Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of ways that we can increase access to the program. Of course, the most important one is for members of the Assembly and other leaders in the community to make citizens and constituents aware that these services are available. We are looking to the future with the evolution of family care clinics and our continued support for primary care networks, to use these platforms as a vehicle to both provide assessments and to inform people about services that are available to them. The whole intention, again, is to support our government's agenda of assisting Albertans to age in place.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, I understand that you're not questioning today, so I'll move on to the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Health Services Expense Reporting

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Health Services hired a man, Allaudin Merali, as chief financial officer who, in his former role with the Capital health region, racked up nearly $350,000 in inappropriate expenses. The board chair recently reversed a decision to expand the audit of former senior executive expenses at Capital health. Instead, the chairman, knowing of a FOIP request by the Calgary Herald, pre-empted the release, in the Calgary case, of expenses of three Calgary executives. To the minister: since the minister was employed in the Capital health region during the period in question, how did it happen that Mr. Merali was hired by this government, given his known background?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, first of all, just for the clarification of the hon. member, this government, this minister, and Alberta Health Services comply with the requirements of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, and any suggestion that anything untoward is done to encourage noncompliance with that act is clearly unacceptable and untrue.

Dr. Swann: I'll try again, Mr. Speaker. I'll be a little more direct. Did the minister influence in any way the decision to cancel the Capital health region public audit?

Mr. Horne: Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. In fact, what I did do is that when the expenses in question were made available through the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, I instructed the board of Alberta Health Services to undertake an independent audit of those expenses for the purpose of determining whether those expenses were in compliance with the travel and expense policies that existed at the time. That report should be forthcoming in the near future, and I'm sure the hon. member will be interested to see the result.

Dr. Swann: Since the minister has decided on areas in health services from hospital food to AMA negotiations, could he tell us what role is left for Alberta Health Services and its board?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the role and the responsibility of Alberta Health Services with respect to these matters is no less than the responsibility of this government or the parties represented by the members opposite. Our responsibility is not only to comply with the legislation that prevails; it is to encourage and serve as an example to agencies, boards, commissions, and other entities which are required to comply as well.

Mr. Speaker, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act has been an excellent vehicle to make this information public. All FOIP requests have been complied with, will continue to be complied with, and this hon. member will have all the information he requires to make what we hope will be a more informed judgment.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Full-day Kindergarten Programs

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's another day and another broken promise, it seems. This government promised full-day kindergarten for those families who require it. The teachers are ready. The students are more than ready. When will this Education minister actually keep a promise and make full-day kindergarten available for the next school year?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we know that all of our kids deserve the best possible start in life, and we will keep our promises. As I responded to a similar question last week, there is a lot of work being done on the full-day kindergarten file, but there are a lot of things to iron out yet. Those tie to funding with respect to infrastructure. Those tie to funding with respect to the operation side of the business. Some school boards are already offering full-day kindergarten and how that ties. But one of the most important things is how this meshes together with the early childhood strategy, and that's being navigated right now by the Minister of Human Services.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that right here right now the Edmonton public school board has the space to set up an additional 20 full-time kindergarten classrooms and given that many other school boards are ready to get this done now, what possible excuse could the minister have that would stop full-day kindergarten from happening as soon as possible?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we're not stopping anything. As a matter of fact, many of the school divisions right now offer full-day kindergarten. What we're trying to do is understand how we can roll this out across the entire province so every parent in the entire province can have this proper choice to the education and the early childhood development of their children. This is going to come as quickly as we can possibly help it along.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, it's a question of this Legislature funding that full-day kindergarten. Many people are paying for it.

Given that there's irrefutable evidence that full-day kindergarten benefits students' lifelong learning and given that we have one of the largest groups of kindergarten-aged children passing through our school system right now and in the fall, why would this minister delay the most obvious education reform available to him now at the expense of all of those children's education and the expense of our province's future?

Mr. J. Johnson: I think we're paralyzed by agreement here. We absolutely support full-day kindergarten. As I said, it's happening across the province right now. But when we do it and as we roll it out to all Albertans, we want to make sure we get it right. We want to make sure it fits properly with our early childhood development strategy. When the budget discussions come forward in the spring here, I'll be looking forward to that member supporting anything that we want to do on early childhood development and full-day kindergarten.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Infrastructure Capital Planning

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently we've seen this government splash across the province reannouncing old promises with brand new price tags. Although the flashy new cheques and promises of more beds for patients are very welcome news to the Wildrose, we know that this government's record of waste and mismanagement gives us reason to question. Time and time again we have seen new hospitals under this government delayed further and further down the road, attached to ballooning costs. Given that five new hospital projects are close to $300 million more expensive now than just a few minutes ago, does the Minister of Infrastructure realize that the money wasted on overruns could have built additional beds in other communities that desperately need them?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to building infrastructure in Alberta where it's needed to give Albertans the quality of life they deserve. We've consulted with communities, and the Health minister has done a lot of work in consulting with the health care professionals. We're delivering the right projects in the right place. We're taking our time to do it right. It ends up that we've had to increase some of these projects, and with that increase comes increased costs.

Mrs. Towle: To the same minister: given that $60 million in alleged savings from the Calgary south campus plus $100 million in alleged savings after the government's betrayal of Fort Macleod still only gets you to about halfway of the $300 million in total overruns, what else is on the chopping block as a result of this government's mismanagement?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, we've allocated funds from different budget lines in our government budget, including a capital transition initiative and the consolidated cash investment trust fund. The members opposite said that they would cut infrastructure spending by 25 per cent, so none of these projects would have happened.

Mrs. Towle: Mr. Speaker, given that many seniors, families, and communities across this province are left in the dark as to how they should plan for cancellation, delay, or, if they're really lucky, construction of more long-term care beds, when will this minister table a detailed infrastructure priority list that will give Alberta families a chance to plan for their future?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, we are working on that capital plan as we speak. We've been working hard all summer, and I've been consulting with my colleagues from all departments and my colleagues in Treasury Board. We can't release our plan until we make sure we have the financial plans that go along with it. We'll continue to invest in public infrastructure to ensure that Albertans have the quality of life they deserve now and into the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Special-needs Education Funding

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Education. I understand that the Ministry of Health in partnership with Alberta Health Services, Human Services, and Education is developing a framework for infant and preschool screening. Areas under consideration include universal newborn hearing, preschool hearing, vision, speech, and developmental screening. Although this is an excellent direction for newborn and preschool screening, many children currently within our educational system are challenged by learning disabilities. These learning disabilities can adversely affect their literacy and numeracy skills. What exactly is Alberta Education's current policy regarding learning disabilities?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to success for all students regardless of their ability or their disability. To do that, we need to provide a whole raft of individual tools, and that takes money. That's why in the last budget we increased the inclusion funding, the funding for special needs, by about 22 per cent, which is $68 million, taking that budget to a total of $375 million. School boards are using that funding to provide a whole raft of services, including speech pathologists, literacy coaches, occupational therapists, psychologists, and other initiatives in the classroom like educational assistants.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. My first supplemental. Since you've partially answered that, I'll move on to my second supplemental, which is really my first supplemental. To the same minister: in particular, what steps are being taken to address the learning impairment known as Irlen syndrome?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it's not always clear, when a child is struggling, what might be holding them back. The hon. member mentioned this one particular syndrome. It's important that parents and kids get comprehensive eye exams by qualified professionals should they be experiencing difficulties with reading and writing. In some cases it may be a syndrome like Irlen. I know that in the coming days we're going to have a lot of discussion about Irlen, and we've got a member here who's going to make sure that that is right at the front of our minds, so I commend her for that.

The Speaker: Hon. member, did you have another supplemental that might replace the other supplemental that's replacing the first supplemental?

Mrs. Jablonski: No. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Disaster Recovery Program for Flood Damage

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, many people in my constituency are still recovering from a flash flood of 2010. In Irvine there's a young couple with three small children who've been trying to work through the disaster recovery program to rebuild their home. But rather than providing proper assistance and information to help them rebuild the home they lost, incredibly, government officials are now evicting this young family from their temporary housing unit on October 31. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: when will this government start communicating with Albertans and provide them with some concrete assistance?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, over the last several years the province of Alberta, through the disaster recovery program, has provided hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars to help Albertans that have uninsurable losses due to floods. In this particular case there are almost 1,800 people that have been compensated in the system by the provincial government. There are only seven that remain. Two of them, yes, are in government-subsidized housing. They've been provided the funds to redo their houses, but they've still been in government-subsidized housing for two years. We have to be responsible with taxpayers' dollars, and we're making sure that the provisions to fix their house are there and that they have them.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Responsible with taxpayers' money. Given that this government may have provided more money to the company contracted to administer this program than actually to individuals who've applied for disaster relief, when will the government show they actually care and complete the assistance from this unforeseeable disaster of two years ago?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I'll say it once again. Over 1,800 people in this single incident have been assisted by the province of Alberta. A couple stand out because they haven't fixed the repairs on their house. They've had two years to do it. But we're still there to assist them and to provide them the funding to fix the homes.

The company that the member is referring to: $20 million to cover hundreds of millions of dollars of assistance to members and to deal with them directly client by client. We got incredible value for the money.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, this young family has been unable to make this work for them.

Given that I called the disaster recovery program myself and was told that they would not speak directly with MLAs and given that then I contacted the Minister of Municipal Affairs two weeks ago to resolve this and am still waiting for an answer back, what is the minister going to do to help this young family facing eviction on October 31?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta, this government, has provided subsidized housing to families for two years and provided them with the resources to fix their homes.

It doesn't matter what department you are in this government: we cannot provide personal information even to an MLA because they don't necessarily represent as legal counsel. They're not entitled to that information. They may be getting the wrong information from the people they claim to be representing. We have suggested every single time that they can call us for assistance if they need it. We're here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Obesity Initiative

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 23 the Ontario Medical Association launched their latest campaign to combat obesity. Some of the messaging of this campaign includes calling on the government to tax junk food as well as pop and other high-calorie foods. To the Associate Minister of Wellness: are there any plans to introduce measures like this in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you so much to the member for the question. It's a very important topic. I would like to start by assuring the member that we are not considering any similar action here in Alberta at this time. Instead, we're committed to helping Albertans to make healthy choices through education and the promotion of healthy eating habits, increased physical activity, and the maintenance of healthy weights. Through a number of community and business and educational partnerships we are working to make the healthy choice the easy choice right here in Alberta.

Mr. Lemke: Again to the Associate Minister of Wellness: if that is the case, then what are we doing to combat this issue of obesity, which has become an epidemic amongst our youth?

Mr. Rodney: I appreciate the hon. member's concern, and I certainly share that concern. We all know that obesity is a very complex problem that requires comprehension throughout various levels of government and private industry, communities, families, schools, and workplaces. That's exactly what we're doing through partnerships. We're involved in many programs that promote healthy eating and active living such as Healthy U, Communities ChooseWell, and our upcoming wellness forum. The Healthy U campaign specifically encourages Albertans to do more to be healthy through healthy eating and active living, both of which can reduce the risk of obesity. Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to say that we have no less than 30 programs, initiatives, and events that can reach Albertans in a number of areas, all designed to help them make healthier choices in their lives.

Mr. Lemke: I was going to ask what programs were being introduced to combat obesity, but unless there are some that he didn't previously mention in the last question – are there any other programs that were not mentioned?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Rodney: Absolutely. Mr. Speaker, we've seen great results from a number of programs in addition to what I just mentioned, including the healthy school community wellness fund. To date – here are some numbers for you – the fund has supported 150 projects involving more than 750 school-community partnerships. We're also beginning to work on the third year of a certain campaign targeting kids six to 12, encouraging them and their families to be active and eat healthy, part of Healthy U.

Our focus in Wellness is about creating healthy habits from the start by helping Albertans to eat in a little bit more of a healthy way and to be active in terms of their living. It's going to be second nature. We just want to give the kids the tools they'll need for the rest of their lives.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we go to Introduction of Guests, which I'll do 30 seconds after this request, I want to ask if we can revert briefly to Introduction of Guests. Agreed? Thank you very much.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't know if they're still here or gone, but there was a school here from Edmonton-Mill Woods. The Weinlos elementary school was here today to learn about democracy and events in this building and to see how this Alberta government works. If they are here, I would ask them to please rise and receive our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. They may have departed already.

The Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise to introduce to you and through you to the hon. members of this Assembly two special guests from Calgary. I saw them earlier during question period. I'm not sure they're still here, but for the record I want to extend a warm welcome to them. The two special guests are Mr. Joe Ceci, former city of Calgary alderman, manager of government relations for Momentum, and co-ordinator of Action To End Poverty in Alberta. The other is Ms Linda McFarlane, who is a member of Action To End Poverty in Alberta. Both of them have done huge work in their community, working with different orders of government and community agencies, trying to create conditions that will help the most vulnerable Albertans become constructive and contributing members of society. It's interesting to note that with their poverty reduction work they are trying to create conditions so that people who rely on government services can become taxpayers contributing to society, thereby saving us in the long run. For that, I think Albertans appreciate their work, and I trust that this House will do the same. For the record I'd like to ask our colleagues of this House to extend our traditional warm welcome for the work they've done.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds I will call on the first member's statement, from Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, just prior to starting on that and looking at the clock, it's obvious that we're going to run out of time. I would ask the unanimous consent of the House to extend past 3 o'clock in order to allow Members' Statements and the rest of Routine.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader has asked for unanimous consent, should it be necessary, to extend the Routine beyond the hour of 3 o'clock. If anyone objects to that, please say so now.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

University of Lethbridge Research Award

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today on behalf of myself and my colleague the MLA for Lethbridge-West and share with this Assembly a tremendous accomplishment made by one of Alberta's comprehensive academic and research universities. Last week the University of Lethbridge was named by Research Infosource as Canada's research university of the year in the undergraduate category. [some applause] Thank you, and yes, we are proud.

The U of L increased its research income by an astounding 38.7 per cent over the past year and, combined with other indicators such as research intensity, publication intensity, and publication impact, moved from ninth to first place in the 22-member undergraduate classification.

One of the main beneficiaries of strong research programs at the U of L is the students. Those attending the U of L are not so much learning from a textbook as being taught by those who wrote the textbook. Further, students are exposed to research opportunities throughout their entire postsecondary experience.

Often we think about how research dollars benefit the current research programs at Alberta's universities. The example at the U of L demonstrates how research activity is key in developing a highly trained and highly skilled workforce in Alberta. When paired with the U of L's excellence in teaching, the university is helping to create the foundation for a knowledge economy in Alberta. They are training the next generation of researchers and innovators.

Mr. Speaker, this accomplishment is emblematic of the strength of Alberta's postsecondary sector. The investment this government has made in infrastructure, research, and programs will position our institutions to continue to achieve these types of successes for our future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

AEUB Public Hearing Security Measures

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm holding in my hand red shoelaces in recognition of the Rimbey chapter of the Central Alberta MS Society and the efforts they make in raising awareness to find a cure.

Last week an hon. member from the government party asked me to produce proof of what has been referred to as government spying on law-abiding citizens. Today I will table 24 pages extracted from various documents as proof of that illegal spying. The documents I'm submitting today reveal a number of inconsistencies with regard to the government's, the board's, and AltaLink's actions when the issue of spying was first discovered. A series of misstatements were made, outright falsehoods were made, and the evidence of the cover-up rapidly appeared. The board was forced to admit it hired four private investigators. AltaLink denied under oath knowledge of the private investigators.

The Minister of Justice wrote me to claim that Justice Perras' investigation found no wrongdoing. Ironically, the hon. Justice Perras did not investigate the spying. Justice Perras wrote in his findings: "The allegations of spying and listening to solicitor-client conversations are troubling and problematic and if established are serious matters. This examination is not broad enough nor does it have the time to delve into the allegations."

What should concern the citizens of Alberta the most is the evidence involving the office of the Premier. Two days after the EUB hired private investigators for covert intelligence gathering, there was an executive communication log from the Deputy Minister of Energy's office, approved by the Premier's office, and the subject of the communication was me.

I have more documents available, and I'll be happy to submit them when this government authorizes a full, independent judicial inquiry into the government's issues dealing with spying on citizens.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

My Child's Learning Internet Portal

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to talk about My Child's Learning, a new online resource for parents which is the first of its kind not only in Alberta but in Canada. My Child's Learning gives parents access to detailed information about what their children are learning in each grade and what resources are available to help their kids be successful. Designed with the input of parents and parent groups across the province, this resource offers easy-to-understand overviews of every subject at every grade level. It can also be accessed via mobile devices.

Mr. Speaker, we know that not all parents are looking for the same information. Some prefer a short summary of their child's grade while others would like more in-depth information. My Child's Learning is designed to offer both options. Parents can also create an individualized learning profile of their children's education.

My Child's Learning also contains information on their education programs, including separate schools and French immersion programming, so parents have the information they need to make informed choices about what is best for their child.

We know parents play a key role in shaping the way their children view learning. They understand more than anyone else how their children learn and process information. When parents are better informed, they are better equipped to help their children achieve success.

I encourage all parents to visit the My Child's Learning website at www.mychildlearning.alberta.ca, and in French – bear with me – www.apprentissagedemonenfant.alberta.ca.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Registered Apprenticeship Program

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's truly a pleasure to rise again today to speak to you about youth employment and the work experience opportunities in Alberta. Alberta's students are some of the best educated in the world. Are you all agreed? [some applause] They have proven year after year that they are focused, dedicated, and eager to face new challenges and excel academically. But that is not the only way young Albertans are preparing for the workplace. Real work experience is invaluable to those students. It helps them to further develop the skills needed to be successful in Alberta's workplace upon graduation.

One of the programs that has been helping young Albertans gain valuable work experience for a number of years is the registered apprenticeship program, also known as the RAP program. The RAP program is a unique opportunity for students to explore a trade and begin postsecondary apprenticeship training all while completing their high school diploma. This program has helped a number of young Albertans realize their potential as skilled trades workers. It is a program that this government and every Albertan can be very proud of. It is certainly the case for Calgary-Hawkwood, the great constituency that I have the honour to represent.

After graduating from high school and the RAP program, many of the skilled trades workers help to sustain and advance our provincial economy by working in various industries. Through constant advancement and improvement in programs like RAP, Alberta will continue to train and employ some of the best skilled workers in the world.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is crucial that we maintain and develop more programs like this in order to promote employment mentorship opportunities throughout Alberta. In doing so, our province will maintain its standard of excellence in career training and employment.

Thank you

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Slave Lake Native Friendship Centre 40th Anniversary

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I had the pleasure of introducing elders who represented the Slave Lake

Native Friendship Centre. That was very important because this centre depends on strong community support but, more importantly, the strong support of these and past elders. Thanks to that support, I joined the board of directors and many supporters in helping celebrate the Slave Lake Native Friendship Centre's 40th anniversary on October 27, 2012.

Mr. Speaker, the way they do it is because they have a statement, and that statement says that it "envision[s] a community that respects and accepts all people while promoting the enhancement of the quality of life . . . through culturally based programs and services guided by the wisdom of our Elders." How can they go wrong? Not.

Friendship centres mean a lot to me personally. While attending university many years ago, not understanding the ways of the world and feeling lonely, the Edmonton Native Friendship Centre became my refuge. That friendship centre was probably the best thing that happened to me because today you would not see the suave, good-looking young lady standing before you if it were not for that.

To all friendship centres: thank you. To the Slave Lake Native Friendship Centre: you've done well, and congratulations on 40 years of service to the people who need it in that area.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Labour Protection for Paid Farm Workers

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Over the summer there was discomfort across the agricultural sector over the possibility of a boycott of Alberta potatoes. Surprisingly enough, the potato growers and commercial agriculture, including beef, are still coming to terms with the reality that in 2012 paid farm workers, including children under age 14, are still not protected by law or under occupational health and safety and are injured and killed as a result.

The Alberta government continues to hide behind concerns about family farms and deny their responsibility to regulate child labour standards in industrial operations as well as through occupational health and safety standards, the labour code, and the WCB. Government is doing a great disservice to the agricultural industry and opening the industry to boycotts from the likes of Pepsi, Frito-Lay, McDonald's, and Yum! foods, who have strong ethical positions on child labour and human rights in agriculture. In addition, commercial operations could be liable to Criminal Code sanctions.

The almost blanket exclusion of agriculture from regulation has a pervasive effect and creates a Wild West attitude in the agricultural community. This is increasingly visible within and outside of Alberta in relation to unregulated agricultural work sites. Were these hands-off attitudes and practices a factor in the Brooks XL Foods fiasco and the public harm that resulted? Some believe it was.

Most government members do not realize also that the financial costs of thousands of injuries and deaths annually are being off-loaded from WCB, from the industry to our health care system and to Alberta taxpayers to the tune of millions of dollars annually. The Farm Safety Advisory Council report does not address legislation for farm workers.

Madam Premier, you promised to legislate protection for paid farm workers in occupational health and safety, the Workers' Compensation Board, and child labour standards. After a decade of waiting, Alberta farm workers are simply asking: when?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, the gateway to God's world out there. You'd better believe it. Welcome. Come on out.

Mr. Speaker, I have the requisite documents for submission. Just as an addendum, this is serious business. Members have talked about respecting the rights of citizens and landowners. Words are easy; actions are what people judge this government on. This evidence is serious business about improper actions.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table the requisite number of copies of the 2011-2012 Alberta Health Services annual report. Alberta Health Services is comprised of many skilled and dedicated health professionals, support staff, volunteers, and physicians, who are steadfast in their duty to promote wellness and provide health care every day to Albertans as well as to many residents of Saskatchewan, southeastern British Columbia, and the Northwest Territories. This report illustrates their dedication to fulfill the Alberta government's commitment to health for all.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I have several tablings today after a long summer of talking with constituents. I'll just table a few of them today and maybe do the rest tomorrow.

The first is from Christina Carr, who has written the government with regard to IVF treatments. She feels very strongly that IVF treatments should be covered by Alberta health insurance. She feels that being able to have a child should be something that every woman has an opportunity to do. She wrote a very touching letter about it and about some of those issues and also noted that several other health systems across the country do cover it; for example, Quebec. It would be nice to keep some of those equalization dollars here to spend on programs just like that, wouldn't it, Mr. Speaker? That's the first tabling.

The second tabling I have is a very interesting tabling from a Mr. Scott. Mr. Scott has some great ideas on how to improve safety on our roads through different, I would say, very cost-effective ideas using culverts, road crowns, and other ideas that he's had. It's a very lengthy letter, but I would certainly ask the ministers of Infrastructure and Transportation to take a look at it if possible. That's the second tabling. Maybe I'll do one more; I'll do the rest tomorrow.

Ms Deanna Bruvold is a constituent of mine. I've had many conversations with her. I've asked her to actually put together a letter regarding her experience on getting a drug covered. She's on right now an alternative to the prescription drug that is covered by her Alberta Blue Cross insurance. She's finding that if she goes to the one that's covered by Alberta Blue Cross insurance, it's causing a major allergic reaction, very severe, but she has to use it in order for Blue Cross coverage to cover it. Blue Cross is saying that she has to go back to the one she's allergic to instead of using this alternative one. It's a very weird situation there, a very compromising situation. I hope the Health minister will take the time to look at this letter and see if there's anything that he can do to help this woman, this Albertan.

I'll save my other remaining ones for tomorrow, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have here the required copies of a letter that I read on October 24 and that I would like to table today. It's a letter that I read from a kindergarten teacher in my constituency on her experiences in the classroom.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a tabling – and I have the requisite copies here – by the Foundation for Democratic Advancement. It's regarding an electoral finance audit of Canada's 10 provinces. It's a very interesting report. It goes through an analysis of openness and transparency as well as limits placed in other jurisdictions on various amounts and donations. One of their findings – and I think it's particularly evident that we need to work on this from this report – is that Alberta's electoral finance laws are systematically corrupt by favouring minority and special interests over the interests of the people. I hope people in this Legislature take a sec to look at this report.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? I have two tablings in that case.

First, I would like to table a copy of a letter that I wrote to the president of the Alberta press gallery on October 25 which addresses dress codes and other protocols for media personnel who are attending Alberta legislative committee meetings in the committee rooms at the Leg. Annex. That's effective October 25, 2012.

My second tabling also relates to dress codes, other protocols, and general decorum. That applies to caucus support staff and others who may be attending committee meetings in the Legislature Annex. That one is titled Staff Protocols, and it is in effect immediately.

Both of these updated protocols, hon. members, were discussed at some length, I should say, and agreed to by the Members' Services Committee. However, I need to bring it to your attention immediately because there is, I think, a committee meeting tonight, there's certainly one tomorrow and, I believe, the day after and so on, and this would apply immediately. Please ensure that all of your staff are made aware of these two protocols.

On that note, I wonder if we could have unanimous consent to revert to a congratulatory note. The Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, who came into this world not long ago, just a few years ago, is celebrating a birthday. That is the note I got. Happy Birthday.

Thank you, hon. members.

Statement by the Speaker

Clerk of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta 25th Anniversary

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we go to the points of order, I want to take a brief moment to indicate to all of you that on August 1, 2012, Dr. David McNeil celebrated officially his 25th year as Clerk of our Legislative Assembly of Alberta. Now, since the first sitting of this House in 1906 there have only been six Clerks. Dr. McNeil is the second-longest serving Clerk in our history. Only Clerk Robert Albert Andison has served longer, from April of 1923 to May of 1955. David McNeil has served with four Speakers now: Dr. Carter, Mr. Schumacher, Mr. Kowalski, and myself.

For those among us who are lingo buffs, the word “clerk” actually derives from the Latin word “clericus,” meaning a learned man. This certainly applies to Dr. McNeil, who actually began his postsecondary studies with a bachelor of science in chemical engineering, followed by a master’s and a PhD in management science.

Some of you are probably wondering: what’s the connection to his current job? Let me cite this for you quickly. In the spring of 2011 Dr. McNeil was profiled in the U of A Engineer alumni magazine and was quoted as saying, “Part of being an engineer is being a problem solver. There’s always a problem here [in the Assembly] to be solved.” His scientific background has trained him to be thoughtful, analytical, nonpartisan, and objective in all situations. He’s also one of the most respected voices in the entire parliamentary circle of friends that we have across the country and internationally since he is one of the longest serving of all current Clerks in Canada.

In addition to his procedural role, David has fulfilled a significant administrative role. He has led our Legislative Assembly through many transitions over the years. To give you an idea of the span of progress that has been made during his service, in 1987 there was but one computer in the Legislative Assembly Office of our province. Today we have dozens if not hundreds spread throughout. In fact, we also have migrated more actively into social media in our committee meetings and elsewhere.

In conclusion, Dr. McNeil, I know that I paid a brief tribute to you last week, but today I will ask all members to join me in congratulating you on reaching this tremendous milestone. On that note, I would ask the page to please deliver it here, and I will deliver it to you, Dr. McNeil, if you’ll come forward. On behalf of all members of the Assembly, current and former, please receive this very special 25th anniversary commemorative Legislature pin. [Standing ovation]

Hon. members, we’ll deal with a few points of order now. Let me begin with the hon. Member for Airdrie on the first point of order.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, there were actually two, but I’ll only need to do one because the other one was a point of clarification, which you dealt with with the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

I’m referring to Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). I think we can keep this short as long as we can keep the rhetoric down here. This is a point to make sure that this House is very clear. The member opposite – I believe it was the President of Treasury Board – specifically named two instances, in 2004 and 2007, regarding some party donations. My understanding is that that was the Alberta Alliance Party. The Wildrose Party of Alberta was not formed until 2008 under, obviously, a completely different leader and with completely different policies, board, and in fact it is a completely legal entity. What he said about our party regarding 2007 and 2004 is factually inaccurate, and I’d ask him to withdraw those comments on that basis.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m not sure that I actually attributed it to a party. You know, the wolf in sheep’s clothing, so to speak: they changed the outside; they can’t change the inside.

Mr. Speaker, I did mention that in one campaign, the 2004 election campaign, one individual did bankroll nearly 75 per cent of that party’s contributions, and I assume it was the Alberta Alliance, which then became the Wildrose, with many of the same members. In 2007 by-elections that same individual bankrolled 99.7 per cent of that party’s contributions. Again, those individuals then became the Wildrose Party. In the 2008 election campaign, which the hon. member does refer to, that that was the Wildrose Party of Alberta, that same individual bankrolled nearly a quarter of that party’s contributions.

Again, you know, it’s absolutely clear that the party saw nothing wrong with that and is merely playing politics with it now, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we’re going to stop there. As we know, we often receive clarifications, and as all members here would know, Beauchesne’s 494 does have a nice citation in it that says that frequently we’re asked to accept two different versions of the same account. I think the hon. Member for Airdrie has clarified his point very well, and I think the hon. President of Treasury Board has given an eloquent address from his point of view.

The other thing I’ll just caution you on is that when you raise points of order, please remember to do them briefly, like was just done. It was well done on both sides. We need to remember that it is not an opportunity during a point of order to extend or continue debate, and you can find more on that at page 634 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice.

Hon. Government House Leader, another point of order?

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I trust you weren’t addressing those last just specifically to me in terms of the length of points of order.

I do rise under Standing Order 23(j) and (l), (j) being “uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder” and (l) being “introduces any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly,” and under Beauchesne’s 492, when the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills in his question referred to two areas that I think offended the practices of the House.

The first was in asking whether the government would repay a contribution, and he specifically referred to government, flying in the face of all the admonitions that you provided with respect to not confusing party business with government business. There was a direct linkage there, which, I think, I would go so far as to say was intentional because the scope of questions from the other side today and other days has been to try and connect the process of the political process that we have with government policy. They have been unable to do so even though they continue to do so.

The other offensive piece to the question was in using the language “corruption.” There is a process. If someone has an allegation that someone has broken the law, there are two appropriate ways to go with respect to election finances and disclosures. One, the most appropriate, if there’s a concern being raised, is to ask the Chief Electoral Officer to investigate. I presume that the hon. members opposite have done that with respect to this particular allegation that they’re making. But it’s quite inappropriate to find guilt in their questions and lead the public to believe that there has been a finding of wrongdoing.

The act is very clear. One cannot make a donation greater than $30,000 to a political party during a campaign period. So they're taking great licence by linking all of those contributions together, linking that in and talking about corruption and essentially finding someone who is not in this House guilty of an offence without the opportunity to appear here, which is another section of the rules, to defend themselves.

There is an appropriate process – and I would encourage the hon. members opposite to use that appropriate process – to formally request the Chief Electoral Officer to investigate and to report. The other way they could go, if there's a violation of the law, is to ask the police to investigate a violation of the law. But it's entirely inappropriate to come to the floor of the House and use the immunities that are provided by the House to make allegations of wrongdoing and corruption, which is a very, very strong word, against somebody who is outside the House or, in fact, against a government.

"Corruption" is a very ugly word, and it doesn't look good on you, sir.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, in response to that I would note that, first of all, the question the government member is referring to was: given that 30 per cent of the campaign funds came from one source via a $430,000 donation, will the Justice minister commit to amending the law, or will it just allow another massive PC loophole?

Mr. Hancock: He asked the government to repay.

Mr. Anderson: He never asked that question.

The Speaker: Through the chair, please.

Mr. Anderson: It might have been prior, but it wasn't him. Anyway, my point is that he didn't ask the government to repay that.

This goes back to what the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona said earlier, and I think you did clarify it. We've been trying, and we will now endeavour to try harder given your comments today, Mr. Speaker, to make sure that we refer to public policy when we're in question period, refer to changes in the legislation that we would like to see. We will double our efforts to make it very clear. Now, of course, we do need to put context in that, or the question is useless. You have to contextualize the question and explain what practice we're wanting to stop and what example of a practice we're wanting to stop in government legislation and government policy. So we will endeavour and double-endeavour, as you've asked, to do that in our future questions.

With regard to the word "corruption," we all agree that the government itself should not be called, you know, "this corrupt government" or that "this individual," in this case Mr. Katz, "is corrupt." That's not what this member said. That's not what any question that I've heard in here said. What we are worried about over on this side of the House and what I think Albertans are worried about in general is the general culture of corruption within government, the general culture of entitlement within government. That's not saying that the government and the members themselves are corrupt. It's saying that when you have a process that allows one individual to allegedly pay $430,000 to the governing political party, when you allow that to happen, Mr. Speaker, if the law allows that, then that necessarily opens itself up to a culture of potential corruption. We're worried about that, and I think that the government should be worried about that, too.

So when we're asking questions about changing the law to take care of that culture of corruption, to close those loopholes so that corruption or even the appearance of corruption can be laid to rest, where it should be, I think that's a very legitimate line of questioning in this Assembly, and I think that as long as we follow your rules, Mr. Speaker, and keep it to government policy and keep it to government legislation, there's no point of order here. This was a reasonable question.

The Speaker: Hon. members, you can see why over the decades if not centuries of our fine system of democracy people have created rules, they've created regulations, they've created guidelines, and why it's so important for them to be followed and why I have a passion for this. What we're talking about here is exactly the subject of my admonishment earlier in the day. We're talking again about an issue that has to do with political parties and their contributions. So let me just remind you of a couple of things very briefly.

Number one, in House of Commons Procedure and Practice on page 502, should you happen to have a copy handy, in the middle of the page it says:

In summary, when recognized in Question Period, a Member should . . .

- ask a question that is within the administrative responsibility of the government or of the individual Minister addressed.

Furthermore, a question should not . . .

- be hypothetical.

Then, I turn the page over to 504 and still continuing with "Furthermore, a question should not," the third bullet on page 504 says:

- concern internal party matters, or party or election expenses.

Hon. members, I've been around this game a long time, and most of you in this Chamber have as well. We know what that means. We also have seen what it means when we break away from those rules and take additional liberties. Now, I was very, very lenient in many ways last week, but you can see what happens when we allow the kind of leniency that really does actually break not only the spirit of the law but also the content and the intent of that law. So let's be doubly careful. There isn't a person here who can't phrase or rephrase a question that does not stick within the rules. You can all do it. I know you can. You've asked some wonderful questions, most of you have, so far, and there'll be more to come.

My final point is just to rephrase again, without taking more time out of question period, but I will take it now. In Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms 408 – and recognizing that this something that I haven't had a chance to comment on, let me comment on it now – it says:

In 1964, the Special Committee on Procedure recommended the following guidelines, and this is with respect to oral questions, which were subsequently provisionally concurred in by the House, to be used by Members in asking oral questions.

(1) Such questions should . . .

(b) not inquire whether statements made in a newspaper are correct.

Please remember that one.

Furthermore, 409 in Beauchesne's would tell you that with respect to guides for question period:

(3) The question ought to seek information and, therefore, cannot be based upon a hypothesis, cannot seek an opinion, either legal or otherwise, and must not suggest its own answer, and it goes on.

Finally, 410 in Beauchesne's says:

- (5) The primary purpose of the Question Period is the seeking of information and calling the Government to account.

And I know that that's what's intended, but, again, on page 122 it says:

- (12) Questions should not be hypothetical.

So be careful when phrasing your questions, and please do as good a job as you can to hold each other to account. I have no problem with that at all. But let's do it within the provisions of the book.

I received 22 notes – 22 notes – and it was a record on these matters. The point of it is that it takes up my time, it takes up your time, and all I'm here to do is to enforce the rules, which you subscribed to when you took the pledge.

Now, I'm not here to try and overdeliver or overemphasize that message, but you must know that I feel passionately about following the rules in this House. I will do everything I can to live up to that, and I ask you to please join me and do the same.

As such, the clarification has been made, there's no point of order, and we're going to proceed.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 201 Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Identification Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased this afternoon to move second reading of Bill 201, the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Identification Act.

This bill addresses a serious problem and has ramifications for all Albertans, Mr. Speaker. That problem is the theft of scrap metal. Both individuals and businesses in urban and rural regions are impacted by the theft of scrap metal, and these individuals and businesses are then stuck with the bill.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 isn't just about mitigating the cost of scrap metal theft to law-abiding citizens, businessmen and women. It's also about safety and potentially hazardous conditions created when metal is taken from places and from equipment. When this metal goes missing, everything from power outages to injuries or even death can result. I can cite a case from 2010, when a man was killed in the process of stealing scrap metal from active electrical wire. I can cite instances where manhole covers were stolen, in turn compromising the safety of vehicles and pedestrians on those streets, such as in March or April of this year, when cities all over Ontario reported dozens of missing manhole covers. We could also talk about the loss of metal on construction sites and how such instances often seriously delay work or create costs that far outweigh the value of the metal itself.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Edmonton Police Service in 2011 reported more than $1 million of thefts and $100,000 of associated damages from stolen copper wire alone. The Calgary Police Service reports comparable numbers for their jurisdiction. Earlier this month 90 kilograms of copper wire and 200 metres of stripped telecommunications were stolen from a Telus site northeast of Calgary. As a matter of fact, Telus alone has reported 74 copper theft cases in Alberta this year alone. Two months ago the RCMP recovered $500,000 worth of copper wire just east of Edmonton. In June, Mr. Speaker, a piece of copper cable was stolen from a radio tower in Strathcona county, my own constituency. It was part of the lightning grounding system of the tower. The piece of cable that was stolen was worth $30. The damage to the tower, which was actually struck by lightning, was over $25,000.

Clearly, scrap metal matters, and clearly things aren't slowing down. Consultations, research, and thorough analysis all indicate that the provisions and measures outlined in Bill 201 will help stem the tide of scrap metal theft in our province. As it stands today, thieves can take stolen material to a scrap metal dealer or other recycling-related business and sell it, usually for cash, no questions asked. Mr. Speaker, the objective of this bill is to make it harder for scrap metal thieves to operate in Alberta. Questions will be asked and answers will be recorded so that police have a paper trail when they need it. Regulating the scrap metal industry by giving police this paper trail would greatly diminish the ability of criminals to profit from scrap metal theft here in Alberta.

If the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Identification Act is brought into force, all scrap metal dealers will be required to request proof of identification from each seller, record specific information about each transaction as determined by regulation, make that information available to law enforcement officers upon request, and report suspicious transactions such as purchases above a certain weight or with certain identifying features.

Mr. Speaker, some have argued that municipalities should regulate the scrap metal industry, not the province, but only provincial legislation can minimize discrepancies between differing municipal standards, a necessary outcome according to Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police. This is because municipal bylaws lead to jurisdictional shopping. That is, thieves will travel to alternative locations to sell their ill-gotten gains until there is a uniform standard. Province-wide legislation and regulation would prevent this.

Bill 201, the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Identification Act, would also protect scrap metal dealers from legal action when information is disclosed in order to comply with the purposes of the act, a protection that municipal bylaws do not ensure.

Again, with scrap metal dealers and recyclers in mind, Bill 201 stays away from in-depth daily electronic reporting. That type of regulation is too onerous for business owners and operators and isn't consistent with the spirit of this proposed legislation. Our intent certainly isn't to displace a burdensome process from law enforcement officers onto business owners. That's not what Albertans are about, and that's not what this bill prescribes. The requirements for scrap metal dealers and purchasers under the bill are not onerous. In fact, most large and medium-sized scrap metal dealers would continue on. It would be business as usual.

This legislation doesn't target law-abiding scrap metal dealers. It cracks down on less-than-reputable scrap metal businesses that cater to scrap metal thieves. Penalties stipulated in this legislation involve serious fines when proper records are not kept. Individuals could also face jail time. It considers the obstruction of an investigation for the purposes of this bill an offence, and it prevents businesses from popping up and operating for a short time before they're shut down due to a fine or a criminal investigation.

These measures were developed in consultation with a variety of stakeholders, and because of that, I believe this bill has enormous potential to equip law enforcement officers to both investigate crimes and minimize the potential profit for both sellers and dealers who operate on the wrong side of the law. I'd like my colleagues to note this bill has the support of the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police, which passed a resolution in support of this bill. As well, the RCMP have indicated their support. The Calgary Police Commission is certainly in support of this legislation as Calgary actually has their own bylaw in place, and the Edmonton Police Commission has called for regulation of photo identification by scrap metal dealers also.

To me this call from the Edmonton Police Commission is an endorsement for the principles that inspire this bill. Theft can only be profitable if there's a market for stolen goods. This bill reduces that market by requiring scrap metal dealers and recyclers to leave a paper trail for law enforcement authorities. Right now, Mr. Speaker, the regulation of scrap metal trade in Alberta is left up to the municipalities, and it has led to a patchwork of requirements that merely relocates the selling of stolen goods to communities with lax or no regulations. We need a province-wide standard to help crack down on this problem. I would propose this province-wide standard would start with Bill 201. I urge all hon. members to follow this debate this afternoon and consider supporting this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I will recognize the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka and then the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Identification Act is a timely piece of legislation as theft of these materials is becoming an increasing problem for Alberta industries. The intent of this bill will bring more accountability to the scrap metal industry. By recording the personal identification information of the seller of scrap metal, we should see diminishing returns for the criminals.

I know there is support from the scrap metal dealers themselves on this, Mr. Speaker. All too often they are the greatest victims of theft. With massive yards, often dozens of acres, they are prime targets for thieves. They face heavy costs for security and insurance. This impacts the bottom line for them and then, because of the price, also for their consumers.

This bill seems to be targeted at a few bad apples. I've spoken to the scrap metal dealers and recyclers, and the reputable businesses are already taking down the information related to the seller and the history of the materials. This is good, common practice that will now have the force of law.

As tough as I am on crime and supportive of this law, I do have my concerns. I have heard from those in the industry that they hope the paperwork does not become burdensome, that it does not get in the way of them doing their job. This is a complaint I hear from many people in many industries. Our police officers and our health care professionals among others find themselves away from the front lines, tied down because of paperwork and bureaucracy. I hope we don't find the same situation in the scrap metal industry because of this bill becoming law.

I'm also concerned with how much of this law is left to the regulations after the bill has passed. In section 3 I read, "Information respecting the transaction prescribed by the regulations." I know it is standard to leave much of these details to regulation once a bill is passed, but again I'm concerned about onerous paperwork bogging down hard-working Albertans. I hate to see the majority suffer because of the actions of a few bad apples.

I support the intent of this bill, Mr. Speaker. We should do everything we reasonably can to crack down on fraud and theft. I look forward to debating this bill in committee to make sure it's the best fit for all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The sponsor of this bill and I have gone a couple of rounds already on this one, mostly through the media over the summer. I do thank him for his diligence and for his recognition of a problem and an attempt to do something with it. The problem is that it's not the right thing to do, and there are a couple of reasons why that is the case.

For starters this bill does absolutely nothing to stop people from stealing copper or any other prohibited scrap metal. Nothing. Nothing. What this does is take down everybody's personal information in the hopes that they might be able to have a paper trail good enough to be able to catch somebody who might have stolen something. In the meantime we have subjected every single Albertan who has walked through the door and done any kind of an exchange on scrap metal – we've taken their personal information. Now, is that problem? Well, yes, it is a problem.

I'm just going to give you a couple of examples where personal information has been collected by a government or a police force for one purpose, and it gets used for another purpose. It's just too great a temptation, it seems, particularly for police forces but also other individuals, even – let's face it – candidates for election. Boy, once they see all those lists and names, they just think, "Wow, we could market to them," or "We could use this to catch other things," or whatever their little minds can come up with.

Here are a couple of examples, very recent, where information collected using surveillance or a direct request for information was turned around on law-abiding citizens. In Brussels they have decided to fine people who are cursing in public. How are they going to find these cursing people? Ah. They're going to use the closed-circuit television. Okay. Was that closed-circuit television put in place to catch people who say "shucks" or "dam" or "heck" in public? No. They were supposedly put in place to catch terrible murderers and thieves of large amounts of money, but they're now going to use it to read people's lips and chase them down and fine them for cursing. I don't think that's quite what people had in mind when they put in those closed-circuit televisions. Nonetheless, that's how they're going to use it. Is that what they intended when they first put that in? No, it wasn't.

Here's another one. A large hospitality consortium here in the wonderful city of Edmonton with a number of locations in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre had shut down a few locations and found that they had been broken into and a USB memory stick containing employees' personal information stolen. There was no video that was doing surveillance on their location, and the alarm system didn't work. Nonetheless, out there somewhere is a nonencrypted memory stick containing the personal information – home address, social security number, description, photo, signature – of every employee that hospitality consortium had ever had. They don't know where it is. They don't know how to get it back.

Also, this same hospitality consortium regularly, with the blessing of this government because I was here when it was debated, collects and takes a copy of the driver's licence of every person who comes into their establishment, which, again, includes a photograph, a signature, a home address, a description of what they look like. It's a lot of information. They scan that information because they were going to help bring down drug dealers and terrible people that were causing problems in these bars. Is that what they used it for? No. What they used it for was to get dates with some of the pretty girls that happened to go through. Not quite what they'd said they were going to use it for.

The last example is stolen credit cards. I tried to phone and report a stolen credit card, and I couldn't despite the fact that I was giving the full legal name of the individual who owned the card, two legal addresses by which they could track them down, one in the States and one in Canada, and their date of birth, which should be good information to be able to track anyone down. This company couldn't do it, could not locate the person and their credit card number. Now, why is that? Well, I finally found out after a lot of digging. This, in fact, was not Visa. This was a contracted company that deals with stolen Visas but only the black ones and the gold ones. They kept saying, "What colour is the card?" I kept going: "It doesn't matter. It's stolen." "Well, we don't deal with the blue ones." "Oh, okay." What were they doing with all of this information? They couldn't even manage to find the right person. Is that why you gave all your information to Visa, so it could go to a contracted company so they could manage not to locate you when your card is actually stolen?

What is it that happens with personal information? Do you know where the biggest breach of personal information is? Somebody knowing they're not supposed to use that information and doing it anyway. Those are where the breaches always happen. Almost always. It's not security. It's not technology. It's individuals knowing they're not supposed to do that and doing it anyway.

So back to this bill. We have a bill that says: this is going to stop people from stealing copper. How? What it's going to do is take down the information of everybody that comes in there to sell or trade copper. My dad – God bless him – has collected every single thing he's ever used in his life. It's all neatly tied up. It's all inventoried. When he passes over – it won't be soon – I will have to go and dismantle that garage and sell all of this stuff he's collected: all the acetylene torches and the welding and the arc welders and pipe and the solder stuff and all the gubbins that someone like that collects. I will be taking in copper wire that an old man has collected, but now I will have to give all of my personal information because I might be a bad guy, and they need a paper trail on me. Yeah.

Did it stop the guy next door from stealing the copper wire? No, it didn't, but it does give personal information over to a small-business individual. Let's talk about them. We supposedly love small-business people. Why on earth would we put them in a position where they have to now go out and probably get a computer system and probably send someone to be trained on it? How many of you have been at a scrap metal dealer that was neat and tidy, and every piece of paper was as white as snow? No answer. Well, I bet you they're not going to be keeping these informational recipe cards in a little box. They're going to end up having to put in a computer system, and that's not a small amount of money for someone whose profit margin is pretty small.

So now we've got a system that doesn't do what it says it does. It does collect information on every single person who walks through the door and, basically, makes them criminals or treats every decent, law-abiding person as a criminal because it's creating a paper trail for a possible thief somewhere. And it creates an additional burden of expense, time, training for a small-business person. How is this effective in the slightest? It's not.

I don't blame the member who has proposed it, because he's trying to address something, but this constant default to, "Well, let's capture everybody's personal information, and that'll solve the problem" doesn't solve the problem. This bill is not going to solve the problem. It's going to collect a lot of people's personal information.

Now, let me loop back to where I started. Why is collecting people's personal information a big deal? Why is it a problem? Because it gets abused. Because those very people that are supposed to know that they're not supposed to fool around with it fool around with it. Those people look at it and go: "Oh, my goodness. Lookit. That's a whole cache of information we could market to or we could capture for some other use." They go ahead and do that even though that's not what you wanted. So it doesn't stop the thieving. It does collect information, and that information ends up getting into other people's hands and being used for purposes that you didn't sign up for.

When you actually look at the information, it's not giving us a lot of what is going to go on there. I'm aware that I'm going to run out of time here, Mr. Speaker, but let's just start with "a scrap metal dealer . . . shall inform a person." Well, inform them how? A sign on the door? Do they have to say it verbally to every person that comes in there? Do they wear a T-shirt that says this? What? How are they supposed to inform?

It then goes on to say that they have to hang onto that information "for a minimum of one year after the transaction" but gives no maximum. So this small-business person is now supposed to keep files forever? I guess so. Now we've incurred storage costs for a small-business person.

Please don't support this bill. Nice idea. Bad implementation.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize next the hon. Associate Minister of Wellness, followed by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 201, the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Identification Act, as introduced by the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park. I have found this member to be truly inspirational. This has been a long row to hoe for this member, and he's been a true champion for the cause.

Bill 201 does seek to prevent scrap metal theft, which, with the increasing price of many metals, has become a major issue in many jurisdictions. In addition, it'll provide additional resources to our peace officers when investigating such theft, and the bill would do so by requiring that scrap metal dealers and recyclers record the identities of individuals selling scrap metal in addition to other identifying information. That is true. This information would be available to authorities, who could use that information for the purpose of investigations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, the hon. member has worked very hard to find a solution to the issue of scrap metal theft for a number of years, and I'm happy to see that such a strong bill has been the result of those efforts. That's just one of the reasons why I'm supporting the bill here today. I believe that it does have the ability to greatly reduce scrap metal theft, which has become a serious problem.

The main reason for this, of course, is that since about 2003 global metal prices have been rising, astronomically in some cases. As an example, from 1996 to 2006 the price of aluminum rose 87 per cent, from just 62 cents a pound to $1.16. Copper prices, as many are aware, have seen an even bigger increase of 191 per cent, rising from $1.05 per pound to $3.08. The price of rhodium, a rare metal, has risen from $2.08 per pound in 1996 to $43.59 in 2006. With prices like this it's small wonder that theft has also risen.

Police have identified not only a trend of thefts becoming more frequent; they've also recognized that scrap metal thieves are taking bigger and bigger risks to get that metal. There have been cases in which people have been electrocuted – they've electrocuted themselves, as a matter of fact – trying to get their hands, literally, on valuable metal wiring. Not only is this a major health and safety hazard, but the theft of live wires means that functioning infrastructure has been damaged in the process, and that, of course, multiplies the negative impact of the theft. For example, the theft of fibre optic cables or phone lines could knock out life-saving 911 services in a community.

Now, other common sites for scrap metal theft are construction sites such as LRT extensions and high-rise developments, which would slow the progress of these projects and cost developers countless dollars to repurchase materials and rebuild damaged edifices.

Mr. Speaker, it's clear. Scrap metal theft is a major concern, and Bill 201 offers a way to deal with this issue, proposing that provincial legislation be established to control the sale and purchase of salvaged and scrap metal. At this point there is no provincial legislation in place that deals explicitly with the prevention of theft related to the sale or recycling of scrap metal, so Bill 201 is a novel idea provincially.

However, it's worth noting that on the municipal level there is a bylaw in place in Calgary that does deal with the issue already, so it's certainly worth taking a look at that. That particular bylaw requires that all scrap metal transactions be reported to the Calgary Police Service. Specifically, these transactions include situations where scrap metal "is received, processed, stored or dismantled prior to being sold or disposed of." In these cases the business accepting the metal is required to record the seller's full name and current address, to provide a full physical description of the person and the property they are selling to, and to record two pieces of identification. Additionally, the bylaw states that scrap metal businesses, including salvage yards, must not accept second-hand metal from any person who appears to be under the influence of alcohol or drugs, is under the age of 18, refuses to show the required ID, or is not the true owner of the scrap metal in question.

So that's the municipal level. If we look across Canada, across the provinces, the trend seems to be that as municipalities recognize that scrap metal theft is becoming an issue, they've started to develop these types of bylaws. For example, Mr. Speaker, in Maple Ridge, B.C., authorities are currently developing a scrap metal identification bylaw. That is the result of a string of thefts, including a very unfortunate theft late last year of a war veterans memorial plaque.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think we can all agree that in light of the rising prices of metal and the subsequent increase in scrap metal theft something more needs to be done. While municipalities have been dealing with this issue for some time, the provincial government is better positioned to deal with such an expansive problem. Our government has a broader jurisdiction and is thus able to set standardized rules across all of Alberta, protecting every community from scrap metal theft. In addition, if the laws become province-wide, it will prevent thieves from simply taking their scrap metal and selling it to the next city or town that does not have a bylaw in place. While I'm grateful that some municipalities have taken the issue into their own hands to protect their citizens and their infrastructure from this type of vandalism, I think our province can play an important role in doing so as well.

Currently scrap metal dealers are under no obligation to assist the police in theft investigations, but Bill 201 would give police the ability to review the records kept by scrap metal dealers. It would also give them authority to review and copy the files kept by salvage yards and other metal dealers. This will make a world of difference in terms of enabling the officers to resolve cases more quickly and efficiently, saving valuable time and resources.

Mr. Speaker, other types of reporting systems have been proposed in the past in order to prevent certain types of theft. For example, in Calgary a few years ago a system called RAPID, regional automated property information database, was proposed to keep track of pawnshop transactions. This system would have provided the police with instant access to transaction information from all pawn- and second-hand shops as well as precious metal and scrap metal businesses. Now, in the end, however, I can tell you that Calgary did not decide to incorporate this technology, in part because it would have been quite onerous and demanding on our already hard-working business owners. There's a difference here with Bill 201. I believe it strikes the right balance, holding the businesses to account across the province while not making unreasonable demands for reporting.

As a whole, I believe that this bill will help to reduce scrap metal theft and help us to solve cases where it does happen. All of this, of course, would benefit our communities here in this growing province. As such, I will definitely be voting in favour of this bill today, and I do urge all of our colleagues from all corners of the House to do the same. Once again, thank you so much to the hon. member for spearheading Bill 201 and addressing this important issue.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to stand and speak to this bill. I can appreciate the fact that my colleagues on the other side of the room are looking to bring forward legislation that would cut down on criminal activity and ensure that property owners and their properties are in safer hands or in safe hands.

The challenge that I have with this particular bill, Mr. Speaker, is that it has a very negative effect on a very large group of people who live within our province, and I'm talking about those who daily do jobs that other people wouldn't want to do. They're the ones who are going through old computers and televisions, going through dumps, pulling out copper, pulling out the valuable pieces of metal that we wouldn't use, that we would otherwise get rid of, and then they're taking it and selling it at some of these scrap metal yards. I speak first-hand. The school that I taught at for six years had a scrap metal yard right beside it. That metal yard, unfortunately, was torn down last year when a new development went up and has seriously displaced where people go to take this.

What I want to highlight is the fact that that was an economy all on its own, where you had people recycling old metals, taking them in in order to make some dollars . . .

Ms Blakeman: Self-sufficiency.

Mr. Bilous: Right. Thank you.

. . . to be self-sufficient, to pay for their rent, to pay for food. You know, these are people who were working. By introducing this bill or bringing forward this legislation, you're now going to make it extremely difficult if not impossible for these people to do this. If you ask how, well, many homeless people do not have identification. Part of the problem that they don't have identification is because you need to have an address; you need to have a permanent residence. "Well, that's wonderful. I don't have one." "Well, you can't get one."

Well, with this bill now the person who is working, who's not sitting around drinking or waiting for life to hand him or her things, who is out there working in order to pay their way, cannot because they don't have the proper ID. They don't have the proper permanent address in order to get a proper ID. Although this bill looks okay at the outset insofar as helping out some, you know, I truly think that the laws that we currently have regarding theft – I mean, the last time I checked, it's still illegal to take something in Alberta that's not your own. So if plaques are going missing, theftwise, well, by all means we need to crack down on that. I also question the dealers that are buying these illegal objects, which clearly aren't from the person who brought them in.

When we're talking about, you know, breaking down wiring, old equipment, old telephones, and junk and deriving the use from that, this is a form of recycling that would not happen otherwise, and the fact of the matter is that it's benefitting all of us environmentally but also financially because they're contributing to the economy. I hope that my Wildrose colleagues will acknowledge that point.

I stand here today speaking in opposition to this bill. I can acknowledge that there is theft and that a rising number of thefts are happening, that, obviously, I disagree with and that should be stopped. I think we do need to come up with a creative solution, but I do not believe that Bill 201 will do that. If anything, it'll have a more negative effect and harmfully impact a large, large group of people who often are nameless and faceless but whose lives and livelihoods depend on this.

Ms Blakeman: And contribute to the economy.

Mr. Bilous: And, again, these are folks who are contributing in a very significant way to our economy.

With this legislation in place I could see other adverse side effects rise up. I'll ask my colleagues in the Legislature to reject Bill 201 on grounds of financial, moral, and environmental reasoning. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the minister of environment and sustainable resources.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and speak to Bill 201. I won't reiterate the good points and the points that were made by my colleagues here, but this is of particular interest to me. As an electrical contractor for the past 35 years I have seen first-hand a number of instances where theft of copper wire as well as aluminum wire has caused major problems on construction jobs. It is no coincidence that incidents of theft happen to rise as the prices of copper and aluminum rise. Employee theft as well as breaking-and-entering damage done by thieves is a major cost to contractors and, therefore, in the end to all consumers.

Mr. Speaker, I have personally seen homes under construction that are in the rough-in stages of electrical and plumbing work completely ravaged by scavengers who were after both copper wire and copper pipes which were stolen for resale. In fact, copper plumbing and pipes are no longer being widely used and have mostly been replaced by plastic pipe. Copper wire, however, is still very much in use and is very valuable. Reels of copper wire must be removed from sites on a daily basis and returned the next day in order to avoid the theft. This also adds to construction costs, which, again, are passed on to the consumers.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 aims to cut down on the theft of scrap metal. If we can decrease scrap metal theft, contractors will not be experiencing the increased costs related to those thefts, and the consumer will also be protected from those increased costs. Is this the be-all and end-all? Will this fix the problem? Absolutely not, anymore than any bill fixes crime.

I will be supporting this bill, Mr. Speaker, and I encourage all members of this Assembly to do the same. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, followed by the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It certainly is a pleasure to rise today and join my hon. colleagues in the debate on Bill 201, the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Identification Act, brought forward by the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park. Before I begin, I would first like to thank the hon. member for bringing this forward today in the House. I know that he is very passionate about this issue and that this is not his first time bringing this legislation before the House, which makes him both passionate and determined about this legislation going forward.

Bill 201 focuses on deterring scrap metal theft, which is an increasing problem that may not be receiving the attention it so deserves. It first identifies which materials should be considered scrap metal and goes on to establish specific regulations and responsibilities for scrap metal dealers and recyclers. As we currently sit, Mr. Speaker, Alberta does not have any scrap metal dealers and recyclers identification legislation.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 is in line with our government's commitment to the prevention of crime and the promotion of safe communities by creating standards for scrap metal dealers and recyclers, including mandatory collection and storage of transaction information for the duration of at least one year. To address crime on all fronts, we must also have effective and timely legislation that complements our other efforts.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I will focus my comments on an overview of scrap metal theft in our province and highlight how and why the issue needs to be addressed. First, it is no secret – and the RCMP has admitted this as well – that the theft of metals, particularly copper, is common throughout Alberta. These items are readily sold for cash at various scrap metal dealers. For the past number of years there have been numerous news stories covering scrap metal theft throughout Alberta. These news articles highlight many issues surrounding this crime, including damages done to both public and private property in addition to safety risks to communities and the individuals stealing scrap metal.

Copper is the most publicized scrap metal we have been hearing about in the news. In recent years the global copper inventory has been declining. This is one reason behind an increase in copper prices of some 330 per cent and a corresponding rise in the number of copper thefts. In addition, between 2002 and 2006 the global price of aluminum has increased substantially. Aluminum nearly doubled, and we saw a fivefold increase in the value of rhodium. As we can see, Mr. Speaker, scrap metal theft can be very lucrative, and Bill 201 recognizes this as being an issue.

It may be unclear as to how these scrap metals could be so valuable. Some of the most common applications for copper are for electrical use, plumbing tubing and fixtures, casting, and heat exchangers. Other common uses include manufactured products such as doors, windows, house siding, beverage cans, foil products, cooking utensils, and street signs. Rhodium is primarily used as a finish for jewellery, mirrors, and searchlights but also can be used in various electrical connections.

The most common location of scrap metal theft is on secure construction sites after regular working hours, but fenced compounds, trucking and manufacturing yards, and even LRT extension sites are frequently targeted by scrap metal thieves as well.

Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned earlier, stealing and off-loading scrap metals such as these is not difficult to do. In fact, the Calgary Police Service estimates that in the first 10 months of 2011 alone more than $600,000 worth of copper had been stolen in Calgary, with an additional $88,000 in estimated damages. Meanwhile, in the city of Edmonton the reported value in this same 10-month period is just shy of $1 million, with an additional $95,000 in damages. This is just copper; never mind the other types of scrap metal.

There are approximately 10 salvage yards in Calgary and 12 in Edmonton. There are also numerous others in small centres throughout the province. When we talk about small centres, I've had the opportunity to talk about copper wire theft to many of my constituents, certainly those at rural crime watch meetings, the RCMP, business owners, and various people from my constituency who have phoned, e-mailed, and talked to me at different places to support this piece of legislation.

We know that Bill 201 calls for a legal requirement that scrap metal dealers obtain photo identification from anyone who exchanges scrap metal for cash and to record this valuable information. This would eliminate the relative ease scrap metal thieves currently enjoy as no law requires any record of these transactions at present. As it currently stands, scrap metal dealers in Edmonton conduct business in the absence of any existing local bylaws, provincial or federal legislation related to scrap metal.

Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that of the companies canvassed by the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, several indicated that they do in fact identify and keep track of the licence plate numbers of all vehicles that have sold scrap metal to their dealership entirely of their own accord. However, some companies have said that they require no identification at all. While business practices vary between companies, the security threshold in the scrap metal industry for the most part appears to be lacking. My concern is that without a formal piece of legislation like Bill 201 to combat this issue, scrap metal theft in our province may only get worse. As we know, the instance of scrap metal theft is on the increase, and with the prices of these metals also increasing, this problem doesn't appear to be going away any time soon.

I think that under these circumstances law enforcement needs to be better equipped in order to deal with this problem head-on, and this is one of the many tools we can afford to them. It is readily apparent that the hon. member has conducted extensive stakeholder consultations with law enforcement authorities, organizations representing scrap metal dealers and recyclers, privacy commissioners, and other jurisdictions. Much thought and time has gone into addressing the concerns of all parties and learning from the best practices developed in other jurisdictions experienced in this type of regulation, all of this so that we can vote confidently that this legislation equips our peace officers with the proper tools to get to the root of the problem.

Again I would like to thank the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park for taking on this worthwhile challenge and for bringing this bill forward to debate. I for one will be supporting this legislation, and I urge my colleagues to do so as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise also in support of this bill, but I do have some concerns. As with all laws there are some issues that can arise. I want to speak in favour of this bill because of my own past experience both as a police officer and as an engineer for a phone company who was a victim of multiple thefts of phone cable for scrapyards purposes. With regard to what the hon. member from the third opposition party said, the reality is that if we have good enforcement here, it'll actually save lives and prevent people from being hurt.

One of the greatest and easiest ways to steal copper phone wire is to look for self-support cable that has just been hung by the line crews. All an individual has to do – and they do this fairly regularly – is climb the pole or climb out of a window if it's between buildings. They slash the cable just half an inch, and then they jump and ride that down as if they were Tarzan on a swing. They come up with a tremendous amount of cable that they roll up quite quickly, and they run to the scrap metal dealer. I can't tell you how many times someone has been hurt doing that. It's a quick way to come up with a very large amount of copper to basically, quite honestly, supply a drug habit. They've done this.

I can remember as an engineer having the line crews hang a cable, and then going in the next day and the cable is gone, and then hanging a cable again, going there the very next day, and the cable is gone. It took the police quite awhile. They had to camp out to catch this individual. That's how we caught him sliding down and running away with the cable. This is a common practice. It's mostly relegated to the urban areas because that's where they use self-support cable, but it's extremely dangerous. It's extremely dangerous.

There are some issues with the bill that I'm concerned about, particularly section 3(5), that puts an onus on the scrap metal dealers to report within 24 hours a weight that would exceed the regulation. As we all know, the devil is always in the details of the regulation.

Now, I would prefer it if the wording was that if the owner thought it was an issue dealing with criminal activity, the onus would be on them to report a suspicion of criminal activity. What I worry about is that we have the regulation, the owner is abiding by the law, then the regulation changes – the weight changes or whatever – and the next thing you know, an owner is in violation of the law and they don't even know it. But the onus is on the actual proprietor. It's something to be careful of when we deal with these issues.

I am absolutely in favour of documenting who's selling scrap metal. This is important for our economy. It is important to lower the theft. It can actually help to make it a little bit more difficult for the black market, so it has its value.

I want to go back to section 3(5). If the onus is on the police force, it's real easy. If there was a large theft of any kind of metal, I know what the officers do. The detectives do this automatically. They will be contacting the scrap metal yards, finding out if large amounts of copper are finally being brought in for sale. As long as that's being identified, the detectives can easily follow their work and track down this individual and investigate. I just worry that we might put the onus on the owner. Then all of a sudden, unsuspectingly, somebody in the business of scrap metal finds themselves in violation of the regulations and could be subject to a fine when their intention was never to violate the regulations and never to actually break the law. So I caution on that one point. In reality the law itself is, in good faith, a good bill. It can do some very good things for our society, and it can protect the safety of the public given how some of these thefts occur.

Going back a little bit further, the hon. member talked about the theft of copper wire on the residential side, particularly at construction sites. I have to tell you that the things thieves will do to gain access to a construction site, the danger they put themselves in unnecessarily is beyond reason in most cases. This bill would basically stem that tide. It would make it far more difficult to market the illicit metals. If it's effective – and I can't say it will be – I think it will put a dent in it. Once it's difficult to sell illegal metal, to get money for that illegal metal, for that contraband, then these thieves will be looking for some other source of income. They won't be going down this route.

I will be supporting this bill. I think I'm going to bring an amendment to that one section, and hopefully the other side will actually take that in good faith.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the Member for Little Bow.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to support Bill 201, the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Identification Act. Before I share some of my thoughts on this proposed legislation, I would first like to thank the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park for bringing forward this important bill for debate. He's been at it for a long time, and I'm so thankful that he's been able to carry it through.

Mr. Speaker, the goal of this legislation is to prevent scrap metal theft in Alberta by setting out clear and explicit responsibilities for scrap metal dealers and recyclers throughout the province. Bill 201 would require scrap metal dealers to record certain information regarding their purchases and their sales, including the identity of the seller and details of the transaction.

These conditions would give police greater resources for both solving the investigation of scrap metal theft and preventing future occurrences. I believe Bill 201 would help reduce scrap metal thefts, thefts which burden Alberta businesses and citizens by causing damage to their property and significant financial loss, as we've heard from our colleagues.

These damages to public and private property are quite significant, which is why I would like to focus my comments on that topic today. In the last decade the value of common scrap metals has gone up substantially. We know that this leads to increasing theft, which in turn results in an increasing financial burden on those Albertans and businesses preyed upon by scrap metal thieves.

We also know that this problem is not unique to Alberta. Almost every jurisdiction in North America has experienced similar problems with scrap metal theft. Scrap metal yards, power lines, large-scale construction projects, and even private residences have all been targeted by thieves. These thieves are going after unconventional sources of scrap metal as well. Manhole covers, road signs, and even the catalytic converters in vehicles have all become targets for scrap metal theft. As examples these sources of scrap metal are indicative of the lengths thieves will go in order to be paid for stolen items by a scrap metal recycler.

Similarly, industrial compounds and job sites have also experienced thefts though usually on a larger scale. Copper, as we've been hearing during this debate, is one of the main targets for thieves, probably because of its ever-increasing value. It is commonly used in many daily items, including electricity lines, computer components, data and phone transmission lines as well as appliances. The price of copper, as the Minister of ESRD has indicated, has been at or near historic highs for the last five years, fetching between $2.60 and $4.60 per pound. These prices have made thieves more aggressive in their efforts to steal copper wherever they can find it.

In the past scrap metal thieves have also targeted utility companies for their copper wiring, causing thousands of dollars in damage. It's these companies that then get stuck with a bill for replacement wire. Recently, just last month, two tandem trailers loaded with about half a million dollars' worth of copper wire were recovered after being stolen for their scrap metal value.

In June of this year copper wire was stolen from a communications tower outside of Edmonton, where the damage and loss were estimated at $25,000. This theft left the communications tower without a grounding line, and after the tower was struck by lightning, emergency calls were compromised for over a day in the area. In August of 2011 a number of spools of copper wire were stolen from an industrial compound east of Edmonton. The total cost of stolen property was roughly $600,000, the wire alone making up $300,000 of the total.

Mr. Speaker, that occurrence of theft could have delayed work from proceeding because the wire that was stolen was set to be used the following week. If police would not have been tipped off by a local farmer about the theft, that business would not only have had to wait to continue the work that required the wire; they would also have suffered substantial financial losses. The stolen copper wire would have garnered a great deal in scrap metal value and possibly even impacted the company in such a way that would have directly affected its employees.

Mr. Speaker, private citizens and small businesses have also been targeted by scrap metal thieves in Alberta. When a new business, home, or condominium is being built, the job site can often become a magnet for individuals looking to steal wire, pipe, conduit, or even metal siding or flashing. You can imagine how difficult it must be for Albertans, who work hard for their money, to deal with the theft of metals from the home or business they are building or renovating.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is clear that the effects of scrap metal theft can be widespread and significantly damaging to public and private property. I really do believe this bill would help reduce cases of scrap metal theft across the province. When thieves are in the process of stealing scrap metal, they often have to trespass and destroy private property to take what they want. The repercussions of this are far reaching and can affect thousands of people.

In April 2010 phone service to hundreds of citizens in Big Lake, near St. Albert, was disabled after thieves dug up and removed about 500 metres of copper cable. That is extremely unsettling, considering that severed electrical or phone lines can affect access to essential services like emergency response teams or fire crews. Oftentimes these crimes damage power supplies, causing outages which can be devastating to computer networks and the businesses that rely on them. The effects of power outages may require companies to replace and repair costly equipment. Furthermore, the financial implications of power outages can cause lost revenue, including the cost of service restoration.

Scrap metal thieves waste thousands of man-hours for utility companies, private businesses, and law enforcement. In addition, they burden businesses by reducing profits and incurring expensive service restoration projects. Bill 201 would aid law enforcement officials, the scrap metal industry, and all Albertans in curbing the destructive act and consequences of scrap metal theft.

I would like to once again thank the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park for putting forward this proposed legislation. The issue of scrap metal theft is becoming a greater concern to Albertans, businesses, and law enforcement officials as well as our health care. This bill sheds light on how we might implement provisions that would prevent metal thefts and the exchange of stolen property. I look forward to seeing all of our colleagues supporting this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [some applause] Thank you, hon. colleague from Medicine Hat, also.

I'd like to stand up here and support this motion by the hon. member. It's a worthwhile piece of legislation, and I support the initiative to protect Alberta's scrap metal recycling industry. Also, it is nice to see a member of this government propose legislation against something most Albertans would deem inappropriate.

There is, however, a fundamental and serious problem with this piece of legislation which I'd like to raise for this House's attention. While laws need to be flexible enough to work within the framework for adequate enforcement, they still must provide guidance for what the intended enforcement is on the law. Mr. Speaker, when I was a child, my mom used to always say: do blank or else. Well, I think this does address the "or else," but I'm not entirely sure what it does for the "blank."

For instance, we have not defined what the set weight is for the purpose of section 3(5) or what conditions a person selling or providing must meet before the dealer may purchase the scrap metal. This, in essence, removes our ability to legislate the acts which we intend to enforce for all Albertans.

With those points being raised, I'd like to voice my support for this legislation, and I am looking forward to any clarification on this bill that comes forward for the following readings. I can also bring up that in the small farming community where I'm from, Mossleigh, the old school got cleaned out of the copper in it and also the copper in some of the old elevators, which we had to replace in order to use the elevators as we still make use of them.

This, again, I think is a very good piece of legislation because it would add to the point that people cannot sell that without the proper identification. I'd like to thank my colleague from Strathcona-Sherwood Park for his motion here in Bill 201.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and join the debate on Bill 201, the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Identification Act, brought forward by the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park. Scrap metal theft in Alberta is on the rise, and Bill 201 aims to reduce it by setting out detailed actions and responsibilities for scrap metal dealers and recyclers. While aligning with the government's goal of crime prevention and safe communities, this bill would minimize the economic and social costs associated with scrap metal theft by creating standards for scrap metal dealers.

Due to the increasing value of products such as copper, the number of scrap metal transactions is on the rise. Targeted areas include LRT extensions, oil field and construction sites, and existing storage and salvage yards. However, these criminal acts of theft not only hinder businesses financially; they also pose a serious threat to public safety.

Careless theft by a perpetrator can result in serious injury or death. Specifically, the practice of burning or cutting copper or other metals poses a risk to thieves. In recent years news agencies have highlighted an increasing number of scrap metal thefts throughout our province. The Calgary Herald reported in 2008 that a deceased man was found at the bottom of an Enmax electrical vault who was presumed to be stealing copper wire. A further example is of a man killed in Texas after he was shocked by 69,000 volts of electricity while standing on the top of a substation transformer cutting off one of the wires. Earlier, in 2009, a 32-year-old man was found dead after he'd broken into an electrical substation and was electrocuted, cutting power to 800 customers in the process.

Another instance occurred in Riverside, California, in June 2009, when two men trying to steal wire were found electrocuted near a utility transformer, in turn blacking out the city for two hours. Across Canada there have been incidents in which people have been electrocuted or burned as a result of trying to steal wire from transformers.

More importantly, Mr. Speaker, I think of the inherent danger scrap metal theft poses to the unsuspecting public. If an employee arrives at his or her work assuming that everything is grounded and in working order, as it was when they left, they could be seriously injured or even killed. Often ground wires for electrical boxes and transformers are composed of copper. If these are successfully stolen, an unassuming and unaware worker could enter the area and be exposed to extremely dangerous and unstable electrical conditions.

Workplace safety is a priority of industry in this province, and scrap metal theft poses a serious threat to maintaining that high standard. The peril of scrap metal theft does not end, though, at the scene of the crime, Mr. Speaker. An additional safety concern of police is burn pits. These are remote locations, often found in rural areas, where the thieves burn the insulation and the coating off stolen goods. This burning process is done to ensure higher prices are earned at salvage yards. These burn pits pose a high fire risk in their areas, and the environmental impact from melted plastics is a concern for air quality.

Mr. Speaker, it's also commonplace for thieves to have small workshops where they strip wire. Often found in Sea-Cans or abandoned buildings, these makeshift shops pose a danger to the public. They contain propane tanks, torches, power tools, and those are often improperly stored.

Another danger to public safety is the theft of manhole covers and sewer grates for profit throughout the industrialized world. Consequently, a number of incidents have occurred affecting motorists, cyclists, and pedestrians, resulting in serious injury and often death.

Mr. Speaker, as the global copper inventory continues to decline and prices continue to rise, metal theft is only going to increase. A further concern is that many of these crimes occur at main substations and transformers. This can lead to severe power outages, which are a risk to a community's essential services. Traffic lights could be affected, raising the risk of motor vehicle accidents. Accordingly phone and 911 services could be limited, causing serious implications for emergency medical care. A power outage goes far beyond the inconvenience and the general discomfort of the public. It's important to highlight that scrap metal theft not only harms individuals but entire communities.

It seems that organized crime has gravitated toward stealing scrap metal because of its rising value. This, coupled with a lack of regulation, means it's easier and easier to steal metals, and thieves are less and less likely to be caught. Specifically, gangs looking for quick money have targeted scrapyards, unguarded maintenance shops, and businesses. This sort of organized crime is the precise threat to our communities that this government is dedicated to combating. Whatever can be done to stifle its proliferation is a step in the right direction.

This government has placed a very high emphasis on programs like the safe communities initiative. This initiative strives to help eliminate organized criminal activity, which is such a detriment to our society. The hon. member's bill strives to deter criminals who are looking to make an illegal profit. With approximately 10 salvage yards in Calgary, 12 in Edmonton, and many scattered in smaller urban areas throughout the province, selling and off-loading scrap metal is not as challenging to thieves as it should be. Through mandatory identity recording and specific restrictions and responsibilities for scrap metal dealers and recyclers, Bill 201 aims to aid our law enforcement in tracking down and quashing scrap metal thieves.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 provides additional tools that our law enforcement needs not only to minimize the economic incentive of scrap metal theft but also the inherent danger to public safety. Therefore, I support the hon. member's bill and look forward to hearing the thoughts and ideas of my fellow colleagues on the issue.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured for the opportunity and appreciate being able to speak in favour and support of this bill. I'm not generally in favour of more regulations, having been in the trucking business for so many years and been, well, I won't say persecuted, but it felt like it sometimes. I know that regulations are necessary to keep order in society, and this appears to be one that's designed with a number of clear objectives in mind, among them reducing the cost of theft.

Theft, of course, is a great expense to society, not just to detect and persecute or, rather, prosecute those who are perpetrating the crimes – a little autobiographical comment slipped in there – but to give people the tools that they need to make it easier to identify the instances of theft or likely theft. Put some responsibility on the dealers, and I think they can probably tell when shady things are happening, by making it easier for them to justifiably report things like this without feeling guilty about doing so. It provides the tools to the police. They now have more people working on behalf of their efforts to reduce the cost of theft. It provides clear consequences to criminal activity. We know that the likelihood of being caught committing a crime is, in and of itself, a deterrent to the commission of that crime.

I believe that there's a protection to the public, too. Sometimes when things are taken like this, there can be inadequate supports left for the structures that are standing. It was mentioned about the manhole covers. Clearly, we've heard of examples of manhole covers being stolen and people actually being injured. As they walk along unsuspectingly, the ground literally disappears beneath them, and they could be seriously injured. No laughing matter, but you've seen it in the movies, and it is pretty funny when you see it. Well, we don't want that happening because in real life it causes injury and can cause death, too.

So we've got clear objectives. It meets the test there, I believe. We're giving our police and the people who might be tempted to purchase a way to deal with that effectively and to identify people that might be tempted to commit these crimes. I think those are important tools for them to have.

I am fully in support of this and hope that all people will vote for it, recognizing that it's a great benefit to our society.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today in this Assembly and speak to Bill 201, the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Identification Act, brought forward by the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park. I have been impressed by the knowledge that he has in this area. I've spoken to him a couple of times about it. He has given it his due attention. He's talked with his colleagues, and I know that he's been out in the community a lot. It is time to institute this provincial legislation to deal with the issue. As I will explore, there is evidence to suggest a correlation, indeed, between increases in metal prices and increases in both the theft of metals as well as the resulting damage to public and private property.

There are many benefits to this bill. First, it aims to provide additional tools for law enforcement. Secondly, it takes aim through legislative direction at scrap metal theft, a common problem that affects many jurisdictions in Canada, Mr. Speaker. Now, I stand before you today to discuss some historical trends of metal prices in relation to that increased theft of metal, but first I'd like to spend a little more time reviewing some of the specific aspects of the bill itself, as I understand it, and how it might achieve its objective in order to deter metal theft in Alberta.

The bill proposes the outlining of specific restrictions and responsibilities for scrap metal dealers and recyclers. It also takes on the more basic but paramount task of determining which materials are included in that definition of scrap metal. It's perhaps noteworthy that until now there has been no clear provincial definition of the term. It might be argued that this is one of the reasons that metal theft has become, in fact, more common. Establishing a clear-cut definition of the materials is at the heart of the matter and will enable our government to strengthen the legislation and the monitoring of scrap metal. Moreover, the lack of definition of the term "scrap metal" itself and the detailed rules regarding the exchange of these metals suggest that perhaps the issue warrants further attention.

But, Mr. Speaker, the history of scrap metal theft in Alberta needs to be discussed first in this House, and we need to have legislation that will assist. In order to narrow the scope of the discussion, I'll use copper as a prime example. It's been mentioned a couple of times today. The global copper inventory has seen steady declines over the past decade or so. I used to live in Whitehorse when there was Whitehorse Copper. Whitehorse Copper closed down a long time ago. Supplies have been going down, and that means the price goes up from an economic perspective. As well, the number of thefts are going to go up because the price is increasing.

Since November 2006, in fact, the price of copper has generally trended upwards, reaching a peak of $4.60 in February of 2011. Currently it has come back somewhat. It hovers around $3.80. Scrap metal salvage yards have been willing to pay anywhere from $2.60 to $3.25 per pound of copper pipe and wire. It is these higher salvage yard prices that incentivize the theft of these products at the expense of many Albertans.

The Calgary Police Service has commented on this. Based on a comparison of the first weeks of September 2010 and September 2011 there was a notable increase in copper transactions of 61 per cent. In just one year the dollar figure yield from copper transactions jumped from $64,000 to $94,000. It should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that these numbers reflect overall copper transactions, not incidents of metal theft.

Having said that, the Calgary Police Service logged some interesting numbers with respect to theft. During the first 10 months of 2011 alone estimates reveal that $645,000 worth of copper was stolen in Calgary, and the damages were approximately $88,000. In Edmonton between January and November 2011 the reported value of stolen copper reached nearly a million dollars, with an additional $95,000 in damages. That's not chump change, Mr. Speaker, and we need to do something about it.

Historically construction sites of various kinds are on the hit list for scrap metal dealers. In particular, sites that are not secured after hours such as LRT extensions as well as manufacturing yards and plants are common targets. Some of my clients in my former life were indeed some of these target individuals. High-rise projects, new substations, and oil field sites are also impacted as well as fenced compounds such as existing substations, equipment storage locations, trucking yards, and salvage yards. As many of you know first-hand, the overhead costs of construction and business in general are hard enough on a company's bottom line. Add to that the unforeseen and unrecoverable costs of theft and, in this case, theft of material of increasing value, and it's apparent that chronic theft is negatively affecting many Albertans.

To further highlight the severity of this issue, I'd like to mention a couple of instances of recent thefts. Earlier this month, Mr. Speaker, Calgary police seized, amongst other things, about 90 kilograms of copper wire. This wire is believed to have been stolen from a telecommunications provider. In total more than $100,000 worth of stolen goods were recovered. In another case a farmer stumbled across a pickup truck and a trailer in a field in Edmonton's northeast loaded with 20 spools of copper wire. Another 10 spools were discovered nearby, bringing the total value of the copper wire stolen to $300,000. This just happened in August. In December 2010 $7,500 worth of copper wire was found at a residence in the Calgary area.

I could go on and on and on with other examples. Those are the ones that I picked. Constables are convinced that the increasing amount of theft reflects the value of the materials. In all of these cases, members of the local police service observed that copper theft has occurred at construction sites throughout both cities and in surrounding rural areas, and the incidence of that is increasing.

There are countless other stories, Mr. Speaker. I think that there is sufficient evidence to encourage this House to take a hard look at the legislation surrounding scrap metal or, rather, the lack thereof. I invite my colleagues to examine this bill carefully and consider the ways in which it will help Albertans from being victimized by such crimes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise here today and debate Bill 201, the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Identification Act, which is being brought forward by the hon.

Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park. The intent of this bill is to deter metal theft in our province. Is this a magic bullet? No. But it is a key piece of the larger prevention and enforcement effort in this province.

We are far from being the leaders here. Calgary bylaws, the province of B.C., and many more jurisdictions have led to displacement of these transactions to areas without legislation. The success of this bill would be achieved by setting out specific restrictions and responsibilities for those who deal and recycle scrap metal. As well, the legislation would determine what materials should be included in the definition of scrap metal.

Mr. Speaker, over the past decade global copper supplies have been dwindling, which has resulted in an inflated copper price. There are only two ways to get copper, you either mine it or you recycle it. Prices have even reached historical highs of $4.60 per pound and currently hover around $3.80. This has led to a corresponding rise in the number of copper and metal thefts. In fact, the increased value of scrap metal contributes to the willingness of scrap metal salvage yards paying prices as high as $2.60 to $3.25 a pound. Overall, Bill 201 has the potential to minimize the economic and social costs associated with scrap metal theft by advancing accountability through these regulations.

I had the experience of investigating a metal theft myself, where a gentleman at about 2 in the morning walked down the transit tunnel of Edmonton Transit. The trains are shut down at that time. On video we see him walking down with some big cable cutters. What he did was he cut the grounding wire. Now, what it is is a big, braided, about one-inch line of copper wire. You see him come back about an hour later in the surveillance video with this over his shoulder – and it's heavy because he is climbing out – and he climbed over the wall. We later found that same grounding wire at a recycling place across the street from where he came out.

In fact, speaking with the transit guys, there are a couple of key things that were a big risk. Without that grounding wire, the train believes another train is coming the other way, so they have to slam on the brakes, putting everybody at risk. Also talking to the Edmonton Transit guys, the best way to get the grounding wire to replace and repair these lines is from the scrapyards because they can get it from the people that stole it. It's a full circle of theft and repair from the same small group of people.

Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta is committed to ensuring that all Albertans are able to live in a safe and vibrant community, and scrap metal theft puts that at risk. To achieve this, we must continue to support our law enforcement and crime prevention efforts.

Another incident. I pulled over a truck at about 2 in the morning. The back of the truck was lined with copper waterlines. Basically, searching the vehicle, I found out there were candles all over the place and all these long, copper-cutting snipes. The guys were obviously in some building, and they had a perfect measurement of how long the length of the truck box was, and they had this little cart made. So they were stealing copper, they were trucking it back into their truck, and it laid flat in their truck box. Now, if we follow through with what would have happened if we hadn't stopped them, they would have just gone to a recycling place, dropped off all this copper piping, and walked away with cash.

I did a little renovation on my own bathroom and had a bunch of old copper. When I was looking into this, I went to the local scrap metal yard. So I walk in. I thought: well, instead of throwing it in the garbage, I'm going to take it to scrap metal. I walked over to the yard and, surprise, of course they didn't ask for any identification. They weighed the stuff, and I walked away with $280 in cash. I couldn't believe it on that small amount, and the transaction was so quick.

Later I was doing another investigation of a large organization, where the gentleman at the business would actually take their product. He would cut this brand new product off the wire. Then he would drive his company truck to the scrap metal place, get about $200 worth of cash, and then he would go to the casino which was down the road and gamble it. This was almost a daily occurrence.

Going to the scrap metal dealers, there was a varying range of data and information they kept. It always struck me that these transactions are not only internal thefts, putting people's lives and infrastructure at risk, but they have no transaction. In fact, if you go to a gas station and pay for your gas, you have a transaction. There's a transaction record that is accessible. Well, there was no transaction record. There's a huge opportunity for these organizations, these recyclers to do the wilful blindness of, "I don't know where it came from," so I think it clearly sets expectations and accountability for them as well.

Specifically in regard to law enforcement we need to assist them in putting a stop to the scrap metal through this. Accountability is what does it – okay? – and information. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre does the recycling of her father's material. Is her information going to be provided? Yes. So is a whole bunch of other people's, but that's not criminal. There's no reason to look beyond that. It's simply a transaction record. It isn't initiating any kind of investigation or anything else like that. It just holds people accountable.

Primary selling and off-loading of scrap metal is relatively easy. These types of stolen goods are extremely difficult to confirm as stolen due to their lack of identifying features. When you get your car stolen, it has a VIN. It has a licence plate, a make, model, colour. But copper is basically a commodity that gets thrown into a bin and cut up, and you can't identify where it comes from.

You laugh that somebody tried to recycle a telephone booth, and other jurisdictions report that manhole covers and light standards are being recycled. We laugh at those, but there are some serious infrastructure and metal that are being recycled as well that have identifying marks that just get cut up and thrown into the bin.

Businesses that choose to purchase metals of questionable origin are under no obligation to assist police in their investigations and sometimes refuse to co-operate at all. In cases where a warrant is necessary, businesses have more than enough time to purge the inventory and destroy the suspicious evidence and documentation by the time the warrant is obtained. The transaction cycle of this is very quick.

The Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police strongly hoped that Bill 201 would include police inspection powers without the need for a court order or reliance on permission from the dealer recycler. Unfortunately, the current legislation, Bill 201, doesn't require permission from the dealer to inspect their premises, records, and inventory.

That bill also doesn't require dealers to provide ongoing, same-day reporting through electronic means or otherwise to police on all transactions, which the police association also requested and I feel is important. If you want to have a real-time response to incidents, you need to have real-time data.

It does insist, however, that dealers who have reasonable grounds to believe that purchased material is stolen property make an immediate report to the police. This doesn't go quite far enough, but it does advance the accountability for the dealer and the problems with metal recycling. Currently scrap metal dealers are not required to obtain photographic identification from anyone who exchanges scrap metal or, from my experience in looking into this, any identification. For some a name and signature is satisfactory. Not surprisingly, one might suspect that John Doe has recycled a lot of copper in the province of Alberta.

During the consultation phase of this bill some have suggested that the following information be collected: a photocopy of the driver's licence, the licence plate number and description of any vehicle in which said property is delivered, and the seller's stated source of the scrap metal. Others indicated that that isn't in the spirit of Alberta's Privacy Commissioner or the spirit of this bill, which is to give law enforcement authorities enough information to operate effectively. Interestingly, in the city of Edmonton they've got a pawn bylaw.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. I conclude.

The Acting Speaker: The chair will now recognize the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park to end debate.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to all the hon. members who have spoken this afternoon to this bill. As discussed, the goal of Bill 201 is to crack down on scrap metal theft. Research and consultations and analysis all indicate that this bill would accomplish that goal by making it hard to sell illegally obtained scrap metal and easier to track illegal metals when they are sold.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

These are consultations, Mr. Speaker, with law enforcement, the scrap metal dealers' association, and the Privacy Commissioner.

Bill 201 contains a very modest requirement and something that most scrap metal dealers and recyclers already do, which is record and identify the sellers of the scrap metal. ID could also include the government-issued ID for homeless people, and this is currently done through homeless shelters, using the homeless shelter's address. Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 would increase our safety and security and help deter crime. This piece of legislation is the most appropriate means at our disposal of mitigating the increasing occurrence of metal thefts across our province that we've been talking about this afternoon because there's no point in stealing it if you can't sell it.

Mr. Speaker, I value, respect, and thank all of my colleagues for their comments regarding this bill this afternoon and would urge all hon. members to vote in favour and support Bill 201.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park has moved second reading of Bill 201, the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Identification Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a second time]

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, given the nature of the clock I would move that we now call it 5 o'clock and move to Motions.

[Motion carried]

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Municipal Support for Resource Road Maintenance

501. Dr. Starke moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to explore options for providing support to municipalities that experience significant local road deterioration due to heavy industry/resource truck traffic, with the goal of ensuring these roads are adequately maintained and available for all to use.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and open debate on Motion 501. I want to make sure that all members are on the same page for this debate as to the definition and the motion wording as they are important to the discussion. The term “local road” is defined in the commercial vehicle dimension and weight regulation as “a road that is not a primary highway or secondary” highway. In the context of this motion “local road” means a road that is the sole responsibility of a municipality. Furthermore, the motion refers to road deterioration due to heavy industry or resource truck traffic, and that refers to the direct impacts of specific activities; for example, in our area the transportation of heavy oil.

Mr. Speaker, I’m proposing this motion because I believe that transportation is the lifeblood of our province’s economy. If you’ll forgive me for using a medical term, if transportation is the lifeblood, then, to borrow the phrase, our roadway network is analogous to the arteries and veins, the very circulatory system that allows for the vital flow of commerce throughout the province. There are parts of this province where those vessels need some help.

Motion 501 simply urges government to explore options to support municipalities that experience significant road deterioration due to the ever-increasing burden of heavy vehicle traffic. What exactly does that mean? Well, it means looking at supports, at legislative tools, both existing and future possibilities for further innovation.

Now, I know that many communities bear the cost of hosting heavy industry but lack the local resources to ameliorate the associated wear and tear on their local roadways. That is especially true in my home county, the county of Vermilion River, No. 24. In our county the major industry is heavy oil. The critical thing that you need to know about heavy oil is that it can’t be transported by pipeline. Heavy oil is extracted to the surface by various ingenious methods and then stored in tanks. Large tanker trucks then collect and transport this product to batteries for further processing.

This creates an interesting situation. The resource, the heavy oil, is an asset owned by the people of Alberta. Royalty revenue in the hundreds of millions of dollars every year flows as income to the provincial treasury. But the accompanying cost, the wear and tear, the deterioration of our roadways: that is borne by the municipalities. In the county of Vermilion River those roads are our pipelines, but unlike pipelines in other parts of the province, where actually there’s an earning to the municipality of linear assessment revenue, our pipelines, our roads generate expense, not income.

Let me give you some statistics from our county to illustrate this. In 2011 public works expenses constituted some 56 per cent of our county’s annual expenditures. On a per capita basis our public works costs are 75 per cent higher than the median for counties across the province. The county of Vermilion River has a huge roadway network. Our county has 3,800 kilometres of roadways, half of which are used by heavy oil traffic. Our county estimates that the costs of maintaining those roadways, the ones that are used by heavy oil truck traffic, run 8 to 10 times that of what we might term a regular roadway. Now, the county of Vermilion River’s equalized assessment is roughly in the middle if you rank all of Alberta’s rural municipalities, but because of our huge roadway network our equalized assessment per kilometre of roadway is the lowest by far among counties across the province.

Now, many of my colleagues in the Assembly have served in municipal government. You know that the sources of funding for municipalities are limited. You have property taxes, you have fees and charges, and you have government grants. Expressed as a percentage of total revenue, our county, the county of Vermilion River, has the highest rates of income from fees and charges of any county in the province; 37 per cent of county income comes from fees and charges thanks in large part to a very successful county-owned gas utility. Less than 6 per cent comes from government grants. Most of the remaining 57 per cent comes from taxes. In short, on the revenue side of the statement our county is heavily reliant on utility income, fees, and charges and receives comparatively little in government grants.

Now, it’s not that our county hasn’t done its homework. Our county administration applies for and maxes out on virtually every available grant related to roadway maintenance. The resource road program, the basic municipal transportation grant, and MSI funding are all utilized at a maximum level, but the net result is that only a fraction of the needed roadway maintenance is funded through these initiatives. So what we have in the county of Vermilion River and, I suspect, in other parts of Alberta is a mismatch. Our rural roadway system generates significant costs for the rural municipality. Existing programs, while helpful, simply do not provide sufficient resources for counties that have a large roadway network.

Mr. Speaker, that is what this motion addresses. It urges the government to look again at the programs it has in place and to work together with rural municipal councils to come up with solutions that will improve the flow of commerce throughout our province. That is what responsible, sustainable resource development and environmental stewardship are all about.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, Motion 501 urges the government to explore solutions to the problems that I have identified. In my opinion, Motion 501 would set us on a path to ensure that all local roads impacted by resource and industry truck traffic are adequately maintained. I hope the debate will help inform and increase current efforts to improve the maintenance of local roads.

While I believe that the government is already doing much to support local municipalities, I also believe that government must never stop looking for new ways to partner with local authorities in helping to deliver services essential to those communities. I believe that government must never stop trying to improve our province every day, so I urge all hon. members to follow this debate with interest and consider fully the advantages of studying potential solutions to this problem.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, Standing Order 29(3)(a) affords 20 minutes to the Premier or the Leader of the Official Opposition. All other members will have 10 minutes and the mover five minutes to close.

I will recognize the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to thank the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster for putting forward this motion, and I will speak in favour of it, the notion of exploring options to provide “support to municipalities that experience significant local road deterioration due to heavy industry/resource truck traffic, with the goal of ensuring that these roads are adequately maintained and available for all to use.”

As I mentioned, I am sympathetic to the intention of this motion, and I want to speak in favour of finding ways to provide support for municipalities in general and, in particular, to municipalities that are impacted by the consequences of economic growth. After all, Mr. Speaker, having to repair roads that are damaged by truck traffic because of our prosperity is a problem, but in the big scheme of things it's one of those problems that falls into the category of a good problem to have since it is an indication of our prosperity and growth. However, I do think that the motion is somewhat too narrowly constructed, and it does reflect the fundamentally different approach to municipal funding that the members opposite take versus the one that the Wildrose supports.

Let me tell you how I would adjust the thinking around this motion. It would be: how do we find ways to be able to have own-source revenue provided to municipalities to be able to meet this need? I was fortunate before coming here today to speak with the board of the AAMD and C, who have raised the concern with me about a particular tax that they're worried about coming to an end at the end of this year. I had actually expected the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster to mention this tax because it does seem to go particularly to the point that he is making. What it is is the well-drilling equipment tax regulation, and it's under the auspices of the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Let me just tell you, though, the story that one of the members shared with me about how difficult it is for them to manage to keep up with the road construction and the road repair caused by the damage of heavy equipment. This one particular council member had told me that at any given time in a given year you will find 50 to 60 vehicles going up and down this particular road, which was originally not designed to have that kind of heavy traffic on it. If you're in an area where there's muskeg, you end up with what is almost like a marshmallow effect, he called it, on the road. They become rutted. There are potholes. They require yearly repairing. He was saying that this one particular road that has this amount of traffic – and we all know how many kilometres of roads there are in municipal districts – takes up one-third of the overall amount of the road budget in this particular municipality.

Beyond that, of course, there is also the impact on bridges. I believe the municipal districts are responsible for something in the order of 8,500 bridges, which, once again, had not been designed for this heavy truck traffic and are all in need of repair and upgrade. In fact, it was shared with me that many of these bridges have now had loads disallowed on them because they are not in a condition to be able to support those loads. In addition, from time to time, when the road condition is particularly bad, they have to reduce the amount of load that a truck is able to carry just so that the roads can manage it.

But, as I say, there is actually, fortunately, a simple fix for the government. They had extended a regulation to expire at the end of this year, December 31, and it is, as I mentioned, the well-drilling equipment tax regulation. What this does is that it actually allows the municipality to levy a tax, with the tax rate set by the Minister of Municipal Affairs through regulation, but the dollars flow through to the municipality, the municipal district, or county on the basis of the number of wells that are actually drilled in their area. There is a relationship between the number of wells drilled and the amount of truck traffic.

Under current legislation a well, if it's shallow, would yield about $290 to a municipality per well drilled. It could go up to $38,000 plus, depending on how deep the well is drilled. In the case of this particular municipal councillor I was speaking with, this is a significant source of revenue for them for their road budget. His municipality alone collects $7 million to $8 million out of this tax. In addition to that, there was a survey that the AAMD and C did last year to ask about the extent to which our municipalities are reliant on these revenues. Twenty-six municipalities responded – that's not the entire universe of municipalities who benefit from this tax – and they're generating $21.7 million from this revenue source.

The concern the AAMD and C has is that, once again, the regulation was supposed to be reviewed this year, with a view to seeing whether it fits with the current technological advancements that have been made in drilling technology. What the municipalities, of course, are finding is that with the invention of horizontal multistage fracking there isn't a provision for how this tax might apply. There isn't a provision for how it might apply to shallow wells. Also, we're seeing increasingly that companies are going back into existing wells, and there isn't an opportunity for them to be able to get the revenues that they would normally be able to get the first time that these wells are drilled.

I think that since the government has not done the review of this regulation this year, it would seem to me that one of the immediate interim fixes, to make sure that we don't end up seeing our municipalities fall short, is to extend this regulation for another year so that we can do a review and so we don't end up finding that we have taken away a source of revenue at the very time when we know that our municipalities are using this for road construction and that they do need it.

I would just put on the radar, then, that this regulation is one that the government needs to take a look at next year, looking at it with a view to modifying the rules to consider shallow wells, to consider as well the impact of horizontal multistage fracking. That's the request that came forward from the AAMD and C. I think it goes directly to the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster's point, and it clearly is a significant source of revenue for the counties and municipal districts. It also has the advantage of being a level of taxation that flows directly through to the municipality rather than being yet another granting program that pits one community against the other. That's what I like about it.

Let me segue into the approach that we believe would solve these kinds of problems and these kinds of requests permanently. During the most recent election cycle we spoke about a new deal for municipalities that would have three different approaches to it. Number one is that we know that we need better funding for municipalities. We need more dollars to flow through to municipalities, and we have a plan for that, which I'll talk about in a moment. We also need better planning. We need to see a priority list, whether it's for these kinds of infrastructure projects or any of the other many, many demands that we see at the municipal level. Having a priority list that is public with clear criteria for how it is the projects are prioritized is absolutely essential for municipalities to be able to do their own planning.

The third thing, of course, is better governance. We believe that we need to have a new relationship with our municipalities and recognize them as another order of government. The only way you do that is that you respect them as an entity which is able to raise and steward its resources without a lot of interference from the provincial level of government.

In keeping with the spirit of what the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster has proposed, we think that a better approach and one of the options that we would hope the government would consider when they're looking at options for how we fill this gap is what we have called our 10-10 plan, our community infrastructure transfer. What we had proposed here is rolling a number of different granting programs into a single community infrastructure transfer where 10 per cent of provincial tax revenues would flow through on a formula basis to each municipality, similar to MSI. But we have heard that there are concerns with the MSI formula. The 10 per cent of provincial tax revenues would be based on personal income tax, corporate income tax, fuel taxes, insurance taxes, tobacco tax, and so on. If you identify 10 per cent of provincial tax revenues each and every year that you earmark for municipal purposes and then develop a formula to flow it through, similar to MSI, we believe that this will meet a number of objectives.

One of the most important objectives it will meet is predictability. One of the concerns that we hear from municipalities and the reason why they're facing such difficulty in managing things like their road budgets and the additional pressure of industrial activity is because they don't know from year to year whether or not the municipal sustainability initiative is going to be spread out for another length of time and ultimately end up seeing them have fewer dollars or whether or not the government is going to keep its commitment year after year to provide that predictable funding. If we create a formula where we're earmarking 10 per cent of our revenues, that provides predictability.

It also provides simplicity. We know that there is a lot of confusion in the grant application process. I've spoken with municipal leaders who tell me that they actually have to hire full-time staff to be able to navigate through the approval process for grant applications. We think that having more of these grants divvied up to the municipalities on the basis of a formula gets at the issue of simplicity as well.

We also know that the level of government that governs best is the level of government that is closest to the people, and having a program like the community infrastructure transfer would meet that goal.

In addition, we believe firmly that municipalities need to have control over their own revenue base rather than having to go begging cap in hand to the province or their MLA every time they have a new need in their community. It's simply not fair to force a municipality to have to petition their MLA to be able to get enough money to be able to pay for basic needs in their community, in this case roads and infrastructure.

It is also not fair to pit one community against another, trying to argue that they deserve a grant more than another community deserves a grant when we know that all of our municipalities have their own source needs at the local level. They're all quite different from each other. We have an infrastructure deficit in every single community across the province, so we need to stop pitting one neighbour against the other.

It's also not fair to have to go through some secret and mystifying process to figure out how you actually get your project moved up the priority list or, if you're on the priority list, the secret and mystifying process that causes you to move down. We think that if you have a community infrastructure transfer based on a percentage of revenue divvied up on the basis of a formula, we would get away from the politics of determining who gets what grants and where.

The other part of our 10-10 plan is, of course, flowing through 10 per cent of provincial surpluses to municipalities. We, of course, are a party that believes it's attainable for us to get back into budget balance, a real budget balance that includes all of our sources, both capital and operating. We also believe that once we're back into budget balance and back into surplus, every part of our Alberta community needs to be able to benefit from it.

What we've seen in the past is that when the provincial government has racked up huge surpluses, they have not been as good at sharing it with those who are also the ones who are suffering from managing the pressures of growth, the pressures of growth being described in this motion. One of the things that we think we could do is take the approach of also earmarking 10 per cent of provincial surpluses and flowing it through this community infrastructure transfer on the same basis, where you develop a formula and you develop some fairness. So in a given year – let's say that you have a billion-dollar surplus – 10 per cent of that would be $100 million flowed through to each municipality.

We know $100 million would go an awfully long way to meeting many of the community needs at the local level. In some communities it would be for seniors' housing. In other communities it would be for recreation centres. I think that in the community of Vermilion-Lloydminster they might decide to use that to be able to repair the roads from heavy truck traffic. Whatever it is that is the concern at the municipal level, this kind of approach allows for municipal leaders to be in the driver's seat, where they get the resources and then are able to target the money to what they believe is the priority for their community.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I think that there are a great many options for us to be able to rebalance the revenues between the municipal level of government and the provincial level of government. I think the most immediate fix would be for us to look at this well-drilling equipment tax regulation to make sure that we don't end up leaving our municipalities short when it expires at the end of this year. But I would hope that we could engage in a broader discussion over the course of the next year or two as we're examining the Municipal Government Act.

Surely, we do want to talk about roles and responsibilities, but you can't talk about roles and responsibilities in the absence of fixing this fiscal imbalance. We believe that we've got a plan, through our 10-10 plan, our community infrastructure transfer, that would ensure that not only do we meet the needs that were identified in the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster's motion today but that we would also address the various pressure points that we would know every single community ends up experiencing on a year-by-year basis.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'd be happy to turn it over to the next.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. leader.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today to speak to Motion 501, brought forward by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. The purpose of Motion 501 is to explore options for providing support to municipalities that experience significant local road deterioration due to heavy industry and resource truck traffic. The goal of this motion would be to ensure that such roads are adequately maintained for all to use. As we all know, our province is home to numerous communities that host heavy oil operations. These municipalities see oil support equipment hauled up and down their rural roads. Due to the heavy loads carried by support vehicles, some of these roads appear to be deteriorating faster than expected and require more maintenance.

Municipal roads seem to be impacted in a similar way, though by different industries, and I think we can all agree that both rural and municipal roadways are essential to the successful operation of numerous core sectors in Alberta. These roads are vital arteries connecting support equipment and resources to their destinations. Their deterioration may have a noticeable impact on the efficiency of resource transportation and can represent a cost to municipalities for maintenance.

Mr. Speaker, the motion does not specify a course of action to address this issue. Instead, it simply asks that we explore options. I am certainly open to and welcome the opportunity to explore additional options. I want to highlight a number of programs and grants that are in place to support rural road maintenance as they will hopefully provide you with a snapshot of how these issues are dealt with in the rural network as well as in other municipalities.

The municipal sustainability initiative, or MSI, in particular assists municipalities by allocating a portion of funding to certain municipalities in order to meet the demands of growth. MSI assists low-population, large-area municipalities based on the number of kilometres of local roads. Beyond base funding for municipalities, 48 per cent of additional MSI funding is allocated between municipalities on a per capita basis, 48 per cent is also allocated based on education property tax requisitions, and the remaining 4 per cent is allocated based on the number of kilometres of local roads. Mr. Speaker, this formula is an attempt to assist low-population, low education property tax assessment municipalities with a large area traversed by numerous roads.

In addition to MSI funding, there is the basic municipal transportation grant, or BMTG. BMTG allocations are based solely on a per capita basis for the majority of Alberta municipalities, excluding Edmonton and Calgary. This program was allocated $321 million for the 2012 budget. Depending on need, different types of municipalities may apply for grants for different purposes. The rural transportation grant exists for smaller communities like counties, municipal districts, Métis settlements, and the special areas.

Another support in place to aid the rehabilitation of resource-heavy transportation routes is the federal gas tax fund. This fund does not directly finance municipalities but is based on a return to the province of a portion of this tax. For example, in the 2012 year almost $200 million was allocated to Alberta municipalities. Communities such as those located in rural areas and having populations of less than 500,000 can use this allocation to rehabilitate roads and bridges and, in this case, roads that have been damaged due to heavy transportation.

The Municipal Government Act also offers a legislative support for municipalities seeking funding for deteriorating roadways. Under the act a municipal council may pass a special tax bylaw to cover the cost of the repair and maintenance of the roads. This tax must be approved annually. A municipal council may also pass a tax for damage incurred by transporting well drilling equipment.

I would like to thank the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster for bringing Motion 501 forward as it helps to raise awareness of the burden that small municipalities may face in their role of supporting the growth of our resource-rich economy. I look forward to listening to the rest of the debate.

Thank you.

5:20

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to rise and speak on behalf of this motion. This motion for the most part I do support for a variety of reasons. I mean, first and foremost, there is a huge infrastructure debt in this province, from roads and bridges to schools. You know, I'd love to remind this House that that infrastructure deficit was truly created in the '90s with the slash-and-cut-and-burn style of legislation that passed through, starving hospitals, schools. Our books looked very good. Alberta claimed itself to be debt free. The reality was that they just prolonged that debt or moved those numbers on to the next generation or two generations down. [interjection] That as well.

There is a real need for government to provide supports for municipalities and for school boards as well to deal with these deficits. Municipalities have very few tools at their disposal to raise revenue to pay for many of the services that they offer and that they need. The provincial government does have the MSI, the municipal sustainability initiative. It's been good for some and on some fronts, but more funding is needed. Part of the issue I take is that the formula that is designed by the MSI is one that benefits some municipalities more than others and is more harmful to some than others.

The other challenge with the MSI is that the government will only commit to a few years. I know recently the government has committed to three years, and that's considered a long-term plan. Well, municipalities need to plan much further out than three years. Not knowing if you're going to have the dollars to be able to complete a project or to adjust costs because of inflation and wages and all the rest makes it very, very difficult to sit down and have a realistic long-term plan.

One of the revenue sources that municipalities used to have was the well drilling tax on their roads. That's where the trucks are heavy and they take a toll on the infrastructure, on the roads that they're driving. There are issues regarding this that need to be addressed because a lot of the old wells are being used again. They're being reopened, and municipalities aren't getting paid, if I may, a second time for it. So a well that was used a long time ago: they would receive the dollars, through this old system, to help maintain the roads where the machinery and equipment were needed. The well closes down, X number of years later they decide to go back to that well because of technologies that help them extract more from it, so now they're using the roads again. However, they don't receive any new dollars for using those roads again. So the onus now lands squarely on the shoulders of the municipalities.

I should say in addition to that that with horizontal drilling the formula for calculating this tax is kind of out of date, again, because many companies can be quite far away, hundreds of metres away from where they're digging. The use of roads and what strains certain roads actually needs to be looked at even further.

A well drilling tax is a good start for municipalities, but they definitely need more tools at their disposal to ensure that they're able to maintain the infrastructure that they need, especially for the energy traffic and the traffic that's going to be using their roads. I myself and Alberta New Democrats would support this motion if there were mechanisms in place to ensure municipalities have the resources they need to deliver the services that are required. I, too, like the fact that this motion is open to a discussion with all the different political parties, different levels of government, looking at exploring ways to ensure that they have the funds and are able to make the repairs that are needed.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to look at why this motion has merit or, in other words, what our current government is doing so wrong that in a large, prosperous, resource-blessed province like ours far too many of our provincial roadways are rated only at poor or fair condition, an amazing 42 per cent, if you can believe it. To meet the needs of their communities, our local municipalities and counties have to play political games of favouritism.

In the Wildrose we have a plan, a plan that will deliver stable funding and autonomy to allow municipalities to help meet their local needs. We want each and every municipality in Alberta to have the resources they need to meet the priorities that they set for their communities. This plan is called the community infrastructure transfer, and it has been nicknamed the 10-10 plan. Mr. Speaker, the Wildrose will send 10 per cent of all provincial tax revenues and 10 per cent of all future budget surpluses directly to the municipalities to meet their needs, with no strings attached. This will allow municipalities to, first, decide for themselves what priorities their communities have; second, receive stable funding so all Albertans will receive a fair share of our prosperity; and, third, stop having to petition cabinet and pit legitimate needs and concerns of their community against their neighbour communities who are competing for the same grants.

In the Wildrose we also know there are other things this government could do to ensure that Albertans receive better pricing, better value, and more return for our tax dollars. It is time for the government to get more businesslike and less political with its planning of projects and cost estimates for these projects. One way to make this happen is to answer the Wildrose call for a published, prioritized infrastructure list of all current projects in the planning process. This would allow contractors, companies, and financiers to plan their assets and bids in the most efficient and effective manner, and it would end the current political approach of rushed government announcements to buy votes, eliminating the whimsical transfer of capital and equipment at extra cost to the taxpayer and a resultant loss of quality and quantity of infrastructure and services to all Albertans.

We have all heard what the Fort Macleod broken promise cost the community of Fort Macleod, but I also wonder what the province spent on this, spending taxpayers' money on planning, researching. And don't forget that many municipalities, including Medicine Hat, Camrose, Lac La Biche, and Edmonton, spent tens of thousands of their taxpayer dollars trying to court this project eight years ago.

Maybe the best example to use of how this can cost all taxpayers extra money is the Medicine Hat hospital expansion. First, $480 million of taxpayer dollars was going to be spent on it, then that was changed to $280 million, then $200 million, and finally 10 days ago the government announced that $220 million of taxpayer dollars will be spent. My first question: are you sure? My second question: wow, how much have those change orders cost the Albertan taxpayer?

This sporadic political planning has certainly hurt the Cypress-Medicine Hat constituency. Highway 61 from Manyberries to Foremost is badly in need of proper shoulders and repaving. We are a commodity-based community, and because this oil play is growing and many large trucks are travelling this road, the safety and durability of this highway are of great concern.

For 30 years we have seen studies, and we have been waiting for the twinning of highway 3 from Medicine Hat to Taber, to complete the portion that is already twinned from Taber to Lethbridge. Very crucial for my constituency for safety and economic growth.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on and on with countless more examples of how this government's poor planning and shifting priorities have wasted taxpayers' money and caused uncertainty for our municipalities. With this in mind, in a direction for change, I certainly like the motion.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Motion 501, the first motion brought forward in the 28th Legislature by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. Good for him.

I want to talk about this because not only do I like the member; I also live in rural Alberta. I have every resource's truck traffic coming through my whole constituency because I have fantastic resources that have to be extracted and taken to the markets, Mr. Speaker. When passed, this motion would urge the government to explore options for providing support to municipalities that experience significant local road deterioration due to heavy industry or resource truck traffic.

I know we have many programs that have provided dollars to our municipalities. As an example, my municipality of Big Lake is receiving $445,780 for the grading work on range road 172. My MD of Opportunity: $3 million for base and paving work on phase 8 of C-road. It's still not enough. There is still a huge concern when and where we have huge activity.

I would like to thank my hon. colleague for the work he has put into this motion and also for raising such an important topic. As you know, Mr. Speaker, one of our government's priorities is to invest in families and communities, and I see this one as both. The proposal we're debating here today certainly has our communities in mind and, more specifically, the dozens of smaller municipalities that support Alberta's valued industries on a daily basis.

Mr. Speaker, to provide a bit of background, currently Alberta has three major programs that contribute to the maintenance of resource roads, and we thank our government: the resource road program, otherwise known as RRP, for 2012-2013, $31 million – that's good, but we still need to push for more – the basic municipal transportation grant, otherwise known as BMTG, in 2012-2013, $334 million annual funding; and, of course, the municipal sustainability initiative, otherwise known as MSI. While funding for the resource road program is only provided on a one-time application basis, the other two grants are provided to all eligible municipalities to be used for various functions.

As the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster said, we should never stop looking for solutions or finding new ways for concerns that we have in our communities, and I'm very, very glad that he's brought some suggestions. Just as an example, there exists in Saskatchewan one major program in place to maintain high-traffic roads, the municipal roads for the economy program. This program was established in 2009 through an agreement between the Saskatchewan Ministry of Highways and Infrastructure and the Saskatchewan Association of Rural Municipalities.

Mr. Speaker, the MREP consists of three smaller infrastructure programs: the heavy haul program, the clearing the path program, and the municipal bridge program. The heavy haul and clearing the path programs are probably most comparable to those that we have here in Alberta. Heavy haul is a high-volume program which helps with the cost of construction and maintenance of infrastructure projects that are necessary to support heavy loads associated with industrial hauling. In 2011 13 projects received assistance from this program, at a contribution rate of 50 per cent, totalling nearly $6 million. Clearing the path is a program designed to help construct and maintain corridors necessary for industrial transportation. In 2011 the program assisted 17 new construction projects, totalling nearly $4 million.

In addition, the program seeks to draw trucks off thin-membrane roads and redirect them to less load-sensitive municipal primary-weight gravel roads in order to enable thin-membrane roads to stay in better shape for light vehicle travel. A by-product of this plan is that in participating municipalities more industrial traffic travels on certain designated roads, thereby requiring additional maintenance. As such, this program provides maintenance assistance of a thousand dollars per kilometre per year to eligible municipalities.

Mr. Speaker, I do find this program intriguing as it not only provides maintenance funding to municipalities, but it also seeks to address the underlying causes of road damage, including heavy trucks travelling on thin-membrane roads. I find the programs in Saskatchewan to be different enough from those that we have in Alberta to be worth exploring but similar enough that I don't believe their model would necessarily be an improvement on our existing supports. However, I hope this information provides some food for thought as to the different ways in which industrial road maintenance can be supported by provincial governments.

I would once again like to thank the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster for bringing this motion forward. I am looking forward to listening to the remainder of the debate and to all members supporting this motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and good afternoon, everyone. It's a pleasure to speak here again today. First of all, I'd like to applaud the member for recognizing this critical issue and urging the government to finally do something about it. I think it's high time, and I think it should be addressed.

The goal of this motion, I believe, is something that deals with deteriorating roads, as I see it, and ensuring that they're going to be adequately maintained with proper funding but also protecting them from damaging abuse and available in good condition for all to use. Local road deterioration is a serious issue not only for my constituency but to all throughout Alberta as many of them have become a corridor for heavy trucking and suffer from local road deterioration at an advanced rate.

Two of the main causes for this deterioration, I believe, have been identified as extensive legal use of roads by authorized trucks but, unfortunately, also by extensive illegal use of roads by unauthorized trucks and heavy equipment. It is this aspect that I wish to add into this discussion if I may. Municipalities in Livingstone-Macleod and across the province, I'm sure, shouldn't be hit with the bill for unauthorized trucking, nor should they continue to have their taxpayers victimized by these unauthorized uses. Further, they should not have their regular programs and infrastructure plans put on hold simply in order to pay for the upkeep caused by this inappropriate use of roads.

Mr. Speaker, it's a shame that some would abuse the roads they use to operate their business or to transport product and equipment without obtaining proper permits for the weight of their vehicle. In my years as a municipal councillor I can assure you I saw first-hand how municipalities tried to stop these unauthorized uses, and we had to hire an awful lot of professionals and added staff and equipment just to cover these extreme cases. It was always a frustration.

They're not only expensive, but they shouldn't be the sole responsibility of the municipalities. Why should a municipality independently have to spend dollars, that should be going to other worthwhile causes, on portable scales; enforcement officers; consulting engineers, as I mentioned earlier; maintenance personnel; heavy construction equipment; and road-building materials and upkeep years before the time that it's necessary? Municipalities simply don't currently have these extra resources to deal with these unnecessary issues, and they shouldn't have to spend all that money while continuing to attempt to provide the services their residents deserve.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I support this motion. As stated by the Leader of the Opposition, it's high time that the government took a responsible and ethical approach to funding allocations for municipalities and recognized that they should finally get consistent, predictable, stable, and nonpoliticized funding.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Stony Plain, followed by Little Bow.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster has brought forward debate on a matter that is of interest to many rural municipalities. As we discuss this motion, it is important to note that Alberta Transportation provides grant funds to all Alberta municipalities to assist with their capital infrastructure. In 2012-13 alone Transportation is providing nearly $935 million for municipal support through a number of capital grant programs that municipalities can use to maintain their local roads.

The Alberta municipal infrastructure program, announced in 2005, is a $3 billion program to provide funding to Alberta's urban and rural municipalities for capital infrastructure projects. Eligible projects include roads, bridges, public transit vehicles and facilities, water and waste-water systems and facilities, storm drainage systems and facilities, and emergency service vehicles and facilities.

The basic municipal transportation grant, another Alberta Transportation funding program, is providing $334 million in 2012-13 as part of an annual funding commitment to all of Alberta's urban and rural municipalities for road and transit capital purposes.

Alberta Transportation also provides project-specific grants under the strategic transportation initiative program and the local bridge program because the government understands that an effective transportation network is key to achieving the strategic objectives of building better communities and facilitating economic growth. Part of the strategic transportation initiative program includes a section related to resource roads because the ability to move goods and people safely and efficiently contributes to Alberta's prosperity and quality of life.

The resource road component of the strategic transportation initiative program provides funding assistance to local municipal road authorities for the movement of goods and people associated with new or expanded value-added processing facilities, resource and other industries, intensified farming operations, or high-throughput elevators. The resource road program provides cost-shared funding on a 50-50 basis between the province and the municipality up to a maximum provincial contribution of $3 million per project. For 2012-13 the proposed funding for this component is $31 million. Municipalities are eligible to receive funding for one project every two years and are encouraged to acquire a contribution of 25 per cent of the required funding from the private sector to offset the municipal contribution portion.

The 12 approved projects for 2012 are the county of Grande Prairie for $4.5 million; the county of Mountain View, $2.7 million; the county of Northern Lights, $4.5 million; the county of Northern Sunrise, $3 million; the county of Saddle Hills, $3 million; the county of St. Paul, $3 million; the county of Stettler, $1.7 million; the county of Thorhild, $2.3 million; the county of Westlock, $896,000; the municipal district of Big Lakes, $440,000; the municipal district of Opportunity, $3 million; the municipal district of Wainwright, $2.3 million.

Mr. Speaker, this is how the $31 million is being invested in 2012 to support their own municipalities and their resource roads, all with the goal of providing safe and efficient roads for Albertans to travel regardless of whether they are driving to their child's hockey game or dance recital or moving a load of grain or cattle, forest products, or energy products to market.

Also a part of the strategic transportation initiative program is the local municipal initiatives component, a project-based grant with an emphasis on supporting road and other growth pressures that are beyond the normal financial abilities of a municipality. For 2012-13 funding is $26.1 million. Over and above that, all municipalities receive financial assistance through the federal gas tax fund, administered in our province by Alberta Transportation, which provides nearly $200 million in 2012-13 to municipalities across the province. Road and bridge rehabilitation are eligible projects under the federal gas fund.

While this list is already long in the government of Alberta's support for rural, municipal roads and infrastructure, there is yet another program, joint-administered by the federal and provincial governments, that supports municipal needs. The Canada-Alberta municipal road infrastructure grant was a cost-shared grant, with the federal government, provincial government, and municipal government each contributing one-third of the cost for eligible projects. While applications for this fund are closed, a total of $321 million has been committed for projects to be completed by March 31, 2013. This program allowed for new construction, expansion, or renewal of municipality infrastructure, including specialized transit, water, waste water, solid waste, environmental energy improvements, recreation, cultural, tourism, and connectivity projects, local roads, and bridges.

I look forward to continuing debate on this matter, and I congratulate the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the next speaker, but I'll just warn you that we have three minutes allotted in the time frame. The Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This'll be one opportunity when I get to talk for my whole allotted time, then.

I'd like to commend the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster for raising Motion 501. In my past experiences on county council in Vulcan for 16 years, this was a key thing, where we had problems in funding. To remind everybody, it's not always just oil, which we have an abundance of in my riding also, which takes in four municipalities and counties. We're also moving gravel and oil and cattle and everything else that is key and crucial in and out of our ridings, gravel being one of them. In our particular county when I was the reeve there, there was a lot of gravel being taken out as a resource into different ridings because they didn't have gravel, which also beat up local roads.

Back in the old days – and I'm starting to age myself – and for some people in here who were also on municipal councils, they had the MAG grant, which is the municipal assistance grant. We always found it much easier to operate with than MSI because with MSI you always had to go back and have it be approved by the government, what you were doing. We found the MAG grant was a little easier to be able to roll out for our own needs.

The Member for Highwood brought up having to get a grant specialist. That was in our county. There were so many different little loopholes and things to go through to get grants to be able to fund what we needed in our county that we'd actually end up hiring somebody because there were so many different things we needed to go through to get that done. This, too, I guess, is an issue that I find problems with.

In September my colleague across the floor there, the Associate Minister of Finance, asked for a list of things that we needed in our riding. The second one I put on my list was a large bridge in a rural area that's on a gravel road. That's the old-school bridges that are covered over. This, too, would be another spot where I think this would be a great thing for this government to identify, the bridges and the roads that maintain the integrity of our rural ridings. I think this definitely ties to rural ridings more so than urban in just my own personal experience because of all the infrastructure we have laid out and the money it costs to go back on it. So I do appreciate it, and I hope that they use the information that we sent for infrastructure and our road ideas when they make a plan.

Again, the hon. Member for Highwood brought up the 10-10 program which our party has brought up. I think it lays out some very good ideas and is something that we could all work together on. Hopefully, this government will take this matter seriously and remember those in our rural communities. Less red tape to MDs and counties so they can make local decisions on local matters I think would be key and crucial.

That pretty well sums it up. I'm in support of the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster on his motion. I think it shows how we can work together in this House to move forward with some good ideas. With a little bit of tweaking I think there's some progress that this government could make with it and move forward.

With that, I hope I'm under the three-minute mark, and we'll go from there. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under Standing Order 8(3) the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster has five minutes to close the debate.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank all hon. members who decided to speak to this motion. I appreciate the input, and I appreciate the interest as well. Just a few comments that I'd like to make in sort of a nonpartisan way, wrapping this up.

Clearly, we're talking about an effective partnership between the provincial government and municipalities. The hon. Leader of the Opposition spoke to recognizing municipal governments and recognizing them as a level of government that we have to respect. I agree with that 100 per cent. One thing that I have certainly experienced over time is that there is an increasing level of sophistication amongst our municipal governments both at the elected official level as well as at the administration level. We have some very highly skilled and highly dedicated people working in municipal government today from our largest cities to some of our smallest counties, and I think we have to respect that, and we have to respect that expertise.

I'm not going to get into some of the specifics of the proposals that were mentioned by my friends opposite other than to say, as I said in my maiden speech, that I don't really care whose idea it is. If it's a good idea, let's move forward with it, okay?

I do have some concerns with regard to a program that focuses more on how big the pot of money is and not on how that pot of money is going to be divvied up so that it meets the needs.

Specifically with regard to what the hon. Leader of the Opposition said with regard to the well drilling equipment tax, I'm well aware of that program, and in fact that program does need to be extended. I have spoken with the Minister of Municipal Affairs specifically with regard to that. And you're right. It's great because it provides a locally administered source of revenue to the municipality.

The problem in our constituency, again, is that when we looked at that, because of some of the technology that's out there, the number of wells producing a product and the amount of truck traffic are not necessarily proportional. We have to come up with ways that equate or at least align the traffic that is generated and the weight of that traffic and the deterioration to the roadways it creates.

Another thing that came up during the course of the debate made it sound like there's been significant mismanagement or that there've been a lot of problems going on. I'm not saying everything has been perfect. My hon. colleague the Member for Lesser Slave Lake made reference to some of the Saskatchewan programs. I will tell you one thing from living in a border community. If you think things are bad here, you should look at the roads in Saskatchewan. We have a big set of border markers in Lloydminster, but you really don't need them because you know darn well when you're crossing the border. You just have to look at the quality of the pavement. It's the same on the rural roads as well.

That said, though, I don't think that that gives us any reason or any justification for resting on our laurels. I do think we have to move forward, and I do think we have to explore ways that we can do a better job of supporting our municipalities in some of the crucial infrastructure maintenance that they are charged with doing while at the same time being significantly hamstrung in the ways they can generate the revenue they need to do those programs. That, in fact, has been one of the challenges for municipal government. Many of you come from a municipal government background. My background in municipal government goes back, unfortunately, some 25 years. A lot has changed since that time, but I do think that it's important that we move forward.

I appreciate the input. I do hope that in carrying this motion forward, all hon. members will look and contribute ideas, as they have during the course of the debate. I would ask for your support of the motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 501 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of that very wonderful discussion we've just had and the hour, I move that we adjourn until 7:30.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:53 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, October 29, 2012

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2012

[Debate adjourned October 25]

The Deputy Speaker: I believe the next member to be recognized is the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka. You have the floor, sir.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise again today, and I'd like to thank my fellow colleagues for all of their hard work so far today. I'm also standing to speak to Bill 9, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2012.

The proposed amendments in this bill are intended to correct a number of loopholes and discrepancies that are currently found within the Alberta Corporate Tax Act. The proposed changes and amendments cover a number of industries, including insurance, oil and gas, research, and pleasure crafts. All of these amendments are in response to discrepancies found by either the industry or the Department of Finance.

Now, I do have to say that even though some of these changes are small, they're not inconsequential. Most of these changes seem like reasonable attempts to make the tax code more fair. I'm going to start to talk about something that causes the eyes of most of my friends and of people I know to glaze over. I'm going to talk about insurance for a few minutes.

In Alberta there is an insurance corporation tax, which is payable by insurance companies for business transacted in Alberta during the year. The rates are 2 per cent on premiums for life, accident, and sickness insurance and 3 per cent on other types of premiums for other types of insurance policies like property and casualty.

In the existing legislation it states:

88(1) The tax imposed under this Part is not payable . . .

(b) in respect of premiums receivable under a contract of marine insurance.

What we're seeing happen is a change in definition of what falls under that marine insurance act. What we're seeing it move to is bringing pleasure craft out, and we're going to see a change to that definition. Now, the definition of pleasure craft is a water craft or vessel used for recreational or sporting purposes. Whether or not the craft or vessel is chartered to another person for this use doesn't matter.

At the end of section 88(1) the terms "unless the premiums are receivable in respect of a pleasure craft" are added. We are seeing that there will be a 3 per cent tax now payable on these premiums by insurance companies. Fair as this might be in removing the marine exemption tax, what we're seeing is kind of a little bit of a tax grab. Now, I'm not sure if this is something that is good or bad, but we are seeing this happen to the industry.

Any time we see these kinds of changes, we know what's going to happen. The consumer will pay. These increases are going to be passed along to the consumer, although it is up to the insurance company as to how they are going to do it. I think that does need to be noted here in the Chamber because, as I said, these changes may be small, but they're not always inconsequential.

With that, I'd like to thank you very much for your time here tonight. Take this into consideration as we move forward with this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to . . .

The Deputy Speaker: My apologies, hon. member. Standing Order 29(2)(a) provides for questions or comments from any member to the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Seeing none, I will recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo again.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sorry for jumping the gun there.

It's always an honour and privilege to rise to speak to any bill, even a bill that may make some people's eyes glaze over, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2012. My friend from Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition got it mostly right. This bill really attempts to clarify the tax codes, both federally and provincially, and allows for extended deadlines for scientific research, experiment, and development tax, tax credits for three months, which seems like a reasonable thing to do, and it eliminates the ability of the insurance companies to claim different policy reserve amounts for Alberta and federal tax purposes. All in all, it seems like business as usual. We tend to see this every year when we review our corporate tax structure.

You know, I do, I guess, differ slightly from the last speaker on one particular issue. I have troubles where the individual would classify the government taxing of a marine pleasure craft as being a tax grab.

Mr. Anderson: You just said it. It was taxing.

Mr. Hehr: Okay, okay. I understand that.

Let's think about this, okay? Through some anachronisms in the insurance code we had forgotten that through the long history of Alberta we probably had marine craft that were canoes and other things like that, what people were using in their day-to-day lives to fish, to get around their neighbourhood, and the like. I guess over the course of time, the definition of marine pleasure craft has probably expanded. I've been out in B.C., and I see some of those nice riverboats there that would be considered luxury items in my view. You see some of those boats when you're here in Alberta. In my view this is not a tax grab. It's merely a situation where you have to recognize what the beast of burden you're taxing is. It's a luxury item that should fall under the Insurance Act, as other luxury items do, and be fairly taxed accordingly to reflect that in the insurance rates. It seems to be fair and reasonable.

Given the fact that policies have to be paid out in some regard, and the government needs to collect their pound of flesh from somewhere, it would seem to me that this looks like a reasonable place. If someone could afford a marine pleasure craft under that definition, we should be able to assess that as what it is and be able to recoup some money in that regard.

I don't have to go into this, but I will. I think in this year's budget with the deficit we'll spend $44 billion. In the main we spend all of our fossil fuel revenue as it comes out of the ground. We only bring in personal and corporate tax revenue of roughly $12 billion. If you're not going to get the money from somewhere, then I guess you have got to cut the services, although I hear a lot of talk from that side. I hear you want also to keep the police college going, I hear you want to build a new hospital facility in Sylvan Lake, and all of these things that do take government revenue. At no time do I hear you want any tinkering with the Alberta tax code. This may be one of those circumstances where you can continue to build your Sylvan Lake hospital with some of the revenues from the marine beautiful boat levy that we're going to now incorporate.

I'm just warning you. There has to be some way to pay for government services because currently the only way we are doing that is by spending every last dime of fossil fuel resources. We structured it that way, okay? Unless we're going to change the structure of it, I have every confidence we're going to continue to do that. Okay? Maybe this is a small victory for future generations, the marine excise luxury tax. Maybe we can now save that small sum of money that we're going to recoup on behalf of the Alberta taxpayers to maybe save something for when, one, the oil and gas is all gone or, two, the world moves on. That would be the one difference I would have.

Nevertheless, other than that, it looks like a decent act that will hopefully simplify things for corporations. It will also allow the government to recognize that some of the services it provides here in this province also benefit their citizens, benefit their business, and the like.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Questions or comments to the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: The Member for Calgary-Buffalo said that this is a step in the right direction, the tax increase. My question to the member is: how about the whole Alberta tax structure? What do you think of that? Should there be any changes there because we are spending all the royalty revenues, all the money coming in? Should we be doing things differently, in your opinion, so we could bring in more revenue because we have revenue problems?

Mr. Hehr: Well, here's what any government should do. You should look at what services you're willing to provide or what you think the electorate should provide and then run a program of taxation that allows for the covering of those services. It seems pretty simple. That's what governments should do. Decide what you believe the level of service should be. Decide what level of taxation you will bring in to get that level of service to go on. Different parties have different views on that level of service, but you have to have the confidence to then back up your position on what level of service you believe that is for public education, public health care, and the like and then tax.

What we have done in this province for far too long is simply said: "We can have the best of both worlds. We can have this high level of service or a level of service and still have this lower level of tax that really sort of is an anomaly here in Alberta. The rest of the jurisdictions don't have it. We'll have this kitty of $11 billion to $12 billion that will just paper over these deficits, these essentially structural deficits that are made up by fossil fuel resources." Okay? Really, I guess the true, honest position would be going to the electorate and saying: "We're going to provide $31 billion in services, and we're going to save the rest of this. Then we're going to take the interest out of the heritage fund." I think that would be a reasonable position. We're going to save this; we're going to spend a little bit of the resource revenue.

Another position would be to be perfectly, I guess, moral to future generations. We'd say that we're going to tax on the first $44 billion. We could probably do that by adopting B.C.'s tax code, which, by the way, would be the second-lowest tax jurisdiction in the country, look people in the eye and say: "What? We're the second-lowest tax jurisdiction of all the provinces. What's so wrong with that?" That could be another position. But I don't find the position right now of any moral substance, the one that we continue to do right now.

I'd say the government should either lead and go to the polls – whack the provincial budget by $6 billion, $8 billion, and go to the polls on that. Increase your tax revenue by $6 billion, $8 billion, and go to the polls on that. At least you might have something for when the oil and gas runs out. But right now this, in my view, is extremely unfair to what we should be doing for the long run in this province. Then again, Mr. Speaker, in the long run we're all dead, and there's the old saying: what have future generations done for us? I don't buy into those philosophies, but they are concerns of the government.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

There's still some time left. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the hon. member would comment. A number of times I've heard the member talk about raising taxes. I know he is a big believer in the democratic process, and certainly in my riding, my constituency, the democratic process would dictate that the public is not in support of any new taxes whatsoever. Now, your constituency may be different, but I was wondering if you would comment on that. If the public is not in favour of any new taxes, how can we go down this road of passing bills or passing legislation that would increase taxes?

Mr. Hehr: Well, first off, you're wrong on that account. A public opinion poll during the election said that people were more than willing to pay a higher price, a higher taxation. One was in the Calgary Herald, and I will come back with that poll. Okay? Maybe it's different than people from Rimbey; nevertheless, that was a poll I read in the Calgary Herald.

The second thing. You know, governments lead. Oftentimes there are situations where your electorate at the time may not always agree.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just came in here, and I was trying to organize my notes just a little bit. I take it that I'm the last speaker on this one. Is that correct? Yeah. All right.

Well, it's a pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 9, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, which has been characterized as a bill which is primarily geared towards housekeeping in order, in many respects, to bring our law around corporate taxation in line with that which is in place federally. I believe that there are certain elements of it that are probably going to be helpful and amount to reasonable initiatives. One of those seems to be the notion of amending the policy reserves for Alberta versus Canada in the insurance industry in order to ensure that there aren't different policy reserves between the two that can be claimed by the insurance company.

One, it appears as though we're giving the insurance companies four years to pay back the excess amount that they received due to claiming the higher reserve, and I would certainly be interested in knowing what amount of money this may amount to and what the considerations were from the government in determining that four-year period. I'd also be interested in hearing from the government what their view is of the net tax outcome collectively as a result of the changes that are being made through this bill, and that doesn't just simply relate to the changes in the amount, the policy reserve that can be claimed, but also changes to the other elements that are outlined in the bill.

We have some concerns in the way the bill proposes to define recreational craft insurance and how it plans to treat it. On one hand, it makes perfect sense for recreational marine craft to be treated the same as other recreational vehicles. So that is completely appropriate, and I think it's a good thing. The concern that we have, which is really at this point just a question because I honestly don't know the answer to it, is how this change will impact aboriginal and Métis communities, particularly those that run small guiding companies, whether or not their insurance costs are going to go up as a result of this. That is a question that I'm hoping at some point will be addressed.

As the previous speaker from Calgary-Buffalo outlined, though, the real sort of interesting issue around this bill is the fact that we're tweaking little exemptions and loopholes here with our corporate tax calculations, but what we're not doing, of course, is looking at the overall issue of our provincial corporate tax rate. In the last election campaign the NDP proposed to raise corporate tax rates by 2 per cent while reducing taxes for small business by one-third to help them grow. We were, ironically, the only party of any of the political parties in the election to propose a tax reduction. That was a tax reduction for small business. [interjection] The Member for Calgary-Buffalo was saying something to me, but I didn't quite catch it. I'm sure it was very amusing and wise both at the same time, though.

Nonetheless, at the same time we certainly did suggest that we needed to increase the corporate tax rate in Alberta by 2 per cent, and that would have generated roughly another $800 million annually. I think that there is good reason for this. You know, the government often likes to talk about, "Well, if we have low tax rates, of course, everyone is going to invest here," but the fact of the matter is that we have room to play around with our tax rates while maintaining a competitive advantage.

Of course, there are other reasons why corporations invest here, not the least of which has to do with the location of our resources. As much as this government likes to pretend that they are brilliant financial managers with a savant-like corporate skill that allows them to negotiate in superhuman ways, that personally and individually each member of the government is directly responsible for every business success that occurs in Alberta, the fact of the matter is that we have resources in this province, and business is here because we have resources.

While I will give some credit to the early versions of the multigenerational government that we have sitting over there for their foresight in terms of beginning the work with respect to our oil and gas industry, I would suggest that at this point there's not a lot brilliant management going on. Anybody could sell something for nothing and have people show up at their store. If you make it free, everyone's going to come. We're on the verge of doing that in this province. While I guess having everyone come through your doors is really exciting, and you can have a great big grand opening every week, and it really sounds like there's lots going on, if what you're doing by giving away everything virtually for free is selling the next generation's future, then one really has to think about whether it's valuable.

When it comes to issues around corporate taxes, there is no need for us to continuously drop the corporate tax rate for individuals like, for instance, someone who featured prominently in our conversations earlier today, the Katz Group. Really, when someone is making billions and billions and billions of dollars, do we really have to reduce the corporate tax rate yet again?

Meanwhile, study after study shows that working Albertans, average middle-income families, have less and less expendable cash. Generally speaking, their quality of life is deteriorating. Overall the income of most Alberta families and their disposable income relative to the top echelons of this province and the country and the world – the gap is growing and growing and growing. So people are working harder and harder and harder for longer and longer hours. In two-parent families both parents are forced to work in order to meet basic costs, which previously could be met on a single income. When that happens, that impacts our communities. It impacts the strength of our communities. It impacts the quality of our community life. It impacts our quality of life.

So one wonders why it is that we continuously cut corporate tax and ask Albertans to work harder and harder and longer and longer, and at the same time we hold steady the cost for most of the public services for which those corporate taxes used to pay. The former Member for Edmonton-Riverview did a very compelling analysis of the trend with respect to corporate tax contribution to our provincial coffers as compared to the amount of expenditure by the government in a number of key areas. What he found was that over the space of about 15 to 20 years corporations had their contribution to the pot, as it were, reduced by almost one-half. Meanwhile, the per capita and inflation-adjusted investment that this government makes on antipoverty and child protection and family enhancement for those families that are at risk has also dropped by about one-half. So we've given lots of money to the big corporations, and we've pulled it back from those in our society who are most vulnerable.

Meanwhile, education has managed to stay almost steady. Not quite. It's actually gone down a little bit over time. Health care, as a percentage of our GDP, has remained roughly the same. Overall our social expenditures in this province have gone down on a per capita, adjusted-for-inflation rate over the course of the last 10 or 15 or 20 years while at the same time, coincidentally, our quality of life is suffering, while our infrastructure debt is growing, while our roads are falling apart, and while our kindergarten kids receive the least amount of hours of education in the country. While these kinds of things are happening, oh, we're so proud; our corporations pay the least amount of tax.

At a certain point you have to wonder, Mr. Speaker, what kind of choices are being made, whose side the government is on, and what their ultimate objectives in outcomes are when Alberta has the lowest transition rate from high school to university, when our kindergarten kids are pretty much the only ones remaining in the country who don't have full-day kindergarten, when we don't have prekindergarten, when our class sizes are growing notwithstanding the government's own studies that suggest that they should not, and when our special-needs kids are not receiving anywhere close to the support that they should. When young families from across the country are coming to Alberta, we are dropping the ball in terms of investing in their future, and we're doing that, in part, in the service of delivering that 10 per cent corporate tax rate here in Alberta, dropping it, dropping it, dropping it every year.

Of course, that's in line with the equally unfortunate and misguided flat tax that this government also insists on maintaining, ensuring that those who make more pay less. Again, that is regressive and antithetical, I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, to commonly understood notions of equality and fairness.

I'd like to comment on the exchange between two of the members recently. It's actually the case that many Albertans are prepared to pay their fair share of taxes. They do generally support the notion of progressive taxation, and in fact a huge number of Albertans, probably 70 per cent, support increasing corporate taxes. They do that if it means that their services will be protected.

Now, because the question was raised about this last election, what's interesting was that our Premier painted herself in what I would suggest was a combination of red and orange and went out to Albertans and promised them that she would preserve, build, and invest in the growth of those very important programs, the programs that focus on children, the programs that focus on family, the programs that focus on health, and the programs that focus on seniors. She did a great job of painting this picture of how she was going to build our community and support our families and that she wasn't going to slash and burn.

So when people say: what did people vote for? Well, what they voted for was the party that, coincidentally, had an extra $430,000 in their bank account to run campaigns that allowed them to make Albertans think that they were electing a government that actually was not what they were electing. They were wanting a government that was progressive. They wanted a government that cared about public service. They wanted a government that was interested in building community. They wanted a government that was looking at progressive and fair taxation. But they voted for the government that, coincidentally, happened to have the most money to spend on advertising, which, of course, goes back to a previous comment we've made that votes should determine elections, not dollars. Unfortunately, in this province our electoral financing is so broken; it is really quite the unfortunate thing. [interjection] I believe the Wildrose did in fact raise more than the Conservatives, but it's very clear that the Conservatives spent more, and at the end of the day that's what voters made their decision on.

The fact of the matter is that I think the jury is really out on what Albertans are looking for. Certainly, I have spoken with people who were somewhat associated with the folks on the other side, and there was a time when they would say to me quite openly: "Yeah, you know, Alberta is changing. They actually are kind of interested in what you guys have to say, so sit back and watch. You're going to see the quickest costume change that you have ever seen, and we're going to run out and give them what it is they think they want, and we're going to pretend we're you." I had conversations like that with folks across the way.

You know, I don't believe that the last election in any way, shape, or form can be interpreted as Albertans voting to keep the Katz Group taxed at 10 per cent. I don't think Albertans voted to have the full-day kindergartens they were promised put off indefinitely because these guys can't find any place to teach those kids because they haven't built a new freaking school in God knows how long. That's not what Albertans voted for. Albertans voted for the kind of progressive change that the Conservatives suggested they would offer.

Unfortunately, what's now happening is that that very thin coat of paint that was thrown on that broken old bus right before the election is starting to chip off, and Albertans are becoming more and more aware that, in fact, what they're getting is the same old same old except that that same old is so nervous of the folks on their far, far, far right that they're actually now starting to move closer to them, so we cannot look forward to seeing a genuine investment in preserving and protecting our environment for the future.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) provides for questions or comments to the hon. member. I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I always enjoy hearing the member speak. My question is: can Alberta have the best of both worlds? By that, I mean we still have probably the lowest taxes in Canada. I suggest that by charging $1 less than B.C., you would be still the lowest tax jurisdiction in Canada. So we'd have the best public service and predictable, sustainable funding as well as savings for the future generations. I have come to the fundamental belief that in 50, 60 years the world could move on. Do we have some obligation not only to do things a little better today but to save for that time when we don't? Comment on whether remaining with the current tax structure allows us to do that, all these promises.

Ms. Notley: Well, thank you to the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. You know, there are no simple solutions, but what I will say is that we can't continue on the road that the government has laid out for us. We need to take those resources that we have right now, and the exploitation that is going on right now of our natural resources needs to be converted into a benefit for Albertans. In doing that, we need to overhaul our royalty system, as the previous Premier ever so slightly tried to do before he was shouted out of the room by the oil and gas industry, so that Albertans as the owners of the resource are treating themselves as though they are the owners of the resource, and we are getting a fair share of that.

Now, having said that, that is not a solution to our ongoing operational requirements because what we need to do, when we get a fair share for Albertans from our resources, is that we need to invest in the future. We need to save for the future. We need to be looking towards building up the kind of security that will allow us to transition into a new form of economy.

You know, you can go back to 1971 and hear members from the government opposite talk about the need to invest in diversification, yet we really have not succeeded, and the continued sort of turn away, shall we say, of this government from research and from postsecondary institutions and a slew of diversification strategies indicates that. What we need to do is invest in green energy, and we need to save for the future, and we need to use most of those extra resources towards the future.

Having said that, though, as the Member for Calgary-Buffalo rightly points out, we have room to restructure our tax system, maintaining competitiveness with every other jurisdiction in the country. By that, I mean maintaining a premiere tax system, where we continue to be the most competitive simply on the basis of dollars and cents. We can do that while at the same time creating a sustainable revenue flow so that we can invest properly in our valuable public services while at the same time starting to transition that resource revenue into a savings mechanism and an investment for the future.

Mechanism is different ways to save for the future. You can stick it under your mattress, or you can invest it in things that will bring you greater return in the future. Either way, that's the long-term vision that we should be engaging in, and that's the vision that will ensure that our children and our grandchildren and our grandchildren's grandchildren will actually not wake up to find that the cupboard is empty, there's nothing left in the piggy bank, and there's a great big empty hole outside in the backyard where the government, as a result of some cabinet order, built a transmission line and a pipeline and three other ditches without ever asking them. That's not what we want for the future of Alberta. That's not what we want for our kids and their kids.

It is possible to chart a different course, Mr. Speaker. The very simplistic, sort of Republicanesque view that this government has very clearly adopted and embraced with respect to our revenue stream is not the way forward. Pretty much every study shows that the way to build a deficit is to bring in a bunch of Republicans, have them cut taxes and give money away to the corporations, and that's where your deficits grow from. I've said it a lot before the election, and I will say it again. The party with the best record of balanced budgets over the course of the last 30 years in this country is not the Conservative Party, not the Liberal Party, not the Wildrose. [interjections] They don't have government yet. I'm just telling you the facts, folks.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers to speak to the bill?

Section 29(2)(a) is finished, hon. member, if you'd like to speak to the bill. The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: I'm in favour of this bill, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to make that point. I can't remain silent when I hear the common mistakes of the left being perpetrated again and proposed. It's just simply not true that corporations don't pay enough taxes. The truth is that corporations don't pay taxes at all. They build the cost of taxes into their prices, and it's customers like you and me that pay them. To fail to recognize that or at least to not have that on the record in this House would be an injustice to all Albertans, and I won't stand for it.

Suggesting, for example, that royalty rates need to be higher: there's oil everywhere. There are natural resources everywhere. Companies and capital investment demand a return. If that return can't be met in a tax-friendly and royalty-friendly jurisdiction, those businesses move elsewhere. Surely our memories aren't so short that we don't remember 2008 and what happened when unilateral royalty changes were made, and my friends had to move to B.C. or Saskatchewan or other parts of the world to be able to continue to practise their trade and use their equipment. We certainly don't want to see that again.

Leveling the playing field, making the rules fair and equal to all people: fine. But never, never think that corporations don't pay enough taxes. What you're really saying is that customers should be paying more for their products. Would the hon. member like to pay more fees at the bank, for example? We all complain about those. Maybe the bank should pay more. That way, they could charge us more for those fees. I submit this is a reasonable bill and needs to be supported, but we ought not to operate under that misconception.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: I realize that people want to pay less for their Nintendos, their computer games, and all this stuff, but there's also the other equation, that they want their public services. Right now here in Alberta they had taken the facts where they are. We also have spent all the fossil fuel wealth in one generation. I understand. You've got to understand the level of public services they want, and then you have to tax appropriately whether that's corporate, personal, or otherwise; I don't care. So is your solution, then, given the $12 billion we take in in fossil fuel resources and our current tax record, that you can cut $6 billion from the rolls right now at the Alberta government? Where would those public services go? I didn't see it in your election platform. Where are you going to cut in order to get us off spending all this royalty wealth in one generation?

The Deputy Speaker: Just to remind hon. members, the comment should be through the chair.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you for giving me another chance to sound off. Our government doesn't have a revenue problem; it has a spending problem. We need to spend more wisely. I'm not aware of very many things that government does better than the private sector. I think there are opportunities to do some of the things. Where we see waste and we see overspending, where the bottom line prompts people, it gives them an incentive to control costs. I don't see that incentive very often in very many departments. If it were there, then we would be seeing that money spent more wisely.

Mr. Dorward: I appreciate those comments, Mr. Speaker. I have a bit of a crow in me that needs to speak as well relative to the comment that I heard regarding a regressive tax or a progressive tax. Indeed, a regressive tax is one that demands that the less you earn, the higher the tax rate that you pay. In Alberta the thing that turns this completely around is the deductions that we have, the very generous deductions that we have in Alberta, such that what might otherwise be a regressive tax is, indeed, a progressive tax. Somebody who is earning $20,000 in Alberta will pay an Alberta tax of 2 per cent. Somebody who is earning $40,000 will pay an Alberta tax of 6 per cent. Somebody that earns an income of $60,000 will pay 7.3 per cent. As it goes up, the rate approaches 10 per cent. So we are exactly the opposite of a regressive tax because of the heavy deductions that we have in Alberta.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Again, through the chair. Thank you.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't sure if that was a question.

The Deputy Speaker: It's questions or comments, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Okay. Well, then mine will just be a comment, I guess, if we're into that. I was just wondering if the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner would then answer two questions. In fact, is he suggesting that the slowdown in oil and gas in 2008 had absolutely nothing to do with the financial crisis and recession that occurred throughout the world and everything to do with the set of royalty changes which – oh, wait for it – never actually were implemented? I'm wondering if the member can suggest how it is that he assumes one caused it and not the other.

The other question is: I'm wondering about sort of the logical extension of the statement that he made that corporations actually pay no taxes and consumers pay all the taxes that corporations pay. Can I then ask: is it Wildrose policy that we should eliminate all corporate tax?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. [interjections] The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner has the floor.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you very much. I think that the proposed royalty changes of 2008 exacerbated the problem that Alberta oil companies . . . [interjections] Who did you say had the floor, Mr. Speaker?

The Deputy Speaker: Carry on, hon. member.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you. Somebody else apparently wanted to carry on.

They made it worse, and the investment capital fled, investment capital that was intended to come here. Billions of dollars, in fact, according to some brokers that I talked to, did not come here because capital craves certainty. It craves stability. It craves consistent rules, rules that can't be unilaterally changed. Rules that, when changes are necessary, occur as a result of negotiation.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers to Bill 9?

Seeing none, I look for the hon. associate minister to close debate.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much. I guess I really don't have anything to say. I think we'll just call the question.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a second time]

Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012

[Adjourned debate October 24: Mr. Hughes]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Minister of Energy still has 18 minutes left to speak if he so chooses.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I think I made very conclusive comments earlier, so I have nothing further to add at this point.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

At this point I will recognize the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I rise with some satisfaction to speak in favour of Bill 8, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012, a bill which is a direct response to a key recommendation of the Critical Transmission Review Committee and ensures that all future transmission line projects require complete review and approval by the Alberta Utilities Commission, not the provincial cabinet.

When I look through Bill 8, the four simple clauses that repeal section 41.1 of this legislation, I am just struck by how easy it was to fix at least half of the problem with this bill. The reason I'm struck by that is that when I remember the abuse that was hurled at my four MLAs in the Legislature in the spring and earlier when they talked about the problems of this bill – they were ridiculed; they were told they were wrong; they were told they didn't know what they were talking about – it is actually gratifying to see that the government has finally listened. I suppose part of the reason is because we now have 17 members on this side of the Chamber.

I want to pay a special tribute to the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, who earlier today tabled proof of probably one of the most scandalous and embarrassing incidents in this government's history when they hired private investigators to spy on an Alberta landowner group that was opposed to Bill 50 and what it would do to landowner rights. I find it fantastic that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is sitting here in this Chamber and will have lots and lots and lots of opportunity to talk about this bill and what's wrong with it.

Let me go to a couple of issues about why we speak in favour of this bill. The first is the recognition by the government of the importance of an independent needs assessment conducted by the Alberta Utilities Commission as opposed to approved through cabinet. Why is an independent needs assessment important? Well, it's quite simple. It's so that the companies who are proposing transmission needs or the Electric System Operator proposing transmission lines can have their data challenged by consumer groups, both industry as well as residential, challenged by landowners so that we actually don't see mistakes made, so that when government makes a decision to approve a transmission line for construction, we can be certain that it is actually needed. That's the reason we have a two-step process for approving transmission lines: one step to approve need, the second step to approve the routing of it.

We're delighted that the government now understands that on a go-forward it makes no sense for members of cabinet, who have no experience in assessing transmission needs, who are not electrical engineers themselves – it made no sense whatsoever for them to take it upon themselves to believe that they could make these decisions in the absence of that independent review.

Why we look at this as only half a solution is because it only looks at approving transmission projects on a go-forward. We believe that what we need to make sure of is that we don't end up making the mistake of building the six lines that cabinet did ascertain were critical infrastructure when we don't actually really need them. We will be proposing amendments to repeal the schedule so that we can go back and have independent needs assessments for those six projects as well because if it doesn't make sense on a go-forward for cabinet to be approving these projects, it didn't make sense when they did it in the first place.

Let me talk about the three mistakes the government made when they first brought through this legislation. The first mistake they made was that they did not realize that in making a decision like this, the paradigm had changed for how we determine our transmission needs. Back in the early 2000s there was a big debate over what our base fuel should be not only Alberta but in North America. The big debate was over these great, vast supplies of coal that we would be able to use to produce cheap electricity versus relatively costly natural gas. You may recall that back in 2006 the price of natural gas spiked up to $16 per mcf. When you were looking at that world, having a discussion about what kind of transmission system you're going to need looked very different than the kind of transmission we need today. I'll talk about that more in a minute.

The second thing – and this has been revealed in the WikiLeaks cables that were leaked a number of months ago when a former Energy minister went down to Washington and was talking about how Fort McMurray was going to have oodles and oodles and oodles of electricity, cheap electricity that they didn't know what to do with, that we would need to export somewhere, and the United States would be the obvious market to export all of that electricity. Once again, the world has changed for what the expectations are of those companies up in Fort McMurray.

Why did they change? A couple of reasons. Well, natural gas became a game changer. An Alberta-based company, Packers Plus, developed the technology for horizontal multistage fracking, unlocking shale gas resources all throughout western Canada and the United States. As a result, we now see the consequence today. We have natural gas prices that range anywhere from 2 and a half dollars to 3 and a half dollars. It looks like we're going to have a 120-year supply of natural gas.

It's in this context that we now have to reassess our transmission needs because in the past when we were looking at coal, building coal plants hundreds of kilometres away from end consumers and then expensive transmission lines to transport that electricity hundred of kilometres may have made sense. In a new world, where natural gas becomes the base fuel, it is possible to build smaller units closer to end consumers so that you don't need to build all of those transmission lines. That is the analysis the Alberta Electric System Operator needs to do. That is the analysis that the government has failed to perform, and that is why we're still stuck on looking at six projects that we don't actually need.

The second major game changer has been in the area of micro-generation, albeit that this is on the cusp of being transformative technology. In my own constituency of Highwood we have a renowned microgeneration project in Drake Landing. It's won an international award as well as an Emerald award as well as several other awards, including one from the Federation of Canadian Municipalities, because they have 52 units where the solar heat is taken into the ground, stored in a liquid, and then in the winter it's used to heat the homes. These are the kinds of really exciting microgeneration technologies that we can use. That's for heat. There are additional ones that we have heard about being used for solar film on windows to be able to generate electricity. We know, as well, that there are forestry projects. I've travelled the province. There are all kinds of microgeneration forestry projects using biomass.

In addition to that, more and more people are looking to natural gas generators for their own home electricity generation needs and looking at ways to be able to get off the grid or even generate enough electricity to sell back to the grid. This may be in its infancy, but once again it is new technology that is transformative, that reduces our need and reliance on large generating units built far away from load and large, expensive transmission projects that we likely don't need.

The second mistake that the government made, again back in the early 2000s, was putting 100 per cent of the cost of new transmission onto customers, actually in direct contravention of the advice that they were given by the regulator. The regulator suggested that for big transmission projects the cost of building them be split 50-50 between residential consumers/industrial consumers and the generators who were producing them. By making that decision of a 100 per cent cost borne by the ratepayer, they basically opened up the floodgates of demand to build a bunch of unnecessary transmission that we now see that we don't need.

The third mistake was agreeing to this notion of zero congestion. When you agree to a notion of zero congestion on our transmission infrastructure, you end up in a situation where you are necessarily going to overbuild. A couple of the statistics that I've heard the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre use – I'll repeat them here, and I'm sure he's going to repeat them again later – are that we have a transmission infrastructure right now that's worth $2.2 billion. The proposal from the Electric System Operator for the entire new transmission plan initially came in at around $13 billion. Recent cost projections – because there've been cost escalations – suggest that if this entire system is built, it would be around $16 billion. I'm sure the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre will have updated figures on that. Even if it is $16 billion, what the government is proposing with this plan is that we would see an eightfold increase in our transmission capacity.

I'm not sure what they're expecting to happen in this province over the next 20 or 30 or 40 years, but I don't think anybody, not even industry, is expecting an eightfold increase in our need for generation and, thus, transmission. If you were to see, for instance, a highway twinned to the same extent that we are overbuilding our transmission system, you would go from two lanes to, eightfold, 16 lanes. That is the kind of zero-congestion policy that this government is proposing, taking a highway and building 16 lanes just so you can ensure that at no point would there be any congestion. That doesn't make sense in an environment where you're talking about roads; it doesn't make sense when we're talking about an environment where we're building transmission lines.

Let me talk about the six projects that were approved in this schedule and their need to be repealed. First of all, there were two transmission line projects going up to Fort McMurray. As I've already alluded to, Fort McMurray companies have now changed their business model. They are not talking about exporting all of that electricity. They're talking about using it themselves. In any case, even if you were going to build those transmission lines, the place where they're identified to be built is now the wrong place relative to some of the future proposals that are on the table. I'm sure the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre will also elaborate on that.

The third item was a substation that is supposed to be built somewhere southeast of Calgary. We don't know where. We don't know what type of project it's going to be or who's going to build it, yet the government has identified it as being critical. It seems a little strange to us that a project identified as critical is one where no one knows what it is or where it's going to be built.

The fourth one is a DC line, the western Alberta transmission line – it's been called WATL – on the west side of the province, that is going to be built by a company called AltaLink. The problem with this line is twofold. Number one, our entire system is built on an AC system, so the question of why we would be looking at DC, especially for such a short distance as is being proposed by this particular line, simply doesn't make sense. If you're going to use DC, you're going to use it to transport electricity much longer distances. As I understand it, distances of over 600 kilometres are needed to make DC make sense, especially when you're switching back and forth between DC and AC. You're looking at having incredibly expensive costs for the substations that are able to do that.

The reason this is important is because of the heartland line, which is the fifth project. The only reason for the heartland line is to connect the western line, which we don't need, with the eastern line, which we may need. So heartland is one more as well which I would think, if we were to go back and do an honest assessment of our true transmission needs in the province, would be one that would benefit from a full needs assessment.

The last one, the DC line on the east side of the province. There is an argument to be made – and I can put this forward now – that having a DC line on the east side of the province makes some sense, especially if you're looking to the future and potentially developing hydroelectricity up in the Slave River area, which would bring on many thousands of megawatts of additional electrical power coming down through Fort McMurray, ultimately going down to the southern part of the province. It would satisfy a number of different potential objectives of the government to do this: switching to a cleaner type of power, having the distance that makes sense for DC. But this isn't for me to decide. I'm not an electrical engineer. This is a decision for the Alberta Utilities Commission.

The government erred in making this decision prematurely because, once again, if you look at the way the lines are currently proposed to be built, it doesn't make sense. If you want to do a proposal that would be able to capture all of the electricity coming from Slave River, you would build the system in an entirely different way, which is once again why we have to wipe slate clean, go back to the drawing board, and do a reasonable needs assessment.

Now, let's remember when all of this scandal started. The scandal started when the Electric System Operator acknowledged that we needed to have a new 500-kV line on the east side of the province to be able to shore up the system. If that was the direction that the government had gone, with a simple AC system, a simple AC line, I don't think any of us would be in the position where we are today. This, I think, is where the politics entered into the equation. Once again, I'm pretty sure the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre will be able to talk much, much more about this.

The point is: what we have heard from the government almost from the moment they began to try to sell this project to the public was needless fearmongering. We even have the old articles from 2006 threatening that the lights were going to go out in Calgary by 2009 if these transmission lines didn't get built. Well, I was just in Calgary a couple of days ago. I'm pleased to report that the lights are still on in Calgary even though these transmission lines have not been built. It was ridiculous fearmongering, and I'm glad that we've had enough time and distance to see it for exactly what it was.

The danger that we have now if we do not go back and address these six projects that never should have been approved by cabinet in the first place, that need to have an independent needs assessment is the outrageous cost that this is going to impose on our industry. Using the conservative estimate of $16 billion, this has the potential of seeing the transmission portion of everybody's electricity bill go up eightfold, which would mean we'd be looking at a doubling of our electricity bills. Now, I know that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has numbers that suggest it's going to be much higher than that. Perhaps we might even see a threefold increase in our electricity bills.

Let's talk about what that means for businesses, businesses that are electricity intensive, and I've talked to many of them. If you have businesses who see a doubling or a tripling of their electricity bill, this could be the difference between them staying in business or going out of business. It could be the difference between them deciding to stay in this province or deciding to move to neighbouring British Columbia or Saskatchewan or going south of the border to the U.S. Or it could be the difference between them deciding to stay on the grid and pay their share of the transmission cost or go off the grid. If they go off the grid, those costs have to be spread around somewhere, and where they get spread around is to those of us who can't go off the grid.

So then you may end up seeing a greater impact on residential consumers. For our senior citizens, for whom electricity bills represent a significant share of their fixed income and for whom it's a real hardship during winter to pay the higher cost of electricity and gas, as a matter of fact, as well, you'll end up seeing those costs go up. And there's nothing that can be done about it after these projects have already been built.

We're trying to be the canary in the coal shaft here. We're trying to say, "Don't make this mistake," because we know that if you make this mistake today, we're going to be paying for it five or 10 or 15 years from now. The people who are going to be paying the most and be hit the hardest are the small business owners and senior citizens and low-income folks who are not able to get off the grid.

I'll say a word about our landowners as well – of course, that's once again one of the reasons why there are 17 Wildrose MLAs on this side of the Chamber – because they really were the first line of attack against this terrible approach that the government has taken. It's not been just on this bill. Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act, was another bill that they were fighting against, and I would acknowledge that the government basically fixed that one, too. The Alberta Land Stewardship Act, Bill 36, is still a problem, and we will have to address that, hopefully in the course of business in the Chamber. Of course, Bill 24, the carbon capture and storage act, is still a problem as well.

Our landowners came out in droves. The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre conducted probably about a hundred different forums across the province with hundreds of people coming out to hear what he had to say about these four bad bills. This was the reason why rural Alberta got galvanized, why they got behind the Wildrose. They knew that we would be able to press to change this legislation. We at least managed to get the first part of it changed. We're going to press to get the second part of it changed.

In closing, I would just say one thing to the government on what we actually need to be able to move past the controversy around this entire issue. What we need is to be open, and we need to be honest. Part of what I think the government is trying to do is they're trying to have it both ways. They're trying to pretend that they're creating a system for Albertans – for Alberta residential consumers, for Alberta business consumers – that is a closed system. If you were to look at this as a closed system, there is no possible way that we would need to build $16 billion worth of transmission lines to be able to feed just the Alberta market.

If the government was going to be honest and say that the reason why we're doing this prebuild is actually a prebuild for export, which is what the Energy minister went down to Washington back in 2003 to talk about, and if this is a system that is going to be built for export, then let's have that conversation. But I can tell you what our landowners say here and I can tell you what our ratepayers say here: if this system is being built for the benefit of American consumers, then American consumers are the ones who can pay for the transmission lines, not us.

I look forward to having additional debate and discussion on this bill. As I mentioned, I am inclined to vote in favour of it, and I know our members are as well, but we will be seeking a couple of key amendments so that we can have this bill as a full fix rather than just half a fix.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. leader.

Before I recognize additional speakers, I'll just remind you that the next speakers from here on have 15 minutes each to speak, and Standing Order 29(2)(a) will apply.

I also notice that we have in the gallery a group of young people. I don't know if they're guests of anyone, but I would like to welcome them and their chaperones and invite them to enjoy our proceedings. We are having debate on second reading of a bill. Welcome.

With that, I'll note the next three speakers in order. I'll recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, and then the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Five years ago I sat up there at 3 o'clock in the morning when the Alberta Utilities Commission Act – at that time it was Bill 46 – was passed. I made a promise to some of the members at the bottom here that I would be down here one day arguing the same thing, and here I am. If this isn't corrected, I'll be over there arguing. With all the bluster aside, what I want to appeal to are the sensibilities of some of these members here across the floor. This is significant because, as the hon. minister said: a different time, a different need. And that's true.

What we are engaged in doing right now is actually building what's called a 10-year plan. That's what all this is premised on. We are members – you may not know this – of the Western Electricity Coordinating Council. That's a standards body that sets the electrical standards for 22 western states, two or three northern Mexican provinces, Alberta, and B.C. The Western Electricity Coordinating Council sets out the parameters for how planning is conducted, and what they label out there is that nobody has ever built a 10-year plan. There's a reason why no one has ever built a 10-year plan. The system is too dynamic. We've caught ourselves right now in a conundrum with this bill. What I would like to do is tell you exactly how this came out and how this came to be.

Alberta for some reason created a two-tier system. It's ironic because the minister of sustainable resources and environment is bringing a bill forward so that we can streamline regulation, and we have in the electrical industry this split regulation between the need and the location. We are one of the only jurisdictions that actually do that. Industry doesn't like it, and it doesn't work well for the landowners. I can attest to that. So why do we do it, and why wasn't it brought forward in this bill to correct that to be consistent with other bills that are being proposed? It's a valid question.

When we started this process, they held a needs hearing – and I will be tabling that needs identification document – back in 2003. The first line proposed was not brought forward by the AESO. It was brought forward by AltaLink in 2002. You can find it in their 2002 annual report. Mr. Duane Lyons proposed – it's written right out there – to AESO that they wanted to build a 500 kV AC line on the west side of Alberta.

That's when I got involved because what happened was they didn't follow their own protocol. I know landowners got blamed for holding up the process, but the reality is that the very first person who held up that process was the deputy minister of electricity. He held it up for three months. He wanted to testify, and that created a problem unto itself. You had the deputy minister of electricity testifying at a process where the board actually reported to the Minister of Energy for a transmission line. It was unconventional, to say the least, yet he did it.

Then he wrote a letter two years later saying how he was in favour of the line. I have a copy of that letter. The problem is that creates this conflict of interest. How does a board make a decision when somebody who has authority over them is actually testifying for a project? That's really an issue that started this whole process going south.

What happened is that the board held a hearing – and you should check the transcripts because it was quite odd – and the board chairman asked all the people at the hearing, "Should the board follow the regulations?" because the regulations were new at the time. Every lawyer, every one of them on both sides of the argument, stood up and said: "Yes. You have to follow the regulations. The law is the law is the law." It's quite interesting. When the board chairman wrote the decision, he said that some people said we shouldn't go by the regulations, so he decided not to go by the regulations. Again, a very odd interpretation.

We appealed that decision as landowners. We appealed it based on the fact that they left us out of it. And the court agreed with us, that the AESO and the board knew roughly where that line was going to come, mainly because they drew right on a map inside the needs identification document. What happened there is quite simple. The court agreed with us. The court said: they knew where the line was going, and they had an obligation to tell you landowners that you had a right to be there.

What happened from that point was that it just got worse. It didn't get better. We could've just gone back and redone the process, heard the evidence, and made a decision, but we didn't do that. I don't know why we didn't do that. What happened is that they decided to hold a review and variance hearing for landowners only. What they said to us as landowners was: you can review the decision, but you're not allowed to review anything that was made with regard to the decision. Now, think about that. It was a review where we weren't allowed to review anything. That's where the trouble really started with the landowners.

They changed the rules in the process when we went to this process. First they said we were no longer allowed to make motions. It was at that hearing that the board counsel actually went outside of the board's jurisdiction to ask somebody outside of the jurisdiction of the board how they could deny us a motion. We made a motion to compel Alberta Environment to come to the hearing. The e-mail states – I tabled it today. You can read it. There's a copy of that e-mail. Is there any way we can get around it is what he wrote. We're dealing with the one line at this time.

Now, what was missing in all of this was that the government was saying, cabinet was saying, and other industry members – when I say that, I'm talking about AltaLink and AESO – that the lights were going to go out in Calgary. One problem with the wiring schematics with that is that nothing connected to Calgary. It didn't provide any electricity to Calgary. So we're seeing all this misinformation.

So there was a kerfuffle, if you want to call it. A 70-year-old lady, suffering from cancer, on her way to cancer treatment stops off at the hearing. She has two hip replacements. She takes a swing at a 30-year-old lawyer. Next thing you know, we have private investigators. They labelled us as terrorists at one time. It all went downhill. That was the tabling of the spying documents today. It just started getting crazier and crazier. It was as if nobody could grab hold of the process and say: "Stop for a minute. Let's take a look at this. Let's do this right."

Then, lo and behold, instead of going back and doing it right, they passed the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, which was Bill 50. They legislated not the one line. They legislated two HVDC lines, two high-voltage 500 kV AC lines going to Fort McMurray, the heartland line, and a substation that nobody knows what it's going to be used for. I'm sure somebody does. I've never seen a $300 million project authorized without any idea of what's going to connect into it, what's going to connect out of it. It's absolutely staggering. That was what was legislated.

When I looked at what they legislated, it was shocking in the sense of the amount of money. Now, all the money that you hear of in the news from the reporters and any other documents doesn't mean a whole lot. You have to go right to the AESO documentation. They say that it's an estimated $16.6 billion, but here's what's problematic about that. The first two projects that are ongoing right now have more than doubled in cost. As a matter of fact, all of AESO's projects more than double in cost. That you should take caution with.

How does this happen consistently? When you talk to the transmission line companies, whether it's ATCO or AltaLink, what they will tell you is that they don't care what AESO says for an estimate. When they get that hand-off of the job, they work up their own numbers – they really don't care what AESO estimates – and their estimates are always significantly higher. So we're looking at a $16.6 billion proposal that is on its way to doubling.

What's not happening here, and it should happen, is – who has the most at stake? It is the industrial power consumers. It is our major industries that consume electricity. In our committee tonight I think that the person testifying for hydro said something to the effect that 60 per cent of the electricity is consumed by industry. That actually is a lowball number. It's more like 80 per cent, and they pay about 80 per cent of the bill. That's commercial plus industrial. That's significant. They are the consumers.

What they're telling us, what they've already told the PC caucus – they sent a letter to everybody in the PC caucus in the last government – is that this is going to make Alberta uncompetitive. They said that this is going to cause some industries to relocate, and they said that we are going to lose jobs. Nobody is listening to them. The industries that were in favour of the legislated lines – AltaLink, ATCO, TransCanada – are all going to benefit financially, yet they came out publicly and said that cabinet should not be making these decisions because it's wrong. Even though they were going to benefit financially, they saw the pitfalls with this happening.

I know there are some medical doctors across the aisle here. We would never want government to actually legislate the treatment for any type of disease or diagnosis. We'd want the doctors to make the diagnosis and evaluate what is the proper treatment. The same is true in electricity. We want the experts to make the diagnosis – what is the need? – and then make the determination of what the treatment will be; in other words, how to fulfill the need.

So here's one of our major problems. We have a bad policy. We have a couple of bad policies. The first bad policy is zero congestion. We've got this idea that we can build a congestion-free grid, and that's an impossibility. We can't do it. You can't build a congestion-free grid. You can try, but you'll never achieve it. It's a money pit. You're just going to keep throwing money at it. You'll never get there. That's a bad policy. It led to bad legislation.

In order to make this work, what we did is change the Electric Utilities Act, section 34(1). That's the needs. That says that AESO has to bring proof that the line is needed. It used to say that they had to bring proof that the line was needed when it was required, and that was the test. That was the legal test of the law: when it was required. That law was watered down, and they added three little words to it that said "or may be required." So we lost the teeth in that one section of the law.

The second piece of legislation that the government did away with was section 14(3) of the Hydro and Electric Energy Act. Section 14(3) of the Hydro and Electric Energy Act took that to the second stage. What it said was that the public is paying for this, so if the public is paying for it, it had to be value for the public today and value for the public in the future. This, I tell you, was a good section of law because what it gave us was balance. You couldn't underspend, but you couldn't overspend. You had to look at the project that was being proposed. You wanted to see value going out in the future, but it couldn't be so large that there was no value today. That's how the board decided whether or not to go forward with a transmission line. What we ended up doing is just repealing that retroactively all the way back to June 1, 2003, and we did that to get around what's happening now.

What we have now is that everything has changed. Since these lines were first legislated, things have changed significantly. The oil sands working group has now come out and said: we no longer want to export electricity. I won't even get into that argument with you. The whole idea of these lines in the first place was about export, but the reality is that they no longer want to export electricity. So why are we building these?

I know I was mocked the other day on my recommendation that we use HVDC. I think we should use any and every technology that is available and use it most efficiently. I am in favour of HVDC where it is available to use efficiently. I think the Premier should have a plane to do the business of the province. I just don't think she should have a 747 like Obama. She doesn't need it. HVDC has its uses, and what we have decided to do is misuse it.

I want to give you an example.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments to the hon. member. The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Something tells me he's just getting warmed up. I'd love to hear a little bit more, hon. member, if you would tell us a little more.

Mr. Anglin: To continue on the misuse of HVDC, the whole idea of using HVDC, according to the current use that this government is applying, is to minimize the environmental impact. That's somewhat valid in some sense. HVDC technology uses a smaller amount of right-of-way than AC technology. One problem: HVDC technology costs a billion dollars more the way we're using it. So we're proposing a billion dollars more for the western line and a billion dollars more for the eastern line.

I just worked up the numbers, and they're quite staggering. If you look at the right-of-way required for an HVDC line, it's roughly 4,920 hectares. This is right from AESO's documents. An HVAC line is 6,340 hectares. If you do the math, that comes out to roughly $300,000 per acre savings on what we're spending that billion dollars for, or $46 million a quarter section. Now, think about that. That's a staggering amount of money, dealing with the $1 billion, and we're going to do it in two places in the province.

What do we get for it? Are we moving any more electricity? No. Are we gaining anything as far as our flexibility? No. Generation is not a function of transmission. As a matter of fact, it's quite complicated, but it can be just the opposite. You place more generation; you need less transmission. We're not looking at it that way. We're building massive transmission lines to a coal centre location, and we are expecting to retire those coal plants.

Ironically, Mr. Speaker, the HVDC line for a couple of billion dollars over in the west corridor cannot work alone. We're going to spend roughly $2 billion to $3 billion to build a line that we cannot utilize. You'll find that on page 17 of that 10-year plan that we are working on. It states that the first line alone cannot be fully utilized without the second line being in service because it's too large a contingency. We're actually going to build a line that, if we try to energize it to any useful level, threatens to shut off the lights in the province. It is that poorly engineered. That is staggering. We're doubling down to balance the system. We're overbuilding.

Now, you across the room can sigh at me, but you can't out-debate me on this one. The fact of the matter is that electricity has to be balanced. It has to be balanced. If you strengthen one leg far too much, then in the other section of your grid you create that imbalance, and you create contingencies. And that's what they did. If you take a look at the map, they overbuilt in one area so large, and they left the other area still weak. That's what causes problems. We are doubling down on what we're proposing to spend, and it's all unnecessary.

What we should be doing, Mr. Speaker, is looking at what's happening right now. The oil sands no longer wants to export. We are looking at potential hydro development. We are looking at a pipeline coming down from Fort McMurray to Redwater. That should be the corridor. Even industry agrees. The problem is that the lines are legislated on the other side of the province. We're spending money to build lines now where they don't belong, and we're not putting them where they do belong. Guess what? If we did come down from the north like that, then we should use HVDC technology going all the way up north. That's the correct place to utilize that.

We need to take a look at, again, the economics. What we have to do – by the way, AESO recommended it in 2011 to this government. AESO said that one of the options – it was alternative number one – was to start all over again with a needs assessment. That was one alternative they brought forward to this government. Now, this government didn't choose that alternative, but they should have because, again, we live in a dynamic world.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, just a reminder that the point of Standing Order 29(2)(a) is to maybe draw out something that wasn't clear in the member's comments, not necessarily to extend the debate for five minutes. I hope you'll work with me.

Mr. McAllister: I will happily rephrase next time, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't know if I can beat that or not. Probably not.

It is my pleasure to rise here tonight to discuss Bill 8, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act. The overall purpose of the bill, to remove cabinet's power to deem transmission projects as critical transmission infrastructure and circumvent the formal process that includes a public needs assessment, is something that has been advocated for a long time by landowners, community activists, and the Wildrose alike. This is an issue that I heard a lot about prior to being elected to this Assembly.

After the PC government passed Bill 50 and approved the building of new transmission lines through my constituency, the people were furious, not just upset. They were furious. They felt betrayed by a bill that seemed to support large corporate donors and friends of the PC Party and not them. Mr. Speaker, my constituents are all aware that the reliable generation and transmission of electricity across our province is obviously critical to our future growth and prosperity. However, the powers within Bill 50 were still unnecessary. Supporting growth does not require trampling on the property rights of landowners, dogging taxpayers on their electricity bills, and building unnecessary, ugly, tower-sized transmission lines across Alberta's pristine landscape when there are much better and less intrusive alternatives.

Let us remember what Bill 50 did in 2009. The contentious piece of legislation authorized the construction of roughly $16 billion of new transmission line projects across our province. It deemed these projects critical transmission infrastructure, thereby removing the need for an open, objective, and transparent needs assessment hearing before the Alberta Utilities Commission.

Why is that process so important? Simply put, in almost every democratic industrialized nation where ratepayers are required to pay directly for transmission on their electricity bills, there is before all other things the requirement of an objective, arm's-length needs assessment review – let me restate that: an objective, arm's-length needs assessment review – to conclude if the new transmission is even needed. If that project is needed, there is a process to also discover how much is necessary. This was the case in Alberta until the passage of Bill 50. Following Bill 50, the entire process could be circumvented following a decision made by the Premier and his or her cabinet. I spoke to Albertans who had land in their family's name for nearly a century that were forced to accept these big, ugly transmission lines cutting across their property because the PC cabinet declared them to be critical transmission infrastructure.

The entire process affected people throughout the province. Bill 50 has been a travesty for landowners, for ratepayers, seniors, and democracy in Alberta. That being said, Mr. Speaker, I'm happy with much of what is being proposed here in Bill 8. It is just too bad that it has taken $16 billion in projects, an uprising from landowners across the province, and the PC caucus losing the majority of their rural southern seats for them to hear a message which should have been so clear.

Still, this bill does not do nearly enough to rescind the damage caused by Bill 50. First and foremost, the act does not go far enough as it does not require an independent review of the current critical transmission infrastructure projects by the AESO or the Alberta Utilities Commission. Unless the government reviews these projects, it seems clear that they used Bill 50 for everything they wanted and are now making a token gesture to landowners after the damage is done. Their inability to see that these current projects require a thorough review means that the government still sees no problem with what happened in Bill 50.

With that in mind, it would not be a surprise to see similar legislation in the future. This is a classic case of only admitting fault once the damage is done. Bill 8 is too little, it's too late, and only happened once $16 billion in projects had been approved. Bringing in such a measure is a failure to demonstrate leadership and means that this government still does not respect the rights of landowners or their property.

We can still work together to make this better legislation. My colleagues in the Wildrose Official Opposition will be bringing forward amendments to this act, and I would encourage all members of this House to consider these sincerely. Mr. Speaker, I would like to add that the Wildrose Official Opposition will continue to fight for landowners across this province. Over the next four years property rights will be an issue that the government, try as they might, will not be able to ignore. We will continue to advocate for the repealing of bills 19, 24, 36, and 50. These bills are symbolic of the government's disrespect for property rights, and the Wildrose will not stop fighting for these rights until they're all repealed.

We will also fight to ensure that no private property shall be taken for public use without full, fair, and timely compensation. We will also work to enshrine property rights in the current Alberta Bill of Rights. Finally, we will also continue to try and start a national initiative to include property rights in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We are aware that these things cannot be accomplished quickly or easily, but in this caucus we all respect the idea that property rights are something worth fighting for, and it is something we will continue to do for the next four years in this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

In the spirit of my most recent reminder, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 8 today in second reading. It's interesting in comparison to the previous bill, that we were just discussing, in that we had some rather entertaining debate and disagreement between the NDP caucus and the Wildrose caucus, but in this particular issue I think that we are actually very much in agreement both in terms of the value of this bill, which is partial, and how it could be changed and improved – I think we agree on that – and also in terms of the history around Bill 50, which this Bill 8 now attempts to undo and correct. It's interesting. We may not agree with them that corporate taxes should be dropped or eliminated, but we do agree with them that Bill 50 should be repealed, and I think we can agree in many respects on the reasons for that as well.

When Bill 50 was first introduced, in fact, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood rose almost immediately to question the government on this decision and on the apparent decision of the government to simply crystallize in legislation what is, in fact, the result of now 41 years of the same government. Really, at its heart what the original legislation represented was an exceptionally high-handed, unilateral, arrogant decision on the part of the government to sweep away their obligations to follow not only the law but also to consult regularly and transparently with the citizens of the province on major, major infrastructure decisions as well as the placement of same.

That's the kind of thing that a government that's 40 years old just kind of does on the fly. Just off the cuff they'll pass a piece of legislation, saying: you know, it's kind of inconvenient to talk to people, so we're just going to give ourselves the ability to have a meeting behind the cabinet doors and make the decision really quickly. That's what Bill 50 was, so it's very important that that change.

You know, it's interesting when you look at the history around Bill 50. The original proposed costs of what Bill 50 would be sort of slowly increased over time as more and more information came out. Originally the government suggested that it would be about, I think, half of what ultimately people are projecting the cost will be now, then tried to respond to the outcry of Albertans across the province over the summer of 2009. They then came into the House in the fall of 2009 armed with what they thought was a series of amendments that would make Albertans happy.

Of course, as is the case with so many of the initiatives that this government brings in, Mr. Speaker, it was a set of amendments designed to appear to respond to people's concerns, not one that actually responded to people's concerns. They had a whole series of amendments, one of which was in terms of the whole issue around the internal, behind-closed-doors authority of the government to designate a power line as critical infrastructure. They suggested, "Well, you know, we'll let the AUC kind of talk to the public about the placement of this line that we have already decided is critical infrastructure," and they thought that Albertans would be happy with that.

Really, it's a testament to Albertans that I think they saw through it very, very quickly and understood that what it was was a package of amendments geared to distract Albertans and convince them that they'd been heard when, in fact, they hadn't really been. It's a pattern that's been repeated by this government on a number of occasions on a number of different issues.

They brought in their five amendments. No one really bought it. Bill 50 passed notwithstanding tremendous outcry from people throughout the province. Then we got a new Premier. Then they announced that they would do a review of the transmission lines because they understood that people were still pretty angry, and they were looking pretty vulnerable in a lot of rural areas.

They did a review and tried to look, again, like they were listening to Albertans, but once again it wasn't really a public review. Moreover, although that review ultimately recommended the amendment that we're seeing today, it also reinforced the decision that had been made repeatedly by cabinet behind closed doors to designate certain transmission lines as critical infrastructure and to remove it from the rigorous purview and consideration that would otherwise happen if it was subject to the process that was in place before this government decided that it just didn't have enough power after 40 years and that it needed more.

We saw that committee, and that brings us to where we are today. It's interesting, you know, if you go back. I was just taking the opportunity to listen in part to a number of the many good public policy points that were made by previous speakers around the future of our electrical transmission system and some of the strategies that should be considered in an independent and transparent way, where we get the best advice from the best people.

While I was listening to that, I was also sort of reviewing some of the media reports that came out around November 2009, and it really was quite compelling, Mr. Speaker, you know, the range of people that were opposed to this. We had the U of C's School of Public Policy suggesting that the lines that were proposed are economically inefficient and unwarranted and that, in fact, there is a benefit to the regulatory process and that there are serious doubts about the stated reliability and supply adequacy indicating that there's a need for an emergency response, like that being relied upon by the government, to take so much power to themselves and take it away from the citizens of this province, including landowners.

Then we, of course, saw comments from – I'm just looking at some of the other ones here – the Utilities Consumer Advocate, pointing out that "much of the data and logic presented by the AESO is unconvincing and overstates the sense of urgency" and that, effectively, "demand has dropped off considerably since the AESO published its forecasts." It was interesting because subsequently the government suggested: "Well, I guess we'll go back and look at it because things have changed since 2009. You know, the economy has changed from when we first brought this forward in 2009."

Of course, by the time this government rammed this through in November of 2009, the economy had changed, and the drop in demand should have already been clear to members of the government as they were pressing through with this bill over the united opposition of all the opposition parties in this Legislature at that time. It's always great when the government ultimately concludes that it did something wrong and it tries to change things, but of course, as has already been pointed out, it's only really a half measure at this point because they are retaining the decisions that have already been made, and they still refuse to open those decisions up for further review.

It seems to me that it would in fact be possible to do that. At least two of them, anyway, are still awaiting consideration by the AUC and, I think, perhaps even three – I don't have my notes exactly in front of me – and it's certainly possible for this legislation to amend the criteria that would be considered by the AUC in the forthcoming hearings, that are currently very limited in scope with respect to the lines that were designated by cabinet as critical infrastructure. The government could undo the arrogant, behind-closed-doors policy-making decisions that governed and dictated how they conducted themselves six months ago. They could undo that with this bill if they really wanted to and subject a good portion of their remaining decision-making to the very process from which they tried to remove it through Bill 50. I think it's important.

Again, in the last election this issue was an extremely hot topic, and previous speakers have spoken about it. In the last election the Alberta NDP did commit to making the Alberta Utilities Commission independent from industry and to add to the AUC's mandate – here's a neat one – the mandate to protect consumers and to ensure that the system is operating for the public good and to actually write that into the AUC's mandate.

We also proposed a system for beginning to regulate electricity rates so that we could have stable prices that are as low as possible. Then, of course, we proposed reversing the decision made by this government many years ago where consumers pay the full cost of transmission lines. Then, finally, in our election platform we recommended that Bill 50 be repealed.

It's being done prospectively, but it is not being done retroactively. Since a good deal of that which is not covered by this amendment to the act stands to be the primary form of activity in this area for the next decade or more, I think the government needs to go back to the drawing board and find a way to let Albertans in, finally, on the decision-making process and the planning process for our electricity system genuinely as opposed to in the fashion that they've been doing up to now, which is to do it in name only.

As I say, in short, we are pleased that this bill is coming forward. We believe that it needs to go farther. We will either be introducing our own amendments to make it go farther and/or supporting the amendments of other opposition members to make the bill go farther. We think it is the beginning of an end to a long book filled with many chapters that primarily highlight government arrogance and a failure to consult with the majority of the key people who should have been consulted and the most important people who should have been consulted, which are Albertans.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any comments or questions of the member under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to speak on Bill 8, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012. I think the speakers so far have done a good job of going over the history, some of the difficulties that the Albertan people have faced in light of the lack of openness and transparency, and some of the questions that still linger out there as a result of the significant changes to legislation that did not allow for public discussion or allow for independent review of some electricity projects that have a significant impact on Alberta's future. This government appears still willing to roll the dice on whether some of the information they collected in 2001 is still pertinent to this day and age and what is actually happening out there not only in regard to some of the changes on coal-fired legislation but also pricing of natural gas and the like. I'll touch on that later on.

Like it was mentioned, I believe the NDP was against Bill 50, the Wildrose was against Bill 50 when it came in, and in fact the Alberta Liberals were also against Bill 50, not necessarily because of anything special, but we recognized the fact that when we saw government trying to do things behind closed doors, this is not a good thing. Often sunlight is the best disinfectant, and people have a right to know what is going on with their government, what is going on with their power distribution centre, what decisions are being made.

I believe this government really, I hope, has learned a lesson from this, frankly. It was a bad piece of legislation that gave the cabinet the power to designate certain power lines and stations as critical. The meaning of that was that the Alberta Utilities Commission's regular process, which was to determine both whether the lines were needed and whether they were in the right place, was actually valid. It was, obviously, the most controversial bill of the last session, and I think overwhelmingly it's taken a lot of confidence out of what Albertans see from an electricity standpoint.

Even for me as a recovering lawyer, not an expert person when it comes to putting together a transmission grid, I think because of that process I tend to question whether this line is necessary or not. I've read some reports from the Conference Board of Canada that say that this maybe is a good thing. I read other reports that say that it may not be. Really, that's why we have a body like the AUC: to sit down, to hear all the sides, to hear the opinions, and to make a decision with those experts in the room as to whether or not this is going to serve the interests of the Albertan public. Because of this Bill 50 and despite the mea culpa here in front of us, despite the fact that we'll in the future be able to see these decisions on transmission being decided by the AUC, this was not available in the past designation of the critical transmission lines.

Really, we're at a point where the Albertan people still don't know. I still don't know. The case hasn't been made to me. That, to me, is unfortunate for the Legislature, but I think it is more unfortunate to the Albertan people and, in fact, gives me very little confidence that the government has this right. I think they may be gambling on this. They may be basing their decision on past information and the like.

I listened with great interest to the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre when he said that this transmission line was designed at a time when coal was really cheap and natural gas was really expensive. They said, "Oh my goodness; we're going to need a transmission line that actually allows for reasonably cheap power given the fact of this, that, and the other thing to supply power to the Albertan people," which really is a noble cause of any government, to try to ensure reasonable power prices are had.

Nevertheless, these decisions were made early on, and things have changed. You know, natural gas: $2, $3. How long is that going to stay down? I'm not sure. The difficult thing is that we can't predict the future, either the price of coal or the price of natural gas, so I understand there have to be reasonable decisions about what is necessary in a transmission line, okay? Designing a system for one fuel source or another fuel source shouldn't be the goal. It should be designing a system that's able to adapt, that is strong enough to be able to accept all forms of energy whether that be, for at least the short term anyway, 45 years of coal, to be able to adapt more to wind and solar, to be able to adapt power dam electrical generation like we're discussing in our committees: all of these things.

I am not certain that this current infrastructure program as it is designed for these things because of the fact that we didn't get to go through the hearings. I believe that information would have been more clear to me and would allow me to make a more appropriate judgment on the need or the lack of the need for this very expensive and, it appears, growing ever-more-expensive-by-the-day project. I believe it was stated here that originally it was supposed to cost $8 billion. It's now $16 billion. Who knows what it's going to be by the end? That troubles me, that I don't have all that information as a legislator in this building today.

Needless to say, if we go back to some of the decisions that were made along the way, it was unfortunate, the hiring of private investigators to derail the 2007 hearings. Clearly, a lot of the decisions stemmed from that. The government saw that it was going to be a difficult process, you know, and who needs a difficult process? I guess that's what the government is saying. Let's just do this another way. That's a difficult thing in democracy. Democracy isn't supposed to be easy. You're supposed to win the debate. You're supposed to challenge assumptions. You're supposed to let people have their say. That wasn't happening.

Going even further back, it was an unfortunate decision, I believe in 1997, when the rules were changed, saying that the Albertan end-user would pay for these transmission lines, a decision that I feel was wrong then, is wrong now, was a sellout to wealthy business interests in this province to the detriment of the average Joe and Jane Albertan. It may not necessarily lead to the building of the right kind of transmission line that deals with the real economic impact, that deals with the real need, and doesn't just build it for the sake of building it because the powers that be of the day say as such.

Although I'm probably going to vote for this bill, I can say that this entire process has been less than stellar. In fact, it's been downright shoddy. It hasn't left me with the confidence that we've got it right. I think a lot of the suggestions that were brought up here – in fact, even the AESO, I believe it was who mentioned it, said in 2011 that we should go back and redo all of these assessments, see if we got it right. That would be something. Let's look at it with the experts, having an eye to what is, in fact, right, what is needed, what is our current energy mix. What is the fact that we're going to be closing coal plants in 45 years going to do to what we need out of an electricity system? If we don't do that, I feel that we're at least moving ahead without the information necessary to make a reasonable decision, okay?

Nevertheless, those are my comments on this bill. I'll probably add some more later on in the debate. Thank you very much for allowing me the opportunity.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions or comments to the member under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a neophyte politician I am tempted, with the hour and with my backside, to say one word, "ditto," to our Wildrose caucus.

Mr. Speaker, during the debacle of the Brooks meat packing plant and the Lakeside-XL fiasco, I used the comment that there is no door handle on my farm that's not affected by the price of beef. I also would like to say that there's no door handle on my farm or my operation and that of many other agricultural operators that is not affected by the price of electricity.

The price of electricity – and I guess I could leave out the producers that are irrigating or could have irrigated from the Berry Creek reservoir, which has lost all its water; that's not going to be an issue for those producers next summer – for many others who use irrigation water for pumping and for livestock use is very important to them, and it's important to their farm and agricultural operations going forward.

The tenuous promotion and bringing forward of Bill 50 in this province was innocuous, to say the least. It was improper. It was bordering on immoral. But as a result of that, I've gained 16 very good and close personal friends, or I'd like to believe them to be, in our Wildrose caucus.

Bill 8 represents a major backtrack on the needs assessment, Mr. Speaker, but the dirty work has already been done. The four major power lines would appear, to me at least, to go ahead. I believe that we need to make some amendments to Bill 8. With that, I'd like to cease and desist here and potentially recover any questions from the other people here.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Again, Standing Order 29(2)(a) offers the opportunity for comments or questions of the member.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 8, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012, is an amending bill. It amends the Electric Utilities Act but actually reverses the provisions of Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, by removing contentious provisions that allowed the cabinet to designate certain new power lines, transmission lines, as critical infrastructure, bypassing the normal regulatory process of public and technical needs-based hearings. It's a short bill, only three clauses long, and it contains amendments that the government announced it intended to make back in the spring of 2012. This bill will reverse the most contentious provisions of Bill 50, both due to strong public pressure and as a response to the Critical Transmission Review Committee report of February 2012.

The four projects formerly designated as critical, including the heartland transmission line from Edmonton to the site of proposed oil bitumen upgraders to the northeast, transmission lines from Edmonton to Fort McMurray, and, the most controversial, adding lines between Edmonton and Calgary, will go ahead as planned. Only the new projects will be affected by this legislation. We are trying to correct something here, but this bill is not going all the way.

Opposition to Bill 50 was generally centred around landowners who did not want lines on or near their land between Edmonton and Calgary and people in Sherwood Park who opposed the heartland line as it runs in the utility corridor between Edmonton and Sherwood Park, right beside homes and schools. Transmission is paid for 100 per cent by regular Albertans, as electricity consumers, on their power bills. Some estimates have said that many further lines were too expensive; some are to be built as high-voltage direct current, which is more expensive but has less of an impact on landowners, unnecessarily; and some are worried that they would eventually be used to export electricity.

As we heard from the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, the cost, as he was saying, is $16.6 billion, and it may be doubled. You know, we don't know what we're up against here. If that's true, then I think we will all be having – I don't know. Maybe we will go back to kerosene gas lamps or something because we won't be able to afford electricity. I don't know what we will do to heat our homes and to cook. I hope that natural gas is still cheaper by the time we build these lines at a $32 billion cost.

You know, this is unnecessary, and we are worried that these lines would eventually be used to export electricity, meaning that Albertans would pay for the lines on their power bills, and then the private companies would profit by selling electricity to the States.

Finally, there was opposition to the effect that while transmission is private, the province is divided into zones where private companies have regular monopolies such as ATCO and the eastern transmission lines. These companies were not acting in landowners' best interests, and I don't think they were working in Albertans' best interests, Mr. Speaker.

As the need for new transmission lines has been in the works for 13 years, the process got bogged down with a lawsuit brought by landowners in 2006 saying that the regulatory process was unfairly biased against them in favour of the companies building the lines. There was also the spying scandal where the regulator, the EUB at the time, was caught improperly spying on landowners at hearings, et cetera. The regulator was overhauled, and the process was started again.

Finally, the government passed Bill 50 to give cabinet the power to basically give approval for certain lines so that they could be built quickly and without lengthy regulatory reviews holding them up. The bill was passed, you know, with strong opposition from the opposition parties on this side of the House.

As Alberta Liberals we opposed Bill 50 basically because having cabinet decide where and which power lines are built is a bad process. We came up with an electricity policy of our own, one that dealt with actual problems in the system and that could stop Albertans from having the highest electricity prices in the country. Our leader called for Bill 50's repeal when he was elected. The critic from Calgary-Buffalo said that Bill 50 was usurping the voice of the people. We understood that the new transmission was a necessity but knew that Bill 50 was a very bad process for deciding on where and when to build. Good government policy is objective policy, and objective decisions are best made by an independent body like the AUC, both on need and location. We have always followed a good, objective process to make hard decisions.

We are glad that the government is trying to correct its mistake of passing Bill 50 with this bill. I think, you know, we didn't need to go through all that hassle and all the hearings and all that in order to come back to square one again with this bill. I think the government from the beginning should have heard what Albertans wanted. They should have heard the opposition parties on this side of the House. They could have corrected this a long time ago.

Now the government is selling this as an example of them listening to the people and responding to their concerns about Bill 50 as well as responding to the recommendations of the CTCRC's report. You know, we strongly opposed Bill 50 because it made a mockery of the process for determining the need and placement of power lines, and these decisions should have been made objectively and publicly by the AUC and not as a critical decision by cabinet. This bill is partially correcting that problem.

We have opposed the deregulation of electricity as it now stands, and the fiasco over whether or not power lines should be built is another example of this government's utter mismanagement of this process. Albertans deserve better, Mr. Speaker. What will happen when the lights go out? It's because the government keeps changing the rules of the game when it comes to where the power lines will go. Albertans' power bills are already among the highest in the country, and decisions regarding power lines will have a large effect on our power bills.

Furthermore, industrial customers are the biggest power users in Alberta, and whether or not they can get cheap electricity will be a big factor in whether or not they stay in Alberta or expand their operations. So this is going to have a big impact on our economy, Mr. Speaker. It may cost us jobs and businesses. Who knows what the end result will be?

It's good the government is trying to reverse their mistake. What are they trying to correct now? Even larger mistakes in deregulation and giving Albertans a reliable, cost-effective electrical system, Mr. Speaker? I'm a little bit concerned about those four projects which are already designated critical projects. If they go ahead, what will happen with the costs? How will we pay? How much will we pay?

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will think about this bill, whether I'm going to support it. You know, we will see what kind of amendments come in and take it from there.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any comments or questions for the member under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to rise and speak on Bill 8, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012. I speak here today with the help and advice of a local constituent of mine who was one of the many Albertans outraged by what this government tried to force through with Bill 50. His advice has been very important to me, and with his help I am glad to share some of his and my thoughts on Bill 8 with this Assembly.

What Bill 8 does is that it repeals a section of Bill 50 that allowed cabinet to deem any electrical transmission critical transmission infrastructure and to bypass the required needs assessment from the Alberta Utilities Commission. The needs assessment by the regulator, the AUC, ensured that actual technical experts made the decision on whether a project should go ahead based on actual need and not on the whims of a politician sitting around the Premier's cabinet table. Bill 8 is an admission that the government has recognized the fact that just because you are appointed to the Premier's cabinet does not mean that you have the technical expertise to grant approval of a line based on need. This is a major admission and is definitely a step in the right direction.

However, the government has not acknowledged that, in fact, the lines they approved under Bill 50 were a mistake and were approved under a process that they now acknowledge was insufficient. It is completely inconceivable that the Bill 50 lines, approved under a flawed concept, should now be in any way considered proper or prudent. Why would a government stand before this Assembly to repeal legislation they know is flawed but continue to support billions of dollars in transmission lines that were approved through the very same flawed legislation?

None of these lines have been completed. In fact, most have not progressed to actual construction. It is not too late to do the right thing and let the AUC conduct their assessment of those existing lines. The Wildrose Official Opposition calls on this government, if they're serious about what they have done in Bill 8, to put our existing power line projects under the same regulations and scrutiny as future ones should be. There can be no real argument against delaying these lines until a needs assessment can be conducted under the new provisions of Bill 8.

When the government has already admitted Bill 50 was a flawed process, it is absolutely necessary that we follow this corrective procedure on the lines that were wrongly approved under Bill 50. Why not follow the corrected process on these lines before we spend billions of dollars on infrastructure that may not even be needed? Better to err on the side of caution than to burden our citizens for generations with a system that is not necessary. This same system will put onerous costs onto the backs of Albertans.

If this government really believes these lines under Bill 50 are necessary, then allow them to follow the process the government now acknowledges is necessary in Bill 8. It would be a complete tragedy if we infringed on landowners' rights and destroyed Alberta industry and businesses with uncompetitive power rates due to power lines that couldn't pass an act the government now deems necessary.

Mr. Speaker, we would be remiss if we did not take a minute to talk about hard-working families, our most vulnerable, seniors, and how Bill 50 directly affects them. As someone who is passionate about her seniors and someone who is personally responsible for aging parents, I've seen first-hand the difficult choices that are already having to be made. Our seniors, who built this country, often live on fixed incomes, and they are paying for this government's mismanagement of power lines. Seniors across this great province are being forced to decide between what they buy for groceries and paying their power bill.

One only has to use common sense to understand that if seniors are already having difficulty living off of their fixed incomes and accommodating the increased power costs, that if power bills do double, the vulnerable Albertans will be forced to make very difficult decisions that will be detrimental to their quality of life. At what stage does this government realize that we need to respect Albertans and those who built this province and ensure that legislation that is passed in this great House does not detrimentally affect those who have put us here?

Mr. Speaker, I applaud this government for bringing Bill 8 forward to correct their mistakes of the past. I encourage them to halt construction on the Bill 50 lines until a needs assessment can be conducted by the AUC. Let's not continue to go down the wrong road by constructing these lines until we can let the technical experts find out if we actually need them. Let's not let Albertans down any longer. Let's ensure that if these lines cannot pass a needs assessment test by the AUC that Alberta's seniors and families do not have to pay the $16-billion-and-rising price tag for them. It's not too late to do the right thing and repeal Bill 50.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Comments or questions for the member under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise and speak on Bill 8, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012. I'd like to echo some of the concerns of my colleagues and constituents who have been outraged by what the government tried to force through in Bill 50. Bill 8 finally recognizes the error made in section 41 of Bill 50, that allowed the minister and cabinet to upgrade any electrical transmission to critical transmission infrastructure and undermine the required needs assessment from the Alberta Utilities Commission.

Mr. Speaker, this is something that the Wildrose has been advocating for years. This is truly a sign of how instrumental a grassroots movement can be in changing an out-of-touch legislation. Wildrose has been advocating against this piece of legislation since 2009. Well, three years later here we are.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to note that I have had numerous conversations with constituents, family, friends, and Albertans, and the truth is that no one I talked to has ever advocated for a law which circumvents due process and places matters in the hands of the government cabinet. This is why I campaigned and ran for office: to advocate against bills which infringe on people's property and to address issues to deal with the democratic deficit. This is an issue of democratic deficit for the secretive, selective, and discretionary nature of how this government conveniently picks and chooses what they deem critical.

The government already has a body, the Alberta Utilities Commission, which was given the mandate to regulate the utilities sector, natural gas and electricity markets, to protect the social, economic, and environmental interests of Alberta. Given that they have Alberta's needs in mind, they would be more capable to deem what is critical as opposed to cabinet, who can swoop in and cherry-pick any company to get a piece of the $16 billion. This doesn't seem fair. It doesn't seem right. Quite frankly, I'm glad they heard Albertans and have decided to repeal this portion of the bill.

But, Mr. Speaker, it doesn't end there. This amendment has not gone far enough to ensure that the people, in particular landowners, are protected from the government. I have heard some stories of how various government boards have come in and taken away rights of landowners, and I would like to share one of them with you right now to raise a point as to how serious this issue is and how this is still not enough to ensure our landowners' rights are protected.

In the Strathmore-Brooks riding a landowner was approached by a power transmission company who received approval from AUC which was deemed critical by cabinet. Despite a valiant and well-fought effort on the part of my constituent the government was able to force their way onto his land with police assistance and install the power lines, which subsequently has put barriers on his irrigation land and, thus, decreased the value of his property.

Mr. Speaker, the model of peace, order, and good governance seems to be a thing of the past. Now Albertans are left with a government riddled with a culture of entitlement. It's a sad day when the government of Alberta is forcefully removing hard-working Albertans from their own land. Unfortunately, this amendment will not address those who have been negatively impacted by Bill 50.

Mr. Speaker, I'll begin to wrap up by echoing the plea made by the Leader of the Official Opposition and my other colleagues to halt the power lines assigned under Bill 50 and wait for the critical needs assessment to go through. While it is commendable to see a government take steps to correct their wrongdoings, they need to be cognizant and address retroactively any problems this may have caused. If these lines pass standards set by the AUC, I say go, but until that time we need to ensure that we as parliamentarians are basing our decisions on facts and logic.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any comments or questions to the member under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As always, it is a pleasure to rise and stand in this House. Tonight we are debating Bill 8, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012.

Now, the repealing of Bill 50 is a clear victory for all Albertans, not just those of us on this side of the House who have been advocating for it for years. It's good to see that the government has taken another page from the Wildrose green book. No, we're not just simply trying to take credit for it; it's the right thing to do.

This was clearly an abuse of power by the cabinet of the day. Nothing good was going to come from removing the need for an independent assessment, and they should have realized that. This was going to set them on a path for failure, and it really, truly did, and it's culminating here today in the acceptance of that failure. Likewise, nothing good will come from forging ahead with the results of what is now being deemed as an abject failure. Giving cabinet the absolute power to circumvent that formal process is ludicrous.

Those lines were assessed based on a 2003 assessment. Well, let's look at what's changed in our world since 2003. You'll recall the SARS outbreak, perhaps the fact that the Concorde enjoyed its last flight, or, maybe more apt, that Americans still believed that Saddam Hussein was in possession of weapons of mass destruction. Clearly, we've come a little way from there, and I think it's time to accept that within what we've done with Bill 50 or what was done by cabinet at that time with Bill 50.

The cost of natural gas is another factor that was here. It's been discussed earlier tonight. It's a cleaner resource. It's less expensive than it was, far cleaner and more green than coal, and it should be the direction that we look to go in because based on the fracking abilities that we have now, we are going to have ample resources for it. We don't have to build massive transmission lines to use it. It just makes sense.

Now, proponents of this transmission project will suggest that it is merely transmission charges that are going to increase on our power bills, and they are correct in suggesting that. But what is that impact going to mean for people? It's going to be different for those of us in the city of Calgary under Enmax versus someone who lives in a rural environment, where their transmission charges are much higher. I ask you, especially those of you who represent rural ridings: are you ready to go back to your constituents and tell them that you had a chance to fix this but you chose not to?

Enmax in Calgary is also building the Shepard plant, which is going to be online in 2015, Mr. Speaker. That is going to generate 800 megawatts of electricity, and it's going to be enough to power half of that city. We're not going to benefit in Calgary from these transmission lines, just like the majority of Albertans are not going to benefit from them. Even though our population is growing, our electrical consumption is not. Now, that's a fact that I would suggest everybody take a good look at because it's counter-intuitive. It absolutely is. The reality is that if you reach out to various stakeholders – and I strongly suggest that every member do just that – they will tell you, based on reduced load from energy efficient appliances, LED lighting, that the reality is that consumption is not growing even though our population is.

Now, this situation really is not much different than a petulant child making a mistake yet stubbornly insisting that they follow through just to merely make a point that they can. This bill is recognition of a mistake and ensuring that it doesn't happen again, which we can all agree on, but it will be a failure if it allows the by-product of the mistake to continue.

This decision will leave a legacy. In 10 to 15 years from now this will be looked at, and it will be judged a failure. Now, we are all going to be judged by that decision, and I hope that each and every one of you is ready for that.

There's a quote that I heard once that I'm just going to share with you because it stuck with me for reasons that are probably going to become clear after you hear it. It goes: growing up, I was always taught that the only thing worse than making a mistake was not admitting the fact that you did; I made a mistake on these issues, and now I'm fixing them. The quote goes on to say: I think one of the things I've learned since last year is that Albertans want leadership, that they want honest leadership, and they want people to be straightforward and direct, and that's how I'm going to be.

I think it's only fair that if that policy is going to guide this government in some areas, it guide them in all. I would hope that our Premier and her entire caucus would agree that just as it's unfair to place the burden of others' mistakes on a select few, it is equally unjust to ask others to pay for those mistakes as well.

We are asking for future generations to pay for the mistakes of Bill 50. Again, I ask you and implore you to please educate yourself. The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre would like nothing more than to have your time and to try and explain this to you if you can have him do that. I know that it's a heavy issue, but believe me when I say that it is important. Just taking the government's talking points and passing this without actually going back and looking at what Bill 50 created is a mistake. I implore you, please, within your caucus to ask for free votes on the amendments, to educate yourselves, and do the right thing.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any comments or questions of the member under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask a question of the previous speaker in terms of electricity demand in Alberta. I have in front of me the AESO report, which speaks about our GDP growing 295 per cent over the last 20 years. Over $200 billion – that's a “b” – worth of major capital projects are being planned in Alberta over the next few years, our economy is continuing to expand at 2.5 per cent, and our population growth by the year 2032 is expected to be 5.1 million individuals, wonderful Albertans to be represented in this Legislature. I'd like to understand how my hon. colleague expects that electricity demand is going to decrease in the upcoming future.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore for sharing these concerns. As I said when I spoke, it is counterintuitive. I spoke with someone at Enmax just today. There are suggestions, and we have documentation that our hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has shown that I'd be more than happy to table. That is what I'm basing this information on, and I'd be more than happy to do that.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Then I'll recognize the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to stand to speak to Bill 8, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012. This bill is one that affects every single Albertan, farmer, business, industry, and manufacturer in the province of Alberta. It is notable that Bill 8 is a reversal of policy over Bill 50, but this bill does not cancel the lines that were approved by cabinet under Bill 50. Bill 8 will allow the AUC to review and approve projects going forward but not those that were approved under Bill 50.

Why is that? It is notable that the Industrial Power Consumers Association of Alberta and the Alberta Direct Connect Consumer Association, who represent Alberta's largest energy consumers, both opposed Bill 50. Why is that?

Well, Mr. Speaker, we know Alberta is Canada's economic engine, but we cannot be that economic engine without electricity. What we also know is that in being Canada's economic engine, we cannot do it without affordable electricity. Going back to the question I asked earlier, "Why is that?" it was cost. It is recognized by some that Bill 50 lines are a massive overbuild to the cost of some $16 billion. Who is it that will pay this cost?

As I said earlier this evening in another speech and as my old Uncle Gerry, whom I spent a lot of time with, has always said: it is always the consumer who pays. These unneeded electrical lines will cost Albertans needlessly, Mr. Speaker. A twofold, threefold, or even a quadruple increase in electrical bills will cost Albertans dearly. As a result of these increases to residential, commercial, and industrial users, it will force businesses with large costs to move out of the province or go off grid. Why? Seeking more affordable electricity. What happens as the pool of ratepayers decreases? The cost to those who cannot move or go off grid will go up yet again. That means you and me, my friends, all Albertans. I would rather see the Alberta economy continue to be Canada's economic engine, purring along rather than coughing and sputtering under the burden of expensive electricity.

Now, I'm curious why we continue down the path of building these unneeded lines. From what I understand, when we ask AESO why we need the lines, the answer is: because it's legislated. When we ask the government the same question, the answer we get is: because AESO says that we need them. This just seems like we're stuck in a continuous and vicious loop.

What are the technical reasons behind these projects? Why do they hold such special status? What makes them so special considering that before Bill 50 the province was able to build critical infrastructure, transmission infrastructure, without the special order of cabinet?

While I support the changes – and I do support the changes – that are contained in Bill 8, we need to go back and allow the AUC to do the job we're now asking them to do. We need them to review the lines. We need them to review the Bill 50 electrical lines.

Thank you so much for your time.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any comments or questions of the member under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I commend my colleagues in the House here that are having a constructive debate over transmission lines. It just seems to me that when you have a home and it's over 30 years old, the electricity components inside the home usually are deemed to be replaced because they're unsafe. It's my understanding that transmission lines now are decades old. Now, I know that things are becoming more efficient. LED lights have been mentioned before.

To the member: can you explain why we're having brownouts in places like Leduc and, particularly, Calgary? I know that the SCM sorting plant is the largest sorting plant in western Canada. A very conscientious group of investors uses that Supply Chain Management group to make sure that the cost is effective and, similarly, with another group, called the Genco group. When the lights go off, that plant shuts down for over an hour, with lost wages, lost productivity. I guess that at some point we talk about efficiencies, and we need electricity, but the current demand that we have right now is not cutting it. Can you answer those questions in terms of what we tell those stakeholders when the lights go off?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fox: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd be happy to answer your question on that with a question back to you. When do transmission lines account for the creation of new electricity? These brownouts that we heard about over the summer: we found out that there were six electrical generators that were taken offline that day to do maintenance. So I pose that back to you. How is it that transmission is generating us electricity?

Mr. Fraser: Well, I think there's obviously a process that needs to be followed in every industry that needs maintenance. That's clear. Perhaps there could be better collaboration between those industries to ensure that they're not all going offline at the same time. I think there are a few things, and we can look to stories in Quebec and, you know, in other places. When the transmission lines and the electricity go out based on a crisis, then that's a small example of people not collaborating to make sure that the best interests of Albertans are being met.

I think we as legislators right now need to start looking to the future. I think it's clear that the people of Alberta have asked us to ensure that their infrastructure is sound not only for the safety of their families but also to make things more efficient. Like the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw said, LED lighting. Well, the light bulbs that we used before lit the room, but they weren't as efficient. It's time that these transmission lines are built so that they're more efficient to provide more electricity for the growth that we have here in Alberta, to ensure Alberta's economic future. I'll just put that back to the member.

The Deputy Speaker: Would you care to respond, hon. member, or I can go to the next speaker.

Mr. Fox: No, I'm happy to respond to that. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why is it that we are now again asking the AUC to do a needs assessment on all lines going forward, yet lines that were approved 10 years ago with older technology aren't going through that same needs assessment? I think that we need to serve Albertans' best interests by allowing the AUC to do its job and assess these lines.

The Deputy Speaker: I recognize the hon. Associate Minister of Finance. Your points were made. Thank you.

With that, then, I'll recognize the Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Man, this is like I've gone into a time warp. I've been here before. Well, here we go again.

An Hon. Member: Do over.

Mr. Anderson: A do over. That's right.

I do think we're having a good debate today, and I do appreciate some of the members opposite participating in part of the debate. Let's step back before we get down to the minutiae here. Let's step back a little bit and look at what we're talking about here. We're talking about a government that passed a bill to subvert the needs assessment process, to not have to go through the needs assessment process to approve $16 billion worth of transmission lines, okay? The question becomes right away: why on earth would we need to pass a bill in order to subvert a process, in order to skip the requirement to show need? Why would we pass a bill to do that if there actually was a need? If there was a need for these lines, if there was a need for $16 billion of these lines, then the government and AltaLink and the transmission companies, et cetera, needed to come to the board and get approval and demonstrate that these lines were needed. Otherwise, what's the problem here?

I mean, we have spent years in this Assembly debating this issue now. We debate it, debate it, and debate it. If they would just have taken it through the needs assessment process to begin with, we'd be done this. We would have an independent assessment by a board with expertise in this subject area telling us exactly how much we need in this province to keep the lights on.

Everyone agrees that we need to keep the lights on. We want to keep the lights on. I want to keep the lights on. Lights are good. Television is good. You know, we all like electricity. We like running businesses and things like that, commercial buildings and industrial complexes and so forth. But if that's the case, if that's the goal, then why aren't we going to the regulator, whom we've set up and we spend millions upon millions of dollars to run every year, to do their blinking job, which is to assess the transmission requirements for this province, to do a proper needs assessment, and to let the people of Alberta know what exactly we need?

Think about the absurdity of skipping that process, passing those lines, passing a bill that allows you to skip that process to approve these lines, and then coming back to the Legislature two years later and saying: "You know what? Jeepers, we really shouldn't have given the cabinet that power. That's not a power the cabinet should have. You know what? It's just wrong. It's wrong for that to happen, but we will still go ahead with all $16 billion of the transmission lines that they approved." It's nonsensical, Mr. Speaker. I mean, it's laughable.

It's like my child going into a store and stealing a toy and then coming out of the store. I find out what the child has done, and I say: "What are you doing? Take the toy back." And he says: "No, I don't need to do that. I won't do it anymore, but I'll just keep the toy because I want the toy. I won't give the toy back because I want it, but I'll be good from here on out." As a parent I should be reported to child services if I said to that child: "Good grief. That's a good idea there, Derek. That's a great idea. You know what? I'm going to be a good parent here and say you keep the toy, Derek. Just from this point on don't steal any more toys, but keep the toy." No. You give the toy back. That's what a good parent does. This is just plain, common sense.

So this government sits over there and passes this bill, which says: "You know what? Yeah, we blew it. We blinking blew it. We should not have given the cabinet this authority to subvert this regulatory process, this needs assessment process. We made an absolute mistake, but – ha, ha – we're going to continue to build the lines, 20 years' or more worth of transmission lines. Who knows how long this will take us? We will do that without going back and doing it the right way, the democratic way, the way that it was intended, the way the system has been set up." It's nonsensical, Mr. Speaker. In a way this bill is a bit farcical from that perspective.

I have a real problem. I'm trying to find a reason to vote for this bill. Yeah, you know, it takes away that power, so I have to vote for that bill because the problem is that you won't have to use this power. Certainly, in most of your lifetimes and our lifetimes over here we'll never have to use it. There'll never be a point. We're going to have transmission coming out of our ears here pretty quick once we build this. Who cares if they have the power or not? Who cares? They're going to build too much of it anyway, and it's going to be years' and decades' and decades' worth that we don't need.

That's the first problem with this bill, but then it gets even funkier, Mr. Speaker. We start with the fact that we pass a bill that allows the government to skip the independent needs assessment process, and everybody across the board – the U of C public policy report, even AltaLink and ATCO, everybody, even the ones that agree with the fact that we're building the lines – agrees we shouldn't have given cabinet this power unilaterally. It was a mistake.

10:10

Even with that, then we take these lines, and we give $16 billion in transmission lines. Do we tender them out to the best possible bid so we can get the best value for money for Albertans on their power bills? Let's say, for example, that we need all these lines, which is malarkey, but let's say that we do, okay? Instead of getting the best price for Albertans, instead of making sure that we're getting not just the lowest price but the lowest price from the company that can deliver the best service, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera, what do we do? The government gives these transmission contracts to specific transmission companies: AltaLink, ATCO. It gives them to these folks with no competitive bidding whatsoever and basically cost-plus, which is just a recipe for massive cost overrun. We give these folks these contracts, and we guarantee them 9 per cent on these billion-dollar contracts, a guaranteed rate of return of 9 per cent plus costs. Oh, man.

I mean, I can't understand how on earth folks over there can go along with such blatant disregard for the taxpayers and the ratepayers of this province. I just can't understand it. They know they're not getting the best deal. They know the people of Alberta are getting ripped off. They know the ratepayers are getting ripped off. They know we skipped the needs assessment process to get here. They know all of this, yet they still go along with it.

At some point you've got to wonder why we get elected to this Legislature. I thought the reason was that we were looking out for the best interests of Albertans. I thought the reason was that we were trying to protect our taxpayers and our ratepayers from being gouged. I thought the reason was that we were to uphold the rule of law and the processes that we have in place, the regulatory process and the House process and all the different processes that we have to ensure there aren't conflicts of interest, there's not abuse of the system, that we're not a banana republic, that we have good government, yet here we are passing a bill. We're going to go ahead with these lines, $16 billion dollars.

Now, going to the question earlier about the reason we're having brownouts, it's a legitimate question. People ask why we have brownouts sometimes. I defy anybody over there to bring any shred of evidence that we have had one brownout in this province because of a lack of transmission. You will not find any evidence out there that we have had one brownout, one blackout, or any other out because of a lack of critical transmission infrastructure in our province. It does not exist.

We have gone over this again and again in this Legislature, but we'll repeat it again because sometimes repetition is a good thing. [interjections] Yeah, that's right. The reason we have brownouts is because we have generation problems from time to time. Generators will go offline. Things will happen that cause generation to go offline for various different reasons. When that happens, yes, you will have brownouts and things like that. That doesn't mean that there don't need to be some repairs to different transmission infrastructure from time to time. But, yeah, sure, it's a decades-old transmission system. This building is 100 years old now. Do we tear this thing down? No. You fix it up. You make do with what you have as best you can because it would cost a fortune to replace a building like this, so we don't do that. We repair it. We make it better, okay? So I just don't buy that argument.

The other thing, too, is that if transmission were a problem – everyone agrees over there that the number one stakeholder in the province affected by electrical generation and transmission is, of course, industry. Sixty to 80 per cent of our electricity users are either commercial or industrial users. If that was the case, if transmission was such a problem for these folks, then why did the Industrial Power Consumers Association of Alberta come to the Legislature?

I was with the PCs at the time. They came and spoke to our caucus and said: "We don't need this. It's an overbuild. We do not need this transmission. It's totally unnecessary. It's going to make us uncompetitive. The rates are going to go up, and we don't need it because of cogeneration and other things that we're doing in the industry to take care of this." What they said is, "It'll make us uncompetitive, and we will either leave Alberta, or we will go off grid." When they go off grid, guess who gets to pay the bills? The rest of Alberta ratepayers: the seniors, the families, the folks we've been sent here to represent. They are the ones that are going to pay the bills for this.

You would think that if we needed all this transmission, it would be the industrial power users who would be knocking down the doors to say: we need this; we cannot do business without this. Then that argument there about making sure the lights stayed on in Leduc and so forth in these businesses, that would all make sense. But the problem is that that's not what they're doing. They're not knocking down the doors to get more transmission lines built so that they can get electricity to their businesses and industrial complexes. No. They're knocking down the doors to tell us not to build the transmission. So why would the stakeholders with the most to lose if the lights go out be telling us that they don't want these lines built?

I mean, guys, how is this not clear for everybody over there? We've been through this. We're ignoring evidence after piece of evidence after piece of evidence, and we keep going down this – it's like watching a train wreck, you know. Please stop at some point. You can say: oh, man, please stop; push the pause button. Yet we just keep going.

We could turn this around any time we wanted, so the question becomes: why aren't we turning the ship around? Why aren't we admitting the mistake, going back, having a proper independent needs assessment process to figure out exactly what is needed, with experts coming in, with all the new realities of 2012 and the cogeneration and everything that's changed over the last 10 years since the first inkling of this was done in 2003? Let's have the needs assessment process and get it right.

Maybe we do need $2 billion worth of new transmission. Maybe we need $4 billion. Who knows? I'm not an engineer. Neither, am I aware, is anyone over there an electrical engineer. The only expert in here, frankly, on the electrical grid is sitting in the Wildrose caucus, from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. That's really it. [interjection] He is an electrical engineer, actually.

Facts are funny things, aren't they? He's the only expert here, but I would say that I think he'd be the first to say: it's not me that should be making that decision; it should be an independent board made up of experts and then experts coming in and giving testimony back and forth on how the regulatory process works. Then you determine what the need is. Everyone can go forward. Then we tender the contracts properly, make sure we're getting the best possible deal, which would probably mean a lower price than we're getting now, making sure that it's not cost plus 9 per cent given to our friends at AltaLink and ATCO. That's not the way to do things. That's not the way to run a government.

The people of Alberta deserve way better than this. They deserve competence. They deserve transparency. They deserve a government that is willing to go to bat for them and make sure that even though it might be a little bit of an inconvenience for them to have to go through the proper process, they will go through it in order to make sure that we get it right. If we get it right this time, the upside is that not only will people have faith in the process, but we'll get a good deal for consumers. We'll make sure that our seniors aren't gouged. We'll make sure that our families aren't gouged on their power bills. We'll make sure to keep industry competitive and staying in Alberta. All the good things that come from doing a proper and careful job of this will be accomplished.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll sit down. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: We will commence with questions under 29(2)(a). The hon. Associate Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fawcett: Yes. Mr. Speaker, it has been a very interesting debate with some interesting ideas thrown around on each side of the House. I'd like the hon. member to explain. They talked about how, you know, this was the caucus that championed property rights, and this is a bill that really puts the needs assessment back into the hands of the AUC. I'm just wondering, actually, what relation property rights have to the needs assessment – it really has no bearing on whether a line is needed or not – and how the hon. member really draws that conclusion.

Mr. Anderson: Actually, that's a great question because I never addressed that in my remarks. I was more talking about saving ratepayers money and transparency and so forth, but now that you mention it, it has a massive bearing on property rights. You know, one of the things that I think we can all agree on in this Assembly, I think on both sides, is that we want to interfere with people's property rights, specifically landowner rights, as little as humanly possible in order to accomplish what is in the public need for Albertans.

So it goes without saying that if that is the case, if that is your goal, to make sure to interfere the least amount possible while still satisfying the public needs that are out there to keep the lights on and so forth, then it would seem very clear that you would want to ensure that instead of building, you know, $16 billion worth of lines criss-crossing the province all over the place and having to put out landowners and building power lines across their land and interfering with municipalities' growth plans, as is happening in Crossfield, for example, where they're coming across the highway in that one spot. It's interfering with them. You would think that you would want to build the least amount of power lines possible to get the job done.

I think the opposition leader said it very well. We're building, essentially – and you can quibble with 16 lanes, eight lanes, 10 lanes, whatever – the equivalent of, in her words, a 16-lane highway. We're turning a four-lane highway into a 16-lane highway. What's the point of that? That interferes unnecessarily with property rights. It's just not necessary.

That's how this particular bill – I agree. It's not like Bill 36, which is directly related, but I think that indirectly it is still related to property rights and that we should be always looking at ways to cut down on the space and the land that we need to disrupt in order to accomplish what is in the public need.

Mr. Fawcett: Just for clarification, I think the member has got his processes mixed up. There is certainly a needs assessment that does look at the public good and the necessity for such lines. Then there's also a separate process once that needs assessment is determined that then contemplates what this member is talking about: meeting those needs and reducing the impact that it could have on private property. Mr. Speaker, that has never been taken away by any legislation in this House.

Mr. Anderson: Well, of course, the member is correct that Bill 50 did not take away that process. No one here is accusing them. The siting process was never changed. I agree with that.

What we're saying is that if you're going to build two massive lines, it's greater than one. By my math I think that one line is going to interfere with property rights a lot less than two lines would interfere with property rights, and one would interfere more than if you didn't build any lines at all. I guess what I'm saying is that if your goal is to reduce the amount of disruption on people's land, you should try to build the least amount of power lines possible and still be able to turn the lights on and do what is in the public need. I think that's basic.

But you're right. Bill 50 did not change the siting process. That hasn't been changed by Bill 50. Property rights were more of a scratchy issue in particular on Bill 36 and Bill 19.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

I'll recognize the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Here we are once again debating legislation to amend the Electric Utilities Act. This is certainly not a new issue, and it is something that my Wildrose colleagues and I have been hearing about for some time not just from landowners in our constituencies but from many people from all walks of life right across the province.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation brings up the memory of Bill 50, the piece of legislation that removed – yes, removed – the requirement for an independent needs assessment process to take place before new transmission lines could be approved. Yes, you heard me correctly. This government removed an independent process and gave decision-making authority to cabinet, to themselves. Then after the government passed legislation which took away the independent assessment of transmission lines, legislation that was opposed by Albertans and opposed by the Alberta Utilities Commission themselves, the PC cabinet unilaterally approved four major transmission projects at a cost of $16 billion without ever demonstrating that these projects were needed.

I also feel the need to once again point out to the members opposite, as many of my colleagues have already done, that both the Alberta Utilities Commission and the Critical Transmission Review Committee are opposed to cabinet approval for transmission lines. They don't want to see lines approved for no reason. They, too, want a public needs assessment.

Albertans have been calling for the repeal of Bill 50 for years, and we in the Wildrose have been consistently calling for an independent needs assessment to be reinstated and a cancellation of the four major transmission lines. The new piece of legislation before us today, Bill 8, includes one of the things we've been calling for. If passed, this bill will ensure that all future projects will be based on a thorough process and an independent needs assessment. But, Mr. Speaker, too little, too late.

Our province already had an independent needs assessment for these projects in place before the PCs decided to change the process to give themselves the power of approval. Simply put, they used Bill 50 to ram through the approval for transmission lines they wanted but that Alberta doesn't need. Not only are these Bill 50 lines not needed, but they will increase the power bills for residential users and for commercial and industrial users in our province. In Cypress-Medicine Hat seniors and concerned ratepayers one after another have contacted me about this grave concern.

We all know what happens when the cost of energy for residential consumers goes up. Albertans will directly pay more out of their pockets for the same amount of electricity they've always used in their homes. But what happens when the power rates for industry and businesses dramatically increase? What happens when these industries and businesses account for 80 per cent of the electricity consumed in our province? Mr. Speaker, this is what happens: businesses large and small will see their power rates skyrocket. They will then move out of our province to a jurisdiction with more affordable electricity. Our province will lose investment, and Albertans will lose jobs. Industry-killing electricity hikes will not only cause businesses to leave our province, but those looking to make new investments will think twice about investing in our province.

The worst part of this is that there is no reason for what I have just outlined to occur. This government has not and cannot prove that there is a need in our province for the transmission lines. These lines are a massive overbuild, at least a $16 billion overbuild that will be transferred onto consumers and future generations. This is nothing short of complete and utter contempt for taxpayers, and the government should be ashamed. If the government is so sure that these transmission lines are necessary, why does this legislation not include an independent needs assessment for the current projects as well as future projects?

Mr. Speaker, no one except the government members themselves, it seems, wants the Bill 50 transmission lines to go ahead. Everyone – everyone – will suffer from the higher electricity rates these lines will bring to Alberta consumers and businesses.

My proposal to the government is simple. Expand Bill 8 so that current as well as future transmission projects will be subject to an independent needs assessment process. Let the independent experts in our province review the Bill 50 lines to see if our province truly needs them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any comments or questions for the member under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to come in here tonight and bond with some of our fellow MLAs at such a nice hour and talk about Bill 8, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act. I think the key to this whole bill is right where you get into page 2 where it says, "critical transmission infrastructure." This is what's led a lot of the people on this side of the floor into our position as MLAs.

Now, I know the hon. Minister of Energy stated last week that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is an armchair quarterback on Bill 8. I believe, after listening to the hon. member, that you would have to agree that he is pretty knowledgeable on this whole situation. I'd hope that in the future, when we have a wealth of knowledge such as that of this member from that riding, maybe we have to put some of our party hats to the side and actually listen to him instead of insulting him. In all honesty, he is probably going to forget more about power transmission lines and generation than a lot of us are ever going to learn in here.

In saying that, he is here truly to help Albertans, and I'd say that he's probably more than willing to work with our current government on what is best for Albertans, by Albertans. On that note, I'm going to listen to our expert. I know, after listening to him at a couple different functions, he has lots of knowledge on this. He has spoken all over the province on this, and he has for a number of years, as he had said in his opening statements to it. He had actually sat up in the gallery to talk to this government.

Mr. Speaker, what we have before us is Bill 8, a piece of legislation that some would say is too little too late. This is a theme from this government which my constituents in Little Bow are becoming all too familiar with. But I will give credit where credit is due. It has been identified by this government, and it is a good start to bring up Bill 8 to take care of some of the problems in Bill 50. Bill 8 does do some good things in limiting cabinet's power to unilaterally make decisions and infringe on landowners' rights.

Still, the bill will not change the status of the heartland, the WATL, and the EATL lines, where the property rights have been ignored, and a needs assessment away from this cabinet table is still necessary. Those lines stay under the old rules of Bill 50, basically indicating that the government feels they should still be above the law.

Bill 50 was a deliberate attempt by the government to extinguish landowner rights and tell Albertans their central planning ideas were better than local decision-making. The reaction that followed Bill 50 indicated to the government that Albertans were not rosy with the idea that the Premier's cabinet should have the right to extinguish property rights of any individual landowner. Hard-working Albertan farmers, ranchers, seniors, and families that have been part of this province for generations spoke out against the bills. But, like in Carmangay, the government failed to listen. Instead, they went ahead with a multibillion dollar project which could still use a needs assessment today but will not be given one because it seems, again, the government believes in the idea of Bill 50.

Mr. Speaker, we were always well aware that Bill 50 was a bad piece of legislation, and it shouldn't have taken this long to figure this out. But, again, I'll give credit to the new members on the other side of the floor. They identified it and with Bill 8 are trying to move forward with it.

After Bill 50 was implemented, the University of Calgary School of Public Policy came out with a report, as did this government's very own Utilities Consumer Advocate. Both these reports clearly identified that there were many problems with Bill 50. They both indicated that the size of the bill was excessive. They pointed out the lack of transparency and the lack of competitive bidding. They decried the government's unprecedented decision to skip these needs assessment processes. The government ignored this entirely. It was what many people would call common sense, but common sense was too inconvenient.

Mr. Speaker, in my riding this hits home. Just east of Coaldale they want to slice up perfectly good irrigation farmland to put up towers. The question always comes: would they actually do this? Well, yes, they have. During the election period we were at a forum, and I had landowners that had been forced by the police, the RCMP, to let a tower go through, the MATL line, the Montana link. They actually put up towers. When we talk of property rights – and the hon. member the Associate Minister of Finance has some valid points about what this does for property rights. I guess if you're a farmer and somebody puts in a tower in the middle of a quarter section pivot, that's infringing on your rights, in my eyes.

I can put it back into terms that maybe everybody else can understand if you don't have farmland. They wanted to come in and put a communication tower in your backyard, where your kid's trampoline is, and come in afterwards and tell you: "We might negotiate on the price within in a couple years because we're not quite sure what it's going to be yet, but it's need. It's a critical need."

The question is that back in April this line had been put in three years earlier. It had gone through the process, with the towers put up. It still did not have the strings hung on it. I mean, we have colleagues in here that'll show you and tell you, as we've talked about before. The hon. Member for Calgary-South East had a point about blackouts, grey-outs, and everything else. The point is that you can have extension cords hung all over inside this building. If you have nothing to plug into it and nothing to take the power at the other end of it, why would you put up all these extension cords? Really, it's that simple if you sit there and look at the whole thing. We're putting in a bunch of towers that aren't needed right at this moment. There's a process through it.

We talk of aging infrastructure. This building is a hundred years old. If you go out and look at those towers – I farm around them – they're bulletproof. I mean, you can hook them with a cultivator. You might ding things a little bit, but the actual cable itself: definitely you can restring that, put on new stuff. When we still have no compensation paid to this day to those people who have towers sitting on their property, which they were told they had to take, this infringes on private property rights. This is probably, I'll guarantee you, why I got elected in my riding, because this was a bad piece of legislation in Bill 50. I do give the government credit for identifying it and figuring out what we need to do with it. The question is: is it far enough? I don't believe it is.

As we sit and have open meetings in my riding, a lot of people are irrigation farmers. Years ago we went away from going to natural gas and diesel because the costs were cheaper to go to electricity. Everybody actually put funding in towards it. You got some money back to change your pivots, going from gas to electric. It made a lot of sense to most people. It's a business plan, again. Now, when most people come to the meetings, they are talking of power bills of $20,000 to $25,000 a month, of which half is transmission. They're not paying for the power. It's the transmission infrastructure that has been there for 20 years.

To me, the question always arises: how much can they get from us? With no open bidding process it's very apparent that we have two companies that are guaranteed 9.25 per cent return on their investment. Now, I mean, anybody in here that has any kind of mutual funds would be well aware of the fact that if you could lock in a 9.25 per cent return, we would all be giggling. I mean, we wouldn't need to double up our RRSPs. We wouldn't need to do anything else. We could sit and just run smooth with it at 9.25 per cent.

Also, the beauty of that, Mr. Speaker, is that we're sitting here with a whole situation of nobody watching the henhouse. As a businessperson I cannot have any kind of situation where you can sit there and have a business where nobody actually asks what the costs are. The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre was very key to point out – I'd bring it to anybody who'd love to debate him on it – that there's nobody for the needs assessment of this line. Is this actually needed? So when it's not, the question comes up about the need or the want of it. You don't need something, but you've given the contract to somebody and said: here, run with it.

Every time you run an ad in the newspaper, on TV, sit and do anything on the advertisement, they guarantee a 9.25 per cent return on whatever they do. I mean, it's a foolproof plan to sit and run a great business. I, myself, would like to buy shares in them, but you can't. Most of them are private companies. So they've really got a great system there. I guess as far as I'm concerned, it affects livelihoods in my riding as much as anybody.

We can improve this bill by implementing the same needs assessment process the bill deems necessary for projects in the future. But before 2009, for projects like the heartland line, if members of this House are serious about what is in Bill 8, I ask every one of them, particularly those MLAs on the government side, to take off your partisan blinkers, re-examine the need for a multibillion dollar transmission line, and find the courage to ask for an independent review by the Alberta Utilities Commission.

In the previous election Albertans across the province demanded that we be representative and do better. I think we have 87 excellent MLAs that are all here for the right reason, to represent Albertans in what they want. We've identified that Bill 50 was not something that was working. Again, I commend the government for identifying it. It was after a little bit of help, but good government needs good opposition. That's how the whole Westminster process works. So we've identified it. We're using Bill 8. We've identified some of it. Has it gone far enough? I don't think so. I think we need to repeal more. But baby steps. I'm always about the little steps to get to the big journey. Eat an elephant one bite at a time, they always say.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think we need to look at some legislation here. The real problem with this is Bill 50. In saying that, I hope that we can look at this bill and repeal retroactively the current lines that are proposed, that were part of Bill 50.

On that, I'd like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, and the members in session here tonight for your time as we've been bonding for such long hours. I'd be more than happy to take any questions.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any comments or questions for the member under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. It is always a privilege to get up and speak in this House. Might I say, actually, that tonight I'm charged to speak on Bill 8. I'm all fired up about speaking on Bill 8 tonight.

An Hon. Member: You're shocking them.

Mr. McAllister: And I hope you are when I'm done, sir.

I'll try and do this in my own style. So much has been said on this tonight. I think it warrants, you know, us all bringing our own flavour to the debate. I believe that a good speech has a good beginning and a good ending, and the closer they are together, the better. So I'll proceed with that.

For me, though, it's particularly significant because one of these lines that we're talking about tonight goes right through Chestermere-Rocky View, so I banged on a lot of doors, talked to a lot of people in the country. Everything you're hearing here tonight from this side came from those people, I can assure you. They don't want the lines, they believe the needs assessment should have been done, they wanted the regulatory approval process, and they do feel, to the Associate Minister of Finance, like they're being taken advantage of and that maybe their land doesn't need to be uprooted and planted with transmission towers.

Now, to get this straight, I'll try and sum up sort of what we've heard tonight in a shorter version. Effectively, cabinet approved up to $16 billion in transmission projects without a needs assessment and bypassing the regulatory approval process. Now we're going to go back, and we're going to repeal Bill 50, essentially, but we're not going to look at the work that was already done. There is no arbitrator, mediator, outside body on this planet that would look at this group and say: boy, that one makes sense. Nobody would do that.

The Member for Airdrie made a reference to something. When I speak on this in public, I use a similar analogy to his although I must say that his was very passionate and well delivered. I always say that it's kind of like somebody came to your house and stole your car, and then they came back later and told you they'd never steal your car again, but they didn't bring it back. It doesn't make sense.

What you should do with a process like this is review the entire process, just satisfy the public. If you're fiscally responsible, are you not concerned at a $16 billion bill? Are you not concerned by that? We're going through money in this government faster than Kim Kardashian. These are things that we have to look at.

An Hon. Member: Order. She can't defend herself.

Mr. McAllister: Sorry. I guess I shouldn't mention Kim Kardashian.

Ethically or even the optics of it: I'm not convinced that everything government does is wrong. I've seen great signs this week of productive government and movement and taking steps to improve situations after some thought that the situation was hopeless. I saw that on the education bill. I truly believe we're all good people in here. But the public is begging us to revisit this, and it's a simple thing to do. Just order it, a needs assessment, a regulatory approval process. Then all of these hours and hours of debate can go away. The way it's set up now, Bill 8 is a day late, and it's $16 billion short. You know, the ship has sailed. The horse is out of the barn.

An Hon. Member: One more analogy.

Mr. McAllister: Pick them all. There are a few. It's late.

We could revisit . . .

Ms Notley: One beer for every two analogies.

Mr. McAllister: Well, that's three, and that's not bad. Are you buying, by the way?

Government knows that there's enough here to review. I believe that. And I believe from watching the members on the other side tonight that backbenchers know there's enough to review here. I'm convinced that people on this side understand that we owe it to Albertans, and I darn well know that Albertans know we need to revisit this. I'm convinced of it. So we can still do that, is what I'm saying.

As for the debate back and forth here tonight, Mr. Speaker, I love it when members ask questions and challenge people. I'm not a transmission expert or an electrical engineer. One of us in this room is. We'll speak to it to the best of our knowledge. But we can talk about what we see, what the public sees. I would just say that if you're courageous enough to pepper questions on talking points, put your name down on the sheet, stand up for 15 minutes, and talk about this bill and how wonderful it is.

Mr. Hancock: Or do we want to acknowledge the person who has some information on it? We could do that, too.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has the floor, hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, sir.

We've passed enough bills or talked about enough bills. Just as an example, not to single anybody out, I would point to the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster's bill. I am singling you out, so there you go. The point is that he spoke with great passion about a bill, several members on the other side did, people over here did. It was exactly what we would expect to see.

Does it not strike you as odd that nobody but the Energy minister is talking about Bill 8 on that side? It is odd. Get up. Let's have a conversation. Tell Albertans. Get into Hansard. Tell them why you want to spend $16 billion. That's all I would say.

In closing, I said that I would be a little shorter with this speech, and I've tried. We can still fix this. It's not too late. The horse is out of the barn, but we can catch it. We've got a cowboy. He's not here now, but he's right there. He'd be willing to help out. You know, you're telling Albertans, "Look; we're repealing Bill 50," and you want forgiveness, but it's hard to kiss the lips at night that chew your backside out all day long. That's what they're saying when you knock on their doors. That's got to be worth at least one more.

Mr. Speaker, thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any comments or questions to that hon. member under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: I just want to know if the hon. member is still married or ever was.

The Deputy Speaker: Relevance?

Hon. member, would you care to answer?

Mr. McAllister: Great question. To the member, Mr. Speaker: I don't speak that way at home because I know better. That's how I've made it through a decade. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I think I will recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad that I'm able to rise in the House today to speak in general support of Bill 8, but I do have a number of concerns that I wish to raise on behalf of the constituents of Medicine Hat.

Mr. Speaker, the introduction of this legislation is a good thing. However, it does beg the question as to why this legislation is even needed in the first place. Why is it that cabinet needed the power to approve, without consultation, certain power lines but not others that will now be built? Did they need this ultimate authority in order to raise power prices? Did they need this ultimate authority in order to put Alberta's economy at risk? Did they need this ultimate authority in order to spend billions and billions of taxpayer dollars on unneeded transmission lines?

This extra money, which is going to projects that never were required and never were even economical, could be much better spent on health, seniors, education, how about some detoxification facilities, or even, I dare say, Mr. Speaker, a balanced or a surplus budget.

In my constituency of Medicine Hat we even have consumer rebates for energy-efficient choices made by consumers. Mr. Speaker, it is this type of decision-making that would help our province become a world leader in energy efficiency now and into the future. The overbuild by billions of dollars in unneeded transmission lines makes us a world leader, but we are a world leader in government waste and mismanagement.

Mr. Speaker, power bills are the concern of many families in Alberta, and this overbuild that has been deemed critical by cabinet is just going to cause power bills across Alberta to rise. There has been no need proven for these transmission lines, and cabinet seems to think that they still know better. I guess that leaves me wondering. Why is it that the cabinet has admitted, and rightfully so, that they do not have the knowledge to approve transmission line projects into the future yet say that they had the knowledge in the past to do so?

Mr. Speaker, in scenarios such as this there must be public consultation. There must be an open process, and the process needs to be conducted by experts, not made by cabinet and their special friends behind closed doors. The lack of a fair, open, and thorough consultation being conducted in public is going to have negative repercussions on industry in Alberta. If power bills start to double or triple, industry will bear the majority of the cost. Now, some of them will be able to survive, some will adjust, but some are just going to leave. Not just that, but all too many of my constituents live paycheque to paycheque, and they cannot afford for their power bills to increase exponentially. Nor do I think that many Albertans will be able to afford a doubling or tripling of their monthly power bills either.

Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no reason that Alberta should not be able to maintain and attract the best and the brightest, not only in industry but truly in everything we do. Why is it, then, that the current government wants to create new barriers to obtaining success?

I want to close by saying that I will be generally supporting this important piece of legislation because it is a step in the right direction. However, there are still a number of serious shortfalls that this government needs to address before this legislation completely fixes the issues that Bill 50 created.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any comments or questions for the member under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to be here today as an MLA for Cardston-Taber-Warner and to stand up for the rights of my constituents and truly for the rights of all Albertans. And I want to thank the government for helping me get elected.

Mr. Speaker, property rights are a basic right that every government should recognize. Property rights provide the foundation for every other right that we enjoy, and it is good to see evidence that the government is beginning to realize this. However, it's unfortunate that Albertans are still going to have to pay the price for the current government's mistakes. This government made a decision without consultation, without expert opinion, and without any respect for Albertans. This decision, which was to overbuild billions of dollars worth of transmission lines, would be bad enough given the current fiscal situation the government has put us in.

Unfortunately, not only is the government putting our fiscal situation into a precarious position, but they are doing so for transmission lines that are unneeded at such an excessive scale, perhaps on the order of eight times, as has been mentioned. They are not needed where the cabinet decided to build them, and there have been many objective experts with no skin in the game that have stated that the lines are not needed at all. Why the current government seems to think that they know better than the experts is beyond me, but I have my suspicions.

Which brings me to the next point: Bill 8 is definitely on the right path. The passage of this bill will ensure that all future projects will go through the proper steps to ensure that there is an independent, objective needs assessment and not be decided behind closed doors by cabinet.

Mr. Speaker, this is great, but why is it not retroactive? Why does the government still think that it knows better when it comes to transmission lines such as heartland, such as the western and eastern lines cutting through our province? Why not go back to the future? You have a time machine. We have the power to change the past and make it right this time. Let's make this bill retroactive. I see no reason that this piece of legislation could not be made retroactive, and I hope that the government sees the light and that the Minister of Energy sees the light and seizes the moment and realizes this legislation should be made retroactive in the best interests of all Albertans.

We need to always be mindful and always be respectful of the property rights of Albertans. We have a sacred trust. We don't have any money of our own. All the money that we have is taxpayers' money. We need to be guardians of that and spend it wisely.

Milton and Rose Friedman in their famous book Free to Choose talked about the utility of money and drew a quadrant with, of course, four boxes. When a person spends money on themselves, that's the most efficient use of money.

When they spend their own money on someone else, that's the secondmost efficient. For example, I might choose to buy you, Mr. Speaker, a gift, and I've set a budget of $50. I'm going to say: "I hope you like it. I think I know what you're interested in, but if you don't, it's the thought that counts." That's the secondmost efficient use of money, spending my money on someone else.

The thirdmost efficient use of money is when I spend somebody else's money on me. I'd like to buy a new car. Now, it doesn't matter to me how much it costs. I want all the bells and whistles. If I was spending my own money on me, I'm going to negotiate the best deal I can because I worked hard to earn that money. But when I'm spending somebody else's money on me, I'll go for all the bells and whistles, all the frills, all the extras: the backup camera, the navigation system, the Bose stereo system, leather seats, the big mag wheels. Who cares? It's not my money; it's somebody else's.

The least efficient use of money according to Nobel prize winning economist Milton Friedman is when other people spend other people's money on other people, and that's what we see happening. There's no accountability, and that has got to stop.

This bill is a good step in the right direction, and I look forward to supporting this bill on behalf of the constituents of Cardston-Taber-Warner, who elected me to do just that, see that their money is being spent wisely. I pray that the government has the courage and the humility and the self-awareness to correct their mistakes and support making changes to this bill retroactive. A 9.25 per cent return on my own money would be a great return, but how about a 9.25 per cent return on somebody else's money? Now, that's a heck of a deal, and that's what we're offering. You know, I think that's where their heritage savings trust fund should invest. They should invest in TransAlta and AltaLink. We're not getting 9.25 per cent right now.

I talked to a former MLA from that side of the House, who said that after listening to the hon. Member for — let me get this right; nobody else has — Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre... Did I get it?

An Hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Bikman: Good.

After listening to his presentation, this former MLA said: "Gee, I wish I'd known that back when it was being talked about in caucus. They told us not to talk to him. They told us that he didn't know what he was talking about. They told us to beware." He, among others of that era, was denied the opportunity to learn from somebody who had no axe to grind except what's best for all of us. He said that looking me right in the eye: I wish I had known that when I was an MLA, when this was being debated in caucus or discussed.

Now, why don't we want to build so much for the future? We were asked: "Don't we think things are going to grow? Projections say our population is going to increase. We can expect that demand would be greater." Well, because of technology and energy efficiency the demand for electricity isn't growing at the same rate. Why would we build an eight times overbuild of a highway, thinking that maybe 50 years from now we're going to need those roads, when technology may well be: beam me up, Scotty? I'm in Calgary. Beam me to Edmonton. Oh, no, I can't because I've spent all this money on a 32-lane road, 16 on each side, to drive there. Such waste reduces our ability to respond in a timely manner in a dynamic economy, where we've got technology that's advancing as rapidly as it is.

How many of you on either side of the House have a computer that the government has provided us with? How would you like that computer to have been bought 20 years ago, knowing that sometime in the future we're going to need computers? I don't want to use a 20-year-old computer. I'm not very happy using a five-year-old one. Technology advances. We don't want to overbuild. That's not prudent.

Well, I'm going to sit down now, but I appreciate the opportunity to sound off because I think the things I've shared with you tonight are worth hearing, Mr. Speaker, and I'm glad that through you everybody else got to hear it, too.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any comments or questions to this member under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there other members that would like to speak on the bill?

I would invite the hon. minister to close debate.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm very pleased to conclude comments at the end of second reading of Bill 8, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012. I thank colleagues on all sides of the House for their remarkable support for this bill.

Our goal relating to electricity is simple. It is to ensure Albertans continue to have a reliable supply of electricity at a reasonable cost. You know, Alberta is in a very fortunate position. Our province continues to grow and undergo tremendous economic and population growth. However, as more people move to Alberta, the strain on our electric system increases, just as it does on all other infrastructure in this province. Demand for power in Alberta has increased more than 20 per cent in the last 10 years. That demand is forecast to increase by two-thirds, or over 60 per cent, over the next 20 years. For our province to continue to grow and prosper, to attract investment, to lead, we have to know that when we turn on a switch in Alberta, the lights will go on. We need a robust generation sector and a robust transmission network for Albertans, not for export to the United States of America but for Albertans.

Albertans need the certainty in their personal lives that the lights will go on when they turn on the switch. The Alberta Electric System Operator, or the AESO, is the independent agency that monitors the grid and plans where and when transmission infrastructure is needed. In 2009 the AESO identified four areas of the provincial electricity grid that needed immediate reinforcements. The responsibility of the government of Alberta is to ensure that electricity is available to all Albertans when and where they need it at a fair price.

Three years ago the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, was introduced. The act approved the need for four critical transmission infrastructure projects to meet the electricity needs of Albertans. It also gave the government of Alberta authority to approve the need for future critical transmission infrastructure. The four projects for which need was approved are the heartland project, the eastern and western Alberta transmission lines, the Fort McMurray to Edmonton lines, and a Calgary substation. Currently heartland is under construction, both north-south reinforced projects are awaiting an AUC decision, construction of the Calgary substation began in July of this year, and the Fort McMurray lines are in the planning stages.

Moving forward, Mr. Speaker, we want Albertans to feel confident that decisions on the need for transmission lines are made by an independent body with a public interest mandate, the Alberta Utilities Commission, through an open and thorough process. We also want Albertans to know they can have a say in where power lines go and if they're needed.

A year ago the Critical Transmission Review Committee was appointed to determine whether the AESO's plan for the north-south transmission reinforcement was reasonable. Reviewing the needs, the committee found that forecasts showing a need to immediately reinforce the transmission grid and the proposed solution, comprising two high-voltage direct current transmission lines, were indeed reasonable.

The committee also recommended changes to legislation so that consideration of the need for future projects was returned to the Alberta Utilities Commission. According to the critical transmission report the committee feels that the AUC is the right organization to appropriately review the need for transmission lines in the future. We accepted their recommendation and are doing what we promised.

Over the past few years the government of Alberta took the steps necessary to ensure that much-needed power lines will be built in a timely fashion, but sections in the act pertaining to future critical transmission infrastructure are no longer needed. We recognize that Albertans want to be heard on all future decisions regarding the need for transmission lines. With the passage of the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012, all future infrastructure projects will go through a full needs assessment process under the Alberta Utilities Commission.

The government of Alberta will no longer have the authority to deem transmission infrastructure critical or to determine its need. Those need assessments will be conducted by the Alberta Utilities Commission. As the case has been all along, siting decisions will continue to remain open, public, and transparent under the regulatory authority of the Alberta Utilities Commission. We want these decisions to be made in a transparent manner and to be able to withstand great scrutiny, so the AUC will assess transmission project need in the future.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we're confident that the AUC as an agency independent from government has the expertise, practices, and processes necessary to consider the need for future transmission infrastructure. The amendments respond to a clear recommendation in the Critical Transmission Review Committee report and our commitments we made to Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, just to give a bit of context, the electricity system supports some $8 billion in wholesale electricity annually and an economy of $300 billion annually.

With all having contributed to creating a bit more light on this topic, I call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

Bill 1 Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2012

The Chair: Are there any questions or comments? I'll recognize first the hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities and then the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's an honour to rise this evening and offer comments as we begin discussion in Committee of the Whole on Bill 1, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2012.

Mr. Chair, as we now consider what I'm sure are some amendments forthcoming, I want to draw the attention of the Legislature back to the original intent of this bill, and I think it's quite important to do so. This bill is about thanking first responders, and I think it's very important that we do that. The bill was never a discussion about: my job is more stressful than your job. It's not about making value judgments.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona admonished the government somewhat for making value judgments in including some occupations and excluding others and pointed out that those occupations have just as stressful jobs as the jobs of people we're trying to thank and that it was wrong to make value judgments, yet I'm sure she is about to table some amendments that do exactly that. We're going to add some more professions into the discussion and thereby make value judgments.

The wrongness of this approach was really underlined for me in a discussion with a union representative from the federal corrections officers, a phone conversation I had. This federal corrections officer made it clear to me that their jobs are a little more stressful than provincial corrections officials', which I thought was unseemly, but also pointed out to me that the very stressful jobs they do, which I don't deny for a second – the federal corrections officers have very stressful jobs; I have no doubt about that – they do day in and day out. He said, as closely as I can quote, "It's not like we're rescuing cats in trees," thereby denigrating first responders because their job is far more important, which bounced me right back to: what is the purpose of this bill in the first place? That just underlined the absolute ridiculousness of this debate.

This bill is meant to recognize first responders. It's not to say that they have more stressful jobs than other people and that other people don't count. It's not to exclude anybody. It's to thank them. It's not even to say that first responders have a higher incidence of posttraumatic stress disorder. I don't actually think we have the data on that. If we want to go to anecdotal evidence, we have a fair amount of evidence that says that there are a lot of first responders who won't claim PTSD because there is a stigma attached to it. That right there might tell you something about first responders. But beyond that, I don't have any evidence that says that they have a higher incidence of PTSD.

That's not the point. The point is that we are saying thank you to some people that are richly deserving of that. It's about the fact that the things that they do day in and day out are horrific, and we thank them for that. We should thank them for that.

The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills this morning I thought got it. He came back from a pretty stressful situation and made today, I thought, a very thoughtful and heartfelt statement in response to a ministerial statement from the Minister of Education. In his statement that member specifically mentioned the brave and selfless actions of first responders in a time of need. He didn't say that anybody else there wasn't deserving of any thanks, and I would take from the tone of his statement that he was pretty much admiring of absolutely everybody who was involved and will be involved in what is a horrific situation. But he singled out first responders because intuitively I think we all know there's something there that's deserving of thanks. I thank the hon. member for his statement, and I hope he'll participate in the debate later on.

This bill is about thanking first responders. It's about thanking people who are rousted out of their beds at 2 o'clock in the morning. It's about thanking those same people who are sitting at their dining room table when their families wake up, unable to sleep, unable to describe their feelings, and unable to explain their tears.

Mr. Chair, it's not about excluding anybody. It's not about denigrating the extremely hard and stressful work that other people do in our society and that we're all grateful for. It's not about that at all. It's most definitely not about removing the right that any worker in Alberta has to PTSD coverage when that PTSD, posttraumatic stress disorder, is related to their employment. That's already available to everybody, and the bill does not remove that from anybody.

It's about saying thanks to somebody who's richly deserving of our recognition. I plead with the Legislature to focus on that purpose of this bill as we move forward to discuss what, I'm sure, are amendments coming forward but at the end of the day to thank first responders across our province.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Just before I recognize the next speaker, just a little bit of information for the members. Speaking time for this purpose: members have 20 minutes each. Members are free to move about the Chamber. You can remove your jackets if it's hot. For new members, these proceedings are a lot less formal than the regular House proceedings.

With that, I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to be able to get up and offer comment on Bill 1 in Committee of the Whole. I do want to move to an amendment that I'd like to put on the table, but I feel that it's somewhat necessary to respond to some of the points made by the previous speaker.

First of all, I want it to be absolutely clear that in no way does anyone in our caucus in any way think less overall or is in any way less grateful, in any fashion, for the work that is done by the group of first responders that are recognized in the current draft of the legislation. I think that that's very important to get out there. Having said that and having practised in the area of workers' compensation law for the last 20 years, this is not a piece of legislation that can just be casually used to thank people. It should be used thoughtfully and intentionally with a clear understanding of what amendments to it mean.

I happen to support this particular amendment being put forward to expand and make easier the compensability of posttraumatic stress disorder because it's an area that is grossly, grossly undercompensated. However, I don't think that you should just sort of arbitrarily be using this piece of legislation or that piece of legislation as a thank you. If that's what legislation is for, there's lots of other ways you can do it. But this has an impact on people's lives. People will spend 20 years having their lives significantly changed by whether they happen to be someone that the minister thought should be thanked in this particular legislation or not thanked in this piece of legislation. I am struck that the minister seems to be kind of misunderstanding the role of legislation and particularly a piece of legislation that is so profoundly impactful on the lives of regular Albertans each and every day. First responders do deserve our gratitude. No question about it. But let's do this rationally.

The associate minister talked about sort of the conflicting arguments that exist when you say, on one hand, that you shouldn't be picking and choosing certain professions, and then, of course, he anticipated correctly that we are going to move forward with amendments to identify certain professions. I think before we embark upon that debate, I just want to make it very clear that I would love to have this whole legislation crafted differently so that we could really substantively and genuinely deal with the epidemic of mental health issues that arise in the course of work and the people that suffer as a result of their work activity, but that's not what this government has decided to do.

I'm going to be proposing a bunch of different legislation. But just so the minister doesn't get too excited, I will actually be proposing a piece of legislation that would suggest a different approach. Rather than listing, it would approach it in a different way. In the interests of pragmatics and in the interests of having this government acknowledge and make as many improvements as it is possible to get out of this legislation, the first strategy that we're going to take is we are going to propose adding people to this legislation, and we will slowly expand the scope of those people that we will be proposing to add.

The minister suggested that it was somehow inappropriate, in probably the course of a rather heated discussion of one particular advocate for one particular profession, to speak apparently dismissively about some of the work that those extremely hard-working and very respected firefighters do. But, of course, the minister needs to understand that he's invited that by identifying certain professions and excluding others. I don't think it's fair to then critique people who engage in that conversation.

That being said, it's also interesting that the minister then goes on to say: well, we need to be dealing with first responders because especially first responders are less likely to file claims. That tells you something about them, as though somehow we should celebrate them because they're less likely or less able, because the resources aren't there, to actually successfully advocate for a compensation claim when they rightfully are entitled to it because of an injury that occurred at work that happens to have created posttraumatic stress disorder. Again, I think there are underlying assumptions in the minister's comments that really raise some very significant concerns.

Now, the minister said that this legislation is designed to support those important first responders. Good. Let me just repeat, which I'm going to have to do over and over because I'm sure the minister is going to try and suggest that by us proposing to add people, we don't respect first responders. So I'm just going to do it every three minutes or so to make it very clear that we support this legislation for first responders but that it needs to be improved. He said it was there to support those first responders and those people who are sitting at the dining room table in the middle of the night unable to sleep because of the extensive trauma that they've experienced, and they're unable to talk about it or to get treatment. I want to just say that, of course, that's who we should be thanking, but a lot of people experience that by making heroic decisions day in and day out at their workplace, and those people are not necessarily covered by this current act.

This morning I spent some time at a breakfast that was put on by the Legal Action and Education Fund, and interestingly the speaker there was a journalist who had been essentially drummed out of her employment after she wrote an article which generated tremendous controversy and ultimately several death threats. Her employer was unwilling to support her in that, and ultimately she was diagnosed with PTSD.

Now, it's interesting. She described her horrifying process. She wasn't actually even filing for WCB. She didn't even try that. She did what probably 99 per cent of people who have PTSD right now do, which is they simply go through long-term disability because it's less onerous to qualify for long-term disability than it is to show the causation that the minister suggests is easily accessible to every worker. The vast majority of mental health, where it is compensated, is compensated through long-term disability, and in that case, of course, we're making employees share the cost.

Anyway, she described a horrifying process that she went through, suffering from a mental health issue that arose clearly out of being threatened in her workplace. It was relevant to this debate because she did such a good job of describing how incredibly difficult it is for people who suffer not only PTSD but other forms of mental illness that arise from their experience at work to receive compensation as well as maintain their profession and maintain their relationships with people in their workplace. It's a travesty, and this legislation is one small piece of a large area which we have ignored to our detriment and to the detriment of all Albertans.

I'd like to begin by talking just about our most specific amendment, which is that which relates to including corrections officers and why it is that corrections officers need to be one of the groups that is covered, regardless of what the mechanism is, by this legislation. The minister repeatedly talks about first responders and about how we need to thank first responders. Well, corrections officers are first responders. Corrections officers are the first people to provide medical care when there's a medical emergency in a prison. They are the first people to show up when there is a violent incident in a prison. They are the first people to be there when somebody is murdered in a prison. They are the first people to be there when somebody has a heart attack in a prison. They are the first responders in a prison. The only difference in the nature of their availability, the nature of its unpredictability, the nature of its trauma, is that it's in a prison.

While I think there's an important discussion – and I look forward to having that important discussion – on the larger issue of how people who suffer from mental health issues as a result of a trauma in their workplace should be dealt with, this particular issue to me seems like a no-brainer. I don't understand why the government would exclude this particular group of first responders unless, as I said before, what they're doing is making a value judgment about the people to whom they respond. I can't imagine that they would be so simplistic as to engage in that kind of analysis. I can't imagine that they would be so reactionary as to engage in that kind of analysis but that, rather, they understand that these people are first responders just like the other first responders that they already want to include in this legislation.

Let's see. How am I doing for time here? I don't have too much time left, so I will probably speak more on the merits of the amendment that I'm about to offer up once I've tabled it. I would like to table the amendment before I run out of time to speak. Mr. Chairman, I will offer up copies to one of the pages and wait for it to be distributed before I read it into the record.

The Chair: For the record we'll call this amendment A1.

Ms Notley: The amendment that has now been distributed reads as follows. We would amend section 2 in the proposed 24.2(1) by striking out clause (c) and substituting the following:

(c) "peace officer" means

- (i) an individual appointed as a peace officer under section 7 of the Peace Officer Act who is authorized by that appointment to use the title "Sheriff",
- (ii) a member of the Correctional Service of Canada who is designated as a peace officer pursuant to Part 1 of the Corrections and Conditional Release Act (Canada), and a warden, deputy warden, instructor, keeper, jailer, guard and any other officer or permanent employee of a prison other than a penitentiary as defined in Part 1 of the Corrections and Conditional Release Act (Canada), or
- (iii) an individual who is constituted a peace officer under section 10 of the Corrections Act;

The point of this amendment in short, Mr. Chairman, is to include corrections officers under the coverage of Bill 1.

In speaking to that, first of all, let's talk a little bit about what this bill does because the minister repeatedly says: well, everybody has access to this. But just to be very clear, what happens right now if somebody claims for PTSD is that, first of all, the WCB spends a whole bunch of time trying to evaluate whether what they're suffering from is PTSD or whether it's depression of some other type, and by doing that, they turn the person's life inside out. Just to be clear, their doctor may diagnose PTSD, but then the WCB will immediately question that diagnosis and evaluate it at great length and investigate it very intrusively at great length.

They will then decide whether the PTSD actually is related to the employment, and the way they do that is by trying to find out if there are other ways that it could have been caused. That's where you get these lovely situations where you get unauthorized filming of people, where you get investigators digging into people's lives, where people are required to provide psychological reports and counselling notes going back 20 years so that the WCB can determine whether or not that person might have actually already been suffering from PTSD before the particular incident occurred. Then, of course, witnesses have to be examined to determine whether or not the event itself was traumatic.

It's a huge hill to climb, and because, of course, the very injury that the person is suffering goes to the very heart of their ability to advocate for themselves, 9 times out of 10 they don't advocate for themselves.

What we've seen in the last two years under the current rules is that the greatest number of people actually approved for PTSD were bus drivers, followed by truck drivers, followed by correctional service officers, followed by firefighters. Other than that, we don't actually have any other first responders on the list. The remaining people that were approved for PTSD were some of the other folks that one would think would typically be included on a broader list.

So what this bill does is that it just concludes that if somebody gets the diagnosis of PTSD and they are in that occupation, everything else is finished. They don't have to go through that intrusive, demeaning, demoralizing, in and of itself injury-producing process which is run by the WCB to establish whether or not their issue should be compensated. It's a major, major change. It's a good change. Don't get me wrong. It is a good change.

Then the question becomes: why have we not included corrections officers? In 2011-2012, Mr. Chairman, 814 incidents were investigated by the correctional investigator, and of those incidents 84 involved emergency response teams. Just to review, corrections officers as a matter of their employment serve on emergency response teams. Over 600 incidents involved the use of restraining devices, and a dozen involved the use of firearms by correctional staff. To emphasize, these are only the incidents that were actually reviewed by the correctional investigator. We know that as with the first responders that are currently identified under this legislation, correctional officers also underreport mental health issues, also underreport PTSD, notwithstanding that it probably exists at higher levels, for the very same cultural reasons that other first responders underreport them.

Prison populations as well, as I've said before, suffer from extremely high rates of mental health issues, drug addictions, diseases such as HIV and hep C, and these populations require care while incarcerated. Correctional officers are involved in the delivery of that medical care, and indeed they are often involved in the delivery of that medical care on an emergency response basis. As a result of that, Mr. Chairman, it just makes no sense. It defies explanation why the government would not include these first responders on the list of people who are going to benefit from the presumption in the way that I've described. It is so incredibly important, when someone is injured and as a result of that injury is diagnosed with posttraumatic stress disorder, that they not then be required to subject themselves to the intrusive and torturous adjudicative processes that are currently in place with the Workers' Compensation Board.

The presumption that the government is proposing will provide that benefit to the first responders that are currently listed, but there is absolutely no reason to not provide that benefit to the other first responders who benefit the community in different ways but to the same level as the ones identified by government. I would suggest to you that there are no studies out there that would suggest that the frequency of emergency response incidents in the prisons by corrections officers is not equal to or greater than the frequency that is experienced by those who are currently listed by the government in the bill which is before us today. For that reason, I believe it is only logical as well as just as well as reasonable for the government to accept this amendment so that corrections officers can be treated with the same dignity and equality that they and all Albertans deserve.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader on the amendment.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Yes, on the amendment. I think it's been very interesting. The hon. Associate Minister of Human Services certainly put into context, following the second reading debate speeches, what the purpose of the bill is, and now we have an amendment framing some of the other issues. I think all members in the House would want to take a few hours overnight to digest the two elements of debate that have been put before us before making a decision, so I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, I would move that the committee now rise and report progress on Bill 1.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: I recognize the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The committee has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 1. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:39 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, October 30, 2012

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us pray. Dear Lord, bless all of us with a strong and abiding sense of the great responsibilities laid upon us. Bless us with a deep and thorough understanding of the needs of the people we serve, and bless us with Your guidance to help meet those needs to the best of our abilities. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you a group joining here today us all the way from the state of Jalisco, Mexico. The group is in Alberta to sign agreements with both Alberta Education and Alberta Enterprise and Advanced Education working together in education. Leading the delegation is Mr. José Antonio Gloria Morales, Secretary of Education for the state of Jalisco. I'd ask them to stand and to remain standing when I announce their names. The Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education and I had the pleasure of meeting with him today, and I can assure you that he is very committed to education and passionate about his state.

Mr. Speaker, also here as part of the delegation and seated in the Speaker's gallery are Andrés Barba and Thalía Pérez Llamas. With them in the gallery are staff from both departments, who've been working hard to make these agreements and this MOU extension possible. From Enterprise and Advanced Education we have Caleb Nienkirchen, and from Education we have Waldemar Riemer.

Earlier today, Mr. Speaker, we hosted an event at Government House, with a lunch, to formally sign both MOUs. We were lucky enough to have several students join us there as well. These students are also here with us today in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to stand as I introduce them. From Austin O'Brien high school in Edmonton please welcome international exchange students Alieth Ramirez and Angel Chavez Vasquez. From l'ecole Notre Dame high school in Red Deer we have international student Patricia Martinez Gallardo. Accompanying them today are teachers Derek Hatch and Richard Foret as well as Jackie Bodker from Alberta Education.

Mr. Speaker, this was a great extension of a very good MOU between Alberta and Mexico, and I know the entire Assembly will join me in welcoming them to Alberta.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three wonderful grade 9 classes from my old school, George McDougall. They're here today with several teachers, including somebody I graduated the same year as and who was always a much better student than I, Ms Devon Sawby. Of course, Ms Kristin Duncan is here, Constable David Henry, Constable Meagan Fillion, and our former mayor of Airdrie Mrs. Linda Bruce is accompanying them, so if we could please give them the warm reception of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly several government of Alberta employees who are participating in a leadership program led by the Ministry of Human Services. This is a program which employees can volunteer for when they want to develop their leadership skills. With us today are Gordon Weighell, the team mentor, from Human Services; Amanda Jackman from Education; Lesley van de Ligt from Justice, Meenu Nath from Human Services; Mike Wordell from Solicitor General; Myra DeCoteau from Human Services; and Sabrina Marling from Health. I'd ask all of them to stand and be recognized by Members of this Legislative Assembly for the good work they and the people they represent do on behalf of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very honoured to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a number of special guests who are here today to hear and to support my member's statement on Irlen syndrome. Some of these individuals have travelled from across our province to be here today. I ask that they rise as I introduce them.

Nola Stigings, who is a certified Irlen diagnostician from Innisfail, has brought with her Lisa Hansen from Red Deer and Lisa Goodwin from Calgary, both certified screeners. Judy Pool, a reading specialist and Irlen diagnostician from Edmonton, has brought with her three guests who have all been diagnosed with Irlen's: Rachel Maskowitz, Amy-Lynn Bienert, and Colleen Stott. Finally, Bettylyn Baker, a teacher and certified Irlen screener, has brought with her Sarah Verbeek and her two sons, nine-year-old Champ and seven-year-old Wyatt Verbeek from Youngstown. Champ and Wyatt have both been diagnosed with Irlen's, and you can see that they're wearing the filtered lenses that have changed their lives. These individuals have persevered in their fight against Irlen syndrome, which is a visual perceptual impairment. I would now ask that all members join me in the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly for my guests.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a group of guests who are members of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. Working as social workers and correctional peace officers, these individuals are regularly exposed to volatile and traumatic events. The cumulative experience of such traumatic events often leads to posttraumatic stress disorder. Our guests today seek to have their occupations recognized for presumptive WCB coverage in Bill 1. Doing so will ensure that those who suffer PTSD are not revictimized by having to relive the events that made them sick in order to obtain WCB benefits. I would now ask my guests to rise as I call their names: Monte Bobinski, Michele Deuél-Bobinski, Hal Griffith, Dennis Malaylco, Shamanthi Cooray, Morag Rempel, and Heather Sweet. I'd appreciate it if members could join me in welcoming them to the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly eight guests here in recognition of the North Edmonton Seniors Association's grand reopening of their newly reconstructed facility; namely, the Northgate Lions Seniors Recreation Centre. You may recall the devastating collapse of the centre's gymnasium roof on January 25, 2011, which made it necessary to temporarily relocate the association's educational, health, recreational, and social activities.

My guests today are chosen to represent the North Edmonton Seniors Association in honour of their exemplary long-term volunteer service. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask that they please rise and remain standing as I mention their names. We have with us this afternoon Mr. Hugh Newell, president; Mr. Steve Shamchuk, past president; Mrs. Grace Swekla; Mrs. Brenda Doucet; Mrs. Sharlene Wyness; Mr. Jim McArdle; Mr. Ed Doucet; and Mrs. Shirley Curle. I would now ask that my colleagues please join me in giving the traditional warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you. With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I have two introductions to make today. I'd like to do them separately so that each may be recognized in their own right. Thank you.

I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly an exceptional lady who truly defines the meaning of an outstanding citizen. An active member of our community, she served on the village of Beiseker council, volunteered for the fire department, is the lead on the disaster services committee, a member of the community hall board, pinch-hits at the local doctor's office and the village office, and she even found time to volunteer during my campaign. Among her most ambitious projects is being a member of the local Helping Hands group. Putting her artistic talents to work, they have made over 1,200 afghans for the needy and numerous quilts for charitable organizations. She is always giving her time, lending a hand whenever and wherever needed, and has an exceptional dedication to our community. She is known for her energy, her enthusiasm, and her wonderful disposition. Deeply respected and loved, she is an inspiration to us all. I am privileged to call her my friend. I would ask that Vera Schmaltz rise and receive the traditional welcome of this House.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly another exceptional lady, a pillar of the community I call home. As well as serving on a number of committees and boards, she also found time to play a pivotal role in a very important campaign in the last election, mine. I would ask that my wife, Carol, rise and receive the traditional welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two leaders from the community of Fort Saskatchewan. The first is Brenda Gheran. She is the executive director for the Northeast Region Community Awareness Emergency Response, a mouthful. We like to call it NRCAER. This organization co-ordinates mutual aid for emergency response in our very growing Alberta's Industrial Heartland. It serves nine municipalities and 31 industries. In addition, they also provide a valuable education program to the community.

The second individual is Conal MacMillan. He is the executive director of the Fort Saskatchewan Chamber of Commerce. This chamber brings together over 350 local members to work collectively to advance small business and industry in our community. As we know, these groups are essential in representing the interests of industry and business. I would ask Brenda and Conal, who are seated in the members' gallery, to stand and receive the traditional warm greeting.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an absolute pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three of my constituents: Karly and Gloria Roszell and their mother, Priscilla. This is their first time visiting question period, and they came all the way from Cache Lake, near the Saddle Lake reserve. This is a very educated family. Karly wants to become a lawyer, and we can always, of course, use more lawyers in this world. Gloria wants to take architecture and engineering, and Priscilla, when she grows up, wants to become an aboriginal lobbyist. These are some outstanding Albertans with a very bright future. I would ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an absolute privilege today for me to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly 12 policy interns from the Ministry of Health. This group plays a critical role in strengthening policy capacity within the ministry, and I'm very pleased that they have chosen health policy as an area in which to focus their career interests. They are here in question period this afternoon. I would ask each of them to rise as I call their names: William Camm, James Carver, Salvatore Cucchiara, Scott Fullmer, Tiko Gumberidze, Nirosha Gunasekara, Fedja Lazarevic, Kristi MacNeil, Brady Olsen, Dorothy Roberts, Alysha Visram, and Fiona Wang. They are joined by Burnadene Ebanks, manager of human resource strategies in the ministry. I'd ask all members to provide them with an especially warm welcome.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, it's my honour to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Mr. Mike Boldt. Mr. Boldt resides in the wonderful community of Spruce Grove, which Minister Horner made sure that I would remind you of. Mr. Boldt is a children's author and illustrator. Please stand, Mr. Boldt, and be recognized by this Assembly.

The Speaker: Just a reminder, hon. member, about not using names of individuals who are elected in this Assembly.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly someone who means a great deal to me, Marion Eggen, my mother. Marion was born and raised in Vermilion, Alberta, and has been a nurse, a hospital administrator, and, of course, means a great deal to me and my family in everything that we do. If she could please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Service Alberta, did you have an introduction?

Mr. Bhullar: Sure. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to have some folks from my department join me here this afternoon to witness the grand theatre that has become question period. I'd ask them to rise as I announce their names: Rhonda Lothammer; Wanda Benning; Lisa Lai; Claudette Dunsing; Twyla Job; Nathan Stelnicki; and, of course, our two policy analysts who have been working very intently on a particular piece of legislation that will be introduced a little later this afternoon. I'd ask my colleagues to give them a warm reception.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

North Edmonton Seniors Association Northgate Lions Seniors Recreation Centre

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On January 25, 2011, the North Edmonton Seniors Association lost access to a well-known gem of a facility in north Edmonton. The Northgate Lions Seniors Recreation Centre experienced a real disaster on that day as the building's roof had collapsed. Since that time, facility manager Maggie Nichol alongside many hard-working, tireless staff and volunteers did an admirable job in relocating and reorganizing association activities in various alternate locations during the infrastructure rebuilding process. This was a daunting task, truly a living example of the Alberta spirit as the association provides over 180 recreational, social, educational, and health-related programs per season.

On September 21, 2012, I had the pleasure of joining the membership of this organization, the city of Edmonton mayor, city councillors, and the construction and architectural firms to help celebrate the grand reopening of the Northgate Lions Seniors Recreation Centre. The North Edmonton Seniors Association and the city of Edmonton turned the disaster into an opportunity to reconstruct and retrofit a beautiful $5.8 million gathering place for all seniors to enjoy.

Mr. Speaker, it is said that the more we do for humanity, the more benefits we receive. Special thanks to the North Edmonton Seniors Association for contributing annually over 42,000 volunteer hours to the centre and community at large. I would like to commend the membership, staff, and all the volunteers of the North Edmonton Seniors Association, who worked so tirelessly through their 20 months of dislocation, and wish them all many years of laughter, learning, and living in their new home.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Professional Sports Arena for Edmonton

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the topic of Edmonton's downtown arena is back in the news, I thought I'd take some time to clarify where we in the Wildrose stand on this issue. The Wildrose wants Edmonton to have an arena. We like having two NHL hockey teams in our province. We like what this means for Alberta, for our two major cities, and for our economy, and we think that a new arena for the city of Edmonton would be a fabulous addition to a rejuvenated and ever-evolving downtown core but not at any cost.

Last year I put out a proposal to help fund this project, one that would require no additional funding from the province and, most importantly, would protect taxpayers from being forced into having to pay for it. It's a lottery, Mr. Speaker. Quite simply, it would be a branded lottery sponsored by the province dedicated to generating revenues for Alberta's two NHL hockey teams with the express purpose of raising funds for a new arena. It would give Albertans, passionate hockey fans, a direct stake in their team's future and, critically it would be entirely voluntary. We estimate that it would generate between $5 million and $10 million annually for Alberta's hockey teams, which is a steady stream of revenue to help offset arena costs.

Now, yesterday the Municipal Affairs minister got quite agitated at the idea of a lottery, apparently forgetting that this very government implemented a lottery in 2001 to raise money for Alberta's NHL hockey teams. It was a good idea then; it's a good idea now.

Mr. Speaker, let me also put to rest a false comparison the same minister made. He suggested that there is no difference between municipalities using provincial MSI dollars to build a public recreation centre or an NHL hockey arena. We disagree. One is a public asset, the other a private endeavour. That's why we support a lottery. If you want a new downtown arena for Edmonton or someday for Calgary . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Speaker's Ruling

Oral Question Period Time Limits

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we start the clock for question period, let me remind you that one of our objectives in question period is to allow as many members as time permits to rise and ask their questions. Our rule is that you are allowed 35 seconds for each question and 35 seconds for each answer, and no preambles to supplemental questions are allowed. Therefore, when your 35 seconds are up and over, I will stand up as soon as I possibly can and recognize the next member to keep the pace moving. Start the clock.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Opposition.

Lobbying Government

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we'd like to know more about the government's dealings with the Katz Group on a number of matters. The Finance Minister said yesterday: "The Katz Group asked for a change in casino licences. We said no. The group asked for direct funding for the arena. We said no." Will the minister provide details on when and where those meetings took place, who attended those meetings, who arranged those meetings, and how the no decisions were made and communicated?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd be pleased to get you the dates of the meetings. It's not a secret. I've met with stakeholders in this province pretty much consistently since I've become the minister. Even previous to that, a number of years ago I recall the discussion around the possibility of changing casino licensing was brought forward, and the answer was no then. The answer is no today, and the answer will presumably be no in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that making a request for a change in a casino licence seems like a lobbying effort and given that a special request for targeted funding through an extraordinary adjustment to the municipal infrastructure funding program also seems like lobbying, who was the registered lobbyist representing the Katz Group when the casino and the funding requests were made?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of who the registered lobbyist was. One of the occasions was at a social occasion where I was approached and asked whether the government would consider it. I said no.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, when we ask legitimate questions about the government's cavalier attitude toward the cozy connection between party donors, government policy, grant request, funding arrangements, handling of government investments, sloppy election laws, and now hazy lobbying practices, we get dodging, glib brush-offs, misdirection, and jokes about the Kennedy assassination. When will they come clean and tell Albertans the whole story?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, as usual we have the opportunity to discuss all of these issues in the House based on newspaper reports. The good thing about these newspaper reports is that they have accurately reflected the dialogue with respect to public policy on these issues. There is no dispute or any confusion about the government's position with respect to casino licences, with respect to funding of arenas. We have been very clear, people who have interests in these issues have been very clear, and the stories have been very clear.

MLA Remuneration

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the government appears ready to use its majority to slip through another increase in MLA pay while trying to convince Albertans that an extra thousand dollars a month is actually a decrease in compensation. No wonder these guys can't balance the budget. They clearly want to increase MLA pay despite the Premier and the whip messing up the strategy for how to do it. How can they justify this thousand-dollar-a-month increase of taxpayer cash when the provincial budget is so far out of whack?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I received information today with respect to the Leader of the Opposition and another hon. member from that side of the House bringing a motion forward . . .

An Hon. Member: Are you spying on us?

Ms Redford: I believe it was a press release or on the Internet with respect to a motion that is coming to the Members' Services Committee, which is a committee of this Legislature. It is important for that committee to do its work without a partisan perspective.

I will also say that we have been very committed to a transparent process with respect to compensation, and Albertans support that.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, it's so hard to get a clear answer from this government. We want a simple yes or no to this question. Is the government going to use its majority to push through an 8 per cent raise, a thousand dollars a month, for MLAs in the form of fully taxpayer-funded RRSP contributions? Yes or no?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, there is a process under way at Members' Services. We have been very clear with respect to the information that's been provided. There have been months of study with respect to this, and I look forward to the results of the committee decision.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, even if they try to hit undo a bunch of times to erase this terrible RRSP idea, the damage has already been done. Our collective reputation as MLAs has already been damaged. More importantly, there's a signal that if 8 per cent more is good for MLAs, it must also be good for our public-sector unions. How are they going to unring that bell?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the hon. Leader of the Opposition that if she was worried about the collective reputation of MLAs in this House, she should actually look at the conduct of her party in the last six days.

However, Mr. Speaker, the Members' Services Committee has been considering a number of recommendations from the Major commission with respect to compensation pay, most of which this government has already rejected. We think it's appropriate for Members' Services to ensure that the work is being done to reflect what MLAs do right across this spectrum, and we look forward to the decision of the committee next week.

Ms Smith: At least I've been here the last six days. [interjections]

Provincial Borrowing

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Finance minister likes to compare the provincial budget to a family budget, and he's trying to soft-pedal a $3 billion budget deficit by comparing . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, please. The Leader of the Opposition has the floor, and I think she is abundantly familiar with most of the rules by now. I'd ask her to please abide by them and please rephrase.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Finance minister likes to compare the provincial budget to a family budget. He's trying to soft-pedal a $3 billion budget deficit by comparing it to a household mortgage. It's a ludicrous comparison because if a family's income drops, they don't spend more, they don't take expensive trips to London, they don't eat at fancy restaurants, and they certainly don't book hotel rooms that they don't use. But here, with projected revenues down, way down, we see no evidence of anything except more borrowing. What real adjustments is the government family going to make to its spending?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not exactly sure how all of that connected in terms of what I may have been comparing to the family's budget. I think it's important to note that the ridiculous statements of the opposition Finance critic and the opposition leader that suggested that we would have a budget that would be balanced without putting the mortgage payment in it: I've never said any such thing. In fact, what we've said is that we will balance the budget, and included in that budget will be the funding of our capital plan like any responsible financial manager would do. We will do that. In addition, if they had been paying attention when we gave the first-quarter update, they would have heard . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Finance minister seems to be justifying the potential for additional borrowing by crowing about the province having no net debt – this is an apparent reference to the heritage fund – is he saying that borrowing is okay as long as it stays under $15 billion? How deep into debt is the minister planning to take us?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the hon. member might want to have a discussion with some of the financial experts in our community and in our province, because I have. Over the last six months I've been talking with a number of those financial experts. I've also been talking to Albertans, and Albertans want us to do things like highway 63 now, not defer it till some point in the future. Albertans want us to build the postsecondary spaces that they need today, not defer it till sometime in the future. Albertans want us to build the schools in their cities, like Airdrie, like Edmonton, now, not defer them to sometime in the future.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, Albertans want this government to live within our means. The minister has told us that revenue projections were based upon average prices established by multiple outside experts, but if the experts are proven wrong, as they have been, the minister doesn't seem to have a real plan for reducing spending. If oil prices go up, they spend. If prices go down, they borrow. When will this government stop blowing through our savings?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, again, I would ask the hon. members opposite to pay attention when we do the first-quarter update or when I do the second-quarter update. They would know that we did announce further increases in in-year savings for this year. I would also suggest that it's incredible that a party that's talking about this would stand up, most of their members, over the last few days and talk about nothing but more spending in their constituencies, more than a billion dollars. Where's the balance there? Where's the priority?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Sexual Orientation and Human Rights

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier says that she is committed to human rights, especially as it affects the gay and lesbian community in Alberta. She has even scored big points by taking part in the Pride Week festivities in both Edmonton and Calgary. My question is to the Premier. Why has the Premier consistently avoided removing the odious section 11.1 from the Alberta Human Rights Act?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, there is not a doubt in the mind of any Albertan that we support choices and lifestyle and people who live whatever way that they want to in this province with respect to sexual orientation. What I will say with respect to all of the work that is being done for the first time by this government is that there is a comprehensive consultative process going on with members of the gay and lesbian community to ensure that we have a fully comprehensive legislative, regulatory, and policy framework that respects all human rights in this province.

Ms Blakeman: Well, not while that section is still there.

Back to the Premier: could the Premier please explain why during the election the Premier sold herself and her government as progressives, especially to the under-40 voters, yet flip-flopped fast in refusing to remove that very section and continuing to propose legislation that upholds racial and religious practices but won't even name sexual orientation and gender identity?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, without speaking specifically to the legislation that is before this House at the moment, what we did in this election is that we spoke to Albertans about being a progressive and inclusive and respectful government. What that means is that everyone in Alberta has rights that need to be protected. All rights need to be balanced. We have to be consistent with our Constitution. This government will stand up for that and will not be subject to political stunts.

Ms Blakeman: Balancing human rights. Hmm.

Back to the Premier: how does the Premier explain the proposed government policy which allows parents to teach their children at home that homosexuality is a sin and that being gay or lesbian is bad but denies teachers the ability to even talk about sexuality in the classroom without the Human Rights Commission sword of Damocles hanging over their heads?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, that is a characterization that does nothing but provoke fear and intolerance in all parts of this discussion. [interjections] We are proud of the fact that in this province we have legislation that is consistent with our Bill of Rights, with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and ensures that we do do what every court in this country does, which is truly balance the rights of all Canadians. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I cautioned you yesterday about interjections, and I'm going to caution you again today.

The hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition.

Cost of Injections by Pharmacists

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's flu season, and Albertans are lining up to get their shots, but this year pharmacies are making extra cash providing those shots. Last year, before Daryl Katz, the billionaire pharmacy magnate, saved the PCs' bacon in the election, pharmacists were given $10.93 per injection. This year pharmacies are getting $20 per shot. My question is to the Premier. Can she explain why pharmacies now receive almost double what they did one year ago?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the answer to that question is very simple. We as a government made a commitment early in our mandate last year to begin to pay pharmacists for the services that they are legally enabled to do under their scope of practice. That includes injections and immunizations. If the hon. member wants to stand up and make an argument to Albertans as to why they should not be able to access flu immunization from their pharmacists, I'd be more than happy to listen to that.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The point is that the government after the election nearly doubled what they were being paid.

Given that the province pays physicians' offices just $10.30 per shot and pharmacies twice that for exactly the same service, can the Premier explain this sweetheart deal for pharmacies in Alberta?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had followed the improvements in pharmacy care that were announced by this government and took effect on July 1, he would know that as of that date a new pharmacy compensation framework for the province was introduced, wherein pharmacists are paid $20 per interjection for drugs or for vaccines. He would further know that this government in our last budget reduced the prices that we pay in our public plans for generic drugs in order to fund that very service, which Albertans report as tremendously convenient and effective.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the fourth party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're well aware of how the government has sweetened the deal for pharmacies, including those owned by Mr. Katz.

Given the financial benefit of this sweetheart deal to Mr. Katz among others, does the Premier acknowledge that her government has placed itself in a serious conflict of interest by accepting a massive donation from Mr. Katz and his family and his associates?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, for the last three years we've been discussing how to improve health care, and we've listened to Albertans. What Albertans have told us is: ensure that all health care professionals are able to exercise their skills to the best of their ability and to their full professional qualifications. What we did this year in terms of making changes to the pharmacies act was in response to listening to Albertans. This is a sweetheart deal for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Election Finances Legislation

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given your instructions yesterday, I've drafted my questions accordingly. I will table documents later today that show that almost $1,800 of illegal donations were made by a prohibited corporation, Bow Valley College. This government's election law, which was put in place when the Premier was Justice minister, prevents the Chief Electoral Officer from making his findings of wrongdoing public. Will the Premier amend the legislation now, or is she fine with the status quo of Albertans being kept in the dark on who has made or received illegal donations in this province?

Mr. Olson: On behalf of the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker, the member is well aware that we have legislation coming, so I suggest that he stay tuned.

Mr. Saskiw: Mr. Speaker, given that the election finance laws have already gained the reputation as the worst in Canada and given that the Chief Electoral Officer has already found dozens of illegal donations made to a political party, can the minister explain why Alberta is the only province that refuses to publicly disclose all illegal donations and fines, or will this so-called open and transparent government force Albertans to use expensive FOIP requests to find out?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, that characterization may only be in that member's mind and some of his colleagues'. We have very good legislation in this area, and we're constantly trying to improve it. We have taken recommendations of the Chief Electoral Officer after the last election and are considering them. It's a work-in-progress. I ask the member to be patient and see what's coming.

Mr. Saskiw: That's just not true. You should stick to the ag department.

I have a very simple question for you. Will this minister do the right thing and commit today to introduce legislation to retroactively publicly disclose all illegal donations and fines in the past seven years, or will this cover-up continue? Simple.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to give such an undertaking. That's a ridiculous request. Now, I don't know why he is referring to me as the agriculture minister in this particular context because, obviously, I'm answering on behalf of the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General. Again, I say that we have legislation that's coming, and his questions will be answered at that time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, followed by the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Health Care Costs

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian Institute for Health Information has just released their report on the national health expenditure trends dated from 1975 to 2012. On a per capita basis Alberta spends the second-highest amount on health care amongst provinces, second only to Newfoundland. Now, as with all government expenditures Albertans expect good return on their money for this kind of investment. To the Minister of Health: can the minister tell us why we are spending well above the national average on health care in this province, and is this investment actually making for better health outcomes in Alberta?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons that we lead Canada in per capita health spending is because we have been fortunate enough in this province to have the finances to pay for infrastructure, technology, and other improvements that Albertans depend on and benefit from each and every day. What's interesting about the hon. member's question is that the cost drivers in health care have changed according to this report. Whereas in the past drugs, for example, and hospital costs were the key drivers in the health system, it is things such as physician costs and other factors that are leading the increase in costs today.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, also to the Minister of Health: can the minister tell us what we are doing to get a handle on these ever-increasing expenditures here in Alberta?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, one excellent example is the question that was asked earlier this afternoon with respect to pharmacists. We are working with physicians and nurses and pharmacists and other providers to ensure that they have the opportunity to practise to the full scope of their training and expertise. This, of course, allows physicians in particular to be freer to deal with more complex cases, see greater numbers of patients, and lend their extra expertise to the benefit of a wider number of patients.

Dr. Starke: The final supplemental to the same minister, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this summer the salaries and compensation packages of senior executives at AHS were made public. Is this the reason why our health care costs are so high?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, interestingly, as a percentage of total health spending Alberta has the lowest administration costs in Canada, at 3.2 per cent. When it comes to executive compensation, the Alberta Health Services Board looks carefully at similar compensation across the country and in North America. We must continue to ensure that health administrators and physicians and, in fact, all of our providers are paid competitively, that we continue to offer the best suite of resources in Canada for them to practise, and that we truly empower them to deliver the quality of care they wish to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Ferruginous Hawk Habitat

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The impressive ferruginous hawk is currently considered endangered by the Alberta Wildlife Act and the federal Species at Risk Act. This spring, just prior to breeding season, 16 nesting platforms were torn apart to facilitate the construction of a power line project which had not yet been approved. Albertans expect a threatened and endangered species would not suffer from the incompetence of a government. Will the SRD minister be investigating who exactly is responsible for this avoidable – no – atrocious act?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Certainly, the platforms were removed before the nesting season began to prevent the disruption of the birds during construction and are scheduled to be re-erected this fall. In fact, ATCO has been working in collaboration with AESRD and with the Special Areas Board and with Dr. Schmutz with regard to this issue.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the program director, David DePape, describes this as an officially induced error, which we all know is a blatant breach of the act, will the minister do the right thing and pursue charges prescribed under these acts for the parties responsible?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, Dr. Schmutz, who is the hawk expert – I'll just quote some of the stuff that he has said. He has stated that he is extremely pleased – let me repeat: extremely pleased – with the efforts that ATCO Electric, AESRD, and the SAB have undertaken to ensure that the nesting platforms are properly replaced, new locations for the platforms have been determined, more locations have been added, and new platforms and poles are being considered to replace the old ones. This comes from the doctor, the expert himself.

Mr. Strankman: Given that Wildrose believes in environmental stewardship and in actually protecting the environment, both the plants and wildlife, when will the minister take the appropriate action to ensure that these threatened endangered species will not suffer from this again?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I find that last question quite amusing, especially after yesterday's comments from, let me see, the Member for Strathmore-Brooks with regard to a question with regard to the SSRP consultation to make sure we wouldn't put more conservation areas in place. We work very hard. We work with the species at risk board, and we work with experts to make sure that we are given good advice on this issue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

New School Construction in Beaumont and Leduc

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my constituency growth continues to be both a blessing and a curse. Statistics Canada has recognized Beaumont as one of the 20 fastest growing communities in the country, where 25 per cent of the population is under the age of 15. Leduc is not far behind. As a result, the schools are bursting at the seams in both Leduc and Beaumont. To the Minister of Education: can the minister outline what steps he's taking to alleviate these pressures?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the pressure this member mentioned is faced by many communities right across this province and is something that this government takes very seriously. That's why this Premier has made such a commitment toward school infrastructure. You should know that either just completed or under way there are approximately 88 projects totalling a billion dollars. That's going to create about 27,000 new spaces for students around the province, and that includes two K to 9 schools, one public and one Catholic, in Beaumont. The other nice thing I'd say about that school project is that they're going to be built together, and they're sharing a library and a gymnasium. That's the direction we need to go, and I commend those school divisions for doing that.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: while this new joint facility in Beaumont will be very welcomed by that community, can the minister share any plans that might offer some comfort to the residents and students of Leduc?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I understand that many Albertans, many communities are eager to learn about the next round of capital, where and when, and I want to thank this member for bringing those two school boards to meet with me so they could relay their concerns and their frustrations to me personally. All I can say to those communities is: we hear you, and we're working as hard as we can to get the next round of capital out and planned. The pressures that these communities are feeling are going to play very strongly in the considerations in the coming months.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that by the time these schools are opened, they will likely be full – and this is something that we've seen in many communities – is your department using any forecasting methodology to allow these schools to have a few years before they reach full capacity?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the answer is: yes, we are. We're working closely with the school boards. When we're looking at the size and scope of the new schools, we take, essentially, their requests, but we work with them to establish school enrolment projections based on pressures and based on information from StatsCan and Health and others. Overall we've done a good job on the projections, but we just haven't been able to roll out capital fast enough as a province to keep up with the growth because people are moving to Alberta because Alberta is the place to be.

Mr. Hehr: In question period yesterday and, in fact, today we heard the Minister of Finance admit that the Katz Group asked the government to provide funding for an NHL arena and also for a change in casino licence. To the Minister of Finance: are we to believe that the only time the Katz Group or Rexall group or any of those like affiliates talked to you or a member of your government was at this cocktail party?

Mr. Horner: Well, I said it was at a social event, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure what the question was?

The Speaker: Second question.

Mr. Hehr: I'll try that again. In your answer you said that the only time Daryl Katz asked you about arena funding or a casino licence was at a cocktail party. Was this the only time you or any member of your government was in fact lobbied about these projects?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I didn't say cocktail party, first of all. The request was for us to consider. The response was very quick. We're not going to consider any new applications for different kinds of casino licences, not just from the Katz Group but from any of the other groups. In fact, there's currently a moratorium on new casino applications, as the hon. member probably well knows. The AGLC is part of that.

If the hon. member is asking me if I know of anybody else in government that in the last three or four years has talked to them, I couldn't answer that question.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I guess I can't figure that out. Looking at the lobbyist registry, it doesn't reference Daryl Katz, the Katz Group, Rexall, or any other affiliated entity. Is this an admission that you guys have a failed lobbyist registry? When will you fix this failed lobbyist registry if this is the case?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, it wasn't Daryl Katz himself that wandered into the Legislature and asked me about this. There was a group that was representing themselves as part of the Katz Group. There are a number of individuals in that group. I have already undertaken to bring that forward for the hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the Member for Airdrie.

Whistle-blower Protection

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For too long workers in Alberta have been silent because they fear losing their job. This government claims the importance of transparency and accountability over and over, so much so that they even named one of their ministries after it. Albertans want to know that this ministry is more than a label on an empty box. To the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation: will he guarantee that Albertans who have been silenced in the past can now speak without fear?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, this Premier has made a commitment that we'll be the most open and transparent government in Canada, and that's exactly what we're doing. We've produced the most robust expense disclosure policy in Canada. Today we're introducing whistle-blower legislation, and we're going to be introducing a review of the FOIP Act. This is an accountable and transparent government.

The Speaker: Hon. member, just a reminder that the Speaker's chair has not moved; it is still up here.

Mr. Bilous: I guess that accessibility doesn't count for my staff, who were refused entrance to briefing statements.

Mr. Speaker, given that the XL Foods recall was most certainly preventable and given that workers publicly expressed concern about food safety at the plant after the recall, will the minister commit to private-sector coverage for whistle-blowers? If not, why not?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, we are today introducing whistle-blower legislation. I'm looking forward to a robust debate on that issue. We're going to take all of the concerns that are expressed into account.

Mr. Bilous: Given that Alberta desperately needs strong whistle-blower legislation which will protect workers and the public and given that the only reason a company or government would ever fear strong whistle-blower protection is if they had something to hide, will the minister admit that the aim of this legislation is not to protect whistle-blowers but to protect the government from whistle-blowers?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member misunderstands. We are an open and accountable government. We're introducing whistle-blower legislation to protect employees from reprisal. That's exactly what we're doing. That's what this government has committed to doing, and that's what is going to happen.

Khalsa Credit Union

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, Khalsa Credit Union has successfully served Alberta's vibrant Sikh community since 1995. There is now an ongoing attempt by a group, including several members of the Minister of Service Alberta's family, to take over governance of Khalsa at an upcoming board election, as is their right to do. However, during this pre-election period Alberta's credit union regulator has threatened sanctions against Khalsa's current board based largely upon the complaints by the group seeking to take the board over. To the Minister of Finance: why does the credit union regulator appear to be taking sides in what should be a democratic board election?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, this should not be brought to the floor of this House because the credit union regulator, or CUDGC, is the group that's responsible for ensuring that the credit unions are viable, that they are governed appropriately. If there are issues relating to governance or to the viability of a credit union, it is not for this House or, for that matter, political influence as is now being brought up in this House to be even part of this.

The Speaker: I'm going to check the Hansard later, but, hon. member, proceed with your first supplemental.

Mr. Anderson: Oh, here's the rub, and it's entirely relevant as you will see. Mr. Speaker, given that the group leading the takeover attempt of the Khalsa Credit Union board according to current board members is being led by members of the Minister of Service Alberta's family, which, I repeat, is completely their right if done democratically, will the minister agree that in order to avoid even the appearance of a conflict, the Minister of Service Alberta must recuse himself from any and all involvement or communications on this matter until the issue is resolved democratically?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, it's somewhat appalling, frankly, that the hon. member, who is the Finance critic, would actually bring this to become politicized in this Assembly when we are not, nor were we, involved in any discussions. I have not been involved in any discussions with the credit union – I can't recall the name he brought forward – and I don't think it's appropriate for it to be on the floor of this House.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, the Khalsa board has FOIPed a petition sent to the Minister of Service Alberta that contained complaints about the current Khalsa board and was signed by many members of the minister's family. Given that this petition may have been used by the credit union regulator as a basis for threatened sanctions against the current Khalsa board, will the Minister of Service Alberta immediately grant this FOIP request rather than delaying it until 2013, as is currently being indicated, so that the minister cannot be accused of delaying the FOIP request due to his obvious conflict of interest in this matter?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, I won't even dignify how disgusting and how low this member goes in his politics. He picks up the phone, calls, and says: get involved or else I'm taking this issue up in QP. So you want us to politically interfere in a matter or else you're going to accuse us of political interference? What's next? Are you going to intervene in elections at the Sikh temple? Is that what's next?

Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the FOIP request was made. The petition was released. The signatures on a petition cannot be released. This is so low that . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park, followed by the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. [interjections] Hon. Member for Sherwood Park, you have the floor.

Physician Services Agreement

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta physicians have been without a contract for 19 months now. Previous agreements in principle have expired, things seem to be dragging out, and Albertans have the right to know what is going on. My question is to the Minister of Health. What is the status of the negotiations?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I first want to make clear . . . [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Please, let's stop the discussions going across the floor here. Hon. Member for Airdrie, you're on my list now for today. Minister of Human Services, you're on my list today as well. Please, no exchange of conversations across the floor.

The Minister of Health had the floor, and he was attempting to answer a question.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to begin by making it clear that our government is extremely proud of the work physicians do for Albertans and the important role they play in delivering very high-quality health care in this province.

It is true that we have been without an agreement with the Alberta Medical Association for about 19 months now. Last week

I presented on behalf of government our best offer to the Alberta Medical Association, and my understanding is that they're currently considering that offer.

Ms Olesen: Also to the Minister of Health: what does the minister mean when he says that government has presented its best offer?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I mean by that is that we have carefully looked at all of the issues that have been discussed over the last 19 months during the negotiations. We looked at the two agreements in principle, which were not completed. As a government we presented our best response to the issues that were raised by the Alberta Medical Association while at the same time looking at mechanisms and opportunities to work collaboratively to further health outcomes that we desire on behalf of Albertans. These include things like better primary health care, better use of other health professionals in our health care system, and a host of other improvements that we know are critical to health for Albertans.

Ms Olesen: To the same minister: what is government hoping to achieve with a new contract with physicians?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, first and foremost, we intend to preserve our position as the province that pays the best for physicians across the country. As the hon. member may be aware, we currently pay the highest in the country, approximately 29 per cent above the national average. We want to continue to offer the best facilities and services to support physicians, and we want to make the best possible use of nonphysician professionals, who can offer a great deal to Albertans as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Calgary-Fort.

Electricity Transmission Facility Costs

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the greatest respect and civility, to the Minister of Energy. Recent data reveals that the cost to build a transmission line in Alberta is more than double the cost it takes to build the same transmission line in neighbouring jurisdictions. The cable, steel, and labour all come from the same pool of manufacturers and companies that specialize in this industry. Can the Minister of Energy explain to this Assembly why it costs twice as much to build a transmission line in Alberta as in neighbouring jurisdictions?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's a very interesting theoretical construct the hon. member makes given that the lines that he is discussing day to day are actually only just starting to be constructed and that some of them aren't constructed yet. I'll look forward to the evidence, but I can tell you that the Alberta Utilities Commission has direct responsibility to oversee the cost structure of transmission lines. There are appropriate public policy mechanisms in place to address this issue.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta's transmission cost monitoring committee, that is tasked with monitoring the costs of these transmission lines, can be denied access to certain financial information and given that companies are not required to provide this committee's financial information upon request, how can Albertans have any confidence that proper cost controls are in place?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, the Alberta Utilities Commission has oversight of this directly and can seek all of that information on behalf of the people of Alberta to ensure that Albertans are getting the best value possible. I would simply note in passing that the context here is that these are important infrastructure lines that ensure we have a robust electrical system in this province. It supports over $8 billion in wholesale-provided electricity costs in this province, and it's a $300 billion economy that this is supporting.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to evidence that proves that fact.

Why did this government sign a multibillion-dollar no-bid contract to AltaLink to build a transmission line, that is not needed, given that the sole owner of AltaLink was the subject of two RCMP investigations and they're under investigation for fraud, money laundering, and corruption of a public official in North Africa?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, I don't believe the regulatory or the legal construct in North Africa is anything near similar to what we have in the province of Alberta. I would suggest that the hon. member should make that allegation outside of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

WCB Coverage for Foreign Workers

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency of Calgary-Fort includes a large industrial area where tens of thousands of hard-working Albertans perform their tasks every day. The well-being of workers is high on my attention. There are a large number of foreign workers in our province contributing greatly to the economy. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Human Services. How is WCB coverage provided for foreign workers in case of serious injury in respect to treatment and recovery in Canada and in their home countries?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Any worker who is covered by the Workers' Compensation Board is covered in the same manner, whether they're a foreign worker or whether they're a landed immigrant or whether they're a Canadian citizen. Regardless of their status, if they're covered by the Workers' Compensation Board because of the place that they are working, they have the same coverage.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister: given that the foreign worker was seriously injured at work, what help is provided to an injured worker while being hospitalized long term in Canada and during his recovery?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, the foreign worker would have the same coverage as a Canadian worker or an Albertan worker, so the Workers' Compensation Board would make provision with respect to salary replacement if that was appropriate and, certainly, would make provision with regard to the medical requirements of that worker. The job of the Workers' Compensation Board is to assist a worker, regardless of where they come from, in recovering and getting back to work as quickly as possible and to provide income support for any income loss that's incurred as a result of the injury.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister: given that the foreign worker's injuries are permanent and may mean he cannot perform the same task and that his work visa has expired, what help is provided for an injured or disabled foreign worker when unable to perform the jobs specified by the work permit?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, for any worker, if there is a long-term disability or a long-term inability to return to work or to return to that work, the income support provisions of the workers' compensation program would kick in. Those income support provisions would follow that worker, whether they had to return to their home country or whether they were staying here. A temporary foreign worker can move from one job to another under appropriate circumstances. The temporary foreign worker program is a federal program, so we work with the federal government to assist temporary foreign workers when they need to change jobs. If that is appropriate for the individual involved . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Capital Infrastructure Planning

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was pleased to open the Edmonton Journal this morning and see that the government is taking another Wildrose idea and is planning to release a long-term version of infrastructure in the next budget. Hopefully, it will be a public document. The Wildrose has long been advocating for this infrastructure priority list so that Alberta families and Alberta communities can plan the future. Will the Minister of Infrastructure commit to and make public how we will prioritize projects around items such as transportation versus schools . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, I've been working hard with my colleagues all summer in all departments to bring together a capital infrastructure plan going forward. I'm also working with my colleagues in Finance and Treasury Board so that when we come up with our infrastructure plan, we'll have the capital finances that go with it.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you. We would like that public infrastructure list. We've been talking about it for a while, but there's more to this. Given that the Deputy Premier was in Medicine Hat using an infrastructure announcement to roll out failed PC candidates and PC MLAs from Lethbridge, Edmonton, and Sherwood Park as local representatives, why won't the minister take politics out of this infrastructure planning and release this detailed priority list based on Albertan families and community needs and priorities?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, I know the different departments have their three-year capital plans. I think they're posted on their websites. I'm working with the Finance minister, and when he releases his budget next spring, we'll have those plans with that. We continue to invest in public infrastructure to ensure Albertans have the quality of life they deserve now and into the future.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that hard-working Alberta contractors have made it clear that they are fed up with this government's process of awarding multiple projects to a single bidder, without a proper competitive process, will the minister end this practice and give all Albertan contractors a chance to bid on projects so taxpayers and Alberta families can get the best deal for the new infrastructure projects they so desperately need?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure what this member is talking about. We have public tenders that go out when we do our projects, and every contractor in the province can bid on them if they're qualified. I spent the last couple of days meeting with infrastructure partners at their convention, talking to them about these issues. It's open and transparent.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by the Member for Little Bow.

Highway 15

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Congestion on the highway 15 bridge into the city of Fort Saskatchewan is a significant issue for my constituents. Unfortunately, at this moment we don't have a viable alternative option to help accommodate the increasing traffic flow in this area and to reduce the congestion. To the Minister of Transportation: what is our government doing in regard to decreasing congestion in and around Fort Saskatchewan?

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is currently a planning study under way for long-term improvements to highway 15 east of Fort Saskatchewan up to highway 830. Also, construction is under way on the northeast leg of the Anthony Henday, which does include a new North Saskatchewan River crossing upstream from Fort Saskatchewan that is expected to be complete in the fall of 2016. That will help mitigate congestion issues in Fort Saskatchewan.

As we review the entire transportation network in the province, we consider the volumes, the safety records and will continue to do so.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. That bridge that you're referring to is, certainly, south of Fort Saskatchewan. It does not address the issue, nor does it address the issue of the heavy loads, oversize loads. What is the plan, please?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, a route study was completed earlier this year, and we're working with the agencies, the industry to assess the viability, practicality, and cost of various alternative routes for oversize loads. The transportation of oversize loads is important to our continued economic growth, and it's essential that everyone on our highways has the ability to travel safely and efficiently. As we build these oversize load corridors, it will take traffic and congestion off the alternate routes.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: could I have some indication that this study will be timely and will be made public in an efficient manner to the residents of Fort Saskatchewan?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I have to say that the hon. member asking the question has been dogged in asking this question to me outside of the House. As such, I'm sure the hon. member will continue to be dogged, and I won't be allowed to forget, even if I wanted to, about this particular issue. I can assure the hon. member that we will get the report out as fast as we are able.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, that concludes question period today. As a result of tightening up our questions and answers, we were able to recognize six more questions and six more answers than yesterday. Good job to all of you. Thank you.

In a few seconds from now I will call on the Member for Red Deer-North to give her member's statement.

Members' Statements

Irlen Syndrome

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, one of my greatest joys in life is to snuggle up in a comfy chair with a good book, to read my way into an adventure and become a great explorer in the depths of Africa with Dr. Livingstone or a great space explorer racing through time with Captain Kirk or Han Solo or to become a faithful and loyal friend to Harry Potter or Frodo Baggins. Reading is one of life's greatest adventures, and at the same time it is the greatest tool there is in the quest for knowledge and success. It is, therefore, one of the most important learning experiences that a child can have.

Imagine having a visual perceptual symptom that causes you to see a snowstorm on a written page, as Emily in the University of Alberta study saw, or to see words that move up and down and off the page, as 10-year-old Kaden saw, or to see words in sentences that are blurry, like seven-year-old Wyatt sees, or watching the words pop out of the page, like nine-year-old Champ sees. Imagine the frustration and anxiety that arise when you realize that you can't read as fast or as effectively as others in your class. The scientific name for this syndrome is scotopic sensitivity syndrome, and the common name is Irlen syndrome. This syndrome is a neurological impairment that impacts the brain's ability to accurately process images. When present, Irlen's causes word and number distortions that prevent a child from reading properly.

The good news is that those with Irlen's can be helped with prescribed coloured, filtered lenses that help to filter light differently. My guests today in the gallery, certified Irlen's diagnosticians, certified Irlen's screeners, parents of children with Irlen's, and children with Irlen's, can all attest to this condition and how these noninvasive treatment methods have changed their lives. It is my hope that we can raise awareness about this neurological syndrome and assist children with Irlen's. Mr. Speaker, in doing so, we can improve the lives of many people across Alberta, allowing them to fulfill their dreams and giving them the opportunity to experience one of life's greatest joys, reading.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Election Finances Legislation

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Katz donations fiasco of the past week provides a case study in the need for stronger election finances legislation. Alberta has the highest individual limit in Canada, $30,000 in an election year. As the fiasco has shown us, the legislation provides ample opportunity for parties to manipulate the numbers so they appear to stick to limits while far exceeding them. The New Democrats have long been the only voice in Alberta calling for a ban on corporate and union donations and for a lower individual donation limit.

Unsurprisingly, in the last week in this Assembly we've heard repeatedly from this Justice minister that changes to the election finances act don't include a reduction of the $30,000 limit or a change to the loopholes. With this government, Mr. Speaker, it's a foregone conclusion that there will be no ban on corporate donations.

The ability of corporations and wealthy Albertans to purchase influence with this government is something that needs to change immediately. Albertans need a government elected by citizens, not dollars. Middle-class Albertans want a hard-working, transparent, and ethical government. What do the dollars of corporations and wealthy PC donors mean to the average Alberta family? Corruption, complacency, and welfare for the wealthiest.

It's time to clean this house, Mr. Speaker. It's time for this Premier and her government to take responsibility for the legislation that they've created. When the election finances amendment act is introduced in the House, the New Democrats will be seeking significant changes to it. We need strong and principled election finances legislation on this issue. It is the only way to protect our democracy and finally have a government that cares about the needs of middle-class Albertans.

Thank you.

Read In Week

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, even in today's world of texting and technology such as I'm using, nothing compares to a good book. That's why I'm pleased to stand today to highlight a great event that happened in Edmonton and area high schools earlier this month. Read In Week is a celebration of reading and the difference it can make in our lives.

Reading opens us up to a world of imagination. Through a good book we can stand toe to toe with a tyrannosaurus rex, fly a rocket, solve mysteries, or learn why the sky is blue. Events like Read In Week remind us of the magic of a good book and the joy of reading and being read to. From October 1 to 5 schools opened their doors to scores of volunteers and several members of this very Legislature, who joined classes in order to share a good book.

For those of us with children or grandchildren, we know the importance of reading to them. Reading helps our kids to be better learners. They come to the classroom with expanded minds, new perspectives, and knowledge. Reading inspires students to be engaged thinkers who are creative and innovative. It helps them understand language, develop problem-solving skills, and appreciate the world beyond their doorsteps.

Through events like Read In Week and with the participation of students, parents, teachers, and the whole community we can all do our part in ensuring literacy flourishes now and in Alberta's future. Congratulations to everyone involved in this valuable initiative, and thank you for your dedication to reading and literacy for all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, in recognition of this, I will be tabling five copies of the book The Gophers in Farmer Burrows' Field by Mr. Mike Boldt, whom I previously introduced. A children's book has never been tabled in this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Ferruginous Hawk Habitat

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the prairie grasslands of Alberta a gentleman by the name of Dr. Josef Schmutz has dedicated the last 28 years to the recovery of the ferruginous hawk. The ferruginous hawk is the largest of its species in North America. This hawk is so big that it's often mistaken for an eagle. This bird of prey has been classified as endangered by the Alberta Wildlife Act, and it's classified as a schedule 1 threatened species by the federal government.

Dr. Schmutz has spent the last 28 years building nesting sites and studying this majestic bird of prey in the Bullpound area, just south of Hanna. In late February and early March of this year Dr. Schmutz discovered that his work was undermined by the removal of 16 of these nesting sites built to help with the recovery and the breeding of these hawks. I know, Mr. Speaker, that this sounds like a reiteration of my questions earlier, but I view that it's of significant importance to the constituents of my area and to the species.

The removal of the nests was in direct violation of the federal Species at Risk Act, section 33, and that is the responsibility of Sustainable Resource Development to enforce. All this seems to be being brushed off, sir, based on a yet-to-be-approved transmission line. This is wrong. This is not how Albertans expect our endangered species to be treated. To date there has been no action taken by SRD to prosecute the parties responsible for this violation of the SARA or the Alberta Wildlife Act.

Environmental stewardship is critical to protect Alberta's ecological systems and to protect the environment. However, this is just the latest case of PC mismanagement when it comes to taking care of the environment. Instead of doing simple things like protecting the nests of endangered hawks, they're busy coming up with multimillion-dollar central planning schemes or spending billions of dollars of corporate welfare to pump hot air into the ground.

Thank you, sir, for your time.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation.

Bill 4

Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act

Mr. Scott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise to introduce Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, 2012.

This legislation is due in large part to the diligent efforts of staff, some of whom are here today and who were recognized earlier. These are public servants who have worked tirelessly as this new legislation was developed. I thank them for their ongoing dedication to this and other projects they are working on.

Mr. Speaker, the introduction of the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act strengthens the commitment of this government to the values of accountability, transparency, transformation, and promoting confidence in the public sector. For this reason the act is focused on public-sector organizations as opposed to private corporations. We will be a leader in Canada because of the scope of the public sector covered by this protection. Public-sector entities that will be covered by this act include the Alberta public service; agencies, boards, and commissions; academic institutions; school boards; and health organizations. Other organizations may be included at a later date upon their request.

Mr. Speaker, there are possibly individuals working in these public-sector organizations that have observed wrongdoings in the course of their employment and may have feared reprisal for reporting them. This act will protect them by prohibiting retaliation in response to such disclosures and will establish a formal process through which reporting and investigations into wrongdoing can be conducted.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a first time]

Speaker's Ruling Tabling Documents

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we get into tablings, let me remind you that tablings may be preceded by only a very brief description of the item you are tabling. Please do not use tablings as an opportunity to make a member's statement or a mini member's statement or what have you. Let's try and abide by that if we could today and see how it goes.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture to start us off.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, indeed, have four tablings today to table in the House. First of all, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of the annual reports for the Alberta Foundation for the Arts, the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation, and the Wild Rose Foundation.

Last of all, I'll be tabling a list of Alberta children's authors relating to the theme of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar talking about Alberta's children's books and Mike Boldt, who is, indeed, an Alberta author and illustrator. These Alberta writers have a collection of wonderful local literature that tells Alberta's story in beautifully illustrated books. I'm happy to table the list of authors.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to table five copies, the requisite number of books, of The Gophers in Farmer Burrows' Field by Mr. Mike Boldt.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling six documents. The first one is the 2004 needs identification document, volume 1 and volume 2.

The second document is the 2009 10-year long-term plan.

The third document is the 2009 10-year long-term plan pamphlet.

The fourth document is the report, Canadian-Northwest-California Transmission Options Study.

The fifth document is the Critical Transmission Review Committee report.

The sixth document is the cost monitoring committee ministerial order with the three pertinent sections – 14, 21, and 23 – that I have referred to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is from Susan Tripp. Susan Tripp has asked me to table this and explain very briefly that this was a situation where her husband hurt his back and waited for an MRI for many months, 18 months actually, had to wait a great deal of time to see a specialist, and then was told the surgery was in B.C., but he couldn't get it there. It's a heartbreaking story.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I agree. I'm sure it is. If you could just tighten up the tabling as requested, that would be appreciated. Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: Anyway, he was not able to receive that treatment in due time and wasn't able to have it in Alberta. As I've heard tablings last an hour here sometimes, I hope that that would be sufficient, that she's now on the record. Here are five copies.

Speaker's Ruling Tabling Documents

The Speaker: Hon. member, thank you for that observation. The reason I made the comment I did today was because of some tablings you had made yesterday, which I thought exceeded the normal time frame for tablings. Please understand that we are one of few jurisdictions that actually does allow these types of tablings. There are other jurisdictions that don't allow them at all, so it's a privilege to do a tabling. I would ask you, please: let's try and just tighten them up. That's all I'm asking. Thank you. You have a second tabling?

Mr. Anderson: Yes. The second tabling is from Ms Helen Erickson, and it's regarding a very lengthy note, again a very sad story. To be very brief, she would like to see regulation of private facilities that treat people with addictions. There are regulations for public treatment centres but not for private treatment centres, and she would like to see that, so a tabling in that respect.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, do you have a tabling?

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce five requisite copies of a letter dated July 11, 2012, to the Wildrose caucus from Bow Valley College in which they outlined various donations made to the Progressive Conservative Association of Alberta.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, followed by the hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Strankman: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to just table five copies of pictures of the endangered species animal that I was speaking about today, and it relates to my presentation.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of the Alberta Transportation three-year construction plan, 2012 to 2015. Once again, today in the House, though the question has been answered before, opposition asked where to find the priority list for what's been approved. Since they can't seem to find their way to transportation.alberta.ca, I thought I would make it easy.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, please. You know, this is what gets the House going. It really does. I'm going to ask – this is my first admonition in this respect with regard to members' statements. However, it is 3 o'clock, and I'm recognizing the hon. Government House Leader now.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't know whether there are further tablings, but I would ask for unanimous consent to allow the completion of the Routine if there are.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader has asked for unanimous consent to proceed beyond 3 o'clock in order to allow us to conclude Routine. Is anyone opposed to that motion? Please say no.

The Speaker: Thank you. Let us proceed on. Are there other tablings?

If not, hon. members, I would like to make a tabling. Pursuant to section 63(1) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, section 95(1) of the Health Information Act, and section 44(1) of the Personal Information Protection Act the chair is pleased to table with the Assembly the annual report of the Information and Privacy Commissioner. This report covers the activities of the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner for the period April 1, 2011, to March 31, 2012.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 5 New Home Buyer Protection Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs or someone on behalf of the hon. minister. The Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to move the New Home Buyer Protection Act for second reading.

The New Home Buyer Protection Act is a very – I was going to say long-awaited but, certainly, long-anticipated piece of legislation which will provide homebuyers in this province with a higher degree of protection. We've had in place in this province for a considerable period of time now a number of new-home warranty programs, but those new-home warranty programs have not provided ubiquitous coverage to all new-home buyers. This New Home Buyer Protection Act will in fact extend that coverage to ensure that every homebuyer in the province knows that they have, for one of the largest purchases they will make in their lives, the coverage, the protection of a new-home warranty.

The act goes to a considerable amount of effort to ensure that while it does not interfere with the ability of an individual Albertan to build their own home or to be their own prime contractor, in the event that they do so and intend to resell the house into the market in future years, the new-home buyer's protection will extend to that house as well.

It's a fairly comprehensive act. It's an act which completes the circle with respect to new-home protection but protection which is absolutely necessary because, as I said, Mr. Speaker, a new-home purchase is probably one of the most significant purchases any Albertan will make in their life.

I would commend it to the House for second reading, and I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

Bill 1

Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2012

The Chair: We will continue with the debate on amendment A1. Are there questions or comments to be offered? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Chair, thank you for the opportunity to speak to this bill, my first opportunity. After submitting an amendment to the bill, I would like to suggest that I could proceed with some further discussion about the bill.

The Chair: Hon. member, we have amendment A1 on the floor. We'll deal with that amendment.

Dr. Swann: Thank you for your reminder, Mr. Chair. I stand in support of the amendment and will actually be taking the amendment further.

The diagnosis of posttraumatic stress disorder is a bona fide medical, psychological diagnosis. It's important that we recognize first responders – fire, police, emergency workers – for the work they have done and for the important stresses and strains and trauma that they themselves experience.

What strikes me as surprising is that we would in some way both intervene in a WCB process of assessing merits of the diagnosis of PTSD as they apply to an individual but also that we would single out particular professionals as being more legitimate in their response to these stresses with a particular diagnosis of PTSD.

The recognition in this amendment by the fourth party that this is critically important, that it be extended and equally accessible to child care workers, prison guards, those who see horrific things on a daily, weekly, or monthly basis and who have their own particular emotional response and their own particular ability to deal with the stresses and strains of their particular exposures based on their background, their own health, their own makeup is a fundamental responsibility of this Legislature, to ensure the fairness of this process and, in fact, not to interfere with the very no-fault insurance process that we have set up under the auspices of the WCB. They have competent professionals: physicians, nurses, psychologists. They have a team of those who assess people's claims. To begin to set up a two-tiered system around PTSD strikes me as being very inappropriate and very problematic.

What I would like to say is: surely in this Legislature we can acknowledge these important first responders. We can say thank you, as the Member for Peace River did last night, to these first responders. We do not need to make a law to say thank you. We do not need to make a law to make it easier for certain professionals over others to get the compensation they deserve.

It's a travesty of the use of this Legislature to begin to pick and choose winners in this no-fault insurance program that has served reasonably well. It has many problems. It has many challenges. It has for some a weak appeal process. It has some lack of objectivity. It has some of the wrong incentives, that we can talk about another time. But we have set this no-fault insurance organization there to ensure that we compensate people who are injured. In this case it's a particular injury we call PTSD. Why on earth would we distinguish between certain people who have PTSD and work in a certain profession and make it somehow easier for them to get compensation than other groups?

It makes no sense, Mr. Chairman. It is going to embarrass us as a government to do this. It will come back to haunt us. It will create rivalries and antagonisms and hard feelings across our professional sectors. To be prejudging the role of the Workers' Compensation Board and their competence in defining what is compensable and what is not compensable PTSD is beyond the scope of this Legislature. We should not be dabbling in this. If we're going to do it, at least extend to those professionals we know suffer from PTSD and have submitted claims equal to the number of claims that have been submitted by first responders: in the child care area, in the peace officer area, in the prison guard area, in many other areas.

Really, I will be moving on after this debate to ask the Legislature, if we're going to go down this road – and I don't think it's a good decision to go down this road – we must simply say that we want to ensure that all professionals, all people who are under Workers' Compensation Board coverage be assessed equally, fairly, and responsibly in relation to their compensability.

I cannot accept the bill as it's written. I can support an extension of the bill with other professionals included, including those that the member has promoted.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Speaking to amendment A1, presented by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I stand to speak in support of this amendment. I do believe that she has got it right on this, that the men and women who serve in our penitentiaries, both federal and provincial, deserve the same sort of presumptive care that we are offering to our first responders whether they be police, fire, or EMT. These men and women are faced with very serious situations on a daily basis. Some of the most, I guess, rough and tough people in our society are put in jails for a reason, and these naturally become environments that have necessity for first response whether it be a fight, whether it be someone getting – you know, maybe I see too many movies – shanked, or if they walk into a suicide.

I think that the evidence is there. When you look at the WCB and how many cases of correctional officers they have offered PTSD coverage for in the last two and a half years, it is equal to the number of firefighters or the number of police. I do not believe that including this segment of our population and calling them first responders and giving them the presumptive nature of this care is going to open the door for many other amendments, as some of the hon. members would like to see. But definitely in this instance, where men and women are putting their lives on the line in first response, critical situations and their lives are in danger, I do believe – and it's completely reasonable for me to see that happening – that this is the type of amendment that will work well. I do believe that like our very strong and capable members of EMT, police, peace officers, and firefighters, we should recognize these individuals in this bill as well.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I also rise, and I will be in favour of this bill.

An Hon. Member: Amendment.

Mr. Anglin: Hang on. I will be in favour of this bill, but when I look at this amendment – I just had a slight stall before I got to the amendment – I'm in favour of this amendment for a very technical reason.

As a former first responder what I'd like to do is tell this House and this Assembly that there really are two different types of first responders. There is the broader term, which is the very first person who shows up on the scene, and there are a number of first responders that would qualify for that. Then there are those first responders who show up to put their lives on the line. Those are the people who actually answer the call when they know it is a deadly situation that they are going into. Firefighters are one of those, police officers are another, and so are sheriffs. You may think that sheriffs just answer these calls when they are pulling someone over for a speeding ticket, but they are first on the scene in a number of deadly situations.

The correctional officers are no different except that their condition is actually significantly different than that of a sheriff or of a police officer. Having served as a police officer, I would never want to serve as a correctional officer. I don't like that idea of being confined with a bunch of deadly people in a locked-in place. I like my escape route to be clear to me.

The reality is this. Prison life is extremely dangerous. I have been privy to an example of actually turning over a prisoner who got away, got out from his restraints, and had to be physically restrained by multiple correctional officers, some of whom were harmed as a direct result. When two prisoners battle it out, which is often the case, it is the correctional officer who has to intervene. Weapons are generally manufactured. They're confronted with this every day. They are in harm's way when they go to work, and when trouble starts in a prison or in a correctional institution, they are the first responder.

To my colleague who introduced the motion: to me it is a very well-thought-out and significant motion to amend the definition of the individuals that would have this presumptive condition. Again, we're not talking about adding any other medical care. We're just talking about the presumption. In my opinion these people qualify as first responders more than some others and more than sometimes I did.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Yes, Mr. Chair. I'd like to speak in support of the amendment from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I could be wrong – and I wouldn't mind hearing from the other side if I'm missing this – but my understanding is that under this act correctional officers in Alberta are covered by Bill 1. No, they're not either. Okay. So this is just an oversight of correctional members both by the feds and the province.

They're covered, but there's not a presumption that any posttraumatic stress disorder that is diagnosed is because of their job, and therefore it's a little bit more difficult for them to get coverage. I think that it makes sense. I do concur in the idea that correctional officers should be put on the same playing field along with other first responders like firefighters, like police officers, and so forth. I think it's just as dangerous a job in those prison environments.

I don't see the harm in this. I mean, this is pretty basic. This would give those folks peace of mind, especially in that culture. Every culture is different, and I don't pretend to know what the culture of corrections officers is. I've never been one, and I've never been in jail yet. [interjections] That's right. That's right.

My guess is that it's much like other first responders, where it's very difficult for those folks – please, hon. members, do stand if you'd like to speak to this amendment as well – to come forward and admit that they have a problem even if they've been diagnosed. So I think that this would give them that protection. It would allow them to be treated for PTSD in a very quick manner or a very efficient manner when compared to having to prove that it was from their job that they were suffering this diagnosis and so forth.

I think it's clear that they're going to see and hear stuff everyday that, you know, is just going to be very disturbing. They're going to be dealing with folks who have in a lot of cases killed other people, have violated young people, have done all kinds of heinous, heinous crimes, and they're going to hear some graphic details on that. They're going to see things. Some of them are going to see suicides. They're going to see drug deals. They're going to see all these different things, and then they're going to try to break those things up in a lot of cases.

So I think that it's very important that we recognize that this is a good amendment, that this is something that will certainly bring correctional service officers up to the same level as our other first responders, where they should be. I really think that the cost of this will be quite negligible. I mean, we're already going the extra mile. We're covering peace officers, we're covering sheriffs, and we're covering police officers, firemen, making an automatic presumption, which is good.

I agree that we can't be going into other categories; for example, social service workers. Fantastic people. There are times when the job of social workers has the effect of giving them PTSD in certain circumstances if they're dealing with a multitude of terrible situations that some social workers have to deal with. But I think there are enough social workers that aren't in those situations where they have to deal with it that it would be very hard to say: okay; we're just going to assume that if anybody who is a social worker has PTSD, it's because of their work. I think that would be too much of a leap to make. I think that should be proved on an individual-by-individual basis. In some cases it absolutely, clearly would be from their work.

I think that's the difference between a first responder and someone who is not a first responder. I think that corrections workers at correctional facilities are on the front lines. They do have to respond to things immediately and see things and are involved in altercations and so forth that must be very, very difficult and in some ways even more difficult than for a lot of folks who are first responders.

Yeah, I think this would be a great amendment. I support it, and I hope that members of this Assembly would contemplate doing so as well when the time for a vote comes.

The Chair: I'll recognize the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you. Members of the House, we in the government and, indeed, all law-abiding citizens of Alberta demand of our justice system that criminals are arrested, processed through the court system, and when found guilty, segregated from society. Then for the most part we put them out of our minds either consciously or subconsciously, sort of out of sight, out of mind. But they are not out of the sights and minds of our corrections officers. These men and women are our front line of defence. They protect us from these people, the very worst of our society. They deal with them every minute, every hour in every shift that they serve. To deny them the same treatment we have for police and firefighters and EMTs is just not right.

I support this amendment, and I would urge everyone else in the House to support it as well. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Government House Leader and then the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will be brief. I just wanted to rise to speak and oppose this amendment. It's not a question of whether or not corrections officers do important work for us. Of course they do important work for us. The intention of Bill 1 is to provide presumptive coverage. The Workers' Compensation Board, under a policy that was adopted, I believe a year ago now, provides coverage for posttraumatic stress disorder for any worker who's covered by WCB who has posttraumatic stress disorder as a result of their work and their work conditions. The purpose of putting presumptive coverage in place for first responders is a recognition of the trauma that our first responders face as a regular part of their job. On a day-to-day basis police officers are responding to horrific situations. Certainly, emergency and medical technicians respond to vehicle accidents and respond to situations of trauma. Those are day-to-day occurrences in the course of their work.

We could go through and find each and every category of worker and say: in what percentage of their work might a person be expected to have a traumatic incident? Suffice it to say that that's not really the intention here. The intention is to start – as we did, actually, with the recognition of presumptive coverage for certain forms of cancer that occur in a firefighter's work, for example – with the presumptive coverage to cover the three areas where we know that people on a regular basis are faced with trauma in the course of their work, and we know that it has an impact on their lives. We know that most of the employers in those circumstances have programs in place, and even the employee work groups have processes in place to help each other deal with the tragedy, the trauma that they face every day, but it is an everyday expectation or occurrence.

In the case of the specific amendment with respect to corrections services one would assume that in a prison situation there's quite a controlled process. Yes, indeed, there are some events that happen from time to time. There are tragedies. There are situations where a prisoner might commit suicide, or there might be an altercation, but we wouldn't anticipate in that type of controlled circumstance that these would be the everyday occurrences that we might expect an emergency medical technician would have to face. So that's the difference here.

If we go on to anticipate some of the other areas that have been raised in the past few days, you know, such as social workers, I have a great deal of empathy for social workers. I think in our own ministry the people that work with us deal with some of the horrific things that children can face across the province. There's no question that there could be traumatic impact. Quite frankly, I'm not sure how some of those people actually do the jobs that they do for Albertans on a day-to-day basis. We really do appreciate the work that they do.

Again, we're getting into a situation – and here I would have to at my peril agree with the hon. Member for Airdrie – where you can't go through and sort of analyze the job on a day-to-day basis and say: how often do you expect that type of situation to be occurring in a nurse's or a social worker's life? Yes, there are other professions and occupations where people face trauma. There are other circumstances where something that's absolutely horrific might come into a person's life, and it may in fact cause posttraumatic stress disorder which needs to be dealt with and thus comes under the purview of workers' compensation.

I think we should be guided very carefully here, move forward carefully. The purpose of Bill 1 is to include our first responders. I think that that's where we should stick for the moment. We should see what kind of experiences we have. Perhaps at some point in time it would be appropriate to have a committee of the House look at this particular section and say who should be in and who should be out and for what reasons, but I don't think that we should just pick people and put them into the act because we think they have important jobs. All Albertans do important jobs. Some Albertans choose to work in areas that can be particularly stressful and sometimes traumatic.

Some Albertans act on our behalf on a day-to-day basis as first responders to go into the worst situations that we have and to assist Albertans when they're in those types of things. Those are the people that we're putting in this first iteration, at least, of presumptive coverage for PTSD, and I would encourage the House to consider a careful approach to this rather than a broad stroke of including some people and leaving other people out. Include the first responders that we know do this on a day-to-day basis on behalf of Albertans, and leave others for a closer examination, if people wish to, before a legislative committee or some other forum and then come back at a later date if that proves to be an appropriate addition.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Little Bow.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm certainly very interested in speaking in favour of and supporting this amendment to include corrections staff in Bill 1 and the benefits that Bill 1 outlines. You know, it's interesting how we have just heard that the government is encouraging us not to choose people, but in fact that's what they're doing here, making distinctions and leaving some people out, some members and some workers that by definition, by legal definition and certainly by what they actually do and experience in their jobs, are exactly the same as any other first responder.

The Criminal Code of Canada itself defines the prison wardens, deputy wardens, keepers, jailers, guards, and officers as peace officers, in fact, under the federal Corrections and Conditional Release Act, 1992. According to federal law these employees are, in fact, already in the same group as that which this bill is trying to encompass. Again, I find that to be, perhaps, an oversight, or perhaps it's something that wasn't looked at as carefully as it should have been, but here we are in the Legislature with a great opportunity to include corrections officers under the coverage that Bill 1 suggests.

Also, the provincial Corrections Act, from our own laws, acts as though the duties in federal prisons are defined by federal legislation, so we're tied in that way, too. Within the prison environment there is absolutely no question that corrections officers are responding as the first responders to many traumatic incidents. They are left with very difficult, dangerous, and traumatizing duties, and they encounter violence on a very regular basis.

Statistics from the office of the correctional investigator provide us with a glimpse of the daily risks and incidents that doesn't sound too different, really, from a police officer and what they encounter on the outside. In 2011-2012, for example, 814 incidents were investigated by the correctional investigator, and the correctional investigator, I believe, was a former member of this Assembly. Of these incidents 84 involved emergency response teams, 600 used restraining devices, and a dozen incidents involved the use of firearms by correctional staff. By definition, by circumstance, in reality these are exactly the same incidents that we are trying to cover for other groups outside of a prison with this Bill 1. I say that corrections staff reasonably should belong to this group as well.

The quite unreasonable and illogical, I would suggest, exclusion of corrections officers from this legislation is a big concern to the workers that are actually doing the jobs themselves, including the Union of Canadian Correctional Officers, of which we had a group delegation here just a few days ago. They know that their members fulfill all of the first responder responsibilities that take place in prisons. This legislation is not encompassing their members, and they consider it to be a grave oversight that has to be fixed with this amendment, which I believe we developed in consultation with them, in fact. It's not just coming out of the air.

If we don't accept this amendment, the province is making divisions and not treating all first responders in the same way and creating a patchwork system with a hierarchy of needs and coverage according to where people happen to be working, not whether they are, in fact, first responders and experiencing, potentially, trauma as a result. Workers in our prisons deserve the same presumptive coverage as all other first responders, and we certainly will fight vigorously and, I think, with quite a number of members here, maybe even from all sides, that would consider this amendment as a reasonable addition to what otherwise could be a very productive and useful bill and law here in the province of Alberta.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Little Bow, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you. I'm up to speak in favour of this amendment. I think corrections officers are key and crucial and also part of being first responders in this province. Again, as my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre stated, I mean, they deal with everything day to day on these issues also.

I think this is a great bill to begin with, this Bill 1, but I think we need to also identify all the peace officers in this province, who every day don't know exactly what they're walking into, especially a sheriff or a corrections officer. For anybody that's had the opportunity to go into one of the fine facilities in our province, it's not for the weak of heart. I think that they definitely have their lives on the line also.

With the posttraumatic stress syndrome that we're trying to deal with here, I think this is something that we should be in support of also.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to rise again to speak to this amendment, that would include corrections officers under the presumptive coverage that is provided through Bill 1. I'm hoping at this point to have a little bit more of a back and forth with members of the government because I remain truly perplexed about why it is that corrections officers are excluded from this legislation. I will say that I've made in the past a couple of rhetorical suggestions that maybe what we were really doing was judging the victims or, you know, talking about sort of the photo op potential of the work that each group does, but I really didn't honestly think that that was what was going on. As I say, I remain perplexed about why corrections officers are not included.

Now, we will have a discussion further on with a different amendment about the work of other types of people and whether or not they should be covered under this legislation with respect to the presumption, but I'm just talking about corrections officers. When the Minister of Human Services got up, he very quickly moved into a discussion of other occupations who he didn't believe were appropriately included under this bill. He didn't really focus his explanation on why it is that corrections officers are excluded from coverage under this bill.

If for a moment you accept the government's explanation that what we're really doing here is that we want to narrow it really, really carefully to those who do first responses, who are first responders, who are trained to be first responders, who are compelled, through both the culture as well as the workplace direction as well as what they're trained to do, to put themselves at risk, then there is no difference between the different types of first responders that the government has included in this bill and the corrections officers. As other people have also argued, I would suggest that it is actually possible to argue that they are faced with those traumatic situations in some cases even more frequently than some of the other first responders who were identified by members of the government through this bill. So I truly want an explanation from this government.

Now, last night the associate minister went on a long, grand soliloquy about how what this really is about is thanking our first responders and that if we question this, well, then we're questioning our thanking of the first responders. Really, that's what he said over and over and over again. Beyond that he was unable to provide any foundational fact-based, research-based, policy analysis-based explanation for why we were excluding corrections officers. He wasn't able to point to the difference in the work, the difference in the legal status between them, the difference in their obligations, the difference in frequency of traumatic events, the difference in what the employer expects of them in their workplace. He wasn't able to point to any of those kinds of issues.

Now, the minister in charge of Human Services overall suggested: well, what we're doing is that we're trying to compensate those fairly through the presumption who have this obligation to show up at traumatizing situations and accident sites as a regular part of their job. Fair enough. Now, even that definition, which is more narrow, could be quite easily applied to a rather long list of people, but let's just say that we're just talking about those people who are in uniforms, who are authorized to be armed, who are expected to physically intervene in emergency situations and are expected to provide medical care on an emergent basis, no matter the extent and the degree of the trauma that they are faced with when they get to that emergency situation. If you're doing it even in that very, very narrow way, again, nobody on the other side has been able to provide an explanation for why it is that corrections officers are not included. Corrections officers have to do that.

Now, the Minister of Human Services said: well, you know, I think it's possible that in the prison system we can presume things are under control, so it's not quite as volatile, and it's not quite as risky as it is when you're a police officer showing up in the middle of a robbery or you're showing up at a traffic accident. I will say that it is not as a result of having watched every episode of Oz that I'm saying this. I am saying this instead because I, as I've said before, had the privilege of representing corrections officers for three or four years when I first became a lawyer.

Indeed, I was one of the people that ran one of the first hearings in front of the Occupational Health and Safety Council and, if I recall correctly, it was a two-day hearing where we called about nine or 10 witnesses, corrections officers each one of them, before the Occupational Health and Safety Council, where each of them described their work, went through documents which showed near miss reports, accident reports, professional responsibility reports, all those kinds of things, and also in great detail talked about what it meant when best practices were at that time periodically overlooked by management.

At that time best practices were to avoid double-bunking. Now, of course, as many people who follow the discussion in corrections know, we've long since moved past double-bunking. We're ratcheted up to triple-bunking now, in particular in the remand centre here in Edmonton. The research is clear; the objective fact-collection processes are clear. When you do that, the level of violence and level of traumatic and uncontrollable and violent incidents goes up.

So when the minister says, "Oh, I think there's really a fair amount of control there, and they're all really fairly safe," I would urge him to look at the record of the Occupational Health and Safety Council, which actually wrote a decision on this back in the early '90s. I would urge him to look at any or all of the occupational health and safety research out there about the state of our prisons and the frequency of the traumatic and violent events that occur in those settings because the fact of the matter is that it is intense, people. It is really intense.

These people go to work every day, and they, just like the other first responders who are covered under this legislation, agree to put themselves at risk when they walk through that door every morning. When they put on their weapon and they put on their uniform and they walk into that not-so-very-controlled setting, where a whole bunch of people who are the top 10, the most popular of the criminals that the other first responders had to sift through, who are all nicely collected and concentrated in this building, which is overfilled, with inadequate safety prevention initiatives in place – because, as we know, as has been commented on by I believe it was a Court of Appeal judge, but maybe it was a Queen's Bench judge here in Alberta within the last two or three years, our remand centre is a travesty. We have some serious problems in terms of how we're able to manage and maintain the safety of not only the corrections officers but, quite frankly, the inmates in that setting.

Again, anyone who has spent a little bit of time with the Solicitor General or, in this case, the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities, who at one point was the Solicitor General, would know that that is the environment that has developed in our prisons and remand centres across the province. To suggest, then, that these folks are not first responders in every way, shape, or form as the other first responders who have been identified is illogical, Mr. Chair. It is absolutely illogical, and there is no rationale for it. It is frustrating for me that we cannot get an explanation from this government because it would be good governance to include these people.

Now, previously the minister also said, "Well, everybody is eligible for PTSD coverage," but let's just be entirely clear here. The literature is unequivocal on this that the vast number of people do not apply for PTSD coverage. The same cultural inhibitions that work within the ranks of firefighters and police officers and EMT professionals also exist and function within the ranks of corrections officers. Often they just simply don't apply, or if they do apply, what they do is go to long-term disability because long-term disability is not as intrusive and as painful as workers' compensation is. But when you say that they get compensated, does the minister really believe that only 22 Albertans in the last two years have developed posttraumatic stress disorder in this province? Do you really believe, based on all the research, that that is the actual number of people with posttraumatic stress disorder arising from traumatic events in their workplace? That's a ridiculously naive assumption.

The fact of the matter is that that is simply not the case. The case is that most don't apply, and the number that do apply go through such hell that they actually withdraw their applications before they're even considered, or they withdraw them partway through the process, or they're outright rejected. The fact of the matter is that although in theory PTSD is covered in this province, the obstacle course that claimants have to go through, the degree to which they have to subject their life, their history, their family, their medical records, their marriage counselling sessions – I mean, all of these things are things that the WCB demands and succeeds in getting from someone who claims for PTSD.

If you as a corrections officer witness and are part of a violent exchange that results, let's say, in someone being brutally stabbed and beaten and you yourself are almost brutally stabbed and beaten in that and you file a claim for PTSD, you can bet that if you've been to see a counsellor for marriage counselling, the WCB will absolutely demand to have access to those records, and they will demand the opportunity to speak to your wife or, God forbid, your ex-wife to find out whether there is another way in which your PTSD can be explained. Because the onus is on you to show that it was that brutal stabbing that caused the PTSD, all they have to show is: well, you know, five years ago he was pretty wacky with his wife, and she's a totally objective witness in this case. You know what? We've created doubt. They haven't made their case; they don't get compensation for PTSD.

So it is really quite misleading for the minister to say that all Albertans are eligible for or entitled to coverage for PTSD in this province because the way the WCB administers that right now is extremely onerous, extremely invasive. In many cases it actually reinjures them, and I've seen doctors' reports that have actually supported this notion. The process of WCB adjudication is in and of itself an injury. I've actually seen the WCB, when on the most rare of occasions someone is able to actually afford a lawyer, be compelled to compensate people for the injury that they created as a result of their adjudication process, particularly as it relates to mental health issues.

We go back to the fact that the presumption, then, is a progressive and wonderful move forward, and it is something that the government should be congratulated on. But I continue to stand here waiting for someone over there to take the time to provide a rational, thoughtful, well-researched, justifiable explanation why these hard-working first responders who work in our corrections system are being excluded from coverage by this legislation. It makes no sense, Mr. Chairman. It smacks of the worst of political opportunism on the part of this government. If they're not prepared to give us the research for why correctional officers are excluded, then they should do the right thing and vote in favour of this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think the hon. member already pointed out the misstatement. Earlier the member from across the aisle mentioned something about social workers, and that's not in this amendment. What this amendment is dealing with is correctional officers and the definition of correctional officers.

I think there might be a misunderstanding of what a correctional officer does and the danger correctional officers put themselves in on a daily basis. I do have a solution. I think someone needs to go over and get themselves involved in a jail and see what these people actually go through. I just pulled up some quick statistics on this issue. Fifty-four correctional officers have died in the line of duty in Canada as compared to 133 police officers. These are first responders.

One of the things that is paramount about posttraumatic stress disorder is the stress level, and I want you to think about this. Put yourself in the prison. Put yourself behind the bars, behind those locked gates. The minute you walk to work, that stress level picks up, and the threat is constant. When I drove a cruiser, I only felt that threat when the call for help came and I was brought into a dangerous situation. But for correctional officers that threat is paramount. Every minute, every hour, every second of their daily duty they are in harm's way.

To say that we're sort of picking and choosing: I would disagree with that member's comment. We're not picking and choosing. What we're identifying is an aspect of this bill where we've left out one segment of society that puts their life on the line every day and lives with that stress every day. I have to tell you that some of these young women, some of these young men who go there are face to face with the element of our society that we want locked up. We want them locked up for our own protection. We need them locked up. That's really important. Those are the ones that we rely on to make sure that these people that are locked up stay locked up and don't harm other people in that facility.

I would actually say that to not approve this motion is sort of callous in the sense of looking at these correctional officers as if they do not matter, when the fact is that they matter sometimes, I think, the most.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you. Let me speak as a current paramedic that still works the car when I find the time available. To be clear, correctional officers do put it on the line every day. It is a stressful job. There's no doubt that there are people that have seen things in there that suffer from posttraumatic stress syndrome. There's no doubt in my mind.

However, the intent of this bill was to talk about the people, particularly in Edmonton and Calgary, that do the hundreds of thousands of calls every year, hundreds of thousands. Now, responding to whether it's correctional facilities in Calgary or Edmonton, they are not as frequent, and let me tell you that it's we who respond with tactical teams, the tactical paramedics, the tactical SWAT teams, when things really hit the fan.

Again, I don't want to detract from what correctional officers do. They're important. Let me say that again. They're important. But in passing this bill, the intent was to thank the people that every day, whether it's in a volunteer capacity in a rural setting, in a professional setting in the cities and in some of the bedroom committees – it's important for us to recognize this.

I'll speak to this member who has proposed this change. We've had some interactions over the years. In fact, any time that we get into this debate, we like to take the opportunity to thank these people because we're trying to include all of these people. Here's a good example. For the parent who has a child fall out the window, technically they are the very first responder, and more often than not they suffer from posttraumatic stress syndrome. That takes them away from their families and their jobs. We have to have the ability to draw the line for the people who choose this as a profession, not only from a humanitarian perspective but from a perspective of making it sustainable, making sure that the job is attractive, because we know that they go to work and do these hundreds of thousands of calls every day.

Let me go back to the tactical police and paramedics that respond to the Edmonton Max or other various correctional facilities here in the province. They don't have the ability to lock it down, lock down the entire province and lock down the entire city like a correctional facility would do for a number of days until it calms down. What they do is take off their tactical uniform, put their regular uniform back on, and get back out on the street to save the choking children, to save the grandparents and the parents that are having heart attacks.

I'm not in favour of this motion. I am in favour of correctional officers and the work that they do. They're important. If the evidence and the traumatic incidents increase, I would be supportive of that motion later being introduced. But at this point the way that this bill stands, I think it's important that we get this ball rolling, protect those who per capita – like, thousands of calls every day. I think that in the city of Calgary for paramedics, EMS, alone there are well over a hundred thousand calls, and that's increasing on a percentage of 7 to 9 per cent per year. In fact, this past year – and I've said it before – 30 per cent call volume. Well, that ties along with community policing and everything else and the sheriffs just as population grows. Now, we all hear when the Edmonton Max and all these other facilities fly off the handle. I think it's important to recognize the high volume right now where we know the evidence is, where we know we can assume that it's presumptive.

Those are my comments. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the comments of the hon. member from the other side, and I appreciate the firsthand experience that he brings to the table. I'm speaking in favour of this amendment on a little different note only because the Bowden Institution is located in my riding and I have many, many friends who are correctional officers and who deal with this type of employment every single day.

One of the things that they constantly talk about is the average day. The average day means that when they leave the house, they have to make sure that every window and every door is locked, they have to make sure their children are walked safely to school, and they have to make sure that they have no listed phone numbers and that their addresses are not known. Then they head off to work to deal with some of the worst people that we don't really want to deal with. That's the start of their day.

Now, inside the prison system – luckily, I've visited but never had an overnight stay, thankfully – they have to deal with a multitude of events. Sometimes it's rape, sometimes it's stabbing, sometimes it's attempted murder, sometimes it's murder, sometimes it's just the day-to-day denigration of these types of individuals, and they're constantly in that negative situation.

One of the things that they constantly tell me is that in their jobs, the requirements of their jobs, they never really get the opportunity to see rehabilitation. Then when you're dealing with that day to day, that provides a stress level. Then they have an event, and there's a psychological stigma that is attached to corrections officers, as there is attached to many people in this field, that doesn't allow them to step forward and say: "This was the event that caused my trauma. Please, I need some help." When they're not able to do that, what ends up happening is that they go back to their families and they self-medicate either through alcohol or drugs or physical violence.

The reality of this legislation is less about what those people are bringing to the table day to day but more about the ability for them to seek medical help without having to be the one that says: it was this event that triggered my event. I think it's important if we want to keep families together and if we want to ensure that we have productive people in these types of jobs that they get the help that they need as soon as possible.

Clearly, we know from WCB stats in all occupations that the sooner the person receives medical attention, the sooner the person receives psychological attention, and the sooner the person is able to go back to their employment, the better off that employee is. The ability to have the presumptive nature put into this legislation for correctional officers allows for a better temperament of people that are dealing with these types of situations.

Another dilemma that we have here is whether or not to cover sheriffs. I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has put forward sheriffs as well.

I personally have a family member who is a sheriff. On a pretty regular basis his daily employment is not that much different than a police officer's or a correctional officer's, those sorts of things. He goes out every day putting his life on the line, and every day he doesn't know what he's going to run into, and he doesn't know what kind of serious incident is going to affect him.

The one thing that keeps coming up is that it's not necessarily the job that they do; it's that it's usually a multitude or a series of events that creates posttraumatic stress disorder. When those series of events happen, then how do you know which event triggered your posttraumatic stress disorder?

Each one of these individual workers is doing their best for Albertans. They're keeping us safe, and they need to be acknowledged for that. They worry about their families. They worry about when the offender leaves the facility. They worry about whether that offender is going to hurt anyone in their family. They worry about whether that offender is going to come after them. Did they have some sort of altercation within the system that caused this offender to be violent? These types of issues and posttraumatic stress disorder directly affect their marriages. You know, the multitude of marriage breakdowns, which ultimately affect their families and ultimately effect negative consequences for their children, is something that can't be ignored.

In reality, if we allowed these correctional officers to be included into this legislation, those officers could seek help immediately, resolve those issues, and get back to work sooner. They could also become much more productive members of their families and allow their families to grow with them and grow in an occupation that is desperately needed in this province.

I can appreciate the comments: "Where do we want to go from here? How much of a nanny state do we want to have?" I can appreciate those comments because I've sat back and, in my decision to support this bill, have had that conversation. I reached out to the stakeholders in my community and had conversations with them. Over and over and over again the message that I heard was: "The clientele that we're dealing with, the type of events that we're dealing with, and the situation in which we deal with those definitely lead us to a higher amount of posttraumatic stress disorder." So I think that going forward the presumption is the right thing to do.

I strongly believe that this bill is a good bill, and I would support this bill wholeheartedly, but I would ask: take a step back, take a look at correctional officers in your communities, have a discussion with them about what they do on a day-to-day basis, and bring that back. I strongly encourage you to support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other comments on amendment A1? The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Chairman. I rise here today also in support of this amendment to Bill 1. This is my first attempt at this, so I'll try to get through it. I think it's a good amendment, brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. To include these individuals in this, I think, is very important. These people do some very dangerous work. I also question the comments made by the Minister of Human Services, not because I don't respect what he has to say and his wealth of knowledge, but I think that the comment that he made I'm going to just maybe counter a bit.

Everyday exposure does not mean PTSD will occur. There's the ability for individuals who have that makeup to actually attend to their job to a high level, and they're able to function. They can do this. They can do this over and over and over, but sometimes they're going to hit an event that just pushes them over the edge. It's something that they didn't anticipate when they walked in that morning, and it just takes one event. I think that's the important part here. It could happen once, and that might not show up right away. I just wanted to counter that statement of: over and over and over. It only takes once. I think that's important.

I think the other thing, too, is that in this regard we're asking certain people to do these jobs that most of us would not want to do, don't aspire to do, never dream of wanting to do. I think that in that situation, when these individuals do get put into a position where they are mentally stressed for whatever reason, it's incumbent upon us to be there for them if they ever do require some kind of treatment for a mental issue, if it is PTSD and determined to be so.

I think one of the reasons that we're actually talking about making this amendment, adding people to this list – this is my personal opinion – is because of the multiple designations we have created in the peacekeeping business, I guess, so to speak. We have police officers. We have sheriffs. We have peace officers. We have an abundant, you know, number of different designations, and I think it was done to basically reduce the responsibility and the cost that each one of these levels of service, that each one of these individual jobs provides. But it doesn't mean that any one of these people may not be called upon to attend an accident or an event that could create some mental anguish or mental stress. In saying that, I think we do owe these people the obligation that should they ever be faced with this, we won't turn our backs on them because they didn't turn their backs on us. Their job/role description may not officially designate them to deal with this on a daily basis, but they are there to do that work for us.

As I wrap this up, I do support, generally, Bill 1. I think there are some amendments that could be brought forward and discussed, and hopefully we can talk about what gets added and what doesn't, but I do generally speak in favour of amendment A1.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's with great pleasure that I get to rise and actually speak on the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2012, Bill 1, and the amendments that have been brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I feel especially privileged to be able to stand up and speak in support of this amendment as the former Solicitor General for the province of Alberta. Knowing full well as the former Solicitor General of the province of Alberta that the correctional facilities were under provincial jurisdiction, I can tell you that after the meetings that I went to on FPTs and some of the tours that I took into some of the federal correctional facilities, I am extremely pleased to be able to stand up and support the members of the Correctional Service of Canada under the Corrections Act and make sure that they're incorporated and included under Bill 1. It makes perfect sense to me that under the work and duress that these corrections officers do on a daily basis in correctional facilities, they should come under this act.

I also noticed that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has talked about the Peace Officer Act and the sheriffs. I was actually with the government when we brought forward the sheriffs into this province, and I've gotten to know the sheriffs throughout this province over the last several years. There's no question that they should also be incorporated in Bill 1, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act.

Mr. Chair, I wanted to stand up. I've had calls from some corrections officers, and I told them that I would be speaking in support of this particular legislation. I will want that on the record, and I'm on the record now.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I think it's important that we remember here that what we're not doing is that we're not saying that just because you work as a correctional officer, you're going to have posttraumatic stress disorder. I would like to share with this House the diagnostic criteria for posttraumatic stress disorder:

one, the person experienced, witnessed, or was confronted with an event or events that involved actual or threatened death or serious injury or a threat to the physical integrity of self or others, and two, the person's response involved intense fear, helplessness, or horror.

For the condition to continue and be diagnosed, they now have to exhibit at least three of these next criteria: intrusive recollections; distressing nightmares; acting, feeling as though the event were reoccurring or having flashbacks; psychological distress when exposed to traumatic reminders; physiological reactivity when exposed to traumatic reminders.

Next segment, two of the following avoidant/numbing symptoms: avoidance of thoughts, feelings, or conversations associated with the stressor; avoidance of activities, places, or people associated with the stressor; inability to recall important aspects of the traumatic event; diminished interest in significant activities; detachment from others; restricted range of affect; sense of foreshortened future.

Next set: sleep problems, irritability, concentration problems, hypervigilance, exaggerated startle response.

The reality is that all we're suggesting here is that when people are diagnosed by a medical doctor, a psychologist looks at an individual in the eye, diagnoses them on these conditions, not an arbitrary WCB employee saying: yes, you look like you must have posttraumatic stress. The bill clearly states that this is the model we're using here. I ask you: is it not reasonable to assume that if a correctional officer is diagnosed with this, they actually got that while doing their job? That's what this amendment says, period.

This is not about thanking first responders for the great job they do and dismissing others. That's not what this is about. This amendment is simply stating that if a correctional officer has been psychologically diagnosed with these conditions, it is then reasonable to assume it's work related, and they have presumptive coverage. That is why this should be a supported amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other speakers to this amendment?

If not, I would call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A1 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:12 p.m.]

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: We will continue with the discussion on the original bill. I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am becoming increasingly less pleased to rise to speak to this bill. Nonetheless, I will still do so to talk about some of the other concerns that we have with respect to the bill as it is currently drafted. Again, as I've said before, it is always important to start by talking about the value of this piece of legislation generally and the dire need for there to be some type of presumptive law when we're dealing with compensation for mental health issues in the workplace and, in particular, when we're dealing with compensation for posttraumatic stress disorder.

I would like, Mr. Chairman, to propose another amendment to this piece of legislation. Obviously, based on the result of the last vote, it does seem unlikely that the government is going to be terribly interested in accepting it. Nonetheless, I believe it is worthwhile.

Ms Blakeman: You should still do the right thing.

Ms Notley: Thank you. The Member for Edmonton-Centre says that it's the right thing either way.

I think it would be worthwhile to put this issue on the agenda so we can have a more clear conversation about this particular issue, which is unfortunately not well addressed through the terms of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I have copies of the amendment with me for distribution. I think it's the right one this time, so I won't confuse people. I will sit down for a moment while it's being distributed and then talk about the substance of the amendment that I'm proposing.

Thank you.

The Chair: This amendment we will be referring to as A2.

Hon. member, to the amendment.

Ms Notley: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to be able to speak about the amendment that I am now putting forward. I apologize for any confusion that my comments last evening might have created for people when I started to read out the amendment that actually was talking about corrections officers and then started reading this particular draft because I had two different files. So I do apologize for this.

Basically, what this proposed amendment is attempting to do is to add health service workers and social workers to Bill 1 so that they, too, would enjoy the benefit of the presumptive coverage offered through Bill 1. The way in which that would be done would be by amending section 2 in the proposed section 24.2 in subsection (1) by renumbering clause (a) as clause (a.1) and by adding the following before clause (a.1):

(a) "emergency health care services provider" means an individual who is engaged in providing emergency medical treatment in an emergency department or trauma unit; and by adding the following after clause (g):

- (h) "social worker" means an individual who is registered as a member of the Alberta College of Social Workers.

Then in subsection (2) striking out "or police officer" wherever it occurs and substituting "police officer, emergency health care services provider or social worker."

As is obvious from what the amendment says, I am proposing to add these two categories of extremely valuable and important and critical contributors to our community to the list of people who would enjoy the benefit of the presumption under the amended Workers' Compensation Act through Bill 1.

Just in terms of definitions when we talk about social workers, it's important to understand, and we've been advised by the College of Social Workers, that those who are registered under the College of Social Workers can include child care workers. It's a broader range than the name would normally imply, and it includes those who are engaged in front-line social service counselling and work, generally speaking. Some of the reasons for this have already been outlined. Social workers confront traumatic situations on a routine basis, and they often respond to difficult domestic situations and cases of public emergency, actually.

I've been contacted by the Alberta College of Social Workers, and they indicate that they truly cannot understand why the government would overlook the services provided by their members. Moreover, they have approached the government but have been unable to get any response. Indeed, in July the college sent letters outlining their concerns to three members of this House: the Premier, the Minister of Human Services, and the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood. These letters requested that social workers be listed as first responders in this act. It was a simple and logical request and one that the government could easily have accepted or, dare I say it, at least considered. In the three months since these three letters were delivered, the college has not even received the courtesy of a response from the Premier, the minister, or the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

I just want to review again why it is that I think it's so important to be able to include these two groups of people in the legislation that we're talking about here today. I apologize if I've said this before, but I think it really, really underlies what we're dealing with here. I want to talk about an event that occurred in B.C. a decade and a half ago, so as to not in any way aggrandize or sensationalize issues which are in the current discussion or public discussion now.

In B.C. a social worker was contacted by a neighbour, I suspect, of a family where the neighbour understood that the children in the family were known to the ministry, as it were. They also indicated that there was some concern that there may have been criminal activity going on in the apartment that the neighbour was calling the social worker about. The social worker, knowing that there might be some issue of criminal engagement or criminal activity in the apartment, contacted a police officer, and the two of them went to this apartment. When they came into the apartment, they were met with a horrifying scene, a scene that I'm not going to spend a lot of time discussing but suffice to say that there was a child who was roughly 18 months old who was dead and who had been dead for a period of time and who had clearly died under absolutely abhorrent and tragic and upsetting circumstances.

Then, let's move forward six months. Here's what would happen if this happened in Alberta today. Regardless of whether that was the only traumatic incident that the police officer had observed or whether they had observed a number of traumatic incidents or whether the police officer was a brand new recruit and had actually stayed in the car doing paperwork and never actually made it to the scene, it doesn't matter. If six months from now that police officer started experiencing symptoms of posttraumatic stress disorder, they could apply for compensation for that posttraumatic stress disorder and would automatically be compensated. Now, that's fine. I understand the rationale for why the government wants to do that. That's good because in so many cases that person wouldn't be compensated.

What would happen to that social worker, though, is that she would apply for posttraumatic stress disorder, and the Workers' Compensation Board would first insist that she needed to be examined by their doctors and their psychologists, who, just to be clear, often are on contract with the Workers' Compensation Board because they happen to have a particular approach to how they deal with posttraumatic stress disorder.

Ms Blakeman: Do you mean friends or in the family?

Ms Notley: They happen to be people who are in the family, the Member for Edmonton-Centre outlines, that lovely "in the family" phrase.

Those psychologists, notwithstanding that the social worker already has a diagnosis from a reputable physician, will demand and exercise their extremely intrusive rights under the Workers' Compensation Act as it currently exists to subject that social worker to a battery of interviews, assessments, testing, all that kind of stuff. In addition, that social worker may well be told that she needs to talk about any or all mental health care, treatment, counselling, anything that's ever happened in her life.

And if in the course of talking to that board-hired psychologist, she mentions, "Oh, yes, you know, when I was five we had a traumatic incident in my family," well, then the WCB has absolute and complete ability to go back to when she was five and to uncover all the records of that time. All they have to do is show that there was another traumatic incident in this person's life, and because the onus of proof is on that social worker, the WCB has probably met the legal test to argue that the PTSD is not related to the traumatic incident that the social worker experienced when she walked into that apartment and found the deceased baby.

So two very different outcomes. Just to be clear, with the social worker what will happen is that, you know, it'll take a year or two years, and she will have potentially had the WCB film her, they will potentially have hired a private investigator to follow her around, they may well have asked for any files, as I've said before, associated with marriage counselling or any counselling of any type in her life. Her world is an open book. All the WCB has to do is find some other reason why she might have developed this diagnosis, and then they don't have to cover her. So they will do that, and I say that with absolute certainty, Mr. Chairman, because I've represented far too many people where exactly that has happened.

So two people: both at the same incident, both affected similarly by the same incident, both there as a result of the requirements of their work. One gets covered; the other has her life turned inside out and upside down and is, in fact, subsequently reinjured by that process, very possibly, and in any event does not get compensation.

Now, I've sort of touched on this a little bit in the past as well in previous comments. What will likely happen is that she will claim for long-term disability benefits if she is lucky enough to have them, and she may get those benefits because to get long-term disability, all you have to do is show that you have a disability. You don't have to show that it's causally related to your employment. So she will get those benefits for a period of time.

Now, in getting those benefits, you need to understand, she has copaid for them whereas with Workers' Compensation in theory it's the employer that has paid for those benefits. We're now making certain employees, if they should be so lucky to make it through that obstacle course to actually get benefits – these are benefits that they are now copaying for. The other thing that will happen, of course, is that, you know, those types of benefits often don't last as long.

The other issue that arises, of course, is that that's only where that social worker actually is eligible for long-term disability benefits. The more we contract out these services, the more we ask nonprofits in the community to provide our social services and to provide that work for us, the less likely these workers have the benefit of that well-paid union job with all these extra benefits. The odds are good that they don't actually have access to long-term disability. So then that social worker, after she's gone through a two-year process of having her life turned inside out by the Workers' Compensation Board so that they can deny her PTSD, will end up on welfare because, God knows, she won't be entitled to AISH. That's a whole other conversation that we could go on about here for a very long time.

So two very different outcomes for people that have been exposed to exactly the same situation.

We know that social workers come up against this kind of traumatic stuff regularly in the course of their employment. That's what the minister suggested: well, are you exposed to traumatic things in the regular course of your employment? I've talked to social workers at great length about how it is in their world, you know, child protection workers who work diligently with a certain child who they know has been subjected to horrendous, horrendous abuse. They try hard to provide support to that child, and oftentimes they're compelled to put the child back into a situation that they know is dangerous. That, frankly, is traumatizing.

For anyone to not get that that is a traumatizing event, they are making some very significant value judgments about how people process traumatic events. Frankly, I think it starts to smack quite significantly of sexism and sort of a respect for one person's pain and a dismissal of another person's type of pain.

The other group of people that this amendment seeks to include, of course, is health service workers. Now we're getting back to the trauma of the carnage on the highway that the minister keeps talking about. The associate minister said that this is really about compensating and thanking those people who respond to these horrible, traumatic accidents on the highway. Then, of course, another member from his caucus got up and said: well, no, it's really about the number of emergent calls that they get in a day. Then another member got up and said: well, really, it's about whether they deal with these things in the regular course of their work. Heaven forbid that a lawyer ever gets a hold of this.

Ms Blakeman: Did they read the bill?

Ms Notley: They don't appear to have read the bill or have a full understanding of workers' compensation law.

That being said, if we just go back to the highway dynamic, one wonders. You know, the carnage that one sees on a highway: no question that it is shocking and traumatizing. I know, for instance, that people who work with Alberta Transportation periodically – I don't know if I'd say regularly but, certainly, with more frequency than the general population – are exposed to those kinds of things. I'm not entirely sure why the guy who's driving the ambulance gets the presumptive coverage for seeing the trauma that they saw, but the person who's at the door of the emergency room and taking that person inside and trying to deal with the outcome of that carnage in a life-and-death kind of scenario for a much more extended period of time doesn't get to enjoy the benefit of that presumptive coverage.

We know that our emergency rooms are places where trauma exists all the time. Traumatic events occur all the time, and people's lives are permanently changed all the time. People watch their mothers and their fathers and their children pass away all the time. They're counselling them, and they're trying to save their lives. In some cases they do, and in some cases they don't. The most horrifying of injuries: these people deal with them. It's not as if the traumatic carnage that we see on the highway is just wrapped up in a bow and taken away somewhere so that no one else sees it. It comes into our emergency rooms. So I don't understand why, when it gets into emergency rooms, suddenly those people, who, by the way, by virtue of their professional body and their professional designation are not given the choice to walk away from what they see – whether you're talking about a doctor or a nurse or any one of a number of other professionals, they are compelled by their professional body to provide the best care that they can and to put themselves second in the course of providing that care. The judgment of what's second, how you put someone second or not, is a bit complex if you get into the decisions at great length.

I hate to say it, but I did spend a bit of time in my career representing nurses in front of their professional bodies, so I'm fully aware of how the professional body insists that when they get up in the morning, they put on their little Wonder Woman outfit and put on their little Wonder Woman cape. They forget that they haven't slept. They forget that they're on their sixth consecutive overtime shift. They forget that they're working short. They forget that many supports that are supposed to be in place for them from their employer – this government, actually, ultimately – are not there, and they do whatever they can to provide the best treatment and care possible to the victims with whom they deal. That's their job, and if they don't do that, their professional body tells them it's their fault.

I've been at those hearings. I know that's what it's like for many, many people who work in the health care field. That's why we regularly get up here and talk about how much we love nurses and how we don't have enough nurses and about: wouldn't it be great if we had more nurses? Hopefully, we'll manage to go a year or two without this government accidentally firing a thousand nurses and losing a whole graduating class for a year. Anyway, that's a whole different issue.

The point is that these people put themselves on the line. In that traffic accident scenario, if you follow it through, I'm not quite sure why one group is being compensated and the other group is not. It's a little concerning because one group does tend to be primarily male, and the group that's not being compensated, once again, tends to be primarily female.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities and then the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's an honour to rise again and just provide some additional thoughts on Bill 1 at this time on the amendment before us. I don't want to make any comment about social workers or anybody else because I do not want for a second for anybody to think – it would be wrong – that I don't value the excellent work they do. That is really not the point here.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona provides an anecdote of somebody. You know, anecdotal evidence abounds, but it rarely usefully guides us. I say through you, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona that I myself would probably qualify for PTSD and certainly some of the symptoms that the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw read out just a while ago in his explanation of how PTSD diagnosis works. I caught part of it on the air. I didn't catch what he said about it, but I want to stress that all workers, whether they would have presumptive PTSD or not, would first of all have to be diagnosed, and it's not an easy test.

I can tell you that probably 25 years ago this month, in a work-related incident, I had to recover the body of a co-worker, actually somebody that reported to me, who was killed by a bear. To this day I think I still suffer from some of the incidents that the hon. member outlined. I still wake up with cold sweats, and there's an image burned in my mind that I'm sure I will never get rid of. That's not the point. That's probably more stressful than most people would have to put up with.

I was in the bush that night by myself till 3 o'clock in the morning in the pitch black with a flashlight and a compass looking for him. I think I walked probably within 40 metres of his location, but it was pitch black, and I didn't find him. The next morning I went in and found him, and I was, as it turned out later, probably within about 40 metres of the bear den. I have no idea if the bear was there or not at the time. That afternoon, when a recovery team went in, the bear was there and attacked them. You know, it was a stressful situation.

A lot of people encounter unbelievable stress in their life. I don't rise to claim victimhood or anything, but I do rise to point out that just because your job is stressful, it doesn't mean that you should have presumptive PTSD. Whether or not I meet any medical test, I wouldn't for a second think that I should have presumptive PTSD even if I'm diagnosed with it. In my life I've had a lot of other stressful things that are absolutely not work related, as everybody does. We've seen car accidents. We've seen house fires. We've had families or friends that have lost children and other horrific, horrific incidents in our lives that have nothing to do with work. It's not how stressful your job is.

I do not want to speak specifically to the careers mentioned in the proposed amendment, Mr. Chairman, and I do not in any way denigrate the good and, I'm sure, very stressful work, for example, that social workers do, but I will say this. The hon. member alluded to the fact that the College of Social Workers attempted to contact the government and got no response. I'll stand here right now and tell you that nobody who attempted to contact me got no response. I did talk to the president of the AUPE and – the word escapes me – an entourage. He had some fellows with him, other executives from the AUPE. I did, as I indicated last night, talk to a representative of the union of federal corrections workers from the prairie provinces. Nobody from the College of Social Workers contacted me. Had they done so, I would have talked to them or met with them at their convenience. I just wanted to make that clear.

Mr. Chairman, I thank you for the opportunity to provide those comments.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on this occasion to speak in favour of the amendments that my caucus is putting forward, which amend the list of occupations for which the presumptive principle is extended for PTSD compensation. I'm a strong advocate that emergency health workers and social workers need to be on this list as two groups of people that are Alberta's first responders.

You know, I'd like to first and foremost maybe clarify or detail the responsibilities that these folks carry out on a day-to-day basis. I can appreciate what the hon. member on the other side has said as far as people dealing with different stressful situations day to day. However, these are folks that are encountering traumatic situations because of their occupation, and the different experiences that many of them have, I think, as all in the Assembly probably know, can have a lifetime effect on people.

The fact that those two groups aren't included actually surprises me because I've spoken to emergency health service professionals and social workers not only about what they see but what they live through on a day-to-day basis, from disclosures that people give to them to what they have to carry around about individuals. They try to do their jobs to the best of their ability, sometimes, I'm sure, experiencing roadblocks that are a cause of frustration but, beyond that, that have that long-term effect on their health and well-being.

Again, social workers confront traumatic situations on a routine basis. They respond to difficult domestic situations, cases of public emergencies. As my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona has so eloquently pointed out, the Alberta College of Social Workers cannot understand why the government would overlook the services that their members provide and how they are somehow cut off this list. You know, I share their frustration that they have approached the government via three letters to the Minister of Human Services, the Premier, and the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood. The fact that the letters weren't shared, then, on the government side with the appropriate people is a letdown. These letters just talked about how their request was one that is pretty logical as far as what they're dealing with on a day-to-day basis and their case for why they should be included.

Again, social workers are first responders. In domestic disputes they arrive on scene with police officers, so they're seeing and experiencing the same thing or similar things that the officers are experiencing when they arrive on scene. The fact that one group fits under this umbrella and the group of social workers doesn't just seems – I mean, it's not just unfair. This is people's livelihoods. There are folks, I'm sure, where it's affected all areas of their lives, their families' lives, others as well.

Where this legislation falls down could also be a deterrent for those possibly looking at going into these different fields. There is a lot of different weight that's placed on these groups of people as far as what they experience and what they go through. I think the fact that they're not included in this legislation sends a message to them that, you know, they don't qualify, that their job is somehow either less important, or that they somehow have maybe some kind of harder skin or should be able to endure different traumatic situations, situations that for some people are acknowledged to be traumatic and that therefore they may need extension of services while others do not. The fact that those two groups are left off this list is a clear message, in my opinion, that they're not being listened to, that they're not being valued for the work they do, nor is their job or occupation understood by the government.

As well, the amendment, like I said, seeks to include emergency health service workers to ensure that nurses and other professionals who staff our trauma units and emergency departments and who are engaged in providing emergency medical services on a day-to-day basis are afforded the same rights regarding the presumptive principles as other first responders. For myself, we're talking about their livelihood, their right as a human being, and what they're doing and putting forward in the name of service. It not only needs to be acknowledged, but they deserve to have this coverage.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.
The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will keep my comments pretty short on this one. I certainly appreciate the intent of what our members in the NDP caucus are presenting. I can relate to how the members across the floor were arguing during the last amendment. You know, we do need to essentially draw the line somewhere.

I would like to read from Clinical Psychology Review a definition of a first responder. This was a document I tabled last week after my speech on second reading to this. The article is called Treating Posttraumatic Stress Disorder in First Responders: A Systematic Review.

In the context of this article, we use the term first responders to refer to a heterogeneous grouping of both paid professionals and volunteers who provide critical services in emergencies; for many their main occupational task is first response – e.g. fire fighters. Typical first responders have specialized training, sometimes with explicit certification, which both prepare them and entitle them to take action to safeguard the health and safety of those victimized. This action usually occurs on an individual basis and for the public at large, most often in emergencies.

Just based on that definition, I think that the way the bill is now worded, with presumptive care for EMT, firefighters, police, and peace officers, is sufficient. We've already discussed the item of correctional officers. That amendment has been defeated, and it is my opinion that that is where the presumptive care should end in Bill 1.

Thank you.

5:00

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.
I'll recognize the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to stand at this time and speak to this amendment. I realize the intent, and I think the issue is one of presumptiveness, not that social workers aren't covered because, of course, they are under WCB.

I happen to have a daughter, Molly, who is a social worker who happens to practice in Boston and has been exposed to a number of things that I might consider traumatic but that she, in her training, considers part of the job and that have prepared her for the kinds of things that she has the potential to experience. One of the experiences that she had happens to have been that one of her clients committed suicide while in her care. Obviously, she wasn't present at the time, but that had an effect on her. She has dealt with it through counselling with others as well as because of the professional training that she has and, quite frankly, also because of her faith. That's not suggesting that everybody will deal with such traumatic events in the same way. She's not in any way, shape, or form, at least in her practice, what could be considered a first responder.

I just don't feel that the issue of presumptiveness applies to this category of worker within our society. Nonetheless, they do important work, and I'd be remiss if I didn't express appreciation for the help that I've received from people in this category myself and with our family.

I'm not in favour of this amendment, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I will recognize the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It gives me a great deal of pleasure again to stand up in regard to Bill 1 and speak to the amendment from my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona. It's one of those amendments that, you know, you do a lot of soul-searching on, and you understand where the member is coming from in regard to the amendment.

Then I look back at what we're trying to do. I think my colleague from Calgary-Shaw talked about the presumptiveness and what is covered under the legislation. We talk about emergency health care service providers, which, in my mind, trying to read through that particular language, could be a trauma nurse in a centre where they're trained to deal with traumas. When you're a trauma nurse or you're an ICU nurse or, for that matter, you're an RN – and I have relatives who are RNs and, in fact, have a sister-in-law who was an emergency nurse for many, many years and actually loved the job – you're trained for that particular job. To try and incorporate that, you have to think about what the nurse is trained for and what she is expected to see and do on that job. My colleague from Calgary-Shaw talked about the proof in regard to: if you suffer from posttraumatic stress disorder on the job, then it has to be proven. So I was thinking about this, and you can think about it many ways where, yes, a nurse could suffer from posttraumatic stress disorder.

I go back to when I was Solicitor General, Mr. Chair. I happened to be the Solicitor at the time when we had 9/11. I can tell you that I was two hours outside of Halifax when that tragic, tragic thing occurred. I was down three weeks after that at the 9/11 site, where they were still looking for bodies. I remember going down into the centre, with the firemen and all of the emergency medical people that were on-site digging for bodies, and hearing the compelling stories and seeing all the pictures all around the site that had been left by people looking for particular individuals.

I can't even imagine, after sitting down and talking to the CIA and the FBI and all of the emergency people that I talked to at 9/11, the crisis that they must have been dealing with at the time of the accident and at the site of the accident, when they were transporting thousands of people to emergency centres, to churches, and to halls body bag after body bag. You can see where you would have people who were emergency health service providers and where they would absolutely – there's no question – be dealing with some of the posttraumatic stress that this bill is going to include and that, I would imagine, would easily be covered under Bill 1.

Mr. Chair, I'm going to say as the former children's services minister that I was honoured to be that minister at that time, and I was honoured, quite frankly, to have all of the social workers that worked in the department with me and for me and the incredible job that they did day in and day out in dealing with some very, very difficult situations trying to serve families and children that were in troubled times. We put together a CARRT team, which is a crisis team, and we partnered a social worker with a police officer. Many times while you're driving down 107th Street, you'll see a police car parked outside, and you've probably wondered: what's a police car doing there? Well, they're part and parcel of the CARRT team, which gets called out under, obviously, some horrific situations. Or you could see a social worker, even though they're trained, entering a crisis situation.

But all of this has to be proven. Every single one of the people that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is trying to incorporate into this particular piece of legislation will be covered if they can prove that they are suffering from posttraumatic stress under their particular job. Mr. Chair, as much as I think that this is a good amendment, I think that there are times when you have to start backing off and you have to say: "Look. You know what? This has to be proven." I've used a couple of examples, you know. And it's up to the individual who's working in the job to prove that they're suffering posttraumatic stress disorder on the job. So I, unfortunately, will not be supporting this particular amendment.

Of course, once the bill is proclaimed is when you find out whether it's working or not. That's when you start hearing about what is working in the bill and what isn't working. If we're all of a sudden getting bombarded like we have in the past with WCB claims and the job that the WCB isn't doing, I think that will certainly alert us.

The government has made it very clear that this bill is their number one in this Legislative Assembly. So there is nothing that will stop the government from bringing this bill back because they're famous for bringing bills back when they're flawed. We can then look at incorporating what the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is recommending.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others that wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I'll be brief. I don't want to be repeating some of what I have said before. I guess I have serious concerns that this Legislature is about to create laws that identify specific professions as having preferential access to a diagnosis and a treatment and a compensation package. At the same time, we are acknowledging implicitly that the process in place isn't working, and somehow we're going to fix the process that isn't working quite well by a law that would identify some people preferentially over others. So I want to register a deep concern that while this is well intentioned, we're heading down the wrong path.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others that wish to speak? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In the previous amendment we talked about the correctional officers and about the role that they play in day-to-day life. In day-to-day life the average social worker and these types of professions have the ability to call in a professional of a different nature to deal with very traumatic situations.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek talked about the CARRT team and that in exceptional circumstances our social workers are out there with a team of police officers or professionals that deal with this kind of trauma every day, and they're working in tandem with those types of professionals. I think it's important to understand that if the situation goes badly, as sometimes it does, then that person is able to take a step back and actually let the RCMP or the police service or whomever do that job that they need to do, that first responder type of duty.

Social workers as a whole are very, very important, and we know that every day they are dealing with very traumatic and sensitive family situations, often having to take children from their home, dealing with parents that aren't responsible, unfortunately, or in very difficult circumstances. While that is traumatic, they do have coverage. What it's allowing them to do is – they will still be covered. If they have an event that they go through, then they just have to prove that that event actually occurred during work.

Nobody is taking coverage away from a certain group of people. We're just making sure that those who have to deal with trauma on a day-to-day basis, on a regular occasion, in a very negative work field are getting the presumptive nature that's in place so that they don't actually have to prove that it was one single event. It might have been a series of events, or it could have been a single event. In this case, these types of workers, who could probably identify one single event or even a series of events, are able to come forward and make the case as to why their employment created a PTSD situation.

There is not a single person in this room that wants to deny any Albertan coverage and certainly not any employee, but we need to make sure going forward that for every employee, for their job description, we make sure their coverage is appropriate for them and ensure that our social workers have the ability to do their job. That's really, really important.

The difference between this amendment and the previous amendment is that the previous amendment was actually putting that first responder, basically, right in the line of fire and essentially saying: "Okay. That person has to deal with the trauma every single day." A sheriff pulls up to an accident and sees a multitude of dead bodies, and he has to deal with that. The average worker of this type doesn't necessarily have to do that.

It's really important that we keep a perspective on this and that we make sure going forward that we're not taking the presumptive nature and applying it to every single profession. How is that profession any different from anyone else? All of these things are traumatic as well: a teacher who sees a child going through traumatic things, a parent who watches their child die of cancer, you know, a parent who is volunteering – it's a slippery slope. So then what ends up happening is that we start assuming that everybody has to have the presumptive nature of coverage, which creates a problem. We need to make sure that the people are responsible and doing their jobs appropriately, but we also need to make sure that that presumptive nature only applies to first responders in very traumatic situations.

For that reason, I will not be supporting this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others that would like to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. As I'm listening to the various debates that have taken place on this side of the House and on the other side of the House, I think we're getting sort of off track in the sense that in order for this bill to even come into effect, somebody has to be diagnosed with posttraumatic stress disorder. This is just about the presumption that it is as a direct result of this employment. That's it.

Now, one of the things that I think has been missing in this debate is the issue of dealing with the WCB and how traumatic that can be for anybody who has ever dealt with the WCB. That is the elephant in the room. I cannot speak for any other MLA in here and their constituency office, but I can tell you that in my constituency 60, 70 per cent of people who come to my office have an issue with the WCB. Some of these people will walk into my office, and they will have volumes, binders of medical records and situations, and it goes on and on and on. It is overwhelming, to say the least. Overwhelming.

Initially I was not in favour of this motion. I'm not there yet, but clearly, in listening to the debates and some of the clarification coming from the other side of the House, these are people who have already been diagnosed, so that's not a question here now. They have been diagnosed with this disorder. The question is: do they now have to battle with the WCB to make sure that they have their other issues taken care of? I can tell you: boy, I wish this bill was 300 pages long to do a whole lot of work with the WCB, because they are a disaster.

That's my statement. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others that wish to comment on this amendment?

Seeing none, then I call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: Now back to the bill. Other speakers on the bill? Ms Notley – my apologies, hon. members. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

5:30

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will say that I've never quite understood the rationale for that rule. I was never quite sure why I should be so shocked and appalled, so apology accepted. [interjection] What was that?

Ms Blakeman: By naming you, they can have you removed.

Ms Notley: Oh, I'm told that historically by naming me they can have me removed, which is quite true. There is a naming in the rules. That would probably be convenient for everybody in terms of moving more quickly today, but sorry.

I have one more amendment that I would like to propose to the Legislature in this Assembly as it relates to the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2012, Bill 1. I will hand those over to the pages and sit for a moment while they are being distributed, and then I'll explain what it is that I'm trying to achieve.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. members, we will refer to this amendment as A3, and I believe they've just about been delivered.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to speak to the amendment.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chair. A quick summary of what it is that we're attempting to do with this amendment. First of all, what it says is that the bill be amended in section 2 in the proposed section 24.2 by adding the following after subsection (2):

(3) If a worker who is or has been employed in an occupation that from time to time exposes the worker to traumatic events or a series of traumatic events is diagnosed with post-traumatic stress disorder by a physician or psychologist, and experienced a traumatic event or series of traumatic events, the post-traumatic stress disorder shall be presumed, unless the contrary is proven, to be an injury that arose out of and occurred during the course of the worker's employment in response to a traumatic event or a series of traumatic events to which the worker was exposed in carrying out the worker's duties in his or her occupation.

The intention of this amendment is basically to address the rather pithy, I thought, outline of a concern that was offered up by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. It is what I would suggest is a bit of a compromise amendment. What it's attempting to do is to create a middle level of test for compensability. It's a halfway level of test. What we've heard from a number of members, at least on this side of the House from all three parties, is that we're all very acutely aware that the Workers' Compensation Board does not function in the way we would like it to – there is a fairly broad understanding amongst injured workers that it's pretty hard to get a fair shake out of the Workers' Compensation Board – and that, really, what we would love to be doing is reforming the system as a whole. So what this amendment tries to do is: it tries to create a mid-level test.

There are currently if this bill passes two tests. The first one is the one where, if we go back to my example of the social worker and the police officer, who were helpfully described by the Wildrose member from Fish Creek as the CARRT team, you've got your social worker and you've got your police officer and they go together to deal with, you know, an acute event with respect to a domestic issue. They both go in to try and deal with it.

What happens right now if this amendment doesn't pass is that there are two tests. The police officer would just enjoy the benefit of the presumption, the end, and they would get compensation should they develop PTSD. The social worker, as I discussed before, because the onus is on her to prove the PTSD and that the particular traumatic event is what caused the PTSD, therefore needs to withstand repeated efforts on the part of the WCB to uncover every other potential element in her life that could actually be the contributing factor to the PTSD. As I say, that process itself can be generative of PTSD. Nonetheless, those are the two tests. What will invariably happen is that the social worker will not be covered and the police officer will be, yet they're both suffering an illness as a result of the same event.

What this is attempting to do is create a different test. What it's saying is: first of all, are you in an occupation that from time to time compels you to be in a situation where you're exposed to a traumatic event because of the nature of your work, and have you been diagnosed with PTSD? So if we were talking about the firefighter or the police officer, that's where it stops. That's where the questions stop. That's where the onus to prove stops. If you can say yes to those two things, boom, you're covered. What we're saying here is that we're going to add a third test, and the third test is: can you specifically point to a traumatic event which occurred to you or to which you were exposed or a series of traumatic events to which you were exposed in your workplace? If you can meet that third test, then you get the benefit of the presumption.

Then what you're able to do is avoid that process of having the WCB dig through your life for the last 20 years to come up with all of the different explanations for why – well, actually, you drink too much, and you've had two failed marriages, and yada, yada, yada – and all the kinds of things that they will rely on to say that, no, this isn't PTSD, and, no, it wasn't related to this thing that happened at work. It's because you're a shitty person. Oh, I'm sorry. I'm sorry, Mr. Chair. You're not a good person, and therefore you are not entitled to PTSD. That's the examination that typically the WCB goes through now.

So what happens is that the person has to meet three tests, and if they meet those three tests, then the onus shifts to their benefit. Then it's a little bit harder for the WCB to simply say that it's because you drink too much or your family didn't get along well when you were a kid or you went through a traumatic divorce and yada, yada, yada. It's not enough for them simply to point to those things to say that's why you shouldn't get coverage because now the presumption is that it's the traumatic event or series of traumatic events at work that actually is driving the diagnosis of PTSD.

This is a halfway point. It's not as easy for that social worker that I described at the beginning to get the coverage that the firefighter or the police officer gets, but it is easier for that social worker to get the coverage and the benefits than is currently the case because currently it's very, very difficult for them to get those benefits. What we're trying to do with this piece of legislation is come up with a compromise attempt to deal with what is an epidemic across the country, to deal with a diagnosis which is constantly underidentified and undercompensated. Whether we're talking about Alberta workplaces or whether we're talking about our military service or wherever we're talking about it, we know that this is a huge issue which, essentially, goes unaddressed and is unfairly treated.

This is our attempt to come up with a reasonable halfway point. It attempts to get at as well the significant point made by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View that we are at least to some extent getting away from picking winners and losers on the basis of your actual title. Instead, we're giving due deference to the significance of trauma in the workplace and the relationship to PTSD while at the same time dealing with it on an individualized basis and looking at the actual experience of people and doing it in a way that prevents the WCB from conducting itself in the way it has in the past.

I think it was a really important point that was made – I'm not sure exactly who made it – that the decision of this government to create the presumption for our first responders as a means of thanking them does implicitly very clearly represent an admission by this government that the system is not working very well for those first responders now and that the mechanism of compensating for PTSD is broken. This is an effort to fix it in a less dramatic way for everybody else as well. It's an effort to bring and inject some level of equality into how we're addressing this issue.

I hope members will give some thought to this amendment and will consider supporting it in the spirit of compromise and good governance and coming up with the best outcomes for the greatest number of Albertans.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise in support of this, having said something about these issues in the past. As is often the case in the House, one is struck by the ironies that confront us in this work, and maybe the word is even "contradictions."

In the House today we again have two farm workers, Eric Musekamp and Darlene Dunlop, who represent a major occupational group in the province who are not fighting for preferential access to WCB. They're not even fighting to see their particular occupation group, farm workers, deal with PTSD. They simply want WCB. They have been excluded from any access to WCB. Our food producers: no mandatory requirement for farm workers to have WCB. There is the correct phrase. Any commercial employer who has paid farm workers has the option of whether to provide compensation for injury or death in this province.

We are today talking about accelerating access for a particular group of professions in Alberta who are finding it difficult to get appropriate, timely, effective WCB coverage, and we're ignoring a whole group of people, thousands and thousands of workers who produce our food every day and who don't have guaranteed access to any compensation, who don't live within the context of occupational health and safety standards, who aren't even under the labour code in this province in 2012. I won't go on and on because we're dealing with an amendment, but I couldn't help, Mr. Chairman, but comment on the 10 years of dedicated work that these volunteer folks have done in farm working, raising the awareness for us as legislators and Albertans generally of this huge anomaly that our most critical food producers are not covered by this very service that we are now enhancing for some in our society.

Mr. Chairman, I will be supporting this amendment at the same time as I recognize that once again we are trying to fix a system, WCB, which works in some ways in some areas but is clearly deficient in the area of PTSD in terms of timely access, appropriate treatment, and identifying the supports that people need when they're exposed to serious traumatic events arising out of the workplace and are not coping well.

It's not the appropriate way to fix the problem in a Legislature. I will again raise the question for the members to consider: whether discriminating under the law those particular occupational groups that should get preferential access to support and compensation and treatment is the role of the Legislature. It's a nice gesture; it's simply not the role of the Legislature.

Let's go back to the WCB and ask them to look at this particular area, which is a problem. And I recognize it is a problem. Some of our most vital first responders are not getting the services they need. But let's not burden the WCB or complicate our employment standards and care in this province by deciding for them how to manage a particular occupational condition called PTSD.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to speak on behalf of this amendment and the fact that I won't be supporting it. I appreciate where the hon. member is coming from; however, I think this amendment is so broad in nature. It essentially covers every single worker who may have ever had entanglement in some traumatic event at any point in time in their work history, and in reality that's not realistic.

You know, as a person who was a farmer – my husband and I owned a turkey farm. We were farmers, and we were a corporation, a full-blown corporation. We were incorporated. There were two of us. Yes, our three-year-old daughter all the way up until the age of eight helped us out on our farm. This is what family farms do. Not only that. My father-in-law is a big, huge dairy farmer, milks over 220 cows; again, a corporation; again, a family farm. His daughter farms; his son-in-law farms. Every once in a while we go over and help, and my sister-in-law's five children assist in that family farm operation.

There's one thing that's forgotten here. Most of these family farm operations, which are nasty little corporations – I understand that – do this because we're building a lifestyle. Part of the reason, and I experienced it myself, that we're building that lifestyle is because we want our children to grow food for Albertans, and most of us do that in a very safe and effective manner. I don't believe for a second that there's a single farmer out there that is purposely putting their employees in dangerous situations, not covering them with WCB, and purposely hoping that at some point in time they'll be injured just so they don't have to cover them. That's not the case.

I think we need to take away this whole idea on the left that all of a sudden every farmer in this province is bad, bad, bad because they're incorporated and they're doing things with their children. I personally find it offensive that we continuously hear this. They're owning a business and teaching their children about morals, values, and good work ethics. My little girl for five years helped us; my little girl called turkeys. Now, hey, the people in my town thought that it was cruel to call a turkey. But do you know one thing that my little girl does understand? My 10-year-old little girl understands when I tell her: don't run across the street in traffic; you will die. She understands exactly what that means.

If you start imposing WCB regulations on family farms, you will darn well put them out of business. It's about time that people on the left understood what our farms do for our people and what they bring to this province. This is absolutely ridiculous. In this case we're talking about family farms, but it's not limited to family farms. What about the restaurants that bring in students? We hire them at 12 years old. I was one of those students growing up. At 12 years old I went in and washed some dishes, got some good morals and good ethics, and went forward. Today I'm a hard-working Albertan giving back to Alberta.

I'm absolutely in favour of protecting those that need to be covered. We absolutely need to protect those people who are in traumatic situations on a daily basis and those people who need to be covered by WCB and need to have that presumptive nature removed and also have proven or have the presumptive nature removed so that if they have WCB, they have proper coverage and they have the proper clinicians to help them. There's no question about that. But we need to stop turning this argument into: let's go bad on those big, bad farm corporations; they're out to hurt everybody. It's about time somebody started standing up for the farmers of this province.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I really like it when the passion in this House rises to a certain level. I will tell you this: their whip may be bigger, but I'd bet on my whip any day of the week.

I actually talked myself into supporting that last motion mainly because it was specific in nature.

An Hon. Member: Do you regret it?

Mr. Anglin: I do not regret it, sir.

When I look at the problem here, the reason this piece of legislation is required – and it is a good piece of legislation – is because we have this giant elephant in the room called the WCB, which has been a headache, I think, to most MLAs, after I heard a few conversations. That's problematic. That's problematic.

I would agree that this amendment is so broad in nature. There are situations where the WCB does not belong. It would be penalizing certain small businesses. I could not accept that in my riding, particularly on the family farms. My riding is all family farms. I shouldn't say I don't have any corporate entities, but I have very few in nature.

Where I am on this bill is quite simply this. It's troubling that we have to debate this legislation because we're not fixing the real problem. The problem is what the WCB does to these workers, particularly after they're diagnosed. If any of you walked over to the WCB building, what you'll find is that you're walking into almost an armed fortress because of some recent events where people have gotten so frustrated that they've gone into the building armed. That is something that has never actually been addressed as to what caused that problem and what we need to do to fix that problem.

So this in my mind is a Band-Aid attempt to fix what is a much larger problem, which is where the WCB belongs and how it should function. What we've done is just for the first responders, which I think I have nothing but admiration for. The presumption of their disorder is now going to be legislated. That's ironic in many ways when you think about it in those terms.

I don't think I'm going to be supporting this because of its broad nature, but I would encourage the other side to think about actually fixing the WCB. Thank you.

Ms. Notley: I'll be very brief, but I do just want to clarify. A couple of speakers have spoken about this being too broad. You need to understand that this is not an attempt to broaden the presumption or the benefits that are otherwise provided through Bill 1 to a great big group of people. What we're doing is providing a lesser benefit to a great big group of people. There's a great, fabulous benefit that's being provided to a very narrow group of people, and we've talked most of this afternoon about the people that are being excluded from that great, fabulous benefit.

What this is is an attempt to provide a lesser benefit but still one which is better than the horrific benefit that I would suggest currently exists for the vast majority of Alberta workers who are, unfortunately, through tragedy forced to claim for PTSD under our current workers' compensation system. Do understand, Members, that the language would not extend the Bill 1 presumption to all the people that are described. Rather, it would just attempt to ameliorate the difficulty that is experienced by those who are not covered by the Bill 1 presumption. That's what I'm trying to do.

That's all I have to say on it, and I thank you for your consideration.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.
Are there other speakers?

Mr. Anglin: Mr. Chair, I would like to give the hon. member a chance to try to convince me. I don't understand this lesser benefit. If she wouldn't mind elaborating on it, I will listen.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chair. As quickly as I can, the benefit that is being provided to first responders through this legislation is that if you are a first responder that's described, all you have to show to the WCB is that you're diagnosed with PTSD and that you fit this occupation. That's where the inquiry ends. You get your compensation.

What this would do is it would say that you're in an occupation that's quite widely described – you've quite correctly described that – and you're diagnosed with PTSD and you can show that you were exposed to a particular traumatic event or particular series of traumatic events in your work, and then you get the benefit of the presumption. So it's not the case that we're saying that if you happen to be a social worker who spends most of your time educating people in the office, dealing with files, but if you are a social worker who was the one that I described previously, who was exposed to a very traumatic incident, then you would get the presumption but only then. So it adds another test. You have to show that there was a traumatic incident. Then you get the presumption.

Right now even if you show there was that traumatic incident, the WCB still has the presumption and you have to show all this evidence to balance the probabilities in your own favour. That is what allows the WCB to do this intrusive investigation of your whole life in order to disprove that claim. I'm attempting to mitigate the opportunity for the WCB to engage in that intrusive investigation, which undermines so many claims and ultimately reinjures people in many cases.

I hope that's clearer.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.
Any other comments?

I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: Any other questions or comments on the bill? We still have some time. The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I certainly appreciate the debate and the discussion that we've had around this bill today. I think it's been engaging. I, too, have a couple of amendments that I would like to propose. The first one is here, the requisite number of copies, and I will speak to it.

An Hon. Member: After they hand these out.

Mr. Wilson: Yes.

The Chair: We have an amendment before us, hon. members. This amendment will be A4. We'll wait for the amendment to be distributed. By then it'll probably be time to adjourn until 7:30.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It is a pleasure to stand and bring forward the first amendment that I have brought to this House. I look forward to an engaging debate.

Mr. Chair, the House leader from the Official Opposition has suggested that I move for adjournment until 7:30 at this time.

The Chair: No. Just carry on. I'll manage the clock. Thank you.

Hon. members, it appears to be 6 o'clock. Pursuant to Standing Order 4(4) the Committee of the Whole is recessed until 7:30 p.m.

[The committee adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

Bill 1

Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2012

The Chair: Hon. members, the Committee of the Whole is back in session.

We are discussing amendment A4. I would ask for any additional speakers on amendment A4. The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. As I had said earlier tonight, it's a pleasure to bring the first amendment to this House. This amendment is specific to time limits on claims. Now, as I had referred to in the speech on second reading, there are some factors that I believe will impact when a first responder will choose to make a claim for posttraumatic stress coverage.

In the unwritten rules in the fraternities that they work in, whether that be the fire hall, the police hall, again, there is an element of: you do not appear weak while you are in this, or you face rejection. Showing emotion is not something that is necessarily approved of. It's relatively frowned on, and having a mental disorder and filing a claim may result in reduced duty, removal from the front lines, or potentially even ending your career. The very real fears that may prevent individuals from coming forward may cause them to choose to live with the symptoms of posttraumatic stress disorder so that they can hang on to that identity of actually working in the field that they are in.

I would suggest that the second reason we need to consider this is that there is the reality that delayed onset can happen with posttraumatic stress disorder. It is not necessarily that there is an event, and then your symptoms start immediately.

The act currently reads that there is a two-year limitation from the point of the accident.

26(1) Subject to subsection (2), the Board shall not pay compensation

- (a) to a worker unless the worker reports the accident to the Board within 24 months after the date of the accident or the date on which the worker becomes aware of the accident.

Due to the nature of posttraumatic stress and (a) how it is not necessarily just one event, (b) with the delayed onset, and (c) the fact that many first responders will choose not to actually seek treatment out of fear of rejection from their colleagues, I believe that we need to amend this bill to allow for a greater period of time for them to receive coverage once diagnosed with posttraumatic stress.

So this basically asks the government to consider amending this bill to allow for a five-year time frame. I look forward to hearing others' thoughts on this and debating from there.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others that wish to add? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: All right. Thank you, Mr. Chair. A very interesting amendment here. I know that this member brought this up in our caucus the other day, and it was a very good learning experience because I don't know much about PTSD although after question period today I think that some of us might be in trouble in that regard if things continue.

It is a very serious diagnosis, and what happens, of course, as we've heard here today, is that it's a cultural thing where for front-line folks, first responders there's an idea that if you say that you have a problem or admit to having a problem, that's some sort of weakness or a show of weakness. That's kind of built into the culture a little bit. From the statistics that have been given by members opposite and by members over here, that's quite clear. There are obviously a lot of these cases going undiagnosed or perhaps diagnosed but not admitted to, so many folks are going without treatment. That's why, of course, we agree with this bill.

Of course, that can be an ongoing process. PTSD is not like a car crash, where, you know, there's an event. It's an injury, and like with other bills that we have, there's generally a two-year limitation period on them wherein you have to bring a claim in civil court. Or sometimes if you're making an insurance claim, there's a limit, and often that limit is two years from the time of the incident. That's generally what we do in our legal system, but because in this case we're dealing with something that often goes undiagnosed for a long period of time from the time that it starts, the accident that maybe triggered it, going forward sometimes takes more than two years. Sometimes it takes three years. Sometimes it takes 10 years. Sometimes it takes five years. It does take a lot of time sometimes to diagnose and often to admit, too, that you have a problem.

I think that the spirit of this law is the right one. We should recognize that that culture exists and make it easier for folks who maybe have been in denial of it or are unwilling to come forward on it, allow them to have a little bit more time to think it through and come forward and make a claim and get compensated for their treatment for PTSD.

This isn't completely unheard of, too. The law has changed recently, for example. Well, not very recently but in the last decades it has changed with regard to, for example, abuse of children. It's not when the event happens. It used to be, but it's not when the event happens that a statute of limitations period starts. It's from when there's a realization that it has occurred, and that can happen much later on in life, obviously.

So this isn't unheard of. There is precedent for this sort of extension for certain circumstances. I think that this is good, whether it's five years, whether it's 10 years, 15 years. I don't know what the right number is for it. I don't. But I know that two years is probably too short a time given the culture surrounding PTSD with regard to first responders.

I think it will get better, now that this is in place, and I think that over time it won't be such a stigma. A stigma won't be as attached to it as knowledge and awareness of this condition happen. I think you already see that in the military, for example, where this would be essentially unheard of to be claimed 20, 30 years ago, but now it's something that people are very aware of. There's an awareness of it. The soldiers certainly in Canada as well as in the United States are getting more treatment for it, getting better treatment for it, getting treated quicker than they ever would have before. I think that happens with awareness.

If we can extend this for five years, I think that that would be a good idea. I'd love to hear people's suggestions on that. This is certainly an amendment that I can support, but I would like to hear from the associate minister opposite if he possibly has any subamendments to this amendment. If he's not happy with the timeline, if he thinks it should be longer or what have you, I think this would be a very good opportunity for a subamendment on this or something to that effect.

With that, Mr. Chair, thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you so much, Mr. Chairman. I do have comments directly on the amendment. I just need to clear up a comment that was made earlier in my response to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. In earlier discussions she indicated to this House that the College of Social Workers had contacted our government and had not received any response. I thought that was odd, and in the break here I went back and checked. The College of Social Workers did write to our Premier a letter. It was forwarded to my office, and it slipped my mind, but I did receive a copy of that letter, and I wrote a response. They did not ask for a meeting or a conversation of any kind in that letter. They just said, "Think of us," basically. I will be tabling at the appropriate time tomorrow a copy of the College of Social Workers' letter to our Premier and my response to them just so we can clear that up. I thank you for the opportunity to clear that up.

With respect to the amendment I think I understand what you're trying to achieve. I think you're trying to extend the timeline in recognition of a bunch of things. I wholeheartedly agree with the sentiment. I'm a little confused by the approach, and I need somebody to help me clear this up. The amendment says that a worker diagnosed with a posttraumatic stress disorder has five years from the date of diagnosis to file a claim with the WCB. The potential delay in the PTSD case is not that once you're diagnosed, you sit on it, and because of a stigma or whatever else you may not file a claim right away. The delay is from the traumatic incident until you get a diagnosis. Once you get the diagnosis, you're already on the path to healing. You have talked to doctors, psychologists, and your employer. Your employer has likely shared information with the psychologist because you're going to talk about what traumatic event may have triggered this.

The delay is from a particular traumatic event or a series, perhaps, of traumatic events, no identifiable one of which triggered your condition, and a long period of the symptoms that the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw laid out – sleeplessness, possible addiction problems, all sorts of problems – until finally a light is shone and you have a conversation with somebody that leads you on a path to healing, the first step of which is diagnosis. That diagnosis is likely even part of the claim. In fact, the diagnosis might be advised by the WCB: go see this person or follow this path.

I think the delay – and I wholeheartedly respect the member's desire to ensure that nobody is excluded by this because they waited too long – is between a traumatic event or a series of traumatic events that actually caused the syndrome and the diagnosis that says: here's why you're going through what you're going through, and now you're on the path to healing. The amendment doesn't address that potential for the delay. However, I would also point out that I don't believe the bill sets up a time period there. All the bill says is: if you were diagnosed with a posttraumatic stress disorder and you're in any one of these categories of workers, it's presumed it was caused by a workplace incident. It doesn't say: if it's more than two years ago, too bad. It just says that it's presumed to be caused by a workplace incident, and it has to be proven otherwise. When you have a disorder that's diagnosed and presumed to be caused by a workplace incident, you're in the system. I don't see where the bill imposes any timeline on anybody.

So I wholeheartedly agree with the sentiment, and I applaud the opposition for it. My question is that I don't see where the bill imposes a time limitation. Second of all, the period between diagnosis and filing a claim is not really the delay issue. It's between the incident and the diagnosis. I really do appreciate the sentiment. I understand what you're trying to achieve, but can you help me with those two incongruities there? It doesn't seem to address anything.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I think I agree with the sentiment expressed in this amendment. I believe, obviously, that PTSD has many forms and causes. It can have many delays from people reacting to getting help or being diagnosed with their PTSD. The spirit of the amendment that was addressed was very good in recognizing that sentiment and the nature of the professions that are being covered by this act and the nature of people having a social stigma attached to it.

I also appreciate the explanation given by the hon. associate minister. I was following along pretty well, but I may need some more clarification on it. I like uniformity in laws, and laws across this province have general application. I don't like making distinctions for different situations. I know there's a term in law that says: two years from when you knew or ought to have known. That is essentially the situation for most legal claims. That's when you have to file them by, two years from when you knew or ought to have known.

For instance, say you were injured in a car accident, but you didn't really have anything happen to you until five years after the accident happened. Finally, you get a diagnosis from the doctor, who said: "Oh, yeah. You crashed your car. You had a vertebra go loose here. That's what's causing your problem." The time limit starts from the time when you ought to have known. I guess the argument that lawyers would make is that you didn't know until you got that diagnosis from the doctor that this accident caused it five years ago.

Is that the situation we're looking at here, that it's two years, 24 months, from when you knew or ought to have known? Is that essentially what it is, a two-year limitation? Or is it a limitation that runs from when you should have known that the PTSD troubling you was presumed to have been caused by your workplace? Or am I misguided in even that interpretation?

The Chair: Looking for a clarification, hon. member?

I'll recognize the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps I can have a go at it. Section 26 of the Workers' Compensation Act provides that compensation is not paid to a worker unless the accident which gave rise to the call for compensation has been reported, and that report has to be within 24 months after the date of the accident.

By bringing in presumptive coverage, we're basically saying that we're presuming that the nature of the job has caused the result, so the 24-month limitation, in essence, is not relevant because you're not actually filing an accident report. You're not saying that this incident happened, and that's where I cut my leg off. You're saying that the nature of the work has caused the condition, and because you fit into one of these categories where you have presumptive coverage, you don't file an accident report. So the section isn't particularly relevant. It's covered.

The Chair: Thank you.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the explanation by both the MLAs from Peace River and Edmonton-Whitemud, but perhaps we can just clarify this one step further. If an individual reports the incident within 24 months, then that incident is on the books. Then after that, I'm asking: how long does an individual have to make a claim for PTSD? I understand that there might be some confusion here with this amendment, but I think we need to get to the heart of the matter. Once that incident has been put onto the books, I would like to know how much time can elapse before a person does actually get the diagnosis because, of course, that's the real essence of this condition, right?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you. I think you need to separate a workplace accident that causes an injury and some presumable disability as a result from this situation, which might not even be a specific incident. It's not a claim that a worker is going to file with the Workers' Compensation Board. The fact that they get a diagnosis is the claim. It's done. Once they are diagnosed, the bill specifically says that they're included. There is no claim to file.

When you are injured in a workplace accident, if you don't report that accident within a period and then you go back five years later and say, "You know, I was working there, and I broke my arm," there's no claim. The bill excludes the possibility of that claim.

In this case, however long it takes for you to come to grips with your difficult situation – it might be five or might be more years, and I think there's documented evidence of longer than that – once you get to that diagnosis, which is already on the path of healing, you're in. That's your claim right there. It's presumed that that was caused by workplace incidents unless proven otherwise. So there is no claim to be filed at that point. You are covered, and from there on you have the resources, the regular coverage of the WCB, on that point.

The act does not impose any time limit on those persons. It says that when you get the diagnosis, it's presumed. You're already there. It would be that you would have to prove that it was work related – right? – so you'd need a claim and an investigation and all that. This says that if it's proved that it was caused by your work, that's it. There's no time limitation, no claim to file. You're already in the door. That, I hope, is providing some clarification. It's quite a different situation from a workplace accident, a specific incident which caused an injury, but you didn't report it. Quite a different situation.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Other comments? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, and thank you for the clarification. It is appreciated. I'm glad that we see sort of the intent of what we're trying to put forward here. I think it's important to remember – and the WCB actually suggested it – that in the case of mental claims quite often the individual will seek treatment prior to approaching their employer with it. There is a reality that they could have a diagnosis of PTSD and know that it's there. So I'm happy to see that you're not suggesting there will be any time limit.

I just worry about some of things that have been said about the Workers' Compensation Board here, that they've got a reputation for not wanting to do things and for falling back on legislation and regulations at any given time that they can. The reality is that section 26(1) does still say 24 months. If what you're suggesting is that there will not be a time limit and if you're confident this is not something that needs to physically be written into the bill because this is going to amend the act that says that there is a time limit, I'm happy to move forward. I would like to know your comments on that if I could, please.

Mr. Oberle: And the act does put the onus on the worker to report an incident. In the case of PTSD they don't often understand that there has been an incident, and there is no incident, really, legally until such time as there's a diagnosis of PTSD. Then it's presumed that it's the result of an incident. Neither the employer nor the worker might even know which particular thing was the cause. So there's no reporting of the incident. There is no timeline involved here. I wholeheartedly support the member's intent here, but there is no time limit imposed on the worker.

I do agree that a worker may choose privately on his own, as part of his or her own path of healing, to seek a diagnosis outside of the system. Once that diagnosis is made known to his employer or to the workers' compensation, it's automatic. Even if he got the diagnosis two years ago, it doesn't matter. Once that diagnosis is accepted by the employer and the workers' compensation, he's in. There is no time limit at all.

I do need to take a slight exception to a comment by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw. I, of course, am responsible for the workers' compensation organization. I just had dinner with the board, actually. Or, actually, they had dinner and I watched because I had to race back here, and I didn't get dinner. But I can tell you that I've been elected since 2004, and in that period I would say that issues surrounding workers' compensation occupied a third to a half of my constituency time. It was significant.

I would honestly tell the member that in my constituency and overall I think that the Workers' Compensation Board has worked very hard to rebrand themselves. I think they've worked very hard to gain the respect of employers and employees, and I think they've changed that organization. I hope that in some small way in my tenure I can contribute to that because I think it's the right thing. I agree that they did have a bad reputation, and they were thought to lean on one side of the equation more often than the other.

I have a great respect for the hard work that those people do, and I think it's very evident that they've worked hard to change their brand and that they've done so. I'm going to continue to work with them, and I invite hon. members to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. If the hon. member could sort of help me with what he just stated, as I'm listening to the motion and the explanation, I just took a quick look at the act, and basically what it states is that the worker must report "the accident to the Board within 24 months after the date." I was wondering if you could comment on a situation where posttraumatic stress disorder may be diagnosed somewhere along the road, and the physician would say that it occurred as a result of this, this, this, and that. In other words, it wasn't one incident. It was a series of incidents. They went back, say, two and a half years, and that report date of the accident is somehow registering with the WCB as not being within the 24-month period. Could you sort of elaborate upon that so I could get some clarity?

Mr. Oberle: Again, this more properly describes a specific accident. You had a car accident while you were driving a company vehicle on the job or something like that, a specific incident which caused a specific injury, possibly a longer term injury, disability, something like that, which is not really the case in PTSD.

But just assuming for the moment that the cause of your PTSD could actually be traced back to a specific incident, section 26(1) actually states that:

The Board shall not pay compensation

- (a) to a worker unless the worker reports the accident to the Board within 24 months after the date of the accident or the date on which the worker becomes aware of the accident.

Now, that very much defines the PTSD case. The worker isn't even aware until he goes through the diagnosis and understands the healing path.

If that doesn't cover it for you, putting aside the 24-month question, if you think there's a problem there, what section 26(1) is saying is: you don't have a workplace accident; you never reported it. But in the case that we're talking about tonight of PTSD, when you're diagnosed, you've had a workplace accident. It was caused by your work. Never mind when it was reported. This bill presumptively says that if you were diagnosed with PTSD, it was the result of a workplace injury, which right there means that you will be covered. There's no claim to file after that point. It is a workplace injury, and it will be dealt with in the way that WCB deals with a workplace injury, depending on what medical coverage and whatever else you need going forward.

The timing is irrelevant here. This section 26(1) says that if you don't report your accident within two years or within the time that you ought to have known, your injury is not a result of a workplace injury, but in the case of PTSD it automatically is. That's the bill that we're debating, the larger bill, not the amendment here. That instance is already covered. There is no time limitation. It's irrelevant.

When you are diagnosed, it is the result of a workplace injury. It doesn't matter when the incident happened. Maybe people won't even know what incident caused it. That's one of the reasons for the presumptive coverage here. It's a workplace injury, and you're covered when you're diagnosed. End of story.

I hope that clears it up for the hon. member.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I can appreciate the passion coming from the hon. Member for Peace River, and I appreciate your clarifying the time limits in section 26 and how they relate to this amendment and this act. We can all agree that lots of times these are multievent situations, that the person who is claiming PTSD may not have even known when that event happened, and often maybe they don't even know they have PTSD. In some of the examples of the people that I've spoken to, it's oftentimes, actually, the family member who identifies a problem. There's an issue in the home, it escalates to a certain point, they start seeking help for their loved one, and it all sort of rolls back to where they work and the stresses of where they work. Given the discussions that we've had all day today with regard to, you know, certain traumatic situations which people who would qualify for this type of act would fall under, we can all appreciate that, so I appreciate your clarification.

The one thing that I'm wondering, though. I can appreciate that the WCB is rebranding, but the WCB is ultimately an insurer. I don't know that it's a question for us in this House. I'm not so sure that it wouldn't be a question for those enforcing the Workers' Compensation Act, that there couldn't be some sort of mistaken idea that it is 24 months. I'm not so sure, looking at this act, that it clearly states that there is no time limit.

I can appreciate where you're coming from, and that sounds fantastic. I think that everybody on this side of the floor, certainly in our party, would support that there is no time limit, but that doesn't seem to be identified, yet in section 26 it's clearly identified. So I think that that will leave some room for interpretation, and WCB sort of doesn't have the best reputation at the moment when we're talking about interpretation versus what is actually stated.

I guess what I would suggest is that if that truly is the situation, that there is no time limit, could the hon. member actually make that very, very clear and do a subamendment to the Member for Calgary-Shaw's amendment where he could actually make it very clear for those who are interpreting this act and applying it to the individual that there is no unjust punishment for not reporting in the 24 months, that there is no opportunity for anyone to be confused on if there is a time limit or if there is not a time limit. That would ensure that this act is actually intended for getting the care and the clinical help that they need, which is clearly your intention, and I appreciate that intention.

I think we also need to realize going forward that everybody in this room likes to have everything very clear. Any time there's a grey area, your side or my side or anyone could be confused by that grey area. So I would implore the hon. member to help us out with that. If there's no time limit, then let's make it very clear that there is no time limit.

Thank you.

Mr. Oberle: Again, I'm wholeheartedly in support of the sentiment here. I'll just give you another example of how this applies. When you have a workplace accident, if you don't report it within two years, it's not a workplace accident. End of story. Right? You can't file a claim and say, "I had an accident, and it caused this injury." If you report it within a certain amount of time, then you can file a claim, and there's an investigation. It may have been a workplace accident, but if you don't report it within two years, that's it.

Presumptive coverage is an end around on section 26. In section 26 it defines whether you're going to get coverage or not. Presumptive coverage is an end around on that. It presumes coverage.

I'll give you a parallel. Many Legislatures give presumptive coverage to certain kinds of cancer for firemen. This has been tested. This is one where the time limitations clearly don't apply. If you have a certain kind of cancer as a fireman, it's presumed to have been caused in the workplace. In that case it's possible that there's a specific incident but probably not. It's probably a prolonged exposure to certain toxic fumes and those sorts of things. It's possible that it was caused by one incident. It's irrelevant what particular incident caused it. What's relevant is the fact that presumptively you're covered. It's presumed that it was caused in the workplace, which means you're covered. That's what you're presuming. It's caused in the workplace; therefore you're covered.

That's what we're presuming here. We don't know which incident. Maybe we might; we might not. We don't know how long ago. If you are diagnosed with PTSD, it's presumed to be caused in the workplace. That's the definition of covered, that the injury, the syndrome was caused in the workplace. Therefore, the WCB has to cover you. That's the definition of the WCB. If you have something that happened to you in the workplace, they have to cover you. So it's an end around on section 26. Actually, 26 is kind of irrelevant here, and the cancer in firemen thing has been tested. You know, this presumptive coverage of PTSD is new but only the syndrome, not the mechanism here. This defines: don't care what happened; it's a workplace incident. End of story.

So all it takes is a diagnosis. You know, the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw knows what's involved in that. That's not an easy thing. Even getting to the diagnosis is not easy. But once you have that, you're covered. That's what this clause says. You presume it's a workplace incident; the WCB has to cover you.

Now, I'll just add one thing to your comment about the WCB. Yes, they are an insurer, but they're not a private-sector insurer that operates under their own rules and policies. They operate under the legislation of the government and the guidance of this Legislature. We decide what their policies are and how coverage is assigned and all those things, which is why we're passing this bill. We want this class of people to have presumptive PTSD coverage because we know that we're not going to be able to identify a specific incident, and we're often not going to be able to make the employee prove it, you know. So people that are exposed to these kinds of risks, we're going to give them presumptive coverage.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. While we're just on the point of clarification around timelines, in Bill 1 it does also suggest: "a worker who is or has been" a first responder. Are we to also assume that there's no time limit on when they were a first responder? I'll take it one step further. If there is an individual who was a first responder, has been diagnosed with PTSD, is no longer a first responder, has paid for his own coverage because he couldn't get coverage through WCB, is there now recourse for that individual based on this act?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you for the opportunity to respond to that. That's very much the case. This also covers the incident of a volunteer firefighter who was a first responder but is not actually employed as a first responder at the present moment. He's in his original job. The PTSD is presumed to be caused by that workplace as a first responder, and yes, he's eligible for WCB coverage even though he's not employed as a member of an ambulance service or a fire service. Yes. In fact, that could very well be the reason that that person, if they were an employed first responder, left the employer. They just couldn't do it anymore. Almost certainly the cause of that. So yeah, absolutely. That's why the bill says: is or was a first responder.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. My compliments to the member. You explained it to me really clear. I understand your intent, and it's an honourable intent. I agree with it. I'm hesitant to put this question out to some of the lawyers in the room because I only have enough legal training to cause the lawyers heartburn, not much more than that. When I look at legislation and I hear the member's intent and when I read the legislation, I can follow his train of thought. But what I try to do when I look at legislation is ask: how would the opposing lawyer try to manipulate the language – I apologize if I offend anyone with the word "manipulate" – to try to make a case for the other argument? I know that some lawyers – I just saw one smirk on the other side – have trained legal minds. Given the intent of the hon. member and what he's trying to accomplish with this, can they read this language and agree that this cannot be twisted any way other than the intent that it has been designed to have? If there is a grey area, would it make sense, then, to maybe bring something forward in the amendment just to exclude section 26, just as the intent has been communicated?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chairman, I apologize. I'm not a lawyer, and I don't play one on TV. I'm going to ask the hon. House Leader if he could give us a legal opinion, which, of course, according to the rules of the House, I'm not allowed to do. I wonder if I could ask him to comment.

Mr. Hancock: Well, I'm not allowed to give a legal opinion either, and I wouldn't ever, ever suggest that lawyers try to manipulate wording. That's not what we do.

What I would say is that it's pretty clear in the way that the various sections – the amendment refers to 26. So if you go to section 24, the hon. member was referencing the presumptive coverage for certain cancers. We have in the act a triggering mechanism; the act comes into play for a worker if they're injured at work. It has to be an accident or incident which triggers the coverage.

When there's presumptive coverage, we're presuming the accident happened because of the nature of the work. If you're a firefighter and you have certain cancers, it's presumed that you breathed too many fumes. That's just one of the things that happens on the job, and it's been shown over time with the incident reports, et cetera. So we have as a Legislature accepted that and said that you shouldn't have to go back and try and pinpoint the fire or the incident because it's impossible to do, perhaps, and because we know that this type of cancer is something that firefighters get.

We're now saying that this type of posttraumatic stress disorder is something that first responders can get because they may have had one incident that triggered it, as was mentioned earlier in one of the speeches in the House. It could be a triggering incident, but it could be a triggering incident based on a number of cumulative effects of incidents. So it's unfair to actually say that you have to go back and pinpoint the accident, the triggering event. By making it presumptive, you don't actually have to file the accident report that says: this is the day that I broke my leg.

The Chair: Other questions or comments?

Mrs. Towle: I just have one for clarification, hon. Member for Peace River. I just want to be clear. You're saying that if a person was ever – ever – a first responder and suffered from PTSD but may not have the diagnosis at this point in time, then because there are no time limits, they can come back to WCB, claim PTSD, go through the process, and get the proper diagnosis. There would be no time limit on that. They would then qualify because it's presumed that they have PTSD, and the WCB would then cover all of the costs that were out of their own pocket because they were not covered by WCB in the past. That's the first point I want to clarify.

The second one: is the government worried or is the WCB worried that all of a sudden we could have a multitude of claims coming forward to WCB now claiming, "I have PTSD," go through the diagnosis and do everything properly as it has to be done – and I know that's not an easy process; I know it's not as easy as one thinks – go through that process and then have an abundant claim or an excessive claim that now all of a sudden WCB will have to pay out? If that is the case, has WCB budgeted a certain allotment of money to accommodate for that possibility?

Mr. Hancock: Let me start with the second one first because the hon. member is now catching on to exactly what the problem is with the previous amendments that we were debating in the House. If you open this up on a presumptive coverage on a total wide frame as the previous three amendments that we were debating suggested we do, you haven't done the actuarial analysis, you don't know what the incidence piece is, and you can't have levied the premiums that you would need to levy to cover it. So, of course, the Workers' Compensation Board would be very concerned if we opened it up wide. In fact, they're very concerned at all about presumptive coverage. The Workers' Compensation Board has never liked presumptive coverage because they can't plan for presumptive coverage in the same way. That's why it's very necessary to do this on a cautious basis and why it was necessary to not adopt the three previous amendments.

With respect to this amendment and if you understand the way Workers' Compensation works, if I'm injured in an accident or hurt in an accident or have an incident at work and I file my report and 15 years later I have a medical condition that causes me to be unable to work, if I can prove a causal effect that goes back to that report, that individual incident, I am covered. There's no limitation there as long as I filed my accident report.

When you've got presumed coverage, there's no accident report. Essentially, if you were a firefighter or a first responder and you have PTSD, it's presumed it was caused by your work even if you haven't been in that work for 10 years. Now, that's why you need the qualifying phrase "unless otherwise proven." You know, you may be able to say that, well, you were a firefighter, but then you joined the military, and you went off to war. The onus is on the WCB to say: well, let's look at what else might have caused this, and let's see if there's a different causal connection than the fact that you were a firefighter or a policeman or an emergency responder.

The way the system works is that if you file your accident report, then any subsequent claim that you might have, as long as you can prove causation back to your accident, is covered. The difficulty, of course, that people have is that the longer the period of time between your claim and the accident, the more difficult it is to prove causation. In the case of presumptive coverage you're saying that the onus is otherwise. The onus is on somebody else to say that it wasn't caused by that.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, or was your point covered?

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I want to thank the member for his explanation. It was clear. The question really came down to the exclusion of section 26. I follow your points, and it all makes sense to me, but when I'm trying to follow the language, what I'm just looking for is assurances in the language. As I understand what's being conveyed, the onus of presumption, once it's established, which it is once they file their claim, is there. What you're telling me is that when I read this language, section 26 will not apply because the presumption has been made. That is what I was looking for clarification on.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Oberle: Yeah. That's very much the case. If you look at the Workers' Compensation Act, section 24 relates to presumptive incidents of cancers, and that coexists with section 26 quite nicely in the act right now. If you have a type of cancer, if you are the fireman that's described in here, you have it. You don't need a claim. The claim is made by the fact that you have the cancer. Or, by what we're trying to add here, the fact that you have this syndrome, the claim is made.

I just want to address the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. I guess it's always possible. If you're worried that there will be a rush of complaints or files, if that were the case – and I really don't think so. You know, I think we all understand the mindset of people that do first responder work, and I don't think there will be a rush. If there was an increase, it would be in the number of people seeking diagnosis.

The diagnosis process itself is pretty rigorous. The people that have come out of the other end of that with a diagnosis of PTSD: we want to cover them. If you are now unable to work or sort your own personal life out because of that, we want to cover it. For the reasons that the hon. minister pointed out, with the Workers' Compensation Board being an insurer, it makes it difficult for them to plan, but they do around this cancer piece, and they will around the PTSD piece.

There is still the possibility that, you know, you worked as a first responder for a day and a half, never actually got a call out, and now you're doing something else, and 15 years later you claim PTSD. Well, this section still allows an out. You can still prove otherwise. I mean, somebody would look at your work history, and if that was the case, they would say, "Well, you know, you worked a day and a half, you didn't actually get a call out, and in the meantime you were a Maytag repairman," which, as we all know, is a very stressful job, which we didn't get to in the amendments. You know, you get the picture. It would be possible to say: "Well, wait a minute. That can't be traced back to the workplace."

That puts the burden of proof somewhere else. If that proof isn't there, then the worker is covered. That is the intent of this bill. If you've served our province that way, we want to recognize you. We want to make sure you're covered.

The Chair: Thank you.

The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you. Hon. minister, I appreciate your clarification. I actually appreciate all of this dialogue going back and forth. It's been really informative, and as somebody who came from the health care industry before, I'm familiar with how the WCB works and the causal effects, that 15 years after something happens, if you have injuries that are related back to the first claim, yes, you're covered. I understand all of that.

I have to commend you because you're very clear and concise in your answers. I find them very factual, and I think they've helped a lot. The only thing that I didn't hear in this conversation, though, is: in the budget for the WCB are the premiums going to be enough, or is there any opportunity or will there be a possibility that the WCB will now need to raise the premiums on these affected industries, costing taxpayers and private industry dollars to cover off the possibility that some of these people may come back?

I agree with you. On the nature of first responders you're absolutely right. I think most of them don't, and I don't expect there's going to be a stampede at the door to be covered, but of course, you know, these are questions that we need to ask to be responsible and diligent in our duties. My concern would be: are we going to be passing these premiums on to the people paying for them to cover off the possibility that someday, somewhere, somehow, because it may not happen today, as people become more comfortable with – right now PTSD has quite a stigma to it. So did depression at one point in time. Today depression doesn't have as much of a stigma. More and more people are coming forward and saying, "I am depressed, and I have this, this, and this," and they're seeking help. You're absolutely right. This is what we want people to do because it makes for a healthier Alberta, and it makes for healthier families and healthier people.

As we go forward, you know, for the next 10, 20 years, this is legislation that is taking us into the next generation, and that generation might be quite comfortable with PTSD and might be quite comfortable with: I had this experience in my job, and I didn't have any other causal factors that would create a reason not to grant me this claim. Have we built in some sort of security for that, and/or are we looking at the possibility of having to raise premiums? And I'm not talking about just having to raise premiums for the sake of raising premiums, because of cost of living and all of that. I'm talking about actually having a direct effect on those claims coming through for PTSD as we go forward. I don't think the generations behind us are going to stampede to the door, but as it becomes more acceptable, we may have this issue come up. How is that going to be passed down, and how are we going to cover off those costs?

Mr. Oberle: Therein lies the black art, perhaps, of insurance operators in trying to figure out the actual game of what their expenses will be and how to properly assess what insurance premiums are as a result. First of all, I need to point out that you are talking about public employers here. First responders are employed by the public, by the government or municipal government, or by an agent of a municipality; for example, a fire service, those sorts of things. But, yeah, they very much have to figure out: what's an appropriate premium?

Now, this in some ways is where the PTSD diagnosis and the accident diagnosis are a little bit more in parallel. If you've had an accident and you report it within the two years and then 10 years later you find out that it's actually had some effect – it's causing you some impact; you can't work; you can't do this – then you are compensated as long as you reported that accident. Same thing here. If you get diagnosed with PTSD, it's presumed that you're covered, but it's not like: "Oh, you have PTSD. Here's a big payment."

The PTSD diagnosis is related to some injury or debilitating condition you now have. You can't work, and you need compensation. In those cases we owe that compensation. Those people are injured, debilitated as a result of their work. It's not like, you know, "You have PTSD." "Okay. Give me my money, and I'll go back to work tomorrow morning." These people are injured as a result of a workplace incident, and they need compensation.

Yes, the Workers' Compensation Board has their actuarial work to do, but they have some idea. There is evidence from across North America and other jurisdictions that they regularly use to understand incidents in certain types of workplaces, and they set and adjust their rates accordingly. I can't answer you on whether it will cause a change in the rate. It wouldn't surprise me. I don't think it'll be significant. We deal with PTSD today. We have diagnosed PTSD sufferers in the first responder community today, so I don't think it'll be a significant change, but it's possible that there will be a change, absolutely.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. A sincere thank you to the ministers across for your clarifications. I think it will go a long way to, I guess, ease our minds as to the interpretation of Bill 1, and I'm more than happy to call the question on the amendment.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

We'll call the question, if there are no other speakers, on amendment A4.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: We've dealt with the amendment. We're back on the bill. The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I do have a second amendment that I would like to propose to the House, please. I'll pass this off with the requisite number of copies and explain it once the members have it in front of them.

Thank you.

The Chair: We'll wait for that amendment to be circulated. When it gets to you, it will be noted as A5.

Hon. member, do you have the original?

Mr. Wilson: I do. I'm sorry.

The Chair: Please send us the original. We'll trade you for a copy.

Hon. member, you can speak to your amendment.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. In an attempt to keep the preamble relatively succinct on this, I have spoken on some of the administrative stressors that first responders go through when dealing with posttraumatic stress disorder. This amendment is an attempt to ensure that when first responders are diagnosed with PTSD, they receive treatment that uses the research and understanding around the unique lens that first responders experience posttraumatic stress disorder with.

I would like to flag the feelings of abandonment as their family turns their back on them – the family of the firefighting community, the police community, the EMT community – and their loss of identity. The potential for administrative hearings after traumatic events and analyzing the actions of the individual under extreme stress causes them to relive events. This is, again, something that is unique for first responders. To have to go through hearings to justify or explain what had happened with their posttraumatic stress and the depression linked to these factors compounds the trauma.

Now, my concern is that we do not have any protection for first responders that are receiving treatment, and I'd be happy to be corrected if I am wrong. The WCB, I believe, would assign a psychiatrist or a psychologist to treat the individual who has been diagnosed with PTSD, the concern being that the psychiatrist that they're being sent to may not fully understand the stressors that first responders have to deal with. If they do not, the first responder under treatment may begin to feel that the doctor is not helping them, and again, because of the unique nature of post-traumatic stress, they may stop going to this doctor because they don't feel that they're helping them or they're pressing them in a different direction than they're willing to go. If they do that and they stop going, there's also the potential that the WCB can then say: well, you're not following our treatment plan; we're now yanking it from you.

The problem with that is that now you've got an unstable individual who may be on medication prescribed by the doctor to help them sleep at night to get through the early stages, who may be unable to pay their bills, who still has the family pressures of PTSD, the additional administrative pressures of the work life that they left behind, and all of this can add up to an increased risk of suicide.

How do we ensure that this doesn't happen? I think that there is a simple solution to it, and it is to legislate that first responders will have access to culturally competent clinicians familiar with the research and realities that first responders face when diagnosed with PTSD.

Again, I look forward to an engaging and open debate. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. associate minister to respond.

Mr. Oberle: Yeah. You know, again, I support the intent here. I'm quite willing to accept this. It probably goes without saying, I think, that the WCB, being a public entity, has to deal with health and the health of the people that certify: psychologists and doctors and all those sorts of things. We have the College of Physicians & Surgeons and the college of psychiatrists.

I think it kind of goes without saying that it would be presumed that the person would get the best help available. I actually don't mind saying that if – and this is a question. If you look at section 24, for example, it doesn't say that a firefighter who has a presumptive cancer gets the best, latest cancer treatment because it's presumed. So by accepting this amendment, do we say anything about, in the case of those other ailments, that it's okay if you don't get the latest treatment? I don't think so.

Frankly, I'm prepared to accept this amendment. I don't see where it detracts. Let's put it that way. I'm prepared to listen to other comments, but I don't have a problem with it as written.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm going to rise in favour of this amendment, unless I'm swayed a different way, for one reason and one reason only, the issue dealing with culturally competent clinicians. We are a diverse society. We have, actually, many different cultures. In my own riding we have First Nations, we have Métis, and we actually have a number of other cultures that are represented. All across this province it is something that we both value and cherish.

When I first looked at this, I would agree with the member that the presumption that we would do that is an honourable presumption, but to actually put it in the bill and make sure it is clear in writing, where I sit, is worthy of merit. So that for individuals who are in the system, who fall within the parameters of what we intend to do, there's absolutely no question when there are these culturally sensitive issues that they can deal with them on a culturally sensitive basis. That is really where I think the member was going with it, and I support that completely.

The Chair: Are there other comments? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. I just wanted to compliment the associate minister across as well as the Government House Leader for a very, very good exchange of ideas on this issue. I think I've learned a ton from the discussion tonight. I think all of my Wildrose caucus colleagues have. I just hope that for other bills that we talk about in Committee of the Whole in the future we can have this kind of constructive dialogue. I think it has certainly been a great way to start out the session.

We'll support this amendment, and hopefully we can vote on it and move on to other matters.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other comments?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A5 carried]

The Chair: Now back to the bill.

Hon. Members: Question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 1 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Chair, I wonder if we might briefly revert to introductions.

Introduction of Guests

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Chair and colleagues, I'd like to introduce a couple of guests that I see in the gallery. We have Tony Sykora, the president, and Dean Sarniecki, the new executive director, from the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association. I would welcome them here in the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Bill 3 Education Act

Mr. J. Johnson: Before I get started, I want to thank everyone who's taken time to share their support for this legislation. Since it was introduced last week, my office has received many calls and e-mails supporting the act and encouraging us to move quickly to get the bill passed and get on with the important work of reviewing the supporting regulations and, of course, implementation. In the spirit of moving quickly, Mr. Chairman, I won't take too long this evening reinforcing what we're trying to do with the act, but I do want to address a few of the questions that were raised last week with respect to the Education Act.

I'll start with a few concerns raised by the Official Opposition about extending the age of completion to 21 and what it might mean in the classroom. I believe the specific concern was about the potential for 15-year-old students to be in the same classroom with a 21-year-old. Mr. Chairman, let me make it clear that while this change does allow young people up to the age of 21 the ability to access education and the funding that goes with it, school boards are still able to direct students to a particular location for these services. So not all these older students will go to the traditional high school. School boards can support older students through online distance learning programs, outreach centres – the Chinook Learning centre in Calgary is a great example – which are becoming more and more popular.

Mr. Chairman, members also raised questions about how we consulted on the legislation and specifically if we worked with teachers or our First Nations partners. I can tell you that this act is a result of some of the most comprehensive and far-reaching public consultation in Alberta's history. We all know that since it spanned two years in this Assembly and now is in its third version. The opinions of stakeholders and teachers from across Alberta are definitely reflected, including feedback from parents, students, school trustees, administrators, postsecondary partners. Specific to our First Nation partners and Métis stakeholders, communities were consulted during both the Inspiring Education initiative and Our Children, Our Future consultations as well as Setting the Direction and consultation for Bill 18.

There were also several comments raised about charter schools, Mr. Chairman, and specifically whether the legislation supports these schools enough and if we're making it harder for charters to establish. As you've heard me say in this House before, one of the reasons Alberta has an education system that's as effective as it is and world class is because we offer choice. Parents have options about what kind of educational environment is going to help their child succeed. This bill very strongly reinforces the government's ongoing commitment to that choice, and charter schools will continue to play a key role.

What we have done in this legislation is capture the current process we are using to create charter schools and make sure the school boards are given the opportunity to establish alternative programs if they want to do so. So if a group of people have an idea for a school that's innovative and they want to see it available, they can first take that idea to a school board as an alternative program. If that school board doesn't introduce the program for whatever reason, then that group can go down the road to apply for and open a charter school. This amendment was agreed to in this Assembly last March, and I don't believe there were any objections to it at that time, Mr. Chairman.

I was encouraged last week to hear a great deal of support for the fact that this legislation does so much to encourage and respect local decision-making. We have locally elected school boards in this province for a reason, Mr. Chairman, and it's good to hear that they have so much support. That said, I did hear a few issues raised by members opposite that go against that principle and would potentially have my office, the office of the minister, step in on issues like limiting school closures, dictating assessment policies, or setting local fees.

Mr. Chairman, let me make it clear. School closures are not something anyone looks forward to. I know in my constituency over the last several years we've had several school closures, three in the last four years to be precise. Those decisions are never easy, but they are decisions that need to be made locally. I have no intention of stepping in and limiting boards from making these decisions. We will and have included in the legislation requirements for school boards to consult with parents and the community when they are considering closing down a school.

Similar to this, Mr. Chairman, there have been calls for me to ban some types of assessment in this act. Again, this goes against the philosophy of local decision-making that is a key pillar of this bill. We can't claim to support local autonomy, local decision-making, then step in every time we disagree with it.

To be clear, Mr. Chairman, this government expects that our children earn their way through school just like every parent and every Albertan expects. We expect teachers to assess children based on policies set by administrators in keeping with feedback received from parents and using the latest research. I also expect that the assessment approach as used by one school for one child may not always work for another. The act clearly states that teachers are responsible for the day-to-day assessment of students and that principals are responsible for overseeing that assessment, not this Assembly.

In addition, school boards are responsible for ensuring they have policies in place to allow them to be able to assure parents that learning outcomes have been met. The only place where the minister has a role in assessment directly is in relation to our standardized tests, so our provincial achievement tests and our diploma exams, Mr. Chairman. The PATs are not mandatory, so parents can opt out of them, and with diploma exams if you don't write the exam, you get a zero. So for anyone to suggest that we have a provincial no-zero policy in Alberta simply is not true. Assessment happens on the ground day to day and is treated as such in this legislation. I think that's exactly where it needs to stay.

Addressing assessment locally works. Take what's happening in Edmonton, where concerns around the no-zero policy started. The school in question now has a new and engaged school council of parents who are working with the principal to ensure that assessment policies meet their children's needs, and the school board is reviewing assessment practices and encouraging the public to provide input. Albertans have expressed concerns about a local policy, and those concerns are being addressed. Let's be clear. This is a local, not a provincial, policy.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, I might add that we are in the process of evolving our system to fulfill the vision set out in Inspiring Education. One of the key shifts is moving from a focus on content regurgitation to a focus on mastering competencies. When we revise our curriculum and assessments to be focused on competencies, students will need to prove that they have mastered the skills and they have those competencies before they can advance. Advancement will be less tied to how much time they've spent at a desk or in a classroom or even on how many assignments they've done, more on what kinds of skills they have achieved. If they've proven they can master it, they can move forward. Once we get there, zeros really become irrelevant because if you don't do the work, you won't progress.

I've also learned through media reports that members of the opposition want to bring forward an amendment to ensure teachers can't be fired for giving a zero. Mr. Chairman, the Education Act sets out clearly that a teacher is the employee of a school board and as such needs to work within the policies set by their employer. It would be inappropriate for the Minister of Education to start to impose himself in that relationship and skirt the role of parents and teachers in setting any local policy.

While I know the members are referring to a very specific situation between an employer and an employee, one where I believe the opposition claims someone was terminated solely for giving a zero and the employer asserts other factors were at play, I want to be a little cautious here, Mr. Chairman, because that case is currently being appealed. We will need to let the process work and get to the end of the appeal before we jump to conclusions about legislative solutions.

Several questions were raised during second reading debate about funding for schools, whether it be funding for special education, reducing class size, or implementing full-day kindergarten. I'm happy to share what we're doing in these areas, but the time to debate that funding is when the budget is in front of the House, not in relation to the Education Act legislation here today.

We've also heard about school fees. We take pride in an education system where children with athletic skills can focus on being tomorrow's Olympians while those that have musical abilities get the chance to reach for those goals. But these program options all have different costs, and I do not think it unreasonable for these opportunities to be a partnership between those that benefit from them and those of us that finance them. That said, fees should not be used to fund the basics, and parents should have a clear understanding of what fees are being collected and why. Students should never miss out on programming options just because their parents can't pay. I know we're all concerned to hear of the engagement of collection agencies. Parents have made it clear they want us to look at the rules around school fees. Once we pass the Education Act, we will be asking Albertans for input on our school fee regulations to ensure that it is clear where and when fees can be charged and for what.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, some members opposite claim that the changes we have introduced in Bill 3 somehow are a sign that we are softening in regards to expectations around diversity and respecting human rights. This could not be further from the truth. Albertans have told us that they want an education system that respects diversity, and the Education Act does that. All courses, programs, and materials used in schools must reflect the diverse nature and heritage of Alberta, promote understanding and respect for others, and honour and respect the common values and beliefs of Albertans. I don't think I need to remind this House that all legislation and all public programs in Alberta must be consistent with the provisions of both the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Alberta Human Rights Act, and rightly so. They must be consistent whether the Charter and Human Rights Act are referenced or not.

We removed the reference to the Charter and the Human Rights Act out of section 16 simply because it was being misinterpreted, not because we have changed our position with respect to human rights. Mr. Chairman, the Human Rights Act is still referenced in section 33, which requires school boards to develop a code of conduct to ensure that it addresses prohibited grounds of discrimination as set out in the Human Rights Act. All of us have the right to believe what we choose, practise the religion we choose, love whom we choose, and teach our children the values we choose are important. We have no intention of changing that, Mr. Chairman.

I also at this time, Mr. Chairman, need to bring forward an amendment to Bill 3. I believe that the pages have copies of the amendment, and I'll wait for them to be passed out before I cover off what that amendment is.

The Chair: Hon. minister, I believe everyone has a copy of the amendment. You can speak to it.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's come to my attention that a clause giving the minister authority to make regulations with respect to private schools was mistakenly left out of Bill 3. I can assure this House that this was an oversight. It was not meant to be deleted. This regulatory-making authority is currently in place under the School Act. It was included in both Bill 18 and Bill 2 under subsection 29(7). I apologize for the oversight or any confusion this may have caused. I've spoken to all my critics ahead of time with respect to this. We'd like to make sure that it's reinserted in the bill, and I hope that we can just get a fairly quick question on this one.

The amendment reads as follows. In part A section 29 is amended by adding the following under subsection (6):

(7) The Minister may make regulations respecting private schools, including, without limiting the foregoing, regulations establishing eligibility criteria that must be met by a person who proposes to operate a private school.

Mr. Chairman, it gives the minister the ability to set regulations with respect private schools, which, of course, we want. It has always been the case, and we want to continue.

With that, if there are questions or additional comments anyone would like to bring forward on this amendment or the bill, I look forward to the discussion, and I thank everyone for their input the other day and over the last two years and in the coming hours.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

I'll recognize the Member for Airdrie, followed by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, then Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Anderson: Yes, Mr. Chair. I understand this is an oversight, but while we have it on the table, I wonder if the minister could clarify. This is a very open-ended power that we're giving the minister here under this act, and I understand that it might've been there in the past, so great. But what are some of the eligibility criteria that this clause is referring to? Can you give any specific examples of what that would be referring to?

Mr. J. Johnson: Well, Mr. Chair, I think one thing we should be very clear on is that any of the regulations for Bill 3 are up for discussion following passing of the bill. We're going to have to discuss with Albertans and make sure that we've got the regs right before Bill 3 actually comes into force. If I'm going to talk about regulations, it would be ones that might already exist. But, for example, with private schools you'd set criteria in terms of how a private school actually gets accredited: when they can apply for that, how much time the ministry needs to have a look at that. Right now they need to operate for a year and show they're viable before they actually get funding as an accredited private school.

Things like that and other things would be within the regulations. All those things will be discussed in the reg review coming forward for every piece of the bill to make sure we put the fine points on all the broad brush strokes.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. Is it this government's policy, when they're doing the regulatory review on this, to create a very broad set of criteria about who can set up a private school? Obviously, we know that they have to be accredited, and I understand all that. But are we going to keep and respect the freedoms of individuals to start a private school, whether it's based on a specific religion or it's based on a specific learning pedagogy? So, for example, if someone wants to start up a special-needs private school for special-needs kids, is it this government's intention to continue – I would say continue – its track record of creating a lot of leeway with regard to who can set these private schools up? As long as they're accredited and staying within the curriculum and so forth, there's not going to be any movement in future to restrict any further than what is currently the case an individual's ability to start a private school?

Mr. J. Johnson: There's no intention to narrow the scope, narrow the focus, or narrow the eligibility for private schools. We have three types of private schools. We have registered, we have accredited, and we have accredited funded private schools in the province. Their level of oversight or their level of alignment with Alberta's program of study and diploma exams and all of those things dictates the level of funding, so we do have conditions we can set on the funding side as well. But there's no intention to change the scope or narrow the focus on who is eligible for these schools.

The Chair: Thank you.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Before I talk about this amendment, I would just like to thank the minister and his staff for all the briefing that has been done and the discussions we've had and for keeping me apprised and for listening to some of my concerns at times over the course of this Education Act. It has been greatly appreciated.

Nevertheless, in speaking to this amendment, I want to make it clear that I am for people being able to have the choice of a private school. I'm all in favour of people who choose to have a private school. They can also pay for it themselves. I realize that that is not the nature of this amendment, but I will go more to what this amendment speaks to, dealing with who proposes to operate a private school.

It was widely reported in the Calgary Herald when we had an incident with the International School of Excellence. I believe the minister is familiar with this. We have a school operated in the private system that is receiving 70 per cent of the per-student grant that our public schools receive. At least the Calgary Herald reported that the person operating the school was deemed ineligible to teach in our Catholic school system, was using funds derived from the education system to not only pay for a BMW lease but also a mortgage on his house and somehow this private school, and furthermore, allegations of grade fixing, not even allegations but almost proven facts of people receiving inflated grades. This has been on the record and openly reported. I note that this private school continues to be in operation today. It seems to be, if I read the response from the ministry that was quoted in the papers, that we take a laissez-faire approach to private schools. That was a quote from your ministry.

Now, in my view . . . [interjection] I understand the Member for Airdrie seems to be applauding the International School of Excellence record. I would ask him to go back and review the facts on this matter.

Nevertheless, it appears to me that at least this one situation leads me to believe that there has to be something done in this regard. Will you be addressing through regulation some of these concerns brought up by the International School of Excellence? The grade inflation, the purchasing of a BMW car with funds derived from the school, a house mortgage from the school, the fact that the member who started the school was deemed unable to teach in our Catholic school system: are these some of the things you'll be looking at dealing with in regulation?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Chair, I know this particular member has been a strong supporter of private schools. Based on his comments, I'm sure he supports the amendment. Once we can get the amendment passed, then we can have a lot of discussions about the regulations, which is really what he is talking about.

The Chair: Thank you.

The Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks very much. I, too, want to thank the minister and his staff for keeping me tuned up as to what is happening here. We have, I think, a great responsibility when we open up such landmark legislation as the Education Act to ensure that we get it right. Perhaps this three-times-lucky situation that we're in will bear some fruit this time. I hope so. This particular omission, I guess, is an indication of that, how perhaps by slowing down a little bit and being able to look very carefully at each section of this bill, we will get it right. So that's great.

I'm glad that the private school provision is here. It's an interesting thing because although sometimes our reputation as a province is more to the right side of the spectrum, we have probably more public schools and fewer private schools than almost any other province in the country. I think that's a testament to the fact that we value our public education more and certainly don't preclude the possibility of people making a choice for a private school, nor would I ever suggest that we should as long as people are paying for it themselves. I think it's a bit duplicitous that we actually direct public funds to a private school, but that's a discussion for another day.

We do have the fact that we do have proportionately fewer private schools to public schools, and I think it's a testament to our strong public education system, right? Why spend $10,000, $20,000, $30,000 on a private school when you probably get a better education in the public school down the street? That's great, and part of the reason I signed up for this job is to ensure that we keep it that way here in this fine, fine province.

Finally, I just wanted to ask the minister, then: has he or his staff found any exercising of this clause previously in your own experience or in the experience of your staff? You may not be able to answer that right now, but maybe you can check back. I'm curious to know how this particular clause has played out historically in our province to ensure that we properly regulate our private schools here.

The Chair: Hon. minister, do you care to respond? You will get back to the member?

Mr. J. Johnson: Yeah.

The Chair: Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, did you wish to speak at this time? I think I had you on the list earlier.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think I'm fine on this amendment, really, but since you called me out, maybe I'll just make a couple of points. I believe in the value of time, so I assure you I'll be brief. There was so much in the minister's comments that I think we are going to get to talk about. Some of the amendments that we're bringing forward and that some of the other members are will require more time and more discussion. So maybe I'll just leave it at that on this amendment. I don't have any problems with it.

The Chair: The Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you. The question brought up from one of the schools in my riding was just on some of the wording in the act, and it's independent school that is the preferred language compared to private school. It's on the whole thing, and it's also in the amendment, but it's just preferred language that some of those schools like to hear. Instead of "private" they like to hear "independent." That was just a comment that was brought up to me by one of my schools, so I thought I'd pass it on to you.

Thank you.

The Chair: Other comments? The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake on the amendment.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just actually want to express to the hon. member across the way there that I appreciate that you're taking the opportunity to include private schools in this amendment and that I completely have no problem supporting this amendment. I appreciate that you acknowledge that it was missed in your first draw of the act. Thank you for bringing it forward.

The Chair: Any further comments on the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: Now back to the bill. Speakers on the bill? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Yes. Mr. Chairman, I would like to propose an amendment to the bill and circulate it and then speak to it.

The Chair: Hon. members, we have before us amendment A2. I would invite the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View to speak to amendment A2.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Chairman, thank you. For me, too, as my colleague stated a few minutes ago, it's a pleasure to bring my first amendment forth here in the Chamber. I'd like to move that Bill 3, the Education Act, be amended in section 57, as you can see in front of you if everybody has received it to this point, in subsection (1) by adding "and subject to subsection (1.1)" after "Notwithstanding section 13" and by adding the following after subsection (1):

(1.1) A board shall not charge a parent of a student a fee relating to

- (a) a program or course that is considered mandatory, or
- (b) administrative costs.

So many ways to go about this. There are so many different points to make on fees. I'm just going to try and roll through a few, and I'm looking forward to a good discussion on them.

I would say, first off, that I appreciated the minister's comments as he introduced the bill and all of the things that he was able to speak to. We were able to talk beforehand. It was my hope that in those discussions beforehand we would be able to work through a consensus on a couple of these although I didn't get the indication from his comments that maybe we're going to be able to, but I still have hope on that.

If anybody is following the way school fees work in this province, you'll know that something is screwed up. We have somewhere around 62 boards, and anybody can do it any way they choose. While that's all about local autonomy, and we appreciate that, the people that are suffering in this are parents and families because what's happening with mandatory fees is that September, Mr. Chairman, is becoming Cheque-tember, and you're not really sure what you're paying for anymore.

I just want to make a point, when I raise these mandatory fees, that we're not talking about transportation fees or busing fees – I think there should be a discussion on that – or extracurricular fees, you know, field trips and those things that aren't mandatory to graduate from high school. What I heard from parents around the province as I travelled this summer was that when you're paying for textbooks and noon supervisory fees, administration and photocopying fees, this is where things are bordering on ridiculous.

We don't ever want to put boards in a place where they don't have the money to do what it is they need to do. What we had hoped to do was find out from the government exactly how much money school boards need in terms of mandatory fees to carry on with the work that they do and the services that they provide. I don't think we were ever given a number. We tried at one point to compile them. There was an estimate of $40 million to $80 million, I believe, come up with probably before I came onboard. But $40 million to $80 million in mandatory fees across the province is obviously a sizable chunk of change.

As I call for the province to make that money available to boards so they don't have to pass these hidden fees and taxes on to parents – well, they're not even hidden – I also want to note that I'm fiscally responsible enough and aware enough of the debate in this room to not suggest that we pay for everything and we have a blank cheque for everything and then turn around and say: "How come you guys are running a deficit? What's wrong with you over there?" I get that presentation.

For me it's about prioritized spending. There are some things that I'm very open about, and I think most of us are about disagreement on where money is allotted. Perhaps that's a debate for another day, but I raise it just to say that I don't say openly: "Hey, $40 million to $80 million, guys. Dig it out of your back pocket, throw it to the boards, and everybody is happy." I don't think money grows on trees, and we just can't do it like that. But I would prefer a prioritized approach. If the Minister of Infrastructure over there knows what tree it's on, I'd love to walk to it with him.

There is in Calgary right now a serious situation, you know, that I think we should all be troubled by. Whether we work this out tonight or not on this issue, we should be troubled by the fact that 3,000 parents in the Catholic school board are being chased down by a collection agency. Something is wrong when we have that many parents, or any parents, being approached by a collection agency to pay their fees. This is why we're looking for clarity on the issue and to eliminate mandatory schools fees. I mean, we all pay handsomely, I think, in our property taxes for education, and we all pay, you know, for extracurricular activities openly, I believe.

Might I make another point? If you know any of the administrators or principals or teachers in your local schools, you know that they go above and beyond to help students that are in need, and I think that there are a lot of things that go unreported. When somebody shows up at school and can't afford to go on the swimming trip, I'd bet dollars to doughnuts that most administrators and teachers and principals are aware of that child's situation and probably make an extra effort to get them there. I raise that just to throw a bouquet out to the people in the system. I know that they're doing their best to make sure that kids are not alienated because of a lack of funds. But, clearly, we've got a situation that we need to look at when we have 3,000 sets of parents being chased down by a collection agency.

I would also say that there is a board that's doing it right, and I think we can applaud the Lethbridge school board. You know, there's a board that doesn't charge any fees somehow. I always believe, no matter what the subject, that there's a template out there to look at for success. We're always wise to look around and see who's doing it right and what we might learn from it. Maybe that's the province's intention on this, to take some time with it. But, clearly, they've done something differently, and they should be applauded for it.

I would just say in general on this amendment that we've gotten to a point where education seems to parents – you know, I've said that September is Cheque-tember – to be at a point where you're reaching into your wallet every other week for something. If you have a few kids, it does add up. For families it does make a difference. We'd like to be able to do it – I know we all would – so that kids could get their public education and get through graduation without being fee'd to death on the mandatory side. I'll leave it at that for now.

Again, I appreciate your time, Mr. Chairman and colleagues, to bring forth my first amendment. I look forward to the discussion.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. minister, did you want to respond?

Mr. J. Johnson: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I can say a few comments on this item. I appreciate the member bringing it up. I don't disagree with some of his comments. Obviously, as a parent and as the Minister of Education I know that we pay very close attention to these fees. We're concerned when we see them. We're hearing from constituents that Albertans are concerned when they see them. The question to this House becomes: what is the best way to deal with it? What's the best way to address it and put some fences around this that all Albertans can agree with and all Albertans can have some input on?

I will also agree with his comment that we won't be able to work it out tonight because this is a far broader issue than just limiting fees with respect to mandatory programs or administrative costs. I would point out that we do have some very good regulations on administrative costs. The member would know that Alberta school boards are limited to spending only between 4 and 6 per cent of their budget on administration. We're one of the few jurisdictions in the entire country that has restrictions like that.

What about the transportation fees? This is one of the things that's really burning many Albertans, but that's not included in the amendment.

There are a lot of things worked into fees, Mr. Chairman, and the member was right again when he said that some boards do it right. The boards are important. They play a very important role. They deliver the day-to-day operations of education in the classrooms in those schools, and they need that autonomy to be able to do that.

Coming from the Official Opposition, that has been very vocal in their view that we need to respect local autonomy, this amendment is a little baffling in that we can get into this far broader, far deeper, and with far more consultation with Albertans and still respect local autonomy if we get at it through regulations and we get at it through a regulatory review, which is what's coming next and which is where we would be now, oddly enough, if this bill had passed last spring.

I don't disagree that we need to understand these costs, and we need to put some fences around these costs. But I don't agree that we need to take away the local autonomy of the boards and that we can fix it with one fell swoop with legislation. This is something that needs to be dealt with in regulation, with a fulsome discussion with the boards and with Albertans.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder on the amendment.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you. I appreciate the chance to speak on this amendment, and I would thank the hon. opposition critic for bringing this forward. I think it's a well-reasoned amendment, and I think it speaks to, again, what I had said before, that we are making landmark legislation in opening up this Education Act. It only happens once in a generation or so. We need to make sure that we get it right. We're sending elements of guideposts not just for those of us in this room today but for people 10 years from now and 20 years from now, reasserting that principle of public education and that it is a universal program that does not have instructional fees.

You know, you can take this argument of the autonomy of school boards to a certain extent, but they are elected and charged with the responsibility of public education. When we put out a new Education Act here ultimately, hopefully, we're sending and reasserting not just the laws they must be governed by, the regulations, but the spirit of how we want our public education system to unfold. The cornerstone of that is that we provide public education without regard to the financial circumstances of a student or their family, right? This is a foundational belief that serves as the basis of our public education system.

We might be able to put in regulations that might control this, but I say that it's important to have overarching statutes and sections that do so in an unequivocal sort of manner. I mean, we're not precluding the possibility of charging fees for noncore programming like school trips and sports and that kind of thing. We're talking about core educational sections. I know that we have had a lack of unanimity across the province, some individual schools, you know, making provisions to not charge and some that are charging. It is our responsibility here as elected members to send a clear message down to every single school under our charge to ensure that they do not have school fees for core education. Please, I certainly urge everyone to support this amendment. I think it is useful, and I think that everyone will benefit from it in the end.

It's interesting because here in Edmonton we have quite a number of schools, I see, that will advertise that there are no school fees. "Come here to our school. No school fees whatsoever." They're doing that because often the parents are burdened by those fees. I know that if you have two or three kids in high school, let's say, those fees can be quite substantial. As both a teacher and a parent I could see those fees causing distress for people with moderate incomes and several children. I just don't want to see that going forward. There's no reason we should be doing that, and it needs to be enshrined in law.

Finally, I just want to say that, you know, so often when we're collecting these fees, the process of collecting these kinds of fees will eliminate any fiscal advantage that you might gain from the extra fees. It's like when we were trying to collect those health fees years ago. We spent a good portion of that money just on the administration of chasing people down who didn't pay the fee, right? We could probably unburden our schools by not having them deal with this, and it certainly sends the best message for public education into the future.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm privileged to speak to this amendment, moved by the opposition critic from the Wildrose Party. It speaks to a lot of the core values of what I believe in. I believe that public education should be one of those systems in place that governments, taxpayers, and the like buy into and choose to support and support through tax dollars in order that everyone can attend. The public schools are not only for the rich, the middle class, or the poor, but they're for everybody. They're the essential building blocks of our society.

When we start layering on fees, school fees or otherwise, on top of the simple ability of children and families to go to the public school, I believe we are starting to chisel into that core principle that I believe has made Canada and, in fact, this province quite successful in terms of its education system. I would even go so far as to suggest that the amendment doesn't quite go far enough.

I ran for a political party that had the boldness or the temerity to suggest that all school fees and busing fees should be eliminated. We, in fact, recognized that in our platform and recognized that revenue collected in this regard would be better collected through a progressive tax system or otherwise to fully fund public education. If we really think about it, if public education is going to provide a music class, should there be a fee for using the horn? If a science class is going on a field trip, should there be a fee to go to the museum? Those are real questions for us to ask in this regard. Are we just simply penalizing kids who go to that school who may come from more difficult circumstances than I was fortunate enough to be raised in? If they say, "No; band class has an extra 50-buck music fee to it," you're not taking band class. That happens out there, Mr. Chair, and I don't think that is right. I don't think it meets with the spirit of what our public education system is.

You know, I do understand that you have two ways to pay for things in Alberta. You can go to user fees and/or general taxation, or I guess we can continue on the path of spending all the royalty wealth in one generation, but I don't subscribe to that. I subscribe to education funding coming from general taxation, and it should be in regard to providing opportunities for all our children. This is one of those important core values. That's why we have people pay into a system, to ensure everyone has those opportunities.

I'm willing to support this amendment, and I believe it's important enough to be enshrined in legislation because we all know that if it's enshrined in legislation, it has less chance to be whittled down in regulation. Often what I call the large print in legislation is sort of what we're going to follow. The regulation is often the small print. It's like an insurance policy. Often what the large print giveth, the small print taketh away.

Sometimes I see that in regulations, what we're going to whittle down, what we're really going to do. Furthermore, regulation can be changed often, regularly, and at whatever whim the minister may have. Now, with this minister I know he's going to do a good job of consulting, so I don't have to worry that much about this minister. But I don't know who the future Minister of Education is or what his belief system is or what, in fact, his ideas for public education are, okay?

So that is why I would support this, yet I think we should use this as an opportunity to understand what public education is, that it has to be inclusive of all people. By the nature of what was brought up by the hon. member, 3,000 people being chased down for school fees, you know, probably averaging $180 per student across this province – I have the general understanding that people aren't not paying these just out of spite or out of a willingness not to contribute to their children's education. I come from the belief that there's probably some reason for this. It's probably because they have difficulty paying for it. Okay?

With that understanding, I support this amendment, yet I think that even with some of the rhetoric coming from the mover of this, there is also an understanding that this has to be covered. If we are going to eliminate school fees or eliminate some fees, there have to be some means to pay for this, and that would be through general revenues and through general taxation, okay?

Thank you very much, sir.

The Chair: I'll recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise in support of this motion. I want to comment on some of the comments already made by my colleagues here, both in my party and on that side of the House. One thing that I think we need to focus on is that this is only talking about those fees that deal with mandatory programs, not the extracurricular activities, although the minister did bring up the issue of transportation, which is a big issue in my riding. I don't know of too many students who have the ability to walk to school. Many of our students will spend easily an hour, hour and a half on a bus to and from school, and that's a huge issue.

But focusing just on this particular issue is significant in a number of different ways. I'm not so sure we need to raise more funds. The reason I say that – and the minister brought it up, and it was also mentioned here – is that some school boards do it right. Some school boards actually advertise.

I did bring up in an earlier debate on a different bill an issue in my riding, where the teachers of the local school division are going to be on a plane to Las Vegas to attend a conference, and this is all to do with professional development. I'm in favour of professional development, but do teachers really need to go to Las Vegas for professional development?

Mr. McAllister: London.

Mr. Anglin: London.

The answer is: it's about priorities. I can't help but think that the school divisions, the school districts that are doing it correctly are prioritizing things correctly. If school fees have to be part of all the extracurricular activities, we know that they are not the sole funder of those extracurricular activities. There are some funds that come to these schools for these various programs. As a parent I know this because I pay school fees for both of my children for a variety of different extracurricular activities, for some of the programs that they take outside the normal course of their school work.

What I think is happening here is that sometimes we forget those of low income and those who are poor. I was in a discussion with the mayor of Rimbey recently. We are a small town. He was under the impression that the town of Rimbey does not experience homelessness, and it was pointed out to him that when we have a child living on somebody else's couch – when I say a child, I mean a teenager – who has no home, that would be considered homelessness. That child has no way to pay fees even though they're still attending school. Although we don't experience homelessness to the degree any of the urban areas do, it comes and it goes. We could have it at some given point in time, and it might dissipate as this person moves along. But the reality is that we do experience that.

And we do have children who are raised by single parents. We have a lot of children who are raised by single mothers who work two, three, four jobs to make ends meet. They're not on subsistence, and they refuse to be on subsistence. They qualify, but they absolutely refuse to live that way. They don't believe in it. The mandatory fees, the fees for those mandatory programs, penalize them unfairly.

I have some questions for the minister, and maybe he can clarify this. Again, we're not talking about all the fees. We're just talking about those fees that deal with those programs that are mandatory. What kind of dollar value are we talking about? How is it that some of these school districts can do it correctly and are so successful at it and others are not? Can this actually be prioritized so maybe we're not sending teachers to Las Vegas, as an example, yet we are funding the mandatory programs so that somebody doesn't have to pay a fee?

When I look at this, I think there's room to work together to try to find a solution. Maybe one of the ways to force some of these school boards to look hard for those solutions is to make sure that we don't eliminate all fees, but we eliminate the fees just on those mandatory programs. It doesn't usurp their authority, but they have the flexibility in the jurisdiction to figure out how they're going to spend their money and prioritize their money, just as we as a legislative body are trying to do that on a provincial level.

Thank you very much.

9:30

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. School fees: boy, am I ever glad we didn't have them when I was raising my 13 kids. I'd be broke.

An Hon. Member: You could have made money home-schooling.

Mr. Bikman: Yeah, we would have been home-schooling.

Now, this is a significant issue in my riding. We have larger families, and it isn't just because we're a rural riding and we don't have cablevision. I don't think for a minute that it's a money grab by school districts or school boards. I think it's partly a symptom of deeper issues, and I think that, obviously, one of them is inadequate funding from the province. If it's not that, then what is it? If we don't know, we need to because it's serious and needs to be rectified.

I think there needs to be more focus, provincially, at least, on seeing that more of the money that comes in at the top of this funnel gets to the bottom. Instead of it being like this, it needs to be inverted, like a typical pyramid, with a little at the top. All of us who have any business experience or have audited businesses know that one of the things that contribute to their failure is when they don't control their overhead and don't deliver enough funding to the delivery end of their businesses. The same is true in the case of schools and the school systems. We need to make sure that we don't have extra expenses at the top.

Public and universal schools by very definition imply that they're provided and paid for through the taxpayers' assessments. I think the taxpayers believe that they're paying a big enough portion of their taxes for the school requisition that it should be able to cover things like what are currently fees for mandatory – not optional, not extracurricular but required – courses that will lead to a proper education, a complete education, and graduation.

I was so pleased earlier tonight by the comments of the minister regarding the principle or the concept of mastery of the subject. That's something that we've stressed in our home with each of our 13 kids. We didn't say: we want you to get A's. We said, "We want you to master the material" and then taught them the concept that this is done by doing your homework daily and reading ahead where possible. We budgeted time and required through family rules that they set aside a couple of hours every evening after supper to do nothing but either read or do their homework if they had homework.

I'm concerned that the issue of these fees, that appear to be almost ubiquitous except for those few successful jurisdictions that seem to have mastered this concept of prioritizing their expenditures, can be traumatic for kids and parents. We've had some discussions about trauma tonight, and I would hate to see this issue lead to workers' compensation claims. Also, more seriously and significantly, are we unintentionally making some parents and kids feel like second-class citizens? I think we are. You know that it's talked about in their homes. You know that their kids hear this and think about it. The kids do think about it, and I think we need to think about it.

In some cases, I submit to you for your consideration, it may contribute to kids feeling guilty and to their decision to drop out of school. If this is harped on, if this is raised, a kid naturally could misinterpret the parents' concerns or complaints and feel responsible. We know that, for example, in situations of divorce sometimes the kids are asking, and when they're counselled, therapists are saying: "It's not your fault. It's not something that you did." But kids will take ownership for situations if parents aren't very careful with the language that they use. Now, I'm not in any way suggesting that we should try and legislate what parents can talk about with their children. In fact, that's one of the reasons it took till now to pass this bill. It had to be modified in that area.

Anyway, I think this is a serious issue, and I suspect that each of you understands that it is. We may not feel like we want to theoretically meddle in the affairs and the local autonomy of school boards, but at the same time we mention in the bill in 59(2), I believe, that the minister reserves the right to force boards to co-operate with transportation where he determines it's necessary. Well, I agree with that principle, and I also agree with the principle of oversight. I don't think that it's meddling when we do our job to see that the funding is doing its job, that there's enough of it to do the job, and that it's being spent wisely. There needs to be oversight. There needs to be accountability, and in some cases that accountability needs to extend beyond the local school board. I think we have an obligation as a province, and I think the Department of Education, if that's its current name, plays a role in that.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I applaud, you, Minister of Education, for how you have handled this bill. It's been a very interesting change to the previous Minister of Education, who is now the Deputy Premier. I have appreciated that you appear to be open to suggestions and that you're aware of the concerns that are coming forward. I would hope that the hon. member has not premade his decision on these amendments without at least hearing and actually listening to the issues that are coming forth from the floor. As we saw in Bill 1, with the amendments that were made there, there was a very good dialogue going back and forth. Each of us had the opportunity to debate, and it was in a very respectful manner, and there was value in keeping an open mind and ensuring that we're acting on behalf of all Albertans.

As a parent of two children, one in school and one already out of school, this issue is of real concern to me. Each day I send my absolutely stunning, superfantastic, awesome daughter Madison off to grade 5 and know that she's getting a good, quality education. I understand that I have a responsibility to pay my fair share of taxes to ensure that her education is secure. However, mandatory fees are really concerning because, really, they're just an additional method of taxing Albertans without the province really telling them that they're raising their taxes.

The problem with mandatory fees is that, really, they seem to vary. There's no real consistency. You just get that note home every September, and it has a list of extra fees that you have to pay, and if you don't pay, then there might or might not be the threat of going to collection. The fees appear to be, you know, applied arbitrarily. There doesn't appear to be any recourse for the families, no ability to appeal the fees.

There's also a direct effect on the credit rating as some of these school boards are sending these families to collection. As my colleague here mentioned, there are 3,000 families in the Catholic school board in Calgary that are going to collection. That should cause great concern to all of us in here because that basically says: "We're going to charge you more than you're already paying in your taxes, and if you don't pay that, we're going to send you to collection. Then if you don't pay the collection bill, you're going to have a direct hit on your credit rating, which may in turn make it detrimental for you to get a loan, a mortgage, to buy a car, which might be the key to the job that you need to have to pay for your taxes to put your child into the school." This should really concern each and every one of us because it seems a bit ridiculous to me that we would expect that any of these bills would ever go to collection. They are a bit onerous, and the process of going to collection is onerous not only on the school but on the parent.

There have been occasions where the parent has maybe paid the bill, and accidentally it goes to collection. Then there are costs incurred by the family to correct that error and all of those sorts of issues, not to mention the stress that it puts on the family if the family can't afford this bill. Clearly, for most of these families probably going to collection, if that's the situation they're in, then you've added extra stress to that family, extra hardship to that family, which then creates an atmosphere at home that can be very difficult for the child, who's expected to be learning, not to mention that we've now damaged the relationship between the parent and the school board or the parent and the principal. We should be encouraging that they have a collaborative and co-operative arrangement so that we have provided a better learning environment to the student. I strongly would think that people in our position as elected officials, who are here to represent Albertans all across this great province, should be very uncomfortable with that perception of how we're expecting families to deal with this sort of burden.

Now, let's talk about the burden. In my own constituency there are many families who cannot afford extra fees, and in my own constituency and in my own school I get the little note home, and they talk about lunchroom supervision, and they talk about an extra fee for textbooks. I've questioned it before, and they tell me that they're not properly funded and that in order to get that extra money, they need the parent to kick in the difference. I'm fortunate in my area that I don't have a transportation fee, but I know that in my neighbouring constituency they certainly do. Not only are they being charged for a textbook and not only are they charged for lunchroom supervision, but now they have an added fee of a transportation fee for a bus service that, really, should already be covered.

I have an interesting story to tell. My husband has a sister, and she and her husband have five children. Every September she dreads it. It's supposed to be this happy and joyous time, and really she wonders where she's going to get the money. She wonders how that money is going to come out of her bank account. It's not just school fees. I mean, there are extracurricular activities. There's the buying of all the clothes. She's got three growing boys and two beautiful little girls. You know, she has to buy them all new runners, and we all know they need two pairs of runners. One pair is not enough because the black soles mark up the gym and all that fun stuff. We need to have 18 boxes of Kleenex because we've got to make sure that every kid in the class might have a Kleenex. We've got to have 42,000 pencils because there might be some kid in the class that can't have a pencil, so we've got to make sure we're all fair with that.

This burden is put five times on a family that has five children, and then on top of that, we send that same family home with that nice little letter that says, "Not only do you have to buy all of these things and supply your kids with school clothes and lunches and all that fun stuff, but you now have to pay these additional fees five times over," which is very, very expensive for some families. I happen to know that my brother-in-law and sister-in-law are on I wouldn't say a meagre income, but they're certainly not middle-class. They're hard-working Albertans, which I think most people are. I think that when we're asking families to have to decide, "Do I buy no new shoes for little Johnny, or do I buy no treats for the lunch box because I have to pay $150 per kid?" I wonder what kind of message we're sending to our children. When families are left to worry and wonder what's going to happen if they can or cannot pay this mandatory fee or this mandatory bill, that's a very concerning situation to be in. And not only that, but it's a very distressing situation.

I've had the experience in my own family where in my daughter's class in grade 3 she had textbooks, and there weren't enough textbooks to go around. So they sent the little note home, and you pay the fee, and I did that. But there still weren't enough textbooks. So the solution to the textbooks was: "Well, you know, Johnny can take textbook A home today. You can have a photocopy of the page that they're working on, and then tomorrow you get the textbook, and Johnny gets the photocopy of the page that we're working on that day." Your kid is sent home with this textbook or a photocopy. There's no context to the photocopy. There's nothing that says what they learned that day in class because all you get is the one piece of paper, and that's after paying the extra fee for textbooks. One has to wonder: if the mandatory fees are supposed to be going to textbooks and I still have to share a textbook and share a photocopy and share with little Johnny, I have to question where the mandatory fees are and what the purpose of the mandatory fees are.

It seems that if we're talking about this and it's important to us – and, clearly, the Minister of Education has said that the education of our little children, the future of our province, and our future leaders . . .

An Hon. Member: The Premier said that, too.

Mrs. Towle: That's right. The Premier has expressed many, many times that children are our future and that they're the future of this province and future leaders in this House. I would think that it would be imperative that every school have a substantial amount of textbooks so that every day no child should have to worry about coming home, whether or not they pay a mandatory fee. That should just be a given. There should never be a mandatory fee for anything but certainly not attributed to learning, and apparently there is.

There seems to be no rhyme nor reason, no decision on why we pick which textbook or which class even. Are we short? Is the producer of these textbooks for science not in production anymore? So you need to say: "Okay, we don't have this book anymore. We all have to share. The math book is not going to be in circulation for the next two years. We're phasing it out, so we don't want to buy any new ones." No, that never comes home to the parent. All that comes home is: pay here, pay here, pay here, pay here, and please send your cheque. As a side note to that, just so you know, never does a thank you come home to the parents saying: thank you for sending your cheque; we'll still send you home with a photocopy of the textbook.

There seems to be a clear disconnect between the funding of the school and what they're providing to the students. More and more they're asking parents to do more in their schools. They're asking them for lunchroom supervision. In my school I pay a minimal fee for lunchroom supervision, but there have to be two parent volunteers every day on the playground to cover off recess because, apparently, we don't do that anymore either.

I wonder what we are paying for, and I wonder – I have all these questions in my head – where exactly the Education budget goes. Clearly, if it's not going to recess supervision or lunchroom supervision or textbooks or possibly even transportation, one has to then question: what exactly are we spending our money on? Not only that, but then the letters start coming home saying: "Mrs. Mum of Johnny, you need to not only pay for your textbooks and all those sorts of things. You now need to donate all your time."

To go even further, what happens on September 15? The fundraising letters start to come home. Not only do we have to do the mandatory fees, but we now have to do the fundraising to raise money for little Johnny's band camp, and we have to raise money to cover off, you know, some painting in the school gym. All of a sudden we want a mural on the side of the school, and that can't possibly be covered in the Education budget.

Not only is it enough that you pay taxes, not only is enough that you raise this little kid, not only is it enough that every night you're doing 10 times more homework than we ever had to do in the past, but now we have to pay mandatory fees, and we have to donate, and we have volunteer. One has to start to question: what is the funding model for the Education budget if all of these demands are put to the school board and the school board clearly cannot manage with the money that we have?

Look, as a Wildrose MLA I know that keeping our decisions local is our number one priority. We need to keep them with our communities. We know that keeping them local and in the communities is the best thing for the children. It's a way to get community engagement. It's a way to get parents involved. Everybody has a say, and they know where their money is being spent. That being said, when the school board is not being appropriately funded, this creates a situation where they pass it on to parents in a nondiscretionary manner, in an arbitrary manner, with no ability to have any discussion on what those fees are. This causes me great concern.

Each and every one of us that sit in this House should take a quick breath and literally have a discussion in our heads or with our stakeholders or with our children or with our parents. You know, it might cause us to take a moment to actually ask our mums and dads: "You know, Mum and Dad, when you were in school, did you have to pay X, Y, and Z? Exactly what did your taxes cover, exactly what did your fees cover, and exactly what was expected of you by the teacher? Exactly where did your money go, and how much volunteer time did you have to do? How many volunteer hours were you demanded to do? How many PAC, parent advisory councils, did you have to sit on, and how many meetings did you have to attend, all for the good of your children?"

I think you would find that, quite literally, our predecessors, quite honestly, did not have to do all of this effort. Yet take a look. I'm 38. Most of the people in here have gone through the school system. Most of the people in here had parents who didn't have to pay all these mandatory fees. Most of the people in here have had children who've already gone through the system and may or may not have had to pay mandatory fees, but I can tell you that the generation that's coming up behind us has to pay mandatory fees. There seems to be no rhyme nor reason as to why they have to do that.

So when you're sitting there having that conversation with your mum or dad and you're talking to little Johnny and you're trying to decide how that money is best spent, we maybe need to take a look at that it's our job as legislators to ensure, when these mandatory fees are coming out, that we have a logical reason for why they're doing that, that we have an understanding of what that money is going for, and that we have a clear indication to Alberta taxpayers as to why we are replacing one tax with, really, an additional tax.

That's really what it is. Let's get right down to it. Mandatory fees are a way to tax Albertans further and further and further, and this government does not have to stand up and say: "Albertans, we are going to tax you mandatorily. We're just not going to tell you about it. We're going to hide it under the auspices of mandatory fees. Not only that, but we're going to redirect funding from you so that you have to impose mandatory fees on families."

Then we put our school board trustees into a situation where it's negative. They're having to go back, and every time they have these little meetings, they have to go in camera and out of camera and all those sorts of things, and everybody has hurt feelings because they've passed a new mandatory fee.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I applaud my fellow colleague for speaking very passionately on this issue. I also applaud our Education critic and, of course, our leader that during the election we made this a very important plank of our platform. It was even more popular than the lake of fire.

Part of the Wildrose plan would be to ban mandatory fees for all Catholic and public schools to ensure that there would be no unfair financial barriers to education. I know that the Premier campaigned against this idea, but I know that she's proven from time to time that she can alter her promises. I hope that we can have a discussion and a conversation on this, and I hope that she'll support young families and children, support this endeavour.

Of course, we understand that this is an investment. There is a cost to this measure, but of course Alberta's young families and children are a major source of wealth and energy, and they are our future. I don't have 13 kids. I don't have a child, but I do have nieces and nephews, and I think our government should support them and support hard-working families to keep more money in their pockets. I personally feel that, you know, these types of fees are like nickelling and diming our Alberta families. I think that the amendment that the Member for Chestermere-Rockyview has put forward will ease the undue cash burden on our families.

You know, the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre referenced that this isn't in relation to extracurricular activities. You know, this isn't something that parents and children do on their time outside of school and so forth, that isn't relevant to, you know, the core courses. It's mandatory. These are new fees that I think we're seeing coming up. It's photocopying charges, textbook fees, and registration fees. I think that these fees have popped up in recent years. I mean, I'm 31. I didn't see these fees even when I was in high school there.

There is also the topic of the fact that collection agencies are trying to collect these from parents. You know, just the stress of going through a lawsuit, having these collection agencies hound you and go to civil court and get a judgment and then continually pressure parents in this situation. Of course, if the parents don't pay on time, I'm assuming that the debt collectors would charge the prescribed interest rate in the relevant act for such fees.

There was a suggestion by the minister that this could be done in regulation. You know, if this is a priority for government, this should be explicitly stated in the act, in the constituting documents, not left to the minister or his bureaucracy to meddle with after the fact. I think, you know, that the Education Act is supposed to set out the overarching parameters upon which our education system will be based. I think that if this were a priority for this government, it should be placed explicitly in the act. This amendment does just that. It places the elimination of mandatory school fees right in the legislation so it's clear to everybody.

You know, we talk about costs and where we get this revenue from. I think it's important that we look and understand that everything is a question of priorities, wants versus needs. There are a lot of things people want. They may want $2 billion in corporate subsidies to pump CO<sub>2</sub> into the ground. They may want brand new MLA offices down the street for $500 million. They may want these things, but when it comes to the children and families, some of those families are really strapped for cash, and this type of amendment will really help those families. You know, it's probably on average about a hundred bucks a family or something like that. I think that we should really look at the priorities that we have right now. There are just so many ways. Looking at hotel rooms at the Olympics, I think that when families are getting nickelled and dimed each and every day on these types of fees, we have to look at those types of expenditures. If we actually were very prudent with our fiscal resources, we could help those families.

On that note, I would just like to commend our Education critic. Of course, our leader was very instrumental in putting forward this campaign promise. I hope that, like other legislation, perhaps they might adopt this promise as well. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize next the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to make a couple of points on points already made, hopefully not to go over from scratch on some of the things said. First of all, to my colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake: I know you misspoke. She's gone, but I'll correct the record anyway. I think she referred to collection agencies looking for 3,000 parents in the Calgary Catholic board of education. What she meant to say was the Calgary board of education. It's the public board.

I want to talk about what the minister had said to me a long, long time ago when he got up after I did the very first time. He asked me why the amendment doesn't say: why don't you also ban transportation fees and all fees? Well, because that wouldn't make sense. You know, we're trying to do something that we can work with for families, and we recognize that we can't pigeonhole boards, so I'm not sure if it was sort of a sarcastic implication of: why don't you just do that? Clearly, I don't want to do that. I don't think anybody wants to do that, put boards in that situation. So that's why.

The issue of autonomy is almost used as something to hide behind when it's convenient. We very much support regional autonomy, and maybe before I make the point, I'll say this again so that it doesn't seem like we're saying to boards or those in schools that they don't know what they're doing. I believe that the administrators, the principals, and the teachers in our school system would be first in line to best represent our kids and stand up for them and lead them on the path that we want them led on. I believe in what they do.

We're talking about public education and our role in it, so it's not about: we're not going to tell you what to do. In fact, you know, I just grabbed the Education Act, and I opened it to a random page. It's all about what the minister can do. Read it. I mean, pick it up, and flip it open to any page. "A board shall . . . where the board makes an application under subsection (1), the Minister may . . ." It talks about the minister in virtually every paragraph, so I believe it's our job for oversight, to refute the point that is going to be the theme, I think, going forward, which is regional autonomy. Again, we very much support regional autonomy. But this book effectively says, "I'm the king of the castle," if you read it. Now, I know that's not how it's applied, and I don't think we have an Education minister currently that would act that way, but it does give the room for oversight and responsible oversight to work with boards.

The amendment we propose I believe to be very reasonable, and we propose it for all the right reasons. We propose it because families asked us to propose it as we travelled around. We can still do this, but my concern with the amendment, from what I heard in the opening speech from the minister, is that the decision has already been made. If that's the case, I'm very disappointed because we met a few times to discuss some of the things that we might do under the premise that we would work on them together going forward and that maybe we could find some common ground and do Alberta families some good. So I was very forthcoming. This is what we're going to be proposing. This is why we're going to be proposing it.

Now, I know there is no guarantee . . . [interjection] All right, Bruce. Gotcha. Sorry. All right, minister of Chestermere-Rocky View. Got you. Not minister. All right, Member for Chestermere-Rocky View. Do you see what I'm trying to say? Jeez. This must be another late night.

The point is that you get together and try and work together. That's the point. It's not to help prepare a speech to rebut all the points that you know are coming, but that's essentially what I heard.

Now, there'll be another contentious issue coming forward, one that we all want to speak on. I'm concerned that the decision has already been made, from what I heard in the opening comments. Isn't the point of this, looking at these amendments, to work together and see that we might make a difference? That's the point of this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other comments on amendment A2? The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to this amendment. I also want to outright commend the Minister of Education for tabling this bill. It's obviously a huge improvement over the renditions that were put forward earlier. I guess, in relation to a comment he had made earlier, that the reason we are debating this new bill in this session is because the previous bills were faulty. I know he made that comment in the opening remarks. I'm glad we can stand here and debate the issues of what is going to make this improved bill, hopefully, even better.

I think this a great amendment brought forward by the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View. I think it's just a great idea, and I fully support this. Also, in following up a comment from the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, I too believe that this should be supported in legislation because in talking to stakeholders, their primary concern is that legislation is passed and that we leave too much decision-making on the regulation side, to bureaucrats, and the conversation with stakeholders stops at that point in time. I think that's a really important point. The people that I talked to said: you know, if you leave it up to bureaucrats to make the regulations, you're just cutting them loose. I think that is valid. That's from the stakeholders; that's not from me. That's from individuals that I've talked to. So I appreciate that comment. Again, I back up what the very wise Member for Calgary-Buffalo mentioned earlier, that it's better to have it in legislation. We put the idea forth here, and it's decided, and the case is done. I want to commend that.

I also feel that if we don't legislate, then the regulations open the door for what fees are justifiable: how much is enough and at the end of the day how much is too much? Autonomy allows all those questions to be asked. Autonomy also allows the broad range of: "We don't charge fees. We charge fees. How much do we charge? What are we charging for?" I think, you know, that if we can do this right and have a really good, open discussion about this, we might close those gaps and loopholes and just sort of make it very straightforward for the parents and children who are using this resource.

As mentioned, collection of the fees was another issue brought forward by stakeholders and the fact that this task is at times very onerous. It's very labour intensive. I had no idea that there was – you know, the number of 3,000 was tossed around for the Calgary board area chasing delinquent fees or fees owed. There are costs involved there. I think that we have to ask ourselves: where is the time and the energy best spent by our educators and our administrators? Do we want them concentrating on education, our children? Or do we want them to be creditors, collectors of bills? I think that's a very valid point. Again, it's adding layers of bureaucracy and duplication of efforts that it shouldn't be. It just shouldn't.

I don't have children. I pay taxes every year to the education system, and as somebody who is paying into a service, I'm assuming that I'm fully funding that service. I think that's the way it should be. I think education should be truly and fully funded. Full stop. I mean, at that level. I think that's very important to meet the curriculum. You know, there are some disclaimers, but your average basic public schooling system: we should be able to send our children there and not be nickelled and dined to death as was earlier mentioned.

Again, because I don't have children, it's the idea that I'm willing to pay for that, but I also want some good results back from that. The results come from the stakeholders and the people that I represent. If they're happy, then I guess we're doing a pretty good job. Right now I think there's a little bit of a contentious issue around this. I think there are some possibilities for making this amendment work and making this system better, making this bill better and stronger, which you already have done. I really, really commend you for that, not being here in the previous session. I think there is huge opportunity.

In saying all of that, I want to say thank you. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on behalf of myself and the stakeholders in my constituency.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. minister.

Mr. J. Johnson: Yes. Mr. Chair, I appreciate the comments of the Assembly. I just feel compelled that I need to comment and respond to a few things. I appreciate the hon. Member for Medicine Hat. Yes, there has been a lot of work done on this bill. I think it's come to a good place, and there have been some good compromises. But his comments that the system should be fully funded: when you match that with comments from the hon.

Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, where he suggests that fees are a result of the insufficient funds, boy, those things sound like a page right out of the NDP playbook.

Mr. Hehr: The Liberals as well.

Mr. J. Johnson: And the Liberals as well, as so rightly noted by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

I want these folks to know how well funded our education system is, Mr. Chairman. The funding for our education system in Alberta dwarfs that of other provinces, whether you look at it in terms of how much we fund teacher compensation, how much we fund on a per capita basis, or how much we fund on a per-student basis, which was just reported in the OECD report.

As a matter of fact, in the last numbers I looked at, which was a couple of years ago, Alberta Education funded our system to the tune of about $1,600 per man, woman, and child. When you compare that to the rest of the country, most provinces are around $1,000, $1,100. Number two in the country was B.C., at $1,200. To suggest that we should be putting more money into the education system, I'm not sure how that reconciles with all the demands every day during question period that we need to cut the budget, balance the budget, reduce the deficit. It seems like we're talking to a different group of individuals here during the day versus in the evening, when they ask for schools and roads and seniors' facilities and now more funding for the education system.

The other thing that was very concerning to me to hear was that the lake of fire comment was actually a plank in their platform. I thought it was just a comment from just one kind of wing nut. But the commendation that the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills made to their leader in terms of the fees plank of their platform being more popular than the lake of fire comment was, I think, a little insensitive. To make a joke of something that impacted Albertans so greatly is, I think, a little irresponsible.

Mr. Anderson: That's the reason you're there.

Mr. Eggen: It was a gift.

Mr. J. Johnson: Well, thank you for that gift. I still think it's irresponsible.

I would like to say emphatically that we do support a fulsome review of school fees. We recognize the issue. We realize that it is an issue. The Education Act that we have before you goes further than the School Act of today does. It allows the government the ability to set regulations for school fees, which we don't have today. We think that we need a fulsome discussion on that, but we also believe that the locally elected officials – and I know the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake talked about that she's an elected official. Well, so are local school boards, and they're elected for a reason. The question is: what would you have local school boards do? Do you want to take away their ability to establish fees, potentially take away their ability to fire teachers for whatever they think they should fire them for? Many would argue that that is fairly limited today, and I think there's good reason for that. You can't say that you respect local autonomy, which was another plank in the platform of the opposition, unless they disagree with you.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre talked about restricting PD and PD trips and forcing solutions on school boards. Again, I'm not sure how that reconciles with respecting local autonomy. We're seeing several reversals of the platforms of the Official Opposition and even comments that they make during the day. There's one interesting one here, Mr. Chair, where the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake talks about – and I believe I have the quote right here: Albertans should never have to pay a mandatory fee for anything. Well, I wonder how she feels about her leader's comment that was written in the Herald in 2003 that says that this province votes overwhelmingly Conservative, which means Albertans should believe it is the responsibility of an individual to provide for themselves, their families, and their dependents; besides, if parents aren't willing to pay out of pocket to support the education of their own children, why should I? So I'm a little confused on the position of the Official Opposition because it seemed to change from March to now, and it seems to change from the afternoon to the evening.

I want to emphatically say that the system is well funded. We just need a really fulsome discussion about this. It needs to be through regulation. We are in agreement on that fact. I think we're just in disagreement on what the right avenue is to get at that.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. Boy, that was a chippy little reply. It's like question period in here all of a sudden. That's very nice. You know what? We were having a very constructive discussion here, and I wonder if the fact that you got all chippy there, Minister, is because the Premier showed up and you want to look good or something like that. [interjection] No, the Premier was here for that. Absolutely. I can certainly say that someone is here, and she was definitely here for that.

A fantastic, fantastic job of brown-nosing. Anyway, let's talk about the Education Act. [interjections]

The Chair: Hon. members, please. The Member for Airdrie has the floor.

Mr. Anderson: All right. Hopefully, we can go back to being constructive after that little, you know, relapse. That's fine. The Education minister said a lot of things. Some were relevant. Some were completely irrelevant to what we were talking about. I think he knows full well that he was taking a member over here's comments completely out of context with regard to certain things, but he knows that. What can you do?

With regard to school fees – and I was hoping we could vote on this, but now everyone's blood pressure is up. Jeepers. I guess we might as well still go for it. I think it's very clear that this minister has an issue with basic math. Here's the problem. He seems to think that if we somehow live within our means, if we somehow keep the spending to below what the revenues are for this province, whatever that would be, $37 billion, $38 billion, that if we only spend $38 billion after taking in $38 billion instead of $43 billion or $41 billion or whatever it is, somehow that means we will not spend any money whatsoever. He seems to not understand that $38 billion or whatever we're taking in this year in revenue, whatever it turns out to be, is a heck of a lot of money.

If you spend it properly on priorities, if you are able to get your head around the fact that you cannot spend everything, that you cannot ask for absolutely everything at once but that you have to prioritize – you have to do it. You do it all the time. You say that you do. You have to pick some things over other things, and that's okay. That's good. That's called basic common sense and just basic fiscal sanity.

What I'm not understanding is why this minister can't understand, for example, that instead of paying $2 billion to your buddies at Shell and, you know, to whomever else wants to do a carbon capture and storage project so that we can pump hot CO<sub>2</sub> into the ground, why not take an absolute microscopic portion of that amount and, instead of pumping CO<sub>2</sub> into the ground, put it towards ending a regressive tax on the poor families of Alberta, who want to send their children to school and don't think that they should be nickelled and dimed to send their kids to public school? I think that's a pretty reasonable priority to have, personally. It would cost $40 million to $80 million. You would have to reimburse the school boards for it, but guess what? That means you'd have to not spend it somewhere else. So don't pump hot air into the ground. Don't pay for that. Let somebody else pay for that. Shell doesn't need your charity. Shell Canada doesn't need your charity. The people of Alberta need it.

Mrs. Forsyth: Don't give yourselves raises.

Mr. Anderson: Don't give yourselves raises – that's another example – or an RRSP increase. Don't go to London for an all-expenses-paid trip to the Olympics. That's a million dollars right there. You could put that towards it.

See, this is called prioritization. It's not that hard. Build the things, do the things, have the programs that you need, but do first things first. That's all we're saying here, and this is a priority. Parents should not be nickelled and dimed in this way, and they are being nickelled and dimed by these mandatory school fees. We're talking about mandatory school fees for courses that the children have to take in order to move on, in order to progress to the next grade or whatever. We're not talking about optional field trips and things like that. We're talking about mandatory stuff. That is a reasonable position to take, and it is completely consistent – completely consistent – with running a balanced budget. Now, we have tried over and over and over again to explain to the folks on that side of the House that you can balance your budget, live within your means, and still do what's important for Albertans. You can do it.

We have this false debate in here, you know, that if you're for a balanced budget, you are for slashing programs, throwing people out on the street, kicking seniors down the stairs. I mean, it's just endless. It's the bogeymen that are brought up in this. It's just ridiculous. You can have a balanced budget. Even the folks in Manitoba, the NDP of all people . . . [interjections] I know. Gary Doer had a great record of balancing the budget. That fiscal conservative, that right-wing extremist that wanted to throw seniors out of their homes balanced the budget. He was able to balance the budget. He was able to prioritize. Why aren't you guys able to prioritize?

Why don't we start moving the debate instead of saying, "The Wildrose wants to cut everybody and throw the kids out of their classrooms, not build any schools, shut down all the road construction; they're going to just shut 'er down, boys; that's what the Wildrose would do if they got in"? Why not, instead of having that ridiculous debate, start debating what the priorities are? If we did that, I bet you that we'd all have a lot of common ground. I bet you that we would agree on a lot of stuff.

We could start eliminating some of the obvious things that should not be priorities, and then we could make sure that we could build the schools that we need, that we could hire the teachers that we need and the doctors and the nurses and build the health facilities and the roads and all those good things and do without some of the other things that we can do without or delay some of the things that aren't as important, like a hundred-million-dollar new professional sports arena, for example.

Those are my thoughts on this. I hope that we can again return to a constructive debate for the rest of the evening. I think we had some very good comments, certainly from this side of the House, on this.

I would say to the member opposite that, you know, there are reasons there are 17 MLAs over here. There is a reason why a party that didn't even exist, didn't have MLAs at all four years ago, and wasn't even on the radar has 17 seats, won 34 per cent of the vote, won almost 500,000 votes of Albertans. It's because we do have some good ideas, and a lot of people, a lot of parents in particular, voted for those ideas in the last election. That's why we're here. If the Education minister wants to win a few of those votes back and not lose any more votes, because if he keeps losing the votes at that rate, we will be government next time, then maybe he should think very seriously about some of the ideas that we're bringing forward instead of some of those comments that I heard earlier.

With that, I hope we can vote on this motion. We obviously know that the government doesn't support it. The Wildrose supports it, and hopefully we can wrap it up. Thanks.

The Chair: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Airdrie, might I remind you and all members that Beauchesne's 481(c) states that a member, while speaking, must not refer to the presence or absence of a member.

Mr. Anderson: Oops. My apologies.

The Chair: Thank you.

Also, hon. members on all sides of the House, just a reminder that while discussing the amendment, the debate should as much as possible be relevant to the amendment.

With that, I believe the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View would like to call the question on the amendment.

Mr. McAllister: Yes, Mr. Chairman. We could call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A2 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 10:22 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We'll go back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise in the House this late evening and propose an amendment. I'm going to start off maybe three times lucky on this particular amendment. The amendment that I'm proposing is to move that Bill 3, the Education Act, be amended in section 256 by striking out "or" at the end of clause (b) and adding the following after clause (c):

- (d) conduct themselves in a manner detrimental to the safe operations of a school.

The Chair: Please circulate the amendment.

Mrs. Forsyth: Before I start speaking, I think, you know, that we talk about co-operation in this house. Co-operation is a wonderful thing, and I would like to personally thank the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. His experience as a former police officer has been very, very helpful in regard to bringing this amendment forward. I also want to talk to all of the stakeholders in the police that I've worked with on this particular amendment.

I'm going to take people back in history as this is the third time this has been brought forward.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, if I may, we just need to get the original so that we can proceed. Do we have it? We do have the original. I'm sorry. We need your original for the record. Thank you very much.

You can proceed, hon. member. Thank you.

Mrs. Forsyth: As I was saying, I would like to hearken back for some of the members to this particular amendment that was debated in the Legislature under a private member's bill, Bill 206, the School (Enhanced Protection of Students and Teachers) Amendment Act, 2009. What is particularly exciting and positive is that some of the speakers on that side of the House spoke to this particular bill back then. The hon. Premier spoke in support of this. The hon. Justice minister spoke for it. The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake spoke for it. Lethbridge-East spoke in support of this particular amendment. Calgary-Bow, Lesser Slave Lake, Calgary-North Hill, Red Deer-South, Edmonton-Decore, Edmonton-Rutherford, and Strathcona-Sherwood Park all spoke in support of the private member's bill.

I would like to talk about this particular section. What we're doing is that we're adding an amendment to section 256, which says:

- No person shall
  - (a) disturb or interrupt the proceedings of a school,
  - (b) disturb or interrupt the proceedings of a school meeting or board meeting, or
  - (c) loiter or trespass in a school building or on property owned by a board.

It's proposed that an amendment subsection be added to 256, an offence which will read:

- (d) conduct themselves in a manner detrimental to the safe operations of a school.

Now, Mr. Chair, I would like to talk about this particular section and the idea of weapons and drug paraphernalia being brought into the school. This section would include possession of any weapon since we know that possession of any type of weapon can be dangerous in the context of a school setting. It would also include drug paraphernalia and bullying incidences. Presently – I want to make this clear – the Criminal Code does not cover drug paraphernalia, but the school community is intolerant of any association to drugs or illegal substances for obvious reasons. With this subsection in place it can also make – and I think it's important – antibullying legislation province-wide. I think what falls under this and falls under the Minister of Education: the goals are to maintain safety in the school communities and create a meaningful consequence for our troubled youth.

The purpose of this proposal is to fill the gaps in legislation between the Education Act and the Criminal Code. Often inappropriate actions that can jeopardize school safety are not covered by either the School Act or the Criminal Code, making it difficult to compel the offender to seek the help that they need.

Let's just for a minute talk about drugs. First, we all know drugs are a major issue in the schools, and they're a major issue no matter how big or how small they are. I think it's important for us to understand that the most common drugs of choice in the schools right now are marijuana, meth, cocaine, and ecstasy. I think it's important also for people in the Assembly to understand that drug use in schools has increased in the last decade and, obviously, even since 2009, when Bill 206 came forward, and 2008, when I brought Bill 10 forward. There are still drugs in the schools, still weapons in the schools, and they're increasing.

Unfortunately, the drugs that are used in schools have increased, like I said, and with it we've brought gangs, we've brought gang-related problems, we've brought violence, we've brought weapons, and we've brought all sorts of bullying. We also know that when a drug dealer comes to the school, school security is breached. It's also known that our courts are busy, and they can't deal with small offences like this.

I think the thing that people need to know is that, secondly, weapons are the primary reason that kids are being kicked out of school.

I waited very patiently for the Minister of Education, that being the Minister of Education, when he was the minister from Edmonton-Whitemud. We had another minister of education from Edmonton. I can't remember where he was from.

An Hon. Member: Athabasca.

Mrs. Forsyth: No, the one before that. Castle Downs. Now we have Athabasca.

I remember when I was in conversation on Bill 206, the then education minister, the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, when we were running out of time on my private member's bill, talked about the fact and talked to I think it was the Alberta School Boards Association at the time – I'll have to go back in my notes and get those notes – saying that he would be incorporating what Bill 206 contained into the Education Act.

So it was important for us to look at Bill 3 and see what the minister had provided in his bill. It's a little disappointing on some of the things, but I know that the minister has a lot that he wanted to incorporate in the act, and I give him credit for that.

What I would like to do is have the motion that I have put in front be accepted by the government because I think it's the right thing to do, Minister. I think it's the right thing to do on behalf of the police in this province, it's the right thing to do on behalf of the school resource officers in this province, and I think, more importantly, it's the right thing to do on behalf of the children that attend the schools in this province when we're talking about such a serious issue as bullying.

Along with bullying, as I said the first time I got up and spoke in this Legislature, it's hard to rationalize why a child would be carrying a billy club in their backpack. I don't remember any education classes that I've taught, and I'm sure under what you're teaching them today – I've been out of school a long time – we don't have any classes on billy clubs whatsoever.

I'm eager to sit down and listen to what some of the government members have to say about this amendment, and I look forward to the support of the government on this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Not to intercede in debate at this point, but simply to ask if the House would agree to unanimous consent to shorten the bells to one minute in the event that we need them later this evening.

The Chair: Okay. Thank you.

Hon. members, this saves time. As you know, between bells we have 10 minutes if the House does not see fit to agree to this request. This requires unanimous consent.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Yeah. Mr. Chair, I'd like to suggest to my colleagues that we support this amendment. This is actually something that I know the hon. member has been very passionate about for many years, and while we may have disagreements on some things, I think all of us in this House certainly can agree on anything that's going to make our schools a safer place. We have been in discussions with our whip, who is a former police officer, and some of the resource officers in the province as to how to best address this.

I think she has brought forward a very good amendment that the entire House can support and vote on this and get on to the other pieces of the bill. I commend her for bringing it forward.

[Motion on amendment A3 carried]

The Chair: We'll go back to debate on the bill. The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have an amendment, as well, I'd like to propose, and I'll take a minute to circulate it.

The Chair: Yes, please.

Hon. members, this amendment being circulated will be A4, and we'll just take a moment to get a copy to all members.

You're just about there, hon. member? Proceed.

Mr. Anderson: All right. I'm moving that Bill 3, the Education Act, be amended in section 24 by striking out subsection (2). Subsection (2) currently states with regard to charter schools:

An application may be made to the Minister only if the board of the school division in which the school is to be established has refused to establish an alternative program under section 19 as requested by the person.

In other words, in an application to establish a charter school, the new act would read, if the amendment is passed:

24(1) A person may apply to the Minister for the establishment of a charter school to be operated by a society incorporated under the Societies Act or by a company registered under Part 9 of the Companies Act.

Then section 24(2) would read:

An application must be in the form and contain the information prescribed by the regulations.

So it still gives the government the ability to make regulations with regard to this.

Now, the reason for this. The government in Bill 2, that we discussed previously, before the election, actually had this. They actually had taken out this section just as I'm amending right now.

There was, I believe, an amendment by one of the other opposition parties to put it back in, and for some reason it got back in. I have no idea what decision-making process went into that. It's, frankly, inconsequential at this point. I thought that what the government was originally trying to do by taking out subsection (2) was a very good idea. The basic reasoning for it, I think, was to essentially, first of all, streamline the process with regard to charter schools, make it easier to establish charter schools.

Let's remember what charter schools are, first off. Charter schools are not private schools. That has to be made very clear. They are not private schools. They are public schools. They are open to all children in the public, and there's a waiting list. If you've ever been on a waiting list for a charter school, you just take your spot on the waiting list if you're willing to sign up for the charter. There's no tuition paid, so it's not like a private school. You can't charge tuition to attend there. There may be some fees, but of course, as we discussed earlier, there are fees at every school.

A charter school is a public school. It's 100 per cent funded by the taxpayer. The great thing about charter schools is that they allow for great innovation in education. I think they're the laboratory of the public system a lot of the time. Not all the time. Our public schools sometimes – I know in Rocky View, for example, and I'm sure there are other examples across the province – come up with some really innovative, fantastically innovative, things within a public school setting without even the need for a charter school. That's great. I think it's fantastic. But a lot of the innovations that we get in our public system today have come straight out of the charter schools.

What charter schools do is allow a group of education innovators to try things that may not have been tried in the public system because you'd have to change things right across a large school board or whatever. You can try different teaching methods, different ways of teaching the curriculum. You can focus on different things; for example, trades or language. In charter schools, just so everyone knows, the difference can't be religious in nature. That's one of the things it can't be, which is fine. That's more for private schools. But they allow education innovators to innovate, and I think a lot of phenomenal things have come out of this.

Now, the problem is, unfortunately – not in all cases, mind you – sometimes there are some folks on local school boards that for some reason feel threatened by charter schools. I don't understand the reason. They are public schools. They're fantastic innovators, and public schools have used a lot of the innovations that have come out of charter schools. But whatever; it's there.

It doesn't make a whole lot of sense, if someone wants to start a charter school, to have to go to the public school in the area that doesn't want to see a charter school and ask, essentially, and demonstrate that their public school is not already offering that program. It's pretty easy in that case for the public school to say: "Sure, we're offering that program. We offer this, this, this. It's almost exactly like what you're asking for in that charter for that charter school." Unfortunately, it's not what is being proposed. It's a way of kind of allowing the public school system to essentially stall some innovation, some innovative ideas and new schools that are coming forward.

Also, charter schools – and it is getting late. I need some more caffeine. Holy smokes.

Mr. McAllister: You don't drink it.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. I don't.

Long story short because I do want to keep this short, thankfully, I know, to everyone across. You know, it's kind of like this. If Ford wants to build a new car, they don't have to go to General Motors to ask if they can build a new car. The fact of the matter is that we need to encourage innovation. We need to encourage this competition, especially within the public system, and this is within the public system. The innovation created is fantastic. We shouldn't make the charter schools and groups of educational experts and innovators that want to start a charter school to have to go to, essentially, folks who are competing for the same kids and ask permission from them to allow them to move forward with their project. I think it would lead to a lot more innovation in education.

I think the government was completely right when they first said that they were going to do this, what I'm proposing now. This is absolutely the government's idea out of Bill 2. Clearly, the minister will still have discretion and can set regulations, no doubt about it, but this will take a piece of red tape out of the equation. You won't see us pitting public schools, public school trustees against folks who want to start a charter school. I think the government should take the credit for what they did with Bill 2 on this particular piece, and we should pass this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Hon. Minister of Education, did you want to respond at this time?

Mr. J. Johnson: Yeah. Sure, I can, Chair. I can say that I sympathize with the member and his sentiments because we certainly agree on the principle that we want parents to have choice. The role of family is very important, and we want that enshrined. We're taking those steps in the legislation, clearly.

What I'd like to say about this piece is that while I'm very supportive of that choice and that diversity in the school system and of charter schools because I think they're doing a tremendous job in many areas, the way the proposed legislation currently sits in Bill 3, the third time lucky bill, is the same as the current School Act, and it's the same as the current practice. So we're not actually suggesting changing anything from today, as the member is.

This was debated at length last March, before the election, Mr. Chair. It was actually an amendment brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. It was passed, I believe, unanimously in the House. I don't believe anybody spoke against it at that time, from checking Hansard.

Although I sympathize with the sentiment because I think it goes to choice and the ability to establish charter schools, I think we have that today with the current process. Really, we do want those innovative ideas coming forward, but we want community engagement. We want those people that want those innovative ideas coming forward to their local school boards and saying: we want these programs offered in the local system. If they don't get satisfaction at that level first, then, absolutely, they should have the option to start up charter schools or private schools or whatever they think they need to make sure that those options are available for their children.

The first step should be to talk with the local school board, the local trustees. I think that even if we had a practice or legislation where they could go straight to establishing a school, many times, if we're going to set up regulations, we're going to ask them: "Have you talked to your local school? Have you talked to your local principals? Have you at least given them the opportunity to look at whether they can offer these innovative programs within the schools that we've already built, within the programs that we've already funded, with the teachers we've already trained as opposed to setting up a stand-alone school?" Although we're not opposed to that either.

I would respectfully ask my colleagues to not support this amendment although I do support some of its intent.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I, too, will recommend that all colleagues of this House to vote against this amendment. It's my view that the current legislation as drafted, as it is in the act, really is appropriate for the mechanism for starting a new charter school. You take your concern about what type of education you would like to see, and you make your application. You discuss with your locally elected officials, who are elected every three years. You see whether your charter, at least at that level, is unique or whether something in that system is being already offered that does this, so we can make sure that the t's are crossed and the i's are dotted to see whether that pedagogical approach is already being taken in the system to really have an understanding of what the public system offers.

Of course, it's my view that we should continue to encourage the public school system as the first stop for the majority of Alberta's children. Possibly, parents, when creating their charter, aren't aware of the fact that the school board or whatever jurisdiction already has that program in place. If they see that by going through this application process, they see that that program is already being offered, well, they're probably going to be satisfied at that point and will find that their charter is no longer necessary and understand that these systems are already in place.

I also think the legislation as drafted strikes a bit of a balance here. If you get rejected at the CBE, the minister has some authority to hear your arguments. So it's not the end of the legislative process. You're not just told: no; go away. There's an opportunity for you to make your arguments one more time. So I think it does strike a balance in that regard.

I would like to challenge some of the statements made by my hon. friend from Airdrie in that not all elected officials are seemingly against charter schools. They're re-elected every three years, so you assume they come in with their own values and principles and will decide accordingly. If they do have a problem with charter schools, maybe they have them for valid reasons. I'm not sure what they are, can't speak to them, but maybe they do have those concerns. They're locally elected. They get elected every three years. They can make their case as to what their value system is and what they believe.

I also note – actually, now I'm sucking and blowing, but that's nothing different than we often do in this House – that I have talked to some of those officials at local school boards who don't see some of this unique educational opportunity that is allegedly happening in our charters. They don't see the vast array of learning and sharing that is supposed to happen between charters and public schools and the like. They don't see that innovation. Charters are created to sort of stem further innovation throughout the system. They haven't seen that to date. In fact, to further that argument, it's not only locally elected officials who share that sentiment at times; it's the vast majority of members who teach in our public school system.

I will remind people that 95 per cent of our students do go to public schools; 95 per cent of our teachers teach in public schools.

Those teachers almost to a person, through various presentations, publications, and the like that you can find all over the place, have seen none of those shared learning opportunities or the so-called different pedagogical approaches that are not already represented in the public system.

I would encourage people to go look at some of that reading and to understand that charter schools maybe have not been the ultimate success point that we think they have been.

On that note, I support the minister as the legislation has been written. I think it serves our education system well the way it is drafted.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Chair. Just briefly, I think that this section was put into the previous legislation for a reason. I think that we managed to reinstall it here just previous to this Legislature forming and, again, for a reason. I think there were compelling arguments made and unanimous consent to have this put back into place before. So I certainly hope that we can keep this section going forward.

Thank you.

The Chair: Other speakers?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: The question has been called.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: We'll move on with debate on the bill.

Mr. McAllister: I would like to propose another amendment, Mr. Chair. I'll circulate it, give everybody time to look at it.

The Chair: Hon. members, this amendment will be referred to as A5.

While it's being distributed, hon. member, you might as well start.

Mr. McAllister: Sure. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll read it first for those that don't have it. It's short. We move that the Education Act be amended in section 197 by inserting the following clause after (h): "ensure that teachers are free to assign grades of zero for work not submitted by students."

My goodness, what an emotionally charged issue we have here in this no-zero policy. I think we all recall the furor across this province when the story broke in Edmonton that a teacher was going to be fired for having the audacity to give a zero for work that wasn't submitted. We heard it loud and clear from parents that it wasn't acceptable, yet for some reason that teacher was fired for giving that zero.

Now, I think it's important to try and take the emotion out of the debate, and it's hard because there are two very emotional arguments, for and against. Those that are for a no-zero policy will say: "We have a lot of research that backs it up. An incomplete is an incomplete. We want to see the whole body of work. A zero doesn't give us a look at how the student is doing, basically."

The other side, which I am firmly planted in and I believe Albertans are firmly planted in, says that when a teacher has exhausted every avenue – and I believe that they do. I don't think there's any teacher that's sitting inside his classroom, red Sharpie in hand, waiting for a student to miss a deadline so they can scratch a zero and pass it to the student.

I can speak from experience to it, in fact, as the father of an 18-year-old who graduated last year and was often on the hockey bus late at night, you know, travelling and playing high-end hockey. I'm sure he missed his assignments all the time. I know because I got phone calls from teachers that wanted to see them turned in and went the extra mile to make sure that the body of work was turned in. They do do that. They do try and help students.

There are situations where students have problems in their family lives. You know, we don't all have the greatest social settings, unfortunately. I believe teachers are aware of that with kids. I don't think a teacher says to a 16-year-old that's dealing with things at home that none of us should see: oh, you're going to get a zero the minute you walk into my class today because you didn't prepare your work. I believe the teacher has the compassion to recognize those instances.

We always frame this as: we're telling teachers what to do. No, we are not. We're doing what Albertans have asked us to do.

Now, the side of it that bugs me so much is that the intolerance comes from the other side, and they try to paint someone that opposes it as ignorant. It's not ignorant. The Alberta way is about accountability. When a student has shown that they have no interest in doing their assignments and they have no respect for teachers, they have no respect for the system, we need to teach accountability. We need to say: this is how the real world works. There's no shame in that. It's how the Alberta advantage was created. I think that if all of us knocked on doors and talked to people in our ridings, the great majority of people would say: support this amendment. But I was led to believe earlier that we're not going to, and I can't imagine what it is that we're hiding behind.

We've got a simple philosophy in my home, and I bet it applies to many of yours. Prepare your kids for the path; don't prepare the path for your kids. I would subscribe that most Albertans probably believe in that philosophy. If we truly do, then we should let our children be held accountable when they don't submit work and let them be graded accordingly.

For what it's worth, I wonder if we could all think back to high school. I recognize for some of us it would be a lot further back than for others. [interjections] I'm probably right in the middle of that. To the Member for Banff-Cochrane: I meant no insult that way. The point I'm trying to make is: can we all remember a time when we got a zero?

I'll be the first to admit it. I remember it was a similar situation to what I just talked about, my son and the hockey bus. It was the same thing. We were supposed to be doing trigonometry, and I was too busy messing around with my teammates. I didn't study my formulas, and the next day we had a pop quiz. I didn't know the formula. I specifically looked over at the smartest girl in the class, who happened to sit right beside me – she was cute also – and I looked over at her work, found the formula, did mine correctly, and should have got a five out of five if I was judged on my work. But it wasn't my work. I got a zero out of five and a nice little note from Mrs. Holland, my grade 11 math teacher: do your work yourself next time, Bruce. Well, I can tell you what. I wasn't proud of it, but I did what a 17-year-old would do to try and get an assignment in.

An Hon. Member: Oh, no.

Mr. McAllister: Yes, I did. Can you imagine? And all of you that are heckling get to speak, too. That's the good thing. You can stand up and say to your constituents tonight on the record: I support the no-zero policy. Isn't that great? You'll have your time right away. You're up next. I can't wait. I can't wait to hear it. Thank you.

The point is that I got the big red zero, and my father didn't rush to the high school the next day to defend my honour. There wasn't an uproar in the community saying: "Oh, boy. We're going to hurt this guy's feelings. We better do it a different way." It's a line of thinking that flies in the face of where we are in Alberta. It's the same line of thinking from people that would suggest that all games end in a tie, and I just believe Albertans disagree with it.

If we all agree that our kids should get a zero when every effort is warranted or at least some effort to try and get their assignments in, then let's find a way to allow it to happen. I want to read the amendment again because I tried to make this something that wouldn't offend anybody on that side, that we could make it about the greater good and not: what did the Wildrose come up with for the PCs? It is relatively straightforward. "Ensure that teachers are free to assign grades of zero for work not submitted by students." If you took that to the doorsteps in your riding, where do you think the people that put you in those chairs would vote? We asked parents how they feel, and we heard them.

You mentioned autonomy and that you don't want to weigh in on decision-making, yet we do in so many other areas. If that's the cloak you're hiding behind and you see that as doing the right thing, well, in my view, doing the right thing isn't the right thing to do, and I think there's a big difference in the two. Let's be bold enough and courageous enough to do what we were asked to do: to read the public, to listen to Albertans, to make a mark. Let's be bold enough. I would love to see some vote for and some vote against because I know in my heart that you support and agree with this amendment. So don't be whipped into following and toeing the party line for the sake of toeing the party line.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Education to respond.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Yeah, we certainly can talk about let's not be whipped, but I haven't seen anyone vote other than along party lines on the other side of the floor tonight either.

So can we talk about this amendment? The member brings forward a very interesting discussion that could go on at great length tonight on a whole bunch of different tangents. The concern I have with it is, first of all, what it's predicated on. It's predicated on the belief that a teacher was fired for giving a zero. This is something where I have to be very careful about how I speak to this. Certainly, if you believe the opposition and some of the media, a teacher was fired for giving a zero. If you believe the employer, he was fired for other things. There is an appeal of that termination with my ministry now, Mr. Chair. To establish legislation predicated on something that we're not sure happened I think is something that as legislators we need to be very careful about.

The second piece is, I guess, the principle of this. Once again, I think we agree more or less on the intent here. Many Albertans were flabbergasted that a teacher can't give a zero. Myself I personally don't support that. I would tell you that anyone who leads you to believe that the province or this ministry or this Department of Education has a policy that we don't give zeros is not telling you the truth. We do not have a no-zero policy in this province, and we have no intention of implementing one, Mr. Chair. As a matter of fact, as a province we assess kids four times throughout their K to 12 life in terms of standardized assessment, three PATs and the diploma exam, and if those kids don't show up to write those exams, they effectively get a zero. That's the provincial policy.

The other thing that I think we need to keep in mind is that we entrust the day-to-day assessment of kids to their teachers and their administrators and their school boards. Why would we remove that ability? Why would we meddle with that? Why would we be legislating that? Is it because there's a belief that one teacher got fired for giving a zero? I'm not sure that that's enough.

We certainly want to make sure that kids are earning their way through, with no free passes, and I think this is what struck at the heart. This is the foundational piece of this for not only myself but all Albertans. We want to make sure that the system is not soft, that kids aren't just being socially progressed. You spend your 10 months in grade 2, and in June you're qualified to go to grade 3. Then you spend your 10 months in grade 3, and in June you're qualified to go to grade 4.

What if – what if – the system was different? What if we changed our curriculum and our assessment so that there was flexibility and self-paced learning? What if kids could progress through the system based on actually attaining the skills or the competencies they need and could progress at different rates? I'm going to suggest to you, Mr. Chair, that that's exactly what Inspiring Education has been talking about for four years, that's what we're trying to develop in terms of curriculum and assessment, and in that kind of a model zeros are irrelevant. Why would we set legislation based on a model of the 1950s when we're trying to build an education system for 2030, 2040, 2050, and beyond?

Mr. Chair, the other piece of this that is just as concerning is once again the desire of folks in the Legislature to reach into the day-to-day operations of a school board and take away that autonomy. If we're going to continue to do this, of course, we have to set some parameters. We have to set some fences. There were amendments tonight on the fees, there was talk about limiting the professional development, there was talk about forcing them to do certain things, and now another amendment that's going to take away the local autonomy of educators in the classroom, of administrators to deal with their employees, and of school boards to make local decisions.

My question, I guess, would be: in that kind of an environment what do we have local school boards for? What is their purpose if they can't even make local decisions with respect to assessment and day-to-day assessment? If we're going to legislate this and on how we assess on a day-to-day basis, are we going to run back into the Assembly every time new research comes forward or we change curriculum or assessment?

Although the spirit of it, I think, is valid, the vehicle to do this is very problematic. It's backward looking, not forward looking. It takes away the trust that we have in the people that run the system on a day-to-day basis. I think there are other ways to make sure that kids are earning their way through the system, and those are the things that we need to focus on, Mr. Chair, and we certainly will be.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's an honour to rise and speak to this amendment. I'm going to speak against this amendment, and I would encourage all members of this honourable House to do the same thing.

I actually enjoyed many of the comments made by the hon. minister in this regard. Oftentimes in politics you can get caught up into this web. If you ask a guy a loaded question, you're going to get an answer back that you expect. Yes, straight off, without thinking about it, without doing any detailed analysis about it, without understanding the nature of schools or the like, if you ask a guy, "Do you think a kid should get a zero if he doesn't hand in his paper?" it's: "No. No way. No way." It's kind of like asking a guy going into the liquor store if he thinks his case of beer is too much. You know what answer you're going to get. "Yeah, it's too expensive." It's the type of question you're asking, okay? That's the type of question that often has been thrown up in some of the articles written on this and some of the things of that nature.

If we really are worried about what kids are doing in school and what they're learning, sometimes we have to think deeper or get a little more information or ask a few more questions. Oftentimes in education a kid may need a zero. Sometimes he may need two zeros. But somehow what we have to be overarchingly concerned about is: what is the kid learning, what is the best way to get him the information in class, what is the best way to keep him engaged and not drop out of the school system, and what is best for the child, giving him every opportunity to succeed?

In my view, like the hon. minister said, if we look at some of the research around education, some of these policies and practices and the way they teach skills have been developed by experts – local school boards and teachers – who actually know what they're doing, who actually have a concept of what's going to keep kids engaged. Sometimes these policies have been derived from research, so they're not based on a loaded question to a gentleman on the street or through a poll in the Calgary Herald news: do you think kids should get a zero in these types of situations? It's very easy. You know the answers in the polls. You know what the answers to those questions are going to be. We need to ask ourselves to think deeper, to actually let teachers and school boards do the work that's necessary. They're the experts in the field, and they generally have an understanding of what's going to get the kids further on in the education system than not.

I would agree with the hon. minister when he says that sometimes we have to put fences around certain things in our education system. I understand that, that everything can't be left to chance, but sometimes we have to place confidence in the locally elected people as well as in the people who should know best, teachers, and also, with that, consulting with parents, as they did in your situation when they called home to you and said: "Hey, the kid is not doing his work. Yeah, we could use a little help and support on this. Maybe he'll get in the next assignment." These are reasonable, rational approaches that the education system has developed, and these policies haven't just come up overnight, okay? I understand the sentiment in this. We want our kids to do the best that they can, but sometimes overreaching from the Legislature, although it may be good politics, does not make for teaching kids better.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I just have some brief comments on this amendment. It's interesting. I can come to this story and this phenomenon from a number of different angles, first as a teacher myself for 20 years. I was a high school teacher mostly. Also, I've just had both of my daughters graduate in the last couple of years from high school, in fact from the high school from which this sprung, the ground zero, so to speak, of the zero situation. We talked about this a lot in my family, and of course I also have lots of my colleagues, teachers, that I still keep in contact with and now as the Education critic. I was watching this whole thing with interest. Yeah, I was like, I think, most Albertans. I had that immediate, sort of visceral reaction that, you know, there was some injustice with the no-zero policy.

I recalled, of course, my own experience as a teacher, when I would use all manner of tools to not just assess students but to cajole and motivate them to get the job done and to learn the information that they needed to learn for the course that I happened to be teaching. I mean, I used zeros. Of course. It was a tool that I had available to me – and it was a very useful one sometimes – but only predicated on the idea that you would use it maybe to frighten or to shock someone into reality and then chase them down and get them to do the job, right?

You know, often just casting zeros about is abdicating in some way your responsibility to try to get that student to learn to do the job and have some discipline to get through the course. I sometimes heard a very discouraging comment from students that I would have. They would say, “Oh, well, just give me the zero,” and I’d say: “No, I’m not going to just give you the zero. I’m going to chase you down and make sure I do everything within my power to get you to do the work and to pass the course.”

So it’s a tangled web, and as I said before, of course, we were right there at ground zero of the zero thing with my own daughters. It was a mixed reaction because at the school in question there was one sort of strident situation, where it was clear what was going to happen, and then other teachers who were sympathetic but wanted to create a successful organic resolution to the whole thing, you know. I think we have to first of all recognize the autonomy and the sovereignty of teachers and of school boards to make the right decisions and to have a full complement of tools at hand to make assessments and to motivate students to do the job.

While I certainly think this amendment speaks to the strong reaction that we saw about this whole no-zero thing, I think we need to now move the debate into something more constructive so that we can come to a resolution that’s amicable and useful for everyone – right? – not to further polarize this debate but, rather, to lay it out in the open. I think that’s part of what Edmonton public is striving to do. You know, they’ve put a new principal in place and so forth. I know a lot of people on that school council now – it’s very close to where I live – and I think they want to have a full and honest and open debate on this issue.

As I say, while I do appreciate the sentiment of what this amendment has, I don’t think this is the place or the time to be doing that. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I find this whole conversation very interesting because every one of us has been approached on the street on whether you’re for no-zero or you’re against no-zero, and we’ve had conversations with our constituents and just in general have had conversations around the dinner table with our spouses and those sorts of things. This is a very polarizing issue.

There’s no question that local autonomy to school boards is the number one priority for everyone, but this amendment doesn’t speak to that. This amendment solely speaks to the ability to ensure that teachers are free to assign grades of zero for work that is not submitted by the student. It is all about student accountability and has no effect on the boards’ autonomy.

What we’re talking about here is teachers who have given every opportunity to the student, every single advantage to that student, to be compassionate, to understand why they don’t have the assignment in, and then allow them every opportunity to redo, offer alternative assignments. It is only after all of those efforts have been made that they would have the ability to assign a grade of zero.

I have teachers in my family, I have friends that are teachers, and in reality, you know, all they’re asking for is the ability to give the zero. I mean, if we’re talking about autonomy, if you want to talk that right down to the local issue, teachers are the ones that are closest to the student. They know the student. They don’t want to punish students. Our teachers are hard-working Albertans. They’re here to create a positive environment for our students to learn. They literally go above and beyond to keep our students in school. They literally donate time after school to do extracurricular activities they’re not compensated for. They are doing everything in their power. Then we say to the student: “Well, that’s okay. If you choose to do nothing, we still can’t hold you accountable because I can’t force you. I cannot in any way shape or form keep you accountable and give you a zero because you did no work.”

That’s what this amendment is, too. If you want to talk about politicizing this issue, quite frankly, at this point I think the only reason any of you are against it is because it is a Wildrose amendment. I think that if this amendment was coming from the other side of the floor, it would be: “Rah-rah-rah. Ha, ha, ha. Let’s give ’er.”

Every day we raise our children. I wake up every morning and tell my daughter that she has to be accountable for every decision she makes that day, to be a responsible Albertan. Every time she makes a choice, she has to answer for that choice. Whatever path she chooses is going to be the path she picks for her future, and it can go badly, or it can go well. This is no different. When we teach our children not to have a proper work ethic or that you’re not responsible for anything you do, we raise irresponsible adults. We’re tasking our teachers with this task, and then we’re saying: we’ll task you with that, but we’ll not give you any tools to actually deal with it.

The other part of this. I find it very interesting that our hon. friends on the other side of this House have not spoken at all to this bill, short of the minister. I am hearing from all over the province. You know, all you have to do is listen to Charles Adler. All you have to do is listen to Rutherford. All you have to do is door-knock. The hon. minister of intergovernmental affairs: there are members of his constituency who are phoning my office because we are defending the no-zero policy. I’m more than willing. I’ve actually referred them back to you, Minister. Literally, all you have to do is door-knock.

Are you honestly telling me that a hundred per cent of your constituents are telling you that they have no problem with this policy or that they’re not in favour of it a hundred per cent? Now, I’d understand if you say: “Hey, you know what? Fifty per cent of my constituency supports it, 50 per cent don’t, and I have to go with the bulk of my riding.” I get that. That’s not a problem. But none of you are actually standing up for your constituency. [interjections] Okay; 60-40, 70-30, whatever it is. But not a single one of you is even addressing the fact that, literally, there is nobody in your riding that has actually spoken to you about the no-zero policy? We know that’s not true. You can see every day that this is a polarizing issue.

All I'm asking for is that you actually look at the amendment without sitting there and getting all political about it. All it's saying is that teachers are free to assign the grade of zero for work not submitted by students. That's all it's asking for. Clearly, you're not going to support that, and I understand that, and that's fine. But if you actually break it down to what the amendment is truly asking for, it's asking for the right of the teacher to be autonomous and actually grade the student for the work they've done.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other questions? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I won't be long, but I do want to put a couple of things on the record with respect to this because the rhetoric that's coming in on this would suggest that this is somehow a question that we as provincial legislators should deal with and that if we don't deal with it, we're somehow letting down our constituents.

The fact of the matter is that even members on the other side of the House would also agree that Albertans don't want a lot of laws in their lives. We shouldn't necessarily run to pass a law every time an occurrence happens. We should be de minimis. We should be staying out of the lives of Albertans as much as possible. I think the people on the other side would agree with that. Certainly, as a Progressive Conservative, as a person with conservative values I believe that to the extent that government can stay out of people's lives – not write codes, not write rules – that's a better way to go.

Now, we also cannot be all things to all people. I am not a professional educator. I've had the privilege of living with a professional educator for the last 33 years. [interjections] I am a slow learner, yes. I live with a saint; there's no question about that. I think I've picked up a little bit along the way about education and about the process, but I'm not an expert in assessment, and I would suggest that very few others in this House are experts on assessment.

What we really need to understand is that we should let school boards do their jobs. We should let schools do their jobs. Within a school a principal has to have some authority to work with their staff and to create policies for the school working with their staff. Those policies might differ from school to school, depending on the nature of the school, the nature of the community where they are. Assessment is not a cut-and-dried thing, and it's not something, certainly, that can be codified in a provincial education act and shouldn't be codified in a provincial education act.

One of the critical issues around this whole question about no zeroes is this whole question, as the hon. member said, that there's polarization. Well, the polarization really comes because most of the reaction that I've on heard on this from people who want a no-zero policy focuses on the work ethic. In fact, I think the hon. member said something about: we want our children to be raised with good values. Well, I am raising my children, or I did – my youngest is 23 now – with good values. That's not an anticipation that I have for my teachers. What I want my teachers to do is to help educate my children, help challenge them to think, and help challenge them to understand the concepts of the curriculum. When a teacher provides a mark in, for example, physics 20 or physics 30, what I want that mark to be is an assessment of how well the student has understood the concepts in that course. I'm not particularly interested in and I can't actually tell when I get a mark in physics 30 how good the student's work ethic is. That's not really what it's about.

But we could spend a lot of time debating that issue, and quite frankly the debate would be of relatively little value because none of us actually have the pedagogical background or the background in assessment that's necessary to really come to grips with that. The root of this is not whether or not we agree or disagree on whether or not a zero policy makes any sense at all in any given school or whether it's a good assessment tool. The real root of this question is whether it should be codified in a school act at the provincial level, and the answer to that is very clear, no.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Anderson: Whenever I see the Government House Leader get up, he just inspires me.

Mr. McAllister: At least he did get up.

Mr. Anderson: I know. He does get up, and he inspires me. I do appreciate his comments. I do appreciate that he takes the time to respond to these bills. I wish more people would do that. He's a true parliamentarian.

I do have to take issue, though, with a couple of statements, specifically that the Progressive Conservative Party doesn't want to pass unnecessary laws that affect people's lives. I got a little bit of a chuckle out of that. I'm just going through my desk right now. We've got Bill 9, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2012. We've got Bill 3, the Education Act. It's, like, 500 pages long. We've got Bill 5, New Home Buyer Protection Act. We've got Bill 10. It's, like, 90 pages long. We've got Bill 8, Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012. We've got Bill 4, Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act. What else have we got? Bill 2, Responsible Energy Development Act. We've got Bill 1.

I mean, you just go through. There are just endless bills. They just keep throwing them. It's like a paper storm here in the Legislature. Every day we get a bill thrown at us. For this government to say that they don't like passing laws is a little rich because the amendments that we have are that big. You can hold them in one hand. Then we've got this storm of paper. So it's a little bit rich to say that, you know, we're bringing too many ideas forward or too many intrusive laws. Let's also make a note of this, not to mention Bill 50, Bill 36, Bill 19, Bill 24. Are there any others? I mean, we could be here all day. There are just tons of good ones in there. This is not exactly a government that worries too much about putting restrictions on the lives of Albertans. Oh, the .05 legislation: there's another very intrusive law for no reason.

Let's remember what the Education Act is. You would think from the comments opposite with regard to the no-zero policy that this Education Act would be as big as Bill 1. Bill 1 is, I think, the thinnest act here, a couple of pages long. You would think that Bill 3 was that thin from the way they're talking. We are talking about inserting about 15 words here. I don't know how many words; it's not that many words. It's a very small number of words here.

We have an Education Act for a reason. The reason we have the Education Act, the reason we have thousands upon thousands and tens of thousands of words in this Education Act is because we've decided in Alberta that we're going to have some minimum standards that apply to everyone. Now, we don't run around saying that that is going to intrude into the local autonomy of school boards. We do not say that, and the reason we do not say that is because I think we have a general agreement here that across the province there need to be some basic, basic standards of conduct. It's all throughout the act.

You can look at part 3 on page 39 of the act, student responsibilities.

31. A student, as a partner in education, has the responsibility to
- (a) attend school regularly and punctually.

Mr. McAllister: We had to put that in there?

Mr. Anderson: That's right. We had to put that in there, "attend school regularly and punctually," which, by the way, is kind of related to the no-zero policy. Ironically, it's related to the no-zero policy because it's saying right here that the student needs to attend "regularly and punctually," and you would think that meant handing in their assignments, but whatever.

"Be ready to learn and actively engage in and diligently pursue the student's education." Well, clearly that infringes on local autonomy. If a school wants to be out there and says that we have a policy that students should be free to not learn and to not actively engage in and diligently pursue their education, well, who are we to interfere with the local school board's autonomy in that regard?

"Respect the rights of others in the school." "How is that important?" they would say. Why do we need to have something in this act that says we need to respect the rights of others in schools if you're a student? Well, that doesn't make sense. That's infringing on local autonomy.

Well, that's bizarre. Of course that's not true. The reason we have this in here is because we believe in a minimum standard of conduct for these students, so we put in some basic, basic things that should be very clear, that should apply right across the board. We put them in here because they're principles that we believe in.

Parent responsibilities. The responsibility to "act as the primary guide and decision-maker with respect to the child's education." Okay. Well, what if there's a local school board that doesn't like that policy? Well, too bad. That's the policy that we have for all school boards across the province.

Board responsibilities. They're supposed to "deliver appropriate education programming to meet the needs of all students enrolled in a school operated by the board and to enable their success." Well, okay. Why are we telling boards what to do? We have board responsibilities right here. Why are we telling them what to do? We shouldn't be doing that if we follow the logic of the members opposite. We put these things in the act because there's a basic standard. I think we can agree that that's why we have Bill 3.

Now, the question is and where the debate is: should a no-zero policy be one of these basic standards that we put in the Education Act? I think it's very clear that it should be. I think that it offends – and the Minister of Education can say: oh, well, maybe he was fired for different reasons. Okay. All right. We'll let that process play out in the process that he outlined. That's fine.

But, really, do you honestly think that the majority of Albertans – frankly, do you honestly think that 20 per cent of Albertans actually agree that a teacher should be fired for legitimately – legitimately – giving out a zero to a student for not handing in his assignments or refusing to hand in his assignments? Honestly? Honestly, you think a teacher should be fired for giving an incomplete, a zero on an assignment? I mean, come on. What folks over there actually live in a constituency where the majority of your constituents believe that? Honestly, there's just no way. I refuse to believe that even in the most hard-core of PC ridings, Liberal or New Democrat ridings – if you polled that question, I guarantee there's not one constituency in this province, not one, that would even be close. Even close. And we know this because we do poll these things.

Anyway, the point is that we would know full out . . . [interjections] Fair enough. Fair enough. I have absolutely complete one hundred per cent confidence that every constituency in this province, everyone, on all sides of the aisle – left, right, up, down, no matter where you come from on the political spectrum – agrees that a teacher should not be fired for giving an incomplete to a student on an assignment. I mean, I hear that from the Education minister. He says that this government does not have a no-zero policy. Okay. Fine. So if you agree with the actual idea that a teacher shouldn't be fired for giving a zero on an assignment that's incomplete, if that's what you believe, then I ask you: what have you against putting it in this bill under board responsibilities, under teacher responsibilities? What's the problem with it?

It sends a clear message that – you know what? – we have an expectation across this province that we will respect our teachers enough that when they give out an assignment, students are expected to complete that assignment. They're expected to be in the classroom, learning and engaged and doing their homework and coming and putting in an assignment. We expect that of all students in this province, and that is a very reasonable basic standard that every child should be asked to follow. If we're saying that we're not putting it in because we don't want to take local autonomy out, well, there are about 500 responsibilities listed in here that in some cases are far more prescriptive than the no-zero policy that's being proposed here.

I would ask you to please do what your constituents are clearly asking you to do. They clearly are not in favour of this policy, so pass it, and let parents know and let teachers know that we have a minimum expectation for our children and that we will protect our teachers from disgraceful actions like being fired for doing their job and giving out a zero where it is well deserved.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. You know, I'll rise to offer a couple of comments. In no way do I intend to incite any reaction across the way. I'll just tell you that I'm in a hundred per cent agreement with the intent here, but I view it a little bit differently. I think the hon. Member for Airdrie is correct in pointing out that we do occasionally infringe upon the autonomy of school boards or municipalities or whatever.

I think the intent of the Education Act when it comes to students and teachers and school boards is that it defines some basic responsibilities. It's right to point out that we expect students to attend school, absolutely. We don't say how often, but we do say that we expect them to attend. You have to have policies around that.

When it comes to school boards, we expect them to do certain things, you know, establish health and safety standards and those things that have to be followed. Basically, what we're doing is empowering a corporation, just like a municipality, in effect a corporation. Their board is elected, they run a multimillion-dollar corporation, and they have a lot of employees. We expect them to establish policies, and when they establish policies, Mr. Chairman, as a parent – this is, I think, where I'm in agreement here – sometimes I'm going to disagree with those policies. I don't want to write my MLA a letter or phone my MLA when I disagree with those policies. I want to show up at a parent-teacher council meeting or show up at a school board meeting and disagree locally with the people who are charged with educating my children. There they are, right in my community.

That's why I'm against the amendment. Now, I agree that a teacher should not be fired for wanting to give zeros. I agree with that. I'm not actually aware, standing here, of any teacher that was fired for giving zeros. I'm not. If I can follow the media, I'm aware of a teacher that may have been fired because he didn't follow the policy of his school board. I have no way of knowing if that teacher tried to overcome that policy in any other productive way, like any employee is duty bound to do when he works for a corporation. If he took no such actions, then I think the school board would rightly have some concern with that teacher. I do. I'm not sure, as I say, that any teacher got fired for his approach to the zero policy. It's possible that a teacher got fired for not following the policy of his employer. That's a concern. We've empowered the school board to make policies. We have to allow them to enforce those policies.

That's the other thing about this act. As a parent I get to stand in my home community and hold those guys accountable – my educators, my school board, in my community – and I don't need to phone my MLA to do it. I like the idea that the policies are made locally and I get to hold them accountable locally.

I think exactly the same thing. I think my children deserve a zero if they don't submit their assignments. I don't think it belongs in the act. That's all I believe. I think we're on the same page.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. McAllister: You can't imagine how much I appreciate your comments, that you would rise and speak, and I believe that we are all on the same page, to not revisit all that's been discussed.

We have a duty to represent those that put us here. What we seem to be doing is finding 10 ways to not do one thing that we all know we should do. The public is right. As for the teacher and whether he got fired for the no-zero or not, you could make the case that we don't really know, I suppose. We'll let that play out. But it's raised an issue, and it's given us an opportunity to improve school for our kids. It's given us an opportunity to make a difference in their lives in a positive way.

What we're saying to them as the leaders of this community is: "We don't think it's important enough. We don't care enough. We're going to hide behind another cloak and turn our backs." I find that completely reprehensible and unacceptable.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Well, it's a pleasure to stand and discuss this issue. I did want to put on the record exactly what I have done when I talked to my constituents who have spoken at times on this issue relative to the zero mark. I've asked them and encouraged them to go and talk to the Edmonton public school board, which I wonder how many of my friends on the other side have indeed done, talked directly to the Edmonton public school board. When I have, I've found that for the most part people don't come back to me because they found satisfaction in the things that they've discovered at the Edmonton public school board. I personally know that the people that I've talked to in Edmonton-Gold Bar are quite happy with the situation whereby the school boards in the province of Alberta get to determine this based on their local considerations and based on the experts that they would have near at hand to be able to make the decision.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other comments, or should we call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: The question has been called on amendment A5.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A5 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 11:53 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Chair: On the main bill, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I am actually rising for the first time on the bill, so I'm very interested in doing so, but I also am conscious of the time as well. So I'll reserve my comments on the general bill for another time, but I do have some amendments that I need to put forward. The first one I just will get distributed.

The Chair: The amendment is being circulated?

Mr. Eggen: That's done.

The Chair: Thank you. Did you send the original, hon. member?

Mr. Eggen: Yeah.

12:00

The Chair: Thank you.

Hon. members, this amendment will be A6.

Proceed, hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. Great. I want to move this along fairly expeditiously. This amendment, essentially to section 16 of Bill 3, is replacing what was taken away from, I guess, what was called Bill 2 in the spring session of the last legislature. This section covers diversity and respect.

Our amendment from the New Democrats changes the wording of the section to refer explicitly to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Human Rights Act, essentially what was there before. Our amendment uses the exact wording that the government used when it first introduced the Education Act in the previous session. It's very important that we do so. We must ensure that the courses and programs of study in Alberta schools are consistent not merely with vague references to diversity, understanding, and respect but are, in fact, in accordance with the basic rights outlined in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Alberta Human Rights Act.

It should be noted that probably the same government or many similar members had spoken out so passionately for this act in the spring, and suddenly we found it removed in the fall. I don't think that that's a good precedent to set. We know what happened, right? There was a lot of politics in between. But it doesn't preclude the necessity of having this in this new bill. You seemed to be okay with it before, so what's changed?

Now, I've heard the argument: well, the Alberta Human Rights Act and the Charter still function over the other things that we do, including this bill. Well, I guess you could use that same logic, Mr. Chair, to talk about the bullying thing that is highlighted in here as well. We have laws on assaults. We have laws on defamation and harassment and so forth, but we also chose to highlight and emphasize an antibullying message in Bill 3. I would suggest, using that same logic, we would include and should include the Human Rights Act and the Canadian Charter like it was in before. It's not because those laws don't exist outside but because, in fact, we want to emphasize them and to make it clear.

Any time that I see the Alberta Human Rights Act, which is landmark legislation coming from a previous government here in this province, put forward and then taken away, it immediately gets my suspicions up, and it makes me want to investigate very clearly why and to emphasize the primacy and the importance of both the federal legislation and the Alberta Human Rights Act.

Reason and logic should prevail here, and we should put it back in. It was there before, and I think that a lot of people would be very reassured to see that happen.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a great pleasure to rise and speak in favour of this amendment and encourage all members of this House to consider it and vote for it. When I think about this act and the way the legislation is written, it appears to me and to many people that we have carved out an exception within this act that allows for some groups and some home-schoolers and others to avoid following what's the law of the land, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Alberta Human Rights Act.

We see that in previous legislation this government had said as much by incorporating it by reference into section 16. They did it under the hon. Minister of Human Services when he was the minister. They did it when the hon. Deputy Premier was the minister.

As we know from writing legislation and otherwise, words matter. Words matter very much. It doesn't only matter what it says in the legislation, but it matters what it says about us as a people, us as a government, the overarching goals and aspirations that we value and hold dear. There are certain things that we will not bend or break. Those values are so important that they must be incorporated for all groups, regardless of how loud they squawk or how they might say that it's unfair or how their morals or otherwise say differently.

That's this type of legislation. This is the type of legislation that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Alberta Human Rights Act say – they say that these are the things that we hold dear: our freedom of expression, freedom of religion, freedom of association, and go on down the list. We also in these acts have the right not to be discriminated against on the basis of race, religion, gender, age, disability, and sexual orientation. Both of those things are evident in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and in our Alberta Human Rights Act. Those protections are held so dear that we incorporated them into acts.

If we look at this, there's a case to be made that because of prior precedent and what we've done in this Legislature in the fact that we have had it in two previous acts, now this absence in this legislation carves out that exception, that it's not only invalid in this act but has to be interpreted as such. Essentially, when people look at this, they'll look at that and say: well, obviously the government meant something by this because they changed their wording.

When I look at this situation and because I see many groups are appeased by this legislation – the Wildrose for one is very happy about this; home-schoolers are very happy about this – it has to mean, at least to them, that they think this matters. Now, government members may say otherwise. Government members may say: "No, no, no. The act still applies. The act still applies because it's overarching legislation." But essentially what we're saying here by this change – by this change – is wink, wink, nod, nod. "Go ahead. It's okay for your group now to carry on business as usual, to carry on doing what it is that you do. Whether you don't like sexual orientation, whether you want to do it on school time or when you're teaching kids at home or otherwise, we will allow for that to happen."

That, to me, is wrong. Whether or not it's the message we are sending by this redraft of this bill, it's wrong. It says something about us as a society. It says something about us as to what we expect our citizens to uphold, and frankly I'm disappointed. I'm of the full knowledge that having this provision in the act will not change things in what happens in home schools. Frankly, I don't want it to change anything that happens with home-schoolers. Frankly, it's really not that much of a concern. But what is the concern is what it says about us as a society, what it says about us as a Legislature, and what it says about what we're willing to give in on. In my view, we've given in to a certain extent on human rights by not following through on this.

You know, there's a story that my uncle tells. I was too young to really remember it, but I was about nine or 10, and my cousins and I were monkeying around at my grandfather's dinner table. We'd been there probably for five days of the holidays. He was a little bit older, and he was getting a little tired of us running around and doing our stuff. I guess, as my uncle tells the story, he looked at my father and said, "Well, are you going to do anything about this?" My father looked at my grandfather, and he said: "L.F., you know, you had the right to screw up your children in any way you saw fit, and some people claim you did a pretty good job of it. Please give me the dignity and respect to allow me to screw up my children the way I see fit, okay?" I just know that because that story has been told to me and all that stuff.

Needless to say, I have every confidence that parents, whether they send their kids to a public school, a Catholic school, a charter school, a private school, or home-school them, will fill their heads with things. You know, it happened to me. It happened to everyone here and the like. There's nothing we can do about it, nor really should we. Kids are going to have to in the main figure it out for themselves. They're going to have to sort through all this stuff they're fed, a lot of mistruths that may be incorporated by reference into their growing up, and figure it out for themselves. I'm not wanting to change that process, okay?

What I am trying to change is what we as a society espouse in our legislation, what we espouse for all citizens of this province to follow regardless of race, religion, disability, sexual orientation, or gender, and this should be clear in all our legislation. Frankly, because the government has muddied the waters so much, it is unclear. It is unclear what we expect different groups of people to do, and that to me is highly disappointing. It sends mixed messages out there, and frankly I don't think it's right or moves to where we want to go in 21st century education. I said at the news conference that I think we'll be on the wrong side of history on some of the stuff we've done in the past. I was under the impression that with the election of the new Premier this day and age was over.

I don't have to go far back, but I will. You know, we were the last province to recognize sexual orientation under the human rights code. That just happened in 2008. We still have Bill 44 hanging over our heads, which much of the gay and lesbian community finds distasteful and our teachers find is not leading to a well-rounded society with the ability to teach about sexual orientation in our classrooms. And now this.

I think it stays with the storyline that has been crafted, that I wish was over, and frankly I thought it was over with the new election. But look at how the government, in essence, caved on this, caved on putting in the simple words, "respect the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Alberta Human Rights Act." It's not that hard. It wasn't that difficult. Guess what? Everyone, really, in how they teach their kids was going to continue on the same way, okay? We know that as a matter of practicality. I know that. You know that. Everyone knows that. But we caved on that. We're at least sending a mixed message that some people are allowed to discriminate, and we tolerate that.

I will support this amendment. I would hope the government would think about this and maybe bring it back in third reading, or maybe you're all going to vote for it tonight. But even if not, maybe you go back in third reading and you say: "My goodness. You know, this isn't that hard." Guess what? You bring it back in third reading. Can you put something back again on third reading, an amendment? Probably. You're the government. You can do what you want. [interjection] Exactly. Well, if you can, then there you go. But then you say: "Guess what? The debate is over. No one is going to be protesting these things. It's going to be over and done with, and everyone is going to go on with their lives."

Those are my comments. Thank you for allowing me to speak, and we'll go from there.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Chair: Okay. Speaking on the bill, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: I'd just like to make an amendment in a similar vein in case you didn't like the wording of that one. I'm just trying.

The Chair: Hon. members, this will be amendment A7.

Hon member, proceed.

Mr. Hehr: You can see I've changed the wording of subsection (2) of section 16. It reads now with these changes:

For greater certainty, the courses or programs of study and instructional materials referred to in subsection (1) must not promote or foster doctrines of racial or ethnic superiority or persecution, religious intolerance or intolerance or persecution based on sexual orientation, gender, disability, or social change through violent action or disobedience of laws.

As you can see, I've tried to craft my legislation so you don't have to incorporate by reference the Alberta Human Rights Act or the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. What I'm essentially doing is adopting the language written in some of the things you wrote there and trying to go along with the flow of what you were trying to do in your original act, which I don't have in front of me, but I think it said to respect diversity and race and religion or something else like. This act is essentially not incorporating by reference the Alberta Human Rights Act or the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, but it is still protecting some of those things that I believe our society stands for. Our society doesn't stand for discrimination based on sexual orientation, or at least we're not supposed to. We're not supposed to discriminate on the basis of gender or disability or the like.

I think this amendment may ease some concerns a little bit about adopting the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Alberta Human Rights Act lock, stock, and barrel, but it still does many of the same things. I won't go over the reasons that I just read into the record of why I think this is important. Actually, scratch that; I will. You know, I believe our legislation should be written to reflect our overarching goals and values. I believe the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Alberta Human Rights Act are so important that they should have been incorporated in this act.

That said, if you're unwilling to do that, can we at least put this in? I believe it would say a lot about us as a society, a lot about the direction we wish to go in, and a lot about the protection of sexual orientation and the understanding that we won't give a wink and a nod to those groups who find it distasteful. Frankly, it's just time to say: "Well, you may find it distasteful, but it's the law of the land. We're not going to walk from that. We're not going to obfuscate from that. We're not going to carve out little niches for various groups not to follow it. Simply put, this is the law of the land. We understand that."

Here's what we expect, especially with things coming from government, and here's how the Education Act applies to all things in government. The government is in charge of education under the Constitution Act. It is only in charge of actually providing public schooling, Catholic schooling, and francophone schooling.

Let's remember that home-schooling is a privilege. It's not a right granted under the Constitution. It's something we've allowed people. It's an accommodation, one that I actually support. Okay? I support the right of people to home-school. In certain situations it would probably be better, and many people find it advantageous. But understand that it is not a right to home-school. It is something we've allowed.

To say that our educational materials or what we expect from the government of Alberta should be watered down for any group, especially any particular group that is not one of our recognized constitutional responsibilities, I believe is troublesome. It sends mixed messages. It sends messages that we will allow a group of people where the rules do not apply to. Simply put, I find that unacceptable.

Nevertheless, we've had a long night. I'll leave it at that. If anyone else would like to speak to this, or we can vote on it, whatever people would like.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. Very briefly again, I appreciate very much my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo taking another shot at this. My brevity does not reflect just how much I am concerned about this issue and the exclusion of the Human Rights Act. Any time you see something that has been institutionalized and explicitly describes the rights of humans in any jurisdiction, seeing it suddenly disappear, being pulled away or somehow altered, you know, is really a red flag for us to stand up and speak clearly and loudly and explicitly as to why and how this is taking place. We win each of these freedoms and each of these rights through hard toil and struggle, and I recognize the people that have come before us, as does the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, and who have fought hard and long for these rights to be enshrined in law. What better place to re-emphasize or remind ourselves of these things than in a landmark, once-in-a-generation re-examination of our School Act, the Education Act.

You know, when I saw that it suddenly – poof – disappeared, I was very disturbed. I think that it's a reflection that the thin facade of the progressive part of Progressive Conservative is not so strong and that the new paint job that they tried to put on the PC Party here to be more progressive is just that, a paint job on the same old vehicle. I know that Albertans are smart enough to recognize that, and here's an example staring us in the face in the very first, early minutes of Halloween 2012.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there any other comments to be offered on this amendment A7?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A7 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder on the bill.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you. I have another amendment that I would like to distribute, please, if I could. I'll try to make it happen here fast. You know, we could make this happen here faster if some of the members opposite could help pass out papers in the spirit of education. No? Maybe not.

The Chair: Hon. member, I think you can start. The paperwork will be at the members' tables very soon.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. You can give this amendment a letter or a signification.

This one is, I think, worth while and interesting because it speaks to taking back some of the whole issue around school closures, giving some ministerial responsibility to school closures. We know that school boards agonize over school closures, and it's a very difficult and disruptive thing to happen to a community, so I've crafted an amendment here to just speak on board responsibilities and ministerial responsibilities.

The Chair: Hon. member, if I may, I did not announce that this will be amendment A8. So for the record we are speaking to amendment A8.

Please proceed. Thank you.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you very much. Like I said, this section refers to the procedure for the closure of schools, and this amendment ensures that the minister's decisions regarding school closures are governed by a public input process. The reason I drafted this one is because school boards are authorized to permanently or temporarily close schools in accordance with regulations in this act, but it also affords the authority to the minister to make regulations with respect to the permanent or temporary closure of schools.

This amendment clarifies that the minister may make regulations in respect to the authorization of school closures by a board, and in part B the new section 62 is included in this bill, outlining the rules that will regulate the minister's actions when closing the school. According to this amendment, the minister will be required to gain public input on the proposed decision to permanently or temporarily close a school. As such, the minister will be required to publish a notice on the department's website and have some consultation there.

This amendment also outlines the requirements of such a public notice, the time period that must be given, and stipulates that the minister must report to the Executive Council on changes to the proposed regulations. This amendment seeks to ensure that regulations governing school closures, which have always had a profound impact on students, parents, staff, and communities, will only be taken by the minister after proper consultation with the public and proper reporting to the Executive Council.

I'm sure that after you've heard all of that you will all leap to your feet and vote in favour of this amendment. Thank you.

Mr. Hehr: I think I can speak in favour of this amendment. Obviously, school closures and the building of schools are both necessary things at times, but they should be done with the public's input as well as the minister understanding the full realm of possibilities and ramifications thereof. I look at school closures that are happening sometimes in inner-city or sometimes under-utilized schools. Sometimes there has to be a broader perspective around that, some of the implications of what that means to the larger ends, about whether we're going to encourage people to live in certain neighbourhoods or whether we're going to continue on with their ability to provide the programming that those local communities need.

I think it's a decent amendment. I think it puts a little more onus on public consultation and hearing all sides. I think it's a decent amendment and worth voting for.

The Chair: Other comments to be offered on amendment A8?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A8 lost]

The Chair: On the bill, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have another amendment that I would like to run through and run by. Am I too soon? I guess technically it's still just October 30 because we are in suspended animation here.

The Chair: Yes, it's October 30.

Mr. Eggen: So I won't wish you a happy Halloween.

The Chair: This amendment, hon. members, will be A9.

Mr. Eggen: Can I proceed, then, Mr. Chair?

The Chair: You may start, hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. This is an amendment concerning section 33(1)(c). This section concerns a board's responsibility as a partner in education. This amendment seeks to remove the reference to the business community and to relieve the board from the requirement to involve local business communities in board matters.

The reason I say this is not because I don't value the input of business in the section, but the stakeholders are an important part, in fact, of our public school system. School boards must engage with parents, students, and staff in order to ensure that the objectives of Alberta's education system are being met and implemented at each school. Moreover, local collaboration and consultation among stakeholders are an important part of encouraging innovation in education and meeting the present and future needs of Alberta's students. Community organizations, including municipal governance bodies, are also important stakeholders in school board matters and can be important partners in the development and implementation of a board's plans.

This amendment seeks to remove the reference of local business community, which is not a primary stakeholder in Alberta's education system and needs not be involved or privy to school boards' plans in the same manner as parents, students, and staff. We must ensure that Alberta's public education system meets the needs of students and does not prioritize the interest of business communities, which might have significantly different priorities and interests than our public education system has.

This amendment is designed to protect the rights of school boards, parents, students, and staff to plan and implement public education in their community while encouraging collaboration and co-ordination with the broader community. We should not seek to define the meaning of community other than to note the important roles that municipalities play in school board matters.

I'm sure that you all will have a conversion on the road to Damascus and vote for this amendment.

The Chair: Are there other comments on the amendment?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A9 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder on the bill.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you. Finally, I did find one more here, and it's the last one, the last amendment. Everybody is looking at me. You know, if we had sort of a longer session – right? – where we didn't immediately go into night sessions, then we would have a more civilized routine to deal from, and we wouldn't be staying up all night.

An Hon. Member: What time do the cleaners come?

Mr. Eggen: You have to lift up your feet while they vacuum underneath.

The Chair: This amendment will be A10, hon. members.

Mr. Eggen: This last amendment I have, can I speak to it, Mr. Chair? Yeah?

This one is including a reference to student achievement and health and the relationship between those two things. I took sort of some of this amendment wording from the Ontario provincial Education Act, and it was also brought to my attention though the good work on healthy eating and so forth that was taking place here in Edmonton.

The original clause in section 33(1) reads as follows:

A board, as a partner in education, has the responsibility to

- (a) deliver appropriate education programming to meet the needs of all students enrolled in a school operated by the board and to enable their success.

My amendment defines the responsibility of the board to include both student achievement and health, or well-being. This just seems like a logical extension.

Mr. Hehr: It's a good amendment, guys.

Mr. Eggen: That's right. Please. This is an important one because, of course, we deal with the intellect of students and the pursuit of excellence in one's mental capacity, but this is tying the importance of that to the physical health of a student as well, not just talking about physical health like phys ed but physical health in terms of healthy eating and healthy lifestyle and so forth, the old adage of healthy in body and mind. I think this amendment serves to do so.

Like I said, you know, you only open the Education Act once in a very long while, so it's time to update things in all ways. A healthy addition here is, I think, very apt and appropriate for Bill 3.

Thank you.

Mr. Hehr: I would like to speak in favour of this motion. I think that given the overarching concern we have in our society with healthy eating and overweightness – that's not a word – people being overweight and obesity and the like, this is one of those statements that I believe says a lot about the direction we'd like our society to go in. It's really not a substantial change. It's an aspiration, a statement, and being responsible for the health and well-being of students. That seems like what a public education system should be doing, looking after the health and well-being of all students.

We brought this up in the Legislature just the other day, with the horrible tragedy in St. Paul, how this local school was responsible for leading that community in some of the healing, some of the community getting together and being comforted in a time of need. That directly relates to the well-being of all students. We talk about health. We want them to be healthy and to grow up healthy and the like. The school system should be concerned about that.

In my view, this is a good amendment that really doesn't change things. I think it leads us in here to adopt an aspiration, a goal of what the local community and the local school system should look like. So a well-thought-out amendment. I assume the minister has done his due diligence over there and passed it around and gotten consensus that this will pass through, and we'll go from there.

In any event, thank you for allowing me to speak on this amendment.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you very much. In my former life as a chartered accountant there were times that I was doing corporate tax work after midnight. Occasionally I would have the streaming on and watch the Assembly and see people working, and that was good to help me to stay awake.

I can't support this amendment for a couple of reasons. Section 33(1)(b) comments that a board is accountable for student achievement, which is part of the amendment, so I'm not sure why that has to be there. And we have a Health Act in the province of Alberta which seems to cover the responsibility for the health and well-being of all students.

So I will not be supporting this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.
Are there other comments?
Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A10 lost]

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 3, the Education Act?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 3 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: I've been demoted. Ah, well.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader. My apologies. You have been reaffirmed, sir.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd move that the committee rise and report Bill 1 and Bill 3.

[Motion carried]

12:40

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills with some amendments: Bill 1, Bill 3. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Does the House concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have done excellent work today, and I would suggest that we leave it at that. I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 12:41 a.m. on Wednesday to 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, October 31, 2012

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us pray. Dear God, let us be reminded of the unique privilege we have been given to work for the betterment of our constituents. Let us also be mindful that there may be places in the world where that privilege does not exist. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, it is indeed a great pleasure for me to introduce to all of you in the Assembly today members of the Daughters Day Committee who are seated in the Speaker's gallery. Established in mid-2011, Daughters Day is the initiative of a group of volunteer individuals and more than 40 diverse community organizations who are all dedicated to celebrating the lives, the contributions, and the achievements of all daughters in our society.

I will ask the following individuals to rise as I call their names and to remain standing until all have been introduced, and then we can greet them all very warmly as one: chairperson and former citizenship judge Gurcharan Singh Bhatia; vice-chairperson and former economist with the Alberta government Charan Khehra; Ratna Basappa, Indo-Canadian Women's Association; Sonia Bitar, former citizenship judge; Satya Das, principal at Cambridge Strategies; Jim Gurnett, who is a former MLA and executive director of the Mennonite Centre and is technically a visitor with us – welcome, Jim – Dr. Zohra Husaini, Indo-Canadian Women's Association; Trina Joshi, a journalist; Paula Kirman, a freelance writer, photographer, and musician; Poushali Mitra, a worker in the human services sector; Christina Nsaliwa, Edmonton Immigrant Services Association; Didar Singh Pannu, former superintendent of schools; Shaykh Sheikh, religious minister for the Muslim community; and Miriam Thomas, president of the Indo-Canadian Women's Association. Hon. members, let's welcome and thank them all.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to stand today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House a member of my staff and a very good friend. Her name is Shelley Draper-Wilson. Shelley Draper-Wilson started in the public service over 20 years ago, when she was 18 years of age, in the department of agriculture. She had the benefit and, I would say, privilege of working for five ministers of government – the hon. Ernie Isley, Walter Paszkowski, Gary Mar, Ron Liepert, and Lloyd Snelgrove – before she moved to the Premier's office and worked there in both Premier Stelmach's office and in my office.

I think many people in this building who've had the opportunity to work with Shelley will know how fondly we think of her, how she has treated everyone in this building with respect. Shelley will be leaving our office today to work now in the office of the Public Service Commissioner with respect to public service reform.

Shelley is originally from Edmonton. Her husband, John Wilson, I'm sure will be pleased to have her able to keep regular office hours, as will her two daughters, Jillian and Erin, who she'll be going to Disneyland with next week.

Shelley, thank you for everything from all of us, and we wish you well.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my distinct pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a group of great young kids who are visiting the Legislature from Coralwood academy, who are here with their supervisors, Mr. Mike Willing, Pastor Allan Perez, and Mrs. Marian Rochford. I would ask that they all rise and receive the warm and, hopefully, not frightening welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you a school from my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie, Meyokumin elementary school. They are here with their teacher, Dr. Pike. Over the years I've had the opportunity to visit his class numerous times, and I've always found his students extremely engaged on current events and on all political issues. They're joined here today by teacher assistant Mr. Musabimana. At this time I'd ask all of my students and teachers to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a great friend and constituent in Edmonton-Whitemud, Mr. Gus Ahmad. Accompanying him is his grandson Samir. Samir is a Facebook friend of mine. Gus is a huge supporter of his community and volunteers his time on many initiatives at all three levels of government. He's provided a leadership role in the Pakistani, Muslim, and ethnic communities in Edmonton for over 35 years. He served on the U of A senate, the Faculty of Arts development council, the Edmonton Community Services Advisory Board, and the Family and Community Support Services Association of Alberta, and, I can assure you, many, many other things to help build our community and our province. Samir attends Avalon school. He's here today to learn about the process of government. I've witnessed Samir grow from a baby to the marvellous school student that he is today. Because of the role model of his grandfather, Samir is also starting to undertake volunteer initiatives. As a matter of fact, he volunteered on my campaign. I'd ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Annie and Karen Boychuk. Annie is a constituent of the Innisfail-Sylvan Lake riding, and she has travelled here to seek some answers from this government after the tragic passing of her husband this summer. Karen Boychuk is Brent's mother and a new resident of Sylvan Lake since her son Brent Boychuk's death. Our province is home to the best doctors and health care workers in this country. When it comes to accessing them, our system falls woefully short, something that the Boychuk family can attest to. I'll ask that Annie and Karen please stand and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House seven members of the Council of Alberta University Students, also known as CAUS. The students have met with several of my colleagues and have been very helpful in bringing to light the issues facing postsecondary students today. I've had the opportunity to spend some time with this group and work with this group, and I assure you that they're not afraid of asking very hard questions. They're also not afraid of working towards constructive and collaborative solutions as well. It's my honour to work with this group. I learn something from this group every time I have the opportunity to meet with them and to work with them, and I'm grateful to work with this group. As it's Halloween, it would appear that they have come dressed as the aspiring politicians that they are, and I thank them for that. [interjection] Thank you, Rachel. We channel that.

They're seated today in the front row of the members' gallery. I would like to ask that they rise as I call their names and acknowledge them, and I would ask my colleagues today to give them the traditional warm welcome of the House: Raphael Jacob, Petros Kusmu, Colten Yamagishi, Hardave Birk, Armin Escher, Julia Adolf, and Duncan Wojtaszek.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a great pleasure for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly nine guests from Dawson Motors Ltd., which is a long-standing, successful Edmonton-based company located in the constituency of Edmonton-Decore. Dawson Motors Ltd. is a multigenerational, family-owned and -operated auto repair business celebrating 80 years of providing prompt professional service to our communities. The Dawson family has built a business that's provided a living for three generations of Dawsons and all their employees.

Seated in the public gallery today are the family members and guests, and I would ask that they please rise as I mention their names. We have this afternoon Mr. Ken Dawson, president and son of the founding patriarch, Julius Dawson; Mrs. Margaret Dawson, Ken's wife of 53 years; Mr. Dale Dawson, manager and Ken and Margaret's son; Mrs. Cathy Dawson, Dale's wife; Mrs. Laurie Dawson-Bodner, all the way from Portland, Oregon, who is also Ken and Marg's daughter; Barry Dawson, Ken and Marg's son; Wade Dawson, Ken and Margaret's son; Shirley Dawson, Ken's sister, daughter of Julius and Kate Dawson; and Mr. Ejvind Hansen, a 17-year employee of Dawson Motors, now happily retired.

Thank you.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to my colleagues four young men with apparently the same first name. They're representatives of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints. There are approximately 380 missionaries serving in Alberta. They give up two years of their lives for this service. They work as volunteers in our community and, of course, share their message. Could I ask Elder Poulton, Elder Adams, Elder Hathaway, and Elder Western to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the Associate Minister of Seniors.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Legislature two courageous individuals who continue to come back to the Legislature on behalf of paid farm workers outside of family farms. They're calling for this Legislature to enact legislation that would protect the occupational health and safety, workers' compensation, and child labour standards for those who are not working on family farms. I'd ask Eric Musekamp and Darlene Dunlop to stand and be recognized by the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Seniors.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great opportunity for me to rise and introduce to you a lifelong friend, the past mayor of Whitecourt, Brady Whittaker. Brady is currently the director of the Alberta Forest Products Association, and he's known as Mr. Wood. Wood first and wood always. [interjections] And he "woodn't" listen lots of times, too. I'd ask him to stand and be recognized in the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly an energetic, visionary businessman who is also a good friend, Felix Schroder. He hails from Wabasca, Alberta, and is the principal of Schroder Oilfield Service. Schroder Oilfield Service has been in operation since 2001 and is located in Wabasca, as we know. The business's focus has been to provide a wide range of energy services, including facility construction and operation, road and lease construction, pipeline repair, labour crews, and welding and pipe-fitting. Prior to this, president Felix Schroder operated Jolam Mechanical for four years, a plumbing business located in Slave Lake but serving Wabasca and other MD of Opportunity hamlets. Felix and his brother Mike, vice-president of the company, have earned a strong, positive reputation in the region given their commitment to providing quality service, hiring locally, and providing support to the community both on and off the reserve. He is seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask him to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Urgent Care Services in Sylvan Lake

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise here today to speak about a tragic event that happened in the Innisfail-Sylvan Lake constituency this summer. Sylvan Lake is not a small town. In fact, it's one of the largest towns in Alberta. It's home to approximately 13,000 people year-round, and that population skyrockets during the summer months. Sylvan Lake has a lot to offer and is blessed in many ways, but this summer, on August 18, what this town is missing became painfully clear. On August 18 Brent Boychuk, a 49-year-old husband and father of four children, was experiencing signs of distress and realized he needed urgent help. Brent asked his daughter, Brianne, to take him to see a doctor at the local walk-in clinic. Upon arrival at that clinic it was closed. So was the second clinic. Sadly, Brent collapsed in the parking lot, and Brianne, his daughter, called for an ambulance and began CPR, trying to save her father's life.

Sylvan Lake, like many communities, no longer has a dedicated ambulance service. However, when paramedics arrived, they diligently tried to save Brent Boychuk. Sadly again, by the time Brent Boychuk arrived at the Red Deer regional hospital, which is a half-hour drive away, he had passed away.

We are thankful to the paramedics. Once again they did an amazing job in a difficult situation. Sylvan Lake has no emergency care facility, no trauma centre, or urgent care. The Boychuks are not asking for much. They are only asking that no other family has to experience what they have gone through.

Mr. Speaker, I'm not standing here to point fingers, to lay blame, or to play politics. I am simply speaking for my constituents the Boychuks, who would like some answers, and for the town of Sylvan Lake, who desperately needs an urgent care centre. We implore the Minister of Health to keep his promise of understanding the needs of Sylvan Lake and to ensure that urgent care for this community is considered in the zone plan. We also urge the Minister of Infrastructure to provide a detailed priority list to show all Albertans that these communities' needs are being addressed.

Whistle-blower Protection

Mr. Bilous: Alberta has finally tabled its whistle-blower legislation, and our concerns and the concerns of experts have been confirmed. The bill is already being referred to as another bureaucratic black hole that will intimidate, complicate, and, ultimately, further silence whistle-blowers who want to do the right thing and protect the public interest.

Mr. Speaker, blowing the whistle is an intimidating process, and any legislation must keep the interests of the whistle-blower at its core. However, this legislation doesn't do that. This bill misses the mark on five essential points which signal that this government doesn't seem to be concerned with the protection of whistle-blowers. It seems more concerned about the protection of the government from whistle-blowers. Strong legislation must allow whistle-blowers to blow the whistle any time, anywhere, and to anyone, including the media. But this law sets up a departmental process ensuring a blown whistle echoes down a never-ending bureaucratic tunnel.

This law offers no protection to private-sector workers or government contractors. This is simply unacceptable in a province that just went through a massive E coli crisis due to unreported food safety issues. This legislation doesn't go far enough to ensure that workers will be protected from harassment and abuse in the workplace. This legislation sets up a secretive tribunal process instead of ensuring an open and transparent one. Lastly, Mr. Speaker, whistle-blower legislation must include details on mandatory corrective measures. Instead, it avoids the issue by referring to possible corrective recommendations.

Mr. Speaker, once again the Alberta PCs have failed to follow through on their promise of being transparent and accountable. Instead, they remain the most secretive government.

Dawson Motors Ltd. 80th Anniversary

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, great business leaders deliver more than just financial returns for their company. They also strive to build enduring institutions. They know to the core of their purpose and success that the more they value people within their organization, the greater the rate of return that will result. Also, for any entrepreneur to have a family-owned business, which is one of the oldest forms of business organization, which spans more than one generation is a legacy to be reckoned with.

Mr. Speaker, Dawson Motors Ltd., located in my constituency of Edmonton-Decore, is such a company and on September 15, 2012, celebrated with pride their 80th anniversary. Generations of customers, friends, family, community, and one of Alberta's successful country music artists, Brett Kissel, attended the celebration.

With entrepreneurial spirit automotive pioneer Julius Dawson, patriarch of three generations of mechanics, founded Dawson Motors in 1932 in a 14- by 24-foot building. Dawson Motors has continued to successfully grow into a modern and complete facility for automotive service and repair as well as a fully equipped machine shop.

To this day, Mr. Speaker, the company exemplifies Julius' business philosophy, which is quality workmanship, good service, and value for your money. Second generation Ken Dawson started as a gas jockey at age nine and officially joined his father, Julius, in 1954 as a master journeyman in both welding and automotive mechanics. Today Ken is the company president, and his son Dale serves as manager.

Again, Mr. Speaker, my heartfelt congratulations and sincere appreciation to all the family members and employees past and present for adding immeasurably to our great city and province. God bless.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Lobbying Government

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's fitting that we're sitting on Halloween because it's getting scary out there. It looks like the government has been possessed, so we're grateful that the Chief Electoral Officer is investigating this phenomenon. But there's another aspect beyond donations, lobbying. The Minister of Finance has described a number of meetings and a number of decisions related to the Katz Group and its interest in casinos and arenas. Is the Finance minister aware of the strict rules about lobbying and the sanctions for breaching those rules?

Mr. Horner: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Smith: That's good to know.

While we wait for the Minister of Finance to deliver on his commitment yesterday to provide details of the meetings about these matters, can he at least tell us who the registered lobbyist is that the government met with on behalf of the Katz Group through 2011 and 2012?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, throughout 2011 I did not meet with any of the Katz Group or with any lobbyists. I was actively engaged in a leadership race throughout 2011, so I can't speak to 2011. As the hon. member well knows, the definition for registry of a lobbyist is someone who spends more than 100 hours, but if you're meeting with the president of a corporation [interjections] – wait for it – they don't necessarily register themselves as a lobbyist because they're there on behalf of their corporation.

I would also add, Mr. Speaker: how many people in Edmonton do you think don't know what Mr. Katz is trying to do?

Ms Smith: That's very interesting, Mr. Speaker, because given that the Katz Group did register as a lobbyist in 2009 and did register as a lobbyist in 2010, but the lobbyist registry shows no record of anyone registered to lobby on behalf of the Katz Group in either 2011 or 2012, can the minister explain this discrepancy?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, a lobbyist is someone who is hired by the corporation. In fact, the hon. member is right. I'm glad that for once they've done their homework. Now, the lobbyist that was registered in 2009 and 2010 was Mr. Peter Elzinga. Mr. Peter Elzinga was the registered lobbyist for them. Two and a half years ago, when I met with the Katz Group, with their lobbyist Mr. Elzinga, that was when they brought up the concept of whether we would consider changing the charitable gaming model. I said that the answer was no then, we've said that the answer is no today, and the answer will be no tomorrow.

The Speaker: The hon. leader, second main question.

Municipal Taxation

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Here's another scary idea for taxpayers, the spectre of tax hikes. The Minister of Municipal Affairs has been meeting with the big-city mayors on the issue of city charters. Now, it appears that Calgary's mayor emerged super happy with what they've heard so far about their quest for new tax powers. The Calgary mayor is floating the idea of several new taxes – a new municipal sales tax, a new vehicle registration tax, a new municipal tourism tax, and a new municipal fuel tax – yet the minister says that such taxing powers are not on the table. What's the truth?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, the truth is exactly what I have said for an entire year as minister in this role. There's only one taxpayer in this province. Everything that we do in this department is going to revolve around making sure that our roles and responsibilities with municipalities serve the one client we both represent, with the idea that they are one taxpayer. I've been clear from the beginning, and I'm just as clear now.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I'm just waiting for the minister to say, "no new taxes," because we're not advocating for more taxes, and given that the minister says that he's not either, if he has given the mayor such bad news, how can he explain why they emerged from the meeting with him so super happy?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I've been at AUMA. I've been at AAMD and C explaining my position. She should listen to the mayor of Edmonton, who said that he agrees with me that we don't need new taxes. We need to make sure our roles are clear and stop listening to somebody who – I don't know – is maybe speculating.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Wildrose has a plan to help municipalities get the revenues they need to do the work that they need to do. It's called our 10-10 plan. The government's plan seems to be to have meetings, string them along, and then give them nothing. Call it a 0-0 plan. When is the government going to answer real needs with real answers?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, we have respected municipalities' autonomy from the very beginning. They say that they do, but every time we turn around, they talk about their 10-10 plan, which will cut funding to municipalities by $400 million up front. Then they turn around, and every single time a municipality, whether it's Sylvan Lake or it's Edmonton, about the airport or the arena – they come forward and say that they won't support them. Do they support municipal autonomy, or are they going to boss everybody around?

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Hon. Member for Airdrie, you have a point of order?

Mr. Anderson: I sure do.

The Speaker: So noted.
Proceed, hon. leader.

MLA Remuneration

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is trying to trick Albertans, but the doubling of RRSPs is no treat for taxpayers. The government proposes to double the amount of taxpayer money going to MLA RRSPs, adding $1,000 a month to MLA pay, an 8 per cent increase. Does the Premier really expect us to believe that there have been no caucus discussions or directions from her on how government members should vote on this issue?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, what I expect Albertans to have confidence in . . .

Speaker's Ruling

Questions about Legislative Committee Proceedings

The Speaker: Hon. Premier, excuse me for a moment.

Could I just remind all members of the House and this member who just questioned, in particular, about 411 again? Beauchesne's 411 specifically states that a question may not "seek information about proceedings in a committee which has not yet made its report to the House." [interjections] Hang on. Hang on.

Furthermore, House of Commons Procedures and Practice, page 506, states, "When a question has been asked about a committee's proceedings, Speakers have encouraged Members to rephrase their questions."

Member for Airdrie, we've noted your point of order and a point of order from the Government House Leader as well.

Mr. Mason: And from me as well, please, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: And a point of order from the hon. leader of the ND Party. Thank you.

Hon. Member for Airdrie, you were asking?

Mr. Anderson: Just a point of clarification, Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 13. The opposition leader is asking a question of the Premier on what her position is: is she instructing her caucus to do something? Does that not comply with Beauchesne's?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'll comment more fully at the end of question period to clarify it for you, but anything to do with MLA compensation and pay is an issue for a committee called the Members' Services Committee, which two of your members sit on. As such, they have before them consideration of MLA compensation. It's a cautionary reminder. That's all.

Hon. Premier, you had the floor. Please proceed.

MLA Remuneration

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last fall and during my leadership bid I made a point of ensuring that we were going to have a transparent process put in place with independent advice with respect to how MLA compensation should be structured. After I became leader of our party and became Premier, we asked for that review to be done, and we were fortunate enough to have a retired justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, Mr. Justice Jack

Major, provide us with that report and detail. My understanding is that between decisions that government has made and decisions that the committee will make, we will have a full response to that.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I would point out that the Premier had no problem talking about transition allowances in the direction she gave to her MLAs.

Given that the RRSP increase amounts to an 8 per cent jump in MLA pay and given that the Alberta Teachers' Association is being told by government that it's trying to stick to a 1 per cent increase this year, doesn't the Premier see that an 8 per cent pay increase for MLAs sends the wrong message to our public-sector unions?

2:00

The Speaker: Again, hon. member, please, let's understand that the committee is reviewing this matter right now, in general, about RRSPs, about pensions, about compensation and has not yet brought its report forward.

Hon. leader, please proceed with your third and final.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we are asking for a moratorium on discussions about MLA compensation until the budget is balanced. Will the Premier at least agree with me today that this is the right thing to do so that her people can feel free to support our motion?

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. member has noted that there are three points of order on this already. I think we'll get to that at the end, and we'll clarify what this is all about so that everyone understands that there are rules that govern certain proceedings here, in fact, all of our proceedings. I think we all ought to try a little better to follow them. I certainly wouldn't be following them if I allowed them to be broken or bent to the point where they appear to be breaking.

Let's go on, then, with the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Public Agencies Governance

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans may be surprised, as I was, that 250 government-appointed boards, agencies, and commissions spent approximately half of the provincial budget without any consistent oversight. This government in 2007 recognized this in a report called At a Crossroads, recommending that each ABC – agency, board, and commission – must have a precise mandate and that ABC members should be appointed based on competence. The government passed the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act, Bill 32, in 2009 to attempt to implement these recommendations. Over three years have passed. This act has not been proclaimed. To the Premier: why has the law not been proclaimed, and when will you take steps to do so?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, there's been extensive work done with respect to agencies, boards, and commissions. In fact, one of the things that is going on under Executive Council and the President of the Treasury Board is to ensure that all agencies, boards, and commissions are fully in compliance with the recommendations that were made with respect to that report. We're making tremendous progress with respect to that.

Dr. Swann: Making tremendous progress since 2007, when it was identified, and still nothing on the websites, Mr. Speaker. That's progress? I'm sorry.

Given that about one-third of ABCs have a mandate document posted online, even fewer have a current membership list, and given that the current Health minister said in reference to this legislation that "it's important to have legislation in place, reflecting this government's commitment to . . . transparency and accountability," how does the Premier ensure that these 250 ABCs are accountable to Albertans without proclaiming this legislation?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we do this every day through the public sector reform process, we do this every day through the Department of the Treasury Board, and we do it every day through Executive Council.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, of the 250 agencies, boards, and commissions we have looked at so far, their membership lists have 50 per cent of their members donating; 80 out of 90 of those donations go to the Progressive Conservative Party. Will the Premier commit to proclaim the act into law immediately and go a step further by not allowing any ABC members to donate to any political party?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I could say categorically that that hon. member has more information with respect to that issue than I or anyone on this side of the House. That is not a factor in anything that we do.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition, followed by the Member for Medicine Hat.

Chief Electoral Officer Investigations

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Based on a questionable interpretation of the elections financing act, the Chief Electoral Officer refused to release details of previous investigations into illegal political donations. Now his office is suggesting that the results of this latest investigation into the massive donation from Mr. Katz and associates to the PC Party will also be secret. My question is to the Premier: will she do the right thing despite the Chief Electoral Officer's bogus interpretation of his act and ensure that his report will be made public?

Speaker's Ruling

Questions about Political Party Activity

The Speaker: Hon. member, before we get into points of order – I see two or three members rising – I ruled on this earlier this week, and I would ask you to please consider that ruling seriously and rephrase your question to not make it a question about any political party or its donations, as is consistent with what I said earlier.

Secondly, the comments about an officer of this Legislature: you might just want to rephrase that part of your question as well and perhaps bear in mind that he's not here to defend himself.

I invite the next question.

Chief Electoral Officer Investigations

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I apologize for that.

The Deputy Premier said in this Assembly: "if the Chief Electoral Officer chooses to release information, he's privileged to do so as per the independence of his office. Nothing, in my opinion, in the legislation prevents him from doing that." My question is: does the Premier agree with her Deputy Premier?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, first of all, it is not for anyone in this House to be making comments with respect to how the Chief Electoral Officer, who is an independent officer of this Legislature, interprets legislation. What I will say is that I do agree with my Deputy Premier in terms of his interpretation of the legislation although, as we know, he is not a lawyer.

However, that is not the point. The point is that we have made significant contributions with respect to transparency, from expense disclosure to a commitment to a FOIP review, public interest disclosure, whistle-blower legislation, and of course we will make whatever information is communicated to our party publicly available as soon as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, just to give greater certainty to that last point: given the importance of full disclosure in election financing will the Premier release the Chief Electoral Officer's report herself if the Chief Electoral Officer refuses to do so, and if not, why not?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to suggest that the hon. member has just questionably interpreted my answer, which was "of course," which can also mean yes and can also mean absolutely. So he can interpret my answer in any way that he would like. It will be public.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Travel to London Olympics

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This PC government has shown once again that they are out of touch and only out for themselves. For a real Halloween scare Albertans need to look no further than our growing deficit and the million dollars wasted on a taxpayer-funded junket to the London Olympics. This may be Halloween, but Albertans are tired of the tricks this government keeps playing. To the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation: will you admit this million-dollar junket was an irresponsible waste of taxpayer money?

Ms Cusanelli: Mr. Speaker, Alberta needs to build bridges, not walls. Our future depends on the connections that we make beyond our borders. We are already seeing the return on our investment that will be a lasting payoff for Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation likes to just dance around the issue, maybe the Minister of Culture will tell Albertans what cultural value was gained by having over a hundred thousand dollars flushed down the toilet in empty and unused hotel rooms.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will answer the question. People in key areas of our economy – artists, tourism industry, agrifood sector, technology sector – are telling us that this mission has been valuable to them, and that is what matters to us. What is good for our key industries is what is good for Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like the member to table all those statements that she made.

An Hon. Member: Investors.

Mr. Pedersen: The investors.

Given that the PC government passed a hat around their caucus to pay for their friends on the no-meet committee, will the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation commit to being accountable and ask that they do the same to repay Albertans for the cost of empty and unused hotel rooms on the London Olympic junket?

Ms Cusanelli: Let's be clear, Mr. Speaker. The expenses for the hotel rooms are frustrating, and I share that frustration with Albertans. Our decision to reduce a delegation to ensure a focused, effective mission was the right decision. We wanted to ensure that we had a strong presence in London, and we accomplished that goal. That was the goal of our mission, and it is done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Capital Infrastructure Planning

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been reported by a reputable Edmonton newspaper that there's a possibility that next year's capital plan will include a list ranking the province's top infrastructure projects from one to 100 and beyond. My question is to the President of Treasury Board. Edmonton has several important capital projects proposed. Will they be included in the plan, along with a detailed timeline for completion?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, we are reviewing the processes for allocating funding for capital projects. We spent the summer and this fall travelling and talking with Albertans and have heard their thoughts on what infrastructure is needed. We're certainly putting that together.

Certainly, the opposition gave us their billion-dollar wish list over the last couple of weeks as they gave their maiden speeches. You know, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting that while they campaigned on cutting infrastructure spending by 25 per cent, now they're talking about spend, spend, spend in all of their speeches. I'm wondering if that's in their priority list.

Mr. Jeneroux: My next question is to the Minister of Transportation. Can you tell this House how this government will decide Albertans' priorities: a hospital in this community versus a school in another community, a road, a bridge, a waterline? [interjections] It needs to be clear, Minister.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, please.

Member for Edmonton-South West, I did not hear the end of your question. I hope the minister who is expected to answer did.

The hon. Transportation minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To answer the hon. member's question, when we're deciding on infrastructure priorities, we talk about traffic volumes, safety records, collision statistics, infrastructure conditions, economic activity, new developments that are occurring. We do it in the interest of all Albertans, not in the interest of individual ridings, as was presented by the members across in their speeches asking for spending only in their ridings, three-quarters of a billion in the critic's alone.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back to the President of Treasury Board: will this mean our government will see an increase in lobbying for projects, trying to influence decision-making?

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, if you could just keep the noise down. There are conversations going across the floor here, and there are interjections of all kinds. I'm having trouble hearing, and I'm sure people in our galleries are having trouble hearing, and who knows who else is having trouble hearing.

However, I invite the Minister of Finance to respond.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and well said. The decorum in this House should be respected.

Capital Infrastructure Planning (continued)

Mr. Horner: I do believe that there will be efforts to talk to us about where the priorities lie for each riding. I would also agree that every MLA has a duty to bring forward his issues, and we do that as a caucus.

I hope that the finance critic was listening to all of his colleagues and their more-than-billion-dollar requests for capital that are over and above what the rest of the province needs.

I would also say, Mr. Speaker, that we listen to our municipalities. We support our municipalities. We don't tell them what to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, thank you. The bullying and intimidation of our doctors and our health professionals is one of the biggest issues that has faced this province. It peaked this spring when the Premier broke her promise, calling an inquiry that fails to address this serious issue. Now, in the government's whistle-blower release yesterday, which was more a trick than a treat, we find our protection will only apply to wrongdoings in 2013. Does the associate minister of transformation really think that trying to shut the door on the government's bullying of our health care professionals or, for that matter, any other public employee is truly being accountable and transparent?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, clearly, the members opposite have no clue what they're speaking about. The fact is that this new piece of legislation will allow the commissioner to go back and investigate as long as he so wishes. It would be very nice if those members opposite paid attention to the facts in this House and spoke about something that's real for once.

Mrs. Forsyth: You know, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting. The member calls us clueless, and I wonder who the clueless one is here.

If the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation is all of the above and claims to be an agent of change, what will the minister do to ensure that our health inquiry expands to include the serious issue of the bullying and intimidation of our health care professionals?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to say that we're leading the way in openness and transparency in this position. We are. We have the most robust expense disclosure policy. We introduced whistle-blower legislation. We're going to be reviewing the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. Our Premier asked that this jurisdiction lead Canada in openness and transparency. That's exactly what we're delivering.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, the minister just doesn't get it.

Given that this Premier during her leadership campaign last September quite clearly stated that she wanted protection for whistle-blowers, who can go to opposition parties, the media, the courts, or to the general public, can the minister please explain how the Premier will be held accountable for her latest broken promise to protect whistle-blowers?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, this legislation does not restrict the whistle-blower from going to any of those persons that were just mentioned. They can go to the media. They can go to anyone that they wish. Our act focuses on getting something done about the whistle-blowing issue. Our legislation is going to be able to react to problems. I don't just want the issue to be reported. We want to do something about it, and that's what this legislation is going to accomplish.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

School Class Sizes

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been hearing from a lot of sources big concerns about the tremendously large class sizes in our junior and senior high schools across the province. I can't turn around without someone asking about big class sizes, particularly in the cities. It would be helpful to receive the actual numbers in the situation. To the Minister of Education: how many classes in each of grades 7, 8, and 9 in Alberta's junior high schools have 30 or more students? Of those, how many have 35 or more students?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, this is a great question. Class size is really an important issue and one we've been working hard to address. I can tell you that last year we had just over 45,000 classes serving our grades 7, 8 and 9 students across the province. About 10 per cent of those had class sizes of just 30 kids, and 1 per cent of those had class sizes of more than 35 kids.

I think it's also important to note how much we're investing in the class size initiative: $1.6 billion since 2006, $232 million this year alone, Mr. Speaker. As a result, less than one-third of a per cent of our K to 3 classes, which is where we're focusing our money, have over 30 kids.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. It's important to know how many classes in each of grades 10, 11 and 12 in Alberta's senior high schools have 30 or more students. How many of those have 35 or more students?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, for the high schools we had 24,000 classes. About 16 per cent of those had more than 30 students, and 8 per cent had more than 35 students last year.

I want to point out that Education does not mandate specific class sizes as there's no one-class-size-fits-all for this province. But we do have guidelines for the school divisions, and those school boards are in the best position to determine the needs of their local classes. For one school 30 might be just fine. For another, a class of 12 kids may be an issue because of diversity in the classroom. I know that as a parent, and I've experienced that as a parent myself.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you. Again to the same minister: how do these figures which you have presented to the Assembly today compare to those from the 2010-2011 and 2011-2012 school years?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, our junior high students have seen a slight increase in the number of classes with 30 or more students, about half a per cent. For high school it was slightly less, with an increase of .4 per cent. I think, again, it's important to note that class size, as important as it is and as much money as we're investing in it and as much attention we want to pay to it, is just one of the factors of success, the other factors being: what is the makeup of that class, the diversity and the challenges that are in that class? The third really important one is the skill level of the teacher. We're paying very close attention to all three factors.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

2:20 Labour Protection for Paid Farm Workers

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the summer there was discomfort across the agricultural sector over the possibility of a boycott of Alberta products from international corporations such as Pepsi, Frito-Lay, McDonalds, and Yum! foods, who have strong ethical procurement positions related to child labour and human rights in agriculture. It is interesting to note that the city of Medicine Hat is now also looking at its procurement policy. As most Albertans are shocked to realize, the paid people employed to produce our food, not including family members of family farms, are without protection under occupational health and safety, WCB, and labour standards for children. To the agriculture minister: are you concerned that these major buyers of Alberta meat and other produce, seeing the conflict, may be forced to boycott . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Olson: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I will acknowledge the hon. member's interest in this issue. He's been talking about it for some time. I want to acknowledge that, but I also want to say that I'm very disappointed at his comments, which put our industry at risk in terms of talking about boycotts and, I would say, encouraging multinationals to boycott Alberta farmers, Alberta producers, and Alberta workers.

Now, we take this issue very seriously. We're very interested in worker safety, too. That's why we have struck a Farm Safety Advisory Council. I have their report. The Minister of Human Services and I are working on a response.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you. Well, I'm concerned about your lack of commitment as a lawyer to human rights in this province.

To the Finance and Treasury Board minister: is it acceptable to you that commercial agricultural operations choosing not to have WCB are downloading health care costs onto the public purse to the tune of $4.5 million annually, at a minimum, according to a local expert? That's a lot of hip replacements, road work. How do you feel about that?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I'd like to know who the local expert is that came up with that number.

Secondly, coming from a farming family myself and having some history in the agricultural community, I'm obviously concerned about farm safety, very concerned. I've had friends who have been injured on the farm because they were farming their farm. The two ministers are working on the report. We expect to have the results of that soon.

Dr. Swann: Yes. They've been working on it for decades. How many more decades, Mr. Minister?

To the Human Services minister: since the Premier pledged to extend occupational health and safety and WCB to paid farm workers, excluding family farm members, the question is: when? Albertans want to see change.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, seeing as that question has been answered twice already, that we're working on it and it'll be coming shortly, perhaps I could use the time that I have to ask the hon. member to stop disrespecting potato farmers and other farmers in the province by encouraging international companies who have got policies to boycott their products.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Corporate Sponsorships in Schools

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's becoming more clear that this government simply does not provide the funding that school boards need to run our education system properly. Yesterday we heard that the Calgary board of education has started a discussion about accepting corporate sponsorships to fund their schools. Schools are public institutions, and they should not be put up for sale. To the Minister of Education: why is this minister not taking action to protect the integrity of our public schools?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I think that's quite an allegation, that our schools are up for sale to the private sector. I've heard nothing of that sort, and I'd encourage the member to actually talk to the CBE. I'd also ask: why wouldn't we invite industry and partners into our schools? Why would we refuse donations of the latest, greatest technology that our kids can be exposed to? Why would we not want to engage the people that are going to employ our kids as they come out of the school system? I wonder if the member has actually read any of the work of Inspiring Education, where it talks about engaging the community and engaging the business community and those folks with respect to our education system.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that without an increase in funding from Alberta Education Edmonton public schools will be facing a $1 billion infrastructure deficit by 2021 and given that this government has a deficit of its own to deal with, what plan does this government have to keep our education system running without forcing school boards to go cap in hand to the corporate sector for sponsorship?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I have no inclination that this potential partnership that the CBE is looking at is to just generate revenue. This is to generate partnerships with industry. This is a good thing. This is not a bad thing. As a parent I want my kids exposed to the latest, greatest technology. I want them to be aware of what kind of job opportunities and work experience opportunities and internships are out there. We've been trying to push school divisions and push the education system to adapt that entrepreneurial spirit as one of the core things that we want to deliver. How do you deliver that without inviting entrepreneurs into the system?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the education system is relying on P3s for infrastructure and on school fees for instructional costs and with reports of corporate sponsorship for schools in Calgary, would this minister explain what he will do to reverse this race to the bottom where piece by piece the integrity of our public school system is being sold off?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, anyone that talks about our education system being on the bottom is completely out of touch. Alberta has a world-class education system recognized right around the globe as one of the top jurisdictions in the world, and one of the reasons is that we will overturn every stone we can to get at the partnerships, to get at the funding, to get at the latest research to make those classrooms better for our kids so our kids have more opportunities than anyone else on this planet.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Energy Technology Expenditures

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know what is scary? Our growing deficit. The Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education seems oblivious to the government's record of wasting billions of dollars on corporate welfare like AOSTRA 2 instead of putting Albertans first: fixing health care, balancing the budget, and eliminating school fees. We've seen this before as the government continues to pump $2 billion of hot air into the ground. To the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education: are you not aware that this is exactly the kind of government waste that should be slashed to balance the budget?

Mr. Khan: Thank you, hon. member, for the question. Mr. Speaker, during members' statements not that long ago a number of members from across the aisle acknowledged the visionary contribution of Peter Lougheed to this province. Premier Lougheed was the man who came up with the original concept for AOSTRA, which is being taught in European classrooms as visionary legislation. AOSTRA 2 is a legislation and a vision for this province to continue on that visionary path that Premier Lougheed set for this province, and it will build to establish Alberta as the best place in the world to do business as the cleanest energy provider.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I find it amazing that this minister thinks the government knows better than everyday Albertans how to spend their money. Given that this government has a terrible track record of picking winners and losers, holding out billions on a silver platter for corporations on unproven carbon capture technology or even the so-called world-class magnesium plant, will the minister explain why more government waste, more deficits, and more corporate welfare are this government's priorities?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member is fully aware that our Minister of Finance, the President of Treasury Board, toured this province engaging Albertans in conversations about our financial future, all of which the hon. members across the aisle were invited to participate in. Thankfully, one took us up on the offer.

An Hon. Member: Two.

Mr. Khan: Two. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to be on this side of the aisle with the visionary leadership that establishes Alberta and understands the value of research and science. With all due respect, we're not certain that those folks on the other side of the aisle are the best people to make recommendations in terms of scientific innovation.

Mr. Bikman: Mr. Speaker, I can't say I'm surprised by the minister's strong defence of wasteful spending.

Again to the minister: will you stop hiding behind this bureaucratic, make-work, corporate welfare project and admit that AOSTRA 2 is a complete waste of taxpayer dollars? It's the epitome of wasteful spending and incompetence and is exactly why we're drowning in red ink.

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, quite the contrary. I am so proud to stand here and defend AOSTRA 2 as a visionary statement in terms of Alberta's position, and I'm proud to tell you that we will continue to be at the forefront of innovation, the forefront of research because Alberta is not only established as a leader within Canada, but we are recognized as a leader in research and innovation around the world. We will continue to do so, and we will continue to reap the economic benefits of that research and innovation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Cardiff Road Overpass

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Highway safety is of particular importance to my constituents in Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. Two top priorities identified are the completion of the Cardiff overpass near Morinville and the paving of highway 661. My first question relates to the delay of the Cardiff overpass completion. There have been many accidents and a tragic death this summer. To the Minister of Transportation: when will the government commit to increasing highway safety at the Cardiff intersection and complete the Cardiff overpass?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the member for the question. This intersection is a priority for residents of the area, and I would also like to recognize that the hon. member is actually working with the locally elected municipal council on this issue because I'm hearing the same thing from them. The first phase of construction is complete, including a temporary detour and a realignment of 100th Street. There are also in place advance warning signs, warning lights, reduced speed limits, and acceleration and deceleration lanes. We'll continue to work with the hon. member and the local municipal council to address this issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: is the government considering temporarily lowering the speed limit or increasing law enforcement presence until the overpass is completed?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to say to the hon. member that she might be disappointed. The speed limits on this particular intersection have already been reduced, and today there are no plans to reduce them further.

Between a combination of work that's been done and, thankfully, safe driving practices by Albertans using this area, we hope to make sure that motorists will ensure that this is a safe intersection. I'll also continue working with my colleague the Solicitor General to make sure that there is enforcement out there for those few Albertans that somehow need to be reminded.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that both Westlock and Barrhead counties have identified the paving of highway 661 as their number one priority, can the minister assure us that the upkeep of this highway will be improved until that stretch of road is slated for paving?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On highway 661 we do monitor to make sure that it's maintained at what we consider a high standard of safety. At this point 661 is not in the three-year plan to be replaced, but I'd like to assure the hon. member, who has been pretty diligent in going after me on this issue, that we review the plan every year. We examine traffic volumes, safety records, infrastructure conditions, and as the needs arise, I'd like the hon. member to know we will take action and fix the road as it needs fixing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Highway 63

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speaking of taking action, winter is fast approaching, and with it comes an urgency to complete the maintenance on that 70-kilometre stretch of highway 63 north of Wandering River. Last week the Transportation minister boasted that he was getting the job done and was even taking an extraordinary step of bringing in a fancy piece of equipment to get the lines painted quickly. Despite these assurances, none of this work has taken place. Alberta drivers want to know, first of all: is there a cost overrun, and who is paying for it, the general contractor or taxpayers?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. It's more timely than the hon. member knows. I've been on top of this every single day. Because I've been on top of that, I know that as of 1:30, just by coincidence the same time the House started sitting today, there is that fancy equipment, rightly described, out painting lines on that section of road.

Mr. Barnes: Given that snowfalls are inevitable during the winter months in northern Alberta, contributing to difficult driving conditions, and given that proper road lines are central to enhancing road safety for motorists and given that safety is very, very serious and the highway very, very important to Alberta, why wasn't this finished sooner?

Mr. McIver: Well, I'm grateful for the endorsement by the hon. member of the good work we're doing, the fact that we're out there.

Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member was listening when I answered a similar question in the House earlier, this project, when it's done, will be completed somewhere between eight and eight and a half months earlier than the original schedule of July 2013.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to go back to my very, very first question. A lot of Albertans have expressed concern about the cost of this extra machine. A lot of Albertans have expressed great concern about the safety of the highway, and we empathize with all Albertans. Will the minister please talk about the cost of the machine and who is paying for it?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, the taxpayers of Alberta are paying for the construction of this road, and this particular exercise is no exception. This government has decided and my ministry has decided that the safety of Albertans is worth—I will get the hon. member the exact number; it seems to me it's in the neighbourhood of $30,000, but I will get the exact number. This government considers that a legitimate expense. Rather than having Albertans not drive safely on this new section of road that they paid for for another six or eight months, we decided that while that was an additional expense, it was quite reasonable to add that level of safety this winter for all Albertans using highway 63.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Heartland Electricity Transmission Project

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The heartland transmission line will soon be under construction through my constituency. Many of my constituents are questioning the need for this line. To the Minister of Energy: since the decision was made by a former cabinet, would the minister provide detailed information on why a 500-kV, 6,000-megawatt line is required?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much. The Alberta Electric System Operator, AESO, identified this project as being required as early as 2007 in the long-term transmission system plan. It was reaffirmed in the 2009 long-term plan. You know, common sense just tells us. If you look at the Fort Saskatchewan, 37 per cent growth over the last 10 years; Strathcona county, 30 per cent growth over the last 10 years. The Industrial Heartland is home to more than 40 new companies, 11 new projects announced during the planning stages, large-scale industrial complexes. Yes, Mr. Speaker, I'd be happy to . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary to the same minister: what's the timeline for construction now for the heartland transmission line, and when can we expect to see it actually fully energized?

Mr. Hughes: Well, I'm always happy to talk about fully energized, Mr. Speaker. The target for completion of the line would be approximately a year or a little bit more than that. It will be within the next year and a half or so and fully energized within a short period thereafter.

Mr. Quest: Second supplementary to the same minister, then, Mr. Speaker: what's the latest anticipated cost now of this line, of this project, and what will it amount to on Albertans' power bills?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One would expect this to cost approximately 60 cents for each of the consumers in the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Ferruginous Hawk Habitat

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What's really scary about this government is its inability to follow the law. Early this year ESRD gave ATCO permission to remove the nesting platforms of the ferruginous hawk. This hawk is protected by the Canadian Species at Risk Act, yet yesterday the Minister of ESRD stated twice that Dr. Schmutz was extremely pleased with ATCO and ESRD. Why did the minister misrepresent Dr. Schmutz's initial outrage when he wrote to the minister calling the removal of these nesting sites a breach of due diligence, ill conceived, and a mockery?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my understanding that Dr. Schmutz certainly in the beginning wasn't happy with this but that with the outcome that has happened with these hawks, that their nests are there, he is happy with that. That's what my understanding is. They're working together, Dr. Schmutz and the department and ATCO. The important thing is that these are an important species for us and that we're working together to find solutions for these species.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government claims to consult and given that Dr. Schmutz was clearly never consulted with regard to his ongoing research and the removal of these nesting sites, how did this government arrive at its decision, and by whose authority did this government allow ATCO to remove these nests?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, certainly the department has been working with ATCO and with the groups around there and with advice from experts like Dr. Schmutz as well to make sure that this important species is being taken care of. The nests are there to make sure that we take care of these important hawks.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that power lines actually kill hawks and given that the removal of these nesting sites violates the Canadian Species at Risk Act and given that the illegal action jeopardized an ongoing 28-year scientific study, will the minister admit that the decision to remove these nesting sites of the ferruginous hawk was an illegal action that violated the Canadian Species at Risk Act?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I have said in both answers and as I said yesterday, ESRD is working with ATCO and is working with experts to make sure that we are taking care of the species at risk and to make sure that these hawks are taken care of as well.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes question period. In a few seconds from now I will continue with Members' Statements, starting with Edmonton-Manning.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Northeast Anthony Henday Drive

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to the ongoing construction of the northeast leg of Anthony Henday Drive. We had the sod-turning this summer to start construction on the northeast section of the Henday. Since the sod-turning large construction machinery can be seen moving materials day and night to complete the section by 2016. As the construction runs from Manning Drive to end just south of the Whitemud, this project directly affects my constituency of Edmonton-Manning and the capital region.

The completion of this ring road project is one that people of the capital region and I are looking forward to as construction is planned to end in 2016. When the project is completed, it will include nine interchanges, two road flyovers, eight railroad crossings, and two bridges across the North Saskatchewan River, a total of 46 bridge structures.

Funding from the Alberta government along with private partnership will enable construction to end a full three years earlier than initially projected. It supports an ever-changing and expanding population and furthers Alberta's economic growth.

I look forward to witnessing the impact that the ring road may have on reducing commute times and traffic congestion for the residents in my constituency of Edmonton-Manning and for all Albertans who use the roadway.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Banff-Canmore 878 Air Cadets Squadron

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian cadet organization is one of the largest youth programs in Canada and includes Royal Canadian sea, army, and air cadets. This is a national program for young Canadians aged 12 to 18 which provides a variety of challenging and rewarding programs. Cadets learn valuable life skills such as teamwork, leadership, and citizenship and carry these skills into their adult lives.

Mr. Speaker, the Bow Valley is privileged to have the Banff-Canmore 878 Squadron located in our communities. This year they will be celebrating 33 years of service to our community.

Since its inception 878 Squadron has worked hard, building strong relationships with the surrounding communities. Their members are from Canmore, Banff, Exshaw, Morley, and Lake Louise. They are sponsored by three branches of the Royal Canadian Legion: No. 3, Three Sisters branch in Canmore; No. 26, Colonel Moore branch in Banff; and No. 179, Heart Mountain branch in Exshaw.

Supporting the squadron's 47 cadets is an incredible group of dedicated and skilled volunteers, which includes six officers, four civilian instructors, and a large, active Sponsoring Committee. Over the years 878 Squadron has been recognized with many individual and squadron awards. The latest of these is being named top air cadet squadron of the 96 units in the prairie region for 2010-11.

We are incredibly proud of all the young people taking part in the 878 air cadet programs, everything from biathlon to flight training to survival training, the programs too numerous to list here. The cadet program, Mr. Speaker, does work, and it is an asset in any community. We are very lucky, indeed, to have 878 Squadron in ours.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Government Accountability

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are honest, forthright, and upfront. These are our core values that make us who we are, so naturally we are disappointed when the government fails to live up to those values. We were promised a new approach to accountability. It was central to the arrival of a new leader, a new Premier, and a new government. Honesty, openness, transparency: these words were and still are tossed about daily from the other side with no regard for what they actually mean.

The reality is quite different: denials, secrecy, silence. This is what has come to define this government under this Premier. Her words and their actions just don't line up. Albertans have to look no further than what has transpired in this Assembly since we reconvened last week. Daily questions about MLA pay hikes and questionable political contributions to this PC government are met with scorn, ridicule, crude jokes, and stonewalling. We're not asking for much, Mr. Speaker, just the truth, just what the Premier promised when she said, and I quote: if what we are doing doesn't pass the highest levels of scrutiny, we shouldn't be doing it. Unquote.

Those words ring especially hollow today, the day we learn that Elections Alberta will indeed investigate her party for accepting a massive election contribution from a single source. Mr. Speaker, the Premier has an opportunity to save Alberta taxpayers a whack of dough and start repairing her tattered reputation on accountability and transparency by doing one simple thing, release the cheques. If this contribution was above board, if she's done nothing wrong, the cheques will prove it, so just release them. We doubt that will happen because despite claiming to adhere to, quote, the highest levels of scrutiny, this government's words and its actions tell a different story.

Mr. Speaker, the Wildrose Official Opposition is deeply committed to keeping this government accountable and transparent, and for us that's more than just words.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got the required number of copies of Annie Boychuk's personal story in her own words, and I'd like to present it to the hon. members.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday during debate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona indicated that the Alberta College of Social Workers had written to the government – I believe she said they were requesting a meeting – and had never even received a response. The College of Social Workers did indeed write to the hon. Minister of Human Services, but the letter did not actually request a meeting; it provided some input. They did receive a response. I'm tabling the appropriate number of copies.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? No other tablings? Thank you.

2:50

The Speaker: Hon. members, there were some points of order. I don't know if the members who raised them wish to proceed with them, but this would be the time. I think in the order that I recall them, Member for Airdrie, were you first? Please.

Point of Order

Factual Accuracy

Mr. Anderson: I'm just again referring to our favourite section, 23(h), (i), (j), and (l), a new one that was introduced to me by the House leader yesterday, a very, very good section. Mr. Speaker, we try to come into this House and debate issues. From time to time we do get answers. A lot of time we get answers we don't like, and we understand that. But when a minister of the Crown stands up and specifically misrepresents what another party has said, it's very difficult to conduct any kind of civil discourse. The innuendo does happen from time to time, and we ignore it, but when it's so blatantly false, when it's so completely false, that makes it difficult.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs clearly stood up in this House and said that the Wildrose 10-10 plan would severely cut funding for municipalities. It is completely unfounded, completely untrue. If he looks at the 10-10 plan, what it does is that it takes all of the municipal grants that are out there right now that the government gives to towns, rolls them up into one grant – okay? – and essentially replaces that grant with tax revenue of the same amount. It actually equates more because you don't have these granting application processes and bureaucracies filtering them and so forth. It just gives the money to the municipalities.

We did a detailed costing that was looked over by several professors of public policy at the University of Calgary and others. Costed, accounted for, et cetera. It did not result in a lower amount of money going to municipalities. It actually increased the amount going to municipalities.

We're not going to try to misrepresent what their municipal policy says. We know what the MSI is. We've said the numbers. They're written down. We don't say that MSI is going to take money away from municipalities that wasn't there before. That's not true either, so we don't say that. I just ask that we keep this civil, we keep it to the truth, and not misrepresent so blatantly what other people have to say.

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think that this is a point of order. Their plan had said before that it was going to take 10 per cent of 10 per cent of taxes and then 10 per cent of surplus. It doesn't take a genius to sit down with the budget and calculate. We've got $40 billion in revenue coming in. Thirty-four per cent of that comes from income and corporate tax. Ten per cent of that is $1.36 billion. All the funding we provide now is $2 billion. That's a cut of over $600 million, and I'm being generous. I've heard municipalities talk about this. If you even factor in the cigarette tax and the alcohol tax and the gasoline tax, it's still at least $400 million less than the $2 billion that they get now. I'd argue this is not a point of order; this is a dispute among facts. They don't like the facts, and that's what this dispute is about.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've commented on this before, and I hope I don't have to comment on it again any too soon. You will recall that on October 29 I referred to Beauchesne's 494. Now, before I rule on this, is there anyone else that has something new to add that perhaps I haven't heard or the Assembly hasn't heard?

Mr. Mason: Want to hear about the NDP policy?

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I would refer you to the Speaker's comments of October 29, just two days ago, page 289, wherein I stated that "we often receive clarifications" in this House, and "as all members here would know, Beauchesne's 494 does have a nice citation" in that respect. Just to remind you all, I will read it to you once again, and hopefully it will sink in a little more deeply with all members on all sides of the House. It's headed Acceptance of the Word of a Member, page 151 in my version of Beauchesne's, sixth edition. It says under 494: "On rare occasions this may result in the House having to accept two contradictory accounts of the same incident."

When that happens – and it has happened in this House many times – we frequently get points of order about it. Points of order lead to a use of time. Points of order sometimes lead to additional comments by additional members, sometimes abusive and disruptive behaviour occurs, and we have to accept that one person's version of it is this; another one is that. As such, this is registered officially as a point of clarification, not a point of order, but for each of you to please reflect on.

The hon. Government House Leader with a second point of order.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think that's a very delicate way of putting it with respect to the last point of order given that so many times even the word "misrepresentation" came up. But I digress.

Point of Order

Questions about Legislative Committee Proceedings

Mr. Hancock: My point of order is under Beauchesne's 411(3), as you so rightly have quoted a number of times, that a question may not "seek information about proceedings in a committee which has not yet made its report to the House." I could give a number of other citations, but I think it's fairly well understood that the House has delegated certain responsibilities to committees. One of the committees that we have is the Members' Services Committee. The Members' Services Committee has the full authority to debate and set members' stipends and members' benefits and those sorts of things. It doesn't come back to the House for approvals to do that. It does it under the delegated authority that it has. Those are within the purview of that committee.

The House received a report from Justice Jack Major in the spring session and referred that report to the Members' Services Committee, asking the Members' Services Committee to implement the report but for two items, I believe, that the House did not agree with and asked the committee to look at the pension recommendation in the report and report back to the House on that. That's clearly something that has been given to the committee. The committee has not yet reported on it.

It is entirely out of order for the hon. member opposite, the Leader of the Official Opposition, and others who have raised questions on other days to raise questions in the House about the proceedings that are before the committee. They are members of the committee. In fact, the hon. member raising the question is a member of the committee. She has a place to raise those questions. It's in public. It's on Hansard. It's got every opportunity to make the case that she wants to make about anything. That is not the purview of question period. That's not allowed in question period.

As well, Mr. Speaker, I think that there are other offending pieces to the way the questions have been raised in this particular area. One of them is this constant demand that the Premier tell her members how to vote. It is not appropriate for the Premier to tell her members how to vote. Every member in this House is voluntarily a member of a caucus. We can get together and we can discuss things. We can advise our members of committees what our views are.

Those discussions are the discussions of our caucus. Their caucus has discussions. I assume their caucus has discussions. I assume the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition is not a dictator, benevolent or otherwise. I presume that caucuses have discussions, challenge positions, decide on things, but members of the House have their position. It's not appropriate for the hon. member to ask the Premier to direct her members to do anything.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a member of that caucus for two years I know full well that we were whipped many, many times on virtually every single bill. To say that that's not the case . . .

Mr. Horner: You've never been a member of this caucus.

Mr. Anderson: I guess they could have changed that policy, but so far we haven't seen one person stand up against a government bill. If the Premier really believes that, then we should see if her MLAs actually start living it.

With regard to the issue of commenting on the committee proceedings, we are fully aware and the opposition leader is fully aware that when a matter is before a committee, she cannot comment on it. She gets that. We understand that, okay? The problem here is that, first of all, there is some confusion, Mr. Speaker, and I hope you can clarify it for us going forward. We are under the impression that a motion was passed in that committee. That motion specifically set out a transition allowance and specifically set out a raise in the RRSPs. Now, that was a motion – it's in the Hansard there – that was passed and then referred back to the House. I don't know if it's been sent back. It hasn't been sent back by the House, obviously, but maybe the committee has said: just hold on; we're going to do this again. I'm not sure. Maybe that's where some of the confusion is coming from. So if you could please clarify that.

That said, what we've been talking about in caucus is that when we address these things in question period, we're trying to understand what the policy of the Premier is, what the policy of the government is on a specific issue. We all know that in our system the Premier has a lot of influence on the decisions that her MLAs make. If they're not whipped, if you don't want to fess up to that, that's fine. Okay. Apparently you have free votes. Certainly, she has a lot of influence on their opinion, you would think. We're trying to figure out, this leader is trying to figure out what that opinion is on, specifically, MLA salaries.

Now, this Premier has stood up multiple times in this House saying how she has ended transition allowances, talking about transition allowances, talking about how she has committed to not having any transition allowance and so forth. Great. Fantastic. That's her opinion on transition allowances even though that's the work that the committee is doing. She's allowed to comment on that, though, because that's her policy, yet this member is being told that she can't comment. The Official Opposition leader can't ask a question on the policy with regard to the RSP allowance. It's completely inconsistent. How come the Premier can talk about where she stands on transition allowances, but this member can't ask the Premier about where she stands on RSP allowances? Both issues are before the committee that you speak of.

We're just looking for some consistency here, Mr. Speaker, in how we can talk about these things in the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. member of the fourth party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Rather than go to my own point of order, I think it would be preferable for me, at least, to just make some comments with respect to the hon. House leader's point of order.

Now, I want to confirm the statement that was made by the hon. Member for Airdrie. That is that the committee has made a decision, and the committee voted to recommend to this Assembly, as per its instruction from the Assembly, some recommendations.

Subsequent to that, we had some confused public statements by the Premier that later became a little clearer that she was clear that there would be no transition allowance. She repeated the earlier position that she had taken. That may not be instructions to PC members of the standing committee, but it raises a question as to why the motion that was made in the committee to make a recommendation to this House has not been brought forward to this House so it could be debated. I would hate to think that because of the Premier's public statements, there is a decision to hold that recommendation in abeyance while we have another meeting so that the members, of their own free will, can reverse the decision that has offended the Premier.

Mr. Speaker, I would very much appreciate some clarification because it was my understanding that the committee had made a motion to make recommendations to the House, and I'm frankly surprised that those recommendations have not come before the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader briefly. You've already spoken once.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A couple of things that I need to respond to in closing debate on the point of order. Firstly, the hon. Member for Airdrie said that the member raising the question was asking the Premier her opinion. Well, it's clearly out of order to ask any member for a personal opinion. It's not a government policy; it's an opinion.

Secondly, there is not a government policy with respect to MLA pay. That's the purview of the members, and that's a debate that's held at the Members' Services Committee.

Thirdly, rule 411(3) clearly says: "which has not yet made its report to the House." It's a matter of fact that the committee has not reported to the House.

The Speaker: Hon. members, let me review this and, hopefully, try to bring the clarity that I think everybody seeks, whether you're on the committee or not on the committee. Let me tell you how things stand. There are 10 standing committees. All of them are listed inside Hansard on about page 2 or 3; the pages aren't numbered. There are standing committees, for example, on economic future, on the heritage savings trust fund, on the Conflicts of Interest Act, on private bills. The list goes on. It also references the Members' Services Committee, which is the subject of discussion.

Now, further to that, the Assembly back in spring passed what has frequently been referred to as Government Motion 11. Let me just refresh your memory of what that says briefly.

That the committee being the Members' Services Committee examine alternatives to the pension plan for members proposed in recommendation 12 and discussed in section 3.5 of the report, . . .

That, of course, is the retired Justice Major's report.

. . . including defined contribution plans, and report to the Assembly with its recommendations.

Now, it's true that that committee, which I happen to chair, has met on several occasions, and we have considered a lot of business. That committee does have the power and the ability to make some rules, and we did that. We made some changes to some of our orders, and we are within our right to do that.

However, on this matter pertaining to an issue that was referred to us by this Assembly, we have not yet made a final decision other than a recommendation. The decision is in the form of a recommendation for a purpose, because we have not yet concluded our business. We still have, as you know from the letter I just sent you, a new issue to deal with that also comes out of Justice Major's report, and that is to provide some clarity, some recommendation regarding a review mechanism for MLA compensation in general. We have not yet done that.

Our business, hon. members, in respect to the charge that was put upon us by this Assembly has not yet been concluded. Therefore, we haven't yet come to a decision with respect to what our final report will contain. There are still some outstanding items to deal with, that being one of them. So we ought to wait for that committee's report. The committee, which has now been called by me to meet again next Tuesday, I believe, at 8:30 a.m., will consider what and how it wishes to report to this Assembly. Hon. members who serve on that committee are welcome to think about that over the weekend and see what the nature of our report might be, what it will contain and so on.

Remember that it has not yet come to this Assembly; therefore, Beauchesne's 411 applies. It's the only way of maintaining some sense of order and sequence and parliamentary adherence in this Assembly. I would caution you once again as I have done on numerous occasions – I haven't counted them all up yet, but I shall over the weekend – about not trying to pre-empt the work of that committee before it has had a chance to report. Then the Assembly will decide how to deal with it.

Those hon. members who are shaking their heads or otherwise indicating their disagreement simply have to understand that these are the rules that have guided us and will continue to guide us because if they don't – I'll tell you what's scary. Do you want to know what's scary? It's scary if we have no rules to govern this Assembly. It's even more scary if we have rules and we ignore them or choose to break them.

That having been ruled upon, we will proceed with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood with his point of order if, indeed, he has one.

Mr. Mason: Apparently not anymore, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you so much. That being the case, the matter is now closed, and we will proceed with Orders of the Day.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 4 Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act.

This past spring the government of Alberta established its accountability, transparency, and transformation mandate. The new Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act is a cornerstone of this mandate and will make Alberta a leader in transparency legislation. Extensive research has been undertaken to ensure this bill reflects best practices both nationally and internationally. The bill incorporates crossjurisdictional research on comparable Canadian and international legislation, best practices from academic experts and advocacy groups, and consultations with stakeholders in the broader public sector to ensure the bill will accomplish its intended objectives.

As I mentioned before, the scope of the act applies to the public sector and is one of the broadest in Canada in its application. The legislation will apply to the Alberta public service; agencies, boards and commissions; academic institutions; school boards; and health organizations upon proclamation. Municipalities and Métis settlements may be included at a later date upon their request.

The purpose of this bill is to establish a formal process to facilitate the disclosure of wrongdoing, conduct investigations into wrongdoings, and protect those who make disclosures from reprisal.

I would now like to take this opportunity to provide more details on the key features of this bill. First and foremost, the kind of wrongdoings reportable under the act have been specifically defined and are consistent with comparable legislation in other Canadian jurisdictions. A wrongdoing includes violations of provincial or federal law, actions or omissions that create a danger to public health or safety, gross mismanagement of public funds, or counselling any person to do any of the above.

Should a member of the public witness an action or omission that would fall into these categories, they have the discretion to report under this act and receive protection from reprisal, which includes a dismissal, a layoff, a suspension, a demotion or transfer, a discontinuation or elimination of a job, a change of job location, a reduction in wages, a change in hours of work, a reprimand, or any other negative employment action that is connected to the reporting of a wrongdoing.

To facilitate compliance with the act, the bill creates a new, independent office of the Legislature to be known as the public interest disclosure commissioner and sets out responsibilities and guidelines for the commissioner to follow. The commissioner will be responsible for reviewing disclosures received, investigating where appropriate, and making recommendations where reprisals of wrongdoing have been established.

It is our intent to have the Ombudsman appointed as the public interest disclosure commissioner in addition to his current role to ensure a smooth transition and to make use of already allocated resources. The appointment can be up to five years, with the possibility of reappointment by the Legislative Assembly. Future commissioners will be appointed and reappointed by the Legislature as a whole as is the case with other officers of the Legislature like the Information and Privacy Commissioner or the Ethics Commission.

This bill also sets up a framework for an internal disclosure process before engaging the commissioner. Chief officers within each public entity will be responsible for implementing procedures, for managing disclosures of wrongdoing, and for communicating these to their employees. The act will define key elements that must be included in every internal disclosure policy. The commissioner will have the ability to review any organizations' internal disclosure procedures and, if they find them to be inadequate, direct that all disclosures go directly to the commissioner until such time as the deficiency in internal procedures is remedied.

Another senior official in each public entity will then be designated to manage disclosures in accordance with the internal procedures. Employees will be required to use the internal disclosure process unless otherwise provided for in the act. For example, if an employee is making a complaint and fears a reprisal, then they may go directly to the commissioner.

To ensure transparency through reporting, the bill provides that the public entities and the commissioner must report annually on the number of inquiries they receive, the number of disclosures of wrongdoing and reprisals, the number of investigations, and recommendations made and actions taken to resolve wrongdoings. The commissioner may issue a public report at their discretion such as when a wrongdoing is found or to identify systemic problems and recommendations that are not adopted.

To ensure that there are appropriate enforcement mechanisms, the bill makes it an offence to commit a reprisal in response to a disclosure, to obstruct an investigation, destroy records, or make false or misleading statements to an investigator. If such an offence is committed, it would be referred to prosecution through the court process, and the court may issue a fine of $25,000 for a first conviction and a hundred thousand dollars for subsequent convictions.

It is important to note that the act does not replace other remedies pertaining to wrongdoings or reprisals such as civil lawsuits and that, where appropriate, wrongdoings must be referred to the appropriate authority. For example, investigations that confirm fraudulent use of public funds would be referred to law enforcement for criminal prosecution.

As you can see, this is an extensive, groundbreaking piece of legislation for Alberta and is evidence of the government's commitment to fulfilling its mandate of accountability, transparency, and transformation. To ensure that the objectives of the act are being met after the act is operational, a special committee of the Legislative Assembly will be tasked with undertaking a comprehensive review of the act within two years of the act coming into force.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would now move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 2

Responsible Energy Development Act

[Adjourned debate October 25: Mr. Hughes]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to address the issue of Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act. Let me say that the Wildrose Official Opposition wants to support this bill. We hope that we will be able to support this bill because we welcome its intentions. We do think that a one-stop shop for approving resource development is a good idea. We do, of course, believe in streamlining and finding efficiencies, and we think that all of the stakeholders in development can be brought together for the benefit of all Albertans, and I really do mean all Albertans, those Albertans who put the economy first as well as those Albertans who put the environment first.

Now, the Wildrose has gone out of our way to learn from and understand the needs and concerns of our energy and resource industries, and we have heard loud and clear their complaints about slow, cumbersome, and often contradictory regulatory hurdles. Because of those reasons, we were excited to see the introduction of the Responsible Energy Development Act.

That being said, before I get to some of the concerns I have, let me go through some of the complaints that we heard. When I began running for the leadership of the Wildrose Party, it was shortly after the implementation of the disastrous new royalty framework. There was a survey that was done on an annual basis called the Global Petroleum Survey, done by the Fraser Institute. What it does is ask investment advisers to rank the top jurisdictions in the world in which to do oil and gas investment. In the past Alberta had always enjoyed being in the top 10 of about 150 jurisdictions. In the 2010 survey Alberta had declined to number 92 out of about 150 jurisdictions, sandwiched somewhere between Poland and Hungary in the assessment of our business climate.

I'm pleased to acknowledge that having repealed some of the worst aspects of the new royalty framework and made some strides in addressing industry concerns, we're beginning the steady climb back to restoring industry confidence. In 2011 we were 51st on that ranking. In 2012 we were 21st on that ranking. So we're not back to where we were before the bad decisions were made back in 2008, but we're getting there.

Looking at the most recent, 2012 report from the Global Petroleum Survey, let me tell you what some investment advisers say about the jurisdictions in which they're investing. They say of this one jurisdiction that it has "stable and attractive fiscal terms." They say that it has "less red tape in conducting business than in other jurisdictions." They say that "the investment climate is bright." And the jurisdiction they're talking about is Saskatchewan.

Let me tell you what they say about another jurisdiction: "constantly shifting regulatory and approval framework," "high degree of government bureaucracy," "inefficient oil well site inspection procedures." And the jurisdiction they're talking about is Alberta.

Now, I commend the sustainable resource development minister for reaching out to industry and going through an examination of all of the steps that industry has to go through from the moment they conceive that they want to develop a well to the moment when it's abandoned and the land is reclaimed. I have to tell you that industry refers to what they developed as the 100-foot-long tapeworm, because when you put all of these tiny process steps on eight and a half by 11 sheets of paper, you end up with a stack of paper that is five feet high and 20 feet long. That is the 100-foot tapeworm that this government in its 41 years of creating regulation for the oil and gas industry has developed.

Let me tell you what that means in practice for a couple of the companies that I've spoken to over the last number of years, comparing our investment climate here in Alberta versus neighbouring Saskatchewan. One example was the company PetroBakken. They were trying to get approval for a pilot project for their fire-flood technique. In Saskatchewan the approval took 54 days. In Alberta the approval took more than two years. I don't know that they ever even got it before they ended up moving on from that.

Another story. This one is one of my favourites. Crescent Point was a company that switched from being an income trust back into a corporation after the federal government changed its income trust rules. They had thousands of wells in Saskatchewan and in Alberta, and they had to make a simple change in the description of each well site. They had to remove the word "trust" in the legal description of the well site.

So they called the regulators in Saskatchewan and said, "How do we do this?" The Saskatchewan regulator said, "Well, send over your list." Within two hours they'd solved the problem.

In Alberta the same issue took nine months to remedy and for a couple of reasons. First of all, it sat on someone's desk, didn't get pushed along. Finally, when it did get pushed along, they found out that part of the process they had used for transferring was to move all these wells into the abandoned well process. As a result, it ended up creating delays. While it was stuck in that limbo land, there were no completions that they could do, there was no additional development they could do, it was earning no revenue, and they were not able to do any work on it.

The second stage of the process. After they'd transferred over a portion of the wells, they were still stuck transferring over several hundred wells, and the excuse the government gave was that part of the problem was the way they tracked the percentage ownership. Crescent Point tracked its ownership share to three decimal points. The government only tracked ownership shares to two decimal points. Because the two systems couldn't talk to each other, they weren't able to transfer over several hundred wells.

When they finally fixed that problem, the last hurdle that Crescent Point faced was that the government regulators determined that the only way they would be able to execute the change of the name on the well sites was for them to put several hundred thousand more dollars into a liability fund in the event that those wells became abandoned. So a process in Saskatchewan that took two hours took nine months here, and I think that encapsulates part of the problem of what our industry is facing.

When I look at what we have in the bill, I was hoping that what I would see would be practical suggestions and practical steps for how we would address all of these different delays in the process. The unfortunate thing, from what I have seen in the bill so far, is that it kind of reminds me of the regulatory streamlining effort that the PCs went through a number of years ago, when they tried to convince the public that they were streamlining regulations because they took five or six different rules, put them under the same title, and they squashed them all in together under one act. This is kind of what this feels like to me.

It feels a bit like a Franken-bill. It's bringing in all of the different elements of a variety of different pieces of legislation, squashing them together, and hoping that by naming it under a single regulatory agency, somehow it's going to solve the many problems, only a few of which I just identified here. In reading through the bill, I'm worried that the government is walking down exactly the same path that they did with four flawed pieces of legislation. I'll talk about three of them: Bill 36, Bill 19, Bill 50.

Bill 36 was the Land Stewardship Act, and one of the problems the government found with this bill is that when you look at the provisions of it, it centralized decision-making into the hands of cabinet, it restricted or removed compensation, and it eliminated the appeals processes for landowners. This is why landowners across the entire province stood up and told the government to change it. The government did change certain provisions because it was so poorly written in its first phase that it would have allowed the government to extinguish – that was the wording in the act – all sorts of statutory instruments, including things like land titles, drivers' licences, marriage certificates.

Having recognized that they'd made an error, the government went back, and they attempted to remedy a small portion of it. They didn't get rid of the central planning elements of it, which is why we're still hoping for some changes, but I think we have to acknowledge that they made a major error in the original drafting of this bill.

Bill 19 was the Land Assembly Project Area Act, once again a piece of legislation designed to freeze land into green zones and have an entirely different compensation process that operated outside the Expropriation Act. The Expropriation Act identified 19 different headings of compensation to compensate landowners. Bill 19 was specifically designed to limit the amount of compensation to a very narrow range of market value only. Once again landowners across the province stood up, went to town hall meetings, and forced this government to look at this legislation, and once again they did address the major flaws in this legislation to restore the full rights of landowners that are equivalent to what they would enjoy under the Expropriation Act, but again a bill was pushed through giving central planning powers to the cabinet, no appropriate provisions for protection of compensation, no appropriate provisions for legal recourse. Mistakes were made, and it had to be amended.

Which brings me to Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009. This is the third in a set of three bad pieces of legislation that followed along the exact same path: central planning authority, taking away the independent needs assessment, putting the power into the hands of cabinet to make complicated technical decisions on the basis of need for transmission lines across the province. As we've seen, we're debating that in another session. They are now repealing that provision, returning and restoring the independent needs assessment to this independent commission rather than keeping the power centralized in the hands of cabinet.

When I look at the pattern that I've seen over the last few years of the government making the same mistake over and over and over and having to do amendments over and over and over, I am hoping that with this piece of legislation we can slow it down, we can identify the areas where we've got problems, and we can work together in a bipartisan way or a multipartisan way, perhaps, to be able to address those concerns so that we're not here again, one or two years from now, having to make amendments that we should be making to ensure that this legislation preserves that balance of respecting and streamlining the regulatory environment for our energy companies as well as respecting the landowners who are impacted by it.

Let me go through and talk about a few of the concerns that I would see in the legislation. The first concern that I have, having spoken with many members of our First Nations and aboriginal communities, is section 21, which indicates, under Crown Consultation with Aboriginal Peoples, that "The Regulator has no jurisdiction with respect to assessing the adequacy of Crown consultation associated with the rights of aboriginal peoples as recognized and affirmed under Part II of the Constitution Act, 1982."

When I've spoken with leaders in First Nations communities – and I've travelled to many, many First Nations communities and met with many chiefs over the last couple of years – I was surprised to hear that their biggest problems are not with the federal government, as I expected. Their biggest problems are with the provincial government, a provincial government that doesn't consult, a provincial government that didn't consult on the Land Stewardship Act. So when I read this section of the act and hear that the regulator does not have any authority to consider whether or not the Crown consultation process was adequate, I think that's an inadequate provision. What we're trying to do for industry is to create certainty. It doesn't create certainty for industry if we go through this process and then at the end of the day end up tied up in the courts in a legal process because the Crown consultation process with our First Nations communities was inadequate.

I would like for us to revisit this issue so that if we do end up having a process that is truly one window, it will acknowledge that First Nations consultation is an integral part of that, that the province does have a role, a key role, in making sure it's doing proper consultation, and it has a duty not only to the First Nations communities but to our energy companies to make sure it's doing that consultation appropriately so we don't end up getting bottlenecked in continued litigation and a legal process.

From what I've heard from our First Nations communities, they welcome the opportunity to have that conversation, that dialogue, that discussion. They welcome the opportunity to be able to have development in their communities not only because there's the opportunity potentially to share in the revenues developed from those resources but also so that their people can be employed in those projects.

The First Nations leaders that I have met in Alberta are progressive. They are looking forward. They are excited about the opportunities for their people. They just want the province to look at them as a partner in that development rather than as a barrier, rather than as an extra step in a process. I think the language of this bill in section 21 does not recognize that they are reaching out a hand to us. I think the government needs to reach out a hand across the aisle as well.

3:30

The second thing that concerns me – and I believe that we'll be having to have a further conversation about this and, hopefully, some amendments – is this issue of time frames. As I've been travelling around and as I mentioned in my opening and in the stories that I told, the issue that we're seeing is not necessarily the fact that there are these different bodies. The problem is that none of these bodies have time frames that are legislated in statute that they have to follow to be able to make their decisions – to give their permits, to give their approvals, to give their licences, to have the appeal hearings – and I don't believe that this legislation addresses that. There are a couple of places where, I'll tell you, I have some concerns.

Section 61 of the legislation talks about all of these time frames, all of these parameters being at the discretion of the regulator. Section 61 says:

The Regulator may make rules . . .

- (f) prescribing the time within which the Regulator shall make a written decision on an application after the completion of a hearing.

It's in the hands of the regulator to determine what a reasonable time frame is.

- (l) prescribing the time within which the Regulator shall make a written decision on a regulatory review.

Once again, the time frame is within the parameter of the regulator.

- (p) prescribing the time within which the Regulator shall make a written decision on a reconsideration.

Again, it seems to me, in reading this legislation, that we're giving a lot of purview to the regulator to make decisions which, I believe, we should be more clear about in statute.

The reason you put something in statute rather than in regulation is because you want it to be tough to change. You want your regulators to realize how seriously as legislators we take their obligation to make decisions in a timely way. We shouldn't be leaving it to their discretion to push out decisions in six months, one year, two years, or longer because it's not convenient for them to increase their level of staffing or increase their processes so that they can deal with these things in a timely way.

I would like to see time frames prescribed in law. I find it very interesting that there are two time frames in here that are prescribed in law, so it's not as if the statute would not consider that. There is a time frame. If the regulator does make a rule, it's prescribed that they have to give 120 days' notice to the minister. That's very specific. The minister thinks it's so important that he knows of a rule change that he wants to prescribe in the legislation that the regulator has to give him 120 days' notice.

I would also note that there is another prescription for a time frame. If an energy company happens to have an administrative penalty against it, it has to be paid within 30 days. So the government, clearly, finds that it's important to put on industry a time frame for when they would have to pay fines related to administrative penalties. I think the quid pro quo is that industry deserves to have something written in statute about the time frames that the government is prepared to commit to and the time frames that the regulator is obligated to follow so that we can actually truly meet some of the recommendations and some of the objectives of the bill, which is to streamline the process.

The third thing I would say is that I have heard from one of the stakeholders who has examined this bill some concern that we appear to be losing one of our appeal processes, the appeal that you would normally have to the Environmental Appeals Board. This stakeholder had told me that there are in the current situation 12 per year that do take place. It's very important to be able to have an appeal. He gave the example that just this year this appeal board had heard a decision regarding a rancher who had some damage done to their dugout or their water well as a result of some coal development activity. So these are very serious issues. If a decision has been made by a regulator and there does need to be an additional appeal process, you don't want to take away that additional avenue for appeal.

Now, I do recognize that the Court of Appeal remains the ultimate court of adjudication, but part of what we're trying to do here is to create a bunch of quasi-judicial mechanisms so that we can avoid the costly process of going through the judicial courts, so that we can avoid the costly process of forcing our landowners to go through that as well. Let's just make sure that we preserve all of the protections for these kinds of appeals in the event that there is a dispute. Once again, with this appeal board only hearing about 12 cases per year, it does not strike me that this is the area that our energy companies are complaining about. If we can restore and preserve this appeal process, I can tell you that it will go an awfully long way to making sure that our landowner stakeholders have a level of comfort with this legislation.

The other concerns that I have involve the makeup and the selection of the board. The board as it's prescribed in the legislation is going to be at least a three-member board. It could be more, but that does appear to be at the discretion of the minister. All three members of this board will be appointed by the minister. I think that we can go beyond what we have done in the past. I think part of the issue that we're seeing here is this concern: do we have the right people representing all of the interests when we're bringing together a board like this to examine a variety of different stakeholder concerns and to be able to balance them? I think the government is setting itself up for major push-back from certain stakeholders unless we look at a different model for how we select this board.

One of the things I would put out there as something that we could consider looking at is the way in which we, for instance, put together an airport authority board. On an airport authority board you often will have a couple of nominees represented by the city council, a couple of others who are represented by a county council, a couple of others who are represented by industry. I would say that that kind of process could potentially work here to alleviate some of the concerns of some of the stakeholders about having all of the cards stacked in the minister's office.

It could well be that we decide to go for a seven member board. Two of them could be former ERCB employees, as is suggested by the regulation. Two of them could be nominees by industry. Ultimately, the minister could make the appointment decision. But if you're asking CAPP, and you're asking SEPAC, and you're asking PSAC and others who they may think would be representative of their interests, maybe we have a nominee process so they can put forward two names. Maybe you also then have a nominee process for two landowner representatives on the board, so you can ask the Alberta Beef Producers, you can ask the Western Stock Growers' Association, you can ask those who are involved in the various surface rights organizations. And since we need an odd number, maybe you also get one from the environmental community. Maybe you ask CPAWS or you ask others who are involved in the Sierra Club for a nominee to represent that environmental interest.

Again, the decisions would ultimately be made by cabinet, but at least you would be reaching out to the various stakeholders and they would have some sense that this process has some credibility among all and is giving due consideration to all of the various stakeholders who are impacted by this legislation. I think the makeup and selection of the board in this legislation as it's written is not going to pass muster with our stakeholders in the landowner community and the environmental community.

I think that we've got to be working toward something that will be embraced by all of the stakeholders who are impacted because we also have another problem in that all of the hearing commissioners are also appointed by the minister. Again, there doesn't seem to be any consideration for how we might be able to balance between those competing interests, between those stakeholders who have different perspectives and different concerns. Of course, we want people on there who understand the energy sector, but we also want those who understand the impact on the environment, and we also want those who understand the impact on landowners and all of the various issues that landowners face when development takes place on their property.

The main concern that we do have, though, is that the intense centralization tendency that we saw in Bill 36, that we saw in Bill 19, and that we saw in Bill 50 appears very much to be paralleled in this legislation. As I was reading along, I was becoming more and more concerned about all of the ways in which cabinet may do this, and cabinet may do that, and cabinet may do the other. But I think the real kicker comes when you get to section 68. In section 68(1) it says: "The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make rules in respect of any matter for which the Regulator may make rules under this Act or any other enactment." That seems pretty broad to me. If you look at subsection (2): "A rule made under this section prevails over any rule that is made or amended by the Regulator with which it conflicts or is inconsistent to the extent of the conflict or inconsistency."

So we get back to the same kind of problem that we had before, that if the cabinet, the minister doesn't like what the regulator does, they can interfere and start meddling and, basically, throw out anything that the regulator has said. So what's the point of having a statute to be able to give certainly to industry if you continue to have cabinet have these wide-ranging powers in which they can override a regulator's decision? This is not idle because when you look at how this happened in the past with transmission lines in the early 2000s, when the regulator came back and said, "If you're going to build a bunch of transmission lines, you need to split the cost between the generators of power and the consumers of power 50-50," that was overridden by the minister saying: "To heck with that. We're going to put all of the cost on the ratepayer." And we've had nothing but problems ever since.

That is the reason why you want to preserve the integrity of the regulator. It's the reason why if you're going to have a bill that purports to create an environment of regulatory certainty, you can't have clauses like that in the legislation.

I'll just say one more that sort of left me scratching my head because, again, it just seems so incredibly broad that I have to wonder what the minister has in mind with it. It's section 78 where it says:

The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations . . .

- (k) respecting any other matter or thing that the Lieutenant Governor in Council considers necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act.

Now, I don't know what the legal definition of "thing" is, but I have to say that when I see that kind of language, it does strike me as a catch-all to say: let's give the minister carte blanche to do anything at any time regardless of what is said in the statute. That's what we're trying to get away from here. We're trying to get a process in place where stakeholders can have confidence, not just the stakeholders who are going to be impacted by having development on their land but also the stakeholders who are impacted by these decisions.

We recognize that an arbitrary decision by cabinet could be just as damaging to landowners as it can be to energy companies. We need look no further than the sustainable resources minister's lower Athabasca regional plan where, with the stroke of a pen, the government is able to wipe out 18 oil sands leases. Who knows what the compensation is going to be for that? Who knows whether they're going to get full compensation for all of their investment and all of their projected investment? This is why having that kind of arbitrary power in the hands of cabinet does nothing to create an environment of certainty, not for landowners, not for environmental activists, and certainly not for the energy industry which this bill purports to be responding to.

With that, Madam Speaker, as I said when I began, we are hopeful that we will be able to support this legislation. As you can see, we have some significant concerns with key elements of this bill, but we think it's fixable. We think if we go through a process and we do it properly and we do it with good faith and we recognize that all of us in this Chamber are actually trying to get the very best legislation so that the government doesn't face the kind of landowner activism that they've faced over the previous two and a half years or the kind of backlash that they got from the industry over the previous two and a half years – we've got to take the time to do this right.

Having legislation that is this many pages long dumped on the opposition benches, forced through its various readings within a matter of weeks, without giving us time to go through, talk with our stakeholders, talk with those who are giving us legal advice to be able to make appropriate amendments and recommendations, I think will lead us down the same path that we went before with Bill 19, Bill 36, Bill 50. I would implore the minister to be open-minded about slowing this down so that we can do the proper consultation, so that we can get it right, so that we can go forward with the government and the Official Opposition saying: "Yeah. This is a good piece of legislation. This is a piece of legislation that we can support, and this is legislation that we think all stakeholders can support."

As it is written right now, I would not be able to go out and say that. But we have a number of hours ahead of us. We have a number of speakers ahead of us. I do hope that the government members listen to the debate of my fellow opposition members here. I know everybody has an awful lot to say on this bill. I know that our caucus is generally wanting to support the intention of the bill. We do think that it is salvageable, but we do think as well that significant improvements are needed to take this bill to the end where it is intended. And I do hope that the government will work with us to get there for the benefit of all Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you for your comments, hon. member.

I will now recognize the Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Barnes: I have a question under 29(2)(a).

The Acting Speaker: No. I'm sorry. Standing Order 29(2)(a) does not apply.

So the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, please.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to thank the hon. Energy minister for taking time to speak to me about this bill since he has introduced it. Overall Bill 2 looks to be on the right track. Wildrose supports cutting red tape. This bill aims to reduce some of the red tape faced by industry to encourage economic growth without sacrificing environmental targets. I can support that aspect of this bill.

It's worth pointing out that the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers supports this bill, in particular the changes which will provide clear policy guidelines to the regulator, simplified regulator access for all parties, and the right level of regulatory review. CAPP notes that the regulatory enhancement project will create a more efficient regulatory system to help build investor confidence, bring more investment, and create jobs in Alberta. I agree with CAPP that Alberta should work with our neighbouring provinces to advance policy and regulatory improvements and work with the federal government to reduce any duplication.

Bill 2 aims to improve the regulatory process, which has become labour intensive, cumbersome, and has reduced Alberta's competitiveness in the global economy. The province of Saskatchewan has recently taken steps to increase its competitiveness and has been quite successful in encouraging investment because of its reduction of red tape. There have also been other issues with this province's model, that I will mention later. I applaud the initiative taken here to tackle the problem head-on and, hopefully, maintain the momentum to restore Alberta's competitiveness.

While Bill 2 appears to be a step in the right direction in encouraging this competitiveness, I have a few reservations I hope the government will address before this bill gets to final reading. I would need to see some changes before I could fully support this bill. First, the bill appears to centralize power in a similar fashion to former bills 19, 50, and 36. For instance, Bill 2 repeals landowners' section 26 standing rights under the Energy Resources Conservation Act and does not replace those rights with anything substantive. An easy remedy for this absence is to reinstate the section 26 rights into this new bill.

Second, Bill 2 removes the rights of landowners to appeal decisions under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act and the Water Act relating to energy projects to the Environmental Appeals Board. What we see instead is a centralizing of these current appeals mechanisms under a single regulatory board. This board makes its own rules. For someone who may want to appeal the decision that has been made, appealing to the same board that made the decision might seem like a fruitless activity. Under current legislation appeals are made to the Environmental Appeals Board, but landowners won't have that option under this current bill.

A lot of the issues with landowners may be handled if their concerns are addressed from the start. They need to be brought into the planning stages of projects from the beginning so they can have input or, at the least, notification of where they will be impacted. I don't see anything in this bill that shows where landowners are engaged in the approval and planning process. The government should reconsider the mechanics of this bill to ensure landowners' rights are protected so that we don't have the same uproar that followed the Land Stewardship Act. There needs to be an independent appeal process to give Albertans confidence that their traditional appeal rights are not being taken away.

Now, just to point out the importance of getting it right, I'd like to relay an example. In Saskatchewan the government created Enterprise Saskatchewan, which was supposed to be the new model for economic development. According to some industry groups it has been nothing short of a disaster. The government hired someone who didn't fit the bill, and it severely limited the effectiveness of this initiative. While the Saskatchewan government had good intentions, it resulted in a series of administrative nightmares. The make-or-break of this bill will be its execution. It's important that legislation is right, or the execution is going to be off, and it will not result in the intended conclusion and could instead result in negative consequences for industry and landowners.

One of the issues is the makeup of the board of directors for the new regulator and how these directors are appointed. Getting the right people on this board is paramount. The government should consider defining the composition of this board to reflect the diverse makeup of Alberta. The board of directors should include someone with a property rights background, someone with an environmental background, and, of course, someone with oil and gas experience. Furthermore, this board should be appointed by an all-party committee of the Legislature. Bill 2 should get rid of the provision where the minister appoints this board to prevent any perception that this is a politically appointed board or that it is being done as a patronage appointment. Such perceptions would limit the effectiveness of the regulator and could have negative consequences for the regulator to accomplish its objectives.

Next, a few sections in Bill 2 empower the Lieutenant Governor in Council and the minister with far too much power. We saw how unpopular this was in former bills 19, 36, and 50. In Bill 2 section 68 opens the door for another Bill 19, Bill 36, or Bill 50 disaster by allowing the minister and cabinet to rewrite rules to expedite things that wouldn't make it through the standard regulatory process. As written, too much discretionary power is given to the Minister of Energy, the cabinet as well as the regulator.

On a small but important note, the minister's powers could also be curtailed so as to exclude the right to request personal information on applicants. Currently Bill 2 gives the minister the right to request personal information. It's not clear why the minister would be that hands-on, asking for this information. I would like to hear the minister's explanation for this and to elaborate on whether the FOIP Act would limit him in any way concerning privacy. At any rate, the regulator should not have the minister as a back-seat driver, and applicants shouldn't have to fear ministerial interference.

Sections 42 and 43 give the regulator power to review its own decision after the fact without a hearing. This clause seems to open the door to creating a level of uncertainty as it will deem any decision made as not final. That could be changed on the whims of the regulator. When a company gets approval, they should have certainty that they can go ahead. When a landowner has assurances concerning their land, they should also feel that they can stop worrying. The regulator shouldn't be making all of its own rules, reviewing its own decisions, and changing its mind whenever it wants.

Madam Speaker, overall, the intention of Bill 2 is good, but there remain several concerns, as outlined here and by my colleagues, which need to be addressed before receiving final reading. Bill 2 as currently written gives the Energy minister and the cabinet too much power in determining the makeup of the board. It risks not reflecting the diverse makeup of Alberta with property rights, environment, and industry adequately represented.

Bill 2 eliminates traditional means of appeal for no good reason. The right to an independent appeal must be reinstated, whether that is through the Environmental Appeals Board or a different independent body. The regulator must not be its own regulator. It should receive clear direction from government and act independently but not have the powers to define its own mandate or to retroactively review cases where a decision has already been determined. That should be the job of an independent appeal group.

Bill 2, if passed, will be judged on its implementation and the results of the work of the new regulator. It's important to get this right the first time rather than face a prolonged battle with landowners and industry and end up amending it a few years down the line. I look forward to working with the hon. Energy minister to get it right the first time.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Now Standing Order 29(2)(a) kicks in. The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. To the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. I have a constituent in Cypress-Medicine Hat who for seven or eight years has had trouble with the appeal process and getting answers on removal of or compensation for orphaned wells. I'm wondering if you're further concerned about the appeal process with this and if you could touch more on what your main concern with this bill is, please.

Mr. Hale: Well, certainly, Madam Speaker. Orphaned wells are a huge concern. There is no definite timeline, if a well is abandoned, until it is reclaimed. Our hope is that this bill will address those concerns and allow landowners to have a set timeline for when orphaned wells will be looked after, when wells that have been abandoned are reclaimed and the reclamation certificate can be handed over.

There's too much indecision in the way that landowners are affected. I've got a couple of really good examples of landowner issues, not having the right appeal process. For the oil company I was working for, we were drilling a well adjacent to one landowner's land. He was not happy with what was going on. He went to the company. He went to the ERCB. He wasn't satisfied with the way issues were being handled, so one day he decided to take matters into his own hands. A surveyor that came to talk to him about a lease application that we were recommending on his land took the brunt of it and ended up bent over the back of a truck.

Landowners are very, very protective of their land. They are excellent stewards of the land. Nobody knows how to maintain the land better than they do. They have so much invested in the land. That's why we are very concerned that the property rights aren't enshrined in this bill. If we can get that section put back in to allow them an appeal process – so the regulator does not have the option of hearing an appeal or not – if it goes through an independent body, then that landowner will feel like he has a place to go. At this point with this bill he doesn't. That's our intent. I'm hoping to work with the hon. Energy minister in ensuring that landowners will be satisfied that if they have concerns, they will be looked after.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

We still have a few minutes under Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any other comments or questions for the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to my colleague and fellow member. I was wondering if the member could comment on, in particular, landowner frustration and how that is created by the way we design some of these pieces of legislation.

Mr. Hale: Well, I think that mainly it's created because the landowners have no input into the formation of these bills and legislation. That's why I recommended in here that the board of this new regulator have somebody with property rights experience, somebody with environmental experience, and someone with oil and gas experience so that they have a voice from the start. Also, I mentioned in here that they need to be brought into the process, that when these oil companies and pipelines and mines and facilities are getting built, they are made aware of what is going on from the start, if it's on their land or it's adjacent to them, so that they have some sort of an input process in the determination of what is going to happen. They need to be well informed.

I mean, communication is of the utmost. If they don't know what's happening and all of a sudden they see right across the road from them a drilling rig that pulls in or, you know, some sort of company that is going to build a big structure that they don't know about, of course they're going to be angry. They're used to being left alone out on the prairie. Many times when we were working – you know, we'd have a thousand-well project we were proposing – we'd pull in. We would call the landowners in. We would say: "Okay. This is what we're looking at in a year, in two years. We want your input. We want to know what you think."

That's what the companies really need to do, and that's what this regulator needs to do. Start at the ground level. Bring in the landowners. Get their input. Show them what's going to happen. If they don't like it, you know, then it's easier to make the changes at the start than when you're halfway done a project. They need to be brought in from the start. Many of the oil companies that I've been involved with really worry about the landowners.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my privilege to stand up and speak on Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act. It's also an honour for me to be following the Leader of the Official Opposition and my colleague sitting next to me, who is the Energy critic. Then up pops the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

As I've indicated in this House before, one of the things that I enjoy the most about being a member of the Official Opposition is the incredible learning curve that we have. I've also spoken in this House prior in regard to the incredible respect I had when I was a member of the government for the opposition having the ability to get up and speak so eloquently over and over and over again about every piece of legislation and the knowledge that the members seemed to have on every bill.

Well, I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that I'm still learning on this particular bill. We had a robust discussion meeting I think it was two days ago – with the long hours we've been putting in, they sort of all go into the same day – listening to my colleagues talk about their concerns on this bill. I am an urban MLA. I have a great deal of respect for industry, the people in my riding, and my riding has a lot of oil and gas people. I had breakfast, actually, on Sunday, when I was at a constituency brunch, with probably two of my biggest supporters, both presidents of oil and gas companies.

I've also mentioned in the House my son who's in the oil and gas business, a driller. He's always kept me informed on the oil and gas side, and I was very, very proud that my son was very prominently in Licence to Drill. That was a very enlightening movie for me to watch over a series in six parts about all of the things that go on on the oil and gas side of the business: all of the costs, all of the money that goes into the oil and gas business, and some of the things that they do on the rig that I consider as a mom quite dangerous. I wasn't quite sure whether I wanted to watch this movie to the very end, especially when I saw my son bringing in a helicopter, and he goes sliding across the ice because of the cold, the damp, the wetness, and some of the things that are happening on that particular rig.

I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that the bill, there is no question, has been a response to the concerns of the oil and gas industry that the current regulatory regime in Alberta is a hindrance to growth. There's no question that we know that, and there's no question that we know that the regulatory process that we put our industry people through in the oil and gas business is so cumbersome. I see what's happening in Saskatchewan and B.C., not to mention in the U.S. I think that when we go back in history, the task force at that particular time, that was led by the now minister of environment, was formed to put together some suggestions, some recommendations on how to improve the industry.

I also am in receipt, obviously, of a memo from CAPP, which everybody is aware of. The Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers in a news conference in Calgary spoke very eloquently about the implementation of the regulatory enhancement project in creating a single provincial regulator, that they support the bill and they support the hon. Minister of Energy and, obviously, the hon. minister of environment, and about them creating that single regulator so that the oil industry has one-window shopping, I guess, if we can call it that. I don't have a problem with that. I think that's a huge asset to the oil and gas industry, that one-window approach. They talk about the clear policy guidelines to the regulator and the simplified regulator access for all parties and the right level of regulatory review, based on the projects.

The Responsible Energy Development Act talks about the purpose of the legislation, to create an energy regulator, and talks about efficiency, safety, and the environmentally responsible development of the energy resources. It talks about the single regulatory process. What is interesting, after sitting down and listening to my colleagues, is that I look at it from an industry perspective, and all of a sudden I'm listening to my colleagues about the balancing act of a landowner.

That takes me back to when there was a small caucus, previous to the last election, of four and the incredible fight that we were putting up with the government in regard to some of the legislation that was before us – I think it was bills 19, 36, and 50 if I'm right – and how we were talking about landowners' rights. At that particular time we faced a lot of criticism from the government.

Being the urban MLA, I always find it interesting – and it's no different today than it was back then – that when I start hearing from people in the rural areas, something is amiss. That starts putting my radar up, and I'm thinking: okay; we've got a problem. At that particular time the PCs, the government at that particular time, had a lot of rural members. When I started talking to some of the people that were calling me, I said, "Well, you know I'm not your MLA." They said: "Yeah. We know that, but our MLA isn't listening."

So my little spidey senses start going up, and I'm starting to think: well, we have a problem. There's no question that there was a problem. We've got Bill 50 and – I can't even remember the name of the bill now that's before us – I think it's Bill 8 that we're going to be dealing with. One of the things that I'm concerned about, again, is that the landowners or the rural owners in this province are starting to send their messages of concern, and I'm thinking: "Oh, my gosh, are we going to have the same problems that we had previously where we're not respecting the rights of the landowner?"

I know – and I've spoken about it – that the industry supports this bill, and I don't think the industry has any intention of not respecting landowners' rights. There's no question. But I think it has to be very clear in the legislation for both parties, and I think it has to be very clear in the legislation for both parties about the respect for both parties.

I have had some interesting conversations with my leader, whom I have a great deal of respect for. I listened very intently to her speech. It's interesting. As busy as she is, I've been watching her over the last two days go over the bill word for word and line for line to make sure that when she speaks, she incorporates not only everything that she has heard but that she has picked up on the bill. I think that's important, and that's what every member in this Wildrose caucus is doing in their critic position. They are not only speaking for themselves as a critic, but they are also speaking on behalf of the constituents that they're representing. They're also speaking a lot of times on our behalf, and they're educating us in regard to what they think is important in the bill and what isn't.

The leader and I had a good conversation about balancing the needs of industry and, obviously, the needs of the landowner. She assured me that she would make sure that she covered on both halves the concerns that she's heard from the industry and the concerns that she's heard from the landowners.

One of the other things that I found was very interesting when I was listening to the leader is her bringing up her concerns about the aboriginal issues. I think that's sometimes one of our forgotten peoples. I've always had a deep love for the aboriginal people. I was blessed when I was the minister of children's services to receive a Blackfoot name, which is probably, there is no question, one of the biggest highs in my political life, and you know, Madam Speaker, we have lots of highs in politics. I was deeply appreciative. To go through that process of getting an aboriginal name – I don't know if you have a name – is deeply honouring.

Mr. Dorward: What's your name?

Mrs. Forsyth: As soon as you asked, I went: I'll get it to you. It's Healing Woman. I know that. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar asked me my Blackfoot name. I had it, and as soon as he said it, it went like this. I know it's Healing Woman in English, and I promise I'll get that to him. I don't want to make a mistake because, as I said, it's very honourable.

I noticed when the leader, the Member for Highwood, was talking that even CAPP has recommended that they want to continue to encourage federal-provincial co-ordination of regulatory reform initiatives and encourage both levels of government to make progress in clarifying expectations of project proponents regarding aboriginal consultation.

Now that's very key. As a former minister – and you were a minister also previously – you know the importance of going to FPTs, and you know the importance of attending FPTs, that you bring the issues from the province to the federal-provincial-territorial meetings.

I'm looking at what CAPP has to say, and there obviously are concerns about some of the aboriginal consultations in this particular province on the oil and gas and the respect for – I guess we'll add three parties – the industry, the landowners, and, obviously, our aboriginal people.

I am one of those MLAs, as everybody else here is, who knows why I'm elected and understands why I am elected. I think one of the number one priorities for all elected people in this Legislature is to learn why they have two ears and one mouth. I think that was given to us for a reason, and I was taught very early in life by my dad, who's no longer here, why I have two ears and one mouth. I guess I was naughty one day and thought maybe he should tell me why I was blessed with two ears, and of course everyone knows it's to listen more than you speak.

I am anxious and encouraged to listen not only to my colleagues – I know many of them want to talk on this because it's important – but to the government and to hear what the government members have to say. I've noticed, Madam Speaker, that it hasn't changed much since I left on January 4, 2010, because I don't see many members standing up and speaking on behalf of their constituents on a piece of legislation. I indicated the role of an MLA at the national press conference when I crossed the floor.

I'm going to yet again encourage members. On every piece of legislation that we're talking about that's going to be going through this Legislature, it would be nice to be able to hear what they have to say, even if it's two minutes or five minutes, on behalf of their constituents, that they're fully supportive of this bill. I'm sure many of them can stand up on behalf of this from an industry perspective. I'm not so sure the rural guys can stand up as eloquently and talk about how their constituents feel when there's that landowner issue that needs to be discussed. I imagine both the leader and my colleague... [Mrs. Forsyth's speaking time expired]

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) we have five minutes for comments and questions. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, I used to be with the PCs. I remember when I was the VP of policy, when they were ramming through some of this legislation, Bill 50, I chaired a meeting, and they rushed in MLAs and other people to just force the vote. The grassroots people weren't consulted. Here we have, again, a 79-page document with pretty dense legalese in it. You being a former minister, I guess I just have a question: is the process getting better? Do you have healthy legislation when you have this much legislation being rammed through in three evening sessions and so forth, or is there a more methodical approach that should be used?

Mrs. Forsyth: That's a very interesting question, and I'm actually pleased to be able to answer that. One of the interesting things that I think my new colleagues are learning and that I'm starting to hear about is how quickly bills are tabled in the Legislature, how quickly we have to get to second reading, how quickly we have to go to committee, and how quickly we have to go to third reading. I don't know what the answer is, but I think there has to be an answer about a process on a bill and how you debate that bill and how you bring forward recommendations over and over and over again.

I will do this research sometime. I've seen this government table legislation even just in the two and three-quarter years that I've been here, and they've not proclaimed it. I can't even imagine how many bills that have been passed in this Legislature – the Alberta Health Act comes to me immediately because it was a number one bill in this Legislature, and it hasn't been proclaimed. There is a ton of legislation that has been passed in this Legislature that hasn't been proclaimed. We're also seeing bills that have been rushed through second reading, rushed through committee, rushed through third. The LG comes in here, proclaims the bill, gives it proclamation, and it's back in the following sitting being either rescinded or something like that.

I'm sure that the government has some ideas. After all, they're the government. They're the government that claims that they listen and consult Albertans and they've got it right. I would think that's maybe something that we can discuss as a caucus. The Premier has said that she's open, she's accountable, and she's transparent and has repeated that over and over and over again. She also wants to talk about how government is run in a different way. That kind of opens up the door so that we as the Official Opposition, not only ourselves but the Liberals and the NDP, can have the opportunity to offer the Premier some advice, whether it's through Members' Services or one of the other committees, on how we can make this process a little easier on everybody so we're not sitting until I think it was a quarter to 1 last night for some of our people. I know the leader and I left at a quarter to 12, and we still hadn't finished the Education Act.

Madam Speaker, I think that's a role that the government can do. The government House leaders can certainly start negotiations, the Premier and the Leader of the Official Opposition, I'm sure. I know my leader is a very bright woman, that she would be able to come up with some great ideas on how to get this legislation through at a much easier pace where we're not sitting 16, 18 hours a day.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any other members who wish to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Drumheller – no. Wait a second. Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Both are nice places, but home is Cardston-Taber-Warner.

I appreciate the opportunity to rise and to ask the speaker a question, realizing that she's in almost a kind of a conflict of interest situation in the sense that, as you correctly identified and I understand it, many of your supporters in an urban riding are oil companies and industry people. What prompted you to rise and speak to this issue of the rights of the rest of Albertans, and how are you going to handle that?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, another good question. I think it's about listening. It's about listening to what your colleagues have to say, what they're bringing forward as far as concerns about what they're hearing. I think that's what makes this province successful, if you start not only taking what's happening in your riding but what's important to other people in their ridings. Let me give you an example: what happened in Strathmore-Brooks with the XL Foods plant. I can still get my meat at the grocery store, but to hear his concerns opens it up to a whole... [The time limit for questions and comments expired]

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a privilege to be able to rise and speak on second reading of the Responsible Energy Development Act. I've had a chance to go through the bill, not in as much detail as I would like, but I do have some thoughts, and some red flags have appeared to me. Hopefully, the minister will be able to assuage my concerns on some of the questions that I will bring up as pointed questions, or hopefully he can fill in the blanks for me as to what the process will be down the line. This is a very important bill not only for energy companies but for all people of this province because there's no doubt that moving to a single regulator has implications.

When we do our energy development acts or anything related to the energy industry, we should always take a pause back, and we should look at this not only as to whether industry has a perspective. We have Joe and Jane Albertan who have a perspective. We have people intricately connected to the environmental movement that have a perspective. We have landowners that have a perspective. There are a whole host of competing interests here in this province, in fact I would suggest throughout the world, in our development of our oil and gas resources and what the correct process is to see projects go through and what the different cleavage points are, what the different challenges are, and what the correct balance is on how we're going to balance our environmental responsibilities as well as look after our economic interests.

It's at that point where we look at – there is a continuing challenge for Alberta in the global sphere in that we need to create a responsible energy development right here at home. We need to continue to have a social licence to produce our energy products and to have our oil sands run correctly and efficiently and to the highest environmental standards. I honestly believe that Alberta should be leading the way in this regard.

We have tremendous challenges facing us. In my view, carbon is a serious issue. We should do our best to maintain a reasonable balance in our development as well as what we're doing to the environment. In my view, things are going to get harder, not easier, in this regard. We'll have continued challenges from the rest of the world. I would think it would be in our best interests, given the nature of our economy and the nature of our reliance on nonrenewable resources, not only to pay today's bills but hopefully with some work on the fiscal structure save some of this one-time resource for future generations to be extra vigilant on the environmental side.

I would say it should be a goal of this Legislature to create some of the most forward-thinking and – I don't want to use the word "punitive" because that's not the correct word – environmentally supportive legislation out there. It would give us a chance to look at the rest of the world and say: "No, we are doing it better than anyone else. No, we do have the most progressive legislation. No, we're ahead of the curve on this. So don't look at Alberta as being a laggard on this; look at us as being a leader." I think we should look at that in all of our bills and our acts that are coming in on the energy front. We need to protect what is ours by doing what is right on the social responsibility side. I think if we do that, business will take care of itself.

If I look at this act, again, back to what I said at the beginning, it's a balance of all sorts of perspectives, whether these perspectives are having a chance to be heard, a chance for their opinions, their expertise, their challenges, whether it's with drilling policy and/or land policy. I believe this can be done through a one-window shop, and I'm not so certain that it has been at this time. Maybe the minister can fill in the blanks.

If I can start with some of the questions or at least things I would hope the minister will enlighten me on, we seem to have changed the legislation somewhat from where we were before under the ERCB and other acts, as to who could apply and who had standing and who had an ability to bring thoughts and ideas to the review, to where it is today. You see one change in the legislation, and it says that only people who are directly and adversely affected can make complaints to the new regulator. Clearly, this has implications to environmental groups, other organizations that wish to intervene or bring knowledge to an application. This seems to be – although it may be convenient and it may in fact speed things up, it doesn't necessarily say to me that we're looking to have a broader view of what in fact is happening.

This is really highly concerning. The old act had an ability to look at the broader public interest. The public interest does have a conception, and it is a loose conception as to what that might be. It could look at all factors. This has been removed since the previous legislation. I find that concerning. The public interest is trying to look at all things that are important to this great province, not only the air, the water, the land, the carbon, and the like but also our economic best interests. It's balancing these things out. All those things make up the public interest. It's tough to define exactly what the public interest is, but it includes a whole host of factors, and now this has been removed from the legislation. This gives me concern.

Maybe there is another forum or a fashion where the public interest can be discussed, but that gives me concern. Maybe the minister can inform me as to why the public interest component of this was taken out. Maybe there is another forum or mechanism within the act where public interest can be discussed or more people can take part. Nevertheless, it doesn't appear that that is in there.

A direct question to that is: why would the new regulator not be able to consider the broad interests of all Albertans in the public interest and now must only consider the narrow interests of those directly affected? Although that may speed things along, which is of course what we want to do in any application, we don't want to cut corners, and we may be cutting corners by using some of this language in the act. It may be convenient to keep people from having a forum to discuss things.

I note the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre spoke very passionately about people being cut out of the process. I'm certain that he wouldn't want that to happen as it did in the cases that we saw in 2007 when his group was making applications on what was happening in the transmission line applications. I see some correlations there as to what may happen, and I hope the minister can enlighten me or tell me where I'm missing the pieces that will be available to people to do that.

We also see that a large amount of the details of this will be contained in regulation. Much of the bill is yet to be developed. Only 25 to 50 per cent of the rules are in this new legislation. This leaves to me many questions as to how this will actually work and why these rules are in regulation and not in legislation. I've said this before: what the large print giveth in the actual act, the small print can taketh away in the regulation. It concerns me when we're moving the bulk or at least up to 50 per cent of this act into regulation. It leaves a lot of wiggle room where the ministers or other bodies could have a great deal of influence, and then all of a sudden by ministerial order these regulations are changed, different rules are applied, and not really everyone has an opportunity to understand what those changes are.

Obviously, this was brought up by my colleagues from the Wildrose. How will landowners be consulted on projects that are on adjacent lands? What about hearing costs? What about the rules for how the regulator will determine what is noncompliant? This is an important one. You know, we talk about noncompliance of organizations who don't follow the rules. There's no determination of what noncompliance is. There's no determination of what the penalties are for noncompliance. Does it simply mean a company will get, "Oh, you've got a noncompliance sticker beside you," but continue doing business? What does noncompliance mean? What does actually happen to an organization that is found in noncompliance? I have no direction as to what noncompliance is in the provision of registered surface agreements. That gives me concern. If I don't know what noncompliance is, how can it be enforced?

There also seems to be some lack of independence on this. Section 67(1) allows the ministers of Energy and Environment to set priorities as well as guidelines. The government can determine whether the regulator is being compliant with government policy, okay? So does government policy, then, change the actual rules that are being enforced by the regulator? Can government policy of the day, whatever that is, simply change the rules on the fly, lessen or strengthen regulations that people have made, and the like?

Furthermore, the regulator has to turn over any documents to the minister upon request. This appears to have privacy implications. It doesn't seem to me to create the independent arm's-length organization that we're looking for. Those things are concerning to me.

If I can continue to go on on some of these things, in particular this doesn't appear to be an independent regulator. The new regulator appears to be simply another arm of the government. Section 67(1) of Bill 2 provides that the ministers of Energy and Environment and SRD can tell the new regulator what its priorities should be, what guidelines, programs, policies it should follow, and can ensure the work of the new regulator is consistent with the work of the government. Maybe that's good, but it also gives me alarm bells. How independent is this new organization? To me, from the reading of it, not that independent. It causes me concern.

Section 67(2) provides that the new regulator has to do what it's told by the ministers. Section 16(1) also provides that the new regulator has to give these ministers any record or piece of information they want, including personal information. [Mr. Hehr's speaking time expired] Done already?

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) are there any members that would like to question or comment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you, hon. member, for your speech on this bill. I was curious. You mentioned that you are looking to include progressive environmental policy in all legislation. I'm wondering if you could expand on that concept, please.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I'm not sure if I can expand on that. What I can talk about is a broad concept of what I think would be an energy leader. A province such as ours has much vested in the success of our oil and gas industry. In my view, Alberta's immediate prospects as well as many of our future prospects, at least for the next 50 years, are directly tied to this industry and how it works, how it operates. We all know we rely on the $12 billion we currently have coming into the public purse from royalties. We spend it all on paying today's bills. Clearly, that is important to us, to seemingly keep operations going on a day-to-day basis.

I'm also not so sure how Alberta will be able to transition from an oil and gas industry, so we should try to keep it going as long as possible. I think we happen to be in the best business at the best time. People pay $100 for a barrel of oil. Allegedly there's some money in this business, Madam Speaker. That's a good thing. We're in the right place at the right time. But to ensure that we have that social licence, we should have the best environmental standards in the world, okay? This has a business component, too, not just an environmental component. We should do the right thing in this regard, you know, to not only look after our air, our land, our water but, as I mentioned earlier, try to reduce our carbon footprint.

By adopting legislation that is leading the world, and I mean this on all fronts, it will protect our industry. It will give us that social licence. I think, over the course of the last five years, we've had a difficult public perception. Rightly or wrongly – I'm not saying that it all has been right – it has been heaped on Alberta. By going forward in that new, bold direction of leading the world in this type of legislation, I think it will be a benefit to this great province and will allow us to have our social licence longer and extend the life of our industry.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

There are still a few minutes left. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I heard your comments, and you mentioned that in the act there was nowhere that stated that public interest should be included in the legislation. I noticed that as well. Every single reference was taken out. I think some of the naysayers may say that public interest is too broad, and you have to look at social and environmental factors. But, of course, there is loads, decades of jurisprudence. Do you have any comments on why they may have taken public interest out of this legislation?

Mr. Hehr: Public interest is difficult to deal with. That's why, okay? It's not easy to incorporate public interest into one regulatory system like this. I think it can be done, but by no means is it easy. If you want to I'm not saying appease the gas industry – but you understand that there are challenges there. I think they've cut a few corners here. I think this can be done with a public interest component, and I don't know if we've worked as hard as we can to get that in.

The reason why it's out, in my view – maybe the minister can enlighten me – is because it's hard. It's really hard to get what is in the public interest. We all discuss the public interest in here, and we can't come to a handle on it. So, you know, that's a difficult thing to have in a regulatory body. But on a position of allowing people to have an opportunity to be heard, which is half the battle in this business, you give people an opportunity to be heard, then they feel better. They feel they at least have not had their rights trampled on, they've been part of the process, and hopefully they learned something: why their view isn't the only view out there and how it's a balance.

I thank you for that question.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Being as there are only five seconds left, I think we'll move on to the next speaker. The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. To my colleagues across the aisle in this honourable Assembly: the reason I am here is because of bills like this, and if you want to get rid of me, you've just got to get it right.

An Hon. Member: We'd like to.

Mr. Anglin: I know you'd like to. I am offering you the chance. I will gladly take that offer up. But I will tell you this in good humour: I made life difficult for some of the members here in rural areas. Some of those elections were close, and they were because of bills like this.

The reality is this. Time and time again this government has started out on a track to do something good. I believe the intentions were well meaning and in good faith. I don't doubt that. But time and time again they've not been able to look at the results of what they've done and say: "Wait a minute. We need to make adjustments."

For me it started with something called Bill 46, the Alberta Utilities Commission Act. In that act, which created a new commission very much like this – it's right in line with this – what happened was that there were a few things that jumped off the pages that never got resolved. In that act they had one provision that said that a property owner was not allowed the right to be represented by legal counsel. It's still in the act.

We move forward and we go into these other acts, particularly the Land Assembly Project Area Act, which, thank you very much, this former government, I guess the last sitting of the Legislature, did make some changes to before I got elected. They didn't make all the changes that were asked for, but there was an attempt. But the Land Stewardship Act – some of you may know it, some of you may not realize – was the demise of many PC members. That still stands in many ways. We could argue whether it's real or imaginary, but the fact remains that, when taken out in the public and allowing the public to take a look at what the law says, the public is smart enough to make up their own mind. It was a very good representative of the former government that went out to try to defend that, who is no longer here because of that bill.

The point I'm trying to make with regard to this bill is quite simple. Industry would like to see a streamlined regulator. I agree with it. I can tell you this: landowners agree with it. We do. I can speak for them in many ways because they asked me, and they tell me to take their message here. They want a streamlined regulator. The only thing they really want in addition to that is the balance that a streamlined regulator should have, that they would protect the rights of landowners, protect the rights of farmers, and protect the rights of small businesses at the same time that we get rid of those regulations that cause all this backed-up approval process for no good reason.

I will tell you this. It gets offensive sometimes when I get the criticism that landowners caused the problem. Under the Alberta Utilities Commission Act, when we were going to hearings – I have a lot of experience at hearings – it's quite interesting that industry a lot of times is their own worst enemy in dealing with these regulations. Government doesn't really help very well at all, mainly because it backs itself into a corner with the regulations.

Let me give you an example. When we went to a hearing dealing with the transmission lines, it was the landowners who brought a motion forward to the board and said: we want you to make a decision within 180 days on a transmission line. That's all the motion was. The law said at the time that the board must make a decision within 180 days. The industry members, including the government, the AESO, and the Department of Energy, opposed the motion, but that's what the law said at the time. That law eventually got changed to extend the time frame. Interesting.

I brought a motion forward at a hearing, and the motion was a simple motion. We wanted to compel Alberta Environment to show up at the hearing to answer questions since they were part of the approval process. In other words, it was the landowners who were taking the step to streamline the process. I tabled a copy of an e-mail from one of the board lawyers, the lead board legal counsel, to an outside source: how do we get around this motion? How do landowners take a board seriously when that happens? Jurisprudence says that once you strike that board, that three-member quasi-judicial board panel, they are supposed to be the judge. They're not supposed to go outside the courtroom. They're supposed to make their decision. They have legal counsel there to help them.

We have an issue here dealing with two items with this bill. The first issue is the legal writing in the bill. The second issue is regaining the public trust. That's yours to take, yours to give away, but the public trust is not with you at the moment, not out in the rural areas.

I'll tell you something. There's probably not a rural farmer in my riding that doesn't make an income off the oil patch. Many of these farmers have jobs as welders or well drillers or with oil field service companies. They work in the oil patch. They live in the oil patch. They farm in the oil patch. These people know the meaning of property rights, and property rights have been watered down step by step by step. What we see here is not a major step, but given all the steps that have taken place, we've taken the next step and gone a little bit less with property rights. I can't support that, but I want to support the streamlining of regulation. I want to go back to my constituents and say: "Hey, listen. We streamlined regulation, and we protected your rights." That's what they want to hear.

Let me just kind of go through the bill a little bit. A lot of the people did, but it's really important. I witnessed the very first time the public interest test was taken out of some of Alberta's law. Alberta's laws had the public interest test. This is the public's resource. It is a broad definition. You can put parameters around it, and it used to be, in the electric world, that that parameter was that when we invested in electricity, there had to be enough investment so there was value in the future but not so much investment that there wasn't value for the public today, because the public is paying for it. The same is true in this.

All laws that you pass, all legislation that you pass takes rights away from people, citizens, in one form or another, so they should have a beginning where they take those rights away. In other words, when you pass a regulation – well, we don't pass regulations. When a regulation is made on a speeding limit, then I'm not allowed to exceed that speeding limit without a fine or some sort of offence, but I get my right back at a certain point. In other words, they can give me a speeding ticket, but they can't throw me in handcuffs and take me to jail for going 10 kilometres above the speed limit. You have a limit to the law. These bills here need a limit, and you didn't give it a limit.

When you look at the board's authority, you gave the board unlimited authority. That's where one of the major problems happens with these bills. What you want the board to do is meritorious in many ways. You want to streamline the process. I do, too. But if you give the board unlimited power, then what you do is you give the board, the commission, or whatever you want to call it the ability to abuse. Unfortunately, we have experienced that in this province, where people have been abused.

I'm going to give an example. We often look at landowners as being just the farmer, that rural person. I'm going to tell you about an oil field service company right here in Edmonton – maybe you Edmonton MLAs should pay attention to this – that was looking to consolidate their company right here in Edmonton. Good business for Edmonton. They bought a quarter section on the southeast side, that they were developing. To continue their development, they were going to keep 30 acres for themselves for their business, develop the rest, sell it off, and sort of break even, make a profit, or reduce their cost to develop their property. A smart business plan, a smart move. Lots of people have done it.

They called my office up. They didn't call your office up. They came to see me because it dealt with property rights, because a business is property rights. I had no idea why this businessperson was coming down to Sundre when they were from Edmonton. He explained to me what went on. There's a dugout on that quarter section. For those who are not farmers, that's a watering hole. I actually went to that section of land, and I looked at it. You can look at that. It's like: yeah, a farmer in 1960 dug a hole for watering the cattle.

He wanted to reclaim that. Now, under our current laws, under Alberta Environment, which this is going to streamline and doesn't correct, by the way, you have to reclaim that dugout. You have to reclaim that wetland, and there's a procedure for reclaiming wetlands. We all know what the procedure is. So he hires an environmental consulting group. They come out. They do their plan. It's registered as a class 3 wetlands. It's a man-made dugout. It's dry. There's no water in it. He gets a lawyer involved to do all the legal work, which is very expensive, some firms more than others, for you lawyers who are here in the room.

But the reality is that he thought he was doing everything right. For his efforts, following the guidelines that we've followed in this province for the last 30 years, he could donate $32,000 to Ducks Unlimited to reclaim that wetland. That was the plan. Members of SRD showed up and said: "No. We're not going by that plan anymore." This gentleman said, "What are you talking about?" They said: "That's ours. We own that wetland. The government owns that wetland." His lawyer didn't know about it. The environmental consulting agency didn't know about it. This guy was livid. They told him that they wanted 10 per cent of his development. His development was $30 million. They wanted $3 million from this company if they wanted to fill in a dugout.

That's what started the problem, and he showed up in my office. He comes to my office, and he says, "Where did this happen?" I flipped my computer around and said: "Land Stewardship Act. Go right to where it amended the Public Lands Act. There it is. They took away your right." But that's not the end of the story. It was the abuse of the bureaucrats to come up with a 10 per cent penalty without any basis to come up with that penalty. The only thing I could do for him was to say, "Welcome to my office" because I knew a business would show up sooner or later.

Farmers get the idea about property rights because they deal with oil and gas all the time, but many of these businesses, ironically an oil service company, find out that the government is violating what they thought was their fundamental property right. You can see what's happening around the province. There's inconsistency, and what we want is consistency. Oil field companies, developers: they want clear-cut rules that they can go by. They want to know what the rules are before they even make the investment. They want to be able to plan on the rules and count on the rules, and so do landowners and property owners. That's all we want.

When you look at this bill, it doesn't do that. The first thing that is missing is the public interest test. It's been taken out. That public interest test, I tell you, must be put back in. You have to define some sorts of parameters that will define the public interest test. That's so important. One is on the resource side; that's in the public interest. On the property rights side that's in the public interest. They need rules and regulations. Say that I bring an oil field company in on my property to drill a well, run a pipeline, whatever. I sign an agreement that they do this, and they do it right, and then they sell that well. They sell that pipeline. A new company comes in and violates this. This bill makes an attempt to address this, but it misses.

I'll give you another story about this. Five farmers west of Rimbey contacted my office after I got elected. They are the kind of landowners we want in the oil patch. They welcome pipelines and wells coming onto their property. They work with them. We had a pipeline from Keyera come across their property, quarter sections worth about $340,000 each. They get a rent, loss of use, for having that pipeline across their property, but the animals can graze. They have multiple agreements with different companies. [Mr. Anglin's speaking time expired] I'm done? I was just getting started.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). If any member would like to comment or question the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. The Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd just like to ask the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre: in your opinion, why do we keep seeing bills like this coming across that are presented in this fashion, yet there are so many what you've identified as holes and places to make changes.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Finish your story.

Mr. Anglin: I'll get to that story, but I want to answer that question, and I'm going to use my story to finish that question. If you didn't hear the question, the question was: why is this continually happening? That's a very good question because it appears that there's bad consultation in the process.

To just kind of bring it all together, I was telling that story about the farmers, the landowners who want to have oil field workers and oil field companies come onto their property. These people signed a lease agreement, and the general contractor did not pay the subcontractors. I guess that happens. But each farmer out there with a quarter section worth $340,000 found a $6.4 million lien on each section. They're not legal minds. It devastated some of them. One of them lost a land deal. Another one lost his fertilizer. He had used his land as leverage to get his fertilizer, and that fell through as soon as the bank said: you've got a $6.4 million lien on a $340,000 quarter section. Their recourse? None. Keyera said: "Go away. We don't care. It's not our problem. It was the general contractor." What happened to their rights? What happened to their rights?

That's what's going on here. Why is that continually happening? You need to ask yourself that question. I'd love for you to fix this bill and get me out of this Legislature, but I'm here because of property rights. Make no mistake about it. I'll be there if you pass this law. I will tell you that the way this is right now, I will be out at every rural hall again telling people what's in this bill.

It was brought up to the other member there – and it's really important – that this is not an independent board. This is a board that will take its direction from the minister. You can't have that. You have to have independence. When they make a decision that's wrong, there has to be due process of law. They just need legal recourse, and it can be administratively. It doesn't necessarily have to be the courts. You have to give some guidance in this legislation so that if I am wronged, if a company is wronged, they have recourse to say, "How can I get a remedy to make me whole?" and have a fair process by which they have that decision made.

Right now the way this is laid out is that the people who would make a bad decision, whether it's intentional or unintentional – that's not the point – get to hear the appeal. I will tell you that it is very difficult for people to admit they made a mistake, and that is a real problem for landowners, for property owners, for business owners when they are dealing with the regulator. It is so important when we look at that.

There's another issue in this provision here that I find troubling, and it has to do with the rules of evidence. The rules of evidence don't apply as in court, and that's, actually, generally a good thing. We want boards to have a lot of flexibility to allow evidence to come in, and from jurisdiction to jurisdiction to jurisdiction – and I've testified on a lot of industry boards for utilities – boards have that authority. I'd never seen it abused until I came to Alberta, and that's unusual. I don't know why that is. That's something that you have to ask yourself when you're looking at that provision. That provision is a provision in law that is designed to give a board flexibility. I've seen it in Alberta where they've actually used it to deny evidence from coming forward. That actually has happened in the electricity world. That's one of the reasons we've got such a crazy problem in that history of the world.

You could end up with that same problem here. That's what leads to landowner frustrations. I believe that in this bill you have the exclusion of a judicial review, where the board has the right just to reject the viewing of evidence. I have to tell you that we've had a couple of violent cases in Alberta where people have been killed over the frustration of dealing with these regulatory boards. Alberta has had way too many. Way too many. One is too many. We've actually had two in recent memory, in my recent memory. In my own experience we had a 70-year-old lady – two hip replacements, on her way to cancer treatment – try to actually attack a board lawyer. Nobody asked the question – I mean, it all got reported. What would prompt a 70-year-old lady of ill health, poor physical condition to take on a 30-year-old board lawyer? She tried. If you asked her, what she said was: I was protecting my land. That to me is unacceptable. The whole thing is unacceptable.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm honoured to rise and speak to this bill. I have quite a few things to say, so I'll jump right into it. I'd like to note that there's quite a lot in this bill to digest, as some of my colleagues from the Wildrose have iterated, so I'm sure there'll be a lengthy discussion on this bill.

This bill charges the regulator, who reports to the Minister of Energy, with the sole responsibility for environmental oversight. This seems to be a misplacement of responsibility as the Ministry of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development already has the policies, capacity, and expertise to support the regulation and oversight of energy projects when it comes to environmental assessment and monitoring. The Ministry of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development has, literally, hundreds of compliance officers, approval engineers, and technical support staff. At the moment it's unclear if this expertise will be automatically used by this new regulator.

I want to talk a little bit about some background from previous talks of a single regulator in the MacNichol report. The push for a single regulator in this province goes back to 2002 when Vance MacNichol made a report to government that ultimately concluded that the approval process for energy projects was not as efficient as it could be due to the involvement of these three separate departments at the time: Energy, Environment, and Sustainable Resource Development.

In 2004 environmentalist Martha Kostuch revealed that the government had been working on the plan for a single regulator since 2002. She echoed the concerns of many within the environmental community that the formation of a single regulator would contribute to rushed reviews of energy resource activity applications and would overlook legitimate environmental concerns.

The issue of the appeal process remains a deep issue of concern within the currently proposed Bill 2 as it did within the MacNichol report. In the 2002 MacNichol report the recommendation was made that the single regulator would not only be responsible for the approval of energy resource activities but also would be responsible for dealing with any appeals made with regard to the approval of energy resource activities.

Unfortunately, this proposed legislation as well allows the regulator to determine whether an individual is directly or adversely affected and can decide not to hold hearings if they deem that unnecessary, which is a cause for concern.

I'd like to talk a little bit about the mandate of the Alberta energy regulator and pace of approval for the energy resource activities. The mandate of the regulator is "to provide for the efficient, safe, orderly and environmentally responsible development of energy resources in Alberta through the Regulator's regulatory activities." That's in section 2(1)(a). This refers to the efficient development but begs the question as to whether Alberta's regulatory approval process resulted in consultations that were inefficient or too long. Further, it's not necessarily true that Alberta's economy would benefit from a more efficient approval process for oil and oil sands gas and coal projects.

Some economists and researchers are challenging the truism that ramping up production of oil in the oil sands by streamlining the regulatory process with a single regulator will be to the benefit of Alberta's economy and to Albertans. In other words, there are other factors, including a potentially saturated market, that need to be considered when dealing with energy resource activities as defined within Bill 2. For example, this past April Randy Ollenberger, with BMO Capital Markets, said that "we have more oil moving into the system than the pipeline system in North America was designed to accommodate." That was taken from the CBC business news on April 20, 2012.

Unfortunately, the issue of the prioritization of energy projects is a blind spot in this bill. Of course, the priorities for development may change over time according to political and economic factors, but it remains to be determined what expertise would be represented on the board of directors that will respond to complex economic and environmental factors. In general, however, it remains doubtful that long-term economic development will be served by the efficient approval of the energy resource activities.

Until the government can clarify what its desired membership on the regulator would be, it is impossible for Albertans and the NDP to know whose interests will be represented or under-represented at the table of the regulator.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford underlined the mandate of the regulator, saying that the new process could shave months off of decisions regarding energy projects. Stakeholder groups would like to see a system that is nimble, that is responsive, competitive, and that is efficient: quoted from CBC news, October 24, 2012. The minister's comments at a press release regarding the bill and the bill's stated mandate for the regulator take for granted that faster development of Alberta's energy resources is necessary in the current economy. Although this assumption seems to be at the heart of the MacNichol report from 2002 and the current Responsible Energy Development Act, it remains to be proven that what Alberta needs is a streamlined approval process and a potentially handicapped environmental review process.

I'd like the body to consider what happens when supply is greatly increased, what happens to the price in the market. Looking at the pace of development, back in 2009 Premier Lougheed is on record stating his concerns about the pace of development in the province, speaking about a very high-cost economy. He told reporters he'd like to see only one surface mining project at a time, with lower cost underground bitumen recovery projects proceeding at a relatively faster pace. To quote former Premier Lougheed, "That will be hard to accomplish in the short term, because so many commitments have been made, but I would hope, in due course, the new government in Alberta would move themselves more to a more uniform development." That's taken from the StarPhoenix, July 15, 2009.

Again in 2011 in an interview on the CBC's The Current Mr. Lougheed stated his concerns over Alberta's current pace of development in the oil sands.

I worry about it because the problem with it is that the oilsands go too fast, the costs go up. And when the costs go up, it doesn't just impact the people in the oilsands in the Fort McMurray area – it impacts the people all around the province . . . but my view is that we have to be very careful that we don't let the oilsands impact negatively other parts of our province including our agriculture and our agriculture processing.

Mr. Lougheed wasn't only concerned about the local effects of the oil sands on other sectors. He was also thinking about what the approval of projects means for the job market in the energy sector.

We should be refining it in Alberta and we should be making it public policy in the province and hopefully the new Premier, whoever he or she is, will deal with that issue pretty quickly.

That was taken from CBC'S The Current, September 13, 2011.

This last quote redirects the issue to where it should be: public policy. Although this bill deals with the purview of the regulator and specifies that the regulator shall give the minister at least 120 days' written notice before making a rule under this act, the bill does not articulate the way in which the regulator will respond to the policies set forward by the government, the Minister of Energy, or any other government departments that touch on the issue of economic, environmental, and social impacts of resource development. In other words, this bill sets up an empty structure with no sound public policy to fill it and guide its decision-making.

The Pembina Institute is also on record saying that Bill 2 is incomplete when it comes to policy direction and the resolution of policy-conflicted proposed projects. The managing director of the Pembina Institute, Chris Severson-Baker, says his organization is unclear on how stakeholders beyond industry and government will be engaged in policy discussions on energy development. "The single regulator piece has been fairly well developed, but the piece that hasn't been fully designed yet, and that we're most interested in is the policy management office." That was taken from the Fort McMurray news on October 26, 2012. In other words, it's not simply enough to have an efficient or speedy regulator when you have no strategic plan for sustainable energy resources development.

In addition to the lack of a clearly defined relationship between public policy and the regulator, the bill does not go into enough detail regarding the question of membership. The regulator is made up of a board of directors "consisting of a chair and at least 2 other members appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council," section 5. The minister will also approve the board's appointment of a chief executive officer "responsible for the day-to-day operation . . . and affairs of the Regulator," section 7(1)(a). Since this membership making up the regulator will be responsible for the establishment and maintenance of policies and procedures, addressing identification, disclosure, and resolution of matters involving conflicts of interest of directors, hearing commissioners, officers, and employees of the regulator, the regulator will essentially act as a self-policing body with no outside scrutiny.

5:10

More generally, the issue regarding the membership of the regulator extends to the issue of interest because the bill does not offer any details regarding the balance of expertise represented on the regulator. Instead, the Lieutenant Governor in Council is solely responsible for choosing the board of directors, section 5(1), and the roster of hearing commissioners, section 11(1). This description of membership and organizational structure does not go into any detail regarding what academic, political, economic, or governmental expertise will be sought for membership of the regulator.

Moving into hearings, section 32 of the bill does not give any detail regarding notification to individuals who may be affected by an application to the regulator. "A person who may be directly and adversely affected by an application may file a statement of concern with the Regulator in accordance with the rules," section 32. This section should be amended to include the responsibility for the regulator to ensure that applicants have notified individuals who may be potentially directly and adversely affected of their plans for an energy resource activity. Only then will individuals have the information necessary to determine whether they consider the potential energy project to have a direct and adverse effect on themselves.

The bill states that in cases where a hearing has not taken place, "the Regulator shall publish or otherwise make publicly available the Regulator's decision in accordance with the rules," section 33(2), implying that there will be no public notice made available before a decision has been made if a hearing does not take place. This puts an unreasonable burden on any potentially affected individual to become informed of an application for an energy resource activity. In general there needs to be greater clarity in this bill on when a hearing will be required on applications for an energy resource activity.

Regarding the review process, after giving a decision notice to the applicant and any participant in the hearing, if there was a hearing, the regulator will then publish or otherwise make known its decision. After this happens, an eligible person may make a request for a review. This generally covers a wide range, but there are two problems with this request for a review process. "The filing of a request for regulatory review does not operate to stay the reviewable decision," section 38(2). This means that though there may be significant and legitimate appeals in the process of being filed and heard, the decision of the regulator stands, and the applications can continue to move forward.

Second, the regulator is responsible for the whole review process as it is responsible for the initial decision. In other words, there is no third party that vets and hears review applications, which means that the regulator can simply throw out requests for a review for a number of procedural, general, and subjective reasons if it doesn't deem them relevant or worthy of being heard. That's taken from part 2, division 3, section 39(4).

(4) The Regulator may dismiss all or part of a request for regulatory review

- (a) if the Regulator considers the request to be frivolous, vexatious or without merit,
- (b) if the request is in respect of a decision on an application and the eligible person did not file a statement of concern in respect of the application in accordance with the rules, or
- (c) if for any other reason the Regulator considers that the request for regulatory review is not properly before it.

With these general and broad-sweeping reasons for dismissal at hand, the regulator could easily avoid any review process, and that again speaks to the lack of public consultation and public input. There should be a third party that's responsible for considering a request for review.

Regarding the appeal to the Court of Appeal, decisions of the regulator can only be appealable to the Court of Appeal "on a question of jurisdiction or on a question of law," part 2, division 5, section 45(1). On the other hand this, regrettably, means that other than internal reviews of decisions or Court of Appeal appeals on jurisdictional matters or a question of law, every decision of the Regulator or a person carrying out the powers, duties and functions of the Regulator is final and shall not be questioned or reviewed in any court . . . to quash or set aside or otherwise, to question, review, prohibit or restrain the Regulator or any of the Regulator's proceedings.

From part 2, division 6, section 56. This essentially means that when it comes to questioning the rationale for decisions, appellants do not have access to the courts of law.

Finally, regarding fines, the increased upper limits for fines, $500,000 for corporations and $50,000 for individuals, is a welcome amendment to current sections of energy laws dealing with fines, but when it comes to megaprojects, this upper limit of fines is still too low to be an adequate deterrent for companies and individuals to ensure compliance with environmental regulations.

Although the upper limits are higher in fines for noncompliance than currently dictated by the energy resource enactments, these potential fines are given a loophole in this bill. The fines will not be levied if a person establishes on a balance of probabilities that the person took all reasonable steps to prevent its commission.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you, my friend from the wonderful riding of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. You know, I've really enjoyed listening to what you had to say here today, and I'd actually like to hear a little bit more. I'd like to hear what processes you'd like to strengthen or see put in place and the benefit that they'd have for the province of Alberta. I'd like to hear some more of your comments on that.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Member for Lacombe-Ponoka. You know, I think part of the issue at hand here is that we're taking what I like to refer to as a megabill because we're taking different bodies and streamlining them into one. There was due process for projects that went through several different steps, from looking at the environment to ensuring that there was a public discourse.

The concern that I have is that we're going down to one regulator that has sweeping authority. We've talked about the fact that it's the minister who appoints this regulator, and that causes grave concern for myself and for the Alberta New Democrats. You know, in order to ensure that the pace of development continues at a healthy pace, that we don't overheat our economy, there are steps and processes that should be in place to ensure that all the different members of the public and industry are represented, that they have a voice, and that there is due process before projects are approved.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, we'll move to the next speaker, the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to speak about the Responsible Energy Development Act. For a long time now our regulatory approval process has been bogged down in a quagmire of regulatory delays and burdensome bureaucracies. I was fascinated to hear the stories that our leader told today, kind of horror stories, didn't you think? Quite shocking.

This act appears to be designed to make our processes competitive with our neighbours', restoring energy companies' faith in Alberta and making it easier for them to plan and initiate new projects in a cost-effective way. I think most of us who recognize that we rely on businesses to create wealth-producing jobs and add revenue to provincial coffers realize that this needed to be fixed, in a nonveterinary way, I hasten to add. I didn't think anybody was awake over there. [interjections] I said that I think this needs to be fixed in a nonveterinary way.

In our eagerness to rectify wrongs of the past, however, let us not discard the good parts that protected the rights of all stakeholders. Whether intentional or not, certain landowner rights will be removed, specifically the section 26 standing rights under the Energy Resources Conservation Act, if the current form of this bill proceeds without amendment.

Part 2 of the bill, dealing with hearings and reviews, is very problematic. It is this entire section that reduces landowners' rights. Currently section 26 of the Energy Resources Conservation Act describes a clear process of appeal for those who might be affected by an ERCB decision, including proactive disclosures of relevant information by the regulatory body and a right to a hearing by an appeal body independent of the regulator. The language in the new legislation is far weaker and does not guarantee a right of appeal. See Bill 2, sections 31 through 35.

The current legislation also removes landowners' rights to appeal to the Environmental Appeals Board and gives the regulator the power to review his own decisions. It is unlikely that the regulator will be inclined to amend his own decisions. As was mentioned earlier, it's not easy to admit you were wrong. Thus, section 36 removes another important opportunity of appeal for landowners. The ERCB ethos does not appear to be aimed at protecting the environment or landowners. There have been checks on its pro-industry mandate in the past that are being eliminated. We believe the language and protections contained in section 26 of the Energy Resources Conservation Act should be placed into Bill 2. In particular, there should be an external appeal body like the Environmental Appeals Board, which is being cut out by this act.

I received input on this bill from an expert in advocating for landowners' rights, Mr. Daryl Bennett. He's a constituent of mine as well as a knowledgeable, vocal spokesman for his many landowner clients. With his permission I will now share some of his comments to me, his MLA.

I'm just getting sick of what is happening in this province, and not a few landowners are mentioning . . . this.

This is about taking the few remaining rights away from the landowners and streamlining the process so that industry does not need to deal with environmental or landowner concerns.

Basically, government is getting tired of informed landowners being able to use the system to protect themselves. I'm really concerned about putting the reclamation and remediation under the same regulator that gives licenses in the first place. It's like the fox guarding the hen house.

I'm involved with the MATL power line right now, and it is sickening how the operator is being given preferential access to government and the regulators and how the rules don't apply. They're contriving to have information beneficial to landowners thrown out and threatening lawsuits and other actions to keep the landowners from effectively representing their cases.

The biggest problem with these regulators is that their decisions are very difficult and costly to review. They also sanitize their decisions so that many issues brought up by landowners are not even mentioned.

They ignore what they don't want to deal with and then hide behind Administrative Law which states that their decisions only have to be reasonable. How do you determine what reasonable is when they edit the information that they rely upon?

This is the government's way to remove judicial oversight and fairness from the system so that they can confiscate private resources to benefit the "big players" who donate to their campaigns.

Then they use intimidation or regulation to shut down the opposition.

It's going to get very difficult to represent landowners in this climate. Landowner lawyers are being slashed on costs, and very few people want to work for landowners anymore because the system is so rigged against them.

Daryl is an intelligent, well-educated man. I'm sure you can sense his passion and his frustration. Variations of his comments are being echoed across rural Alberta, as you've heard from some of my colleagues.

Now, democracy and fairness can be clumsy. When you believe you know what's right and you have the power, there's a tendency to ignore contrary voices. To continue to do so will appear to be both presumptuous and insensitive to the interests and needs of the weakest partners in this equation. To pass up this opportunity to create a win-win for energy companies and for the landowners upon whose property many of the energy developments will occur would be a travesty. Power corrupts; absolute power corrupts absolutely. That is a saying that, hopefully, this government is committed to seeing does no longer apply to it. Self-awareness precedes change.

I want to talk for a minute now about the law of the harvest, a principle about natural and artificial systems. An example of that might be farming. Now, a farmer knows that if he doesn't prepare the soil and plant in the spring and do the other things necessary to tend his crops during the summer, if he decides, "Gee, it was a bad winter, and I'm going to take the summer off and play and have a good time" and when fall comes he says, "Well, I'm rested and ready to go; I'm going to harvest if it takes me 18 hours a day," well, what's he going to harvest? He didn't plant anything. That's a natural system, where choices have their consequences.

Education might be considered an artificial system, where if the goal is to get an A, you might just cram for your final exam, and I suspect that some of us got pretty good at cramming when we were in school. But what's the half-life of crammed knowledge? It's probably just barely long enough to get the test written. Maybe you get an A, but does that A demonstrate that you mastered the material? I submit that it doesn't in such cases. You could fool the system. The teacher might think you're brilliant – you got an A – but did you really get an education? No. Now, how many of you would like to be operated on in, say, a delicate brain surgery procedure by a doctor who as a student knew how to beat the system, who crammed for his exams? I wouldn't have confidence in his performance, and you wouldn't either.

Natural versus artificial systems. Governments create some artificial systems and some artificial rights from time to time. We need to have laws and rules and regulations like this act that make sure that we have equal rights to government services, to government regulations and to government regulators, to government boards and the courts, and to protection from incursion and unjust acts that may be perpetrated on us, unjust use or access to our land. There are natural rights, and there are artificial rights.

Let me tell you about Farmer McGregor, who gets a letter from the government. He's just thrilled to get the letter because it says: "Dear Farmer McGregor, you don't have to plant this year because we've got too much grain, so we're going to pay you to bank your land." He's thrilled. He says to his wife: "Martha, great news. We don't have to work this year. They're going to pay us to bank our land." They feel pretty good about it. They kind of celebrate it. But then they get the rest of the story. The letter the next day says: "Oh, by the way, Farmer McGregor, you're going to have to go to your neighbours and get the money from them. You'll go to Mr. Smith, your neighbour next door, and ask him for a thousand dollars so you don't have to work this year, or you'll go to Mr. Jones across the street and ask him for $500 so you don't have to work this year" and so on.

Well, you know what, Madam Speaker? He can't do that. He won't do that because he knows that he has no right to a portion of your income. He knows he can't look you in the eye and say: give me some money for not working. Now, if he doesn't have that right individually, what makes him think that he can delegate a right that he doesn't have to the government, a right for the government to go and to give somebody, an oil company for example, the right to trample on somebody else's rights? You can't do that. We can't collectively delegate a right that we don't individually have, I submit to you.

Now, we need rules and regulations, and there are situations where government will through rule and regulation and through rule of law require that certain things will happen, but you can't give a right to one person without taking away another person's right, so we have to consider the impact of our actions and the consequences of these decisions. I think that's what's been talked about so eloquently by all of the speakers today.

Now, a criminal is provided a lawyer if he can't afford one. Shouldn't a law-abiding citizen receive the same help in a civil matter, in a battle against financial giants? That's what we're talking about. That's what Mr. Bennett was talking about in his concerned comments to me. Landowners can no longer afford to engage in costly battles to defend their rights. When David went up against Goliath, his own strength and skill and God's help allowed him to conquer that giant. Who's going to help the landowner Davids?

I think the system and this government shouldn't put him in that position in the first place, but if it does, then he's entitled to our help. I think it's our obligation to see that the law and the system prevent that from happening as much as we can. Where it does happen, we shouldn't pit the landowner Davids against the financial giants in the oil industry.

Now, we want the industry to have access. We want the system to be speeded up. But it can't be at the expense of the individual rights of landowners. Every landowner should have a say in decisions that affect him or her. I think that's where a lot of the frustration arises. Each of us wants to have a say in decisions that affect us. We ought to be able to within our own government, where we're paying our taxes and voting. The democracy in Alberta shouldn't end the day after an election. You all across the way ought to have the freedom and ability to vote the way your constituents want you to. That's participatory democracy. It's essential to our freedom. It's essential to the protection that landowners need. It shouldn't just be those of us who have been chosen to represent the rural ridings, in most cases, that speak up on behalf of landowners' rights. You all ought to be doing the same thing yourselves. Shame on you if you don't, I think, and so do they.

Government ought to seek first to understand the needs and concerns of all parties before prescribing the solutions. You wouldn't have any confidence in a doctor, say an optometrist, that saw you walk in and took a look at you and said: "I think these would work for you. They've been really good for me. You ought to try them.” You wouldn’t go back to that optometrist. You’d turn around and walk out.

Government says: we’ve listened to Albertans. But the evidence shows that you didn’t hear. You need to listen and hear, and your actions will demonstrate that you’re hearing, that you’re getting the point, that you understand the concerns of the people that are being affected by your decisions, who don’t feel like they have a say.

Why don’t people show up? Yesterday, I think it was, somebody mentioned, the Finance minister perhaps, that he was puzzled by the lack of response from the citizens when given a chance to come and talk about the budgeting process. Well, after going to those kinds of things for so many years and never seeing any impact or any change in what was already obviously planned, why would you continue to do that? You’ve got better things to do. Watching Oprah, for example. You may actually learn something. Credibility comes from listening and demonstrating that you understand.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. I believe that you were reading from a document, so I would remind you that you’re required to table that document tomorrow during the regular Routine under tablings, please.

Mr. Bikman: Glad to do that.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Just before we go to 29(2)(a), I want to remind everyone in the House that in the spirit of Halloween we can go out and celebrate and enjoy the ghosts and ghouls that are out there, but in the House it is not traditional for us to wear any masks.

The Member for Drumheller-Stettler under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Strankman: Yes. Madam Speaker, to the hon. member. He used the phrase “absolute power corrupts absolutely,” and I was wondering if he could explain how he feels this will relate to this new superregulator and the appointed board.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you for asking that question and for the opportunity to respond, but first I need to ask, Madam Speaker: you made the comment about costumes after I spoke. I wonder. This is the way I really look. [interjection] Thank you.

Absolutely power corrupts absolutely. We see evidence of that throughout history.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, through the chair, please.

Mr. Bikman: I’m sorry. Absolute power corrupts absolutely. The question is: how do I think that applies to a superboard? Well, where in the world have we seen central planning for large jurisdictions actually produce lower cost services or better quality decisions? We know that decisions are best made at the level nearest to the people affected by them. I believe there’s strong evidence of that, yet we see attempts to create superboards.

We know the frustrations that have been created with the Alberta Health Services superboard. Lots of our constituents complain about the quality of service not being what it was prior to that event. They feel like, again, they’re powerless. They feel like decisions are made here in Edmonton that don’t reflect the realities of Milk River, Alberta, where five critical care hospital beds were taken away and now they can’t hire doctors anymore. That’s what I mean. When you centralize power and you don’t have checks and balances to the power, the kinds of things that I’ve talked about and that my hon. colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre so eloquently expressed and others have too, you lose credibility. Your ability to govern effectively relies on that credibility, that relationship that you have with the citizens at large.

Now, because we’re in a majority rules situation here, people get the sense, especially when the voting occurs as a bloc as opposed to individuals in spite of what’s been said and evidence to the contrary that exists, that there are no dissenting votes. That’s peculiar because you’re not from a homogeneous riding. It’s a heterogeneous riding. When we get homogeneity within a group where the group’s opinions, varying opinions and perspectives, aren’t allowed to be expressed, not just behind closed doors in caucus but also on a floor like this, then you produce a stagnant result. That’s why in certain similar situations adoption is required. Think about it.

We need to value the differences, and a good dynamic party values the differences and input from all of the stakeholders and the stakeholder representatives that were elected. When I mentioned in a jesting way earlier about fixing things not in a veterinary way, I think sometimes that seems to be what’s happened. I think the government is fixed because they can’t come up with new ideas with input. We don’t value the differences. We’re not getting enough differences of opinion.

Now that’s clumsy. That’s awkward. But psychological experiments and studies have proven that the groups that have a variety of interests, where you’ve got somebody there that’s always agitating and making life miserable for the rest because he’s never happy with the ideas they’ve come up with, those groups compared to homogeneous groups end up producing far better results, far more creative solutions to problems.

When power corrupts and absolute power corrupts absolutely, it isn’t necessarily in a criminal way. It can also be that it corrupts the decision-making process, that it corrupts the creative juices and the creative processes that need to exist, that have to exist if we’re going to meet the real needs of our province. This is a dynamic province, a province with great potential, great people, great citizens.

Now, we can keep telling ourselves that we’re the greatest in this or we’re the greatest in that, and we can find statistics that will prove it, but many a statistician has drowned in a river with a mean depth of three feet. You can lie to yourself with statistics, but don’t do that.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I’ll recognize the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Madam Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to speak on Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act. We all understand and agree with the basic idea that the present regulatory process has become a bureaucratic nightmare. The idea of a single regulator that ensures efficiency, consistency, and collaboration within the regulator is very important, and this should be the goal for all legislators going forward. The Wildrose believes in streamlining processes. We believe in creating efficiencies, and we believe in reducing the tax burden to families, to businesses, to industry. However, along with any of these decisions consultations have to happen with stakeholders. Those consultations have to happen with industry, with landowners, property rights groups, and any other affected stakeholders.

Industry has come forward and endorsed this bill, as seen by the CAPP news release of October 24, 2012. Clearly, industry was consulted, and going forward they indicated this bill, in their belief, will create a more efficient regulatory system that helps build investor confidence, will encourage technology and innovation, simplify the processes, and make it easier to navigate a regulatory system, and will encourage the provinces to work together and collaborate with the federal government to reduce any overlap or duplication. These are very important aspects of this legislation. These are also all things that the Wildrose sees as positive as well.

The Wildrose fully supports the intent of Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act. Clearly, we need to ensure that we make the process less cumbersome and promote economic growth while at the same time ensuring that landowners are protected. It is important to understand that the red tape in Alberta creates a situation where we become one of the worst jurisdictions for energy development because of this bureaucratic process. Many other members in this House have already spoken to what other provinces are doing or not doing or how it can be or can't be. The Leader of the Official Opposition identified how Saskatchewan is doing it and is taking a process that is taking nine months in Alberta down to a simple two-hour process. We can get there.

Bill 2 is a step forward, but it has become clear that it will not be able to get the job done. Any time we look at government regulation, especially when we're trying to maintain a balance between the environment, landowners, and industry, we must ensure that the legislation will generate efficiency and balance. We must also ensure that landowners are fully consulted when making decisions about how their property is affected. After all, landowners are the persons who have invested in the property and have worked the property, and it belongs to them. We as legislators do not have the right to impose upon them our will and to take their property away from them. I've spoken to stakeholders who were completely caught off guard by this bill. It's not at all what they were told it was going to be, which was a simplified regulatory process. Instead, we have something that could make the process even more complicated.

My first worry with this legislation is that it's adding more red tape to an already rising mountain of red tape, which is not a solution. Red tape continues to hurt Alberta's industries and small businesses. A Canadian Federation of Independent Business report in 2010 said that overregulation costs Alberta $4 billion a year. This means that we're taking $4 billion, removing it from Alberta, and not giving back to the people who give to Alberta every day. A recent Fraser Institute study said that a sweet gas well that should take 10 days and $1,000 to get regulatory approval for currently takes almost three years and $100,000. That does not signify to industry at all that we are a friendly place to do business.

We are a great province. We already provide the lowest tax rate. We provide a very friendly work environment, and we have a hard-working, diligent group of people in Alberta. What we need to do is reduce the regulatory burden. Interestingly, this government has known this all along. The Wildrose knows this, and together we should be doing something about it.

Alberta's economy is only going to get better as we allow our businesses to become more and more competitive, especially in the global marketplace. We can do this while we ensure that we protect landowners' rights as well as the environment. We must make sure that landowners and the environment and industry are all working together to make that the priority. What we also have to do is cut unnecessary regulation, and I believe that Bill 2 does not cut that regulation but actually adds more.

One area of Bill 2 that concerns me greatly is that it takes the failed bodies and basically stuffs them into a new energy superboard. Unfortunately, Alberta has seen the detrimental effects of superboards. Albertans have seen how centralization has taken the power away from local decision-making and given that power to a board that is no longer acting in the best interests of Albertans or aware of the concerns facing many Albertans.

The Alberta health superboard was one such board. This was a board that was created to simplify the process, provide efficiencies, and save taxpayer dollars. Clearly, this has not been a success. The Alberta health superboard has created insecurity, added layers and layers and layers and layers and layers and layers and more layers and a few more layers and some more layers and a couple of more layers and then some more layers, and then we added some bureaucracy, and then I think there were even more layers and then a couple of more layers and then about two more layers to the process. It fails on making decisions that best serve Albertans. We only have to look daily to the situation of the multitude of vice-presidents in Alberta Health Services, how money is being eaten up at the bureaucratic level, not making it to front-line workers. Those are decisions of a superboard.

Those same decisions of a superboard take away local autonomy. They take away decision-making from those who know best what's going on. Many Albertans have expressed loudly that they are no longer heard in this type of centralized decision-making. Centralized decision-making often loses sight of the real goal, only to cave in to a particular agenda. It is imperative that we do not create that same style of decision-making in energy. This is especially true when we have experienced first-hand how centralization of anything can be devastating to Albertans, landowners, and business. Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act, centralizes power under the minister's hand-picked regulator, with plenty of room for interference by the minister. Hmm. I think I've seen this a little bit before. I'm not really sure, but I think there were a couple of bills before that sort of addressed this a little bit and had a little bit of room for interference and a little bit of hand-picking, those kinds of things.

We have seen how that process works, and it has a negative effect on business and Albertans, and it creates uncertainty and instability. Bill 2 does make something more efficient for industry and government. It pretty much takes landowners' rights away. It pretty much ignores the landowner. That's pretty efficient if you want to get something done. Part 2 of the bill, which deals with hearings and reviews, is very problematic. This entire section reduces landowners' rights, which have already been marginalized enough by this government. We can do better than this. This bill would be a lot better if it was more focused on reducing the red tape than marginalizing property rights.

Once again, there are sections in this bill that are broad and subjective as to what the regulator's powers are. This bill clearly opens the door to constant political meddling. However, of great concern is section 68. Section 68 goes way too far. It allows for another Bill 36 or Bill 50 disaster. Section 68 may allow the minister to rewrite the rules, to expedite things that wouldn't normally make it through a standard regulatory process. One only has to ask: "How does this protect the landowner? How does this protect the Albertan? How does this protect people who are investing in our province?"

The makeup and selection process of this board should ring alarms for all who believe in democracy. I think we can all agree that there should be representation for more than one hand-picked group. The board could clearly be made up of a variety of stakeholders such as property rights representatives, people with environmental backgrounds, and, of course, experienced and proven people from the different kinds of energy industries.

How can Albertans be assured that this bill will not result in even more appointments of PC donors and volunteers to high-paying government jobs? Since cabinet is in charge of appointing the board of directors, there is concern that positions will be filled with PC supporters instead of industry experts and landowners. It was the Premier's cabinet that approved the Bill 50 lines and pushed for the hiring of Evan Berger, all of which create an atmosphere of cronyism and distrust. Many have expressed great concern that leaving these appointments to cabinet is not a good idea. The creation of a biased, superregulatory agency will not solve the deficiencies in the regulatory system.

That being said, Bill 2 has made some progress. The intent is right, the idea is solid, and there's an opportunity to ensure this is not another Bill 50 debacle. We've already seen Bill 50 come back to this House. Clearly, it was a flawed process, and the House asked that it be reviewed. We have done that, and that's the right way to do it.

Bill 2 did make a positive step in allowing the landowner to register their agreements that they make with the companies with the regulator. This allows the regulator to enforce the provisions without the landowner having to take the company to court. This is a very positive portion of this bill. This clearly shows that they had the landowners' interests at heart, that they were listening to those that they might have consulted on this issue, and clearly they have developed that into the bill. Now, if only we can take all of the other concerns and ensure they're addressed as well.

Madam Speaker, while I do appreciate that the government is trying to do something to help industry with project approvals, streamline the process, and create a single-door regulator, which I one hundred per cent agree with, I do not believe that Bill 2 as it appears today is doing the right things. Bill 2 does not ensure that there is proactive informing of affected landowners, and it does not guarantee their right to a hearing as part of the licensing process, as is currently the case with the ERCB.

I'm happy to work with the members opposite to provide opportunities to landowners while ensuring that we are protecting the rights of landowners. I understand that there is a need to make sure that industry has the opportunity to be able to run their businesses and provide their services in an effective and efficient manner.

I look forward to working together on amendments to make this legislation something that will benefit all of Alberta, and I'm hoping that the government can see that this is not about politics. This is about understanding our constituents, Albertans, and putting their needs ahead of ours. I will not be supporting Bill 2 as it stands today.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any other members who would like to comment or question the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake? The Member for . . .

Mr. McAllister: Chestermere-Rocky View.

The Acting Speaker: Chestermere-Rocky View. Thank you.

Mr. McAllister: I forget myself sometimes, Madam Speaker.

My question for the member. I think she communicated effectively, you know, what her problem with the bill is. I'd be curious to know what it would take to sway her vote in support?

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you. It wouldn't actually take a lot. What we need to do is to sit down and engage with landowners and see what their concerns are with these bills. What I'm hearing is that they need to make sure the board is fair, that it's not appointed just straight by the minister. We need to make sure that the regulatory process is streamlined but streamlined in a way that it's not catering to any one person. I'm happy to prepare some of those amendments. I know many of our colleagues in this House will be preparing some of those amendments. But, ultimately, what it's really going to take, as the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner said, is the ability to listen, not just to listen with your ears but to actually hear what someone is saying.

This isn't about, you know, that side or this side. This is about picking what is best for Albertans, and landowners have a problem with this bill. Landowners had problems with bills 19, 36, and 50, and they were ignored and ignored and ignored, which created a situation where we have 17 MLAs in the House today, which is absolutely historical in this province. What we need to do: we need to take a lesson. Albertans have said: "We will not be ignored. We will be heard, and if you don't hear us, you're going to see what's going to happen." So let's work together. Let's figure out what the best solutions are to this bill, and let's do it in a proactive way and show that we can do that.

The people on this side of the House, in the Wildrose caucus, anyway, are more than willing to work with the government. All we're asking is that the government be more than willing to work with the Wildrose. That's what's best for Albertans.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

There are still three minutes left. Are there any other members who wish to question or comment? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Well, I want to ask the hon. member what kind of impact the streamlining process will have on the environment, if any. In your opinion, when we streamline the process, what kind of impact is it going to have on the environment?

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, hon. member. Well, clearly, I think that any time we can streamline the process, we can ensure that there are environmental protections to make sure that we are not damaging people's land, waterways, air quality, all of those things. We can do that through legislation, or we can do it through regulations. But making a one-stop shop for industry and for landowners provides a system where – right now what happens is that somebody wanting to do something literally has to go to eight or 10 or 12 different spots. They have to, you know, pay this fee here, and they have to do this, and they go to the next window. Well, what happens is that something gets forgotten. Hawks' nests get torn down. Marshlands get destroyed. Property gets ruined. Farmland gets taken out of productive cropping, all because there are so many steps in the process.

We can streamline the process, we can protect the environment, we can protect landowners, we can encourage industry, and we can do it right. It just takes co-operation. Just because you streamline a process doesn't necessarily mean that you're devastating the environment. There are ways to do it right, and as long as we listen and we co-operate and we engage the people who know – if you ensure that there are environmental people on this board, that's the check and balance. We can have that. Just because you streamline doesn't mean that we automatically destroy the environment. We can do it right. We want to do it right. We just need to do it together.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

There is still one minute left. Are there any other members that wish to comment or question the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake?

Mr. Kang: Will the application be proceeding simultaneously in all the other departments? Will different people be dealing with the application or just one regulator?

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, hon. member. Well, I don't think that at this point that's clearly been laid out. I mean, that's something the government is going to have to bring forward to everybody here. I'm certainly open to hearing whatever suggestions they might make, so how that streamlined process can benefit everybody and how it actually works so that in the House here we know that we're protecting Albertans. If it's one person or two people, that's fine, or if you make the application to protect the environment and have your project go forward and that's arranged through one window but behind the scenes it takes more than one person, I'm assuming it will.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Being an inexperienced Speaker, at this point in time I see that we have one minute left, and I think that I am required to call the next speaker, who will just stand up and start his presentation.

Mr. Campbell: Madam Speaker, I suggest that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn till 7:30.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member has moved that we call it 6 o'clock.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:59 p.m.]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 2

Responsible Energy Development Act

[Debate adjourned October 31]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege tonight to come in here and talk on Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act. I think this bill has some great ideas and concepts. I believe industry welcomes this bill. I also agree with our leader. I want to support this; we all would like to support it, but I'm afraid there're a couple of problems with the current wording. One thing that worries me is the fact that the explanatory notes in this bill are a little more than the actual bill is. It's just over half, which usually means there are a lot of things that we're taking out. Some of the things that are being taken out of that are a lot of the wording changes with that.

In saying that, I'm concerned that we cannot support this bill until it changes in part 3, section 65(1), the part that overrides any terms and conditions of a registered private surface agreement that conflicts with this part.

Also, the language in the new legislation is far weaker and does not guarantee a right of appeal under section 31 through section 35, again.

Section 68(1) I also feel takes away from property rights, which I'm a strong advocate for.

Also, our leader brought up section 21 and working with our First Nations in this province to make it better for them as well as everyone involved in it.

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

Hearing commissioners are appointed and not elected. Something I've always fought for during the election process is to make sure that everybody on boards is elected and not appointed.

Also pointed out, just like on Bill 36, is a way that the government and ministers can overturn anything and veto vote with just the stroke of a pen. To me, that is not democracy.

I believe that we should learn from what we've been talking about here in the last couple of nights with Bill 8 and the fact that we're trying to fix Bill 50, which had some obvious issues to it. I think we're showing that that's how we can get some things done, by working on those, but let's identify it now instead of making this something that we have to deal with two years from now. In saying that, I believe, as a strong property rights advocate, that we need to get property rights onto the front of this bill and not onto the back burner of it. I stand here today before you as someone who believes in property rights and will hold this government accountable for that as I believe that is probably one of the prime things that got me involved in politics in the Little Bow riding and also made people vote for me. They knew we'd be strong advocates for property rights.

Another thing that I have noticed with this new bill is that it concerns me that the references to public interest are completely gone out of this bill. This concerns me as everyone, I believe on both sides of the floor, is here for the best of public interests for this province.

Again, I can echo my leader's concerns. Please try to slow this down, Mr. Minister, and give us time to walk through this with some of our stakeholders and get this correct the first time, which I think is probably the best way to try to pass any bills.

If we could move some of the wording forward on this bill, I personally would be able to support it, but until that time I cannot go against my belief in property rights for landowners.

I can tie this together. When I worked in oil and gas myself, moonlighting from my farming job in the wintertime, the company I worked for was having some problems with landowners. Most of the time when a landman would come in to talk with you, you didn't trust them because you didn't know them and they didn't know your concerns. With this bill – and I guess that's where I can tie into it a bit – you've got to have the buy-in of the landowners. With the landowners tied in with it, you can work with the industry, oil and gas, a lot better.

I was told a long time ago, when I started on county council, that it's a lot easier if you ask somebody instead of tell them. Nobody likes being told. Nobody in this House that I'm aware of likes to be told to do something. They like to be asked for their input. This also worked well when I was a reeve in the county any time we'd be working with landowners on doing any new roadwork or general work within the county.

Section 16 gives the minister the power to request any information from the new regulator, including personal information. Again, I'd rather put in there "excluding" rather "including" if we're going to change some of the wording to this. I'm always a little leery of all the personal information that gets given to any agency, whether they're arm's length or apart. It's private information for generally good reasons.

Part 2 of the bill, dealing with the hearings and reviewing, is very problematic. It's an entire section that reduces landowners' rights. Again, not to harp over things that didn't work out well, but I think we've identified before in this province that landowners take their rights very seriously and have fought for them. I guess, to me that is key and crucial to how I'd like to deal with this bill, to identify that we need to take care of the landowners before we start worrying about everybody else. I think we can work collaboratively on that with industry. The people in the oil and gas sector are well aware of how to work with everybody on that. I don't want to have this just at the stroke of a minister's pen.

The current legislation also removes landowners' rights to appeal to the Environmental Appeals Board and gives the regulator the power to review this on its own decision. That's very scary to me, any time when you're not allowed to appeal anything to a board that's at least arm's length from the board that made the original decision. I mean, being on council before, you could say, "Well, you could come and appeal to the county or somebody," but if it's the same people that are around the table that made the original decision, unless there's some very new evidence that comes up, the odds of them changing their mind is almost certain to be unlikely. In saying that, we're going to see that with the regulator that's appointed by the government. They're going to be inclined to go with their own decisions rather than – nobody usually likes to hear that they're wrong, so if they came up with a decision, they're not going to go back on themselves within a short period of time.

I believe section 36 removes another important opportunity to appeal for landowners. As a farmer and a landowner, I think that probably one of the key things in our campaign that I could talk with people about was property rights and rights of individuals. I think that's key, and whether you're urban or rural, depending where you live, you want respect for your rights. If you're an urban person, you put up your fence and your neighbour doesn't get to park their vehicle on your front lawn for something to do and vice versa. You own your property. Everybody works hard to be able to make their mortgage payments and have the property that they do. As a farmer and a landowner, that's key and crucial to me for how things work.

I'm more than willing to work with any oil company and gas company usually, but when they dig their heels in and they don't want to work with you and they start telling you how to do things, it never goes over well. The track record always shows that those are the ones that always end up in front of an appeal board. There are different companies that do that. Back in the old days, in the early '80s, there were a couple of companies out in our neighbourhood that were doing that. They'd fight you because they knew the farmer didn't have the money to go fight it and go through the process. Then when people started banding together and we had strong property rights advocates start working with everybody, there was the push-back a little bit.

As I say, most times when we're talking about a bill in this House, if you can have the respect amongst everybody around it and listen to the ideas, you can bounce back some ideas, whether it's a good idea or a bad idea. Oil companies always fell into that, Madam Speaker. They'd sit there, and they didn't want to listen to the landowner all the time.

Sometimes it's the little things that people go along with to be able to negotiate. It doesn't have to be huge changes in what they're doing. For instance, I had a gas well at my place that we put about 300 feet farther south from my yard than where they originally wanted to drill it, just for noise concerns alone. It wasn't the end of the world. With the technology that they have in this day and age, I mean, they can directional drill. They can put it on a bit of tilt and get the gas zone they're shooting for. Again, this hits different spots for different people.

I'm lucky, I guess, in my area. It's all sweet gas that we have; there's no sour in that area right where I farm, particularly. Now, there are people that have sour gas wells in their area and there are studies to show where cows, you know, have birth defects with their calves and everything from the sour levels. When you can see that with an animal, you probably don't want to be breathing that in yourself. I'm not saying that there isn't technology to deal with it all. It's the fact of sitting down and actually talking to the people, making sure that we're working with all the stakeholders in it. That's the one of the things that concerns me all the time.

Point of Order Decorum

Mr. Donovan: Madam Speaker, a point of order, I guess. I don't know all my stuff, but are you supposed to be sitting in the normal seats you're at all the time, or are you allowed to sit around? During Committee of the Whole you're allowed to.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. This is the formal part of our proceedings, and you should be in your regular seats. I believe that everyone is. Thank you.

Debate Continued

Mr. Donovan: Thank you. As I was saying, when you get the buy-in from people, it goes a lot better because you're willing to work with the people. It's the process and the common respect you have for working with the people. We saw this, you know, when we had a bit of a crisis here this fall with beef producers. Instead of fighting with everybody, everybody sat around the table and worked together on that to resolve the problem. I think that's the key to it. I think the key to making good, common-sense decisions is sitting down and appreciating that we might not all agree with what is being done all the time or where it's going, but at some point you have to figure out how to work there together.

I think it's come a long way over the years with oil and gas and working with landowners, but at any point where you start telling them that the minister at the stroke of a pen can change something, that's always very worrisome to landowners and property right owners. I have all the respect in the world for our current Minister of Energy because of his track record and history of working in government. I'll say that I got to see him in my younger years when he was the MP for the area where I reside.

I think the problem isn't the current people that we always have in. Something you always have to worry about when you pass a bill is who could be in charge of that later on. That's, I guess, the concern when you have that, and that goes back to why I believe we need an elected board with any of these regulators, if there's any regulator, to make sure it's an elected person in that position. Then there's always a way to recall that person if there are set times for the election dates or not, however you want to go about it. But you can always bring people to a board, any kind of a board, from a recreation board to a regulator board, everything we do in society. As long as you have the right to democratically elect somebody, that's key and crucial. I think it's the foundation of how this country was built and how this province was built.

In saying that, I think we've got to make sure that landowners' rights are always enshrined in this act. I think most of the colleagues on this side of the floor and I'd assume most of the colleagues on the other side of the floor respect everybody's property rights. In saying that, if we could make some changes, if we could have some good dialogue with the minister on this, there's probably a good possibility that – I know if I had the right wording change on that, enshrining property rights into this act, I wouldn't have any problems at all supporting it. I think it streamlines it. I think industry would appreciate it. We've seen the letter from CAPP saying that they're more than happy to be part of this bill as it's presented.

I think we've got to always make sure we have a proper balance of both sides between landowners and also the oil industry. I mean, we've shown that it can work well together. The problem is: if you get a regulator or that one inspector that doesn't like you or a landman that doesn't go well or whatever goes on, you can push yourself into quite a corner. I don't think anybody wants that.

With that, Madam Speaker, I'd be more than happy to put this out there for everyone else in the House and my colleagues that have been here and definitely all have their own history and their background, but I'd caution everybody to please try to think about adding property rights to this and try to get that back into the act, which I think everybody appreciates.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Member for Little Bow.

We have Standing Order 29(2)(a) that's kicked in. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You mentioned that you have lived in your riding your whole life, been involved in the oil patch, been involved in the agriculture industry. What do you think your neighbours, that you've known for most of your life, would feel about this bill if it passed as it is?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, you shouldn't speak for your constituents as far as their opinions are concerned, but if you'd like to comment on his question, you can go ahead.

Mr. Donovan: Yes. Well, thank you to my colleague for Strathmore-Brooks. I talk with people in my area, and I know my own thoughts on it. There's no way I could sell this to my constituents and say that this is a good bill as it sits right now because of the lack of landowners' rights and privileges in it. I think property rights – I mean, we can't kid ourselves – were a major driver in the last election, and I think that's something that we've all identified.

I give the government credit on bills that we've talked of already in the House so far this fall, stuff that we've identified. I mean, nobody's perfect. They come up with a bill with all good intentions, but that's why we have amendments to bills. We can identify because a different set of eyes always finds something different to look at and can see something in that.

I know that in my riding property rights are key and crucial, whether it be a power line, an oil well, a gas well, a pipeline, an overpass, anything like that. People know what's good for a general area and everything else, but as soon as you put something – it goes back to what I'd stated earlier. It's always better to ask somebody than tell them. I know I personally do a lot better if I'm asked to do something, but if I'm told to do it, sometimes I put my heels in a little bit, and I might not be the funnest person to deal with in those situations.

Again, I think, as it sits now, it's not something that my constituents of Little Bow would be happy to have as a bill. I believe it takes away from property rights. In saying that to the hon. member who asked me the question, I don't think the people in my constituency would be happy as it sits, but I think they'd be more than happy if we enshrined some property rights into this piece of legislation.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We still have a few minutes left on 29(2)(a). Are there any other members? The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You mentioned your experiences as a reeve and a municipal leader in your area. When a decision is made, is it a real appeal right if it goes back to the same decision-maker? In your experience have you had that decision go to another body that's somewhat independent from the decision-making process so that they could look at the facts anew and come to potentially a different conclusion?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to my colleague. Yes, I have seen that. When I was a reeve, you always had the chance to appeal your taxes, for instance. Lots of people do that in a municipality all the time. We have a couple of lakes and a couple of developments around those lakes. The conversation would always come up as to whether they should be paying the amount of taxes on it because they're only living in that house, say, for 90 days over the summer. The first argument is always, "Well, I shouldn't have to be paying taxes for a full year" when they're doing that. So they'd always appeal their taxes.

Now, of course, our assessor is a great guy, has been there his whole life, but his job is to assess. When you're arguing an assessment municipally through the Municipal Government Act, basically you could only argue about whether the house was complete or not complete, the actual resale value of it because that's what the tax was based on, and how many bathrooms were in the facility. They've got a whole code and a book of regulations they go off when they do the taxes.

In saying that, people would bring complaints to the county, and there was a tax assessment review board committee. From sitting on that and also chairing it a couple of times, you'd have people come in, and they'd explain why they felt that their taxes were higher than they should have been. Now, if we deemed that they were fine as they were, then they had the choice of either paying them or appealing them provincially. I know that three times while I was on it, the appeal actually went to Red Deer, which was the provincial tax review for the province – I don't know the exact wording of it – and we got overruled. The beauty of that was that it was a different set of eyes that weren't part of our municipality. I'm not saying that we were doing anything wrong or trying to do anything wrong, but there were some different things to look at.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak on Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act. As it currently stands, I'm not sure it's the right way to describe it, but we can work on it. It is very important for members of this Assembly to engage in debate in order to ensure that the intent of a piece of legislation actually becomes the legality of the same piece of legislation.

Madam Speaker, the intent of the bill can be honourable and well-meaning, but if the legislation is flawed, good intentions mean nothing. I fear that this may be the case with Bill 2. However, I am most definitely able and willing to be convinced otherwise through some important amendments and the actions of the government. There are some major and serious concerns that need to be addressed to ensure that its application does not negatively impact landowners and that government is not simply making these changes to consolidate their own powers.

We have heard in this House how important property rights are, and I sure hope that the government does not forget this. They are paramount, and they must be respected. Alberta's current regulatory system for oil and gas projects in our province is cumbersome and difficult in part because a company must apply to a multitude of government entities and boards when seeking approval for a single project. And, Madam Speaker, I would not be surprised if a company is often required to submit the same information to various government entities. This needless bureaucratic duplication does not serve any purpose, and it would explain the frustrations that many in our industry face.

As someone who has worked in our oil and gas industry for almost my entire working life, I know that all too often there are bureaucratic nightmares that are faced by hard-working Albertans. We recently saw the federal government implement a streamlined approach for resource development projects where they reduced the number of federal government departments and agencies that deal with the regulatory process from over 40 down to three. They did not reduce the standards of information companies need to provide but simply made the system more efficient by cutting out unnecessary duplication. This is important because I think we know that all Albertans are committed to sustainable and responsible development and to environmental protection.

Having one point of contact within government for a company to deal with when submitting applications as proposed in this legislation makes sense. Madam Speaker, it is something that Albertans in the oil and gas industry have been asking for.

However, I caution this government that simply creating a regulatory superagency does not automatically eliminate deficiencies in our current regulatory system. The government must specifically address the deficiencies within the system before responsibilities are reorganized, or else these deficiencies will simply transfer over from the old system to the new system.

Madam Speaker, I know that in my constituency of Medicine Hat I am constantly told to accept the need for regulations. However, they must be well thought out, and they must serve a purpose, and they must not be detrimental. Outside of the oil sands region most of the oil and gas exploration and development in our province takes place on privately owned land. Alberta currently has strong legislation in place dictating how oil and gas companies must deal with private landowners. Can the government assure Alberta's landowners that if they have concerns regarding a proposed development, the new regulatory body will provide an avenue for those concerns to be addressed in a meaningful way?

Madam Speaker, as we debate this piece of legislation, members of this Assembly and, indeed, all Albertans will be looking to the government to provide concrete evidence that they can in fact bring together several government entities under one single-window regulator without causing more red tape for industry and more cost to taxpayers. A single-window regulator for oil and gas, as proposed in this bill, will only be successful in encouraging further investment in our province if it truly makes the system more efficient. And we need to be respectful of property rights. Until I am assured by the government with amendments that this will be the case and property rights will be respected, I will find it rather difficult to vote in favour of this bill.

Madam Speaker, I wish to reiterate some key points because natural resources and their development are critical to our prosperous future. We must balance the rights of industry with those of landowners, the environment, and, most importantly, all Albertans as taxpayers as they receive the services from the government.

As I said before, the Wildrose believes that there is a place for regulation within this industry definitely, but it's the inefficiency of regulation that causes the heartburn to the industry and landowners and the service and supply industry, which I have some experience with. If they're not set out correctly, all that these regulations do is cause more red tape. They cause issues in trying to get your business of the day done, add cost, add expenses, slow projects down. If we're going to do any kind of new legislation, let's make sure that the regulations are streamlined so that we hit the important points but we don't hamstring anybody in any one of those different groups in working with the new bill.

Balance is so important, like I mentioned before, balance between industry, landowners, the environment, the taxpayer. I mean, we all have to answer at the end of the day to our taxpayers, who are our constituents. They're our customers, and we're tasked with making sure that our customer service is the best customer service we can deliver. That's key, and I think a lot of times we forget about that.

My prior experience was in customer service, and it's important, I think, to know that what you do today is great, but the customer comes to you again tomorrow. "Thank you very much for yesterday, but we want to know how you are going to improve your services to us today." We have to continually go to our customer and find out: "What are your needs? What are your wants?" Then we have to make sure that we understand what they're asking for. We can sit down, figure out a solution, bring it back to them, and ask them: "Is this what you were asking for? Is this going to meet your needs? Is this going to satisfy you?" If it does, we've succeeded. If we haven't, the customer has an opportunity to come back and say: "No. You got that. You got that. You missed me on that."

That's an opportunity, as we've been talking about, with the ability to appeal to an arm's-length board. I think that's very, very crucial. If you didn't have that communication going back and forth, you'd be delivering a service or delivering a product that the customer didn't ask for, didn't want, didn't need, and now is burdened by your solution. So that's key. I think that's awesome.

The environment, of course, in the whole equation: I think that's very important as well. A lot of times we get caught up with, you know, the value of industry versus a landowner. The environment's in the middle there somewhere, and we have to make sure that it's not trampled on by either side. Again, it comes into this idea of balance.

The issue of centralized power with this bill is extremely worrying. It, essentially, gives ultimate authority to the minister and his department. I don't know if that was intentional or an oversight, but I think it's something that we really need to look to, to make sure, going back again to our customer, to our constituents, that their voice is heard and that the people that they take their concerns to aren't the judge and jury as well. It's fine that you have decision-making processes within this, but you have to have that ability to appeal should you feel that you are not being treated fairly, not getting the decision that you think is correct or fair or right. Having that ultimate authority with the ministry and the minister is not good. Again, if there was an amendment to correct that, I think that would be a real benefit.

To allow the regulator to control its rights and to remake its own rules after the fact is very, very concerning and a little bit disturbing, as was mentioned before by some of the other members. Industry and landowners and even the environmentalists just want a nice, solid, consistent set of rules that they can work with. I think if we lay out a strong, solid foundation with clear rules, clear expectations, and clear requirements, that's how everybody can best work together because then you take away that grey area. That grey area is where a lot of times things go sideways, things get missed. People think this and say that. I think, again, make sure that the rules are in place. They're in place for a reason, and we don't allow the regulator to go in and make new rules as they go along. I think that the rules need to be that if there are going to be changes, bring it back to the House, you know, bring it back to the voters. Let them decide if it works or if it didn't work.

One of the things that is good is to allow landowners to register the agreements they make with companies with the regulator so that the onus is upon the regulator to enforce the provisions of those agreements. I think what's happened in the past is that there were regulations in place and agreements in place with all good intent. Most industry stakeholders and most landowners usually work together to make those agreements work. Unfortunately, you have to have these rules in place for addressing the individuals where that doesn't happen, and that can be quite onerous on the landowner or even the environmental group, depending on what is being discussed.

Sometimes the only recourse left is going into the legal system. I know how important lawyers are, but their importance is measured usually monetarily in most cases, and that can be burdensome on . . .

Mr. Anderson: Very important.

Mr. Pedersen: Very important, yeah. Very important, but again also sometimes it's a little daunting if you're an individual landowner or you're a small-business owner. A lot of times you're dealing with corporations that don't report in the order of five or six figures. They report into the areas of eight, 10, 12 figures. I mean, you're talking about big money, and it can be quite scary for those individuals.

The fact that that is in there I think is a really good step in the right direction. That takes the onus off the landowner or the individual who feels that they have been wronged and puts it in the hands of the regulator, who can actually go chase the other side to make sure that these agreements are truly rolled out in the spirit of the original agreement and that they aren't being taken advantage of.

Again, kind of to wrap it up, this bill deals with my history, my livelihood. The oil and gas industry has been very important to me. It's given me the opportunity to get to this position, and I'm very thankful for that. I found it to be a very responsible industry in the past, what I've had to deal with, and I commend them for that. It always seems that rules and regulations and acts are brought out to deal with the less than adequately professionally acting individuals. For the most part I've seen good things happen. I just want to make sure that going forward we all work together as a group to make this bill better and have everybody work for a good outcome.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Member for Medicine Hat. Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. To the member that was just speaking. In your speech you talked about your experience in oil and gas, and you also talked about customers. Do you compare the province as probably, say, the business and the taxpayers as the customers? If so, do you see what would work better in this bill from your past years in public relations and sales, how to change this bill so it would be more usable that way?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Little Bow for that question. I think that one of the strengths I've developed over the years is the customer service side. If you're in that service industry, you don't exist without customers. In this situation, we're a little bit different. You know, if they're not happy with the decision that the Alberta government makes, the voter can't just go to Saskatchewan and say: hey, I like your ideas better; I'm going to side with you. It's not quite that easy and quite that aligned.

There are a few things that you can draw parallels to. Again, I like to think of the constituents in the constituency as customers because we are there to serve them, and I think that's very clear as to why we're here. We are here to serve them and to represent them. You know, they come to us with wants and needs, and they come to us for a reason. Sometimes it's just simply to maybe express small issues; maybe it's to express big issues. But at the end of the day we were put here to be very, very good listeners, right? The most important thing, as the member from our side here was talking about earlier, is having two ears and one mouth, and I think that's key.

I think that the best results are delivered by the best listeners who are also willing to reconfirm the message back to the person they were speaking to, the requester, making sure that the request is fully understood. If we do that and we treat all the people as customers, there's a really, really good chance that we're going to revise the way we think, revise the way we're looking at issues, give us a different slant, a different viewpoint, come up with maybe a different and better solution, maybe an improvement.

I think that's what we're talking about here, taking something that – as was mentioned earlier, it's hard to find something that's bang on first time out. Fresh sets of eyes and people looking at it and offering suggestions can make something that's good great. I think we have an opportunity here. But at the same time we have to be very good listeners on both sides of the House, and we have to hash this out back and forth. We have to make sure that we're hearing what each other is saying. We have to make sure that we're meeting the needs and the wants of many different customers, different parties: landowners, industry, environment, taxpayers.

8:10

If we get that all right, this could be a great, great bill. It could be a huge improvement, again, because we're treading down that path where we're talking about streamlining. Any time you get the idea of streamlining – reducing bureaucracy, reducing costs, reducing regulations, reducing paperwork, just reducing, making things simpler, easier for business – I think you get people's attention that way, and I think that's a positive statement, a positive step. It's a great opportunity, and I'm glad the minister has brought it forward. I think there is a really good chance this could go through with the right amendments.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We still have a little bit of time on 29(2)(a). Are there any other members that would like to comment or question? The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to ask our Member for Medicine Hat if anybody in the oil and gas industry in Medicine Hat specifically talked about the drag that the regulatory burden is causing right now and some positive suggestions to make it better in the oil and gas industry.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, for that question. That's a broad issue. I mean, I think most industries are burdened by regulation, overregulation, red tape, paperwork. The opportunity we have as members of the Legislature is the ability to look at these bills and make sure that there's not too much regulation.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

I would now recognize the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Now for something completely different. I want to rise to express very great concern with the direction set out by Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act. The bill establishes a single organization to regulate energy resources, and that'll be the Alberta energy regulator. In doing so, it folds in responsibility for environmental monitoring under the Department of Energy, a regulator that is set up and operates under the purview of the Department of Energy.

Madam Speaker, it's our view and has been our view for many years as a party that the policy with respect to development of oil and gas resources in this province has been one-sided, has been lopsided, and has been weighted far too heavily in favour of the rapid development and exploitation of oil and gas resources in our province at the expense of other things that are important.

I'll mention two of them because I think they're linked. One is the question of the environment and how we protect the environment, and the other one is property rights. I note that a number of my colleagues from the Wildrose caucus have been talking about how we could improve this bill by putting in some language around property rights. Let's be clear. There has been an ongoing conflict between property owners and the oil and gas industry in this province going back many, many years. Property owners have not all gone the way of some more extreme elements that we're all aware of but have felt that they have had their rights trampled on by a policy of a government that leans very heavily to the oil and gas industry.

I connect that with environmental protection. Because we will not have independent environmental protection, because all decisions will be in the hands of one regulator in the interests of efficiency and making things simple and better for business, as one of my colleagues said just a moment ago, it means that the other factors will ultimately be sacrificed, in my view. I think that it's important that we rebalance the relationship between the oil and gas industry and property owners and that we rebalance the relationship between the oil and gas industry and environmental protection. In this province, in our view, the Energy Resources Conservation Board has not really effectively been about conservation in the past at all. It's been about facilitating the rapid exploitation of our resources.

I'm quite frankly amazed that after so many decades of oil and gas development in this province and the tremendous wealth that that's created and the tremendous contribution to the economy, people are now saying that things are too difficult and too complicated for the oil and gas industry and we need to streamline things further. Let's be clear. If you combine the responsibility for energy policy and facilitating oil and gas development in the same body with the responsibility for protecting the environment, the environment will lose almost every time. There is an inherent conflict of interest that exists when you subsume one responsibility under the other, and there is no question in my mind which is going to be the predominant interest if this bill is passed and if this one-stop regulator is created.

Madam Speaker, a few years ago the Auditor General reported that the unmet environmental liability for cleaning up after just conventional oil and gas in this province was $2 billion. I think that it is indicative of the lack of balance that we've already had.

The bill also makes a regulator responsible for not only the environment but the management of public lands and the conservation and management of water resources. I met just this week with the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties. One of the great concerns that they raised with me is the use of surface water by the oil and gas industry. There are other alternatives, of course, but they are more expensive. Do people honestly believe that this one-stop-shop regulator is going to protect the groundwater of our province, which belongs to all of us, not just to the oil and gas industry? This bill permits the regulator to proceed without any regulatory hearing. I think it's just another example of the inadequacy of this approach.

I think one positive aspect is the increase in fines to half a million dollars for a corporation for noncompliance. We think that should be substantially higher. In the case of megaprojects, that is completely insufficient, and I think that that's a weakness, but it is also a strength because it's certainly better than what exists now.

Madam Speaker, we're fundamentally opposed to the concept of this bill, of eliminating a separate regulator for the environment. I think that it is going to be a very sad day if we proceed with this. I would challenge people here to make a case that the environmental aspects of oil and gas development are going to be properly defended by the regulator that's created under this act. I would love to hear it if you can make a good case that the environment is going to be treated on the same basis as the development of oil and gas resources.

Again, I think that landowners' rights are going to be trampled as well. I want to challenge my colleagues in the Wildrose because I know that you stand up for property rights as did we with Bill 50 and Bill 19 and Bill 23. Before there even was the Wildrose, it was the NDP that was standing up on those issues. I think that the passing of this bill will mean fewer rights for property owners, will mean that the oil and gas companies can run roughshod over property owners. In the next election the NDP will be there to remind your constituents that we stood in this House and said so. [some applause]

Madam Speaker, with that brief and fleeting applause from my colleagues on the right and the other right of the House I will conclude my remarks and sit down. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is now available, and I see that the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills would like to comment or question.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I find myself in a really awkward position on property rights. I think our party is consistent with the socialists.

I guess the one question that I have is that prior to this bill there was an appeal right to the Environmental Appeals Board. If you as a landowner had, for example, a leak on a pipeline and it went into your soil, you would then go to Environment Alberta, and they would come up with a decision, but you could always appeal that to the Environmental Appeals Board. They would say: oh no; you have to do something with that contaminated soil or whatnot. That appeal right is eliminated. Now it's called a reconsideration under the new regulator. I'd like your thoughts on that.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for that question, hon. member. Well, I agree with you that the bill does eliminate that right and replaces it with something that I think is far less adequate, a process far less likely to overturn a decision already made.

You know, I think there's a lot to be said for having some checks and balances with respect to decision-making in the bill. It may be seen by some as bureaucratic excess: too many bodies poking around, and it's too difficult, and so on, just a little extra bureaucracy that you don't need. But I think that there is real value in having one body that can oversee or stop something instead of having just a single decision-making point. I'm not a big fan of the Senate, but I know some of you are, the idea that you don't have just one body that can make all the decisions, that there are some checks and balances. I think that where you get into a problem is if you don't have that kind of thing.

I believe quite strongly that you shouldn't try to combine responsibilities that may be at odds. I'm not saying that it's wrong that the environment is sometimes at odds with oil and gas exploration. It's just the way it is, and it should be reflected in our institutions. A healthy tension is not always a bad thing.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

The hon. Member for Little Bow. [interjections]

Mr. Donovan: It's all right. It's like Whac-A-Mole over here.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. I find it intriguing listening to the previous member here talk about property rights, which I firmly agree with. I'll give the province and the Environment minister credit for this, that they've always had very strong guidelines to follow. Being in oil and gas a little on the side, I mean, there are always guidelines laid out. I think the province has gone a long ways to that. I think there are guidelines in place. I think we want to be a place that does business. I think it's a matter of, as you say, the balance of putting that back and forth. I guess my question is: do you ever think you could see yourself at that point where you'd agree that the province does a good job with environment and tracking pipelines and stuff like that?

Mr. Mason: I think they do a terrible job.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Barnes: Yes, please. I would like to ask the hon. member what he thinks of the component under sections 63 and 64 where landowners voluntarily can register agreements, exploratory and production licences of the oil and gas companies, and then it can be subject to them fulfilling these elements of the agreement.

Mr. Mason: To be honest, hon. member, I am not as knowledgeable about that section as I should be to answer your question.

The Acting Speaker: There are 15 seconds left. The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: I just wondered if the hon. member has had any experience in the Saskatchewan experience in relation to the development of oil and gas.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, three seconds.

Mr. Mason: No.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you for your comments. I recognize the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak on Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act. It is very important for members of this Assembly to engage in debate in order to dig deeper into this legislation and ensure that what is presented on paper, the intent of this bill, translates into sound policy when it's put into practice.

It is of special interest and special concern and utmost desire for me to be involved because of the makeup of Cypress-Medicine Hat. My constituency up until the royalty review and the change in natural gas pricing – I represent the south part of Medicine Hat, approximately a third, and the town of Redcliff – was huge in the natural gas business. We had exploratory companies, head offices, and service companies providing a lot of jobs, a lot of people in town, a lot of income, a lot of royalties for our citizens, providing services and a lot of jobs for our economy.

Baseball is one of my favourite things, and I coached a baseball team about five or six years ago. I was talking to one of the parents from the baseball team who said that from his small town in northern Saskatchewan his entire graduating class of 16 people lived in the Medicine Hat area and worked in our natural gas industry. That's how important that was to our industry and our job growth.

A lot of these companies are second- and third-generation oil and gas companies. They are companies that have taken pride in our community, taken pride in supporting our charities, taken pride in paying our taxes, taken pride in adding to the quality of our lives. Many, many of these people have told me that the fact that Alberta at times is considered one of the very, very worst jurisdictions for doing business costs them money, costs them time, costs them enjoyment. They would like to move to a single regulator if it can be done right.

Cypress-Medicine Hat is a constituency about 80 miles by 80 miles. It runs from the Alberta-Saskatchewan-U.S. border north along the Saskatchewan border about 80 miles to where the South Saskatchewan River crosses the Alberta-Saskatchewan border, about 15 or 20 miles north of a little town called Hilda. From the Saskatchewan border through Medicine Hat it will run straight west past Bow Island, past Burdett, and almost to Grassy Lake, somewhere around 80 miles by 80 miles. When we go south to the American border from there, we get into some of our ranches that are sixth-generation ranchers where the people are now raising their children and their grandchildren. Property rights and this way of life are absolutely crucial to them. I know of some instances of families where they provide many, many jobs, lots of opportunities, and a great quality of life.

In the campaign process, in the time leading up to the actual campaign period when the writ was dropped, of course, there were three or four town hall meetings that I went to. It was amazing – amazing – the involvement and the interest that the rural people have in politics. Amazing. They wanted to talk of property rights, all prepared to handle things in a fair manner, but also wanted to be treated fairly themselves, wanted to be given the opportunity to have due process if necessary, access to the Expropriation Act if really necessary, and treated openly and transparently, especially when it came to the resale of grazing leases and those kinds of things.

My background. I sold real estate for 26 years and am very, very much a novice at politics. It was so refreshing to me when I was out in these town halls meeting all these rural people how interested they were and how willing they were and how willing they were to contribute, how willing they were to contribute their time, their ideas, and in some cases their money. And, yes, a lot of times it was property rights. It's very, very important, this property rights, this merger with the oil and gas industry.

It's also very interesting to Cypress-Medicine Hat now, too, because we're sort of on a collision course with the environment, land-use planning, and Bill 36. Our RAC plan, I think, came out a week or two ago, or our RAC map, I guess. I see that the government is planning some meetings around the south part of the province and around the province to discuss this plan. Cypress-Medicine Hat people are very, very concerned. The urban people are concerned about what the infringement on property rights will do to the economy, what it will do to wealth creation, and what it will do to their freedom of choice. People in the rural parts of Cypress-Medicine Hat feel exactly the same way and with some of the directives, that are fairly subtle at this point, are concerned that if they have an alternate opinion or an alternate idea, they may not be able to find the avenue, they may not be able to find the possibility to sit down and discuss these things in a fair way with all Albertans and with access to due process if necessary. All three of these are coming together at the same time with Bill 2, so I find that particularly interesting.

One thing I've found interesting in my initial days sitting in this House is that it makes me think of one of our implement dealers in Cypress-Medicine Hat who has e-mailed me and called me, very, very concerned about the transition allowance and very, very concerned about doubling the RSP amount. Of course, that's a different story. But why I bring this gentleman up is that he's quite an advertiser on the radio, and his slogan is entrenched in my mind: Buy It Right the First Time. It makes me think of what some of my other colleagues have said earlier to the government side of the floor. This is your opportunity to get it right the first time. Please listen to what some of us are saying. Please feel free to steal our ideas. Please make Alberta a better place.

In the case of this legislation we are debating tonight, I am hearing from Albertans that the intent of this bill is sound, yet there are some major concerns that need to be addressed to ensure that its application does not negatively impact landowners and that the government is not simply making these changes to consolidate their own power. Apparently we're concerned out there.

The present regulatory system for oil and gas projects in our province is frustrating in part because a company must apply to a variety of government entities and boards when seeking approval for a single project. Madam Speaker, I would not be surprised if a company is often required to submit the same information to various government agencies.

I shared the plane back from Edmonton last Thursday night, and I sat with an executive from an oil company who was making a very generous donation to the Medicine Hat College. He indicated to me that there are sometimes over 200 applications for a single project. Nobody hates paperwork more than me, so I have quite a bit of empathy for the good employees and the good oil and gas entrepreneurs in our area that do that. This needless bureaucratic duplication costs industry millions in lost time and productivity as well as lost wages of workers. In short, the economic growth of Alberta is sacrificed. Having one point of contact within the government for a company to deal with when submitting applications, as proposed in this legislation, Bill 2, makes sense if it's done right and is something Albertans and the oil and gas industry have been asking for. We've heard lots from my colleagues tonight about what "done right" means, and again I would ask you to get it right the first time.

I'm concerned, Madam Speaker, that in a rush to consolidate, we'll skip over the deficiencies in the current system as we've seen with Alberta Health Services and its consolidation from 16 regions to nine to one big one. If you want to change a light bulb or get the parking fixed in Medicine Hat, you have to phone Red Deer, and it takes 10 days. Centralization is no cure-all. Sometimes it's worse than the disease. Alberta Health Services took health service delivery in this province backwards. Even to this day the effects of centralization and rushed consolidation are being felt all across the province.

The single-window regulator the government is proposing must streamline regulations and eliminate needless duplication, not create more red tape, more unnecessary bureaucracy. Madam Speaker, if the goal is to make the process more efficient, then I would also argue that it should make the system more cost efficient and not increase costs. The government needs to provide concrete evidence that they will not be creating more bureaucracy. Instead, they should be addressing deficiencies, eliminating this needless duplication, reducing red tape, and saving taxpayers money by implementing a single-window regulator system. I think this can work if it's done right.

I heard many times and I spoke many times during my campaign about the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and the fact that they had put out that only three provinces, with a failing grade of D or less, have flunked the reduction of government bureaucracy and red tape, I believe, for three years in a row. It might be two. Sharing the dubious distinction with Manitoba and Prince Edward Island, unfortunately, is us, Alberta. I remember reading somewhere that this unnecessary regulation and that red tape costs our economy $4 billion a year, money that could be used to generate income, wages, taxes, freedoms, quality of life.

Madam Speaker, I am concerned about how this legislation may affect landowners in my constituency and, indeed, all landowners right across this great province. The track record of this government in terms of respecting the rights of landowners does not, I'm afraid, inspire much confidence. Bills 19, 36, 24, and 50. The amendments as opposed to the desire to get it right the first time. We know this government does not typically listen to landowners. Perhaps they simply do not understand landowners' concerns, or perhaps they simply do not care. For years the Wildrose has been standing up and voicing the concerns landowners bring to us. It sounds like the NDP is doing that as well. It seems that we finally got government to move on one aspect.

I like sections 63 and 64 of this legislation. I see sections 63 and 64 of this legislation as a positive development. These sections will allow landowners to voluntarily register with the new regulator any surface agreement they and an oil and gas firm have negotiated. The word "voluntary" is so nice to see in there. I mean, in the time that I was involved in real estate and in my landowning it's a frustration amongst landowners that the information isn't accessible to everybody, that neighbours are treated differently, that this industry seems to happen too fast, too quickly, without their concerns in mind a lot of times. Providing information will go a long, long way to make that much fairer, much easier, and much more satisfying for all of our landowners so that they, too, feel that they're a greater part in sharing in this prosperity of Alberta.

By registering these agreements, the exploratory and production licence of the oil and gas company will be subject to them fulfilling the elements of the agreement, again a way for the landowner to have a little more strength in the agreement, a way for the oil company to have to be a little more accountable. Accountability is normally good, and that should make it a much, much more prosperous way for us.

8:40

These sections also provide the new regulator with the power to enforce the conditions in surface agreements so landowners will no longer have to deal with conflicts through the court system, which my colleague from Medicine Hat touched on briefly.

However, getting one thing right does not excuse this government for getting so many other things wrong when it comes to landowners' rights. I am certainly hearing from many landowners that they do not support this legislation because it actually takes away some avenues of appeal that are available to landowners within the current system.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Under 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I do have a bit of a question for the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. You know, he referenced some previous decisions around landowners' rights and so on. I'm going to read him a few pieces of the act and just basically ask him to comment on the proposition that this particular bill has many of the same principles, or features, at work that Bill 50 did when it was first introduced, that it is, in fact, a centralization of power and an elimination of opportunities for citizens to involve themselves in the process and have a say in the process.

Section 56 says:

56 Subject to sections 38, 42 and 45, every decision of the Regulator or a person carrying out the powers, duties and functions of the Regulator is final and shall not be questioned or reviewed in any court by application for judicial review or otherwise, and no order shall be made or process entered or proceedings taken in any court, by way of injunction, certiorari, mandamus, declaratory judgment, prohibition, quo warranto, application to quash or set aside or otherwise, to question, review, prohibit or restrain the Regulator or any of the Regulator's proceedings.

I had an opportunity to look to some of the sections there that this is subject to. Section 38, for example, says:

38(1) An eligible person may request a review of a reviewable decision by filing a request for regulatory review with the Regulator in accordance with the rules.

(2) The filing of a request for regulatory review does not operate to stay the reviewable decision.

So some things are reviewable, some things are not reviewable, but you've got to go back and ask the same people that made the decision to do the review.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but this is questions and comments. You're supposed to question. He's supposed to comment.

Mr. Mason: I'm just giving some background, but thank you for that direction, Madam Speaker. I'd ask him to comment whether or not he feels that the centralization of power over citizen's rights, whether they're property rights or otherwise, is a common feature between this and the original Bill 50.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you for that question, hon. member. Get it right the first time. Bill 50. Now we're looking at Bill 8. I think everybody on this side was saying that if we're going to review going forward, if we're admitting that we were totally, totally wrong, so we're going to redo it going forward, let's look backwards as well and make sure that Albertans are getting the economic value of those lines and not throwing billions of dollars away, leaving a lot less money to circulate in the economy and costing us all jobs, taxes, the opportunity to do that.

I know that some of my other colleagues, too, had expressed concern that there wasn't the opportunity for appeal, that there wasn't the opportunity for things to be reviewed. It's paramount that citizens in a democracy have the chance to appeal to a higher source.

I spoke of those town halls earlier. Bill 50 brought out a lot of those town halls. Some of our members have talked greatly about how property rights and stable electricity prices are crucial for keeping business and attracting business to this province. We know what Bill 50 and now Bill 8 is going to do to not improve that and, obviously, harm that. If they get this Bill 2 wrong, where it doesn't attract oil and gas and business we need to provide jobs in the right way, Saskatchewan and B.C. will be very pleased that we will be doing more to help them.

Thank you for that question.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any other questions and comments under 29(2)(a)?
The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm just wondering if the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, because his riding is a mixture of urban and rural – I think you end up wearing two hats sometimes. How do you anticipate working with your stakeholders to balance industry with landowners and property rights and the environment to make sure that everybody is treated fairly?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, you have three seconds.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, hon. member, for that question.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. A pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act. You've got to hand it to this government. They have a way with words. They use all the right words: "enhancement," "efficiency," "responsible." Unfortunately, they do not follow through. The history of this government and its unwillingness to stand up to our most powerful industry, especially in light of many of the stories we've heard lately about massive donations – we're still gathering information on the just massive donations this government has received from the oil and gas industry. It is staggering.

And to see the way they continue to dance around the reality that we have devastated a significant part of this province – we have overtaxed the water system, water quality and water quantity in the south of the province, where we've had a tremendous amount of oil and gas development over the years, including groundwater threats that are increasingly evident and, unfortunately, still aren't characterized accurately as far as what is natural contamination and what is industrial contamination. I'll say more about that later.

The boreal forest, of course, and the First Nations challenges that have been experienced, where this government seems to believe that consultation simply means calling a meeting and sometimes listening to what's said but certainly not accommodating the interests, the values, the long-term well-being of our First Nations people. Not to mention the total disregard for the climate in all of this development in this province that has led us to be the number one carbon emitter per person on the planet. We are number one, and what a distinction for us.

Now they're coming to us today to say they truly want to make things more efficient and effective. Those are the words. They want to enhance assurance. Well, whose assurance? I guess that's the question. We see anything but reassurance in the history of this government in relation to oil and gas and other developments in the province.

In fact, the oil and gas industry has been the major logging impact in the province. It's not the logging industry per se but the oil and gas industry that has cut more lumber in the province than any. Nice to see that they're coming together to co-operate in some ways on roads and linear disturbances, but we have a profound deficit in this province that is accelerating at about 3 and a half per cent per year, higher than almost any other jurisdiction in the world, in terms of linear disruption and impact on agricultural productivity, water quality, and, of course, the air. We are as a resource industry obviously running or at least generating a lot of our wealth. It's a challenge for us.

But when is this government going to step up to the challenge and stop hiding behind more words? When are they going to deliver on a commitment to future generations and say: "We have a plan. We are going to allow certain developments here and not here. We are going to ensure that we replace wetlands that are disrupted by oil and gas activity. There will be no net loss of wetlands in this province. We will be leaders on the planet in carbon-efficient reductions. We are going to take seriously our commitment to future generations. We are going to manage the pace and the scope of development in this province to ensure that we err on the side of protection as opposed to development. We are going to put money second to well-being, environmental sustainability, and integrity as leaders and decision-makers.”

The most fundamental threat in Alberta today is not our lack of resources or the pace at which we are developing them, however. The most fundamental threat is the loss of trust between this government and its citizens, the profound disconnection between government and the people, and a profound disconnection between words and actions.

These are not Lougheed Tories, Madam Speaker. We paid tribute to the former Premier Lougheed last month, and there were tremendous accolades given him. One would have hoped that his legacy would live on in terms of actions, but this has clearly not been the case in the last couple of decades and is not evident in the hubris in this bill.

Albertans are not fooled, but they are discouraged. They have become cynical. They have in many cases lost hope in what is possible in this province to influence public policy and to see a better future for themselves and their children.

Lougheed reluctantly spoke out forcefully and persuasively against this lack of leadership, the lack of foresight, the lack of science-based decision-making, the lack of honesty, admitting that it is the market, not the government, reflecting the people's wishes. It is the market that directs every significant decision about our resource development.

Let me quote from this bill: Albertans wish to realize the full benefits of Alberta's oil and gas resources. End of quote. Unfortunately, the government continues to give away this wonderful motherlode to foreign companies and foreign governments. Why they see no value in tapping into this on behalf of the people of Alberta is still a mystery, but that is part of the contradiction between saying one thing and doing another.

The proof is in the pudding. Look at the environmental and economic record of Norway, for example, where in one-half the time they have amassed almost $600 billion of savings through their oil and gas industry. Where are we? We have $15 billion in the heritage savings trust fund that is under threat. We have groundwater that is under threat and has significantly deteriorated in quantity and quality, at least where we know about it and have mapped it. We are still grossly behind in mapping our groundwater.

What is abundantly clear, then, is the lack of real planning for future livelihood. What we get is talk, Public Affairs Bureau spin, and a continuation in subverting real, responsible land-use planning. Still in 2012 we have no land-use plan for this province. We are allowing everything to go everywhere any time it's wanted as long as it meets very limited standards.

There's no recognition of environmental goods and services. There is talk of this buzzword “cumulative impact assessment.” Does anybody on the other side know what cumulative impact assessment is? Do you have the skills in the department, Madam Minister of the Environment, to do comprehensive impact assessment, a very complex, expensive, and highly technical review of every impact in a particular zone of any human activity? I find it very difficult to believe that a department that has been cut by millions of dollars over the last decade and is now being cut even more to add them to the resources conservation side of the equation is doing anything like cumulative impact assessment or making any decisions based on that cumulative impact assessment. I'm sorry. These, again, are words without substance.

We have to be ashamed of not spending twice, three times, or four times more on the environment department and leaving this department head to cope with totally inadequate data, totally inadequate resources, lack of technical ability, and simply a spin machine that tells us everything is fine. Not acceptable, Madam Speaker. Albertans have become deeply cynical about how we are developing this province and fear for their future and their children's.

Water is the lifeblood of this province, not oil and gas. In 2006 this caucus managed to push then environment minister Boutilier to begin a groundwater study to see whether there were impacts of resource activity on our groundwater. We began it in 2006. We had no knowledge of impacts on groundwater. He agreed to do this, and we began a six-year boondoggle with thousands and thousands of public dollars and millions of industry dollars that have gone into a pool of data that is now indiscernible, unanalyzable, with variable techniques in sampling, no connection to the resource wells, no ability to connect gas from a resource well to gas in groundwater.

This department, or its spin machine, had the temerity in March of 2011 to have up on its website a one-page summary of this baseline groundwater analysis saying: no evidence that the resource industry has impacted our groundwater. That's gone now. It's no longer on the website because I wrote about it and condemned the department for its false reporting.

The four-member panel of experts at the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary who set up the study were appalled at what's happened to that critical baseline groundwater study associated at the time with coal-bed methane but looking at all kinds of well activity and impacts on groundwater. They made 16 recommendations after a year of watching this fiasco unfold. None of them have been adequately addressed, and there has been no review of groundwater impacts from resource activity in this province.

Who can believe what this government says about the state of our environment, the state of our planning, the state of who runs the province? It's very clear who runs the province. It's not the people. It's not the government. It's the resource industries.

The Energy Resources Conservation Board has a long history of struggling with this conflicting role of developing the industry and regulating the industry at the same time. Seventy per cent funded by industry, it has all the appearance of struggling with what is understandable, conflicts of interest, and it handles them almost universally in favour of the industry. Fewer than 1 per cent of any applications get turned down.

So hastening the review process under whatever guise – efficiency, effectiveness – flies in the face of our experience. We do not believe this government can manage our resources responsibly, and we do not believe they will do anything but continue to promote an industry that is essential to Alberta but not as essential as a longer term vision, meaningful land-use planning, and better water management, a clear commitment to our water as the life blood of all our future endeavours.

I think it should be clear by now, Madam Speaker, that we cannot begin to say how doubtful we are that this is progress for Alberta. This is another bill that would purport to do things that it will never accomplish. There is only one thing to be done in the circumstances, and that is that Albertans need to pluck up courage, listen to the scientists in our community that continue to be silenced and marginalized, and stand up to a government that's not doing its job.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. My question for the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View is to inquire what he was about to say about the silencing of scientists.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you very much to the member. I think it's been clear over at least the last five years that water has been at the forefront of rhetoric but not reality, with the Athabasca River having been monitored by the regional aquatic management program and it ignoring major contaminants, with major evidence that it had significant deficiencies, no objectivity, no clear guidelines for action on certain items, and no independence from the industry.

It took people like Dr. David Schindler and others to blow the whistle on a government that continued to deny the evidence and didn't want to find evidence and didn't want to do a thorough analysis, that it was too expensive. I'm not sure what their reasons might be. In a multibillion-dollar industry they were spending a pittance on monitoring. This has been an embarrassment to Albertans. It's been an embarrassment to our international market. It's part of the reason why there have been discussions across the globe, especially in Europe, about our oil and the negative impacts it's had on our environment and our sustainability.

This government has never been keen on getting answers to questions that might change their plans, that might change direction, that might slow development. Unfortunately, our children and our grandchildren are going to pay the price for that wilful blindness, I would say, and unwillingness to do the job of government, which is simple: careful, comprehensive, scientific policy analysis and thinking about the long term in the context of the precautionary principle that we take care of future generations as much as we do today and the principle of polluter pays. Those basic principles have been a shambles in this government. The scientists are the very heart of these kinds of decisions and enforcement of standards. It may be true to say that we have high standards, Madam Speaker. The problem is that we don't monitor them, and we don't enforce them.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

There are two minutes left. Anyone else with a question or comment?

Seeing none, we'll move to our next speaker, the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. With a view to the hour and some of the enthusiasm that I see about the Chamber tonight, I hope I don't turn this into a complete bedtime story and that everybody is asleep by the time I'm done. [interjections] Well, or possibly not even a fairytale. We'll see how you respond to that.

Madam Speaker, I've lived 59 years within six miles of the Saskatchewan border. Only recently have they embraced a change in government. The socialistic form of government that they've had for many years previous was a boondoggle for the province. They are only now struggling to get 1 million people. There are 1 million people in the city of Calgary, and this province is approaching four times the population and four times the growth.

It's my humble view that a hundred of years ago, when the provinces were formed at the same time, they had equal opportunity, but that province took a different path than this province and embraced a completely different form of government and has not been successful. I might like to add, though, as a point in their defence, that they may have saved some of their oil field resources and are now selling them for significantly more than the province of Alberta.

I'd like to go back to another example that began some one hundred years ago in the state of Texas, and it's called the Texas Railroad Commission. This was originally created to regulate railroads and express companies. Today the agency has nothing to do with railroads despite its name. Some years ago the U.S. federal government took over the regulation of railroads, trucking, and buses, but the Texas Railroad Commission, nevertheless, kept its name. It's a viable option. It's been working for over a hundred years. It's a completely functioning agency, and it's a practical, direct method of accountability and transparency.

The members of this Texas Railroad Commission are elected, not appointed political hacks. These people are elected and, therefore, directly accountable to the members of those industries in that state. The Texas Railroad Commission regulates the oil and gas industry, natural gas utilities, pipeline safety, the natural gas and hazardous liquids pipeline industry, and surface coal mining with uranium mining. It should be noted that the regulation of natural gas utilities has not been popular in their state. Since 1894 commissioners of the Texas Railroad Commission have been elected in a staggered six-year term. One commissioner seeks election every two years, and the commissioners decide among themselves who will chair the three-person commission. The Texas Railroad Commission has a budget of nearly $80 million.

In the neighbouring state of Oklahoma the Oklahoma Corporation Commission is a regulatory counterpart of the Texas Railroad Commission, and its commissioners are elected in the same manner for the same term as in Texas. These members have been elected since 1907. In Alberta elections could be held every four years in conjunction with municipal and county elections, with one commissioner elected during one cycle and two the next. That being said, provision for Lloydminster would have to be made because its municipal election occurs with the Saskatchewan cycle.

The point I'm trying to make here, members of the House, is that this Bill 2 is simply a reiteration of many regulatory bodies that we have in this province, and with the historical development and the opposition that's come forward to property rights, landowners' positions on accountability and transparency, and even the Premier's statements on transparency and accountability, I view that we need to embrace a completely new and completely different body. I'm disgusted in this legislation where it talks about the ministerial direction to a regulator, page 35, under part 4 of the regulation, section 68(2): "A rule made under this section prevails over any rule that is made or amended by the Regulator with which it conflicts or is inconsistent to the extent of the conflict or inconsistency." Some of this is complete doublespeak.

It relates back to the comments by my learned friend the member from Calgary when he talked about Premier Lougheed's funeral. The quote from Premier Lougheed's funeral that struck most with me, Madam Speaker, was that he believed that the people should be above the government, that the government should not be above the people. He led that charge some 40 years ago, and you see the fruits of some of that coming forward with the election of 17 Wildrose members in this province. It was historical to come forward with an opposition like we have, and we're pleased and proud to defend property rights in this province.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any members who would like to question and comment?

Seeing none, we'll move on to our next speaker, and that would be the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Madam Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to speak this evening on Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act. After listening to my colleagues' comments as well as to the other opposition members here, perhaps it should be called the Irresponsible Energy Development Act.

Madam Speaker, I too am disappointed with what the government has delivered in this piece of legislation. I agree wholeheartedly with what I thought was the original intent of the bill, to streamline the process for new oil and gas projects, but I do not believe the bill does a good job of doing that. My Wildrose colleagues and I want to see red tape cut in order to foster more economic growth in our oil and gas industry. While we are rich in energy, Alberta is one of the worst jurisdictions for development because of this red tape.

A recent CFIB report indicated that we are losing about $4 billion every year because of the regressive amount of red tape the provincial government requires from our industries. We applaud the government for working with industry to try and change that embarrassing fact. Bill 2 could be a step forward, but it's not clear that it will do the job. The Wildrose believes that there is a place for government regulation, especially in efficiently maintaining a balance between environment, landowners, and industry. It is not clear that this bill will generate efficiency, and it does not maintain the balance between the various areas. Madam Speaker, we can do a better job than this.

My expertise is not in the oil and gas industry. It is in municipal government, where one thing that I did learn – and I learned that very quickly as mayor of a small village – is that if you want to upset people, infringe on their property rights. It doesn't matter if you're trying to do the right thing or not. If you're telling them their grass is too high or their yard is littered or whatever, they feel it's an infringement on their property rights, and that's how you upset them. That's what's happened in the past.

On this issue of landowner rights the way this bill deals with hearings and reviews is very problematic. The bill reduces landowners' rights, which have already been marginalized enough by this out-of-touch PC government. It is a central Wildrose principle that one of the most fundamental roles of government is the protection and the preservation of property rights. Without such protection our entire economy is in jeopardy. Bill 2 does not take property rights seriously, and it should. Again, Madam Speaker, we could do better, much better.

Property rights in my constituency are largely the reason I am in this Assembly today. I wish it was my good looks and my persuasive nature, but sadly it's not. It was both unneeded power lines and the basic landowner rights that we were being deprived of. During my campaign as I door-knocked, talked to groups in coffee shops, town hall meetings, and so on, I consistently heard that property rights was their biggest issue. This government has damaged that.

The legislation basically makes a proposed regulator into a new position with sweeping powers and who will answer only to the minister, not to Albertans through their elected representatives in this Legislature. Like bills 19, 24, 36, and 50, Bill 2 centralizes power under the minister's hand-picked regulator, with plenty of room for ongoing interference by the minister.

Madam Speaker, the intent of this bill is sound, but the way it reads makes its application very, very concerning. I urge the government to work with us to improve this bill in a collaborative manner and make it a piece of legislation that will actually help our province, not harm it, and make it one that we can all be proud of and pass on to those who sit here after us.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any members who would like to comment or question?

Seeing none, we'll move on to our next speaker, the hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll keep my comments very short. I want to echo the comments of my colleagues tonight. The Wildrose is in full support of the intent of Bill 2 and what it is trying to accomplish, which is a one-window regulator to streamline things, to make our energy industry more efficient, to make it easier for energy companies to get their work done and develop our resources in a way that benefits Albertans with jobs and royalties and all the other great things that come from that economic activity. So we believe this is a very good idea.

The problem, of course, as it is often, is implementation, and some of the issues include respecting the rule of law, respecting property rights, and making sure that we get due process rights, making sure that due process rights are protected unequivocally in this bill and that landowners and their rights are completely protected and respected so that if there is an issue, they have the opportunity to be notified of those issues, to respond to those issues, to appeal those issues in a way that is fair to them.

We think we can have a win-win here, and we think that if we can have some multipartisan support and work on we can make this into a bill that we could all go home and be happy with after it's done in a little while and not talk about, frankly, for four years or more, not make it an election issue, not make it an ongoing issue, not have to be back here in a year or two years to fix up some of the mistakes and all the wasted money and time and resources that might happen if those mistakes aren't corrected, not have to run folks across the province doing town halls and organizing all these things in order to raise awareness and create, you know, frankly, political headaches and time headaches for all of us when we want to be moving forward instead of getting stuck on that like we did with Bill 36, Bill 50, and Bill 19. It took four years to unwind that mess, and we're still not completely unwound from it, specifically the power lines. It took us four years to get so much of that mess straightened out, at least enough to carry on.

This is a new government and a new Premier, essentially a new Premier, and they have an opportunity to do things differently than the previous administration under Premier Stelmach. Premier Stelmach was a very good man, but one of the problems that he had, I think, was shooting first before aiming with regard to the property rights bills. That was the problem with those property rights bills.

We have an opportunity here to do it right. That means putting this on the table and making sure that we carefully comb over it like most parliamentary democracies do. In the federal government bills like this are sent to proper committees. We take a little extra time – three, four, six months, whatever it is – to make sure we get it right, to make sure that all stakeholders are happy with the bill or enough stakeholders are happy with the bill, that we come up with something that every one of us can stand up and support. This is a bill that we want to support, but we can't support it in its present form.

Let's take the time. We have these committees set up. We were going to bring a motion here to refer it to a standing policy committee. We've been asked not to do that just yet. Let the government have a chance to discuss it at their caucus. We will do so. We respect that request. I think that it would be a great idea and a great show of reaching out across the aisle and reaching out to Albertans, specifically the 450,000 or so that voted for our party as well as many others that voted for other parties, especially in rural Alberta, to say: "You know what? We are listening, and we're going to do it right this time. We've got this great idea. Everyone agrees it's a great idea, and we're going to make sure we implement it perfectly this time."

If it takes an extra six months, you know, the world isn't going to end in six months. Our industry isn't going to shut down in six months. We can survive another six months if it means getting this thing right.

So I hope that the government will take that offer of bipartisanship. We're close, too. There are probably six to eight amendments max that need to be implemented to make this thing hum and be perfect, but we're not there yet. It does not protect landowners, and this is going to be a problem going forward. If the changes are not made, there's going to be constant friction in this House over it, and I guarantee that as implementation goes on, as landowners groups organize and so forth, it's going to turn into a mess.

9:20

Let's do it differently this time. We have representation on both sides here, from rural Albertans across the province, certainly in the south, obviously, with Wildrose and in the north, obviously, with PC with one exception. That means we both represent these folks, and of course this applies also to folks living in urban areas as well but mostly to those in rural areas. Let's do it right. Let's refer it to the committee, and I hope at caucus tomorrow the government will do that and come back on Monday with an agreement to put this into committee.

With that, Madam Speaker, I would like to move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 5 New Home Buyer Protection Act

[Adjourned debate October 30: Mr. Hancock]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise and speak to Bill 5, the New Home Buyer Protection Act. It's really a sterling piece of legislation. I can't do anything but congratulate the government on this. I think it's progressive. It's addressing many of the issues that Albertans have said they wanted to address.

It makes home warranties mandatory and standardizes minimum coverage for labour and materials, the building envelope, and major structural components. What can you say except that it will ensure that when people buy something, they have a much stronger sense of what they're getting, and they can hold accountable the various elements of the building that are essential to safety and health for many years to come. It provides for a minimum coverage of one year for labour and materials, two years for defects and labour, five years for the building envelope with a requirement for the warranty provided to offer the consumer the option to purchase additional years of coverage, and 10 years for major structural components.

This is a huge, huge step for Alberta. It's been sought for many years, obviously, by homeowners, but it's also been pressed in this Legislature for many years by the opposition. It's well written. It's clear. It's something people know they're getting. I, for one, am proud to stand here and support the work that has gone into this and how it's going to benefit all of us and our children and set a new standard for building in the province.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Standing Order 29(2) is not in order at this time.

Mr. Rowe: Madam Speaker, as the Municipal Affairs critic for the Wildrose Official Opposition I am pleased to speak today on Bill 5, the New Home Buyer Protection Act. To begin with, I would like to congratulate the Minister of Municipal Affairs on bringing forward a solid piece of consumer legislation. I want to thank him personally for consulting with me over the last couple of days on some issues and some questions that I had. I think that kind of collaboration goes a long way in getting these bills through, so I do appreciate that very much.

I don't think any member would argue against taking steps to enhance consumer protection, and in fact I think bringing forward consumer protection measures for the largest purchase most Albertans will ever make in their lifetimes, their home, was long overdue.

Alberta homeowners and builders have been consulted, and in general they are telling me they are supportive of the measures in this bill. I know there are a few groups who still have some questions about how the measures in this legislation will be implemented, but I trust that the minister is also aware of this and that he will work with them to address their concerns.

Madam Speaker, I fully support the principle of this bill, as do many of my Wildrose colleagues. However, there are a couple of things within the legislation that I am hopeful the government can clarify for us.

First, I remain concerned about how warranties for modular homes will be applied under this act. Modular homes are built in a factory, they're purchased, and then they're transported out of that factory to a location chosen by the new homeowner. But before the modular home can be lived in, a foundation must be poured for it to stand on, and all the wiring and the piping, et cetera, must be hooked up to it. Where does one warranty start, where does another one start, and how is that going to be handled? Those are questions that we can get feedback on, and I'm sure we can come to an agreement on those.

Under this legislation modular homes are treated the same as any other single home. However, the fact remains that most of the building, as I said, is done in a factory, and some of the work is done where the home is installed. I sincerely hope the government has put some thought into this and can explain how, given the unique circumstances under which a modular home is constructed, a modular-home owner can obtain a home warranty that covers all aspects of their home, the entire point of this legislation. How can the modular-home dealer provide a warrantee when they do not build a foundation or install the wiring, et cetera? Will the purchaser of a modular home fall into the owner-builder category and purchase a warranty on their own? Clarification is needed, and I look forward to hearing it from the minister.

Madam Speaker, I also have a major concern around warranties for an owner-builder. I am pleased that it will be the choice of the owner-builder as to whether or not they purchase a home warranty. However, if this act is passed, mandatory home warranties will cover new homes for up to 10 years. Therefore, if an owner-builder builds a new home and there's a possibility they will sell their home within 10 years, they will be required to purchase a warranty for the remaining warranty time prior to the sale.

It is inevitable that the owner-builders will construct a new home without having any intention to move and will not purchase a warranty because they have done the work themselves, but we live in a mobile society, and people often have to make an unforeseeable move due to employment, family obligations, and so on. If this is the case, it seems probable that the owner-builder could have difficulty purchasing a warranty, a warranty that is necessary to be able to complete the sale of their home. I would hate to see Albertans punished if they find themselves in these circumstances by being unable to obtain that home warranty. Has the government thought this through, and do they have a plan to deal with situations such as the one I have outlined?

Madam Speaker, I look forward to hearing from the government on these two points I have raised. As I already stated, the principle of this bill is good, and I believe if we can work together and iron out these few kinks, we will end up with a piece of legislation that will likely benefit all Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills is the third speaker, so now Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available to anyone who would like to question or comment. Are there any members?

Seeing none, we'll move to our next speaker, and that would be the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my great privilege tonight to rise once again and speak on behalf of this bill. We're debating the second reading of the New Home Buyer Protection Act. I know that I support the intent of this act, to protect the buyers of new homes.

You know, I remember the feeling that I had when I purchased my first new home. It was one of pride, and it was one of excitement. It was really an amazing feeling that this home was now mine, and I could make it home. Now, these feelings can last for a long time, and I think the intent of this bill is to make sure that these feelings remain there even when there are some defects in the home that need to be fixed, that there is some protection for the homeowner. I think that the intent of this bill before us is to give the buyers of homes a little bit more protection in case of these defects.

I'm happy to stand here and commend everybody on the work that they've done, especially in talking about what the warranties are going to cover. There are a few extensions in this: defects in the materials and labour for one year, extending materials and labour and the delivery and distribution of those systems at least to two years, defects in the building envelope for at least five years, structural defects for 10 years, and then the option for homeowner-builders to purchase additional coverage to extend even further to defects in the building envelope and defects in other prescribed components of the new home. It really is a pleasure to see legislation that comes forward that really does keep the consumer in mind and does look to protect the consumer.

Oh, boy. I'm trying to shorten this up here since this is really, actually, a good piece of legislation.

With that, I'm going to leave it there and just say, you know, that the work that has been done here in the House on this is commendable, and thank you so much for your time.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any members who wish to comment or ask questions?

Seeing none, we'll move to our next speaker, the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 5, the New Home Buyer Protection Act. I, too, support the intent of this bill, to enhance consumer protection for the largest purchase most Alberta consumers will ever make, their home.

First, I'd like to acknowledge and thank all builders out there. There are many of them, and there are a lot of great builders who are in terms of customer service already providing good product and providing warranties to their customers. In fact, 80 per cent of new homes built in Alberta already have warranty coverage although it is for a shorter time period than the 10 years that this bill proposes. Some are five.

I do know many people in the home-building sector, including my wife, whose small company completes about 10 to 15 new builds a year. Indeed, my colleagues and I have been speaking with home builders across this province to get their thoughts on this legislation, and they are generally in favour. I think there's agreement that it is in everyone's best interest for homeowners to be protected against the many things that may go wrong with their home through no fault of their own such as defects in materials, structure, and, indeed, the entire building envelope.

I was pleased to see in the legislation that the owner-builder will be able to choose for themselves whether or not to purchase a warranty for the home they have built themselves. This makes sense as many Albertans are qualified and choose to build their own home, and they should not be forced to purchase a warranty on their own work. I am also pleased to see that if they do sell it within the 10 years, they will have to get the new-home warranty protection for the new buyer, who of course could be the innocent buyer.

I, too, am concerned about the aspects on modular homes, the affordability impact that may have, and how hard it is to administer and regulate that.

Madam Speaker, in conclusion, this bill contains good measures like the ones I just outlined. However, there is one thing that really jumped out at me when I looked the legislation over, and that was the amount of some of the fines under the New Home Buyer Protection Act. I'm hoping to hear some more about this and the direction of the government on that.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any members who wish to comment or question?

Seeing none, we'll move to the next speaker, the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Much appreciated. I, too, rise to speak in favour of this bill. I think it's a strong bill and a good piece of legislation, and I commend the government for putting it forward.

My wife and I recently went through the process of purchasing a new home, and I can assure the House that it is a stressful procedure. Having a strong warranty in place is the reassurance that Albertans need to ensure that our housing market stays strong, that our new builds and our starts stay high. I think that, you know, for the most part every once in a while a blind squirrel finds a nut, and I would like to congratulate this government for doing just that.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any members that would like to comment or question?

Seeing none, I would ask the hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the Minister of Municipal Affairs to close debate.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would move second reading of Bill 5, the New Home Buyer Protection Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 6 Protection and Compliance Statutes Amendment Act, 2012

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you. It's a real honour to rise this evening and offer comments as we begin discussion in Committee of the Whole on Bill 6, Protection and Compliance Statutes Amendment Act, 2012. Madam Chair, Albertans have the right to expect a safe workplace, the right to feel secure in the belief that work done around and for them is in keeping with the safety codes that are in place, and the right to expect to be treated fairly in business transactions.

This act amends the Occupational Health and Safety Act, the Safety Codes Act, and the Fair Trading Act. The intent of this legislation is to ensure willing and active compliance with existing regulations by creating new penalties and bolstering those that already exist for those who ignore the provisions of the three acts being amended.

I want to take this opportunity to make some further notes to address questions I've heard in the House through the past week. There were some questions raised on consultations. I want to be clear. We have consulted with industry and stakeholders about administrative penalties and ticketing. It's been a platonic and productive discussion. We did not hear anything surprising. Neither industry owners and their associations nor workers and labour groups would seek legislation that would see their own members penalized.

Our administrative penalty framework achieves balance in that penalties can be levied against both employers and workers. This is important. Everyone has a responsibility when it comes to workplace safety. Employers, employees, and government have a shared responsibility to keep our workplaces and workers safe. Bill 6 provides the tools to hold people accountable when they put others at risk.

There was also some discussion on how OHS admin penalties will be negotiated and imposed. Again, to be clear, OHS officers will recommend the penalty based on specific criteria. The amount of the penalty will be a base amount plus adjustments depending on the degree of risk and the seriousness of the contravention. If the same contravention is recorded again within 24 months, Madam Chair, the base amount is doubled.

As this is an omnibus bill, it affects three acts. The appeal mechanism: on that point I'd like to address some of the discussion around there. Bill 6 will amend the OHS act, sections 7, 16, and 17, to provide the OH and S Council the ability to hear appeals of administrative penalties and provide the appropriate tools and procedures to deal with this new category of appeals.

Under the Fair Trading Act their admin penalty appeals will be heard by an appeal board appointed by the minister or by regulation.

Finally, under the Safety Codes Act this increases the maximum prosecution fines, so the normal court appeals mechanism applies.

Again, Madam Chair, we are proud of and grateful to the majority of Albertans, who respectfully comply with the rules, and we are confident that those who do not will see these measures as a meaningful incentive to improve their practices. Albertans have the right to safe and healthy workplaces, to know that those working around them are respecting safety codes, and to be treated fairly on their end of the business deal. This legislation helps protect those rights. Health and safety is a shared responsibility between both parties and government, and we are moving forward with an equitable solution that will make Alberta workplaces safer and hold people accountable when they put others at risk.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Madam Chair. Generally I'm speaking in favour of this bill. The only concern that I have with it is under section 158, which discusses the administrative penalties and how and why an administrative penalty can be levied against someone who has failed to comply with the act. It indicates there initially that the fines could not exceed $100,000, and then there's an amendment saying that the fines could not exceed $300,000. That's a substantial amount of money.

That being said, there needs to be a discussion on the inadvisability of having OH and S administrative penalties make their way into government general revenues. It would seem to me that we need to ensure that victims of those that are not in compliance shouldn't be forgotten through this whole process. In a just society we need to ensure that these people are not revictimized by not being compensated if they're affected. An example of this, of course, would be that if a piece of siding falls off a building in a city and strikes a child, injuring her, should that family not be compensated for that? If so, would it not be realistic that that compensation could come from a fund that is provided for by the administrative penalties rather than having those funds going back into general revenue?

Under section 8 of the Victims of Crime Act the administrative penalties are subject to a surcharge, and that surcharge flows back into the victims of crime fund. However, that does not change my mind on the inadvisability of these administrative penalties flowing back into general revenue.

Several parts of the Fair Trading Act and the delegated authorities that are under it already envision protection funds for consumers. For example, the Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council, which is the delegated authority that regulates the automotive sales and repair industry under the Fair Trading Act, has a compensation fund that it manages for the protection of consumers. Ideally, the new administrative penalties under this bill could create a similar fund and have those flow to that fund, which would be managed for the protection of those affected by people who don't comply. Unfortunately, this bill before the House doesn't contemplate this.

You know, we need to make it clear to Albertans that we're not creating deterrent taxes; rather, we're looking for ways to eliminate these problems and to compensate the victims when there is a problem. If these administrative fines were to achieve a meaningful purpose beyond more deterrence, then the money must flow to the victim and grants relating to the programs that benefit victims. Otherwise, these penalties are only a deterrent tax and will only have that type of legitimacy.

I guess I'm asking the government to take a look at how these administrative penalties are applied and where those funds go and ensure that we're looking at those victims affected by anything that might happen under this bill are actually compensated by that rather than having that money just flow as what could be considered a deterrent tax back into the general coffers.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 6, Protection and Compliance Statutes Amendment Act, 2012. Again I would have to be quite positive about this government's role in recognizing that we need and have called for new penalties and increased fines as a way of encouraging compliance with the Occupational Health and Safety Act and the Safety Codes Act and that we fully support reasonable measures that will enhance consumer protection, make worksites safer, and reduce worksite fatalities. We believe that having adequate penalties and fines in place will positively affect site practices.

Having said that, I guess, Madam Chair, it raises the question about similar standards on industrial farming operations and the need and the opportunity here to amend this bill and add in protection for paid farm workers on those industrial operations that do not involve family members, that are clearly large, that are clearly involving machinery, electrical hazards, chemical hazards, transportation vehicles that pose a risk and may not be meeting standards, that are killing and injuring paid farm workers every year in this province and are still subject to no investigation because they have no occupational health and safety standards.

There are no fatality investigations in these cases. We don't learn from them because there's no research coming out of them. We don't know the numbers of farm injuries in this province because they're not registered in our hospitals and in our emergency rooms as farm injuries so that we can gather statistics and actually know how much injury and death we have that's specifically related to inadequate, unsafe practices and conditions on these operations.

Judge Barley several years ago, after reviewing the Kevan Chandler fatality in Black Diamond, indicated that education was only part of the solution here. He admonished the government to get busy and legislate occupational health and safety standards in industrial farming operations. I think it's clear Albertans want that. They want to feel proud of the way we are treating our food producers in this province. We want to follow ethical standards, standards that are world-wide except for the poorest developing countries in the world.

As I've commented before and will probably continue to comment on ad nauseam – I hope you've got bags over there – there's a very serious dimension to this. Some of you may know that this month Lorna Chandler received a settlement from the death of her husband six years ago in the grain elevator in Black Diamond. Because the company had no workers' compensation, she had to go to court. She's been fighting this company in court to get any kind of compensation for the death of her husband, living with two children, a widow. Partly as a result of this lawsuit, that she had to with great difficulty bring to bear, the company went bankrupt and is no longer able to function. They had 40 employees, so it has done damage to not only her and her family; it has damaged the company that was providing grain services in the Black Diamond area, the Tongue Creek Feeders.

This is a failure of government when we see the problem and we allow a loophole to put people at risk, children at risk. Without compensation people have to fight for the very most basic rights in this province. I hope the government takes it seriously. I think this is an opportunity in this bill to say: "Yes, we want to strengthen occupational health and safety. Yes, we want to increase the fines associated with poor working conditions."

Well, what about our food producers? Can we be proud of what we're setting up in this province or allowing to continue, I should say, for decades, eating food on our plates that has been produced off the backs of people at risk, being injured more frequently than in many other parts of the country?

B.C., after introducing its legislation, saw its injury and death rate decline. The Alberta Centre for Injury Control and Research has said that the evidence is clear. We need to change our approach to large farming operations. We're not talking about family operations. We're talking about industrial agriculture – potatoes, beans, beef – that employs many paid farm workers. It's time to take it seriously. We're in the 21st century now. We are not a 19th century economy. People are looking at us as leaders and looking for leadership.

Let's consider an amendment to this bill that would include a strong commitment to protecting the equal rights, the equal personhood, the equal constitutional and human rights of our paid farm workers.

Again, we have two farm workers in the gallery who were injured and are courageously standing up for people who are afraid to speak out on their own behalf because of their own vulnerability as farm workers. They need those jobs. If they piss off the farm owner, the operator, they may be looking for a new job. If they get injured, they may be looking for a new job because there is no compensation for people at the present time who get injured on the job. They're kicked down the road as these two were on the farming site that they worked on years ago. They've no longer been able to work on farm sites, but they are standing up for principle, they are standing up for human rights, they are standing up for Albertans and the reputation of our agricultural industry.

How can this government continue to ignore not only their rights but the economic opportunity for companies like the Tongue Creek Feeders, who had to be bankrupted to face the results of negligence? That's not leadership.

I applaud the government for taking steps to make sure that it's clear on work sites where the health and safety act applies. Real teeth. Real penalties when people put others at risk to cut corners, to have shoddy buildings or shoddy electrical or shoddy chemical management or poor machinery to work with.

I again most earnestly appeal to this government to do the right thing on behalf of our children, on behalf of our businesses, our agricultural businesses. Let's make sure there are basic protections for paid farm workers in this province.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

There is no Standing Order 29(2)(a), no comments.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: I guess I've sat and listened in here for a long time now to this whole issue, and I guess it's just finally gotten to me. We're sitting here, and the hon. member brought it up, it was not a feed mill operation; it was a feedlot. It was not in Black Diamond; it was between High River and Okotoks. I can drive you to the place. It was high-moisture barley that was inside a silo that he tried to get out of. I feel horrible for that family that they lost a family member there. I understand that. For the love of Mary, could you please get the facts straight before you start spewing them out?

Thank you.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you for the question.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, this is not 29(2)(a). That was his speech in Committee of the Whole when we should be discussing the clauses of the bill. So you have no opportunity to respond.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just would like to add a comment to follow up with the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West on the Protection and Compliance Statutes Amendment Act. I would also like to point out to the members across the floor that name of this bill simply begs for an amendment, and it kills us not to have one, but I do hope you give my comments due consideration.

In the April 2010 Auditor General report – and it was repeated again in July 2012 – it was recommended to the ministry formerly of employment and immigration and now of Human Services that they should promote and enforce compliance with the law by high-risk employers. I think that this act certainly takes care of the enforcement piece, but I think there's some room for, I guess, the promotion piece.

I think that what the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake was suggesting earlier with putting aside the funds that are being charged to violators of this act and taking that money and implementing some of the promotion side of what the Auditor General has asked this government to do for a couple of years could allow you to kill a couple of birds with one stone.

I do believe that, you know, if you were to perhaps take those funds and directly support a program like Work Safe Alberta, where I know that there is some work being done in this program – there is a new strategic plan that the ministry is working on and it has got some good initiatives in it. I do think that there is room for those fines to actually go to promotion of safe workplaces as opposed to just finding their way into general revenue. If you didn't want to just simply fund Work Safe Alberta, you could fund charitable organizations or nonprofits like the War Amps or other industries that are affected by nonsafe workplaces.

That was the only comment I wanted to offer, and I appreciate the time of the House.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Just a few general comments. In general I think that we're supportive of the idea of adding administrative penalties and strengthening enforcement and closing loopholes. We have, however, two amendments, and I would like to introduce the first one now. I'll have this brought up to the table, and then you can call on me, and I'll introduce it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. We'll call this amendment A1, and we'll wait to have this amendment distributed throughout the Assembly.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, would you like to continue on amendment A1, please.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to move on behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona that Bill 6, the Protection and Compliance Statutes Amendment Act, 2012, be amended in section 2(10) in the proposed section 40.3(1) by striking out clause (e).

Now, Madam Chair, I'll speak very briefly to this. The intention of the administrative penalties is to influence the workplace, and (e), by the way, includes workers as being subject to administrative penalties under this act. Those that are subject to administrative penalties in this act include contractors, employers, prime contractors, suppliers, and, (e), workers.

The Deputy Chair: Excuse me, hon. member. Can I just remind members that we are still in Committee of the Whole, and the noise level is a little high. If you have some conversations, you are welcome to take them into the next room. If we could keep it a little quieter, I would appreciate it. Thank you very much.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Madam Chair. This amendment proposes to delete workers from being subject to administrative penalties. The question is why. The amendment is modelled on British Columbia's legislation. In consultation with stakeholders the government emphasized, to quote their own material, that

An administrative penalty system . . . promotes remedial action, preventive in nature, to address a health/safety issue by re-establishing compliance with regulatory requirements . . . not seek redress for (i.e. punish) a wrongful activity.

Now, administrative penalties are unique extra-legal mechanisms that must be used to compel compliance, not to impute or punish guilt. Because they don't involve a court of law, administrative penalties are open to misuse at the same time that they can be used to serve as crucial mechanisms for allowing OH and S officers to penalize contraventions of the act. OHS legislation is designed to protect workers, and this amendment also seeks to protect workers by ensuring that administrative penalties will apply to target the employers whose responsibility it is to ensure safe workplaces and safe work practices in accordance with OHS legislation.

Madam Chair, not to put too fine a point on it, employers have control over the workplace; workers don't. Administrative penalties in this case aimed at workers are misplaced because they have very little control over the health and safety culture, the standards, the conditions that exist in the workplace. That is the role of the employer. Their employer has that responsibility and has the authority to make those decisions; workers don't. To single out workers and to include them as being subject to administrative penalties is not going to do anything to improve the safety of the workplace but will serve to intimidate and potentially harmfully affect workers who have no control in the workplace.

So I urge the government side and other members to support this amendment, which is to delete clause (e) so that workers would not be subject to penalties that are designed to enforce behaviour among employers.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members that would like to speak on amendment A1?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chair: We'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Maybe we'll go for 2 out of 3, then. I have another amendment. I'll have that distributed to the table and speak to it when called upon.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, this will be known as amendment A2.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Madam Chair. On behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona I move that Bill 6, Protection and Compliance Statutes Amendment Act, 2012, be amended in section 2(10) in the proposed section 40.3 by striking out subsection (3) and substituting the following:

- (3) The amount set out in a notice of administrative penalty must not exceed
  - (a) $500 000, or
  - (b) in the case of a contravention or a failure to comply that continues for more than one day, $1 000 000.

Just speaking to that, the concern here is that administrative penalties might be used as a way of having a less expensive way than an actual prosecution. I think that this will make the penalties equivalent or equal to the maximum limits for monetary penalties in case of a prosecution. Madam Chair, that is to prevent this from being used as a lower cost way of dealing with offences, providing a loophole whereby employers would pay a lower amount than if they were prosecuted. So it makes the fines equal.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A2?

Seeing none, we will call question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll go back to the bill. Are there any other speakers who would like to speak to Bill 6 in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. Campbell: Madam Chair, I move that we move Bill 6, the Protection and Compliance Statutes Amendment Act, out of Committee of the Whole.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member has moved that we move Bill 6 out of Committee of the Whole, so we'll call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 6 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 9

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2012

The Deputy Chair: Any comments or questions? Any member who wishes to speak?

[The clauses of Bill 9 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

10:10

Mr. Campbell: Madam Chair, I would move that we rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: I would ask the Member for Calgary-East to report.

Mr. Amery: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 6, Bill 9. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Those who concur in this report, are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Those who do not concur, say no. It's carried.

Mr. Campbell: Madam Speaker, I would ask that we adjourn the House until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:11 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, November 1, 2012

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us pray. Holy and divine Creator, we are grateful for Your guidance during this past week, and we ask for Your continued guidance and oversight of our actions and activities when we head home to see our families, our friends, and our constituents after today's work is done in this Assembly. Guide us safely along the roads that we must all travel. Be with us always. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four sets of introductions today, I guess a bit of a fan club, so bear with me, please. First, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly constituents residing in Edmonton-South West, Mr. Ani Seoul and his wife, Mrs. Trina Joshi. Trina Joshi is back again today. She was here yesterday with the Daughters Day delegation. Mr. Seoul is a police officer with the city of Edmonton. Mrs. Joshi works as a community support co-ordinator. With them as well are Mrs. Joshi's parents, Mr. Ram Sharan Joshi and his wife, Mrs. Madhu Joshi, who are visiting from the capital of India, New Delhi. I'm not done about Mr. Joshi. Mr. Ram Sharan Joshi is a retired journalist, who is a renowned writer celebrated in India. He has covered the Indian Parliament and the United Nations, accompanied state representatives across the globe, and has done extensive research on Indian tribes for over four decades. Mr. Ram Sharan Joshi has written over 15 books, earning him various literary awards. In 2007 he also chaired a delegation of Indian writers to the UN General Assembly. A very accomplished and, overall, really nice guy.

Number two, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of students and teachers from George P. Nicholson school, located in the new constituency of Edmonton-South West, that I'm so honoured to serve. Accompanying these 22 bright and energetic students is their teacher, Mrs. Maxine Sprague. They also just came from McKay Avenue school, where they were introduced to what the first session was like. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would like to ask the students and guests from George P. Nicholson to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to introduce to you and through you some smart, passionate Albertans from the University of Alberta Progressive Conservative Association. Here today in the members' gallery are Aurora Pounder, Aaron Pollock, and Natasha Soles. These are good friends of mine and, like I mentioned, very passionate Albertans.

To round out the fan club, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you and through you my two assistants. Mrs. Jennifer Kirkelund, my legislative assistant, and my constituency assistant, Mrs. Kara Fuhr, are here helping with all these guests. If we'd all give them a round of applause.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Gordon Smith. This gentleman takes citizenship to a new level. He has received numerous awards for his community involvement from the Silver Acorn, one of Scouts Canada's most prestigious awards, to the community service award from the Legion, of which he is a member, having served as a second lieutenant, to recognition from the city of Edmonton and the government of Canada. Gordon is trained as an educator and taught at NAIT. He taught economics, marketing, and a leadership class, and became the first recipient of the faculty emeritus award.

In 1989 because of a tumor in his spine he was confined to a wheelchair, and he was told he only had a 10 per cent chance of living. That never slowed him down. Mr. Speaker, the Liberals were told they had a 10 per cent chance of living in this last election. It didn't slow us down either. Amongst many other things, he owns businesses, engages in public speaking events, carves, paints, volunteers, and advocates for others. I'd like Gordon to raise his right hand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know how excited I get about introducing to you and through you to every member of the Assembly wonderful constituents from the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. I'm truly delighted today to have three advocates joining us in the public gallery. Danielle Zyp has been an adviser to me on mental health issues since I got elected, and she has continued and grown into that role as an advocate overall. Danielle, would you please rise? With her today are two others, Karen Peterson and Cathy Smith. They have formed a little advocacy group on their own, working on the need for public education, breaking the stigma of mental illness. They're going to start an e-zine blog to discuss some of these issues, a nice way to do advocacy in the new century. They would like to see amendments and consistency of benefits and health care concerns and to maintain and increase funding to mental health programs. Thank you very much for coming down, Danielle, Karen, and Cathy. I appreciate it.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Youth Advisory Panel

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm privileged today to share some work that I've been doing as the newest chair of the government of Alberta Youth Secretariat. As a part of my duties as the Youth Secretariat chair I will form and meet regularly with the Youth Advisory Panel. The panel is made up of 18 of Alberta's youth aged 15 to 22 who will support our ongoing work. Together the panel and I have been tasked with providing feedback on emerging issues for youth in our province. The Youth Advisory Panel has been a successful initiative since the year 2000. We have the opportunity to ensure that youth have an ongoing chance to provide input into the future of the province as we create new public policy and programs.

Recruitment has ended as of yesterday, and the selection process is well under way. Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to say that we've received a number of applications from around the province. I look forward to introducing the new members to the House when the selection process is complete. I also look forward to working with these young, inspired leaders. I'm eager to share my findings as I spend time meeting with these youth. I truly believe that there is no limit to what we can learn by listening to young Albertans and working side by side to find solutions.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tax Reform

Mr. Hehr: A report released today by the Parkland Institute acknowledges what many other think tanks and economists have already reported, that Alberta's fiscal structure is fundamentally flawed and does not let this province do what it needs to do today: build schools, hire teachers, teach children, ensure a vibrant middle class, and provide dignity and hope to those living in poverty. The report acknowledges that the state of this province reads a lot like a Dickens novel. It is the best of times for some and the worst of times for others. The report clearly shows that inequality exists and highlights that other jurisdictions are doing more in this regard.

The report points out the ludicrous nature of our tax structure. One of society's most important tools for ensuring economic equality and, in my view, for this province to be able to save for the future is a progressive tax system. Alberta currently has a flat-tax system. By the way, Mr. Speaker, we are the only jurisdiction in North America that has one of these. In Alberta we ask an individual who makes $30,000 a year to pay the same rate as a person making a million dollars a year. Not only is this silly, as the report point out, but Albertans with lower incomes actually pay higher rates than most other Canadians while those at the top pay the lowest rates in the nation.

Further, the report also notes that we have the lowest corporate tax rates in the nation. As a result of our broken fiscal structure the Alberta government is not able to build the schools and roads, hire teachers and nurses and the like, and has the least generous social supports of any Canadian province. It's a trite saying, Mr. Speaker, but societies are judged by the fair and equitable treatment of those who have the least.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the Parkland Institute for this report and for bringing this and many other issues to light. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Calgary-Hawkwood.

MADD Canada Project Red Ribbon

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take a moment to recognize an important milestone being achieved today by MADD Canada. Today marks the official start of MADD Canada's 25th annual Project Red Ribbon. This campaign promotes sober driving during the holiday season. For a quarter-century MADD Canada chapters and community leaders have gone into their communities around the holiday season to distribute red ribbons and to raise awareness about the dangers of impaired driving. From November 1 until the first Monday after New Year's Day MADD Canada volunteers will be out there with their red ribbons. They'll be asking the public to tie the ribbons to vehicles, key chains, purses, briefcases, or backpacks as a reminder that it is never okay to drive impaired by alcohol or other drugs.

The red ribbon is not only a reminder about the importance of driving sober; it is also a strong and meaningful tribute to all victims who have been killed or injured in impaired driving crashes. Every year between 1,250 and 1,500 Canadians are killed and more than 63,000 injured in impaired driving crashes. I am sure that I'm not alone in the Legislature in knowing the pain of the consequences of such accidents. When we know that this crime is completely preventable, even one death or injury attributed to impaired driving is too many.

By raising awareness and reminding the public about the risks of impaired driving, MADD Canada hopes to ensure that this year's holiday season is free of impaired driving tragedies. MADD Canada encourages all Albertans to get their red ribbons and wear them proudly as a symbol of your commitment to driving sober this holiday season and all year long. With everyone working together, we can make our roads and our communities safe. MLAs have been given a red ribbon to wear and show support for a safe holiday season.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Speak Out Student Engagement Initiative

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today and speak to you about a wonderful initiative that is engaging Alberta's youth in their education. Since 2009 Speak Out, the Alberta student engagement initiative, has given our province's students the opportunity to share their thoughts, concerns, and ideas for the future of our education system. I'm proud that the government of Alberta cares what students have to say about their education.

Through the Speak Out website students are empowered to share their thoughts in a safe and welcoming environment. There are fascinating dialogues happening on the Speak Out discussion boards right now. Young people from across the province are debating many of the same things that we are discussing in this Legislature, things like whether teachers should be able to assign a zero, whether the value of standardized testing is appropriate, and whether what they're learning in class is relevant to the future of their work and career.

Another important part of Speak Out is the Minister's Student Advisory Council. I know the hon. Minister of Education had the opportunity for an initial meeting with those outstanding young Albertans in September. The 24 council members come from across the province and represent a broad spectrum of rural and urban youth aged from 14 to 19, each with a unique perspective on education. One of the council members, Mr. Cyril Binny Kuruvilla, is a grade 11 student at St. Francis high school in my riding of Calgary-Hawkwood. Last week I had a chance to speak to Cyril about his experience involved with this council.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by Calgary-Bow.

Whistle-blower Protection

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak on another broken promise of this government. Previously the Premier had said that we either have open government or we don't. Well, it's clear that with Bill 4 we don't. For starters I refer to part 1, section 3(2), which states, "This Act applies only in respect of wrongdoings that occur after the coming into force of this Act." Even if there were nothing to hide, this section quite clearly gives the impression that this government is hiding something. Bill 4 needs to include retroactivity to protect whistleblowers who may be compelled to blow the whistle yesterday, tomorrow, or even today.

In question period yesterday the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation said that Bill 4 allows whistle-blowers to go to anyone they wish. Bill 4 tells a different story. This bill stipulates that the public interest commissioner would handle all whistle-blowing complaints and that the whistle-blower will report to the designated officer or chief officer, the deputy minister. People should not have to navigate their own organization to blow the whistle.

While this bill covers breaches of the law and gross mismanagement, Bill 4 would not apply to ethical behaviour. Government and its departments should be responsible for the totality of their record, not the narrow definitions under this bill.

Particularly alarming is the exemption clause in section 31(1). Albertans are wondering if the commissioner will use this to exempt friends and members of the government family. Albertans have seen how exemptions are given to the government's friends, and this only fosters a culture of cronyism. Albertans are sick and tired of seeing this.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Bowness Ratepayers/Bowmont 169 Scout Group Hall

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the new Bowness Ratepayers Lions and Bowmont 169 Scout Group hall. It celebrated its grand opening on October 20. Construction of the hall just began this year, and I'm proud to say that the hard work and dedication of everyone involved in this project paid off because it looks absolutely amazing.

There would be no new hall without the hard work and dedication of people like Dale and Kally Streit, the Lions Club, and so many other community members who gave hundreds of hours of their time. As well, Allan Markin and Jim Thorogood generously assisted us in financing the hall, continuing the tradition of ex-Bownesians giving back to the community where they were raised.

I think it's important to stress that the majority of the labour was done by community volunteers. I am very proud of how one of my Calgary-Bow communities came together to build this hall with everyone giving their time, labour, and money according to their capabilities. It is facilities like these that will continue to give back to the community and serve as symbols of co-operation and strength.

I am pleased to say that the community spirit of Bowness along with the Alberta government community initiatives program and community facility enhancement program grants have created a gorgeous building that will serve the Scouts, Lions, and people of Bowness for many years to come.

I want to congratulate and thank everyone involved in the building of the new hall. I know that it'll be well used and valued by the community.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Chief Electoral Officer Investigations

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Chief Electoral Officer believes he is barred from releasing the results of any investigations, and the government seems to go along with that, or at least they did up until yesterday. Originally we understood the Deputy Premier said no to releasing anything about the Katz affair, but later the Premier, under heavy pressure, gave an answer that could be interpreted to indicate a willingness to release the investigation results, or perhaps not. Let's give the Premier the opportunity today to be transparent and accountable. What exactly will she release?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier. [some applause]

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's always good to be back in the House, and I'm glad that the opposition is so enthusiastic, but one thing I didn't miss is the fact that our Premier was very clear yesterday. She said yes, absolutely, and for sure. I don't know how many other terms she could have used to convince the Leader of the Official Opposition or at least have her understand that this government will be transparent. When we receive the findings in the form of a letter from the Chief Electoral Officer, we'll not only share it with this Chamber but with all Albertans.

1:50

Ms Smith: That's very encouraging, Mr. Speaker.

Will the Premier now commit to applying the same openness and transparency to releasing the results of the investigations that exposed 45 cases of illegal donations to a political party?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, we already did better than that because if that member actually cared to do a little bit of research, she would find that the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta had already released on its website in May of 2012 a list of all donations that had been found to be inaccurate and returned.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm asking: when will they publish the list of donations that they had to return?

I will be tabling that soon.

The Speaker: I can see where this is going, hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We don't have any illegal donations to publish.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier talks about openness and honesty a lot. In one speech she wanted to keep raising the bar on transparency and accountability. Can the Premier square that comment with the evidence of secrecy and cover-ups on things like those illegal donations?

Mr. Lukaszuk: I'm glad to hear, Mr. Speaker, that they will say on the record that they don't have any illegal donations, but let me remind you that in the 2004 election one individual donated 75 per cent of their campaign funding, in the 2007 by-election that very same individual funded 99.7 per cent of the cost of their entire campaign, and in the 2008 election that very same individual funded 23.3 per cent of their campaign. It's a matter of interpretation.

Speaker's Ruling

Questions about Political Party Activity

The Speaker: You know, it's becoming exhausting to stand up as many times as I have to stand up and interject and remind you of some of the rules. Now, I'm not going to take the time to read them all again. I may later. Please, let us not stray too far into this right now because it is against the rules to ask about issues pertaining to political parties in the way that some questions have been phrased and some answers have been phrased. So let's be doubly careful.

Airdrie, you rose on a point of order, and that point of order has been noted. Thank you.

The hon. leader. Second main question.

Fiscal Accountability

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is patting itself on the back for another consultation, and, surprise, it has delivered exactly the results that they were hoping for. Another surprise is that it's exactly the opposite of what Albertans said about debt when they were polled this summer. In that same speech I mentioned, where the Premier talked about raising the accountability bar, she also said this: we need to ensure that our actions are fair to this generation and to those that follow. To the Finance minister: how does racking up more debt and borrowing more money square with that statement?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we actually went out and we did six different ways of doing consultations so that we could make sure that what we were getting was an accurate representation of what Albertans were telling us. We did the online survey, which the hon. member alludes to. We also did electronic submissions. Just to name a few, I had in-person discussions with people like the chair of the Calgary Chamber of Commerce; the board chair emeritus of the University of Calgary; the chair of the public policy institute, University of Calgary; the former dean of the School of Business, U of A; the managing director of the national bank. In addition to that, we also did presentations by mail. We had one-on-one meetings. We had online open houses. We did a number of these things.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. First supplemental.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The research done in June by Think HQ did a scientific poll of a thousand Albertans and found that only 7 per cent thought that going deeper into debt was a good idea – that's just 7 per cent – yet the minister wants us to believe that his consultation gives him the green light to spill more red ink. Why does he still insist that going into debt is a good idea?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, it's interesting. Think HQ is the same one that thought that they were going to be the government next time.

To that end, Mr. Speaker, in 1971 Albertans rejected Social Credit finance policy and chose Progressive Conservative policy. In April of this year Albertans rejected Social Credit finance policy and chose Progressive Conservative finance policy.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier is committed to raising the bar on transparency and accountability, will the Finance minister obey his own law and disclose the full picture, all the details, in the next fiscal update?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I did, I will, and it's going to be a great one.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Justice System

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, Alison Jones is a constituent of mine who has a daughter who says she was sexually assaulted for eight years by an individual, starting when she was just nine. This man was charged in 2009. Due to delay tactics and the Crown not having adequate staffing to deal with its caseload fast enough, the judge threw the case out because he felt it was taking too long to come to trial. Premier, I want to know what kind of pathetic excuse for a justice system charges an individual for violating an innocent girl for eight years and then denies that victim her day in court.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hope this issue is not still sub judice. No?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I was just going to say that I think this is an appropriate question for an MLA representing their constituency to ask. I won't make political hay of this. I won't respond at this point in time. We'll look into this matter and provide appropriate comment back.

Mr. Anderson: Albertans are tired, though, of the excuses and the refusal by this government to take responsibility for its actions and inactions on a number of files, spending millions on trips and corporate handouts, yet we have things like this.

Premier, you were the Justice minister during the time of this debacle. Why is the provincial Crown prosecutors' office so grossly understaffed that somehow this girl's case was delayed and deferred to the point where now she will never see justice done for the unspeakable crimes perpetrated against her?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, as I said, I do not actually believe that this is an appropriate question to be raised in such a political manner. We have said that we will look into the facts of this case, and we will provide a fulsome response.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I don't know where you're going with your third and final supplemental, but I hope it's not a repeat of the first two. Please govern yourself according.

Mr. Anderson: These questions are entirely appropriate, and you'd better start thinking about the girl instead of your political skin. I want accountability on this. [interjections] This girl is a citizen of Alberta and, as one of the most innocent victims, deserved better than this. Everyone here had better . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, please. [interjections] Hon. members. Very nice. Thank you.

Let us move on, please, to the leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition. [interjection] Please, have a seat. Please. [interjection] Please.

Mr. Anderson: I have a legitimate question.

The Speaker: I'll deal with you and your issue at the end of question period. I'll clarify for you where this is not supposed to go. You can see the eruptions that occur, okay? Please. If you wish to rephrase the question, I'll allow you to, briefly. You have a rephrasing?

Mr. Anderson: Yes.

The Speaker: Okay. We'll listen carefully. Proceed.

Mr. Anderson: Premier, will you launch a full investigation into this matter, determine what on earth went wrong here, what steps will be undertaken to ensure it doesn't happen again, and will you personally call this victim to comfort and apologize for a justice system – a justice system – that entirely failed her? This is unacceptable. It cannot happen again in this province, and you have the power to do something about it, Premier, so do something.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I stand by my comments in this Chamber, and I will follow up.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition. [interjection]

Hon. Member for Airdrie, please. [interjection] You've made your point. [interjection] You've gone a little bit further than I would have preferred to allow you to go, and now, as I'm speaking, you're still continuing. Now, what would you like me to do about that? I have an idea. Why don't you and I meet at the end of this and have a little chat. All right? Thank you.

The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Social Policy Framework

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's the best of times and the worst of times. According to a report from the Parkland Institute titled A Social Policy Framework for Alberta, Alberta has quickly become home to both the wealthiest and poorest citizens in the country. Alberta has the highest poverty gap, and our indigenous community is overrepresented in the poverty group. Poverty is driving inequality off the cliff in our society, and we are footing the bills for mental health, addictions, violence, courts, policing, prisons, lower high school graduation rates, and lower health outcomes. To the Premier: how is the government's social policy framework going to address growing levels of poverty and the worsening inequalities in our society?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm more than delighted to talk about the fact that we are engaged in a social policy framework discussion with Albertans because it's something that matters to all Albertans, and all Albertans have to be engaged in that topic. As the hon. member raised in his question, it's not simply about income disparity, but it is about income disparity. I was privileged to hear a report about a meeting that some members of our caucus had, for example, with Women Building Futures, a wonderful organization that's helping with some of that wage gap because they're helping women find better jobs and get some of those higher paying jobs that traditionally have been in the purview of men.

I was also today at a family violence prevention thing. That's another part.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, this issue has been going on for decades, and they're having discussions? Albertans want action. They wanted it 10 years ago, and they want it today.

To the Premier: why do you insist on regressive policies that download costs to hard-working Albertan families in the form of user fees, mandatory school fees, higher tuitions instead of a progressive tax rate that would see the wealthy pay their fair share, the same policies that Peter Lougheed had? Why don't you implement those, Premier?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I want to speak to how proud I am of our Minister of Human Services, who has undertaken a comprehensive consultation with respect to the social policy framework. One of the things that I learned when I was Minister of Justice was that the foundational work with respect to community development and building families, ensuring that families were empowered to provide support for their children, were given support through programs, through institutions, through education and health care to ensure that every child had the opportunity for success, was fundamental. This government introduced a social policy framework to lead that discussion, and I'm looking forward to seeing the results of that.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, given that we have more than 70,000 children in poverty, I want to say how proud I am of hard-working Albertans who go to work each and every day to build this great province. To the Premier: given that our greatest resource is their children and given that today we have a golden opportunity to develop a just, fair, and inclusive society where we can all benefit from our resource riches, why does your government insist on keeping the benefits of Alberta's great wealth in the family instead of implementing truly progressive revenue reforms?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you what truly progressive reforms are. Truly progressive reforms are raising AISH payments by $400 a month so people on AISH can live with dignity. They're some of the people who have among the lowest income. [interjections] Truly progressive policy is raising the daycare qualification income amount to $50,000 so that low-income Albertans can have quality child care, with standards, while they're at work at those jobs. [interjections] Truly progressive policy is supporting organizations like Women Building Futures so that they can help women get the skills that they need to get those high-paying jobs.

The Speaker: Let us remember the rules and the courtesies regarding interjections and not discussing things across the bow. The Speaker is doing his best to maintain order here. I wish 86 others would join me.

The hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition.

Political Party Financial Contributions

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government simply can't be trusted to be straight with Albertans about election finances. Yesterday the Premier said that the Chief Electoral Officer's investigation into the massive donation from an unnamed person would be made public, yet she refuses to publicly release evidence. This morning I asked NDP staff to dig up a cancelled cheque from a campaign donation I received, and they took less than an hour to get it to me. My question is to the Premier. Why has she refused to release the cancelled cheque or cheques from Mr. Katz?

Mr. Lukaszuk: I'm not surprised it took them five minutes. There are only three cheques, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, we've been very clear, and you know best. We have officers of this Chamber, and one of them happens to be the Chief Electoral Officer. He has undertaken to do a full investigation. It's in the interest of this Chamber and in the interest of Albertans that we allow him to do this review. We have been very clear. We will release anything and everything that he wishes to have available to him during this investigation, and we'll go one step further. Once he sends us a letter with his findings, we will share that letter with this Chamber and with Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, our party is not the party of the shrinking campaign donations. We're actually growing, unlike that party.

Given that this Premier when she was Justice minister buried efforts to include donations for leadership races in disclosure legislation and given that she is apparently wilfully blind when dealing with the Katz donation, how can Albertans trust her and her government to clean up the financing of politics in Alberta?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, as Justice minister one of the privileges I had was to be able to ask an all-party committee of this Legislature to make recommendations with respect to leadership fundraising rules. I'm very proud of the fact that every single member of our leadership campaign competition, which is what it was over those 12 months, who is sitting in this House publicly released all of their campaign contributions. We are committed to transparency, and we'll continue to be committed to transparency.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the committee the Premier refers to did make recommendations. They were never acted on. It's not voluntary disclosure we're looking for; it's legislated disclosure.

Given that Albertans' confidence in the financing of our political system is now at an all-time low, will the Premier attempt to restore confidence in her government and introduce legislation which prohibits corporate and union donations to political parties?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, knowing the rules of this House, I cannot pre-empt a piece of legislation that hasn't been tabled yet, nor will I spoil Christmas early, but I can tell you that this member very soon, within a matter of a few days, will be able to debate a bill that will speak to many of these issues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Edmonton-Riverview.

No-zero Grading Policy

Mr. McAllister: Never a dull moment in here, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. The voice of Albertans is loud and clear on the no-zero policy that's employed in some schools in this province. Albertans think it's, frankly, ridiculous. It doesn't allow teachers to do their jobs. It penalizes them for it. It penalizes students by not preparing them for life. I think most members of the PC caucus probably agree it's a bit ridiculous. Why say one thing and then do another? To the Education minister: why wouldn't he support our amendment to put an end to this no-zero policy?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, let's talk about saying one thing and doing another. Let's talk about saying, "We respect local autonomy," and leaving out the condition, "unless we disagree with their decision." Let me be very clear because we said this over the hours of debate the other night. The province of Alberta, the Ministry of Education, does not have a no-zero policy. We assess students four times during their K to 12 life with PAT exams and diploma exams, and if students don't show up to write those exams, they get a zero. We expect students to earn their way through the system. We expect there will not be any free passes.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I was pretty certain that the Education Act was a guideline for boards and teachers to reference. My apologies.

Given that right from the act, a couple of examples, a student must comply with the rules of the school and policies of the board, given that the board as a partner in education has to be accountable to students, parents, the community, and the minister for student achievement of learning outcomes, Mr. Speaker, doesn't the minister agree with Albertans who think this is a little bit hypocritical to not get rid of this amendment?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure what amendment he's talking about. We expect, like I said, students to earn their way through the system, and we entrust the day-to-day grading, the day-to-day assessment of students in the classroom to teachers and the administrators of those schools. That's what's in the Education Act. If we want to micromanage the day-to-day assessment and actually put that in legislation, I can't imagine how many times we'd be running back to this House to change legislation based on new research, based on hypothetical situations, or based on one-off issues that may come up to allow teachers to actually grade kids based on their professional judgment within the day-to-day operations of the school.

Mr. McAllister: I didn't realize, Mr. Speaker, that PC stood for pathetically cowardly, but I think that's what it does with this policy.

Mr. Speaker, why is the Education minister seemingly standing up for a bureaucrat or an educrat that came up with a policy that nobody agrees with instead of standing up for Albertans, who are in droves asking this Legislature to do the right thing and get rid of this no-zero policy?

2:10

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I guess I'll say it a third time. There is no no-zero policy. At the local level with the school in question that he's talking about, that school division is working with parents to talk about their grading policies as we speak. That's where those discussions should take place with respect to the day-to-day grading policies. We absolutely agree with Albertans that kids should not be progressing through the system just based on their social age. They should be earning their way through the system. We're developing curriculum and assessments that are going to get us to that end. We believe that is happening in the system today, and we want that to be happening in the system tomorrow.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, you rose on a point of order?

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: It has been noted.

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, I realize that a lot of us are new in this Assembly, but I'd really caution you to please review your words and choose them, perhaps, as carefully as you can. I'm sure that's what the point of order will likely be about. It just consumes time, as you're seeing. I know we can all do a lot better than that. We all took an oath. I thought we had all agreed that we would try and elevate the decorum in this Chamber, so let's try and stick to that.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Impaired Driving

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. November 1 is MADD Canada's red ribbon day. The MADD Canada red ribbon project has been promoting safe, sober driving for 25 years. My question is to the Minister of Transportation. How has this government been working with MADD Canada to make roads safer?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to say that this government has an excellent relationship with MADD Canada, and their input was invaluable when we were updating our impaired driving legislation. We look forward to working with them in continuing to find ways to make roads safer for Albertans and every other person that travels on roads around here. The efforts of MADD Canada and our other traffic safety partners – the police, the food and beverage industry, and other Albertans – have been instrumental in helping us make judgments that way. MADD Canada has been a very good contributor to helping us formulate good legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. There's been a lot of discussion about the changes to the administrative suspension periods in the Traffic Safety Act introduced earlier this year. Have these changes been effective in promoting safe decisions about the consumption of alcohol and driving?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Time will tell whether the legislation has the desired effect, but I can tell you that most Albertans have gotten the message that the limits haven't changed but the penalties have. Those few Albertans that choose to make bad decisions know that the consequences are greater than they were. We have actually, as I said, partnered with Albertans, including the hospitality industry, who are really working with us to not scare their clients like the opposition chose to do in some of their comments on the legislation but, rather, to try to educate their clients to behave responsibly and tell them that they can enjoy themselves as Albertans and still get home safely if only they make a plan.

Mr. Young: My second supplemental is to the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General. While I certainly support the stance the government has taken on drivers who record alcohol levels of between .05 and .08, what are we doing to get tough on drivers who record blood-alcohol levels over the Criminal Code limit of .08?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that question because just this week I was in Regina at the national justice ministers meeting. Of course, as this member knows, drunk driving over .08 is a federal matter. We brought up an issue about tougher sentences for drunk drivers over .08 involving serious bodily harm or death. I'm really pleased that the federal government appears to want to act here. I would definitely like to see mandatory minimum sentences. So would many of my counterparts across other provinces. Let's make this a reality federally.

Hospital Occupancy Rates

Mrs. Towle: Mr. Speaker, last February the Health Quality Council recommended that Alberta Health reduce hospital occupancy rates by 85 to 90 per cent. This means freer flow through emergency departments and progress toward hitting the eight-hour wait time benchmark that everyone agrees is a critical measure of success. The Minister of Health ordered Alberta Health Services to reduce occupancy rates to 95 per cent by October 31. That was yesterday. Has that target been met? Yes or no?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to report to the House that Alberta Health Services has made tremendous progress toward meeting those targets. They are in the process of preparing a final report, which I'll be pleased to share with the Assembly, regarding the results on that directive as well as the one on reducing the number of alternate level of care patients in our major hospitals. They have done this through a collaborative effort at the site level, where administrators and clinicians and other support staff have worked together to design processes and procedures to achieve these objectives locally.

Mrs. Towle: Mr. Speaker, hospitals typically see a major reduction in emergency department visits over the summer months, when major health issues like influenza and pneumonia aren't as prevalent. How will the minister move toward hitting a target of 85 per cent during the much busier winter season?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, we make no apologies as a government for setting aggressive targets within our health care system. We are very well supported by a health delivery organization, Alberta Health Services, which is committed to doing that. As I've said, there will be a report forthcoming from Alberta Health Services describing the very, very good work they've done across the province through empowering our clinicians and our support staff and our administrators to work together to deliver better results for Albertans. They've done so in the past. They will continue to do so in the future.

Mrs. Towle: Mr. Speaker, this government constantly claims to be open, accountable, and transparent, but it's almost impossible to track the progress on meeting many of these Health Quality Council recommendations. Will the Minister of Health commit today to tabling in this House regular monthly updates of occupancy rates of all Alberta hospitals?*

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Health Services and the Alberta health system is one of the most open and transparent in the country when it comes to sharing data. As the hon. member should know, there is information readily available on a variety of topics on the Internet with respect to waiting lists, with respect to time to treat for various procedures, and with respect to our progress in primary care among many other topics. The information is available. It's available to the hon. member without the benefit of question period. I encourage her to review it and perhaps succeed in asking a better question.

Community Development Funding

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, when I meet with nonprofit organizations in my constituency, one of the consistent concerns I hear is the need for more funding for community-based projects. Now, the lottery fund helps address some of the need, but those dollars are finite, and the programs are oversubscribed. My question is to the Minister of Culture. How can the minister justify giving $5 million in funding to a radio station when there are so many other projects that need funding?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's always more demand for our tax dollars, but to me this is an example of how partnerships can make the dollars go further. The government recognizes that every dollar invested in cultural projects is nearly doubled in economic impact. That's exactly how we see the potential of CKUA. I'm proud to support that project. It's an important cultural project and an important historical project as well.

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, my second question is again to the Minister of Culture. How does a new building in Edmonton benefit my constituents in Calgary?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is an investment for all of Alberta because CKUA broadcasts Alberta-wide and world-wide. As a matter of fact, they were the first Canadian radio station to broadcast over the Internet. It helped launch the careers of such internationally renowned artists as k.d. lang, Corb Lund, and Jann Arden. CKUA will have a new space in the National Music Centre in Calgary.

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, my final question to the same minister: how are those decisions on who does and, more importantly, who does not receive funding made?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My department assesses grant applications based on strict eligibility requirements. When projects don't meet those criteria, they're not funded. It's a fair and equitable program and supports projects all over Alberta. At the end of the day these projects provide safe community places for our children and our families, and this government believes in investing in families and our future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Teacher Working Time

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This November 1 we learned that there's maybe a trick but there's no treat for the school community as the deadline for three-way talks between teachers, the province, and school boards has passed without an agreement. Teacher workloads, classroom sizes, and support for students remain the main issues. To the Minister of Education: given that teachers are working longer than ever under worse conditions, can you tell us why you and the school boards won't consider some kind of cap on working hours for teachers?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I think that's a great question. We've had long discussions with the ATA and the SBA, and I've been in many schools talking with teachers. What I can tell you is that a hard cap on how many hours a teacher can work throughout the week – 31 hours is the request – over the whole province, one cookie-cutter approach, is not the right way to go. I can point to the fact that over half of our teachers already had these hard caps in place, and those teachers in those jurisdictions are just as vocal in their concerns about the workload as the ones that don't have it, so it's obviously not the silver bullet.

Mr. Hehr: Well, obviously, that's classroom teachers, not the overall workload.

One of the reasons given why there will be no discussion on this is the fact that rural school boards are already suffering a shortage of schoolteachers, and they feel that any discussion on this will impact them even further. What are you doing about the fact that our rural school boards don't have enough teachers, and what are you doing to try and recruit more there?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, just to clarify, we are talking about the overall workload. The 31 hours is 23 hours of instruction and eight hours of assignable time. That's the parent-teacher interviews, the staff meetings, the supervision, and all those pieces that are in that workload. I do sympathize with teachers because they have a real challenge today with the diversity in the classroom and all the skills that need to be kept up with respect to technology and the collaboration that we expect or hope to be done. So we want to tackle this in other ways. We want to have solid discussions with the teachers on what pieces of the business are they doing today that don't bring value that we can peel back to provide time for them to prepare so that we can have the best-quality teachers in front of our kids.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, I find it slightly disingenuous that the minister keeps referring to these 31 hours a week that teachers are allegedly only working. Minister, you're aware of a recent study that points out that the average teacher is working 56 hours a week in this province, are you not?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the 31 hours are not mine. They're the hours that are in the agreements and the hours proposed by the ATA. We can talk about the hours that we're talking about, that other folks may be talking about, or we may want to calculate, but let's talk about the implications for rural Alberta. You just can't put hard caps on the number of minutes a teacher will work in rural Alberta when, literally, we have some schools of 20 kids with two teachers hundreds of kilometres from the next school. How do you manage a workforce that way? With a hundred kids in one school and half a dozen teachers, how do you get a teacher to come in for .3 of a job, five subjects over the course of a year, and situations like that? Rural schools will close.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Social Policy Framework (continued)

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to a sobering report released today by antipoverty advocates, Alberta has the most intense poverty and the highest poverty gap in the country. In short, we have the dubious distinction of being the Canadian leader in inequality. My question is to the Minister of Human Services. When will this government recognize what the IMF, the World Bank, and the Conference Board of Canada have already recognized, that heartless social policy is also bad economic policy?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, that was recognized by this government many years ago and has been continually part of the way that we construct our policy and our relationships with social agency in the community. It's one of the reasons why we're refreshing that social policy with an intense discussion across the province about social policy framework. Fundamentally, we need as a community to own the issues about what causes poverty in a community and how we can come together to overcome those causal issues. Income disparity is a very big concern. Alberta has the unenviable privilege of having some of the highest paid people because we have such great jobs. Now we have to move to get everybody else up to that level.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, here are the facts. Given that the Conservatives' policies mean that Alberta leads the way down the wrong road, with the lowest minimum wage in the country, the most intense poverty, the lowest rates of postsecondary enrolment, and bankruptcy rates that are twice that of the average Canadian, when will the minister admit that his policies are driving Alberta's families deeper and deeper into poverty?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, of course, the policies that we have in this province and the quality of life that we have in this province mean that we have the highest growth, the most people coming to live here because it's the best place in the world to live, but that doesn't mean that we can forget that there are people who need a hand up and help from time to time. So we have Alberta Works, which helps people find better jobs than they have, helps people get the skilling that they need to get those better jobs. As I mentioned, organizations like Women Building Futures are helping people get the skills that they need to get some of those higher paying jobs so that we can close the gaps. Yes, we have some of the highest income. Yes, we have some of the best social programs to ensure that everybody has a part of Alberta's opportunities.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, intense discussion does not feed families, so given that Alberta has the highest percentage of working families in Canada who are forced to use food banks, why won't the minister, at the outset of his epic consultation process, make a concrete gesture of good faith and immediately raise Alberta's minimum wage to at least $10.30 an hour for all workers?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, that's one of the problems with the social policy discussions. People move immediately to the wrong answers instead of really looking in depth at what makes a difference for people in a real way. There is a very small percentage of people in this province who are earning minimum wage. A lot of them are not the people that she's talking about: the single-parent families that are living below the poverty line, the working poor. Those aren't necessarily the people who are on minimum wage. Just raising minimum wage is an easy placebo that doesn't really reach the depths that the social policy framework discussion that we're having is going to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Edmonton-Manning.

Ferruginous Hawk Habitat

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll let the blood pressure drop a little. Yesterday I asked the Minister of Environment and SRD a specific question regarding the irresponsible and unlawful violation of the Canadian Species at Risk Act. ATCO removed multiple nesting sites of a protected species, the ferruginous hawk, in direct contravention of the act. To the minister: will you be open and transparent and admit that your ministry – your ministry – is responsible for giving permission to ATCO to remove these nesting sites in violation of federal law?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will say that a mistake was made by ATCO, but it was identified quickly. [interjections] ATCO has been working with us to rectify the situation, as I said. The situation, which was unfortunate, has led to several positive outcomes, including more nesting platforms, 34 from 13, and significant improvements to artificial nesting structures, which ensures their serviceability and longevity in more strategic locations. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, we can do without the groans and the moans on either side here. It's not helping the debate at all. It's not doing anything to maintain, much less elevate, the level of decorum that we've asked for. Please, can I ask you for the last time today: let's not have any more of this across-the-bow stuff. These members on this side or private members on that side have the right to ask questions. Government members, ministers, associate ministers: you have the right to answer them. Let's all respect each other a little more today if we could, please.

The hon. member.

Ferruginous Hawk Habitat (continued)

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that ATCO just felt the bus run over them, will the minister do the right thing and hold those responsible accountable for this unlawful decision and uphold and enforce our existing laws?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When potential compliance concerns arise as a result of incidents like this, discussions typically occur at the field level between our wildlife staff and their enforcement field services colleagues. If, in the opinion of those field staff, enforcement is required, we have a range of options available to us to bring an individual or a company back into compliance. In this case we chose to use the situation as an educational opportunity for the company, as a more effective way to rectify the situation. I'll say, as I've said for the last two days, that the situation will be rectified to move from 13 to 34 nests.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that that's the longest no I've ever gotten and given that the commission has not approved a licence and has not approved the location of the transmission line, to the Minister of Energy: how can the public have any confidence or faith in this government or a commission hearing process when the ministry of SRD interferes and contaminates the process by having the nesting sites of a protected species removed prior to the commission's evaluation and determination of the transmission line location?

Mrs. McQueen: Mr. Speaker, I'll take that question for the Minister of Energy. We have a great deal of confidence in the AESO and in the AUC, who look after those regulations on where the power lines go. We will continue to have a lot of co-operation with them, and certainly we look to them to provide the direction in that area.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by Medicine Hat.

2:30

Apprenticeship Training

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are 31 optional certification trades in Alberta. For those trades, apprenticeship training programs are not required. Instead, their skills can be recognized by their employers without any formal training. This may leave Albertans vulnerable to those who do not have formal training in their trade. My question to the hon. Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education: please, Minister, could you tell us what this government has done to regulate optional certification trades in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like to thank the hon. member for that question. Here in Alberta we have quality and appropriate standards for both optional and compulsory trades set out in the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Act. The hon. member is correct. For optional certification trades such as cook or baker there is no requirement for a tradesperson to be certified in their trade; however, they always have the option of obtaining a journeyman certification within our system here in Alberta.

I'm very proud to let you know that Alberta is clearly established and recognized as a leader in apprenticeship training and skill development throughout the world, and Alberta is responsible for training more than 20 per cent of all skilled people across Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: does your ministry see value in making certification for all trades compulsory?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's important to note that for what we would consider high-risk trades such as electrician or welder, where public work and public safety is a vital concern, for the most part those trades require compulsory certification. We've worked very closely with industry, consulting with the public, as well as working extremely closely with the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board to establish the proper criteria for trade certification, compulsory certification as well as consideration for the optional certification trades.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. What does your ministry plan to do to protect homeowners from potentially shoddy workmanship done by uncertified tradespeople?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You can be assured that workers who go through Alberta's apprenticeship and industry training systems perform their skill sets to the highest standards, highest standards compared to anywhere else in the world. We encourage homeowners and consumers who are considering hiring individuals or trades to work on their homes to verify those certifications. Our department is happy to receive those inquiries and verify those inquiries. One of the things that our government is doing in leading the way is the work of our Minister of Municipal Affairs and the Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs in terms of the legislation for new-home buyers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Travel to London Olympics

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We heard yesterday how out of touch the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation really is when it comes to ripping off Albertans for her million-dollar junket to the London Olympics. She said she "needs to build bridges, not walls," but the only thing Albertans have seen so far is a $113,000 London bridge to their luxury hotel industry. She said Albertans are "already seeing the return on our investment" for such outrageous and bloated costs. Will the minister, then, clarify to hard-working Alberta families why she sees this gross waste of their money as such a massive success?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to talk about one particular success of the many that we have achieved in London. In particular, we look forward to next year hosting what is called the Dertour Academy, which is going to bring more than 600 top travel agents and key tourism partners and journalists to Alberta.

An Hon. Member: How many?

Ms Cusanelli: Six hundred.

We hope that it will be aligned with the experiences of others who have hosted this same event. In the future we hope to reap a 20 to 30 per cent increase in travel and tourism. That will add to Alberta an additional $16 million coming to our province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this minister has admitted that she has a general aversion to saving tax dollars by flying economy because –I will try to say this without laughing, and I quote – when you're out there meeting nine people in one day, you need to have your sleep, will the minister stop dozing off, stop ripping off Albertans, and start treating Albertans with respect?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our very strong and top-level expense and travel policy is obviously being espoused and supported across Canada. As I've done in the past and will continue to do, I will be following that policy.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When will the minister talk to her caucus whip so he can convince her colleagues to pay back Albertans for her waste and mismanagement, just like they all happily and freely agreed to for the no-meet committee? [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjections] Did you hear the question? There was so much noise, I had trouble hearing it. But if you did and wish to answer it, proceed.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I couldn't hear the question either, so I will take the opportunity to say a little about, you know, the impact that our travel to London had on many of our artists and, certainly, our agrifoods environment and industry here. As I said in the past, what is good for our industry here in Alberta is going to be good for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

Labour Negotiations with Teachers

Mr. Bhardwaj: Well, thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, teachers started the school year without a contract. Now we've learned that labour talks between government, teachers, and schools will be extended. My questions are to the Minister of Education. How long do you intend to keep these talks going and leave teachers without a contract? Mr. Minister, what are the main issues, and what's really on the table?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, to be clear, this is a tripartite discussion. We could go back to local bargaining, but we haven't set a deadline. There's enough fruitful discussion happening right now that we feel it's good to keep the discussions going. I would point out in response to the questions that the ATA and the teachers have recognized they're the best paid in the country by a wide margin. And it's not about the pay. It's about the working conditions, as the Member for Calgary-Buffalo mentioned. While we all agree that teachers need time outside the classroom to prepare and collaborate and keep their skills up, we need to find a solution that also gives us the ability to be flexible and doesn't put our rural schools at risk.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My next question to the same minister: Mr. Minister, how much will this agreement cost the government? Is that one of your concerns?

Mr. J. Johnson: Cost is always a concern, Mr. Speaker. We've been very clear that we need to work within the three-year budget that the Premier promised the school boards and that we've laid out so that they can have that certainty. But you should know that over the last decade we have increased funding to education by 60 per cent, even though enrolment has only increased by about 4 per cent, and the number of teachers in the classroom has increased by 13 per cent. We already invest more than any other province on a per-student basis or on a per capita basis. Our teachers make about 20 per cent more than the teachers in B.C. and Saskatchewan, which is okay because we want the best teachers in front of our kids. So it's not about the money. It's about finding ways to do things better, like cutting back some of the red tape that teachers have to deal with on a day-to-day basis.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, my final question is to the same minister. Given that teachers are pushing to change the classroom hours to deal with workload, would that mean that kids spend less time in the classroom?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we will not decrease the instruction for our kids. We may discuss changes on how much time a teacher spends in a classroom and what their workload day is like and how we support them with some of the diversity aspects that they have to have with respect to that, but we will not consider changing how much time our kids have in front of quality instructors.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

2:40

Employment Standards (Compassionate Care Leave) Amendment Act, 2012

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 203, the Employment Standards (Compassionate Care Leave) Amendment Act, 2012.

Bill 203 would amend the Employment Standards Code to include provisions for eight weeks of unpaid compassionate care leave for individuals charged with caring for terminally ill family members. This bill would help to ensure that Albertans do not have to risk employment and careers while performing their familial duties.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I committed to yesterday, I'm pleased to rise and table the appropriate number of copies of our final report on our London mission and, along with that, testimonials from individuals, companies, and institutions benefiting from Alberta's program during the London Olympics. Of course, as you know, our primary goals in London were to attract investment in our energy and tourism industries and to create new opportunities in the arts and culture sector. The documents that I'm tabling today will show exactly just that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices and in accordance with section 19(5) of the Auditor General Act I would like to table five copies of the report by the Auditor General titled Report of the Auditor General of Alberta, October 2012. Copies of this report are being distributed to all members in this Chamber.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table five copies of a document I referenced to the Minister of Treasury Board and Finance yesterday, estimates of medical costs associated with agricultural injuries in Alberta from Dr. Bob Barnetson, associate professor of labour relations at Athabasca University. The data are incomplete because there's no regulation regarding reporting of farm injuries, but his best estimate is that $4.5 million annually is transmitted to the public health system instead of being paid for by the industry through WCB.

I have a second tabling, Mr. Speaker, and that is A Social Policy Framework for Alberta: Fairness and Justice for All, presented today by the Parkland Institute, highlighting the growing inequity in Alberta and the health consequences of the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table official transcripts from the western Alberta transmission line hearings out of Red Deer. There are extracts, with the requisite copies, basically attesting to the original author of every document this government has relied upon calling these transmission lines not in the public interest and not needed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View has already tabled the report documenting increasing inequities and disparities in the province, so I will not need to.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In reference to my answer during question period, I would like to table five copies of the website for the Progressive Conservative Association of Alberta that lists any and all donations that have been returned to bodies that should not have donated. I certainly hope that we will see similar disclosures from the parties opposite.

Thank you.

Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The hon. House leader for the Official Opposition on Projected Government Business.

Mr. Anderson: Yes. Pursuant to the standing orders what is the expected business for next week, Mr. House Leader?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have projected government business for next week. On Monday, November 5, in the evening we anticipate discussing in second reading Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act. Time permitting, we could spend time in Committee of the Whole on Bill 5, the New Home Buyer Protection Act; Bill 8, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012; and thereafter third reading of Bill 6, Protection and Compliance Statutes Amendment Act, 2012, and Bill 9, Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2012.

On Tuesday, November 6, 2012, in the afternoon for second reading we anticipate getting back to Bill 2, Responsible Energy Development Act, and, time permitting, Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, and as per the Order Paper. In the evening for second reading we would anticipate still being on Bill 2 and Bill 4 and as per the Order Paper.

Wednesday, November 7, in the afternoon in Committee of the Whole we would anticipate commencing with Bill 2 and thereafter Bill 4 and as per the Order Paper. Wednesday in the evening we would anticipate being in Committee of the Whole on Bill 2 and Bill 4 and as per the Order Paper.

Thursday, November 8, in the afternoon for third reading Bill 2 and Bill 4 and as per the Order Paper.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, I believe you had a point of order, or was Airdrie first? I've lost track of the order here. Airdrie, I think you were first earlier on. You may have two, but let's go with your first one.

Point of Order

Questions about Political Party Activity

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's just one. According to the Standing Orders – and we've done this, as you've pointed out – a point of clarification, just to keep it exceptionally short today. Again, we dealt with this at another time. The Deputy Premier, obviously, may have missed that discussion, given his busy schedule. It was that the Alberta Alliance, of course, is a completely separate entity from the Wildrose Party, so the 2004 and 2007 donations have absolutely no relevance. Not only that, but as you always say, it is a party matter, and what's good for the goose is good for the gander. You know what I'm saying?

Thank you.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say to you that the hon. member is absolutely right. Matters of party finance should not be discussed in the House. I couldn't agree with him more. I will admonish all members on our side not ever to talk about party matters in the House again. I would hope that he would admonish all of his members to do the same.

I'd only have one other comment to make, Mr. Speaker. If that's not a sufficient apology, I would apologize most profusely for any member of our side talking about party finances and party matters in the House, and we will endeavour never to do it again.

I would only say one other thing that I think needs to be said, that one shouldn't ever be seen in public, particularly on the record, denying their heritage.

The Speaker: I think that sufficiently clarifies the matter. I just leave it with you to think about. If the hon. House leader of the opposition and the hon. Government House Leader on behalf of their respective caucuses and reflecting the general mood of the House are in total agreement, then I'm going to assume that next week there won't be any reference whatsoever to anything to do with issues that are outside the competence or the jurisdiction directly of the government, including and specifically referencing the two discussions that just occurred that might refer to party financing matters of any political party. Any political party. Are we agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: A point of clarification on Standing Order 13.

The Speaker: I'm just taking you at your word there.

Mr. Anderson: I did not agree to any such thing.

The Speaker: I have clarified this, and I'm not going to get into a debate with you here. We'll leave it there as something for you to think about. If we're agreed, let me know on Monday how you feel about that, and we'll proceed.

The second point of order. The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Items Previously Decided Parliamentary Language

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. Earlier today in question period the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, in a question to the Minister of Education, did two things which were particularly egregious, and I would ask that you admonish him not to do those sorts of things and ask him to apologize under section 23(f), "debates any previous vote of the Assembly unless it is that Member's intention to move that it be rescinded," which, of course, in question period he can't do, and Beauchesne 411(4), which suggests that a member must not "criticize decisions of the House."

I could give further citations, but I think that's a sufficient platform to say that we had a debate in this House on Bill 3, and there was a specific debate on the amendment to Bill 3 with respect to a no-zero policy. Positions were put on both sides of the House about whether or not that was an appropriate policy to be enshrined in the act. That was discussed. That was voted on. It's entirely inappropriate under the rules of the House to try and reraise that same issue and to continue the debate in question period by bringing that back after it's already been debated and voted on in the House. That's clearly against the rules.

What is also clearly against the rules and was also offensive in that same question was the use of unparliamentary language. The Speaker has ruled on a number of occasions with respect to unparliamentary language. I would ask members who haven't had the privilege to read these books thoroughly. The House of Commons Procedure and Practice at page 619 – now, I am, I think, operating with an old edition, the 2nd edition rather than the 3rd edition – outlines some of the context for that.

Although an expression may be found to be acceptable, the Speaker has cautioned that any language which leads to disorder in the House should not be used... that Member will be requested to rise in his or her place and to withdraw the unparliamentary word or phrase.

When you go to Beauchesne's 492, you will find that the word "cowardly" is a word that has been ruled unparliamentary, and I think pathetic and cowardly used together or separately are both unparliamentary words. Certainly, if you went to 23(j), suggesting anybody using "abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder," it would fall, clearly, into that category.

Mr. Speaker, you quite rightly, I think, admonished this House several times about decorum and about how we keep our place. It's certainly easier to keep our place if we don't hurl insults across the floor at each other, and I would ask the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View to do the honourable thing, to rise in his place, to withdraw those remarks and apologize for them, and, further, to look at the rules with respect to raising issues that have previously been discussed and voted on in this House and understand that those aren't the topic for further questions.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, since this is a point of order regarding you, I'll recognize you first, and then we'll go to the Liberal House leader.

An Hon. Member: Isn't it Chestermere-Rocky View?

Mr. Anderson: That's right, but the House leader responds to it, as you know.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to the amendment issue that was raised, obviously, we acknowledge that we're not supposed to reraise subamendments that have already been voted on. We understand that. We'll make sure to make that clear to our caucus. Obviously, he can still ask about a policy. There's nothing wrong with asking about a policy and asking the government to act on a policy. But, granted, a subamendment which has already been voted on is different, so I will absolutely alert my caucus to that.

With regard to pretending that the PC name represented pathetically cowardly, clearly, Beauchesne's and the references he's referring to are dealing with individuals in this House. You cannot refer to an individual in this House using those names. Absolutely and completely true. The member was clearly referencing the party, the PC Party, in that way. That said, I will without any doubt ask my members to go over the sections in Beauchesne's that list the things that are unparliamentary language and familiarize themselves with them as much as possible. Even though this was not directed at the member and was directed clearly at the party and meant in a slightly humorous way, we'll make sure to go to great lengths to not use things that may be interpreted as being against a member of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wouldn't usually rise to speak on someone else's point of order, but this has been, depending on how you like to look at it, either an exciting or a brutish week. I'm aware that there are a number of new colleagues in the Assembly, and I'd like to offer some observations if I may.

Using the citations 23(j) and 489 to 492, while it is sort of fun and a little bit joyous to call people names in this House for the first couple of times you do it, we have a freedom of speech in here that is balanced by an understanding that you shouldn't abuse it. There are hundreds of thousands of words in the dictionary that you can use to describe other people without resorting to pretty lame, schoolboy name-calling.

My issue in this is that the public doesn't distinguish. If the Wildrose wants to call the Tories some kind of blah, blah, blah, I go back into my constituency, and my constituents think that I've been called that, or I've called someone else that. This goes far beyond you standing up and calling anybody else a name. It blackens all of us, and like a witch's curse, it comes back on us seven times.

It's a particularly stupid thing to do in this House – I'm talking about the action, not the individual – considering the number of words that are available to us. I don't like being tarred with that brush. I'm careful to try not to do that. I'm a good heckler. I don't always get caught, but that's a different matter.

Really, it comes down to the golden rule. Speak to others as you would like to be spoken to. Would any of you like to be called the names that you've called others this week?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie, very briefly.

Mr. Anderson: Very short. I would reference that this member – it's difficult to understand that she of all members would be lecturing on this point – just did this exact thing that she's accusing the other of doing. She said that saying stupid names and stupid things like that – obviously insinuating that this member was the same. [interjection] Hold on.

I would also notice that the Minister of the Treasury Board has repeatedly in this House said over and over again, pertaining to us: I don't care what the wild alliance ever said. Well, that's not our name, all right? Again, there has to be some fairness in here. The hypocrisy can only go so far. What's good for the goose is good for the gander on this.

The Speaker: Thank you.

You know, I want to again ask you in all sincerity to review a couple of citations that will help in this matter, and I hope will help prevent future matters. I say this with the greatest of respect whether you're a new member in this House or a returning member to this House. I wish to begin on page 618 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, probably 2nd edition, Unparliamentary Language. Here is what it says.

The proceedings of the House are based on a long-standing tradition of respect for the integrity of all Members. Thus, the use of offensive, provocative or threatening language in the House is strictly forbidden.

Strictly forbidden.

Personal attacks, insults and obscenities are not in order. A direct charge or accusation against a Member may be made only by way of a substantive motion for which notice is required.

If language used in debate appears questionable to the Speaker, he or she will intervene.

That's what I've been doing. I'm compelled by the practices and traditions that guide this House to intervene.

In fact, if you were to look at our own Standing Orders, right at the very edge, at the beginning it says:

(2) In all contingencies unprovided for, the question shall be decided by the Speaker and, in making a ruling, the Speaker shall base any decision on the usages and precedents of the Assembly and on parliamentary tradition.

So I ask you to please bear that in mind.

You know, there is not an undereducated person in this House. Not one. I've looked at all your resumés that you had on your websites and everywhere else. This is a very intelligent group of people we have here. I just know that you can craft a solid question without using gutter-type language or using unparliamentary-type language, and I just know, government members, that you can answer without using the same.

I also know that any time and every time we get into issues that concern political parties, which don't belong on the floor of this Assembly, a point of order, usage of time, insults being hurled back and forth, disruptions, disorder, and the like always arise. Every single time. I can guarantee it.

I'm going to repeat. Hon. government members, you may not like some of the questions that are being asked, but they have a right to ask them. Hon. members in the opposition and government private members, you may not like the answers that you're getting from the government – you may not; you may disagree with them – but there's a time and a place and a manner in which to disagree with them. Using unparliamentary language is not one of those methods.

On page 634 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice it goes on. I'm pointing this out hoping that some of you will actually take a moment and reflect on Hansard over the weekend or on Monday. "A Member may not direct remarks to the House or engage in debate by raising a matter under the guise of a point of order." Points of order sometimes themselves get abused and are taken to be an extension of some debate.

With respect to the actual parliamentary language that was used in this case, "pathetically cowardly," I think all three speakers to this point – the Government House Leader, the leader of the Wildrose opposition, the House leader of the Liberal opposition – accurately stated a lot of valid, valid points. I'm not going to review all of them, but I would like to draw your attention to a couple of these. It's not just a matter of the word itself that guides a Speaker in making the ruling. It's the tone with which that word was delivered that counts as well. It's the timbre and the temperature and the passion or lack of it or whatever that governs how Speakers rule. I've had the benefit of listening to many Speakers over this summer as we discussed and debated some of these kinds of issues.

Quite correctly, as pointed out by a couple of members, citation 492 of Beauchesne does specifically list "cowardly." It says, "The following expressions are a partial listing of expressions which have caused intervention on the part of the Chair, as listed in the Index of the Debates between 1976 and 1987," and it specifically cites the word "cowardly." When you add "pathetically cowardly" to that and you add a little salt and pepper to it to spice it up, you're going to have a point of order every time, hon. member.

You are. It's just how it works. Now, if you flip back, you'll see that the word "coward" is also parliamentary in another instance if it's used in a different context, in a different way. There are frequently two versions of the same stat, fact, or data.

In the end of ends, let's all agree that using terms like "pathetically cowardly" in the context in which those two words were used does exactly what the Member for Edmonton-Centre indicated they do. They tend to tarnish us all. I would say to you that the majority of members by far in this House are very adult in their presentations, very adult in their questions and in their answers. Sometimes a few people don't quite rise up to the level of adult, but the majority by far do. Yet each and every one of us has to live sometimes by the missteps and misrepresentations, if you like, of the rest of us. We have to live by it.

Now, we're going home, some of us longer and farther than others, to our constituencies, to our families, to our friends, as I said in the opening prayer, and I want you to please think about this again. I am doing my best to help all of you, including myself, clean up our act, as I said in May. I've received some wonderful notes from all different people in this House, from all different parties, in verbal or in written form, saying: thank you for doing your best to clean up the act. I just ask you to join me in doing that with a little more passion, please.

As such, we will accept the apology which I think I heard you, hon. House leader, give on behalf of your member.

I don't know, hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, if you wish to add a short apology of your own. If you do, I would encourage you to do it now.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and everybody that pointed out my mistake today. I sure don't claim to be perfect, and emotion does run hot in here, and obviously as a newbie you make mistakes along the way. I completely withdraw what I said to the members across the hall even though I didn't intentionally mean to call them what I said. I meant to refer to the party. It still is the wrong thing to do, so I completely withdraw and ask that you accept my apology.

The Speaker: An excellently phrased apology. Thank you. We all noted the sincerity with which you gave it, and I think you noted the response of the House. Thank you.

That concludes that matter, then, and we move on to Orders of the Day.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 1

Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2012

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of the hon. Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real honour and a privilege for me today to rise to move Bill 1 for third reading on behalf of the hon. the Premier.

Bill 1 is always intended in parliamentary tradition to be a signature bill, to be a bill that sets a tone or direction and that actually makes a statement. Often it's not necessarily substantive. It's only in our House, actually. Not in very many parliamentary traditions is Bill 1 a substantive bill. In fact, in many parliaments Bill 1 is not a substantive bill; it's really just a pro forma bill.

We have had a history of Bill 1's that make a difference in this House, and I'm really proud of that, and I'm really proud of this Bill 1. I think it was an important statement to be made on behalf of our community to first responders, to recognize that first responders operate in a context that most of us do not have to operate in. Many of us do see trauma in our life, sometimes in our work, hopefully not always in our work here, Mr. Speaker, but many people do see trauma in their life. I want to reiterate that this bill is not about saying that people don't have trauma in their workplace or trauma in their life.

This bill is about saying to first responders that we appreciate that day after day first responders go out on behalf of Albertans and face some horrible circumstances. They do it willingly, they do it with a great deal of skill, care, and attention, but they don't always get the opportunity to come back from that. They don't always get the opportunity to debrief. If you're driving an ambulance and you're going to a horrific accident and you deliver the victims of the accident to care and then turn around and go back out on the street, you don't get a chance to go and see a counsellor about what horrific things you've seen. If you're a police officer showing up at a site where a child has been killed or injured severely, for example, sometimes in some of the most horrific of circumstances, you don't necessarily get to book off and go and see a counsellor and debrief right at that moment. You get to continue your shift and to do other things and go to other sites.

I know this is anecdotal, but often we hear about the fact that at the end of the day, of course, our first responders go home to their families, and they don't get a chance to debrief with their families, nor do they often want to debrief with their families.

You're talking about first responders who are going out and doing things on a daily basis that are traumatic without necessarily the kind of supports although I know that in each case of the employers for police, for emergency medical technicians, for firefighters, and for peace officers there are counselling services available. There are supports available. There are even support groups involved, but they don't necessarily get the opportunity to kick in.

Now, we heard in debate at other stages of the bill that there are other professions and occupations who suffer trauma, and that's absolutely certainly true. I know personally that that happens sometimes where you don't expect to have to deal with it. People have to deal with incidents and occurrences which cause trauma, and some professions and occupations are more likely to face it or face it more often than others.

This bill is not about separating those out. This bill is about making presumptive coverage for those first responders that we know face trauma on an everyday basis, on an every-shift basis on behalf of Albertans. It's about taking away the additional trauma of having to point to a specific incident or a specific occurrence or file a report when they don't even know it's happened, to start the process of saying: "I have a claim that I need to deal with. I need some coverage, some medical help that I need perhaps to take. Maybe I can't do my job anymore because I'm so traumatized by it."

This is a very good bill, Mr. Speaker. It's a very good bill in the tradition of Bill 1's in this province, which speaks to a direction of government and an understanding that we have as a community about how important it is that we have people who are prepared to go to work every day to make our communities safer, to take us out of harm's way, to be there for us when we become the victim of an accident, whether through our own fault or somebody else's.

I would ask the House to vote in favour of this bill, to pass this bill, and to make Alberta the first jurisdiction which has presumptive coverage in its Workers' Compensation Act for first responders – police, firefighters, emergency medical technicians, peace officers – who on a day-to-day basis go out there on behalf of Albertans and help us with our most troubled times.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to stand and speak to this bill one final time. I have been pleased throughout this process, first off, to see the Premier make this the first priority of her government, and I want to thank both the hon. Minister of Human Services and the hon. associate minister of persons with disabilities for the engaging and productive debate that we had around this bill this past couple of weeks.

We've been through this, Mr. Speaker. PTSD is a devastating condition, and I'm very pleased to rise in support of the bill as it's been written and pass this legislation, with complete understanding of what presumptive care actually means for our first responders. I had requested an amendment earlier this week that would have put in a different time frame, and I was so pleased with the answers and the response that we received from the government members, who explained that presumptive care means that there isn't a timeline, that there is no time frame, that there is no statute of limitations in the sense of denying care for those first responders, who, as the hon. minister so eloquently put it, put their lives on the line for families, for our loved ones when it matters most.

The clarity offered around this particular part of the legislation will assure our first responders that they can quite simply receive the treatment when they need it, and I think it is incumbent upon us to offer that. It will reassure them that if they start experiencing the trauma of PTSD and have served as a first responder, the presumptive nature of the bill will simply allow them to get their lives back.

Through the meetings with stakeholders that I spoke with, that's truly what they've been asking for. It's nice to see that democracy works every once in a while and that they will have the opportunity to get their lives back. They're not just simply looking for wage replacement. They're looking to be able to go home at night, look their loved ones in the eye, and not want to go sit in a dark room by themselves. They're looking to be able to fall asleep at night without having to self-medicate. I think that this bill goes a long way to helping ensure that that is the case for our first responders.

I am thoroughly impressed and encouraged by the willingness of the government to accept an amendment that we brought forward during Committee of the Whole. There have been some questions posed to me regarding what it means to provide culturally competent clinicians to our first responders diagnosed with PTSD, so I'd like to take a brief opportunity to just maybe offer some explanation as to what that will mean for our first responders.

We all know that there are too many examples of the types of events that can cause PTSD, but to help explain this, let's just assume for a moment that a first responder has experienced a highly stressful situation and traumatic event where the extreme nature becomes a potential trigger for posttraumatic stress disorder. After their shift that day the worker goes home to their loved ones, tries to get some sleep and the images out of their mind from the hours previous. Now, assuming they can fall asleep, they may experience intense nightmares, essentially reliving the event. The next day they go to work, and they are told by their superiors that the events of the previous day have come under question, potentially because a firearm was discharged or the actions of someone on their team came under question and someone was injured.

That generally in those environments starts an administrative hearing process where these first responders not only are set in the frame of mind of trying to deal with what they've just experienced, but now under a stressful, court-like setting they're asked to defend and relive these moments over and over, potentially for weeks and/or months, until some sort of administrative resolution has been found. As this is going on, there's potential for them to begin withdrawing, perhaps start self-medicating. They perceive or start to notice their colleagues are looking at them differently. Seeing as it's not generally acceptable to appear weak within these fraternities and professions, the feelings of abandonment add up. Combined with the potential stresses of these hearings, the very real stresses of living with PTSD all compound the trauma that they are experiencing.

It is for these reasons that PTSD is experienced through a unique lens when you are a first responder and why it's so important to have a treatment option that has familiarity with this. That is where culturally competent clinicians will come in and be able to help our first responders because it means they understand the whole picture. Again, I applaud the government and the ministers responsible for accepting that amendment and being open to further discussions.

As I mentioned earlier this week, the importance of allowing for culturally competent clinicians is that if a worker is going through treatment and they're not finding that they're getting the help that they want, you know, a worker stops going to treatment. They may be on medication. They're unable to pay the bills. There may be family pressures, administrative pressures. All of this can add up to an increased risk for suicide. The last thing that we want is an epidemic on our hands of first responders who aren't feeling like they're getting the support that they require once they've decided to pursue treatment for this terrible condition. Again, I'm very, very pleased with the way that this bill is going to be passed today for third reading.

I would also like to offer the potential to begin some education and a remedy to another topic that I've brought up, which is that we've only had four of what is suggested should be about 2,700 first responders having claimed for PTSD in the past two and a half years. If our first responders, when they do their annual physical, had to also go through an annual mental exam, perhaps that would allow for some insight into some of the stresses that they see on an everyday basis, and we'd start to be able to catch some of this. Just an item for further discussion down the road, I suppose. Perhaps some of those stakeholder organizations – our fire departments, our EMTs, our police departments – would consider doing this to help kick-start the education process, start to break the stigma of mental health here in our province and ultimately help our first responders.

As the hon. minister mentioned, this will be the first legislation of its kind in Canada. It's been a great honour to stand and debate and take part in this process. Again, I congratulate the government for making this a top priority for them.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

3:20

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak in third reading of Bill 1, which is intended to be a debate on the anticipated effect of the bill once it's implemented. I have listened to almost all of the debate on the bill, and that which I didn't listen to either in person or on the Tannoy, I've followed up by reading Hansard, and I have to say that this has been an odd debate.

No one that I heard speak was intending in any way, shape, or form to demean or degrade or to value in any way less the first responders that are specifically named in this legislation. What I am really interested in is that I have not heard a very clear explanation – I haven't heard a clear explanation – from the government as to why they have made a choice to give preferential treatment to certain people and not to other people, and even on their definition of that they have waived and changed their mind.

I start back from the beginning and go: okay; why does the government feel a need to intervene in the current WCB process? Because that's what's happening. They're saying: we are going to say that this group of people gets to go to the head of the queue. Once they've been diagnosed with posttraumatic stress disorder, they go to the head of the queue. They don't have to go through the usual WCB process where they're examined, the WCB doctors can be brought in, and additional examinations and tests and surveillance and all the rest of that stuff can happen. This one particular group of people goes straight on. Nobody is saying they shouldn't, right? Nobody that I've heard debating or read has said that, so let's be really clear about it.

But I still can't get a straight answer out of the government as to why they feel the need to put these people at the front of the line for WCB. To me, that says that there's a real problem with WCB, so I'm wondering why the government hasn't just addressed the problem with WCB.

Increasingly, I'm seeing a Swiss-cheesing of this issue. Five years ago we added – forgive me; I'm going to get the order wrong – firefighters. It's the same situation. They would be automatically believed that any lung cancer they suffered would have come directly as a matter of their job, and off they go. No more tests. No more hurdles. No more loopholes. On they go. Then we added in another piece of legislation a couple of years later, and a second kind of cancer got added in for a specific group of people. Same deal: head of the line; avoid all the hoo-ha with WCB.

Okay. This is the third bill doing exactly the same thing, and I started to think: "Hmm. Why aren't we dealing with the problem here; that is, the problem with WCB? Despite the fact that in the last – oh dear – 15 years we've had two significant inquiries/commissions, maybe a blue-ribbon panel in there somewhere, and a committee to examine this, and there were, in fact, recommendations made, very little, if any of it, has been implemented. I'm looking with anticipation to my colleagues on the other side to see who is going to leap to their feet to contradict me on that. No one.

Mr. Hancock: We can't.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, that hasn't stopped you before. Come on, now.

If we're going to develop this argument, then, if we're having this legislation enshrine, enable, enact the ability to intervene in the current WCB process, why are you doing it? Okay. One stream of that is saying: there's something wrong with the system, and we're trying to queue-jump some people we think really should be queue-jumped. The second side of it is: well, if there's nothing wrong with the WCB system, then why are we choosing certain occupations to get preferential treatment?

I carefully listened and read the definitions to see who a first responder is or why they've chosen certain people. It's ranged from the Member for Peace River on page 336 of October 29 Hansard talking about: "This bill is about thanking first responders." Okay. Then a little later on he talks about that it's "meant to recognize first responders," to which I say: for what? Usually when you recognize someone, you give them a plaque or a glass thing or a bonus or a watch or something. Why are we recognizing these people? I thought we were trying to help them with a health problem. There's one definition that I've heard coming from opposite on why we're doing this bill. We're thanking and recognizing people.

I carefully went through and, once again, on the next page over, 337:

The point is that we are saying thank you to some people that are richly deserving of that. It's about the fact that the things that they do day in and day out are horrific, and we thank them for that. We should thank them for that.

And everybody here has agreed thus far. If that's the definition we're going on, there were very good arguments made throughout the various debates on this bill that there are a number of other people who also do things day in and day out that are horrific and, one presumes, on behalf of the public in Alberta. So there were arguments for prison guards. There were arguments for social workers. There were arguments for anyone in the public service who is diagnosed with posttraumatic stress disorder. I never get the initials right.

Later in the same thing:

It's . . . not about removing the right that any worker in Alberta has to PTSD coverage when that PTSD, posttraumatic stress disorder, is related to their employment. That's already available to everybody, and the bill does not remove that from [anyone].

No, it doesn't, but it does grant preferential treatment to certain people, and I still can't get an answer as to why. If you're going to say first responders, well, there are other people that fit the definition of first responders that didn't get included in that. I'm just looking for criteria here that anybody could repeat more than once so I can go back to my constituents and say: here are the criteria they based this on. But I can't find it; in your own words, it's not there.

Let me go back and talk a little bit about this. Well, okay; we're going to give preferential treatment, and it's about saying thanks, or it's about recognizing. Well, I would argue that these are all hard-working people. They are all hard-working public servants. These are not people that are paid by a corporation. These are public servants who are walking into a building or a situation when everybody else is running out. They indeed are the firefighters, the medical technicians, the police officers, the sheriffs. I support having the additional categories of people added in if that was the point of this, that we were going to take care of certain people because they were doing something on our behalf, and it is something – what did the minister just say when he was up? It was a traumatic situation, and they may not get a chance to debrief, and they may not get to a counsellor; they may be doing a traumatic thing. Well, I think there are a lot of public servants that actually fit into that.

This is the problem with the government drawing a line. As soon as you draw a line, there are people on one side of it and people on the other side of it. Then there's a long argument about why you should move some people from one side of the line to the other side of the line. I just want to know what made people get on the other side of the line, and it's not clear why the government decided to do this. I'm sure there's a reason, but it may not be a reason that we can discuss in the House because maybe it's got to do with party business or party financing, Mr. Speaker. Maybe that's why we're not talking about it. Who knows? They won't tell me.

3:30

In the end, having gone through all of this, I did go and look up "presumptive" as I was listening to the previous speaker. To presume: to assume is true without proof; to undertake to do something without right or permission. Okay. Both of those would apply, I would say. Presumption: the act of presuming; reason or grounds for presuming or believing something is true. Again, that's exactly what's anticipated here, that we're going to believe that this posttraumatic stress disorder came about because of the work that these public servants were doing, and therefore we're going to look after their health without making them run through this gauntlet of tests and questioning and proof that is a matter of course and process with WCB.

Again, I challenge the government: why them and not everybody else? What is the point that we have come to where this is the third piece of legislation that I've seen in this House inside of I'm going to say eight years, each of which is specifically – what's the word I'm looking for? – going around the WCB process . . .

An Hon. Member: Circumventing.

Ms Blakeman: Circumventing. Thank you. See? We can all work together.

. . . deliberately circumventing the WCB process. That's exactly what's going on here, and we still don't have a real reason or a definitive criteria.

I know people feel really strongly about it, and that's quite clear from listening to the debate that I listened to and from reading the remarks in here. There was also clearly a division, where people said: "No. We're willing to add this one in but not this one." There were a number of people that spoke in favour – Calgary-Shaw, Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, Airdrie, Little Bow, Calgary-South East, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, Medicine Hat, Calgary-Fish Creek – that spoke in favour of including the penitentiary workers but not in favour of any additional workers, so very clear guidelines in people's heads. Okay. Fair enough. They all had reasons why they didn't want to go the other step, very clear reasons why they felt that the penitentiary workers should be included and very clear reasons about why they wouldn't include anybody else, which, frankly, is better than the government managed to do.

You know, I think everybody is going to support this legislation. Why wouldn't you? But, again, I question. I know it's hard, but you're the government. You've got a gabillion dollars behind you. You've got resources up the wazoo. You have everything. Why can you not deal with the difficult stuff? You have everything to be able to get to the core, to do the radical surgery that you need to do here on WCB, and you've got some experts on WCB here. You've got people that come from the trades and unions and people that really understand this, and every one of us has dealt with these cases in our office.

I challenge the government: step up; do the right thing. I really don't want to see a fourth piece of legislation in here exempting yet another group of people from the WCB process or adding another reason why they get to queue-jump that process. I'm not saying queue-jumping in any kind of negative way. It's just that there's a queue, there's a process, and these people don't have to do it. That's what the presumptive is all about.

I do think there's a huge underlying problem here that has not been addressed. I'm sure the bill will pass, and you will all put feathers in your caps and feel good about it. But we still have not dealt with the problem, and I am not seeing any sign that you're inclined to. Oh, well, another 15 minutes of talking to thin air.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available for five minutes of questions or comments regarding the previous speaker's comments. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just wondering if the member, one, would recognize that I supported both motions and went against my own caucus and, second, define "wazoo."

Ms Blakeman: I am sorry. I was looking at the divisions that were done on that, and I thought I saw your name. I am certainly willing to withdraw that and believe you absolutely because I remember you getting up the second time to say: now, just a minute here; I haven't said that I won't support it, but you've got to give me a better argument. I do remember that.

An Hon. Member: That was in the third one.

Ms Blakeman: That was in the third one. Okay. Sorry about that. I have misspoke about you, and I will take that back because I'm sure you did it.

The definition of wazoo is culturally different, but generally it is a very large container, a vat, you might say, or a large enough venue that you can put many, many things in it. This government certainly has that, and they certainly have a lot of things that they could use to improve WCB, and I would encourage them to do that.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, according to the Urban Dictionary "up the wazoo" means "up one's trapdoor."

Ms Blakeman: This is what I was saying about the precision of language, and it's such a delight. I will thank you for using your electronic device to be able to look up a more colloquial way of describing it than I chose to. You're just faster with your electronic device than I am with an old-fashioned dictionary, but thank you very much.

The Speaker: Yes. Well, that certainly clarifies that matter, doesn't it?

Are there others under 29(2)(a)?

If not, hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, proceed on the main debate.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. That's exactly what I came to do this afternoon. I haven't had an opportunity to speak at length in regard to Bill 1. I think I did speak on one amendment. I was very interested in bringing forward some comments on this bill.

First and foremost, I do recognize this as being perhaps a good first step in regard to protecting and funding treatment for public workers that experience PTSD. Certainly, we know that through the evolution of this condition and the treatment of this condition we have been ignoring this for a long time. We've come to know different versions of PTSD from as early as the First World War, really, when people had shell shock and so forth, but now to recognize the condition and to provide more advanced treatment for people over these last hundred years I think is overdue. We know that we have at least thousands of these cases every year across the country.

Certainly, when dealing with issues like this, I like to speak on behalf of the first responders that would be under this new law if it becomes law. I have heard from firefighters and police and peace officers and EMS workers that are all certainly favouring this legislation. I'd like to support them, of course. These are important workers that often are not compensated commensurate with the hard work that they do. As the Member for Edmonton-Centre mentioned earlier, they are the people that run into emergencies while the rest of us are running away from them sometimes. For that, I certainly don't find fault with Bill 1.

But there is, I guess, a problem here. It's both a logical problem and a practical problem. When we are changing legislation on who gets a treatment and who doesn't get a treatment, then we have to be very careful about how we define that and whether it passes the test of logic and of common sense as well.

As I said, I did get to speak on one amendment that was put forward on Bill 1, and that perhaps will serve as a good example of how when you draw a line treating people for a condition in a presumptive way, there are people on the other side of the line that probably, logically and practically, could be considered for that same treatment if we were to be fair and balanced, which is what we try to do in a Legislature when making laws.

That amendment that I spoke to, of course, was in regard to including jailers, keepers, guards, and other officers that work in prisons as being fairly defined as first responders as well. We know that, in fact, there are even legal definitions that would legally tie those prison workers of different categories to being in the same category as a police officer. We know that there are lots and lots of cases. It's a difficult environment to work in. These are individuals that need and require our support always and are often in traumatic situations that can lead to a diagnosis of posttraumatic stress disorder. Again, just drawing a rather arbitrary line with this whole presumptive part of this law I think unfairly excludes, for example, prison guards. I did speak on that before. I don't want to bring too much of that detail in.

Upon reflection, then, you take that example of prison guards being on the wrong side of that line, where they are not able to be protected under presumptive laws or sections of this bill. Then, of course, I just started to reflect on this in even a wider way, again applying logic and common sense. If a person has a condition and it's recognized by a doctor to be a condition – you break your arm; you have something wrong with your kidney or whatever – then that's just the way it is. It's a scientific fact. If we are excluding someone because they are in a certain occupation – let's use our imaginations for a moment here on that kidney disorder, not the PTSD but the kidney disorder – but they're not under this certain small category of people, you know, that person still has the same kidney disorder as the other one that is included. We've just drawn an imaginary line in law here in the Legislature.

I think that there is a reasonable compromise. We do know that including, I think, social workers and other professions in the public service is very reasonable when we're talking about this law. I think that by applying a certain reasonable test, where if someone has a documented situation that's happened to them, that's been documented as a traumatic event in the course of their job, and then they end up with a diagnosis of PTSD, again, I think that by applying that little sort of middle range of law, we should be able to give them the protection that this sort of law would be afforded them as well.

There is a third story that passes through this bill, and it's not a pretty story. It's a story of how the Workers' Compensation Board and practices in this province of Alberta are not necessarily serving the needs of workers as they should be. If you go to the board with an application for a PTSD case, then you are often strung along on a very long and very tenuous course with people trying to make a presumption that you picked up PTSD or that your condition is for any number of other reasons besides that traumatic incident that you had suffered during the course of your work. We all know, because we're all dealing with casework from WCB here in our constituencies, that so often people – it's like judge, jury, and executioner all in the building up the street, in WCB, where someone has a case of, let's say, PTSD, and they go and they delve into their substance abuse or their broken marriage or whatever else that, you know, people will get pinned with. They carry that around with them like this heavy knapsack of stones, that is entirely unfair. We also know that once your case is up for review at WCB, that stress alone often results in people picking up more and more problems along the way. You'll see this as you go through your caseloads, that will undoubtedly increase exponentially once they've heard you speak so eloquently on this issue, right? People will come to your constituency, and as their case drags on, just the case alone will complicate things and make their lives that much more miserable.

I like this idea of a presumptive protection for people, but let's make sure that we're not just giving it to one person. We know that first responders are well deserving of it, but why hive that off? If we have a good idea, let's use it for everybody, right? That's a basic thing that I've always learned in my experience in this Legislature. If we come up with something that's good, well, then, why should we exclude anybody from having that thing that is good? Of course, the case that's often made back to that is that, oh, well, it costs too much money. Well, you know, when we are treating people for illness, all forms of illness, then presumably we are treating them with the idea of not just saving that person but also saving society a larger money issue down the road.

We've come up with something here which I think is good, an idea of presumptive coverage and protection for first responders, and good for them. They will recognize and appreciate this, undoubtedly, and I think they're well deserving of that, right? But let's use the model that we're building here with some modification. If someone can show that they have had a traumatic incident during the course of their work and they do get diagnosed with PTSD, then they can be afforded the same coverage that is in Bill 1.

Bill 1's are often trying to set the tone for a government, and it's important that we make sure that we get that tone right, that we're not compromising or just trying to get a little attention or something like that but that we're building a landmark thing that we can point to that adds to the edifice of a just and fair society for everyone. That's what we do when we make laws. You know, I look at other Bill 1's in the past, and I've seen governments rise to that occasion and recognize that they will mark their period of governance with landmark legislation that lasts.

I can see very clearly the good example of that back in 1970, 1971 when the Progressive Conservative government of Peter Lougheed brought in the Human Rights Act, and here we are 40-some years later still dealing with that landmark legislation and enjoying the benefits of it. But I also find that this government, when talking about that Bill 1, the Alberta Human Rights Act, which is now law, and constantly compromising the integrity and the intention of that law – I find that very disturbing.

We've seen a movement away from the idea of equality and social justice in this Legislature through the compromise of that Bill 1 from back in 1970, 1971, the Human Rights Act, and I find that disturbing. I feel glad that I'm back here to speak on that, and I will certainly be watching like a hawk – with all of the things that happen to hawks, and literally watching hawks in some cases – to ensure that that Human Rights Act is not compromised. That's the sort of Bill 1 that is landmark legislation that you can take to the bank and help to build up the edifice of democracy in this province.

This one, this Bill 1, is okay, right? I'm not saying that it's not okay, but there's that compromise in there, where you are undermining a sense of equality and both logic and common sense, that I find a little bit disturbing. Certainly, it's not going to preclude me from probably voting in favour of this Bill 1, but let's remember just what that flaw is built into it. I think we've heard eloquently and succinctly from a number of people. They've pointed that out. It's fairly clear.

But, you know, we're not at a make-work sort of project here, Mr. Speaker, where we build little tiny bits of law here and there and everywhere and then come back next year and include another group. I mean, let's do it while we're all here together now and, like I say, build a Bill 1 that we can all be proud of and that will still be around 50 years from now.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments related to the previous speaker's comments.

Seeing none, we can move on. I would recognize the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to rise today to speak about Bill 1, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2012, which has given presumptive coverage to Alberta's firefighters, emergency medical technicians, peace officers, and police officers, all as first responders who have been diagnosed with posttraumatic stress disorder. This bill clearly is a great step forward towards providing the support that our 27,000 first responders need when they become ill as a result of the trauma of things they deal with in their everyday lives. We all know somebody, who might know somebody, who might know somebody – or perhaps we even know them personally – who deals in this range of fields.

I myself have a cousin who is a police officer with the Calgary Police Service, and the amount of work and the amount of trauma that he sees on a regular basis is staggering to me. It's honestly a job that, while I'm happy to be here and sometimes it's traumatic, I wouldn't want to do. I admire and acknowledge and honour everything that they do each and every day for Albertans all across this province. Clearly, their job is important. Clearly, their job is needed by each and every one of us in order to feel safe and in order to go forward every day.

One of the important parts of this bill is the presumptive coverage. This is vital for a number of reasons, but I'd just like to go through a couple. First, first responders are very courageous people, who become ill through the course of their work. It's important to understand that the traumas that they see, either at one time or in a series of events, are likely to be all through the course of their work. They're not likely to be seeing this on the drive home on a regular day. They're not likely to be going home to traumatic situations. The majority of their situations come directly as they relate to work, and that's why the presumptive coverage is so important.

These courageous people also help Albertans through some of the most stressful and traumatic events that they face. I myself had a very traumatic event. As most people in this House know, my brother was diagnosed with Huntington's in 2008. This was a new diagnosis to our family. We had no idea. There was some odd behaviour ahead of time. Quite honestly, we thought he had mental illness. We truly had no idea.

Well, unfortunately, a call came early one morning at about 5:30. It was the RCMP from our local detachment. The RCMP called, and I took that phone call on behalf of our family, and they advised that my brother had jumped off a bridge attempting suicide, as almost 40 per cent of those with Huntington's do because they're not aware they have a disease that is killing them. As we made those decisions, the RCMP met us in Innisfail. They were very kind and very giving. My mom was devastated. They couldn't tell us if he was dead or alive. All they could tell us, in the middle of a blizzard and minus 25, was that he had been taken to Red Deer hospital and they would escort us to that hospital. They did that. When we arrived at Red Deer hospital, they stayed with us.

Obviously, we were all very upset. My dad was at home recovering from cancer. My children were at home with my in-laws, thankfully, being very kind. We walked into a hospital not sure if my 32-year-old brother was alive. Luckily, we were very fortunate. When we got to the hospital, thankfully, he was very much alive. Unfortunately, he was broken, completely broken. He'd jumped off the top of an overpass onto pavement. You can imagine what kind of trauma that would be. He was unrecognizable. I had not seen my brother in six months and did not recognize him. He had no teeth. He was gaunt, 140 pounds. He looked like a stranger. The RCMP officer stayed with our family during that whole thing.

Now, I understand that this isn't the same kind of trauma, but to watch a family go through that kind of trauma and have to work them through that trauma – I don't know what's going on in his life. How do I know he doesn't have that same one? How do I know he hasn't suffered the atrocity of suicide? It's something we never talk about. To sit there with us and console us and then walk us through the beginning of the worst two and a half years of our lives: I honour them for that.

Recognizing that, I understand that our first responders must be supported when they ask for our help in return. This coverage will also help the families that deal with these situations every day. This is not limited to our first responders. These families live with their spouses and their partners. Early on they see the signs of PTSD. Early on they will see that their spouse is drifting apart, going into a room that is dark, those sorts of things, and then their family is directly affected by this. Having presumptive coverage for first responders will make it so that that spouse, that partner, can seek help sooner. This bill will make it easier for them to assist their loved ones with getting the help they desperately need.

Secondly, first responders understand that they work in a culture where the stigma of mental illness has made it difficult for them to talk about the problem of PTSD and seek help for it. Removing the burden of proving that these events occurred at work or which tragic event affected your life ensures that first responders will not be traumatized going forward. The Workers' Compensation Amendment Act will help to create a better culture in workplaces so that those workers who need help will know that they are working in an environment that is committed to getting them the help that they desperately need.

Part of this commitment is ensuring that they get the right help at the right time with the right person, and this is what the amendment forwarded by the Member for Calgary-Shaw achieved. I'm quite honoured to be sitting in a caucus that was able to show everybody how we can work together and achieve what is best for Albertans. The Member for Calgary-Shaw identified the clear need to ensure that those people who need treatment will get that treatment from a clinician who understands the unique stress that our first responders are under, the unique stress of their job, the demands of their job, and the incidents that lead to PTSD.

It's key that in order to understand how to cure, we need to understand what causes the illness in the first place. Along with that, first responders will also be reassured that they have the opportunity to recover and lead a full and productive life and, hopefully, at some point in time return to work if they're able. This is crucially important. We all know that the sooner a worker returns to work if they are able, the sooner that life can return to them.

I am honoured that we can show all Albertans that this bill is the result of a collaboration between stakeholder groups, first responders themselves, the government, and the opposition. The government likes to talk about all of its consultations and conversations that it has had with Albertans, and we're often very critical of that process. I understand that. A lot of times that's all we hear: "What kind of conversation did you have? What is the decision? Oh, no decision, so more consultation." But I will acknowledge and note that with Bill 1 the government has delivered something that is tangible as a result of those conversations with those on the front lines. I would extend a huge appreciation, and I thank you for that.

I'd also like to recognize the great effort by members of all our caucuses, not just the opposition and not just the government but also our third and fourth opposition parties, to debate and actually agree on the amendment to provide workers with PTSD treatment delivered by culturally competent clinicians. I swear he picked that just so we can't say it.

No instance of PTSD is the same, and this amendment recognizes this and provides the supports for the first responders who need it. It's always a nice feeling when we can come to work and as members can work together to bring smart improvements to legislation and put partisanship aside. I truly feel that with Bill 1 that appears to have happened. I am excited that over the next four years we'll have many opportunities to do that with many more pieces of legislation and to show that we're all working for the betterment of Albertans.

I thank each and every single member of this House for doing their part in making sure that that amendment was entered into Bill 1 and for making sure that Bill 1 covers all first responders.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available for any comments or questions directed to the previous speaker.

Seeing none, we'll move on. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in support of this bill. As some members may have noticed, I actually voted against, in opposition of my own caucus, one of these amendments because I did have a change of heart. We debated it. We decided it. This is a good bill in many ways, but I'm also saddened that we had to even bring this bill forward. The fact is that the reason behind this bill, the overriding reason, is that we have an issue with the WCB. That's the problem. That's a problem that does need to be fixed.

It's interesting. My experience with posttraumatic stress disorder goes way back to when I served in the Marines. I lost a friend, and I watched it right in front of my eyes. He just couldn't stick a needle in himself enough. I watched a young man dissipate in front of me who was a good friend. I didn't realize at the time what was driving that. Years later I got a sense of what went on.

How traumatic situations affect people is complicated. There are medical physicians that diagnose it, but we do have, in my mind, basically two types, the one that is diagnosed from a series of events and the one that can actually be pinpointed to an event.

What saddened me about the bill is that although the hon. members claim that they did not pick and choose who would be represented or which was more important than the others as far as professions – I say to you this. I just had a chance to talk to the security who have the enviable position of security for this honourable Assembly. They are all ex-sheriffs, ex-police officers, but they are private security nonetheless right now. Not one of them would hesitate, I don't think, to do their job, which is to put themselves in harm's way to provide security for this facility. The question is: if it's a one-time event, are they covered and presumed for posttraumatic stress disorder? It's not clear to me in this bill. Clearly, if it's related to their police work from their former employer, then they would be.

The reality is this. In order to be diagnosed with posttraumatic stress disorder – and maybe the sheriffs here or the security here do have it just watching us behave some days. But the reality is that it is diagnosed professionally and by qualified medical clinicians. Once diagnosed, the idea of having to fight with the WCB or have them make your life difficult is problematic. It's troubling. I just find that deplorable, knowing what I know from my own experiences.

Looking at some of the professions who, in my mind, are absolutely first responders that are not covered by this bill, I'm saddened because the reality is that we should never ever deny anyone with a legitimate diagnosis, with a legitimate cause the coverage that they absolutely deserve. They should never be interfered with by that government nanny who comes in and says: we're going to investigate your life. A prison guard, a correctional officer will now qualify as that, and that's unfortunate.

The idea behind covering people with the presumption I think is a good idea. I would disagree with my caucus and the members on the other side. I think the onus should be on the WCB. Once the diagnosis is made, if they disagree with it, then the onus should be on them to evaluate it as far as to prove that it wasn't what caused the PTSD. That's just my opinion. It is serious, and it affects people in so many different ways. I have nothing but respect for first responders.

I will tell you this. You groaned when I said that I was in the Marines. When I was a police officer, it was no different. When I worked for the Canadian Coast Guard it was no different. We had people who joined up in that service, all three of them, and after their very first event they hung it up, quit, walked away, decided that it was not for them. They could not take it, and that was it. That one event caused them to say: I do not have what it takes to do this job. I can tell you right now that that is true, I think, of every first responder's position, where there are people who cannot do it. Yet we don't cover all first responders.

I truly believe that anybody in any profession that would put themselves in harm's way willingly is a first responder. There are people who ride along with police officers. There are people in that position on a boat, on a pleasure cruise who, with no intention of being a first responder, find themselves all of a sudden there. When a ship goes down, a boat goes down, they have to react. They have to deal with the consequences. They have to deal with the traumatic experience. That happens day after day after day, yet they're not covered. I just find that sad.

I'll go back to the beginning, where I started. The problem is the WCB. This law is unnecessary. It's a Band-Aid approach to correct a situation. I am going to support it because it is a step in the right direction, but it is not the final solution. We need a WCB that works and that covers people and treats them with the respect and dignity that the average person deserves.

Now, granted, there are people who could abuse any law or any system that we come up with here, but that's no reason to penalize the population at large.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available should anyone have a comment or a question for the previous speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

4:10

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to congratulate the member for a very well-constructed argument and an excellent speech. As I said, this is my first real opportunity to speak to this bill, so I had missed where you had said that you had voted on your own. Was it on one of the amendments? If you could maybe just identify where that spot was, I would be curious to know.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe I voted against my caucus on the second amendment if I'm correct, which is the social workers.

The Speaker: Are there others under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any others who wish to speak to third reading of this particular bill?

Now, hon. members, I understand there might be a wish to shorten the time between bells. If that's the case, we will need a motion to that effect because some members, not being in the know on this, would not be able to arrive, perhaps, in time. I'm prepared to entertain a motion.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let's just waive Standing Order 32, which would allow us to shorten the bells to one minute.

Thank you.

The Speaker: That means it will be one minute between bells. Accordingly, should there be a division, then that's how we will proceed.

Are you ready for the question?

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for third reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:13 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

For the motion:

Amery	Fenske	Pedersen
Anglin	Fox	Quadri
Bhardwaj	Goudreau	Quest
Bikman	Hale	Rowe
Blakeman	Hancock	Sandhu
Brown	Horner	Sarich

Cusanelli	Klimchuk	VanderBurg
DeLong	Luan	Wilson
Donovan	McIver	Woo-Paw
Dorward	Olesen	Xiao
Eggen	Pastoor	Young

Totals: For – 42 Against – 0

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 1 read a third time]

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 19(1)(c) I must now put the question on the following motion for consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's speech.

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Olesen moved, seconded by Mr. Luan, that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Colonel (Retired) Donald S. Ethell, OC, OMM, AOE, MSC, CD, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Motion carried]

Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Address in Reply to Speech from the Throne

14. Mr. Campbell moved on behalf of Ms Redford:
Be it resolved that the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne be engrossed and presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor by such members of the Assembly as are members of Executive Council.

[Government Motion 14 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would say to call it 4:30 and adjourn the House until 1:30 p.m. on Monday, November 5, 2012.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:20 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, November 5, 2012

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us pray and then remain standing, please, for the singing of our national anthem.

Holy Creator and author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask for Your guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all our speeches, actions, and judgment. Amen.

Hon. members, I will now invite you to reflect on this great country that we live in called Canada and, as you reflect, to listen carefully to the singing of O Canada by one of Alberta's fastest rising young stars, Mr. Brett Kissel, who is the youngest ever nominee for a Canadian country music award after his 2006 nomination for the rising star award. Mr. Kissel, if you will, please. [applause]

Mr. Kissel:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

Thank you. [applause]

The Speaker: Thank you, Mr. Kissel. I doubt you have ever had finer accompaniment than the chorus of MLAs who joined you.

It's a great beginning to our week, hon. members, and it's a great kickoff to Edmonton Northlands' special Canadian Finals Rodeo week as well, a little later this week.

Thank you as well and congratulations, Brett. Best wishes as you headline our province and our country in France next year at one of their largest European country music festivals ever. All the best. [applause]

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: We have the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie with some visitors to introduce, please.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you Mr. Bapi Raju Kanumuri, the Member of Parliament from Narsapuram constituency, which is in the state of Andhra Pradesh in India. Mr. Kanumuri was first elected as an MLA in 1978 and served five terms in office. He is currently serving his second term as the Member of Parliament. He is here in Canada to bring Kalyanam for the first time, one of the most auspicious religious ceremonies. In addition to his various ministerial portfolios, he has also been appointed three times as a chairman of the TTD, which is one of the most blessed and prosperous Hindu temples in the world, an extreme honour and a very high honour. He is accompanied here today by his wife, Annapurna. Also joining him in your gallery today is the president of the Bhartiya Cultural Society, Mr. Chander Mittal, and his wife, Anita Mittal. At this time I ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a close and personal friend of mine, Mr. Brett Kissel. Brett hails from a cattle ranch in Flat Lake, Alberta. Mr. Kissel is a constituent of mine, and I had the pleasure of being his grade 8 teacher, when he received straight As and had the title of teacher's pet. When he turned 18, he got to vote, and he knew where to cast his ballot.

His musical accomplishments include the top five of independent album sales in Alberta. As well, he is about to sign one of the largest songwriting and publishing deals in Nashville, Tennessee. Brett has been signed to headline the largest country music festival in all of Europe, called the country tour of France, and is the youngest-ever artist to be nominated for a Canadian country music award. Brett will be releasing his new CD this spring. I have the pleasure of being able to go to his Christmas party in December. Brett is seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I would ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 54 students from Edmonton Christian school, northeast campus, new to my riding of Edmonton-Manning after the boundary change last election. They are the future leaders of this beautiful province. These 54 bright grade 6 students along with six parent helpers and their teachers, Mr. Greg Gurnett and Ms Elaine Junk, visited the Legislature and learned a lot about our building and provincial government. The group is seated in the public gallery. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of students, teachers, and parents from George P. Nicholson school, located in the constituency of Edmonton-South West. Accompanying these 22 bright and energetic students are the teacher, Mrs. Lorelei Campbell, and parents Mrs. Ruth Brodersen, Mrs. Cathy Sheppard, Mrs. Janet Lentz, and Mrs. Judy Ukrainetz. This class is one of three classes from George P. Nicholson that will be participating in School at the Legislature. Over the past three weeks they've been researching four MLAs each and preparing for their mock Legislature, where they'll be debating the elimination of provincial achievement tests. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask that the students and guests from George P. Nicholson please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Nellie McClung junior high at Bannerman elementary school, located in the constituency of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. Nellie McClung programs provide junior high programming for girls while emphasizing leadership, initiative, self-reliance, and independence as well as a chance to study in a single-gender educational setting. The Nellie McClung junior high girls are accompanied by their teacher, Ms Shannon Smale. I'd like to invite them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board, followed by the Minister of Health.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a small group of valued staff from various areas within the Ministry of Treasury Board and Finance. They are visiting us on a public service orientation tour today, and they are seated in the public gallery this afternoon. As I call their names, I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly: Robyn Halliday, an e-commerce helpdesk administrator in tax and revenue administration, business technology management; Natalie Zhang, an investment and debt accountant in financial services; and Jeff Dunn, service request co-ordinator in strategic and business services, corporate technology services. I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health, followed by the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

1:40

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members Miss Kyra Lee and Miss Zofia Prus-Czarnecka, two students from my constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford who are seated in the members' gallery. Also with the students is Kyra's father, Mr. David Lee. Kyra and Zofia were part of a group of 22 grade 11 students who were chosen to participate in the 2012 heritage youth research summer program. This summer they experienced research first-hand by working side by side with university researchers at the University of Alberta. This program is funded and operated by Alberta Innovates: Health Solutions and assists students in building experience and knowledge of health research and innovations. I'm very proud today to have both students in the House. I'd ask them to rise and receive our congratulations and our warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm indeed pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two individuals who have dedicated their working lives to our youth. As teachers they were very committed to their students. They are also very involved in politics both federally and provincially. I'm very proud to have had them on my team, and I am truly thankful to them. Thank you for being the kind spirits that you are. I am honoured to call you friends. I would ask that Garland and Edna Hoel rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services, followed by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a constituent of mine, Gomathi Boorada. Mrs. Boorada is an extremely accomplished dancer in Kuchipudi and has performed extensively. She's currently the artistic director of Kalanjali Dance Academy here in Edmonton and has instructed many in this traditional and ancient Indian dance. In addition, she is volunteering as a secretary to the Bhartiya Cultural Society of Alberta.

She is extremely devoted to Lord Vishnu and has travelled to India two times at her own expense to ensure that Kalyanam is brought over to Canada for the first time. Eight priests and several cooks are here in Canada right now in that pursuit. Her hard work has helped to ensure that the citizens of Alberta are able to witness this auspicious religious ceremony. The Kalyanam ceremony will take place in Vancouver, Toronto, Edmonton, and Calgary. Edmonton events will take place on the 9th, 10th, and 11th of November and in Calgary on the 12th. On the 13th they'll return to Edmonton to perform Diwali, the festival of lights, a special prayer for all the devotees. She is joined today by her extremely supportive husband, Balu Boorada. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome and thanks of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, followed by the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly four individuals who are in Edmonton for a meeting of community leaders who are engaged in gang prevention for their communities. They are seated in the members' gallery today, and I ask each one of them to rise as I introduce them. First off, Mr. Abdiyaz Liban – I apologize if I got your name wrong – is the executive director of tools for success for the Alberta Somali Community Center. This program engages at-risk Somali-Canadian and immigrant youth. Secondly, Ms Karen Erickson, the program manager for Pohna: Keepers of the Fire, an intervention program that steers at-risk youth away from the gang lifestyle by providing individualized services and supports. Thirdly, Inspector Dennis Fraser, who represents RCMP K Division's aboriginal policing services, an important partner in this province's crime prevention efforts. Last but not least is Mr. Mario Maciel, who is from San Jose, California, and is here on his first trip to Alberta to share his vast range of experience in gang intervention, youth substance abuse, and domestic violence. I'm pleased to join these individuals later this afternoon for an announcement concerning gang prevention and reduction. I would like to ask that all members please give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education, followed by the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the privilege of making two introductions today if I may. For the first introduction I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two new additions to the Portage College board of governors if I could ask them to rise. Mr. Danny Smaiel is a business owner and operator in Lac La Biche. He also serves as the president of a property development and management company. Mr. Smaiel has served on various boards and committees, including the Northern Lights school division and the Lakeland regional health authority. He has held community positions with the Lac La Biche chamber of commerce, minor sports associations, and the downtown business association.

I also have the privilege of introducing Darrell Younghans, who has managed his family farm in Heinsburg since 1979. He has been a referee for Alberta Amateur Hockey and a coach for Elk Point and Dewberry minor hockey associations. He has also volunteered for various community and school organizations, including the Dewberry agricultural society and the Heinsburg Community Club. Mr. Younghans has served on numerous boards and committees, including the Heinsburg school council and the economic development plan committee for the county of St. Paul.

Their considerable talents will provide expert leadership to Portage College, which is instrumental in providing postsecondary access to students in northern Alberta and a valuable part of our Campus Alberta model. Mr. Speaker, these two remarkable individuals are seated in the members' gallery.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly four guests who are seated in the members' gallery who are here today representing a few of the organizations which are supportive of Bill 202, the Public Lands (Grasslands Preservation) Amendment Act. I would ask them to rise as I mention their names. They are Kevin Stewart, Dari Lynn, Terry Noel, and Chelsea Flook. I would ask members to give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education, you have a second introduction?

Mr. Khan: I do, sir.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the president of Mount Royal University, Dr. David Docherty, along with the vice-president, university advancement, Ms Hope Henderson, if they could rise and receive the acknowledgement of our colleagues. Dr. Docherty became Mount Royal's ninth president on August 1, 2011. He is an accomplished academic, author, and administrator. As a recognized expert on parliamentary democracy in Canada Dr. Docherty has been instrumental in developing new undergraduate and graduate programs at Wilfrid Laurier University, which he joined us from. Having spent some time with Dr. Docherty this summer, I can assure all of my colleagues in the House that he is indeed a gentleman as well as one of our pre-eminent scholars.

Ms Henderson joined Mount Royal in August 2012. Previously she was a stakeholder relations expert with more than 20 years' experience. As a member of Alberta's Métis community Ms Henderson has a particular interest in the advancement of aboriginal education and employment initiatives. Ms Henderson is a tremendous example for all our Métis and First Nations students across this province.

Again, if my colleagues in the House could acknowledge their presence, we would be grateful. Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Brevity

The Speaker: Thank you. Hon. members, before the Speaker starts to get notes from people about how long some of these introductions are taking, not necessarily the one we just heard, could you please be reminded to tighten up your intros a little bit? It would help because we have two more that I'd like to squeeze in before QP starts.

The Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation to lead the way, followed by Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Scott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House a constituent who is a resident of Fort McMurray, Theresa Wells. I'd ask her to rise. She is a prolific and persuasive writer whose career began with a blog entitled McMurray Musings. She is now a frequently featured writer with the Huffington Post and Connect weekly and many other publications. She has been a tremendous advocate for many of our region's issues, including highway 63, having been the author of the eloquent and heart-wrenching Highway of Tears article that was recently tabled in this House. She often appears on radio and television to speak about the issues of our region. Theresa is not only a brilliant writer; she is also a dear friend. I would ask Theresa Wells to receive the traditional warm welcome from my colleagues in this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three guests from Edmonton Northlands: Andy Huntley, chair of the board of governors; Stuart Cullum, president of agriculture; and no stranger to this building, Cathy Kiss, vice-president, communications and government relations. As the government representative on the Northlands board I am proud to serve with these fine individuals. Andy, Stuart, and Cathy are seated in the members' gallery. They have now risen, and I would ask them to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Political Party Financial Contributions

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The questions about undue influence on government policies around election donations and the connection to arena funding continue to linger, especially when the Premier gives conflicting statements about whether she spoke to the individuals involved in the lobbying. She initially said that it was her policy to call all big donors to her party; then she seemed to backtrack on that. Can she clarify: what members of the Katz Group involved in the lobbying for $100 million in arena funding has she spoken with?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I think that the Premier has been very clear on this topic, but I can tell you whom the Premier did not meet with following the election, and that is the family that funded some 70 per cent of the party opposite's campaign in 2004.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There may be a loophole in Alberta's election financing legislation, and we'd just like to clear this up. Does the Premier support a law that allows a single person to donate $430,000, a million dollars, $10 million, then hand a list of family, friends, and business associates to receive the tax receipts?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the reason why I made the allusion to that donation to the other party is because this is a case of the kettle calling the pot black, when you have one family virtually paying for their entire campaign in the past elections.

However, we will have a bill, as you know, on the floor of this Legislature very soon, and we will be able to debate what the rules ought to be in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you. We are looking forward to that, Mr. Speaker.

The Premier has promised full co-operation in the investigation. Let's start right now. Will the Premier disclose what she discussed with all of those involved in the arena deal, release all of the relevant cheques and deposit slips, and clear the ethical cloud once and for all?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I think we have been more than clear on the fact that the arena deal will not be supported by this provincial government in any one-off manner. We have also been very clear that the Chief Electoral Officer will have the ability to do a full review of any and all donations. We will go one step further. We will make the findings of the Chief Electoral Officer, the letter that he will be sending to us, public for Albertans' scrutiny.

The Speaker: Second main question. The hon. leader.

Justice System

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I see the Premier didn't like the first three questions; maybe she'll take the next three.

We received calls all weekend about the case of a young Airdrie girl who was repeatedly abused and then denied her day in court due to the delays in getting the accused to trial. The family was told it was because of a shortage of Crown prosecutors. D'Arcy Depoe, president of the Criminal Trial Lawyers Association, confirmed that prosecutors are overloaded, yet just a few hours after the story broke, the Justice department was blaming it all on sickness of witnesses, last-minute evidence, and the weather. To the Premier: what's the truth here?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, when this issue was raised in the House last Thursday, we said that we took this matter very seriously. We have asked our ADM of prosecutions to look into this. It is important that we know what the circumstances are, and we're not going to determine the circumstances by having people quoted in the newspaper and speculating. We will ensure that the facts are clear, we will ensure that all information is available, and we will ensure that our justice system continues to work.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, the Premier's and the department's claims just don't ring true, and we have heard this all before. In 2009 the court dismissed a rape case involving a 15-year-old girl and two assailants because of delays that the court said were "almost entirely attributable to the Crown. It is in large part unexplained and unjustified." Is the Premier still going to say that there is no shortage of Crown prosecutors?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we have a strong justice system; we have a strong prosecutions department. We are not going to get into a very constructive discussion if every single day in this House we have politicians who are selectively quoting transcripts with respect to court proceedings. Our justice system is independent from the executive branch of government. We must ensure that it stays that way, and that's why this work is being done.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, now that we've had two cases and looking at these two cases, which are almost identical, it's quite clear that we won't get to the bottom of this by simply asking the Justice department to investigate itself, will the Premier immediately call one of the other provinces and ask for a member of their justice department to come in and investigate and make recommendations to ensure this really doesn't happen again?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry, but I will take umbrage at the fact that the Leader of the Official Opposition has any particular legal training that allows her to characterize any circumstances in the justice system of being similar or not. That is why the Department of Justice is doing this work. I have full confidence in our prosecutors in our Department of Justice, and that is where the work needs to be done.

Mr. Anderson: Last Thursday the Premier told this House that she would call an investigation into why an Airdrie girl who was abused had her case dropped because of delays. Miraculously, within only four hours of asking this question – four hours – the investigator, Mr. Greg Lepp, concluded that a lack of prosecutors categorically was not a factor. In fact, the Crown wasn't at fault at all. It turned out to be weather and illness. He didn't even have to talk to the victim to figure all that out. Premier, is your investigator an omnipotent human being, or has he been sent to whitewash this entire scandal?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, one of the really unfortunate levels of political debate that's going on right now in this province is undermining the institutions that protect people's rights, and I'm disappointed to see that. The comments that were made, as I understand it, were the start of the work that our Department of Justice will do with respect to this matter. As I said in this House on Thursday, I don't think it's constructive, and we will no longer participate in responding to specific questions or comments on this matter. There will be a full investigation, it has been undertaken, and the results will come forth in due time.

Mr. Anderson: What about the victim's rights, Premier?

Does the Premier remember the 2009 case, while she was Justice minister, when an officer assaulted an individual and was given a minor sentence in part because the prosecutor failed to play or describe a video showing the victim being repeatedly elbow stricken to the head? Does the Premier remember that her all-knowing friend, Mr. Lepp, was also asked to review that case and that his finding was – surprise – that the Crown did nothing wrong and justice had been served? Why have you selected the same Mr. Lepp to investigate this case, Premier? Surely you don't think that justice was done in that scandal, do you?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader rose on a point of order?

Mr. Hancock: Yes.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the assistant deputy minister in charge of prosecutions is looking into this matter, and the results will be made public.

Mr. Anderson: You know, Mr. Speaker, if we're going to have a whitewash here, let's at least try to make it convincing, okay?

Final question: will the Premier immediately call in a qualified outside investigator from another province who is entirely independent, who doesn't owe his job to the government, and who will openly and objectively figure out what went wrong if the case was dropped because of staffing shortage and what changes must occur to ensure that what happened to this Airdrie girl and in other cases like it never happens again in this province? Will you do this for that girl?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the characterizations with respect to what did or didn't happen or shouldn't happen again are not appropriate for this House. There is an investigation going on. We respect that investigation. This is not a political matter. This is our justice system, that Albertans must have confidence in. We will ensure that they do. The fact that any member of this opposition, this, quote, loyal opposition, would suggest that any person who is a Crown prosecutor, who is a public servant responsible for prosecuting on behalf of the Crown is somehow beholden to political loyalty is offensive.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition, followed by the hon. leader of the ND opposition. [interjections] You've been recognized, hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

Auditor General Recommendations

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to focus on taxpayer money and trust. The Auditor General's report shows that Albertans can't trust this Conservative government with their money, their privacy, their environment, their banks, or even the safety of their bridges. He found an utter lack of effective controls in the financial reporting of royalty revenue despite repeated recommendations that this government clean up its act. To the Premier, Premier, you've got a $3 billion hole in your fudge-it budget. Why does your government continue to shortchange Albertans on royalty revenues?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we followed all of the recommendations that the Auditor General has put forward in terms of the financial reporting that is put forward in our quarterly reports and in our annual reports, and we will continue to do that. Taxpayers are being very well served by our system.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, given that the Auditor General had to repeat yet another recommendation to improve reliability, comparability, and relevance of public reporting on the costs and the results of Alberta's climate change program, to the Premier: your government spent billions of taxpayer dollars on projects like carbon capture and storage. Why is the government hiding the true costs and the results? Is it because it's too expensive, or you got bad results? Which is it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we've been very transparent with this. We've individually reported on individual aspects of our climate change strategy. We are now pulling those together. We'll have a comprehensive report, information that I'll table individually today with regard to the individual reporting that we have done on different aspects of climate change strategy. That will all be brought together, as I said, in a complete project by next year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Auditor General raised serious concerns with this government's lax IT governance, risk management, and accountability measures, again to the Premier: despite the millions that you are spending on information technology, why can't your government do something as basic as protecting Albertans' privacy?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The fact remains that the Auditor General brought forth recommendations, and we complied with those recommendations. We've created a new office that looks after these issues. We're Canadian leaders in the fact that our department is the only one that encompasses IT security, information security, and physical security threats into one suite, one program to ensure Albertans are protected. What Albertans need to be protected from is the hysteria and the choice of what sort of facts members opposite like to believe on what specific . . .

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Parental Notification of Class Programming

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much. Mr. Speaker, this Premier will promise just about anything to just about anyone to win a leadership or an election. Keeping those promises is another story, though. After the Premier was elected leader of the PC Party, she said that she would consider removing section 11.1 from Bill 44, which amended the human rights code, that prevents teachers from talking about religion or sexuality in the classroom. Albertans are trying to understand what this Premier stands for, so let's get some clarity. Will the Premier commit to removing section 11.1 from the human rights code, and if not, why not?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we've had a tremendously successful legislative session with respect to legislation that mattered to Albertans. I'm very proud of the fact that we are making such good progress with respect to legislation around the Education Act, which we know was part of incredible public debate before the election, during the election, and, of course, after the election. We've ensured that that legislation reflects the balance of interests that Albertans need to have in order to ensure that students and parents and teachers all have the ability to learn appropriately, and we're very proud of that work.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the Premier is very proud of not answering that question, too.

Given that the Premier also promised to consider changes to the human rights code that would legalize hate speech, will she admit that she's talking out of both sides of her mouth and pandering to the extremists within her own caucus and party?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the work that needs to be undertaken with respect to comprehensive legislation around the balancing of rights might appear in things like the Education Act. It may appear in the Human Rights Act. But the first thing we have to do – and our Minister of Justice has spoken to this – is to ensure that we know exactly what the courts are saying with respect to that. There are a number of matters before the court at this time, and it's important for those to be dealt with.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that Albertans need to know what it is that this PC government stands for, will the Premier show Albertans where she really stands on human rights by bringing forward an amendment to remove section 11.1 from the human rights code and do it in this session of the Legislature?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, during 28 days of a campaign Albertans understood what a Progressive Conservative Party and a Progressive Conservative government stand for. I am proud of this government's record and the members of our caucus individually, who have a fundamental commitment to protecting the human rights of all Albertans. It was very clear during the election that we are the party that stood for those rights, that we can balance those interests. That's why today as government we are able to introduce legislation that does exactly that.

Ferruginous Hawk Habitat

Mr. Anglin: Last week the Minister of ESRD refused to take responsibility for the destruction of the ferruginous hawk nesting sites. She blamed ATCO for violating the law when she stated, "I will say that a mistake was made by ATCO." Recently obtained communications now confirm that ESRD suggested to ATCO that they remove these nesting sites before the birds return. Will the minister care to revise her misstatement to this Assembly, tell the truth, and accept responsibility for her ministry's violation of the Canadian Species at Risk Act?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I did say is that we at ESRD are working with ATCO to make sure that we take care of this species, all species in this province. Quite frankly, like I said last week, we went from 13 nesting sites to end up with over 30 of them. This is an outcome that actually will benefit.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One more try: given that the records clearly confirm that ATCO advised ESRD and only acted upon the direction of ESRD, is it the policy of this government to ignore federal environmental laws and then blame others for the infraction?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're not blaming anyone. We always take action and accountability for our actions. What I said is that out of an incident that was unfortunate, we have rectified the situation, working with our department and working with ATCO to make sure that we will have almost triple the number of nesting sites for this species. We take this very seriously.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. More importantly, will this minister explain to Albertans why they should trust her ministry to protect the environment when it's clear this ministry doesn't follow or understand the laws and then fails to tell or admit the truth?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is the fourth day of questions on this, and right from the beginning I've said that the Ministry of ESRD has worked with ATCO and with others to make sure that we take care of the species in this province, particularly this special hawk. We are doing that. We are making sure – very important – what the outcome is. Much unlike this heavy-handed party over there would like to do, we like to do the education, awareness, and mitigation approach. It is much more appropriate because we've nearly tripled the number of nesting platforms.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Social Policy Framework

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Human Services. Last week a member of this Assembly rose and asked what good our epic consultation on social policy is going to do for Albertans. I'm wondering: Mr. Minister, what good is this consultation? Is it going to be just another government listening exercise with no results and no action?

Mr. Hancock: Well, quite the contrary, Mr. Speaker. It is an epic consultation in that we've embraced a number of different technologies and methodologies which involve a very significant number of Albertans in talking about what kind of a province we want to have and what the various roles and responsibilities of individuals, communities, social agency, and governments are at all levels in order to achieve that. It's an important discussion because it can't be a policy that's just owned by Human Services or by the government. It has to be owned by the community to be effective.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you. I have a supplemental question. There are a lot of words in that. I need some drilling down through all the stats and talk and technology. Please, could the minister describe how the social policy framework will make, for example, our communities safer?

2:10

Mr. Hancock: It's an important question, Mr. Speaker, because today we celebrate the fifth anniversary of the safe communities task force and SafeCom, as we call it. You can't have a safe community just by adding more police and enforcing the law. You have to have a safe community by building the social structures in the community that help people who are homeless, that help ensure that we lower the incidence of poverty, that make sure that children have an opportunity to be successful. Social policy is a fundamental underpinning for a safe community.

Mr. Dorward: Well, let's try this one. My question as the second supplemental is: what will the social policy framework do, for example, to give more tools to families so that they can have the best opportunity possible to raise healthy, well-adjusted children?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, when we talk about safe communities, again, it isn't always focused. We have the REACH committee in Edmonton, for example, that's done some extensive work in this area. It isn't always focused on policing. Policing is important, the law is important, but so also is the social structure in our community, parent link centres to help parents with the skills that they need to ensure that their children are successful. The Solicitor General introduced members of the gang reduction strategy. Gangs come from children who don't have a strong family themselves, so creating a new family. We have lots of places that social policy can make a big difference in a safe community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Calgary-Glenmore.

Driving Competence Test

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government talks a lot about the importance of seniors' independence and quality of life, yet this is the same government that is infringing on that independence and quality of life. Seniors across this province have expressed concerns that the pilot project DriveABLE program targets unsuspecting seniors by saying to them that if they do not pass the DriveABLE test, they will lose their licence. However, the DriveABLE test is not a road test. It's a computer-administered test. Most seniors who are not computer literate do not do well on the DriveABLE test. In addition to that, the senior is hit with an extravagant fee of up to $300. Does Alberta Transportation and the Minister of Transportation support the DriveABLE program and its results?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member probably needs to understand that all drivers at certain times are subject to the DriveABLE test. The other thing that I'd like the hon. member to know is that currently the DriveABLE test is under review to see if we need to make changes to that. Consequently, I appreciate the question. I'd like to assure the hon. member that when we are done evaluating that particular test, we will share those results.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you say, as you just did, that you do support the DriveABLE program, which is an interesting theory because Alberta Transportation says that they don't, will this minister be open and transparent with seniors across Alberta and make clear the exact criteria for the DriveABLE test and the cost to each individual senior?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member made the cost clear. I don't know why she'd make the cost clear one second and then ask the question in another. But I guess that's what I've come to expect, inconsistency. As I said, we are evaluating this, and when we decide what to do with it, we'll make that known because we think that's transparent and in the best interest of Albertans.

Mrs. Towle: Mr. Speaker, given that the DriveABLE program puts many seniors in an uncomfortable position dealing with technology that they're not familiar with and given that this program seems to skip any actual physical exam done by a physician, can the minister explain what course of appeal Alberta seniors have if their licence is revoked unjustly?

Mr. McIver: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, the test, as I said, is under review. It's for different circumstances. It's for seniors and other Albertans. All Albertans can be subject to it. There is an appeal process through Alberta Transportation, and there have been cases where decisions have been reversed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Asia Advisory Council

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans understand that countries like China and India will play a big part in the future economic success of this province. My question today for the Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations: how will the Asia Advisory Council help Albertans, in particular those residents of Calgary-Glenmore, take advantage of opportunities in Asia?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, and thank you to the member for the question. First of all, Mr. Speaker, the people of this province are not content to build walls and gaze inward. They want to look outward, seek out opportunities, and build bridges. The 10 members of the council have already met to discuss strategies to further engage the Asian market. We are also building a work plan to look at additional exploration and outreach. Ultimately this council is going to advise Alberta so that we can gain a better understanding of the intricacy of building relationships and also reach our goal to expand the market.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. associate minister. Clearly, everybody was enjoying your answer because they were talking all the way through it.

The hon. member for your first sup, please.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Exactly, Associate Minister. The residents of Calgary-Glenmore are outward thinking. We're an entrepreneurial constituency, and we have a large number of business owners. Can she tell my constituents what opportunities the government is providing to Albertans so they can participate in Asia and other international locations?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, the member is correct that Albertans are the province's best ambassadors. First of all, there are many, many opportunities for Albertans to be engaged with Asia. One is that for a long time, due to the efforts of our educators, students such as those in this member's riding at the Spanish school have made wonderful linkages with students from all over the world. Our Premier's vision has helped to create international career development opportunities for talented young Albertans with organizations around the world. These externs will also bring that valuable world-class knowledge and experience back to the province of Alberta. We'll make further announcements.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, the students of St. Benedict are enjoying their Spanish program, which has kept a school open in my community and kept our communities lively.

Associate Minister, can you give an example of international entrepreneurs that are building businesses in Alberta to support your initiatives?

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, I'd just like to say that there are many facets that we need to look at in terms of international engagement. We also have to recognize that bringing the world to Alberta is just as critical as bringing Albertans to the world. We've been working extremely hard with different levels of government in terms of addressing our labour market needs, and we'll continue to work closely with Ottawa, municipalities, economic development entities as well as industry here at home and to reach out to different parts of the world through our international offices to address our labour market issues.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Hospital Occupancy Rates

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The recent Auditor General's report indicates 35 outstanding health system recommendations still not addressed dating back to 2005. More recently, the Health Quality Council recommendations are also languishing. Based on the last performance report by the department in June 2012, they have not reduced bed occupancy rates to 85 or 90 per cent. This means longer emergency room wait times, a waste of EMS units, and more complications for patients. To the Health minister: why have hospitals still not achieved occupancy reductions to 85 per cent?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as I believe I said in an answer to a question last week, Alberta Health Services is preparing a report that will document their success in reducing occupancy rates in acute-care hospitals as well as reducing the number of patients awaiting placement in continuing care in alternate level of care beds in our hospitals.

Dr. Swann: Well, it's clear what's happening, Mr. Speaker. Long-term care is still languishing on the vine. The Health Quality Council targeted long-term care, yet over 450 patients are still languishing in hospital. Why, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as we've discussed in answers to similar questions in the past, not all patients waiting in alternate level of care beds in our hospitals are in fact waiting for long-term care. What many of them are waiting for is access to a suitable level of health care support that meets their needs: some in the community through the destination home program that we funded in the last budget, which offers enhanced programs, some in supportive living, and some in long-term care. I believe when the report from Alberta Health Services comes forward – and I renewed my commitment last week to make it available to colleagues in the House – it will show that, in fact, we have made great strides since the HQCA report last year.

Dr. Swann: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, the emergency room wait times say otherwise. Only 45 per cent of patients in the emergency room are achieving admission rates within eight hours, well below the 60 per cent low target this province has suggested. When will we start meeting the targets?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, it is true that Alberta Health Services has not yet met that 60 per cent target, but as I think the hon. member would be aware, emergency department wait times have improved dramatically in the last couple of years in Alberta both for the four-hour target for patients who do not require admission and for the eight-hour target for patients who do require admission to hospital. The fact of the matter is that more people than ever are seeking treatment in emergency departments. The government has worked very diligently to increase the number of continuing care spaces and to expand family care clinics and other models of primary health care to provide options to emergency departments where appropriate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Environmental Monitoring of the Oil Sands

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we have more confirmation of what Canadians have known for decades even in the face of this government's denials. Oil sands activity is contaminating the water supply in the lower Athabasca region, and industry monitoring of this threat has failed abysmally. My question is to the minister of the environment. Two years after this failure was first disclosed, why is your government still forcing Albertans to rely on industry self-monitoring, and why will Albertans have to wait at least another two years before this changes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government under Premier Redford over the last year has taken huge steps to make sure that not only have we announced a joint three-year monitoring in the oil sands for air, land, water, and biodiversity; we've also set up a monitoring agency that will be science based and data that will be publicly reported.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the minister suggests her new not-so-independent agency will be ready in a matter of months, but her new not-so-independent agency's chair says that it will be at least two years, and her new not-so-independent agency's report says several years, will the minister explain to Albertans how they're supposed to trust anything that starts out with this much confusion, contradiction, and delay?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This agency is independent. It's the science and the data that scientists like David Schindler have asked to be independent, and that's exactly what will be independent. Scientists like David Schindler have said that he's very happy with the number of people and the people that are on that as well with regard to . . .

Mr. Mason: He wasn't a year ago.

Mrs. McQueen: He may not have been a year ago, but today, Mr. Speaker, Dr. Schindler has said publicly that he's happy with those that are sitting on the arm's-length agency.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, given that notwithstanding the minister's inaccurate statements to the contrary industry has made no specific commitment for the full $50 million necessary for independent monitoring, will the minister admit that as it stands, her whole plan is a house of sand built on delay and designed to continue this government's decades-long record of failing Albertans' environment, health, and safety?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to say again in this House that the industry has committed $50 million to the oil sands monitoring agency each year for three years, so $150 million if you add the three years together. They've said that. They're committed to that. We've said that in the House, and I'll continue to say that in the House. This is a good way to do environmental monitoring, through this agency, and we're very happy to see that industry will help to support that as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Public Health Standards for Meal Donations

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This summer one of my constituents brought to my attention a textbook example of how the government is deprived of common sense. For years a group of church volunteers, Inn from the Cold, have been preparing meals and feeding thousands of hungry and needy people in Calgary, but in August they were threatened with being shut down by Alberta Health Services for making the egregious mistake of preparing the meals at home. To the Minister of Health: can you please explain how allowing AHS to shut down a dedicated group of volunteers will get Alberta any closer to addressing the issues of poverty and homelessness in our province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't know the particulars of the specific situation that the hon. member is referring to. If she'd care to provide those to me, I'd be very pleased to look into this and give her a specific answer.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that it's his organization, Alberta Health Services, you would think he'd know as minister.

Given that volunteers in Raymond brought in food for the evacuees from Milk River during the wildfires this fall, would the minister please explain why the first government representatives on the scene of the disaster were the AHS food police, turning away meals for the hungry evacuees?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd be the first to agree with the hon. member that we don't want to do anything unnecessary to discourage volunteers who assist in situations such as the one that she described. But I'm sure she would also agree that government, through Alberta Health Services, has a responsibility to protect public health through the enforcement of reasonable standards, fair inspection processes, and appropriate appeal mechanisms for those who disagree with those decisions. That is what we offer, and that's what we'll continue to offer to Albertans.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, this minister doesn't understand what reasonable means.

During the spring election the Premier pledged to end poverty in Alberta. Can the minister please explain how that will be done without the dedicated help of volunteers like Inn from the Cold?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, with all respect, I think the hon. member needs to be clear as to whether she wants to have a debate about public health standards, inspection processes, and the like in this House or whether she wants to have a discussion about the role of volunteers. I'm quite prepared to answer questions about both, but they are not mutually exclusive situations to which she refers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Campsite Upgrades

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Even as another successful camping season ends in our beautiful province, Albertans are already gearing up for next year's adventures. Given the rising popularity of large campers and trailers in our campsites, averaging upward of 30 and 40 feet, the need for more accommodating spaces is required. To the hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation: what is being done to modernize camping stalls to accommodate these larger types of trailers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank this member for his question. This year alone we will be investing $24 million in upgrading park facilities. This will include larger sites, adding more pull-through sites, more sites with hookups, and, of course, new washrooms.

Mr. McDonald: To the minister again: given that some Albertans want to be able to park their trailers for longer periods of time such as the full summer, are there accommodations being made to accept these types of trailers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. As more Albertans embrace the RV lifestyle, there is a growing interest in seasonal camping, so we see an opportunity for our parks to provide these opportunities for campers in parks where short-term demand for sites is lower. We've been piloting seasonal camping at six of our parks, and the response has been very positive. Albertans are embracing this option, and it's helping to fill up our campsites.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. Given the popularity of random camping, which includes unauthorized camping along forestry trunk roads and on public lands, what is being done to accommodate this phenomenon, and is there an opportunity for revenue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know there are lots of Albertans who enjoy the experience of random camping, so we don't want to take that experience away from them. What we want to do – and we're working in conjunction with other ministries – is to make sure that the safety measures are there to enhance this experience.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Edmonton-Riverview.

Transition Programs for AISH Clients

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that protecting the most vulnerable in our society is one of the fundamental roles of government. In Alberta over 100 AISH clients turn 65 each month, meaning they no longer qualify for AISH benefits or the associated health benefits. Although there are a number of provincial and federal programs available, not all AISH clients qualify and therefore have their benefits slashed. To the Minister of Human Services: are these vulnerable seniors not receiving the support they require because this government does not have the financial resources available?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This speaks to the whole concept of the social policy framework discussions that we're having right now, looking at how we not only design individual programs for individual circumstances but, most importantly, look at the overarching piece and make sure all of those programs work well together. Transitions between programs are always difficult. We see that from children becoming adults and moving from what is a better-supported area when they're youth into a less-supported area as adults. We see the same thing as AISH recipients turn 65 and move on to the seniors' programs and out of the AISH programs. We're working on those transitions. The important thing is that all Albertans should be able to live with dignity and have their needs met.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is preventing this government from providing the same level of support for AISH clients once they turn 65?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. AISH is essentially an income support program. When you turn 65, there are income support programs for seniors. One does not want to have two programs doing the same thing, so you try and refine the program so that people fall into the right place. What we're doing now through results-based budgeting and through the social policy framework is making sure that those programs are seamless, that we're doing the right programs in the right way so that all Albertans can live with dignity.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that AISH recipients lose nearly a third of their health benefits when they turn 65 and I've been trying to find out since August how much it would cost to fill the gap, but the government hasn't answered my letter yet, which I will table, maybe the Minister of Health can give me a number today. How much would it cost?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I don't have that information on hand. I'd be happy to get the information for the hon. member and get back to him.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat. Edmonton-Riverview? Did you have a question, Member for Edmonton-Riverview?

Mr. Young: No.

The Speaker: Let's move on to Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Bridge Safety

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General's report shows there's a high risk of unsafe bridges in our province due to shoddy and missed inspections. I hope the Transportation minister would agree that ensuring our public infrastructure is safe and secure should be a top priority of his department. Given the Auditor General's finding Albertans are wondering: how does this government have enough money to spend on empty hotel rooms at the Olympics, patronage posts for defeated cabinet ministers, and weekend getaways to Jasper, but they cannot properly fund and co-ordinate bridge safety inspections?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I'm glad the hon. member looked at the Auditor's report. I would draw his attention to the bottom of the first page, and the sentence there says exactly: "We did not find evidence of unsafe bridges." We work very hard at maintaining this province's infrastructure and will continue to do so. I think Albertans can have complete confidence in those structures.

Mr. Barnes: Probably just by luck when he didn't do the inspections.

Mr. Speaker, given the fact that this government's record on acting on the Auditor General's recommendations is downright terrible and given that their inability to prioritize spending and needs are putting Albertans at risk, I have one simple question for the Transportation minister. Where are the 150 bridges throughout Alberta identified in the Auditor General's report that were not inspected on time, and why didn't the minister care enough about safety to ensure they were properly inspected?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll try to say it more simply. The fact is that the Auditor's report talked about the inspections. The fact is the inspections have been done. The fact is we've acted on the recommendations of the Auditor. We appreciate that. We'd never be able to keep up if the opposition was in government because they wanted to cut infrastructure spending by 25 per cent for four years in a row. So the chances of us maintaining the infrastructure are much greater with this government in place.

Mr. Barnes: The facts are you're 150 behind.

Mr. Speaker, given that government waste is to blame for important front-line bridge inspections falling by the wayside and given the Auditor General has pointed out that the Transportation minister again failed to prioritize the necessary spending to maintain our bridges, how long will it take the minister to fix this failure and properly co-ordinate bridge safety inspections?

Mr. McIver: Done, and done.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, please proceed.

Insulin Pump Program

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, according to the Canadian Diabetes Association Alberta has one of the highest prevalences of diabetes in Canada, with 217,000 Albertans diagnosed in 2010, or 5.8 per cent of the population, and that number is projected to rise to 8.6 per cent by 2020. To the Minister of Health. Research has shown that the use of insulin pumps dramatically improves glycemic control for diabetic patients. During the recent election campaign the government promised that Alberta diabetics would receive insulin pumps. Those patients are still waiting. When will the minister make this promise a reality?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is correct that diabetes is one of the most prevalent, chronic diseases in our population. It is true that we made a commitment during the election campaign that we would provide an insulin pump program for eligible insulin-dependent diabetics in Alberta. We're in the planning phases of that program now. As we promised, we will deliver it in the spring of 2013.

Dr. Starke: Supplemental question, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. Now, in addition to the initial costs of the pump at over $5,000, annual pump-related supplies can cost an estimated $6,800. Will those costs also be covered under this program?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as we recognized at the time we made the announcement during the election campaign, the costs of the pumps and supplies and accessories are considerable. They will be covered as part of the insulin pump program. We made the commitment during the election. We said we would honour it beginning in the spring of 2013. That's exactly what we intend to do.

Dr. Starke: My final supplemental to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given the large number of diabetic patients in our province and the costs of these pumps and supplies how is our cash-strapped health care system going to pay for all of this?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we make spending decisions in our health care system based on population health needs as they are identified. As the hon. member himself pointed out, diabetes is one of the most prevalent chronic diseases in our society. The program that we will come forward with in the spring will provide eligibility criteria for insulin-dependent diabetics who may be eligible to be on the program. This coupled with some of our other initiatives around funding diabetic supplies, for example, in the Blue Cross for seniors program, shows that this government takes diabetes extremely seriously.

The Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Gravel Extraction Management

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the glaring omissions in the environmental policy of this government is the lack of protection for groundwater when gravel is allowed to be mined. A quick check shows that current regulations and policies do not allow ministry staff to deny gravel applications that are detrimental to the environment. My question is to the minister of the environment. Why hasn't the minister taken steps to provide approval officers with the ability to outright deny gravel applications damaging to the environment?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that when there are gravel applications that pertain to a water body, the department undertakes specific reviews to ensure that activities do not have adverse impact to these areas. A Water Act approval is required, and the department looks at each case through that lens.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. You just made my point. They don't have the ability to deny it.

Back to the same minister: given that Alberta Environment currently has no adequate policy on gravelling out alluvial aquifers or flood plains and given that science is clear that alluvial aquifer protection is essential for aquatic ecosystem health and function, why has the minister stood by and allowed permanent destruction of flood plains and aquifers through gravel mining?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My point with the last question was and my point with this question is that the Water Act applies. Approvals or not are done through the ministry as they look through the lens of the Water Act. That's the whole point. They can approve or not approve or approve with conditions.

Ms Blakeman: No. Not happening.

Back to the same minister. This minister and the previous minister have committed to cumulative environmental impact assessment. So just out of curiosity, when will Alberta Environment add up the impacts of gravel mining and be able to verify that thresholds and metrics have been established relating to gravel mining of alluvial aquifer water bodies and flood plains?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We do look at cumulative effects management in this province. The department does look at that, and they continue to look at it. So that's what happens in this area. With regard to the approvals, I'm going to say it again, for the third time: the approvals are done through the Water Act.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Highway 14 Service Road

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. About three years ago passing lanes were added to highway 14 going through my constituency due to the amount of increasing heavy truck traffic. Residents there were quite concerned, felt their accesses were no longer safe because of the passing lanes, but those concerns were alleviated during an Alberta Transportation open house last year when they announced a new service road. But we haven't heard anything about that service road since, so my question to the Minister of Transportation: when can my constituents expect to see construction on this new service road begin?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The passing lanes that the hon. member referred to were added to the plan when the public consultations were completed. At this point those improvements are not in the three-year capital plan, so the date is as of yet undetermined. But I can tell you that they will get reviewed on an annual basis, based on budget, safety, a whole number of factors.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, this is obviously a concern since they were already announced, but I'm just curious: has the decision to fast-track construction of highway 63, for example, in any way impacted the funds or resources necessary for other projects like this one in our province?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, that's a good question. As we announced, the $1.1 billion to accelerate the completion of the twinning of highway 63 as well as some improvements to highway 881: we're going to go to the capital markets for that money. So in the current budget there's no effect. I know the hon. member is very concerned about that. I can tell you that we, again, will review this on a regular basis and we have heard the hon. member's pleas on behalf of his constituents.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Final question to the same minister: if you could just tell me, then, what the long-term status is for the twinning of highway 14 through the rest of Strathcona county?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've heard from the hon. members as well as members from the oil sands, trucking industries, other stakeholders, and indeed from individual Albertans themselves about improvements in this area. It will be part of the 2013 to 2016 capital assessment for Alberta Transportation, and when that comes out, the hon. member will know about it. We understand that resources are a big thing, and we are handling the money of Albertans carefully in dealing with these things on a priority basis.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, just before we proceed, I have received a request from the Minister of Health, who may wish to supplement an answer that he gave earlier in question period. I believe it goes back to Thursday, and it concerns a question from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, I think. Hon. minister, would you like to proceed, then?

Hospital Occupancy Rates (continued)

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I refer to a question posed by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake on Thursday, November 1, on page 469 of Alberta Hansard. The question that the hon. member asked me in the second supplemental question was with respect to the availability of information to track the progress on meeting Health Quality Council recommendations. I responded with a general answer about information that is available. What I failed to hear when the hon. member posed the question was the last sentence of her question, which was: "Will the Minister of Health commit today to tabling in this House regular monthly updates of occupancy rates of all Alberta hospitals?"*

Mr. Speaker, quite honestly, I did not hear that part of the question because of other comments and outbursts that were occurring in the Chamber at the time. In answer to that part of the hon. member's question I'm pleased to tell the House that the information is available. It is available directly from Alberta Health Services, it is available through the processes in this House through Motions for Returns and Written Questions, and it's certainly available from me on written request from the hon. member.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, a supplemental supplementary if you wish.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Health. This information is not available. We asked today. We asked Friday. We asked Thursday. Alberta Health Services has come back and told us that we need to FOIP this or ask the minister the question. To be clear. On November 1 you told me: "The information is available. It's available to the hon. member without the benefit of question period. I encourage her to review it and perhaps succeed in asking a better question." Now you're telling me the information is available. It clearly is not. Please tell me exactly who I have to phone – who do I call exactly? – because Alberta Health Services doesn't have it, your own ministry doesn't have it, and the library can't find it. So who do I call exactly so that I can get this information?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, with the clarity from the hon. member that the question specifically concerns occupancy rates in acute-care hospitals, as I said earlier today in the House and I said last week, Alberta Health Services is preparing a report on their progress on this directive. I will make that report available to all members, including this hon. member.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I'll make a few comments a little bit later with respect to how question period went today, but in the meantime let's move on to Members' Statements. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Members' Statements

Alberta Culture Days

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the MLA for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo I know that when people talk about my constituency, they're most likely talking about the oil sands and our province's thriving energy industry. But you may be interested to know that when I moved to Fort McMurray, it was not to work in the oil sands but to own and operate a music store. As a professional jazz musician I saw Fort McMurray as a cultural hub in Alberta's north, and I'm pretty sure, based on today's musical treat that we had, Mr. Kissel would have a similar view of his community in the fabulous riding of Bonnyville-Cold Lake. Residents there, just like Albertans at every corner of the province, value the opportunity to enhance their quality of life by enjoying art, music, theatre, dance, crafts, literature, language, food, and heritage.

In my constituency, just like in communities across the province, during the last three days in September this rich and vibrant culture took the centre stage during Alberta Culture Days 2012. This annual event started five years ago with only a handful of events. I'm proud to report that since then this province-wide celebration has exploded in scope and number of events. This year Albertans of all ages celebrated our heritage, artistic diversity, provincial pride, and culture at over 1,200 events in 81 communities. Despite its immense growth Alberta Culture Days remains a volunteer-driven, grassroots movement led by partners in the culture sector in collaboration with government, public funding agencies, and the private sector, a testament to how culture connects us all and how culture involves all of us.

To encourage participation, help build new relationships, and increase access to cultural experiences, the government of Alberta supported Alberta Culture Days celebration sites in 38 communities. Sixty-four community organizations shared a total of $375,000 to assist with planning and co-ordinating the events. Mr. Speaker, the Fort McMurray Interplay Society was a feature celebration site for Alberta this year. It's a testament to the spirit of our province. September 27 to 29, 2013, will also be a cultural highlight next year.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Whistle-blower Protection

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to legislation introduced in the Assembly called the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, the so-called whistle-blower legislation. Today FAIR, the Federal Accountability Initiative for Reform, released the results of its analysis of Bill 4, and the results were not surprising. FAIR called the bill "a misleadingly-named piece of legislation which shields the government from damaging disclosures, may be used to protect government wrongdoers, and does not protect whistleblowers at all." They say that it's not even appropriate to have whistle-blower protection in the name of the bill because it provides absolutely no meaningful protection to whistle-blowers, this coming from an organization whose sole mandate is to promote integrity and accountability within government and to support legislation that provides protection for whistle-blowers.

Whistle-blower legislation should not be designed to shield the government from embarrassing publicity, which is precisely the intent of the government's poorly conceived legislation. In fact, a leadership candidate for the PC Party agreed last September when she criticized her opponent's plan for whistle-blower legislation, a plan that is almost identical to what we now see before the House, that when you start saying that a whistle-blower must report to the Ombudsman, you're being prescriptive again about the structure that is in place in an effort to manage the information. I think that defeats the proposal. I think that needs to be protected if they go public with it. The person who said that, Mr. Speaker, was right. In fact, she went on to win the leadership race. The Premier campaigned against the very type of legislation because it doesn't work. I think it will be very interesting to see where she stands when it comes time for members to vote on Bill 4. After all, she said that you either have an open government or you don't.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier was right when she said that last year, but it's a complete shame that when it comes to Bill 4, she's gotten it so wrong.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, followed by Sherwood Park.

2:50      Ethnocultural Inclusivity and Integration

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As all hon. members know, Alberta is increasingly recognized as one of the best provinces to live and to raise a family. It is a unique place full of opportunity, prosperity, and diversity. Because of this reputation people from all over the world continue to move to Alberta, hoping to provide a better lifestyle for their family. This being the case, I believe it is important that we continue to support initiatives that offer new Albertans nurturing, caring communities free of discrimination.

Mr. Speaker, one of the very best practices happening in this province, supported by this government, is the welcoming and inclusive communities initiative, which I had the pleasure of working with before coming to the House. This program is run in partnership with the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and the Alberta Human Rights Commission. It assists municipalities in building all-encompassing communities where people from different backgrounds can feel welcome. Such a program is especially important in Alberta. As our economy continues to grow and develop, we need the supply of labourers, and immigration is one of the solutions to that. It is important that those people, newcomers to our province, feel welcomed and know that they are contributing to our society. A strong community is a safe and unified place where people feel accepted.

With that in mind, it is my hope that we can continue to support the welcoming and inclusive communities initiative in Alberta and that we can all feel proud of this.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Strathcona County Crime Watch

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's safe communities initiative has helped our province develop into a national leader in crime prevention, and we are a leader for a variety of reasons. Programs such as Alberta's crime prevention framework, the safe communities innovation fund, and the Alberta community restorative justice grants program have made a huge impact on community safety, but there are other local programs that also contribute so very much.

I'd like to take some time to update members of the Assembly about a valuable partnership initiative called Strathcona County

Crime Watch, that meets in the constituency of Sherwood Park. Strathcona County Crime Watch is an excellent example of individuals, businesses, and neighbourhoods working together to take ownership of issues in their communities. Through their relationship with local RCMP creative solutions have been used to solve local issues and create a safer place to live, work, and raise a family. In fact, there are 1,544 families that belong to this organization. This is especially important as the most powerful tool police have in their crime-fighting arsenal is a strong and active community.

Thank you so much for all of the hard work from everyone involved with Strathcona County Crime Watch. A special thank you to Mr. John Fuga, who received the seniors' service award from the Hon. George VanderBurg, Associate Minister of Seniors, and Alana DeLong, chair of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta. I was honoured to be in attendance with them this past July. Oh, I used the wrong names. I did the name thing. Sorry. My apologies.

Together with a balanced approach based on prevention, intervention, and enforcement, with a firm commitment to partnerships, the Alberta government and local communities will continue to strive for excellence in community safety.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Auditor General Health System Recommendations

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The public, professionals, and the Auditor General are all wanting answers as to how Alberta spends $16 billion, 20 per cent more per capita on health care services than the national average. Once again the Auditor General is concerned about the lack of accountability for public money. No one questions the dedication of the professionals and the quality once they get into the system, but there are penetrating questions about financial oversight.

This ranges from delays in payroll consolidation to inaccurate staff pay to delays to employer contributions to pension plans. The Auditor General identified 19,000 differences where Alberta Health Services data did not match Alberta Pensions Services Corporation. Clearly, this means interest charges and penalties at the cost of taxpayers. Obviously, AHS employees are justifiably concerned that their pension funds are not accurately being accounted for. The contract to consolidate payrolls from former health regions after four years is millions of dollars over budget and still has not consolidated one-third of health employees. Who is responsible for the oversight of this payroll consolidation?

The Auditor General has indicated that in addition to 35 outstanding health system recommendations dating back to 2005, there persist inaccuracies in payroll transactions and lack of documentation to validate the consolidation of the payroll systems. He also comments that significant and/or unusual entries are not reviewed and approved appropriately. This is not good news for a government that argues that the public purse is responsibly managed and that Albertans are getting value for money in our largest government department. Is it lack of qualified people? What is the board doing to address these serious deficiencies? Albertans deserve better accounting practices in this premier service and should not have to wait for another Auditor General's report to confirm that major changes are needed in Alberta Health Services accounting now.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

New Lac La Biche High School

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had the pleasure last week of joining our Education and Infrastructure ministers as they broke ground on a new school in Lac La Biche. The school in Lac La Biche is more than just a school; it is a true community partnership. Its physical attachment to the Bold Center will allow students, families, and community members to interact on a daily basis, whether it's through the use of the library, the field house, the rinks. The new school will be part of an investment into the future of that community.

I watched the excitement in the eyes of the community members who attended. Two of the trustees, introduced earlier, are here with us today, Trustee Smaiel and Trustee Youngmans. I know that these events are much more than just the overturning of dirt. Each time construction on a new school starts, it's further evidence of our government's ongoing support for Alberta families and communities wherever they live. Over the next several months Albertans in 15 communities will watch as empty fields transform into schools, and thanks to the commitment of our Premier many more communities will soon be able to experience that excitement.

Mr. Speaker, as a parent and a former teacher I am proud that we have a leader who understands that our families, our future, and our prosperity depend on our continued investment in education, someone who knows that when we encourage our kids to reach for the stars, we are helping all of us reach higher, a leader committed to building and maintaining the schools we need to keep growing.

It was a pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to be a part of the sod-turning in Lac La Biche, and I look forward to joining the ministers for many more in the future because whenever a shovel hits the ground, we are building our future.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on behalf of the MLA for Edmonton-Whitemud to present a petition to the Legislative Assembly signed by six people from the Edmonton area urging the government to "ensure that the existing credentials of practising registered massage therapists are recognized province-wide, regardless of increases in the hours of formal education required to gain certification."

Thank you.

The Speaker: Just before we go to Introduction of Bills, is there anyone rising on a notice of motion on behalf of someone, perhaps?

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, we did have something in that regard, but given the statements by the Health minister I think it's been clarified. Can we withdraw that?

The Speaker: Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table the required number of copies of the Asia Advisory Council annual report for 2011-12. The council, chaired by the hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills, consists of nine other members: Thomas Walter, vice-chair of the council; the Member for Edmonton-Manning; Margaret Cornish; Robert Francis; Peter Harder; Gordon Houlden; Ray Price; Peter Sutherland; and John Zahary. I'm pleased the council just held its first meeting and outlined a work plan and schedule for future meetings to provide recommendations and advice to our government.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to table an article written by yours truly this summer about what I think about our spending of $12 billion a year in resource revenue and, if we're ever going to have anything left at the end of the day, what we need to do in that regard.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Government House Leader, did you wish to address the clock?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, seeing that it is 3 o'clock, I'd ask unanimous consent of the House to extend the clock so that we can complete the Routine.

[Unanimous consent granted]

3:00

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, followed by the Associate Minister of Wellness.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the following documents with regard to our climate change reporting. Enclosed for tabling are the energy efficiency rebate program summary, the oil sands greenhouse gas emissions OSIP reporting, the 2011 greenhouse gas emission reduction program results, news releases of the carbon capture and storage project details and information on Alberta's implementation of a renewable fuel standard, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Corporation's Setting the Momentum for Change, Alberta's 2008 climate change strategy, and the 2009 specified gas emitters regulation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Wellness.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to table several reports today on behalf of the hon. Minister of Health. First is the 2011 annual report from the College of Registered Dental Hygienists of Alberta. The college has over 2,500 members, who provide a valuable oral health care service. The college exists so that Albertans will continue to receive safe, high-quality dental hygiene care from a continually advancing profession. This report outlines their activities in the last year and illustrates the outstanding work that they do to promote the health of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also pleased to present and table together the 2010 and 2011 annual reports of the Alberta Dental Association and College with the required number of copies. The Alberta Dental Association and College represents dentists and dental specialists. These reports highlight the standard of excellence to which dentists in Alberta practise and their dedication to fulfill the Alberta government's commitment to health.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the requisite number of copies of two letters. The first one is dated August 29, addressed to the hon. Minister of Human Services. The second letter is dated September 13, which is his response, copying the Minister of Health, referred to earlier in question period.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of a series of e-mails that detail that ESRD was part of the decision-making process and approved the removal of these nests.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? If not, the chair would take this opportunity to table the requisite number of copies of the Child and Youth Advocate's 2011-2012 annual report. The report has been prepared pursuant to section 21(1) of the Child and Youth Advocate Act, and it covers the activities of the office of the Child and Youth Advocate for the period April 1, 2011, through March 31, 2012.

Statement by the Speaker

Rules and Practices of the Assembly

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we go to points of order – and I think we only have one today – just a couple of very brief comments, as I said I would make, with respect to Oral Question Period. First of all, occasionally we do see a hiccup between the listing that I'm given versus the listing that some members from some caucuses feel ought to have been followed, and that happened again today. In fact, it happened twice. So we will look into where that glitch is occurring. However, please know that the Speaker's script for the order is finalized at the very last moment, at 1:20 p.m., and then it is brought in and left on the dais so that the Speaker can pick it up and commence the proceedings. Once the proceedings start, if there is a sudden change, please send me a listing of that change – of that change – and I'll do my best to try and accommodate it. But I will look into what occurred.

Secondly, as you will have noted, I extended a great deal of leeway with respect to supplementals to main questions both today and throughout last week, and the reason I'm doing it is because of the cautionary note and the advisory that I gave perhaps a week or two ago to House leaders from all four caucuses to get together as soon as possible and address the issue of the length of supplemental questions. It's very, very difficult if not short of impossible for many, I'm sure, to give a good supplementary question in a question form that would last 35 seconds. I know some of you have written to me about this, and you have some suggestions. Please provide them to your House leaders, and we'll hopefully have a recommendation come to the floor very soon in that respect. In the meantime I also want to say that most members were very good, short and quick to the point, and didn't use any preamble whatsoever. The knife cuts both ways on that one, so thank you to those who were able to do that.

Thirdly, with regard to the introductions of visitors and guests this is a very difficult thing for the chair to sometimes monitor to the satisfaction of all members. We all want to say something nice about a constituent we're introducing or a school group or a visitor from afar, and it's entirely appropriate to do so. However, the impact of going on a bit too long, which a few members did today, is that it means that we can't quite make it to 3 o'clock to complete our Routine on a daily basis. You know, from having been here now for several days, the number of times the Government House Leader has had to ask for unanimous consent to proceed beyond 3 o'clock, such as was the case again today. So there are a number of places where we can look to tighten this business up. Then, of course, again cutting both ways, several members were very quick and to the point and made very wonderful introductions. But it does backlog the Routine and other things.

Two members today mentioned people's names. I'm talking about sitting MLAs. One of them apologized halfway through, and the other one I think probably knows the mistake that he or she made. We do not use the names of elected MLAs in this Assembly, neither their first name nor their last name. I know you know that. It's just a reminder.

Another reminder, please, is with respect to personal digital appliances, PDAs, and it can take any form. The Speaker was alerted last weekend that some people were tweeting during question period. Now, the Speaker has no way of knowing if that occurred while a member was in the House or if a member stepped outside to tweet, but it creates a difficult and very, very grey area. I'm going to give you this as an official caution. If I get another one of those, then I will have to review that rule, and it may mean losing the privilege of having PDAs for reading purposes only, which at the moment is our rule. So please be warned in advance that if it happens again, I will have to take that under serious consideration and advisement.

Finally, some of the members' statements today went on just a little bit too long, but when it was a first-time member giving a first-time member's statement, I allowed three or four seconds. I hope you'll indulge me in that indulgence and discretion. It's going to come to a quick stop at some point very soon, but that's why I allowed a couple of people to go, I think, three or four seconds over the limit today. I will try to not allow it in the future, however, so please tighten up your statements. Thank you.

Now, Government House Leader, you had a point of order?

Point of Order

Referring to Nonmembers

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. During question period today the Member for Airdrie was raising questions and violated Beauchesne's 493(3) and (4) in his questions. I think it's very evident. I appreciate that you rise at the end of the Routine and review some of the rules that should be obvious to members who have been in the House for some period of time and will become more obvious to others. The hon. Member for Airdrie, of course, has no such excuse. He's been in the House a long time. He knows well that we do not reference the names of people who are not in the House and who cannot defend themselves.

In his questions today he referenced a senior public servant, someone who carries on in the prosecution service for Albertans, and did so in, I think, what was by all accounts a very disparaging manner, quite inappropriate, quite outside the rules, where 493(4) says:

The Speaker has cautioned Members to exercise great care in making statements about persons who are outside the House and unable to reply.

And 493(3):

The Speaker has traditionally protected from attack . . .

And I think it was an attack.

. . . a group of individuals commonly referred to as “those of high official station.” The extent of this group has never been defined. [However] over the years it has covered senior public servants . . .

And it goes on.

I think the rule is there for a reason, and that is that we enjoy significant privilege in this House: the privilege to discuss matters of urgent public policy, the privilege to have a Legislature where the government can be held to account in public, and a privilege to be able to say things in this House which one might not be able to say outside the House. With that privilege, I think, comes a very significant responsibility, and that is to do it, to raise those questions, in appropriate ways. There is no reason why a question can’t be appropriately phrased, appropriately worded to question public policy, to question what’s happening in government, and to hold government to account. All of us in this House would stand for those principles of our democracy, but we cannot stand, Mr. Speaker, for people making disparaging comments, for attacking the integrity and the person of individuals who are not in this House and cannot defend themselves and who spend their days, day to day, working hard for Albertans.

3:10

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. House leader for the Wildrose.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would say that there has absolutely been no point of order here. In this Legislature one of the main purposes of question period is to question the government on its conduct, to question the government on the conduct of the folks that implement their policies, to question the government on the investigations that it is doing, and so forth. We see a rich history of this. If you look at our federal friends, if you look to the CP Railway scandal of yesteryear, if you look to the Gomery inquiry, if you look at the in-and-out donation scandal, if you look to the robocall scandal, if you look to all those different – sorry; I call them scandals, just to paraphrase; affairs we’ll call them – if you look at all those things, there were individuals named in the House in the context of trying to get to the bottom of a poor government decision and asking the government to explain itself.

Now, in this case I didn’t even personally attack in any way, shape, or form this individual. I simply questioned the fact that an individual, in this case the individual referenced here, who is working already for Alberta Justice, has been asked to investigate a major default or a major mistake made by the justice system. I don’t think that it in any way is appropriate, frankly, that this person is doing that, and I absolutely brought that up. I think that it’s very clear that that is absolutely a relevant question.

Another example of that, Mr. Speaker, would be the case of Mr. Merali in this House – we’ve already had questions about that, and we will have more questions about that – a former AHS official that was involved in questions regarding his expenses and so forth. Mr. Duckett: there was another example of a senior public official whose comments were being questioned in the House and so forth. This is regular course of business. I don’t understand why the Government House Leader would have our speech in this House so restricted that, in essence, we can’t question the government on anything that they do, on anything that their departments do or that their senior civil officials do.

This has been a gross injustice. It’s one of the worst injustices that, personally, I’ve ever heard of, with regard to this girl from Airdrie. When we’re asking questions that we would like to get to the bottom of this, that we would like an independent investigation, and the individual involved in the investigation has already come to a conclusion after four hours and not even talking to the victim, I don’t see how, Mr. Speaker, that is not an appropriate question. I think it’s the most appropriate question that could possibly be answered. This individual was in the media just prior to the weekend, on Thursday. He’s perfectly able to respond and has responded.

It’s not like this is a judge or someone else where, you know, you can just come in here and say a name of an individual who’s not really permitted in his professional work to respond. This is a servant that right now, it appears to me and appears to a lot of people and, for lack of a better way of saying it, let’s just say perhaps is not being as thorough as a lot of us would like in this investigation and is jumping to conclusions. If that’s the case, then I don’t see how on earth it can be inappropriate to ask the government about that and to point it out, Mr. Speaker.

There is no point of order here. There was no attack. It was an entirely appropriate question, and to find anything else would be to go against literally years and years of parliamentary precedent. We couldn’t talk about Gomery, Merali, or anything else for that matter, and that’s not fair, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Anyone else?

Okay. Let me just review this matter because it is a serious one, and I want to give you the full weight of its impact. The hon. Member for Airdrie rose with a question during question period, and in his question he said, “Does the Premier remember the 2009 case while she was Justice minister when an officer assaulted an individual and was given a minor sentence in part because the prosecutor failed to play or describe a video,” and it goes on. The Member for Airdrie goes on, “Does the Premier remember that her all-knowing friend Mr. Lepp,” to mention a name, and it goes on. Then the Member for Airdrie concludes by saying, “Why have you selected the same Mr. Lepp to investigate this case?” And it goes on.

Hon. members, I think the Government House Leader has made a very relevant reference to Beauchesne 493(4), which I just want to repeat for you briefly because it’ll speak to what I’m about to speak to. It says, “The Speaker has cautioned Members to exercise great care in making statements about persons who are outside the House and unable to reply.” I know that all members here know what that refers to because I myself in the chair, just for however many days it’s been, have also cautioned you about mentioning names of people who are not here and not able to defend themselves. So we have that issue to deal with.

Secondly, in our own Standing Order 23(j) I will just remind you that we have the issue that comes up more often than not when points of order are raised. It simply says:

23 A Member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker’s opinion, that Member

(j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

I don’t think that the hon. Member for Airdrie used necessarily abusive or necessarily insulting language. That’s not the part I want to focus on. What I want to focus on is the last part, “create disorder.” Anything at any time can set someone off in this Assembly. You have seen it, and you’ll see it again, I’m sure.

Let's be very careful to choose our words more carefully. You all have adequate time to prepare for question period, and I know that the ministers have adequate time to know their portfolios and respond accordingly.

Beauchesne's 409(3), while we're on the subject, also says that the question during question period "ought to seek information," – and it goes on – and not "be argumentative or make representations." There are numerous other examples.

The last thing I'll just draw to your attention is that members asking about a minister's former portfolio ought be reminded that that isn't on either because as you will note in Beauchesne 409(6) and in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 503, there are references to this very point. In fact, it says, "Furthermore, a question should not . . . address a Minister's former portfolio," and it goes on. [interjections]

I know time is ticking. Thank you, hon. members, for the reminder. You're reminded, then, that in this particular set of questions there are a number of, I'll call them, infractions that occurred. As such, I'm of the opinion that everybody should just be cautioned again as to how they raise the questions, how they answer the questions so that by taking that greater care, we don't have these points of order that do consume time of the House. Today, unfortunately, it consumes time, which I really do not like, from private members' business.

That will close this matter with a caution to everyone to please word their questions in such a way and answers in such a way that they don't create that disorder. That closes the matter, and we'll move on.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 202 Public Lands (Grasslands Preservation) Amendment Act, 2012

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to move second reading of Bill 202, the Public Lands (Grasslands Preservation) Amendment Act, 2012.

Mr. Speaker, there is a video presentation produced by Travel Alberta. It's entitled This Majestic Land. It shows fabulous scenery from many parts of Alberta filmed from a helicopter. It's accompanied by stirring symphonic music composed by Michael Hoppé. The video shows mountains, foothills, lakes, and forests, but for me the most majestic scenes in This Majestic Land are the sweeping vistas of our prairie grasslands for this is the landscape that I love above any other. W.O. Mitchell called the prairie "the least common denominator of nature, the skeleton requirements simply, of land and sky."

On the grasslands the horizons are broad, the skies are bigger, and the sense of freedom is incredible. It's a place where one can feel alone amidst the expanse and the beauty of nature. It's a place where one can see pronghorn antelope and the burrowing owl and hear the haunting melody of the western meadowlark. It's where I go for a long weekend getaway, and it's where I take visitors who come to Alberta from other parts of Canada or from overseas to see and fall in love with this incredible Alberta landscape. Mr. Speaker, I was born in Calgary, surrounded by grasslands with the foothills to the west and the sweeping vistas of the great plains stretching to the east.

In the spring of 1883 my great-grandparents journeyed from present-day Saskatchewan by covered wagon and ox cart. They covered a primeval landscape, a sea of grass, the same sea of grass which supported the vast herds of buffalo, antelope, deer and elk, the Great Plains grizzly bear, and the First Nations of the Blackfoot Confederacy, who lived there for thousands of years. Stand in a broad expanse of native grassland and look around and let your imagination wander and see a landscape of the buffalo-hunting Blackfoot tribes, as it has been since the last ice age.

Much has changed since my great-grandparents came to Calgary in 1883. Most of it has been positive for the people who live in this great province. Cities and towns and villages have grown up. Roads and highways and railroads and industries and pipelines have been built, and much of the grassland has been tilled and cropped. Most of these things are positive. They've created the prosperity and the standard of living which we enjoy in Alberta.

But since I was a young boy, I've seen the native grasslands, which I love, disappear year after year. Those that are remaining are becoming more and more fragmented and disturbed by roads and resource development. In Alberta we love nature, and we pride ourselves on the beauty of our landscapes and our ability to preserve our environment for future generations. We have the largest area of parks of any province in Canada, but most of those great parks such as Wood Buffalo, Jasper, and Banff are mountains and forests. Only a small percentage of our parks is grasslands, and some of these are imperilled by very poor management.

In short, we are losing our magnificent native grasslands landscapes. The grasslands of southern and central Alberta are disappearing year by year as more pressure is put on by agriculture like ranching and grazing and the pressures put on those practices in favour of more intensive land uses. Today only about 26 per cent of our grasslands remain, but only about 16 per cent remain in the name of the Crown. Those lands contain many unique species of plants and animals, including 80 per cent of our species at risk, species like the sage grouse, the burrowing owl, and the ferruginous hawk, a species which I am pleased that the members of the Official Opposition have taken an interest in in the recent past.

Mr. Speaker, Crown lands are public lands. They are owned by you and me and every Albertan. They're not owned by the minister. They're not owned by the government of Alberta. They're owned by the people of Alberta. They are held in trust by the government of Alberta and our cabinet in the name of the Crown for all of the people of Alberta. They are a sacred trust for the use of all Albertans, now and in the future. I believe that we have a duty to ensure that some significant part of this majestic and iconic Albertan landscape is kept intact for future generations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, after the introduction of Bill 202 last spring there were a lot of misconceptions about what the bill does and doesn't do. I want to address some of them, particularly with respect to the so-called property rights issue. Some have tried to portray this bill as somehow infringing on property rights. Let me clear up some of those misconceptions. Bill 202 in no way affects privately owned property. It speaks only to public land, the land owned by all Albertans and held in trust by our Executive Council acting in the name of the Crown. Bill 202 was never intended to and would never affect the rights that are already granted to traditional uses of public land such as grazing leases or grazing permits. In fact, I would contend that it would give assurance and comfort to stakeholders in the ranching community who rely on public land for traditional uses like the grazing of cattle.

Should Bill 202 be passed on second reading, it would be my intention to propose an amendment to make that clear. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow I will be tabling the appropriate number of copies of that amendment for the records of the Assembly.

Bill 202 recognizes the critical importance of ranching and livestock grazing to the preservation of native grasslands. Native grasslands need the intervention of fire or grazing to maintain the diversity of their plant and animal communities. Today's herds of cattle are the ecological replacements for the buffalo and other ungulates which roamed the great plains before European settlement. Bill 202 will protect Alberta's traditional agricultural base and enhance the long-term tenure of Crown grazing leases as the best way to maintain native grasslands and their plant and wildlife communities.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to outline why the present policy on sales of land is inadequate. Presently public land routinely undergoes several assessments before it's approved for sale to private ownership. However, there is no requirement to make the results of any assessments public. While the fact that the land that is to be sold may be posted, the public is left in the dark on the factors which might influence the suitability of that land to be sold. Furthermore, at present there is no mandated period to allow for public input into the proposed sale. Bill 202 will rectify these shortcomings. It will bring transparency and accountability to the process, transparency in that the assessments done on public land proposed for sale will be made publicly accessible and accountability in that the public will have an opportunity to have their voice heard during a 90-day period before a decision is made to sell their land.

Mr. Speaker, since last spring I've conducted consultations with a broad spectrum of stakeholders on Bill 202, and I can say that the vast majority of those are in support of this bill. It's supported by many Alberta grasslands individuals and many organizations. Among those groups are Nature Alberta, an umbrella group for over 40 clubs throughout the province with over 5,000 members; the Alberta Fish and Game Association; the Southern Alberta Group for the Environment in Lethbridge; the Alberta Wilderness Association; Pheasants Forever, Calgary chapter; the Southern Alberta Land Trust Society; and Ducks Unlimited Canada.

In closing, I will repeat that Bill 202 is all about transparency, making those assessments public, and it's about accountability and giving the people of Alberta 90 days to comment when their land is proposed for sale. Transparency and accountability in the sale of public grasslands: that is what Bill 202 entails.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you. I'm going to in a moment recognize the hon. Leader of the Opposition, and then the order I have is the Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the Minister of Environment and SRD, followed by the Member for Livingstone-Macleod. Then we'll see how it goes after that.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to rise today to speak to the issue of Bill 202, the Public Lands (Grasslands Preservation) Amendment Act, 2012. I won't be supporting this legislation, and I'll go through a few of the reasons why. I share the hon. member's appreciation for the work that our ranching families have done over the last hundred years or so of managing our public lands on our behalf, and I would remind the hon. member and the hon. members in the Chamber that it is because of these ranching families that we have such incredible, beautiful scenic vistas in southern Alberta.

3:30

When our ranching families are doing their jobs well, they're not only managing it for their own benefit, because they're able to provide healthy grassland for their own animals, but they're also able to provide healthy landscapes for a whole range of various species. The diversity that the hon. member talks about comes in large part from the incredible job that our grassland managers, our ranchers, are doing in managing these landscapes. I would note that there is a whole range of endangered species that appear on these lands. The burrowing owl, the short-eared owl, the ferruginous hawk, the long-billed curlew, Sprague's pipit, McCown's longspur, and the rusty blackbird all depend on native shortgrass prairie. I would put it to the hon. members that it is because of the actions of our landowners that these endangered species exist on these lands. They're clearly doing something right, so why would we want to step in and change the way they're managing landscapes, which could potentially impair their ability to continue managing the lands properly for the benefit of us all?

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

I can tell you about the landowners I speak to. When you ask them what they think about ESRD coming in with the power of this bill, telling them how to manage landscapes, saying, "Hey, I'm here from ESRD, and I'm here to help," I can tell you: that is not the way our landowners are feeling. Maybe the hon. member might have had a bit more support for this bill if the issue of the ferruginous hawks in the special areas had not been so badly mismanaged by the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. It was the landowners who came to our hon. member who represents Drumheller-Stettler outraged – outraged – that it was members of that minister's department that gave ATCO the go-ahead to tear down 16 nesting areas for ferruginous hawks, and then in this Chamber she has not chosen to be forthright in the circumstances surrounding that, first blaming ATCO, then saying that a mistake was made.

Let's be very clear – and I'm glad that the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is going to be able to table the proof of this matter – that this is an error that was made on behalf of the department officials. So why would you then punish landowners by telling them that we're going to create a piece of legislation that will bring in a bunch of department officials to tell you how to manage your landscapes, to tell you how to manage your habitat for endangered species?

I, quite frankly, put my trust in the land managers who've been doing this on our behalf for over a hundred years. Let's remember: they are doing this at their expense. They are paying us to manage these landscapes, yes, for their benefit but also for the benefit of all Albertans. I can't imagine the kind of requisition the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development would put forward before this Chamber to hire a team of bureaucrats to try to manage the landscapes and endangered species habitat to have the same effect, the same positive outcomes that our landowners and ranchers do every single day.

Now, let me just go through a couple of the reasons why our landowners would not support this legislation and why I am speaking against it. The hon. member mentioned poorly managed landscapes. He mentioned the pressure of ranchers on the land as being part of poorly managed landscapes. Maybe he misspoke, because he did speak later about how important cattle are on these landscapes.

Let me just reinforce that point. When you look at the landscapes in southern Alberta with this native fescue – and I've seen some of the root systems in cross-sections and analyses that have been done by biologists – some of these root systems go several metres deep. Part of the reason why this fescue is so special is not because we build a fence around it and we allow it to rest. Rest is only one way in which these landscapes are managed properly. Rest and fire we know from the history of the prairies; fire is also a way in which our landscapes are managed. Animal impact is absolutely essential to being able to keep these landscapes strong. It's when you have the cattle wandering on them. It's when you have the dung beetles working away at the land. These are the things that keep the landscapes healthy, and this is the reason why we need to continue to have strong ranching families managing these landscapes on our behalf for the benefit of all Albertans.

One of the other concerns that I think has caused so many landowners to be in opposition to these bills – and I do recognize that the hon. member is intending to make a couple of changes. Under section 82.3(1) he talks about: “Before a disposition or grant of public grassland is made, the Minister shall conduct an assessment to determine if the grassland that is the subject of the proposed disposition or grant contains significant wildlife habitat.” That's one section. And then further on the next page, 82.5(1): “At least 90 days prior to the date proposed for a disposition or grant of public grassland under this Part, the Minister shall provide public notice.”

Well, when I went and spoke with the folks from special areas, they attempted to try to illustrate to me the difficulty they would have in being able to abide by these kinds of regulations. In the special areas we have a board that manages the tax recovery land on our behalf. They are making decisions every single day on access for energy companies. One of the concerns they have in the reading of this legislation is how it might be interpreted, that every time they go to make a disposition of an oil and gas lease, they would have to put that up for a 90-day review period before they would be allowed to let anybody on that land and be able to use that disposition. In the special areas alone they approve 1,500 such dispositions in a given year, and most of the time they're able to do these dispositions within four days. This would completely stop their ability to be able to provide the access to oil and gas development that their citizens want, that is being done in a responsible way, and that we've charged them to do.

Again, I do recognize that the hon. member recognized this concern and is intending to come back with language that clarifies that he is speaking about sale. Even still, we also have charged the Special Areas Board with the ability to undertake those sales on our behalf as well. I think that even with that change, the Special Areas Board is not going to be one hundred per cent happy. The problem now is that out there in the rural areas there is this concern that that is the implication of this bill. Trying to now communicate that it means something completely different than what is written in these pages I think would be very difficult, and I think the hon. member would have to go back to the drawing board and tighten up the language if, indeed, he is trying to get to that more narrow purpose.

The other concern that you hear about from our landowner stewards – and I think that the hon. member talked about this when he was introducing the bill – is the concern that this would be used to take land that is currently under grazing, build a fence around it, and build a public park out of it. I've already mentioned that these landscapes are as beautiful as they are, are as pristine as they are, and are as environmentally diverse as they are because they are being actively managed by our land stewards. They're being actively managed by our ranchers. The concern that I've heard from landowners is that this legislation would enable the creation of public parks and that that would be to the detriment of the landscapes.

I will also, then, just quickly go through some of the issues that we see with the regulations under 82.7. They're incredibly, incredibly broad powers that are given to the Lieutenant Governor in Council to be able to make regulations

- (a) establishing criteria for determining whether wildlife habitat is significant wildlife habitat;
- (b) respecting the manner in which an assessment under section 82.3(1) must be conducted;
- (c) designating the types of assessments . . .
- (d) specifying permitted uses . . .
- (e) respecting what constitutes adequate protections . . .
- (f) specifying the criteria [for private land] . . .
- (g) respecting the requirement for public notice.

There's an awful lot that the member is asking us to sign off on here that will ultimately be determined by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, which I think would put our landowners at great risk of not knowing exactly what is being agreed to in this bill. This is a reason why I don't support it.

Now, let's go back to, I think, the reason why this came about in the first place. I would invite the hon. member – if he wants to come back with a piece of legislation that actually narrows the scope rather than broadening it the way this does to deal with the singular issue that we had back in 2010, which the hon. members from the Liberal caucus raised to great effect under the name Potatogate, they might find that the hon. members on this side would be in support of closing the loopholes to prevent this situation from happening again. Of course, what I'm referring to – and I'll table a document that does go through and explain – is that in the October 25, 2010, version of albertafarmexpress.ca they talked about SLM Spud Farms receiving a 16,000-acre parcel of grassland to turn into cultivated land for potatoes.

The problem that the landowners and, I think, the hon. members in other caucuses had at the time was that it was developed in secrecy. Nobody knew what the provisions were around the nature of this disposition. Nobody knew what the terms of the public bid actually were. It wasn't an open public bid. The decision on whether or not to approve it rested with the minister. At the same time we know that in southern Albertan we have a freshwater system that is overloaded, and this would have required additional irrigation. We also know the whole range of endangered species that would have been impacted by it.

One of the things that was expressed in this article, which was of great concern to the general public as well, was that cattlemen were upset over what they saw as special treatment for this particular farming operation and fear that they would be forced to give up grazing land for the potato farm's expansion. It continues:

Although leaseholders in northern Alberta can buy their lease land without tender or auction, that's not the standard procedure south of Highway 16. In southern Alberta, a request to buy public land is reviewed by Sustainable Resource Development to determine if the parcel is suitable for sale and is in excess of the department's needs. If a sale is recommended, it is sold to the highest bidder through auction or public tender.

Local ranchers are questioning why that procedure [was not] followed in this case.

I quote the president of the Bow Island Grazing Association:

Why should one person be favoured over [all the] others? Why is this deal not open to tender?

Now, if the hon. member wanted to address this issue, I think that there would probably be quite a different bill before this Chamber to be able to debate this issue. This is an issue we expressed concern about. I know that there are other hon. members who expressed concern about it. We're still concerned that this kind of approach can take place in the future, that we have not closed these loopholes, that we have not established a practice of public tender, that we have not established a practice that would allow all people to participate in the potential sale of public land. As a result, I think that there is still a hole in the legislation that does need to be filled, but I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that the hole in that legislation does not get filled through Bill 202.

This is a piece of legislation that has created great concern among our landowners, great concern among those who are stewarding our public lands, gives way too much power to the cabinet, is way too open ended, and for those reasons, I cannot support it.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Ms Blakeman: Excuse me, Madam Speaker, but it should go back and forth. It should alternate between the opposition and the government side. Without losing my place in the lineup, I think it should go to the minister of the environment, and I'd be happy to follow her.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you very much. I believe that you are correct, but I was following the speaking order. Thank you.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre for this chance as well in the lineup.

I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 202. I thank the hon. member for expressing concerns regarding the protection of native grasslands in southern Alberta through a private member's bill. Environment and Sustainable Resource Development agrees with the intent of Bill 202, in particular the protection of native prairie that contains ecologically significant and sensitive wildland habitats. In fact, existing policy and legislation, including development of regional plans, are already being used to guide decisions for high-value landscapes such as native prairie to be protected.

I would agree with what's been said. I believe our ranchers are doing an outstanding job managing the grasslands, and we have no intention of changing this. Section 4(1) of the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves, Natural Areas and Heritage Rangelands Act states:

The Lieutenant Governor in Council, in order to preserve public land for ecological purposes, may designate as an ecological reserve any area of public land that, in the opinion of the Lieutenant Governor in Council . . .

- (b) is a representative example of a natural ecosystem in Alberta . . . [or]
- (d) contains rare or endangered native plants or animals that should be preserved.

In addition, Madam Speaker, section 18 of the Public Lands Act states:

The Minister may, if in the Minister's opinion doing so will not conflict or be inconsistent with any applicable [Alberta Land Stewardship Act] regional plan . . .

- (c) reserve public land for any reason and for any period and permit the use of that land for any period and subject to any terms and conditions that the Minister prescribes by the Crown in right of Canada, by any department of the Government or by any person, without executing a disposition for it.

There is also opposition to the proposed bill from key stakeholders. The Alberta Grazing Leaseholders Association, for example, has written and spoken to me on this issue. The letter that they sent states that the association feels "that Bill 202 duplicates what is presently available to protect Alberta's native rangelands," and I certainly agree with them. The group sees no purpose for this bill and feels it would just add an unneeded layer of red tape, which the association feels would be counterproductive.

Madam Speaker, public lands are sold only – only – if they are not needed for government purposes and programs, and that includes the government's natural resource management commitments. I'm pleased to say that through the Premier's leadership the government of Alberta is firmly committed to an integrated resource management system. The province does not support the sale of public land with a postsale restriction such as caveats or encumbrances as referenced in Bill 202. If we have a continued interest in the management of public land, we will not sell it. In fact, the department retains land with high ecological value such as land near rivers, water bodies, or coulees and land that is important for soil and watershed protection, biodiversity, and wildlife habitat. When land is sold and comes under private ownership, the municipality determines land use through bylaws and zoning.

Madam Speaker, before public land is sold, the department has a standard referral process using science-based knowledge and technology. This includes a detailed evaluation carried out by trained staff with expertise in vegetation ecology in consultation with other government resource managers, including fish and wildlife biologists, foresters, and water managers. In addition, proposed public land sales are subject to a field assessment that identifies site characteristics, including climate, landscape, drainage, and what type of vegetation exists.

Madam Speaker, land-use activities, vegetation inventories, wildlife habitat, water courses, and many other land attributes are assessed using geographical information. This provides a better understanding of potential factors that may affect a public land sale. The scarcity of a particular type of land or vegetation type, for example native prairie, and the value of the land in comparison to other public land are also examined. Attributes like conservation, recreation, and access are also considered in the process, as is consultation with First Nations. Only then is a decision made that takes into account the needs and concerns of other land and resource management agencies, including the local municipality. This allows the department to hear a broad range of opinions and apply decision-making criteria based on the concerns heard.

Madam Speaker, public land sales are guided by regional planning under the land-use framework. Albertans will continue to inform the regional planning process through public consultations, which will provide guidance with land-use decisions on public land. In fact, to develop an effective regional plan for the South Saskatchewan region that addresses issues like watershed protection, recreation, natural resource management, and population growth, the government will gather feedback this fall, in fact in November and December, through public stakeholder information sessions. I encourage the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill and all members to attend the session in Calgary in November, when public input is gathered, and all of the other sessions.

Land-use planning is essential in a growing province where industrial and municipal development, recreation, agricultural production, and conservation compete for the same landscape. The potential restrictions associated with Bill 202 could limit government's ability to adapt to changing priorities. In addition, the requirement for 90 days of public notice prior to the disposition date, as referenced in Bill 202, does not support the province's effort to align regulatory processes.

While I agree with the intent of Bill 202, to protect wildlife habitat and native grassland, many department programs along with policy and legislation, as I've mentioned, are already in place to achieve these objectives. Therefore, I will not be supporting Bill 202.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

3:50

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. You know, private members' bills are always an interesting exercise in this Assembly. I don't know how many of the people that are following this through live streaming or reading Hansard understand that government, cabinet members, can put forward a bill at any time. They can develop it today and put it on the table tomorrow; not that that's their process, but they have that leeway. But private members, which is everyone that's not in cabinet, are assigned their position through a random draw. Back in the summer, in the middle of July, we had our names pulled from a hat, and that determined the position that we're in.

Secondly, we're required to basically have our ideas in by mid-September. They can change a little bit – you can switch positions and change a little bit – but essentially that's pretty much it. For those of us that are private members, we're trying in September to think forward to the spring or, in our case, into the fall to what will be relevant and urgent and necessary. Not all the time but, gladly, more often than not we do get members who bring forward and support private members' bills that they're really passionate about, and I would say that this is one of those bills.

The Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill has worked hard on this bill. He's reached out to other caucuses, he's sent out descriptive notes, he has tried to explain and work with people to alleviate their fears, and I commend him for that. Clearly, this is a great passion for him, and I'm really pleased to see someone, one, get a draw that's good enough that he's actually going to get it debated – there will be about four of those in this whole year – and two, follow through with a pretty fine take at it. Lots of times we're in a rush and don't really know what we're doing, and the bills are not of as high a standard as we'd like. This member worked hard on this, and I want to acknowledge that.

It's a bit of a disappointment that he's getting a bit of a pile-on from the first couple of speakers. I didn't start out thinking I was going to support it, but the more I've looked at it, the more I thought, "Yeah, he's on the right track here" and for a couple of reasons.

Mr. Hale: Have you been out to the prairies?

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Actually, my father's family comes from the Turner Valley-Black Diamond area, which isn't that far to get onto the prairies, and I go to southern Alberta every year.

An Hon. Member: Every year?

Ms Blakeman: Every summer. [interjections] No need to get snarky over there. Oh, yes. Madam Speaker, you'd like to hear about this, wouldn't you?

I do make a point of going there because there's just something about that landscape that pulls you to it, where you can stand outside at night, and from where I used to stay, I could see the storm coming over Monarch, which was about 15 miles away. There's just something about that big-sky country that's really important to Albertans. [interjection] No, our big-sky country. Sorry; I'm not giving that one away to Saskatchewan.

What is it about this bill that I support? Well, a couple of things. First of all, the recognition of the need for habitat preservation and wildlife corridors – although they're not mentioned here, I'm assuming it – for, actually, a number of species. It's interesting. We get all kinds of representation in this House and have very strong representation currently through the Wildrose for farming families and a rural lifestyle, which is great. That's what representation is all about. But we don't get very many caribou or elk or various other kinds of wildlife in here because, you know, they're not human, and they don't get elected. It's hard to get a voice representing them into this place, and I would know that because I've tried. So I appreciate the fact that it's recognized with this bill that those grasslands are a habitat for certain species, and we need to be aware of that as we plan forward into the future.

This government is capable of planning with a very far horizon on industry and development but seems to have no horizon for planning on environmental protection, wildlife protection and preservation, ecological protection and preservation. I'm a Liberal, a dying breed in Alberta, I grant you, and I'm a Liberal because I seek that balance. It strikes me that we don't have a balance in this area right now, that those scales of justice that you always see are imbalanced, and we have an overpermissiveness, a very permissive environment toward development.

This bill is trying to say: "We don't have very much of that traditional grassland left. Let's try and hang onto it." Even at that, the bill is not saying: nobody shall ever step on it or do anything with it. If I'm reading the bill correctly, it does say, you know, that whatever is going on there now can continue to go on. In fact, if I might quibble, in section 82.4(3), "Nothing in this Part is to be construed as precluding the exploration for and development of oil and gas resources," because God forbid in this province that we would preclude oil and gas resource development. Oh, no. How could we possibly have one inch of land that isn't open to oil and gas development? Sure enough, this hon. member has followed through on that sacred – it's not sacred to me but seems to be sacred to the government members – action that they will carry through and develop every square inch. This bill does carry through with that, so I'm a little confused about why the Official Opposition is so exercised about this.

One was the recognition of the habitat and how little of it remains pristine and also remains public and the whole concept that this land is not the government's. It's held in trust for all Albertans. I noticed when the minister was talking that, again, this government and the cabinet tend to assume an entitlement which they have not earned. The minister says that the land will be sold only if it's not needed for government needs. Well, too bad, because it may not be about what the government needs. It may be about the public having that land in trust. I think this bill is recognizing that, and I want to support that.

The sale of lands. You know, unprompted when I talk to my seniors, this is one of the issues that they are particularly adamant about, a greater transparency for the sale of public lands. I'm not sure where that comes from because when I ask how many people grew up on a farm, it's not a large percentage – it's maybe a third, 20 per cent of the people in the room – but there are very strong feelings that this should be a much more public process, much more transparent. They approve of what has been put forward in Bill 202, that there is a public notification, that there is a period of time for people to react, and that there is an opportunity for people to be heard, yea or nay, on a particular sale of public lands.

I am curious about why there is an assumption that those holding grazing leases should, it seems from the government point of view, be given control over all grasslands. I just don't agree with that. I think the job they're doing is fine. I've got nothing against that. I just don't think I'd hand over the rest of it. You know, I don't think that they are the best or the only stewards, and in this case I think they have a conflict of interest. I was not impressed by the letter they sent, but I imagine they didn't care too much about impressing me. The letter that was sent in September is – well, if you can't say something nice, don't say anything at all. We'll just move along there.

That 10 minutes is just gone in a snap, isn't it? Okay.

4:00

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The Associate Minister of Wellness.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to speak about Bill 202, the Public Lands (Grasslands Preservation) Amendment Act, 2012, brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill. Before I begin, I would like to thank the hon. member for all of the time and work he has dedicated to this bill. It's very obvious that he's very passionate about this.

Madam Speaker, I believe that Bill 202 does address a very important topic, the conservation of Alberta's natural landscapes. Anyone who knows me knows that I care very much about this personally, professionally, and politically as well. I trust that we can all agree that preserving Alberta's natural habitat is a huge priority for us all. With the population growth our province has seen over the past several decades, it's even more important now than ever to ensure that we have the correct measures in place to protect our natural landscapes. That's why in 2009 the Assembly passed the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, or the ALSA, which provides strong leadership on land-use issues.

According to this act this piece of legislation has several important purposes, including:

- (a) to provide a means by which the Government can give direction and provide leadership in identifying the objectives of the Province of Alberta, including economic, environmental and social objectives;
- (b) to provide a means to plan for the future, recognizing the need to manage activity to meet the reasonably foreseeable needs of current and future generations of Albertans, including aboriginal peoples;
- (c) to provide for the co-ordination of decisions by decision-makers concerning land, species, human settlement, natural resources and the environment;
- (d) to create legislation and policy that enable sustainable development by taking account of and responding to the cumulative effect of human endeavour and other events.

Now, to achieve these objectives, the ALSA established seven regions for which regional plans are currently being developed. To date, as some members are well aware, the lower Athabasca regional plan, or LARP, has been completed, and Alberta Environment and Sustainable Resource Development is currently soliciting public input on the South Saskatchewan regional plan before its completion and release. I know some folks who are very active in this. They're very appreciative of this process.

Madam Speaker, a great deal of work, experience, and public input have gone into developing these regional plans. They're going to help to ensure the protection and sustainability of our natural spaces. I look forward to the completion of each of the regional plans as I believe they will provide the framework our province needs to balance our current needs with the needs of our future generations.

Madam Speaker, the objective of the ALSA was to establish a crosscutting land-use framework. As I understand it, Bill 202 does not coincide with the ALSA and would instead put into place a new set of rules based on a different framework. To establish another set of laws that do not function within this plan seems counterintuitive. It may complicate provincial rules surrounding conservation instead of streamlining.

In addition, Madam Speaker, the regional land-use plans established under the ALSA contain a number of provisions protecting ecologically sensitive land. For example, the recently completed LARP has established regional environmental limits for air and surface water quality and a regional groundwater management framework. It has also established six new conservation areas, bringing the total conserved land in the region to 2 million – that's right; 2 million – hectares. That's 22 per cent of the region. The plan will change the Dillon River conservation area from a public land-use zone to a wildland provincial park, increasing the size by 27,245 hectares, thus securing a larger tract of important caribou habitat. As you can see, the plans established under the ALSA place a great deal of focus on ecological conservation, which makes one wonder whether an additional piece of legislation such as Bill 202 is necessary in the first place.

Alberta's regional plans are not closed to public input. In fact, public consultations are a very important part of the development of these plans. As I said earlier, Alberta Environment is currently accepting input into the South Saskatchewan regional plan, and before that, they accepted public input on the lower Athabasca regional plan, or LARP.

Section 5 of the ALSA states that appropriate public consultation is required before a regional plan is completed and that a report on Albertan's feedback must then be presented to Executive Council before the completion of a regional plan. What this says to me, Madam Speaker, is that the existing framework makes room for suggestions in improvement on our current regional measures.

I do believe that if it is in the best interests of the public, the Assembly may choose to incorporate elements of Bill 202 into our existing land-use framework instead of establishing an entirely new piece of legislation that is unrelated to the plans.

In summary, Madam Speaker, while I truly and greatly appreciate all of the incredible work that the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill has done – that cannot be doubted – in the name of preserving Alberta's natural heritage, I do stand behind the ALSA, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, and its regional plans, as I stated. I believe that these initiatives are the best mechanism through which we can effectively manage land use in our province. As a result, I will not be supporting this bill today.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by the Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It should be known right from the start that I have the greatest respect for the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, but I, too, stand here to speak against Bill 202 on behalf of Alberta's farming and ranching community. Proper grassland and rangeland management is already happening by Alberta's ranchers, who have been the stewards of land for generations. The government already has a process in place to ensure Crown leases are handled properly, as we have heard today by the minister.

Further, I must add, though, that the ranching community is very concerned in this bill that grazing dispositions, almost all of which are on Crown land, may be cancelled much as the Alberta government has done with the mineral dispositions in the lower Athabasca regional plan. The worry is that with this amendment the government may have coded the discussion as denying the sale of Crown land with high biological value, but the true intent in many of my landowners' opinions is that it actually may be to provide recreational access for the masses.

Just for background, what was originally federally leased land which was not suitable for homesteading, or farming as it was known post-1904, is now Crown land and exists today as grazing disposition from the provincial government. Located intermittently near deeded land, Crown land under a grazing disposition may occur in an erratic checkerboard form integrated with deeded land. Ranchers manage the whole environment as one regardless of what type of land designation, leased or deeded.

There are many cases where the Crown land has never in history been fenced away from the deeded land on regular quarter sections, which are defined as property boundaries. Therefore, public access to this Crown land intimately integrated into a deeded ranching operation causes a great deal of controversy as most of the coveted Crown land is within an hour's drive of a lot of our major urban areas in Alberta today.

4:10

Various public interest groups – and I think the member did mention many of those – have tried for the past 35 years to gain unfettered access to what they call public land, and there's a difference in the definition in many people's minds, especially the farming and ranching communities. What we're really talking about, in our opinion, is Crown land with a statutory consent with common law property rights attached to it.

With this bill this government is continuing to deny the sale of this Crown land, and they will continue to devalue, therefore, the deeded lands surrounding the Crown land with this process. Thus, with the stroke of a pen on Bill 202 the government devalues deeded land in the province, not for biodiversity's sake but, in my opinion, for a new, upcoming campaign of public access to Crown land.

Given all of the above, I believe Bill 202 is truly an assault on property rights, and I therefore cannot support it. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I, too, am pleased to rise today and join the debate on Bill 202, the Public Lands (Grasslands Preservation) Amendment Act, 2012, brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill. I understand that the purpose of Bill 202 is to ensure the continued protection of public lands containing significant wildlife habitats, including Crown grazing lease lands and tax recovery lands and public lands in special areas.

The goal of this bill would be accomplished in two ways. The first would be to ensure the provincial government retains land containing significant natural wildlife, and the second, as I understand it, is to ensure Crown lands that have been sold are subject to conservation easements registered against the title under the provisions of the Land Stewardship Act or any successful legislation.

Madam Speaker, the preservation of these natural areas is important because it provides opportunities for recreational use, it maintains Alberta's scenic reputation, and it helps prevent wildlife habitat fragmentation. Although all of these factors are important to consider, I would like to focus my comments on virtually the last point, habit fragmentation for wildlife. As the name implies, wildlife habitat fragmentation is the emergence of discontinuities in an environment leading to the formation of isolated areas of populations. Large and continuous pieces of land where wildlife once had the ability to roam and hunt unimpeded is transformed into smaller pieces of land separated by physical barriers. These barriers can range considerably from cropland to pasture to pavement.

Although obstructions also naturally occur in the environment and cause fragmentation, according to the Nature Conservancy of Canada animals tend to be well equipped to adapt to these situations. Conversely, human developments such as roads in areas with a high population of wildlife pose a greater challenge, in my opinion. The effects of significant human interference in these regions can be numerous and far reaching.

The intention of Bill 202, Madam Speaker, is not to prevent all developments on public lands or to place a moratorium on the sale of those lands. Instead, it seeks to regulate those lands after departmental assessments and public consultation have taken place in order to maintain the natural state and recreational use of plant and animal communities in certain areas. According to Bill 202 public lands would undergo objective assessments to determine their environmental and wildlife value before any sale could proceed.

I feel it is important to note that a number of assessments of these public lands are already being undertaken by a number of provincial departments, with the intention of being used for similar reasons. Fragmented parcels, lands already under cultivation, severely degraded lands, or lands deemed to have limited environmental value would continue to be sold or transferred to municipal governments or private individuals. The assessments that are currently being done on these public lands are carried out with sensitive vegetation and animals in mind.

With that being said, I believe that aspects of this proposed legislation are already being undertaken by a number of provincial departments in order to preserve plants and wildlife which may be threatened. This was reinforced earlier this afternoon by comments from the hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

For many years public lands have been available to Albertans in a number of ways, including resource development, recreational opportunities, and agricultural purposes. Madam Speaker, I believe that we have done a very good job of balancing the economic benefits of those lands with the protection of habitats within them. I'm confident that as a province we will continue to reap many important economic benefits from these long-standing practices while ensuring the continued protection of sensitive plants and animals. However, I'm not so confident that this bill would provide any further protection. It is important to note that Bill 202 would only apply, again, to public lands south of highway 16. I wonder if more closely regulated human activities at times in these areas would more effectively prevent habitat fragmentation.

As elected members of this Assembly it is imperative that we make decisions that reflect the best interests of all Albertans in this generation and the next. I believe it is important to consider all the potential consequences of our actions in order to be adequately prepared. We must recognize and take into consideration the importance of public lands to those whose livelihoods depend on them and the role they play towards strengthening our economy.

Madam Speaker, I recognize the hard work and good intentions of the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill. The hon. member is dedicated to making sure these valuable areas are maintained for generations to come, yet I cannot help but think that aspects of this legislation are already being undertaken, and as a result I will not be supporting Bill 202.

With this, I will conclude my comments. I look forward to hearing the perspectives of the rest of my hon. colleagues. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. A pleasure to speak to Bill 202 and in full support, may I say. As a lifelong Albertan with years working in the foothills and on farms and living in the Pincher Creek area for seven years and being a grandfather and seeing how this province has been inundated with development over the past few decades in particular, I'm very concerned that this kind of initiative from the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill be given full airing and full appreciation. After years of raising issues of public trust and the lack of progress in land use, I do applaud the member for his attempt to redress a public lands process that has been anything but public and anything but transparent or thoughtful about the long-term public interest in this province.

I'm aware that land impacts continue at an unprecedented pace in Alberta and have left us less than 15 per cent – 15 per cent – of our native grasslands. Obviously, the decisions that continue to be made in this province are taking other things into consideration besides the long-term public interest. It is false to say that public consultation has taken place or would occur before sales. We've seen too many examples, including that of last year where thousands and thousands of acres were about to be sold to a potato operation and only public outrage at the closed nature of the discussions pushed that out of the plan.

What I've seen is an increasing pressure to approve developments before any firm limits are in place, without a land-use framework, without a commitment to how we're going to develop the southern part of the province, which is a critical area for all kinds of interests, including the agricultural industry and the grazing dispositions that are there. But, indeed, these are public lands. It is indeed the responsibility of government to check with the owners of the resource before making irreversible decisions that affect not only current generations but future generations.

Grazing leases should not preclude public review, with such pressures that are consistently accommodated by this government. Recognizing, again, that we have less than 15 per cent of our native grasslands left in Alberta, we must tap those who have the most to lose – that is, our public – and get their legitimate concerns, their legitimate values expressed in the decisions that we make about selling off sections of land that will never come back into the public purview.

I know that the land-use framework is under review. It's been in hiatus for several years. We haven't seen yet the firm limits that we want to see on land use and linear disturbance, oil and gas development, where we want to protect agriculture and industrial operations. We desperately need that plan before we make more decisions that are irreversibly scooping up the last remnants of public lands in this province.

I for one have expressed before that Alberta Environment is grossly underresourced to do its job. I do not believe that they can do a proper cumulative impact assessment. I do not believe that they have scientists and technical experts that can actually give us a comprehensive look at all the impacts in a particular region and recognize where the limits are and the important environmental goods and services, as they're called, that are provided by current wetlands and grasslands and treescapes. We do not have the technical ability in this province. We do not invest the resources in Alberta Environment. In fact, we have removed some of the resources at Alberta Environment and transferred them over to energy resources and conservation issues. I'm deeply concerned that we do not have an authentic process to assess value, to assess long-term impacts, to assess and preserve some of these important grasslands that, as I say, are almost gone in terms of their native species.

This courageous bill is trying desperately to say to this Assembly – and I think that if we can get more Albertans to be aware of this, we'll have overwhelming support, as did the objection to the last potato proposal in southern Alberta – that we need more public involvement, that we need more of a sense that this government knows where it's going in land use in this province. There is no clear plan and no clear limits being placed on where we will develop, what we will develop, and what the priorities are for the long-term well-being not only of agriculture but of species protection and human activities, recreational and otherwise.

I feel very strongly that this Legislature needs to take a second look at this bill. I see no extra cost involved in ensuring that we get more public input into the discussion around the sale of public lands and that those groups that have dedicated themselves to looking at the long-term environmental issues, including grasslands, have an opportunity to influence the public debate and to provide their expertise and their input into these important decisions before they are made with, as I say, potentially very critical impacts for future generations. These are parts of the province that are under critical threat from drought, from many activities that potentially would render them permanently damaged and their species, as I say, under threat.

I would encourage people to think again about their position on this and encourage support for this innovative and forward-looking bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to rise and speak about Bill 202, the Public Lands (Grasslands Preservation) Amendment Act, 2012, brought forth by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

To begin, I would like to thank the hon. member for his time, efforts, and passion regarding this issue as he seeks to serve the best interests of all Albertans and, I might add, the right of private members to bring bills forward.

Madam Speaker, Alberta's environment is truly one of its greatest spectacles, offering unequalled ecological diversity and stunning scenery. From the towering Rocky Mountains to the rolling foothills and shimmering rivers we have been blessed with one of the most beautiful places on Earth, which provides habitat for various plants and animals that are crucial to maintaining a healthy ecosystem, a diverse ecosystem, and a fully functioning natural landscape.

Madam Speaker, Bill 202 seeks to preserve the natural value of these lands and address land-use issues which could have an impact on the environmental well-being of our province, especially its wildlife. The Public Lands (Grasslands Preservation) Amendment Act in part attempts to achieve the protection of grasslands and grazing leases which contain significant or sensitive species. This would be achieved by carrying out assessments to determine the environmental worth of the land before the potential development could occur. Therefore, if the wildlife and grassland loss was considered substantial, land development may not proceed.

Madam Speaker, as Alberta's population continues to grow, our environment will be affected, altering its natural state. As municipalities keep expanding, they will intrude on natural habitat, potentially disrupting the survival of wildlife and grasslands. Furthermore, as our province continues to develop economically, the potential for grassland degradation also increases. Together such circumstances pose a significant threat to the ecosystem as a whole.

The protection of wildlife and its habitat is important as we strive to become environmental stewards, maintaining a balance between economic development and environmental protection. In saying this, human-caused habitat loss could have negative consequences and may cause irreversible damage to this fragile ecosystem. Madam Speaker, Bill 202 could possibly prevent habitat degradation by preserving grasslands and grazing leases, therefore helping to sustain wildlife populations.

The importance of native grassland should not be underestimated as such territory is important to the carrying capacity of a healthy ecosystem. Carrying capacity refers to the maximum wildlife population that can be sustained given the available food, water, and habitat. If these grasslands become threatened by human expansion, the carrying capacity of animal habitat could decrease. This, in turn, could reduce animal populations, adversely affecting the diversity and the sustainability of numerous species, culminating potentially in environmental damage. As a government we have a responsibility to future generations to maintain a high level of environmental stewardship. This will help all Albertans enjoy the ecological splendour this province has to offer for generations to come.

Madam Speaker, Bill 202 could make significant changes that help maintain and preserve grasslands, protect wildlife, and sustain our environment for future generations. However, such legislation is unnecessary and, unfortunately, redundant. Currently there are a wide array of management mechanisms in place and numerous pieces of legislation which sustain the environmental integrity of grasslands. Together these measures help preserve the habitat of numerous species, promoting their survival.

One relevant piece of legislation, the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves, Natural Areas and Heritage Rangelands Act, helps sustain public lands and wildlife habitat. This legislation in part also protects sensitive or scenic public lands from disturbance, helping to maintain its natural state. Together these measures help protect grasslands and the various species that inhabit them. This is but one example of how public lands are maintained within Alberta, helping to promote grasslands and wildlife sustainability.

Madam Speaker, in addition to this legislation, the government of Alberta has many assessment tools in place to monitor grasslands. One such tool is the Alberta grasslands vegetation inventory, which monitors changes in native vegetation characteristics. This assessment mechanism helps ensure that land-use decisions can be made with greater confidence, especially when it comes to minimizing the impact on grassland.

The Alberta Biodiversity Monitoring Institute offers another means of ecological assessment as it notes changes in habitat and land development. Supported by the Alberta government and private industry, this institute helps monitor the health of over 2,000 species province-wide.

Madam Speaker, while supporting this institute and its work, we recognize the importance of grasslands to biodiversity. Promoting the survival of wildlife through grassland protection and, for that matter, all habitat protection is extremely important in maintaining a diverse ecosystem and environment. While Bill 202 recognizes this fact, such legislation is simply not needed. These mechanisms represent ways in which the government monitors public lands, helping to promote ecological security throughout the province. As is often the case, the government of Alberta already has a variety of legislation and land assessment tools in place to sustain the integrity of public land, which helps maintain animal habitat and ecological sustainability across the province.

Madam Speaker, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill is committed to preserving public grasslands, a sentiment that I personally share. His love of the prairies is certainly shared by me. However, I would suggest that this government has taken measurable and effective steps to the same end. This is not about land use. This is about monitoring and ensuring that habitat is protected from one end of Alberta to the other. We have those measures in place today. Therefore, it's my view that this legislation is redundant, considering the current mechanisms and legislation already in place. As a result I, unfortunately, find myself unable to support this bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill 202, which, if passed, will have a major impact on my constituency. As you know, my constituency of Cypress-Medicine Hat covers the southeast corner of Alberta. Many of my constituents are ranchers and farmers, and a lot of my ranchers hold leases for public grasslands. The mentioned Bow Island grazing reserve is in my constituency. Again, these grasslands are important not just to the ranchers who lease the land but to the neighbouring farms and ranches which rely on the availability of grazing leases to add to the value of their operations. As the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod so aptly pointed out, many of these ranches are comprised of checkerboard situations, with 160, 320, 640 and up acres of public grazing land and deeded land. It is very, very much a mixed component out there.

My constituents will be some of the Albertans who are most impacted by both the proposed bill we are discussing, the Public Lands (Grasslands Preservation) Amendment Act, 2012, as well as the government's South Saskatchewan regional plan. As both a rancher and an MLA representing Cypress-Medicine Hat I can tell the government that both of these plans are generally going to have a negative impact on Albertans in southern Alberta.

Madam Speaker, in 2009 this government passed Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. This divided our province into seven land-use regions and gave cabinet the authority to implement regional plans for each area of the province. This means that central planners in the government bureaucracy rather than local elected and accountable municipal councils will decide what types of activities are going to be permitted or prohibited on both Crown and private land. Farmers and ranchers in my constituency were not in favour of Bill 36, and they are now not in favour of Bill 202. In fact, they are extremely worried about the implementation of the government's South Saskatchewan regional plan and the consequences, whether intended or unintended, it will have for their land and therefore for their businesses and their families.

Government should not be looking for ways to meddle in systems that are already in place. Government should not be adding regulation simply for the sake of adding regulation and placing further burdens on our citizens. When government does act – and I do not believe government should have its fingers in every aspect of the economy and society – it should be acting in the best interests of its citizens and taking measures to improve things. So I ask all my colleagues to listen to how the application of Bill 202 will affect real Albertans and to carefully consider whether or not you'll lend your support to this legislation.

Madam Speaker, I will not get into the details of Potatogate, as it was called, the potential sale of the Bow Island grazing reserve and the conversion of the leased land to deeded, but it would certainly appear that Bill 202 is a direct response to what happened with those situations. First of all, this government was forced to cancel a land sale that was done in secret with no public input and without full value for the taxpayer and the citizen when details of the impending deal were brought to light. Then they were forced to cancel the same sale a second time because it was so obvious that the requests for proposals they had issued were so narrow that there was only one potential purchaser that could have possibly met all the requirements.

Do those sound like the actions of a government that claims to be transparent and accountable? Albertans don't think so. Cypress-Medicine Hatters don't think so. The government deserved to get caught in both these cases. They were not transparent. They did not hold themselves accountable, and they were certainly not interested in protecting their taxpayers and their citizens.

Madam Speaker, I really question the need for Bill 202. It is not as if our province does not already have a system in place to ensure that Crown leases are handled properly. We do. It is not as if sustainable rangeland management is not already occurring in our province. It is. Ranchers have been leasing public grasslands for decades, and they have acted as good stewards of the land for decades. In fact, we all owe these grazers a lot. Their cattle replicate the grazing of the buffalo that roamed our land over a hundred years ago. It is because of these grazers that these grasslands are in the great condition they are with the species that do exist.

Madam Speaker, to change our system with this onerous legislation because of one poor decision by this government is, frankly, ridiculous. If the government is truly interested in ensuring that something like this does not happen again, they should look to other jurisdictions that have fair and effective policies in place for the sale of Crown and leased land. For example, maybe again we can learn something from the province of Saskatchewan. Not only can lease land stay in a family indefinitely; there are clear guidelines around the sale of this lease land. The sale is publicly advertised. The land is sold to the highest bidder, ensuring the taxpayer gets the best deal, when it is deemed in the public interest to do so.

Bill 202 does not establish a sensible process. All Bill 202 will do is add another layer of bureaucracy over leaseholders. All Bill 202 will do is create a whole new system of hoops, burdensome and unnecessary. Please don't forget that Alberta's ranches are businesses, and it's businesses that create jobs and economic prosperity in Alberta. Ranchers and farmers are the businesses that feed our province, our country, and, indeed, our continent.

Another concerning element of Bill 202 is that it appears to leave the door open to infringing upon grazing leaseholders under the pretense of protecting wildlife. If passed, it would grant broad and sweeping powers to cabinet to define criteria for wildlife habitat. Perhaps the government is not aware of this, but Albertans certainly know that the grazing lease land is extremely conducive to providing habitat for diverse wildlife.

Madam Speaker, as was the case with Bill 50, another piece of legislation this government passed despite the fact that Albertans strongly opposed it, Bill 202 gives cabinet autonomy over decision-making. It is very concerning that this government keeps legislating power to themselves so they can implement decisions with no public input, and Bill 202 seems to go the same way.

Madam Speaker, my constituents do not support this legislation. I do not support this legislation, and I sincerely hope that members of this Assembly will do the right thing and join me in voting against Bill 202.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is a privilege for me to rise today in this Assembly to speak to Bill 202, Public Lands (Grasslands Preservation) Amendment Act, 2012, being brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill. I would like to acknowledge the hon. member for his tireless efforts on this bill and his passionate commitment to grassland preservation.

Madam Speaker, this bill seeks to further protect native wildlife habitat present on public land held by the province. Specifically, it would only apply to public land south of highway 16 and would not be applicable to public land that is currently or has previously been under cultivation. While the focus would be more broadly on all native wildlife habitat, of particular concern is the native prairie grassland, which is key to the ongoing health of species like the burrowing owl and swift fox. Its objective would be to ensure that any parcel of public land that goes up for sale is subject to an assessment to determine the environmental and wildlife value of the parcel. In cases where public land was found to have substantial environmental value, the land could be retained by the province, sold with restrictions on its use, or sold without any restrictions. A judgment would be made as to whether it was wholly necessary to retain that parcel of land or whether it would suffice, from an environmental perspective, to place restrictions on certain types of use.

Public land that has already sustained wildlife habitat fragmentation, is presently under cultivation, or is considered to be majorly degraded would still be sold off or transferred to municipal governments or private individuals. Examples of public land include Crown grazing lease lands, tax recovery lands, or public lands in the special areas. The province makes Crown grazing land available to ranchers at low rent, which is actually an example of appropriate and environmentally sound land management. The ranchers benefit from inexpensive land for their animals to graze on, and the land is protected by this natural and low-intensity usage.

This bill would also propose to balance the protection of the land while allowing economic development of public lands to the benefit of Alberta companies. Specific exemptions would be granted for mineral exploration and exploitation rights.

Madam Speaker, the goal of wildlife habitat protection, which this bill would address, is certainly very laudable and something to strive for. However, in light of this goal, we might want to consider what the department of sustainable resource development currently does in this vein. We would be able to consider how this bill would complement current land-management practices within the department. Furthermore, a discussion may be warranted as to the environmental assessment tools currently available to the department. At present there is a land-management process for Albertans who wish to use public land that is being retained by the Crown. The process requires that any potential users of public land must first submit a land disposition request application. An evaluation process is undertaken whereby it is determined if the proposed use is conducive to the current uses for the land.

Departmental staff use a variety of factors to determine the suitability of any particular usage. This leads to integrated resource management for each parcel of publicly owned land. Some of these factors include consideration for the landscape, soils, and vegetation. According to sustainable resource development, there has been a long and concerted effort over the years to gather these types of information. Applied research has been undertaken and resource inventories completed throughout the province. This means that the province has a reliable database of pertinent information from which to make decisions on the environmental suitability of commercial, industrial, and leisure activities. This database continues to grow each year and demonstrates the expertise and institutional knowledge of the department.

In terms of tools available to the department for making environmental assessments, one such tool currently employed is the grassland vegetation inventory, the GVI. According to sustainable resource development, the GVI is a comprehensive biophysical, anthropogenic, and land-use inventory that covers the southernmost portion of the province. Anthropogenic, for those members who may be wondering, refers to the human-generated impact on the environment. In 2006 the creation of this inventory began in the southeast corner of the province, moving in a northwest direction. It employed the use of digital colour photography to trace negative impacts on the landscape. The GVI came about as a way to improve upon and to replace the former native prairie vegetation inventory, the NPVI, which was completed back in 1993.

It ought to be underlined that the present GVI gives a more wide-ranging and complete portrait of environmental impact upon the land. The GVI was devised with the intent of meeting various business needs which are fundamental to land-use management and planning in Alberta. The previous NPVI was essentially limited to a vegetation inventory of native prairie grasses, which detailed the scope of different vegetation zones throughout the province. That inventory measured and evaluated the type, extent, and condition of the present vegetation as well as what changes had been occurring. However, the current GVI incorporates other elements like a biophysical and land-use inventory. In areas of nonnative vegetation data is available as to the associated uses of those tracts of land, be it agricultural, industrial, or residential.

Another tool available to the department, that is presently being exploited for its valuable information, is the Alberta Biodiversity Monitoring Institute, ABMI. As a point of fact, the ABMI is actually a not-for-profit entity separate from the Alberta government; however, it does receive funds from the Alberta government, with industry also contributing its share to the project. Its main goal is to present a factual, impartial, and up-to-date picture of the changes to biodiversity in this province. The institute is a supplier of crucial information to the various government agencies and departments in charge of land-use planning.

According to the institute biodiversity had not factored nearly enough into policy decisions in the past because funding an accurate method of evaluation used to be harder to accomplish. Currently, with the comprehensive evaluation being offered by the institute, the goal is to use this objective data more often in decision-making. The institute commenced its work in 2003.

The biodiversity and, therefore, the health of over 2,000 species is assessed by the changes in habitats and human land use through a cumulative effects approach. Cumulative effects monitoring attempts to uncover the link between environmental stressors and the many indicators that are monitored. The methodology employed is such that the province is divided into 1,656 evenly spaced monitoring areas. Each year approximately 330 sites are assessed. An assessment is comprised of site visits, aerial photography, and satellite imagery. This results in a comprehensive snapshot of the entire province every five years. The next time around when a site gets re-examined, it is done within a week's window to reduce any seasonal variability.

This institute is a great example of the exceptional land stewardship that Albertans exemplify, and I am proud that our government supports its crucial work. This is just one other great tool the department has in its disposition to monitor stressors on biodiversity in the province. In order to have a balanced discussion on the merits of the bill, I feel it is prudent to discuss what the department has been doing and continues to do to protect wildlife habitat. Without a doubt, the grassland vegetation inventory and the Alberta Biodiversity Monitoring Institute both play a crucial role in this regard.

I will not be supporting Bill 202; however, I would like to thank the hon. member yet again for his dedication to this valuable cause. It is my strong conviction that today's debate has been and will continue to be informative and stimulating, and I look forward to further discussion.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise today and speak in favour of Bill 202, the Public Lands (Grasslands Preservation) Amendment Act, 2012. I'd like to begin, of course, by thanking the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill for the work and effort that he has dedicated to having this bill drafted and before us today and for the work that has gone into generating the conversation that we are having today.

This bill is geared towards the preservation of wildlife habitat in Alberta. It is geared towards protecting our grasslands, one of the most altered natural zones in the province and the zone which, as we know and as has been mentioned, contains about 80 per cent of designated species at risk in the province.

It's a bill which is timely because in fact, Madam Speaker, we are running up against that inherent conflict between environmental preservation and the conflict that exists between different uses, whether we're talking about ranchers who use the land for grazing or whether we're talking about more intense industrial development or whether we're talking about urban development and urban sprawl. Regardless of what we're talking about, there will always be conflict in land use, and there'll be more and more conflict as Alberta grows over the course of the next many years.

So it is reasonable, then, that we engage in a conversation about how we start to balance these needs and how we start to talk about them and, to use that ever increasingly used buzzword in this Legislature, to have a conversation about how we're going to balance these needs. So that is what's being attempted in this bill.

The other key thing that's being attempted in this bill is a move towards genuine transparency and genuine public consultation. I find it interesting that we've had government member after government member after government member stand up conveniently supplied with extremely well-researched notes by people within the ministry. Obviously, the minister herself is not in support of this bill, so they've been able to get up and talk to us about how it's something that they don't agree with. Nonetheless, what we're really talking about is making this conversation public and transparent in a meaningful way. So it's difficult to understand how it is that we wouldn't support that.

Some members have talked about: "Well, we have special areas and special area boards. You know, that works well. They're able to do a turnaround in some cases of four days. The last thing we'd ever want would be for the oil and gas industry to wait the 90 days which is outlined in this bill." Now, it's been clarified that, of course, they won't be asked to wait the 90 days and that this bill would not apply to those folks.

I will say that I think the Castle special area is an indication of the fact that it's maybe not all working just absolutely perfectly. There are members of the public who would actually welcome an opportunity for more transparency and more opportunities for consultation in a genuine way.

It's already been noted that this bill would not impact lease arrangements or the work of those who are not actually buying the land in fee simple, including the oil and gas industry. But I think when we talk about landowner rights, it's important to remind people in this Legislature that what we're talking about here is land that we own as members of the public. We're not talking about private land that I own right now being limited in its use. We're talking about preserving the land that we all own right now in a way that allows us to pass it on to our children and our children's children just the way someone who owns private land would want to be able to do. So it's a little bit misleading to say that this is somehow an attack on landowners because it is not, unless you say that it's an attack on all of us collectively, which I would suggest is certainly not the intention here.

Now, the other thing that people have been suggesting is that: well, you know, there's lots going on already in the Ministry of Environment and SRD, so we've already got lots of opportunities to make sure there's proper assessment. The most recent speaker listed quite a long, long list of what the ministry is doing. But I think it's, first of all, as I've said, important to understand that most of that is not public, and the public is not invited into that process. That's really important because the public does care about the land that they own.

The other thing is that the minister has referred to cumulative effects management and regional planning and all that kind of stuff. Again, the difficulty that we have with that being something that members of the public and Albertans should rely on is that, really, that process is so much talk but very little action. The fact of the matter is that very little has been achieved under that legislation and that planning process to date. It's just a lot of talk.

This bill is actually crafted in a way that allows those of us who would rely on it as members of the public, as owners of the Crown land to take one of two options. You engage the 90-day process and you have the assessment that is proposed under this act or, alternatively, if there has actually been an assessment completed through, heaven forbid, the land-use framework or regional planning – I mean, I'm not holding my breath, Madam Speaker, for that to actually happen because I've heard that being talked about for the last four and a half years and I suspect we're probably going to hear about another four and a half years of discussion before anything of significance happens. But if it does happen, well, then that's fine. Then that allows the process under this act to be subordinate to other public consultation and regional planning and environmental assessment processes that would be in place, so it's not even actually a problem.

What it does do is that it makes sure that there is a public and transparent consideration in place. With all of the reading of prepared notes that we've just heard, where everyone's talked about all the interesting scientific things that the ministry of SRD does behind closed doors before it waves its magic wand and decides to sell public lands without thinking about the impact on the environment, on the wildlife that's supported, on the cumulative impact of the loss of that land, with all that talk, the fact of the matter is that we're still looking at something that's done behind closed doors and eliminates the role of the public.

It's important to understand that this is not an attack on ranchers. Their leasehold rights would not be impacted under this bill. It would simply be something that would allow for more engaged, thoughtful, transparent public consideration before we immediately go to that right of first refusal or whatever other opportunities are out there for our Crown land to be bought up without us having any say in the process.

I think the intention behind this bill is a good one. I think that it is unfortunate that members of the government, in particular, are so ironically opposed to engaging in a process that would allow for more accountability, more transparency, and more public engagement.

Dr. Swann: It's the lack of it that's pretty consistent.

Ms Notley: The Member for Calgary-Mountain View says it's not really ironic because it's so darn consistent with the overall approach taken by this government.

Nonetheless, it is unfortunate because I do think it was a thoughtful attempt to deal with an issue that we would be naive to suggest doesn't exist and that we would be naive to believe is being appropriately addressed in a way that respects the rights of all Albertans right now. I think that there was a lot of time and thought put into it, and I think it warrants further debate, further consideration, possible amendments.

I would hope that members of this Assembly would give respect to the amount of work, thought, consideration, deliberation, consultation that went into this bill and give it the respect of having it move on to Committee of the Whole, where we could then consider the type of amendments that might ameliorate some of the more obvious concerns or the more concrete concerns that some people have been able to raise. I think that overall there is a very good objective being sought here, and it would be unfortunate to not allow the opportunity for us to explore how to best put it in place.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. As it's almost 5 o'clock, I move that we call the question on this bill.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you very much, hon. Minister of Justice. This is a private member's bill. It gets 115 minutes of debate. If there are still speakers that are wishing to speak on it, we have to recognize those speakers, as I understand it.

Hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, you have about 30 seconds.

Mr. Strankman: No, ma'am.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on this bill?

I would ask the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill to close debate.

Dr. Brown: Well, Madam Speaker, I'm prepared to give a closing speech, but given the time I think I would move that it be called 5 o'clock.

5:00

Mr. Hancock: Madam Speaker, I beg your leave to ask for unanimous consent of the House to allow the hon. member his five minutes to close debate so this bill can be voted on, and then we would proceed with the motion at 5:05 or when the vote is done.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Long-term Care Accommodation Fees

502. Mr. Mason moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to maintain the current maximum limit on long-term care accommodation fees and that the same maximum limit continue to apply to accommodation funded by the affordable supportive living initiative.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. If I may now speak to it, I made this motion because I think that there is a serious issue in the province today with respect to the affordability of seniors' accommodation, and there is considerable confusion with respect to the government's intent regarding where fees to seniors go. It's clear that people who are on fixed incomes, people who are particularly in the later stages of their life very commonly have financial challenges, and I think that it's important that we provide seniors' accommodation in a way that is affordable for seniors and for their families.

When the Premier was running for the leadership of the PC Party, she promised to lift the cap on seniors' accommodation in Alberta. Madam Speaker, the promise to lift the cap was to allow for-profit operators to charge as much as they want and is clearly the result of lobbying by operators of private long-term care facilities, many of whom have made substantial political donations. The Premier claimed during the provincial election that she never said that she intended to raise the allowable limit or to lift the cap, but she was on the record in Hansard saying just that on October 24 of last year. "The government will remove the cap on seniors' housing costs." Within months of the election the PC government increased the allowable accommodation fees in long-term care facilities by 5 per cent. By January 2012 a senior could be charged as much as $1,545 a month for a semiprivate room. The Associate Minister of Seniors said that the change was meant to help operators cope with increasing labour and food costs.

But, Madam Speaker, for-profit care providers are not necessarily in it for the well-being of seniors. For months Albertans have witnessed the fallout of the government's insistence on encouraging for-profit delivery of seniors' care. We've seen labour disputes in a number of for-profit seniors' facilities in both Edmonton and Calgary. The owners of these facilities were paying their workers significantly below standard Alberta Health Services wages for LPNs and other health workers. Today workers at Monterey Place are still locked out by the employer as they struggle to attain fair, industry-standard wages for their work.

Madam Speaker, it's a source of much disappointment to Albertans that this government is heavily relying on the private sector to provide the needed beds while over 1,400 seniors are waiting for long-term care. Research has said over and over again that publicly funded and publicly delivered facilities provide better care for less money than that provided by the private sector. In order to protect Alberta seniors, the people who built this province, from a never-ending increase in allowable fees in long-term care facilities, this motion is intended to keep a firm cap on housing and accommodation costs for seniors. Alberta's New Democrats want to protect the 14,500 seniors currently in long-term care in Alberta from unreasonable increases in costs for where they live.

I want to deal a little bit with this question of long-term care because the government has never been transparent with respect to different types of seniors' accommodation. When we talk about long-term care, we are essentially talking about around-the-clock nursing care; that is to say, a nursing home or an auxiliary hospital. It is a particular level of care, and it is separate from other seniors' accommodation in that it is considered to be part of the health system as opposed to being provided by the Seniors ministry as, essentially, accommodation where there may be some assistance for people who live in it. It's considered a medical facility. It's considered, essentially, as a hospital.

Several years ago we found a document, an internal document, that included discussions between ministries in this government where a plan to reduce the percentage of seniors' care that was long-term care was revealed. Now, the government has never acknowledged this document. They have never admitted what the document clearly shows, that the government plans and intends to reduce the percentage of seniors' accommodation that is long-term care to about half what it is now. This is despite the fact that the government's own numbers show a dramatic increase over time, with changing demographics, with an aging population, in the number of seniors who will require long-term care. The trains are going on the same track in the opposite direction. At the same time that we need a large increase in the number of long-term care facilities, the government's plan is to reduce the number.

Secondly, Madam Speaker, what the government is proposing to do is to meet the demand for seniors' care not necessarily with long-term care but with what they call assisted living, which is a very confusing and all-encompassing title, or what they prefer to call aging in place, with a private-sector model. This is the connection that I see to lifting the cap on long-term care.

The association of seniors' care providers has told the government that if they are expected to invest in seniors' accommodation and, particularly, long-term care, they're going to have to see a much larger return on their investment. That's fair, and I'm not particularly critical of that. It simply speaks to the economics. The question is: if we're going to have a private-sector investment model, who is going to provide the funds that make it a good investment to build, to construct, to staff, and to operate seniors' care? That's where I think the lifting of the cap comes in.

It allows more money to be drawn from the senior or from the senior's family in order to fund this particular model of seniors' care.

Now, we don't think that it's a good model, but we particularly don't think that seniors can afford to fund the massive costs that these private-sector operators want to have covered in order to invest their money in long-term care. In our view, the serious need for seniors' accommodation and, particularly, long-term care can best be met by a program of expansion of those facilities, publicly funded and publicly delivered. We believe that that will ensure the highest level of care for the residents of those facilities and the lowest outlay of public funds in order to finance these facilities.

We bring this motion because we want to clearly state for the record – and we would like to have the Assembly concur in this – that we cannot continue to charge seniors what they can't afford for care that doesn't meet their needs. That is the situation, unfortunately, in our province today, Madam Speaker. I have toured many facilities. I have received calls from family members to visit aging parents, and I can tell you that the level of care in some of these facilities is not adequate.

As the Auditor General reported six or seven years ago in his report, seniors are left unattended, there are extremely long waits for things like baths or meals, and seniors are sometimes gotten out of bed as early as 3 or 4 in the morning because of the short-staffed situation in order to go for their breakfast, to be fed their breakfast. Those conditions were documented by the Auditor General. In all accounts, the government has not kept its promises to fully implement the Auditor General's recommendations, and in fact the conditions for seniors have worsened in the interim.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Associate Minister of Seniors.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Madam Speaker. First of all, I want to make it very clear that while appreciating the member's intent on this motion, I do not support it and really don't agree with a lot of the comments that were just made.

But I want to focus my attention, Madam Speaker, on the motion. The government's rationale for increasing the maximum accommodation charges for long-term care settings in the province is simply this: you have to keep up to the costs. These are room and board charges. These aren't health care charges. Health care is covered by the province. It is today and always will be.

To talk about lifting the cap: this is nothing that has occurred today, and this is not what this member is talking about. This member wants to freeze the charge that we have today. I would imagine that at his home his utility bill, his food bill, his repairs on his home have increased. It's ridiculous to think that because someone lives in a seniors' facility, maintenance doesn't occur, that the cost increase of preparing food doesn't occur. That's not real life. In real life all of us know that costs go up. Let's not start talking about these places where seniors live as a facility. These are people's homes. They're people's homes, so why shouldn't costs occur in their home just like they would occur in your home? They go up. They do in my house, I'll tell you that.

Madam Speaker, long-term care residents are responsible for paying charges that accurately reflect the actual costs of their accommodations and services. The charges cover expenses like meals, housekeeping services, utilities, staff wages, and routine building maintenance. Just like in our homes, those costs occur. To shingle your house or to fix your hot water tank or to buy a loaf of bread: it never goes down; costs always go up. The reality is that these operating costs are increasing, and we need to keep pace, just like we're doing with the announcement of this last increase, 5 per cent over the last two years. That's 2 and a half per cent a year. I think it's very reasonable.

Madam Speaker, our government is not moving down the path where this member would say that we're having an increase to reflect our wishes, that it's only private operators. I take exception to that. We have some nonprofit operators. We have foundations. We have private operators. We have a wide range of different operators that offer different services in our community for our seniors. They're great partners. But in order to be a partner, you have to actually realize that they have some costs and that those costs go up.

The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and I had the opportunity to turn the shovel on some ground for Bethany Care in Didsbury, a private, nonprofit organization that's serving our communities very, very well. The same member and I had the opportunity to open a facility in Crossfield, a great opportunity to work with the foundation. Do their costs go up? Of course they go up. If they didn't, I'd be concerned.

This September our government announced a 5 per cent increase to the maximum accommodation rates effective January 2013, and we will continue to. Costs will go up. Madam Speaker, it may be a better idea, rather than every two or three or four years addressing this, that the Assembly has a discussion about annual increases. That may be a fairer way to go. But right now the maximum monthly charge is $1,700 for a single suite. In 2013 it'll be $1,785 for the room, accommodation, and all those things that I talked about.

We have approximately 8,300 low-income residents in long-term care facilities across the province. As you know – and I assure you that our government will continue to assist these individuals – when the maximum accommodation charges in long-term care settings rise this January, so will their subsidy. I think that's very, very fair. Alberta's seniors' benefit recipients will maintain their minimum disposable income at at least $265 a month. We're not talking about that, Madam Speaker. Our government is maintaining a balance between increased costs that the operators have while trying to keep those costs manageable for residents. I think we both agree on that, that we have to make sure that this is within reason.

We're also sticking to our commitment to review operational and accommodation costs to avoid large, one-time increases. Like I stated, this next increase, 5 per cent, hasn't been adjusted for two years. Two and a half per cent a year: I think all of us can defend that. For our parents and our grandparents and our aunts and uncles and our friends that need to go into facilities, we want to make sure that the place is maintained properly and that they get good quality food and that people aren't cutting and scrimping, because if we freeze these rates, I'm worried about that as well. I'd like to stress that even after the adjustment Alberta's maximum accommodation charge will continue to be amongst the lowest in the country.

I want to read to the members here the accommodation rates as of January 1, 2013. In Alberta it will be $1,785. In British Columbia – the left-wing group seems to manage well over there – their rate is $3,023; in Manitoba, $2,312; in New Brunswick, $3,072; in Newfoundland and Labrador, $2,800; in Nova Scotia, $3,011; in Ontario, $2,275; in P.E.I., $2,360; in Quebec, $1,712; in Saskatchewan, $1,931. I think what we're doing here in Alberta is quite fair.

The low-income residents receiving increases to their benefits will continue to have amongst the highest minimum disposable income amounts in Canada. Member across the way, I'll read you the list, the minimum disposable income per month: Alberta, $265; British Columbia, $325; Manitoba, $288; New Brunswick, $108; Newfoundland and Labrador, $150; Nova Scotia, $248; Ontario, $132; P.E.I., $103; Quebec, $197; Saskatchewan, $212. Have a look at our program. It's pretty fair.

Alberta Health Services and individual operators have also had special processes in place for helping residents who are in exceptional or hardship situations. We can deal with one-offs, and we do some one-offs because there are some situations that aren't the textbook case.

Madam Speaker, this maximum accommodation charge increase has carefully been considered by our government. We've looked at a number of sources to determine whether an adjustment was warranted and what size the increase should be. Two and a half per cent a year for the last two years: pretty reasonable. Freeze it? Probably not very reasonable. We're confident that this 5 per cent maximum accommodation charge for long-term care settings is needed. It will ensure that these residents continue to receive quality accommodation and services in long-term care facilities across our province.

Madam Speaker, I ask everybody to say no to this member's motion. It's not fair for seniors, and it's not reasonable.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to speak as the Seniors critic for the Official Opposition and to provide my own personal thoughts on a motion put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I thank the hon. member for putting this motion forward. The intent of the motion is to freeze accommodation fees for those living in long-term care nursing homes as well as those living in facilities funded by the affordable supportive living initiative.

I think this is a timely issue for this House to debate. Our population is aging very fast, Madam Speaker. As of 2011 there were over 400,000 seniors in Alberta. It's expected that within 20 years our seniors population will more than double to 925,000 seniors. One only needs to read the government's report Aging Population Policy Framework to see this is an enormous challenge to our society. It will test our ability to care for seniors and their families while fulfilling the needs of others. Our obligation as the Official Opposition is to ensure quality care for all seniors, and that will remain my utmost priority.

We have over 140 lodges in Alberta, and they have served us well. They have become a home, a part of the community, and a base of trust for many of our seniors. In Alberta we are all very well aware that our hospitals hold hundreds of seniors in acute-care beds, awaiting long-term care nursing beds, and Acute-care Alley has become home to many of our Albertan seniors. This is not acceptable, and this is not how the population that built this province should be treated.

What often gets lost in the debate about seniors is how resilient and strong they really are. Many seniors live in a home that they own. They are often able to take care of themselves or, as in my case with my own father, have someone to stop in and help with odds and ends. Additionally, a number of seniors live in rental accommodations. Some of this is assisted living, but a lot of that care is, again, the odds and ends of housekeeping and meals. Seniors' lodges, as we have said, play a strong role in ensuring that our seniors are able to age in their own communities with limited assistance.

The last segment of the population, the most vulnerable, is those seniors that live in long-term care nursing facilities. These are the people that I am most concerned about. Seniors in long-term care nursing homes need constant supervision from a registered nurse, 24-hour nursing care. It's a form of health care in itself. They need managed care for their prescriptions and chronic conditions. Madam Speaker, when someone is placed into a long-term care nursing facility, they continue on until they are into palliative care as they pass on to the next life. This has become their home. This is where they are the most comfortable. This is why our obligation to the seniors living in long-term care nursing facilities is so great. They have given much to us. They have built this province. They have given, and now it is their time to receive. It is their time to receive the medical care that they so greatly deserve at an affordable cost.

The accommodation fees that seniors pay are not inconsequential. In my own experience, Madam Speaker, my brother Ron's private room was approximately $1,800 per month. This did not include additional charges or costs. This was solely the accommodation fees. The vast majority of seniors no longer work. They have a combination of their savings and pension to make ends meet. The lucky ones have very supportive families.

However, let's take a broader look at what this motion really means. This motion is talking about seniors, but what about those who require long-term care nursing beds who are not seniors? What about those who come into the system who are under the age of 65 with terminal conditions that require 24-hour nursing care? It's something we haven't had a discussion about. These people need to be reviewed as well. What about those Albertans who have ALS, MS, Parkinson's, or Huntington's disease?

As many of you are aware, my brother Ron was diagnosed with Huntington's disease in 2008. He was 32. This required us to make an application for a long-term care nursing bed as he required 24-hour nursing care. Being 32 and with his diagnosis, guess what? Ron didn't fit the matrix for a long-term care nursing bed. Ron was a handful. He jerked. He moaned. He had inappropriate action. He required daily bathing, which he did not get. He required 11,000 calories per day just to live. He ran a triathlon every half an hour because that's how often his body moved. This additional cost? We bore it as his family. He required feeding. He couldn't feed on his own, refused a feeding tube, so a nurse had to feed him daily. Usually it was my mom. My mom would come in every single day, and she'd feed him at night, and she was glad to do it. He required full administration of his medications.

But what is most important and what is missing in this whole debate is that Ron at 32 required full-time nursing care. He had no money. He had no assets, and like many seniors across this province, a long-term care nursing bed was his only option. Those benefits that are provided to those over the age of 65 are not universal, so let's not all sit in here and pretend that this is only about seniors. It's about anyone requiring long-term care nursing beds. It's not just about those 65 years and older.

The government recently increased the accommodation fees. Initially, it doesn't sound like that much. It's really only a cup of coffee a day, but over a year this can add up to almost a thousand dollars. Now, if you're somebody who has no money, a thousand dollars is a thousand dollars. It doesn't matter if it's $1 or $10 a day. It's a thousand dollars a year. If you don't have an extra $2.50, it's a burden.

There's no question that costs occur and rise over time. However, the question I have to this House when you're considering this motion is this. In an environment where this government allows extravagant expenses from Alberta Health Services executives to be covered, why would you raise fees on our most vulnerable? In an environment where this government felt it was acceptable since 2009 to feed seniors in 74 long-term care nursing facilities boil-in-a-bag meals devoid of all flavour, taste, and texture, why would this government raise fees on our most vulnerable seniors? In an environment where there is substantial corporate welfare such as carbon capture and storage, why would this government once again raise the fees of our most vulnerable seniors?

For those who follow politics, the decision seems so easy. There's an attitude of: I'm right; you're wrong. But this issue of accommodation fees is complicated. Facilities need to be maintained. Nobody is questioning that. Services provided by staff need to be provided. The business of providing care needs to be attractive enough for people to want to provide that service. I think we're all concerned about the care of our seniors population. I worked for a former health region. I've seen first-hand the great care by staff and management.

Madam Speaker, it seems to me that we should be ensuring that seniors have certainty and can afford their care. We need to ensure that as elected officials we provide that certainty to them. I fear an open season on seniors' wallets if we continue to take from the very people we should be protecting.

I've had a family member in long-term care. It was a struggle for our family to make sure they received the care they needed on a very limited budget. I support the motion put forward here today. I think that at this time we need to reflect on the increase that was made in September and ensure that seniors will not continue to be surprised with raised fees. Taking more money out of limited budgets hurts seniors, who have contributed all their lives. The rate cap was just increased two months ago. By freezing it now, after the increase, it would provide a level of certainty to those seniors with fixed and limited incomes.

I also personally believe that when these types of decisions are made, they should be made in consultation with Albertans, stakeholders, and those who are involved directly in caring for those in long-term care nursing facilities. We cannot let vulnerable seniors worry about incomes in their most fragile state. We need to stand up, we need to protect seniors, and I intend to do just that by supporting this motion.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to join the debate on Motion 502, which urges government to maintain the current maximum limits on long-term care fees. As we all know, public health care is a very contentious and important issue. It is a cornerstone of our society and helps our citizens sustain a good quality of life at a time when they need it. An accessible health care system goes a long way in ensuring that our citizens can receive the medical they need as severe health complications arise.

5:30

Long-term care presents one very important aspect of our care system. It assists people who are terminally ill, ensuring that they receive proper medical attention when needed. Madam Speaker, providing accessible long-term care and financial support such as AISH and Alberta seniors' benefits payments to our citizens is a very important aspect that the program would provide. With such financial support seniors in long-term care can maintain a monthly disposable income of at least $265 while AISH recipients receive an income of $315. Madam Speaker, this income is very important and allows individuals to cover the cost of personal goods, recreational activities, and other chores that one encounters in daily life. As such, this income is extremely important and helps provide financial assistance to our most vulnerable citizens.

[Mr. Goudreau in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's proposal to maintain the maximum limits on long-term care fees goes against a very important economic principle; that is, inflation. Just like any other goods and services in our economy, the cost of providing long-term care increases over time. As is the case, operators must be able to address rising costs associated with providing accommodation. Such services are important as they help maintain the quality of life for residents in long-term care. They include the cost of providing room and board, meals, housekeeping services, and other important operations. Therefore, in order to keep these services sustainable and to maintain sufficient levels of service, it is necessary to review and critically assess the fee structure on a regular basis. This will allow care providers to provide the high-quality accommodations and services which are necessary in assisting those who are very ill.

Might I also add that assessing the fee structure on a regular basis will help prevent large one-time cost increases, which could adversely affect many citizens financially. Mr. Speaker, the reality is that operating costs will continue to increase over time and facilities will need to adjust the fees to keep pace with market conditions. Unfortunately, Motion 502 fails to recognize this fact. By supporting it, we could damage the monetary stability of facility living over the long run.

Moving forward, be assured that we are committed to accessible long-term care for all and maintaining our tradition of providing some of the lowest rates in Canada. This is something we are truly proud of and will continue to work towards.

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

Madam Speaker, I would like to point out that even with the slight increase in fees, which equates to $2.80 per day effective January 1, Albertans will still have some of the lowest long-term care fees in the country. Further to this, residents receiving additional income support from the Alberta seniors' benefit program and AISH will see an increase to their income level as of December 2012 because those payments are indexed to inflation.

Together this shows our commitment to maintaining a world-class health care system while continuing to assist the most vulnerable citizens. The approach we're demonstrating here is a balanced approach. On one hand, we give consideration to sustainable long-term investment and quality of services, but on the other hand, we do address the need for affordable services so that the most vulnerable citizens continue to receive financial support.

Madam Speaker, we look forward to serving the health care needs of those who have helped make Alberta what it is today as those people more than anyone else deserve the care that allows them to age peacefully and receive services which enhance their quality of life. As a whole, however, we believe that long-term care facilities and our health care system can be better served by not supporting Motion 502.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'll speak briefly to Motion 502 in support. I think it's important to distinguish the fact that we have an ethic in Canada that demands, requires, adjures us to support medical care for people throughout their lifespan. That is the unique feature of Canadian culture that we have embraced and that we have honoured throughout our lives and experienced as citizens of Alberta and citizens of Canada.

What we're talking about here is not all services for seniors and not all accommodations for seniors. In fact, we have a two-tiered system. Let's acknowledge it. We have differential payers for private accommodations, various levels of care in certain accommodations, but what we are talking about today is people who require public services for their long-term medical care. They're in a long-term care setting, which still is a stalwart part of our health care system. It covers their accommodation and their medical costs. I don't understand why the government cannot embrace that dimension of our health care responsibility at the same time as saying that with a two-tiered system, which has evolved, we're going to have people that decide to pay more and go into private accommodation to have extra services, to have an extra quality of rooms, to have extra medical services, to buy extra supports for their quality of life if they choose to.

What we're talking about today, though, is something that should be unrelated to the cost of living and inflation as our hospitals and medical care is protected from individuals' costs because we believe that people in medical need require their costs to be covered. That is an ethic that has pervaded Alberta and Canada for 45 years. So it's surprising that in the case of long-term care – and this is a very focused motion on long-term care. There is no question in my mind that we need to honour our commitment to seniors and others who need long-term care: 24/7 nursing care, medications, food, and aids to their lifestyle. Those people need to be guaranteed that they will not be bankrupt, that they and their families will not be severely stressed to the point where we might consider much more serious problems with their mental health, with their family well-being.

To me this is quite a clear issue that needs to be distinguished by the House. We're talking about medical services throughout the lifespan, and we should be protecting people from the costs of those and ensuring in the case of this motion that that is exactly what it is trying to guarantee, that there would be no impact of increased costs of salaries and wages and drugs and accommodations passed on to individuals who need 24/7 medical care.

That's a very simple summary, I think, Madam Speaker, of how I feel about the issue. I think many Albertans share this notion that they and their family members deserve to have protected medical care throughout their lifespan.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today to speak to Motion 502, brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Motion 502 urges the government of Alberta to maintain the current maximum limit on long-term care accommodation fees. In addition, it would see the same maximum limit continue to apply to accommodations funded by the affordable supportive living initiative.

Madam Speaker, ensuring that our most vulnerable citizens are provided the support they need at a reasonable and affordable price is important, and I would like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood for proposing this motion. While I understand that Albertans across the province have varying financial situations that may make it difficult to afford long-term care, it is important to note that when compared to other jurisdictions in Canada, the maximum costs for long-term care in Alberta are well below other provinces. In fact, Alberta's maximum charges for long-term care accommodation remain among the lowest in the country. What's more is that here in Alberta our government continues to assist eligible low-income residents who require long-term care so that they are not faced with choosing between their health and/or financial commitments.

For example, in April of this year the government of Alberta increased the maximum monthly financial benefit for assured income for the severely handicapped clients by $400 a month, to $1,588 a month. Another initiative that assists eligible Albertans with long-term care needs is the Alberta seniors' benefit program. The program provides support in addition to the federal benefit received under old age security, the guaranteed income supplement, and the GST credit. Madam Speaker, the Alberta seniors' benefit program is based on income and provides qualified seniors with financial support depending on what their income is and the type of residence and care that they require. In general a single senior with an income level of $25,100 or less and senior couples with a combined annual income of $40,800 or less are eligible for financial assistance. About 8,300 of the approximately 14,500 Albertans in long-term care settings receive financial assistance through the Alberta seniors' benefit and AISH programs.

The income support provided by the government of Alberta through these programs allows low-income residents to not only afford their accommodation charges but also to retain the monthly disposable income that was spoken of earlier. Benefits for seniors living in long-term care and designated supportive living facilities are calculated to ensure that there's at least $265 of disposable income every month after paying their accommodation charges. Now, I sat on the Westlock Foundation board and saw this in action for a couple of years.

Madam Speaker, although maximum accommodation charges that operators can apply in long-term facilities will increase by 5 per cent, or a maximum daily increase of $2.80, effective January 1, 2013, it is important to know that accommodation charges have not increased in nearly two years. Increases in accommodation charges will help ensure that residents continue to receive quality accommodation and related services by helping long-term care operators meet the rising accommodation costs.

In addition to the two programs I previously mentioned, the Alberta government also contributes capital funding to supportive living facilities through grants and through the affordable supportive living initiative, ASLI. This year the Alberta government is helping to develop 695 new affordable supportive living spaces by providing $67 million through a series of grant applications in eight areas in the province. Madam Speaker, these areas have been identified by Alberta Health Services as having the greatest need for additional access to affordable supportive living accommodation and services. ASLI funding was available to municipalities, not-for-profit organizations, Métis settlements, housing management bodies, local housing authorities, community groups, and private-sector organizations.

As you can see, Madam Speaker, this government is carefully monitoring the costs of long-term care operators while balancing the financial assistance provided to our most vulnerable citizens who rely on long-term care. Although I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood seeks to make accommodation costs for long-term care residents more predictable and affordable, there must be a balance between the rising costs of care and the amount of financial support offered by the provincial government. I believe that this government has listened to those who are living in long-term care and their families and also to the facility operators. Through increased accommodation charges for operators and increased financial assistance for those in long-term care, Alberta's facilities will continue to provide world-class long-term care for low-income residents. They will not be left without greater financial assistance from this government.

Madam Speaker, I believe this motion does not take into account the costs of providing long-term care in Alberta. It also does not take into account the greater financial assistance that has been provided to our most vulnerable citizens who require long-term care. Now, I've been involved in local municipal politics for long enough to have seen what can happen when these caps are put into place and to have seen the painful consequences of it a few years later when they have to play catch-up. Because of this, I will not be supporting this motion.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise to support this extremely, extremely important motion, one that is critical to the lives of many of our seniors in Alberta and those of us who will ultimately be seniors ourselves. This is probably the single most important issue in terms of the overarching administration of health care in this province. It has a tremendously profound impact on whether our health care will be publicly funded or privately funded. It will have a tremendously significant impact on whether or not poverty in this province grows or whether we're actually able to maintain and perhaps even build our quality of life.

The reason that this motion is coming forward, of course, is because of the very disturbing and concerning statements that have been made by members of this government, not the least of whom is the Premier. To go back some time, when the Premier ran for the leadership of her party, she received not insignificant donations from private long-term care providers. Coincidentally, after she became leader of her party and the Premier of the province, suddenly we started hearing about conversations – that buzzword again – that were going to be held around how to go forward with our long-term care and our continuing care in this province. Indeed, there was clear admission on the part of the previous Associate Minister of Seniors that we were going to have a conversation about whether or not we should take the cap off the long-term care costs and also the costs in other continuing care facilities.

This is not a question, just to be clear, about whether or not we allow the costs for accommodation and long-term care and other supportive living to go up in line with inflation. What this issue is about is whether we're going to take the cap off altogether and let those private developers go crazy with the amount of fees that they would like to charge in those centres in this province that provide continuing care services, continuing care for people who, quite honestly, many of their doctors would say, should be in long-term care. But continuing care places that are categorized differently, that are run by the private sector: those places are already charging $3,000, $4,000, $5,000 a month to these seniors. They are gouging them. They have long lists about how it costs them an extra $250 a month to get their medications organized for them, whether they can get a second bath in a month. Things like this are all being charged, things like this which, of course, all go to the heart of their health and which are a form of health care.

Just to be clear, this is not about whether we allow a 3 per cent increase or a 4 per cent increase. This is about whether we allow the outrageous gouging of seniors that is going on in many privately run continuing care centres in this province today. This motion is about stopping that from expanding and spreading, and this motion is about protecting the livelihood and the lives of not only our seniors but the families who will be asked to care for them should their long-term care accommodation fees suddenly balloon to 100 per cent or 200 per cent or 300 per cent of what they currently are because that's what the private sector will start doing if the cap comes off. So I think it's really important to not let this be confused with something else.

The reason we worry about that is because that is the kind of thing the government has been sending up a few trial balloons about. The government, when they've sent up their trial balloons about this issue, talk about it in terms of choice: well, we need to give our seniors the choice to spend $5,000 a month on their new continuing care. But choice is, in fact, code for making sure that the vast majority of Albertans get less while a very small group get the chance to buy more, and if they're really lucky, they can buy more of something that's subsidized with our taxpayer dollars, which is what we're talking about when we talk about ensuring that the ASLI-funded continuing care centres are not now or ever allowed to have their accommodation costs go above the cap that is currently in place, allowing, of course, for inflation, as anyone would reasonably do.

So up to this point we probably put roughly, ballpark, half a billion taxpayers' dollars into the ASLI program, and as has previously been mentioned, municipalities, nonprofits, and private corporations and private developers have taken that half a billion dollars to build a whole range of continuing care spots. Interestingly, the government can't tell us what kind of continuing care spots have been built with that half a billion dollars. They can't tell us whether it's a level 1, level 2, level 3, or level 4. They're not saying that they won't tell us; they're telling us that they don't know. I'm a bit perplexed. I can't decide whether they're truly incompetent or whether it's just a new strategy for keeping things behind closed doors.

In any event, half a billion dollars has gone out the door, and the minister cannot tell us what kind of care was leveraged with that funding. Because that money that went out the door came from our taxpayers' dollars, what this motion does is say that under no circumstances should those facilities that were funded by our taxpayers' dollars ever be allowed to take the cap off so that they can then start doing these $3,000-a-month, $4,000-a-month, $5,000-a-month continuing care beds, as the government periodically likes to call them.

I'm sure many in this House will recall when we were able to talk to many about some advertising materials that a few health care insurance companies had been distributing all over the country. Great-West Life I think was one. In those insurance brochures they talked about how in Alberta care for seniors is not so good, and care for seniors in the community is not so good. The fact of the matter is that in Alberta many continuing care facilities charge extra for meals brought to your room, and many continuing care facilities charge extra for medication administration, and many charge extra for baths, and many charge extra for the kinds of things that any good public health nurse or doctor would tell you are absolutely critical to your health. Nonetheless, all those things attract extra charges. So these insurance companies are gleefully selling insurance policies to seniors and about-to-be seniors saying: "You know, you can't count on the government to ensure that you are clean and well fed and healthy if you are unable to care for yourself in the future. So you darn well better buy some insurance because that's the direction that things are going in Alberta."

What this motion is geared to do is to stop that process. What we need to do in the longer term is reverse that process because the state of seniors' care in this province is an embarrassment, and it's also damaging to Alberta seniors. At the very least we need to make sure that the process does not get any worse. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has therefore brought forward this motion in an effort to crystallize the deterioration that this government is engineering, stop it in its tracks and freeze it so that we have a chance to then go back and provide our seniors with the care and the respect that their many years' contribution to our province and our future deserve.

That is the objective of this motion. I think that it would really be quite astounding for people to vote against it and to invite the kind of gouging that we have seen in many, many private-sector continuing care centres to be increased and expanded and to have the number of seniors who are victim to it increased to any extent.

With those remarks, Madam Speaker, I urge all members of this Legislature to support this motion. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to close the debate on this motion. I appreciate very much the contribution of all members who rose to speak, and I particularly appreciate the support of my colleagues from the Wildrose and Liberal oppositions.

I want to address a couple things that were said or suggested by the Associate Minister of Seniors in his comments. In those comments the associate minister characterized this as just finding a way to deal with normal inflationary costs that take place in any home or any housing situation, and I will certainly acknowledge that there are, in fact, those costs that do occur.

Let's deal, first of all, with the notion that lifting the cap will only allow small inflationary costs for the costs of delivering the housing component in long-term care. I think the other piece that we need to deal with is, in fact, the notion put forward by my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona that lifting the cap will allow private operators to charge whatever the market will bear. So there are two possible scenarios, the one sketched by the associate minister.

The real issue is not that these costs don't occur but who should pay them and who can pay them, who can afford to pay them.

That's the question. You see, this is something that's a little different than in the rest of our health care system. Everything is provided to you in our health care system at no cost because you've paid taxes in order to support the health care system. This is a case where there's a housing component because it's long-term care, so you are actually living there on a long-term basis. It is a cost that you must pay in order to access the care. In order to get the health care you need, you have to pay the accommodation, and if you can't afford the accommodation, you don't get the health care.

That's what makes this different. It's not just a rental issue. It's not just a housing question. It's being able to afford to pay those costs in order that you can get the health care you need. That's why it's important, that's why it's different, and that's why this motion should be passed if we accept the associate minister's proposition that this is just about inflationary costs.

The other thing is what was raised by Edmonton-Strathcona, and that is that the contemplation of lifting the cap entirely means that it becomes a fully market-based system in which the costs are borne according to what the market will bear. Some seniors can afford the much higher fees, and some seniors can't. That creates a real problem in terms of care. We're not just talking about inflationary costs there. We're talking about dramatic increases in the potential costs because it will be up to the private operator to decide what they charge our seniors for the accommodation part. Yet the province will still be providing at taxpayers' expense the health care component that goes with that, so we'll then be supporting with public dollars and health care services the private, for-profit operation of the provider. That is a situation that is much more difficult and dire than the associate minister would have us believe.

Regardless of whether it is small inflationary costs or a full what-the-market-will-bear kind of situation, the fact of the matter is that this is a question not of how much it costs to deliver the housing component but who can afford it and what they can afford. That's the question that I don't think the minister really appreciates, Madam Speaker.

That's why we need to pass this motion, so that we can ensure that everyone has access to long-term care in our society regardless of their ability to pay, which is the same fundamental principle of the health care system, the medicare system that was established, of course, first by Tommy Douglas and then adopted universally across the country. That is as valid today as it was at the time that it was developed by Tommy Douglas and the CCF government in Saskatchewan and adopted from coast to coast to coast in this country. It's something worth fighting for, and I want to assure all hon. members that the NDP will fight for it.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta*7:30 p.m.*Monday, November 5, 2012

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading*Bill 10
Employment Pension Plans Act*The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to rise and move second reading of Bill 10, the new Employment Pension Plans Act.

Pension standards legislation has been in force in Alberta since 1967. The original Pension Benefits Act was completely rewritten in 1987 to become the Employment Pension Plans Act. This is the first major update since that time, and as you can imagine, things have changed quite a bit over the last 25 years.

The new Employment Pension Plans Act sets the standards for private-sector pension plans with members in Alberta. It deals with matters of funding, investment, how information is disclosed to members, and member entitlement to benefits. The changes to the act are based primarily on recommendations made by the Joint Expert Panel on Pension Standards, or JEPPS. JEPPS was appointed by the Alberta and British Columbia governments in 2007 to review pension legislation.

The panel's job was to make recommendations to help modernize the act and to provide more flexibility as employers and plan members look for alternative ways to manage pension plans. The panel consulted extensively with stakeholders, and once the panel's recommendations were received, the two governments asked for comment from the public. A stakeholder group was even included in the drafting process.

The changes introduced in this act reflect the results of that consultation and also take into account the impact of events and changes in the pension industry that have occurred since the panel released its report in 2008. The result is legislation that is flexible in the ways needed to meet future needs of plan sponsors and plan members while continuing to ensure promises made can be kept. It is highly harmonized with the British Columbia legislation, which greatly assists administrators of plans with members in both provinces both in terms of administrative process and consistent treatment of plan members. Pension plan administrators across the country have long complained about too many differences in pension legislation between provinces, and Alberta has provided leadership nationally on this issue.

While many changes were made, I want to draw your attention to a few key ones. First, the panel's main recommendation was that pension standards legislation become much more flexible. This allows employers and unions who sponsor pension plans to create pension solutions that meet their needs and those of plan members. This means the legislation is based more on principles than on rules. It also gives the superintendent of pensions greater discretion, particularly when it comes to new pension plan designs and extending time limits for dealing with funding shortfalls. Both of these recommendations have been incorporated throughout the act while still keeping in place the rules needed to protect members' interests and provide transparency.

In addition, the act gives the superintendent greater enforcement powers such as the ability to charge penalties for noncompliance. This is a key enforcement tool which was recommended by the panel.

To balance the greater authority given to the superintendent, the act permits the creation of an Alberta tribunal. This tribunal will enable plan sponsors and plan members to appeal decisions made by the superintendent. The act also adds provisions clarifying the roles and responsibilities of the various parties involved in managing a pension plan and to improve plan governance.

Further, the act sets out standards for two new types of plans, target benefit plans and jointly sponsored plans. These plans may become more popular in the future as employers and employees look for ways to provide pensions at affordable costs without disproportionately burdening anyone with risks.

Currently, as most of you will be aware, there are two types of plans, defined benefit and defined contribution. In a defined benefit plan the employer bears all of the funding risk while benefits are more or less guaranteed. In a defined contribution plan risk shifts entirely to members as the benefit is not guaranteed but is completely dependent on investment performance. It also puts retirees at risk of outliving their retirement savings.

The target benefit and the jointly sponsored plans offer a middle ground in which risk becomes shared between the employer and members. In a target benefit plan risk is shared mostly by adjusting the promised benefit. In a jointly sponsored plan the risk is shared through the contribution arrangement. A target benefit plan is similar to a traditional defined benefit plan in that it aims to provide a specific pension amount when a member retires. Unlike the defined benefit plan, however, the benefit may be reduced if funding difficulties arise.

This lowers employer funding risk, which has become one of the main challenges facing defined benefit pension plans at all levels and not just here in Alberta. However, members should still be able to have reasonable confidence that the target benefit they've been promised can be delivered. To deal with this, specific funding rules related to these plans will be established through regulation to provide a higher level of assurance that members will receive their expected benefits.

In a jointly sponsored plan members share in the total cost of the plan with the employer as opposed to contributing only towards their own benefit. While easing employer costs to some extent, this type of plan will require greater member participation in the decision-making and governance of the plan since they share in the funding risks.

Vital to the administration of these new plans as well as the more traditional plan types is the concept of disclosure to members. The panel stressed the importance of all parties, including members, understanding the terms and risks of the type of plan that they are in, what their personal responsibilities are and being fully informed of the health of their plan. This act has made provisions related to disclosure to ensure this happens. The act provisions are broad, giving authority to create rules around disclosure and specific requirements which recognize that the needs of different plan types will be in the regulation.

Another change in the new act deals with vesting, which is the entitlement of a member to the benefits promised under the pension plan. The timing for qualifying for vesting has been changed from two years of plan membership to immediate. This was not a recommendation of the panel, but 5 of 10 Canadian jurisdictions have already adopted this standard in their legislation, and others are expected to follow.

This change recognizes that pension benefits are a part of an employee's compensation rather than a gratuitous reward for long service. Tied to this is a change to the locking-in requirement, which restricts the members' access to pension funds to ensure that the funds are used to provide retirement income. Locking in will no longer be based on years of service but will be based on a minimum dollar amount that is increased annually. This will eliminate the locking in of amounts that are too small to provide a meaningful pension and means that locking-in rules will keep pace with inflation.

Moving along, one of the concerns that sponsors of traditional defined benefit plans have is with what we refer to as trapped capital. In a defined benefit plan the employer is responsible for funding any deficiencies that arise related to adverse events such as investment losses. When a deficiency arises, it must be paid back over a set period such as five years in the case of a solvency deficiency. If in subsequent years the plan is in a surplus position thanks to more favourable economic conditions and the additional funding that may have been required, the employer may be legally constrained from removing any excess amounts from the plan fund due to the legacy wording in the plan text document. The result is that most employers are reluctant to contribute more than the very minimum amount required by the act, and the perverse result is that members' benefits are not as secure as they might otherwise be.

To address this problem, the panel recommended the creation of a solvency reserve account whose terms are governed by the act. Employers could make their solvency deficiency payments to this account knowing that if plan funding improved, they would have the ability to withdraw some of the excess. The funds in the account would be available to protect benefits if necessary, but the employer would be able to access the funds if they are not needed to pay for benefits. Creation of this type of account is at the discretion of the employer. However, before a withdrawal can be made, consent from the superintendent is required. In addition, a contingency reserve must be left in the account. With this change, employers may well be more willing to fund benefits at greater levels, and employees' benefits will continue to be protected as well as or better than under previous rules.

Overall, Madam Speaker, the new Employment Pension Plans Act goes a long way towards making Alberta's pension legislation stronger and more in tune with the way that pension plans need to work in our changing times. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to get up and on behalf of the Wildrose caucus speak in support of Bill 10, the Employment Pension Plans Act. This is a very timely, timely piece of legislation, and I will say that this is an example of government being proactive on a problem that we're seeing around the world right now. I would hope that the government will show the same proactiveness when it comes to other parts of our financial picture going forward.

This in part addresses a problem that we're seeing around the world right now. Around the world. It's definitely in Canada and the United States but in particular in Europe and in other places around the world where we have a very antiquated pension system. We have these things called defined benefit pensions that are literally bankrupting our economies in a lot of ways, certainly bankrupting companies so badly that they go out of business or they need to be bailed out by the government. That in turn leads to other problems like debt and inflation, and in some extreme cases, as we've seen in Greece and perhaps very quickly Spain, it leads to just massive economic problems that spin out of control financially.

We sometimes think that it's just the public-sector pensions that have gotten out of control with defined benefit pensions that we can't afford to pay, and indeed they have. There's no doubt about that. It's a huge problem. It's a problem that afflicts us here in Alberta. It's a problem that afflicts virtually every government in the industrialized world. But it's not just a problem in the public sector. In the private sector it is also a very large problem.

Of course, we saw that in the United States and in Canada, for example, with the auto bailouts. One of the major reasons for the need for government to bail out those automobile companies and spend billions and billions and billions of taxpayer dollars on bailing out those companies is because those automobile companies had instituted what I would call irresponsible pension plans, defined benefit pension plans, that were just simply not feasible, were simply not affordable for these companies.

What happened in their negotiations was that when times are good and there's money rolling in, well, all kinds of great promises are made with regard to these pensions because there's a desperate need to keep workers and attract workers, so they promise these lavish benefit plans for that when times are good. The problem is that when times are not so good and when the money isn't coming in, then all of a sudden these lavish pension plans can't be paid out. It's almost like a pyramid scheme, where over time you've got more and more workers that are living longer and longer and longer after they retire, and they keep drawing on this huge defined guaranteed pension, and then you've got this huge pool of retirees and pensioners that is much larger than the pool of workers paying into the plan to sustain those plans. Not enough has been put aside. Then there are market fluctuations, all kinds of different issues.

The point is that defined benefit plans are very much open to becoming very rich and, frankly, unaffordable. They have cost the taxpayers of this country, our friends to the south, and then folks in Europe literally hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of billions – not millions; hundreds of billions – of dollars to bail out these companies.

We haven't tackled the public pension issue very well yet. Some provinces have started to look at different things. New Brunswick, for example, has looked at some different, alternative methods and so forth, but we haven't as a country and certainly as a province tackled the public pension issue. However, I hope that this legislation will make it easier for us to tackle part of the private pension issue. The way that the government has done this is by proposing to increase the diversity of choices for private companies with regards to what types of pensions they can offer their employees.

A couple of the specific plans that this one mentions. One that we've become kind of familiar with if you've listened in on the Members' Services Committee deliberations is targeted pension plans. Targeted pension plans are essentially kind of a much more affordable version of a defined benefit plan. It's not perfect. There's still risk involved, and that's why the Wildrose wasn't in favour of a targeted benefit pension plan with regards to MLAs. We feel that it does still leave taxpayers in a bind, if things don't go well, to bail the pension out. However, it does reduce the risk, and if you're talking about private companies, then yes, I would say that it's definite that we should give the private companies an opportunity, a choice if you will, to use these targeted benefit plans. Then there are also jointly sponsored pension plans, which are a different type of plan. Essentially, the employer and the employee share in the cost of the entire plan itself.

There are all types of different plans in there and all types of different percentages and formulas that are used for these pension plans, but the point of this bill is to give private companies more choices with regard to the pensions that they offer. We think that's a good thing. I think that's a good thing. I think that giving companies the greatest possible latitude with regard to offering responsible benefits packages and pension packages for their employees is important.

Hopefully, these companies will take this opportunity as they're moving forward to offer more reasonable pension plans, and hopefully our government – and I'm not just talking about our provincial government but our federal government – will signal to companies that in future we will not bail out pension plans that go bankrupt. We just will not do that. Right now it's almost like the government of Canada and other governments around the world are insurance companies for these lavish defined benefit plans that you see at some of these larger companies, and it's just not right. It's not right that taxpayers should be bailing out pension plans that are just simply unaffordable and bailing out these companies. It's very irresponsible for these companies to put the government and to put their employees in a position where they would need to be bailed out.

It's very tragic. I mean, how many of us have gotten calls in this House from folks that used to work for private companies that went bankrupt and can't afford to pay their pension benefits? It's tragic because a lot of folks put their eggs in the one basket, and then all of a sudden it's not there. What do you do? It's awful. That's why we've got to do everything we can to create the choices and promote the choices that private companies can use to move to a more responsible place with regard to their pension plans.

The second aspect of this bill that I agree with and that I'm happy to see is that the government did its consultation work on this. They are implementing the recommendations made by the Joint Expert Panel on Pension Standards. This is important. We have to make sure that in this Legislature we get more in a habit of doing proper consultation with stakeholders and with folks that know a lot more about this stuff than we politicians and taking the recommendations and giving them a high amount of weight.

I guess I would say that the positives of this bill in my view, to sum up, are that it updates a private pension system model that is now quite outdated and does not recognize new plans created to respond to market forces, meaning that currently we don't recognize those plans, and under this act we will. That's a positive. It gives a regulator tools to evaluate and approve newer pensions aimed at sharing liability risk. As I mentioned, that is an important piece of this legislation that's key to having our pensions in this province, at least in the private sector, become more responsible. It follows the recommendations of the JEPSS panel, which I just mentioned. It includes new vesting and lock-in rules that will give more choice to contributing members. It does add an appeal process between a direct appeal to the superintendent and the courts, thus hopefully reducing the burden on the courts that we've seen in recent days although this is, obviously, not the same as criminal court. Anything we can do to reduce the burden on the court system is a good thing.

I would just say in closing that I would encourage the government to not just look at Bill 10, not just at pension plans as they are applied to private companies, but let's start looking at this on the public side. We need to have a discussion about public-sector pensions. [interjections] There you go. Maybe we have agreement on both sides of the House.

We're not talking about not giving a fair pension plan to our public-sector workers. They are absolutely entitled to a fair pension plan; there's no doubt about that. They work hard for our government. They work hard for our province. We value their contribution. They're good people, and they work hard. When they retire, they need to have a pension there so that they can enjoy their retirement and not just enjoy their retirement but pay for the bills that they have to pay. No one is arguing that.

However, we cannot put ourselves in a situation – when you look at our liability sheet in this province, it has gone up over 50 per cent in the last five years. Fifty per cent more liabilities. The vast majority of those liabilities have been from, obviously, the teachers, the unfunded portion of the teachers' pension, and other such liabilities. We have to be careful as a province. We need to make sure that as we move forward, part of our economic path going forward is one of sustainability. We're not going to pass these massive liabilities onto our kids that we can't afford.

If we've promised something to certain pensioners now or to people just getting ready for retirement, we can't really take that away because they don't have time to adjust to it, so we have to understand that reality. We can't take away or reduce the pension or benefits of teachers who are just about to retire or are five, 10 years from retiring. That wouldn't be fair to them. We've got to start looking at phasing in changes so that the growing generation, the folks my age, in their 30s and early 40s and so forth, can transition out into a more stable and more affordable pension system.

If we don't do that, Madam Speaker, if we continue to ignore this problem and just kick it down the road, if we maintain this course, we will come to a point – and I hope that's still long in the future – where we, like Greece, like Spain, like Portugal, like some of these other European countries, like many of the states in the United States like California, like all of these places, will be put into a position where those pension benefits won't be there for those public sector workers at all. They'll just disappear because the countries themselves will go bankrupt and won't be able to pay those pensions out. Who's going to be there to bail those countries out? Who's going to bail those nations out? There's no one there. It's not like companies, who have the government to bail them out when they're irresponsible, which is not good policy, a terrible precedent to set. But when countries go bankrupt, there's no one there for them.

Madam Speaker, I hope that the Premier and the Finance Minister will take a long look at that on the public-sector side. Wouldn't it be a nice gift to give our children at the end of this Legislature in four years when we say: "You know what? We've set up our pensions, our public-sector pensions here, so that they will be sustainable, that we will be able to pay for them"? That would be a great thing to do.

With that, Madam Speaker, we support this bill and what it's trying to achieve. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today to speak on behalf of Bill 10. I'd like to just outline, first of all, a little bit of history as far as where defined benefit pension plans come from and the value that they serve. I mean, first and foremost, these were pensions that were negotiated by workers with their employers. So, you know, I think it's a little bit of a misnomer to think that the workers were trying to pull the wool over the eyes of their employers. This was one of their agreements in exchange for many, many years of service to a company.

Defined benefit plans were very good for the workers, and in exchange for it companies got many, many years of service. The workers didn't have to rely on the market and hope that in those last few years before they started drawing out their pensions, as defined contribution plans allow for, the market would not turn south. Now, suddenly, their pension plan that they were contributing to their whole lives and planning their retirement on shrivels up, which is the case and has happened. With defined benefit plans as well, the worker could expect a similar standard of living in their retirement years from year to year and have, you know, the ability to put their conscience at ease, knowing that they've contributed to this plan and that it was there waiting for them in their retirement.

In regard to Bill 10 this is the first major rewrite of private-sector pension laws in over 25 years. You know, it's taken some time, but it's good to see that we're taking the first step here. There are a couple of aspects of this plan, Bill 10, that I'd like to go through.

First of all, the fact that bill gives the superintendent of pensions more authority to accept different types of pension plans. There are new rules now for targeted benefit plans, but importantly a person has the right to appeal a decision if they disagree with the superintendent. As well, there's a tribunal process that, again, will convene on a case-by-case basis as opposed to a blanket decision that affects all workers and all folks.

Some statistics here to talk about the need for pension reform. There are 11 million Canadian workers who don't have a workplace pension plan, which is quite unacceptable in our great country, according to the JEPPS report, the Joint Expert Panel on Pension Standards, whose recommendations did go into this bill, so I'm happy to see that. According to Stats Canada 32 per cent of our labour force was covered by a registered plan in 2010, so more coverage is definitely, definitely needed, and if this bill allows for that in its flexibility, in the availability of choice, then that's a positive thing.

Specifically in Alberta as of 2011 there were over 236,000 workers that had registered pension plans. When we look at that in the scope of 2.2 million workers in Alberta, we're far from meeting our targets. There's much work that needs to be done.

You know, this bill is similar to B.C.'s pension legislation, that was passed earlier this year. Again, the intent was to make it easier to set up pension plans. The hope is that workers will eventually be covered by pension plans if there are more viable options for employers. One of the recommendations of the JEPPS report that did not make it into this bill is the idea of an umbrella plan for Albertans and British Columbians. This multi-employer plan could have been available to employers, employees, and the self-employed in both Alberta and B.C. and likely would have opened the door for more workers to have access to a pension plan.

Before endorsing this bill wholeheartedly, I think it's important to acknowledge a few things. In the interest of perspective there are different voices that had much to say about this issue and have arisen over the years since the publication of the JEPPS report in February of 2008. The Alberta Federation of Labour, for example, in 2009 argued that Alberta desperately needed a mandatory pension program to make sure retirees could sustain healthy lives after they finished their working life contributing to the Alberta economy for so many years. At the time, the AFL argued that supplementary plans like the ones contemplated in this bill did not get to the heart of the issue. What they meant by that: the AFL was challenging the assumptions of the JEPPS report that supplementary pension plans were the only way to address the problem of low pension coverage. Where the authors in this JEPPS report state quite simply that they don't support mandatory employer-sponsored pension plans, there are other opinions that differ greatly.

Some would argue that if we want to get serious about the impending challenges to our pension system, we need more fundamental reforms. In other words, you know, giving more options and more flexibility to employers may not be enough to entice them to offer pensions to employees. If that's the heart of the matter, then I would argue that this bill takes us a third of the way there but isn't going to quite get us there if, again, some employers decide: "You know what? Even with these options there might be more possibilities, but we're still going to refrain from it."

As for the changes in the bill today, you know, it remains to be seen whether the changes will encourage employers to invest in pension plans for employees in Alberta. Again, it's my contention that workers that contribute to our economy, contribute to the betterment of Alberta, that spend a great number of years working here should have and should know that there is a pension waiting for them, that they aren't going to have to retire and then go back into the workforce in order to pay the bills. Considering that they've already been contributing to this great province of ours, there should be different options. So I can say that I'm happy to see that there are different options, from the target benefit plans to jointly sponsored plans to negotiated-cost plans, that will be offered to employees.

The other thing I'd like to just comment on is the fact that there are reserve accounts so that defined pension plans will have to have solvency reserve accounts, which I'm sure my colleagues in the Wildrose would appreciate greatly as well.

On the whole, you know, I'm optimistic that this bill will do some good. It's long overdue for working people in Alberta. We'll continue to hold this government to account and ensure that more Albertans can get pension plans and don't have to worry about their days once they retire and how they're going to afford to pay the bills and keep the heat and electricity on.

Thank you for the opportunity to stand and speak to Bill 10.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) we have five minutes for comments or questions from the floor. Are there any comments or questions for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview?

Seeing none, I will recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a privilege to be able to speak to Bill 10 and give my comments in that regard. This bill comes at a point in time when in many different countries, many provinces the average worker is actively contemplating what retirement will look like.

It seems that over the course of the last 30 years or so we've seen an increase in the diminishing of what workers can actually expect when they retire, what our society expects people to live on and the like. I know that almost every member of this Assembly has had or will have a call from a senior who can't pay his or her or their family's daily bills. That is a call that comes into my office in Calgary-Buffalo quite regularly, quite tragically. Simply put, there seems to be a hesitancy of many levels of government to deal with this problem of not only today but one that is going to impact Alberta and Canada in the near future with the aging population and the like. At the end of the day I think we as a society have to get a handle on the fact that with an aging society we are going to have to have some sort of pension available for people to live in some sort of dignity.

It's easy for us, I guess, to all preach personal responsibility and the like, but oftentimes if we look at the RRSP contributions of the average person out there throughout society, estimates are that over 50 per cent of our population does not contribute to RRSPs. Simply put, it appears that the middle class is increasingly being squeezed. There's less disposable income. People are having more difficulties paying the bills. I think we saw reference to that in the report by the Parkland Institute the other day.

Actually, I did some research on this in the summer which clearly shows you that we often think people in this day and age have more disposable income than they did in 1970. But experts look at how the middle class actually spends their money and where the hard costs of being in the middle class are – the hard costs of housing, the hard costs of cars and going to work, the hard costs of raising children – and that actually takes more of the average family's paycheque than it did in 1970. So the increasing shrinking of the middle class gives me great concern.

Having pension or pension reform talk actually leads me to believe we are getting a sense that at the end of the day pension reform – I don't necessarily like the term "pension reform." The viability of pensions for the average Joe or Jane Alberta is important to us as a society, important to us as legislators because, simply put, that day is coming.

A little earlier some comments were made and the like that a lot of times, primarily with both public-sector unions and private-sector unions, these pension plans have been freely negotiated on behalf of the worker and the employer. I guess we were bringing up the auto industry in Detroit. Those contracts were agreed to by both free business as well as employees. Contracts that were engaged in by our public-sector unions were, at least in this province for the last 42 years, negotiated with this government and those employees. They were negotiated in good faith, with a view to their working conditions at the time and their agreement to take a contract with this government. One would expect those contracts to be honoured. Otherwise, what was the point of the negotiation?

Although some people suggest that defined pensions are the downfall of the modern world, I would beg to differ, Madam Speaker. There are many challenges out there, and often defined contribution plans – my father has one as a long-serving member of the ATA teaching in classrooms in this province. He always points out the fact that from the years 1989 to 1994 he gave 19 per cent of his salary to his pension plan. That's 19 per cent of his salary that was negotiated, that came off his paycheque, that went into a defined benefit plan. So don't tell me that teachers and nurses have not paid into their pension plans. If the government is having a shortfall now, it's the government who didn't properly put away money or ask citizens to contribute. Okay? Because those benefits were already paid for.

Nevertheless, turning to the main issue of the bill, which is pension reform, it clearly gives some options to private companies out there who, hopefully, are interested in giving their workers some form of pension and the ability to possibly make that happen. For that, I think this is a bill that does some measure of bringing that hope or that eventuality of what people hope or dream their retirement will be, some sort of retirement in basic dignity and the like that will allow them to not worry whether the lights and heat are coming on. In that regard, it's very hopeful that more private businesses will endeavour to create that working condition and allow for people to see a future not only with that organization but a future where they can keep the lights and heat on.

The bill is based on a JEPPS report that has recommended these reforms. In the main it has many supporters of this bill and people who believe that this will allow for more people to hopefully be covered by private-sector plans. In my view, that is a good thing.

We also note that, you know, many workers have been left holding the bag when it comes to private-sector pension plans because they were underfunded not necessarily by the individual worker but by the company itself. We can look through a long list of companies where workers were sold a bill of goods as to what the contributions of that employer would be. I had the list in front of me, and I can't seem to find it at this time. Maybe if it comes up, I can read those into the record. I believe we had some questions on this back in 2009 when it came down to it that some companies had underfunded their pension plans, and their workers were left out. In fact, I had a constituent who worked for Nortel. She was one of the people who was left holding the bag, with her pension contributions wrapped up in a bankruptcy procedure and given to creditors when she was of the view that they were going to contribute to her pension. Okay?

It seems like there's going to be a pension regulator in place to look at these issues, to encourage the funding of them both from the worker's perspective as well as the employer's perspective, to see that they're sustainable, to see that people are making their contributions, to make sure that things are in line. In my view, it goes some way to trying to see more people covered, which is a good thing.

I'll end where I started. This whole idea of pensions and the ability for seniors when they're done their working life to live in some sort of dignity is an issue that is not going to go away for this Legislature or, in fact, for Legislatures across the country. It is something that increasingly we're going to have to deal with, and we should start planning for it now because there are two things that we know about seniors. Seniors are more costly. They are. They're generally more prone to the health care system. They are not working, so they're contributing less to the tax base and are receiving a pension or CPP or something of the like, so they are considered a cost or a different kind of investment on government books.

We should start preparing for that day because we also know here – we just came through an election – that seniors vote. So no matter how much we say it's personal responsibility, that people have done it to themselves, that people have not saved for their retirement so we're going to let them starve on the street, that's not going to happen. Okay? It shouldn't happen not only in a fair and decent society, but it's not going to happen as a matter of fact. They vote. They vote en masse. They vote in larger droves than younger generations do, and I have a feeling that will continue. As legislators we're going to have to address that issue not only from a point of getting elected but a practical point of giving people some decency and the like, which is probably more to the point. Politics and reality sometimes collide, Madam Speaker, and I would suggest that in this case, this is definitely one of those points.

I'll leave it at that. Let's hope that this legislation encourages more private companies to look out for their workforce and to allow for a decent standard of living when the time comes.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We now have Standing Order 29(2)(a) if anybody would like to comment or ask questions.

Seeing none, I'll ask if there are any other members that would like to speak on Bill 10, Employment Pension Plans Act.

Seeing no other members who wish to speak, I would ask the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity to close debate.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: I close debate. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a second time]

Bill 2

Responsible Energy Development Act

[Adjourned debate October 31: Mr. Anderson]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to speak again on Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act. I am disappointed with what the government has delivered in this piece of legislation.

The Acting Speaker: Excuse me, hon. member. We have a complication at this moment. It has just been brought to my attention that you have already spoken on this bill in second reading. You can only speak once in second reading, so save it for the next. Thank you.

I would now ask the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View to proceed.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I did not get to speak on this the first time through, and I'll do everybody a favour and not repeat everything that I know was said on Bill 2 the first time through. [interjection] You're welcome. I'll close with a short story at the end, and I promise it will be short.

Through my reading of Bill 2, though, it appears to me that the intent is to support economic growth by cutting bureaucratic red tape, and that is certainly a noble intent. I know it's one that we all support in here. Alberta gets a bit of a bad rap, I think, with energy development because there is so much red tape in the regulatory system, so I do applaud the government for working with industry to try and change that fact. Bill 2, I think, is a step forward, although, as you know from previous debate, there are some reservations.

We've heard from a lot of members on this. A lot of my colleagues, I think, have done a great job outlining the concerns that their constituents have with it, many of the same concerns that my constituents have brought forward to me. As I say, in the spirit of efficiency I won't go back over all of them, but I will make a few points.

Madam Speaker, it's common sense, I think, that no organization — any organization — should have investigative powers over itself. I suppose there are exceptions to the rule, and somebody can always come up with one, but in general it seems to be a problem in terms of optics with the public. You can think of any example you want. Think about police forces, for instance, which I have the utmost respect for. Anytime a body investigates itself, it opens itself up to questions. So we worry about those things.

The proposed new regulator is to gather together different government entities under one roof. Now, it's my understanding that those entities that are being gathered already have a process in place for decisions to be reviewed by an independent body if concerns are raised. Wouldn't it make sense for that process to remain in place under the new regulator or even to be enhanced?

Some of the things I've heard from my constituents. Again, I know we all reach out to stakeholders to ask people what they think. Before we get up and speak, we should always do that. I'm told by some that it's not procedurally fair, that a third independent party needs to be considered. I think we all recognize that we live in one of the greatest countries in the world, probably the greatest province in the world. Certainly, economically we're the driver of this country. So why in a province like this, in a country like ours, is the government proposing that a regulator of a major industry investigate itself?

I just want to share with you a short story from my riding of Chestermere-Rocky View, if you can all imagine sort of putting yourself in the shoes of these people as I share it with you. It comes from a couple of my constituents. They live in Bearspaw, one of the most beautiful areas in this province, just northwest of Calgary. Their names are Phil and Lee. Well, one day Lee, who has lived in his home for about 20 years, notices 17,000 square feet of concrete being poured about 400 metres from his residence. Obviously, he opposes this. He does some investigating and complains to the NRCB.

Now, a lot happens after that, but in short a feedlot is grandfathered back to 2002 despite the fact that it's poured in 2006. Lee spends an awful lot of money and an awful lot of time seeking justice, seeking the truth. The residents started a judicial review about the NRCB's procedural fairness. In early 2009, more than six court hearings and nearly four years and a lot of money from Phil and from Lee later, Justice Hall of the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench vacated the NRCB decision and called for a proper and thorough new investigation by — guess who? — the NRCB. Therein is the problem. What Phil and what Lee have said to me is that, in their view, it is the fox in charge of the henhouse. I know that is an overused phrase in here.

I think we're on the right path to try and make the right decisions, but I raise this concern tonight for the residents in my riding because I've heard it from several people. That's the point I wanted to make.

Thank you for your time, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Ms Kubinec: Madam Speaker, I'd like to thank you for the opportunity to rise today and speak about the Responsible Energy Development Act. I believe that Bill 2 is long overdue and has been a long time coming. Our province has a lot to be proud of. We have been called the economic engine of this great country. Continuing to develop our resources in an environmentally friendly and responsible manner is paramount. Now, I speak for many of my hon. colleagues when I say that our constituents want to see our province benefit from the resources that we are blessed with.

In speaking with the people across Alberta, specifically my constituents in Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, that development cannot come at the expense of the environment. Albertans across the province, me being one of them, take their responsibility as landowners very seriously. We have generations of families, my own family's forefathers, who have handed their land down to their children and their grandchildren. I need assurance from this government that they are developing policies and legislation that will stand my family in good stead and have my interests at heart. Landowners like myself can be confident that we are developing an effective and efficient regulatory system that balances development and keeps our fields safe from harm. I believe that Bill 2 helps us do that.

When we make decisions about how to manage our resources, we have the same thoughts as many of the landowners do. How will this impact Albertans now and in the future? It is our responsibility to ensure that future generations have the same opportunities to enjoy all that Alberta has to offer. To do this, we need to develop our resources in an environmentally responsible and sustainable way. Our commitment is to balance the need for economic development with the imperative to safeguard our water, air, land, and biodiversity.

Madam Speaker, I believe that this Responsible Energy Development Act provides the right approach to regulating our resources that protects the environment without compromising Alberta's economic future. Bill 2 is an example of what we can create when we engage Albertans in a discussion about future development and regulation. I know that the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon spent two years meeting with and listening to people across this great province, and I think that the task force that she chaired got it right. People want to be heard. This province needs a single regulator that has a comprehensive perspective on development. It needs the ability to look and to assess a project from application all the way through to reclamation. I'll speak a little bit about that later.

Through Bill 2 the regulator will have the authority to administer the Public Lands Act, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, and the Water Act as far as energy resource development is concerned. I am pleased to know that apart from the changes to the application process these acts are not being changed and will apply to the energy resource activities in the same way that they apply to other natural resource activities. Madam Speaker, this new approach to the regulation of energy resource activities is more cohesive and unified than the approach currently. We will no longer divide responsibilities for energy resource development among a number of regulators. That approach is too fragmented.

I'm also pleased that in moving to a more comprehensive regulator system, the regulator will not operate in isolation. This new regulator will be collaborative and modern. It will have the tools at its disposal to make informed decisions and to act decisively to ensure compliance with the terms of approval and the requirements of our public lands and environment legislation. It will have the tools it needs to uphold the strict environmental standards the province and its citizens expect.

I am reassured that the Responsible Energy Development Act increases the amount of the current fines under the energy statutes. In fact, these will be assigned more stringent environmental fines than exist today. Madam Speaker, in many of the existing energy statutes, like the Oil and Gas Conservation Act, for example, fines range from a minimum of $300 to a maximum of $1,000. I know that I'm not alone in thinking that's simply not enough. In reading this bill, I am pleased to learn that fines like that will be increased to a range of $50,000 to $500,000. In short, the regulator will have the authority to levy heavy fines on those who fail to comply with the laws of the land. This sends a strong message that our environment is extremely important to this province and that we are holding energy companies up to a high standard.

I have heard questions about whether having a single regulator responsible for both energy development and the environment presents a conflict of interest. After reviewing the Enhancing Assurance reports and reviewing the bill, I am confident in saying:

no, it is not a conflict of interest. The new regulator will be able to assess the merits of the entire application with an eye to proper environmental protection and the social benefits to our province. I know that the new regulator is part of the bigger integrated resource management system. We are committed to integrating how we manage our resources. We're going to do this in a way that is healthy for the economy, the environment, and society. Bill 2 is consistent with our commitment to have a world-class monitoring system and our commitment to land-use planning.

Madam Speaker, I'd like to change tracks for a moment. One of the things I looked for in this legislation is whether or not we are maintaining landowners' ability to participate in the regulatory system. I was pleased to see that this legislation includes a requirement to provide notice about all energy resource project applications and developments across our province. Currently that is not the case. This is a huge improvement.

I was also pleased to see that the new regulatory system will give Albertans a number of ways to have their voices heard. In fact, my hon. colleague from Calgary-West wants to make public engagement opportunities broader than just about energy resource activities. The government of Alberta has established a policy management office, which will develop an engagement plan to see how Albertans can have their say. Albertans, landowners, and industry will have the ability to have input into matters like land-use plans or policy decisions before decisions are made. Madam Speaker, I believe this is exactly what Albertans are looking for.

I want to tell you a little bit of a story that happened to my family. We had a pipeline go across a quarter section, and they left a mess. In today's world, with this new act, we will register that pipeline agreement ahead of time, and then we will have recourse to go back to that company and say: you clean up that mess.

Madam Speaker, I'm confident that this new regulatory system is a good one. I believe it's the right direction to go, and I am happy to support the bill. We are doing what we said we would do, and we're delivering on what Albertans have said they want.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

We have 29(2)(a) if there are any members that would like to ask a question or comment. The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. For my colleague from Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, I guess that on the pipeline damages and stuff I, too, have had pipelines that went through. Usually it's back to a good rapport with the company you're working with. In our area it's quite sandy soil, so sometimes the pipeline can be good for about five years, and then if you get lots of rain and stuff, the actual water goes along the pipeline, erodes it a bit, and then it sloughs down. As soon as you threaten that you're going to take it one step above them, I've always had good luck with getting it dealt with. I was just wondering. You spoke in your speech of a quarter section where you had a pipeline. Did you ever get it resolved? There are ways to get it resolved right now through legislation.

Ms Kubinec: Madam Speaker, no, we did not get it resolved. They left a mess, and my husband was left to clean it up. With the new process we would have that registered with the regulatory body. They would be able to go and do the work of making sure it got cleaned up.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members?

Seeing none, I would recognize the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you. Let me start by saying that the Wildrose Official Opposition really wants to support the Responsible Energy Development Act. We welcome the underlying intentions of this legislation. We do think that a one-stop shop for approving resource development is a good idea. We are supportive of streamlining and finding efficiencies, and we think that all the stakeholders in development can be brought together to reach decisions that are advantageous for all Albertans.

The Wildrose has worked hard to understand the needs and concerns of our energy and resource industries, and we have heard loud and clear their complaints about slow, cumbersome, and often contradictory regulatory hurdles. It was because of these conversations with industry that we were hopeful to see the introduction of the Responsible Energy Development Act. I could go on at some length about how cumbersome the regulatory process has become in Alberta, but I won't. I'll be brief.

The Global Petroleum Survey, done by the Fraser Institute of Alberta, describes Alberta as having a "constantly shifting regulatory and approval framework," a "high degree of government bureaucracy," and "inefficient oil well site inspection procedures." Obviously, there is much opportunity for improving the regulatory framework for responsible energy development in Alberta, and that, again, is why the Wildrose was very hopeful about this bill. We were hoping that Bill 2 would take practical steps to address all of these different delays and red tape in the current process. Unfortunately, this is not what is in the bill.

The Responsible Energy Development Act, like our leader stated earlier, is kind of like a Franken-bill. It brings together a bunch of different pieces of legislation with a bunch of different elements, tries to squash them together, and it hopes that by naming it under a single regulatory agency, somehow it's going to solve all these many different problems. Unfortunately, it doesn't.

Bill 2 seems to have the government walking down exactly the same path that it went down with Bill 36, Bill 19, and Bill 50. Each of those bills had to come back to the Legislature for significant amendments. Each of those bills failed to recognize the rights of important stakeholders. The Wildrose is hoping to break this government's pattern of forcing through flawed legislation and then having to bring it back to amend it two or three years later, when there is the inevitable public outcry and when it becomes too loud for the government to ignore.

This is why we'll be moving 12 significant amendments to the Responsible Energy Development Act. We hope the government will slow down this legislation and work with us and with stakeholders to fully understand some of the problems in this bill and seek partisan or multipartisan solutions to ensure that this legislation preserves the balance of respecting and streamlining the regulatory environment for energy companies as well as respecting the landowners and the environment.

We are proposing many amendments, and I'll be brief about this because it will come up later. We are proposing amendments to the mandate of the regulatory board, to the composition of the regulatory board, to return public interest provisions into the duty of care of the regulator, to the roster of the hearing commissioners, to protect personal privacy information transmitted to cabinet, to the requirement of a legislative ratification of interjurisdictional agreements, to the provision of notice of hearings for those affected by the decision, reinstating provisions regarding decisions and hearings, creating appeals to the Environmental Appeals Board and the Public Lands Appeal Board where appropriate, removing cabinet's ability to write and rewrite binding rules for the regulatory board, and many others. As you can see, we have some significant concerns with key elements of this bill, but we think it's fixable.

At this point I'd like to put forward a motion that Bill 2, Responsible Energy Development Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, we'll pause while the amendment is being distributed throughout the House.

Hon. members, this is a debatable motion, so are there any members who would like to speak on this? This is a referral amendment, and we will call it RA1.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We think that if the Legislature sends this bill back to committee and works on it in good faith, this bill can be fixed. We think that a bit of investment and give-and-take now will have this government avoid the kind of landowner activism that we've been faced with over the past two and a half years.

I recall that when we first started this legislative session at the beginning of this year, the Government House Leader talked very well about having these all-party legislative committees really delve into bills. We see this done federally, where you actually have contentious pieces of legislation that are put to a committee so that you can hash out these differences, particularly if they're not substantive differences. Sometimes there are just minor corners that need to be rounded out. I think this is a perfect opportunity for the idea that the Government House Leader had earlier this year, to actually have committees do this type of work.

I know that our caucus, generally, wants to support the intention of Bill 2, and we think that these amendments will go a very long way towards salvaging this bill. We can talk about that if this motion does go to committee.

We sincerely hope that the Premier and the Energy minister will be open-minded about slowing this bill down. We hope that they'll seriously consider amendments, that they'll reach out to stakeholders and do the proper and thorough consultation, and that they will ultimately get the Responsible Energy Development Act right. Albertans deserve no less. It's my humble opinion that referring this to committee would do just that.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak in favour of the motion to defer this bill to committee, the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship. I think this goes back to a commitment that the Premier made during the leadership race. She talked about doing legislation differently. I think that she was probably just as frustrated as we are on the opposition benches when we see a 150-page bill come down and go through multiple stages of reading over the course of a matter of days without having the opportunity to fully debate it as a caucus, without having the opportunity to return to your constituency and debate it with your stakeholders, without having the opportunity to actually hash out legitimate amendments being brought forward by opposition members. I think that the entire reason why the Premier created the new committee structure was so that she could keep her commitment to do politics differently.

What we're hoping with this bill – I think that we've demonstrated good faith. There have been a number of bills that have come forward that, as you can see, we're quite prepared to support. I don't think that we're that far apart on a whole range of issues. On this bill, in particular, I think that we can find a solution by making some amendments so that the government is able to put forward confidently a bill where they can go out, whether they're in an urban environment, whether they're in a rural environment, whether they're talking to an energy company or a landowner or environmentalist, and say: we've got a good piece of legislation here with a good process that has got buy-in from all parties, that has got buy-in from all of the stakeholder groups.

I have to say that I'm a bit confused about why the government wouldn't respond to that olive branch, wouldn't respond to that offer, and wouldn't respond to that challenge of their own leader, quite frankly, to actually do politics differently and to do legislation differently. We have seen time and again, unfortunately, that when complex bills like this are rammed through without enough consultation, without enough discussion, without enough due consideration of amendments, mistakes get made. Then we end up with a political battle that rages out there among a variety of different organizations and factions that should be working together for the development and the betterment of our province and that end up working against each other, and it creates more division rather than more unity.

We know that our energy companies will not benefit if we end up with landowners who are hostile because they feel that their interests are not going to be well taken care of under this legislation. We are talking about amending the bill in a couple of key ways so that landowners and environmentalists can feel like they are part of this process, too. Otherwise, we're going to make things more difficult for our energy companies because every time they have to go into a negotiation with a landowner, there's a landowner who's going to be worried that now they don't have access to the Environmental Appeals Board hearing or that they don't have the ability to intervene in the way that they did in the past. That is not going to lead to very good negotiations at the ground level.

We know that we've got, by and large, a pretty good system in Alberta. We recognize that we've got two rights. We've got the surface owner, who has rights. We've got the subsurface owner, who has rights and partners with Alberta to develop our resources on behalf of all Albertans. We also know that those mineral rights holders have the right to be able to go in and have access. That's why we have the Surface Rights Board, so that in the event that we don't end up with an agreement, there can be a forced entry order, and there can be factors of compensation considered. The nice part about the way our system is structured is that the vast, vast, vast majority of all of the negotiations between mineral rights holders and surface leaseholders or surface landowners end up without having to go through that combative litigious process.

We want to make sure that that relationship stays strong. It's been frayed over the last number of years. It's been frayed for a number of reasons. It's been frayed because of Bill 50. I know it's a different issue, the approach that the government took on transmission lines, saying: "You know what? Landowners have become a bit too cumbersome to this process. They're kind of standing in the way of what we want to do, so we're just going to eliminate the process and make a bunch of decisions in cabinet." I don't know what the government thought was going to happen when they decided to do that, but it's entirely predictable to me what ended up happening. Landowners across the entire province stood up and said: we're not going to take it.

Then with Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act, the same thing happened. The government thought: well, all of that compensation, that pesky compensation, kind of gets in the way of what we want to do, so we're just going to pass laws to limit the compensation to just market value, and by the way we're just going to freeze the land, and we'll let you know if we're going to need it. I don't know what they thought landowners would do in response to legislation like that. Of course they started having landowner meetings across the entire province, of course they stood up against that, and of course the government once again was forced to come back to this Legislature and fix it.

Then the Land Stewardship Act, which I think we still end up having problems with. We've seen what happens when the cabinet takes it upon themselves to make decisions that go outside of a regulatory framework, in the case of the lower Athabasca regional plan the cancellation of 18 oil sands leases. We have no idea what kind of leases are going to be impacted through the South Saskatchewan regional plan, but we know that landowners are just as concerned about that. We know the government had to come back once again and make changes to that legislation to be able to satisfy those concerns of landowners.

What I don't get is why on earth we've gone through three different pieces of contentious legislation; three different instances where landowner or leaseholder rights are at play; three different instances where landowner groups have said, "Stop; you can't do this"; three different instances where they didn't feel their compensation was properly protected or that their rights to due process were properly protected. Why would the government, having gone through that for three years, be wanting to make the same mistakes all over again when there are some very simple, very easy fixes to this legislation?

I think we can work it out if we get down to talking with each other in a forum like the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, where we would end up with an all-party committee, all of us from different parties coming together. We have the ability to bring in witnesses so that we can vet their views on the concerns that they have about different pieces of this bill so that the members in the party opposite can hear the same things that we're hearing from the people who are calling our offices and calling our MLAs, so that we all have the same information, so that we can go forward and create the very best bill that we possibly can.

There's absolutely no point in creating an environment where you force through a piece of legislation that we know is flawed. We were able to have 12 amendments that we put on the table. I'm quite certain we probably could have come up with more had we been given more time, but the whole point is that we're forcing through a massive change to the way we are regulating our energy industry, to the way in which they're going to interact with our environmental groups, with our landowner groups.

The government is asking for this to just be forced through. When I looked at the schedule for how quickly the government wanted to move on this bill this week, they wanted to be done third reading by the end of the week. How on earth are we going to get good legislation if in the space of essentially two to three weeks we get this dumped on us along with, you know, I guess, 400 other pieces of legislation? We've got tons of stakeholder consultation that we're doing, and we simply are not going to get good legislation if we end up forcing it through without proper debate, without listening to the stakeholders.

I'm imploring the government to realize that we are with them on this, that we do want a regulatory environment that is streamlined, that we do want a regulatory environment that works for our energy companies, but we want it to work as well for the environmental community, and we want it to work as well for our landowner community.

What we have heard from the feedback we've been getting on this legislation is that it's not there yet. There is no need to rush this. We have had the environment that we've been in getting slowly and slowly and slowly worse for a long time now. I don't know that it could get much worse, which is why I think there's so much hope in the energy industry that by making these kinds of substantive changes, we could start rolling back some of the regulatory red tape and paperwork that has gotten in the way of our being able to make development decisions in a timely way. But we're not going to be able to do that if we end up creating once again friction and conflict between the key stakeholders who are impacted by energy development. We think that some of the proposals we're putting forward are very, very reasonable.

One of the things I would say as well, part of the reason I think it's so important for the government to slow down on this, is that when I was with the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, Alberta consistently would score Ds and Fs from our organization when it was assessed about the progress they were making on being able to improve the regulatory environment. There were a few key things that this government was never able to get right. One of the things that they were never able to get right is that they were consistently reluctant to set a benchmark for measuring the overall amount of regulation. That is absolutely key if you're actually going to reduce the amount of the regulatory burden. You need to know what the problem is right now.

I think we've done a pretty good job, looking at the work that the Environment and Sustainable Resource Development minister has done, of at least quantifying it, at least benchmarking just how bad the regulatory environment is. But where I think we're not seeing what the industry wants to see is: how are we going to improve it by having dedicated timelines in place that we enforce on the regulator so that the regulator has to manage their workload in a way that will meet those regulatory requirements? This is one area that I think we need to have a great deal of discussion about because we can't just leave it to the regulator. In having left it to the regulator for the last number of years, all we've seen is that the regulatory burden has continued to grow and grow and grow.

There does not seem to be an attitude among the regulators, either in this area or any other area across government, quite frankly, that they quite get what the process of genuine regulatory reform looks like. Let me tell you what it looks like in other provinces. This is, again, why I was hoping we'd see some of this attitude brought to this legislation and why I think that if we have these conversations in this committee, we may be able to get there. Not only would this be exciting, to reduce the regulatory burden for energy, but we could apply this across all of government.

One of the great examples of a successful regulatory reform effort was in British Columbia. When Gordon Campbell came in in 2004, he promised to reduce the regulatory burden by 40 per cent. What he did is that he benchmarked the total amount of regulatory requirements, and he went out and told his administrators: "Okay. Reduce it by 40 per cent." What ended up happening is that anytime one new regulatory requirement came in, the regulators had to find five to eliminate. So ultimately, as they were creating new regulations, they were constantly finding other types of regulations that they could eliminate and streamline. At the end they're now in a position where every time somebody wants to introduce a new regulatory requirement, they have to find one to eliminate. We haven't even gotten to that first step in Alberta.

Secondly, there was another excellent regulatory reform effort that took place in Nova Scotia – this is one of my personal favorites – where they actually sat down all of the administrators, all of the members of the civil service, and they made them fill out every form and permit and licence and application and report that they were imposing on the business community. Then they timed how long it took for them to fill out all of those permits and forms and licences and reports and applications and developed a benchmark for the number of hours of regulatory burden. They came up with 615,000 hours of regulatory burden that was imposed on the business community in one year.

The politicians said: reduce it by 20 per cent. That's when they created an environment within the regulator where rather than being a regulation maker, they became regulation managers. For every new process that they came up with, they were constantly trying to find ways to streamline the regulatory environment, reduce the amount of paperwork, reduce the number of hands that a piece of paper ended up touching before a decision was made, and ultimately reduce the time frames.

This is the kind of constructive, positive regulatory reform effort that I think the industry is hoping to see out of what we're going through with this change to a single regulator. But I have to say that I don't think I see anything in the legislation that leads me to believe that that is the direction the government is going in. I don't see anything in the reports that CFIB has done or in any of the assessment that outside organizations have done of this government's progress in doing those kinds of reform efforts that this is actually going to be successful. That's, again, one more reason why we need to have this go to a committee: so that we can bring in groups like CFIB, so we can bring in groups from the energy sector who are impacted by the regulatory environment, so we can hear their stories, so that we can actually ensure that we're identifying the right problems.

This is the concern that I have with the approach this bill takes. It does eliminate a couple of appeals boards. It does eliminate a couple of processes. But is that what the industry is really complaining about? Are those the right processes for us to be eliminating? The Environmental Appeals Board: is that really what industry has been asking for, to eliminate that? I highly doubt it. I don't think that this government has heard enough. I don't think they've listened enough to the exact problems that the industry is having so that we know that when this is being implemented, it's being implemented in the right way.

The reason why I say that is that they gave way too much latitude to the regulator to set their own timelines, their own targets, and I think that that's going to be where the problem is. Those timelines and those targets need to be set by this Legislature. Those timelines and those targets need to be set here in the Legislature and imposed on the regulator so that they don't have that latitude. We're the ones who are supposed to tell them: "Look. It should take 180 days for you to get this approval done. You have to manage your workload to be able to get to that, and if you can't get to that, you have to tell us why not." We're the ones who are supposed to be setting those targets on them so that we can end up meeting those goals.

In the case of the oil sands you hear stories. When I was up at CNRL, the Horizon project – they started the regulatory journey to create the Horizon 2 and 3 projects back in 2000. They did not get all of their permits in place until 2009, 300 permits and licences later, nine years later. This is the problem with the regulatory environment that we have in Alberta.

We want to constructively work with the government to be able to address this. We want to constructively work with the government to be able to fix this, but the only way we can actually do that is not by forcing every one of us to sit here until 4 o'clock in the morning debating our 12 amendments and hoping against hope that the government might see reason on one or two of them. We think the proper way of doing this is for everybody to get a good night's sleep, for us to go back to our constituencies and talk to our stakeholders, and then come back after the legislative break and have a good opportunity to speak about this in this Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship.

We would love to work with the government to see if we can get through that process so that we can hold the spillover until the new year. If we can do that kind of work over the course of the next couple of months, if we can do that work and get this as the first item to come back in the new year, in the spring session, I think we'll all be a lot happier. I think we'll all end up with a process that we feel we can take to our stakeholders in our communities, that the government can take not only to the energy sector but also to landowner groups as well as to environmentalists and say: "We've got a pretty good process here. Let's try it out."

Now, we know that we're not going to get it perfect. We're not asking for perfection. What we're asking is for us to fix the largest and most glaring problems in this legislation. There are many. We've identified 12 of them. I'm sure that the members of the other opposition parties will have identified some as well. I'm just asking for the government to listen to the argument. We're not here to try to make political hay out of this issue. [interjections] Well, I can tell you that there'll be a lot of political hay that will be made out of this issue if the government does not listen to the voices of legitimate landowners and environmental groups. We have no problem making hay out of political issues when the government makes mistakes. We have, and we will. The question on this piece of legislation is: why would we do that? This is too important.

We know that this entire province needs to work together because we've got folks outside our borders who are more than happy to be barbing arrows at this province, talking about our environmental record, talking about our development record. The last thing that we need is to have those who are within this province not standing behind our energy industry. If we can feel proud about the work our energy industry is doing, if we can feel proud about the work that they are doing that is in sync with what the environmentalists are asking for, if we can feel proud about the work that they're doing that we know respects landowner rights, then we are going to create 3.5 million ambassadors for our industry going outside our borders, talking to their friends, talking to their neighbours not only across Canada but in the U.S. and around the world. That's the way you change public opinion. [interjections] It's true.

You don't change public opinion by creating a process that has the different factions that are affected by development at war with one another. This is the divide-and-conquer strategy that this government has played on three different pieces of legislation. They got called out on it. It's not our fault that they got called out for bad legislation. You bet that we're going to be talking about those areas if they're not respecting the environment and they're not respecting landowner rights. But why would they go through it again? We're, again, more than happy to work with the government to be able to fix these bills so that we can take it back to those landowners who are in our areas, those energy companies that are in our areas, and those environmental groups that are in our areas and say: "Yeah, they did listen. They did make some amendments. They did improve this legislation."

But if they don't go through this process, if they try to ramrod this through again, I can guarantee you that two years from now we're going to be back here again after two years of advocacy by various environmental groups, by various landowner groups, and the government is going to realize: "Whoops. We made a mistake, and now we've got to fix it." Why would we go through that for the next two years? Why not just take an extra couple of months to be able to do this right, to hear from all of the different players, to hear from all of the different stakeholders, to amend this bill so that we can all feel good about going back to our constituents, standing with unanimous consent, as we have on some of the other bills in this Legislature, and feel really good about the development that we're doing in this industry.

I know that the people I speak to want this process fixed. I know that the landowners I speak to want to be respected, the environmental groups I speak to want to feel good about the process that we have here. The government has a real opportunity to do things right, and the only way we can get that done right is if we refer to this committee, and we take the time that we need to make sure that we're making the amendments so that we can all stand behind this bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members who'd like to speak on this? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll be relatively brief. I just want to rise to speak in opposition to the amendment, the referral motion as it is, to send this bill to the standing committee. I'm a big fan of the legislative policy committees in government, formerly the standing policy committees. I think there's lots of excellent work that those committees can do. I'm always enticed by the concept that a bill should be sent to a committee so that good work can be done on it.

However, in the case of this bill, this bill is the result of an extensive amount of work already. I believe it was the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon who led a process to develop a report, which was done almost two years ago. An extensive process of consulting went into that regulatory assurance report to deal with one of the issues that we have heard over and over again in this province in recent years, and that is that we need to improve the regulatory process so that there's some certainty in the process, but we need to make sure that the appropriate policies are in place so that everybody knows and understands which direction we're going. The report that was done by the hon. member made a very clear delineation that government and this Legislature set the policy and then the regulatory organization runs a regulatory process that's fair and reasonable to all parties to ensure that we can get the work done that this province needs done while still protecting our environment.

While I understand the hon. member's purpose, instead of just saying, "Send this to a committee and do some more consultation," I think that she probably is, perhaps, unaware of the amount of time and effort and work that's gone into this process already, culminating in this bill.

An Hon. Member: Years.

Mr. Hancock: There are years of work that have gone into it.

In fact, it would be fair to say, I think, that the major players in industry and the environmental area in this province have been very supportive of the work that was done, were very supportive of the report. In fact, if there's a complaint that I've heard as a member of this Legislature and a member of government over the past year, it is that we haven't moved fast enough to get this done. They don't want us to wait another two months or three months or six months. They want this in place now. They want to get on with the job. That's the feedback that we've been getting time and time again.

I would ask the hon. members opposite, as I always do, that if there are some substantive amendments that they see could improve the bill, get them to the Minister of Energy so that he can take a look at them, he can recommend them to our caucus, and they can help to improve the bill. If there are amendments that are for political grandstanding purposes, by all means, put them on the table, and let's get the grandstanding done. But let's not delay the progress that needs to be made in this area. I'd ask members not to support this amendment and to move this bill to committee as quickly as possible so that we can see what those amendments might look like, see whether they have any beneficial purpose to improving the process.

Let's be clear on the bill. This bill does respect landowners. This bill does respect industry. This bill does respect the environment. It respects the fact that there needs to be clearer policy in place, and there needs to be a clear regulatory process. That regulatory process should ensure that everybody that needs to be heard and has an interest in being heard can be heard in the process. But it doesn't delay the process. It doesn't get in the way of process. It allows a very fair and reasonable process of getting things done in this province. That's what Albertans are like. Albertans are get-the-thing-done people. They want us to get this done now.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) is there anyone who would like to comment or ask questions of the hon. member?

Seeing none, we'll move to the next speaker. I believe the Member for Calgary-Buffalo would like to speak on the amendment.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Hopefully, I won't be accused of grandstanding, but I will speak in favour of this bill. There's a lot, to me, in this legislation that needs to be looked at. It's highly concerning to me that there is no public interest component. We've seen that time and time again in our legislation. That public interest is one of those things that committees of this nature that are established have an obligation to hear. It's not always easy or seems to fit nicely with what we want to do, but the public interest component is there. Really, let's be clear. The public interest is the test which measures if this is in the best interests of the people as a whole. It's not a neat and tidy test or anything of that nature. I'm highly concerned that that is not in there.

There are numerous other things in this bill that cause me concern. Whether this in fact is an independent regulator or whether it's simply just an arm of government gives me some concern. It gives me some concern that there is no definition of what constitutes noncompliance of energy companies. It should be contained in an act if we're actually going to enforce what is noncompliance and the like.

It appears that we're going to have lots of time to speak on this stuff tonight, so I won't keep going on for too much longer, but I will also say this. Oftentimes we in this Legislature think that the regulation is just there to cause people concern and the like. I come from a school of thought that often the regulation probably was there for a purpose, probably there to allow for some person to be heard or some person's rights to be protected. I understand the nature of politics. Every opposition party will run on eliminating the red tape, and every government will run on saying: we're doing the best we can.

There's a reason why sometimes regulation exists, people. Sometimes it exists to protect the general public. We've seen incidents. Some say the financial crisis that we're still working out in this world was caused by a lack of regulation or accountability in the financial world. That is, generally, the resounding theme of what has come out of us leaving that time period. We're still not out of it. It's still causing trouble throughout the world. A lack of regulation. I'm certain there were storms of people giving long speeches about red tape and the like across Legislatures in the United States and elsewhere, in Canada here, that said: oh, we've just got to get the red tape out of the way, got to get it out of the way of the businesspeople, got to get it out of the way of this. Simply put, that's not always wise.

I know we have legislation up in the next few days on building codes, okay? Those regulations are going into place to provide people, when they buy homes, with some security on what they are purchasing and some need to have protections in that regard. Is that regulation? Yes, it is. Is there a reason for it? Yes, there is. Now, I might argue that we should have had this legislation 15 years ago, when B.C. had it, more regulation on the books to protect homebuyers. But we've got to remember that here.

Nevertheless, I think this bill is at this time flawed. I don't believe it covers many of the concerns that I'm hearing from out in the community, from people commenting on the bill, and, really, from my own intuition on what should be incorporated into a bill.

By no means is drafting this bill easy. I understand the difficulty in trying to set up a one-stop shop, one regulatory system. You have to move what was basically – I don't know – three, four, five other groups into one, okay? There was probably a reason for those five or six other groups, because people had legitimate concerns about legitimate issues, and putting it into one new system is going to be difficult. I don't think we've incorporated all of those things into one system.

Now, I would like to point out, too, that the hon. member – say, if we were going to move to a timely manner for things, put a time limit on this, 180 days for all this stuff to be heard in a legitimate fashion. Well, no doubt we'd have to staff the organization with about three times as many people to get it heard in the 180-day period, at least if you're hearing all sides, if you're having a public interest component, if you're doing your environmental things. Remember, sometimes when we shorten up the timelines, too, we're putting unnecessary constraints on hearing the whole truth of the matter.

In any event, I don't think this bill is ready to be passed. I would support the amendment as drafted. I think this would be a good place to hash through some of these issues, maybe hear some of the concerns that have been brought up, and come to a better bill. I would also like everyone to think about, sort of when we get on our speeches, that oftentimes regulation is there for a reason, to protect people. Just running around saying, "Cut the red tape; cut the red tape": yeah, it's a great sound bite, but really what does it mean? We at the Legislature have an obligation to protect people; to protect our air, land, and water; and to give people an opportunity to be heard. Oftentimes you give them the opportunity to be heard; they'll hear some information back that may assuage their concerns as well.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), questions and comments, are there any members?

Seeing none, we'll move to our next speaker, the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We've had for a long time in this province a social contract between property owners, farmers, ranchers, and the oil and gas industry. It's worked, actually, quite well up until recently. That social contract was also based on the Surface Rights Act. There was a process that property owners went through, and the standard rule of thumb is still holding true for the most part. Ninety per cent of all leases, of all negotiations are settled without a problem. Of the 10 per cent that are contested, 90 per cent of those are generally settled. The oil and gas company, the developer, the driller: they don't want to go to the board any more than the property owner wants to go to the board.

I will tell you first-hand as somebody who has been extensively involved in all these issues with many, many landowners that it always comes back not to money; it comes back to respect and property rights, dignity. That's what it comes back to every time. When I look at people who are having trouble with an oil or gas lease, it very rarely centres around money. It centres around, generally, respect. I will tell you that one of the greatest abuses that goes on out in the rural areas is when a company of ill repute will show up onto somebody's land and say: "There's nothing you can do about. We're coming onto your land." That starts the fight right there. They're not even talking about negotiating. They're not talking about the lease amount of money. What they're talking about now is pride. It breaks down into pride.

I first heard of this bill two years ago from the hon. member, before the member was a cabinet minister, when I was up in Fort McMurray at a conference. I was asked by the member what my status might be with regard to this bill. I said even then: the devil is in the details. We've already mentioned, as was mentioned by the Leader of the Official Opposition – and I will tell you this – that we would like this bill to work. We're reaching out now, saying that this is what we want. I know industry wants it, and I know many property owners would agree to it, but there are so many things wrong inside this bill right now that you can't sell it in the rural areas.

I know you may not believe it, and some people might accuse some other people of making hay. I'm going to grow a crop out of this thing. This thing's got teeth into it that I can sell to landowners, and no one in this House will be able to debate me out there. If you don't believe me, that's the reason I'm here today. I'm not making that up. What I'm trying to convince on is that we want to make it work.

In every hearing that I've ever been to – and I've been to a lot of hearings for property owners – you get the sense that industry wants a set of rules and guidelines that they know they can follow that are simplified. Property owners agree, and they want the same thing. You have both sides to this equation saying: we want the same thing. You have a bill coming forward that has the ability to provide that, but if we don't get it right, we will fail. If we fail, we're not going to get on with it, as the hon. member said. What we're going to get on with is a rural fight, and we're going to have problems, and those problems can be significant. I can tell you one thing. We can debate this motion, but you can't debate the facts. They're either the facts or they're not the facts. The fact is that you've taken away some of the rights of landowners to have an appeal process.

Mr. Hancock: That would be in "not the facts."

Mr. Anglin: That is the fact. They have no right to the Environmental Appeals Board. That's been removed. That's been removed. If the hon. member can find that for me, please point out where they can get there.

They once had that right. It is now gone. You can't sell that to property owners out there. They see that. I'm already getting phone calls. I've already been chewed out by some of my supporters out there for saying that we want to get this passed so it works for everybody, because they're already concerned. What we're trying to say here is: listen to us. We want to work, and we want to make this actually become something productive.

Now, I do sit on the sustainable resource committee, and I admire our chairperson, Madam Speaker, and she did warn that there would be opportunities for more work to come our way. I'm not keen on taking on more work anymore than probably anybody on my committee is, but the reality is that it's a duty, and it is a mechanism to get this right.

That's what this motion is proposing, Madam Speaker. This motion is proposing that we get it right. It is the tool that, as was pointed out, our Premier has said that she was looking to change when she became leader. What we're saying now is: let's use those tools. Let's use those mechanisms. What better tool to use than to get this opposition party onside to say: we can support the bill so it can do the things that we want it to do. That's the real goal here.

If we decide to force this through, and these changes don't get made – and they're not going to get made if we force this through. There are way too many concerns out there. We need to make sure that everybody is part of this. There are a lot of landowner groups that have risen up in the past, and they will rise up here. I'm telling this House that now. They will rise up, and they will argue.

The hon. member who just spoke against the motion came to Eckville, which is in my riding. He knows. He knows the attitude. That attitude hasn't changed. It's out there. It's about trust, and it's about respect. You have a mechanism here to get trust and to get respect. I would think that would be a high priority for this government right now. We can actually make this work.

So I am speaking in favour of this motion, and I certainly hope that the members would change their minds and reconsider. Let's put ourselves to work and do it right.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Strankman: Yes, Madam Speaker. I'd like to question the hon. member. He made mention of a community where there was a large gathering of people. I was wondering if you could enlighten the rest of the Chamber on the feeling and the number of people that were there in response to a government presentation.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the question. Actually, some of the hon. members on the other side know. We had a meeting in Eckville, which is in my riding, a small community, dealing with the issue of the Land Stewardship Act. This was actually last year, prior to the election. It was significant. Landowners know what's going on. They're reading now these pieces of legislation. When government members came out to defend this bill, it was not defensible.

Now, we can debate who's right, who's wrong. The fact is that you had 500 people in the hall that booed the government out of the hall. That's significant, and that should never happen to this government no matter what party is sitting in those seats. That's really important. I will tell you that there were members of the government that were in denial. They didn't believe it. Yet the crowd was actually very polite up to the point where they felt they just had enough, and they rose up. It was a clear message that I don't think this government has yet heard.

I know we talk about consultation. I know we talk about listening, but you can't listen if your ears are not open, if your mind is not open. Your minds have to open up and look at what these property owners have said.

By the way, that's not just Eckville. I saw the same up north. I saw the same down south. I see the same in every rural hall I go to, and it's not my doing. It is people learning what's going on in these bills, and they don't like it. They've been voicing their opinion. That's why these 17 Wildrose MLAs are sitting right here in this Legislature today. And that's a fact. You can debate our numbers, but the fact is that there are 17 here. What I'm trying to tell this government is that if we don't do this right, we'll be sitting over there.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: There are still two minutes left in 29(2)(a). Are there any other members who would like to question?

Seeing none, we'll move to our next speaker. On amendment RA1 the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to thank the hon. Energy minister. We've had a couple of discussions about this bill, and we both agree that this is legislation that needs to be passed. With respect to all the energy companies they want it, which is great. We want it. I've been involved in the energy industry for many, many years. I'm pro industry. I think, you know, we need to work together and ensure that they have the best process available.

Now, I do respect and honour the hon. House leader, but I do have to disagree a little bit. He mentioned that the hon. Minister of Environment and SRD had consultations for two years. Obviously, from the comments I've received, from the comments my other colleagues have received, we didn't go far enough with the landowners. My phone has been ringing off the hook. I've been getting e-mails from different landowner groups that do not like what they see. Like the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre said, you know, they are becoming aware of what's going on. They're not people who will sit back and take it. They know what they want, and they know what they want to see.

This bill is something that is huge if you think of how many people that it will affect if we pass it and we don't get it right. How many billions of dollars does the energy industry produce in Alberta? Billions and billions. How many lives does it affect? This isn't something where we can say: "Well, we've got six months. We've got to get it done. We've talked for two years, but now we've got six months to get it done." This is something that's going to affect people's lives for many, many years. We need to get it right. We need to ensure that everybody is onside. If everybody is onside, we can all agree, we can move ahead, and Alberta will be strong for many, many more years.

As our hon. Leader of the Opposition mentioned, our job as legislators is to ensure the proper legislation. Our job is to ensure that the people we represent, the Albertans that we represent, get what they want. In the last few days we've heard that they're not getting what they want. You know, the energy industry is something that will be here for many years. It's something that we need to really look at, take the time and ensure that all the people involved and affected have a right to speak to it. If we refer this to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, that will give them the opportunity to have their voice heard. It's something that will affect them for many, many years.

I've got a couple of stories I could tell. I won't go into too much detail. There are many oil companies that are top notch. You know, they're concerned with their image. They come in, and they drill wells. They have huge meetings, public consultations to ensure that landowners, service companies, everybody is on the same page. Everything goes so smoothly. I've been involved in a couple of these projects. It's actually a pleasure to go to work in the morning because everybody is happy. Then there's the other side. There are some oil companies that maybe try to push the envelope a little bit and don't get the consultations that they need. Then all of a sudden they're at odds. The landowners say, "Jeez, I didn't know about this coming in." The oil companies: "Well, we went too far now. We're going to carry on." It causes some tension there.

If this bill is done correctly, it'll minimize that tension. We're always going to have people that do not want oil and gas activity. That's just a fact. But I think if we work together and do the best job we can possibly do, get it right, this will be something that will carry us far, far into the future and, you know, make this government on the other side look great. This isn't a time for party politics. As we mentioned before, I mean, there have been motions and bills that we've agreed with. This is something that needs to be done right, not depending on what side of the House you're on.

So I urge you: do not vote against this amendment or our other amendments. Make a conscious decision. Is this the best for Albertans and the best for Alberta? Then make a decision.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

Seeing none, we'll move to our next speaker. The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am rising to speak against this amendment at this point in time. I, too, sit on the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, and I believe that what we are doing in that particular committee is creating the basis for policy. What I see in this Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act, is that that consultation has taken place. There is a basis for us to begin to look at any amendments that the opposition may be bringing forward, so let's move ahead and bring them on.

Several of the hon. members participating in this debate have said that they've spoken with constituents about this bill. I have as well, and I will continue to do so. I would encourage them as well.

Now, one of the things that has happened in my constituency is that they have received an e-mail from a lawyer who says that he is providing them with information about this bill. I've got a great deal of concern about misinformation being spread out in the community without us being able to sit here and debate what the actual bill states. A lot of the people out in the community haven't read the bill, so they are taking someone's word for a portion of the bill. In my opinion, there are many lawyers – apologies to the lawyers in this room and those that are listening – that are excellent in the sleight of hand. They are better than any magician. They divert attention from the whole picture.

I believe that my constituents, Madam Speaker, are very involved and very experienced in the oil and gas industry and in pipeline siting. I would be willing to table the appropriate number of copies of this e-mail from this particular lawyer. The opening comment in that e-mail is that streamlining energy processes is a good idea, and I agree with that. That's what this bill is here for.

There is also a reminder that most energy development occurs on land which does not belong to oil companies. Again, I agree, and I am reminded of that every day when I go back to my constituency.

However, I would like to spend some time pointing out some of the arguments that I do not agree with in that particular e-mail. This e-mail implies that Bill 2 changes the way that energy companies can access land. I want you to note that access provisions are covered under the Surface Rights Act, and this bill does not change that legislation in any way. Quite simply, it's factually wrong to say that a bill which creates a new energy regulator grants new access rights to energy companies. So I would say to hon. members today, as I've said to my constituents: let us form our opinions about the bill according to the facts of the matter and not in response to inaccurate statements or, even worse, fearmongering.

This e-mail then goes on to say that the Energy Resources Conservation Act is the foundation for landowners within the regulatory process for energy projects. It goes on to quote section 26(2) of the existing Energy Resources Conservation Act, which says:

- (2) ... if it appears to the Board that its decision on an application may directly and adversely affect the rights of a person, the Board shall give the person
  - (a) notice of the application,
  - (b) a reasonable opportunity of learning the facts bearing on the application and presented to the Board by the applicant and other parties to the application,
  - (c) a reasonable opportunity to furnish evidence relevant to the application or in contradiction or explanation of the facts or allegations in the application,
  - (d) if the person will not have a fair opportunity to contradict or explain the facts or allegations in the application without cross-examination of the person presenting the application, an opportunity of cross-examination in the presence of the Board or its examiners, and
  - (e) an adequate opportunity of making representations by way of argument to the Board or its examiners.

I would remind my constituents and my hon. colleagues about the blindfolded man who feels the tail and proclaims an elephant to be a long, slender thing with bristles at the end. We must look at the act and how it relates to the other sections. In this case the author has looked at section 26(2), which I read, and not looked at section 26(1), which says:

Unless it is otherwise expressly provided by this Act to the contrary, any order or direction that the Board is authorized to make may be made on its own motion or initiative, and without the giving of notice, and without holding a hearing.

Let us look at this new bill in the light of all elements in the previous legislation. It is authorized . . .

An Hon. Member: Without holding a hearing.

Ms Fenske: May I explain it to you again, that "any order or direction that the Board is authorized to make may be made on its own motion or initiative, and without the giving of notice, and without holding a hearing." That is the current legislation that exists, and we are looking at all of the elements in the previous legislation and not in comparison to one clause.

Under Bill 2, the new legislation, landowners are given greater respect than they are today in two different ways. First, they must be given notice of all applications for energy resource activities. They must be given that notice. Second, they must be given the opportunity to submit a statement of concern directly to the regulator before decisions are made, and this is not the case under section 26(2) that I just read today.

Currently some applications are considered without any notice. In this new bill landowners are given a voice when they file a statement of concern about an activity before the activity is approved. Landowners present their views at a hearing, and when the landowner or another group presents information before a decision is made, they are helping to bring about a better decision.

By ensuring that the regulator provides the right notice and looks at the right information in the first place, we can reduce the need for landowners to appeal. As the proverbial shop teacher says: measure twice and cut once. So that we don't have to make a second cut, let's look at the information. If there has been a problem, a review mechanism still exists. Perhaps we should be using the word "appeal" rather than "review." That would make it more clear, but they are still the same thing.

The e-mail also criticizes the removal of public interest from the legislation. I would again invite my constituents and others to confirm the facts. Public interest provisions already exist in the energy resources legislation connected to this act. The Oil Sands Conservation Act mentions public interest considerations twice in section 3 and once each in sections 10 and 11, the Coal Conservation Act mentions public interest in sections 4 and 8, and the Oil and Gas Conservation Act mentions public interest in sections 1 and 4. Clearly, the requirement to consider the public interest remains an important part of the regulator's work.

Now, another criticism in the e-mail is that by bringing two different energy regulator systems together, it creates a monster. Well, this truly is fearmongering. I believe that a system that brings a cohesive, unified perspective to the regulation of energy resources activities and their implications for the environment can and should work together.

Now, we have heard the opposition mention that maybe we won't get it right the first time. They're okay with that. What were some of the other words? Well, it might not be a hundred per cent. We've had the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition say that it may not be perfect. [interjection]

The Acting Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member.

Ms Fenske: Anyway, we are bringing these two systems together, each with different roles, in a way that enables them to better work together. To me that's the basis of a good, sound marriage. In fact, it is a marriage that follows a long courtship identified several years ago as the direction that government should take and studied in greater detail by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon. This legislation strikes the right balance, and that's what we're all looking for. I've heard it many times over the last several days.

In response to those constituents and hon. members who may have received this e-mail, let me say this: don't be misled again, check the facts, and read for yourself the whole bill.

I think that the legislation before us reflects a concerted effort to enhance assurance, not just for landowners but for all of us.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: I would remind all hon. members that we are speaking on the amendment.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). Hon. Member for Airdrie, you stood first.

Mr. Anderson: Well, I just have a quick question to the hon. member. You said to your constituents in that last speech: don't be deceived again. Don't be deceived again. So are you telling me that when Bill 19, Bill 50, Bill 36, which were passed by this Legislature in the last several years – every one of those statutes has been brought back before this House, in some cases more than once, to fix that legislation because people like the folks in your constituency specifically, Madam Speaker, found problems with it and had objections to it. It was brought back to this House.

We spent hours and hours on those bills fixing up, frankly, the bloody disaster that they were. Because they were a total disaster. So we spent all these hours fixing them up. We still haven't gotten them all right. Bill 36 is still a mess. With Bill 50 we're still building lines that we don't need. I could go on.

So you're saying that your constituents were tricked by this lawyer? They were tricked into believing that Bill 36, Bill 19, and Bill 50 were flawed pieces of language? They were just out of their minds, and this scary lawyer – is that what this is? If so, why did we come back here and have to fix each one of those bills if they were tricked like that? Can you please explain the inconsistency? Obviously, the government didn't think they were tricked or else they wouldn't have brought all these amendments to those bills. Maybe you could explain that to us.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Through you to the hon. member I believe it was on October 29 that the Leader of the Official Opposition stood up here and mentioned Bill 19 and then threw out the comment that, well, they got that right, or they "fixed that one." That would be in Hansard. I distinctly remember looking for that.

I've also heard – and I would never be one to say that if there isn't an issue, it shouldn't be fixed. I don't think anyone in this Chamber is perfect. I also believe that society changes. Things move along, and we should never be so proud or so boastful as to not be able to come back and take a look again at things. However, I also know that if we don't start with a basis of policy and start from somewhere to be able to go there, we will not get anywhere.

I'm looking forward to us debating the amendments to this particular bill, but I am looking forward to us moving forward on the basis of the consultation that the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon has done by going out to Albertans to gather that information. Let's move ahead, again speaking against the amendment to send further delay. Let's debate it here in this House.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I happen to know that lawyer personally, and I happen to know he doesn't even own a silk suit.

The reality is this. The hon. member mentioned something about a lawyer, and all I ask is: have you read the bill from cover to cover? If you know the bill so well when this lawyer is so wrong, will you welcome an invitation to come to Eckville to debate him in front of the public as other ministers have?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am responsible to my constituents, and I have actually worked on a process to engage them. That's certainly where I am prepared to be spending my time and my efforts.

If the lawyer in question wants to come and sit down with me, I would certainly be prepared to listen to his arguments. I am not here to debate him.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Still on 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I've had the opportunity to work with the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville before, being on council, and I've always been impressed with her heart and how she fights for things.

I was just digging through some stuff, and it was June 28, 2011, that an hon. member that was actually a councillor at the time moved in their own county that a meeting be arranged with the Ministers of Energy and Sustainable Resource Development, . . .

Moved by this member.

. . . our two MLA's and Council to discuss possible amendments to The Electric Utilities Act . . . (formerly known as Bill 50).

Because they are obviously flawed. And everybody voted in favour of it. I just wondered what that means.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, were you reading from a document? In that case I would ask you to table that document.

Mr. Donovan: Yeah. You betcha. I can get it pulled off the Internet here.

The Acting Speaker: That's tomorrow.

Mr. Donovan: You bet.

The Acting Speaker: We are moving to the next speaker on amendment RA1.

Mr. Strankman: I'm pleased to rise and speak, Madam Speaker. I find it interesting that this bill is named the responsible energy act. I take great heart as a newbie to this facility, to this Chamber, that we would use all of the responsibility that we can to come forward with new legislation. I was disappointed when the government delivered this piece of legislation as I wholeheartedly believed that a single regulator would improve, fix, or streamline the process for new oil and gas projects, but I do not believe that now. New legislation should fix a legislative problem, not create more. I believe, after reading the legislation, that we have over 10 amendments that we need to bring forward.

My Wildrose colleagues and I want to see red tape cut in order to foster more economic growth in our oil and gas industry. While we are rich in energy, Alberta is one of the worst jurisdictions for development of more red tape. The Wildrose believes that there is a place for government regulation, especially in efficiently maintaining a balance between environment, landowners, and industry. It's not clear that this bill will generate efficiency, and it does not maintain the balance between the various areas. We can do a better job than this.

On the issue of landowner rights the way this bill deals with hearings and reviews is very problematic, Madam Speaker. The bill reduces landowners' rights, which have already been marginalized enough by this out-of-touch government. It's a central Wildrose principle that one of the most fundamental roles of government is the protection and preservation of property rights. Without such protection our entire economy would cease to function. Bill 2 does not take property rights seriously, and it should. We could do better.

The legislation basically makes the proposed regulator a new position with sweeping powers who will answer only to the minister, not to Albertans through their elected representatives in the Legislature. Like bills 19, 24, 36, and 50, Bill 2 centralizes power under the minister's hand-picked regulator, with plenty of room for ongoing interference by the minister.

Madam Speaker, the intent of this bill is sound, but the way it reads makes its application concerning. I urge the government to work with us to improve this bill and make it a piece of legislation that will actually help our province, not harm it. I would like to speak to the motion of amendment. I believe in the bill's intent, but it does not completely fix an ongoing problem.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Moving on, the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane on the amendment.

Mr. Casey: Yes, Madam Speaker. I'm not sure that I can add a great deal to what my colleague has already said, but I will give it a go anyway. I have some very good speaking notes, but I'll ignore them as well.

Just to point it out, I've had some experience as well. My colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View relayed a story about one of his constituents. Well, I can give you a story about an entire municipality affected by a decision, not a decision by the ERCB but a decision by the NRCB. I have to tell you that when those decisions are made and they're made wrong, it affects you forever. We are now 20 years into a decision that was poorly thought out, poorly written, imposed upon us with no ability to appeal, and we're still seeing the effects of that today. It hasn't worked for the landowner, by the way. We're in the fourth landowner on that property now, and it's currently sitting in receivership. It hasn't worked for the municipality. It's worked for absolutely no one. So it's absolutely critical that these decisions are done right and that the right people are making those decisions.

The one thing that this act does do is that it establishes a board that is separate from the decision-making body, the body that will review applications and appeals. The board is there to drive policy and to make sure that the policy works. The board then will hire a CAO to run the regulator, to head up the regulator, and under that is a roster of commissioners, people with expertise in a variety of fields that will deal with the actual applications and appeal process. So there's separation between policy administration and the actual decision-making at the other end. This is a vast improvement over what we have today. Not only is it more streamlined, not only does it bring everything together into one streamlined approach; it ensures that there are people hearing your appeals, hearing the applications that are truly knowledgeable in that area.

On top of that, Madam Speaker, one of the issues here is that we seem to feel that currently the system is great, that we just need to roll it all into one, but that's simply not true. What we have today are applications being submitted with no notification to landowners, no notification to those being affected because there is no requirement for that notification to be given. This act requires that notification in each and every case be given, and that is a huge improvement over what we have today. Just that one simple piece makes it way more transparent, way more accountable for all the stakeholders involved.

By the way, this isn't just about land rights. In fact, it's not just about making it easy for industry because it's not about making it easy for industry. It's about making it better processwise for industry, but it's not about making it easy. We're not going to compromise the environmental integrity of Alberta in order to make it easy for industry, nor are we going to compromise land rights and landowners to make it easy for industry. There are no winners and losers in this. This is about working together, creating a product, a bill, a process that benefits everyone.

When it comes to appeals, it's clear in the act. In section 38 it's absolutely clear that you have the right to appeal. There is no issue with appeal. The whole process currently is convoluted. Environmental groups can't figure it out. Landowners can't figure it out. No one can figure it out. The truth is that clarifying and bringing together all these regulations into one act, into one process is going to benefit landowners, it's going to benefit environmental groups, and it is going to ultimately benefit industry as a result of that.

One of the issues we have right now is that landowners are left on their own. They go out and go into a surface rights agreement with industry, with an oil company. If the oil company doesn't live up to its end, its obligation, doesn't follow through, they are left on their own to deal with industry. Well, what small landowner, or large landowner for that matter, has the capacity, not only the financial capacity but the social and the emotional capacity, to go to battle with a major oil company? What one? This act says that if you register that service agreement, you as a landowner aren't going to have to take on, you know, the Goliaths of the world alone, that the Alberta government is going to stand there side by side with you, and if there is not compliance, then they have the ability to direct that company to comply, and they have the authority in this act to ensure that that compliance occurs.

To be honest, Madam Speaker, I was likely the first one to go to the minister with concerns about some of the components of this act. When I read it the first time and the second time through, I was sort of going: "Gee, what about this? What about this?" But when the minister had an opportunity to explain that, to bring it all together, then it started to make sense. The more I've thought about it and the more it's worked, the more it makes sense.

Madam Speaker, I won't stand here and tell you that this is perfect, that it doesn't need a tweak here or a tweak there, but that's what keeping this in second reading does. We keep it in second reading in order to have debate, to put the issues on the table so that proper amendments and thoughtful amendments – not political amendments, not here's-my-headline amendments – can be thought through and presented so that we make this better at the end of the day. I'm hoping that both the government side and the opposition side work toward amendments that make this better because it can be. Is it close? Absolutely. Does it need a tweak here or there? Maybe, but I'm willing to be convinced otherwise.

Madam Speaker, I am all for defeating this amendment and getting on with second reading and moving this bill forward. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to thank my colleague from Banff-Cochrane because I agree with you about the NRCB and how you had some problems with your municipality for about 20 years dealing with that. I agree with you wholeheartedly. I think there are a lot of things that just need to be tweaked. We're not asking for the sky and moon, and we're not rewriting it. I think there are just some things where we could sit down and figure those things out. Now, again, it's on the amendment that's on the floor there.

I guess I'd like to ask you for your thoughts. The board that everything gets handed over to when there's a complaint, the board that the Minister of Energy decides to come up with: would you like to see that elected? Do you think that would be a more representative way, at least as elected, than having it appointed by the minister? I guess those are my thoughts on it. I'd like to hear your thoughts on what you'd think of an elected board on that.

Thank you.

Mr. Casey: Sure. I think that it's really important that if we're going to hear appeals and if we're going to have people reviewing applications, they actually be industry experts. You need to have people with an industry background. Inasmuch as everyone in this room is an expert in their own mind and we're all elected, I doubt that any of us are qualified to sit on one of those boards, to be honest with you.

What you need to do is have a roster of people, a number of people, those commissioners, that, in fact, have the background, the knowledge, the education, and not only the industry perspective but the landowners' perspective, the social perspective, the environmental perspective, that you can bring a whole variety of people to the table in order to make sure that the best decisions are being made. I'm not sure that an elected body does that in spite of the fact that, of course, we're all perfect. It's sort of like the kettle calling the pot black here.

At the same time I recognize that there are times when experts need to be brought to the table. It's really in the selection of those commissioners and the qualifications that we need to ensure that there is not one line, that they're not all from this sector or this sector, that there needs to be a variety of people. But you have to put yourself in the position of selecting those people for that board. Why would anyone select all from one sector? I mean, there's no benefit to anyone in that. There's no benefit to government, to industry, to anyone, because the process loses credibility.

The better those people are that you have identified as commissioners and the more qualified those people are as commissioners, the more ability they have to have a transparent, a credible process. I'm not sure that at the end of the day you would necessarily get a credible process if you had an elected body that was elected by popularity rather than by skill set.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. I would remind you to address your questions and your presentations to the Speaker, please.

Mr. Casey: My apologies.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, did you want to speak under 29(2)(a), or do you just want on the list?

Mr. Bilous: Yes.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Anyone else under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Yes, Madam Speaker. I'd just like to ask the hon. member about my understanding of the legislation. Where it talks about an appellant, where the regulator would demand the personal information of an appellant: why would that be required? I don't see that personal information should be brought into any sort of appeal to legislation. I was wondering if you could speak to that, please.

Mr. Casey: Madam Speaker, I almost did it again. I know you caught me, but I was close. I'm a slow learner.

I'm not sure that I can answer the question, to be honest with you. I'm assured that that is there for legal reasons, and I think that for me to comment on what is in the bill from a legal perspective, point of view, really, is inappropriate. I really don't have the background or the knowledge to be able to answer that question.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Anyone else under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, we'll move to our next speaker, the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak in favour of referring Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act, to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship for an extensive and proper review. We need to ensure that the process is done in a manner that is open, inclusive, and transparent. We all understand and agree with the basic idea of a single regulator that ensures efficiency, consistency, and collaboration within the regulations. This is very important, and it should be the goal of all legislators going forward. The Wildrose believes in streamlining processes, believes in creating efficiency, and believes in reducing the regulatory burden for Albertans.

Madam Speaker, as elected officials we're asked to do many things, but most importantly we are asked to represent our constituents and ensure that their voices are heard at a provincial level. This government has said that they want to govern differently. Referring Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act, to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship is one of those ways we can demonstrate that we govern differently. Right before us we have this great opportunity.

Unfortunately, the public often has a negative view of politicians and the work that we do. More importantly, this government and the committees that have existed within it have taken a substantial beating over the last few months. We have a unique opportunity to prove to Albertans the value of committee work and show how all-party committees can work together to review and create legislation that has value. Committee work can identify areas of weakness and areas of strength. Committees allow for open discussion amongst all members. They allow for the ability to bring in stakeholders. They allow for the opportunity to ask questions, become informed, and create legislation that has solid ground. Is it not imperative on all of us who are elected to ensure that we show how these committees can work and how we can be working together to create a better Alberta?

It is imperative that these bills that are put forward in this House include discussions and consultations with stakeholders. Those consultations have to happen with industry, landowners, property rights groups, and other affected stakeholders. What better opportunity to do this than in an open forum such as the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship?

Landowner groups and other stakeholders are telling us that Bill 2 is severely flawed. We are not listening. I cannot believe, as I sit here tonight, that there is not a single government MLA in rural Alberta who is not hearing loud and clear from the rural landowners their concerns regarding Bill 2. Would it really be that detrimental to this bill to hear those concerns and have a committee take a look at this bill? I also find it hard to believe that each and every one of these 61 MLAs on that side of the House have not a single landowner coming forward to express their dissatisfaction with this bill.

Landowners are coming forward in droves and begging for us to listen. This bill does not respect landowner rights, and we must ensure that those that provide us with that information are listened to. Concerned citizens are identifying that projects – pipelines, well sites – mostly occur on landowners' land, not on energy companies' land. Landowners cannot say no to an energy project. We all know that energy companies can get a right-of-entry order under the Surface Rights Act and force their way onto your land.

The Wildrose fully supports the intent of Bill 2. Clearly, streamlining the regulatory process is a good idea, and it's important for the future of our economy. Having a complex and convoluted regulatory system has no value to anyone. That being said, we need to ensure that we make the process less cumbersome and promote economic growth while at the same time ensuring that all stakeholders are protected.

Landowners want to be heard regarding their concerns around section 26, and while the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville talked about some lawyer's discussions around section 26, the information coming back to us is not just from a lawyer. The information coming back to us is from landowners, landowners who have lived Bill 50, landowners who have lived bills 19, 24, and 36 and told us it was wrong. Those bills were flawed, and they are asking – they are begging – for us to listen again.

Landowners are coming forward and saying that section 26 and the effects of removing it are detrimental. Section 26 directs the decision-maker to consider the effects of energy development on landowners, takes away the appeal rights, and landowners are left cleaning up the mess. It has been the process since 1930 that the place a landowner goes to get his or her concerns about a pipeline, well site, or energy project addressed is the ERCB. Bill 2 repeals this important section and replaces it with nothing new under the act.

An example was given to me from a landowner. There's a leaking seismic hole on private property. The process, in effect, leaves the landowner having to bear the cost of repairing the seismic leak. Alberta environment will go after the seismic company for the repair, but the practice is for the seismic companies to dissolve after doing seismic for this very reason, which leaves the landowner with no one to turn to. There is also the effect of leaking seismic on underground water quality and quantity. The landowner has no real rights to oppose the seismic and no way of fixing the effects when it goes wrong. Alternatively, if the leak is on Crown land, the Crown takes care of it.

There are lots of similar issues with oil and gas wells where oil companies are no longer in existence. The question that we should all ask ourselves is: why should landowners bear the cost of suing companies if they exist or of the damages if the company is no longer in business? This doesn't seem right to stakeholders, and this bill takes away an appeal and oversight process.

I have spoken to landowners and stakeholders as well, and they were completely caught off guard by this bill. They met with the government. The bill that's on the table today is not the bill that they talked about. It is not at all what they were told it was going to be, which was a simplified regulatory process. Instead, we have something that clearly makes the process even more complicated.

Stakeholders are asking me daily: "What's the rush? Why is it so important that this bill get through in a week? Why are we doing guerrilla-style government? Why are we forcing legislation through without proper consultation? Why can't we take a moment to step back and give those that need to be heard an avenue to do so? Why is it so negative to listen to Albertans?"

Landowners are giving a resounding thumbs-down to many areas of Bill 2, areas such as the makeup of and selection process for the board. Why does this government want to return to a system where they'll be called out on all parts of this bill that are flawed? Do we as legislators really want to proceed knowing that the board will be a hand-picked group, that this board will not be made up of a variety of stakeholders, that the board will not include landowners and property rights groups? I don't think so. We need to get this bill right. We cannot go forward pushing through another Bill 50.

Bill 2 has made some progress. The intent is right, the ideas solid, and there's an opportunity to ensure that this is not another Bill 50 debacle. The Wildrose wants to work with the government to ensure that this bill is a solid piece of legislation that respects all parts that are party to this bill.

Madam Speaker, I appreciate that the government is trying to do something to help industry with project approvals. I do not believe that Bill 2 is doing those things. I do not believe that permitting Bill 2 to go forward to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship will harm this bill in any way.

Bill 2 does not ensure that there is proactive informing of affected landowners and prevents them from guaranteeing their right to a hearing, which is part of the licensing process as is currently the case with the ERCB. Would it really harm us to listen to those stakeholders in committee and have them explain what this is doing, not just a one-off of who in whose riding? We all have somebody in our riding who will benefit from our argument. Why not bring them to committee so that all parties can have the benefit of that conversation?

The Wildrose will be proposing significant amendments, which could make this bill effective for all. I'm looking forward to an environment of bipartisan co-operation amongst all parties to ensure that the best interests of all parties are considered. We have an opportunity to do the right thing here. Let's work together and ensure that this bill is sent to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship. Let's let our legislators do what the public expects of us, and that is to review, consult, and create proper legislation that protects landowners, environment, and industry. Let's work together and put Albertans first.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing that there are no members who wish to speak under that, I will proceed to our next speaker, the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

10:10

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak in favour of the amendment. I'm sure that the government must be baffled by the fact that we from the loyal opposition have all stated that we're in favour of this bill, that we want to see this bill get through, yet we're speaking about amendments and things that would appear to be designed to delay the process. We want to accelerate the process, and we want to eliminate red tape. We've been elected on a platform of helping to reduce and eliminate red tape.

I think we need to remember that just because we say that something is so, clearly, doesn't make it so. We say – and we've heard it said this evening – that you've listened to stakeholders, that there's been this two-year process of determining how to best address the needs of all the stakeholders: the environment, the energy companies, and the landowners. If you've been listening, you haven't been hearing. In our experience the landowners are very concerned, and those who advocate for the landowners are very concerned, whether it's some of the lawyers who have made a name advocating for landowners against the prior flawed bills that have been mentioned numerous times this evening or whether it's surface rights companies and experts who advocate on behalf of landowners who feel their rights are being ignored or trampled on through the bills that have been passed. Their concern is with this bill, and it's a legitimate and genuine concern.

We can be skeptical and cynical and say that we're trying to make hay out of this, but we're in favour of this bill. We want it to happen. We want our energy companies to have a streamlined way to get approval more quickly so that we can be competitive with neighbouring jurisdictions like Saskatchewan. I never thought I'd live to see the day when I would be looking to the people's republic of Saskatchewan, which is no longer the case, I hasten to add, and having them leading us, showing us how we should be behaving and how we should be treating our industry, but we have unfortunately deteriorated to that point.

It's because we've had these overwhelming majorities that give the party in office the sense that they are receiving divine direction, that somehow being in the majority means that you always get it right and that you don't need to consult, and you don't need to listen to the weaker members in the equation, the landowners in particular, who have in fact elected most of the opposition because they feel that their rights aren't being adequately represented, that their voice isn't being heard. They want that voice heard, and I think you want to send them the message that you do hear them.

I hear it said so often. We've listened to Albertans. I don't see evidence that you've heard all Albertans, and just because you have the majority doesn't mean the minority's interests should be trampled on. Your responsibility in government is to represent all Albertans equally, and there are landowners who don't feel that they're being adequately represented. They're calling us, and they're e-mailing us, and they're very concerned about this. When we speak in favour of this amendment, it's so that we'll get this right.

All of us surely know that it's easier to do things right the first time than it is to remediate, to have to do them again and again. As our Opposition House Leader mentioned, for all the effort and time that's been spent on trying to rectify the mistakes of the past with the bills that we're currently laboring under, our constituents, at least, feel that they aren't being properly represented. Just because you can do something doesn't mean you should. Just because something is legal doesn't mean it's moral or ethical.

There's great benefit in listening to the collective wisdom of the people in Alberta, even the weakest members of this equation, those stakeholders who are the landowners, who feel under-represented, who feel unlistened to. If you want their buy-in on this, you've got to let them feel like they've been heard and send them some signals in your behaviour, not just your words, that you've really heard them and that you understand their concerns and that you're prepared to make the changes that they feel are essential to address their legitimate needs.

Property rights are real, whether they're enshrined in the Canadian Constitution or in our own Constitution. There's a great tradition in history, in English common law that says this is so. When we deviate from the wisdom of the past, we generally are on a path that will lead us to more problems.

It seems to me that over the past few years in Alberta we have a history of changing from something that worked to something that sounds good, and that's the wrong way to go. I think that in some senses there's a little bit of an aspect of that with this bill. So I really think it could benefit from having a really open consultation in a committee, where you've got a good representation of the elected members so that the needs and interests of the minority stakeholders in this would be protected and respected.

We know that a benevolent dictatorship is the most efficient form of government. Get a benevolent dictator, and you can run things really smoothly, and most of the people are going to benefit from it. Now, that's a fact. Think about it. But I don't believe a legislative dictatorship can ever be benevolent because we're flawed human beings, so we do need the collective wisdom.

I want to talk about the difference between efficient and effective. A benevolent dictatorship would be efficient. But what's the difference between efficient and effective? Sometimes those words are used interchangeably. I submit to you for your consideration that they are not interchangeable.

I'll tell you a story that illustrates it if I may. A company in Brazil gets a contract to build a water line to a village whose water supply has been contaminated. They send out the initial party to recruit a labour force from the villagers that surround this project. They look for people with strong right arms, that are good machete wielders, can really have an efficient stroke and can really cut well. They get this organized. They train the machete wielders. They've got girls that are massaging their aching, tired muscles so that they can work efficiently. They've got sharpeners that are sharpening these machetes so that they're ready to go. The minute they get dull, they can give another machete there. They've got salt tablets and all the things they need and fresh water so that they can be really, really productive.

Now, the president of this corporation flies out to see how they're doing. The pontoon plane lands in the river, with bearers taking him to the site. He sees all this activity, he sees these machete wielders working so efficiently, and he's just so proud of the managers that are there running this project. He climbs the highest tree in the jungle and gets out his binoculars to see how close they are to the destination, the water source, and he can't find it. He looks around, and he is shocked. He shouts down to his workers, "Wrong jungle," and they shout back: "Shut up. We're making good time."

Well, I submit that making good time by passing this bill may be efficient, but it ain't effective.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) any questions, comments?

Seeing none, we'll move to our next speaker. Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am honoured to stand and speak in favour of the amendment and speak to Bill 2 and, you know, the fact that a single regulator, this one-stop shop, is actually coming at the expense of landowners, the environment, First Nations groups, and the public interest. Some of my colleagues have said that this bill only requires a little bit of tweaking. I disagree. I think this bill requires a heck of an overhaul. There are groups that will not benefit from having a single regulator and from the bill as it currently stands.

I'll start with talking about environmental responsibility. It's unclear what the environment is actually going to gain under this new bill. It seems that the environment is one of the groups that are going to lose out. The fact that the regulator is going to report to the Minister of Energy but not to the minister of the environment raises some concerns to the environmental community, the fact that it leaves out long-standing concerns and problems related to energy projects and environmental effects. There's a bit of a conflict of interest going on here when you've got one board that's looking at both environmental interests and energy interests. The fact that the regulator would perform its own review processes without the input of the Environmental Appeals Board has numerous consequences, and I'll talk about it a little bit more when I get to the adverse effects this bill will have on landowners and their own rights.

It's unclear if third parties and environmental organizations are even able to appeal decisions of the regulator. As well, the regulator is not directly accountable to the public interest. In other words, environmental effects will not be reported directly to the public but via the ministry. Environmental groups such as the Environmental Law Centre have stated that they feel the bill is stacked in industry's favour. Another issue many environmental groups have is the fact that the regulator will not report any pipeline spills to the department of the environment. It's unclear if the department of the environment will even be notified of the pipeline spills. This is a change from the current environmental conservation resources board, undermining their authority.

The bill does not state that any members of the regulatory board need to have environmental expertise. So when we're looking at, again, who is going to be sitting on the board for the regulator, members don't necessarily need to have an environmental background at all. That's troubling for a board that's going to be responsible for all the aspects of environmental monitoring. Nobody knows how many people and what type of experience and expertise the regulator will employ to assess environmental effects of the energy projects. Many environmental groups have contacted my own caucus, the Alberta NDP caucus, to indicate their concerns with the bill as it currently stands.

When we move to landowner rights, there are other members from across the aisle who have said that this actually strengthens their rights. I think many landowners would actually feel insulted at that comment. The fact that many of their rights are actually being railroaded is more of an appropriate way of referring to it. You know, giving the new regulator unilateral ability to decide whether landowners get any notice of developments near their property or if they have a right to a hearing or other participation doesn't sound to me like it's ensuring that their rights stay protected. I mean, repealing the Energy Resources Conservation Act takes away their right to learn about any energy project proposals and produce statements of concern in response.

If we compare the current ERCB process to the new regulator's process, the differences are actually quite shocking and alarming. We look at section 26(2) from the Energy Resources Conservation Act as it currently stands.

If it appears to the Board that its decision on an application may directly and adversely affect the rights of a person, the Board shall give the person

- (a) notice of the application,
- (b) a reasonable opportunity of learning the facts bearing on the application and presented to the Board by the applicant and other parties to the application,
- (c) a reasonable opportunity to furnish evidence relevant to the application or in contradiction or explanation of the facts or allegations in the application,
- (d) if the person will not have a fair opportunity to contradict or explain the facts or allegations in the application without cross-examination of the person presenting the application, an opportunity of cross-examination in the presence of the Board or its examiners, and
- (e) an adequate opportunity of making representations by way of argument to the Board or its examiners.

That whole section will be condensed.

Under landowner rights in Bill 2, notice of application, section 31: "The Regulator shall on receiving an application ensure that notice of the application is provided in accordance with the rules." As is plain to see, that's quite a difference between the two different bills, in what was protecting landowners and giving them an opportunity to ensure that their voices are heard, that their rights are protected to receiving a notice of application in accordance with the rules. As well, the current bill removes the right of a landowner to go before the Environmental Appeals Board. I know my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has indicated that in his endeavours and consultations with many landowners that's a major issue, and we're completely in agreement on that.

The third area where this bill fails is in the public interest test and ensuring that the public interest is protected. The current bill makes no mention whatsoever of public interest with regard to energy development. The ERCB, which will soon be dissolved, was committed at least to the public interest. The public interest is essential to responsible energy development and should be enshrined in the mandate of the regulator to ensure that its conduct reflects the best interests of Albertans. As it stands, the bill currently emphasizes resource development over the public interest.

Other colleagues of mine from the opposition side have indicated that there should be more of a balance, where we're not just looking at one group versus another. Our fear and my fear is that the public interest is going to be sidelined or diminished or replaced by looking after only one of the other groups' interests. The Energy Resources Conservation Act provides a section that enshrines the public interest as a commitment of the soon to be dissolved Energy Resources Conservation Board. Since the ERCB will soon be dissolved and the new regulator will take over much of the ERCB's roles and responsibilities, it's also crucial that the regulator be similarly committed to the public interest. As it stands, as I said, our fear, my own fear is that the public interest is not taken into consideration, is not given a voice, is not given the appropriate avenues to ensure that they're consulted.

The fourth group that I feel very concerned about is the lack of responsibility that this government has taken regarding the consultation of First Nations stakeholders. The current bill includes a caveat under section 21 that states that the Alberta energy regulator has no jurisdiction to assess the adequacy of Crown consultation with regard to rights associated with aboriginal treaty rights protected under part II of the Constitution Act of 1982. The bill must ensure that the new regulator takes responsibility for ensuring applicants have adequately consulted aboriginal peoples according to their current treaty rights. Deferring to the Constitution Act is not good enough because the responsibility for development of energy resources in Alberta falls under provincial jurisdiction.

The regulation of this development will, according to this bill, fall to a single regulator. The bill, as it stands, places responsibility with the regulator when it comes to hearings, decisions, and appeals with regard to energy resource activities. It also places responsibility with the regulator when it comes to the communication of decisions under section 33(2). Therefore, it stands to reason that the adequate communication and consultation of applications to aboriginal peoples should be ensured before decisions are made.

Alberta's First Nations Consultation Guidelines on Land Management and Resource Development, which came out on November 14, 2007, states that it "acknowledges a duty to consult with First Nations where Alberta's actions have the potential to adversely impact treaty rights." The Department of Energy should ensure that the spirit of this commitment is enshrined in Bill 2 despite the regulator not being an official agent of the Crown. Currently under section 21 it brusquely shrinks its responsibility to engage with aboriginal peoples by deferring to the Constitution Act of 1982. Although this section may be legitimate according to jurisdictional responsibilities, it sends a negative message to First Nations groups and communities who very likely will be affected by many of the decisions proposed by the regulator under this bill.

The regulator should therefore take responsibility to ensure that all consultations and communications have taken place when it comes to energy projects as defined within Bill 2. Again, you know, just because jurisdictionally the government can say, "Well, no, that belongs to our federal counterparts," there's an ethical responsibility, a moral responsibility to ensure that the government is looking at ensuring all groups are consulted and included and part of this process.

Unfortunately, where the bill is, as it stands, it doesn't go far enough, and many of these groups are going to be left without a voice and have projects that will be forced upon them. So it is my position and that of my caucus that this bill clearly falls flat on many different accounts. As I said earlier, some major revisions need to occur before I and we can endorse the passing of this bill. I'm very interested and curious to see some of the amendments that my colleagues from the other parties are going to be putting forward on this bill and hope that we can come to some kind of arrangement which will benefit all the different parties, especially the four stakeholder groups that seem to be left out as the bill currently stands.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

10:30

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Before we continue, I would just remind the hon. members that we are speaking on the amendment. The amendment is to move the bill into a committee, so please make your comments relevant to the amendment.

We have Standing Order 29(2)(a). On 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was wondering if the member would comment. It was mentioned here earlier in the debate about some deceitful interpretations of not just this amendment but the bill itself, and that reference was extended to a number of different other bills also. I was wondering if this member would comment on that observation, with particular reference to a meeting that his leader attended in Vegreville in August 2010.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, and I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre for his question. That meeting that you speak of, that happened in 2010 in Vegreville, was attended by the leader of the Alberta NDP, Brian Mason [interjection] – forgive me – by the leader of the Alberta NDP and Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

At that meeting, as it's been explained to me, there was quite a crowd, roughly 700 people from the area, who were quite upset – the discussion at the time was on Bill 36 – many, many upset landowners and folks in the area. If I recall, the Premier at the time showed up at this debate that was attended, I believe, by the leader of the Wildrose and, as I said, the leader of the Alberta NDP. The Premier showed up at the door but would not go into the hall attended by roughly 700 people because of the outrage that was being expressed at Bill 36 and at how, again – I used this analogy earlier – landowner rights were being railroaded.

You know, I honestly hope that the government will listen to amendments that are put forward and truly consult with the different stakeholders around the province on this bill. I don't feel that they have. I mean, there are plenty of examples of the different groups who have expressed their concern, their dissatisfaction with this bill as it stands. If we want to make progress, if we want to move forward, then this needs to be done right, and there needs to be quite an overhaul on the current Bill 2 as it stands.

I'll thank the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre again for his question. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any other members under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Little Bow on the amendment.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Again, thank you for giving me the chance to speak to the amendment of Bill 2, letting this be referred back to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship. I guess the reason I'm speaking on this amendment: I think that's how this House should be doing some business on issues like this. I think we have quite a few lists of things that we'd like to see done to this bill, and I think if we went back to that, it would allow all members to be able to talk on it.

In saying that, I think democracy brought us all here, not minding which party we came from. I think we should let democracy move forward and listen to all the people affected by this. We could do that in that committee, where they could actually draw people out, cross-examine them, bring them out for information, so we can actually get some better results and some better answers for this bill. On that note, I think that the Minister of Human Services stated that it took two years to get to this point. I understand, and I truly appreciate all the work that the government has done on this bill because they identified that there were some issues that needed to be done and how to streamline some red tape and such.

The point is that in the previous two years leading up to that, there were a lot of different players in this House on both sides of the floor, whether it be in an opposition or in a government role. There are definitely a lot of new faces around here that weren't here two years ago when this process started. I think, in saying that, we need to, you know, appreciate the process, why there are new people around the floor, and what a lot of people talked about during election time, of some change and some different ways and means to come around for answers on this.

This goes back to, again, what this amendment does: taking it back to the standing committee so that everybody on that committee, which has all parties on it, can sit around and – I find that committees always have a little better debate in them and a little looser debate because everybody sometimes seems to drop their party partisanship when they're sitting around and talking about things in the committee state. I think it's a more relaxed forum, and I think, again, we can pull people from the outside, and you can actually question them at the end of the table on their thoughts on it. I mean, my colleague from Banff-Cochrane had some great points on these things that we can do if we have the right people in there and you draw from the right people for these things. It'll go a long ways.

I'll say another thing. I think we all ran on the agenda for a better Alberta. As our leader from Highwood has stated, to do this right, let's listen to all the people that are affected and get this right the first time. We're sitting here. We've rehashed quite a few bills already this fall. I mean, by no means is it the fault of anybody. When the government writes bills, I think they do it with the best intent, and I think that when things have been identified after it's been out and running for a little while, you see what is and isn't working in it.

I think, from an opposition stand, anyways, we see some things already that we think could be identified. Our critic and the Energy minister could sit down and hash out some of these things and try to make some amendments to this bill so that we're not sitting here talking until all hours of the night about each amendment we bring up, you know, instead of sitting here and just locking heads all the time on these things, sit down and rationally look at some ideas on whether they would work or wouldn't work. Personally, it doesn't bother me which party says that they came up with the idea. I think it's what's better for everybody. Down the road, in all honesty, I don't think it's a big problem.

If we could save having this debate on this bill two years from now about things that we identified now, that we'd all have to bring back to the table, that we'd all have to bring back in another bill and another committee meeting, I think this would be a great time to put it to, you know, the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship because I think it's one of the committees that would work well on it. I commend the government for coming up with these committees because they've identified a lot of things that can and can't work, and I think this is one of them that is working. I think this is a key one.

We have new committees since we've started this new sitting in April that have a group of very well-trained – 87 different ideas from 87 different ridings of what could work on these things. I think the reason for having these committees is just for that, so I feel we'd be stalling democracy quite a bit by not letting it go to committee. I guess it's the debate of that. I mean, that's the intent of this amendment, to let that stewardship committee actually deal with it and look at it. Again, I'll say that the key to that committee and all the committees we have in this Legislature is that you can actually draw people to them and talk to them.

Personally, I think we owe it to our constituents, the taxpayers, to get this bill right the first time, you know, instead of sitting here and locking heads all the time. I think Albertans expect this from all of us in this House, to be able to rationally look at some ideas. I agree that we're not all going to see them perfectly the same, but there are some things that I think we're so close on. We're not against this bill. I'm personally not against this bill. I think it has some great places to go in it. I think it just needs some tweaking in some of its wording, and it would calm a lot of nerves if some of that was looked at. I mean, I've played in the sandbox a long time, my whole life. I know that I'm not always going to get what I want, and sometimes the other people you're playing with don't always get what they want, but if you can sit down and rationally decide about it, I think it brings a lot to the table when we do that.

I think this goes back to why this amendment – and I'm speaking for this amendment. I think that if we throw it back in front of the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, they can come out with a lot of great answers which would help this House.

I think that the concept of having these committees is to let a committee come up with some ideas and bring them back to this House. I mean, there are lots of ideas that I've heard committees have talked about that I'm sure I'm not going to be a big fan of, but you've got to let democracy play its role. I think that's what we've all been elected to do here, to listen to each other and let it go through the process.

I'll finish by saying that I'm speaking in favour of this amendment to send it to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Anyone under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing no one, I'll recognize the Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I also rise today to speak on this amendment to Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act, that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, even though it doesn't appear to have a whole lot of government support. It is very important for members of this Assembly to engage in debate in order to ensure that the intent of a piece of legislation actually becomes the legality of the same piece of legislation. The intent of a bill can be honourable and well meaning, but if the legislation is flawed, good intentions mean nothing.

Madam Speaker, I think this bill is a very good starting point, but as has been mentioned over and over, it does need some rework. I think that what we're finding out here in tonight's back-and-forth is that government has enjoyed pointing out the strengths of the bill, predictably. They have put a lot of time and energy and effort into this. We also know the strengths of the bill. That's not why we're debating this. We're actually standing up here challenging the weaknesses that we've found and that we're trying to point out. It's the weaknesses of the bill that are preventing this bill from going forward to be a stronger, more effective, more efficient bill the first time it leaves the gate.

I realize – and I think most of us do – that the government is made up of adults, so they're certainly more than capable of speaking their minds and voting as they wish, but in hearing some of the conversations tonight, it was mentioned that consultation has been done over two years or two-plus years to develop the current bill. Honestly, are we dealing with current information, or are we dealing with information that is no longer current or somewhat current or that needs to be revisited? As was mentioned by my friend the Member for Little Bow, there are new players on the stage. There are people who have found out that it is important that they get involved in the process. Again, what was good two years ago or the process over the last two years: is it current? Is it actually what we need to deal with?

Also, if we members in opposition have found so many issues for which to bring forward amendments after only recently receiving this bill, how can the members on the government side feel confident that their constituents really approve of everything in this bill as it currently reads? We've heard back and forth: "This is what our stakeholders have told us. This is what they want. This is what they said." Well, if that's taking a bit of this stakeholder here and a bit of this stakeholder there and this one over here over the period of two-plus years, the final product may read very differently than what individuals thought their points were when going into this process. Like I say, if the opposition has pointed out the need for this many amendments, I'm sure that the constituents of the government MLAs probably are having maybe not second thoughts but are a little curious about how this is all going to play out.

Madam Speaker, this could be a huge opportunity for the advancement and improvement of this bill, but it's kind of turning into a case of he said, she said. The problem with that is that the stakes are so high for this province, for the taxpayers, for landowners, for the environmental groups, and for the resource industry folks. Are we really willing to gamble on passing this bill as it currently sits? Even with just some minor tweaks it might not be enough. You know, I think that's a question that every member has to ask themselves.

The idea of having conversations while looking in a mirror alongside your close friends is not really consulting stakeholders. It would be interesting to find out who all was consulted on this. As I said and as other people have said as well, there have been some new players come to the forefront. You have some new members that are representing different constituencies for a number of reasons, and I think that the game has changed over the last couple of years.

I think, most interestingly, passing this legislation in its current form certainly does bode well for those of us in opposition because we are actually trying to raise the issues of the landowners, the resource companies, the environmentalists, and, as was mentioned, the First Nations and the taxpayer. I think there are some warranted reasons to send this to committee. I think there could be some great consultations and conversations had there with experts, which is what everybody has been asking for because it's been stated that, you know, most of us are not experts in this field, and we need to defer to them. I think that that is another valid point.

I just want to ask the government members to please consider the comments that all of us make in opposition. Your decision could not only have an effect on all Albertans going into the future, but it also could affect your future as well. I just want them to make sure that they're very confident in the way they're going to vote and support this bill and the possible amendments.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

We'll move to the next speaker, the hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. I, of course, will speak in favour of this amendment, Madam Speaker, a shocking surprise for those listening at home. You know, this is kind of like a bad record, a bad movie, reruns that you see on TV. We've seen this movie somewhere before.

You know, I remember some very good folks in this Legislature. I think of Minister Hayden and Minister Berger, Minister Danyluk, Minister Morton: good men, people that I believe believed in property rights and still do believe in property rights and protecting landowners. I remember each of them. In fact, there were very few people that spoke more than them on these property rights bills – Bill 50, Bill 36, and Bill 19, Bill 24 – and they're not here today. The reason that they're not here today – there are several reasons. Primarily, one of the largest reasons is because of their continual, I would say, kind of grinding in, so to speak, or sticking to their theory that there was nothing wrong with bills 50, 36, 19, 24, that they were fine.

They would stand in this House over and over again, and they sounded very much like the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville earlier. "Don't be deceived, Albertans," they would say. "Don't be deceived by these lawyers in silk suits." I remember that one being used by Minister Morton several times. "Don't do that whatever you do. They're not telling the truth." Instead of listening to his constituents, instead of listening to their constituents, they continued to push out this line. Frankly, you know, you can argue whether they were wrong or right until you're blue in the face. They had some good arguments on why things should have been a certain way, but the point is that they weren't listening to their voters. That was the problem.

You can feel you're right or wrong all you want. You can stand and say: "You know what? We drafted this legislation. We're going to stick to our guns" or "I'm going to go to the dance with the one who brought me," that sort of thing. But at the end of the day you're here to stand up in this House and vote and represent your constituents. The problem with those folks as well as several others in here, especially in southern rural Alberta, is that they just continually over and over again would not listen to what their constituents were saying. Because of that, I think that was the largest reason that there are now 17 Wildrose MLAs over here after having zero Wildrose MLAs four years ago. From zero to four to 17.

Now, I guess we'll find out in four years if that's a flash in the pan or if a movement has started, but if the government wants to make sure that they have a chance of winning back some of those seats and holding back some seats in rural Alberta and other places from going to a different party, then they need to listen. They need to listen.

Now, in healthy, functioning democracies – and our democracy is sometimes functioning, oftentimes not all that functional at all – in the Westminster system we have committees. We have all-party parliamentary committees, and these committees will examine legislation, the final product of legislation that's brought forward, and they will take a look at this legislation. They will comb over it with a fine-toothed comb. They will bring in stakeholders, they will ask for input from their citizens, and they will make sure that they get the legislation right. It's not enough just to consult.

You know, for all the folks in here, and there are many, many in here, that have written papers and perhaps theses – we have a few doctors in here or folks with doctorates and so forth, or they've written a paper or an article or something like that and have had it published – first, you do your research. You do your ground research. You look everything up. You go to the library, go online, get all the information. You talk to experts in the area and so forth. You get all that research together, and you come up with a draft. You come up with a draft of what you think that paper should look like. Now, you don't just hand in that first draft. You don't do that. You make sure that you take the draft, just to make sure that the stakeholders didn't... [interjection] Well, the Government House Leader is the exception to that rule. He handed in his first drafts and did very well. We all know he's brilliant. Point taken.

But for us mere mortals – for us mere mortals – we take the first draft, and we send it back to folks that we trust the opinion of. We send it to experts in that field. "Okay. What do you think? Did I miss something here? We consulted with you earlier, but did I misinterpret what you told me, and have I put something incorrect in here?" That's what you do. Then after getting feedback from these folks, you build a completed document that you're happy with, and you hand that in. That's your final draft. That's what you are willing to put your name to.

Now, what we have here in Bill 2 is a first draft. There's been a lot of good consultative work. No one is taking anything away from the minister of SRD and what she has done with regard to consultative work. Great job. That's part of the process. No doubt about it. She has come back with a draft, and it's a good draft, but there are a lot of flaws in that draft. It's not to say that the majority of it isn't good. It is. We agree with a lot of the things that many of the members around here have talked about, but there are many parts of it that for whatever reason perhaps were overlooked or missed or could have been worded better or more clearly.

That's what these committees are for. They're to take that first draft – and what we see in, for example, places like Ottawa is that with drafts like that those bills will go to committee. They'll dissect it. They'll talk about it for months sometimes, and then they'll come back with amendments, and off we go. What you will have at that point is a much better piece of legislation.

I might add that it's good politics, that it's fantastic politics for the government to get the legislation right the first time and to have not just input but buy-in from the Official Opposition and from all opposition parties. It makes sense; everybody wins. We get a good bill. Everyone is happy. There aren't tours going around rural Alberta with folks in silk suits, so to speak, running around talking about property rights and how these bills are going to damage those property rights. It's good politics to get it right the first time.

We're offering an olive branch. I mean, my competitive side in here says: "You know what? Jeepers." If I didn't care about getting this right, I would say: I hope the government just totally rams this through without making any changes because this will give us something to beat them over the head with, a baseball bat, for the next four years. You know, I kind of like the sound of that.

Mr. Denis: Violence.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. It's a metaphor.

But what we're offering here is not a baseball bat. We're offering an olive branch. Against everything in my body we're offering an olive branch to the folks opposite to say: "Let's do this together. Let's make sure that we get it right." In return for having that mutual feedback and respect and going through a proper process, we're going to come back with a bill. After it's passed, we're not going to talk about it other than to say that it was a good bill.

I'm sure the government will talk about it all the time. "Look how wonderful we were. We worked across the aisle. Look how responsible we are." That's great. It's all a hundred per cent positive for the government. As the opposition we'll feel that we've done our job. We've made sure that concerns of Albertans have been listened to, the bill has been amended, everyone is happy, and we can all, you know, have a camp fire, hold hands, sing Kumbaya. It's going to be just great. Imagine the possibilities.

My fear, from the comments that I've heard today from the government side, is that it's the exact same language, verbatim, that the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville and others have used, the same language, verbatim, that was used two years ago in this House and for two years over and over and over again regarding these land bills. It was always: "You know, you guys are misinterpreting. It's not our intention. It's this. It's that. It's the other thing."

It doesn't matter. What matters is getting a bill that the vast majority of people can support both in this House and, by extension, in Alberta because we all represent the folks out there. They got 43 or 44, whatever it was, per cent of the vote. We got 34 per cent of the vote. That together, right there, is almost 80 per cent of folks that voted. Imagine if we could put out a piece of legislation that 80 per cent of the folks out there who voted for both parties were happy with. That's just fantastic. What a change that would be. What a great thing that would be to have, especially with regard to landowner rights.

So the question is: why do we need to put this into committee? Well, because there are a lot of amendments, and we've done the best we can in a few days. We're going to propose some amendments, 12 amendments in fact, but this is just what we've come up with in a few days, in a handful of days, literally having our researchers – amazing – going around and around the clock researching these amendments. We've brought in at least three or four lawyers; I know that's a bad thing here.

Mr. Denis: No, it's not.

Mr. Anderson: Well, there you go. I agree there, hon. Solicitor General.

We brought in a whole bunch of folks that specialize in property rights, including the aforementioned Mr. Wilson to comment on the bill, to give us his opinion on it, that sort of thing, but others as well. We've put it out to landowner groups. We've talked to many in the industry about it, and they've given us a couple of fantastic ideas as well to make it even stronger. We've had a couple of environmental groups come in and talk to our critic and our leader on this. But that's the best we can do in a few days. We need more time because we want to make sure that we get it right.

11:00

Yeah, we can make some amendments in Committee of the Whole, and the bill will be better than it otherwise would be. In Committee of the Whole we can turn this from a C bill into a B bill if we put it into the standing policy committee chaired by the fantastic Member for Calgary-Varsity, one of the most thoughtful people, certainly, in this Legislature. If we can put this in her capable hands along with our deputy chair from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, I really think we're going to get an A on this paper, and that's what I think Albertans deserve. They deserve an A, an A-plus, and I think we can do that rather than rushing this legislation through.

Because we're not going to comment on the amendments right now, I will say that, clearly, there are some landowner rights that have been eroded in this bill. There is no doubt about it. There have been others that have been strengthened in this bill, but there's no doubt that there are several instances in this bill where landowners have a right to be worried about certain processes that have been taken away. I will absolutely say that there were improvements to other parts of the process, and that's the whole point. They got parts right, but they didn't get other parts right.

I think the biggest reason we need to send it to committee, frankly, is because the whole point of this bill was to streamline the process, to speed things up for industry. Well, Madam Speaker, there are no timelines in this bill. You don't just leave it to the regulator. Why doesn't this bill say: look, the process is going to take nine months; regulator, you make that work? You don't have to say yes in nine months. You can say no in nine months. But by nine months or six months or whatever the time frame is, within that period of time you are going to get a yes or a no or a maybe, you know, if you do X, Y, and Z, whatever it is.

That's what this bill was supposed to do, and it doesn't do that. It just kind of stuffs things together. That's great. We want one window. One window is good, but we can do much better than that, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: On 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was just wondering if the member would comment on his experience dealing with not just the landowners and property owners and those stakeholders but with industry with regard to how their input might be proposed if this did go to committee. Would industry, say, be compromising to accommodate landowner rights?

Mr. Anderson: I think it's a win-win. I really think we've got a chance for a huge win-win here. I don't think that the rights of landowners and the interests of industry are mutually exclusive. I think that they can work together. I think that they can both benefit. I think there's been a history of both benefiting and having, you know, a mutually beneficial symbiotic relationship with one another. I just don't think that this bill does the job in that regard because inadvertently in several areas it pits landowners against industry whereas if we have an open committee process – I mean, I think the folks in here know our parties well enough to know that we both care about landowners, that we're both pro industry folks, that we're very big fans of the energy industry. We know that about each other, so we're starting from a place of agreement in that regard.

Why don't we finish the job by coming together and putting out a piece of legislation that respects the rights of landowners entirely so that there's no reason for them to be up in arms and to have town halls across the province in every rural constituency? That's what will happen if we don't get the right amendments through here. Instead of doing that, why don't we come up with a piece of legislation we all support so that there will be no town halls? Landowners will be happy and will think the legislation protects their rights, and industry will be happy because they'll have a one-window regulator with specific timelines that are far shorter than what they're getting now. That would be a huge win-win.

The landowners want those timelines, too. The landowners don't like fighting this stuff for two, three, four, five years. They don't like that. It's just as annoying and expensive for them as it is for industry. Let's get a six- to nine-month window in legislation, make the regulator work within that confine of time, and then make sure that all property rights and landowner rights are properly respected in the bill.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

We still have two minutes under 29(2)(a). Anyone else?

Seeing as there are no others, do any other members wish to speak on the amendment?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 2 lost.]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any hon. members that would like to speak on Bill 2 in second reading?

I would ask the hon. Minister of Energy to close debate on the bill.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, we've had a very wide-ranging set of views shared across the floor here. I very much look forward to getting into Committee of the Whole so that we can see the specific suggestions that members from all sides of this House have to offer. I look forward to that constructive debate. With that, I call for the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I would like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 5 New Home Buyer Protection Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to the bill? The hon. Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Madam Chairman. It's a pleasure to present to committee today Bill 5, the proposed New Home Buyer Protection Act. I would like to thank all members who participated in second reading for their supportive comments. Bill 5 is an important piece of legislation that will protect new-home purchasers and make a real difference in the lives of Albertans and their families. You've heard me say this before: buying a home is one of the biggest purchases most Albertans will ever make.

On October 25 the Minister of Municipal Affairs introduced to the members of the Assembly a group of homeowners who've experienced significant loss due to construction issues in their homes. Bill 5 will help to ensure these kinds of stories never happen again. This legislation is about supporting Albertans and building stronger communities.

Part 1 is the home warranty protection coverage. Sections 6 and 7 will give Alberta the strongest new-home warranty in Canada by requiring coverage of one year on materials and labour, two years on delivery and distribution systems such as heating and plumbing, five-year building envelope coverage with the mandatory requirement that homebuyers be offered additional years of coverage, and 10 years on major structural components, meaning the main supports of the home such as foundations and framing. A home will not be able to be offered for sale or sold during the purchase period unless the warranty coverage is in place or there is a valid owner-builder authorization in place. The requirement in this act applies to all warranty providers currently operating in Alberta and any future warranty providers.

The Alberta new-home warranty program is a private, not-for-profit warranty provider which is not insurance-backed. However, recent amendments required this warranty provider to comply with all of the requirements of the Insurance Act that other warranty providers are required to comply with. This ensures a level playing field between warranty providers.

In addition to ensuring compliance, section 24(1) of the New Home Buyer Protection Act stipulates that a permit cannot be issued for a new home unless there is evidence that the home is registered with the registrar and home warranty coverage is in place. For single-family dwellings and the unit property of a condominium the coverage begins on either the date permission to occupy is granted or the date of the transfer of title.

In addition, a building assessment report is also required on the common property in condominiums. A building assessment report is developed by a qualified third-party engineer or architect and inspects the common property of the condominium. This will support condo corporations as they make decisions about the needs of the building.

Owner-builders. In this act we also recognize that some Albertans wish to build their own homes, Madam Chair. Owner-builders are exempt from the requirements of the act unless they sell their home within the first 10 years of the building of that home. This provides homebuyers with quality assurance for homes built by owner-builders and ensures owner-builders who regularly flip homes are held to the same standards as other builders. I know there was some discussion on this in second reading.

We've spoken to warranty companies about providing coverage to owner-builders who may find themselves unexpectedly needing to sell their home less than 10 years after completion. Warranty companies have indicated they will provide coverage. We anticipate they will conduct inspections. The cost of coverage would reflect their level of risk. Owner-builders will be informed that if there is any possibility they may sell before the 10-year period, they will be required to purchase a warranty before the sale.

[Mr. Amery in the chair]

Owner-builders also have the option to purchase a warranty at the time they build the home. Owner-builders will also be made aware of the additional cost they may be taking on if they choose not to purchase a home warranty at the time they apply for their permit, owner-builders' authorization.

The registrar is required to establish and maintain a publicly accessible registry. Municipal Affairs will develop an online warranty tracking system that will support compliance with the act and inform Albertans about their new-home purchase. The proposed New Home Buyer Protection Act allows a compliance officer to issue a compliance order for violations of the act. If a person violates the act and does not comply with the order, the registrar may impose an administrative penalty of no more than $100,000.

A concern was raised in second reading that these penalties seemed high. It is important to note that this is the maximum. For situations where a violation has resulted in significant financial benefit to the violator, we want to ensure we have appropriate mechanisms to fine those individuals. If someone has paid an administrative penalty, they cannot be charged with an offence for the same violation. These fines are consistent with other types of administrative fines in other legislation.

There will be an appeal board set up for individuals who may wish to appeal a decision of the registrar. This could include decisions regarding owner-builder authorization, compliance orders, and administrative penalties. If an individual is unhappy with a decision made by the appeal board, they can appeal to the courts. For more serious violations, where administrative penalties aren't appropriate, a Crown prosecutor can charge an individual with an offence. A judge would determine the amount of the fine up to $100,000 for the first offence, up to $500,000 for subsequent offences. A judge can also award restitution if someone has suffered loss as a result of the offence. Again, these penalties may seem high, but there are maximums that will be applied in extreme situations, perhaps involving repeat offenders who intentionally violate the law. These fines are also consistent with other legislation.

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

Program specifics will be contained in the regulations, which will be drafted in the spring of 2013. This approach will ensure a flexible and responsive program that can easily respond to Albertans' needs over time. Some items will be worked out in greater detail in the regulations, including specifics around manufactured and modular homes. Municipal Affairs has been working with this industry to determine how these requirements for warranty will intersect with the manufacturers' existing warranties. While most homes in Alberta are built to stand the test of time, if things do go wrong, this legislation gives homeowners strong protection to get their homes repaired.

Thank you very much, Madam Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. As this is my first time to speak on this bill, I was struck by one of those comments made by the hon. minister. He said, "consistent with other legislation," and that rang true to me. It brought back sort of the thinking as to how we got here and sort of why we got here.

We can just look at my constituency of Calgary-Buffalo, where we've had much angst and issue with home builders and home builders' warranties in condo construction. There have been, clearly, many structures that were put up that have not been built to stand the test of time. We have numerous condo buildings in Calgary-Buffalo that are currently having individuals suffer cash calls of $100,000, $200,000 merely to stay living in a home that they purchased, that they assumed was made up to standards, that had some ability to warrant the purchase price. Clearly, that has not been the case, and I've heard it time and time again in my office. Although I will applaud the government for finally coming out with this legislation, I'm reminded of that term "consistent with other legislation."

I will point out on that fact that in 1997 the B.C. government was faced with a problem. It was faced with the problem that was known as the leaky condominium scandal, that was occurring in downtown Vancouver and, actually, in places all over British Columbia. As they were going through much of this strife, home purchasers and condo purchasers were then left holding the bag, so to speak. They had no ability to hold someone to account for having bought a lemon, to use a car term even though it doesn't necessarily correspond with the house term. They saw this issue, and they moved ahead, in their wisdom, and they brought in protections for the B.C. consumers in 1997. The wheels of government in Alberta tend to maybe work slower than in other jurisdictions.

Okay. In 1997 Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition asked a question of this government: when are we going to bring in legislation to protect homeowners and condo purchasers in this province? Again, they were met with the usual derision, that sometimes occurs from a governing party, that there was no need for this type of legislation, that this was redundant, and that homeowners didn't need this type of protection here in Alberta. Some excuses were given that maybe our climates were different or something of that nature, that our building construction materials were different or our home builders may have been, in fact, different.

Okay. That was 1997. In 2001, then, you had the opposition again. They sensed that homeowners weren't being protected. There was a sense out there that they weren't. So you had a series of private members' bills from the opposition highlighting the concerns of home purchasers, condo purchasers who were not being covered by any legislation in this province. In fact, they were left at the whim of the marketplace, shall we say, at the whim of having no regulation in place, of having no rules or no standards, that our home builders were going to build homes or condos to some sort of standard that would be uniform across the board.

That takes us, finally, to 2008, when in this Legislature's wisdom we have an all-party committee. They go forth, and they do their work, and overwhelmingly at that time it comes back from that committee a report that was undertaken jointly by Alberta Municipal Affairs and the city of Calgary in 2008. It concluded that the system of construction and inspection was not performing adequately to protect the homeowner or condominium owner. This is in 2008.

Since that time we've seen homeowners and condo purchasers who have been hung out to dry, not in all cases but on many occasions, for buying lemons or buying condos or houses that were not built to any reasonable standards of construction.

Oftentimes when these home purchasers or condominium purchasers would try to get recourse from the developer or homemaker or the home builder in question, they would often find that there was no one to sue, that there was no company. If there was a company to sue, well, as soon as they sued, that company would close up shop, move on, or if they were looking for a company to sue to have some reasonable standards, well, that company had changed names.

Really, it was a system that was fraught with peril from at least 1997, when this government knew that there were problems happening in another jurisdiction, and for sure since 2008, when an all-party committee came back and gave that scathing report on what was happening to many people in this province. I guess that dovetails back to our earlier conversation on regulation. This is clearly regulation, okay? But there's a sense that sometimes regulation is put in to protect average Joe and Jane Albertan. Sometimes regulation is necessary. In my view, this bill goes some measure to putting some regulations in place to protect the Alberta consumer, and I think it's good regulation, good red tape, to use another word. Some may argue that this is just red tape to get in the way of what business does best. By all means, should it be excessive? Probably not. But is it necessary? Yes.

We've always got to remember that rules have to be in place to ensure that people are getting a quality product and that they're not being, for lack of a better term, scammed or hung out to dry. I think that because of this government's inaction for what I would say was 15 years, many people have been left hung out to dry. In my view, it was unnecessary. This government knew better and should have acted on it far quicker.

For what reason? Well, I can't be sure. Probably many people wouldn't have liked to see this regulation put forward. Does it add a cost to business? Of course it does, but sometimes adding costs is necessary to ensure that the marketplace is fair, reasonable, and that it doesn't leave people unprotected. I'd just leave that for people to consider. Sometimes regulation is necessary, and in my view in this case it is definitely necessary. It was necessary 15 years ago, and we should have been on it like other provinces were.

Consistency of legislation: I like that term brought up by the minister. We should have had consistency in legislation on this matter 15 years ago, when the problem was apparent to everybody but our government.

If I look at this bill, there are some things here that almost mimic a private member's bill that I did a year or two ago, and it's on protection for end users. The bill our party actually proposed was Bill 209, and it required mandatory insurance coverage for all new homes and condos, three years on deficits on materials and labour, five years on defects in the building envelope, and 10 years on structural deficits. So two out of three ain't bad. I think Meat Loaf said that in a song once. They actually got a couple of points there, so good for them.

We wanted to see establishment of a homeowner protection office, where these things could actually be enforced, where people could register their agreements and their dates. Is that regulation? Yeah, but it's also protection for the end user, protection that I think is necessary in this day and age.

We wanted to see a requirement that residential builders be licensed by the homeowner protection office so that residential builders could lose their licence if they contravene the act. This is somewhat contentious but, I think, in my view, somewhat important. We've had a system in place in Alberta, as I alluded to earlier in my speaking on this bill, where consumers have had nowhere to turn, no one to sue, no one to make them whole after buying a lemon. In my view, I'm not so certain this bill still covers that off. With no ability to register a residential builder or a condo builder, what is our means of, I guess, stopping them from starting a new company, moving on, and continuing to down this path? I know the hon. minister will tell me that they will never get insurance for running a business again, but I'm uncertain of that.

I have a feeling that many people will say that if they find themselves building a condominium structure that goes under, that is faulty, they will find a way to go bankrupt, leaving, again, no recourse for the people there, and they will find an ability to again go out and procure their craft. In my view, we have to do better than that. This is the single largest purchase that people will make in their lives. Many people use this as not only a place to live, but it's essentially their life savings. When they get to the end of their life, this is all they have. Really, it's a means to save for the future.

As we talked about earlier – everything is dovetailing here. Tonight we talked about pensions. Oftentimes, homes are people's pension, so we should recognize that and ensure that these things are being built up to snuff and allow people to get the ability to sue, the ability to get their money back, the ability to get some compensation when they've purchased a lemon.

I see that the hon. minister has implemented monetary penalties for anyone who contravenes the act. It sounds like they're relatively robust or more robust than the absence of any prior to that, but we'll see if this actually establishes some way for our industry to continue to build as well as the protections that people need.

The last thing we wanted was to establish a public registry of residential builders that lists their current licence status as well as any suspensions or monetary penalties imposed. Clearly, having our public be able to assess whether that business is viable, whether it's reputable, whether it has done good stewardship in the past is something, in my view, that is laudable and something that, especially on an investment of this size, we should look to pursue. Much of this is absent from the act, but I will say that it's at least a step in the right direction. Hopefully, home purchasers and condominium purchasers will be able to get some protection from this. I'm hopeful on the minister's point that people who do not live up to this new standard of home building will not be able to continue on with business as a matter of course if they, in fact, are producing substandard results for individuals who have purchased their home.

I'll applaud the new Minister of Municipal Affairs for this collective effort. I know that both are honourable men, and hopefully this will work for new-home buyers. I will just finish. This should have been brought in 15 years ago, not today. It would have saved a lot of people a lot of heartache, and in my view we would've still been in the construction boom we are, regardless of a little bit of regulation or red tape to protect the average Joe and Jane Albertan.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members? The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to move five amendments on this bill. I have the appropriate number of copies for every member in the House.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause for a moment while we distribute the amendment.

Mr. Bilous: Yes. One at a time.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. Hon. member, most of the members have the amendment if you'd like to go ahead, please.

Mr. Bilous: Madam Chair, forgive me; I'm newer to this. Would you like me to read out the amendment?

The Deputy Chair: Yes. If you'd like to, go right ahead.

Mr. Bilous: Okay. Wonderful. I move that Bill 5, the New Home Buyer Protection Act, be amended in section 28 by adding the following after subsection (1):

(1.1) Regulations under subsection (1)(e) shall be made no later than 6 months after the date this statute comes into force.

The Deputy Chair: We'll call this amendment A1. You can carry on.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you. This amendment proposes that government has six months from proclamation for regulations to be determined regarding building assessors and building assessment reports. Now, what's interesting about this is that currently the bill indicates that condominium coverage begins when a building assessment report has been completed. That's under section 1(1)(y)(ii) and section 3(4).

Interestingly, we do not yet know exactly what a building assessment report is. Let me just explain that section 28(1)(e) gives cabinet the responsibility for determining what a building assessment report is, what kind of documents it contains, who a building assessor can be, the qualifications they must have, and the person or office to whom such reports are to be submitted.

Moreover, my office asked the researchers at the Legislature Library to find existing references to building assessors or building assessment reports that exist in Alberta legislation or in regulations. They could find no examples of existing references to these terms. In short, a grave concern and the question is: what is a building assessment report? We still don't know the answer to that. So, colleagues, part of the reason behind this amendment is that if we don't fix this uncertainty regarding building assessment reports, we'll be approving a major loophole that could permit the government to avoid making regulations in order to avoid requiring mandatory home warranty coverage on condominiums.

This amendment requires the government to make regulations pertaining to building assessment reports within six months of the proclamation so that all condominiums will be covered in the same manner as new homes. I think this amendment is definitely logical. It's putting parameters on these building assessment reports. Again, currently there's a loophole where there aren't any. We don't know even what they are. Without this amendment there is great concern that much can be done without, first, this clarification, so this proclamation puts a timeline on it.

So I will ask all members of this Assembly to seriously consider amendment A1. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think this is an amendment that really requires a lot of thought, so I would suggest that we move to adjourn debate so that we can all consider it thoughtfully over the course of the evening and come back to it tomorrow.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Hancock: Madam Chair, I move that the committee rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

11:40

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

Dr. Brown: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on Bill 5. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Having heard the report, all in favour say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: All opposed say no. Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:42 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 6, 2012

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us pray. Dear Lord, help us to always know what is true, what is pure, and what is just. Enlighten our minds and our hearts with thoughts of peace, respect, and freedom as we fulfill our commitment to serve others. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a dear friend of ours that's joining us in your gallery. A colleague of ours from the class of 2008, Doug Elniski is joining us in the gallery today. Many of the members here from the class of 2008 and prior know that his favourite slogan, that I think we worked together to develop, was: it's all in Calder. He's generously given it to me so that I can now say: it's all in the valley. Welcome our friend Doug Elniski.

Introduction of Guests

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise here today and introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly a school in my riding, the grade 6 class of Belgravia school. I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcoming of this Assembly. With them today are Mrs. Rosanna Hansen, Mrs. Lara McMillan, and Ms Kirsten Kinsella, the teachers, as well as Mrs. Barb Forbes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you today to all hon. members 115 grade 6 students from the Innisfail middle school in my constituency. Keeping this large group of students in line are 12 very patient parents and teachers. I'll read out their names: Mrs. Jill Neilson; Mr. Tom Stones; Mr. John Pierzchalski, who, by the way, taught me when I was a student; Ms Gloria Thompson; Mrs. Kari Fox; Mrs. Debbie Penner; Mrs. Charlotte Hagglund; Mrs. Carla Gabert; Mrs. Denise Bennett; Mrs. Diane Martin; Ms Ria Brown. I had the pleasure of meeting with them earlier this morning, and they had lots of questions about democracy and our role in this House. I would like to ask this fantastic group of future leaders to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly guests joining us from the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta. Dr. Trevor Theman is the registrar of the college. He has served in this role since 2005 and is a proud resident of this city. Joining him this afternoon is Barbara Krahn, communications adviser with the college. Later this afternoon I'll be tabling the annual report of the college, and I'm very pleased they are able to join us for the tabling today. I'd ask them to rise, and I'd invite all members to provide them with our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly four individuals whose programs are the most recent recipients of civil forfeiture funding. Yesterday I announced $1 million in funding for eight community projects focused on gang prevention. I had the great privilege of meeting these people and many other community leaders who are in Edmonton for the first meeting of the Alberta gang reduction network.

I ask each of you to rise as I introduce you: Dwayne Yellowknife, who is from Wabasca and represents the Wabasca gang reduction initiative; Mrs. Tracy Zweifel, who is from Peace River and represents the Sagitawa Friendship Society; Mrs. Janet Swampy and her daughter Taryn – Mrs. Sawmpy is from Hobbema and represents the healing life program; I had the privilege of listening to some of her stories earlier – Mr. Vaughn Daniels, who is from Morley and represents the Stoney Nation youth engagement strategy. Of course, finally, I want to introduce Mr. Gerald Lamoureux and Mrs. Carmen Parent with the safe communities initiative. I want to take this opportunity to thank all of them and the safe communities members for their exceptional work, and I ask the members to please give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Scott: Good afternoon, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two individuals from the Fort McKay Métis community. As the president of the Fort McKay Métis community Ron Quintal has helped establish a number of positive initiatives in the community such as the development of the five-year strategic plan, which outlines the main goals of the community, and the establishment of the Fort McKay Métis Group, that has helped fund community projects. Ron has volunteered with the community and the Métis Nation of Alberta and other local Fort McKay initiatives. I would ask that Mr. Ron Quintal, president of the Fort McKay Métis community, and Mr. Jeffrey O'Donnell, executive director, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly three people from the constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville. Two of these individuals have known me every moment of my life, so you can either blame them or thank them for the way that I am today. I am very pleased to have my mother and father here, Ann and Gordon Liske.

In addition, I am also pleased to have Sylvia Smith with us today. She womans our constituency office in Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville Wednesday to Friday. If they would all three rise and if we could greet them, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a very special person. He is committed to giving one hundred per cent to everything he does at school and in his personal life. Kind, thoughtful, and polite are a few words that best describe him. He is active in sports and an avid reader, taking after his Grandpa Brian and his granduncle, that being me. He is with the Innisfail school group, which was divided into two because of their size. I'm not sure that he is in the gallery as I'm speaking, but I would ask that Hayden Jacobs rise and be given the traditional welcome from this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly two individuals from Ironstone Resources. Ironstone is a proposed iron ore and vanadium mining project in my constituency, with over 650 million tonnes of compliant iron ore resources and 2.5 billion pounds of vanadium pentoxide that are ready for production. Ironstone is currently building a technology centre in Hines Creek to commercialize technology originally developed in the '70s by the Alberta Research Council. My guests are sitting in the members' gallery, and I apologize for having missed a meeting with them because of the Members' Services Committee being stretched out so much. I would like to ask the Ironstone president and CEO, Barry Caplan, and the vice-president of corporate development, David Thiessen, to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of guests who are members from the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. These workers represent nearly 90 licensed practical nurses, health care aides, housekeepers, and food service staff who've been locked out at Monterey Place in Calgary since June 26th. Their employer, Triple A Living Communities, receives a financial subsidy from this government. However, instead of giving these hard-working individuals the deal they deserve, Triple A has been paying wages up to 27 per cent lower than industry standards while padding their own bottom line. The Alberta NDP is proud to stand with these workers in their struggle.

I would now ask my guests to rise as I call their names and then receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly: President Guy Smith, Susan Slade, Crispina Bagtas, Rosalia Burguete, Lilia Roxas, Cleofe Gapasin, Bhupinder Gill, Elizabeth Lado, Maria Lemus, and Clarita Natividad. I'd ask all members to give them a warm welcome.

I have a second introduction, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guests Carissa Halton and two of her three children, Madi and Alistair. Until the end of last year Carissa worked as my executive assistant. Currently she is keeping busy with three wonderful children, Alistair being the latest addition, and volunteering on various projects to help with the renewal of the Alberta Avenue neighbourhood. Carissa also writes a regular blog called the Avenue Homesteader, in which she explores and promotes urban agriculture and sustainable living practices. I would ask Carissa, Madi, and Alistair to rise and also, through television, say hello to Lily, who's not here, and receive the warm traditional greetings of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Denise Baillie of Edmonton. Although she is not able to be here today, I would also like to recognize Rosanna Gullekson, one of my constituents from Cypress-Medicine Hat. Both of these women are strong and caring Albertans coping with MS. Both of these women want our health system to be even better and even stronger for the future, with more choice for Albertans afflicted with MS. These women do not just sit back and hope this will happen. They are speaking to Albertans and working hard to make sure that our system is improved and will be better for all for the future. With that, I'd ask that Denise wave – and thank you for standing – and that all members of the Assembly please give Denise the warm and traditional welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Francophone Education

Mr. Goudreau: Merci, M. le Président. J'ai aujourd'hui le grand plaisir de souligner le rôle joué par les écoles francophones de l'Alberta pour appuyer la réputation d'excellence de la province dans le domaine de l'éducation. L'Alberta est fière de compter parmi ses habitants une population francophone grandissante et dynamique qui continue d'enrichir et de renforcer nos communautés petites et grandes, rurales et urbaines.

La riche histoire linguistique et culturelle de cette population se reflète dans les 34 écoles qui, dans notre province, offrent des programmes d'éducation en français à près de 6,000 élèves. En plus de leur présence essentielle pour répondre aux besoins des élèves francophones et de leurs familles, ces écoles témoignent des normes élevées et de l'apprentissage axé sur les élèves qui ont fait connaître le système éducatif de l'Alberta dans le monde entier.

En 2010, par exemple, l'équipe de robotique de la classe de 8e année de l'école Joseph-Moreau a remporté le championnat de robotique provincial et a représenté l'Alberta au Smart Move World Festival, le concours international de robotique tenu à Atlanta. Nous pouvons tous être fiers de la manière dont ces élèves ont personifié l'esprit d'innovation et de créativité de l'Alberta dans le domaine des sciences et de la technologie.

Pour ma part, M. le Président, j'éprouve aussi une grande fierté à faire partie d'un gouvernement qui s'engage à ce que l'Alberta demeure un chef de file dans la présentation de possibilités d'apprentissage à la population francophone. Grâce aux investissements dans l'éducation consentis par le présent gouvernement, nous attendons avec impatience l'ouverture de quatre nouvelles écoles francophones en septembre 2014. Ces écoles, situées à Jasper, à Red Deer, à Airdrie et à Cochrane, offriront un milieu d'apprentissage moderne qui contribuera à préparer la réussite d'une nouvelle génération d'élèves francophones.

Merci, M. le Président.

[Translation] Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise today to highlight the important role of Alberta's francophone schools in supporting our province's reputation for excellence in education. Alberta is proud to have a growing and dynamic francophone population that continues to enrich and strengthen our communities, both large and small, urban and rural.

This vibrant linguistic and cultural history is embodied in the 34 schools that provide francophone education programs to nearly 6,000 students throughout our province. These schools are not only instrumental in helping to meet the needs of francophone students and their families; they also reflect the high standards and student-centred learning for which Alberta's education system has become known throughout the world.

In 2010, for example, the grade 8 robotics team from l'école Joseph-Moreau won the provincial robotics championship and went on to represent Alberta at the Smart Move World Festival, an international robotics competition held in Atlanta. We can all take pride in how these students exemplified Alberta's spirit of innovation and creativity in the field of science and technology.

Mr. Speaker, I am also proud to be part of a government that is committed to ensuring Alberta remains at the forefront of providing leading-edge francophone learning opportunities. Thanks to this government's investments in education, we can look forward to the opening of four new francophone schools in September 2014. Located in the communities of Jasper, Red Deer, Airdrie, and Cochrane, these new schools will offer a modern learning environment and help prepare a new generation of francophone students for success.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [As submitted]

The Speaker: Thank you.

I believe a courtesy translation copy is on everyone's desks.

Justice System Review

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, as we all now know, there's a wonderful and courageous Airdrie girl who was raped repeatedly for eight years only to have her case dropped because of delays in our justice system. Child sexual abuse, indeed sexual assault of any kind, is a heinous and awful crime. Many people may not know that 1 in every 3 girls and 1 in every 5 boys is sexually abused at some point in their life, primarily when they are young. Child sexual abuse is an evil epidemic that is more common than many of us understand.

Politicians often express outrage when such awful things occur, but outrage without action is meaningless and hollow. Mere outrage cannot bring back a victim's innocence. Speeches do not have the power to turn back time or bring about justice. But outrage that spurs righteous action: that is powerful.

We as MLAs cannot sit back on this issue any longer. Unlike the precious children who have been victimized so horribly, we have the power to do something about it, but we first have to be willing to admit there is a problem. Our justice system has lost the public's confidence. You don't have to take legal training to see that. Due to a lack of resources prosecutors are often forced into offering light-sentence plea deals or risk cases getting dropped because of delay, often resulting in mere months of jail time for violent sexual offenders and predators. In some cases like this one in Airdrie the charges are completely dropped, and it is not as rare as the Premier says it is.

This Airdrie case is a wake-up call that real changes are needed and needed now. Let's bring in an independent investigator from another province to talk to those involved in this case, assess whether we need more Crown prosecutors and what other steps can be taken to ensure this kind of outrageous miscarriage of justice does not happen again in our Alberta.

We have the power to do something about this, hon. members. The time for words is over. It is now time for us to act on behalf of those precious little ones, who cannot act for themselves.

Managing Extractive Industries

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Mr. Speaker, at your kind invitation I participated last week in a global dialogue with a dozen other Commonwealth parliamentarians, elected representatives from jurisdictions also dependent on extractive industry revenues. The goal of this exchange was to explore ways to strengthen parliamentary oversight of extractive industries to ensure that the benefits are shared across communities and across generations. Other participants included ministers of energy from Western Australia; Queensland, Australia; elected representatives of parliaments from Zambia, Nigeria, Ghana, two states in India, Trinidad and Tobago, Bangladesh, and Uganda; and someone closer to home, a member from Saskatchewan's Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, members of this Assembly and Albertans across this province are concerned with the best means to budget and manage extractive sector resources. We face several challenges: volatile commodity prices and markets, finite nonrenewable resources balancing investment in sovereign wealth funds with ongoing infrastructure and human needs. Many of my constituents in Calgary-Varsity ask questions about these issues, and these questions have been the focus of ongoing conversations with Albertans hosted by the President of the Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Not surprisingly, Alberta is not the only jurisdiction facing these challenges. At this seminar participants could share experiences in a practical and constructive manner, supported by experts from the IMF and Revenue Watch. I cannot in two minutes provide a full report on this dialogue. However, a document summarizing the insights of participants will be finalized later this month, and I will ensure that that document and other materials available are shared with the House's Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship and with any other interested hon. members.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Justice System Review

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It seems everything this government does needs to be investigated. The latest investigation required is because of a botched prosecution of a child abuser. He is free because of an overworked, understaffed Crown prosecutor's office – at least, that's what a lot of people are saying – but the Premier denies it. That's why we need a immediate, impartial, independent review rather than having her former department investigate itself. As the Premier pointed out yesterday, I'm no lawyer, but isn't it obvious to the Premier that you won't get the best result if the department investigates itself?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Like this member, I, too, was saddened by the recent events, and that's why I ordered an investigation into this matter last Thursday. Over the next two months if the investigation actually turns out that we require an outside prosecutor, an outside individual to come in, the investigation will indicate that. I have full confidence in this institution and also in the independence of the judiciary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's progress, but it's not enough. Once again we get different information in the Assembly than we do in the newspaper. The government insists that an internal departmental review is enough, but her office staff are now saying that they may need to go deeper. We agree that an investigation into multiple cases of botched prosecutions needs to be done properly, completely, and independently. Now, I'm no lawyer, so maybe the Premier can explain why it is that she is opposed to having an independent, impartial review now?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated in my previous answer, I have every confidence in the current investigation, and if we have to bring in any outside parties, that investigation will indicate such.

It's more important to note that justice is not just about justice. It's also about healing. Over the last five years our civil forfeiture office has put in $1.8 million of funding for victims, and I will proudly continue this regardless of the outcome of the investigation.

The Speaker: The hon. opposition leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Here in Edmonton we hear as well that it took 10 years to deal with the case of a police officer charged with using excessive force. His punishment was mitigated because of delays attributed to the Crown. Now, I'm no lawyer, but isn't it obvious to the Premier that there is something wrong that warrants an immediate independent, impartial investigation now?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is exactly, again, what we are doing. It is an immediate impartial investigation, and if there are outside parties that we have to bring in, that investigation will identify it. At the same time it saddens me, the lack of faith that some people in this Chamber have about our judicial system. I have full confidence in this review. Let's get to the bottom of it because one case – one case – is too many.

Ms Smith: Actually, we've now mentioned three cases, Mr. Speaker.

Health Services Expense Reporting

Ms Smith: On to another issue. Mr. Speaker, we're glad to see Dr. Chris Eagle has decided to pay back some personal expenses that he incurred as head of Alberta Health Services. Now, the amounts are relatively small, and they came under AHS's tough new expense policy, implemented last month. You have to wonder about expenses incurred by others before that new policy came into place and how much of those expenses are going to be paid back and how many expenses were offside at the multiple health regions before they became the AHS. To the Premier: why is it Alberta taxpayers can't have this information?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

An Hon. Member: You be careful how you answer this one.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think the questioner should be careful about how the question is asked.

The fact of the matter is that there has been no finding whatsoever that any of the expenses that Dr. Eagle chose to repay violated any of the policies or procedures that were in place at the time under the Calgary health region. The fact that Dr. Eagle has chosen to reimburse Alberta Health Services for the expenses is an example of his concern about public perception on this issue. I think we should congratulate him for doing the right thing, and I think we should recognize that it does not serve us well to undermine confidence in Alberta Health Services or its leadership.

Ms Smith: I did commend Dr. Eagle.

I'll ask the question again to the Premier because the Premier has bragged about raising the bar on transparency and accountability. She's even given speeches about it. Here is another opportunity to prove it. I'm asking the Premier: will she order the release of all health region executive expenses going back from 2005 all the way to today?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, we have in this province a Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act that provides exactly the mechanism for access to all of the information the hon. member is referring to.

This government, this Premier have put in place the most aggressive, the most transparent policy around travel and expenses of any jurisdiction in this country. That has been called a gold standard by the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, an organization which the opposition loves to discuss in this Chamber and apparently relies very heavily on their opinion for assessments in these and other matters. We have the toughest policies in place today. The agencies, boards, and commissions that serve this government have all been asked and are expected to adopt these policies.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Initially it sounded like they were going to do that broader release, but then the Alberta Health Services Board chair said that it would be too expensive. Of course, if you're going to hire some big international accounting firm to do a forensic analysis – but that's not what we're asking for – they could simply post the expenses and let Albertans take a look. Premier, what is it the government is trying to hide?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would care to check, there are well over a thousand pages of receipts that were posted last week by Alberta Health Services with respect to the expenses that she mentioned. This government has no intention of doing the hon. member's homework for her. We have the most aggressive and most transparent expense and travel policy in the country. It is there for all to see. The FOIP Act is available as a mechanism to look for things that the hon. member might be interested in further. They've made good use of that. We're interested in the health system of today and moving it forward, and we intend to do just that.

Provincial Fiscal Policy

Ms Smith: Now, Mr. Speaker, I know the Premier doesn't have an economics background, so I'm going to direct this next question to the Minister of Finance. While we wait for the minister to deliver on his promise to give us dates, times, places, and participants of the meetings the government held with the Katz Group lobbyists regarding arena funding, let's see if we can find out what he's doing about the budget. We're pretty sure he's going to try to bury a lot of his capital borrowing by doing what he has called going to capital markets. We call it going into debt. Can the minister tell us how deep into debt is he planning to go?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is asking me if we are intending on investing in schools, hospitals, roads like highway 63, the answer is yes, we are going to invest in those things. We've looked at what they would rather do, and that's defer the projects out into the future, when they will cost more by their own admissions. We're going to build them now, when Albertans need them, and if we have to borrow for highway 63, we will do so. We've already said that we will.

Ms Smith: I see the Finance minister has forgotten the paid-in-full sign that former Premier Ralph Klein presented to Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, energy prices remain low. The Bank of Canada's monetary policy looks out until 2014, and it now shows oil prices converging at $90 a barrel, yet this government sees prices at $108 a barrel. In other words, they're off by about 20 percentage points, yet there is no evidence of any adjustments in the government's spending plans to reflect this drop in revenue. To the Finance minister: why not?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's rather shameful that this hon. member doesn't pay attention to the announcements of this government before she comes into this House and makes accusations like that. We've already announced that we've raised the in-year savings to $500 million, a half-billion dollars off this year alone. We've already talked about what we're going to be doing with our capital plan as we move forward. We are adjusting to the economic conditions that we are facing, and we are doing it while building the vision that this Premier has for this province into the future and responding to Albertans' needs, not deferring them out into the future.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, the last fiscal update was nothing more than a flimsy collection of coloured graphs and wishful thinking. Albertans deserve the truth. The fiscal accountability act demands full disclosure. The minister has said that the information is too difficult for the media and most Albertans to understand. Will the minister give Albertans just a little bit more credit this time, obey his own law, and give us the full story in the next fiscal update?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I apologize if the graphs that were presented in that document were too complicated for the hon. member. We'll try and make that a little better for you.

Mr. Speaker, I find it interesting that the pretend budget that they brought forward on their website actually uses our revenue forecasts. We've changed ours. They haven't told us what they would have cut out of their budget. They haven't told us what school they would have cut. They haven't told us what hospital they wouldn't have built. They haven't told us what road they would have deferred for the next five or 10 years. We're going to build for today and for the future of this province.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Municipal Funding

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We teach our children the importance of keeping our promises. During the last election campaign the Premier promised a better deal for cities. The mayor of Calgary has said publicly that he has a memorandum of understanding clearly stating the province's commitment to explore all avenues to reduce financial hardships faced by our big cities, a very liberal proposal. Apparently, it's all a misunderstanding as the Minister of Municipal Affairs recently denied municipalities any concessions on new funding or taxing powers. To the Premier: who is right, the mayor of Calgary or the Minister of Municipal Affairs?

Ms Redford: You know, Mr. Speaker, I'm so pleased to stand and answer that question, which is actually on government policy. What I want to say is that our Minister of Municipal Affairs is in the middle, right now, of negotiating what I think will be a new deal for cities that is truly going to make a difference to the lives of people in our cities. Now, I understand that one of the mayors of those cities believes that the solution is more taxes. It is not the view of this government, it is not the view of this minister, and we will not support that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the Premier recognizing a good question on policy, but I do have a problem with the fact that the Premier doesn't respect one of the mayors of our major cities.

Given that a big-city charter must include a decision on municipal finances and given that this government has yet again flip-flopped on a clear election promise made by this Premier, to the Premier: who's in charge, you or the Minister of Municipal Affairs, who reneged on your promise?

Ms Redford: The Minister of Municipal Affairs and this government and I are entirely aligned with the fact that there are people not in two cities in this province, Mr. Speaker, but in seven cities in this province that are committed to ensuring a better quality of life. Our first step forward with respect to big-city charters, looking at Calgary and Edmonton, is our first opportunity to work not only with mayors but with the citizens of those cities, with our Minister of Municipal Affairs, with council members in those cities to determine how to move forward. Everything is about effective delivery of services. It is not about taxation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Liberals have been very clear that any discussion with municipalities needs to be based on three principles: respect for them being equal partners; sustainable, predictable revenue for them; and sharing the responsibility to meet the needs of all citizens. To the Premier: as your government continues to download responsibilities onto our municipalities, why do you still refuse to give our local leaders the revenue and respect and dignity that's rightfully theirs?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member that those are principles with respect to any negotiations that we should have not only with city mayors in Calgary and Edmonton but with all municipal leaders and Albertans in general. What I will say is that as we look to what's happening in our two largest cities, we know that we have to think differently with respect to the delivery of services. One of the things that's so important not only in this discussion but in the work that our Minister of Human Services is doing with respect to social policy framework is how we ensure that the provincial government funding that is available is shared amongst communities to effectively support citizens. That's what this discussion is about.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Lobbying Government

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta College of Art and Design, a publicly funded institution, paid Tory insiders Joe Loughheed and Hal Danchilla $150,000 to get privileged access to this Tory government. They used public money to get access to the very government that gave them the money in the first place. I can't imagine a worse waste of public money. To the Premier: why does the College of Art and Design have to use public money to pay überexpensive Tory insiders just to get the ear of this government?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, my job as Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education is to travel the province and meet with our postsecondary stakeholders. I've spent a great deal of the past six months travelling this province, meeting with the boards, the board chairs, and the presidents of the institutions. I will continue to do so, sir, regardless of their government relations and who is serving in that capacity.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously, the minister is going to have to do a whole lot more travelling before he can answer a question in this House.

Given that the leaders of our educational institutions apparently need to hire Tory insiders and unregistered lobbyists to get the ear of this government, can the Premier explain to Albertans how her government has become so remote and so out of touch that its own public institutions need lobbyists to talk to it?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, it was this very government that in 2009 passed the lobbyists registration act. It is still in place to this day. There is a maximum fine of $25,000. If the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has an issue or has some inside information, I'd suggest that he report it to the Ethics Commissioner, who will actually look into it. The Ethics Commissioner doesn't report to me, doesn't report to the Premier, doesn't report to anyone here but to this whole House.

Mr. Mason: Well, heaven forbid that I would take an ethical issue to the front bench, Mr. Speaker. That would be a waste of time.

Given that the Alberta College of Art and Design paid Tory insiders $150,000 of public money to get the ear of its own government, will the government hold accountable the college officials responsible for this ridiculous use of public money?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, as a newcomer to this Chamber I continue to be dismayed by members of the opposition parties continuing to drag respected Albertans through the mud. I would challenge the opposition: if you have courage in your convictions, sir, please make those allegations on the front steps of this building. Please do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, if you persist in these across-the-aisle conversations, that means I have to stand up and consume valuable time, and that means one hon. member will probably not get to ask his or her question later. So, please, let's respect whoever has the floor. I've said before that you may not like the questions, and you may not like the answers, but the fact is that everybody has the right to offer them.

In that spirit, let's go to the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Lobbying Government (continued)

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every new week it seems the fingerprint of PC cronyism works its way through the fibres of our bureaucracy and publicly funded institutions. Today we found yet another instance. The College of Art and Design felt that the only way they could receive government funding was to pay their dues to the PCs. In fact, $120,000 in taxpayer-funded dues went to two senior PC insiders. Not only does this smell; it reeks. Will this government now explain to the House why this college was squeezed to fall in line with this out-of-touch PC government?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in the previous exchange, the Lobbyists Act was implemented by this very government in 2009. If this member has any inside information, just like the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood he should talk to the Ethics Commissioner. Again, that person does not report to any individual minister, does not report to the Premier. This is in an independent officer of this Legislature. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I asked you politely. Please, let's stop with the interjections. Some of you are on the list to ask questions later. If you wish to speak out of turn now, I will not recognize you later. Be warned.

The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the former president of the college states that the hiring of the two PC insiders to have meetings with people like the president of the PC Party, Bill Smith, led to some of their "greatest fundraising success" and expedited access, does this really strike the minister as a coincidence, or will he admit this is just more business as usual for an out-of-touch government?

2:10

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, with due respect, if the members on the opposite side of the aisle did their research, they would find that ACAD has been funded with the exact same rate of increase as all of our Campus Alberta partners over the past number of years.

Mr. Saskiw: A really odd answer.

Given that one individual who was hired by the college was not registered as a lobbyist, will the minister commit to making public all meetings used to lobby this government, or will this culture of secrecy continue?

Mr. Denis: I think I'll just say this once and for all on this train. If this member, again, has any information, he should report it. Stop dragging people through the mud here. Take it to the proper channels and not this type of forum.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Rolling Power Outages

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On July 9 the lights went out in Edmonton, Calgary, and Lethbridge, and Albertans were left stuck on amusement rides at the Stampede or in traffic because Canada's energy province had rolling power outages. It was embarrassing that during the greatest outdoor show on Earth there were kids left dangling on rides while power companies struggled to keep pace with demand. To the Minister of Energy: how did this happen, and what explanation can you provide?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, on July 9 I also was in Calgary and witnessed the rolling outages. We saw what happened, which is a circumstance that has now been reviewed by the Market Surveillance Administrator, and we actually have the answers. A number of factors were in play. This is a report that has been released in the public domain. First of all, there was record demand for electricity because of the heat wave. Secondly, generator equipment issues caused by high temperatures caused some facilities to shut down. On the Stampede grounds themselves, though, they had their own little challenge that caused the electricity to shut down on the grounds.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. When the rolling outages occurred, there was speculation that it was because of market manipulation or collusion. Was this the case?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, there's always an opportunity for a good conspiracy theory, particularly by certain members of this House, but the facts are clear. The facts are clear. I repeat: there was no evidence of market manipulation. This is the judgment of the independent Market Surveillance Administrator.

Ms Kubinec: Again to the same minister: what is the minister doing to make sure that this will not happen again?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, if you look at the evidence in the province, the important aspect in an electricity system ensuring that we have adequate capacity requires the investment by many private-sector players. If we reflect back over the evidence of the last 10 or 15 years, there has been plenty of investment by plenty of private players. We're extremely well served by the system we have in place today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 19, 2010, this Assembly passed a private member's bill I put forward, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act. This act is simple and straightforward to mandate the reporting of child pornography. During debate on this bill the now Minister of Justice said, "I am going to strongly support Bill 202 and encourage other people to do the same." To the Minister of Justice: why have you not proclaimed this act to protect our children?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Since that time the federal government has passed a similar act that has different reporting requirements, that my department is currently studying. But I want to thank this member for her continued passion in dealing with issues regarding the protection of children. It's much appreciated. It's felt by our department as well.

Mrs. Forsyth: Minister, it was passed by us two years ago.

Given that the same minister said that Alberta "requires a proactive measure such as Bill 202 to protect our children from these predators," not the federal government but Alberta, when will you actually provide the protection our children need and proclaim this act?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, as I've indicated, in the two years that have passed since that time, the federal government has passed a similar bill. If we actually go and proclaim this bill, this bill goes and supersedes the federal piece. At the Justice ministers' meeting last week in Regina this was a matter of discussion that we are continuing on with the federal government.

Mrs. Forsyth: Minister, it's called protecting our children. This government has never been afraid to challenge anything that the federal government has done. When will the minister drop the excuses and start protecting our children?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, one thing that we are actually looking at right now is whether or not the federal bill provides greater protection than this member's bill. Regardless, I think it's time for this member to realize that this is a Canada-wide issue and that, perhaps, the federal bill is the one where we need to look. If we go and proclaim her bill, what will end up happening is that it will supersede the federal legislation, and I'm not sure that's exactly where we want to go in the best interests of our children in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Primary Care Networks

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Primary care networks perform an extremely vital role in our communities in delivering the health care system to Albertans. Since their introduction several years ago PCNs have been struggling to be recognized as part of the master agreement. All of my questions are to the Minister of Health. Is this government planning on replacing PCNs with family care clinics?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The answer is emphatically no. In fact, there are over 40 primary care networks across the province. In keeping with our government's commitment to PCNs, last year we introduced a $12 increase in the per capita amount that's paid to PCNs. They have a critical role in delivering primary health care in the future as will FCCs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My next question to the same minister: will the minister clarify to all of my constituents, where we have many PCNs, and to all Albertans the real difference between the PCNs and the family care clinics?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can certainly assure the hon. member that this government has every intention and, in fact, a very a sound plan to improve the level of all primary health care that's delivered across Alberta. We've talked before in this House about our intention to ensure a greater consistency of services across the province so that all Albertans can rely on a base level of primary health care accessible in or near their own community. Both PCNs and FCCs will play a critical role in doing this. We'll be guided by plans that are developed by communities, and we'll work to support both models in delivering better access to care.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: given that Alberta already spends a lot of money on health care and given that Alberta already has a shortage of health care workers, how do you plan to pay for and staff the family care clinics?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is true that we invest a great deal of resources in primary health care across the province. Support for primary care networks is above $180 million at present. We expect to continue to invest more in the future. The most important thing I would say to the hon. member is that the goal of this exercise is to broaden access and, in doing so, help us to stop doing things in the hospital that we can and should be doing in the community.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've asked you to please stop the conversations across the bow, yet you continue to do it, and it's becoming terribly rude. We have people who are here trying to listen to questions, trying to listen to answers, yet some of you are engaging in this across the bow. Please stop offering the bait, and, others, please stop taking it.

Let us carry on. Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Child Poverty

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Children cannot wait. Deprivation each day in Alberta for 70,000 children, including aboriginals, means failure to develop fully, learn, and succeed as well as suffer preventable illness. This is the most important responsibility of government. The Premier has promised to eliminate child poverty in five years and cut this huge loss of human potential and societal loss. To the minister: given the variety of definitions of poverty how do you define child poverty?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate such an important issue being brought to the floor of the Legislature today. There is nothing more important than ensuring that our children have a good start in life. Many children in Alberta have strong families. They have families that can support them, and they get to go to school with breakfast in their tummies, ready to learn. But for so many Alberta children we've got more to do. The Premier has promised that we'll end child poverty. That's a very, very lofty objective, but it's a very, very important challenge. By starting with the Department of Human Services and talking about the fundamentals of society, we're beginning that journey.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do hope that the minister will come up with a definition so we can define the benefits to make good on the Premier's promise to eliminate child poverty, including aboriginal children.

Financial resources are needed to ensure that these children grow up healthy. With a $3.5 billion deficit this year where does the minister plan to find the money? [Mr. Hancock gestured at the Minister of Finance]

Mr. Horner: Good luck.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We do have to keep a sense of humour about us because some of the challenges that we have are so very, very important and some of the situations that children are in are very tragic.

The hon. member asked me to define poverty. In fact, that's one of the problems we have. There are so many people going around trying to define what poverty is. I think we need to focus on what kind of a society we want to have and how we ensure that every child has the opportunity in Alberta to reach their potential and take advantage of the opportunities that we have here in this province.

Dr. Swann: Well, I'm not sure if the others heard, but I heard the Finance minister say: good luck. That's unfortunate for our children. Ensuring that children do not live in poverty is a noble goal, but without plans, without a commitment to it and no appetite to ask the public to pay, is this not simply an empty promise as children lurch from crisis to crisis in this province?

Mr. Hancock: No, Mr. Speaker, it's not an empty promise. This Premier has promised and this government has promised that we will work with Albertans. We are working with Albertans and discussing a social policy framework that helps us to understand what kind of a society we want to have and how important it is in that society for each and every child to be able to reach their potential. That means all of us, not just government, not just this government. All governments, all societies, all individuals have to come together to deal with this important societal problem. It's not one to make light of. Yes, I did make a bit of a joke; I think it's important for us to keep our sense of humour. But it's really important for us to make sure that every child has the opportunity to succeed.

Children in Care

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, since 1997 the children's advocate has repeatedly identified one issue on which this government is failing. The number of aboriginal youth in care is growing every year. Yet 15 years later, according to the advocate's report of yesterday, "there has still been no concrete action plan developed and implemented." To the Minister of Human Services: why not?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it would be helpful if the hon. member would read the whole report in which the Child and Youth Advocate talks about the advances that have been made, the fact we have hired an assistant deputy minister responsible for aboriginal relations, that we have focused conversations with the stakeholders right across the province, building the relationship that's so necessary. If you want to have a culturally sensitive approach to aboriginal children in care, having those relationships, building the opportunities for foster families in aboriginal communities, building the opportunity for permanence: those are so very important. It can't be done if we just set a top-down structure. We have to build those relationships, and we have to deal with those communities.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, 15 years later and no plan.

Now, given the advocate's report also points out that actions taken by the ministry to address neglect are "not evident" and given that the ministry's focus on family support has decreased in the face of growing emergent child protection demands, why won't the minister admit that additional resources are required to support our vulnerable families before child protection becomes necessary?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, additional resources are necessary to support families before child protection is necessary. That's a fundamental. The focus of the whole child and family enhancement act is to support families and strengthen families so that they can properly take care of their children, they can get through their troubled times, whether they're sporadic or chronic. They can be there to support the families and, if that doesn't work, then to deal with apprehending a child or taking a child out of a circumstance where they may be in danger. But absolutely we need to put our first focus on supporting families and making sure that families are strong so their children can be strong.

Ms Notley: Given that social workers have begged this government to deal with workloads for years and given that yesterday's report also identifies failures that can only be fixed with more resources like giving caseworkers time to help kids with building relationships and working with families to reduce neglect beforehand, why won't the minister commit to demanding publicly additional resources – additional resources – so his ministry can start the work necessary to protect our most vulnerable children?

Mr. Hancock: Well, because, Mr. Speaker, I don't start by demanding more resources. I start by saying: "Are we making the most effective use of the resources we have? Are we doing everything we can to ensure that our children have that opportunity?"

I want to say this. We have 7,000-plus employees in the Department of Human Services, and they're doing very good work each and every day. We can read about the reports, and we want to have the reports to talk about what we could do better and how we could do more. But I want to say here and now that the resources we're putting in place are allowing Human Services employees to help families each and every day in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, municipalities are not the only ones who have to beg favours from this out-of-touch PC government. Today we heard that a postsecondary institution in Calgary has been paying a PC insider a monthly fee to score big cheques from the government. In other words, they're giving tax dollars to PC insiders to try and get more tax dollars from PC insiders. To the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education: just how inaccessible are you that postsecondary institutions have to pay PC insiders just to get you to listen?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question, hon. member. Apparently, the hon. member hadn't listened earlier to some of the conversation we've had today, so we'll take another run at this question for the hon. member. It's my job to travel the province and meet with our postsecondary stakeholders regardless of who manages their government relations. It's a job I take very seriously, and it's a job I've been working very hard at for the past six months. To suggest that there's some type of graft or corporate corruption going on is an insult to our postsecondary stakeholders, to the hard-working people at these postsecondaries, and to the students who value those institutions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the minister is not aware that his job is to fund postsecondary institutions based upon objective need, not political favour. Again to the minister: given that the former president of the institution in question raved about the success his Tory lobbyist had in securing taxpayers' goodies from this government, can the minister give some kind of indication on which other postsecondary institutions lost out on funds because this particular one had friends in high places?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, again, unfortunately, we have a redundant question. The answer is the same. Had the hon. member done his homework, he would see that the institution in question is funded at the same rate of increase as all of the other 26 members of Campus Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the PC culture of corruption has led to institutions being forced to pay money to a political party to gain access to a minister and given that this appears to be the case even within the so-called government family, will the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education explain to Albertans why PC Party fundraising plays a role in his ministry?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, as the minister of advanced education mentioned, this question has been asked and answered. The Ethics Commissioner does not report to me. He does not report to anyone else. He is fully independent. It's not my job to police him. If the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner has some specific information, I encourage him – in fact, I insist that he go to the Ethics Commissioner today.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Riverview, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Disaster Assistance

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Each year we look to the sky and in our way pray for our families, our health, sun, rain, and success but, more importantly, to be free from disasters. However, disasters do occur. Property is damaged; lives are lost. Recent history such as flooding in Youngstown, in Edmonton even this past summer, and the disaster of Slave Lake tell us that they occur far too frequently. Now, we don't know when or where the next disaster will hit, but each year they do occur. To the Minister of Finance and Treasury Board: why is it that our budget fails to account for reasonable costs of disasters?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a very interesting question, and it's something that we have considered. Should we allocate limited taxpayer dollars to spending that may or may not occur, thereby taking it away from some of the other priorities that Albertans have? We do have a process in place for when these disasters occur, and they are many and varied. We have a process to deal with them and to pay for them. We prefer that approach at this time instead of setting aside money that may or may not be used and thereby taking it away from priorities of Albertans.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister commit to including reasonable budget costs for disasters and the provision that in years with few disasters budget amounts in excess will be carried forward to build a reserve for years that have more disasters so we don't face overruns?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not prepared to commit to that today. We are in the process of the budget, and we've also been in the process of looking at that renewed fiscal framework.

I would note that one of the purposes of the sustainability fund is exactly that: to be there specifically to provide for unanticipated spending on emergencies and disasters. To that end, it has performed extremely well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Young: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, given that we do spend large dollars on disaster funding from year to year, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what guidelines are in place to ensure that the supports for disasters don't become financial disasters unto themselves?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is a very good question. Disasters do happen, and we can't predict them, but we are here to support Albertans at those very important times like the fire that happened in southern Alberta this year, which threatened many homes and families there. Many losses are insurable losses, and those are covered by insurance companies. We're here to support homeowners and Albertans in replacing what they have lost that is uninsurable. It's a manageable amount, but it's very difficult to predict.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Lethbridge-East.

School Fees

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. More troubling news for parents on the issue of school fees has just come to light, with the Calgary board of education revealing that it collected $2.8 million more than it needed to in transportation fees last year. In other words, parents paid nearly $3 million more out of their pockets than they had to for bus fees. To the Education minister: does this concern you, and what would you propose you do about it?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, yeah, it's a little bit concerning, but I would suggest the hon. member talk to the CBE about it. My understanding is that when their budgets come back – and keep in mind that they're running about a $1.2 billion budget – if there are any surpluses, they get invested in the transportation budget in the following year, so it goes right back in to eliminate fees that parents would have to pay in the future.

Mr. McAllister: And here I thought the government's job was to represent Albertans, Mr. Speaker.

Given that this is the same school board that has a collection agency chasing 3,000 sets of parents for unpaid fees, can the minister understand that parents are starting to get confused as to which fees are actually legitimate and which aren't? Can you understand parents' frustration on this issue?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the frustrating part of this issue is the flip-flops from the members opposite. Let me read you a quote from an article that was published by their leader: they can find ways to live within the resources taxpayers already devote to education, or they can pay for these extras themselves. Out of the same article: user fees are precisely what's needed. This is what the Leader of the Opposition wrote. Then a few nights ago the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake said, "Albertans should never have to pay a mandatory fee for anything." So I'm not sure what the policy is from across the aisle, but I'll tell you what we want to do. We want to have a dialogue with parents, and that's why we've put the ability of the Education Act to deal with this in regulations.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, I see why it's called question period and not answer period. Anybody watching knows you have no intention of answering the question.

Given this government wastes hundreds of thousands of dollars on unused hotel rooms, given the government spends billions of dollars on private projects that we don't need to, could it be, Mr. Speaker, that the government is shortchanging boards by mixing up its priorities and not allowing boards to do what they need to do and, in effect, punishing parents with hidden fees?

Mr. J. Johnson: I'm not sure if that was a spending question or a cutting question. On one hand we're being told there's a surplus that we've got to deal with, and on the next hand we're underfunding education. Mr. Speaker, we put a lot of trust in teachers and in school boards every day, and they're entrusted locally to make those decisions. We think that school fees are something that we do need to discuss, and that's why we put right in the Education Act that the minister has got the ability to set regulations around those fees. We want to go out and talk to parents about that, and I think that's where we should be having this discussion and not in the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by Little Bow.

Urogynecology Wait Times

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm repeating this question because I believe in its importance. I'm a nurse, and although this topic doesn't embarrass me, there may be a few in this House that will squirm. Maybe that's why thousands of Alberta women are living in needless discomfort. Childbirth, heavy lifting, and, yes, lack of exercise can cause bladder and uterine prolapse into the birth canal. This condition causes incontinence, repeated bladder infections, and often severe pain and sometimes immobility. To the Minister of Health: why are the women in this province waiting for as long as two years plus – and now at this point it might be three – to receive the surgical procedures needed to correct the most serious case of bladder and uterine prolapse?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is an issue that I've discussed with the hon. member as well as professionals who work in this field, urogynecologists. As the hon. member may know, there is a shortage of urogynecologists in Alberta. The waiting times for the procedures that she mentioned are long. They are much longer than we would like them to be. Alberta Health Services has established an internal team focused on women's health that is looking at this issue. I can tell you that I would agree entirely with the hon. member that women are waiting far, far too long for this procedure, and we know that the impact on quality of life can be very significant.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister, who answered part of my question. Yes, we have had conversations about it.

My next question would be: could we add to the online wait time registry so that women could at least see where they are in that lineup for these very lengthy waits?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can certainly take that up with Alberta Health Services and get back to the hon. member. As the hon. member knows, urogynecology is a subspecialty, and although the women who are waiting for this are affected profoundly by the wait, there are a smaller number dealing with a smaller group of subspecialists than other procedures that we more commonly provide.

I think, Mr. Speaker, part of the answer to this, as well, is opening up more operating room capacity. In Calgary, for example, the south Calgary health campus, when fully open in the spring, will provide additional operating room space. That coupled with a renewed effort to recruit more specialists in this area is, I think, ultimately what we need to do to reduce the wait times.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the minister. You've basically answered my third question. We really have to fast-forward this process. I know that AHS is working on it, but I would like to see some kind of a time frame put on it when they have to come forward with their report.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as I said, I will discuss this matter with Alberta Health Services and get back to the hon. member. I will include in that discussion an indication of an appropriate and achievable time frame to address this issue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Municipal Taxation

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2007 the report to the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability was offered by the mayors of the day of Edmonton and Calgary and members of the AUMA and AAMD and C to the past Minister of Municipal Affairs. The title transfer tax was raised and buried at the time, and reading the Calgary Sun dated November 2, 2012, I see the new mayor of Calgary has raised this issue again. Will the Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs please clarify with this House: will there or will there not be a title transfer tax allowed?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise and speak to this particularly important issue. We know that the mayor of at least one large city has speculated about new taxing authorities that they would like to see. We on this side of the House understand there is one taxpayer. There's only one taxpayer in this province, and we realize that they already feel overtaxed. Our new civic charters are not about creating new taxes.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a newsletter, which I'll be tabling here, from the Alberta real estate board that states that they are very concerned about the land transfer tax, which equals, basically, a homebuyer's tax. Given that even at 1 per cent the average home would cost another $3,600 more to buy, to the associate minister: would you please reassure all Albertans that the province and the cities will not try implementing any kind of these taxes?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am aware that these types of taxes have been used in other parts of Canada, but we have been very, very clear. We are not talking about new taxes; we're talking about how to take the best advantage of the funding that's in place now. The mayor of one of our large cities said: we believe there is enough funding in the system to fund the necessary programs. I can say unequivocally that there will not be a land transfer tax.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the associate minister because that's very key and crucial to my next question. Would you please, then, author a letter to the Alberta Real Estate Association board to confirm that this will never happen during this government's tenure?

Mr. Weadick: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to take that under advisement. We have made that statement very clearly in the House today. This is public. There will not be a land transfer tax. We will stand by that.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes Oral Question Period. In 15 seconds from now we'll reconvene with Members' Statements, and it will be Calgary-Glenmore up first.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Literacy

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to acknowledge the hard work of literacy tutors, facilitators, and learners in Alberta. Recently the Literacy & Learning Symposium was held here in Edmonton, a joint effort of the Community Learning Network, the Centre for Family Literacy, and Literacy Alberta. Over 300 tutors, facilitators, and adult learners participated so they could both strengthen and continue the hard work done throughout the province. The opening address was delivered by the Premier, and sessions throughout the symposium addressed such topics as community engagement, what the connection is between literacy and health, and supporting Alberta's next generation economy.

Mr. Speaker, because of the actions of the hosting agencies and others adult learners are improving their literacy skills, increasing their community involvement, and expanding their employment prospects with additional career training. This also means that these Albertans along with their families and their communities are able to realize their full potential and participate in the economic success of this great province.

UNESCO defines literacy as "the ability to identify, understand, interpret, create, communicate and compute, using printed and written materials... with varying contexts." Literacy is an essential skill that affects an individual's quality of life at home, at work, and in social situations. Unfortunately, too many Canadians do not have the appropriate level of these essential skills. Mr. Speaker, this is a reality within both the Canadian-born and the new-Canadian communities.

As this is Financial Literacy Month, I would like to congratulate again the Community Learning Network, the Centre for Family Literacy, Literacy Alberta, and other agencies involved in literacy projects for the good work that they are doing and thank them for their successes to date assisting adult learners.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Travel Alberta Alto Awards

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, tourism is the third-largest industry in Alberta, generates $5 billion a year, and employs more than 90,000 people. This Legislature is very proud of the awesome organizations and individuals who received this year's Travel Alberta awards. On October 22 Travel Alberta hosted its 12th annual industry conference, and the hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation presented awards to organizations and individuals whose enthusiasm is contagious and whose passion for Alberta and our tourism industry is inspiring.

The winners included Stoneridge Mountain Resort in Canmore for service excellence, Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump in Fort Macleod for sustainable tourism, Banff Lake Louise Tourism and the town of Banff for tourism community of the year, Edmonton's Ice on Whyte Festival for the Alberta pride award, Ms Lola Brown for her story Come to Calgary!, Tourism Calgary and the Calgary Philharmonic Orchestra for their singing tweets marketing partnership, and the Calgary Stampede's We're Greatest Together marketing campaign. And Tourism Red Deer won two awards, one for the 2012 Scotties Tournament of Hearts outstanding online marketing campaign and one for the exciting central Alberta Country Drive marketing campaign as well.

Last but not least, Mr. Randy Bertrand of Devon was recognized as one of our greatest tourism ambassadors. Thanks to his vision and dedication tourism is becoming the largest economic driver in his town.

We are so fortunate to have dedicated, enthusiastic, and passionate people like this who are driven to make our province and this industry even better year after year. I ask all members to join me in congratulating them for a job well done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Driving Competence Test

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Confusion over the DriveABLE program seems to be running rampant. It's a test some seniors are forced to take when renewing their driver's licence at a cost of up to $300, a test that's long been complained about, that is unfair, inaccurate, and ineffective.

Yesterday in question period the Minister of Transportation told the House that the DriveABLE program was under a review by his department. This was a very surprising and interesting piece of information for me to hear because up until yesterday I and other concerned Albertans were told that the Department of Transportation had nothing to do with DriveABLE. In fact, not so long ago the now Minister of Health wrote in a letter to a seniors' advocacy group that DriveABLE was a private company with no affiliation with the government of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, this is the basis of the confusion. How can one minister say that the government will review DriveABLE, yet the other minister says the government has nothing to do with DriveABLE? The only thing clear about this situation is that both the Minister of Health and the Minister of Transportation are confused and, clearly, inconsistent.

Concerns about DriveABLE are not new to this government. These concerns regarding seniors' independence and privacy did not just come out now from the woodwork. Seniors have been voicing their concern about this program for a significant time. For the minister to now say that DriveABLE is under review is quite an admission.

Not long ago DriveABLE was a pilot project, a private company doing some research. However, now somehow it's under the wing of the Minister of Transportation and under a reviewable mandate of that minister. If that's truly the case, Alberta's seniors will be shocked to hear that at the same time they were bringing their concerns forward about DriveABLE, the government was quietly establishing itself as official judge, jury, and executioner of the seniors' driving privileges and ultimately their independence. This has raised many questions amongst Albertans. Most importantly, what is the appeal process? Unfortunately, instead we're left with no answers.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table the requisite number of copies of the 2011 College of Physicians & Surgeons annual report, entitled Good Medical Practice: It's What We're All About. The report discusses a new strategic plan for the college, a new online program developed to introduce new registrants to the college, and describes the 3.3 per cent increase in physicians registered for independent practice in that year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Seniors.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table the requisite number of copies of the 2011-12 Alberta College of Occupational Therapists annual report on behalf of the Minister of Health. The report illustrates the college's and the therapists' commitment to fulfill the Alberta commitments to health.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three things to table. Five copies of Concern: Land Transfer Tax = Home Buyers' Tax, which I referred to earlier, from the Alberta Real Estate Association.

I have five copies of the Friday, November 2, Calgary Sun article I talked about, the Municipal Affairs minister.

And then from last night's debate I have five copies of the Strathcona county minutes from the June 28, 2011, regular meeting.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

2:50

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices and in accordance with section 4(2) of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act I would like to table five copies of the 2011 annual report of the Chief Electoral Officer. The copies will be provided to all the members of this Chamber.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Calder, please.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of 202 e-mails regarding Monterey Place in Calgary, where 90 workers have been locked out since June 26 by Triple A Living Communities. These e-mails highlight that this private facility receives a financial subsidy from the government, and we would like to see the payment of the workers at Triple A be comparable to the public sector.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five of the appropriate copies of an e-mail that I referred to in my remarks last night with respect to Bill 2.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of documents related to the Alberta College of Art and Design's lobbying activities with the provincial government. The first document is a contract between the Alberta College of Art and Design and a Tory insider, which shows that the college wished to obtain access to the Minister of Advanced Education.

The second is a $50,000 purchase requisition from the Alberta College of Art and Design for community and government relations.

The third document is a statement of account from Fraser Milner Casgrain to the Alberta College of Art and Design for services from a PC insider in relation to a meeting with the PC Party president among others.

The fourth and final document relates to expenses, including expenses for representatives for the Alberta College of Art and Design to attend the Calgary Premier's dinner.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and table the appropriate number of copies of a notice of amendment regarding Bill 202, which I referenced in my speech yesterday.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: I call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 2

Responsible Energy Development Act

The Chair: I believe that the hon. Minister of Energy has 14 minutes left to speak. I recognize the hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I've been following the debate surrounding Bill 2, obviously with great interest, and I appreciate the very constructive input from members on all sides of the House. As a new member of this Assembly I'm very delighted to be part of this whole process. Of course, my family has a long and rich history in this province, and I'm pleased to be supporting and bringing forward to the Legislature a bill like the Responsible Energy Development Act.

We've heard a lot about the bill in the past two weeks, but I want to take us back for just a moment to the beginning of this important project. The Responsible Energy Development Act has always been about creating an efficient and effective single energy resource regulator. When my colleague from Drayton Valley-Devon first embarked on this endeavour two years ago, it was to ensure that Alberta remains a competitive and internationally respected place to do business.

Alberta has been blessed with immense resources, and our stewardship of those resources is a responsibility none of us take lightly. It's a responsibility we owe to Albertans today and to future generations to come. It's all about finding that balance, Mr. Chair, that balance between environmental stewardship, economic development, and respect for landowners.

We also want to remain an attractive place to do business, though, Mr. Chair. We want it to continue to be a good place for good jobs, to build the economy so we can continue to invest and have the resources in the public domain to be able to invest in education, in health care, in caring for seniors, and other important infrastructure. There are billions of dollars' worth of investment in play here that this new regulatory organization will oversee, and it's extremely important to the quality of life of all Albertans. That's why the timing of this new regulator couldn't be better.

The new regulator for oil, gas, oil sands, and coal will be a one-window approach to energy regulation, something our province needs and which has received support from both sides of the floor. What we're talking about here is bringing together the regulatory functions of the Energy Resources Conservation Board and the Ministry of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development for energy resource activities.

As I've followed the debate, I've heard questions about how the bill will affect landowners. These are important questions. Landowners' interests are vital. We have spent two years engaging landowners and other stakeholders in discussions about the current energy resource regulatory system, and we listened to what they had to say. In particular, Bill 2 makes important provision to ensure that landowners have timely information about proposed energy activities.

As you'll note in section 31, this new regulator will be required to give Albertans notice about all project applications that it receives. This is not something that's currently required, Mr. Chair, and it confirms that we listened to community members, to landowners, First Nations, and others who had concerns about the existing regulatory agencies in the province. Every potentially affected Albertan can then submit a notice of concern directly to the regulator.

Based on the issues raised in debate, I'm going to propose an amendment to clarify that the regulator must provide public notice of an application. In this regard, I want to assure Albertans that they will be heard, because I think that there is some confusion on this point as indicated by the debate.

I'm going to propose an amendment to section 32 to clarify that any person who believes that they may be directly and adversely affected by an application may file a statement of concern with the regulator. This clarity is important. The ability of Albertans to inform the regulator of their concerns is critical so that the regulator will have good information at the front end of the process to take into account all concerns as it begins to consider any particular application.
