corporate tax loopholes, eliminating corporate welfare. The fact that you've got, you know, multinational corporations that are still getting subsidies even though they're turning record profits seems absurd. Alberta's NDP would have passed those savings on to small and medium-sized businesses, the real economic drivers of this province.

It's a great frustration that the revenue side of this budget has not been addressed. This government is determined to pass this burden onto the backs of today's Alberta families, to middle-income earners as opposed to ensuring that everyone pays their fair share. It begs the question: what will it take for this PC government to listen to Albertans? We've already seen many rallies and protests. We've seen pharmacists protesting. Seniors are up in arms. Families with persons with developmental disabilities are very upset with this government. Families who have relatives in the Michener Centre are quite upset. There is complete uncertainty in the nonprofit and voluntary sector, which has caused some great alarm and frustration.

You know, Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate. With the limitation that this government insists on imposing on the opposition to having genuine debate and discussion on a budget where they're planning to spend $40 billion, I think there needs to be more debate and more opportunity for members to discuss this.

Getting back to this budget, completely laden with broken promises, I'll break this down by ministry. In our Health ministry there was a promise during the election to build thousands more long-term care beds, and the delivery is maybe 30 at best. There was a promise or a commitment to address the emergency room wait times, and the fact is that those are growing as opposed to shrinking. There was a commitment to hire more nurses. If you look at the cuts to PDD, I believe it's around $40 million, again this government clearly picking on vulnerable Albertans.

There was an outcry, as we've seen, as far as folks working in EMS and the ambulance emergency services that there's great frustration. There aren't enough resources being put into ensuring that the folks on the front line can do the job that they want to do, and this government has no excuse but to say: "Well, I'm sorry. We broke another promise."

We look at the environment. Regardless of the PR job that this government is insisting on doing, they're spending thousands or millions of dollars on trying to sell the product as opposed to bringing in some legislation to ensure that we're doing more to combat climate change, that they're even in fact meeting their own climate change targets. However, there needs to be more of a discussion between intensity versus hard caps.

You know, the government has failed to protect our water and get rid of our water markets. I mean, it's frustrating as well. Albertans have indicated that it seems ridiculous the money that this government insists on putting into carbon capture and storage as opposed to really tackling the challenges that are facing our province and our world today.

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

A broken promise to diversify the economy. Again, this government should be a lot more proactive than they are, cutting down and ensuring that there are tools in place to minimize the booms and busts of this economy. Again, we look at the fact that our taxes are not at the level that they should be to ensure that you have stable revenues coming into the government coffers as opposed to being reliant on the price of oil.

Regarding our Education department the fact that the AISI funding was eliminated has severely hurt many schools and school districts. There are many teachers and parents and families that don't quite understand how this government has increased funding to private schools yet cut funding to the public system and is really posing more of a block, if you will, as far as teachers wanting to deliver the highest quality of education. When there aren't resources that are put into the classroom, it stifles the ability of teachers to teach, and it affects children and their families and affects this province in the long term. There are many teachers that I've spoken with who are quite frustrated with the cuts that this government is putting forward in the area of education.

As well, failure to introduce full-day kindergarten, which was a promise that was delivered I believe when the Premier was running for her leadership of the PC Party. Again, all that they can say is: well, maybe it will come one day.

You know, unfortunately, it's this kind of behaviour, where a government promises one thing and fails to deliver, that really frustrates Albertans. It also tarnishes, I think, politicians and gives people a sense that: well, if they don't have to keep their promise, then how is that fair to us?

4:20

We look at Human Services. Specifically, $42 million was cut from the community access supports for persons with developmental disabilities. We've had no adequate explanation for this cut whatsoever. Again, when we look at the slight increase that Human Services has gotten, there are still programs and areas that have been significantly reduced.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The elimination of the STEP program affected many, many Albertans. In fact, this was a program that many Albertans were proud of. Many of them got their first start in the nonprofit and voluntary sector. In sectors of our society that might struggle to create positions, the STEP program helped them do that, so it didn't just benefit the students by giving them real, meaningful experience. I know the minister has popped up and said: "Well, you know, they can get a job. Our job rate is fantastic." Well, you know what? We actually value civil society and the work that the nonprofit and voluntary sector does, and it's in those areas where, if we want our postsecondary and young people to get experience in those areas, we need to create those opportunities as opposed to taking them away.

We look at advanced education and the fact that there have been 11 per cent cuts to the postsecondary system. We've seen the elimination of many different programs. There have already been increases to student fees, so again a promise that this government made that they would freeze tuition was a promise made of hot air. Clearly, there are postsecondary institutions that are going to put these cuts onto the backs of students through noninstructional fees. We've had the mayors of Edmonton and Calgary and university boards and presidents and students all band together to say that the plan for advanced education is clearly unacceptable and that it's going to come at the expense of students and the reputation of Alberta's postsecondary system.

When we look at seniors, again, revelations yesterday show that the Premier promised to maintain universal drug coverage for seniors. Well, clearly, that was yet another broken promise. She's implementing a new plan that will see $180 million cut from the seniors' drug benefit. I know my office has letters and e-mails coming in daily from seniors very concerned about these cuts.

Increasing property taxes for senior homeowners with this dubious new deferral program: that will ultimately cost seniors more. We've got a reduction in the eligibility for the seniors' benefit, including removing the WCB and CPP disability income exemptions, which is going to mean that at the end of the day seniors are going to pay more. It's with great frustration that there's a lack of respect for the folks who helped build this province, who helped make Alberta as strong as it is, and this government clearly has no problems, no qualms about throwing them under the bus, again targeting seniors who have been injured or disabled.

We look at broken promises to many of the cities and municipalities. When we look at MSI funding, in the business plan it had called for $1.05 billion in the 2013-14 budget for MSI, and the government failed to deliver that. Cities and municipalities . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available, and I see Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills wanting to participate. Go ahead.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just wondering if the hon. member could expand upon some of the principles that he was outlining.

Thank you.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. I appreciate the question, and I'd very much like to continue.

You know, it's with frustration that in the estimates there may be programs that are cut from one area, but the reality is that if we're looking at, let's say, municipalities, there were many different cuts that they faced, not just from the Ministry of Municipal Affairs. When we look at, again, the STEP program, that affects many communities and many community leagues within the city of Edmonton, which was a cut. We look at the fact that the community spirit grant was completely eliminated. For many organizations this has been a double blow because the loss of the STEP program in combination with the elimination of the community spirit program is severely hurting many organizations, and they're not sure how they're going to be able to offer the programs and services that many Albertans have come to rely on.

The safe communities initiative. You know, it bewilders me, to be honest, Mr. Speaker, how this government doesn't value proactive measures and anything that's preventative. When we look at the safe communities initiative, the feedback from the communities was that it was working very well. You had community organizations partnering with different policing services to create programs that were relevant to the local community that they served. You know, I'm sure the minister will jump up and say that this was a three-year grant or a time-allocated type of program, but it's clear that these programs do serve a great need. When they go into a community, people learn about them, they take a while to get off the ground, and then suddenly they're yanked. So it's with great frustration that the safe communities initiative has literally been decimated.

As well, a broken promise that's going to affect many young people throughout the province is that the grants that were promised by this Premier and this government for aboriginal and rural students are nonexistent in this budget. I just want to point out the fact, Mr. Speaker, that aboriginal and rural students are grossly underrepresented in our postsecondary institutions. This was a promise that should have been kept.

You know, again, all of these broken promises that have been listed here by us today and many others are more than disheartening. Again, Albertans are scratching their heads wondering how we can be in the wealthiest province in the country, at a time when our economy is healthy and strong, yet this government is imposing cuts and pushing those cuts onto the backs of students, of seniors, of middle-income families and communities. Really, there's no reason for it, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is a great province to live in. I think that there's lots of potential, but this budget is actually doing the opposite. It's taking away opportunities from Albertans, and it's taking us back a number of steps as opposed to forward.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, and all the reasons that I've outlined, I cannot support the Appropriation Act and have felt compelled to speak out on behalf of Albertans everywhere who feel disenfranchised and are disillusioned with this government and who, to be quite honest, are quite frustrated with one broken promise after another.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any others under 29(2)(a)? Okay. I don't see any.

Speaker's Ruling Question-and-comment Period

The Speaker: Before we move on to the next speaker, could I just ask you out of courtesy, hon. members, to review what 29(2)(a) is really all about? With no specific reference to the previous speaker or speakers or to previous discussions or debate, here it is. It says:

- (2)(a) Subject to clause (b), following each speech on the items in debate referred to in suborder (1), a period not exceeding 5 minutes shall be made available, if required, to allow Members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses to each Member's questions and comments.

Just bear that in mind, hon. members.

I have no big issue with this, but 29(2)(a) really should be used more for questions pertaining to comments just made as opposed to sometimes doing what we've all done, and that is to allow the member to stand up and complete their speech and so on. That is in order, but Standing Order 29(2)(a) is really meant to be more of an exchange between members rather than that. So please keep that in mind. Again, no admonishment, just a reminder of what the original purpose was and what 29(2)(a) really stands for and how it's described in our own orders.

Ms Blakeman: Under Standing Order 13(2), Mr. Speaker, I'm going to ask the Speaker to explain his comments because I'm not sure what he was trying to tell us to do or not do. We have long had an exchange in this House where one member may ask another to expand on what they were saying or to make a statement or a comment. Indeed, in a number of cases individuals have actually used the entire five minutes to make their own comment, and it does allow for that under 2(a), where it says: "to allow Members to ask questions and comment."

The Speaker: Thank you. Hon. member, that's just exactly what I said: no admonishment, just a reminder of what the original purpose was. If you read Hansard, the little exchange there, you'll perhaps have a similar opinion. No admonishment whatsoever, simply a reminder of what the true purpose of 29(2)(a) really was.

With that, that matter has been clarified. Please have a seat, hon. member, and we'll move on to the hon. Minister of Justice. Thank you for your co-operation and understanding, members.

You have the floor, hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to move to adjourn debate on Bill 20.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion to adjourn debate carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:30 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

For the motion:

Allen	Fraser	Luan
Amery	Fritz	McDonald
Bhullar	Goudreau	McQueen
Brown	Hancock	Oberle
Calahasen	Horner	Olesen
Cao	Hughes	Pastoor
Casey	Jablonski	Rodney
Cusanelli	Jansen	Scott
Dallas	Johnson, L.	Starke
DeLong	Kennedy-Glans	VanderBurg
Denis	Kubinec	Webber
Drysdale	Leskiw	Woo-Paw
Fawcett

Against the motion:

Anglin	Hehr	Rowe
Bikman	Kang	Saskiw
Bilous	Mason	Stier
Blakeman	Notley	Towle
Fox	Pedersen	Wilson
Hale

Totals: For – 37 Against – 16

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Bilous: Point of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: You wish to raise a point of privilege?

Mr. Bilous: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I do.

The Speaker: There is a process for doing that, hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Yes, Mr. Speaker. This is the first opportunity for me to raise this point, so with your guidance I would like to raise this point of privilege. Seeing as this is my first, I hope that you can direct me on this.

The Speaker: Well, I mean, a point of privilege can be in order, and if you wish to proceed and outline the basics of it, please proceed, then.

Privilege Opportunity for Debate

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pursuing a point of privilege under Standing Order 15. I'm pursuing this point of privilege on the grounds that my ability and that of all opposition members to participate fully and fairly in debate around Bill 20, the Appropriation Act, 2013, has and will be unjustifiably hindered by the actions of this government and therefore infringe on my privileges as an opposition member.

Mr. Speaker, there is no more important function for an opposition MLA than to hold the government accountable on issues of public expenditure. Please allow me to explain the nefarious nature of what the government is trying to accomplish and then touch on the matter as it regards a question of privilege. The government has just moved to adjourn debate on Bill 20 until late this evening. I am arguing that this government is implementing a strategy to prevent any opportunity for the opposition to debate Bill 20 by using its majority to abuse the intent and spirit of Standing Order 64(1)(b) and Standing Order 64(3), as has been done in the past by this PC government, if the government plans to adjourn debate until 15 minutes before the normal adjournment hour of 10:30 p.m. as outlined in Standing Order 64(1)(b).

At that time Standing Order 64(3) requires that the Speaker interrupt normal proceedings and put the question on every appropriation bill then standing on the Order Paper for second reading.

The Speaker: Hon. member, thank you. Please have a seat for a moment.

Hon. members, what's happened here just now is that we've had an adjournment of a motion. That motion could come back in five minutes. It could come back this evening. It could come back later. We don't know. Just like you said, hon. member that just spoke, if it is the government's intention to do something, I don't know what the government's intention is. I don't know that you know what it is. So you might want to wait until the appropriate time, when we find out what the government's action actually is or has been, before you proceed onwards.

If you have a few more comments you wish to offer in light of what I've just said, then please feel free.

Mr. Bilous: I would like to continue, Mr. Speaker.

By using its majority to adjourn debate until what is essentially the last minute for debate, the government will effectively prevent any opposition member from having the opportunity to debate Bill 20, thus robbing them of their voice in this Legislature and their duty to hold the government accountable on issues of public expenditure.

I'd like to remind the House, Mr. Speaker, that this is exactly what this PC government has done in the past. This is a tried-and-true method which has been used by this government. It's with this history in mind that I feel confident in the belief that this will occur again today. With this in mind, I'm submitting that this is the first opportunity for me to raise this point of privilege in the Legislature.

The Speaker: Hon. member, thank you. Have a seat, please.

I don't see that anything has yet been violated that would result in a point of privilege motion being entertained at this stage. You may feel differently after we know what the government has in fact done, but at this stage I'm not prepared to entertain any significant amount of debate on this.

I will recognize Edmonton-Centre briefly. If you can be very brief so I don't have to cut you off, please.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Two questions to the Speaker under 13(2). Is the damage not done if the government does decide to follow its precedents from the last five years of bringing appropriation bills back 15 minutes before the normal hour of adjournment and having them voted then, thereby taking away the opportunity of members to speak? If they do that, then the damage is done, is it not? Members who wish to speak in second reading, indeed who are here now, who came in to speak in second reading – and we understand that when it's voted tonight, it's gone. People who wanted to speak in second reading are here and have indicated they wanted to speak, and now they're not going to be allowed to. If precedent is followed, they won't be allowed to tonight.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. member, I'll tell you exactly what I just told the previous member. I have no knowledge of what the government's intention is after this motion of adjournment. All I know is that so far this particular bill, Bill 20, which I know has had some previous debate in various committees, is now the subject of adjournment. As a result, no violation has occurred as of this stage, so there's no point in raising a point of privilege right now because there's no basis for it yet. You may feel differently later. The hon. member who first raised it may feel differently later. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, you may be exactly correct, or you could be exactly wrong. We'll just have to wait and see.

Thank you.

Hon. members, let's move on.

Bill 15 Emergency 911 Act

[Adjourned debate April 18: Mr. Weadick]

The Speaker: I believe the hon. Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs has already moved this.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This is a fairly – sorry; I jumped in front of the Official Opposition.

An Hon. Member: Have at 'er.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. All righty, I'll just keep going, then.

This is a fairly straightforward, administrative type of bill in that the world changes, and we have to adapt legislation to grasp that and to keep up with it sometimes. We had a situation where the costs of operating a 911 call were essentially covered by a minimal charge that was added to everyone's land line because at one point in time everyone had a land line. Remember those? Some people will in this Chamber, and some people won't. I look at my young staff, and frankly two out of three of them don't have a land line anymore. They have a cellphone. Well, you know, we're a good province, so we want to offer the 911 service to people with cellphones, but we still have to pay for it. So how are we supposed to pay for it if, in fact, we're not able to put that small charge on land lines because people are having fewer land lines?

4:50

This bill is seeking to generate revenue to be able to pay for those 911 centres, and I agree. One, I think it's responsible that in this case it's essentially a user-pay system. I mean, somebody that doesn't use a phone at all and uses the mail or walks somewhere: they're not going to end up paying part of this. If they end up borrowing someone's phone or using a telephone booth or a free phone in a doctor's office or something, they're not going to end up paying the cost of the 911. But for most of us this is how we're now going to pay for this service.

It's also going to allow new technologies to be integrated that would allow for things like text messaging and – tah-dah; wait for it – GPS, which I'll just remind everybody you can turn off on your cellphone so that the little people can't tell where you are every second of every day. You can turn that function off, and I recommend you do turn that function off because, frankly, it's nobody's business where you are. Nonetheless, it does allow GPS functions to be rolled into this.

Is this an onerous amount of money that's been put forward? No. Can I even compare it to a cup of coffee? No. I actually think it's less than the price of those little creamers, you know, the flavoured ones that you can buy at the 7-Eleven. They're charging, like, 50 cents for those now, right? [interjection] If you buy the coffee, you don't have to pay for the creamer. Help me out here, minister. I'm just trying to give people an example that this is not an onerous amount of money.

I think you're paying about 50 cents for the little creamer, the ones that are, you know, hazelnut and other weird things that some people do to coffee, those little creamers you can buy, that are actually an edible oil product. God bless Alberta: our bitumen in a little cup with flavours in it.

Mr. Denis: Different kind of oil.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, a different kind of oil. I'm so sorry.

So about 50 cents. The charge they're going to put on your cellphone bill or your land line – they've been charging your land line anyway – is 44 cents. So I would argue that this is not an overwhelming amount of money. I represent a number of people who are extremely low income. They would match any definition of poverty that you want to come up with, whether it's the low-income cut-off or a market-basket assessment or any of the other ones that people use nowadays. I've got a lot of low-income people and a lot of people on government assistance programs, and they are exceptionally good budgeters.

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

I know that when things like the telephone bill itself went up – I mean, at one point it was around $23. Then it started to creep up, and it got to $30. I think it's over $30 now for a land line. Well, that extra 10 bucks a month did make a difference to some of my seniors. That's not going to affect any of us in here, but to people that were, you know, trying to manage on under a thousand dollars, 10 bucks made a difference. But I really don't think the 44 cents is going to make a difference here. So where I would usually be stepping up and saying, "Ooh. I don't know. I'm not happy about that," I can defend this to my constituents, that this is a reasonable charge for a very good service. This charge is expected to generate about $8 million. I'm getting this from page 28 of the government's operational plan for the business plan for 2013-2016.

This bill makes perfect sense to me. You know, it's not hiding anything. Nothing is sneaking through here. They're just doing what they should be doing, and that's kind of moving ahead with things and recognizing that technology has changed, and they are trying to continue to offer a service that we all value very much.

They will also be trying to deal with pocket calls. You know, I love my phone, but when I got my new phone, it had a feature right on the outside of the lock-off where you could hit it and it would dial emergency numbers. Oh, my God. I must have pocket-called 911 five times. You feel so bad because you're thinking: "Oh, my God. They have to follow up on those calls." They had to phone and make sure that I hadn't, you know, fallen in a ditch and that's why my pocket was calling them. Sure enough, you go, "Oh, my God," and you shut it off, and then they phone you and say: are you all right? You think: I'm so sorry I just wasted your time and money; that's really quite unforgivable. Having that function outside the lock-off – so even though the phone was locked off, you could still hit the face of it, and it would dial – just killed me. Eventually I had to go to a younger person and get them to get rid of that feature. So I would have to unlock my phone and put in the pass code in order to dial 911. I'll have to remember that if I ever get into serious trouble. It's going to take me a while to dial that password to be able to hit the keypad and dial 911, but it's totally worth it because, oh my goodness, I felt just horrible about pocket-dialing the 911 centre.

They are trying – I'm sorry; I'm just trying to remember what the heck they were going to do in here. It says in section 8, "No person shall make a frivolous or vexatious 911 call." I wouldn't have deemed what I was doing frivolous or vexatious. I would have deemed it embarrassing and stupid, but not frivolous or vexatious. There are fines involved: for a first offence, not more than $5,000; for a subsequent offence for frivolous or vexatious 911 calls, not more than $10,000. I think a lot of what they're trying to deal with here is people that phone up and say, "Can you give me the number of the nearest pizza place?" or "Can you call me a cab?" Honest to goodness, people do this. I've got some pages that are smiling at me, going: "Yeah. Right. That doesn't happen." Yeah, it does, unfortunately.

It's a wonderful thing for me to be able to get up and say: "You know what? I think the government did a pretty good job on this." There's nothing fancy. It's just straight-ahead legislation. They're trying to deal with the realities of the time. They have added in the vexatious and frivolous calls and added in the fines. I don't quite know how they're going to manage to get as far as an offence on that one because it's usually going to have to be tracking somebody down and then actually charging them in some sort of court process in order to fine them, but maybe there's an administrative process that I'm missing here.

As usual, the government's list of things that they can make regulations on behind closed doors is almost longer than the rest of the bill, which I still find problematic. Yes, indeed. The regulations that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make starts at the top of page 5 and goes to the top of page 7. This is the stuff that the Lieutenant Governor in Council, which is the cabinet, does behind closed doors. We never get any input in it. Based on what I'm seeing and hearing, I don't think the government backbenchers are getting any input into this stuff anymore either. It's problematic. I think this should be a more open process. I don't get what the big secrecy is about regulations. If they're going to be public in the end anyway, what's the problem? But, you know, once you get into that secrecy habit, it seems to be very hard for this government to kick that. It's like an addiction.

I'm happy to support this bill on behalf of my colleagues. There are a couple of questions that we were going to put on the record. In families with multiple cellphones, especially when those beloved companies make it so easy – you know, all the commercials where dad gets a phone, mom gets a phone, three kids all get phones, and they're looking at the dog like he might want one – I think they're all going to have to pay, but I'll ask the minister to follow up on that one. Even then, at 44 cents a phone I don't know that I would be really exercised about that, but I'll put the question on the record.

The money that is collected is for the ongoing service that is being offered. I just want to make sure that we are not stockpiling this anywhere and that we're not, you know, building this up, that it isn't just a one-time-only switch to technology and then we start collecting a slush fund there. According to my understanding of it it's the ongoing support of the 911 system, but I'll just double-check that.

One of the issues that has been raised with me is the lack of good reception for cellphone users in rural Alberta, that they are going to get charged for something that they may not be able to get. I know that when I go up to my cabin, there's probably a 10-mile stretch in there, including my cabin, where you can't get cellphone coverage for love nor money. So I'm paying 44 cents for no cellphone coverage up there. I think that is more of a problem, and I'd like to know how the government is going to handle that one. I think people in rural areas where they're not getting good coverage or any coverage have a right to complain about that. What's the plan there to handle that one?

What is the criteria for the operators to be able to decide whether it's a frivolous call or not?

I'll put those on the record for the sponsor of the bill to be able to answer when he can.

I thank you for the opportunity to speak in support of Bill 15, the Emergency 911 Act. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As the Municipal Affairs critic for the Wildrose Official Opposition I rise tonight to add my voice to the discussion on Bill 15, the Emergency 911 Act. Let me begin by saying that I am supportive of Bill 15. The Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties have also lent their support to this legislation. In fact, our municipalities asked for this legislation. It is often noted that municipal officials are the order of government closest to the people, so when they tell us something, we should perhaps listen. I agree with the AUMA and the AAMD and C that the 911 call and dispatch centres in our communities need some assistance to help pay for their maintenance and their upkeep.

It's no secret that use of land-line telephones is decreasing, but it might come as a surprise to some that while land-line users continue to pay 44 cents a month on their phone bills, funding that is sent directly to the 911 call centres, Albertans who use cell-phones do not pay this levy. Bill 15 will allow the government to enact regulations to ensure that people who use cellphones as well as people who use land-line phones will all pay the same monthly fee that will flow through 911 call centres. The increased funding to 911 call and dispatch centres will allow them to upgrade services, technology, and equipment, something all Albertans will benefit from.

Another important aspect of Bill 15 is that it will extend liability protection to all employees of 911 call and dispatch centres as well as the employees of telecommunications companies involved in 911. Liability protection is often referred to as good Samaritan protection, and I think it is important that all the men and women who do their best every day through their work with 911 be afforded this protection. I can also tell you as a past municipal councillor, mayor, and a member of the AUMA that providing this liability protection for call centres, especially in rural communities, will go a long way towards ensuring that the 911 service can continue to be provided at the local level.

I am supportive of the proposal in Bill 15 to bring in regulations for standards of both service and equipment at 911 centres. Setting basic parameters is needed to ensure that all Albertans, no matter where they live, receive the same service and procedures when they call 911 and, likewise, to ensure that equipment in all call and dispatch centres in Alberta, no matter where they are located, meets a basic standard that will increase public safety.

There are a couple of things I am concerned about, and I know that the government will say that these things will be dealt with when the regulations are developed. However, that is also concerning as we are being asked to pass legislation without having a clear picture of the end product. I sincerely hope these concerns will be addressed before Bill 15 is finally passed.

My greatest concern is centred around how the funding formula will be determined. If mobile phone users start to pay the same monthly levy that land-line phone users pay, how will this funding flow through to each of the 22 call centres in Alberta? If the formula is based on population alone, major centres will receive the bulk of the funding. This will leave rural centres lacking the funds for newer technology and other upgrades and could force some 911 service amalgamations. This would result in a decrease in local service delivery, something I think is the actual opposite of the intent of this legislation. I would ask the minister to provide some feedback on this aspect while Bill 15 is still on the floor of the Legislature and also to work with and really listen to what the municipalities with call centres suggest is the fairest formula.

I look forward to hearing the comments from other members regarding Bill 15. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). Please keep in mind the intention of the standing order, as was addressed by our Speaker just recently.

Seeing none, we'll move on to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 15, the Emergency 911 Act. You know, I just want to begin by saying that I've always during the election and even before the election, when I was campaigning, prided myself on being able to give the government credit where credit is due and to fulfill the role of the opposition, which is to augment and improve legislation but at the same to acknowledge the value of legislation and how it's going to benefit communities.

I do rise to speak in support of this bill. You know, it's a piece of legislation that makes sense. I know that, again, with the movement of many Albertans from using land lines to now using mobile devices, there's been a significant reduction in the number of land lines. Many homes and families do not even have land lines anymore, and in order to provide the essential 911 services that many municipalities provide, they need the appropriate funding. This act will place a levy that will help them meet their needs.

As well, I just want to mention that the levies that will be garnered through this bill will be spent on essential financial support to local 911 call centres and used in part to enhance 911 call operator training but as well to allow the upgrade of equipment to meet the changing technological requirements, which I think is very important if we want to make sure that we're up to date and up to speed.

I think as well that this bill is valuable in that it establishes liability limitations for employees who work at the 911 call centres, so we're going to protect the folks that are doing their best to help connect people who are in need of this service with the appropriate services. It's also going to reduce the potential for damages if there are any allegations of breaches of the quality of services provided by 911 call centres. I think that is very important.

5:10

As well, this is an example of a piece of legislation where there have been some discussions and conversations with the two organizations, the AUMA and the AAMD and C. I think it's critical that these conversations take place and that the government gets feedback about proposed legislation and how that's going to impact those that are going to carry it out or those that are going to be affected by it. It gives me confidence to be able to speak in favour of this bill because the AUMA and the AAMD and C agree that this is something that's practical and that is needed to help offset the costs to operate these call centres.

A couple of questions need to be raised, though. I appreciate the Member for Edmonton-Centre raising the question of families with multiple cellphones. You know, does that mean that each of those phones or mobile devices will be charged the 44 cents? I can appreciate that maybe for most people it's a fairly nominal amount, but it's still an important question of clarification.

As well, something else that I raise an eyebrow over is that the government is going to decide how much the wireless providers can retain to cover administrative costs. It begs the question, Madam Speaker: why not lay that out in the bill itself? Why not make it very clear and up front to all members of this House exactly what the portion is that the wireless providers are going to keep for themselves?

I think this is going to have a significant impact on many people, so if this legislation passes through this House, does it mean that any person who doesn't pay their phone bill is guilty of an offence and liable to be fined up to $1,000? I think it's, again, important that we have some clarification on this before we move this bill further along.

In general, Madam Speaker, I do support the tenets of this bill. For municipalities that have call centres, this bill will help them recover some of their costs and lighten the burden that many municipalities are faced with.

I will leave it there. Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to Bill 15.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any takers?

Seeing none, we'll move to our next speaker, the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my honour to rise today and speak to Bill 15, the Emergency 911 Act. Among other provisions this bill will legalize a 44-cent-per-month charge to cellphone users for 911 services, the same amount that is paid by land-line users. The government is putting forward this bill to offset decreasing revenues as phone users move away from land-line telephones. I, like many others in the House, am one such person that actually does this, and I know none of our neighbours have land lines anymore. This already incorporates a government-imposed 44-cent surcharge towards mobile phones. The subsequent revenues the government would receive through Bill 15 would be used for improvements and upgrades to 911 dispatch centres across Alberta and to enable 911 responses through text message and GPS location. The prospect of these new innovations is exciting.

However, there are still many questions around Bill 15 that should be answered before this bill passes into law. It's hard to support this bill when the 44-cent surcharge is essentially acting as a tax on Albertans who own cellphones. Virgin Mobile has already publicly called the 44-cent provision a tax, and I think all members would agree that a 44-cent fee to pay for a core government service like 911 is a tough pill to swallow, especially since Albertans already pay some of the highest cellphone rates in Canada and in the world.

I am also curious how the minister came up with the 44-cent figure to begin with. It seems arbitrary. I'd like for the minister to put forward some rationale for how he arrived at this number, and if not, I'd ask how he knows this fee will generate enough revenue to pay for the equipment and upgrades it's meant for. What happens if it's not enough? Does the fee go up? What happens if it's too much? Will the fee go down? Not likely. Included in the 44-cent charge is a 7-cent administration fee that will be collected by mobile phone companies. This strikes me as slightly high considering most telecommunication companies already charge a hefty administration fee to their clients.

Many cellphone users also pay a 911 fee in association with their monthly bill, that will exist independent of the 44-cent provision. I would ask on behalf of those Albertans already paying an additional fee for 911 services where their money is currently going. I know on my own bill I have the administration fee for 911 already there, and I have no idea how it's allocated. There's no accountability for what that fee goes to, and we're not even sure how much of it actually goes to the administration of 911 calls. We should be careful that we're getting a fair deal for Albertans before we rush a decision such as this.

There is also the issue with the funding allocation formula that is going to be used. What is it? We don't know, and there are a variety of possibilities that don't sit right with Albertans, like the base formula that was suggested in the 2008 report. Through this formula funding allocation would be based on population alone. Edmonton and Calgary would be poised to be the big winners while rural dispatch centres are stuck trying to meet a new generation of standards and practices with inadequate funds and resources to do it with. Rural centres do have an additional problem with cellphone coverage. Does that mean that the 911 centres in rural Alberta won't receive as much funding? If so, how are they going to equalize this? This could ultimately force our rural dispatches to amalgamate or shut down entirely. Essentially, Albertans living in rural areas could lose access to 911 services while at the same time paying for more.

In my own area we are kind of already seeing this. One of the things we see there is with EMS. We know already that some of our more rural locations cannot get access to EMS service because there is a problem with the GPS location. So I'm just clarifying for Albertans exactly what this would mean as well.

If we're going to ask Albertans to pay this money, we need to give them a fair formula for allocating the resources first. This government campaigned on transparency, and what we see time and time again is a concerted effort on their part to hide information. This is turning into another example of that. We need a funding formula that is open and honest.

We all own cellphones, and I'm sure we've all accidentally pocket dialed someone before. It's happened to everyone. The minister says that frivolous calls to 911 will carry with them a first-time punishment of $5,000 but that pocket dials will be forgiven. I'd like to know how the minister plans to investigate frivolous calls and what evidence he would or wouldn't use to impose a penalty in association with that. I'd also like to go one step further. What will the minister do to those people who make the frivolous calls but have no assets, who have no income, or who may not be capable of understanding what a call to 911 truly is? I'd like to know what the parameters around that $5,000 fine would be.

There are too many areas where I take issue with Bill 15 to support it wholly at this time: the 44-cent levy, the 7-cent administration charge, the lack of a clear funding formula, questions surrounding pocket-dial issues. These are all important questions buried deep in the regulation of Bill 15 that won't see the light of day until after this bill is passed into law and it will finally be opened to opposition scrutiny, not to mention market and Albertans' scrutiny.

There are some questions around the validity of Bill 15 as well. It's not uncommon anymore for every member of an ordinary-sized family to own a cellphone. It is also not uncommon for just one or two members of the family to own a cellphone, usually the parents, and then either lend it to their children or go on the family plan. I am not one such parent as my 11-year-old has been told she can't have a cellphone until she's 18 and can pay for it herself. Bill 15 would ask one family to pay significantly more than the other in any given year. Bill 15 assumes, therefore, that one family is more likely to need emergency services than the other. Or is Bill 15 simply a tax on cellphone owners? Has the minister considered a reduced tax for those people who go onto the family plan or for those people who have multiple cellphones in their home but are sharing amongst multiple members of their family?

It's clear to me that while Bill 15 will usher in many good provisions like liability protection for the hard-working men and women involved with 911 dispatch and new provincial regulations for standards of service and equipment, there are still many issues that could potentially prevent Bill 15 from achieving its desired goal.

Once again we get back to the discussion of transparency. It seems interesting to me that this bill is being brought forward as a government bill, that clearly the government has set this as a priority, that clearly the government is telling Albertans that this money is needed, and that clearly the government has established that 911 centres in Alberta need additional funding. I'm not necessarily disagreeing with any part of that, but once again I wonder. I wonder how many members of the PC government currently in power went to the doors and actually knocked on the doors and said: if you elect me tomorrow, I'm going to put a levy on your cellphone of 44 cents, and this is exactly what it's going to be used for. Now, I understand that they may not have known that the levy was 44 cents at the time, but they certainly would have known that this was a priority. The report is from 2008, and they certainly could have used that.

Once again we're in a situation where members opposite did not go to the doors and tell taxpayers that they're going to raise taxes, much the same as we've seen with so many other things. It's not transparent, and it's not honest. Once again we're not seeing it here. There is no accountability for the 7 cents in administration. They're not saying exactly what that goes to. Exactly how much does it cost in administration? Surely, they've done studies on the other side that would say that administration of this levy would cost X number of dollars, which would justify the 7 cents, yet we see none of that coming forward in the proposal. It's easy to solve. If the government has it, provide it. If the government doesn't have it, then they should do a study on exactly what that 7-cent administration is likely to be and what it should be used for. If it truly is too much, then reduce it. If it's not too much, then justify it. That should be pretty easy to do, and that's open and transparent to all Albertans.

Given that we're playing with taxpayers' money, we need to be in every decision, first and foremost, open and transparent to taxpayers. The additional 37 cents that it says will be distributed to 911 centres: there's no plan for that. It doesn't tell us exactly how that distribution is going to play out, how it's going to go to rural or urban or if it is even going to be a split. Yes, the report says that it's by population. Once again, when you were knocking on the doors during the campaign, and you had a 2008 report – clearly, this is a priority for the government – were you telling them that this is where their 37 cents was going to go to? Were you even addressing that 911 call centres across this province were in trouble?

With respect to all of my aforementioned reservations I recommend the government take more time to study Bill 15 in its fullness and look for ways to improve it. I'm more than willing to work with them to find improvements and amendments to Bill 15 that would make all Albertans happy. I support Bill 15 with reservation and recommend the government examine these outstanding issues before entering it into law.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm also rising in support of Bill 15. I've got a couple of questions here. The first question is on how we arrived at the levy of 44 cents per month. Is it to cover the shortfall we have right now in the 911 call centres? How much money will be paid to the telecommunications providers for administration costs and all of that? How long before the 44-cent levy goes up? Another year?

Another question is: what will happen if the telecommunications provider, you know, dissolves the company? What will happen to the money? How will the government recover that money from the call centres?

Another question is about families who have multiple cellphones. There are so many families out there like my family that have, I think, five or six of them. I don't mind paying 44 cents, but that's another question that comes to mind. This particular program at first blush looks beneficial to all Albertans, especially rural Albertans, but it also dumps the responsibility for the management of this onto a third party in municipal bodies. In the likely occurrence of a cellphone provider dissolving or disappearing, like I said before – no company will last forever – is the municipality still on the hook for those funds collected but not yet paid to the municipal government? If the provincial government is collecting those fees, what process do they have for the collection of the third-party debt?

Those are some of the questions that I have. I think we should be looking into that to make this fair for everybody. Those were my reasons for rising, but I still support Bill 15 because it's going to save lives, Madam Speaker. Anything is worth the cost to save a life.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, I'm glad to hear that members opposite are supporting this bill. Let's talk a little bit about what this act is going to do for rural Alberta. As we do know, a number of years ago the government embarked on – in part it was the hon. Member for Airdrie, in the bill that he wrote – a transition of ambulance service into Alberta Health Services. When that happened, obviously there was the opportunity for ambulance services to be in or to be out. What we've seen from the very beginning is ambulances wanting Alberta Health Services, communities in fact wanting Alberta Health Services to provide direct delivery, to manage and operate and own the cost of it because they recognized the opportunities, I presume, to deliver more effective health care.

Inherently when we think about first responders and the 911 dispatch centres, they typically dispatch those front-line staff. From community to community we know that those 911 call centres vary, particularly around ambulance dispatch. When the municipalities owned it, they were responsible in part to provide the infrastructure, particularly when you talk about those land lines. That's what a lot of those ambulance services and dispatch services in the past were built on and grown on. But we've seen a change in Alberta. We've moved into the 21st century. People are using cellphones, and the technology has gotten better. In fact, there's probably a greater conversation because of that technology and access to lots of information.

Madam Speaker, the big part of the additional cost for this is to provide for that infrastructure. If that infrastructure isn't there, well, it's just simply not there. What we see are calls dropped. What we see are lag times in getting those first responders, whether they be firefighters, police officers, or paramedics, into the field. A large part of that is to support the infrastructure from a cellular stance but also the hard line because we also know that not everybody in rural Alberta is going to own a cellphone, perhaps. It's just a part of doing business that I believe is going to help us provide emergency services to Albertans. Isn't that what we should be doing instead of creating innuendo and campaigning and talking about campaigning and what we did at the doors?

Madam Speaker, I can tell you as an advanced care paramedic what I said to people when I took that oath. Certainly, when I took the oath here in this House, when people put their trust in me, I said that I would do what was right, that I would protect them. It wasn't about my campaign promises about taxes. I told them I'd drive the car for them, and I'd drive it as straight as possible. But what I won't do is that just because I said I'd drive the car straight, when I see a cliff coming, I'm not going to continue straight off that cliff. I'm going to turn. I'm going to make an adjustment for the time that we have here and now to build up Alberta, to do the right thing, not what's political or political rhetoric.

That pertains again back to the infrastructure that we need. That's what this act is going to do. It's going to start allowing us to provide for the technology for the information systems to make sure that calls aren't dropped, that calls aren't missed, to put computer-aided dispatch computers in ambulances so that we can see where they are in real time. Madam Speaker, that doesn't just pertain to the safety of the people that are actually calling for the service; it's actually for the paramedics and the police officers and the firefighters, so that we know where they are.

You know, being part of that dispatch system and having been dispatched, I can tell you that when they see the car parked and they see it stopped, it gives them the ability to know if that crew is in trouble or in danger. The cellphones that we have: there are a multitude of them now in rural Alberta. That's good to see. Again, it's to provide the infrastructure for the farmer who falls off the tractor and is now hurt with a broken leg. I can tell you that when I worked in the rural ambulance service in Mayerthorpe, Alberta, that happened a lot. In fact, I can tell you that my aunt tells my uncle all the time, who's farming, and her son and their family and their loved ones to wear a cellphone when they're out rounding up the cows, when they're out on the combine in case there's a problem so that they can call 911.

Again, that is a positive thing for Alberta. The costs associated with this: obviously, we know there are administration costs to that. You know, there's nothing nefarious here. This is about protecting Albertans. This is about doing the right thing. This isn't a political decision. This is about building infrastructure that's going to protect the front-line staff so that they can get to the people who need them the most.

Madam Speaker, I'm in support of this bill. I'm glad my colleague is in support of this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members who would like to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: I just wanted to make a comment and maybe have you elaborate a little bit more. You made it sound like these farmers are always in a wreck, you know, falling off their horses and falling off their tractors. I've got many friends and family members who are ranchers and farmers, and we use horses and tractors every day. I can't remember the last time we, the people I know, had to call 911. Maybe you'd like to just elaborate on that a little bit and clarify that we're not all in a wreck all the time.

Mr. Fraser: Madam Speaker, let me clarify, I guess, from my own personal experience. My dad is somebody whom I love dearly, a man that probably has come too close to the edge of being in serious trouble due to his activities on a horse with his brother out on the farm. The time that I got the call from the hospital in Drumheller, you know, that he may have an internal bleed because he broke his pelvis on a horse that reared up on him or the time that the horse bucked him off and broke his scapula: I guess there are some personal things there.

What I can tell you is this. Let me talk honestly. Many times as a child I spent my summers on the farm in my uncle's care, in my grandmother's care when my parents were going through a rough divorce. You know what? Those were probably some of the fondest memories I'll ever have of my childhood. Between my grandmother and the people out on the farm, I can't tell you what a connected group of people they are and how they care for one another and how they are safe. In fact, it's their common sense and their connection to their community which I believe contribute to that overall safety. I just mentioned it in terms of the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and her comments. Did we knock on the doors? Did we go out to the rural families?

Again, I'll make the comment that the world is ever-changing, and it's better for us to make a turn that protects Albertans rather than just go off the cliff. That's what we said that we would do. I just think, you know, we need to be nimble as a government, and we need to be effective. That's not always popular, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

We still have two and a half minutes under 29(2)(a). Any other members wish to speak?

Seeing none, are there any other members who would like to speak on Bill 15, the Emergency 911 Act?

Would an hon. member like to close debate?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker: The question has been called.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a second time]

Bill 16

Victims Statutes Amendment Act, 2013

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise today to move second reading of Bill 16, the Victims Statutes Amendment Act, 2013.

The proposed changes in Bill 16 will amend both the Victims of Crime Act and the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act. I appreciate that the latter can be a bit of a mouthful. The bill focuses on financial benefits of victims of crime and helps to ensure that the government responds to victims in an informed and timely manner. We will continue to put the rights of victims first, ahead of offenders. Victims of serious crime resulting in injury are entitled to financial benefits. These benefits help victims cope and move on from the trauma that they have suffered.

I'm going to speak first about the proposed changes to the Victims of Crime Act. Madam Speaker, the last thing that this government wants to do is subject victims to time-consuming, long, and protracted or arduous processes and procedures with respect to receiving the financial benefits they qualify for. The victims of crime financial benefits program gives victims the options to have their case reviewed by the Criminal Injuries Review Board, otherwise referred to as the CIRB.

In order to streamline the current process, a fair number of amendments in Bill 16 deal with streamlining CIRB processes and reducing delays. The amendments would allow a member of the CIRB who has completed an initial evaluation in a case to also sit on the subsequent review panel. The amendments would also clarify that a case can be heard by only two CIRB panel members rather than a full component of three. These changes would add clarity to the legislation and, again, streamline the process. They will also make the decision process faster for victims, who will no longer have to wait for the full board to be available before their hearing can proceed.

The proposed amendments give CIRB the power of a commissioner for the purpose of conducting hearings. This would ensure the board has necessary authority to conduct hearings and obtain information needed to make decisions. Further, Madam Speaker, the amendments would allow the board to obtain expert advice from time to time and to request that a victim undergo a medical examination if necessary to determine the extent of their injury.

The amendments would also require the board to inform the victim of his or her right to choose an oral hearing or a written review. Many ask: why would this be an issue? Well, it's about fairness to victims and giving them more options. Victims who wish to discuss their experiences in person in a hearing would have the right to do so. Conversely, victims who do not wish to appear in person – for example, often but not limited to the case where the victim has suffered something very personal – could opt for a written review, in which they would not have to attend. Again, Madam Speaker, this is the sole choice of the victim. That's what this legislation would offer.

The next amendment would extend the time period in which a victim must report a crime to the police. Currently a victim can report the offence to police within a reasonable period of time after the incident took place. We would propose the change to a "reasonable period of time" after the applicant knew or ought to have known that the criminal offence occurred. Those people who are legally trained in this Chamber will know that this mirrors section 3's language in the Limitations Act. This would also make it easier for adult victims of childhood sex abuse to receive financial benefits. It also enshrines in legislation best practice for serving victims and recognizes the need for flexibility in these situations.

Madam Speaker, we also propose to streamline the review processes I have mentioned. Currently, when new information arises, the board must send the case back to the program director. Pursuant to the amendments, if it is decided that new information is not significant, the board may hear it as part of the review process. These amendments will of course increase the efficiency of the whole process. They will also ensure that we avoid any unnecessary delays that would have a negative impact on the victim.

Proposed amendments would also give CIRB authority to withhold confidential information, otherwise known as redacting, provided by third parties such as police and health services records. This respects the independence of our law enforcement process as well as our investigative process. For example, the release of this information could compromise ongoing police investigations or reveal practices and tactics, matters which the police are entitled to keep private. These amendments would also help ensure that sensitive information is protected while speeding up the review process for victims.

The amendments would also ensure that the transition between the current and the proposed legislation is seamless. Madam Speaker, any applicant who requested a review after October 1, 2011, will be able to choose an oral or written review, as I had mentioned. Requests before that date will remain subject to the act in place at that time.

There are also a number of proposed housekeeping amendments meant to ensure consistent wording and correct cross-referencing in the Victims of Crime Act as well as including information about death benefits, which was an oversight when the act was last amended, in 2011.

Madam Speaker, I'll now focus on the proposed amendments under the second act, the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act. This was an act, actually, passed originally by our current Minister of Human Services and later proclaimed in 2008 by the Premier when she sat in my chair as Justice minister. The particular act provides the tools necessary for Alberta's civil forfeiture office to seize the proceeds of crime through the courts. These processes have supported a number of programs and services, including without limitation those for victims of crime.

Madam Speaker, while the majority of those whose assets are seized do not contest the action, the government must go through the same court process regardless of whether the seizure of assets is contested or not. Bill 16 proposes a process whereby those who may have their assets confiscated have 30 days to respond to our forfeiture notification. If an objection is filed, then the forfeiture action proceeds to court. Interestingly enough, the current legislation under the Rules of Court allows for 15 days when a statement of claim is filed, so this gives twice that period of notification.

If an objection is not filed, the forfeiture proceeds through an administrative process and without court intervention. In the event that a person has not responded to the notification for a truly legitimate reason, that person can apply to the courts to have the forfeiture action reversed. If the application is successful, the objection is considered filed, and the forfeiture proceeds to court.

To be clear, real estate is not subject to the proposed amendments. This deals strictly with personal property and not with real property. Houses and other real estate will continue to be dealt with through the existing court process.

Additional amendments strive to end baseless legal delays by putting a reasonable time frame and limits on the number of adjournments in a case that can be made. This speaks, again, to moving away from what our ADM, Greg Lepp, had talked about as being a culture of delay. This moves away from that culture of delay. History shows that in at least 75 per cent of forfeiture cases mandatory paperwork is never filed by the defendant despite their continued requests for adjournments to do so. These unnecessary delays are a burden to an already busy justice system and delay the government in getting the criminal proceeds off the streets and the criminal proceeds into the hands of groups designed to deal with victims or, actually, to prevent crime.

The last amendment that I want to highlight deals with the assumed criminal proceeds uncovered during a police investigation. I stress again that this is during a police investigation. The amendment proposes that if the police find more than $10,000 in cash or assets that are easily converted into cash and there is no legitimate sign of business activity, it will automatically be presumed that this money is from the proceeds of crime. Of course, Madam Speaker, the owner of the cash can provide evidence to show that the cash is somehow not connected to the crime.

Madam Speaker, the Victims Statutes Amendment Act, 2013, honours victims of crime and helps the government do right by them. The amendments will also give victims of crime more options, help protect confidential information, and make the review process more efficient. They will also ensure that people who bring baseless or frivolous or vexatious legal actions that delay the forfeiture process will be screened out earlier in the process. These amendments enhance the timeliness of forfeiture actions and bolster the police's ability to seize goods and money obtained illegally while still preserving due process.

Ultimately, this increases the money available for victims and crime prevention programs for all Albertans. Of course, this money does not go into the police's wallet. It does not go into the government's coffers. It is given, actually, to organizations that we've seen help victims or prevent crime. Over the last five years over $25 million has actually gone through this process.

Bill 16 is key to ensuring that we continue to offer excellent services to victims of crime throughout Alberta. Madam Speaker, I'd like to thank you for the opportunity to provide these comments. I therefore propose that Bill 16, the Victims Statutes Amendment Act, 2013 be moved through second reading.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and speak to Bill 16, the Victims Statutes Amendment Act, 2013, which amends two pieces of legislation, the Victims of Crime Act and the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act. There are many changes throughout this bill, but I'll only highlight a few of them.

The amendments to the Victims of Crime Act allow for a simplified review process of decisions made by the director in charge of carrying out the duties of the act and also reduces some of the complexity that existed in the review process.

The amendments to the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act essentially make it easier for the minister to confiscate property obtained by or used in illegal activities by creating an administrative process for such procedures.

One additional change is the limit to the number of extensions that an individual can be granted in preparation of a disposition hearing. The one thing that lawyers can certainly do – and their clients do it all the time – is to ask for extensions of time, stretching out the process. Of course, one would hope that every available avenue to reduce that type of undue delay is sought.

There are other minor changes that can be discussed in more detail in Committee of the Whole. One material change is that authorities are now being granted the power to confiscate cash or negotiable instruments, as that is defined in the act, if over $10,000 of such funds can be associated to drug activity or are found in bulk amounts not associated with the regular course of business activities.

I was pleasantly surprised by some of the amendments put forward by the Justice minister. Since he's been given his position, he has pursued what I'd call a complete soft-on-crime agenda, his progressive justice policy agenda. He may have found his world view on justice policy back in 1995 when he was a Liberal staffer for the Saskatchewan Liberal Party, which was well into the Jean Chrétien era. Maybe the minister is wanting to show that contrary to everything else he has done to date, he is actually not soft on crime. If that is his intention, I definitely support that, to actually come up with some policies that would reduce crime and also help the victims of crime.

We saw events in the past year where there's been the elimination of the electronic monitoring of criminals, the slash of the safer communities fund, the two free passes for individuals who commit crimes of theft or vandalism. We also saw delays in the court system. Where individuals who've been charged with sexual assault, where the police investigation warranted a charge and where the Crown prosecutor after an analysis of the evidence found that a charge was warranted, due to the delay in the justice system, the defence was actually able to get those cases thrown right out of court, and the victims in those cases certainly did not see justice. So it's good that the minister is maybe finally turning a leaf and taking some of our criticisms to heart.

What we really need is a comprehensive, real concerted tough-on-crime approach here in Alberta. We need to seriously pursue criminals and criminal activities and ensure that the crooks who break the law receive swift, certain, and severe penalties. Get your affairs in order and start taking care of the victims of crime in Alberta by making sure that the criminals actually get charged and go to jail. We've seen time and time again, which was actually outlined in the report by his ADM, where there was such a multitude of flaws in the current system that resulted in delay and resulted in the victims not having their day in court and their perpetrators not seeing the consequences of their actions.

We hope that, you know, although this act doesn't deal with that specifically, maybe this minister is turning a corner here and actually being tough on crime and actually supporting the victims of those crimes. If that's the case, of course, we would continue to support that movement away from a soft-on-crime liberal . . .

Ms Blakeman: Hey. Hey.

Mr. Saskiw: A progressive approach, not liberal.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you.

Mr. Saskiw: From a progressive approach to a more tough-on-crime conservative approach, that the Wildrose favours.

Madam Speaker, I believe that some of these amendments put forward in this bill will assist in halting organized crime. I look forward to debating the specific provisions of the act in Committee of the Whole.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

5:50

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. I'm struggling with this act. I haven't been able to quite work through it enough to be able to walk you through all the sections that I'm not happy about, so I'm paying attention to what others are saying about this, including the minister, of course.

I'll tell you where my cautions come in. I keep seeing this government – this is the second or third time, I guess, where we have moved from a court setting with all that that means, you know, the ability to call witnesses and cross-examine and all the stuff that flows from the Constitution, to an administrative setting where those things don't necessarily apply. Actually, a lot of them don't apply.

I'm just as concerned as everybody else about crime. I represent downtown Edmonton. Most of my constituents think that we have way more crime than we actually do, but it's very hard to convince them of that. I want people to feel safe. I want them to report crime and not cover it up because it's a friend or whatever. I want them to participate in that policing and justice, the courts and the Solicitor General, you know, incarceration sections. That's important for my people because a lot of them are living on the edge or over the edge in their relationship with those particular bodies.

But I always look at this and think: "Okay. What if it was me?" I would hope that it wasn't, but we've got to be honest with ourselves. We hope lots of things. We hope, you know, that none of us will ever be poor or homeless or sick or get beat up or get yelled at. There are all kinds of things we hope won't happen, and in fact sometimes they do, sometimes of your own stupid decisions and sometimes bad luck, being in the wrong place at the wrong time.

So when I look at this and I'm trying to work my way through the consequences, intended and otherwise, of what's being done in this act, I'm struggling because I think there's more here than meets the eye. There's the version that the minister puts out that this is about looking after victims – good; excellent – that it's about punishing bad guys. Okay. But part of what we've always done in our legal system in Canada is make darn sure that we punish the right bad guy and not the wrong person. Even trying to do that, I think, in a fairly stellar way in Canada, particularly compared to our neighbours to the south, we've still made some monumental mistakes.

I think we always have to be very cautious about where we give power or forfeit power around the law. You've got to be careful about this stuff because if you hand over your ability to be a free person to someone else and they make a decision that they're going to lock you up, you're kind of hooped. You agreed that they had the power to do that, and now they can do it to you. So is that really what you intended?

Let me back up a bit here. I remember once there was a debate on gun legislation here, and people kept getting up and saying, "Oh, you know, my kid was just doing this, and he got picked up and he got fined or charged with something," and I kept thinking: "Yeah, and they broke the law. So what is the problem?" But we need to be careful that we're not judge, jury, and jailer before the fact.

I often hear people in here make the same mistake, where they talk about people in the remand centre as being inmates or convicts or crooks or criminals in some way. In fact, that's wrong. People are in the remand centre usually because they don't have an address, so they don't get released on their own recognizance. They are kept there so that the courts know where to find them. Some of them are truly heinous people – they are gang members and murders and other people – but there is also a fair number of them that are mentally ill or homeless or very poor and don't have the resources. They don't have an address to give, and guess what happens? The rule is: give an address where they can find you or spend time in the remand centre.

I have constituents that end up in the remand centre, and they're not crooks, criminals, convicts, or bad guys, and they are certainly not inmates, which indicates that they have been charged and convicted of a crime. They haven't been. We have to be very cautious about casting people or even creating a situation where that can happen to people. I'm really looking for the double checks that need to be in place here.

As I said, this moving from a court-based system with all of the protections and double checks that are inherent in that system and moving to an administrative tribunal is a different thing. It just caught my ear when I heard the minister say: well, to all of you with a legal background in this House, blah, blah, blah, blah, blah. I thought: hmm; we shouldn't need to have a legal background to understand what's going on.

Mr. Denis: I didn't say that. You misrepresented the truth.

Ms Blakeman: I put in the blah, blah, blah part, so that should cover it.

Mr. Denis: That's all I hear when you speak.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, Minister. Do you really have to descend to that level? Really, Minister?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, through the chair.

Ms Blakeman: I would love to go through the chair, but that's pretty disappointing behaviour from someone that's supposed to be a grown-up. Okay. [interjection] If the Minister of Justice really feels that he needs to get up and demean me, please take the opportunity to do that.

Mr. Denis: Point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
We have a point of order.

Point of Order Remarks off the Record

Mr. Denis: Standing orders 23(h), (i), and (j). At no time did I demean this member. I request that she withdraw those comments.

Ms Blakeman: No. I'm sorry. I have someone here that is deliberately making comments that I can hear. Yes, you're absolutely right, Madam Speaker. If we'd gone through you, that wouldn't have happened, but he intended me to hear demeaning comments, and I heard them. [interjection] Well, then we can postpone this, and the Speaker can find out what's in Hansard exactly because Hansard has got pretty good mikes. I bet you they picked up the comments, and we can all come back and look at this again.

I'm not going to withdraw those comments. If the minister feels that he needs to sit here and make comments about me while I'm speaking, then use the opportunity under 29(2)(a) to get up and put them on the record. All I'm trying to do is express an opinion and express on to my constituents what's going around a bill. He should be able to stand a little questioning around that.

So, no, I'm not going to withdraw my comments, Madam Speaker. No offence to you or to this Assembly, but I can't.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Of course, I don't think there's a point of order here at all. We should just move on with business, I think. The Justice minister didn't even bother expanding upon the rationale for his point of order. It was like an eight-word point of order, almost nonsensical. We'd have to look at all the facts, but there's no point of order here.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, thank you for that.

It is now 6 o'clock. We will respond to the point of order when we return at 7:30 p.m. The Assembly stands adjourned.

Thank you.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Tuesday, April 23, 2013

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

Point of Order

Remarks off the Record

The Acting Speaker: Before we proceed with the next member to speak on Bill 16, we have a point of order that I need to talk to you about. Hon. members, there was a point of order raised by the hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General a few minutes prior to the afternoon adjournment. The chair has reviewed the matter and consulted with Hansard. Given that the chair did not hear any offensive remarks nor were any such remarks recorded by Hansard, the chair cannot find a point of order.

In situations such as this the chair would refer members to the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 618, where it states:

If the Chair did not hear the offensive word or phrase and if the offensive language was not recorded in the Debates, the Chair cannot be expected to rule in the absence of a reliable record.

The same principle is in Beauchesne's at paragraph 486(4). Accordingly, the chair cannot find a point of order.

We will now go back to the debate on second reading for Bill 16. I would remind everyone that it would be a good idea if you remember to speak through the chair and to show respect for each other and the institution. That's what's important in this Legislature.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Victims Statutes Amendment Act, 2013

[Debate adjourned April 23: Ms Blakeman speaking]

The Acting Speaker: We'll carry on. Are there any other members who would like to speak on Bill 16? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to say Madam Chair.

Ms Calahasen: I like you.

Mr. Anglin: I like you, too, Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Madam Chair, I rise to speak in favour of this bill in the sense that victims' rights have long been ignored. I can go through multiple stories. We don't need to hear all the stories that go along with this. [interjection] You want to hear the stories? I've got my coffee. Not to diminish the seriousness of this bill . . .

The Acting Speaker: Through the chair, please.

Mr. Anglin: Through the chair.

For far too long victims have watched a legal system that protected the rights of criminals for due process of law. Due process of law is extremely important, and I won't take away the importance of that. But what victims go through when a crime is being committed, whether it's a violent crime – even in the case of criminals with misdemeanors and things like petty theft, people feel violated. What some legal scholars point out is that it's not justice; it's a legal system. This type of bill brings some sense of justice to the process. That's why I will support the bill.

I have one concern. It is a concern that I would like the government to take into consideration, and that is the concern of due process of law. I always want to make sure that the rights of the victims are protected but also that we don't create other victims in haste or accidentally or unintentionally, that we wouldn't eliminate due processes of law. That would allow injustice to happen as an indirect result of passing this bill. Clearly, there are some concerns here, but I feel the overall intention of the bill is good. It does address this issue.

In some cases maybe it doesn't go quite far enough. How do we address the losses of many of the victims? There are so many different aspects to what these losses are. This isn't the end-all. The government doesn't yet have what I think is a very good solution in the sense of bringing justice to the victims of crime, but it is a step in the right direction. I would prefer to see a system of justice where victims of crime not only receive compensation but closure. That's a complicated issue, closure for people who have been violated. It's different for the different types of crimes that are committed.

I commend the government for bringing this forward. I will be supporting it. I'll ask my members here to support this act. Whether or not we bring some amendments forward, it is possible to address some of those concerns. Maybe the hon. members from the other side can actually address those up front to make sure that there are processes in place that guarantee due process of law. That's the only thing that I'm concerned about.

We like to think that our system of justice always operates at an extremely high level, but we know that sometimes mistakes are made. We're human. People inject into the system their own belief systems, or in some cases we have people that have to be disciplined as a result of improper actions. That deserves to be addressed. We never want the system of justice to actually abuse those who come before it.

These are my concerns about dealing with due process of law, and I've seen it. I've seen it a number of times. I've seen where judges were held accountable, prosecutors were held accountable, and defence lawyers were held accountable for improper behaviour. We want the system to work to hold them accountable. We don't want anyone to be abused, but we want justice served.

To address the issue that deals with victims and how we're going to deal with their rights: this is an ongoing issue in our society. This is something that in many ways we always look at in terms of financial support or financial issues dealing with compensation when, in fact, for many victims of crime, what they're looking for is closure. It's that emotional feeling of being abused, violated, in many ways, and it is for some unending to get over, to have closure, to get on with life.

To have somebody who has been victimized suffer that penalty, in some cases for years, particularly with violent crimes – you hear women who have suffered from the violent crime of rape talk about how it haunts them for many years to come and how difficult it is to deal with it. That's the issue that I think goes beyond this bill. It goes beyond this bill. It is about closure. It's more than just the compensation issue. It is about dealing with the victims of crime and bringing justice towards, you know, an end of closure, I guess is how I want to put it.

That's where I am with this bill. I'm going to support the bill. I support the intent of the bill. I just have my concerns, and I don't want to support the bill and let this government know that I think this is the solution, the end-all, and it satisfies everything that needs to be done. A lot more work does need to be done, and I hope the members on the other side think about that. Maybe we can do something to even improve this bill so we address those types of issues. Maybe that needs to be a whole different undertaking, and I would still support that.

Victims of crime suffer immeasurably, and sometimes their sentences are far greater than the sentence handed out to those who have actually committed the crime. That, to me, is a tremendous injustice. We're dealing with an issue of victims' restitution and compensation, but that is not necessarily justice. I think that if we take a step back, we can pass this bill but still address these other issues or keep in mind how we're going to address those, how we're going to help the victims of crime get back to where they can live a whole life and enjoy life and have a decent quality of life.

With some crimes it's not that difficult to have a victim get over it, get on with life. With other crimes it is devastating. It can be devastating not just for the victim of that crime – and it's something for government to think about – but as a parent. I think many of us are parents in here. If our son or our daughter is a victim of crime, I think the parents and the grandparents suffer just as much as the actual victims themselves. It does affect everybody. It needs to be looked at in that context of who the victim actually is here and what justice is in the sense of putting closure to these events that these victims go through and, in the other venue, how we protect society as a whole.

Clearly, as stated earlier, this is in my view a good bill. I think it's a right step in the right direction. I'm pleased as a member of the Official Opposition to go with the government on this and support the bill. I want to see it go forward. We will scrutinize it at great length as we always do. But the fact is that taking these right steps is a positive thing not just for government but for the fact that we as a legislative group in a bipartisan manner can actually come to an agreement and say: "Okay. Let's take the right steps. We will support this, but let's continue, and let's build upon what we're doing and address more comprehensively the issues that deal with victims of crime."

With that, Madam Speaker, thank you very much. I urge all my colleagues here to support this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I wanted to say thank you very much for . . .

The Acting Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. Minister. I forgot to call 29(2)(a).

Mr. Denis: That's what I was on.

The Acting Speaker: Carry on.

Mr. Denis: Thank you. I just have some brief comments. I wanted to thank the member for supporting this bill. I think it's very important in a bill like this that we have bipartisan support.

The one comment that he did make that I did want to address is when he talked about, for example, a woman who had been sexually assaulted and not wanting to victimize her twice. I couldn't possibly agree with him more. One of the most positive changes in this particular bill is that fact that if the person who would have suffered such a violent and heinous crime would apply to the Criminal Injuries Review Board for compensation, this person would have the choice of presenting an oral submission or a written submission. In that case I can imagine that many of these victims would want to just simply present a written submission. The pith and substance, the idea, behind this bill and the changes that it's making to the Victims of Crime Act is that we do not want to victimize people twice, particularly but not limited to situations like that.

I want to thank the member again for his comments and his support.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Minister.

Are there other members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to stand in support of this bill. I think it's an important bill, Bill 16, the Victims Statutes Amendment Act, 2013. This is a very good piece of legislation. It's a very good idea, this victims' fund in general, and it's something that is very good. It's very, very, very good. This is something that we certainly should be strengthening going forward.

I like the ideas in this bill. I like the idea of being able to seize more assets from organized crime, prostitution rings, things like that, and this legislation seems to make it easier for that to occur, makes it easier to seize money from these organizations. They stockpile a lot of cash. Sometimes when police raid their facilities or their hideouts and bases and things like that, they are able to seize some of those funds. Those funds can now be directed, I think, more expeditiously into the victims of crime fund. That's a good thing.

One thing I would like to see in this bill is addressing the issue of, for example, Dani in Airdrie, who we've gotten to know with regard to the sexual assault case that was dropped. The victims of crime fund, as far as I understand it, would apply to someone like that if there was a finding of guilt, but I don't know if that fund would be available to her and her family in her case.

I think that a good amendment would be that if the Crown for some reason is to drop a case like Dani's or like somebody else who had had their case dropped because of Crown and court delays, so system delays, not for lack of evidence – sometimes there's a lack of evidence, and cases are dropped because of that and so forth. Then I think that it is important that those victims who have essentially been revictimized by not having their day in court – hopefully, that won't happen again, but if it does happen again, those individuals in those very few cases, if any, I would hope, should also be able to access the victims of crime fund.

I'm not sure if that's the case right now. I'm not sure if this bill entertains that notion. I think that we should perhaps think about doing that. I don't know if we can find a way to do that in Committee of the Whole, but it certainly would be something I'd like to see.

I think that what this victims of crime fund allows us to do, Madam Speaker, is it gives us an opportunity to change the dynamic. I think that for many years there seemed to be an overemphasis on the rights of criminals or the accused and much less emphasis on the rights of the victims and what had been taken away from them, the dignity that had been taken away from them, the fear that they had to live in, the cost associated sometimes – the emotional cost, the physical cost – with the crime that was perpetrated against them.

Of course, this is an amendment to an existing piece of legislation that we have on the victims of crime fund. I think that this kind of turns it around a little bit and is a recognition that crime has two sides, obviously. It has someone who commits the crime and someone or multiple people who are the victims of the crime, and those people need to have more than just – in order to have true reconciliation, there has to obviously be justice to the person who perpetrated the crime. That's important, and one would say that we need to improve that side as well. But for real restitution to occur, they need to be compensated even if it's not fully, because some things, of course, you can never fully compensate a victim for. But there needs to be a recognition that something has been taken from them and that society recognizes that and feels an obligation to compensate that victim for their loss. I think that that's a real important step.

I think what will happen here with the victims of crime fund is that this will allow it to build up more, that there will be more funds available to the victims of crime fund because of this amendment. My understanding is that we have a surplus in the victims of crime fund, and I think that that needs to be addressed as well. We need to make sure that the funds are going to the victims, and if we're seeing a surplus built in that fund every year, that means that we need to have more compensation going to those victims of crime or expand the scope of it, like I said earlier, to someone like Dani Polsom, who I think should have access to that fund, as well as people like her who are victims of court system delays and Crown delays and so forth when it does happen.

I support this bill, and I would encourage all members to support it. There is a comment sometimes that we worry about the civil rights of individuals in situations like this, where you have personal property being seized by the police before an accused is convicted of a crime. Obviously, that shouldn't be done just willy-nilly. There have to be protections around it, but I would say that I do think that a piece of legislation like that is open to abuse.

That said, all legislation is open to abuse, and with all legislation that we pass when it comes to policing and so forth, there are always ways that that legislation can be abused. You'll never get away from that. At some point you have to make sure that the civil liberties of individuals are protected, but you can't go so far overboard with that that you make it impossible for the police and law enforcement and the court system to do their jobs, and that's what's kind of happened. We've made it so difficult with paperwork and all kinds of rules and regulations around how to process the accused and so forth that now what's happened is that it's become so onerous that a lot of people are never even getting their day in court or the sentences aren't as stiff as they potentially once were for very serious crimes. Things like that will happen, so there has to be a balance.

I think we'll probably always be working at that balance between protecting civil liberties and protecting the rights of the victim and serving justice. I think that this bill strikes that right balance and gets us closer to that balance, and I applaud the government for doing a good job on that bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) now applies, five minutes of questions and comments. Are there any members who would like to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I would ask: are there any members who wish to speak on Bill 16, the Victims Statutes Amendment Act, 2013? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll be relatively brief. This looks like a reasonable piece of legislation put forward by the hon. Solicitor General. It looks to strengthen the rights of the victim, enabling them to obtain compensation and assistance when they have suffered, having been a victim of crime, and that is always a good thing.

I, too, echo the concerns of the Member for Airdrie. The civil liberties component of this bill is always one of those things we have to look at very closely to decide whether and in what situations we are going to seize property prior to a person being found guilty of committing a crime. I will analyze this bill in greater detail to satisfy myself that we have not overstepped sort of, I guess, my radar on those things.

Nevertheless, I'm of the understanding that people who are victims of crime do suffer a great deal. They do need to be compensated, and they do need access to support mechanisms that may be made available through the victims of crime compensation act with the support of this amendment to enable them to try to move forward, move past, and try to be made whole as a result of the situation that they've been put through.

I will briefly comment, too, on the fact that the victims of crime fund, by all appearances, does have a surplus. The victims of crime fund, where possible, hopefully could be used to support not only individuals but community-minded efforts that not only allow for a reduction in crime but a social good that leads to positive outcomes, whether that be supporting a local community group to keep kids busy after school or something of that nature.

I think there are a whole host of opportunities where we'd look at reducing acts of violence and acts of crime in our society as a result of investments by government in helping people better themselves, better their community, and the like, both when they're young and at other stages in their lives, because that seems to be a much more proactive approach than locking people up in jail forever and a day. In my view, the American experience hasn't, I guess, produced satisfactory results. The price of keeping people in jail forever and a day far exceeds the measures for investments in your community that would keep them out.

If the fund could be used in such a manner and on such occasions to do that, I would hope that it is embracing those opportunities. At this point in time I reserve final comment on it, but it looks like it's headed in that direction, and we'll see it at the next stage of the bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Are there any members who wish to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll ask if there are any members who wish to speak further in second reading of Bill 16, Victims Statutes Amendment Act.

Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker: The question has been called. Would the hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General like to close debate?

Mr. Denis: I just would like to thank all members from all sides of the House for supporting this important bill of victims. If there are any amendments coming into Committee of the Whole, I would appreciate advance notice so we can discuss them.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

Bill 14 RCMP Health Coverage Statutes Amendment Act, 2013

The Deputy Chair: Are there any members who wish to speak in Committee of the Whole? The hon. Associate Minister of Seniors.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise in support of Bill 14, the RCMP Health Coverage Statutes Amendment Act, 2013. I appreciate the support of all members of this Assembly in the second reading. It's clear that the members of the RCMP have the respect and admiration of all Albertans, including all of my colleagues here in the Legislature.

The passage of this legislation is not a choice. It's a requirement created by the federal Bill C-38, and it's a requirement to ensure that Alberta remains in compliance with the Canada Health Act. Before the federal government's Bill C-38 members of Canada's national police force, like members of the military, were excluded from the definition of insured persons under the Canada Health Act. Bill C-38 changes the definition of insured person so that an RCMP appointed to the rank is no longer excluded. This means that roughly 3,000 RCMP members in Alberta who are appointed to the rank will now need to be insured under the Alberta Health Act insurance plan, and that requires changes to the provincial legislation.

Like the Canada Health Act, Alberta's own health care legislation defines who qualifies for provincial health care coverage and who needs to register for coverage. The Alberta Health Care Insurance Act and the Alberta Health Insurance Premiums Act have clauses that exclude members of the RCMP who are appointed to rank. Bill 14 amends these two Alberta statutes to remove the exclusion, so members of the RCMP appointed to the rank are eligible for provincial health care coverage and may register for coverage.

The RCMP Health Coverage Statutes Amendment Act is amongst the shortest acts I've ever had the pleasure to speak to. It has just two sections, consisting of two clauses each. The Alberta Health Care Insurance Act section 4(3)(b) identifies residents who are not entitled to payments of the benefits in respect of the health services. The first section of Bill 14 removes members of the RCMP who are appointed to the rank from the list of unentitled persons. The Health Insurance Premiums Act section 3(1) also lists members of the RCMP who are appointed to a rank as being amongst those exempt from the requirement to pay health premiums.

The second section of Bill 14 removes RCMP members appointed to a rank from the list of exemptions. With these two amendments, Madam Chair, Alberta's health system will have the legislative authority to include members of the RCMP appointed to rank.

In second reading the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake raised the question of whether the province has recognized the cost of health care coverage. The simple answer is yes. The financial impact is small. RCMP members represent approximately .08 per cent of the population. Based on RCMP billings, the average yearly cost for physician services is between $1.3 million and $1.5 million. Plus, under the prior arrangements Justice and Solicitor General already paid for 70 per cent of that total. Government will now be assuming the other 30 per cent, and we expect higher federal transfers to cover that cost.

I hope that clears up the information that the member asked for. I also look forward to any further discussion and debate at committee stage and once again want to thank hon. members for their support in second reading. Today I ask for your continued support for Bill 14, the RCMP Health Coverage Statutes Amendment Act, 2013, so we can bring these dedicated police officers into the publicly funded health care system that every other Albertan, including their spouses and children, is entitled to.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise in favour of this bill. I did not speak to it during second reading, but I wanted to make sure that I did put it on record, because it is very personal for me to make sure that we support and that I support the RCMP. I understand where this comes from. I understand the origins of it and why we need this bill. I'm also of the belief that sometimes we can't do enough to support our men and women in uniform, that put their lives on the line every day.

I just want to emphasize one point. All too often people think that when these men and women go out there and put their lives on the line that they have some sort of anticipation or some sort of idea of what to expect every time that call happens. The reality is that they don't. These men and women don't just put their lives on the line, but they get hurt in the most awkward of situations and sometimes the most incredibly surprising venues, where they totally did not expect to find violence from the direction it came from. That's why it is such an extremely dangerous profession.

I'll just share one experience of mine where we went on a domestic call. Most police officers will verify that they are the most volatile in some cases. My partner actually rescued a lady who was being assaulted, and while he was rescuing her, she bit him on the arm to such an extent that he was laid up for more than three months. Nobody saw that coming, nobody expected it to happen, and now all of a sudden we had somebody who was severely injured. And if anyone knows anything about a human bite, it is amazingly infectious, and that's what happened.

I can go on and on with stories like this. It's so important that we take care of our men and women in uniform, and it is so important that we support them in every way, shape, or form.

To the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne: I remember that day. I remember that day. I was driving to Sylvan Lake when those officers from Red Deer were heading north, going to the event that happened in Mayerthorpe. When they went by me, I knew something was out of the ordinary as one cruiser after another cruiser after another cruiser came by in a parade at full speed heading north. I knew something serious had happened that day, and later on when it hit the news, my heart sank. I felt that loss.

Again, I support this. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on Bill 14?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 14 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 12
Fiscal Management Act

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Bill 12. It seems like an eternity since speaking to Bill 12. It was just like . . .

Mr. Hancock: All that time we spent in estimates.

Mr. Anderson: All that time we spent in estimates. That's right. We almost forgot about Bill 12. I thought it was just a bad dream, a nightmare, perhaps. But, no. It is real. It is a real bill.

Madam Chair, Bill 12 is a piece of legislation that I certainly cannot support. [interjections] I know that's shocking and disappointing to those opposite. Although I will note that I voted for the majority of the government's bills both in the last session and in this session, this one I cannot support.

It is a bill that, in my view, first of all, allows for more clouding of the budget documents that we receive. It essentially allows for less transparency in the budget process and in the budget documents, which I can't support. It contemplates a savings plan, which is good, but I believe that the savings plan in the way it's articulated allows for, well, essentially borrowing to save, which is something that I don't think government should be doing. I realize there are some private investors that use that strategy, but I don't believe that government should be borrowing to save money, which essentially this savings plan does allow for. I do think it's good that we're at least contemplating a savings plan, which is at least a small step.

In my view, by separating the operational from the capital and the savings plan and so forth, it allows the government to continue this practice that they have of taking capital spending off and essentially treating it separately as if it's completely different from the regular activities of government. It's not. We build capital every single year, so we should treat it as a regular expense, not as a separate category.

I think that there are some major flaws in this bill, and I think that it's being passed for the sole purpose of allowing the government to be less transparent. One of the ways that it is less transparent, in my view – and I don't know what the excuse for it is – is this idea that we have quarterly updates. As everyone knows, that was an idea for more fiscal accountability, fiscal transparency, that was passed in two pieces of legislation during the Ralph Klein revolution, actually by the Finance minister of the day, Jim Dinning. A lot of confidence had been lost by the people of Alberta in the way the finances were handled under former Premier Don Getty. A lot of confidence was lost in that. Huge debts were being run up, and they were using accounting practices that – let's put it this way – were not as clear as they should have been with the public, so there was a lot of confusion and so forth.

8:10

When Premier Klein came into office, one of the things that he directed his finance minister to do was to restore public confidence in the way that numbers were reported. They passed two significant pieces of legislation to accomplish this. In that package of legislation one of the things that was brought to pass was the idea of quarterly updates. What these quarterly updates would do is give people – obviously, we have the budget that's delivered usually in February or March or April, and that sets out the government's plan for the coming year, obviously, and explains how the money is going to be spent and where and so forth and what they expect revenues to be and what they expect expenses to be and so on.

Quarterly updates were intended to give the people of Alberta – the government and the opposition parties as well as the general public – an update as to where they were, what had changed in that first quarter, if anything, to change the original budget, what had happened. Were revenues coming in as strong as first thought? Was there an emergency that we didn't expect? Was there some kind of program that just had to be implemented, or was there something that was cut that was in there originally? And so forth.

There are all kinds of things that can change in a quarter throughout a year, so what Mr. Dinning did and what Premier Klein did, rightfully so, was that they said: look, we need to give Albertans an update and show them every quarter, every three months, how things are proceeding, how we think the budget has changed over the last three months, what we're projecting the budget to be now that we have more up-to-date information. This would again restore the trust that Albertans had in the budgeting process and in the books that the government was publishing.

Well, this Finance minister decided recently that that was not – he released a quarterly update, but unfortunately it did not include projections as to how the budget had changed. All it did was give a summation of the revenue for that first three months and the expenses for that first three months in question. But it didn't look at what the projected deficit would be by the end of the year, what the projected surplus would be by the end of the year, the projected expenses, the projected revenues if the price of oil had changed, what the projected revenues would be and so forth. He didn't include that as had been done for more than a decade previously by his predecessors. He decided he didn't want to share that information. He said that his interpretation of the legislation on the books at that time was that he didn't need to, that he just needed to show the revenues and expenses for that quarter and so forth.

I've read that act. I disagree with his interpretation, however. I know folks at the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, a great watchdog over the public purse, also disagreed with the Finance minister on that as did CFIB and several other third parties. Nonetheless, the Auditor General looked at it as well and certainly did not say that the Finance minister was doing anything contrary to the legislation, so we'll have to agree to disagree on that one, I guess.

But I think that it is stunning that after more than a decade of doing it that way, of clearly articulating, clearly showing what the projected end-of-year budget was going to look like every single quarter as new information came, giving Albertans a more fulsome picture of what the budget document was going to look like at the end, to change that so that it doesn't need to be done anymore, which is what this legislation makes very clear now, I think is not a healthy practice for our democracy and, frankly, for our financial affairs here.

We saw this very clearly with the release of the budget. We also got a third-quarter update just before that. If you notice in the third-quarter update, we didn't know if we were going to have an operational deficit, we weren't sure of the size of the deficit because there was no projection at that time. Then, sure enough, when the budget was released, we found out that, indeed, there was an operational deficit for last year and that the real cash deficit was massive. It was north of $5 billion. It was a huge cash deficit, and that was taken out primarily from the sustainability fund.

We had to wait to the very end of the year to figure that out. There were all kinds of questions and all kinds of games being played as to what the size of the thing was, and we couldn't get a clear answer or a clear projection until after the fact. I think that's wrong. That's the government trying to control the message, and that's not what budget documents or quarterly updates are for. They're for transparency, accountability, so everybody can see the projections, so they can know if the government is holding back some expenses to the last minute to mask the size of the deficit, which is indeed what was happening, whether intentionally or just that's the way the program works, whatever.

The point is that we were totally unaware of the size of the deficit and the sustainability fund and everything else. We didn't know what the projection was going to be until after the year was over, and that's not appropriate.

Anyway, going to my first amendment on Bill 12, that is meant to deal with that. I can pass the amendment around if you'd like, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, do you have the original of the amendment?

Mr. Anderson: Yup.

The Deputy Chair: If you could have that sent to the table, please, through the pages.

Hon. members, we'll call this amendment A1, and we'll wait a minute while we have the amendment distributed among the members.

Hon. member, I think that you may proceed.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. Now, what this amendment does – if you turn to section 9, it currently says:

- 9 A fiscal plan must include, in respect of the revenue and expense of the Government and prescribed Provincial agencies,
  - (a) an operational plan,
  - (b) a savings plan,
  - (c) a capital plan, and
  - (d) the major economic assumptions made in preparing the fiscal plan, including a comment on the effect that changes in those assumptions may have on the finances of the Government in the fiscal years to which the fiscal plan relates.

What would happen is that it would add a clause (e) at the end that says:

- (e) a consolidated expense and revenue balance sheet which includes all capital spending as an expense.

Now, what this is an attempt to do is to create essentially a line item there which would show the cash surplus or deficit. The intention of this is to treat capital spending, all money outflows from the government, detail exactly what those are, detail all the money, the inflows and outflows of the government for a given year.

8:20

What had happened previously in the budget document is that if you looked under expenses, the government would have all the operational expenses listed, and then they would also have the capital expenses listed as it applied to grants that they gave out to municipalities and so forth. Then there was a line item there, infrastructure spending for capital, essentially, and it would range from $2 billion, $3 billion, or northward. There was a little asterisk beside that number, and if you went down to the footnote, it would say that this amount is not included as an expense in the balance sheet. The reason is because it was offset. It was an asset owned by the province that was being purchased with that money, so what they would say is: "Look. Even though there's money going out, because we're getting an asset, it offsets. We paid a billion dollars for a road or whatever, and it's worth a billion dollars, so that spending didn't count."

Now, the problem with doing it that way – I mean, it's all fine from an accounting perspective. There's nothing illegal or Enronlike going on with that. But the problem with regard to the public is that it masked the size of the true cash shortfall of government. Because of that, you would have really silly things where the government would announce a deficit, say, of a billion dollars, yet the sustainability fund would go down by 3 and a half billion dollars or $4 billion that year. The question is: well, if the deficit is only a billion dollars, why are we taking $3 billion or $4 billion out of the sustainability fund? The reason for that is because that capital spending was not counting as an expense and was being paid for at that time by the sustainability fund.

So it became very unclear, and people would say, "Well, you know, a billion dollars, yeah, it's a deficit, and we need to correct that, but it doesn't sound like the end of the world," yet their sustainability fund just kept dropping like a rock until at the end of this year it'll be worth roughly a half billion dollars when it was $17 billion not too long ago.

The intent of this amendment is to ask the government to make sure that when they're putting out a fiscal plan, a budget and all the quarterly updates that go with that budget, they will clearly outline the cash flow – inflow, outflow – so we can have an idea of what the true cash deficit or cash adjustment, as the Finance minister sometimes calls it, is. That number should be very clear, and it essentially should equal how much was taken out of savings and how much debt was taken out to finance.

In the case of this last budget that number totalled 5 and a half billion dollars. That was the amount of debt that we're taking out this year plus the amount the government is taking out of the sustainability fund. You add those up together, and it's $5.5 billion. So that was the cash adjustment. And, yeah, there are some amortization costs and a whole bunch of other things that kind of change the number. I will leave that to much smarter people to figure out how all that affects the number. What I'm talking about here is just the actual cash in, cash out of government, and I think that the people of Alberta would have a better understanding and it would also give government members a better understanding and opposition members a better understanding of the state of our government's books.

I think that that's very important because when we have debates on finance and when we have debates on budgets, it's good to have everyone agreeing on the basic facts instead of trying to find agreement on what the real deficit is. Is it the one the government is saying? Is it the number that they give? Is it the number the opposition is giving? Is it the number that the CFIB or Canadian Taxpayers or Public Interest Alberta or whoever is giving out or a number from the media? We had literally 10 to 12 different numbers flying around the Legislature on budget day. The lowest number for the budget deficit was given by the Finance minister. I believe it went up to as much as – I think the NDs had it pegged near $6 billion. That was the highest number. We had it at about 5 and a half billion dollars.

The point is that it's not healthy. That's not healthy to the debate. We've got to be able to debate from an agreed to set of facts with regard to the numbers, and right now we're not doing that. So I would urge members opposite to agree to this amendment so that we can have a little more transparency in the budget document.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Speaking on amendment A1, the hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Madam Chairman. I was listening with interest to the hon. member's discourse on his belief that assets the government of Alberta buys or builds are worthless. I guess that's where it comes down to the fundamental difference between what he's trying to do in his accounting methodology, which doesn't follow anybody's standards, and where we have brought our financial statements to, which has actually been talked about in a very positive light by the chambers of commerce in Calgary and Edmonton, the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, by Scotiabank, by CIBC, by Standard & Poor's, by Moody's, by RBC Capital. National Bank Financial actually said that the way we're doing it now is more transparent because now we see exactly what the operating is without the blend of capital that so confused the hon. member that he now needs to go to a cash-flow statement to try to describe what he's doing.

Frankly, Madam Chairman, when I look at a consolidated expense and revenue balance sheet, there is no such thing. You have a balance sheet. You have a cash flow. You have a profit and loss or a financial statement. But capital spending is not listed as an expense in any one of those things. Generally accepted accounting principles, public-sector accounting principles would be violated if we said yes to this amendment. It would be ridiculous for a province who's known for having accurate, businesslike financial statements to move away from that to something that, frankly – well, maybe it's closer to how he does his chequebook. I don't know. This is a $40 billion enterprise. It needs to have the backing of the Standard & Poors, the Moodys, the CIBCs, all of those folks who look at what we do and provide us with that triple-A credit rating that Albertans take pride in very much, which is not affected by this budget.

Madam Chairman, I'll probably have an opportunity to rise on several more occasions, I'm sure, and talk a little bit more about this. You know, just a couple of things. The hon. member earlier in some of his statements this afternoon talked about how you couldn't sell any of Alberta's assets and a school doesn't actually appreciate, and he's wrong. He's absolutely wrong. Our assets have value, and Albertans should put them on their balance sheet. It is on our balance sheet, page 135 of the budget documents and the overview. The balance sheet shows the difference in the net financial position, which I agree was how we used to calculate what we called the surplus deficit, which no other jurisdiction did, by the way. Today under the new fiscal framework that we're proposing in this act, our financial statements will mirror what business does. It will mirror the way Standard & Poor's and Moody's actually break down the old stuff, and they used to build it back into this formula. Today they can just look at it; they understand.

When Albertans want us to show them how much we're spending on operating expenditures, Madam Chairman, they want it to be clear of the clutter of what used to be the capital expenditures. They want us to show them what we're going to spend on capital and operating expense, and they want us to show them how much we're going to put in their savings accounts. That's the fiscal framework that we have in this act. All of the other controls that the hon. members across the way are concerned about are actually still in the act. the 1 per cent spending rule. In fact, we have a new cap on debt ceilings that is now interest rate sensitive – it wasn't before – and no other jurisdiction has it. We now have legislated savings in this act. No other jurisdiction has this kind of savings plan.

Frankly, this kind of attempt to change accounting rules so that the hon. member can figure out what our cash requirements are is a little bit of a stretch given that if he was to use the financial tables that we actually have in the financial documents, he would find that the cash adjustments section would actually tell him what the cash requirements are. You know, if the accountants wanted to figure it out, they could. It's a very easy calculation, but it's not one you use to measure where you're going. If you put cash into savings, that's a cash requirement. But now you have cash. Now you have savings. The difference, Madam Chair, is that we are going to take a businesslike approach, not a chequebook approach, so I cannot accept or support the amendment.

8:30

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Anderson: Thanks for clarifying that you won't be accepting the amendment. I wasn't totally sure about that, but... [interjections] Well, I appreciate the impassioned defence. This member seems to think he's the smartest man in the room. That's for sure.

This is Graham Thomson from today. "On managing its finances, for example, the government [in this recent Leger poll] gets the thumbs-down from 77 per cent of Albertans and the thumbs-up from just 11 per cent. On government trust and accountability, 71 per cent are shaking their heads and only 17 per cent are nodding."

An Hon. Member: The polls didn't help you much a year ago, did they?

Mr. Anderson: Yeah, well, you did a good job of telling some good stories. They sure did a number on those polls.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Anderson: Absolutely. Hey, that's fine. It's all good. You got your election victory. You had to sacrifice every principle that you had to get it, but that's all right. You got your election victory.

Seventy-seven per cent of Albertans disapprove of this government's handling of the finances. [interjections] They feel really guilty. You get that? You get the guilt? You're feeling the guilt over on that side?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the level of noise is so loud that I'm having a hard time hearing the member speak, and I'm also hearing a member sing in the background. You can go into the Confederation Room and sing, but singing in here is not quite appropriate.

Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Anderson: The guilty take the truth to be hard, Madam Chair. It cuts them to the very bone. They just can't seem to deal with it.

Seventy-seven per cent of Albertans disagree with the way that this government is handling its finances. If that isn't a damning indictment, I don't know what is. Now, they can say that those polls are made up, pulled out of thin air. They can do whatever they want, okay? But that is reflective of what everyone around the province other than the folks living in the dome on that side of the aisle are saying. There is no doubt. People are furious with the way the finances of this province have been handled, especially given the promises and the litany of broken promises of this government. I think that it is very apparent to everyone but apparently a few folks on the opposite side, but that's okay.

There's an expression you hear once in a while, that everybody is lost but me. When I hear the Finance minister talk, that's what I hear. We're expressing what the people of Alberta are saying. They don't think this government has been transparent with the finances. They don't like this budget. They don't like this act. You've seen commentator and study and person after person line up and say that this act is not being transparent. The government's response is: "You guys are all dumb. We're all smart, so nyah-nyah. Standard & Poor's accepted our principles." I mean, come on.

As I said in my remarks, I'm not saying that there's any Enron here. I'm not saying that there's any fraud here in the accounting. I'm saying that there should be a way in the budget document to account for a consolidated cash balance, a consolidated cash flow balance for that year. You can word it any way you want, but that's what we're talking about here. We're not talking about changing generally accepted accounting principles. We're talking about making it clear to Albertans how much money is going in and how much money is being taken out of savings and taken out in the form of debt. I think that that's a very reasonable request from the people of Alberta.

You know, I don't question the intelligence of the Finance minister and his ability to balance a chequebook and things like that. This is not personal for me. I just want clarification and transparency in the budget documents, and I think a lot of Albertans feel the same way. I think that the minister ought to think about that a little bit before going off on a litany of personal attacks. If that makes him feel better, go for it, I guess.

The point of this amendment, Madam Chair, is to increase transparency in government. You know, the minister said something very interesting. He said that no other jurisdiction in the country was doing it like we did before. Is he saying that when they had a semiconsolidated cash surplus or deficit, either the government wasn't following generally accepted accounting principles before, which I don't think is what he was saying – I think he was saying that he was going above and beyond the call of duty for what accounting principles ask for. Yet he's saying that if a proposal comes from this side to do that exact same thing, to do something exceptional, to show real transparency, that's somehow juvenile and ignorant or whatever.

That's silly. You can't have it both ways. What were you doing before? You said that what you were doing before was above and beyond generally accepted accounting principles. So you can't do this now? A little humility from that side in that regard would be a good thing. Perhaps that's why generally speaking it's a good idea to switch governments once every 30 or 40 years, because after a while they start thinking they know everything. That's not a good idea. We should probably just respond to what our constituents are writing to us and telling us they want to see. Ours certainly want to see more transparency on this issue.

I think this is a reasoned amendment, and I would ask the minister to give it due consideration. Hopefully, we can vote on it and move on.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Madam Chair, I don't think we can support this amendment because I think, frankly, it duplicates what's already in the act. It would take a very quick calculation of clauses 9(a), (b), and (c) to figure out what he's requiring in (e). Essentially, what is being proposed in (e) is that the member is mixing up concepts of the balance sheet and the income statement. Essentially, what he's asking for is for us to produce a statement that takes all of the liabilities from the balance sheet accrued in that year and put them on a statement but not put any of the assets from that year onto the statement. Again, that doesn't make any financial sense. It doesn't meet any of the criteria of any sort of basic financial statement. It would beg me to ask the question: why would this amendment even be appropriate?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. associate minister.
Are there any others who wish to speak?

Mr. Anderson: Well, it's appropriate because Parliamentary Counsel approved it, so it's fine to be in the document. You contradicted yourself, hon. member, when you said that this is duplicative, yet it's stupid. So if it's duplicative, that means it's already in there, and if it's stupid, that means you're calling your legislation stupid.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, through the chair.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah.

I sometimes have trouble with this member's explanations on a whole range of concepts. Certainly calling something unnecessary because it's duplicative and then calling that same thing stupid doesn't seem to make much sense, I would say.

Again, I think, obviously, we'll have to agree to disagree on this point, which is fine. Hopefully, we can vote on this amendment and move on.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any more members who wish to speak on amendment A1? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to support this amendment, and I want to address some of the issues that were brought up. I understand where the hon. member and the minister can take issue with maybe the language but certainly not the intent. I don't believe it's confusing a balance sheet with an income statement. I think what he's really looking for is the operational, the investment, and the financing cash flows.

8:40

I think the members can confirm this. What this member is really looking for is that whenever you change your methodology of accounting – and I stand corrected if they want to correct me – you have to restate, I believe, at least one year of accounting so there's continuity for looking back. That wasn't done with our budget. Now, it doesn't have to be done. The member knows that. But the fact is that for transparency to restate past financial reporting to coincide with the new methodology that you've adopted is what is normally good accounting practice. That wasn't done.

What this amendment is trying to do is to show the total cash flow by showing what has been changed from the way capital is addressed. I understand where it's going. I'll give you credit. I'll give the members credit for being smart enough to figure out exactly what we're trying to do. What we're trying to do here is quite simple, and it's out there in the public. It wasn't just the members here in the House in the opposition coming up with different deficit numbers. The NDP came up with a set of numbers. The Liberals came up with a set of numbers. We're all in the same ballpark. We saw what each other was accounting for.

But when you went out to the press and said, "How does this budget compare?" the press, some of the experts being interviewed, as has been mentioned, were coming up with different deficits. They were coming up with different levels of debt depending on what they were including in the process.

What this amendment is trying to is bring transparency so that there's no question about it, that members of the public, people who have accounting backgrounds, accountants themselves would consistently be able to look at what we're doing and say that it is very clear, that it is very transparent, and that the number they came up with would be the same number somebody else came up with, which would be the same number the other experts would come up with. That's where this is going.

We don't need to insult each other. All you need to do is look at the reporting that took place once this budget was announced, look at the experts that were interviewed in all the media, whether it was radio, newspaper, and look at the consensus. There wasn't one because of way the reporting was handled. What they wanted to see was consistency, and that's what this amendment is trying to bring forward so that it would be absolutely clear where we were on our debt, where we were on our deficit, and nothing was hidden.

To the members who claim that it's all transparent: I don't deny that from your perspective. But from the public's perspective, from the fact that the opposition couldn't even come to the same consensus because we might have disagreed on one or two items that changed the final number we came up with, clearly what you've brought forward is not that transparent, not if that many different experts and that many different people can come up with a different deficit number, a different debt number. We all came up with debt. We all came up with deficit. But the numbers were different because of the way the accounting was presented to the public. Good accounting principles seek to avoid that.

Maybe this amendment itself isn't the end-all in the sense that it doesn't accomplish everything we want to accomplish, but it's the right start. It's the right start because what we're trying to get to – and you know this – is where you present your books and there's absolutely no disagreement among the different factions on what you're presenting, where it's accurate, where they can agree to it consistently, not just the opposition but members in the public. Yes, you can parade those who agree with you out front, but you have 60 members that will agree with the one, and rightfully so; you will agree. But the reality is that you know, I know, the Liberals know, the NDs know, and the people that were interviewed know.

When you presented this budget, I was driving to Camrose, and I was listening to an accountant for one of the major banks, who was evaluating this for one of those talk show hosts. It was fascinating because he pretty much knew what he was talking about, and he gave a good synopsis of the budget and of the inconsistency on the size of the deficit, the inconsistency on the size of the debt. When he detailed that – it now becomes the interpretation of the person who is presenting it and not so much the person who is reading it. That's what this amendment sought. It was just clarity.

So you could take issue with the language of a consolidated expense and revenue balance sheet, but I think that when you read this as a whole, no one is asking you to violate any accounting rules. No one is requesting that you falsify any information. What we're looking for is consistency in reporting, and what we don't have is consistency in reporting. You've changed the methodology on how you want to report. It is your right to do so. I understand that. But you should have at least restated it so that we could get some sort of consistency from the past year to the current year, and we don't have that right now.

What we don't have, and this is clear – I like to call this the new Coke that Coca-Cola came out with many years ago. They introduced it to the market. They said that it was better tasting than the old-fashioned Coke. They spent billions of dollars, and it was a flop, but they tried to sell it. What you're doing here is trying to sell a new reporting methodology, saying that it's clear, it's concise, and it's transparent, but the public itself is saying no. You're telling the public they're wrong. That's not right. You know that. You're smart enough to know that.

What you have here is a new methodology for reporting. What we're asking for is better clarity and better consistency. You can call it any kind of financial report that you want. But you know the old methodology that you used. There weren't any complaints that I remember other than the fact that you continually overspent, but there weren't complaints about your reporting. There were some complaints that you weren't reporting as you said you were going to under the Fiscal Responsibility Act and the Government Accountability Act. There was some discussion in that regard, that you weren't following those acts.

This amendment is trying to bring that back into some sort of transparency so that all parties – if it was just one that said that it's not transparent, maybe you can educate just the one, but you have three parties over here that are telling you that it's not transparent. I have to tell you, quite honestly, that compared to last year and the year before and the year before, this is a new way of presenting the budget, and what we're looking for is consistency so that we can track the debt, track the expenses, track the cash flow consistently so that we get a better picture of how this government is spending its money so that there can be better accountability. That's the key. I don't think that's a lot to ask for.

Yes, you can take issue with the way the member used language here, that it's not the correct form of accounting in the sense of the language, but you do understand exactly what this member is getting to. You know that. The hon. President of Treasury Board and Finance knows how to do this. All the public is saying is: fine; if you want to change your methodology, good enough, but we need some better transparency so that there is consistency in the understanding of your financial reporting. That's it. They want that.

I'm done.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Horner: You know, Madam Chairman, the hon. member across the way says that I know how to do this amendment. In all honesty, hon. member, I do not know of a consolidated expense and revenue balance sheet.

Mr. Anglin: But you know about operational financing.

Mr. Horner: Hon. member, we're talking about your colleague's amendment. I understand that you must not support this amendment because you obviously think that we can do this.

The other thing I wanted to suggest to you, hon. member, is that – you asked about the restatement of our previous year – if you look in the budget documents, 2012 is actually in there; 2011-12 is restated in this format, as are the others. The other thing I wanted to suggest to you: don't you think that it's important that the financial experts understand what our financial statements are all about? Don't you think it's important that the financial experts, the people that people listen to, the Angus Watts of the world, as an example, the National Bank Financial, as an example, can tell their clients that they understand what we're doing? I think it's important. I think it's important that the Alberta Chambers of Commerce say: "Yeah, we understand this. It's transparent. It's what we're doing." When we force municipalities to present their books this way because we want to know what they're doing in their operations and their capital plan and we want them to separate it out, don't you think that Albertans deserve the same thing in their books? I do. That's why we're doing this.

8:50

The people that made this complicated, the financial experts that you've been referring to, are the journalists who found it easy the other way. Frankly, the misinformation that has been spread about what the deficit is as opposed to a cash requirement or as opposed to a net change in financial assets, that misinterpretation by a number of colleagues – granted, people who don't understand business financials. None of the financial experts have any problem that has been told to me. If you're thinking about some of them . . .

Mr. Hehr: The Premier says we're not in deficit.

Mr. Horner: We are in deficit; of course she said that.

But I do want to come back. Hon. member, you mentioned the experts, and you mentioned the bank experts you were listening to. Pretty much every bank that is operating in the province of Alberta has reviewed these financial statements. I got the format from them. That's where this comes from. So for you to say that I know how I could have actually accomplished this amendment, absolutely not, because in the accounting world, frankly, it doesn't exist.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for – I've forgotten – Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: I don't know why people have so much trouble with my constituency. You're not alone.

Well, when conservatives fight, what do they fight about? Accounting principles, of course. This is some of the most boring debate I've ever heard in this place, and I've been here for a while, Madam Chair.

I just want to ask the mover of the motion a question about his amendment, "a consolidated expense and revenue balance sheet which includes all capital spending as an expense." Now, I remember the time I bought my first house. I was terrified of the size of the mortgage, and I talked about that with the real estate agent and the lawyer and with my wife. One of the things that I realized was that, yes, we were incurring a very large debt, which was very scary for me at that point in my life, but we were also getting an asset as well that was offset against the debt. It just wasn't that we owed a couple of hundred thousand dollars; we actually had an asset that was of the same amount.

My question, then, is: would the balance sheet then include the assets also? Would it include the things that you get for the capital spending as an asset to offset the debt, the capital spending? Like, you buy an overpass that's worth half a billion dollars, so you add half a billion dollars to your debt, according to this. Do you also take the asset and put it on the other side as an asset and count it so that it zeroes out?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: I have to admit, Madam Chair, I was distracted by a beautiful young woman who came and sat down beside me and was whispering in my ear actually for the duration of that comment. See, the PCs will go to any length to distract me from my job, and this is just another example of that.

An Hon. Member: You're weak, Anderson.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. Sorry, Sarge. Sorry about that.

I would love to discuss this at a future point in great detail with you, hon. member. I stand by my original comments, whatever those were.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A1? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. To just finish off what I started last time – and I did state it – the way that I interpreted this was that we were really looking at operational cash flows, investment cash flows, and financing cash flows. I understand what the member was trying to come up with, and that's why I gave credit to the hon. Minister of Finance, which was: you do know; you understand what he's trying to do.

I did state that you could put out experts. I know you can. I know you did go find certain experts, but if you don't acknowledge that there were other experts out there, there were. They were all over the news media, and they had issues with the transparency. That should give you cause for concern. It should, and you give weight to it. You give weight to it. Now you want me to go back to get a list. I didn't bring my list with me tonight, but I will tell you what I will do. I will put my list together, and I will table it for you as soon as I accumulate the list. I'll be happy to do that.

I'm not asking you to satisfy everybody one hundred per cent. What this is getting after is to get more transparency, get more consistent transparency. I don't think we're too far off the mark. I know you're going to vote this down, but it gives you cause to think. Can you improve the way you're reporting? [interjection] I will be over there in three more years. I promise you. [interjections] I came here via the Green Party, too, so give me a break.

By the way, global warming and greenhouse gases are a very important issue dealing with the world, the environment, and this party cares very much about it.

I'm done. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A1?

Seeing none, we'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll go back to the bill, Bill 12, Fiscal Management Act.

Mr. Anderson: That was lovely, Madam Chair. Just a wonderful debate, there, on the first amendment.

I have another amendment. Hopefully, this will be just more exciting for the members opposite. First I'll pass it out, and then we'll discuss it. How about that?

The Deputy Chair: Yes, please. We'll have the original at the table. This will be known as amendment A2. Hon. member, you may proceed on amendment A2.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. The subject matter of this amendment is the debt. If you look at section 6 in the act, it says, "The debt-servicing costs of the Government for a fiscal year in respect of outstanding capital borrowing must not exceed 3% of the average of the actual operational revenue for the fiscal year and the previous 2 fiscal years." This is a debt ceiling of sorts, Madam Chair.

Now, I don't have a lot of trust in debt ceilings. We've seen in the United States that multiple times, dozens and dozens of times, the ceiling has been raised, and the reason it is is because, of course, you would never want to default on your payments. That would significantly harm your credit. So, really, a debt ceiling is somewhat questionable. If it ever came down to it, especially when based on interest payments, you would certainly want to pay your interest payments even if it went over the debt ceiling because the consequences could be far worse in that regard.

What the amendment does is strike this section 6, and it says instead:

For the 2014-15 fiscal year . . .

That's starting next year, not this budget but the next budget.

. . . and subsequent fiscal years, the Government may not borrow any amount that exceeds an amount that is set aside in the same fiscal year in an account specifically designed for the retirement of debt.

Premier Ralph Klein had a debt retirement account, so in 2004, when he retired the debt and declared Alberta debt free, we actually did still have some debt on the books, but we had some money in the debt retirement account that went along with it, so for all intents and purposes we were out of debt.

That's essentially what this is saying. It's saying that if you're going to go into debt for whatever reason, then you need to offset that debt with cash somewhere else. Now, of course, generally you wouldn't do that, so essentially this is an amendment to outlaw debt for operational and capital purposes. It's meant to return our province to its principles of not being a debtor province.

I think that a lot of folks – and I said this in my comments when I was speaking earlier on Bill 20, the Appropriation Act, which is the budget. I talked extensively about debt. I won't repeat all my comments here about what I said at that time, but essentially it was that by 2016 according to this government's budget document Alberta's debt will go from $4 billion, where it is now, to $17 billion. I don't think that anybody in Alberta was aware in the least that when they marked an X, the 44 per cent that marked an X for the Progressive Conservatives in the last election – I don't think one of them had any idea that they were going to increase the debt levels from $4 billion to $17 billion by the next time they went to the polls. I think that it's dreaming in technicolour to think that that would not have had an effect on the final election result to their detriment, but they don't like to admit that at all.

I would suggest, Madam Chair, that there are many reasons why we should not go into debt. First off – and I think Jack Mintz has alluded to this many times – when a resource-rich province goes into debt, they're essentially double-dipping from future generations because not only are they going into debt, but they are also going into debt while they have high resource revenues. Future generations at some point will not have access to the same nonrenewable resource revenues that we do now, and at that point they'll still have the debt, that they have to pay off. It's intergenerational theft times two. [interjections] Yeah. You like that. I've got fans over there.

I think that Dr. Mintz and my friends in the Liberals and NDP are right about that, and we agree in solidarity with the intergenerational theft and in our condemnation of the intergenerational theft that's taking place.

We would like to see debt outlawed in Alberta. I do find that it's ironic. We take a lot of grief in this Assembly from the other side on this issue. You know, sometimes I have to do a double take. I remember going to PC AGMs for many, many years. Every year I'd go, and I'd look up, and there was the House leader. I'd be, like: "Wow. The House Leader. What a guy." I was an aspiring lawyer, so I was, like: oh, my gosh, this is the guy that I want to be like. I'd look across the way, and I'd see other members of the government that were there at the time. There aren't many left. They're starting to decrease in number a great deal.

Mr. McAllister: You're shattering my image of you.

Mr. Anderson: Well, I'm just saying that I was drinking the blue Kool-Aid in droves. The bowl was way back here, and I was just drinking it up and slurping it down. It was good stuff.

I remember during that Klein Revolution, as it was called, all of these ministers speaking out against the evils of debt and how awful debt was, that it's just awful stuff. You know, you go to the conventions. In Banff one year I heard a great speech. I forget who gave it. Anyway, Ralph followed it up, and he explained how we were going to be the first debt-free province and that this is fantastic and all this sort of stuff. Everyone was just roaring: "This is fantastic. Ralph, you did it. You slayed the debt," all this sort of thing. It's some of the same people now that are saying: "Holy man. You Wildrose are such backward-thinking Neanderthals to think that you can go forward and finance government operations without going into debt." Wow. What a turnaround.

I think of the Premier in her leadership, and we've got a great television clip of her being very clear in saying to Albertans that we can maintain the levels of services that Albertans expect and should have without having to go into debt. I am committed to that, she says. She said many, many other things quoted in newspaper articles, TV. She said multiple, multiple times that she was not going to go into debt. Now she says: "Well, that's kind of an ideological, you know, purity thing going on there. That's just backwards thinking. That's Social Credit thinking." It's such a turnaround from where they were even just before the election but certainly from where they were during the height of the Klein Revolution, which were good times.

It is a little bit hypocritical to be castigating us for essentially trying desperately to save your diminishing legacy in this province. But we're trying. We're doing our best to save your diminishing legacy. We really are trying, and we'll give it our all. That's the problem. I think this amendment does that. Frankly, because of the situation that we're in right now, we wouldn't be able to balance the budget without cutting front-line services this year, so we're not proposing that we do that.

Mr. Horner: So you'd borrow?

Mr. Anderson: No. We still have a little extra in the sustainability fund for an extra year. We'd be able to hold it over for another year, so that would be good. That's why we call it the debt-free plan. We wouldn't have to go into debt. We would be able to use the sustainability fund to carry us to next year, when we would balance the budget, the entire consolidated budget, including capital and operational expenses. We think that that's a reasonable approach.

That's why this amendment doesn't start till 2014-15. It does of course allow for a debt retirement account to be created. This was really the only way we could put in here a way to make sure that we don't go into debt further. This was the creative legislative drafting that took place to try to do that, which sometimes we members are asked to perform, and Parliamentary Counsel has to patiently deal with us as we creatively try to do certain things. They're quite the troopers for doing it.

Anyway, I hope the members will accept this and fight their government so that we don't go into debt any further. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I thought it was really kind of interesting because right off the hop the hon. member said that he doesn't trust debt-ceiling legislation, yet what he's doing is putting in debt-ceiling legislation that he's replacing our debt-ceiling legislation with. The problem is that his debt-ceiling legislation doesn't work because, I'm assuming, then, he would want all of the municipalities in the province of Alberta to immediately pay off all their debt, too. We borrow for them. I'm assuming he would want us to call all of the loans that Ag Financial Services has outstanding today. Some of the members opposite may even have some of those. He may ask us to call those notes in because, by the way, we borrow for them, too.

In fact, Madam Chairman, if you look at the plans that we have in the documents around the financing requirements, if you look at most years, the majority of the borrowing that we're doing is actually for on-lending to the Alberta Treasury Branches. I'm sure he'd be pleased if Alberta Treasury Branches had to charge higher rates to all of those Albertans who, God forbid, are borrowing from the Alberta Treasury Branches.

This amendment actually says that the government of Alberta cannot borrow. Therefore, Madam Chairman, we would not be able to do the municipalities through the Alberta Capital Finance Authority, we would not be able to do ATB, and I guess we'd have to call in all of the Ag Financial Services loans because we do the lending for that.

Something that also keeps coming up – and I know he does it in his town hall meetings, too – is that he asks the question: should government be financing its operations with debt? The answer to that question is an obvious no. We are not doing that, hon. member, and it's a misrepresentation of what we're doing to actually say that in a town hall. Madam Chairman, this kind of a debt-free Alberta, debt-ceiling Alberta is simply not workable given what prudent financial resources would tell us we should be doing. Frankly, you know, we could talk a little bit about the phantom budget that they've got out there, where they say that they could be able to do this without debt. It would be impossible without cutting about $3 billion out of the current operating budget.

The other thing I just wanted to say, too, is that the hon. member talks about an account specifically designed for debt retirement. I actually agree with him on that point. On that one we're actually aligned because if you look on page 128, line 23, we have the capital debt repayment account. As we understand what the maturities are for the bonds that we will be issuing, we are going to be putting dollars in place to pay for those bonds as they come due because that's a prudent thing to do. In fact, it's a bit of a negative financing operation that will work quite well.

Given those reasons, Madam Chairman, I cannot support this, and I urge all hon. members in this House to defeat this amendment A2.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's a privilege to speak to this amendment moved by the Official Opposition. I will say, before I speak against this amendment, that I do agree with the hon. member's sentiments around intergenerational theft. It has been theft of epic proportions that we have done to future generations. As you're well aware, a far greater sum than what we've even tried to do has to be saved for future generations. On that point I agree with the hon. member.

If we look at this amendment in the main, what it seeks to do is tie the government's hands. Almost any legislation that attempts to do this sort of thing I find ridiculous and something that we should all seek to avoid. Often these types of things are for political theatre, not necessarily for actual public good. I remember I ran in the '08 election, and my opponent would get up at town halls, like you were saying, and say: "We will never go into debt again. We have a law. We have a law. We will never go into debt again." Sure enough, that day came to pass, and sure enough, we changed the law.

Nevertheless, I just find these types of amendments that seek to tie the government's hands unnecessary. Governments need the ability to do what is necessary given the circumstances that they face. Although I have many ways that the government could be fairer to future generations as well as do a little bit better today, tying their hands in this manner does not seek to address that. If it is on the books, then you never know. Twenty years from now if it is on the books, all of a sudden: "Oh, my goodness. We can't do what's necessary. We have to go in and run a session and undo this law." It doesn't make sense from a pragmatic practicality.

The government of the day needs to do what's necessary, and the voters will be the judge. In fact, opposition parties need to do a job to hold them to account. If they believe that no debt ever is the way to go, well, then they have to make their voices heard from the opposition and win that debate in the sphere of the public realm. If debt is necessary at some point in time, well, then it has to be a tool that the government has at its disposal if it indeed serves the best interests of the public.

I will not be supporting this amendment for those reasons. Nevertheless, like I said, it's intergenerational theft of epic proportions that has happened over the last 25 years.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, you know, different political parties have different policies on different things, whether it's social programs, education, whether it's the environment, or whether it's the economic and fiscal policy of the government. These are all different sets of ideas that political parties fight out in this place, in the media between elections, and during elections.

One of the principles of a democracy is that different individuals and different political parties can put forward their ideas for the management of the economy and for the management of the government finances. And they are different. They are different between different political parties. Certainly, we don't have the same position relative to this question as the Wildrose or the Conservatives or even the Liberal Party. They also change within political parties over time.

The hon. member who introduced this amendment talked about being debt free as Alberta's principle. I beg to differ. Those aren't Alberta's principles. Those are Ralph Klein's principles, and they're the principles of the Wildrose Party, but they're not the principles of other political parties or other groups within Albertan society.

One of the things that bothers me a little bit – and this is building on the Member for Calgary-Buffalo's comments – is the sort of self-righteous approach that the political principles of one party are so universal and so transcendent that they need to be put into law so that no other political party can change them. Well, of course, another political party comes to power, and they change
